

Himmes H. Buton

FIRTY YEARS' VILW;

OR

STORY OF THE WORKING OF THE AMERICAN GOVERNMENT FOR THERY YEARS,

FROM 1-2 - TO 1850.

CITEDY . ...

THE CONORESS TO CASES THE TRUE TO THE TRUE TO THE TRUE CHES TO THE TRUE CHES TO THE TRUE THE TRUE CHES TO THE TRUE THE TRUE CHES TO THE TRUE CHEST TO THE TR

PUSEAR COLEMBRO CHES.

BY A STATE OF BULL A ARS.

West Valle 11.5

10.1

D. A.C. C. C. C. C. C. C. A.P.A. V.Y.

FROM

HIST

THIRTY YEARS' VIEW;

OR,

A HISTORY OF THE WORKING OF THE AMERICAN GOVERNMENT FOR THIRTY YEARS,

FROM 1820 TO 1850.

CHIEFLY TAKEN

FROM THE CONGRESS DEBATES, THE PRIVATE PAPERS OF GENERAL JACKSON AND THE SPEECHES OF EX-SENATOR BENTON, WITH HIS ACTUAL VIEW OF MEN AND AFFAIRS:

M.LLH

HISTORICAL NOTES AND ILLUSTRATIONS, AND SOME NOTICES OF EMINENT DECRASED COTEMPORARIES:

BY A SENATOR OF THIRTY YEARS.

IN TWO VOLUMES.

VOL. I.

NEW YORK:

D. APPLETON AND COMPANY,

448 AND 445 BROADWAY.

LONDON: 16 LITTLE BRITAIN. 1866. ENTERED, according to Act of Congress, in the year 1854, by
D. APPLETON & CO.,
se Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States for the So

In the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

[The following pain from for a Bi some chi

Тно the autl Carolina of that Gooches took his Kentuck family. by an ea himself. a mother ing hersel observation that time places. books wit agement t famous S British his She was a of her chil of the Engness, had be All the miresort of the Apack of

AUTO-BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

[The outlines of the life of the lately deceased Thomas H. Benton, which are contained in the following pages, were prepared by the author and subject of them whilst he was suffering excruciating pain from the disease that, a few weeks later, closed his earthly career. They were not intended for a Biography, properly so called, but rather to present some salient points of character and some chief incidents of life, and in respect of them, at least, to govern subsequent Biographies.]

Southern

THOMAS HART BENTON, known as a senator for thirty years in Congress, and as the author of several works, was born in Orange County, near Hillsborough, North Carolina, March 14th, 1782; and was the son of Col. Jesse Benton, an able lawyer of that State, and of Ann Gooch, of Hanover county, Virginia, of the family of the Gooches of colonial residence in that State. By this descent, on the mother's side, he took his name from the head of the Hart family (Col. Thomas Hart, of Lexington, Kentucky), his mother's maternal uncle; and so became related to the numerous Hart family. He was cousin to Mrs. Clay, born Lucretia Hart, the wife of Henry Clay; and, by an easy mistake, was often quoted during his public life as the relative of Mr. Clay himself. He lost his father before he was eight years of age, and fell under the care of a mother still young, and charged with a numerous family, all of tender age—and devoting herself to them. She was a woman of reading and observation—solid reading, and observation of the men of the Revolution, brought together by course of hospitality of that time, in which the houses of friends, and not taverns, were the universal stopping places. Thomas was the oldest son, and at the age of ten and twelve was reading solid books with his mother, and studying the great examples of history, and receiving encouragement to emulate these examples. His father's library, among others, contained the famous State Trials, in the large folios of that time, and here he got a foundation of British history, in reading the treason, and other trials, with which these volumes abound She was also a pious and religious woman, cultivating the moral and religious education of her children, and connected all her life with the Christian church; first, as a member of the English Episcopalian, and when removal to the Great West, then in the wilderness, had broken that connection, then in the Methodist Episcopalian-in which she died. All the minor virtues, as well as the greater, were cherished by her; and her house, the resort of the eminent men of the time, was the abode of temperance, modesty, decorum. A pack of cards was never seen in her house. From such a mother all the children received the impress of future character; and she lived to see the fruits of her pious and liberal cares—living a widow above fifty years, and to see her eldest son half through his senatorial career, and taking his place among the historic men of the country for which she had begun so early to train him. These details deserve to be noted, though small in themselves, as showing how much the after life of the man may depend upon the early cares and guidance of a mother.

His scholastic education was imperfect: first, at a grammar school taught by Richard Stanford, Esq., then a young New England emigrant, soon after, and for many years, and until death, a representative in Congress, noted as the life-long friend of Macon and Randolph. Afterwards he was at Chapel Hill, the University of North Carolina, but finished no course of study there, his mother removing to Tennessee, where his father had acquired great landed property (40,000 acres), and intended to make Nashville his home; and now, as the eldest of the family, though not grown, the care and management of a new settlement, in a new country, fell upon him. The family went upon a choice tract of 3000 acres, on West Harpeth, twenty-five miles south of Nashville, where for several years the main care was the opening a farm in the wilderness. Wilderness! for such was the state of the country at that time within half a day's ride of the city of Nashville. "The widow Benton's settlement" was the outside settlement between civilization and the powerful southern tribes which spread to the Gulf of Mexico. The Indian wars had just been terminated, and the boundary which these great tribes were enabled to exact brought their frontier almost to the gates of Nashville-within 25 miles! for the line actually touched the outside line of the estate. The Indians swarmed about it. Their great war trace (the trace on which they came for blood and plunder in time of war, for trade in time of peace) led through it. Such a position was not to be maintained by a small family alone—a widow, and every child under age, only some twenty odd slaves. It required strength! and found it in the idea of a little colony—leases to settlers without price, for seven years; moderate rents afterwards. The tract was well formed for the purpose, being four miles square, with every attraction for settlement—rich land, fine wood, living streams. Settlers came; the ground was covered over: it was called "Benton Town," and retains the name to this day. A rude log school-house, a meeting house of the same primitive structure, with roads and mills, completed the rapid conversion of this wilderness into an abode of civilization. The scholastic education of her son had ceased, but reading continued; and books of solid instruction became his incessant companions. He has been heard to say that, in no period of his life, has he ever read so much, nor with as much system and regularity, nor with the same profit and delight. History and geography was (what he considered) his light reading; national law, the civil law, the common law—and, finally, the law itself, as usually read by law students constituted his studies. And all this reading, and study, was carried on during the active personal exertions which he gave to the opening of the farm and to the ameliorations upon it which comfort exacted.

Then came the law license, indulgently granted by the three Superior Court Judges—White, Overton, and Campbell—the former afterwards senator in Congress, Overton an eminent lawyer before he was a Superior Court judge, and Campbell, one of the respe follov Major and c to be was el session public of Su of jus venien slaves same a under policy of miti Re called f winter teers w proclan ground, were fo appoint

the firs

most in the plac

the volu

service

were the through piece of

Represe

of unkn

transacti

the admi genius ar —before The by Mr. (J814-1; peace; a bank of the fruits of her pious and eldest son half through his a of the country for which be noted, though small in nay depend upon the early

r school taught by Richard er, and for many years, and friend of Macon and Ran-North Carolina, but finished , where his father had acmake Nashville his home; care and management of a y went upon a choice tract Nashville, where for several less. Wilderness! for such ride of the city of Nashville. at between civilization and xico. The Indian wars had ribes were enabled to exact ithin 25 miles! for the line is swarmed about it. Their plunder in time of war, for as not to be maintained by a nly some twenty odd slaves. lony-leases to settlers withhe tract was well formed for n for settlement-rich land, covered over: it was called e log school-house, a meeting , completed the rapid convercholastic education of her son struction became his incessant of his life, has he ever read so the same profit and delight. ht reading; national law, the isually read by law studentsas carried on during the active atm and to the ameliorations three Superior Court Judges senator in Congress, Overton dge, and Campbell, one of the

respectable early settlers and lawyers of the State. The law license signed, practice iii followed, and successful-Gen. Jackson, Gen. James Robertson, Judge McNairy, Major Thomas Hardeman, and the old heads of the population giving him their support and countenance as a young man that might become useful to the State, and so deserved to be encouraged. Scarcely at the bar, and a legislative career was opened to him. He was elected to the General Assembly of the State; and, though serving but for a single session, left the impress of his mind and principles on the statute book, and on the public policy. He was the author of the Judicial Reform Act, by which the old system of Superior Courts was substituted by the circuit system, in which the administration of justice was relieved of great part of its delay, of its expense, and of much of its inconvenience to parties and witnesses. And he was the author of a humane law, giving to slaves the same full benefit of jury trial which was the right of the white man under the same accusation—a law which still remains on the statute book, but has lost its effect under the fatal outside interference which has checked the progress of Southern slave policy amelioration, and turned back the current which was setting so strongly in favor

Returning to the practice of the law, the war of 1812 broke out. Volunteers were called for, to descend the rivers to New Orleans, to meet the British, expected there in the winter of 1812-'13, but not coming until the winter of 1814-'15. Three thousand volunteers were raised! raised in a flash! under the prestige of Jackson's name—his patriotic proclamation—and the ardent addresses of Benton, flying from muster ground to muster ground, and stimulating the inherent courage and patriotism of the young men. They were formed into three regiments, of which Benton was colonel of one. He had been appointed aide-de-camp to Jackson (then a major-general in the Tennessee militia), on the first symptoms of war with Great Britain, and continued to perform many of the most intimate duties of that station, though, as colonel of a regiment, he could not hold the place. The force descended to the Lower Mississippi: the British did not come; the volunteers returned to Tennessee, were temporarily disbanded, but called again into service by Gen. Jackson at the breaking out of the Creek war. These volunteers were the foundation of all Jackson's subsequent splendid career; and the way in which, through their means, he was enabled to get into the regular army, is a most curious piece of history, not told anywhere but by Col. Benton, as a member of the House of Representatives, on the presentation of Jackson's sword (Feb. 26th, 1855). That piece of unknown history, which could only come from one who was part and parcel of the transaction, deserves to be known, and to be studied by every one who is charged with the administration of government, and by every one who would see with what difficulties genius and patriotism may have to contend—with what chances they may have to wrestle -before they get an opportunity to fulfil a destiny for which they were born.

The volunteers disbanded, Col. Benton proceeded to Washington, and was appointed by Mr. Madison a lieutenant-colonel of infantry in the army (1813); and afterwards (1814-15) proceeding to Canada, where he had obtained service, he met the news of peace; and desiring no service in time of peace, he was within a few months on the west bank of the Mississippi, St. Louis his home, and the profession of the law ardently recommenced. In four years the State of Missouri was admitted into the Union, and Col. Benton was elected one of her first senators; and, continuously by successive elections, until 1851. From that time his life was in the public eye, and the bare enumeration of the measures of which he was the author, and the prime promoter, would be almost a history of Congress legislation. The enumeration is unnecessary here: the long list is known throughout the length and breadth of the land—repeated with the familiarity of household words from the great cities on the seaboard to the lonely cabins on the frontier—and studied by the little boys who feel an honorable ambition beginning to stir within their bosoms, and a laudable desire to learn something of the history of their country.

Omitting this detail of well-known measures, we proceed to something else characteristic of Senator Benton's legislative life, less known, but necessary to be known to know the man. He never had a clerk, nor even a copyist; but did his own writing, and made his own copies. He never had office, or contract, for himself, or any one of his blood. He detested office seeking, and office hunting, and all changes in politics followed by demand for office. He was never in any Congress caucus, or convention to nominate a President or Vice-President, nor even suffered his name to go before such a body for any such nominations. He refused many offices which were pressed upon him-the mission to Russia, by President Jackson; war minister, by Mr. Van Buren; minister to France, by Mr. Polk. Three appointments were intended for him, which he would have accepted if the occasions had occurred-command of the army by General Jackson, if war took place with Mexico during his administration; the same command by the same President, if war had taken place with France, in 1836; the command of the army in Mexico, by President Polk, with the rank of lieutenant-general, if the bill for the rank had not been defeated in the Senate after having passed the House by a general vote. And none of these military appointments could have wounded professional honor, as Col. Benton, at the time of his retiring from the army, ranked all those who have since reached its head.

Politically, Col. Benton always classed democratically, but with very little regard for modern democracy, founded on the platforms which the little political carpenters reconstruct about every four years, generally out of office-timber, sometimes green and sometimes rotten, and in either case equally good, as the platform was only wanted to last until after the election. He admitted no platform of political principles but the constitution, and viewed as impertinent and mischievous the attempt to expound the constitution, periodically, in a set of hurrah resolutions, juggled through the fag-end of a packed convention, and held to be the only test of political salvation during its brief day of supremacy.

His going to Missouri, then a Territory under the pupillage of Congress, was at a period of great interest both for the Territory and the Union. Violent parties were there, as usual in Territories, and great questions coming on upon which the future fate of the State, and perhaps of the Union, depended. The Missouri controversy soon raged in Congress, throughout the States, and into the Territory. An active restriction party was in the Territory, largely reinforced by outside aid, and a decided paper was wanting to gi with the c side c Cong

Bente

inside from it) of nounc Consti in defi of whi sion; tom of deceas

Europe

the per

individ

with th

and sin

and wil Wh common himself which s and the livion } good in fatally, and to to and wou in which forever, industry Col. James 1

Preston:

Ann Ben

at Calcut

mother, w

tted into the Union, and uously by successive elecye, and the bare enumerarime promoter, would be is unnecessary here: the land—repeated with the board to the lonely cabins norable ambition beginning mething of the history of to something else characnecessary to be known to it did his own writing, and himself, or any one of his changes in politics followed or convention to nominate go before such a body for ressed upon him—the misr. Van Buren; minister to him, which he would have my by General Jackson, if ame command by the same e command of the army in eral, if the bill for the rank House by a general vote. professional honor, as Col. all those who have since ttle political carpenters renber, sometimes green and orm was only wanted to last al principles but the constipt to expound the constituugh the fag-end of a packed on during its brief day of nilage of Congress, was at a nion. Violent parties were n upon which the future fate souri controversy soon raged

An active restriction party a decided paper was wanting to give the proper tone to the public mind. Col. Benton had one set up, and wrote for it with such point and vigor that the Territory soon presented a united front, and when the convention election came round there was but one single delegate elected on the side of restriction. This united front had an immense effect in saving the question in Congress.

Besides his legislative reports, bills and speeches, sufficient to fill many volumes, Col. Benton is known as the author of some literary works--the Thirty Years' View of the inside working of the Federal Government; the Abridgment of Debates of Congress from 1789 to (intended) 1856; and an examination of the political part (as he deemed it) of the Supreme Court's decision in the Dred Scott case, that part of it which pronounced the abrogation of the Missouri Compromise line and the self-extension of the Constitution to Territories carrying African slavery along with it, and keeping it there in defiance of Congress or the people of the Territory. There was also a class of speeches, of which he delivered many, which were out of the line of political or legislative discussion; and may be viewed as literary. They were the funeral eulogiums which the custom of Congress began to admit, though not to the degree at present practised, over deceased members. These eulogiums were universally admired, and were read over Europe, and found their charm in the perception of character which they exhibited; in the perception of the qualities which constituted the man, and gave him identity and individuality. These qualities, thus perceived (and it requires intimate acquaintance with the man, and some natural gift, to make the perception), and presented with truth and simplicity, imparted the interest to these eulogiums which survives many readings, and will claim lasting places in biographies.

While in the early part of life, at Nashville and at St. Louis, duels and affrays were common; and the young Benton had his share of them: a very violent affray between himself and brother on one side, and Genl. Jackson and some friends on the other, in which severe pistol and dagger wounds were given, but fortunately without loss of life; and the only use for which that violent collision now finds a reference is in its total oblivion by the parties, and the cordiality with which they acted together for the public good in their subsequent long and intimate public career, A duel at St. Louis ended fatally, of which Col. Benton has not been heard to speak except among intimate friends, and to tell of the pang which went through his heart when he saw the young man fall, and would have given the world to see him restored to life. As the proof of the manner in which he looks upon all these scenes, and his desire to bury all remembrance of them forever, he has had all the papers burnt which relate to them, that no future curiosity or industry should bring to light what he wishes had never happened.

Col. Benton was married, after becoming Senator, to Elizabeth, daughter of Col James McDowell, of Rockbridge county, Virginia, and of Sarah his wife, born Sarah Preston; and has surviving issue four daughters: Mrs. William Carey Jones, Mrs. Jessie Ann Benton Fremont, Mrs. Sarah Benton Jacob, and Madame Susan Benton Boilleau, now at Calcutta, wife of the French consul general—all respectable in life and worthy of their mother, who was a woman of singular merit, judgment, elevation of character, and regard for every social duty, crowned by a life-long connection with the church in which she was bred, the Presbyterian old school. Following the example of their mother, all the daughters are members of some church. Mrs. Benton died in 1854, having been struck with paralysis in 1844, and from the time of that calamity her husband was never known to go to any place of festivity or amusement.

JUSTICE gaged, is the hope showing it time, and to come, in patriotic r is another in the spe House of I memory at remained tl mitted us 1 dom, you ca myself, I m it has been 1 admired the sagacity, and cumstances, the church in which she e of their mother, all the 1854, having been struck husband was never known

PREFACE

1.—MOTIVES FOR WRITING THIS WORK.

JUSTICE to the men with whom I acted, and to the cause in which we were engaged, is my chief motive for engaging in this work. A secondary motive is the hope of being useful to our republican form of government in after ages by showing its working through a long and eventful period; working well all the time, and thereby justifying the hope of its permanent good operation in all time to come, if maintained in its purity and integrity. Justice to the wise and patriotic men who established our independence, and founded this government, is another motive with me. I do not know how young I was when I first read in the speeches of Lord Chatham, the encomium which he pronounced in the House of Lords on these founders of our republic; but it sunk deep into my memory at the time, and, what is more, went deep into the heart: and has remained there ever since. "When your lordships look at the papers transmitted us from America; when you consider their decency, firmness, and wisdom, you cannot but respect their cause, and wish to make it your own. For myself, I must declare and avow, that in all my reading and observation—and it has been my favorite study-I have read Thucydides, and have studied and admired the master states of the world—that for solidity of reasoning, force of sagacity, and wisdom of conclusion, under such a complication of difficult circumstances, no nation, or body of men, can stand in preference to the general congress at Philadelphia." This encomium, so just and so grand, so grave and so measured, and the more impressive on account of its gravity and measure, was pronounced in the early part of our revolutionary struggle—in its first stage and before a long succession of crowning events had come to convert it into history, and to show of how much more those men were capable than they had then done. If the great William Pitt-greater under that name than under the title he so long refused-had lived in this day, had lived to see these men making themselves exceptions to the maxim of the world, and finishing the revolution which they began-seen them found a new government and administer it in their day and generation, and until "gathered to their fathers," and all with the same wisdom, justice, moderation, and decorum, with which they began it: if he had lived to have seen all this, even his lofty genius might have recoiled from the task of doing them justice;—and, I may add, from the task of doing justice to the People who sustained such men. Eulogy is not my task; but gratitude and veneration is the debt of my birth and inheritance, and of the benefits which I have enjoyed from their labors; and I have proposed to acknowledge this debt-to discharge it is impossible-in laboring to preserve their work during my day, and in now commending it, by the fruits it has borne, to the love and care of posterity. Another motive, hardly entitled to the dignity of being named, has its weight with me, and belongs to the rights of "self-defence." I have made a great many speeches, and have an apprehension that they may be published after I am gone—published in the gross, without due discrimination—and so preserve, or perpetuate, things said, both of men and of measures, which I no longer approve, and would wish to leave to oblivion. By making selections of suitable parts of these speeches, and weaving them into this work, I may hope to prevent a general publication—or to render it harmless if made. But I do not condemn all that I leave out.

2.—QUALIFICATIONS FOR THE WORK.

Of these I have one, admitted by all to be considerable, but by no means enough of itself. Mr. Macaulay says of Fox and Mackintosh, speaking of their histories of the last of the Stuarts, and of the Revolution of 1688: "They had one eminent qualification for writing history; they had spoken history, acted history, lived history. The turns of political fortune, the ebb and flow of popular feeling, the hidden mechanism by which parties are moved, all these things were the subject of their constant thought, and of their most familiar conversation. Gibbon has remarked, that his history is much the better for his having The r thoug never study Hamp overth Librar notes v lively a Mr. Fo English I was in ber, att and a c the pub differen parties . and aml between Lord L use his means o son, and be used a

I do no working of that designed that designed complex—world are is a novel is still belowish to conful accountable to the conful accountable to the so grand, so grave and ravity and measure, was gle—in its first stage ne to convert it into hiscapable than they had that name than under had lived to see these the world, and finishing a new government and athered to their fathers," nd decorum, with which en his lofty genius might nd, I may add, from the men. Eulogy is not my pirth and inheritance, and ; and I have proposed in laboring to preserve ; it, by the fruits it has notive, hardly entitled to and belongs to the rights es, and have an apprehen--published in the gross, petuate, things said, both and would wish to leave to lese speeches, and weaving publication—or to render I leave out.

WORK.

siderable, but by no means ackintosh, speaking of their evolution of 1688: "They; they had spoken history, ortune, the ebb and flow of parties are moved, all these, and of their most familiar ry is much the better for his having been an officer in the militia, and a member of the House of Commons. The remark is most just. We have not the smallest doubt that his campaigns. though he never saw an enemy, and his parliamentary attendance, though he never made a speech, were of far more use to him than years of retirement and study would have been. If the time that he spent on parade and at mess in Hampshire, or on the Treasury bench and at Brooke's, during the storms which overthrew Lord North and Lord Shelburne, had been passed in the Bodleian Library, he might have avoided some inaccuracies; he might have enriched his notes with a greater number of references; but he never could have produced so lively a picture of the court, the camp, and the senate-house. In this respect Mr. Fox and Sir James Mackintosh had great advantages over almost every English historian since the time of Burnet."—I can say I have these advantages. I was in the Senate the whole time of which I write—an active business member, attending and attentive-in the confidence of half the administrations, and a close observer of the others-had an inside view of transactions of which the public only saw the outside, and of many of which the two sides were very different-saw the secret springs and hidden machinery by which men and parties were to be moved, and measures promoted or thwarted—saw patriotism and ambition at their respective labors, and was generally able to discriminate between them. So far, I have one qualification; but Mr. Macaulay says that Lord Lyttleton had the same, and made but a poor history, because unable to use his material. So it may be with me; but in addition to my senatorial means of knowledge, I have access to the unpublished papers of General Jackson, and find among them some that he intended for publication, and which will be used according to his intention.

3.—THE SCOPE OF THE WORK.

I do not propose a regular history, but a political work, to show the practical working of the government, and speak of men and events in subordination to that design, and to illustrate the character of Institutions which are new and complex—the first of their kind, and upon the fate of which the eyes of the world are now fixed. Our duplicate form of government, State and Federal, is a novelty which has no precedent, and has found no practical imitation, and is still believed by some to be an experiment. I believe in its excellence, and wish to contribute to its permanence, and believe I can do so by giving a faithful account of what I have seen of its working, and of the trials to which I have seen it subjected.

5

4.—THE SPIRIT OF THE WORK.

I write in the spirit of Truth, but not of unnecessary or irrelevant truth, only giving that which is essential to the object of the work, and the omission of which would be an imperfection, and a subtraction from what ought to be known. I have no animosities, and shall find far greater pleasure in bringing out the good and the great acts of those with whom I have differed, than in noting the points on which I deemed them wrong. My ambition is to make a veracious work, reliable in its statements, candid in its conclusions, just in its views, and which cotemporaries and posterity may read without fear of being misled.

PRIMINAL

CHAP. I. J

IL /

III. I IV. F

v. c

VI. F VII. I

VIII. D

IX. A

L I

XL G

XII. V XIII. T

XIV. TI

XV. AI

XVI. Int XVII. Pre

XVIII. De XIX. Pre

XX. The XXL Com

XXII. Case

XXIII. Retin

XXIV. Rem

XXV. The

XXVI. Duel XXVII. Deat

XXVIII. Ame

sid

sary or irrelevant truth, vork, and the omission of what ought to be known. In bringing out the good than in noting the points make a veracious work, at in its views, and which being misled.

CONTENTS OF VOLUME I.

		AGE.	CHAP.	P	AGE,
Pastinin	ABY VIEW from 1815 to 1820	1	XXIX.	Reduction of Executive Patronage .	80
CHAP.			XXX,	Exclusion of Members of Congress from
I.	Personal Aspect of the Government	7		Civil Office Appointments	83
II.	Admission of the State of Missouri	8	XXXI.	Death of the ex-Presidents, John Adams and Thomas Jefferson	87
III.	Finances—Reduction of the Army	11	XXXII.	British Indemnity for Deported Slaves .	88
IV.	Relief of Public Land Debtors	11	XXXIII.	Meeting of the first Congress Elected under
V.	Oregon Territory	18		the Administration of Mr. Adams .	91
VI.	Florida Treaty and Cession of Texas .	14	XXXIV.	Revision of the Tariff	95
VII.	Death of Mr. Lowndes	18	XXXV.	The Public Lands-Their Proper Dispo-
VIII.	Death of William Pinkney	19		sition—Graduated Prices—Pre-emption
IX.	Abolition of the Indian Factory System .	20		Rights—Donations to Settlers	102
Ľ.	Internal Improvement	21	XXXVI.	Cession of a Part of the Territory of Ar-	408
XI.	General Removal of Indians	27		kansas to the Cherokee Indians	107
XII.	Visit of Lafayette to the United States .	29	XXXVII.	Renewal of the Oregon Joint Occupation Convention	109
XIII.	The Tariff, and American System	82	XXXVIII.	Presidential Election of 1828, and Further	100
XIV.	The A. B. Plot	84		Errors of Mons, de Tocqueville	111
XV.	Amendment of the Constitution, in relation		XXXIX.	Retiring and Death of Mr. Macon	114 to the Election of President and Vice-Pre-		XL	Commencement of General Jackson's Adsident	87		ministration	119
	Internal Trade with New Mexico	41	XLI.	First Message of General Jackson to the
XVII.	Presidential and Vice-Presidential Elections			two Houses of Congress	124
	in the Electoral Colleges	44	XLII,	,	404
	Death of John Taylor, of Caroline	45		British West India Islands	124
XIX.	Presidential Election in the House of Representatives	46		Establishment of the Globe Newspaper .	128
XX.	The Occupation of the Columbia	50	XLIV.	Limitation of Public Land Sales—Suspen- sion of Surveys—Abolition of the Office
	Commencement of Mr. Adams's Administra-	00		of Surveyor General — Origin of the
AAI.	tion	54		United States Land System - Author-
XXII.	Case of Mr. Lanman-Temporary Senatorial			ship of the Anti-slavery Ordinance of
	Appointment from Connecticut	56		1778—Slavery Controversy—Protective Tariff—Inception of the Doctrine of Nul-
XXIII.	Retiring of Mr. Rufus King	57		lification	180
XXIV.	Removal of the Creek Indians from Georgia	58	XLV.	Repeal of the Sat Tax	148
XXV.	The Panama Mission	65		Birthday of Mr. Jefferson, and the Doc-
XXVI.	Duel Between Mr. Clay and Mr. Randolph .	70		trine of Nullification	148
XXVII.	Death of Mr. Gaillard	77	XLVII.	Regulation of Commerce	149
XXVIII.	Amendment of the Constitution, in relation to the Election of President and Vice-Pre- sident	78	XLVIII.	Alum Salt—The Abolition of the Duty upon it, and Repeal of the Fishing Boun- ty and Allowances Founded on it	154
			(	A

CZ CX CXI CXII CXI CXV CXVI CXVII CXVIII CXIX CXXCXXI CXXII. CXXIII. CXXIV. CXXV.

CXXVI.
CXXVII.
CXXXI.
CXXXI.
CXXXII.
CXXXII.
CXXXVI. E
CXXXVI. I CXXXVII. I

CHAP.		PAGE.	CHAP	1	PAGE.
XLIX.	Bank of the United States :	158	LXXXIII.	Revenue Collection, or Force Bill .	880
L	Removals from Office	159		Mr. Calhoun's Nullification Resolutions.	384
LI.	Indian Sovereignties within the States .	168	LXXXV.	Secret History of the "Compromise" of
LII.	Vete on the Maysville Road Bill	167		1888	842
LIII.	Rupture between President Jackson and Vice-President Calhoun	167		Compromise Legislation; and the Act, so called, of 1883	844
LIV.	Breaking up of the Cabinet, and Appointment of another	180	LXXXVII.	Virginia Resolutions of '98-'99 — Disabused of their South Carolina Interpre-
LV.	Mflitary Academy	182		tation—1. Upon their Own Words—2. Upon Contemporaneous Interpreta-
LVI.	Bank of the United States—Non-renewal of Charter	187	LXXXVIII	tion	. 847
LVII.	Error of De Tocqueville, in relation to the House of Representatives	205		of Nullification by their Author The Author's own View of the Nature	854
LVIII.	The Twenty-second Congress	208	LAAAIA.	of Our Government, as being a Union
LIX.	Rejection of Mr. Van Buren, Minister to England	214		in Contradistinction to a League : Pre- sented in a Subsequent Speech on Mis-
LX.	Bank of the United States-Illegal, and			souri Resolutions	860
	Vicious Currency	220	XC.	Public Lands—Distribution of Proceeds	362
LXL	Error of Mons. de Toequeville, in relation to the Bank of the United States, the	224	XCI.	Commencement of the Twenty-third Congress—The Members', and Presi- dent's Message	369
1711	President, and the People Expenses of the Government	224	XCIL	Removal of the Deposits from the Bank
	Bank of the United States—Recharter—	240		of the United States	278
	Commencement of the Proceedings  Bank of the United States—Committee	282	XCIII.	Bank Proceedings, on Seeing the Decision of the President, in relation to the
222111	of Investigation Ordered	285		Removal of the Deposits	879
LXV.	The Three per Cent. Debt, and Loss in not Paying it when the Rate was Low,		XCIV.	Report of the Secretary of the Treasury to Congress on the Removal of the De- posits	881
	and the Money in the Bank of the	0.40	VOV	Nomination of Government Directors,	001
	United States without Interest .	242	AUV.	and their Rejection	885
LXVI.	Bank of the United States—Bill for the Recharter Reported in the Senate, and Passed that Body	248	XCVI.	Secretary's Report on the Removal of the Deposits	393
LXVII	Bank of the United States—Bill for the Renewed Charter Passed in the House			Call on the President for a Copy of the "Paper Read to the Cabinet"	399
	of Representatives ,	250	XCVIII.	Mistakes of Public Men—Great Compination against General Jackson—Com-
	The Veto	251		mencement of the Panic	400
	The Protective System	265	XCIX.	Mr. Clay's Speech against President Jack-
LXX.	Settlement of French and Spanish Land	275		son on the Removal of the Deposits—Extracts	402
* * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *	Claims	279	C.	Mr. Benton's Speech in Reply to Mr. Clay
		280		—Extracts	406
	Presidential Election of 1882  First Annual Message of President Jackson, after his Second Election	282		Condemnation of President Jackson— .Mr. Calhoun's Speech—Extracts .	411
TYYV	Bank of The United States—Delay in	200		Public Distress	415
DAAT.	Paying the Three per Cents.—Committee of Investigation	287	CIII.	Senatorial Condemnation of President Jackson—his Protest—Notice of the Expunging Resolution	428
LXXVI.	Abolition of Imprisonment for Debt .	291	CIV	Mr. Webster's Plan of Relief	488
LXXVII.	Sale of United States Stock in the National Bank	294		Revival of the Gold Currency—Mr. Benton's Speech	486
LXXVIII.	Nullification Ordinance in South Carolina	297	CVI.	Attempted Investigation of the Bank of the United States	458
LXXIX.	Proclamation against Nullifleation .	299	CVII	Mr. Taney's Report on the Finances-
LXXX.	Message on the South Carolina Proceedings	808	OVII.	Exposure of the Distress Alarms— End of the Panic	483
LXXXI.	Reduction of Duties—Mr. Verplanck's		CVIIL	Revival of the Gold Currency	469
	Bill	308 818	CIX.	Rejection of Mr. Taney—Nominated for
LXXXII	nequellon of Dulles-Mr. Clav's Rill	818	1	Secretary of the Treesury	470

3	AGE.
1e Collection, or Force Bill .	880
lhoun's Nullification Resolutions.	384
History of the "Compromise" of	849
omise Legislation; and the Act,	045
illed, of 1888	844
ia Resolutions of '98-'99 — Disad of their South Carolina Interpre-n-1. Upon their Own Words-2. n Contemporaneous Interpreta-847 ia Resolutions of 1798—Disabused
Jullification by their Author	854
Author's own View of the Nature our Government, as being a Union Contradistinction to a League : Pre-ted in a Subsequent Speech on Mis-	000
ri Resolutions	860 863
nencement of the Twenty-third	903
igress—The Members', and Presi-
it's Message	869
oval of the Deposits from the Bank the United States	373
: Proceedings, on Seeing the Deci-n of the President, in relation to the moval of the Deposits	879 rt of the Secretary of the Treasury Congress on the Removal of the De-sits	881
ination of Government Directors,
d their Rejection	885
etary's Report on the Removal of the	393 on the President for a Copy of the Paper Read to the Cabinet"	399
akes of Public Men—Great Comoi- tion against General Jackson—Com-encement of the Panie	400
llay's Speech against President Jack-
n on the Removal of the Deposits-	400
xtracts	402
Extracts	406
demnation of President Jackson-
r. Calhoun's Speech—Extracts .	411
olic Distress	415
atorial Condemnation of President ackson—his Protest—Notice of the Expunging Resolution	428
Webster's Plan of Relief	488
vival of the Gold Currency-Mr. Benon's Speech	436
empted Investigation of the Bank of	458
ne United States	403
Exposure of the Distress Alarms—and of the Panic	462
vival of the Gold Currency	469 ection of Mr. Taney—Nominated for

	CHAP.
	CX. Senatorial Investigation of the Bank of the United States
	CXI. Downfall of the Bank of the United States 471
	Death of John Randolph of D
	Death of Mr. Wirt CXIV. Death of the last of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence
	- Testadore a messago
ı	CXVI. Report of the Bank Committee
н	French Spoliations before 1800
ı	Wright, of New-York
	CXIX. French SpoliationsMr. Webster's Speech 505
ı	CXX. French Spoliations-Mr. Benton's Speech 514
ı	Jackson Assassination of President
ı	CXXII. Alabama Expunging Resolutions 524
	CXXIII. The Expunging Resolution . 524 CAXIV. Expunging Resolution Potents
l	CXXV. Branch Mints at New Orleans, and in the Gold Regions of Georgia and North Carolina
ı	CXXVI. Regulation Deposit Bill
	CXXVII. Defeat of the Defence Appropriation, and loss of the Fortification Bill CAAVIII. Distribution of Revenue
	CXXIX. Commencement of Twenty-Fourth Congress—President's Message
	Columbia Columbia
	CXXXI. Mail Circulation of Incendiary Publica.
	CXXXII. French Affairs—Approach
•	CXXXIII. French Indemnities Politics
	Table 1 and .
	resident Jackson's Foreign Diplomace
	. Stavery Agitation
	AAAVI. Removal of the Cherokees from George Extension of the Missouri Boundame
CX	XXVIII. Admission of the States of Arkansas and Michigan into the Union 627

1	S OF VOL I.
Q1
47	CXXXIX. Attempted Inquiry into the PAGE.
17
178	Academy—Speech of Man
75	Senator Benton's Second Speech
76	Distribution of the Land Paner
77	of Mr. Benton—The Posts
1	I my interest Omitted
7	OALIV. Independence of Texas
•	Speech Speech
9	CXLVI. The Specie Circular 670
5	CXLVII. Death of Mr. Madison Francis - 676
1
1	CXLVIII. Death of Mr. Monroe, Fifth President of
l	CXLIX. Death of Chief Justice Marshall
l	Death of Col. Burr Third W.
	CLI. Death of William B. Giles of Vication Liection of 1898
	son Son
	CLIV. Final Removal of the Indians
	CLV. Recision of the Treasury Circular Distribution of Lands and M.
	CLVII. Military Academy—Its Riding House 712
	Har. Benton's Fourth Speech Decision Tessolution—Preparation for CLX. Expunging Resolution—Mr. Benton's CLXI. Expunging Resolution—Mr. Clay, Mr. raised and Executed
	The Supreme Court Indees and Oct
	-Extract
(	CLXIV. Conclusion of General Jackson's Adminis-
	CLXV. Retiring and Death of General 783 Administration of Martin Van Buren 735

THE war 1812, and but a nec
duced ser points of are necess derstand t
ment, and proposed t
1. It s of the fina

without a for which rency—no presented first Bank ist in 1811. ceased to b o foreign y the gen uced to a ic demand umbrous f verspread overnment titution, w emoved the pecie with public load opped speew Englanfavorable en the r ng conv∈ V

PRELIMINARY VIEW.

FROM 1815 TO 1820

1812, and ended in 1815. It was a short war, but a necessary and important one, and introduced several changes, and made some new points of departure in American policy, which are necessary to be understood in order to understand the subsequent working of the government, and the VIEW of that working which is proposed to be given.

1. It struggled and labored under the state of the finances and the currency, and terminated without any professed settlement of the cause for which it began. There was no national currency-no money, or its equivalent, which represented the same value in all places. The first Bank of the United States had ceased to exst in 1811. Gold, from being undervalued, had eased to be a currency—had become an article of merchandise, and of export—and was carried o foreign countries. Silver had been banished v the general use of bank notes, had been reluced to a small quantity, insufficient for a pubc demand; and, besides, would have been too umbrous for a national currency. Local banks verspread the land; and upon these the federal overnment, having lost the currency of the contitution, was thrown for a currency and for ans. They, unequal to the task, and having moved their own foundations by banishing ecie with profuse paper issues, sunk under the uble load of national and local wants, and opped specie payments-all except those of

THE war with Great Britain commenced in holder, soon began to depreciate. In the second year of the war the depreciation had already become enormous, especially towards the Canada frontier, where the war raged, and where money was most wanted. An officer setting out from Washington with a supply of these notes found them sunk one-third by the time he arrived at the northern frontier—his every three dollars counting but two. After all, the treasury notes could not be used as a currency, neither legally, nor in fact: they could only be used to obtain local bank paper-itself greatly depreciated. All government securities were under par, even for depreciated bank notes. Loans were obtained with great difficulty-at large discount-almost on the lender's own terms; and still attainable only in depreciated local bank notes. In less than three years the government, paralyzed by the state of the finances, was forced to seek peace, and to make it, without securing, by any treaty stipulation, the object for which war had been declared. Impressment was the object —the main one, with the insults and the outrages connected with it—and without which there would have been no declaration of war. The treaty of peace did not mention or allude to the subject—the first time, perhaps, in modern history, in which a war was terminated by treaty without any stipulation derived from its cause. Mr. Jefferson, in 1807, rejected upon his own responsibility, without even its communication to the Senate, the treaty of that year negotiated w England, which section of the Union was by Messrs. Monroe and Pinkney, because it did favorable to the war. Treasury notes were not contain an express renunciation of the pracen the resort of the federal government. tice of impressment—because it was silent on ey were issued in great quantities; and not that point. It was a treaty of great moment, ng convertible into coin at the will of the settled many troublesome questions, was very desirable for what it contained; but as it was silent on the main point, it was rejected, without even a reference to the Senate. Now we were in a like condition after a war. The war was struggling for its own existence under the state of the finances, and had to be stopped without securing by treaty the object for which it was *declared. The object was obtained, however, by the war itself. It showed the British government that the people of the United States would fight upon that point—that she would have war again if she impressed again: and there has been no impressment since. Near forty years without a case! when we were not as many days, oftentimes, without cases before, and of the most insulting and outrageous nature. The spirit and patriotism of the people in furnishing the supplies, volunteering for the service, and standing to the contest in the general wreck of the finances and the currency, without regard to their own losses-and the heroic courage of the army and navy, and of the militia and volunteers, made the war successful and glorious in spite of empty treasuries; and extorted from a proud empire that security in point of fact which diplomacy could not obtain as a treaty stipulation. And it was well. Since, and now, and henceforth, we hold exemption from impressment as we hold our independence—by right, and by might-and now want the treaty acknowledgment of no nation on either point. But the glorious termination of the war did not cure the evil of a ruined currency and defective finances, mor render less impressive the financial lesson which it taught. A return to the currency of the constitution—to the hard-money government which our fathers gave us-no connection with banks-no bank paper for federal uses-the establishment of an independent treasury for the federal government; this was the financial lesson which the war taught. The new generation into whose hands the working of the government fell during the THIRTY YEARS, eventually availed themselves of that lesson: -with what effect, the state of the country since, unprecedentedly prosperous; the state of the currency, never deranged; of the federal treasury, never polluted with "unavailable ands," and constantly crammed to repletion with solid gold; the issue of the Mexican war, carried on triumphantly without a national bank, and with the public securities constantly above par-sufficiently proclaim.

No other tongue but these results is necessary to show the value of that financial lesson, taught us by the war of 1812.

2. The establishment of the second national bank grew out of this war. The failure of the local banks was enough to prove the necessity of a national currency, and the re-establishment of a national bank was the accepted remedy. No one seemed to think of the currency of the constitution—especially of that gold currency upon which the business of the world had been carried on from the beginning of the world, and by empires whose expenses for a week were equal to those of the United States for a year, and which the framers of the constitution had so carefully secured and guarded for their country. A national bank was the only remedy thought of. Its constitutionality was believed by some to have been vindicated by the events of the war. Its expediency was generally admitted. The whole argument turned upon the word "necessary," as used in the grant of implied powers at the end of the enumeration of powers expressly granted to Congress; and this necessity was affirmed and denied on each side at the time of the establishment of the first national bank, with a firmness and steadiness which showed that these fathers of the constitution knew that the whole field of argument lay there. Washington's queries to his cabinet went to that point; the close reasoning of Hamilton and Jefferson turned upon it. And it is worthy of note, in order to show how much war has to do with the working of government, and the trying of its powers, that the strongest illustration used by General Hamilton, and the one, perhaps, which turned the question in Washington's mind, was the state of the Indian war in the Northwest, then just become a charge upon the new federal government, and beginning to assume the serious character which it afterward attained. To carry on war at that time, with such Indians as were then, supported by the British traders, themselves countenanced by their government, at such a distance in the wilderness, and by the young federal government, was a severe trial upon the finances of the federal treasury, as well as upon the courage and discipline of the troops; and General Hamilton, the head of the treasury, argued that with the aid of a national bank, the war would be better and more successfully conducted: and, therefore, that it was "necessary," and might 1 a granted 1 war. That having beer the credit The war of the finances existing; and cause of its o ty for a bank then establis and conscient Madison at th national bank the events of the strict cor the weakening mental in the the damage of doctrine of a s tion. But in t of which it is pr the younger go the belief that not had a fair t fact, it had had even in the field when it was sup it was entitled to That trial has be al bank was left tion. The gold treasury were es tried them. The tional bank was and therefore u great question of of party division events of war, and and the strict cor last time in their f being the last, an constitutional curr

3. The protection substantive object, revenue, was a thin war. Its incidents nue clause in the cacknowledged, and substantive object out of the state of Domestic manufactions.

out these results is necessary of that financial lesson, taught hment of the second national this war. The failure of the nough to prove the necessity ncy, and the re-establishment k was the accepted remedy. think of the currency of the cially of that gold currency siness of the world had been e beginning of the world, and expenses for a week were the United States for a year, ners of the constitution had so nd guarded for their country. vas the only remedy thought nality was believed by some ated by the events of the war. s generally admitted. The irned upon the word "neceshe grant of implied powers at meration of powers expressly s; and this necessity was afon each side at the time of the e first national bank, with a ness which showed that these titution knew that the whole ly there. Washington's quewent to that point; the close ton and Jefferson turned uporthy of note, in order to show to do with the working of he trying of its powers, that ration used by General Ham-, perhaps, which turned the ngton's mind, was the state in the Northwest, then just pon the new federal governg to assume the serious charward attained. To carry on with such Indians as were the British traders, themd by their government, at the wilderness, and by the ernment, was a severe trial f the federal treasury, as well and discipline of the troops; ton, the head of the treasury, e aid of a national bank, the er and more successfully conore, that it was "necessary," and might be established as a means of executing a granted power, to wit, the power of making war. That war terminated well; and the bank having been established in the mean time, got the credit of having furnished its "sinews." The war of 1812 languished under the state of the finances and the currency, no national bank existing; and this want seemed to all to be the cause of its difficulties, and to show the necessity for a bank. The second national bank was then established—many of its old, most able, and conscientious opponents giving in to it, Mr. Madison at their head. Thus the question of a national bank again grew up-grew up out of the events of the war-and was decided against the strict construction of the constitution-to the weakening of a principle which was fundamental in the working of the government, and to the damage of the party which stoodsupon the doctrine of a strict construction of the constitution. But in the course of the "Thirty Years" of which it is proposed to take a "View," some of the younger generation became impressed with the belief that the constitutional currency had not had a fair trial in that war of 1812! that, in fact, it had had no trial at all! that it was not even in the field! not even present at the time when it was supposed to have failed! and that it was entitled to a trial before it was condemned. That trial has been obtained The second national bank was left to expire upon its own limitation. The gold currency and the independent treasury were established. The Mexican war tried them. They triumphed. And thus a national bank was shown to be "unnecessary," and therefore unconstitutional. And thus a great question of constitutional construction, and of party division, three times decided by the events of war, and twice against the constitution and the strict constructionists, was decided the last time in their favor; and is entitled to stand, being the last, and the only one in which the constitutional currency had a trial.

3. The protection of American industry, as a substantive object, independent of the object of revenue, was a third question growing out of the war. Its incidental protection, under the revenue clause in the constitution, had been always acknowledged, and granted; but protection as a substantive object was a new question growing out of the state of things produced by the war.

grown up during the non-importation periods of the embargo, and of hostilities with Great Britain, and under the temporary double duties which ensued the war, and which were laid for revenue. They had grown up to be a large interest, and a new one, classing in importance after agriculture and commerce. The want of articles necessary to national defence, and of others essential to individual comfort-then neither imported nor made at home-had been felt during the interruption of commerce occasioned by the war; and the advantage of a domestic supply was brought home to the conviction of the public mind. The question of protection for the sake of protection was brought forward, and carried (in the year 1816); and very unequivocally in the minimum provision in relation to duties on cotton goods. This reversed the old course of legislation-made protection the object instead of the incident, and revenue the incident instead of the object; and was another instance of constitutional construction being made dependent, not upon its own words but upon extrinsic, accidental and transient cir cumstances. It introduced a new and a large question of constitutional law, and of national expediency, fraught with many and great consequences, which fell upon the period of the THIRTY YEARS' VIEW to settle, or to grapple

4. The question of internal improvement within the States, by the federal government, took a new and large development after the war. The want of facilities of transportation had been felt in our military operations. Roads were bad, and canals few; and the question of their construction became a prominent topic in Congress common turnpike roads-for railways had not then been invented, nor had MacAdam yet given his name to the class of roads which has since borne it. The power was claimed as an incident to the granted powers-as a means of doing what was authorized—as a means of accomplishing an end: and the word "necessary" at the end of the enumerated powers, was the phrase in which this incidental power was claimed to have been found. It was the same derivation which was found for the creation of a national bank, and involved very nearly the same division of parties. It greatly complicated the national legislation from 1820 to 1850, bringing the two Domestic manufactures had taken root and parts of our double system of government-State and Federal-into serious disagreement, and threatening to compromise their harmonious action. Grappled with by a strong hand, it seemed at one time to have been settled, and consistently with the rights of the States; but sometimes returns to vex the deliberations of Congress. To territories the question did not extend. They have no political rights under the constitution, and are governed by Congress according to its discretion, under that clause which authorizes it to "dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States." The improvement of rivers and harbors, was a branch of the internal improvement question, but resting on a different clause in the constitution—the commercial and revenue clause-and became complex and difficult from its extension to small and local objects. The party of strict construction contend for its restriction to national objects-rivers of national character, and harbors yielding revenue.

5. The boundaries between the treaty-making and the legislative departments of the government, became a subject of examination after the war, and gave rise to questions deeply affecting the working of these two departments. A treaty is the supreme law of the land, and as such it becomes obligatory on the House of Representatives to vote the money which it stipulates, and to co-operate in forming the laws necessary to carry it into effect. That is the broad proposition. The qualification is in the question whether the treaty is confined to the business of the treaty-making power? to the subjects which fall under its jurisdiction? and does not encroach upon the legislative power of Congress? This is the qualification, and a vital one: for if the President and Senate, by a treaty with a foreign power, or a tribe of Indians, could exercise ordinary legislation, and make it supreme, a double injury would have been done, and to the prejudice of that branch of the government which lies closest to the people, and emanates most directly from them. Confinement to their separate jurisdictions is the duty of each; but if encroachments take place, which is to judge? If the President and Senate invade the legislative field of Congress, which is to judge? or who is to judge between them? or is each to judge for itself? The House of Representatives, and the Senate in its legislative capa- to form the Union—and that any attempt to city, but especially the House, as the great constitutional depository of the legislative power, becomes its natural guardian and defender, and is entitled to deference, in the event of a difference of opinion between the two branches of the government. The discussions in Congress between 1815 and 1820 greatly elucidated this question; and while leaving unimpugned the obligation of the House to carry into effect a treaty duly made by the President and Senate within the limits of the treaty making powerupon matters subject to treaty regulation—yet it belongs to the House to judge when these limits have been transcended, and to preserve inviolate the field of legislation which the constitution has intrusted to the immediate representatives of the people.

6. The doctrine of secession—the right of a State, or a combination of States, to withdraw from the Union, was born of that war. It was repugnant to the New England States, and opposed by them, not with arms, but with argument and remonstrance, and refusal to vote supplies. They had a convention, famous under the name of Hartford, to which the design of secession was imputed. That design was never avowed by the convention, or authentically admitted by any leading member; nor is it the intent of this reference to decide upon the fact of that design. The only intent is to show that the existence of that convention raised the question of secession, and presented the first instance of the greatest danger in the working of the double form of our government-that of a collision between a part of the States and the federal government. This question, and this danger, first arose then-grew out of the war of 1812-and were hushed by its sudden termination; but they have reappeared in a different quarter, and will come in to swell the objects of the THIRTY YEARS' VIEW. At the time of its first appearance the right of secession was repulsed and repudiated by the democracy generally, and in a large degree by the federal party—the difference between a Union and a LEAGUE being better understood at that time when so many of the fathers of the new government were still alive. The leading language in respect to it south of the Potomac was, that no State had a right to withdraw from the Unionthat it required the same power to dissolve as dissolve it, or tional laws, political part exchanged at alter the ques interest from produce such speculation du a practical que YEARS; and th not settled.

7. Slavery time (1819-'20 restriction on the tion to hold sla condition of he to be binding up tion came from lead, and soon sy It was quieted, s tion was concer without restricti remainder of the west of that State degrees, 30 minut of the southern Kentucky. This and was all clea of the question, ar the united slave majority of that vo tatives, and the un administration. I divided free and sla the North than th divided about equa all to the North. immense extent of legally exist, over n left it only in Florida opened no new ter was an immense co holding States; but tion was not laid. different forms, first of petitions to Cong on the subject; then of exciting one half t and laying the founda racy. With this new the men of the new ge ple for the whole peri e House, as the great y of the legislative power, ardian and defender, and in the event of a differthe two branches of the ussions in Congress begreatly elucidated this leaving unimpugned the se to carry into effect a ne President and Senate treaty making powero treaty regulation-yet se to judge when these scended, and to preserve rislation which the constithe immediate represen-secession—the right of a of States, to withdraw orn of that war. It was w England States, and rith arms, but with arguce, and refusal to vote convention, famous under to which the design of

That design was never rention, or authentically ng member; nor is it the to decide upon the fact aly intent is to show that nvention raised the quesresented the first instance r in the working of the vernment—that of a colof the States and the This question, and this -grew out of the war of d by its sudden terminareappeared in a different in to swell the objects of IEW. At the time of its right of secession was reby the democracy genedegree by the federal between a Union and a understood at that time athers of the new govern-The leading language in the Potomac was, that no thdraw from the Unioname power to dissolve as and that any attempt to dissolve it, or to obstruct the action of constitutional laws, was treason. If, since that time, political parties and sectional localities, have exchanged attitudes on this question, it cannot alter the question of right, and may receive some interest from the development of causes which produce such changes. Secession, a question of speculation during the war of 1812, has become a practical question (almost) during the THIRTY YEARS; and thus far has been "compromised," not settled.

7. Slavery agitation took its rise during this time (1819-20), in the form of attempted restriction on the State of Missouri-a prohibition to hold slaves, to be placed upon her as a condition of her admission into the Union, and to be binding upon her afterwards. This agitation came from the North, and under a federal lead, and soon swept both parties into its vortex. It was quieted, so far as that form of the question was concerned, by admitting the State without restriction, and imposing it on the remainder of the Louisiana territory north and west of that State, and above the parallel of 36 degrees, 30 minutes; which is the prolongation of the southern boundary line of Virginia and Kentucky. This was called a "compromise," and was all clear gain to the antislavery side of the question, and was done under the lead of the united slave state vote in the Senate, the majority of that vote in the House of Representatives, and the undivided sanction of a Southern administration. It was a Southern measure, and divided free and slave soil far more favorably to the North than the ordinance of 1787. That divided about equally: this of 1820 gave about all to the North. It abolished shavery over an immense extent of territory where it might then legally exist, over nearly the whole of Louisiana, left it only in Florida and Arkansas territory, and opened no new territory to its existence. It was an immense concession to the non-slaveholding States; but the genius of slavery agitation was not laid. It reappeared, and under different forms, first from the North, in the shape of petitions to Congress to influence legislation on the subject; then from the South, as a means of exciting one half the Union against the other, and laying the foundation for a Southern confederacy. With this new question, in all its forms, the men of the new generation have had to grap-

8. The war had created a debt, which, added to a balance of that of the Revolution, the purchase of Louisiana, and some other items, still amounted to ninety-two millions of dollars at the period of the commencement of this "View;" and the problem was to be solved, whether a national debt could be paid and extinguished in a season of peace, leaving a nation wholly free from that encumbrance; or whether it was to go on increasing, a burthen in itself, and absorbing with its interest and changes an annual portion of the public revenues. That problem was solved, contrary to the experience of the world, and the debt paid; and the practical benefit added to the moral, of a corresponding reduction in the public taxes.

9. Public distress was a prominent feature of the times to be embraced in this PRELIMINARY VIEW. The Bank of the United States was chartered in 1816, and before 1820 had performed one of its cycles of delusive and bubble prosperity, followed by actual and wide-spread calamity. The whole paper system, of which it was the head and the citadel, after a vast expansion, had suddenly collapsed, spreading desolation over the land, and carrying ruin to debtors. The years 1819 and '20 were a period of gloom and agony. No money, either gold or silver: no paper convertible into specie: no measure, or standard of value, left remaining. The local banks (all but those of New England), after a brief resumption of specie payments, again sank into a state of suspension. The Bank of the United States, created as a remedy for all those evils, now at the head of the evil, prostrate and helpless, with no power left but that of suing its debtors, and selling their property, and purchasing for itself at its own nominal price. No price for property, or produce. No sales but those of the sheriff and the marshal. No purchasers at execution sales but the creditor, or some hoarder of money. No employment for industry-no demand for labor—no sale for the product of the farm-no sound of the hammer, but that of the auctioneer, knocking down property. Stop laws-property laws-replevin laws-stay laws -loan office laws-the intervention of the legislator between the creditor and the debtor: this was the business of legislation in three-fourths of the States of the Union-of all south and west of New England. No medium of exchange ple for the whole period of the "Thirty Years." but depreciated paper: no change even, but little bits of foul paper, marked so many cents, and signed by some tradesman, barber, or inn-keeper: exchanges deranged to the extent of fifty or one hundred per cent. Distress, the universal cry of the people: Relief, the universal demand thundered at the doors of all legislatures, State and federal. It was at the moment when this distress had reached its maximum—1820—'21—and had come with its accumulated force upon the machine of the federal government, that this "View" of its working begins. It is a doleful starting point, and may furnish great matter for contrast, or comparison, at its concluding period in 1850.

Such were some of the questions growing out of the war of 1812, or immediately ensuing its termination. That war brought some difficulties to the new generation, but also great advantages, at the head of them the elevation of the national character throughout the world. It immensely elevated the national character, and, as a consequence, put an end to insults and outrages to which we had been subject. No more impressments: no more searching our ships: no more killing: no more carrying off to be forced to serve on British ships against their own country. The national flag became respected. It became the Ægis of those who were under it. The national character appeared in a new light abroad. We were no longer considered as a people so addicted to commerce as to be insensible to insult: and we reaped all the advantages, social, political, commercial, of this auspicious change. It was a war necessary to the honor and interest of the United States, and was bravely fought, and honorably concluded, and makes a proud era in our history. I was not in public life at the time it was declared, but have understood from those who were, that, except for the exertions of two men (Mr. Monroe in the Cabinet. and Mr. Clay in Congress), the declaration of

СН

PERSONAL ASPE

All the departmen ed to great advanta of their administrat as Senator at Was President; Governo Mr. John Quincy Mr. William H. ( Treasury; Mr. Joh War; Mr. Smith Tl retary of the Navy master General; W General. These cor partment, and it wo any government, in more talent and exp decorum, more purit mass of information, a ness, than was compri names. The legislati impressive. The Seneminent men who had services in the feder and some of them co history. From New-King and Nathan San Mr. Harrison Gray O Mr. Macon and Govern the two Governors, J. Pleasants; from Sou Gaillard, so often and tempore, of the Sens Smith; from Rhode Is ter; from Kentucky, C son; from Louisiana, Governor Henry Johns een subject. No more searching our ships: no arrying off to be forced against their own counbecame respected. It who were under it. The ared in a new light longer considered as a imerce as to be insensiiped all the advantages, cial, of this auspicious cessary to the honor and tates, and was bravely included, and makes a I was not in public life ed, but have understood at, except for the exer-Monroe in the Cabinet, ess), the declaration of n obtained. Honor to

THIRTY YEARS' VIEW.

CHAPTER I.

PERSONAL ASPECT OF THE GOVERNMENT.

ALL the departments of the government appeared to great advantage in the personal character of their administrators at the time of my arrival as Senator at Washington. Mr. Monroe was President; Governor Tompkins, Vice-President; Mr. John Quincy Adams, Secretary of State; Mr. William H. Crawford, Secretary of the Treasury; Mr. John C. Calhoun, Secretary at War; Mr. Smith Thompson, of New-York, Secretary of the Navy; Mr. John McLean, Postmaster General; William Wirt, Esq., Attorney General. These constituted the Executive Department, and it would be difficult to find in any government, in any country, at any time, mass of information, and more addiction to business, than was comprised in this list of celebrated impressive. The Senate presented a long list of eminent men who had become known by their services in the federal or State governments, and some of them connected with its earliest history. From New-York there were Mr. Rufus King and Nathan Sanford; from Massachusetts, Mr. Harrison Gray Otis; from North Carolina, Mr. Macon and Governor Stokes; from Virginia, the two Governors, James Barbour and James Gaillard, so often and so long President, pro tempore, of the Senate, and Judge William Smith; from Rhode Island, Mr. William Hunter; from Kentucky, Colonel Richard M. John-

William Pinkney and Governor Edward Lloyd; from New Jersey, Mr. Samuel L. Southard; Colonel John Williams, of Tennessee; William R. King and Judge Walker, from Alabama; and many others of later date, afterwards becoming eminent, and who will be noted in their places. In the House of Representatives there was a great array of distinguished and of business talent. Mr. Clay, Mr. Randolph, Mr. Lowndes were there. Mr. Henry Baldwin and Mr. John Sergeant, from Pennsylvania; Mr. John W. Taylor, Speaker, and Henry Storrs, from New-York; Dr. Eustis, of revolutionary memory, and Nathaniel Silsbee, of Massachusetts; Mr. Louis McLane, from Delaware; General Samuel Smith, from Maryland; Mr. William S. Archer, Mr. Philip P. Barbour, General John Floyd, General Alexander Smythe, Mr. John more talent and experience, more dignity and Tyler, Charles Fenton Mercer, George Tucker, decorum, more purity of private life, a larger from Virginia; Mr. Lewis Williams, who entered the House young, and remained long enough to be called its "Father," Thomas H. names. The legislative department was equally | Hall, Weldon N. Edwards, Governor Hutchins G. Burton, from North Carolina; Governor Earle and Mr. Charles Pinckney, from South Carolina; Mr. Thomas W. Cobb and Governor George Gilmer, from Georgia; Messrs. Richard C. Anderson, Jr., David Trimble, George Robertson, Benjamin Hardin, and Governor Metcalfe, from Kentucky; Mr. John Rhea, of revolutionary service, Governor Newton Cannon, Francis Jones, General John Cocke, from Tennessee; Pleasants; from South Carolina, Mr. John Messrs. John W. Campbell, John Sloan and Henry Bush, from Ohio; Mr. William Hendricks, from Indiana; Thomas Butler, from Louisiana; Daniel P. Cook, from Illinois; John Crowell, from Alabama; Mr. Christopher Ranson; from Louisiana, Mr. James Brown and kin, from Mississippi; and a great many other Governor Henry Johnson; from Maryland, Mr. business men of worth and character from the different States, constituting a national representation of great weight, efficiency and decorum. The Supreme Court was still presided over by Chief Justice Marshall, almost septuagenarian, and still in the vigor of his intellect, associated with Mr. Justice Story, Mr. Justice Johnson, of South Carolina, Mr. Justice Duval, and Mr. Justice Washington, of Virginia. Thus all the departments, and all the branches of the government, were ably and decorously filled, and the friends of popular representative institutions might contemplate their administration with pride and pleasure, and challenge their comparison with any government in the world.

CHAPTER II.

ADMISSION OF THE STATE OF MISSOURL

This was the exciting and agitating question of the session of 1820-'21. The question of restriction, that is, of prescribing the abolition of slavery, within her limits, had been "compromised" the session before, by agreeing to admit the State without restriction, and abolishing it in all the remainder of the province of Louisiana, north and west of the State of Missouri, and north of the parallel of 36 degrees, 30 minutes. This "compromise" was the work of the South, sustained by the united voice of Mr. Monroe's cabinet, the united voices of the Southern senators, and a majority of the Southern representatives. The unanimity of the cabinet has been shown, impliedly, by a letter of Mr. Monroe, and positively by the Diary of Mr. John Quincy Adams. The unanimity of the slave States in the Senate, where the measure originated, is shown by its journal, not on the motion to insert the section constituting the compremise (for on that motion the yeas and nays were not taken), but on the motion to strike it out, when they were taken, and showed 30 votes for the compromise, and 15 against it-every one of the latter from nonslaveholding States-the former comprehending every slave State vote present, and a few from the North. As the constitutionality of this compromise, and its binding force, have, in these latter times, begun to be disputed, it is well to give the list of the senators names voting for it, that it may be seen that they were men of judgment and weight, able to know what the consti tution was, and not apt to violate it. They were Governor Barbour and Governor Pleasants, of Virginia; Mr. James Brown and Governor Henry Johnson, of Louisiana; Governor Edwards and Judge Jesse B. Thomas, of Illinois; Mr. Elliott and Mr. Walker, of Georgia; Mr. Gaillard, President, pro tempore, of the Senate and Judge William Smith, from South Carolina Messrs. Horsey and Van Dyke, of Delaware; Colonel Richard M. Johnson and Judge Logan, from Kentucky; Mr. William R. King, since Vice-President of the United States, and Judge John W. Walker, from Alabama; Messrs. Leake and Thomas H. Williams, of Mississippi: Governor Edward Lloyd, and the great jurist and orator, William Pinkney, from Maryland; Mr. Macon and Governor Stokes, from North Carolina; Messrs. Walter Lowrie and Jonathan Roberts, from Pennsylvania; Mr. Noble and Judge Taylor, from Indiana; Mr. Palmer, from Vermont; Mr. Parrott, from New Hampshire. This was the vote of the Senate for the compromise. In the House, there was some division among Southern members; but the whole vote in favor of it was 134, to 42 in the negative—the latter comprising some Northern members, as the former did a majority of the Southernamong them one whose opinion had a weight never exceeded by that of any other American statesman, William Lowndes, of South Carolina, This array of names shows the Missouri compromise to have been a Southern measure, and the event put the seal upon that character by showing it to be acceptable to the South. . But it had not allayed the Northern feeling against an increase of slave States, then openly avowed to be a question of political power between the two sections of the Union. The State of Missouri made her constitution, sanctioning slavery, and forbidding the legislature to interfere with it. This prohibition, not usual in State constitutions, was the effect of the Missouri controversy and of foreign interference, and was adopted for the sake of peace—for the sake of internal tranquillity-and to prevent the agitation of the slave question, which could only be accomplished by excluding it wholly from the forum of elections and legislation. I was myself the instigator of that prohibition, and the cause of its being put into the constitution-though not a member of the conventi agitation an also a clause prohibit the into the Stat in Congress It was treate federal cons privileges in every State, emigration w being admitt States, this p to be a violat sons. But th slavery clause the State, wh perpetuate. T her application her late delega John Scott; a a select comm Carolina, Mr. and General Sa appointed the being from slave ly reported in fa But the majority way, the resolut by a clear slave exceptions being of admission, and their own State. of Massachusetts Mr. Bernard Sn Senate, the appli similar fate. The committee of th Smith, of South C Rhode Island, an lina, a majority of a resolution of a passed the Senateof Maine, voting w but was rejected tives. A second 1 passed the Senate, House. A motion by Mr. Clay to rais with any committe by the Senate, "to Senate and the Ho nat they were men of judge to know what the consti ot to violate it. They were nd Governor Pleasants, of s Brown and Governor Louisiana; Governor Edsse B. Thomas, of Illinois; Walker, of Georgia; Mr. ro tempore, of the Senate mith, from South Carolina Van Dyke, of Delaware; Johnson and Judge Logan, . William R. King, since United States, and Judge 1 Alabama; Messrs. Leake ams, of Mississippi; Gov-, and the great jurist and ney, from Maryland; Mr. Stokes, from North Caror Lowrie and Jonathan sylvania; Mr. Noble and ndiana; Mr. Palmer, from tt, from New Hampshire. the Senate for the comprothere was some division ibers; but the whole vote to 42 in the negative—the ne Northern members, as jority of the Southernose opinion had a weight at of any other American owndes, of South Carolina. shows the Missouri coma Southern measure, and I upon that character by ptable to the South. But Northern feeling against tates, then openly avowed litical power between the nion. The State of Misution, sanctioning slavery, slature to interfere with it. sual in State constitutions, Missouri controversy and and was adopted for the sake of internal tranquilthe agitation of the slave only be accomplished by om the forum of elections s myself the instigator of the cause of its being put -though not a member of the convention—being equally opposed to slavery agitation and to slavery extension. There was also a clause in it, authorizing the legislature to prohibit the emigration of free people of color into the State; and this clause was laid hold of in Congress to resist the admission of the State. It was treated as a breach of that clause in the federal constitution, which guarantees equal privileges in all the States to the citizens of every State, of which privileges the right of emigration was one; and free people of color being admitted to citizenship in some of the States, this prohibition of emigration was held to be a violation of that privilege in their persons. But the real point of objection was the slavery clause, and the existence of slavery in the State, which it sanctioned, and seemed to perpetuate. The constitution of the State, and her application for admission, was presented by her late delegate and representative elect, Mr. John Scott; and on his motion, was referred to a select committee, Mr. Lowndes, of South Carolina, Mr. John Sergeant, of Pennsylvania, and General Samuel Smith, of Maryland, were appointed the committee; and the majority being from slave States, a resolution was quickly reported in favor of the admission of the State. But the majority of the House being the other way, the resolution was rejected, 79 to 83-and by a clear slavery and anti-slavery vote, the exceptions being but three, and they on the side of admission, and contrary to the sentiment of their own State. They were Mr. Henry Shaw, of Massachusetts, and General Bloomfield and Mr. Bernard Smith, of New-Jersey. In the Senate, the application of the State shared a similar fate. The constitution was referred to a committee of three, Messrs. Judge William Smith, of South Carolina, Mr. James Burrill, of Rhode Island, and Mr. Macon, of North Carolina, a majority of whom being from slave States, a resolution of admission was reported, and passed the Senate-Messrs. Chandler and Holmes of Maine, voting with the friends of admission; but was rejected in the House of Representatives. A second resolution to the same effect passed the Senate, and was again rejected in the House. A motion was then made in the House by Mr. Clay to raise a committee to act jointly with any committee which might be appointed by the Senate, "to consider and report to the Senate and the House respectively, whether it close vote—86 to 82—several members from

be expedient or not, to make provision for the admission of Missouri into the Union on the same footing as the original States, and for the due execution of the laws of the United States within Missouri? and if not, whether any other. and what provision adapted to her actual condition ought to be made by law." This motion was adopted by a majority of nearly two to one-101 to 55-which shows a large vote in its favor from the non-slaveholding States. Twentythree, being a number equal to the number of the States, were then appointed on the part of the House, and were: Messrs. Clay, Thomas W. Cobb, of Georgia; Mark Langdon Hill, of Massachusetts; Philip P. Barbour, of Virginia; Henry R. Storrs, of New-York; John Cocke, of Tennessee, Christopher Rankin, of Mississippi; William S. Archer, of Virginia; William Brown, of Kentucky; Samuel Eddy, from Rhode Island; William D. Ford, of New-York; William Culbreth, Aaron Hackley, of New-York; Samuel Moore, of Pennsylvania, James Stevens, of Connecticut; Thomas J. Rogers, from Pennsylvania; Henry Southard, of New-Jersey; John Randolph; James S. Smith, of North Carolina; William Darlington, of Pennsylvania; Nathaniel Pitcher, of New-York; John Sloan, of Ohio, and Henry Baldwin, of Pennsylvania. The Senate by a vote almost unanimous-29 to 7-agreed to the joint committee proposed by the House of Representatives; and Messrs. John Holmes, of Maine; James Barbour, of Virginia; Jonathan Roberts, of Pennsylvania; David L. Morril, of New-Hampshire; Samuel L. Southard, of New-Jersey; Colonel Richard M. Johnson, of Kentucky; and Rufus King, of New-York, to be a committee on its part. The joint committee acted, and soon reported a resolution in favor of the admission of the State, upon the condition that her legislature should first declare that the clause in her constitution relative to the free colored emigration into the State, should never be construed to authorize the passage of any act by which any citizen of either of the States of the Union should be excluded from the enjoyment of any privilege to which he may be entitled under the constitution of the United States; and the President of the United States being furnished with a copy of said act, should, by proclamation, declare the State to be admitted. This resolution was passed in the House by a non-slaveholding States voting for it. In the Senate it was passed by two to one-28 to 14; and the required declaration having been soon made by the General Assembly of Missouri, and communicated to the President, his proclamation was issued accordingly, and the State admitted. And thus ended the "Missouri controversy," or that form of the slavery question which undertook to restrict a State from the privilege of having slaves if she chose. The question itself, under other forms, has survived, and still survives, but not under the formidable aspect which it wore during that controversy, when it divided Congress geographically, and upon the slave line. The real struggle was political, and for the balance of power, as frankly declared by Mr. Rufus King, who disdained dissimulation; and in that struggle the non-slaveholding States, though defeated in the State of Missouri, were successful in producing the "compromise," conceived and passed as a Southern measure. The resistance made to the admission of the State on account of the clause in relation to free people of color, was only a mask to the real cause of opposition, and has since shown to be so by the facility with which many States, then voting in a body against the admission of Missouri on that account, now exclude the whole class of the free colored emigrant population from their borders. and without question, by statute, or by constitutional amendment. For a while this formidable Missouri question threatened the total overthrow of all political parties upon principle, and the substitution of geographical parties discriminated by the slave line, and of course destroying the just and proper action of the federal government, and leading eventually to a separation of the States. It was a federal movement, accruing to the benefit of that party, and at first was overwhelming, sweeping all the Northern democracy into its current, and giving the supremacy to their adversaries. When this effect was perceived the Northern democracy became alarmed, and only wanted a turn or abatement in the popular feeling at home, to take the first opportunity to get rid of the question by admitting the State, and re-establishing party lines upon the basis of political principle. This was the decided feeling when I arrived at Washington, and many of the old Northern democracy took early opportunities to declare themselves to me to that effect, and showed that they were ready to vote the admission of the State in any form which would answer the purpose, and save themselves from going so far as to lose their own States, and give the ascendant to their political adversaries. In the Senate, Messrs. Low rie and Roberts, from Pennsylvania; Messrs. Morril and Parrott, from New-Hampshire; Messrs. Chandler and Holmes, from Maine; Mr. William Hunter, from Rhode Island; and Mr. Southard, from New-Jersey, were of tha class: and I cannot refrain from classing with them Messrs. Horsey and Vandyke, from Delaware, which, though counted as a slave State, yet from its isolated and salient position, and small number of slaves, seems more justly to belong to the other side. In the House the vote of nearly two to one in favor of Mr. Clay's resolution for a joint committee, and his being allowed to make out his own list of the House committee (for it was well known that he drew up the list of names himself, and distributed it through the House to be voted), sufficiently attest the temper of that body, and showed the determination of the great majority to have the question settled. Mr. Clay has been often complimented as the author of the "compromise" of 1820, in spite of his repeated declaration to the contrary. that measure coming from the Senate; but he is the undisputed author of the final settlement of the Missouri controversy in the actual admission of the State. He had many valuable coadjutors from the North-Baldwin, of Pennsylvania; Storrs and Meigs, of New-York; Shaw, of Massachusetts: and he had also some opponents from the South-members refusing to vote for the "conditional" admission of the State, holding her to be entitled to absolute admissionamong them Mr. Randolph. I have been minute in stating this controversy, and its settlement, deeming it advantageous to the public interest that history and posterity should see it in the proper point of view; and that it was a political movement for the balance of power, balked by the Northern democracy, who saw their own overthrow, and the eventual separation of the States, in the establishment of geographical parties divided by a slavery and anti-slavery line.

FINANCES.

THE distress of government. § diture then was of dollars (inclu nent or incident for the revenues trous period. F became the resor policy in all tin the forced policy lar army was the which the reduc was reduced nea 6,000 men. The appropriation of being reduced to tion and armame the like process. place at many oth tion of a clerkshi Attorney General below the econor After all a loan l President was autl of dollars. The then to be raised ment, small as it double the amount penses of the gove pense of its admini machinery. More or incidental object terest of the public gradual increase of sions, one and a $800,000; arms, m small items, about t whole about eleven expense of keeping ment in operation, a and which was red lions after the red effected. A sum of and above the esti government, was alw on of the State in any the purpose, and save o far as to lose their ascendant to their poe Senate, Messrs. Low Pennsylvania; Messrs. rom New-Hampshire; Holmes, from Maine; m Rhode Island; and r-Jersey, were of tha ain from classing with l Vandyke, from Delated as a slave State, yet ient position, and small more justly to belong he House the vote of or of Mr. Clay's resolue, and his being allowed of the House commitwn that he drew up the l distributed it through ), sufficiently attest the showed the determinaty to have the question een often complimented ompromise" of 1820, in aration to the contrary, m the Senate; but he is ' the final settlement of in the actual admission any valuable coadjutors win, of Pennsylvania; w-York; Shaw, of Masl also some opponents ers refusing to vote for ssion of the State, holdto absolute admissionph. I have been minute rsy, and its settlement, s to the public interest ity should see it in the nd that it was a political ice of power, balked by y, who saw their own ntual separation of the ent of geographical parand anti-slavery line.

CHAPTER III.

FINANCES.—REDUCTION OF THE ARMY.

THE distress of the country became that of the government. Small as the government expenditure then was, only about twenty-one millions of dollars (including eleven millions for permanent or incidental objects), it was still too great for the revenues of the government at this disastrous period. Reductions of expense, and loans, became the resort, and economy-that virtuous policy in all times—became the obligatory and the forced policy of this time. The small regular army was the first, and the largest object on which the reduction fell. Small as it was, it was reduced nearly one-half-from 10,000 to 6,000 men. The navy felt it next—the annual appropriation of one million for its increase being reduced to half a million. The construction and armament of fortifications underwent the like process. Reductions of expense took place at many other points, and even the abolition of a clerkship of $800 in the office of the Attorney General, was not deemed an object below the economical attention of Congress. After all a loan became indispensable, and the President was authorized to borrow five millions of dollars. The sum of twenty-one millions then to be raised for the service of the government, small as it now appears, was more than double the amount required for the actual expenses of the government-for the actual expense of its administration, or the working its machinery. More than half went to permanent or incidental objects, to wit: principal and interest of the public debt, five and a half millions; gradual increase of the navy, one million; pensions, one and a half millions; fortifications, $800,000; arms, munitions, ordnance, and other small items, about two millions; making in the whole about eleven millions, and leaving for the expense of keeping the machinery of government in operation, about ten millions of dollars; and which was reduced to less than nine millions after the reductions of this year were effected. A sum of one million of dollars, over and above the estimated expenditure of the provided and left in the treasury to meet contingencies—a sum which, though small in itself, was absolutely unnecessary for that purpose, and the necessity for which was founded in the mistaken idea that the government expends every year, within the year, the amount of its income. This is entirely fallacious, and never did and never can take place; for a large portion of the government payments accruing within the latter quarters of any year are not paid until the next year. And so on in every quarter of every year. The sums becoming payable in each quarter being in many instances, and from the nature of the service, only paid in the next quarter, while new revenue is coming in. This process regularly going on always leaves a balance in the treasury at the end of the year, not called for until the beginning of the next year, and when there is a receipt of money to meet the demand, even if there had been no balance in hand. Thus, at the end of the year 1820, one of the greatest depression, and when demands pressed most rapidly upon the treasury, there was a balance of above two millions of dollars in the treasury—to be precise, $2,076,607 14, being one-tenth of the annual revenue. In prosperous years the balance is still larger, sometimes amounting to the fourth, or the fifth of the annual revenue; as may be seen in the successive annual reports of the finances. There is, therefore, no necessity to provide for keeping any balance as a reserve in the treasury, though in later times this provision has been carried up to six millions—a mistake which economy, the science of administration, and the purity of the government, requires to be corrected.

CHAPTER 1V

RELIEF OF PUBLIC LAND DEBTORS.

expense of keeping the machinery of government in operation, about ten millions of dollars; and which was reduced to less than nine millions after the reductions of this year were effected. A sum of one million of dollars, over and above the estimated expenditure of the government, was always deemed necessary to be accumulated to twenty-three millions of dollars -a large sum in itself, but enormous when considered in reference to the payors, only a small proportion of the population, and they chiefly the inhabitants of the new States and territories, whose resources were few. Their situation was deplorable. A heavy debt to pay, and lands already partly paid for to be forfeited if full payment was not made. The system was this: the land was sold at a minimum price of two dollars per acre, one payment in hand and the remainder in four annual instalments, with forfeiture of all that had been paid if each successive instalment was not delivered to the day. In the eagerness to procure fresh lands, and stimulated by the delusive prosperity which multitudes of banks created after the war, there was no limit to purchasers except in the ability to make the first payment. That being accomplished, it was left to the future to provide for the remainder. The banks failed; money vanished; instalments were becoming due which could not be met; and the opening of Congress in November, 1820, was saluted by the arrival of memorials from all the new States, showing the distress, and praying relief to the purchasers of the public lands. The President, in his annual message to Congress, deemed it his duty to bring the subject before that body, and in doing so recommended indulgence in consideration of the unfavorable change which had occurred since the sales. Both Houses of Congress took up the subject, and a measure of relief was devised by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Crawford, which was equally desirable both to the purchaser and the government. The principle of the relief was to change all future sales from the credit to the cash system, and to reduce the minimum price of the lands to one dollar, twenty-five cents per acre, and to give all present debtors the benefit of that system, by, allowing them to consolidate payments already made on different tracts on any particular one, relinquishing the rest; and allowing a discount for ready pay on all that had been entered, equal to the difference between the former and present minimum price. This released the purchasers from debt, and the government from the inconvenient relation of creditor to its own citizens. A debt of twenty-three millions of dollars was quietly got rid of, and purchasers were enabled to save lands, at the reduced price, to the amount of their payments already made; and thus saved in all cases their homes and fields, and as much more of their purchases as they were able to pay for at the reduced rate. It was an equitable arrangement of a difficult subject, and lacked but two features to make it perfect; first, a pre-emptive right to all first settlers; and, secondly, a periodical reduction of price according to the length of time the land should have been in market, so as to allow of different prices for different qualities, and to accomplish in a reasonable time the sale of the whole. Applications were made at that time for the establishment of the pre-emptive system: but without effect, and, apparently without the prospect of eventual success. Not even a report of a committee could be got in its favor-nothing more than temporary provisions, as special favors, in particular circumstances. But perseverance was successful. The new States continued to press the question, and finally prevailed; and now the pre-emptive principle has become a fixed part of our land system, permanently incorporated with it, and to the equal advantage of the settler and the government. The settler gets a choice home in a new country, due to his enterprise, courage, hardships and privations in subduing the wilderness: the government gets a body of cultivators whose labor gives value to the surrounding public lands, and whose courage and patriotism volunteers for the public defence whenever it is necessary. The second, or graduation principle, though much pressed, has not vet been established, but its justice and policy are self-evident, and the exertions to procure it should not be intermitted until successful. The passage of this land relief bill was attended by incidents which showed the delicacy of members at that time, in voting on questions in which they might be interested. Many members of Congress were among the public land debtors, and entitled to the relief to be granted. One of their number, Senator William Smith, from South Carolina, brought the point before the Senate on a motion to be excused from voting on account of his interest. The motion to excuse was rejected, on the ground that his interest was general, in common with the country, and not particular, in relation to himself; and that his constituents were entitled to the benefit of his

n of

THE session of the first at wh Congress for tl our territory or part then owne Pacific coast, I presentative from great ability, as from an early re imbued with we subject with the and it required n embrace a subject more likely to b advocate. I had essays on the sub had read. Two g of New-York, an Massachusetts), w ment of Mr. John colony of Astoria, on the northwes Washington that w at the same hotel and I had ours. rally made by Wes knew them before; in information upon try, was eagerly de of Floyd. He reso question of occupati for a select commit upon the subject. by the House, more spected member, that results. It was a c chairman, according Thomas Metcalfe, of of the State), and Th Western Virginia, for himself ardent men, a ing. They reported a the committee was rais cupation of the Colum trade and intercourse thereon," accompanied

replete with valuable s

CHAPTER V.

yments already made:

cases their homes and

e of their purchases as or at the reduced rate.

angement of a difficult

two features to make it ptive right to all first periodical reduction of

ength of time the land

arket, so as to allow of erent qualities, and to le time the sale of the ere made at that time

he pre-emptive system;

apparently without the

ess. Not even a report

got in its favor-nothing provisions, as special fa-astances. But perseve-

he new States continued

d finally prevailed; and principle has become a system, permanently into the equal advantage

overnment. The settler

new country, due to his Iships and privations in : the government gets a ose labor gives value to ands, and whose courage

rs for the public defence

The second, or gradumuch pressed, has not

ut its justice and policy

exertions to procure it d until successful. The ief bill was attended by the delicacy of members

on questions in which

ed. Many members of

he public land debtors, ef to be granted. One or William Smith, from

it the point before the

be excused from voting

t. The motion to excuse und that his interest was

th the country, and not himself; and that his

ed to the benefit of his

OREGON TERRITORY.

THE session of 1820-21 is remarkable as being the first at which any proposition was made in Congress for the occupation and settlement of our territory on the Columbia River-the only part then owned by the United States on the Pacific coast. It was made by Dr. Floyd, a representative from Virginia, an ardent man, of great ability, and decision of character, and, from an early residence in Kentucky, strongly imbued with western feelings. He took up this subject with the energy which belonged to him, and it required not only energy, but courage, to embrace a subject which, at that time, seemed more likely to bring ridicule than credit to its advocate. I had written and published some essays on the subject the year before, which he had read. Two gentlemen (Mr. Ramsay Crooks, of New-York, and Mr. Russell Farnham, of Massachusetts), who had been in the employment of Mr. John Jacob Astor in founding his colony of Astoria, and carrying on the fur trade on the northwest coast of America, were at Washington that winter, and had their quarters at the same hotel (Brown's), where Dr. Floyd and I had ours. Their acquaintance was naturally made by Western men like us-in fact. I knew them before; and their conversation, rich in information upon a new and interesting country, was eagerly devoured by the ardent spirit of Floyd. He resolved to bring forward the question of occupation, and did so. He moved for a select committee to consider and report upon the subject. The committee was granted by the House, more through courtesy to a respected member, than with any view to business results. It was a committee of three, himself chairman, according to parliamentary rule, and Thomas Metcalfe, of Kentucky (since Governor of the State), and Thomas V. Swearingen, from Western Virginia, for his associates-both like himself ardent men, and strong in western feeling. They reported a bill within six days after the committee was raised, "to authorize the occupation of the Columbia River, and to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes thereon," accompanied by an elaborate report, measure. The fur trade, the Asiatic trade, and the preservation of our own territory, were the advantages proposed. The bill was treated with the parliamentary courtesy which respect for the committee required: it was read twice, and committed to a committee of the whole House for the next day-most of the members not considering it a serious proceeding. Nothing further was done in the House that session, but the first blow was struck: public attention was awakened, and the geographical, historical, and statistical facts set forth in the report, made a lodgment in the public mind which promised eventual favorable consideration. I had not been admitted to my seat in the Senate at the time, but was soon after, and quickly came to the support of Dr. Floyd's measure (who continued to pursue it with zeal and ability); and at a subsequent session presented some views on the subject which will bear reproduction at this time. The danger of a contest with Great Britain, to whom we had admitted a joint possession, and who had already taken possession, was strongly suggested, if we delayed longer our own occupation; "and a vigorous effort of policy, and perhaps of arms, might be necessary to break her hold." Unauthorized, or individual occupation was intimated as a consequence of government neglect, and what has since taken place was foreshadowed in this sentence: "mere adventurers may enter upon it, as Æneas entered upon the Tiber, and as our forefathers came upon the Potomac, the Delaware and the Hudson, and renew the phenomenon of individuals laying the foundation of a future empire." The effect upon Asia of the arrival of an American population on the coast of the Pacific Ocean was thus exhibited: "Upon the people of Eastern Asia the establishment of a civilized power on . the opposite coast of America, could not fail to produce great and wonderful benefits. Science, liberal principles in government, and the true religion, might cast their lights across the intervening sea. The valley of the Columbia might become the granary of China and Japan, and an outlet to their imprisoned and exuberant population. The inhabitants of the oldest and the newest, the most despotic and the freest governments, would become the neighbors, and the friends of each other. To my mind the proposition is clear, that Eastern Asia and the two Americas, replete with valuable statistics, in support of the as they become neighbors should become friends and I for one had as lief see American ministers going to the emperors of China and Japan, to the king of Persia, and even to the Grand Turk. as to see them dancing attendance upon those European legitimates who hold every thing American in contempt and detestation." Thus I spoke; and this I believe was the first time that a suggestion for sending ministers to the Oriental nations was publicly made in the United States. It was then a "wild" suggestion: it is now history. Besides the preservation of our own territory on the Pacific, the establishment of a port there for the shelter of our commercial and military marine, the profection of the fur trade and aid to the whaling vessels, the accomplishment of Mr. Jefferson's idea of a commercial communication with Asia through the heart of our own continent, was constantly insisted upon as a consequence of planting an American colony at the mouth of the Columbia. That man of large and useful ideas-that statesman who could conceive measures useful to all mankind, and in all time to come-was the first to propose that commercial communication, and may also be considered the first discoverer of the Columbia River. His philosophic mind told him that where a snow-clad mountain, like that of the Rocky Mountains, shed the waters on one side which collected into such a river as the Missouri, there must be a corresponding shedding and collection of waters on the other; and thus he was perfectly assured of the existence of a river where the Columbia has since been found to be, although no navigator had seen its mouth and no explorer trod its banks. His conviction was complete; but the idea was too grand and useful to be permitted to rest in speculation. He was then minister to France, and the famous traveller Ledvard, having arrived at Paris on his expedition of discovery to the Nile, was prevailed upon by Mr. Jefferson to enter upon a fresher and more useful field of discovery. He proposed to him to change his theatre from the Old to the New World, and, proceeding to St. Petersburg upon a passport he would obtain for him, he should there obtain permission from the Empress Catharine to traverse her dominions in a high northern latitude to their eastern extremity-cross the sea from Kamschatka, or at Behring's Straits, and descending the northwest coast of America, posite the head of the Missouri, ascend it to its source in the Rocky Mountains, and then follow the Missouri to the French settlements on the Upper Mississippi; and thence home. It was a magnificent and a daring project of discovery, and on that account the more captivating to the ardent spirit of Ledvard. He undertook itwent to St. Petersburg-received the permission of the Empress-and had arrived in Siberia when he was overtaken by a revocation of the permission, and conducted as a spy out of the country. He then returned to Paris, and resumed his original design of that exploration of the Nile to its sources which terminated in his premature death, and deprived the world of a young and adventurous explorer, from whose ardour, courage, perseverance and genius, great and useful results were to have been expected. Mr. Jefferson was balked in that, his first attempt, to establish the existence of the Columbia River. But a time was coming for him to undertake it under better auspices. He became President of the United States, and in that character projected the expedition of Lewis and Clark, obtained the sanction of Congress, and sent them forth to discover the head and course of the river (whose mouth was then known), for the double purpose of opening an inland commercial communication with Asia, and enlarging the boundaries of geographical science. The commercial object was placed first in his message, and as the object to legitimate the expedition. And thus Mr. Jefferson was the first to propose the North American road to India, and the introduction of Asiatic trade on that road; and all that I myself have either said or written on that subject from the year 1819, when I first took it up, down to the present day when I still contend for it, is nothing but the fruit of the seed planted in my mind by the philosophic hand of Mr. Jefferson. Honor to all those who shall assist in accomplishing his great idea.

CHAPTER VI.

FLORIDA TREATY AND CESSION OF TEXAS.

and descending the northwest coast of America, I was a member of the bar at St. Louis, in the come down upon the river which must head op- then territory of Missouri, in the year 1818, when the V known the which was s following, an away Texas. sion of Texas for the Unit acquisition o long sought, gress of event cutting off Te Mississippi, m brought a for holding), to t and establish Missouri and trade, separate wild Indian de perty of all w the other. In nothing to do y once the whole instantly raise published in t which were gi reasons against were afterward at the expense given to get it and attacked it imprecated a w should continue valley of the fountains, sprin statesman who drop of its wat foreign power." this spirit I wi ratified. Mr. Jo tary of State, ne of the treaty, wa my censure was sincere ip my b But the declarat on the floor of t censure on accou the blame on the net, southern mer governed in cedin ary which I so 1 authoritative decla the Senate, the ho Missouri, ascend it to its ountains, and then follow rench settlements on the I thence home. It was a ing project of discovery, e more captivating to the urd. He undertook it--received the permission had arrived in Siberia n by a revocation of the cted as a spy out of the urned to Paris, and regn of that exploration of which terminated in his deprived the world of a is explorer, from whose rerance and genius, great e to have been expected. ked in that, his first atexistence of the Columbia coming for him to underspices. He became Preates, and in that character on of Lewis and Clark, f Congress, and sent them head and course of the ras then known), for the ing an inland commercial Asia, and enlarging the hical science. The comaced first in his message, legitimate the expedition. n was the first to propose oad to India, and the inade on that road; and all er said or written on that 1819, when I first took it t day when I still contend ne fruit of the seed plantphilosophic hand of Mr. all those who shall assist eat idea.

TER VI.

ND CESSION OF TEXAS.

e bar at St. Louis, in the ssouri, in the year 1818, when the Washington City newspapers made known the progress of that treaty with Spain, which was signed on the 22d day of February following, and which, in acquiring Florida, gave away Texas. I was shocked at it-at the cession of Texas, and the new boundaries proposed for the United States on the southwest. The acquisition of Florida was a desirable object, long sought, and sure to be obtained in the progress of events; but the new boundaries, besides cutting off Texas, dismembered the valley of the Mississippi, mutilated two of its noblest rivers, brought a foreign dominion (and it non-slaveholding), to the neighborhood of New Orleans, and established a wilderness barrier between Missouri and New Mexico-to interrupt their trade, separate their inhabitants, and shelter the wild Indian depredators upon the lives and property of all who undertook to pass from one to the other. I was not then in politics, and had nothing to do with political affairs; but I saw at once the whole evil of this great sacrifice, and instantly raised my voice against it in articles published in the St. Louis newspapers, and in which were given, in advance, all the national reasons against giving away the country, which were afterwards, and by so many tongues, and at the expense of war and a hundred millions, given to get it back. I denounced the treaty, and attacked its authors and their motives, and imprecated a woe on the heads of those who should continue to favor it. "The magnificent valley of the Mississippi is ours, with all its fountains, springs and floods; and woe to the statesman who shall undertake to surrender one drop of its water, one inch of its soil, to any foreign power." In these terms I spoke, and in this spirit I wrote, before the treaty was even ratified. Mr. John Quincy Adams, the Secretary of State, negotiator and ostensible author of the treaty, was the statesman against whom my censure was directed, and I was certainly sincere in my belief of his great culpability. But the declaration which he afterwards made on the floor of the House, absolved him from censure on account of that treaty, and placed the blame on the majority in Mr. Monroe's cabinet, southern men, by whose vote he had been governed in ceding Texas and fixing the boundary which I so much condemned. After this authoritative declaration, I made, in my place in the Senate, the honorable amends to Mr. Adams, which was equally due to him and to myself. The treaty was signed on the anniversary of the birth-day of Washington, and sent to the Senate the same day, and unanimously ratified on the next day, with the general approbation of the country, and the warm applause of the newspaper press. This unanimity of the Senate, and applause of the press, made no impression upon me. I continued to assail the treaty and its authors, and the more bitterly, because the official correspondence, when published, showed that this great sacrifice of territory, rivers, and proper boundaries, was all gratuitous and voluntary on our part-" that the Spanish government had offered us more than we accepted;" and that it was our policy, and not hers, which had deprived us of Texas and the large country, in addition to Texas, which lay between the Red River and Upper Arkansas. This was an enigma, the solution of which, in my mind, strongly connected itself with the Missouri controversy then raging (1819) with its greatest violence. threatening existing political parties with subversion, and the Union with dissolution. My mind went there-to that controversy-for the solution, but with a misdirection of its application. I blamed the northern men in Mr. Monroe's cabinet: the private papers of General Jackson, which have come to my hands, enable me to correct that error, and give me an inside view of that which I could only see on the outside before. In a private letter from Mr. Monroe to General Jackson, dated at Washington. May 22d, 1820-more than one year after the negotiation of the treaty, written to justify it, and evidently called out by Mr. Clay's attack upon it-are these passages: "Having long known the repugnance with which the eastern portion of our Union, or rather some of those who have enjoyed its confidence (for I do not think that the people themselves have any interest or wish of that kind), have seen its aggrandizement to the West and South, I have been decidedly of opinion that we ought to be content with Florida for the present, and until the public opinion in that quarter shall be reconciled to any further change. I mention these circumstances to show you that our difficulties are not with Spain alone, but are likewise internal, proceeding from various causes, which certain men are prompt to seize and turn to the account of their own ambitious views." This paragraph from Mr. Monroe's letter lifts the curtain which concealed the secret reason for ceding Texasthat secret which explains what was incomprehensible—our having refused to accept as much as Spain had offered. Internal difficulties, it was thus shown, had induced that refusal; and these difficulties grew out of the repugnance of leading men in the northeast to see the further aggrandizement of the Union upon the South and West. This repugnance was then taking an operative form in the shape of the Missouri controversy; and, as an immediate consequence, threatened the subversion of political party lines, and the introduction of the slavery question into the federal elections and legislation, and bringing into the highest of those elections-those of President and Vice-President—a test which no southern candidate could stand. The repugnance in the northeast was not merely to territorial aggrandizement in the southwest, but to the consequent extension of slavery in that quarter; and to allay that repugnance, and to prevent the slavery extension question from becoming a test in the presidential election, was the true reason for giving away Texas, and the true solution of the enigma involved in the strange refusal to accept as much as Spain offered. The treaty was disapproved by Mr. Jefferson, to whom a similar letter was written to that sent to General Jackson, and for the same purposeto obtain his approbation; but he who had acquired Louisiana, and justly gloried in the act, could not bear to see that noble province mutilated, and returned his dissent to the act, and his condemnation of the policy on which it was done. General Jackson had yielded to the arguments of Mr. Monroe, and consented to the cession of Texas as a temporary measure. The words of his answer to Mr. Monroe's letter were: "I am clearly of your opinion, that, for the present, we ought to be contented with the Floridas." But Mr. Jefferson would yield to no temporary views of policy, and remained inflexibly opposed to the treaty; and in this he was consistent with his own conduct in similar circumstances. . Sixteen years before, he had been in the same circumstances—at the time of the acquisition of Louisiana-when he had the same repugnance to southwestern aggrandizement to contend with, and the same bait (Florida) to tempt him. Then eastern men raised the same

four months after the purchase of Louisianahe wrote to Dr. Breckenridge: "Objections are raising to the eastward to the vast extent of our boundaries, and propositions are made to exchange Louisiana, or a part of it, for the Floridas; but as I have said, we shall get the Floridas without; and I would not give one inch of the waters of the Mississippi to any foreign nation." So that Mr. Jefferson, neither in 1803 nor in 1819, would have mutilated Louisiana to obtain the cession of Florida, which he knew would be obtained without that mutilation; nor would he have yielded to the threatening discontent in the east. I have a gratification that, without knowing it, and at a thousand miles from him, I took the same ground that Mr. Jefferson stood on, and even used his own words: "Not an inch of the waters of the Mississippi to any nation." But I was mortified at the time, that not a paper in the United States backed my essays. It was my first experience in standing "solitary and alone;" but I stood it without flinching, and even incurred the imputation of being opposed to the administration-had to encounter that objection in my first election to the Senate, and was even viewed as an opponent by Mr. Monroe himself, when I first came to Washington. He had reason to know before his office expired, and still more after it expired, that no one (of the young generation) had a more exalted opinion of his honesty, patriotism, firmness and general soundness of judgment; or would be more ready, whenever the occasion permitted, to do justice to his long and illustrious career of public service. The treaty, as I have said, was promptly and unanimously ratified by the American Senate; not so on the part of Spain. She hesitated, delayed, procrastinated; and finally suffered the time limited for the exchange of ratifications to expire, without having gone through that indispensable formality. Of course this put an end to the treaty, unless it could be revived; and, thereupon, new negotiations and vehement expostulations against the conduct which refused to ratify a treaty negotiated upon full powers and in conformity to instructions. It was in the course of this renewed negotiation, and of these warm expostulations, that Mr. Adams used the strong expressions to the Spanish ministry, so enigmatical at the time, "That Spain had offered more objections; and as early as August 1803-only | than we accepted, and that she dare not deny Finally, it. " treaty was rai Mr. Clay had House of Repr but exciting so he gave and th bers who conc very certainly to General Ja were contempo some expression son, which ev movement. Th October, 1820, 1 it became neces American Senat of 1820-21. It unanimously, bi given against it namely: Colone tucky; Colonel Mr. James Bro Trimble, of Ohio and a senator ele seat, in consequer the new State of 1 had no opportun the treaty. But gave me an oppor tion, and to appear as an enemy to it. the treaty was sti crastination in the tions, Mexico (to v Louisiana and the tached), itself cease established her inde nish authority, and mother country. the treaty by prorun and mark the passed at the time treaty; it came up was opposed by m upon the grounds of treaty, but on the fu that the revolution in pendence—had super the whole article of was with Mexico he settle them. The act sweeping majority, th purchase of Louisianaenridge: "Objections are to the vast extent of our sitions are made to expart of it, for the Flori-, we shall get the Floriuld not give one inch of ississippi to any foreign Jefferson, neither in 1803 e mutilated Louisiana to Florida, which he knew out that mutilation; nor to the threatening disconave a gratification that, nd at a thousand miles me ground that Mr. Jefen used his own words: ters of the Mississippi to is mortified at the time, United States backed my t experience in standing but I stood it without urred the imputation of administration-had to n in my first election to n viewed as an opponent , when I first came to reason to know before till more after it expired, oung generation) had a his honesty, patriotism, indness of judgment; or whenever the occasion e to his long and illuservice. The treaty, as I y and unanimously rati-Senate; not so on the sitated, delayed, procrasffered the time limited fications to expire, withugh that indispensable this put an end to the be revived; and, thereand vehement expostulat which refused to ratify ı full powers and in con-

It was in the course tion, and of these warm Adams used the strong ish ministry, so enigma-Spain had offered more that she dare not deny it." Finally, after the lapse of a year or so, the treaty was ratified by Spain. In the mean time Mr. Clay had made a movement against it in the House of Representatives, unsuccessful, of course, but exciting some sensation, both for the reasons he gave and the vote of some thirty-odd members who concurred with him. This movement very certainly induced the letters of Mr. Monroe to General Jackson and Mr. Jefferson, as they were contemporaneous (May, 1820), and also some expressions in the letter to General Jackson, which evidently referred to Mr. Clay's movement. The ratification of Spain was given October, 1820, and being after the time limited, it became necessary to submit it again to the American Senate, which was done at the session of 1820-21. It was ratified again, and almost unanimously, but not quite, four votes being given against it, and all by western senators, namely: Colonel Richard M. Johnson, of Kentucky; Colonel John Williams, of Tennessee; Mr. James Brown, of Louisiana, and Colonel Trimble, of Ohio. I was then in Washington, and a senator elect, though not yet entitled to a seat, in consequence of the delayed admission of the new State of Missouri into the Union, and so had no opportunity to record my vote against the treaty. But the progress of events soon gave me an opportunity to manifest my opposition, and to appear in the parliamentary history as an enemy to it. The case was this: While the treaty was still encountering Spanish procrastination in the delay of exchanging ratifications. Mexico (to which the amputated part of Louisiana and the whole of Texas was to be attached), itself ceased to belong to Spain. She established her independence, repulsed all Spanish authority, and remained at war with the mother country. The law for giving effect to the treaty by providing for commissioners to run and mark the new boundary, had not been passed at the time of the ratification of the treaty; it came up after I took my seat, and was opposed by me. I opposed it, not only upon the grounds of original objections to the treaty, but on the further and obvious ground. that the revolution in Mexico-her actual independence-had superseded the Spanish treaty in the whole article of the boundaries, and that it was with Mexico herself that we should now settle them. The act was passed, however, by a sweeping majority, the administration being for all the vast expanse of Louisiana north of 36

it, and senators holding themselves committed by previous votes; but the progress of events soon justified my opposition to it. The country being in possession of Mexico, and she at war with Spain, no Spanish commissioners could go there to join ours in executing it; and so the act remained a dead letter upon the statutebook. Its futility was afterwards acknowledged by our government, and the misstep corrected by establishing the boundary with Mexico herself. This was done by treaty in the year 1828, adopting the boundaries previously agreed upon with Spain, and consequently amputating our rivers (the Red and the Arkansas), and dismembering the valley of the Mississippi, to the same extent as was done by the Spanish treaty of 1819. I opposed the ratification of the treaty with Mexico for the same reason that I opposed its original with Spain, but without success. Only two senators voted with me, namely, Judge William Smith, of South Carolina, and Mr. Powhatan Ellis, of Mississippi. Thus I saw this treaty, which repulsed Texas, and dismembered the valley of the Mississippi-which placed a foreign dominion on the upper halves of the Red River and the Arkansas-placed a foreign power and a wilderness between Missouri and New Mexico, and which brought a non-slaveholding empire to the boundary line of the State of Louisiana, and almost to the southwest corner of Missouri-saw this treaty three times ratified by the American Senate, as good as unanimously every time, and with the hearty concurrence of the American press. Yet I remained in the Senate to sec. within a few years, a political tempest sweeping the land and overturning all that stood before it, to get back this very country which this treaty had given away; and menacing the Union itself with dissolution, if it was not immediately done, and without regard to consequences. But of this hereafter. The point to be now noted of this treaty of 1819, is, that it completed, very nearly, the extinction of slave territory within the limits of the United States, and that it was the work of southern men, with the sanction of the South. It extinguished or cut off the slave territory beyond the Mississippi, below 36 degrees, 30 minutes, all except the diagram in Arkansas, which was soon to become a State. The Missouri compromise line had interdicted slavery in degrees, 30 minutes; this treaty gave away, first | which occasioned the cession of Texas to Spain. to Spain, and then to Mexico, nearly all the slave territory south of that line; and what little was left by the Spanish treaty was assigned in perpetuity by laws and by treaties to different Indian tribes. These treaties (Indian and Spanish), together with the Missouri compromise line—a measure contemporaneous with the treaty-extinguished slave soil in all the United States territory west of the Mississippi, except in the diagram which was to constitute the State of Arkansas; and, including the extinction in Texas consequent upon its cession to a nonslaveholding power, constituted the largest territorial abolition of slavery that was ever effected by the political power of any nation. The ordinance of 1787 had previously extinguished slavery in all the northwest territory-all the country east of the Mississippi, above the Ohio, and out to the great lakes; so that, at this moment-era of the second election of Mr. Monroe-slave soil, except in Arkansas and Florida, was extinct in the territory of the United States. The growth of slave States (except of Arkansas and Florida) was stopped; the increase of free States was permitted in all the vast expanse from Lake Michigan and the Mississippi River to the Rocky Mountains, and to Oregon; and there was not a ripple of discontent visible on the surface of the public mind at this mighty transformation of slave into free territory. No talk then about dissolving the Union, if every citizen was 'not allowed to go with all his "property," that is, all his slaves, to all the territory acquired by the "common blood and treasure" of all the Union. But this belongs to the chapter of 1844, whereof I have the material to write the true and secret history, and hope to use it with fairness. with justice, and with moderation. The outside view of the slave question in the United States at this time, which any chronicler can write, is, that the extension of slavery was then arrested. circumscribed, and confined within narrow territorial limits, while free States were permitted an almost unlimited expansion. That is the outside view; the inside is, that all this was the work of southern men, candidates for the presidency, some in abeyance, some in præsenti, and all yielding to that repugnance to territorial aggrandizement, and slavery extension in the southwest, which Mr. Monroe mentioned in his letter to General Jackson as the "internal difficulty"

This chapter is a point in the history of the times which will require to be understood by all who wish to understand and appreciate the events and actors of twenty years later.

CHAPTER VII.

DEATH OF MR. LOWNDES.

I HAD but a slight acquaintance with Mr. Lowndes. He resigned his place on account of declining health soon after I came into Congress; but all that I saw of him confirmed the impression of the exalted character which the public voice had ascribed to him. Virtue, modesty, benevolence, patriotism were the qualities of his heart; a sound judgment, a mild persuasive elocution were the attributes of his mind; his manners gentle, natural, cordial, and inexpressibly engaging. He was one of the galaxy, as it was well called, of the brilliant young men which South Carolina sent to the House of Representatives at the beginning of the war of 1812-Calhoun, Cheves, Lowndes; -and was soon the brightest star in that constellation. He was one of those members, rare in all assemblies, who, when he spoke, had a cluster around him, not of friends, but of the House-members quitting their distant seats, and gathering up close about him, and showing by their attention, that each one would feel it a personal loss to have missed a word that he said. It was the attention of affectionate confidence. He imparted to others the harmony of his own feelings, and was the moderator as well as the leader of the House and was followed by its sentiment in all case in which inexorable party feeling, or some powerful interest, did not rule the action of the members; and even then he was courteously and deferentially treated. It was so the only time I ever heard him speak—session of 1820-21 and on the inflammable subject of the admission of the State of Missouri-a question on which the inflamed passions left no room for the influence of reason and judgment, and in which the members voted by a geographical line. Mr. Lowndes was of the democratic school, and strongly indicated for an indicated by not by any managementshrunk, as f He was nom tive State for fore the event pressed that s itself, and so was true, "T neither to be s the age of fort age, and in the country, was i public and na biographies, bu some eminent fame belongs to up its own title

CH

DEATH

HE died at Was the Congress of the Supreme Cor tioner. He fell 1 of his strength, under the double and of the Senate centration of the preparation of his in his day the fi will hardly keep cause he spoke m reader—to the pre avoided the care speeches. He lab for the effect of the of present victory. the crowded galler which went forth which crowned the lication of what v applause, giving as speech would not delivered one. His cession of Texas to Spain. in the history of the times be understood by all who and appreciate the events rears later.

TER VII.

MR. LOWNDES.

acquaintance with Mr. ed his place on account of fter I came into Congress; him confirmed the impresharacter which the public him. Virtue, modesty, n were the qualities of his ent, a mild persuasive eloutes of his mind; his mancordial, and inexpressibly e of the galaxy, as it was illiant young men which o the House of Representg of the war of 1812-Caldes ;-and was soon the onstellation. He was one re in all assemblies, who, cluster around him, not House-members quitting I gathering up close about their attention, that each sonal loss to have missed

It was the attention of . He imparted to others wn feelings, and was the the leader of the House its sentiment in all case arty feeling, or some powule the action of the memhe was courteously and It was so the only time ık-session of 1820-21e subject of the admission i-a question on which the no room for the influence it, and in which the memuphical line. Mr. Lowndes school, and strongly indicated for an early elevation to the presidencyindicated by the public will and judgment, and not by any machinery of individual or party management-from the approach of which he shrunk, as from the touch of contamination. He was nominated by the legislature of his native State for the election of 1824; but died before the event came round. It was he who expressed that sentiment, so just and beautiful in itself, and so becoming in him because in him it was true, "That the presidency was an office neither to be sought, nor declined." He died at the age of forty-two; and his death at that early age, and in the impending circumstances of the country, was felt by those who knew him as a public and national calamity. I do not write biographies, but note the death and character of some eminent deceased contemporaries, whose fame belongs to the country, and goes to make up its own title to the respect of the world.

CHAPTER VIII.

DEATH OF WILLIAM PINKNEY.

HE died at Washington during the session of the Congress of which he was a member, and of the Supreme Court of which he was a practitioner. He fell like the warrier, in the plenitude of his strength, and on the field of his fameunder the double labors of the Supreme Court and of the Senate, and under the immense concentration of thought which he gave to the preparation of his speeches. He was considered in his day the first of American orators, but will hardly keep that place with posterity, because he spoke more to the hearer than to the reader—to the present than to the absent—and avoided the careful publication of his own speeches. He labored them hard, but it was for the effect of their delivery, and the triumph of present victory. He loved the admiration of the crowded gallery—the trumpet-tongued fame which went forth from the forum-the victory which crowned the effort; but avoided the publication of what was received with so much applause, giving as a reason that the published speech would not sustain the renown of the delivered one. His forte as a speaker lay in his sistance to British power, he looks to the spirit judgment, his logic, his power of argument; but, like many other men of acknowledged preeminence in some great gift of nature, and who are still ambitious of some inferior gift, he courted his imagination too much, and laid too much stress upon action and delivery—so potent upon the small circle of actual hearers, but so lost upon the national audience which the press now gives to a great speaker. In other respects Mr. Pinkney was truly a great orator, rich in his material, strong in his argument-clear, natural and regular in the exposition of his subject, comprehensive in his views, and chaste in his diction. His speeches, both senatorial and forensic, were fully studied and laboriously prepared-all the argumentative parts carefully digested under appropriate heads, and the showy passages often fully written out and committed to memory. He would not speak at all except upon preparation; and at sexagenarian agethat at which I knew him-was a model of study and of labor to all young men. His last speech in the Senate was in reply to Mr. Rufus King, on the Missouri question, and was the master effort of his life. The subject, the place, the audience, the antagonist, were all such as to excite him to the utmost exertion. The subject was a national controversy convulsing the Union and menacing it with dissolution; the place was the American Senate; the audience was Europe and America; the antagonist was PRINCEPS SENATUS, illustrious for thirty years of diplomatic and senatorial service, and for great dignity of life and character. He had ample time for preparation, and availed himself of it. Mr. King had spoken the session before and published the "Substance" of his speeches (for there were two of them), after the adjournment of Congress. They were the signal guns for the Missouri controversy. It was to these published speeches that Mr. Pinkney replied, and with the interval between two sessions to prepare. It was a dazzling and overpowering reply, with the prestige of having the union and the harmony of the States for its object, and crowded with rich material. The most brilliant part of it was a highly-wrought and splendid amplification (with illustrations from Greek and Roman history), of that passage in Mr. Burke's speech upon "Conciliation with the Colonies," in which, and in looking to the elements of American re-

of the slaveholding colonies as a main ingredient, and attributes to the masters of slaves, who are not themselves slaves, the highest love of liberty and the most difficult task of subjection. It was the most gorgeous speech ever delivered in the Senate, and the most applauded; but it was only a magnificent exhibition, as Mr. Pinkney knew, and could not sustain in the reading the plaudits it received in delivery; and therefore he avoided its publication. He gave but little attention to the current business of the Senate, only appearing in his place when the "Salaminian galley was to be launched," or some special occasion called him-giving his time and labor to the bar, where his pride and glory was. He had previously served in the House of Representatives, and his first speech there was attended by an incident illustrative of Mr. Randolph's talent for delicate intimation, and his punctilious sense of parliamentary etiquette. Mr. Pinkney came into the House with a national reputation, in the fulness of his fame, and exciting a great expectation—which he was obliged to fulfil. He spoke on the treatymaking power-a question of diplomatic and constitutional law; and he having been minister to half the courts of Europe, attorney general of the United States, and a jurist by profession, could only speak upon it in one way-as a great master of the subject; and, consequently, appeared as if instructing the House. Mr. Randolph-a veteran of twenty years' parliamentary service-thought a new member should serve a little apprenticeship before he became an instructor, and wished to signify that to Mr. Pinkney. He had a gift, such as man never had, at a delicate intimation where he desired to give a hint, without offence; and he displayed it on this occasion. He replied to Mr. Pinkney, referring to him by the parliamentary designation of "the member from Maryland;" and then pausing, as if not certain, added, "I believe he is from Maryland." This implied doubt as to where he came from, and consequently as to who he was, amused Mr. Pinkney, who understood it perfectly, and taking it right, went over to Mr. Randolph's seat, introduced himself, and assured him that he was "from Maryland." They became close friends for ever after; and it was Mr. Randolph who first made known his leath in the House of Representatives, interruptng for that purpose an angry debate, then raging, with a beautiful and apt quotation from the quarrel of Adam and Eve at their expulsion from paradise. The published debates give this account of it: "Mr. Randolph rose to announce to the House an event which he hoped would put an end, at least for this day, to all further jar or collision, here or elsewhere, among the members of this body. Yes, for this one day, at least, let us say, as our first mother said to our first father—

'While yet we live, scarce one short hour perhaps, Between us two let there be peace.'

"I rise to announce to the House the not unlooked for death of a man who filled the first place in the public estimation, in the first profession in that estimation, in this or in any other country. We have been talking of General Jackson, and a greater than him is, not here, but gone for ever. I allude, sir, to the boast of Maryland, and the pride of the United States—the pride of all of us, but more particularly the pride and ornament of the profession of which you, Mr. Speaker (Mr. Philip P. Barbour), are a member, and an eminent one."

Mr. Pinkney was kind and affable in his temper, free from every taint of envy or jealousy, conscious of his powers, and relying upon them alone for success. He was a model, as I have already said, and it will bear repetition, to all young men in his habits of study and application, and at more than sixty years of age was still a severe student. In politics he classed democratically, and was one of the few of our eminent public men who never seemed to think of the presidency. Oratory was his glory, the law his profession, the bar his theatre; and his service in Congress was only a brief episode, dazzling each House, for he was a momentary member of each, with a single and splendid speech.

CHAPTER IX.

ABOLITION OF THE INDIAN FACTORY SYSTEM.

The experience of the Indian factory system, is an illustration of the unfitness of the federal government to carry on any system of trade, the liability of the benevolent designs of the government to tecting and of our India the year 17 President 1 counteract t then allowed United State the Indians f ers, and for t cost and carr tries at fair a sold on accou fray the expe serve the capi to the treasury goods were pu ed States-th paid out of the was to be one Indians, guard and oaths pre Being an exper a temporary ac way in which e in legislation. system did not been expected-Indians-no cou an injury to ou the United Sta made to get rid up by continued ter of a centuryof Washington b abuses which he press and punis State, I had seen seen its inside wo to be entirely co signs of its pro this, soon after 1 Senate, to Mr. War, to whose d this branch of ser him the abolition good an opinion Mr. Thomas L. Me thing was wrong his countenance to that I was right, I tion before the Sen all and apt quotation from and Eve at their expulsion ublished debates give this tandolph rose to announce it which he hoped would or this day, to all further or elsewhere, among the . Yes, for this one day, sour first mother said to arce one short hour perhaps, there be peace.'

to the House the not unman who filled the first mation, in the first profeson, in this or in any other been talking of General er than him is, not here, allude, sir, to the boast pride of the United States us, but more particularly ent of the profession of ker (Mr. Philip P. Barand an eminent one."

kind and affable in his y taint of envy or jealousy, is, and relying upon them was a model, as I have rill bear repetition, to all pits of study and application sixty years of age was. In politics he classed as one of the few of our ho never seemed to think ratory was his glory, the bar his theatre; and his was only a brief episode, for he was a momentary has single and splendid ne Indian factory system, ne unfitness of the federal on any system of trade, evolent designs of the government to be abused, and the difficulty of detecting and redressing abuses in the management of our Indian affairs. This system originated in the year 1796, under the recommendation of President Washington, and was intended to counteract the influence of the British traders, then allowed to trade with the Indians of the United States within our limits; also to protect the Indians from impositions from our own traders, and for that purpose to sell them goods at cost and carriage, and receive their furs and peltries at fair and liberal prices; and which being sold on account of the United States, would defray the expenses of the establishment, and preserve the capital undiminished—to be returned to the treasury at the end of the experiment. The goods were purchased at the expense of the United States—the superintendent and factors were paid out of the treasury, and the whole system was to be one of favor and benevolence to the Indians, guarded by the usual amount of bonds and oaths prescribed by custom in such cases. Being an experiment, it was first established by a temporary act, limited to two years—the usual way in which equivocal measures get a foothold in legislation. It was soon suspected that this system did not work as disinterestedly as had been expected—that it was of no benefit to the Indians-no counteraction to British tradersan injury to our own fur trade-and a loss to the United States; and many attempts were made to get rid of it, but in vain. It was kept up by continued temporary renewals for a quarter of a century-from 1796 to 1822-the name of Washington being always invoked to continue abuses which he would have been the first to repress and punish. As a citizen of a frontier State, I had seen the working of the systemseen its inside working, and knew its operation to be entirely contrary to the benevolent designs of its projectors. I communicated all this, soon after my admission to a seat in the Senate, to Mr. Calhoun, the Secretary at War, to whose department the supervision of this branch of service belonged, and proposed to him the abolition of the system; but he had too good an opinion of the superintendent (then Mr. Thomas L. McKinney), to believe that any thing was wrong in the business, and refused his countenance to my proposition. Confident that I was right, I determined to bring the question before the Senate—did so—brought in a bill to abolish the factories, and throw open the fur trade to individual enterprise, and supported the bill with all the facts and reasons of which I was master. The bill was carried through both Houses, and became a law; but not without the strenuous opposition which the attack of every abuse for ever encounters-not that any member favored the abuse, but that those interested in it were vigilant and active, visiting the members who would permit such visits, furnishing them with adverse statements, lauding the operation of the system, and constantly lugging in the name of Washington as its author. When the system was closed up, and the inside of it seen, and the balance struck, it was found how true all the representations were which had been made against it. The Indians had been imposed upon in the quality and prices of the goods sold them; a general trade had been carried on with the whites as well as with the Indians; large per centums had been charged upon every thing sold; and the total capital of three hundred thousand dollars was lost and gone. It was a loss which, at that time (1822), was considered large, but now (1850) would be considered small; but its history still has its uses, in showing how differently from its theory a well intended act may operate—how long the Indians and the government may be cheated without knowing it—and how difficult it is to get a bad law discontinued (where there is an interest in keeping it up), even though first adopted as a temporary measure, and as a mere experiment. It cost me a strenuous exertion-much labor in collecting facts, and much speaking in laying them before the Senate—to get this two years' law discontinued, after twenty-five years of injurious operation and costly experience. Of all the branches of our service, that of the Indian affairs is most liable to abuse, and its abuses the most difficult of detection.

TER IX.

NDIAN FACTORY SYSTEM.

CHAPTER X.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENT.

The Presidential election of 1824 was approaching, the candidates in the field, their respective friends active and busy, and popular topics for the canvass in earnest requisition. The

New-York canal had just been completed, and had brought great popularity to its principal advocate (De Witt Clinton), and excited a great appetite in public men for that kind of fame. Roads and canals-meaning common turnpike, for the steam car had not then been invented, nor McAdam impressed his name on the new class of roads which afterwards were it-were all the vogue; and the candidates for the Presidency spread their sails upon the ocean of internal improvements. Congress was full of projects for different objects of improvement, and the friends of each candidate exerted themselves in rivalry of each other, under the supposition that their opinions would stand for those of their principals. Mr. Adams, Mr. Clay, and Mr. Calhoun, were the avowed advocates of the measure, going thoroughly for a general national system of internal improvement: Mr. Crawford and General Jackson, under limitations and qualifications. The Cumberland road, and the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, were the two prominent objects discussed; but the design extended to a general system, and an act was finally passed, intended to be annual and permanent, to appropriate $30,000 to make surveys of national routes. Mr. Monroe signed this bill as being merely for the collection of information, but the subject drew from him the most elaborate and thoroughly considered opinion upon the general question which has ever been delivered by any of our statesmen. It was drawn out by the passage of an act to provide for the preservation and repair of the Cumberland road, and was returned by him to the House in which it originated, with his objections, accompanied by a state paper, in exposition of his opinions upon the whole subject; for the whole subject was properly before him. The act which he had to consider, though modestly entitled for the "preservation" and "repair" of the Cumberland road, yet, in its mode of accomplishing that purpose, assumed the whole of the powers which were necessary to the execution of a general system. It passed with singular unanimity through both Houses, in the Senate, only seven votes against it, of which I afterwards felt proud to have been one. 'He denied the power; but before examining the arguments for and against it, very properly laid down the amount and variety of jurisdiction and authority which it would require the federal government to exercise within the States, in order to execute a system, and that in each and every part-in every mile of each and every canal road-it should undertake to construct. He began with acquiring the right of way, and pursued it to its results in the construction and preservation of the work, involving jurisdiction, ownership, penal laws, and administration. Commissioners, he said, must first be appointed to trace a route, and to acquire a right to the ground over which the road or canal was to pass, with a sufficient breadth for each. The ground could only be acquired by voluntary grants from individuals, or by purchases, or by condemnation of the property, and fixing its value through a jury of the vicinage, if they refused to give or sell, or demanded an exorbitant price. After all this was done, then came the repairs, the care of which was to be of perpetual duration, and of a kind to provide against criminal and wilful injuries, as well as against the damages of accident, and deterioration from time and use. There are persons in every community capable of committing voluntary injuries, of pulling down walls that are made to sustain the road ; of breaking the bridges over water-courses, and breaking the road itself. Some living near it might be disappointed that it did not pass through their lands, and commit these acts of violence and waste from revenge. To prevent these crimes Congress must have a power to pass laws to punish the offenders, wherever they may be found. Jurisdiction over the road would not be sufficient, though it were exclusive. There must be power to follow the offenders wherever they might go. It would seldom happen that the parties would be detected in the act. They would generally commit it in the night, and fly far off before the sun appeared. Right of pursuit must attach, or the power of punishing become nugatory. Tribunals, State or federal, must be invested with power to execute the law. Wilful injuries would require all this assumption of power, and machinery of administration, to punish and prevent them. Repair of natural deteriorations would require the application of a different remedy. Toll gates, and persons to collect the tolls, were the usual resort for repairing this class of injuries, and keeping the road in order Congress must have power to make such an establishment, and to enact a code of regulations for it, with fines and penalties, and agents to execute it. To all these exercises of authority

the question may be rais position might containent thus to roads and coollision woo ernments, eadependent in pute.

Thus did 1 practical bear sults, and the difficulties wi involved; an made—the b working of th argument aga rights, and th might have ac able by the f inexpedient. examined it un derivation unde power, and for them, and virtu These were, offices and postthird, to regular fourth, the pow for the common the United Stat cessary and prop ed (enumerated) to dispose of, and gulations respect perty of the Un enumeration of t Mr. Monroe well tiplicity was an a each one was re cates for each of th could not agree an single source of t sought for from pl which proclaimed Still he examined e order, and effectual 1. The post-office word "establish" and offices were the act. And how? and that in each and every of each and every canal rtake to construct. He bethe right of way, and purin the construction and preork, involving jurisdiction, ws, and administration. id, must first be appointed I to acquire a right to the e road or canal was to pass, dth for each. The ground d by voluntary grants from irchases, or by condemnaand fixing its value through , if they refused to give or exorbitant price. After en came the repairs, the care of perpetual duration, and against criminal and wilful rainst the damages of acciion from time and use. a every community capable ntary injuries, of pulling made to sustain the road; es over water-courses, and tself. Some living near it that it did not pass through mit these acts of violence enge. To prevent these t have a power to pass laws rs, wherever they may be over the road would not it were exclusive. There low the offenders wherever uld seldom happen that the ted in the act. They would the night, and fly far off be-

Right of pursuit must atunishing become nugatory. federal, must be invested e the law. Wilful injuries assumption of power, and tration, to punish and preof natural deteriorations plication of a different reand persons to collect the resort for repairing this keeping the road in order ower to make such an estaact a code of regulations d penalties, and agents to hese exercises of authority the question of the constitutionality of the law may be raised by the prosecuted party. But opposition might not stop with individuals. States might contest the right of the federal government thus to possess and to manage all the great roads and canals within their limits; and then a collision would be brought on between two governments, each claiming to be sovereign and independent in its actions over the subject in dispute.

Thus did Mr. Monroe state the question in its practical bearings, traced to their legitimate results, and the various assumptions of power, and difficulties with States or individuals which they involved; and the bare statement which he made—the bare presentation of the practical working of the system, constituted a complete argument against it, as an invasion of State rights, and therefore unconsittutional, and, he might have added, as complex and unmanageable by the federal government, and therefore inexpedient. But, after stating the question, he examined it under every head of constitutional derivation under which its advocates claimed the power, and found it to be granted by no one of them, and virtually prohibited by some of them. These were, first, the right to establish postoffices and post-roads; second, to declare war; third, to regulate commerce among the States; fourth, the power to pay the debts and provide for the common defence and general welfare of the United States; fifth, to make all laws necessary and proper to carry into effect the granted (enumerated) powers; sixth, from the power to dispose of, and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property of the United States. Upon this long enumeration of these claimed sources of power, Mr. Monroe well remarked that their very multiplicity was an argument against them, and that each one was repudiated by some of the advocates for each of the others: that these advocates could not agree among themselves upon any one single source of the power; and that it was sought for from place to place, with an assiduity which proclaimed its non-existence any where. Still he examined each head of derivation in its order, and effectually disposed of each in its turn. l. The post-office and post-road grant. The word "establish" was the ruling term: roads and offices were the subjects on which it was to ened citizens, who had no connection with public affairs, and whose minds were unprejudiced, what was the meaning of the word "establish," and the extent of the grant it controls, and there would not be a difference of opinion among them. They would answer that it was a power given to Congress to legalize existing roads as post routes, and existing places as post-officesto fix on the towns, court-houses, and other places throughout the Union, at which there should be post-offices; the routes by which the mails should be carried; to fix the postages to be paid; and to protect the post-offices and mails from robbery, by punishing those who commit the offence. The idea of a right to lay off roads to take the soil from the proprietor against his will; to establish turnpikes and tolls; to establish a criminal code for the punishment of injuries to the road; to do what the protection and repair of a road requires: these are things which would never enter into his head. The use of the existing road would be all that would be thought of; the jurisdiction and soil remaining in the State, or in those authorized by its legislature to change the road at pleasure.

2. The war power. Mr. Monroe shows the object of this grant of power to the federal government—the terms of the grant itself—its incidents as enumerated in the constitution—the exclusion of constructive incidents—and the pervading interference with the soil and jurisdiction of the States which the assumption of the internal improvement power by Congress would carry along with it. He recites the grant of the power to make war, as given to Congress, and prohibited to the States, and enumerates the incidents granted along with it, and necessary to carrying on war: which are, to raise money by taxes, duties, excises, and by loans; to raise and support armies and a navy; to provide for calling out, arming, disciplining, and governing the militia, when in the service of the United States; establishing fortifications, and to exercise exclusive jurisdiction over the places granted by the State legislatures for the sites of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings. And having shown this enumeration of incidents, he very naturally concludes that it is an exclusion of constructive incidents, and especially of one so great in itself, and so much interfering with the soil and jurisdiction of the States, as the act. And how? Ask any number of enlight- | federal exercise of the road-making power would be. He exhibits the enormity of this interference by a view of the extensive field over which it would operate. The United States are exposed to invasion through the whole extent of their Atlantic coast (to which may now be added seventeen degrees of the Pacific coast) by any European power with whom we might be engaged in war: on the northern and northwestern frontier, on the side of Canada, by Great Britain, and on the southern by Spain, or any power in alliance with her. If internal improvements are to be carried on to the full extent to which they may be useful for military purposes, the power, as it exists, must apply to all the roads of the Union, there being no limitation to it. Wherever such improvements may facilitate the march of troops, the transportation of cannon, or otherwise aid the operations, or mitigate the calamities of war along the coast, or in the interior, they would be useful for military purposes, and might therefore be made. They must be coextensive with the Union. The power following as an incident to another power can be measured, as to its extent, by reference only to the obvious extent of the power to which it is incidental. It has been shown, after the most liberal construction of all the enumerated powers of the general government, that the territory within the limits of the respective States belonged to them; that the United States had no right, under the powers granted to them (with the exceptions specified), to any the smallest portion of territory within a State, all those powers operating on a different principle. and having their full effect without impairing, in the slightest degree, this territorial right in the States. By specifically granting the right, as to such small portions of territory as might be necessary for these purposes (forts, arsenals, magazines, dock-yards and other needful buildings), and, on certain conditions, minutely and well defined, it is manifest that it was not intended to grant it, as to any other portion, for any purpose, or in any manner whatever. The right of the general government must be complete, if a right at all. It must extend to every thing necessary to the enjoyment and protection of the right. It must extend to the seizure and condemnation of the property, if necessary; to the punishment of the offenders for injuries to the roads and canals; to the establishment and enforcement of tolls; to the unobstructed construction, protection, and preservation of the roads. It must be a complete right, to the extent above stated, or it will be of no avail. That right does not exist.

3. The commercial power. Mr. Monroe argues that the sense in which the power to regulate commerce was understood and exercised by the States, was doubtless that in which it was transferred to the United States; and then shows that their regulation of commerce was by the imposition of duties and imposts; and that it was so regulated by them (before the adoption of the constitution), equally in respect to each other, and to foreign powers. The goods, and the vessels employed in the trade, are the only subject of regulation. It can act on none other. He then shows the evil out of which that grant of power grew, and which evil was, in fact, the predominating cause in the call for the convention which framed the federal constitution. Each State had the right to lay duties and imposts, and exercised the right on narrow, jealous, and selfish principles. Instead of acting as a nation in regard to foreign powers, the States, individually, had commenced a system of restraint upon each other, whereby the interests of foreign powers were promoted at their expense. This contracted policy in some of the States was counteracted by others. Restraints were immediately laid on such commerce by the suffering States; and hence grew up a system of restrictions and retaliations, which destroyed the harmony of the States, and threatened the confederacy with dissolution. From this evil the new constitution relieved us; and the federal government. as successors to the States in the power to regulate commerce, immediately exercised it as they had done, by laying duties and imposts, to act upon goods and vessels: and that was the end of the power.

4. To pay the debts and provide for the common defence and general welfare of the Union. Mr. Monroe considers this "common defence" and "general welfare" clause as being no grant of power, but, in themselves, only an object and end to be attained by the exercise of the enumerated powers. They are found in that sense in the preamble to the constitution, in company with others, as inducing causes to the formation of the instrument, and as benefits to be obtained by the powers granted in it. They stand thus in the preamble: "In order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, prov the general v liberty to our and establish objects to be Congress to them (in which need for inves be accomplish granted in the sidered as a power to proand the "gene would give to whole force, a Union-absorbi all other power and restrictions these words forn limited power, su (must be) aband United States is a for great national Other interests as whose duty it is and canals fall int General Governm to the exercise of struction, and pro quire. Mr. Monro roads made in ter dian countries, and tory below the 31 (with the consent o Athens in Georgia acquired the Florida no objection to these of them, to the State ines the case of th within the States, a which the United S founded on any pri right." He says of on an article of con States and the State State came into the U. pense attending it was plication of a certain p ing from the sales of the State. And, in this in have exercised no act of ty within either of the of the roads. It must be he extent above stated, or That right does not exist. power. Mr. Monroe arwhich the power to reguiderstood and exercised by tless that in which it was ted States; and then shows of commerce was by the and imposts; and that it was (before the adoption of the in respect to each other, . The goods, and the vesrade, are the only subject a act on none other. He out of which that grant of h evil was, in fact, the prene call for the convention deral constitution. Each to lay duties and imposts, it on narrow, jealous, and stead of acting as a nation owers, the States, individa system of restraint upon the interests of foreign 1 at their expense. This some of the States was s. Restraints were immecommerce by the suffering w up a system of restricwhich destroyed the harthreatened the confederacy om this evil the new connd the federal government, ates in the power to reguiately exercised it as they luties and imposts, to act els: and that was the end > and provide for the comeral welfare of the Union. this "common defence" ' clause as being no grant selves, only an object and the exercise of the enumeare found in that sense in constitution, in company g causes to the formation as benefits to be obtained in it. They stand thus in der to form a more perfect e, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defence, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this constitution." These are the objects to be accomplished, but not by allowing Congress to do what it pleased to accomplish them (in which case there would have been no need for investing it with specific powers), but to be accomplished by the exercise of the powers granted in the body of the instrument. Considered as a distinct and separate grant, the power to provide for the 'common defence" and the "general welfare," or either of them, would give to Congress the command of the whole force, and of all the resources of the Union-absorbing in their transcendental power all other powers, and rendering all the grants and restrictions nugatory and vain. The idea of these words forming an original grant, with unlimited power, superseding every other grant, is (must be) abandoned. The government of the United States is a limited government, instituted for great national purposes, and for those only. Other interests are left to the States individually, whose duty it is to provide for them. Roads and canals fall into this class, the powers of the General Government being utterly incompetent to the exercise of the rights which their construction, and protection, and preservation require. Mr. Monroe examines the instances of roads made in territories, and through the Indian countries, and the one upon Spanish territory below the 31st degree of north latitude (with the consent of Spain), on the route from Athens in Georgia to New Orleans, before we acquired the Floridas; and shows that there was no objection to these territorial roads, being all of them, to the States, ex-territorial. He examines the case of the Cumberland road, made within the States, and upon compact, but in which the United States exercised no power, founded on any principle of "jurisdiction or right." He says of it: This road was founded on an article of compact between the United States and the State of Ohio, under which that State came into the Union, and by which the expense attending it was to be defrayed by the application of a certain portion of the money arising from the sales of the public lands within the State. And, in this instance, the United States have exercised no act of jurisdiction or sovereign-road runs, by taking the land from the proprietors by force—by passing acts for the protection of the road-or to raise a revenue from it by the establishment of turnpikes and tolls-or any other act founded on the principles of jurisdiction or right. And I can add, that the bill passed by Congress, and which received his veto, died under his veto message, and has never been revised, or attempted to be revised, since; and the road itself has been abandoned to the States.

5. The power to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper to carry into effect the powers specifically granted to Congress. This power, as being the one which chiefly gave rise to the latitudinarian constructions which discriminated parties, when parties were founded upon principle, is closely and clearly examined by Mr. Monroe, and shown to be no grant of power at all, nor authorizing Congress to do any thing which might not have been done without it, and only added to the enumerated powers, through caution, to secure their complete execution. He says: I have always considered this power as having been granted on a principle of greater caution, to secure the complete execution of all the powers which had been vested in the General Government. It contains no distinct and specific power, as every other grant does, such as to lay and collect taxes, to declare war, to regulate commerce, and the like. Looking to the whole scheme of the General Government, it gives to Congress authority to make all laws which should be deemed necessary and proper for carrying all its powers into effect. My impression has invariably been, that this power would have existed, substantially, if this grant had not been made. It results, by necessary implication (such is the tenor of the argument). from the granted powers, and was only added from caution, and to leave nothing to implication. To act under it, it must first be shown that the thing to be done is already specified in one of the enumerated powers. This is the point and substance of Mr. Monroe's opinion on this incidental grant, and which has been the source of division between parties from the foundation of the government—the fountain of latitudinous construction-and which, taking the judgment of Congress as the rule and measure of what was "necessary and proper" in legislation, takes a rule which puts an end to the limitations ly within either of the States through which the of the constitution, refers all the powers of the body to its own discretion, and becomes as absorbing and transcendental in its scope as the "general welfare" and "common defence clauses" would be themselves.

6. The power to dispose of, and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property of the United States. This clause, as a source of power for making roads and canals within a State, Mr. Monroe disposes of summarily, as having no relation whatever to the subject. It grew out of the cessions of territory which different States had made to the United States, and relates solely to that territory (and to such as has been acquired since the adoption of the constitution), and which lay without the limits of a State. Special provision was deemed necessary for such territory, the main powers of the constitution operating internally, not being applicable or adequate thereto; and it follows that this power gives no authority, and has even no bearing on the subject.

Such was this great state paper, delivered at a time when internal improvement by the federal government, having become an issue in the canvass for the Presidency, and ardently advocated by three of the candidates, and qualifiedly by two others, had an immense current in its favor, carrying many of the old strict constitutionists along with it. Mr. Monroe stood firm, vetoed the bill which assumed jurisdiction over the Cumberland road, and drew up his sentiments in full, for the consideration of Congress and the country. His argument is abridged and condensed in this view of it; but his positions and conclusions preserved in full, and with scrupulous correctness. And the whole paper, as an exposition of the differently understood parts of the constitution, by one among those most intimately acquainted with it, and as applicable to the whole question of constructive powers, deserves to be read and studied by every student of our constitutional law. The only point at which Mr. Monroe gave way, or yielded in the least, to the temper of the times, was in admitting the power of appropriation—the right of Congress to appropriate, but not to apply money-to internal improvements; and in that he yielded against his earlier, and, as I believe, better judgment. He had previously condemned the appropriation as well as the application, but finally yielded on this point to the counsels that 1802, when it was conceived to 1836, when it was without application was inoperative, and a balk to the whole system. But an act was passed soon after for surveys-for making surveys of routes for roads and canals of general and national importance, and the sum of $30,000 was appropriated for that purpose. The act was as carefully guarded as words could do so, in its limitation to objects of national importance, but only presented another to the innumerable instances of the impotency of words in securing the execution of a law. The selection of routes under the act, rapidly degenerated from national to sectional, from sectional to local, and from local to mere neighborhood improvements. Early in the succeeding administration, a list of some minety routes were reported to Congress, from the Engineer Department, in which occurred names of places hardly heard of before outside of the State or section in which they were found. Saugatuck, Amounisuck, Pasumic, Winnispiseogee, Piscataqua, Titonic Falls, Lake Memphramagog, Conneaut Creek, Holmes' Hole Lovejoy's Narrows, Steele's Ledge, Cowhegan, Androscoggin, Cobbiesconte, Ponceaupechaux, alias Soapy Joe, were among the objects which figured in the list for national improvement. The bare reading of the list was a condemnation of the act under which they were selected, and put an end to the annual appropriations which were in the course of being made for these survevs. No appropriation was made after the year 1827. Afterwards the veto message of President Jackson put an end to legislation upon local routes, and the progress of events has withdrawn the whole subject—the subject of a system of national internal improvement, once so formidable and engrossing in the public mindfrom the halls of Congress, and the discussions of the people. Steamboats and steam-cars have superseded turnpikes and canals; individual enterprise has dispensed with national legislation. Hardly a great route exists in any State which is not occupied under State authority. Even great works accomplished by Congress, at vast cost and long and bitter debates in Congress, and deemed eminently national at the time, have lost that character, and sunk into the class of common routes. The Cumberland road which cost $6,670,000 in money, and was a prominent subject in Congress for thirty-four years-from beset him; but nugatorially, as appropriation abandoned to the States: this road, once or absorbing both tion, has dege and is entirely road route. 7 gree, of the C national object its name impor the Atlantic wi now a local ca panies, very bei the national cha the votes of Co from the federal of the most caut lic men, thoroug and the working upon it entitled point (of interna by the federal go come law. But of improving nat revenue—appropr sippi and other 1 when unincumber by the appropriati of $75,000 for th rivers, and which Mr. Monroe.

CHA

GENERAL R.

THE Indian tribes in Union, had experier the northern and mi in the south and w and formidable. Be Great Britain, these held vast, compact States, preventing th settlements within th dangerous neighbor victories of General and the territorial ce the first great breach but much remained to ern and western State gerous population-to jurisdiction of all th limits, and to place the

as inoperative, and a balk . But an act was passed s-for making surveys of anals of general and nationhe sum of $30,000 was appurpose. The act was as words could do so, in its of national importance, but er to the innumerable intency of words in securing v. The selection of routes degenerated from national tional to local, and from lohood improvements. Early ministration, a list of some reported to Congress, from tment, in which occurred dly heard of before outside tion in which they were Amounisuck, Pasumic, Winıa, Titonic Falls, Lake Memat Creek, Holmes' Hole, Steele's Ledge, Cowhegan, iesconte, Ponceaupechaux, e among the objects which for national improvement. the list was a condemnation nich they were selected, and inual appropriations which f being made for these surion was made after the year the veto message of Presiin end to legislation upon progress of events has withbject—the subject of a sysrnal improvement, once so ossing in the public mindongress, and the discussions nboats and steam-cars have ; and canals; individual ened with national legislation. te exists in any State which ler State authority. Even lished by Congress, at vast bitter debates in Congress, ly national at the time, have and sunk into the class of ne Cumberland road, which noney, and was a prominent for thirty-four years-from nceived to 1836, when it was ates: this road, once se absorbing both of public money and public attention, has degenerated into a common highway, and is entirely superseded by the parallel railroad route. The same may be said, in a less degree, of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, once a national object of federal legislation intended, as its name imports, to connect the tide water of the Atlantic with the great rivers of the West; now a local canal, chiefly used by some companies, very beneficial in its place, but sunk from the national character which commanded for it the votes of Congress and large appropriations from the federal treasury. Mr. Monroe was one of the most cautious and deliberate of our public men, thoroughly acquainted with the theory and the working of the constitution, his opinions upon it entitled to great weight; and on this point (of internal improvement within the States by the federal government) his opinion has become law. But it does not touch the question of improving national rivers or harbors yielding revenue-appropriations for the Ohio and Mississippi and other large streams, being easily had when unincumbered with local objects, as shown by the appropriation, in a separate bill, in 1824, of $75,000 for the improvement of these two rivers, and which was approved and signed by Mr. Monroe.

CHAPTER XI.

GENERAL REMOVAL OF INDIANS.

THE Indian tribes in the different sections of the Union, had experienced very different fates-in the northern and middle States nearly extinctin the south and west they remained numerous and formidable. Before the war of 1812, with Great Britain, these southern and western tribes held vast, compact bodies of land in these States, preventing the expansion of the white settlements within their limits, and retaining a dangerous neighbor within their borders. The victories of General Jackson over the Creeks, and the territorial cessions which ensued made the first great breach in this vast Indian domain; but much remained to be done to free the southern and western States from a useless and dangerous population—to give them the use and jurisdiction of all the territory within their equality with the northern and middle States. From the earliest periods of the colonial settlements, it had been the policy of the government, by successive purchases of their territory, to remove these tribes further and further to the west; and that policy, vigorously pursued after the war with Great Britain, had made much progress in freeing several of these States (Kentucky entirely, and Tennessee almost) from this population, which so greatly hindered the expansion of their settlements and so much checked the increase of their growth and strength. Still there remained up to the year 1824-the last year of Mr. Monroe's administration—large portions of many of these States, and of the territories, in the hands of the Indian tribes; in Georgia, nine and a half millions of acres; in Alabama, seven and a half millions; in Mississippi, fifteen and three quarter millions; in the territory of Florida, four millions; in the territory of Arkansas, fifteen and a half millions; in the State of Missouri, two millions and three quarters; in Indiana and Illinois, fifteen millions; and in Michigan, east of the lake, seven millions. All these States and territories were desirous, and most justly and naturally so, to get possession of these vast bodies of land, generally the best within their limits. Georgia held the United States bound by a compact to relieve her. Justice to the other States and territories required the same relief; and the applications to the federal government, to which the right of purchasing Indian lands, even within the States, exclusively belonged, were incessant and urgent. Piecemeal acquisitions, to end in getting the whole, were the constant effort; and it was evident that the encumbered States and territories would not, and certainly ought not to be satisfied, until all their soil was open to settlement, and subject to their jurisdiction. 'To the Indians themselves it was equally essential to be removed. The contact and pressure of the white race was fatal to them. They had dwindled under it, degenerated, become depraved, and whole tribes extinct, or reduced to a few individuals, wherever they attempted to remain in the old States; and could look for no other fate in the new ones.

ern and western States from a useless and dangerous population—to give them the use and jurisdiction of all the territory within their limits, and to place them, in that respect, on an older States? In New England, where numerous and warlike tribes once so fiercely contended for supremacy with our forefathers, but two thousand five hundred of their descendants remain, and they are dispirited and degraded. Of the powerful league of the Six Nations, so long the scourge and terror of New-York, only about five thousand souls remain. In New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Maryland, the numerous and powerful tribes once seen there, are either extinct, or so reduced as to escape observation in any enumeration of the States' inhabitants. In Virginia, Mr. Jefferson informs us that there were at the commencement of its colonization (1607), in the comparatively small portion of her extent which lies between the sea-coast and the mountains, and from the Potomac to the most southern waters of James River, upwards of forty tribes of Indians: now there are but forty-seven individuals in the whole State! In North Carolina none are counted: in South Carolina only four hundred and fifty. While in Georgia, where thirty years since there were not less than thirty thousand souls, there now remain some fifteen thousand—the one half having disappeared in a single generation. That many of these people have removed, and others perished by the sword in the frequent wars which have occurred in the progress of our settlements, I am free to admit. But where are the hundreds of thousands, with their descendants, who neither removed, nor were thus destroyed? Sir, like a promontory of sand, exposed to the ceaseless encroachments of the ocean, they have been gradually wasting away before the current of the advancing white population which set in upon them from every quarter; and unless speedily removed beyond the influence of this cause, of the many tens of thousands now within the limits of the southern and western States, a remnant will not long be found to point you to the graves of their ancestors, or to relate the sad story of their disappearance from earth."

Mr. Jefferson, that statesman in fact as well as in name, that man of enlarged and comprehensive views, whose prerogative it was to foresee evils and provide against them, had long foreseen the evils both to the Indians and to the whites, in retaining any part of these tribes within our organized limits; and upon the first acquisition of Louisiana—within three months after the acquisition—proposed it for the future residence of all the tribes on the east of the Mississippi; and his plan had been acted upon in some degree, both by himself and his immediate successor. But it was reserved for Mr. Monroe's administration to take up the subject in its full sense, to move upon it as a system, and to accomplish at a single operation the removal of all the tribes from the east to the west side of the Mississippi-from the settled States and territories, to the wide and wild expanse of Louisiana. Their preservation and civilization, and permanency in their new possessions, were to be their advantages in this removal-delusive, it might be, but still a respite from impending destruction if they remained where they were. This comprehensive plan was advocated by Mr. Calhoun, then Secretary of War, and charged with the administration of Indian affairs. It was a plan of incalculable value to the southern and western States, but impracticable without the hearty concurrence of the northern and non-slaveholding States. It might awaken the slavery question. hardly got to sleep after the alarming agitations of the Missouri controversy. The States and territories to be relieved were slaveholding. To remove the Indians would make room for the spread of slaves. No removal could be effected without the double process of a treaty and ar appropriation act—the treaty to be ratified by two thirds of the Senate, where the slave and free States were equal, and the appropriation to be obtained from Congress, where free States held the majority of members. It was evident that the execution of the whole plan was in the hands of the free States; and nobly did they do their duty by the South. Some societies, and some individuals, no doubt, with very humane motives, but with the folly, and blindness, and injury to the objects of their care which generally attend a gratuitous interference with the affairs of others, attempted to raise an outcry, and made themselves busy to frustrate the plan; but the free States themselves, in their federal action, and through the proper exponents of their will -their delegations in Congress-cordially concurred in it, and faithfully lent it a helping and efficient hand. The President, Mr. Monroe in the session 1824-'25, recommended its adoption to Congress, and asked the necessary appropriation to begin from the Congress. A bill was reported in the Senate for that purpose, and unanimously passed that body. What is more,

the treaties tribes in 18 States of all 1 and Arkansa selves, and w out previous for the purpos the Indians and readily ra at St. Louis b thority, so far cerned, at my that the Senate They were rati rendered to th laid for the futi was followed up of Congress, un States were as f cumbrance of ar was an actor in the bills and adve this great benef witnessed the bers from the t currence they co who wish for he the States, and a owe it to the caus the cultivation o this faithful testing conduct of the n lieving the south so large an incum! sion of their settl recommendation of of 1825, were the total removal; bu assured the succes was followed up, as of each case, until t. plished.

CHAP

VISIT OF LAFAYETT

In the summer of the accompanied by his ton Lafayette, and un President, revisited to

on the east of the Mississippi; been acted upon in some deelf and his immediate succeseserved for Mr. Monroe's adke up the subject in its full on it as a system, and to acgle operation the removal of the east to the west side of om the settled States and tere and wild expanse of Louisievation and civilization, and ir new possessions, were to be n this removal—delusive, it a respite from impending demained where they were. This n was advocated by Mr. Calary of War, and charged with of Indian affairs. It was a plan ue to the southern and westpracticable without the hearty northern and non-slaveholding awaken the slavery question, o after the alarming agitations ontroversy. The States and lieved were slaveholding. To ns would make room for the No removal could be effected ole process of a treaty and an -the treaty to be ratified by Senate, where the slave and qual, and the appropriation to Congress, where free States of members. It was evident of the whole plan was in the States; and nobly did they do e South. Some societies, and no doubt, with very humane the folly, and blindness, and its of their care which generally is interference with the affairs ed to raise an outcry, and made to frustrate the plan; but the selves, in their federal action, proper exponents of their will is in Congress-cordially conaithfully lent it a helping and The President, Mr. Monroe, in 25, recommended its adoption asked the necessary approprian the Congress. A bill was reate for that purpose, and unanithat body. What is more, the treaties made with the Kansas and Osage tribes in 1825, for the cession to the United States of all their vast territory west of Missouri and Arkansas, except small reserves to themselves, and which treaties had been made without previous authority from the government, and for the purpose of acquiring new homes for all the Indians east of the Mississippi, were duly and readily ratified. Those treaties were made at St. Louis by General Clarke, without any authority, so far as this large acquisition was concerned, at my instance, and upon my assurance that the Senate would ratify them. It was done. They were ratified: a great act of justice was rendered to the South. The foundation was laid for the future removal of the Indians, which was followed up by subsequent treaties and acts of Congress, until the southern and western States were as free as the northern from the incumbrance of an Indian population; and I, who was an actor in these transactions, who reported the bills and advocated the treaties which brought this great benefit to the south and west, and witnessed the cordial support of the members from the free States, without whose concurrence they could not have been passed-I. who wish for harmony and concord among all the States, and all the sections of this Union. owe it to the cause of truth and justice, and to the cultivation of fraternal feelings, to bear this faithful testimony to the just and liberal conduct of the non-slaveholding States, in relieving the southern and western States from so large an incumbrance, and aiding the extension of their settlement and cultivation. The recommendation of Mr. Monroe, and the treaties of 1825, were the beginning of the system of total removal; but it was a beginning which assured the success of the whole plan, and was followed up, as will be seen, in the history of each case, until the entire system was accomplished.

CHAPTER XII.

VISIT OF LAFAYETTE TO THE UNITED STATES.

Is the summer of this year General Lafayette, accompanied by his son, Mr. George Washing-ton Lafayette, and under an invitation from the President, revisited the United States after a to revisit the land of his adoption. Many of his

lapse of forty years. He was received with unbounded honor, affection, and gratitude by the American people. To the survivors of the Revolution, it was the return of a brother; to the new generation, born since that time, it was the apparition of an historical character, familiar from the cradle; and combining all the titles to love, admiration, gratitude, enthusiasm, which could act upon the heart and the imagination of the young and the ardent. He visited every State in the Union, doubled in number since, as the friend and pupil of Washington, he had spilt his blood, and lavished his fortune, for their independence. His progress through the States was a triumphal procession, such as no Roman ever led up-a procession not through a city, but over a continent—followed, not by captives in chains of iron, but by a nation in the bonds of affection. To him it was an unexpected and overpowering reception. His modest estimate of himself had not allowed him to suppose that he was to electrify a continent. He expected kindness, but not enthusiasm. He expected to meet with surviving friends-not to rouse a young generation. As he approached the harbor of New-York, he made inquiry of some acquaintance to know whether he could find a hack to convey him to a hotel? Illustrious man, and modest as illustrious! Little did he know that all America was on foot to receive him-to take possession of him the moment he touched her soil—to fetch and to carry him-to feast and applaud him-to make him the guest of cities, States, and the nation, as long as he could be detained. Many were the happy meetings which he had with old comrades, survivors for near half a century of their early hardships and dangers: and most grateful to his heart it was to see them, so many of them, exceptions to the maxim which denies to the beginners of revolutions the good fortune to conclude them (and of which maxim his own country had just been so sad an exemplification), and to see his old comrades not only conclude the one they began, but live to enjoy its fruits and honors. Three of his old associates he found ex-presidents (Adams, Jefferson, and Madison), enjoying the respect and affection of their country, after having reached its highest honors. Another, and the last one that Time would admit to the Presidency (Mr. Monroe), now in the Presidential chair, and inviting him

early associates seen in the two Houses of Congress-many in the State governments, and many more in all the walks of private life, patriarchal sires, respected for their characters, and venerated for their patriotic services. was a grateful spectacle, and the more impressive from the calamitous fate which he had seen attend so many of the revolutionary patriots of the Old World. But the enthusiasm of the young generation astonished and excited him, and gave him a new view of himself—a future glimpse of himself-and such as he would be seen in after ages. Before them, he was in the presence of postcrity: and in their applause and admiration he saw his own future place in history, passing down to the latest time as one of the most perfect and beautiful characters which one of the most eventful periods of the world had produced. Mr. Clay, as Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the organ of their congratulations to Lafayette (when he was received in the hall of the House), very felicitously seized the idea of his present confrontation with posterity, and adorned and amplified it with the graces of oratory. He said: "The vain wish has been sometimes indulged, that Providence would allow the patriot, after death, to return to his country, and to contemplate the intermediate changes which had taken place-to view the forests felled, the cities built, the mountains levelled, the canals cut, the highways opened, the progress of the arts, the advancement of learning, and the increase of population. General! your present visit to the United States is the realization of the consoling object of that wish, hitherto vain. You are in the midst of posterity! Every where you must have been struck with the great changes, physical and moral, which have occurred since you left us Even this very city, bearing a venerated name, alike endearing to you and to us, has since emerged from the fores which then covered its site. In one respect you behold us unaltered, and that is, in the sentiment of continued devosion to liberty, and of ardent affection and profound gratitude to your departed friend, the father of his country, and to your illustrious associates in the field and in the cabinet, for the multiplied blessings which surround us, and for the very privilege of addressing you, which I now have." He was received in both Houses of Congress with equal honor; but the Houses did He did not mean to take up the time of the Se not limit themselves to honors: they added substantial rewards for long past services and sacrifices-two hundred thousand dollars in money. and twenty-four thousand acres of fertile land in Florida. These noble grants did not pass without objection—objection to the principle, not to the amount. The ingratitude of republics is the theme of any declaimer: it required a Tacitus to say, that gratitude was the death of republics, and the birth of monarchies; and it belongs to the people of the United States to exhibit an exception to that profound remark (as they do to so many other lessons of history), and show a young republic that knows how to be grateful without being unwise, and is able to pay the debt of gratitude without giving its liberties in the discharge of the obligation. The venerable Mr. Macon, vielding to no one in love and admiration of Lafavette, and appreciation of his services and sacrifices in the American cause, opposed the grants in the Senate, and did it with the honesty of purpose and the simplicity of language which distinguished all the acts of his life. He said: "It was with painful reluctance that he felt himself obliged to oppose his voice to the passage of this bill. He admitted, to the full extent claimed for them, the great and meritorious services of General Lafayette, and he did not object to the precise sum which this bill proposed to award him; but he objected to the bill on this ground: he considered General Lafavette, to all intents and purposes, as having been, during our revolution, a son adopted into the family, taken into the household, and placed in every respect, on the same footing with the other sons of the same family. To treat him as others were treated was all, in this view of his relation to us, that could be required, and this had been done. That General Lafayette made great sacrifices, and spent much of his money in the service of this country (said Mr. M.), I as firmly believe as I do any other thing under the sun. I have no doubt that every faculty of his mind and body were exerted in the Revolutionary war, in defence of this country; but this was equally the case with all the sons of the family. Many native Americans spent their all, made great sacrifices, and devoted their lives in the same cause. This was the ground of his objection to this bill. which, he repeated, it was as disagreeable to him to state as it could be to the Senate to hear.

nate in deba to move any that, when s be done with ciple of the proposed to b

The ardent porter of the abjections, and from Lafavet with the propos sacrifices in o the American 1777 to 1783 ($140,000), a -a foreigner, his fortune into vished in our ca rank and fortu family, to come armies, and wi armed a regimer a vessel to us, lo It was not unti ruined by the Fr forts in the caus ceive the naked p ral officer for th He was entitled t the Revolution, ar him, to be located the United State acres adjoining th Congress afterwar location, granted t New Orleans. was so informed; saying that he won portion of the Ame location to be remov ried upon ground up what was then $500,000. These v losses, and sacrifices, great value to our c by the moral effect of and his influence w which procured us th The grants were v and with the general can people. Mr. Jeff giving as a reason,

to honors: they added sublong past services and sacrithousand dollars in money, susand acres of fertile land in ole grants did not pass withtion to the principle, not to ngratitude of republics is the imer: it required a Tacitus le was the death of republics, onarchies; and it belongs to United States to exhibit an profound remark (as they do ssons of history), and show a it knows how to be grateful se, and is able to pay the debt giving its liberties in the distion. The venerable Mr. Maone in love and admiration of eciation of his services and saican cause, opposed the grants lid it with the honesty of purcity of language which distints of his life. He said: "It eluctance that he felt himself nis voice to the passage of this , to the full extent claimed for and meritorious services of and he did not object to the 1 this bill proposed to award ted to the bill on this ground: eral Lafayette, to all intents aving been, during our revolud into the family, taken into d placed in every respect, on 7ith the other sons of the same him as others were treated. ew of his relation to us, that and this had been done. That made great sacrifices, and money in the service of this . M.), I as firmly believe as I ng under the sun. I have no faculty of his mind and body the Revolutionary war, in destry; but this was equally the ons of the family. Many naent their all, made great sacritheir lives in the same cause. and of his objection to this bill, ed, it was as disagreeable to could be to the Senate to hear. to take up the time of the So nate in debate upon the principle of the bill, or to move any amendment to it. He admitted that, when such things were done, they should be done with a free hand. It was to the principle of the bill, therefore, and not to the sum proposed to be given by it, that he objected."

The ardent Mr. Hayne, of South Carolina, reporter of the bill in the Senate, replied to the objections, and first showed from history (not from Lafayette, who would have nothing to do with the proposed grant), his advances, losses, and sacrifices in our cause. He had expended for the American service, in six years, from 1777 to 1783, the sum of 700,000 francs ($140,000), and under what circumstances? -a foreigner, owing us nothing, and throwing his fortune into the scale with his life, to be lavished in our cause. He left the enjoyments of rank and fortune, and the endearments of his family, to come and serve in our almost destitute armies, and without pay. He equipped and armed a regiment for our service, and freighted a vessel to us, loaded with arms and munitions. It was not until the year 1794, when almost ruined by the French revolution, and by his efforts in the cause of liberty, that he would receive the naked pay, without interest, of a general officer for the time he had served with us. He was entitled to land as one of the officers of the Revolution, and 11,500 acres was granted to him, to be located on any of the public lands of the United States. His agent located 1000 acres adjoining the city of New Orleans; and Congress afterwards, not being informed of the location, granted the same ground to the city of New Orleans. His location was valid, and he was so informed; but he refused to adhere to it, saving that he would have no contest with any portion of the American people, and ordered the location to be removed; which was done, and carried upon ground of little value-thus giving up what was then worth $50,000, and now $500,000. These were his moneyed advances, losses, and sacrifices, great in themselves, and of great value to our cause, but perhaps exceeded by the moral effect of his example in joining us, and his influence with the king and ministry, which procured us the alliance of France.

The grants were voted with great unanimity, and with the general concurrence of the American people. Mr. Jefferson was warmly for them, giving as a reason, in a conversation with me while the grants were depending (for the bill was passed in the Christmas holidays, when I had gone to Virginia, and took the opportunity to call upon that great man), which showed his regard for liberty abroad as well as at home. and his far-seeing sagacity into future events. He said there would be a change in France, and Lafayette would be at the head of it, and ought to be easy and independent in his circumstances, to be able to act efficiently in conducting the movement. This he said to me on Christmas day, 1824. Six years afterwards this view into futurity was verified. The old Bourbons had to retire: the Duke of Orleans, a brave general in the republican armies, at the commencement of the Revolution, was handed to the throne by Lafayette, and became the "citizen king, surrounded by republican institutions." And in this Lafayette was consistent and sincere. He was a republican himself, but deemed a constitutional monarchy the proper government for France, and labored for that form in the person of Louis XVI. as well as in that of Louis Philippe.

Loaded with honors, and with every feeling of his heart gratified in the noble reception he had met in the country of his adoption, Lafayette returned to the country of his birth the following summer, still as the guest of the United States. and under its flag. He was carried back in a national ship of war, the new frigate Brandywine-a delicate compliment (in the name and selection of the ship) from the new President, Mr. Adams, Lafayette having wet with his blood the sanguinary battle-field which takes its name from the little stream which gave it first to the field, and then to the frigate. Mr. Monroe, then a subaltern in the service of the United States, was wounded at the same time. How honorable to themselves and to the American people, that nearly fifty years afterwards, they should again appear together, and in exalted station; one as President, inviting the other to the great repub lic, and signing the acts which testified a nation's gratitude; the other as a patriot hero, tried in the revolutions of two countries, and resplendent in the glory of virtuous and consistent fame.

CHAPTER XIII.

THE TARIFF. AND AMERICAN SYSTEM.

THE revision of the Tariff, with a view to the protection of home industry, and to the establishment of what was then called, "The American System," was one of the large subjects before Congress at the session 1823-24, and was the regular commencement of the heated debates on that question which afterwards ripened into a serious difficulty between the federal government and some of the southern States. The presidential election being then depending, the subject became tinctured with party politics, in which, so far as that ingredient was concerned, and was not controlled by other considerations. members divided pretty much on the line which always divided them on a question of constructive powers. The protection of domestic industry not being among the granted powers, was looked for in the incidental; and denied by the strict constructionists to be a substantive power, to be exercised for the direct purpose of protection; but admitted by all at that time, and ever since the first tariff act of 1789, to be an incident to the revenue raising power, and an incident to be regarded in the exercise of that power. Revenue the object, protection the incident, had been the rule in the earlier tariffs: now that rule was sought to be reversed, and to make protection the object of the law, and revenue the incident. The revision, and the augmentation of duties which it contemplated, turned, not so much on the emptiness of the treasury and the necessity for raising money to fill it, as upon the distress of the country, and the necessity of creating a home demand for labor, provisions and materials, by turning a larger proportion of our national industry into the channel of domestic manufactures. Mr. Clay, the leader in the proposed revision, and the champion of the American System, expressly placed the proposed augmentation of duties on this ground; and in his main speech upon the question, dwelt upon the state of the country, and gave a picture of the public distress, which deserves to be reproduced in this VIEW of the working of our government, both as the leading argument for the new tariff, and as an exhibi- Illinois.

tion of a national distress, which those who were not cotemporary with the state of things which he described, would find it difficult to conceive or to realize. He said:

"In casting our eyes around us, the most prominent circumstance which fixes our attention and challenges our deepest regret, is the general distress which pervades the whole coun-It is forced upon us by numerous facts of the most incontestable character. It is indicated by the diminished exports of native produce; by the depressed and reduced state of our foreign navigation; by our diminished commerce; by successive unthreshed crops of grain perishing in our barns for want of a market; by the alarming diminution of the circulating medium; by the numerous bankruptcies; by a universal complaint of the want of employment. and a consequent reduction of the wages of labor; by the ravenous pursuit after public situations, not for the sake of their honors, and the performance of their public duties, but as a means of private subsistence; by the reluctant resort to the perilous use of paper money; by the intervention of legislation in the delicate relation between debtor and creditor; and, above all, by the low and depressed state of the value of almost every description of the whole mass of the property of the nation, which has, on an average, sunk not less than about fifty per centum within a few years. This distress pervades every part of the Union, every class of society; all feel it, though it may be felt, at different places, in different degrees. It is like the atmosphere which surrounds us: all must inhale it, and none can escape from it. A few years ago, the planting interest consoled itself with its happy exemptions from the general calamity; but it has now reached this interest also, which experiences, though with less severity. the general suffering. It is most painful to me to attempt to sketch, or to dwell on the gloom of this picture. But I have exaggerated nothing. Perfect fidelity to the original would have authorized me to have thrown on deeper and darker hues."

Mr. Clay was the leading speaker on the part of the bill in the House of Representatives, but he was well supported by many able and effective speakers-by Messrs. Storrs, Tracy, John W. Taylor, from New-York; by Messrs. Buchanan, Todd, Ingham, Hemphill, Andrew Stewart, from Pennsylvania; by Mr. Louis McLane, from Delaware; by Messrs. Buckner F. Johnson, Letcher, Metcalfe, Trimble, White, Wickliffe, from Kentucky; by Messrs. Campbell, Vance, John W. Wright, Vinton, Whittlesey, from Ohio; Mr. Daniel P. Cook, from

Mr. Webste other side, and distress which emption from assumed cause tributed it to o paper system, a suspension of the necessity for in tures, and its in: of the country contested the p duties, in the pr of the world, to facturing enterpr

"Within my cause for such g sentation. In 1 States, with the acquainted, they general prosperity be a depression of pressure; the nex that evil. A dep great part of the c degree as that, at the centre and the per cent. The Ba instituted to corre which it is not no did not for some y of the country to a the British House o vote, decided that ments by the Bank deferred beyond th then been in a state five years). The pa certainly communic property. It had e excited overtrading. came, and this violen at the same momen England, inflated and kept up no longer. which has been estin equal to a fall of thi The depression was was felt in the Unite not equally so in eve the time of these fore system underwent s causes, in my view of produce the great show commercial cities, and the country. The ye merous failures, and v and would have furn than exist at present f tation which has been Vol. I.-3 ress, which those who were the state of things which find it difficult to conceive d:

eyes around us, the most nce which fixes our attenour deepest regret, is the h pervades the whole coanpon us by numerous facts table character. It is indished exports of native proed and reduced state of our by our diminished comunthreshed crops of grain ns for want of a market; ninution of the circulating merous bankruptcies; by a of the want of employment. duction of the wages of las pursuit after public situake of their honors, and the r public duties, but as a sistence; by the reluctant is use of paper money; by legislation in the delicate ebtor and creditor; and, and depressed state of the y description of the whole y of the nation, which has, not less than about fifty few years. This distress of the Union, every class of hough it may be felt, at difrent degrees. It is like the surrounds us: all must inan escape from it. A few ing interest consoled itself nptions from the general caow reached this interest also, though with less severity, g. It is most painful to me or to dwell on the gloom I have exaggerated nothing. the original would have auve thrown on deeper and leading speaker on the part House of Representatives, ported by many able and by Messrs. Storrs, Tracy, om New-York; by Messrs. ngham, Hemphill, Andrew msylvania; by Mr. Lous ware; by Messrs. Buckner r, Metcalfe, Trimble, White, ntucky; by Messrs. Camp. W. Wright, Vinton, Whitle-Mr. Daniel P. Cook, from

Mr. Webster was the leading speaker on the other side, and disputed the universality of the distress which had been described; claiming exemption from it in New England; denied the assumed cause for it where it did exist, and attributed it to over expansion and collapse of the paper system, as in Great Britain, after the long suspension of the Bank of England; denied the necessity for increased protection to manufactures, and its inadequacy, if granted, to the relief of the country where distress prevailed; and contested the propriety of high or prohibitory duties, in the present active and intelligent state of the world, to stimulate industry and manufacturing enterprise. He said:

"Within my own observation, there is no cause for such gloomy and terrifying a representation. In respect to the New England States, with the condition of which I am best acquainted, they present to me a period of very general prosperity. Supposing the evil then to be a depression of prices, and a partial pecuniary pressure; the next inquiry is into the causes of that evil. A depreciated currency existed in a great part of the country-depreciated to such a degree as that, at one time, exchange between the centre and the north was as high as twenty per cent. The Bank of the United States was instituted to correct this evil; but, for causes which it is not now necessary to enumerate, it did not for some years bring back the currency of the country to a sound state. In May, 1819, the British House of Commons, by an unanimous vote, decided that the resumption of cash payments by the Bank of England should not be deferred beyond the ensuing February (it had then been in a state of suspension near twentyfive years). The paper system of England had certainly communicated an artificial value to property. It had encouraged speculation, and excited overtrading. When the shock therefore came, and this violent pressure for money acted at the same moment on the Continent and in England, inflated and unnatural prices could be kept up no longer. A reduction took place, which has been estimated to have been at least equal to a fall of thirty, if not forty, per cent. The depression was universal; and the change was felt in the United States severely, though not equally so in every part of them. About the time of these foreign events, our own bank system underwent a change; and all these causes, in my view of the subject, concurred to produce the great shock which took place in our commercial cities, and through many parts of the country. The year 1819 was a year of numerous failures, and very considerable distress, and would have furnished far better grounds than exist at present for that gloomy represen-

(Clay) has alluded to the strong inclination which exists, or has existed, in various parts of the country, to issue paper money, as a proof of great existing difficulties. I regard it rather as a very productive cause of those difficulties; and we cannot fail to observe, that there is at this moment much the loudest complaint of distress precisely where there has been the greatest attempt to relieve it by a system of paper credit. Let us not suppose that we are beginning the protection of manufactures by duties on imports. Look to the history of our laws; look to the present state of our laws. Consider that our whole revenue, with a trifling exception, is collected from the custom-house, and always has been; and then say what propriety there is in calling on the government for protection, as if no protection had heretofore been afforded. On the general question, allow me to ask if the doctrine of prohibition, as a general doctrine, be not prosterous? Suppose all nations to actupon is they would be prosperous, then, according to the argument, precisely in the proportion in which they abolished intercourse with one another. The best apology for laws of prohibition and laws of monopoly, will be found in that state of society, not only unenlightened, but sluggish, in which they are most generally established. Private industry in those days, required strong provocatives, which government was seeking to administer by these means. Something was wanted to actuate and stimulate men, and the prospects of such profits as would, in our times, excite unbounded competition, would hardly move the sloth of former ages. In some instances, no doubt, these laws produced an effect which, in that period, would not have taken place without them. (Instancing the protection to the English woollen manufactures in the time of the Henrys and the Edwards). But our age is wholly of a different character, and its legislation takes another turn. Society is full of excitement: competition comes in place of monopoly; and intelligence and industry ask only for fair play and an open field."

With Mr. Webster were numerous and able speakers on the side of free trade: From his speakers on the side of free trade: From his speakers on the side of free trade: From his speakers on the side of free trade: From his speakers on the side of free trade: From his speakers on the side of free trade: From his speakers on the side of free trade: From his speakers on the side of free trade: From his speakers on the side of free trade: From his own State, Mr. Baylies; from New-York, Mr. Cambreling; from Virginia, Messrs. Randolph, Philip P. Barbour, John S. Barbour, Garnet, Alexander Smythe, Floyd, Mercer, Archer, Stevenson, Rives, Tucker, Mark Alexander; from North Carolina, Messrs. Mangum, Saunders, Spaight, Lewis Williams, Burton, Weldon N. Edwards; from South Carolina, Messrs. Mangum, Saunders, Spaight, Lewis Williams, Burton, Weldon N. Edwards; from South Carolina, Messrs. Mangum, Saunders, Spaight, Lewis Williams, Burton, Weldon N. Edwards; from South Carolina, Messrs. Forsyth, Tatnall, Cuthbert, Cobb; from Tennessee, Messrs. Blair, Isaaks, Reynolds; from Louisiana, Mr. Edward Livingston; from Louisiana, Mr. Owen; from Maryland, Mr.

Vol. I.—3

Warfield; from Mississippi, Mr. Christopher

The bill was carried in the House, after a protracted contest of ten weeks, by the lean majority of five-107 to 102-only two members absent, and the voting so zealous that several members were brought in upon their sick couches. In the Senate the bill encountered a strenuous resistance. Mr. Edward Lloyd, of Maryland, moved to refer it to the committee on finance—a motion considered hostile to the bill; and which was lost by one vote-22 to 23. It was then, on the motion of Mr. Dickerson, of New Jersey, referred to the committee on manufactures; a reference deemed favorable to the bill, and by which committee it was soon returned to the Senate without any proposed amendment. It gave rise to a most earnest debate, and many propositions of amendment, some of which, of slight import, were carried. The bill itself was carried by the small majority of four votes-25 to 21. The principal speakers in favor of the bill were: Messrs. Dickerson, of New Jersey; D'Wolf, of Rhode Island; Holmes, of Maine; R. M. Johnson, of Kentucky; Lowrie, of Pennsylvania; Talbot, of Kentucky; Van Buren. Against it the principal speakers were: Messrs. James Barbour and John Taylor, of Virginia (usually called John Taylor of Caroline); Messrs. Branch, of North Carolina; Hayne, of South Carolina; Henry Johnson and Josiah Johnston, of Louisiana; Kelly and King, of Alabama; Rufus King, of New-York; James Lloyd, of Massachusetts; Edward Lloyd and Samuel Smith, of Maryland; Macon, of North Carolina; Van Dyke, of Delaware. The bill, though brought forward avowedly for the protection of domestic manufactures, was not entirely supported on that ground. An increase of revenue was the motive with some, the public debt being still near ninety millions, and a loan of five millions being authorized at that session. An increased protection to the products of several States, as lead in Missouri and Illinois, hemp in Kentucky, iron in Pennsylvania, wool in Ohio and New-York, commanded many votes for the bill; and the impending presidential election had its influence in its favor. Two of the candidates, Messrs. Adams and Clay, were avowedly for it; General Jackson, who voted for the bill. was for it, as tending to give a home supply of the articles necessary in time of war, and as raising revenue to pay the public debt. | communication which accompanied the note, and

Mr. Crawford was opposed to it; and Mr. Calhoun had been withdrawn from the list of presidential candidates, and become a candidate for the Vice-Presidency. The Southern planting States were extremely dissatisfied with the passage of the bill, believing that the new burdens upon imports which it imposed fell upon the producers of the exports, and tended to enrich one section of the Union at the expense of another. The attack and support of the bill took much of a sectional aspect; Virginia, the two Carolinas, Georgia, and some others being nearly unanimous against it. Pennsylvania, New-York, Ohio, Kentucky being nearly unanimous for it. Massachusetts, which up to this time had a predominating interest in commerce, voted all, except one member, against it. With this sectional aspect, a tariff for protection also began to assume a political aspect, being taken under the care of the party since discriminated as Whig, which drew from Mr. Van Buren a sagacious remark, addressed to the manufacturers themselves; that if they suffered their interests to become identified with a political party (any one), they would share the fate of that party, and go down with it whenever it sunk. Without the increased advantages to some States, the pendency of the presidential election, and the political tincture which the question began to receive, the bill would not have passed—so difficult is it to prevent national legislation from falling under the influence of extrinsic and accidental causes. The bill was approved by Mr. Monroe—a proof that that careful and strict constructionist of the Constitution did not consider it as deprived of its revenue character by the degree of protection which it extended.

CHAPTER XIV.

THE A. B. PLOT.

On Monday, the 19th of April, the Speaker of the House (Mr. Clay) laid before that body a note just received from Ninian Edwards, Esq. late Senator in Congress, from Illinois, and then Minister to Mexico, and then on his way to his post, requesting him to present to the House a which charged Secretary of th ford. The cl through a volu densed at its accusation, con and declaring t if the House we communication bers of certain A. B., of which be the author, received as a p printed along w tions under the then a prominen and the A. B. ps House, were a s Washingfon Cit defeat his electi shared the usual sunk into oblivi had it not been House (the grand call for investigat ever, did not see vestigation, and co of Congress. Co ment; the accuse the charges were g them numerous ar relating to transac banks. The evide was, that the matt session, before whi tion would take I done to Mr. Crawfo unanswered accusa so imposingly laid of Congress. The the necessity of imm of Virginia, instant communication, mo pointed to take it in be empowered to se to administer oathsit to the House; wit journment, if the in before; and publish was granted, with al was most unexcept

speaker (Mr. Clay);

opposed to it; and Mr. Callrawn from the list of presiand become a candidate for . The Southern planting ly dissatisfied with the passving that the new burdens 1 it imposed fell upon the sports, and tended to enrich Union at the expense of ck and support of the bill tional aspect; Virginia, the gia, and some others being against it. Pennsylvania, entucky being nearly unaniachusetts, which up to this nating interest in commerce, e member, against it. With t, a tariff for protection also political aspect, being taken e party since discriminated ew from Mr. Van Buren a ddressed to the manufacturt if they suffered their intertified with a political party ould share the fate of that with it whenever it sunk. d advantages to some States, e presidential election, and e which the question began would not have passed-so ent national legislation from luence of extrinsic and acci-, bill was approved by Mr. hat that careful and strict ne Constitution did not conof its revenue character by tion which it extended.

TER XIV.

E A. B. PLOT.

th of April, the Speaker of ay) laid before that body a rom Ninian Edwards, Esq. gress, from Illinois, and then and then on his way to his n to present to the House a th accompanied the note, and which charged illegalities and misconduct on the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. William H. Crawford. The charges and specifications, spread through a voluminous communication, were condensed at its close into six regular heads of accusation, containing matter of impeachment; and declaring them all to be susceptible of proof, if the House would order an investigation. The communication was accompanied by ten numbers of certain newspaper publications, signed A. B., of which Mr. Edwards avowed himself to be the author, and asked that they might be received as a part of his communication, and printed along with it, and taken as the specifications under the six charges. Mr. Crawford was then a prominent candidate for the Presidency, and the A. B. papers, thus communicated to the House, were a series of publications made in a Washington City paper, during the canvass, to defeat his election, and would doubtless have shared the usual fate of such publications, and sunk into oblivion after the election was over, had it not been for this formal appeal to the House (the grand inquest of the nation) and this call for investigation. The communication, however, did not seem to contemplate an early investigation, and certainly not at the then session of Congress. Congress was near its adjournment; the accuser was on his way to Mexico; the charges were grave; the specifications under them numerous and complex; and many of them relating to transactions with the remote western banks. The evident expectation of the accuser was, that the matter would lie over to the next session, before which time the presidential election would take place, and all the mischief be done to Mr. Crawford's character, resulting from unanswered accusations of so much gravity, and so imposingly laid before the impeaching branch of Congress. The friends of Mr. Crawford saw the necessity of immediate action; and Mr. Floyd of Virginia, instantly, upon the reading of the communication, moved that a committee be appointed to take it into consideration, and that it be empowered to send for persons and papersit to the House; with leave to sit after the adjournment, if the investigation was not finished before; and publish their report. The committee was granted, with all the powers asked for, and was most unexceptionably composed by the the public finances." speaker (Mr. Clay); a task of delicacy and responsibility, the Speaker being himself a candidate for the Presidency, and every member of the House a friend to some one of the candidates, including the accused. It consisted of Mr. Floyd, the mover; Mr. Livingston, of Louisiana; Mr. Webster, of Massachusetts; Mr. Randolph, of Virginia; Mr. J. W. Taylor, of New-York; Mr. Duncan McArthur, of Ohio; and Mr. Owen, of Alabama.

The sergeant-at-arms of the House was immediately dispatched by the committee in pursuit of Mr. Edwards: overtook him at fifteen hundred miles; brought him back to Washington; but did not arrive until Congress had adjourned. In the mean time, the committee sat, and received from Mr. Crawford his answer to the six charges: an answer pronounced by Mr. Randolph to be "a triumphant and irresistible vindication; the most temperate, passionless, mild, dignified, and irrefragable exposure of falsehood that ever met a base accusation; and without one harsh word towards their author." This was the true character of the answer; but Mr. Crawford did not write it. He was unable at that time to write any thing. It was written and read to him as it went on, by a treasury clerk, familiar with all the transactions to which the accusations related-Mr. Asbury Dickens, since secretary of the Senate. This Mr. Crawford told himself at the time, with his accustomed frankness. His answer being mentioned by a friend, as a proof that his paralytic stroke had not affected his strength, he replied, that was no proofthat Dickens wrote it. The committee went on with the case (Mr. Edwards represented by his son-in-law, Mr. Cook), examined all the evidence in their reach, made a report unanimously concurred in, and exonerating Mr. Crawford from every dishonorable or illegal imputation. The report was accepted by the House; but Mr. Edwards, having far to travel on his return journey, had not yet been examined; and to hear him the committee continued to sit after Congress had adjourned. He was examined fully, but could prove nothing; and the committee made a second report, corroborating the former, to administer oaths—take testimony—and report and declaring it as their unanimous opinion the opinion of every one present-"that nothing had been proved to impeach the integrity of the Secretary, or to bring into doubt the general correctness and ability of his administration of himself had contradicted all the accusations in the A. B. papers; had denied the authorship of them; had applauded the conduct of Mr. Crawford in the use of the western banks, and their currency in payment of the public lands, as having saved farmers from the loss of their homes; and declared his belief, that no man in the government could have conducted the fiscal and financial concerns of the government with more integrity and propriety than he had done. This was while his nomination as minister to Mexico was depending in the Senate, and to Mr. Noble, a Senator from Indiana, and a friend to Mr. Crawford. He testified:

The committee also reported all the testimony

"That he had had a conversation with Mr. Edwards, introduced by Mr. E. himself, concerning Mr. Crawford's management of the western banks, and the authorship of the A. B. letters. That it was pending his nomination made by the President to the Senate, as minister to Mexico. He (Mr. E.) stated that he was about to be attacked in the Senate, for the purpose of defeating his nomination: that party and political spirit was now high; that he understood that charges would be exhibited against him, and that it had been so declared in the Senate. He further remarked, that he knew me to be the decided friend of William H. Crawford, and said, I am considered as being his bitter enemy; and I am charged with being the author of the numbers signed A. B.; but (raising his hand) I pledge you my honor, I am not the author, nor do I know who the author is. Crawford and I, said Mr. Edwards, have had a little difference; but I have always considered him a high-minded, honorable, and vigilant officer of the government. He has been abused about the western banks and the unavailable funds. Leaning forward and extending his hand, he added, now damn it, you know we both live in States where there are many poor debtors to the government for lands, together with a deranged currency. notes on various banks being depreciated, after the effect and operation of the war in that portion of the Union, and the banks, by attempting to call in their paper, having exhausted their specie, the notes that were in circulation became of little or no value. Many men of influence in that country, said he, have united to induce the Secretary of the Treasury to select certain banks as banks of deposit, and to take the notes of certain banks in payment for public land. Had he (Mr. Crawford) not done so, many of our inhabitants would have been turned out of doors, and lost their land; and the people of the country would have had a universal disgust against Mr. Crawford. And I will venture to say, said Mr. Edwards, notwithstanding I am considered his enemy, that no man in this government could have managed the fiscal and financial concerns taken, from which it appeared that Mr. Edwards | of the government with more integrity and propriety than Mr. Crawford did. He (Mr. Noble) had never repeated this conversation to any body until the evening of the day that I (he) was informed that Gov. Edwards' 'address' was presented to the House of Representatives. On that evening, in conversation with several members of the House, amongst whem were Mr. Reid and Mr. Nelson, some of whom said that Governor Edwards had avowed himself to be the author of A. B., and others said that he had not done so, I remarked, that they must have misunderstood the address,' for Gov. Edwards had pledged his honor to me that he was not the author of A. B."

Other witnesses testified to his denials, while the nomination was depending, of all authorship of these publications: among them, the editors of the National Intelligencer,-friends to Mr. Crawford. Mr. Edwards called at their office at that time (the first time he had been there within a year), to exculpate himself from the imputed authorship; and did it so earnestly that the editors believed him, and published a contradiction of the report against him in their paper, stating that they had a "good reason" to know that he was not the author of these publications. That "good reason," they testified, was his own voluntary denial in this unexpected visit to their office, and his declarations in what he called a "frank and free" conversation with them on the subject. Such testimony, and the absence of all proof on the other side, was fatal to the accusations, and to the accuser. The committee reported honorably and unanimously in favor of Mr. Crawford; the Congress and the country accepted it; Mr. Edwards resigned his commission, and disappeared from the federal political theatre: and that was the end of the A. B. plot. which had filled some newspapers for a year with publications against Mr. Crawford, and which might have passed into oblivion, as the current productions and usual concomitants of a Presidential canvass, had it not been for their formal communication to Congress as ground of impeachment against a high officer. That communication carried the "six charges," and their ten chapters of specifications, into our parliamentary history, where their fate becomes one of the instructive lessons which it is the province of history to teach. The newspaper in which the A. B. papers were published, was edited by a war-office clerk, in the interest of the war Secretary (Mr. Calhoun), to the serious injury of that gentleman, who received no vote in any State voting for Mr. Crawford.

AMENDMENT O TION TO TH VICE-PRESII

EUROPEAN Writ of mistakes on and these mistal of the democrati and in their igno the theory and t election of the French writers de Tocqueville ar and the theory ticular to be the of electors, to v power of election and hence attrib of these electors eminent President dential chair. Th practice is known should be known who wish to do ju The electors have election, and have tion. From the pledged to vote for the early elections wards, by Congres caucuses followed t assemblages called follow the public w elector has been an particular impulsion would be attended v penalty which publ From the beginning useless, and an inc tween the people and and, in time, may be useless inconvenient. danger; having whol pose for which they which purpose no on becomes a just conc should be abolished, to the direct vote of rith more integrity and prowford did. He (Mr. Noble) is conversation to any body e day that I (he) was inform-'address' was presented to ntatives. On that evening, several members of the m were Mr. Reid and Mr. om said that Governor Edimself to be the author of that he had not done so, I just have misunderstood the Edwards had pledged his as not the author of A. B." stifled to his denials, while epending, of all authorship : among them, the editors lligencer,-friends to Mr. ards called at their office t time he had been there xculpate himself from the and did it so earnestly that m, and published a contraagainst him in their paper, a "good reason" to know thor of these publications. hey testified, was his own is unexpected visit to their tions in what he called a ersation with them on the ony, and the absence of all e, was fatal to the accusaiser. The committee reunanimously in favor of ongress and the country ards resigned his commisfrom the federal political the end of the A. B. plot, newspapers for a year with Mr. Crawford, and which to oblivion, as the current I concomitants of a Presinot been for their formal ngress as ground of imhigh officer. That come "six charges," and their fications, into our parliare their fate becomes one ns which it is the province he newspaper in which the iblished, was edited by a interest of the war Secrethe serious injury of that red no vote in any State rd.

CHAPTER XV.

AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION IN RELA-TION TO THE ELECTION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT.

EUROPEAN writers on American affairs are full of mistakes on the working of our government; and these mistakes are generally to the prejudice of the democratic element. Of these mistakes, and in their ignorance of the difference between the theory and the working of our system in the election of the two first officers, two eminent French writers are striking instances: Messrs. de Tocqueville and Thiers. Taking the working and the theory of our government in this particular to be the same, they laud the institution of electors, to whom they believe the whole power of election belongs (as it was intended);and hence attribute to the superior sagacity of these electors the merit of choosing all the eminent Presidents who have adorned the presidential chair. This mistake between theory and practice is known to every body in America, and should be known to enlightened men in Europe, who wish to do justice to popular government. The electors have no practical power over the election, and have had none since their institution. From the beginning they have stood pledged to vote for the candidates indicated (in the early elections) by the public will; afterwards, by Congress caucuses, as long as those caucuses followed the public will; and since, by assemblages called conventions, whether they follow the public will or not. In every case the elector has been an instrument, bound to obey a particular impulsion; and disobedience to which would be attended with infamy, and with every penalty which public indignation could inflict. From the beginning these electors have been useless, and an inconvenient intervention between the people and the object of their choice; and, in time, may become dangerous: and being useless inconvenient, and subject to abuse and danger; having wholly failed to answer the purpose for which they were instituted (and for which purpose no one would now contend); it becomes a just conclusion that the institution should be abolished, and the election committed ate all excuse for previous nominations by intermediate bodies, a second election to be held forthwith between the two highest or leading candidates, if no one had had a majority of the whole number on the first trial. These are not new ideas, born of a spirit of change and innovation; but old doctrine, advocated in the convention which framed the Constitution, by wise and good men; by Dr. Franklin and others, of Pennsylvania; by John Dickinson and others, of Delaware. But the opinion prevailed in the convention, that the mass of the people would not be sufficiently informed, discreet, and temperate to exercise with advantage so great a privilege as that of choosing the chief magistrate of a great republic; and hence the institution of an intermediate body, called the electoral college—its members to be chosen by the people and when assembled in conclave (I use the word in the Latin sense of con and clavis, under key), to select whomsoever they should think proper for President and Vice-President. All this scheme having failed, and the people having taken hold of the election, it became just and regular to attempt to legalize their acquisition by securing to them constitutionally the full enjoyment of the rights which they imperfectly exercised. The feeling to this effect became strong as the election of 1824 approached, when there were many candidates in the field, and Congress caucuses fallen into disrepute; and several attempts were made to obtain a constitutional amendment to accomplish the purpose. Mr. McDuffie, in the House of Representatives, and myself in the Senate, both proposed such amendments; the mode of taking the direct votes to be in districts, and the persons receiving the greatest number of votes for President or Vice-President in any district, to count one vote for such office respectively; which is nothing but substituting the candidates themselves for their electoral representatives, while simplifying the election, insuring its integrity, and securing the rights of the people. In support of my proposition in the Senate, I delivered some arguments in the form of a speech, from which I here add some extracts, in the hope of keeping the question alive, and obtaining for it a better success at some future day.

becomes a just conclusion that the institution should be abolished, and the election committed to to the direct vote of the people. And, to obvi-

ernment, but goes to endanger the rights of the people, by permitting sudden alterations on the eve of an election, and to annihilate the right of the small States, by enabling the large ones to combine, and to throw all their votes into the scale of a particular candidate. These obvious evils make it certain that any uniform rule would be preferable to the present state of things. But, in fixing on one, it is the duty of statesmen to select that which is calculated to give to every portion of the Union its due share in the choice of the Chief Magistrate, and to every individual citizen, a fair opportunity of voting according to his will. This would be effected by adopting the District System. It would divide every State into districts, equal to the whole number of votes to be given, and the people of each district would be governed by its own majority, and not by a majority existing in some remote part of the State. This would be agreeable to the rights of individuals: for, in entering into society, and submitting to be bound by the decision of the majority, each individual retained the right of voting for himself wherever it was practicable, and of being governed by a majority of the vicinage, and not by majorities brought from remote sections to overwhelm him with their accumulated numbers. It would be agreeable to the interests of all parts, of the States; for each State may have different interests in different parts; one part may be agricultural, another manufacturing, another commercial; and it would be unjust that the strongest should govern, or that two should combine and sacrifice the third. The district system would be agreeable to the intention of our present constitution, which, in giving to each elector a separate vote, instead of giving to each State a con-solidated vote, composed of all its electoral suffrages, clearly intended that each mass of persons entitled to one elector, should have the right of giving one vote, according to their own sense of their own interest.

"The general ticket system now existing in ten States, was the offspring of policy, and not of any disposition to give fair play to the will of the people. It was adopted by the leading men of those States, to enable them to consolidate the vote of the State. It would be easy to prove this by referring to facts of historical notoriety. It contributes to give power and consequence to the leaders who manage the elections, but it is a departure from the intention of the constitution; violates the rights of the minorities, and is attended with many other evils. The intention of the constitution is violated, because it was the intention of that instrument to give to each mass of persons, entitled to one elector, the power of giving an electoral vote to any candidate they preferred. The rights of minorities are violated, because a majority of one will carry the vote of the whole State. This principle is the same, whether the elector is chosen by general ticket or by legislative ballot; a majority of one, in | State executives and State legislatures are annueither case, carries the vote of the whole State, In New-York, thirty-six electors are chosen nineteen is a majority, and the candidate receiving this majority is fairly entitled to count nineteen votes; but he counts in reality, thirty-six: because the minority of seventeen are added to the majority. These seventeen votes belong to seventeen masses of people, of 40,000 souls each, in all 680,000 people, whose votes are seized upon. taken away, and presented to whom the majority pleases. Extend the calculation to the seventeen States now choosing electors by general ticket or legislative ballot, and it will show that three millions of souls, a population equal to that which carried us through the Revolution, may have their votes taken from them in the same way. To lose their votes, is the fate of all minorities, and it is their duty to submit; but this is not a case of votes lost, but of votes taken away, added to those of the majority, and given to a person to whom the minority was opposed.

"He said, this objection (to the direct vote of the people) had a weight in the year 1787, to which it is not entitled in the year 1824. Our government was then young, schools and colleges were scarce, political science was then confined to few, and the means of diffusing intelligence were both inadequate and uncertain. The experiment of a popular government was just beginning; the people had been just released from subjection to an hereditary king, and were not yet practised in the art of choosing a temporary chief for themselves. But thirty-six years have reversed this picture. Thirty-six years, which have produced so many wonderful changes in America. have accomplished the work of many centuries upon the intelligence of its inhabitants. Within that period, schools, colleges, and universities have multiplied to an amazing extent. The means of diffusing intelligence have been wonderfully augmented by the establishment of six hundred newspapers, and upwards of five thousand post-offices. The whole course of an American's life, civil, social, and religious, has become one continued scene of intellectual and of moral improvement. Once in every week, more than eleven thousand men, eminent for learning and for piety, perform the double duty of amen ling the hearts, and enlightening the understandings, of more than eleven thousand congregations of people. Under the benign influence of a free government, both our public institutions and private pursuits, our juries, elections, courts of justice, the liberal professions, and the mechanic arts, have each become a school of political science and of mental improvement. The federal legislature, in the annual message of the President, in reports from heads of departments, and committees of Congress, and speeches of members, pours forth a flood of intelligence which carries its waves to the remotest confines of the republic. In the different States, twenty-four ally repeating limited sphere. ling, and the pr thought, are co gence of the co The face of our grand and varie the human inte Less than half liberty has give moral truth, the power of the in rules the affairs gence the only preferment. Th has created an for reading, and the endowments the heart, are tl inestimable rich posterity. "This objection violence at the e tory of the ancier ary elections of justness of the ex thing in the laws parallel between volatile Greek, a There is nothing countries, or in t makes one an ex mans voted in a even when the qu lions of persons. and divided into c but by centuries. the voters were l city, and decided gle. In such asse to violence, and th prepared by the go ted States all this assembled in small places, distributed They come to the odious distinctions violence, and with e If heated during th upon returning to their ordinary occu

"But let us adn Let us admit that be as tumultuary a as were the citizen the election of the then? Are we th of the officers thus degradation of the presided? I answ assert the superior others ever obtain either by hereditar lect mode of electio he vote of the whole State. y-six electors are chosen and the candidate receiving y entitled to count nineteen s in reality, thirty-six : beseventeen are added to the nteen votes belong to sevenof 40,000 souls each, in all se votes are seized upon, sented to whom the majority calculation to the seventeen electors by general ticket and it will show that three population equal to that ough the Revolution, may en from them in the same votes, is the fate of all mir duty to submit; but this es lost, but of votes taken ose of the majority, and o whom the minority was ection (to the direct vote of ht in the year 1787, to which e year 1824. Our governs, schools and colleges were e was then confined to few, asing intelligence were both tain. The experiment of a was just beginning; the released from subjection to nd were not yet practised ing a temporary chief for rty-six years have reversed -six years, which have prolerful changes in America, ie work of many centuries of its inhabitants. Within colleges, and universities in amazing extent. The atelligence have been wony the establishment of six and upwards of five thoue whole course of an Amer-, and religious, has become of intellectual and of moral in every week, more than , eminent for learning and double duty of amen ling tening the understandings, thousand congregations of benign influence of a free public institutions and priies, elections, courts of jusessions, and the mechanic ne a school of political sci-nprovement. The federal nual message of the Presiheads of departments, and ess, and speeches of memlood of intelligence which ne remotest confines of the ferent States, twenty-four State legislatures are annulimited sphere. The habit of universal travelling, and the practice of universal interchange of thought, are continually circulating the intelligence of the country, and augmenting its mass. The face of our country itself, its vast extent, its grand and varied features, contribute to expand the human intellect, and to magnify its power. Less than half a century of the enjoyment of liberty has given practical evidence of the great moral truth, that, under a free government, the power of the intellect is the only power which rules the affairs of men; and virtue and intelligence the only durable passports to honor and preferment. The conviction of this great truth has created an universal taste for learning and for reading, and has convinced every parent that the endowments of the mind, and the virtues of the heart, are the only imperishable, the only inestimable riches which he can leave to his posterity. "This objection (the danger of tumults and violence at the elections) is taken from the history of the ancient republics; from the tumultuary elections of Rome and Greece. But the justness of the example is denied. There is nothing in the laws of physiology which admits a parallel between the sanguinary Roman, the volatile Greek, and the phlegmatic American. There is nothing in the state of the respective countries, or in their manner of voting, which makes one an example for the other. The Romans voted in a mass, at a single voting place, even when the qualified voters amounted to millions of persons. They came to the polls armed, and divided into classes, and voted, not by heads, but by centuries. In the Grecian Republics all the voters were brought together in one great city, and decided the contest in one great struggle. In such assemblages, both the inducement to violence, and the means of committing it, were prepared by the government itself. In the United States all this is different. The voters are assembled in small bodies, at innumerable voting places, distributed over a vast extent of country. They come to the polls without arms, without odious distinctions, without any temptation to violence, and with every inducement to harmony. If heated during the day of election, they cool off upon returning to their homes, and resuming their ordinary occupations.

"But let us admit the truth of the objection. Let us admit that the American people would be as tumultuary at their presidential elections, as were the citizens of the ancient republics at the election of their chief magistrates. What then? Are we thence to infer the inferiority of the officers thus elected, and the consequent degradation of the countries over which they presided? I answer no. So far from it, that I assert the superiority of these officers over all others ever obtained for the same countries, either by hereditary succession, or the most se-ally repeating the same process within a more history to be the most glorious in arms, the most renowned in arts, the most celebrated in letters, the most useful in practice, and the most happy in the condition of the people, in which the whole body of the citizens voted direct for the chief officer of their country. Take the history of that commonwealth which yet shines as the leading star in the firmament of nations. Of the twenty-five centuries that the Roman state has existed, to what period do we look for the generals and statesmen, the poets and orators, the philosophers and historians, the sculptors, painters, and architects, whose immortal works have fixed upon their country the admiring eyes of all succeeding ages? Is it to the reigns of the seven first kings ?-to the reigns of the emperors, proclaimed by the prætorian bands?—to the reigns of the Sovereign Pontiffs, chosen by a select body of electors in a conclave of most holy cardinals? No-We look to none of these, but to that short interval of four centuries and a half which lies between the expulsion of the Tarquins, and the re-establishment of monarchy in the person of Octavius Cæsar. It is to this short period, during which the consuls, tribunes, and prætors, were annually elected by a direct vote of the people, to which we look ourselves, and to which we direct the infant minds of our children, for all the works and monuments of Roman greatness; for roads, bridges, and aqueducts, constructed; for victories gained, nations vanquished, commerce extended, treasure imported, libraries founded, learning encouraged, the arts flourishing, the city embellished, and the kings of the earth humbly suing to be admitted into the friendship, and taken under the protection, of the Roman people. It was of this magnificent period that Cicero spoke, when he proclaimed the people of Rome to be the masters of kings, and the conquerors and commanders of all the nations of the earth. And, what is wonderful, during this whole period, in a succession of four hundred and fifty annual elections, the people never once preferred a citizen to the consulship who did not carry the prosperity and the glory of the Republic to a point beyond that at which he had found it.

"It is the same with the Grecian Republics. Thirty centuries have elapsed since they were founded; yet it is to an ephemeral period of one hundred and fifty years only, the period of popular elections which intervened between the dispersion of a cloud of petty tyrants, and the coming of a great one in the person of Philip, king of Macedon, that we are to look for that galaxy of names which shed so much lustre upon their country, and in which we are to find the first cause of that intense sympathy which now burns in our bosoms at the name of Greece.

"These short and brilliant periods exhibit the great triumph of popular elections; often tumultuary, often stained with blood, but always lect mode of election. I affirm those periods of | ending gloriously for the country. Then the right of suffrage was enjoyed; the sovereignty of the people was no fiction. Then a sublime spectacle was seen, when the Roman citizen advanced to the polls and proclaimed: 'I vote for Cato to be Consul; ' the Athenian, 'I vote for Aristides to be Archon; ' the Theban, 'I vote for Pelopidas to be Bæotrach;' the Lacedemonian, 'I vote for Leonidas to be first of the Ephori.' And why may not an American citizen do the same? Why may not he go up to the poll and proclaim, 'I vote for Thomas Jefferson to be President of the United States?' Why is he compelled to put his vote in the hands of another, and to incur all the hazards of an irresponsible agency, when he himself could immediately give his own vote for his own chosen candidate, without the slightest assistance from agents or managers?

"But, said Mr. Benton, I have other objections to these intermediate electors. They are the peculiar and favorite institution of aristocratic republics, and elective monarchies. I refer the Senate to the late republics of Venice and Genoa; of France, and her litter; to the kingdom of Poland; the empire of Germany, and the Pontificate of Rome. On the contrary, a direct vote by the people is the peculiar and favorite institution of democratic republics; as we have just seen in the governments of Rome, Athens, Thebes, and Sparta; to which may be added the principal cities of the Amphyctionic and Achaian leagues, and the renowned republic of Carthage when the rival of Rome. "I have now answered the objections which were brought forward in the year '87. I ask for no judgment upon their validity at that day, but I affirm them to be without force or reason in the year 1824. Time and experience have so decided. Yes, time and experience, the only infallible tests of good or bad institutions, have now shown that the continuance of the electoral system will be both useless and dangerous to the liberties of the people, and that 'the only effectual mode of preserving our government from the corruptions which have undermined the liberty of so many nations, is, to confide the election of our chief magistrate to those who are farthest removed from the influence of his patronage; '* that is to say, TO THE WHOLE BODY OF AMERICAN CITIZENS!

"The electors are not independent; they have no superior intelligence; they are not left to their own judgment in the choice of President; they are not above the control of the people; on the contrary, every elector is pledged, before he is chosen, to give his vote according to the will of those who choose him. He is nothing but an agent, tied down to the execution of a precise trust. Every reason which induced the convention to institute electors has failed. They are no longer of any use, and may be dangerous to the liberties of the people. They are not useful, because they have no power over their own vote. and because the people can vote for a President as easily as they can vote for an elector. They are dangerous to the liberties of the people, because, in the first place, they introduce extraneous considerations into the election of President: and, in the second place, they may sell the vote which is intrusted to their keeping. They introduce extraneous considerations, by bringing their own character and their own exertions into the presidential canvass. Every one sees this. Candidates for electors are now selected. not for the reasons mentioned in the Federalist, but for their devotion to a particular party, for their manners, and their talent at electioneering. The elector may betray the liberties of the people, by selling his vote. The operation is easy. because he votes by ballot; detection is impossible, because he does not sign his vote; the restraint is nothing but his own conscience, for there is no legal punishment for his breach of trust. If a swindler defrauds you out of a few dollars in property or money, he is whipped and pilloried, and rendered infamous in the eye of the law; but, if an elector should defraud 40,000 people of their vote, there is no remedy but to abuse him in the newspapers, where the best men in the country may be abused, as much as Benedict Arnold, or Judas Iscariot. reason for instituting electors has failed, and every consideration of prudence requires them They are nothing but to be discontinued. agents, in a case which requires no agent; and no prudent man would, or ought, to employ an agent to take care of his money, his property, or his liberty, when he is equally capable to take care of them himself.

"But, if the plan of the constitution had not failed-if we were now deriving from electors all the advantages expected from their institution-I, for one, said Mr. B., would still be in favor of getting rid of them. I should esteem the incorruptibility of the people, their disinterested desire to get the best man for President, to be more than a counterpoise to all the advantages which might be derived from the superior intelligence of a more enlightened, but smaller, and therefore, more corruptible body. I should be opposed to the intervention of electors, because the double process of electing a man to elect a man, would paralyze the spirit of the people, and destroy the life of the election itself. Doubtless this machinery was introduced into our constitution for the purpose of softening the action of the democratic element; but it also softens the interest of the people in the result of the election itself. It places them at too great a distance from their first servant. It interposes a body of men between the people and the object of their choice, and gives a false direction to the gratitude of the President elected. He feels himself indebted to the electors who collected the votes of the people, and not to the people, who gavenables a few mit will transfer into the hands the humble occubeen done by su "Mr Benton r been done by su prove the correc "He mentione Republic, of the The people to cl the Councils of I and these, by a f choose the Five I the people had their Chief Magis their fate. They each other from same indifference the entrance and the stage. It was tern Republics of delivered, while o rope. The consti pine, and Parthe duplicates of the and all shared the sular constitution year of French lil of the electoral s alone, that profou the bosom of his Alps, predicted as Liberty in France. that 'LIBERTY WOL ANY KIND OF SUBS TIONs:' and the re four years."

C H A P

INTERNAL TRAI

The name of Mexico silver mines posses charm for the peop Guarded from intru and despotic power, or labor in the mines, every attempt to per try, still the dazzled spirits of the Great Valenterprise; and failuin and labor, were not others. The journal

• Report of a Committee of the House of Representatives op Mr. McDuffie's proposition.

ople. They are not useful, power over their own vote, le can vote for a President vote for an elector. They liberties of the people, bece, they introduce extraneo the election of President; ace, they may sell the vote their keeping. They inonsiderations, by bringing and their own exertions canvass. Every one sees electors are now selected, entioned in the Federalist. to a particular party, for eir talent at electioneering. w the liberties of the peote. The operation is easy, pallot; detection is imposes not sign his vote; the ut his own conscience, for ishment for his breach of defrauds you out of a few money, he is whipped and d infamous in the eye of ctor should defraud 40,000 here is no remedy but to wspapers, where the best ay be abused, as much as Judas Iscariot. Every electors has failed, and prudence requires them They are nothing but h requires no agent; and > he is equally capable to self. the constitution had not w deriving from electors pected from their institu-Mr. B., would still be in them. I should esteem the people, their disintee best man for President, nterpoise to all the advanderived from the superior enlightened, but smaller, rruptible body. I should tervention of electors, becess of electing a man to aralyze the spirit of the e life of the election itself. nery was introduced into e purpose of softening the itic element; but it also the people in the result

d, or ought, to employ an

his money, his property,

It places them at too their first servant. It inn between the people and sice, and gives a false diof the President electedbeted to the electors who the people, and not to the people, who gave their votes to the electors. It enables a few men to govern many. and, in time, it will transfer the whole power of the election into the hands of a few, leaving to the people the humble occupation of confirming what has been done by superior authority.

"Mr Benton referred to historical examples to prove the correctness of his opinion. "He mentioned the constitution of the French Republic, of the year III. of French liberty. The people to choose electors; these to choose the Councils of Five Hundred, and of Ancients; and these, by a further process of filtration, to choose the Five Directors. The effect was, that the people had no concern in the election of their Chief Magistrates, and felt no interest in their fate. They saw them enter and expel each other from the political theatre, with the same indifference with which they would see the entrance and the exit of so many players on the stage. It was the same thing in all the subaltern Republics of which the French armies were delivered, while overturning the thrones of Europe. The constitutions of the Ligurian, Cisalpine, and Parthenopian Republics, were all duplicates of the mother institution, at Paris; and all shared the same fate. The French consular constitution of the year VIII. (the last year of French liberty) preserved all the vices of the electoral system; and from this fact, alone, that profound observer, NECKAR, from the bosom of his retreat, in the midst of the Alps, predicted and proclaimed the death of Liberty in France. He wrote a book to prove that 'LIBERTY WOULD BE RUINED BY PROVIDING ANY KIND OF SUBSTITUTE FOR POPULAR ELEC-TIONS: ' and the result verified his prediction in four years."

CHAPTER XVI.

INTERNAL TRADE WITH NEW MEXICO.

The name of Mexico, the synonyme of gold and silver mines possessed always an invincible charm for the people of the western States. Guarded from intrusion by Spanish jealousy and despotic power, and imprisonment for life, or labor in the mines, the inexorable penalty for every attempt to penetrate the forbidden country, still the dazzled imaginations and daring spirits of the Great West adventured upon the atterprise; and failure and misfortune, chains and labor, were not sufficient to intimidate others. The journal of (the then lieutenant, afterwards) General Pike inflamed this spirit, and induced new adventurers to hazard the enterprise, only to meet the fate of their predecessors. It was not until the Independence of Mexico, in the year 1821, that the frontiers of this vast and hitherto sealed up country, were thrown open to foreign ingress, and trade and intercourse allowed to take their course. The State of Missouri, from her geographical position, and the adventurous spirit of her inhabitants, was among the first to engage in it; and the "Western Internal Provinces"—the vast region comprehending New Mexico, El Paso del Norte, New Biscay, Chihuahua, Sonora, Sinaloa, and all the wide slope spreading down towards the Gulf of California, the ancient "Sea of Cortez"-was the remote theatre of their courageous enterprise—the further off and the less known, so much the more attractive to their daring spirits. It was the work of individual enterprise, without the protection or counteance of the government-without even its knowledge-and exposed to constant danger of life and property from the untamed and predatory savages, Arabs of the New World, which roamed over the intermediate country of a thousand miles, and considered the merchant and his goods their lawful prey. In three years it had grown up to be a new and regular branch of interior commerce, profitable to those engaged in it, valuable to the country from the articles it carried out, and for the silver, the furs, and the mules which it brought back; and well entitled to the protection and care of the government. That protection was sought, and in the form which the character of the trade required-a right of way through the countries of the tribes between Missouri and New Mexico, a road marked out and security in travelling it, stipulations for good behavior from the Indians, and a consular establishment in the provinces to be traded with. The consuls could be appointed by the order of the government; but the road, the treaty stipulations, and the substantial protection against savages, required the aid of the federal legislative power, and for that purpose a Bill was brought into the Senate by me in the session of 1824-25; and being a novel and strange subject, and asking for extraordinary legislation, it became necessary to lay a foundation of facts, and to furnish a reason and an argument for every thing that was asked. I produced a statement from those engaged in the trade, among others from Mr. Augustus Storrs, late of New Hampshire, then of Missouri-a gentleman of character and intelligence, very capable of relating things as they were, and incapable of relating them otherwise; and who had been personally engaged in the trade. In presenting his statement, and moving to have it printed for the use of the Senate, I said:

"This gentleman had been one of a caravan of eighty persons, one hundred and fifty-six horses. and twenty-three wagons and carriages, which had made the expedition from Missouri to Santa Fé (of New Mexico), in the months of May and June last. His account was full of interest and novelty. It sounded like romance to hear of caravans of men, horses, and wagons, traversing with their merchandise the vast plain which lies between the Mississippi and the Rio del Norte. The story seemed better adapted to Asia than to North America. But, romantic as it might seem, the reality had already exceeded the visions of the wildest imagination. The journey to New Mexico, but lately deemed a chimerical project, had become an affair of ordinary occurrence. Santa Fé, but lately the Ultima Thule of American enterprise, was now considered as a stage only in the progress, or rather, a new point of departure to our invincible citizens. Instead of turning back from that point, the caravans broke up there, and the subdivisions branched off in different directions in search of new theatres for their enterprise. Some proceeded down the river to the Paso del Norte; some to the mines of Chihuahua and Durango, in the province of New Biscay; some to Sonora and Sinaloa, on the Gulf of California; and some, seeking new lines of communication with the Pacific, had undertaken to descend the western slope of our continent, through the unexplored regions of the Colorado. The fruit of these enterprises, for the present year, amounted to $190,000 in gold and silver bullion, and coin, and precious furs; a sum considerable, in itself, in the commerce of an infant State, but chiefly deserving a statesman's notice, as an earnest of what might be expected from a regulated and protected trade. The principal article given in exchange, is that of which we have the greatest abundance, and which has the peculiar advantage of making the circuit of the Union before it departs from the territories of the republiccotton-which grows in the South, is manufactured in the North, and exported from the

"That the trade will be beneficial to the inhabitants of the Internal Provinces, is a proposition too plain to be argued. They are a people among whom all the arts are lost-the ample catalogue of whose wants may be inferred reported for that purpose. Happily, there are from the lamentable details of Mr. Storrs. No no constitutional objections to it. State rights books! no newspapers! iron a dollar a pound cultivating the earth with wooden tools! and spinning upon a stick! Such is the picture of a people whose fathers were the proud title of Conquerors;" whose ancestors, in the time of Charles the Fifth, were the pride, the terror, and the model of Europe; and such has been the power of civil and religious despotism in accomplishing the degradation of the human species! To a people thus abased, and so lately arrived at the possession of their liberties, a supply of merchandise, upon the cheapest terms, is the least of the benefits to be derived from a commerce with the people of the United States. The consolidation of their republican institutions, the improvement of their moral and social condition, the restoration of their lost arts, and the development of their national resources, are among the grand results which philanthropy anticipates from such a commerce.

"To the Indians themselves, the opening of a road through their country is an object of vital importance. It is connected with the preservation and improvement of their race. For two hundred years the problem of Indian civilization has been successively presented to each generation of the Americans, and solved by each in the same way. Schools have been set up, colleges founded, and missions established; a wonderful success has attended the commencement of every undertaking; and, after some time, the schools, the colleges, the missions, and the Indians, have all disappeared together. In the south alone have we seen an exception. There the nations have preserved themselves, and have made a cheering progress in the arts of civilization. Their advance is the work of twenty years. It dates its commencement from the opening of roads through their country. Roads induced separate families to settle at the crossing of rivers, to establish themselves at the best springs and tracts of land, and to begin to sell grain and provisions to the travellers, whom, a few years before, they would kill and plunder. This imparted the idea of exclusive property in the soil, and created an attachment for a fixed residence. Gradually, fields were opened, houses built, orchards planted, flocks and herds acquired, and slaves bought. The acquisition of these comforts, relieving the body from the torturing wants of cold and hunger, placed the mind in a condition to pursue its improvement.-This, Mr. President, is the true secret of the happy advance which the southern tribes have made in acquiring the arts of civilization; this has fitted them for the reception of schools and missions; and doubtless, the same cause will produce the same effects among the tribes beyond, which it has produced among the tribes on this side of the Mississippi.

"The right of way is indispensable, and the committee have begun with directing a bill to be

are in no danger plated will trespa the jurisdiction of a course and a di begins upon the and runs directly far away from all the Indians are statute book is f against the necess an act in itself p yet name a few in of the governmen make roads through the intercourse of foreign territory t tional communicat.

Precedents were Nashville, Tenness Choctaw tribes, to through the Cree Georgia, to the 31s the direction to N tinued by act of 1 Spanish governmen territory of West 3, three roads thro open an intercourse and the lower Missis. others upon the ter But the precedent c from Athens through and the Spanish dom was up to the exigen particular-being be within our dominions beyond them. The 1 the terms of both th to pass through tribes until it reached the met the foreign bour treaty of 1819, which Texas, but half the A bill which I brought i the road, with the as boundary to Santa Fé I deemed it fair to give this precedent, by sho Mr. Jefferson, and said

"For a knowledge of debted to a conversat himself. In a late e availed myself of a bro my respects to that pati individual must manage ers! iron a dollar a pound h with wooden tools! and k! Such is the picture of a 's wore the proud title of ose ancestors, in the time of ere the pride, the terror, and e; and such has been the eligious despotism in accomation of the human species! based, and so lately arrived their liberties, a supply of the cheapest terms, is the to be derived from a comle of the United States. The eir republican institutions, their moral and social conon of their lost arts, and the eir national resources, are esults which philanthropy a commerce.

hemselves, the opening of a country is an object of vital nnected with the preservaent of their race. For two roblem of Indian civilization presented to each generas, and solved by each in the have been set up, colleges as established; a wonderful the commencement of every fter some time, the schools, sions, and the Indians, have ther. In the south alone ception. There the nations nselves, and have made a n the arts of civilization. work of twenty years. It ment from the opening of · country. Roads induced settle at the crossing of emselves at the best springs and to begin to sell grain he travellers, whom, a few ould kill and plunder. This f exclusive property in the attachment for a fixed resifields were opened, houses ed, flocks and herds acquired,

The acquisition of these he body from the torturing runger, placed the mind in a its improvement.-This, Mr. ie secret of the happy adthern tribes have made in civilization; this has fitted on of schools and missions; ame cause will produce the the tribes beyond, which it g the tribes on this side of

y is indispensable, and the n with directing a bill to be urpose. Happily, there are jections to it. State rights are in no danger! The road which is contemplated will trespass upon the soil, or infringe upon the jurisdiction of no State whatsoever. It runs a course and a distance to avoid all that; for it begins upon the outside line of the outside State, and runs directly off towards the setting sunfar away from all the States. The Congress and the Indians are alone to be consulted, and the statute book is full of precedents. Protesting against the necessity of producing precedents for an act in itself pregnant with propriety, I will yet name a few in order to illustrate the policy of the government, and show its readiness to make roads through Indian countries to facilitate the intercourse of its citizens, and even upon foreign territory to promote commerce and national communications."

Precedents were then shown. 1. A road from Nashville, Tennessee, through the Chicasaw and Choctaw tribes, to Natchez, 1806; 2, a road through the Creek nations, from Athens, in Georgia, to the 31st degree of north latitude, in the direction to New Orleans, 1806, and continued by act of 1807, with the consent of the Spanish government, through the then Spanish territory of West Florida to New Orleans; 3, three roads through the Cherokee nation, to open an intercourse between Georgia, Tennessee, and the lower Mississippi; and more than twenty others upon the territory of the United States. But the precedent chiefly relied upon was that from Athens through the Creek Indian territory and the Spanish dominions to New Orleans. It was up to the exigency of the occasion in every particular-being both upon Indian territory within our dominions, and upon foreign territory beyond them. The road I wanted fell within the terms of both these qualifications. It was to pass through tribes within our own territory, until it reached the Arkansas River: there it met the foreign boundary established by the treaty of 1819, which gave away, not only Texas, but half the Arkansas besides; and the bill which I brought in provided for continuing the road, with the assent of Mexico, from this boundary to Santa Fé, on the Upper del Norte. I deemed it fair to give additional emphasis to this precedent, by showing that I had it from Mr. Jefferson, and said:

"For a knowledge of this precedent, I am indebted to a conversation with Mr. Jefferson himself. In a late excursion to Virginia, I availed myself of a broken day to call and pay my respects to that patriarchal statesman. The who can find himself in the presence of that great man, and retire from it without bringing off some fact, or some maxim, of eminent utility to the human race. I trust that I did not so manage. I trust that, in bringing off a fact which led to the discovery of the precedent, which is to remove the only serious objection to the road in question, I have done a service, if not to the human family, at least to the citizens of the two greatest Republics in the world. It was on the evening of Christmas day that I called upon Mr. Jefferson. The conversation, among other things, turned upon roads. He spoke of one from Georgia to New Orleans, made during the last term of his own administration. He said there was a manuscript map of it in the library of Congress (formerly his own), bound up in a certain volume of maps, which he described to me. On my return to Washington, I searched the statute book, and I found the acts which authorized the road to be made: they are the same which I have just read to the Senate. I searched the Congress Library. and I found the volume of maps which he had described; and here it is (presenting a huge folio), and there is the map of the road from Georgia to New Orleans, more than two hundred miles of which, marked in blue ink, is traced through the then dominions of the King of Spain!"

The foreign part of the road was the difficulty, and was not entirely covered by the precedent. That was a road to our own city, and no other direct territorial way from the Southern States than through the Spanish province of West Florida: this was a road to be, not only on foreign territory, but to go to a foreign country. Some Senators, favorable to the bill, were startled at it, and Mr. Lloyd, of Massachusetts, moved to strike out the part of the section which provided for this ex-territorial national highway; but not in a spirit of hostility to the bill itself providing for protection to a branch of commerce. Mr. Lowrie, of Pennsylvania, could not admit the force of the objection, and held it to be only a modification of what was now done for the protection of commerce—the substitution of land for water; and instanced the sums annually spent in maintaining a fleet in the Mediterranean Sea, and in the most remote oceans for the same purpose. Mr. Van Buren, thought the government was bound to extend the same protection to this branch of trade as to any other; and the road upon the foreign territory was only to be marked out, not made. Mr. Macon thought the question no great matindividual must manage badly, Mr. President, ter. Formerly Indian traders followed "traces:"

now they must have roads. He did not care for precedents: they are generally good or bad as they suit or cross our purposes. The case of the road made by Mr. Jefferson was different. That road was made among Indians comparatively civilized, and who had some notions of property. But the proposed road now to be marked out would pass through wild tribes who think of nothing but killing and robbing a white man the moment they see him, and would not be restrained by treaty obligations even if they entered into them. Col. Johnson, of Kentucky, had never hesitated to vote the money which was necessary to protect the lives or property of our sea-faring men, or for Atlantic fortifications, or to suppress piracies. We had, at this session voted $500,000 to suppress piracy in the West Indies. We build ships of war, erect lighthouses, spend annual millions for the protection of ocean commerce; and he could not suppose that the sum proposed in this bill for the protection of an inland branch of trade so valuable to the West could be denied. Mr. Kelly, of Alabama, said the great object of the bill was to cherish and foster a branch of commerce already in existence. It is carried on by land through several Indian tribes. To be safe, a road must be had-a right of way-"a trace," if you please. To answer its purpose, this road, or "trace," must pass the boundary of the United States. and extend several hundred miles through the wilderness country, in the Mexican Republic to the settlements with which the traffic must be carried on. It may be well to remember that the Mexican government is in the germ of its existence, struggling with difficulties that we have long since surmounted, and may not feel it convenient to make the road, and that it is enough to permit us to mark it out upon her soil; which is all that this bill proposes to do within her limits. Mr. Smith, of Maryland, would vote for the bill. The only question with him was, whether commerce could be carried on to advantage on the proposed route; and, being satisfied that it could be, he should vote for the bill. Mr. Brown, of Ohio (Ethan A.), was very glad to hear such sentiments from the Senator from Maryland, and hoped that a reciprocal good feeling would always prevail between different sections of the Union. He thought there could be no objection to the bill, and approved the policy of getting the road upon Mexican territory with the consent of the Mexican government. The bill passed the Senate by a large vote—30 to 12; and these are the names of the Senators voting for and against it:

YEAS.—Messrs. Barton, Benton, Bouligny, Brown, D'Wolf, Eaton, Edwards, Elliott, Holmes of Miss., Jackson (the General), Johnson of Kentucky, Johnston of Lou., Kelly, Knight, Lanman, Lloyd of Mass., Lowrie, McIlvaine, McLean, Noble, Palmer, Parrott, Ruggles, Seymour, Smith, Talbot, Taylor, Thomas, Van Buren, Van Dyke—30.

NAVS.—Messrs. Branch, Chandler, Clayton, Cobb, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, King of Ala., King of N. Y., Macon, Tazewell, Williams—12.

It passed the House of Representatives by a majority of thirty—received the approving signature of Mr. Monroe, among the last acts of his public life—was carried into effect by his successor, Mr. John Quincy Adams—and this road has remained a thoroughfare of commerce between Missouri and New Mexico, and all the western internal provinces ever since.

CHAPTER XVII.

PRESIDENTIAL AND VICE-PRESIDENTIAL ELEC-TION IN THE ELECTORAL COLLEGES.

Four candidates were before the people for the office of President-General Jackson, Mr. John Quincy Adams, Mr. William H. Crawford, and Mr. Henry Clay. Mr. Crawford had been nominated in a caucus of democratic members of Congress; but being a minority of the members, and the nomination not in accordance with public opinion, it carried no authority along with it, and was of no service to the object of its choice. General Jackson was the candidate of the people, brought forward by the masses. Mr. Adams and Mr. Clay were brought forward by bodies of their friends in different States. The whole number of electoral votes was 261; of which it required 131 to make an election. No one had that number. General Jackson was the highest on the list, and had 99 votes; Mr. Adams 84; Mr. Crawford 41; Mr. Clay 37. No one having a majority of the whole of electors, the election devolved upon the House of Representatives given in a separ In the vice-r ferent. Mr. Jol ginning of the for the President his friends in I for Vice-Presider electoral college. Sandford, Senato had been placed and received 30 ginia were given ment, he not be refused to becon Georgia were give compliment, he no dates. Mr. Albert in the Congress but finding the pr acceptable to the p the canvass. Mr. stantive vice-presid people, and his elec feeling in the Nortl receiving the main quarter-114 votes States, and only 68 southern man, and was indebted to no holders, for the hono tion in the electora the electoral colleges lists of presidential ; dates who had that no disposition in the 1 be unjust, or unkind i

CHAPTE

DEATH OF JOHN TA

For by that designation his own State, the emine of Virginia, who was a the first term of General tration, and in the last and who, having volunta of the Mexican government, ne Senate by a large vote—30 are the names of the Senators instit:

Barton, Benton, Bouligny, ton, Edwards, Elliott, Holmes (the General), Johnson of ton of Lou., Kelly, Knight, of Mass., Lowrie, McIlvaine, ulmer, Parrott, Ruggles, Seyulbot, Taylor, Thomas, Van —30.

Branch, Chandler, Clayton, iyne, Holmes of Maine, King N. Y., Macon, Tazewell, Wilouse of Representatives by a —received the approving signroe, among the last acts of as carried into effect by his in Quincy Adams—and this a thoroughfare of commerce and New Mexico, and all the rovinces ever since.

TER XVII.

D VICE-PRESIDENTIAL ELEC-ELECTORAL COLLEGES.

ere before the people for the -General Jackson, Mr. John r. William H. Crawford, and Mr. Crawford had been nom-, of democratic members of ng a minority of the members. not in accordance with pubed no authority along with it, rice to the object of its choice. was the candidate of the peoyard by the masses. Mr. lay were brought forward by nds in different States. The electoral votes was 261; of 31 to make an election. No iber. General Jackson was list, and had 99 votes; Mr. Crawford 41; Mr. Clay 37. ajority of the whole of electlevolved upon the House of Representatives; of which an account will be given in a separate chapter.

In the vice-presidential election it was different. Mr. John C. Calhoun (who in the beginning of the canvass had been a candidate for the Presidency, but had been withdrawn by his friends in Pennsylvania, and put forward for Vice-President), received 182 votes in the electoral college, and was elected. Mr. Nathan Sandford, Senator in Congress from New-York, had been placed on the ticket with Mr. Clay, and received 30 votes. The 24 votes of Virginia were given to Mr. Macon, as a compliment, he not being a candidate, and having refused to become one. The nine votes of Georgia were given to Mr. Van Buren, also as a compliment, he not being on the list of candidates. Mr. Albert Gallatin had been nominated in the Congress caucus with Mr. Crawford, but finding the proceedings of that caucus unacceptable to the people he had withdrawn from the canvass. Mr. Calhoun was the only substantive vice-presidential candidate before the people, and his election was an evidence of good feeling in the North towards southern men-he receiving the main part of his votes from that quarter-114 votes from the non-slaveholding States, and only 68 from the slaveholding. A southern man, and a slaveholder, Mr. Calhoun was indebted to northern men and non-slaveholders, for the honorable distinction of an election in the electoral colleges-the only one in the electoral colleges—the only one on all the lists of presidential and vice-presidential candidates who had that honor. Surely there was no disposition in the free States at that time to be unjust, or unkind to the South.

CHAPTER XVIII

DEATH OF JOHN TAYLOR, OF CAROLINE,

For by that designation was discriminated, in his own State, the eminent republican statesman of Virginia, who was a Senator in Congress in the first term of General Washington's administration, and in the last term of Mr. Monroe—and who, having voluntarily withdrawn himself from that high station during the intermediate thirty years, devoted himself to the noble pursuits of agriculture, literature, the study of political economy, and the service of his State or county when called by his fellow-citizens. Personally I knew him but slightly, our meeting in the Senate being our first acquaintance, and our senatorial association limited to the single session of which he was a member-1823-24;-at the end of which he died. But all my observation of him, and his whole appearance and deportment, went to confirm the reputation of his individuality of character, and high qualities of the head and the heart. I can hardly figure to myself the ideal of a republican statesman more perfect and complete than he was in reality:--plain and solid, a wise counsellor, a ready and vigorous debater, acute and comprehensive, ripe in all historical and political knowledge, innately republican-modest, courteous, benevolent, hospitable—a skilful, practical farmer, giving his time to his farm and his books, when not called by an emergency to the public service-and returning to his books and his farm when the emergency was over. His whole character was announced in his looks and deportment, and in his uniform (senatorial) dress—the coat, waistcoat, and pantaloons of the same "London brown," and in the cut of a former fashionbeaver hat with ample brim-fine white linen -and a gold-headed cane, carried not for show, but for use and support when walking and bending under the heaviness of years. He seemed to have been cast in the same mould with Mr. Macon, and it was pleasant to see them together, looking like two Grecian sages, and showing that regard for each other which every one felt for them both. He belonged to that constellation of great men which shone so brightly in Virginia in his day, and the light of which was not limited to Virginia, or our America, but spread through the bounds of the civilized world. He was the author of several works, political and agricultural, of which his Arator in one class, and his Construction Construed in another, were the principal—one adorning and exalting the plough with the attributes of science; the other exploring the confines of the federal and the State governments, and presenting a mine of constitutional law very profitably to be examined by the political student who will not be repulsed from a banquet of rich ideas, by the quaint Sir Edward Coke style— (the only point of resemblance between the republican statesman, and the crown officer of Elizabeth and James)—in which it is dressed. Devotion to State rights was the ruling feature of his policy; and to keep both governments, State and federal, within their respective constitutional orbits, was the labor of his political life.

In the years 1798 and '99, Mr. Taylor was a member of the General Assembly of his State, called into service by the circumstances of the times; and was selected on account of the dignity and gravity of his character, his power and readiness in debate, and his signal devotion to the rights of the States, to bring forward those celebrated resolutions which Mr. Jefferson conceived, which his friends sanctioned, which Mr. Madison drew up, and which "John Taylor, of Caroline," presented; -which are a perfect exposition of the principles of our duplicate form of government, and of the limitations upon the power of the federal government;—and which, in their declaration of the unconstitutionality of the alien and sedition laws, and appeal to other States for their co-operation, had nothing in view but to initiate a State movement by two-thirds of the States (the number required by the fifth article of the federal constitution), to amend, or authoritatively expound the constitution; -the idea of forcible resistance to the execution of any act of Congress being expressly disclaimed at the time.

CHAPTER XIX.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

It has already been shown that the theory of the constitution, and its practical working, was entirely different in the election of President and Vice-President—that by the theory, the people were only to choose electors, to whose superior intelligence the choice of fit persons for these high stations was entirely committed—and that, in practice, this theory had entirely failed from the beginning. From the very first election the electors were made subordinate to the people, having no choice of their own, and pledged to deliver their votes for a particular person, according to the will of those who elected them.

Thus the theory had failed in its application to the electoral college; but there might be a second or contingent election, and has been; and here the theory of the constitution has failed again. In the event of no choice being made by the electors, either for want of a majority of electoral votes being given to any one, or on account of an equal majority for two, the House of Representatives became an electoral college for the occasion, limited to a choice out of the five highest (before the constitution was amended), or the two highest having an equal majority. The President and Vice-President were not then voted for separately, or with any designation of their office. All appeared upon the record as presidential nominees—the highest on the list having a majority, to be President; the next highest, also having a majority, to be Vice-President; but the people, from the beginning. had discriminated between the persons for these respective places, always meaning one on their ticket for President, the other for Vice-President. But, by the theory of the constitution and its words, those intended Vice-Presidents might be elected President in the House of Representatives, either by being among the five highest when there was no majority, or being one of two in an equal majority. This theory failed in the House of Representatives from the first election, the demos krateo principle—the people to govern-prevailing there as in the electoral colleges, and overruling the constitutional design in each.

The first election in the House of Representatives was that of Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Burr. in the session of 1800-1801. These gentlemen had each a majority of the whole number of electoral votes, and an equal majority -73 each -Mr. Burr being intended for Vice-President, One of the contingencies had then occurred in which the election went to the House of Representatives. The federalists had acted more wisely, one of their State electoral colleges (that of Rhode Island), having withheld a vote from the intended Vice-President on their side, Mr. Charles Colesworth Pinckney, of South Carolina; and so prevented an equality of votes between him and Mr. John Adams. It would have been entirely constitutional in the House of Representatives to have elected Mr. Burr President, but at the same time, a gross violation of the democratic principle, which requires the will of the majority to be complied with,

The federal Sta and kept up t nights, and unt were sixteen St rence of nine thirty-sixth Mr six, and two we ballot Mr. Jeff elected. Genera public life, took rising above all 1 tions, and urging ning to vote for 1 cratic principle people was electe tives; and the st had opposed that was broken down elections, was left didate at the ensu ed but fourteen seventy-six. But whose connivance was ruined-fell u party, disappeared seen afterwards in ing his life in war tion itself, in that tion), was broken de as to separate the pr dential ticket, givin in the event of no leges, sending each highest on the presi Representatives,-t presidential, to the the first struggle in tives (in relation to between the theory democratic principleruin to its opposers, a in the constitution, struggle.

The second preside of Representatives was of a century, and tution, which carried list to the House where the electoral vote John Quincy Adams, ford, were the three, the 199, 84, 41; and in the

id failed in its application to ge; but there might be a t election, and has been; and f the constitution has failed t of no choice being made by for want of a majority of g given to any one, or on acmajority for two, the House became an electoral college mited to a choice out of the the constitution was amendest having an equal majority. d Vice-President were not arately, or with any designae. All appeared upon the ial nominees-the highest on ajority, to be President; the laving a majority, to be Vicepeople, from the beginning. between the persons for these lways meaning one on their the other for Vice-President. of the constitution and its ded Vice-Presidents might be in the House of Representaeing among the five highest majority, or being one of two y. This theory failed in the tatives from the first election, principle-the people to govre as in the electoral colleges, constitutional design in each. in the House of Representa-Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Burr, 800-1801. These gentlemen ty of the whole number of an equal majority -73 each intended for Vice-President. rencies had then occurred in went to the House of Reprefederalists had acted more State electoral colleges (that having withheld a vote from President on their side, Mr. n Pinckney, of South Caronted an equality of votes be-Ir. John Adams. It would constitutional in the House to have elected Mr. Burr he same time, a gross violatic principle, which requires jority to be complied with. and kept up the struggle for seven days and nights, and until the thirty-sixth ballot. There were sixteen States, and it required the concurrence of nine to effect an election. Until the thirty-sixth Mr. Jefferson had eight, Mr. Burr six, and two were divided. On the thirty-sixth ballot Mr. Jefferson had ten States and was elected. General Hamilton, though not then in public life, took a decided part in this election, rising above all personal and all party considerations, and urging the federalists from the beginning to vote for Mr. Jefferson. Thus the democratic principle prevailed. The choice of the people was elected by the House of Representatives; and the struggle was fatal to those who had opposed that principle. The federal party was broken down, and at the ensuing Congress elections, was left in a small minority. Its candidate at the ensuing presidential election received but fourteen votes out of one hundred and seventy-six. Burr, in whose favor, and with whose connivance the struggle had been made, was ruined-fell under the ban of the republican party, disappeared from public life, and was only seen afterwards in criminal enterprises, and ending his life in want and misery. The constitution itself, in that particular (the mode of election), was broken down, and had to be amended so as to separate the presidential from the vice-presidential ticket, giving each a separate vote; and in the event of no election by the electoral colleges, sending each to separate houses—the three highest on the presidential lists to the House of Representatives .- the two highest on the vicepresidential, to the Senate. And thus ended the first struggle in the House of Representatives (in relation to the election of President); between the theory of the constitution and the democratic principle—triumph to the principle. ruin to its opposers, and destruction to the clause in the constitution, which permitted such a struggle.

The second presidential election in the House 99, 84, 41; and in this case a second struggle anew party lines, then almost obliterated under

The federal States undertook to elect Mr. Burr, took place between the theory of the constitution and the democratic principle; and with eventual defeat to the opposers of that principle, though temporarily successful. Mr. Adams was elected, though General Jackson was the choice of the people, having received the greatest number of votes, and being undoubtedly the second choice of several States whose votes had been given to Mr. Crawford and Mr. Clay (at the general election). The representatives from some of these States gave the vote of the State to Mr. Adams, upon the argument that he was best qualified for the station, and that it was dangerous to our institutions to elect a military chieftain-an argument which assumed a guardianship over the people, and implied the necessity of a superior intelligence to guide them for their own good. The election of Mr. Adams was perfectly constitutional, and as such fully submitted to by the people; but it was also a violation of the demos krateo principle; and that violation was signally rebuked. All the representatives who voted against the will of their constituents, lost their favor, and disappeared from public life. The representation in the House of Representatives was largely changed at the first general election, and presented a full opposition to the new President. Mr. Adams himself was injured by it, and at the ensuing presidential election was beaten by General Jackson more than two to one-178 to 83. Mr. Clay, who took the lead in the House for Mr. Adams, and afterwards took upon himself the mission of reconciling the people to his election in a series of public speeches, was himself crippled in the effort, lost his place in the democratic party, joined the whigs (then called national republicans), and has since presented the disheartening spectacle of a former great leader figuring at the head of his ancient foes in all their defeats, and lingering on their rear in their victories. The democratic principle was again victor over the theory of the constitution, and great and good were the results that ensued. It of Representatives was after the lapse of a quarter | vindicated the demos in their right and their of a century, and under the amended consti- power, and showed that the prefix to the contution, which carried the three highest on the stitution, "We, the people, do ordain and eslist to the House when no one had a majority tablish," &c., may also be added to its adminisof the electoral votes. General Jackson, Mr. tration, showing them to be as able to administer John Quincy Adams, and Mr. William H. Craw- as to make that instrument. It re-established ford, were the three, their respective votes being parties upon the basis of principle, and drew the fusion of parties during the "era of good feeling," and the efforts of leading men to make personal parties for themselves. It showed the conservative power of our government to lie in the people, more than in its constituted authorities. It showed that they were capable of exercising the function of self-government. It assured the supremacy of the democracy for a long time, and until temporarily lost by causes to be shown in their proper place. Finally, it was a caution to all public men against future attempts to govern presidential elections in the House of Representatives.

It is no part of the object of this "Thirty Years' View" to dwell upon the conduct of individuals, except as showing the causes and the consequences of events; and, under this aspect, it becomes the gravity of history to tell that, in these two struggles for the election of President, those who struggled against the democratic principle lost their places on the political theatre, -the mere voting members being put down in their States and districts, and the eminent actors for ever ostracised from the high object of their ambition. A subordinate cause may have had its effect, and unjustly, in prejudicing the public mind against Mr. Adams and Mr. Clay. They had been political adversaries, had co-operated in the election, and went into the administration together. Mr. Clay received the office of Secretary of State from Mr. Adams, and this gave rise to the imputation of a bargain between them.

It came within my knowledge (for I was then intimate with Mr. Clay), long before the election, and probably before Mr. Adams knew it himself, that Mr. Clay intended to support him against General Jackson; and for the reasons afterward averred in his public speeches. I made this known when occasions required me to speak of it, and in the presence of the friends of the impugned parties. It went into the newspapers upon the information of these friends, and Mr. Clay made me acknowledgments for it in a letter, of which this is the exact copy:

"I have received a paper published on the 20th ultimo, at Lemington, in Virginia, in which is contained an article stating that you had, to a gentleman of that place, expressed your disbelief of a charge injurious to metouching the late presidential election, and that I had communicated to you unequivocally, before the 15th of December, 1824, my determination to vote for Mr. Adams and not for General Jackson. Presuming that the publication was with your authority, I cannot deny the expression of proper acknowledgments for the sense of justice which has prompted you to render this voluntary and faithful testimony."

This letter, of which I now have the original. was dated at Washington City, December 6th. 1827—that is to say, in the very heat and middle of the canvass in which Mr. Adams was beaten by General Jackson, and when the testimony could be of most service to him. It went the rounds of the papers, and was quoted and relied upon in debates in Congress, greatly to the dissatisfaction of many of my own party. There was no mistake in the date, or the fact. I left Washington the 15th of December, on a visit to my father-in-law, Council James Mc-Dowell, of Rockbridge county, Virginia, where Mrs. Benton then was; and it was before I left Washington that I learned from Mr. Clay himself that his intention was to support Mr. Adams. I told this at that time to Colonel Mc-Dowell, and any friends that chanced to be present, and gave it to the public in a letter which was copied into many newspapers, and is preserved in Niles' Register. I told it as my belief to Mr Jefferson on Christmas evening of the same year when returning to Washington and making a call on that illustrious man at his seat, Monticello; and believing then that Mr. Adams would be elected and, from the necessity of the case, would have to make up a mixed cabinet, I expressed that belief to Mr. Jefferson, using the term, familia in English history, of "broad bottomed;" and asked him how it would do? He answered. "Not at all-would never succeed-would ruin all engaged in it." Mr. Clay told his intentions to others of his friends from an early period. but as they remained his friends, their testimony was but little heeded. Even my own, in the violence of party, and from my relationship to Mrs. Clay, seemed to have but little effect. The imputation of "bargain" stuck, and doubtless had an influence in the election. In fact, the circumstances of the whole affair-previous antagonism between the parties, actual support in the election, and acceptance of high office, made up a case against Messrs. Adams and Clay which it was hardly safe for public men to create and to brave, however strong in their own consciousness of integrity. Still, the great objection to the election of of the principle from which it r to choose a sa letter which I Missouri, before Mr. Adams, and ately afterward this high groun mainly fought, principle, and si admission of ar cause.

This presidenti under another as the practice of ca dency by membe concentrating pul tised as the emin whom public opin passing away, and pretensions, were was tried several t approbation, publi lowed, and not led tempted in 1824, a Crawford only atte not from any repug previous conduct ha known that Mr. Cr ber of friends in Co receive the nominati refused to go into it "caucus candidate," all united in paintin tion of these caucus maly of members of By their joint efforts in the fact though not these Congress cauc the people, and broke dropped, and a different public opinion was add nations by convention States. This worked the people being strictl and the majority mak it quickly degenerated, all the objections to ( tions, and many other Congress still attended r as lobby managers

Vol. I.-4

r Mr. Adams and not for Presuming that the publiyour authority, I cannot deny proper acknowledgments for e which has prompted you to ary and faithful testimony." thich I now have the original. hington City, December 6th, ay, in the very heat and midis in which Mr. Adams was Jackson, and when the testimost service to him. It went papers, and was quoted and bates in Congress, greatly to of many of my own party. take in the date, or the fact. the 15th of December, on a r-in-law, Count James Mcridge county, Virginia, where was; and it was before I left [ learned from Mr. Clay himention was to support Mr. is at that time to Colonel Mcriends that chanced to be prehe public in a letter which was newspapers, and is preserved I told it as my belief to Mr mas evening of the same year. Washington and making a call nan at his seat, Monticello; and Mr. Adams would be elected. ssity of the case, would have ted cabinet, I expressed that rson, using the term, familia , of "broad bottomed;" and would do? He answered. d never succeed-would ruin Mr. Clay told his intentions iends from an early period, ed his friends, their testimony eded. Even my own, in the and from my relationship to to have but little effect. The rgain" stuck, and doubtless n the election. In fact, the he whole affair-previous anthe parties, actual support in ceptance of high office, made lessrs. Adams and Clay which for public men to create and trong in their own conscious-Still, the great objection to the election of Mr. Adams was in the violation of the principle demos krateo; and in the question which it raised of the capacity of the demos to choose a safe President for themselves. A letter which I wrote to the representative from Missouri, before he gave the vote of the State to Mr. Adams, and which was published immediately afterwards, placed the objection upon this high ground; and upon it the battle was mainly fought, and won. It was a victory of principle, and should not be disparaged by the admission of an unfounded and subordinate cause.

This presidential election of 1824 is remarkable under another aspect—as having put an end to the practice of caucus nominations for the Presidency by members of Congress. This mode of concentrating public opinion began to be practised as the eminent men of the Revolution to whom public opinion awarded a preference, were rassing away, and when new men, of more equal pretensions, were coming upon the stage. It was tried several times with success and general approbation, public sentiment having been followed, and not led, by the caucus. It was attempted in 1824, and failed, the friends of Mr. Crawford only attending-others not attending. not from any repugnance to the practice, as their previous conduct had shown, but because it was known that Mr. Crawford had the largest numher of friends in Congress, and would assuredly receive the nomination. All the rest, therefore, refused to go into it: all joined in opposing the "caucus candidate," as Mr. Crawford was called; all united in painting the intrigue and corruption of these caucus nominations, and the anomaly of members of Congress joining in them. By their joint efforts they succeeded, and justly in the fact though not in the motive, in rendering these Congress caucus nominations odious to the people, and broke them down. They were dropped, and a different mode of concentrating public opinion was adopted—that of party nominations by conventions of delegates from the States. This worked well at first, the will of the people being strictly obeyed by the delegates. and the majority making the nomination. But it quickly degenerated, and became obnoxious to all the objections to Congress caucus nominations, and many others besides. Members of Congress still attended them, either as delegates delegates who had no constituency. Delegates attended upon equivocal appointments. Double sets of delegates sometimes came from the State. and either were admitted or repulsed, as suited the views of the majority. Proxies were invented. Many delegates attended with the sole view of establishing a claim for office, and voted accordingly. The two-thirds rule was invented, to enable the minority to control the majority; and the whole proceeding became anomalous and irresponsible, and subversive of the will of the people, leaving them no more control over the nomination than the subjects of kings have over the birth of the child which is born to rule over them. King Caucus is as potent as any other king in this respect: for whoever gets the nomination-no matter how effected—becomes the candidate of the party. from the necessity of union against the opposite party, and from the indisposition of the great States to go into the House of Representatives to be balanced by the small ones. This is the mode of making Presidents, practised by both parties now. It is the virtual election! and thus the election of the President and Vice-President of the United States has passed—not only from the college of electors to which the constitution confided it, and from the people to whom the practice under the constitution gave it, and from the House of Representatives which the constitution provided as ultimate arbiter—but has gone to an anomalous, irresponsible body, unknown to law or constitution, unknown to the early ages of our government, and of which a large propertion of the members composing it, and a much larger proportion of interlopers attending it, have no other view either in attending or in promoting the nomination of any particular man. than to get one elected who will enable them to eat out of the public crib-who will give them a key to the public crib.

The evil is destructive to the rights and sovereignty of the people, and to the purity of elections by conventions of delegates from the states. This worked well at first, the will of the people being strictly obeyed by the delegates, and the majority making the nomination. But at the objections to Congress caucus nominations, and many others besides. Members of Congress still attended them, either as delegates as lobby managers. Persons attended as three fourths of the States-a consummation to which the strength of the people has not yet been equal, but of which there is no reason to despair. The great parliamentary reform in Great Britain was only carried after forty years of continued, annual, persevering exertion. Our constitutional reform, in this point of the presidential election, may require but a few years; in the meanwhile I am for the people to select, as well as elect, their candidates, and for a reference to the House to choose one out of three presented by the people, instead of a caucus nomination of whom it pleased. The House of Representatives is no longer the small and dangerous electoral college that it once was. Instead of thirteen States we now have thirty-one; instead of sixty-five representatives, we have now above two hundred. Responsibility in the House is now well established, and political ruin, and personal humiliation, attend the violation of the will of the State. No man could be elected now, or endeavor to be elected (after the experience of 1800 and 1824), who is not at the head of the list, and the choice of a majority of the Union. The lesson of those times would deter imitation, and the democratic principle would again crush all that were instrumental in thwarting the public will. There is no longer the former danger from the House of Representatives, nor any thing in it to justify a previous resort to such assemblages as our national conventions have got to be. The House is legal and responsible, which the convention is not, with a better chance for integrity, as having been actually elected by the people; and more restrained by position, by public opinion, and a clause in the constitution from the acceptance of office from the man they elect. It is the constitutional umpire; and until the constitution is amended, I am for acting upon it as it is.

Vol. I.-4

CHAPTER XX.

THE OCCUPATION OF THE COLUMBIA.

This subject had begun to make a lodgment in the public mind, and I brought a bill into the Senate to enable the President to possess and retain the country. The joint occupation treaty of 1818 was drawing to a close, and it was my policy to terminate such occupation, and hold the Columbia (or Oregon) exclusively, as we had the admitted right to do while the question of title was depending. The British had no title and were simply working for a division-for the right bank of the river, and the harbor at its mouth—and waiting on time to ripen their joint occupation into a claim for half. I knew this, and wished to terminate a joint tenancy which could only be injurious to ourselves while it lasted and icopard our rights when it terminated. The bill which I brought in proposed an appropriation to enable the President to act efficiently. with a detatchment of the army and navy; and in the discussion of this bill the whole question of title and of policy came up; and, in a reply to Mr. Dickerson, of New Jersey, I found it to be my duty to defend both. I now give some extracts from that reply, as a careful examination of the British pretension, founded upon her own exhibition of title, and showing that she had none south of forty-nine degrees, and that we were only giving her a claim, by putting her possession on an equality with our own. These extracts will show the history of the case as it then stood-as it remained invalidated in all subsequent discussion-and according to which and after twenty years, and when the question had assumed a war aspect, it was finally settled. The bill did not pass, but received an encouraging vote-fourteen senators voting favorably to it. They were:

Messrs. Barbour, Benton, Bouligny, Cobb, Hayne, Jackson (the General), Johnson of Kentucky, Johnston of Louisiana, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Mills, Noble, Ruggles, Talbot, Thomas.

"Mr. Benton, in reply to Mr. Dickerson, said that he had not intended to speak to this bill. Always unwilling to trespass upon the time and patience of the Senate, he was particularly so at this moment, when the session was drawing to a close, and a hundred bills upon the table were each demanding attention. The occupa-tion of the Columbia River was a subject which had engaged the deliberations of Congress for four years past, and the minds of gentlemen might be supposed to be made up upon it. Resting upon this belief, Mr. B., as reporter of the bill, had limited himself to the duty of watching its progress, and of holding himself in readiness to answer any inquiries which might be put Inquiries he certainly expected; but a general assault, at this late stage of the session, upon bill, had not b had, however, New Jersey ( unfaithful to h discharging thi going over the the expense of from the Orego solve his difficu route-whether new route exp mountains climl sent twelve feet rays of a July calculations and the gentleman's an excellent arti for embellishing the want of one the senator from Senate with the Mr. B. to say, no turb him in the which he had wo directly to speak

"It is now. M precisely two anc for the Columbia United States and originated with th
The moment that it; and without a has labored ever arts of negotiation
covery by menaces

"In the year I States, Capt. Gra Columbia at its en 1893, Lewis and C ernment of the Ui discovery of the downwards, and to the name of their Alexander McKenz by the British Gov object; but he miss fell upon the Tacon Pacific about five he the month of the Co

"In 1803, the Unite and with it an open that vast province. Florida this questio the King of Spain; west, with the Kin happened in the very a treaty in Paris for 1 that we were signing adjustment of the b northwest possessions the King of Great of each were ignoran done; and on remitti Senate of the United for the purchase of Lo te such occupation, and hold Oregon) exclusively, as we had to do while the question of ng. The British had no title working for a division-for the river, and the harbor at its ng on time to ripen their joint laim for half. I knew this, and e a joint tenancy which could to ourselves while it lasted ights when it terminated. The tht in proposed an appropriae President to act efficiently. it of the army and navy; and of this bill the whole question liev came up; and, in a reply of New Jersey, I found it to fend both. I now give some reply, as a careful examinapretension, founded upon her f title, and showing that she of forty-nine degrees, and that ng her a claim, by putting her equality with our own. These v the history of the case as it remained invalidated in all sub--and according to which, and s, and when the question had aspect, it was finally settled. ss, but received an encouraging nators voting favorably to it.

> ur, Benton, Bouligny, Cobb, (the General), Johnson of ton of Louisiana, Lloyd of lills, Noble, Ruggles, Talbot,

n reply to Mr. Dickerson, said stended to speak to this bill. to trespass upon the time and enate, he was particularly so then the session was drawing hundred bills upon the table ding attention. The occupaibia River was a subject which deliberations of Congress for and the minds of gentlemen I to be made up upon it. Restlief, Mr. B., as reporter of the nimself to the duty of watchnd of holding himself in readiy inquiries which might be put ainly expected; but a general ate stage of the session, upon policy, and the details of the bill, had not been anticipated. Such an assault out restriction; the other, with the exception of had, however, been made by the senator from New Jersey (Mr. D.), and Mr. B. would be unfaithful to his duty if he did not repel it. In discharging this duty, he would lose no time in going over the gentleman's calculations about the expense of getting a member of Congress from the Oregon to the Potomac; nor would be solve his difficulties about the shortest and best route-whether Cape Horn should be doubled, a new route explored under the north pole, or mountains climbed, whose aspiring summits present twelve feet of defying snow to the burning rays of a July sun. Mr. B. looked upon these calculations and problems as so many dashes of the gentleman's wit, and admitted that wit was an excellent article in debate, equally convenient for embellishing an argument, and concealing the want of one. For which of these purposes the senator from New Jersey had amused the Senate with the wit in question, it was not for Mr. B. to say, nor should he undertake to disturb him in the quiet enjoyment of the honor which he had won thereby, and would proceed directly to speak to the merits of the bill.

"It is now, Mr. President, continued Mr. B. precisely two and twenty years since a contest for the Columbia has been going on between the United States and Great Britain. The contest originated with the discovery of the river itself. it; and without a color of title in her hand, she has labored ever since to overreach us in the arts of negotiation, or to bully us out of our discovery by menaces of war.

"In the year 1790, a citizen of the United States, Capt. Gray, of Boston, discovered the Columbia at its entrance into the sea; and in 1803. Lewis and Clarke were sent by the government of the United States to complete the discovery of the whole river, from its source downwards, and to take formal possession in the name of their government. In 1793 Sir Alexander McKenzie had been sent from Canada by the British Government to effect the same object; but he missed the sources of the river, fell upon the Tacoutche Tesse, and struck the Pacific about five hundred miles to the north of the mouth of the Columbia.

"In 1803, the United States acquired Louisiana. and with it an open question of boundaries for that vast province. On the side of Mexico and Florida this question was to be settled with west, with the King of Great Britain. a treaty in Paris for the acquisition of Louisiana. that we were signing another in London for the done; and on remitting the two treaties to the Senate of the United States for ratification, that for the purchase of Louisiana was ratified with-the fifth article. It was this article which adjusted the boundary line between the United States and Great Britain, from the Lake of the Woods to the head of the Mississippi; and the Senate refused to ratify it, because, by possibility, it might jeopard the northern boundary of Louisiana. The treaty was sent back to London, the fifth article expunged; and the British Government, acting then as upon a late occasion, rejected the whole treaty, when it failed in securing the precise advantage of which it was in search.

"In the year 1807, another treaty was negotiated between the United States and Great Britain. The negotiators on both sides were then possessed of the fact that Louisiana belonged to the United States, and that her boundaries to the north and west were undefined. The settlement of this boundary was a point in the negotiation, and continued efforts were made by the British plenipotentiaries to overreach the Americans, with respect to the country west of the Rocky Mountains. Without presenting any claim, they endeavored to 'leave a nest egg for future pretensions in that quarter.' (State Papers, 1822-3.) Finally, an article was agreed The forty-ninth degree of north latitude was to be followed west, as far as the territories of the two countries extended in that direction, The moment that we discovered it she claimed with a proviso against its application to the country west of the Rocky Mountains. This treaty shared the fate of that of 1803. It was never ratified. For causes unconnected with the uestions of boundary, it was rejected by Mr. Jefferson without a reference to the Senate.

"At Ghent, in 1814, the attempts of 1803 and 1807 were renewed. The British plenipotentiaries offered articles upon the subject of the boundary, and of the northwest coast of the same character with those previously offered; but nothing could be agreed upon, and nothing upon the subject was inserted in the treaty signed at that place.

"At London, in 1818, the negotiations upon this point were renewed; and the British Government, for the first time, uncovered the ground upon which its pretensions rested. Its plenipotentiaries, Mr. Robinson and Mr. Goulbourn, asserted (to give them the benefit of their own words, as reported by Messrs. Gallatin and Rush) 'That former voyages, and principally that of Captain Cook, gave to Great Britain the rights the King of Spain; on the north and north- derived from discovery; and they alluded to purchases from the natives south of the river Cohappened in the very time that we were signing lumbia, which they alleged to have been made prior to the American Revolution. They did not make any formal proposition for a boundary, adjustment of the boundary line between the but intimated that the river itself was the most continuest possessions of the United States and convenient that could be adopted, and that they the King of Great Britain. The negotiators would not agree to any which did not give them of each were ignorant of what the others had the harbor at the mouth of the river in common with the United States.'- Letter from Messrs. Gallatin and Rush, October 20th, 1820.

To this the American plenipotentiaries answered, in a way better calculated to encourage than to repulse the groundless pretensions of Great Britain. 'We did not assert (continue these gentlemen in the same letter), we did not assert that the United States had a perfect right to that country, but insisted that their claim was at least good against Great Britain. We did not know with precision what value our government set on the country to the westward of these mountains; but we were not authorized to enter into any agreement which should be tantamount to an abandonment of the claim to it. It was at last agreed, but, as we thought, with some reluctance on the part of the British plenipotentiaries, that the country on the northwest coast, claimed by either party, should, without prejudice to the claims of either, and for a limited time, be opened for the purposes of trade to the inhabitants of both countries.'

"The substance of this agreement was inserted in the convention of October, 1818. It constitutes the third article of that treaty, and is the same upon which the senator from New Jersey (Mr. Dickerson) relies for excluding the United States from the occupation of the Columbia.

"In subsequent negotiations, the British agents further rested their claim upon the discoveries of McKenzie, in 1793, the seizure of Astoria during the late war, and the Nootka Sound Treaty, of 1790.

"Such an exhibition of title, said Mr. B., is ridiculous, and would be contemptible in the hands of any other power than that of Great Britain. Of the five grounds of claim which she has set up, not one of them is tenable against the slightest examination. Cook never saw, much less took possession of any part of the northwest coast of America, in the latitude of the Columbia River. All his discoveries were far north of that point, and not one of them was followed up by possession, without which the fact of discovery would confer no title. The Indians were not even named from whom the purchases are stated to have been made anterior to the Revolutionary War. Not a single particular is given which could identify a transaction of the kind. The only circumstance mentioned applies to the locality of the Indians supposed to have made the sale; and that circumstance invalidates the whole claim. They are said to have resided to the 'south' of the Columbia; by consequence they did not reside upon it. and could have no right to sell a country of which they were not the possessors.

McKenzie was sent out from Canada, in the year 1793, to discover, at its head, the river which Captain Gray had discovered at its mouth, three years before. But McKenzie missed the object of his search, and struck the Pacific five hundred miles to the north, as I have already stated. The seizure of Astoria, during the war, was an operation of arms, conferring no more title upon Great Britain to the Columbia, than Maine and Michigan. This new ground of claim was set up by Mr. Bagot, his Britannic Majesty's minister to this republic, in 1817, and set up in a way to contradict and relinquish all their other pretended titles. Mr. Bagot was remonstrating against the occupation, by the United States, of the Columbia River, and reciting that it had been taken possession of, in his Majesty's name, during the late war, 'and had SINCE been considered as forming a part of his Majesty's dominions. The word 'since,' is exclusive of all previous pretension, and the Ghent Treaty, which stipulates for the restoration of all the captured posts, is a complete extinguisher to this idle pretension. Finally, the British negotiators have been driven to take shelter under the Nootka Sound Treaty of 1790. The character of that treaty was well understood at the time that it was made, and its terms will speak for themselves at the present day. It was a treaty of concession, and not of acquisition of rights, on the part of Great Britain. It was so characterized by the opposition, and so admitted to be by the ministry, at the time of its communication to the British Parliament.

Here Mr. B. read passages from the speeches of Mr. Fox and Mr. Pitt, to prove the character of this Treaty.]

"Mr. Fox said, 'What, then, was the extent of our rights before the convention-(whether admitted or denied by Spain was of no consequence)-and to what extent were they now secured to us? We possessed and exercised the free navigation of the Pacific Ocean, without restraint or limitation. We possessed and exercised the right of carrying on fisheries in the South Seas equally unlimited. This was no barren right, but a right of which we had availed ourselves, as appeared by the papers on the table, which showed that the produce of it had increased, in five years, from twelve to ninetyseven thousand pounds sterling. This estate we had, and were daily improving; it was not to be disgraced by the name of an acquisition. The admission of part of these rights by Spain, was all we had obtained. Our right, before, was to settle in any part of the South or Northwest Coast of America, not fortified against us by previous occupancy; and we were now restricted to settle in certain places only, and under certain restrictions. This was an important concession on our. Our rights of fishing extended to the whole ocean, and now it, too, was limited, and to be carried on within certain distances of the Spanish settlements. Our right of making settlements was not, as now, a right to build huts. but to plant colonies, if we thought proper. Surely these were not acquisitions, or rather conquests, as they must be considered, if we were to judge by the triumphant language respecting them, but great and important concessions. By the third article, we are authorized to navigate the Pacific Ocean and South Seas, unmolested, for the purpose of carrying on our the capture of Castine and Detroit gave her to fisheries, and to land on the unsettled coasts for the purpose of tradin after this pompous rec gation, fishery, and carticle, the sixth, which landing, and erecting any purpose but that o and amounts to a cor right to settle in any commerce with the nat mentary History, Vol.

"Mr. Pitt, in reply. part of Mr. Fox's speed reparation, Mr. Pitt proc namely, that gentleman that the other articles of mere concessions, and no swer to this, Mr. Pitt n what this country had g new rights, it certainly We had, before, a right fishery, and a right to fisheries in the Pacific C the coasts of any part of but that right not only h ledged, but disputed and the convention, it was secu stance which, though no advantage.'—Same—p. 10

"But, continued Mr. 1 take the character of the high authority of these riva ish Parliament. The treat I have it in my hand, and relied upon to sustain the Columbia River.

""ARTICLE THIRD OF THE

"'In order to strengthen ship, and to preserve, in fu mony and good understanding contracting parties, it is ag spective subjects shall not molested, either in naviga on their fisheries in the P the South Seas, or in landi those seas in places not alread purpose of carrying on their natives of the country, or of n there; the whole subject, no restrictions and provisions spe following articles.

"The particular clause of upon by the advocates for the that which gives the right of of the Northwest Coast, not a for the purpose of carrying o making settlements. The first upon this clause is, whether t latitude of the Columbia River, at the date of the Nootka Sound answer is in the affirmative. whether the English landed upon it was so unoccupied? The a negative; and this answer puts: tension of British claim founded t

new ground of claim Britannie Majesty's in 1817, and set up relinquish all their r. Bagot was remontion, by the United er, and reciting that a of, in his Majesty's and had SINCE been art of his Majesty's ice,' is exclusive of I the Ghent Treaty, estoration of all the extinguisher to this e British negotiators elter under the Noot-

The character of tood at the time that will speak for them-It was a treaty of uisition of rights, on It was so characterso admitted to be by its communication to

res from the speeches prove the character

then, was the extent onvention-(whether ain was of no consetent were they now sed and exercised the ic Ocean, without re-possessed and exerg on fisheries in the uited. This was no which we had availby the papers on the he produce of it had m twelve to ninetyling. This estate we ing; it was not to be acquisition. The ads by Spain, was all we efore, was to settle in Northwest Coast of inst us by previous w restricted to settle under certain restricant concession on our ng extended to the o, was limited, and to ain distances of the right of making setright to build huts, we thought proper. equisitions, or rather be considered, if we mphant language rend important concesle, we are authorized ean and South Seas, e of carrying on our unsettled coasts, for the purpose of trading with the natives; but, after this pompous recognition of right to navigation, fishery, and commerce, comes another article, the sixth, which takes away the right of landing, and erecting even temporary huts, for any purpose but that of carrying on the fishery, and amounts to a complete dereliction of all right to settle in any way for the purpose of commerce with the natives.'—British Parliamentary History, Vol. 28, p. 990. "Mr. Pitt, in reply. 'Having finished that part of Mr. Fox's speech which referred to the reparation, Mr. Pitt proceeded to the next point, namely, that gentleman's argument to prove, that the other articles of the convention were mere concessions, and not acquisitions. In answer to this, Mr. Pitt maintained, that, though what this country had gained consisted not of new rights, it certainly did of new advantages. We had, before, a right to the Southern whale fishery, and a right to navigate and carry on fisheries in the Pacific Ocean, and to trade on the coasts of any part of Northwest America; but that right not only had not been acknowledged, but disputed and resisted: whereas, by the convention, it was secured to us-a circumstance which, though no new right, was a new advantage.'—Same—p. 1002.

"But, continued Mr. Benton, we need not take the character of the treaty even from the high authority of these rival leaders in the British Parliament. The treaty will speak for itself. I have it in my hand, and will read the article relied upon to sustain the British claim to the

Columbia River.

""ARTICLE THIRD OF THE NOOTKA SOUND TREATY.

"In order to strengthen the bonds of friendship, and to preserve, in future, a perfect harmony and good understanding between the two contracting parties, it is agreed that their respective subjects shall not be disturbed or molested, either in navigating or carrying on their fisheries in the Pacific Ocean, or in the South Seas, or in landing on the coasts of those seas in places not already occupied, for the purpose of carrying on their commerce with the natives of the country, or of making settlements there; the whole subject, nevertheless, to the restrictions and provisions specified in the three following articles.

"The particular clause of this article, relied upon by the advocates for the British claim, is that which gives the right of landing on parts of the Northwest Coast, not already occupied, for the purpose of carrying on commerce and making settlements. The first inquiry arising upon this clause is, whether the coast, in the latitude of the Columbia River, was unoccupied at the date of the Nootka Sound Treaty? The answer is in the affirmative. The second is, whether the English landed upon this coast while it was so unoccupied? The answer is in the negative; and this answer puts an end to all pretension of British claim founded upon this treaty, and thus an individual, in the humble station of without leaving us under the necessity of recurring to the fact that the permission to land, and to make settlements, so far from contemplating an acquisition of territory, was limited by subsequent restrictions, to the erection of temporary huts for the personal accommodation of fishermen and traders only.

"Mr. B. adverted to the inconsistency, on the part of Great Britain, of following the 49th parallel to the Rocky Mountains, and refusing to follow it any further. He affirmed that the principle which would make that parallel a boundary to the top of the mountain, would carry it out to the Pacific Ocean. He proved this assertion by recurring to the origin of that line. It grew out of the treaty of Utrecht, that treaty which, in 1704, put an end to the wars of Queen Anne and Louis the XIVth and fixed the boundaries of their respective dominions in North America. The tenth article of that treaty was applicable to Louisiana and to Canada. It provided that commissioners should be appointed by the two powers to adjust the boundary between them. The commissioners were appointed, and did fix it. The parallel of 49 degrees was fixed upon as the common boundary from the Lake of the Woods, "indefinitely to the West." . This boundary was acquiesced in for a hundred years. By proposing to follow it to the Rocky Mountains, the British Govern-ment admits its validity; by refusing to follow it out, they become obnoxious to the charge of inconsistency, and betray a determination to encroach upon the territory of the United States, for the undisguised purpose of selfish aggrandizement.

"The truth is, Mr. President, continued Mr. B., Great Britain has no color of title to the country in question. She sets up none. There is not a paper upon the face of the earth in which a British minister has stated a claim. I speak of the king's ministers, and not of the agents employed by them. The claims we have been examining are thrown out in the conversations and notes of diplomatic agents. No English minister has ever put his name to them, and no one will ever risk his character as a statesman by venturing to do so. The claim of Great Britain is nothing but a naked pretension, founded on the double prospect of benefiting herself and injuring the United States. The fur trader, Sir Alexander McKenzie, is at the bottom of this policy. Failing in his attempt to explore the Columbia River, in 1793, he, nevertheless, urged upon the British Government the advantages of taking it to herself, and of expelling the Americans from the whole region west of the Rocky Mountains. The advice accorded too well with the passions and policy of that government, to be disregarded. It is a government which has lost no opportunity, since the peace of '83, of aggrandizing itself at the expense of the United States. It is a government which listens to the suggestions of its experienced subjects, a fur trader, has pointed out the policy which has been pursued by every Minister of Great Britain, from Pitt to Canning, and for the maintenance of which a war is now menaced.

"For a boundary line between the United States and Great Britain, west of the Mississippi, McKenzie proposes the latitude of 45 degrees, because that latitude is necessary to give the Columbia River to Great Britain. His words are: Let the line begin where it may on the Mississippi, it must be continued west, till it terminates in the Pacific Ocean, to the south of the Columbia.'

"Mr. B. said it was curious to observe with what closeness every suggestion of McKenzie had been followed up by the British Government. He recommended that the Hudson Bay and Northwest Company should be united; and they have been united. He proposed to extend the fur trade of Canada to the shore of the Pacific Ocean; and it has been so extended. He proposed that a chain of trading posts should be formed through the continent, from sea to sea; and it has been formed. He recommended that no boundary line should be agreed upon with the United States, which did not give the Columbia River to the British; and the British ministry declare that none other shall be formed. He proposed to obtain the command of the fur trade from latitude 45 degrees north; and they have it even to the Mandan villages, and the neighborhood of the Council Blutfs. He recommended the expulsion of American traders from the whole region west of the Rocky Mountains, and they are expelled from it. He proposed to command the commerce of the Pacific Ocean; and it will be commanded the moment a British fleet takes position in the mouth of the Columbia. Besides these specified advantages, McKenzie alludes to other 'political considerations,' which it was not necessary for him to particularize. Doubtless it was not. They were sufficiently understood. They are the same which induced the retention of the northwestern posts, in violation of the treaty of 1783; the same which induced the acquisition of Gibraltar, Malta, the Cape of Good Hope, the Islands of Ceylon and Madagascar; the same which makes Great Britain covet the possession of every commanding position in the four quarters of the

I do not argue the question of title on the part of the United States, but only state it as founded upon—1. Discovery of the Columbia River by Capt. Gray, in 1790; 2. Purchase of Louisiana in 1803; 3. Discovery of the Columbia from its head to its mouth, by Lewis and Clarke, in 1803; 4. Settlement of Astoria, in 1811; 5. Treaty with Spain, 1819; 6. Contiguity and continuity of settlement and possession. Nor do I argue the question of the advantages of retaining the Columbia, and refusing to divide or alienate our territory upon it. I merely state them, and leave their value to result from the enumeration. 1. To keep out a foreign power; 2. To gain a seaport with a military and naval station, on the coast of the Pacific; 3. To save the fur trade in that region, and prevent our Indians from being tampered with by British traders; 4. To open a communication for commercial purposes between the Mississippi and the Pacific; 5. To send the lights of science and of religion into eastern Asia.

CHAPTER XXI.

COMMENCEMENT OF MR. ADAMS'S ADMINISTRA-

Ox the 4th of March he delivered his inaugural address, and took the oath of office. That address-the main feature of the inauguration of every President, as giving the outline of the policy of his administration-furnished a topic against Mr. Adams, and went to the reconstruction of parties on the old line of strict, or latitudinous, construction of the constitution. It was the topic of internal national improvement by the federal government. The address extolled the value of such works, considered the constitutional objection as yielding to the force of argument, expressed the hope that every speculative (constitutional) scruple would be solved in a practical blessing; and declared the belief that, in the execution of such works posterity would derive a fervent gratitude to the founders of our Union, and most deeply feel and acknowledge the beneficent action of our government. The declaration of principles which would give so much power to the government, and the danger of which had just been so fully set forth by Mr. Monroe in his veto message on the Cumberland road bill, alarmed the old republicans, and gave a new ground of opposition to Mr. Adams's administration, in addition to the strong one growing out of the election in the House of Representatives, in which the fundamental principle of representative government had been disregarded. This new ground of opposition was greatly strengthened at the delivery of the first annual message, in which the topic of internal improvement was again largely enforced, other subjects recommended which would r constructive powers, and the President had accept the American States of ministers to their prop Isthmus of Panama. I from the beginning that t was to have a settled and that founded in principle same principles, under d had discriminated parties of the federal governmen school-survivors of the and Jefferson times, with s ed accordingly-the feder Adams, the republicans a mass of the younger genera

In the Senate a decided him, comprehending (not 1 men afterwards become emi North Carolina, Mr. Tazev Van Buren of New-Yorl Smith of Maryland, Mr. Ga rolina (the long-continued t of the Senate), Dickerson of nor Edward Lloyd of Maryl tucky, and Findlay of Pen House of Representatives t minority opposed to the new to be increased at the first e majority: so that no Presider menced his administration un able auspices, or with less ex ular career.

The cabinet was composed rienced men-Mr. Clay, Secre Richard Rush, of Pennsylvani Treasury, recalled from the Lo that purpose; Mr. James Bar Secretary at War; Mr. Samue New Jersey, Secretary of the Monroe, continued in that pla Mr. John McLean, of Ohio, Pos and of Mr. Wirt, Attorney Ger pying the same places respect Monroe, and continued by his place of Secretary of the Treas by Mr. Adams to Mr. William and declined by him-an offer w be commemorated to show how of personal feeling between the y upon it. I merely value to result from keep out a foreign t with a military and f the Pacific; 3. To region, and prevent ered with by British unication for comthe Mississippi and lights of science and ivered his inaugural f office. That adhe inauguration of e outline of the po--furnished a topic t to the reconstruce of strict, or latituonstitution. It was al improvement by he address extolled sidered the constituo the force of arguit every speculative ald be solved in a red the belief that, ks posterity would the founders of our and acknowledge government. The nich would give so ent, and the danger lly set forth by Mr. on the Cumberland ublicans, and gave a r. Adams's adminisng one growing out of Representatives, inciple of represendisregarded. This is greatly strengthrst annual message, improvement was er subjects recommended which would require a liberal use of constructive powers, and Congress informed that the President had accepted an invitation from the American States of Spanish origin, to send ministers to their proposed Congress on the Isthmus of Panama. It was, therefore, clear from the beginning that the new administration was to have a settled and strong opposition, and that founded in principles of government-the same principles, under different forms, which had discriminated parties at the commencement of the federal government. Men of the old school-survivors of the contest of the Adams and Jefferson times, with some exceptions, divided accordingly-the federalists going for Mr. Adams, the republicans against him, with the mass of the younger generation.

XXI.

AMS'S ADMINISTRA-

In the Senate a decided majority was against him, comprehending (not to speak of younger men afterwards become eminent,) Mr. Macon of North Carolina, Mr. Tazewell of Virginia, Mr. Van Buren of New-York, General Samuel Smith of Maryland, Mr. Gaillard of South Carolina (the long-continued temporary President of the Senate), Dickerson of New Jersey, Governor Edward Lloyd of Maryland, Rowan of Kentucky, and Findlay of Pennsylvania. In the House of Representatives there was a strong minority opposed to the new President, destined to be increased at the first election to a decided majority: so that no President could have commenced his administration under more unfavorable auspices, or with less expectation of a popular career.

The cabinet was composed of able and experienced men-Mr. Clay, Secretary of State; Mr. Richard Rush, of Pennsylvania, Secretary of the Treasury, recalled from the London mission for that purpose; Mr. James Barbour, of Virginia. Secretary at War; Mr. Samuel L. Southard, of New Jersey, Secretary of the Navy under Mr. Monroe, continued in that place; the same of Mr. John McLean, of Ohio, Postmaster General. and of Mr. Wirt, Attorney General-both occupying the same places respectively under Mr. Monroe, and continued by his successor. The place of Secretary of the Treasury was offered by Mr. Adams to Mr. William H. Crawford, and declined by him-an offer which deserves to be commemorated to show how little there was of personal feeling between these two eminent political opponents.

citizens, who had just been rival candidates for the Presidency of the United States. If Mr. Crawford had accepted the Treasury department, the administration of Mr. John Quincy Adams would have been entirely composed of the same individuals which composed that of Mr. Monroe, with the exception of the two (himself and Mr. Calhoun) elected President and Vice-President;—a fact which ought to have been known to Mons. de Tocqueville, when he wrote, that "Mr. Quincy Adams, on his entry into office, discharged the majority of the individuals who had been appointed by his predecessor."

There was opposition in the Senate to the confirmation of Mr. Clay's nomination to the State department, growing out of his support of Mr. Adams in the election of the House of Representatives, and acceptance of office from him; but overruled by a majority of two to one. The affirmative votes were Messrs. Barton and Benton of Missouri; Mr. Bell of New Hampshire; Messrs, Bouligny and Josiah F. Johnston of Louisiana; Messrs. Chandler and Holmes of Maine; Messrs. Chase and Seymour of Vermont; Messrs. Thomas Clayton and Van Dyke of Delaware; Messrs. DeWolf and Knight of Rhode Island; Mr. Mahlon Dickerson of New Jersey; Mr. Henry W. Edwards of Connecticut; Mr. Gaillard of South Carolina; Messrs. Harrison (the General) and Ruggles of Ohio; Mr. Hendrics of Indiana; Mr. Elias Kent Kane of Illinois; Mr. William R. King of Alabama; Messrs. Edward Lloyd and General Samuel Smith from Maryland; Messrs. James Lloyd and Elijah H. Mills from Massachusetts; Mr. John Rowan of Kentucky; Mr. Van Buren of New-York-27. The negatives were: Messrs. Berrien and Thos. W. Cobb of Georgia; Messrs. Branch and Macon of North Carolina; Messrs. Jackson (the General) and Eaton of Tennessee; Messrs. Findlay and Marks of Pennsylvania; Mr. Hayne of South Carolina; Messrs. David Holmes and Thomas A. Williams of Mississippi; Mr. McIlvaine of New Jersey; Messrs. Littleton W. Tazewell and John Randolph of Virginia; Mr. Jesse B. Thomas of Illinois. Seven senators were absent, one of whom (Mr. Noble of Indiana) declared he should have voted for the confirmation of Mr. Clay, if he had been present; and of those voting for him about the one half were his

CHAPTER XXII.

CASE OF MR. LANMAN—TEMPORARY SENATORIAL APPOINTMENT FROM CONNECTICUT.

Mr. Lanman had served a regular term as senator from Connecticut. His term of service expired on the 3d of March of this year, and the General Assembly of the State having failed to make an election of senator in his place, he received a temporary appointment from the governor. On presenting himself to take the oath of office, on the 4th day of March, being the first day of the special senatorial session convoked by the retiring President (Mr. Monroe), according to usage, for the inauguration of his successor; his appointment was objected to, as not having been made in a case in which a governor of a State could fill a vacancy by making a temporary appointment. Mr. Tazewell was the principal speaker against the validity of the appointment, arguing against it both on the words of the constitution, and the reason for the provision. The words of the constitution are: "If vacancies happen (in the Senate) by resignation or otherwise, during the recess of the legislature of any State, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments, until the next meeting of the legislature." "Happen" was held by Mr. Tazewell to be the governing word in this provision, and it always implied a contingency, and an unexpected one. It could not apply to a foreseen event, bound to occur at a fixed period. Here the vacancy was foreseen; there was no contingency in it. It was regular and certain. It was the right of the legislature to fi'l it, and if they failed, no matter from what cause, there was no right in the governor to supply their omission. The reason of the phraseology was evident. The Assembly was the appointing body. It was the regular authority to elect senators. It was a body of more or less members, but always representing the whole body of the State, and every county in the State, and on that account vested by the constitution with the power of choosing senators. The terms choose and elect are the words applied to the legislative election of senators. The term appoint is the word applied to a gubernatorial appointment.

The election was the regular mode of the constitution, and was not to be superseded by an appointment in any case in which the legislature could act, whether they acted or not. Some debate took place, and precedents were called for. On motion of Mr. Eaton, a committee was appointed to search for them, and found several. The committee consisted of Mr. Eaton, of Tennessee; Mr. Edwards, of Connecticut; and Mr. Tazewell, of Virginia. They reported the cases of William Cooke, of Tennessee, appointed by the governor of the State, in April, 1797, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the expiration of his own term, the 3d of March preceding; of Uriah Tracy, of Connecticut, appointed by the governor of the State, in February, 1801, to fill the vacancy to occur upon the expiration of his own term, on the 3d of March following; of Joseph Anderson, of Tennessee, appointed by the governor of the State, in February, 1809, to fill the vacancy which the expiration of his own term would make on the 4th of March following: of John Williams, of Tennessee, appointed by the governor of the State, in January, 1817, to fill the vacancy to occur from the expiration of his term, on the ensuing 3d of March; and in all these cases the persons so appointed had been admitted to their seats, and all of them, except in the case of Mr. Tracy, without any question being raised; and in his case by a vote of 13 to 10. These precedents were not satisfactory to the Senate; and after considering Mr. Lanman's case, from the 4th to the 7th of March, the motion to admit him to a seat was rejected by a vote of 23 to 18. The senators voting in favor of the motion were Messrs. Bell, Bouligny, Chase, Clayton, DeWolf, Edwards, Harrison (General), Hendricks, Johnston of Lousiana, Kane, Knight, Lloyd of Massachusetts, McIlvaine, Mills, Noble, Rowan, Seymour, Thomas-10. Those voting against it were Messrs. Barton, Benton, Berrien, Branch, Chandler, Dickerson, Eaton, Findlay, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Jackson (General), King of Alabama, Lloyd of Maryland, Marks, Macon, Ruggles, Smith of Maryland, Tazewell, Van Buren, Vandyke, Williams, of Mississippi-23; and with this decision, the subsequent practice of the Senate has conformed, leaving States in part or in whole unrepresented, when the legislature failed to fill a regular vacancy.

CHAPTEL

RETIRING OF ME

In the summer of this ve minated a long and high department of the federal g tirely to quit its service. the new President, Mr. Je the place of Minister Plen Extraordinary to the Co same place to which he had years before, and from Senate) by President W. which he had not been r Jefferson, at the revoluti took place in 1800. He with the government forty in the Congress of the C the convention which fran stitution (in both places f. of Massachusetts), in the S of New-York, being one of ti that State, elected in 1789, Schuyler, the father-in-law o He was afterwards ministe -again senator, and again 1 the mean time, declined the dent Washington to be his He was a federalist of the head of that party after the Hamilton; and when the na party, with whose views o systems of policy, General V coincided. As chief of that I for as Vice-President in 180 in 1816. He was one of t supported the government in against Great Britain. Oppo tion, he went into its support declared, and in his place in the measures and supplies rec was most essential) exerted hi for the defence of his adopted (on the strength and conduct then depended); assisting to re volunteer regiments and militia erating with the republican lead kins and Mr. Van Buren), to n State of New-York in the st

CHAPTER XXIII.

r mode of the cone superseded by an hich the legislature ted or not. Some edents were called on, a committee was

, and found several.

Mr. Eaton, of Ten-

nnecticut; and Mr.

7 reported the cases

essee, appointed by April, 1797, to fill ne expiration of his

preceding; of Uriah

ited by the governor

1801, to fill the va-piration of his own

llowing; of Joseph

ointed by the gov-

ry, 1809, to fill the

on of his own term

arch following; of

e, appointed by the muary, 1817, to fill ne expiration of his

March; and in all appointed had been

all of them, except ithout any question

a by a vote of 13 to a not satisfactory to

ering Mr. Lanman's

of March, the mo-

was rejected by a tors voting in favor

ell, Bouligny, Chase,

Harrison (General),

jana, Kane, Knight,

lvaine, Mills, Noble,

-10. Those voting

on, Benton, Berrien, on, Eaton, Findlay,

Maine, Holmes of

ral), King of Ala-

Jarks, Macon, Rug-

zewell, Van Buren,

ssissippi-23; and sequent practice of aving States in part

when the legislature

RETIRING OF MR. RUFUS KING.

In the summer of this year, this gentleman terminated a long and high career in the legislative department of the federal government, but not entirely to quit its service. He was appointed by the new President, Mr. John Quincy Adams, to the place of Minister Plenipotentiary and Envoy Extraordinary to the Court of St. James, the same place to which he had been appointed thirty years before, and from the same place (the Senate) by President Washington; and from which he had not been removed by President Jefferson, at the revolution of parties, which took place in 1800. He had been connected with the government forty years, having served in the Congress of the Confederation, and in the convention which framed the federal constitution (in both places from his native State of Massachusetts), in the Senate from the State of New-York, being one of the first senators from that State, elected in 1789, with General Philip Schuyler, the father-in-law of General Hamilton. He was afterwards minister to Great Britain, -again senator, and again minister--having, in the mean time, declined the invitation of President Washington to be his Secretary of State. He was a federalist of the old school, and the head of that party after the death of General Hamilton; and when the name discriminated a party, with whose views on government and systems of policy, General Washington greatly coincided. As chief of that party, he was voted for as Vice-President in 1808, and as President in 1816. He was one of the federalists who supported the government in the war of 1812 against Great Britain. Opposed to its declaration, he went into its support as soon as it was declared, and in his place in the Senate voted the measures and supplies required; and (what was most essential) exerted himself in providing for the defence of his adopted State, New-York (on the strength and conduct of which so much then depended); assisting to raise and equip her volunteer regiments and militia quotas, and co-opposition which the war in Canada and repugnance to the war in New England, rendered essential to the welfare of the Union. History should remember this patriotic conduct of Mr. King, and record it for the beautiful and instructive lesson which it teaches.

Like Mr. Macon and John Taylor of Carolina, Mr. King had his individuality of character, manners and dress, but of different type; they, of plain country gentlemen; and he, a high model of courtly refinement. He always appeared in the Senate in full dress; short smallclothes, silk stockings, and shoes, and was habitually observant of all the courtesies of life. His colleague in the Senate, during the chief time that I saw him there, was Mr. Van Buren: and it was singular to see a great State represented in the Senate, at the same time, by the chiefs of opposite political parties; Mr. Van Buren was much the younger, and it was delightful to behold the deferential regard which he paid to his elder colleague, always returned with marked kindness and respect.

I felt it to be a privilege to serve in the Senate with three such senators as Mr. King, Mr. Macon, and John Taylor of Carolina, and was anxious to improve such an opportunity into a means of benefit to myself. With Mr. Macon it came easily, as he was the cotemporary and friend of my father and grandfather; with the venerable John Taylor there was no time for any intimacy to grow up, as we only served together for one session; with Mr. King it required a little system of advances on my part, which I had time to make, and which the urbanity of his manners rendered easy. He became kind to me; readily supplied me with information from his own vast stores, allowed me to consult him, and assisted me in the business of the State (of whose admission he had been the great opponent), whenever I could satisfy him that I was right, -even down to the small bills which were entirely local, or merely individual. More, he gave me proofs of real regard, and in that most difficult of all friendly offices,—admonition, counselling against a fault; one instance of which was so marked and so agreeable to me (reproof as it was), that I immediately wrote down the very words of it in a letter to Mrs. Benton (who was then absent erating with the republican leaders (Gov. Tomp- from the city), and now copy it, both to do honkins and Mr. Van Buren), to maintain the great or to an aged senator, who could thus act a State of New-York in the strong and united "father's" part towards a young one, and because I am proud of the words he used to me. The letter says:

"Yesterday (May 20th, 1824), we carried $75,000 for improving the navigation of the Mississippi and the Ohio. I made a good speech, but no part of it will be published. I spoke in reply, and with force and animation. When it was over, Mr. King, of N. Y., came and sat down in a chair by me, and took hold of my hand and said he would speak to me as a father—that I had great powers, and that he felt a sincere pleasure in seeing me advance and rise in the world, and that he would take the liberty of warning me against an effect of my temperament when heated by opposition; that under these circumstances I took an authoritative manner, and a look and tone of defiance, which sat ill upon the older members; and advised me to moderate my manner."

This was real friendship, enhanced by the kindness of manner, and had its effect. I suppressed that speech, through compliment to him, and have studied moderation and forbearance ever since. Twenty-five years later I served in Congress with two of Mr. King's sons (Mr. James Gore King, representative from New-York, and Mr. John Alsop King, a representative from New Jersey); and was glad to let them both see the sincere respect which I had for the memory of their father.

In one of our conversations, and upon the formation of the constitution in the federal convention of 1787, he said some things to me which, I think ought to be remembered by future generations, to enable them to appreciate justly those founders of our government who were in favor of a stronger organization than was adopted. He said: "You young men who have been born since the Revolution, look with horror upon the name of a King, and upon all propositions for a strong government. It was not so with us. We were born the subjects of a King, and were accustomed to subscribe ourselves 'His Majesty's most faithful subjects;' and we began the quarrel which ended in the Revolution, not against the King, but against his parliament; and in making the new government many propositions were submitted which would not bear discussion; and ought not to be quoted against their authors, being offered for consideration, and to bring out opinions, and which, though behind the opinions of this day, were in advance of those of that day."—These things were said chiefly in relation to General Hamilton, who had submitted propositions stronger than those adopted, but nothing like those which party spirit attributed to him. I heard these words, I hope, with profit; and commit them, in the same hope, to after generations.

CHAPTER XXIV.

REMOVAL OF THE CREEK INDIANS FROM GEORGIA.

By an agreement with the State of Georgia in the year 1802, the United States became bound, in consideration of the cession of the western territory, now constituting the States of Alabama and Mississippi, to extinguish the remainder of the Indian title within her limits, and to remove the Indians from the State; of which large and valuable portions were then occupied by the Creeks and Cherokees. No time was limited for the fulfilment of this obligation, and near a quarter of a century had passed away without seeing its full execution. At length Georgia, seeing no end to this delay, became impatient, and just ly so, the long delay being equivalent to a breach of the agreement; for, although no time was limited for its execution, yet a reasonable time was naturally understood, and that incessant and faithful endeavors should be made by the United States to comply with her undertaking. In the years 1824-'25 this had become a serious question between the United States and Georgiathe compact being but partly complied with-and Mr. Monroe, in the last year of his Administration, and among its last acts, had the satisfaction to conclude a treaty with the Creek Indians for a cession of all their claims in the State, and their removal from it. This was the treaty of the Indian Springs, negotiated the 12th of February 1825, the famous chief, Gen. Wm. McIntosh, and some fifty other chiefs signing it in the presence of Mr. Crowell, the United States Indian agent. It ceded all the Creek country in Georgia, and also several millions of acres in the State of Alabama. Complaints followed it to Washington as having been concluded by McIntosh without the authority of the nation. The ratification of the treaty was opposed, but finally carried, and by the strong vote of 341 opposition to the treat contented party becar McIntosh and another sistance to the executi pared to resist. Geor ed to execute it by tak territory. The Govern felt itself bound to in dent, Mr. Adams, bec conviction that the tre out due authority, and not to be enforced; an federal troops to the c Georgia was in a flame the neighboring States In the mean time the PI violence, and to obtain j ed further; and assemb chiefs of the Creeks at V ded a new treaty with by which the treaty of nulled, and a substitute 1 all the Creek lands in Go bama. This treaty, with the difficulties of the ques communicated by the Pre and by t referred to the Affairs, of which I was ch tee reported against the ra earnestly deprecated a col the federal government an mended further negotiation easy as the Creek chiefs w ton. The objections to the

1. That it annulled the M by implying its illegality, aring the fate of its authors.

2. Because it did not ce Creek lands in Georgia.

3. Because it ceded none Further negotiations accomendation of the Senate, we ident; and on the 31st of year, a supplemental article which all the Creek lands in toher; and the Creeks within to emigrate to a new home b pi. The vote in the Senate of treaty, and its supplemental emphatic—thirty to seven: a tives all Southern senators fav.

on, who had submithan those adopted, h party spirit attriwords, I hope, with the same hope, to XXIV.

K INDIANS FROM

State of Georgia in ates became bound, sion of the western ie States of Alabama h the remainder of mits, and to remove of which large and n occupied by the o time was limited ligation, and near a assed away without ength Georgia, seeing impatient, and just luivalent to a breach hough no time was t a reasonable time nd that incessant and made by the United ndertaking. In the ome a serious quesates and Georgiacomplied with-and r of his Administrahad the satisfaction e Creek Indians for the State, and their s the treaty of the e 12th of February, Wm. McIntosh, and ig it in the presence States Indian agent. try in Georgia, and in the State of Alait to Washington as cIntosh without the e ratification of the ally carried, and by the strong vote of 34 to 4. Disappointed in their opposition to the treaty at Washington, the discontented party became violent at home, killed McIntosh and another chief, declared forcible resistance to the execution of the treaty, and prepared to resist. Georgia, on her part, determined to execute it by taking possession of the ceded territory. The Government of the United States felt itself bound to interfere. The new President, Mr. Adams, became impressed with the conviction that the treaty had been made without due authority, and that its execution ought not to be enforced; and sent Gen. Gaines with federal troops to the confines of Georgia. All Georgia was in a flame at this view of force, and the neighboring States sympathized with her. In the mean time the President, anxious to avoid violence, and to obtain justice for Georgia, treated further; and assembling the head men and chiefs of the Creeks at Washington City, concluded a new treaty with them (January, 1826); by which the treaty of Indian Springs was annulled, and a substitute for it negotiated, ceding all the Creek lands in Georgia, but none in Alabama. This treaty, with a message detailing all the difficulties of the question, was immediately communicated by the President to the Senate, and by it referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, of which I was chairman. The committee reported against the ratification of the treaty, earnestly deprecated a collision of arms between the federal government and a State, and recommended further negotiations-a thing the more easy as the Creek chiefs were still at Washington. The objections to the new treaty were:

1. That it annulled the McIntosh treaty; thereby implying its illegality, and apparently justifying the fate of its authors.

2. Because it did not cede the whole of the Creek lands in Georgia.

3. Because it ceded none in Alabama.

Further negotiations according to the recommendation of the Senate, were had by the President; and on the 31st of March of the same year, a supplemental article was concluded, by which all the Creek lands in Georgia were ceded toher; and the Creeks within her borders bound to emigrate to a new home beyond the Mississippi. The vote in the Senate on ratifying this new treaty, and its supplemental article, was full and emphatic—thirty to seven: and the seven negatives all Southern senators favorable to the object, but dissatisfied with the clause which annulled the McIntosh treaty and implied a censure upon its authors. Northern senators voted in a body to do this great act of justice to Georgia, restrained by no unworthy feeling against the growth and prosperity of a slave State. And thus was carried into effect, after a delay of a quarter of a century, and after great and just complaint on the part of Georgia, the compact between that State and the United States of 1802. Georgia was paid at last for her great cession of territory, and obtained the removal of an Indian community out of her limits, and the use and dominion of all her soil for settlement and jurisdiction. It was an incalculable advantage to her. and sought in vain under three successive Southern Presidents-Jefferson, Madison, Monroe-(who could only obtain part concessions from the Indians)—and now accomplished under a Northern President, with the full concurrence and support of the Northern delegations in Congress: for the Northern representatives in the House, voted the appropriations to carry the treaty into effect as readily as the senators had voted the ratification of the treaty itself. Candid men, friends to the harmony and stability of this Union, should remember these things when they hear the Northern States, on account of the conduct of some societies and individuals, charged with unjust and criminal designs towards the South.

An incident which attended the negotiation of the supplemental article to the treaty of January deserves to be commemorated, as an instance of the frauds which may attend Indian negotiations, and for which there is so little chance of detection by either of the injured parties.-by the Indians themselves, or by the federal government. When the President sent in the treaty of January, and after its rejection by the Senate became certain, thereby leaving the federal government and Georgia upon the point of collision, I urged upon Mr. James Barbour, the Secretary at War (of whose department the Indian Office was then a branch) the necessity of a supplemental article ceding all the Creek lands in Georgia; and assured him that, with that additional article, the treaty would be ratified, and the question settled. The Secretary was very willing to do all this, but said it was impossible,-that the chiefs would not agree to it. I recommended to him to make them some presents, so as to overcome their opposition; which he most innocently declined, because it would savor of bribery. In the mean time it had been communicated, to me, that the treaty already made was itself the work of great bribery; the sum of $160,000 out of $247,000, which it stipulated to the Creek nation, as a first payment, being a fund for private distribution among the chiefs who negotiated it. Having received this information, I felt quite sure that the fear of the rejection of the treaty, and the consequent loss of these $160,000, to the negotiating chiefs, would insure their assent to the supplemental article without the inducement of further presents. I had an interview with the leading chiefs, and made known to them the inevitable fact that the Senate would reject the treaty as it stood, but would ratify it with a supplemental article ceding all their lands in Georgia. With this information they agreed to the additional article: and then the whole was ratified, as I have already stated. But a further work remained behind. It' was to balk the fraud of the corrupt distribution of $160,000 among a few chiefs; and that was to be done in the appropriation bill, and by a clause directing the whole treaty money to be paid to the nation instead of the chiefs. The case was communicated to the Senate in secret session, and a committee of conference appointed (Messrs. Benton, Van Buren, and Berrien) to agree with the House committee upon the proper clause to be put into the appropriation bill. It was also communicated to the Secretary at War. He sent in a report from Mr. McKinney, the Indian bureau clerk, and actual negotiator of the treaty, admitting the fact of the intended private distribution; which, in fact, could not be denied, as I held an original paper showing the names of all the intended recipients, with the sum allowed to each, beginning at $20,000 and ranging down to $5000: and that it was done with his cognizance.

Some extracts from speeches delivered on that occasion will well finish this view of a transaction which at one time threatened violence between a State and the federal government, and in which a great fraud in an Indian treaty was detected and frustrated.

EXTRACTS FROM THE SPEECHES IN THE SENATE AND IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

"Mr. Van Buren said he should state the circumstances of this case, and the views of the committee of conference. A treaty was made in this city, in which it was stipulated on the part of the United States, that $247,000,/together with an annuity of $20,000 a year, and other considerations, should be paid to the Creeks, as a consideration for the extinguishment of their title to lands in the State of Georgia, which the United States, under the cession of 1802, were under obligations to extinguish. The bill from the other House to carry this treaty into effect, directed that the money should be paid and distributed among the chiefs and warriors. That bill came to the Senate, and a confidential communication was made to the Senate. from which it appeared that strong suspicions were entertained that a design existed on the part of the chiefs who made the treaty, to practise a fraud on the Creek nation, by dividing the money amongst themselves and associates. An amendment was proposed by the Senate, which provided for the payment of those moneys in the usual way, and the distribution of them in the usual manner, and in the usual proportion to which the Indians were entitled. That amendment was sent to the other House, who, unadvised as to the facts which were known to the Senate, refused to concur in it, and asked a conference. The conferees, on the part of the Senate, communicated their suspicions to the conferees on the part of the House, and asked them to unite in an application to the Department of War, for information on the subject. This was accordingly done, and the documents sent, in answer, were a letter from the Secretary of War, and a report by Mr. McKenney. From that report it appeared clear and satisfactory, that a design thus existed on the part of the Indians, by whom the treaty was negotiated, to distribute of the $247,000 to be paid for the cession by the United States, $159,750 among themselves, and a few favorite chiefs at home, and three Cherokee chiefs who had no interest in the property. Ridge and Vann were to receive by the original treaty $5000 each. By this agreement of the distribution of the money each was to receive $15,000 more, making $20,000 for each. Ridge, the father of Ridge who is here, was to receive $10,000. The other $100,000 was to be distributed, $5000, and, in some instances, $10,000 to the chiefs who negotiated the treaty here, varying from one to ten thousand dollars each.

"Mr. V. B. said, in his judgment, the character of the government was involved in this subject, and it would require, under the circumstances of this case, that they should take every step they could rightfully take to exculpate themselves from having, in any degree or form concurred in this fraud. The sentiment of the American people where he resided was, and had been, highly excited on this subject; they had applauded, in the most ardent manner, the zel manifested by the government to preserve themselves pure in their negotiations with the Indians; and though he was satisfied—though he deemed it impossible to supp government could hav tice of this fraud, yet in the case which requi the negotiation of the t of the supplementary as was finally adopted, all communicated to the D two Cherokees. Mr. V purpose, because the nec require it, to say what ought to have done, or do, when the information had known him many y an honester man, or a m country, than that gent said it was not for him to have been the course of United States, if the info to him on the subject. I a mortifying and most in the minds of the people of that no means whatever suppression of this frau there ought to be, an exc in the public mind."

"Mr. Benton said, that of the views of the con which had been given by tyork (Mr. Van Buren), he to a statement of facts on on which references had

sonal knowledge.

"The Secretary of War h his letter to the committee, that the Secretary had ref gratuities to the reek ch success of the negotiation. correct. Mr. B. had himse Secretary to do so; it was, days after the treaty had b ferred to a paper which fix 9th or 10th of March, and signed in the month of Jan was done at the time that M services to procure the sup be adopted. The Secretary the practice of giving these said he had recommended of treating with barbarians; fied in this way, the chiefs negotiation, at a great daily e ernment, until they got the way or other, or defeated the He considered the practice to the usage of the United State to be common in all barbaro many that were civilized; an article in the federal constit ceiving "presents" from fore proof that the convention th striction to be necessary, even

The time at which Mr. B. h vices to aid this negotiation, has to be eminently critical, and big v treaty was made stipulated on the that $247,000, to-$20,000 a year, uld be paid to the the extinguishment State of Georgia, der the cession of to extinguish. The o carry this treaty money should be he chiefs and war-Senate, and a conmade to the Senate, strong suspicions sign existed on the the treaty, to pracion, by dividing the and associates. An the Senate, which of those moneys in ibution of them in e usual proportion e entitled. That other House, who, ch were known to in it, and asked a on the part of the suspicions to the House, and asked tion to the Departon on the subject. and the documents er from the Secreby Mr. McKenney. clear and satisfacisted on the part of aty was negotiated, to be paid for the s, $159,750 among te chiefs at home, ho had no interest 1 Vann were to re-$5000 each. By ution of the money 000 more, making he father of Ridge 10,000. The other ited, $5000, and, in ne chiefs who negog from one to ten > udgment, the charas involved in this under the circumy should take every take to exculpate any degree or form. ie sentiment of the esided was, and had subject; they had at manner, the zeal it to preserve themons with the Indians; -though he deemed government could have countenanced the practice of this fraud, yet there were circumstances in the case which required exculpation. Between the negotiation of the treaty and the negotiation of the supplementary article on which the treaty was finally adopted, all these circumstances were communicated to the Department of War by the two Cherokees. Mr. V. B. said it was not his purpose, because the necessity of the case did not require it, to say what the Secretary of War ought to have done, or to censure what he did do, when the information was given to him. He had known him many years, and there was not an honester man, or a man more devoted to his country, than that gentleman was. Mr. V. B. said it was not for him to have said what should have been the course of the President of the United States, if the information had been given to him on the subject. It could not fail to make a mortifying and most injurious impression on the minds of the people of this country, to find that no means whatever were taken for the suppression of this fraud. There was, and there ought to be, an excitement on the subject in the public mind."

"Mr. Benton said, that after the explanation of the views of the committee of conference which had been given by the senator from New-York (Mr. Van Buren), he would limit himself to a statement of facts on two or three points, on which references had been made to his personal knowledge.

"The Secretary of War had referred to him, in his letter to the committee, as knowing the fact that the Secretary had refused to give private gratuities to the reek chiefs to promote the success of the negotiation. The reference was correct. Mr. B. had himself recommended the Secretary to do so; it was, however, about forty days after the treaty had been signed. He referred to a paper which fixed the date to the 9th or 10th of March, and the treaty had been signed in the month of January preceding. It was done at the time that Mr. B. had offered his services to procure the supplemental article to be adopted. The Secretary entirely condemned the practice of giving these gratuities. Mr. B. said he had recommended it as the only way of treating with barbarians; that, if not gratified in this way, the chiefs would prolong the negotiation, at a great daily expense to the government, until they got their gratuity in one way or other, or defeated the treaty altogether. He considered the practice to be sanctioned by the usage of the United States: he believed it to be common in all barbarous nations, and in many that were civilized; and referred to the article in the federal constitution against receiving "presents" from foreign powers, as a proof that the convention thought such a restriction to be necessary, even among ourselves.

"The time at which Mr. B. had offered his services to aid this negotiation, had appeared to him

it impossible to suppose for a moment that which he was anxious to avert. It was after the committee had resolved to report against the new treaty, and before they had made the report to the Senate. The decision, whatsoever it might be, and the consequent discussions, criminations, and recriminations, were calculated to bring on a violent struggle in the Senate itself; between the Senate and the Executive; perhaps between the two Houses (for a reference of the subject to both would have taken place); and between one or more States and the federal government. Mr. B. had concurred in the report against the new treaty, because it divested Georgia of vested rights; and, though objectionable in many other respects, he was willing, for the sake of peace, to ratify it, provided the vested rights of Georgia were not invaded. The supplemental article had relieved him upon this point. He thought that Georgia had no further cause of dissatisfaction with the treaty; it was Alabama that was injured by the loss of some millions of acres, which she had acquired under the treaty of 1825, and lost under that of 1826. Her case commanded his regrets and sympathy. She had lost the right of jurisdiction over a considerable extent of territory; and the advantages of settling, cultivating, and taxing the same, were postponed; but he hoped, not indefinitely. But these were consequential advantages, resulting from an act which the government was not bound to do; and, though the loss of them was an injury, yet this injury could not be considered as a violation of vested rights; but the circumstance certainly increased the strength of her claim to the total extinction of the Indian titles within her limits and, he trusted, would have its due effect upon the Government of the United States.

"The third and last point on which Mr. B. thought references to his name had made it proper for him to give a statement, related to the circumstance which had induced the Senate to make the amendment which had become the subject of the conference between the two Houses. He had himself come to the knowledge of that circumstance in the last days of April, some weeks after the supplemental article had been ratified. He had deemed it to be his duty to communicate it to the Senate, and do it in a way that would avoid a groundless agitation of the public feeling, or unjust reflections upon any individual, white or red, if, peradventure, his information should turn out to have been untrue. He therefore communicated it to the Senate in secret session; and the effect of the information was immediately manifested in the unanimous determination of the Senate to adopt the amendment which was now under consideration. He deemed the amendment, or one that would effect the same object, to be called for by the circumstances of the case, anti-the relative state of the parties. It was apparent that a few chiefs were to have an undue proportion of the money—they had realized what he had foretold to the Secretary; and it was certain that the wheeminently critical, and hig with consequences knowledge of this, whenever it should be found out by the nation, would occasion disturbances. and, perhaps, bloodshed. He thought that the United States should prevent these consequences, by preventing the cause of them, and, for this purpose, he would concur in any amendment that would effect a fair distribution of the money, or any distribution that was agreeable to the nation in open counsel."

Mr. Berrien: "You have arrived at the last scene in the present act of the great political drama of the Creek controversy. In its progress.

you have seen two of the sovereign States of the American Confederation—especially, you have seen one of those States, which has always been faithful and ferward in the discharge of her combined force of the administration and its allies consisting of a portion of the Creek nation, and certain Cherokee diplomatists. Hitherto, in the discussions before the Senate on this subject, I have imposed a restraint upon my own feelings under the influence of motives which have now ceased to operate. It was my first duty to obtain an acknowledgment, on this floor, of the rights of Georgia, repressing, for that purpose, even the story of her wrongs. It was my first duty, sir, and I have sacrificed to it every other prostrated. "Sir, in the progress of that controversy, which has grown out of the treaty of the Indian Springs, the people of Georgia have been grossly and wantonly calumniated, and the acts of the administration have assisted to give currency to these calumnies. Her chief magistrate has been traduced. The solemn act of her legislature has been set at naught by a rescript of the federal Executive. A military force has been quartered on her borders to coerce her to submission; and without a trial, without the privilege of being heard, without the semblance of evidence, she has been deprived of rights secured to her by the solemn stipulations of treaty.

longer exists. The rights of Georgia have been

· When, in obedience to the will of the legislature of Georgia, her chief magistrate had communicated to the President his determination to survey the ceded territory, his right to do so was admitted. It was declared by the President that the act would be 'wholly' on the responsibility of the government of Georgia, and that 'the Government of the United States would not be in any manner responsible for any consequences which might result from the measure.' When his willingness to encounter this responsibility was announced, it was met by the declaration that the President would 'not permit the survey to be made,' and he was referred to a major-general of the army of the United States, and one thousand regulars.

"The murder of McIntosh—the defamation of the chief magistrate of Georgia—the menace of military force to coerce her to submissionwere followed by the traduction of two of her made a bargain with a savage tribe which you cherished citizens, employed as the agents of the choose to dignify with the name of a treaty.

General Government in negotiating the treatygentlemen whose integrity will not shrink from a comparison with that of the proudest and loftiest of their accusers. Then the sympathies of the people of the Union were excited in behalf of 'the children of the forest,' who were represented as indignantly spurning the gold, which was offered to entice them from the graves of their fathers and resolutely determined never to abandon thein. The incidents of the plot being thus prepared, the affair hastens to its consummation. A new treaty is negotiated here—a pure and spotless treating The rights of Georgia and of Alabama are sacraficed; the United States obtain a part of the lands. and pay double the amount stipulated by the old duties to this Union, driven to the wall, by the treaty; and those poor and noble, and unsophisticated sons of the forest, having succeeded in imposing on the simplicity of this government. next concert, under its eye, and with its knowledge, the means of defrauding their own constituents, the chiefs and warriors of the Creek nation.

"For their agency in exciting the Creeks to resist the former treaty, and in deluding this government to annul it, three Cherekees-Ridge, Vann, and the father of the former-are to receive FORTY THOUSAND DOLLARS of the money stipulated to be paid by the United States consideration. As a motive to forbearance it no to the chiefs of the Creek nation; and the government, when informed of the projected fraud, deems itself powerless to avert it. Nay, when apprised by your amendment, that you had also detected it, that government does not he sitate to interpose, by one of its high functionaries, to resist your proceeding, by a singular fatuity, thus giving its countenance and support to the commission of the fraud. Sir, I speak of what has passed before your eves even in this hall.

"One fifth of the whole purchase money is to be given to three Cherokees. Ten thousand pollars reward one of the heroes of Fort Mins-a boon which it so well becomes us fibestow. A few chosen favorites divide among themselves upwards of one hundred and there THOUSAND DOLLARS, leaving a pittance for distribution among the great body of the chiefs and warriors of the nation.

But the administration, though it condemns the fraud, thinks that we have no power to prevent its consummation. What, sir, have we no power to see that our own treaty is carried into effect? Have we no interest in doing so? Have we no power? We have stipulated for the payment of two hundred and forty-seven thousand dollars to the chiefs of the Creek nation, to be distributed among the chiefs and warriors of that nation. Is not the distribution part of the contract as well as the payment? We know that a few of those chiefs in fraudulent violation of the rights secured by that treaty, are about to appropriate this money to themselves. Are we powerless to prevent it? Nav. must we. too, suffer ourselves to be made the conscious instruments of its consummation? We have concerning whom we legis sent, or without it, as it eves. We know that some them are about to cheat t have the means in our har their corrupt purpose cannot we not the right to see that honestly fulfilled? Consiste honesty, can we put the cons the contract into the hands know are about to defraud trusted them? Sir. the prope

"Mr. Forsyth (of the Hot tives) said: A stupendous fr. intended by the delegation who the Secretary of War, the ne chiefs composing the Creek di sisted by their Cherokee secre had combined to put into their those of a few select friends. three fourths of the first payme the second cession of the land Fig. The facts connected with although concealed from the second contract was before ther and from the House when the to carry it into effect was und were perfectly understood at th ment by the Secretary, and by is called the head of the India Thomas L. McKinney). The So some strange fortune, discovere fraud, after the ratification of tl before they acted on the appropri ed, by an amendment to the bill, success of the profitable scheme o House, entirely ignorant of the suspecting the motive of the amen jected it, insisted upon their disa and a committee of the two Houses onferred on the subject. Now, the ascertained by the separate report mittees, there can be no difference the great point of defeating the inte ry of the delegation and secretaries tribe. The only matter which can sion, is, how shall the treachery how shall the Creek tribe be pi the aboundable designs of their w imprincipled agents? Will the amposed by the committee reach their plan is, to pay the money to the divided among the chiefs and war the direction of the Secretary of V council of the nation, convened for t Suppose the council in solemn session before them, and the division about under the direction of the Secretar. may not the chiefs and their secret the money, as promised to them under and how will the Secretary or his a the claim? They assented—the Hou seive that the only difficulty was the the bribes The Secretary was willing high as five thousand dollars, but shrink from a st and loftiest athies of the behalf of 'the epresented as h was offered their fathers. bandon thein. prepared, the A new treaty otless treaty. ma are sacrit of the lands, ed by the old and unsophissucceeded in government, ith its knowown constitu-Creek nation. ie Creeks to Jeluding this Cherokeesformer-are LARS of the United States I the govern-1 fraud, deems then apprised also detected to interpose, o resist your rus giving its

the treaty-

e money is to EN THOU-AND oes of Fort comes us to livide among ED AND FIFTY ace for distriie chiefs and mmission of has passed

> it condemns power to prehave we no carried into ig so? Have I for the payven thousand nation, to be warriors of tion part of 1? We know lent violation ty, are about iselves. Are v, must we. he conscious We have e which you of a treaty.

sent, or without it. as it seems good in our eves. We know that some ten or twenty of them are about to cheat the remainder. have the means in our hands, without which their corrupt purpose cannot be effected. Have we not the right to see that our own bargain is honestly fulfilled? Consistently with common the contract into the hands of those who we know are about to defraud the people who trusted them? Sir, the proposition is absurd.

"Mr. Forsyth (of the House of Representatives) said: A stupendous fraud, it seems, was intended by the delegation who had formed, with the Secretary of War, the new contract. The chiefs composing the Creek diplomatic train, assisted by their Cherokee secretaries of legation, had combined to put into their own pockets, and those of a few select friends, somewhere about three fourths of the first payment to be made for the second cession of the lands lying in Geor-The facts connected with this transaction. although concealed from the Senate when the second contract was before them for ratification, and from the House when the appropriation bill to carry it into effect was under consideration, were perfectly understood at the War Department by the Secretary, and by his clerk, who is called the head of the Indian Bureau (Mr. Thomas L. McKinney). The Senate having, by some strange fortune, discovered the intended fraud, after the ratification of the contract, and before they acted on the appropriation bill, wishsuccess of the profitable scheme of villany. The House, entirely ignorant of the facts, and not suspecting the motive of the amendment, had rejected it, insisted upon their disagreement to it, mittees, there can be no difference of opinion on the great point of defeating the intended treachery of the delegation and secretaries to the Creek tribe. The only matter which can bear discussion, is, how shall the treachery be punished? -how shall the Creek tribe be protected from the abounnable designs of their worthless and unprincipled agents? Will the amendment proposed by the committee reach their object? The plan is, to pay the money to the chiefs, to be hyded among the chiefs and warriors, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in a full council of the nation, convened for the purpose. Suppose the council in solemn session, the money before them, and the division about to be made, under the direction of the Secretary of Warthe money, as promised to them under the treaty. and how will the Secretary or his agent resist the claim? They assented—the House will perceive that the only difficulty was the amount of concerning whom we legislate with their con- stretch to ten thousand dollars. Notwithstanding the assent of the Cherokees, and the declaration of the Secretary, that five thousand dollars each was the extent that they could be allowed, Ridge and Vann, after the treaty was signed, and before it was acted on by the Senate or submitted to that body, brought a paper, the precious honestly fulfilled? Consistently with common list of the price of each traitor, for the inspection honestly, can we put the consideration money of and information of the head of the bureau and the head of the department; and what answer did they receive from both? The head of the bureau said it was their own affair. The Secretary said he presumed it was their own affair. But I ask this House, if the engagement for the five thousand dollars, and the list of the sums to be distributed, may not be claimed as part of his new contract? If these persons have not a ris to claim, in the face of the tribe, these sums, as promised to them by their Great Father? Ay, sir; and, if they are powerful enough in the tribe, they will enforce their claim. Under what pretext will your Secretary of War direct a different disposition or division of the money, after his often repeated declaration, 'it is their own affair '-the affair of the delegation? Yes, sir, so happily has this business been managed at the seat of government, under the Executive eye, that this division which the negotiators proposed to make of the spoil, may be termed a part of the consideration of the contract. It must be confessed that these exquisite ambassadors were quite liberal to themselves, their secretaries, and particular friends: one hundred and fifty-nine thousand seven hundred dollars, to be divided ed by an amendment to the bill, to prevent the among some twenty persons, is pretty well! What name shall we give to this division of money among them? To call it a bribe, would shock the delicacy of the War Department, and possibly offend those gentle spirited politicians, and a committee of the two Houses, as usual, had who resemble Cowper's preachers, who could conferred on the subject. Now, that the facts are not mention hell to ears polite.' The transcendascertained by the separate reports of the Com- ent criminality of this design cannot be well understood, without recalling to recollection the dark and bloody scenes of the year past. chief McIntosh, distinguished at all times by his courage and devotion to the whites, deriving his name of the White Warrior, from his mixed parentage, had formed, with his party, the treaty of the Indian Springs. He was denounced for it. His midnight sleep was broken by the crackling flames of his dwelling burning over his head. Escaping from the flames, he was shot down by a party acting under the orders of the persons who accused him of betraying, for his own selfish purposes, the interest of the tribe. Those who condemned that chief, the incendiaries and the murderers, are the negotiators of this new contract; the one hundred and fifty-nine thousand may not the chiefs and their secretaries claim | dollars, is to be the fruit of their victory over the assassinated chief. What evidence of fraud, and selfishness, and treachery, has red or white malice been able to exhibit against the dead warrior? A reservation of land for him, in the contract of the bribe. The Secretary was willing to go as 1821, was sold by him to the United States, for high as five thousand dollars, but could not twenty-five thousand dollars; a price he could been deemed secure. This sale of property given to him by the tribe, was the foundation of the calumnies that have been heaped upon his memory, and the cause which, in the eyes of our administrationmewspaper editors, scribblers, and reviewers, justified his execution. Now, sir, the executioners are to be rewarded by pillaging the public Treasury. I look with some curiosity for the indignant denunciations of this accidentally discovered treachery. Perhaps it will be discovered that all this new business of the Creeks is 'their own affair,' with which the white editors and reviewers have nothing to do. Fortunately, Mr. F. said, Congress had something to do with this affair. We owe a justice to the tribe. This amendment, he feared, would not do justice. The power of Congress should be exerted, not only to keep the money out of the hands of these wretches, but to secure a faithful and equal distribution of it among the whole Creek nation. The whole tribe hold the land; their title by occupancy resides in all; all are rightfully claimants to equal portions of the price of their removal from it. The country is not aware how the Indian annuities are distributed, or the moneys paid to the tribes disposed of. They are divided according to the discretion of the Indian government, completely aristocratical—all the powers vested in a few chiefs. Mr. F. had it from authority he could not doubt, that the Creek annuities had, for years past, been divided in very unequal proportions, not among the twenty thousand souls of which the tribe was believed to be composed, but among about one thousand five hundred chiefs and warriors. "Mr. Forsyth expressed his hope that the House would reject the report of the committee. Before taking his seat, he asked the indulgence of the House, while he made a few comments on this list of worthies, and the prices to be paid to each. At the head of the list stands Mr. Ridge, with the sum of $15,000 opposite to his elevated name. This man is no Creek, but a Cherokee, educated among the whites, allied to them by marriage—has received lessons in Christianity, morality, and sentiment-perfectly civilized, according to the rules and customs of Cornwall. This negotiation, of which he has been, either as actor or instrument, the principal manager, is an admirable proof of the benefits he has derived from his residence among a moral and religious people. Vann. another Cherokee, half savage and half civilized, succeeds him with $15,000 bounty. A few inches below comes another Ridge, the major, father to the secretary—a gallant old fellow, who did some service against the hostile Creeks, during the late war, for which he deserved and received acknowledgments-but what claims he had to this Creek money, Mr. F. could not comprehend. Probably his name was used merely to cover another gratuity for the son, whose modesty would not permit him to take more than $15,000 in his own name. These have obtained from individuals, if his title had Cherokees were together to receive $40,000 of Creek money, and the Secretary of War is of opinion it is quite consistent with the contract, which provides for the distribution of it among the chiefs and warriors of the Creeks. Look. sir, at the distinction made for these exquisites. Yopothle Yoholo, whose word General Gaines would take against the congregated world, is set down for but $10,000. The Little Prince but $10,000. Even Menawee, distinguished as he is as the leader of the party who murdered McIntosh and Etome Tustunnuggee-as one of the accursed band who butchered three hundred men, women, and children, at Fort Mims-has but $10,000. A distinguished Red Stick, in these days, when kindness to Indians is shown in proportion to their opposition to the policy of the General Government, might have expected better treatment only ten thousand dollars to our enemy in war and in peace! But, sir, I will not detain the House longer. I should hold myself criminal if I had exposed these things unnecessarily or uselessly. That patriotism only is lovely which. imitating the filial piety of the sons of the Patriarch, seeks, with averted face, to cover the nakedness of the country from the eye of a vulgar and invidious curiosity. But the commands of public duty must be obeyed; let those who have imposed this duty upon us answer for it to the people." "Mr. Tatnall, of Geo. (H. R.) He was as confident as his colleagues could be, that the foulest fraud had been projected by some of the individuals calling themselves a part of the Creek delegation, and that it was known to the department of war before the ratification of the treaty, and was not communicated by that department to the Senate, either before or during the pendency of the consideration of the treaty by that body. Mr. T. said he would not, however, for the reasons just mentioned, dwell on this ground. but would proceed to state, that he was in favor of the amendment offered by the committee of conference, (and therein he differed from his colleague), which, whilst it would effectually prevent the commission of the fraud intended, would, also, avoid a violation of the terms of the new treaty,' as it was styled. He stated, that the list which he held in his hand was, itself, conclusive evidence of a corrupt intention to divide the greater part of the money among the few persons named in it. In this list, different sums were written opposite the names of different individuals, such, for instance, as the following: 'John Ridge, $15,000-Joseph Vann. 15,000' (both Cherokees, and not Creeks, and, therefore, not entitled to one cent). The next, a long and barbarous Indian name, which I shall not attempt to pronounce, '$10,000'-next, John This list, as it appears Stedham, '$10,000,' &c. in the documents received from the Secretary of War, was presented to the war department by Ridge and Vann."

CHAPTER X

THE PANAMA MISS

THE history of this mission, or sion (for it never took effect, the sanctioned by both Houses of serves a place in this inside view of our government. Though 1 into oblivion, and its name alme was a master subject on the r during its day; and gave rise national, and of constitutional la tional policy, the importance of the occasion from which they spi solution of which (as then soil some guide to future action, if sin again occur. Besides the grave which the subject gave rise, the became one of unusual and painfu It agitated the people, made a viole the two Houses of Congress, inflar sions of parties and individuals, rais before which Congress bent, made between the President and the Ser to the duel between Mr. Randolph a It was an administration measure. by all the means known to an ad lt was evidently relied upon as a m ing upon the people—as a popular which might have the effect of turni which was then running high against and Mr. Clay on account of the elec House of Representatives, and the trines of the inaugural address, and annual message: and it was doul imagined for that purpose. It was an movement, and republican. It was th of the American states of Spanish origi ling for their mutual safety and indeand presenting the natural wish for t States to place herself at their hea eldest sister of the new republics, and whose example and institutions the o followed. The monarchies of Europe ha a "Holy Alliance," to check the proliberty: it seemed just that the rep the New World should confederate aga dangers of despotism. The subject had hit; and the name and place of mee

Vol. I.-5

e $40,000 of War is of the contract, of it among eeks. Look. se exquisites. neral Gaines world, is set e Prince but ished as he is red McIntosh f the accursed men, women. but $10,000. e days, when proportion to General Govter treatment enemy in war ot detain the elf criminal if sarily or uselovely which, s of the Patrier the nakeda vulgar and ands of public who have imfor it to the > le was as conat the foulest of the individie Creek delethe departof the treaty. it department ring the penreaty by that however, for n this ground. e was in favor committee of I from his colffeetually pretended, would. s of the new ited, that the as, itself, conition to divide nong the few different sums of different inhe following: Vann. 15,000' and, therefore. xt, a long and shall not at--next. John , as it appears e Secretary of lepartment by

CHAPTER XXV.

THE PANAMA MISSION.

THE history of this mission, or attempted mission (for it never took effect, though eventually sanctioned by both Houses of Congress), deserves a place in this inside view of the working of our government. Though long since sunk into oblivion, and its name almost forgotten, it was a master subject on the political theatre during its day; and gave rise to questions of national, and of constitutional law, and of national policy, the importance of which survive the occasion from which they sprung; and the solution of which (as then solved), may be some guide to future action, if similar questions again occur. Besides the grave questions to which the subject gave rise, the subject itself became one of unusual and painful excitement. It agitated the people, made a violent debate in the two Houses of Congress, inflamed the passions of parties and individuals, raised a tempest before which Congress bent, made bad feeling between the President and the Senate; and led to the duel between Mr. Randolph and Mr. Clay. It was an administration measure, and pressed by all the means known to an administration. It was evidently relied upon as a means of acting upon the people—as a popular movement, which might have the effect of turning the tide which was then running high against Mr. Adams and Mr. Clay on account of the election in the House of Representatives, and the broad doc-called classic and cherished recollections. was on an isthmus—the Isthmus of Panama which connected the two Americas. the Grecian republics had their isthmus—that of Corinth where their deputies assembled. All the advantages in the presentation of the question were on the side of the administration. It addressed itself to the imagination-to the passions-to the prejudices;-and could only be met by the cold and sober suggestions of reason and judgment. It had the prestige of name and subject, and was half victor before the contest began; and it required bold men to make head against it.

The debate began in the Senate, upon the nomination of ministers; and as the Senate sat with closed doors, their objections were not heard while numerous presses, and popular speakers, excited the public mind in favor of the measure, and inflamed it against the Senate for delaying its sanction. It was a plan conceived by the new Spanish American republics, and prepared as a sort of amphictyonic council for the settlement of questions among themselves; and, to which, in a manner which had much the appearance of our own procuring, we had received an invitation to send deputies. The invitation was most seductively exhibited in all the administration presses; and captivated all young and ardent imaginations. The people were roused: the majority in both Houses of Congress gave way (many against their convictions, as they frankly told me), while the project itself-our participation in it-was utterly condemned by the principles of our constitution, and by the policy which forbade "entangling alliances," and the proposed congress trines of the inaugural address, and of the first itself was not even a diplomatic body to which annual message: and it was doubtless well ministers could be sent under the law of nations. imagined for that purpose. It was an American To counteract the effect of this outside current. movement, and republican. It was the assembly the Senate, on the motion of Mr. Van Buren, of the American states of Spanish origin counsel- adopted a resolve to debate the question with ling for their mutual safety and independence; open doors, "unless, in the opinion of the Presiand presenting the natural wish for the United dent, the publication of documents necessary to States to place herself at their head, as the be referred to in debate should be prejudicial to eldest sister of the new republics, and the one existing negotiations:" and a copy of the resolve whose example and institutions the others had was sent to Mr. Adams for his opinion on that followed. The monarchies of Europe had formed point. He declined to give it, and left it to the a "Holy Alliance," to check the progress of Senate to decide for itself, "the question of an liberty: it seemed just that the republics of unexampled departure from its own usages, the New World should confederate against the and upon the motives of which, not being himdangers of despotism. The subject had a charm self informed, he did not feel himself competent hit; and the name and place of meeting re- to decide." This reference to the motives of the clear implication of the badness of one, and the violation of the other, gave great offence in the Senate, and even led to a proposition (made by Mr. Rowan of Kentucky), not to act on the nominations until the information requested should be given. In the end the Senate relinquished the idea of a public debate, and contented itself with its publication after it was over. Mr. John Sergeant of Pennsylvania, and Mr. Richard Clark Anderson of Kentucky, were the ministers nominated; and, the question turning wholly upon the mission itself, and not upon the persons nominated (to whose fitness there was no objection), they were confirmed by a close vote-24 to 20. The negatives were: Messrs. Benton, Berrien, Branch, Chandler, Cobb (Thomas W. of Georgia), Dickerson, Eaton, Findlay, Hayne, Holmes of Maine. Kane, King of Alabama, Macon, Randolph, Tazewell, Rowan, Van Buren, White of Tennessee, Williams of Mississippi, Woodbury. The Vice-President, Mr. Calhoun, presiding in the Senate, had no vote, the constitutional contingency to authorize it not having occurred: but he was full and free in the expression of his opinion against the mission.

Vol. I.-5

It was very nearly a party vote, the democracy as a party, being against it: but of those of the party who voted for it, the design of this history (which is to show the working of the government) requires it to be told that there was afterwards, either to themselves or relatives, some large dispensations of executive patronage. Their votes may have been conscientious; but in that case, it would have been better to have vindicated the disinterestedness of the act, by the total refusal of executive favor. Mr. Adams commenced right, by asking the advice of the Senate, before he instituted the mission; but the manner in which the object was pursued, made it a matter of opposition to the administration to refuse it, and greatly impaired the harmony which ought to exist between the President and the Senate. After all, the whole conception of the Parama congress was an abortion. It died out proposed congress, so far as the United States of itself, without ever having been once heldnot even by the states which had conceived it. It was incongruous and impracticable, even for them,-more apt to engender disputes among themselves than to harmonize action against to our peace and institutions. The basis of the take part, 1. The establishment of liberal pro-Spain,—and utterly foreign to us, and dangerous members, and the usages of the Senate, with its | agreement for the congress, was the existing state country-Spanish pride and policy being slow to acknowledge the independence of revolted colonies, no matter how independent in fact; -and the wish to establish concert among themselves, in the mode of treating her commerce, and that of such of her American possessions (Cuba, Porto Rico), as had not thrown off their subjection. We were at peace with Spain, and could not go into any such council without compromising our neutrality, and impairing the integrity of our national character. Besides the difficulties it would involve with Spain, there was one subject specified in the treaties for discussion and settlement in that congress, namely, the considerations of future relations with the government of Haiti, which would have been a firebrand in the southern half of our Union,-not to be handled or touched by our government any where, The publication of the secret debates in the Senate on the nomination of the ministers, and the public discussion in the House of Representatives on the appropriation clauses, to carry the mission into effect, succeeded, after some time, in dissipating all the illusions which had fascinated the public mind—turned the current against the administration-made the project a new head of objection to its authors; and in a short time it would have been impossible to obtain any consideration for it, either in Congress or before the people. It is now entirely forgotten, but deserves to be remembered in this View of the working of the government, to show the questions of policy of national and constitutional law which were discussed—the excitement which can be got up without foundation, and against reason-how public men can bend before a storm-how all the departments of the government can go wrong:and how the true conservative power in our country is in the people, in their judgment and reason, and in steady appeals to their intelligence and patriotism.

Mr. Adams communicated the objects of the the Senate; in which, disclaiming all part in any deliberations of a belligerent character, or design to contract alliances, or to engage in any project importing hostility to any other nation, he end merated, as the measures in which we could well ciples of commercial intercour posed could be best done in a the American states together. taneous adoption of principles trality. 3. The doctrine that free goods. 4. An agreement t doctrine," as it is called, should the congress, each state to gu means, its own territory from colonization. The enunciation so different from what it has o posed to be, as binding the I guard all the territory of the N European colonization, makes it this passage from Mr. Adams's me words. They are these: "An agr all the parties represented at th each will guard, by its own mea establishment of any future Eu within its borders, may be found : was, more than two years since, my predecessor to the world, as a sulting from the emancipation of 1 rican continents. It may be so de new southern nations, that they i an essential appendage to their i These were the words of Mr. Ada been a member of Mr. Monroe's filling the department from which would emanate; written at a tir enunciation of it was still fresh, a himself, in a communication to t Senate, was laying it down for the a the American nations in a general con eputies. The circumstances of th cation render it incredible that Mr. be deceived in his understanding: ing to him, this "Monroe doctrine' to which it has been of late believ United States were to stand guard o Americas, and repulse all intrusiv from their shores), was entirely conf own borders: that it was only prope the other states of the New World to each for itself, and by its own mea guard its own territories: and, cor that the United States, so far from gratuitous protection to the territorie states, would neither give, nor receive. such enterprise, but that each should u means, within its own borders, for its or tion from European colonial intrusion.

he existing state and the mother y being slow to f revolted colot in fact; -and ong themselves, merce, and that sessions (Cuba, off their subjecspain, and could hout comproming the integrity ides the difficula, there was one or discussion and nely, the considthe government n a firebrand in -not to be hanent any where. ites in the Senate rs, and the pubpresentatives on rry the mission ne time, in disad fascinated the t against the ada new head of a short time it obtain any coness or before the ten, but deserves of the working of estions of policy. law which were h can be got up ist reason-how rm-how all the can go wrong:e power in our ir judgment and their intelligence

> e objects of the ie United States ecial message to ng all part in any racter, or design re in any project r nation, he enuch we could well of liberal prin ciples of commercial intercourse, which he supposed could be best done in an assembly of all the American states together. 2. The consentaneous adoption of principles of maritime neutrality. 3. The doctrine that free ships make free goods. 4. An agreement that the "Monroe doctrine," as it is called, should be adopted by the congress, each state to guard, by its own means, its own territory from future European colonization. The enunciation of this doctrine. so different from what it has of late been supposed to be, as binding the United States to guard all the territory of the New World from European colonization, makes it proper to give this passage from Mr. Adams's message in his own words. They are these: "An agreement between all the parties represented at the meeting, that each will guard, by its own means, against the establishment of any future European colony within its borders, may be found advisable. This was, more than two years since, announced by my predecessor to the world, as a principle resulting from the emancipation of both the American continents. It may be so developed to the new southern nations, that they may feel it as an essential appendage to their independence." These were the words of Mr. Adams, who had been a member of Mr. Monroe's cabinet, and filling the department from which the doctrine would emanate; written at a time when the enunciation of it was still fresh, and when he himself, in a communication to the American Senate, was laying it down for the adoption of all the American nations in a general congress of their eputies. The circumstances of the communibe deceived in his understanding; and, according to him, this "Monroe doctrine" (according to which it has been of late believed that the United States were to stand guard over the two Americas, and repulse all intrusive colonists from their shores), was entirely confined to our own borders: that it was only proposed to get the other states of the New World to agree that, each for itself, and by its own means, should guard its own territories: and, consequently, that the United States, so far from extending gratuitous protection to the territories of other states, would neither give, nor receive, aid in any object proposed by Mr. Adams, in which he supposed our participation in the business of the Panama congress might be rightfully and beneficially admitted, related to the advancement of religious liberty: and as this was a point at which the message encountered much censure, I will give it in its own words. They are these: "There is yet another subject upon which, without entering into any treaty, the moral influence of the United States may, perhaps, be exerted with beneficial influence at such meeting-the advancement of religious liberty. Some of the southern nations are, even yet, so far under the dominion of prejudice, that they have incorporated, with their political constitutions, an ex clusive Church, without toleration of any other than the dominant sect. The abandonment of this last badge of religious bigotry and oppression, may be pressed more effectually by the united exertions of those who concur in the principles of freedom of conscience, upon those who are yet to be convinced of their justice and wisdom, than by the solitary efforts of a minister to any one of their separate governments.' 6. The sixth and last object named by Mr. Adams was, to give proofs of our good will to all the new southern republics, by accepting their invitation to join them in the congress which they proposed of American nations. The President enumerated no others of the objects to which the discussions of the congress might be directed; but in the papers which he communicated with the invitations he had received, many others were mentioned, one of which was, "the basis on which the relations with Halti cation render it incredible that Mr. Adams could should be placed;" and the other, "to consider and settle the future relations with Cuba and Porto Rico.

The message was referred to the Senate's Committee on Foreign Affairs, consisting of Mr. Macon, Mr. Tazewell, and Mr Gaillard of South Carolina, Mr. Mills of Massachusetts, and Mr. Hugh L. White of Tennessee. The committee reported adversely to the President's recommendation, and replied to the message, point by point. It is an elaborate document, of great ability and research, and well expressed the democratic doctrines of that day. It was presented by Mr. Macon, the chairman of the such enterprise, but that each should use its own committee, and was drawn by Mr. Tazewell, means within its own borders, for its own exemp- and was the report of which Mr. Macon, when tion from European colonial intrusion. 5. A fifth complimented upon it, was accustomed to answer,

"Yes: it is a good report. Tazewell wrote it." But it was his also; for no power could have made him present it, without declaring the fact, if he had not approved it. The general principle of the report was that of good will and friendship to all the young republics, and the cultivation of social, commercial and political relations with each one individually; but no entangling connection, and no internal interference with any one. On the suggestion of advancing religious freedom, the committee remark:

"In the opinion of this committee, there is no proposition, concerning which the people of the United States are now and ever have been more unanimous, than that which denies, not merely the expediency, but the right of intermeddling with the internal affairs of other states; and especially of seeking to alter any provision they may have thought proper to adopt as a fundamental law, or may have incorporated with their political constitutions. And if there be any such subject more sacred and delicate than another, as to which the United States ought never to intermeddle, even by obtrusive advice, it is that which concerns religious liberty. The most cruel and devastating wars have been produced by such interferences; the blood of man has been poured out in torrents; and, from the days of the crusades to the present hour, no benefit has resulted to the human family, from discussions carried on by nations upon such subjects. Among the variety even of Christian nations which now inhabit the earth, rare indeed are the examples to be found of states who have not established an exclusive church; and to far the greater number of these toleration is yet unknown. In none of the communications which have taken place, is the most distant allusion made to this delicate subject, by any of the ministers who have given this invitation; and the committee feel very confident in the opinion, that, if ever an intimation shall be made to the sovereignties they represent, that it was the purpose of the United States to discuss at the proposed congress, their plans of internal civil polity, or any thing touching the supposed interests of their religious establishments, the invitation given would soon be withdrawn."

On the Subject of the "Monroe doctrine," the report shows that, one of the new republics (Colombia) proposed that this doctrine should be enforced "by the joint and united efforts of all the states to be represented in the congress, who should be bound by a solemn convention to secure this end. It was in answer to this proposition that the President in his message showed the extent of that doctrine to be limited to our own territories, and that all that we could do, would be to enter into agreement that each should guard, by its own means, against the establishment of any foreign colony within its borders. Even such an agreement the committee deemed unadvisable, and that there was no more reason for making it a treaty stipulation than there was for reducing to such stipulations any other of the "high, just, and universally admitted rights of all nations." The favorable commercial treaties which the President expected to obtain, the committee believed would be more readily obtained from each nation separately (in which opinion their foresight has been justified by the event); and that each treaty would be the more easily kept in proportion to the smaller number of parties to it. The ameliorations of the laws of nations which the President proposed, in the adoption of principles of maritime neutrality. and that free ships should make free goods, and the restriction of paper blockades, were deemed by the committee objects beyond the enforcement of the American states alone; and the enforcement of which, if agreed to, might bring the chief burthen of enforcement upon the United States; and the committee doubted the policy of undertaking, by negotiation with these nations to settle abstract propositions, as parts of public law. On the subject of Cuba and Porto Rico the report declared that the United States could never regard with indifference their actual condition, or future destiny; -but deprecated any joint action in relation to them, or any action to which they themselves were not parties; and it totally discountenanced any joint discussion or action in relation to the future of Haïti. To the whole of the new republics, the report expressed the belief that, the retention of our present unconnected and friendly position towards them. would be most for their own benefit, and enable the United States to act most effectually for them in the case of needing our good offices. It

"While the United States retain the position which they have hitherto occupied, and manifest a constant determination not to mingle their interests with those of the other states of America, they may continue to employ the influence which they possess, and have already happily exerted, with the nations of Europe, in favor of these new republics. But, if ever the United States permit themselves to be associated with these nations in any general congress, assembled for the discussion of common plans, in the way affecting European interests, they will, by such an act, not only deprive themselves of the possess, of rendering useful other American states, but effects, prejudicial to their ow the powers of Europe, who fided in the sagacity, vigilance of the United States, to watch and restrain any disposition the existing contest might excite of America, to extend their emown limits, and who have, the their possessions and commerce while so guarded, would no lost fidence."

The advantage of pursuing of maintaining friendly relations "entangling alliances with no presented in a brief and strikin

"And the United States, who in happiness, to their present strict observance of their old w of policy, and by manifesting and most profound respect for a must prepare to embark their upon an unknown and turbulen by little experience, and destine haven. In such a voyage the isting between themselves and in interest, character, language, r customs, habits, laws, and alm particular: and the rivalship the must surely produce amongst th erate discords, which, if they did hope of its successful terminatic even success itself the ultimate ca direful conflicts between themsel been the issue of all such ente time; and we have therefore str expect in the future, similar resul causes.

The committee dissented from on the point of his right to institut without the previous advice and Senate. The President averred his so: but deemed it advisable, under cumstances, to waive the right, and vice. The committee averred the Senate to decide directly upon the this new mission; grounding the originality, and holding that when a be instituted it is the creation not the filling of a vacancy; and the have a right to decide upon the expedice itself.

I spoke myself on this question, points which it presented, and on the relations with Harti (on which a was to be determined on, or a rule ent that each against the eswithin its bor-, the committee there was no aty stipulation ch stipulations universally adfavorable coment expected to rould be more separately (in ; been justified ty would be the to the smaller liorations of the ent proposed, in time neutrality. free goods, and s. were deemed d the enforcee; and the ennight bring the > r any action to parties; and it liscussion or ac-Haiti. To the eport expressed our present untowards them efit, and enable tually for them od offices. It ain the position pied, and manito mingle their ates of America. influence which happily exerted, 7or of these new ited States perwith these na-sembled for the ie way affecting

such an act, not on the United

ed the policy of these nations,

parts of public and Porto Rico,

ed States could ir actual condi-

deprecated any

only deprive themselves of the ability they now possess, of rendering useful assistance to the other American states, but also produce other effects, prejudicial to their own interests. Then, the powers of Europe, who have hitherto confided in the sagacity, vigilance, and impartiality of the United States, to watch, detect, announce, and restrain any disposition that the heat of the existing contest might excite in the new states of America, to extend their empires beyond their own limits, and who have, therefore, considered their possessions and commerce in America safe, while so guarded, would no longer feel this confidence."

The advantage of pursuing our old policy, and maintaining friendly relations with all powers, "entangling alliances with none," was forcibly presented in a brief and striking paragraph:

"And the United States, who have grown up in happiness, to their present prosperity, by a strict observance of their old well-known course of policy, and by manifesting entire good will and most profound respect for all other nations, must prepare to embark their future destinies upon an unknown and turbulent ocean, directed by little experience, and destined for no certain haven. In such a voyage the dissimilitude existing between themselves and their associates, in interest, character, language, religion, manners, customs, habits, laws, and almost every other particular: and the rivalship these discrepancies must surely produce amongst them, would generate discords, which, if they did not destroy all hope of its successful termination, would make even success itself the ultimate cause of new and direful conflicts between themselves. Such has been the issue of all such enterprises in past time; and we have therefore strong reasons to expect in the future, similar results from similar

The committee dissented from the President on the point of his right to institute the mission without the previous advice and consent of the Senate. The President averred his right to do so: but deemed it advisable, under all the circumstances, to waive the right, and ask the advice. The committee averred the right of the Senate to decide directly upon the expedience of this new mission; grounding the right upon its originality, and holding that when a new mission to be instituted it is the creation of an office, not the filling of a vacancy; and that the Senate have a right to decide upon the expediency of the office itself.

I spoke myself on this question, and to all the points which it presented, and on the subject of relations with Haïti (on which a uniform rule was to be determined on, or a rule with modifications, according to the proposition of Colombia) I held that our policy was fixed, and could be neither altered, nor discussed in any foreign assembly; and especially in the one proposed; all the other parties to which had already placed the two races (black and white) on the basis of political equality. I said:

"Our policy towards Haïti, the old San Domingo, has been fixed for three and thirty years. We trade with her, but no diplomatic relations have been established between us. We purchase coffee from her, and pay her for it; but we interchange no consuls or ministers. We receive no mulatto consuls, or black ambassadors from her. And why? Because the peace of eleven States in this Union will not permit the fruits of a successful negro insurrection to be exhibited among them. It will not permit black consuls and ambassadors to establish themselves in our cities, and to parade through our country, and give to their fellow blacks in the United States, proof in hand of the honors which await them, for a like successful effort on their part. It will not permit the fact to be seen, and told, that for the murder of their masters and mistresses, they are to find friends among the white people of these United States. No, this is a question which has been determined HERE for three and thirty years; one which has never been open for discussion, at home or abroad, neither under the Presidency of Gen. Washington, of the first Mr. Adams, of Mr. Jefferson, Mr. Madison, or Mr. Monroe. It is one which cannot be discussed in this chamber on this day; and shall we go to Panama to discuss it? I take it in the mildest supposed character of this Congress-shall we go there to advise and consult in council about it? Who are to advise and sit in judgment upon it? Five nations who have already put the black man upon an equality with the white, not only in their constitutions but in real life: five nations who have at this moment (at least some of them) black generals in their armies and mulatto senators in their congresses!

No question, in its day, excited more heat and intemperate discussion, or more feeling between a President and Senate, than this proposed mission to the congress of American nations at Panama; and no heated question ever cooled off, and died out so suddenly and completely. And now the chief benefit to be derived from its retrospect—and that indeed is a real one—is a view of the firmness with which was then maintained by a minority, the old policy of the United States, to avoid entangling alliances and interference with the affairs of other nations;—and the exposition of the Monroe doctrine, from one so competent to give it as Mr. Adams.

CHAPTER XXVI.

DUEL BETWEEN MR. CLAY AND MR. RANDOLPH.

IT was Saturday, the first day of April, towards noon, the Senate not being that day in session, that Mr. Randolph came to my room at Brown's Hotel, and (without explaining the reason of the question) asked me if I was a blood-relation of Mrs. Clay? I answered that I was, and he immediately replied that that put an end to a request which he had wished to make of me; and then went on to tell me that he had just received a challenge from Mr. Clay, had accepted it, was ready to go out, and would apply to Col. Tatnall to be his second. Before leaving, he told me he would make my bosom the depository of a secret which he should commit to no other person: it was, that he did not intend to fire at Mr. Clay. He told it to me because he wanted a witness of his intention, and did not mean to joined inviolable secreey until the duel was over. This was the first notice I had of the affair. The circumstances of the delivery of the challenge I had from Gen. Jesup, Mr. Clay's second, and they were so perfectly characteristic of Mr. Randolph that I give them in detail, and in the General's own words:

"I was unable to see Mr. Randolph until the morning of the 1st of April, when 1 called on him for the purpose of delivering the note. Previous to presenting it, however, I thought it proper to ascertain from Mr. Randolph, himself whether the information which Mr. Clay had received—that he considered himself personally accountable for the attack on him-was correct. I accordingly informed Mr. Randolph that I was the bearer of a message from Mr. Clay in consequence of an attack which he had made upon his private as well as public character in the Senate; that I was aware no one had the right to ques tion him out of the Senate for any thing said in debate, unless he chose voluntarily to waive his at Mr. Clay. That determination rested on two privileges as a member of that body. Mr. Randolph replied, that the constitution did protect him, but he would never shield himself under such a subterfuge as the pleading of his privilege as a senator from Virginia; that he did hold himself accountable to Mr. Clay; but he said that gentleman had first two pledges to redeem: one that he had bound himself to fight any member knowledge himself the author of a certain pub- words spoken within it. He took a distinction of the House of Representatives, who should ac-lication in a Philadelphia paper; and the other, that he stood pledged to establish certain facts in regard to a great man, whom he would not name; but, he added he could receive no verbal message from Mr. Clay—that any message from him must be in writing. I replied that I was not authorized by Mr. Clay to enter into or receive any verbal explanations—that the inquiries I had made were for my own satisfaction and upon my own responsibility—that the only message of which I was the bearer was in writing. I then presented the note, and remarked that I knew nothing of Mr. Clay's pledges; but that if they existed as he (Mr. Randolph) understood them, and he was aware of them when he made the attack complained of, he could not avail himself of them-that by making the attack I thought he had waived them himself. He said he had not the remotest intention of taking advantage of the pledges referred to; that he had mentioned them merely to remind me that he was waiving his privilege, not only as a senator from Virginia, but as a private gentleman; that he was ready to respond to Mr. Clay, and would be obliged to me if I would bear his note in reply; and that he would in the course of the day look out for a friend. I declined being the bearer of his note, but informed him my only reason for declining was, that I thought he owed it to tell it to his second or any body else; and enhimself to consult his friends before taking so important a step. He seized my hand, saying You are right, sir. I thank you for the suggestion: but as you do not take my note, you must not be impatient if you should not hear from me to-day. I now think of only two friends, and there are circumstances connected with one of them which may deprive me of his services, and the other is in bad health-he was sick yesterday, and may not be out to-day.' I assured him that any reasonable time which he might find necessary to take would be satisfactory. I took leave of him; and it is due to his memory to say that his bearing was, throughout the interview, that of a high-toned, chivalrous gentleman of the old school."

These were the circumstances of the delivery of the challenge, and the only thing necessary to give them their character is to recollect that, with this prompt acceptance and positive refusal to explain, and this extra cut about the two plotges, there was a perfect determination not to fire grounds; first, an entire unwillingness to burt Mr. Clay; and, next, a conviction that to return the fire would be to answer, and would be an implied acknowledgment of Mr. Clay's right to make him answer. This he would not do, neither by implication nor in words. He denied the right of any person to question him out of the Senate for between man and senator. A constitutional immunity, given and which he would neither s promise; as individual he was faction for what was deemed would receive, but not return much as to say: Mr. Clay m. what has offended him; I will the fire, admit his right to do subtle distinction, and that in death, and not very clear to the c but to Mr. Randolph both clear His allusion to the "two pledg which he might have plead in b challenge, and would not, was a cut at Mr. Adams and Mr. Clay satisfaction for cuts already give ber of the House" was Mr. Geo Pennsylvania, who, at the time of tial election in the House of Repr avowed himself to be the author o publication, the writer of which threatened to call to account if I himself-and did not. The "gi President Adams, with whom Mr a newspaper controversy, involvin fact,-which had been postponed. this sarcastic cut, and of all the ke in the Panama speech, was the President and Secretary, the lat encouraged the newspapers in the attack him, which they did incess; chose to overlook the editors and the instigators, as he believed them he did to his heart's content in that to their great annovance, as the comi lenge proved. The "two friends" al Col. Tatnall and myself, and the c which might disqualify one of the tw of my relationship to Mrs. Clay, of not know the degree, and whether c consanguinity-considering the first the other a complete bar to my appe second-holding, as he did, with the an Indian, to the obligations of blood but little stress on marriage connec affable reception and courteous demea Jesup were according to his own high bi the decorum which belonged to such A duel in the circle to which he belong affair of honor;" and high honor, acco ode, must pervade every part of it. and the other, 1 certain facts he would not eive no verbal message from ed that I was enter into or -that the invn satisfaction -that the on'y was in writing narked that I es; but that if 1) understood when he made not avail himtack I though said he had ing advantage had mentionthe was waivsenator from man; that he ty, and would nis note in reirse of the day being the bearny only reason he owed it to ore taking so hand, saying. for the sugmy note, you I not hear from y two friends. cted with one his services, was sick yes I assured ich he might satisfactory. to his memory shout the in > the delivery of necessary to lect that, with ive refusal to he two plotion not to fire rested on two ess to burt Mr. to return the be an implied t to make him ther by implie right of any ne Senate for a distinction

ilrous gentle-

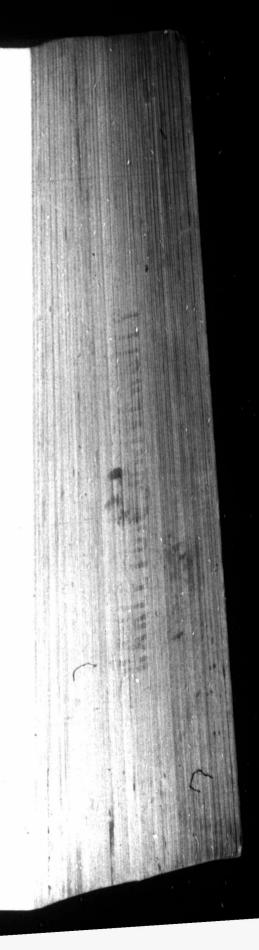

constitutional immunity, given for a wise purpose, and which he would neither surrender nor compromise; as individual he was ready to give satisfaction for what was deemed an injury. He would receive, but not return a fire. It was as much as to say: Mr. Clay may fire at me for His allusion to the "two pledges unredeemed," ber of the House" was Mr. George Kremer, of avowed himself to be the author of an anonymous publication, the writer of which Mr. Clay had threatened to call to account if he would avow himself-and did not. The "great man" was President Adams, with whom Mr. Clay had had a newspaper controversy, involving a question of fact,-which had been postponed. The cause of this sarcastic cut, and of all the keen personality attack him, which they did incessantly; and he to their great annoyance, as the coming of the chal- ran thus: lenge proved. The "two friends" alluded to were Col. Tatnall and myself, and the circumstances not know the degree, and whether of affinity or consanguinity—considering the first no obstacle, second-holding, as he did, with the tenacity of an Indian, to the obligations of blood, and laving but little stress on marriage connections. His affable reception and courteous demeanor to Gen. Jesup were according to his own high breeding, and the decorum which belonged to such occasions.

between man and senator. As senator he had a Jesup had come upon an unpleasant business. Mr. Randolph determined to put him at his ease; and did it so effectually as to charm him into admiration. The whole plan of his conduct, down to contingent details, was cast in his mind instantly, as if by intuition, and never departed from. The acceptance, the refusal to explain, the what has offended him; I will not, by returning determination not to fire, the first and second the fire, admit his right to do so. This was a choice of a friend, and the circumstances which subtle distinction, and that in case of life and might disqualify one and delay the other, the addeath, and not very clear to the common intellect; ditional cut, and the resolve to fall, if he fell, on but to Mr. Randolph both clear and convincing. the soil of Virginia-was all, to his mind, a single emanation, the flash of an instant. He needed which he might have plead in bar to Mr. Clay's no consultations, no deliberations to arrive at all challenge, and would not, was another sarcastic these important conclusions. I dwell upon these cut at Mr. Adams and Mr. Clay, while rendering small circumstances because they are charactersatisfaction for cuts already given. The "mem- istic, and show the man-a man who belongs to history, and had his own history, and should be Pennsylvania, who, at the time of the presiden- known as he was. That character can only be shown tial election in the House of Representatives, had in his own conduct, his own words and acts: and this duel with Mr. Clay illustrates it at many points. It is in that point of view that I dwell upon circumstances which might seem trivial. but which are not so, being illustrative of character and significant to their smallest particulars.

The acceptance of the challenge was in keeping with the whole proceeding-prompt in the agreement to meet, exact in protesting against in the Panama speech, was the belief that the the right to call him out, clear in the waiver of President and Secretary, the latter especially, his constitutional privilege, brief and cogent in encouraged the newspapers in their interest to presenting the case as one of some reprehension -the case of a member of an administration chose to overlook the editors and retaliate upon challenging a senator for words spoken in dethe instigators, as he believed them to be. This bate of that administration; and all in brief, he did to his heart's content in that speech—and terse, and superlatively decorous language. It

"Mr. Randolph accepts the challenge of Mr. Clay. At the same time he protests against the which might disqualify one of the two were those | right of any minister of the Executive Government of my relationship to Mrs. Clay, of which he did of the United States to hold him responsible for words spoken in debate, as a senator from Virginia, in crimination of such minister, or the administration under which he shall have taken the other a complete bar to my appearing as his office. Colonel Tatnall, of Georgia, the bearer of this letter, is authorized to arrange with General Jesup (the bearer of Mr. Clay's challenge) the terms of the meeting to which Mr. Randolph is invited by that note.

This protest which Mr. Randolph entered against the right of Mr. Clay to challenge him, A duel in the circle to which he belonged was "an led to an explanation between their mutual affair of honor;" and high honor, according to its friends on that delicate point—a point which ode, must pervade every part of it. General concerned the independence of debate, the privileges of the Senate, the immunity of a mem- to Mr. Randolph's character. The occasion was ber, and the sanctity of the constitution. It was a point which Mr. Clay felt; and the explanation which was had between the mutual friends presented an excuse, if not a justification, for his proceeding. He had been informed that Mr. Randolph, in his speech, had avowed his responsibility to Mr. Clay, and waived his privilege—a thing which, if it had been done, would have been a defiance, and stood for an invitation to Mr. Clay to send a challenge. Mr. Randolph, through Col. Tatnall, disavowed that imputed avowal, and confined his waiver of privilege to the time of the delivery of the challenge, and in answer to an inquiry before it was delivered.

the respective seconds on this point:

"In regard to the protest with which Mr. Randolph's note concludes, it is due to Mr. Clay to say that he had been informed Mr. Randolph did, and would, hold himself responsible to him for any observations he might make in relation to him; and that I (Gen. Jesup) distinctly understood from Mr. Randolph, before I delivered the note of Mr. Clay, that he waived his privilege as a senator."

To this Col. Tatnall replied:

"As this expression (did and would hold himself responsible, &c.) may be construed to mean that Mr. Randolph had given this intimation not only before called upon, but in such a manner as to throw out to Mr. Clay something like an invitation to make such a call, I have, on the part of Mr. Randolph, to disavow any disposition. when expressing his readiness to waive his privilege as a senator from Virginia, to invite, in any case, a call upon him for personal satisfaction. The concluding paragraph of your note, I presume, is intended to show merely that you did not present a note, such as that of Mr. Clay to Mr. Randolph, until you had ascertained his willingness to waive his privilege as a senator. This I infer, as it was in your recollection that the expression of such a readiness on the part of Mr. Randolph was in reply to an inquiry on that point made by Yourself.

virtually negatived, and its offensive import whol- them. Of course this demand was bottomed on ly disavowed. For my part, I do not believe that a report of the words spoken—a verbal report, Mr. Randolph used such language in his speech. the full daily publication of the debates having I have no recollection of having heard it. The not then begun—and that verbal report was of published report of the speech, as taken down by a character greatly to exasperate Mr. Clay. It the reporters and not revised by the speaker, constated that in the course of the debate Mr. Rantains nothing of it. Such gasconade was foreign | dolph said:

not one in which these sort of defiances are thrown out, which are either to purchase a cheap reputation when it is known they will be despised, or to get an advantage in extracting a challenge when there is a design to kill. Mr. Randolph had none of these views with respect to Mr. Clay. He had no desire to fight him, or to hurt him, or gain cheap character by appearing to bully him. He was above all that, and had settled accounts with him in his speech, and wanted no more. I do not believe it was said: but there was a part-of the speech which might have received a wrong application, and led to the erroneous report: a part which applied to a The following are the communications between | quoted passage in Mr. Adams's Panama message. which he condemned and denounced, and dared the President and his friends to defend. His words were, as reported unrevised: "Here I plant my foot; here I fling defiance right into his (the President's) teeth; here I throw the gauntlet to him and the bravest of his compeers to come forward and defend these lines," &c. A very palpable defiance this, but very different from a summons to personal combat, and from what was related to Mr. Clay. It was an unfortunate report, doubtless the effect of indistinct apprehension, and the more to be regretted as, after having been a main cause inducing the challenge, the disavowal could not stop it.

Thus the agreement for the meeting was absolute; and, according to the expectation of the principals, the meeting itself would be immediately; but their seconds, from the most laudable feelings, determined to delay it, with the hope to prevent it, and did keep it off a week, admitting me to a participation in the good work, as being already privy to the affair and friendly to both parties. The challenge stated no specific ground of offence, specified no exceptionable words. It was peremptory and general, for an "unprovoked attack on his (Mr. Clay's) character," and it dispensed with explanations by alleging that the notoriety and indisputable ex-Thus an irritating circumstance in the affair was istence of the injury superseded the necessity for

"That a letter from General can Minister at Washington, Executive to the Senate, bor having been manufactured or retary of State, and denounce tion as a corrupt coalition bet and blackleg; and added, at t he (Mr. Randolph) held hims sponsible for all that he had s

This was the report to M which he gave the absolute of ceived the absolute acceptance all inquiry between the princip of the quarrel. The seconds de it, and to attempt an accor neaceable determination of the consequence, General Jesup stat in a note to Col. Tatnall, thus:

"The injury of which Mr. Cla sists in this, that Mr. Randolph with having forged or manufactu nected with the Panama mission has applied to him in debate the The explanation which I co is, that Mr. Randolph declare th tention of charging Mr. Clay, eit or private capacity, with forging paper, or misrepresenting any that the term blackleg was not in

To this exposition of the grou plaint, Col. Tatnall answered:

"Mr. Randolph informs me t used by him in debate were as f I thought it would be in my evidence sufficiently presumptive Charlotte (county) jury that this manufactured here—that Salazar' me as bearing a strong likeness in to the other papers. I did not prove this, but expressed my sus fact was so. I applied to the adn epithet, puritanic-diplomatic-blac ministration.' Mr. Randolph, in words as those uttered by him in willing to afford any explanation as ing and application.

In this answer Mr. Randolph re his original ground of refusing to a the Senate for words spoken within respects the statement of the w spoken greatly ameliorated the offe the coarse and insulting words, " falsifying," being disavowed, as were not used, and are not to be published report. The speech was "That a letter from General Salazar, the Mexican Minister at Washington, submitted by the Executive to the Senate, bore the ear-mark of having been manufactured or forged by the Secretary of State, and denounced the administration as a corrupt coalition between the puritan and blackleg; and added, at the same time, that he (Mr. Randolph) held himself personally responsible for all that he had said.

occasion was defiances are

rchase a cheap

will be despis-

racting a chal-

Il. Mr. Ran-

respect to Mr.

im, or to hurt

appearing to hat, and had

s speech, and it was said; which might and led to the applied to a nama message, ed, and dared defend. His

ed: "Here I

nce right into

I throw the

his compeers lines," &c. A very different

bat, and from

was an unfor-

of indistinct

e regretted as, 🍃 inducing the

eting was ab-ectation of the

uld be imme-

he most laud-

v it, with the

it off a week,

the good work,

ir and friendly

ited no specific exceptionable

general, for an

Clav's) char-

colanations by disputable ex-

e necessity for

s bottomed on verbal report,

lebates having report was of

Mr. Clay. It

bate Mr. Ran-

stop it.

This was the report to Mr. Clay, and upon which he gave the absolute challenge, and received the absolute acceptance, which shut out all inquiry between the principals into the causes of the quarrel. The seconds determined to open it, and to attempt an accommodation, or a peaceable determination of the difficulty. In consequence, General Jesup stated the complaint in a note to Col. Tatnall, thus:

"The injury of which Mr. Clay complains consists in this, that Mr. Randolph has charged him with having forged or manufactured a paper connected with the Panama mission; also, that he has applied to him in debate the epithet of black-The explanation which I consider necessary is, that Mr. Randolph declare that he had no intention of charging Mr. Clay, either in his public or private capacity, with forging or falsifying any paper, or misrepresenting any fact; and also that the term blackleg was not intended to apply

To this exposition of the grounds of the complaint, Col. Tatnall answered:

"Mr. Randolph informs me that the words used by him in debate were as follows: 'That I thought it would be in my power to show evidence sufficiently presumptive to satisfy a Charlotte (county) jury that this invitation was manufactured here—that Salazar's letter struck me as bearing a strong likeness in point of style to the other papers. I did not undertake to prove this, but expressed my suspicion that the fact was so. I applied to the administration the epithet, puritanic-diplomatic-black-legged administration.' Mr. Randolph, in giving these words as those uttered by him in debate, is unwilling to afford any explanation as to their meaning and application."

In this answer Mr. Randolph remained upon his original ground of refusing to answer out of the Senate for words spoken within it. In other respects the statement of the words actually spoken greatly ameliorated the offensive report, the coarse and insulting words, "forging and falsifying," being disavowed, as in fact they published report. The speech was a bitter phi- reason for choosing Virginia could only be ex lippic, and intended to be so, taking for its point the alleged coalition between Mr. Clay and Mr Adams with respect to the election, and their efforts to get up a popular question contrary to our policy of non-entanglement with foreign nations, in sending ministers to the congress of the American states of Spanish origin at the Isthmus of Panama. I heard it all, and, though sharp and cutting, I think it might have been heard, had he been present, without any manifestation of resentment by Mr. Clay. The part which he took so seriously to heart, that, of having the Panama invitations manufactured in his office, was to my mind nothing more than attributing to him a diplomatic superiority which enabled him to obtain from the South American ministers the invitations that he wanted; and not at all that they were spurious fabrications. As to the expression, "blackleg and puritan," it was merely a sarcasm to strike by antithesis, and which, being without foundation, might have been disregarded. I presented these views to the parties, and if they had come from Mr. Randolph they might have been sufficient; but he was inexorable, and would not authorize a word to be said beyond what he had written.

All hope of accommodation having vanished, the seconds proceeded to arrange for the duel. The afternoon of Saturday, the 8th of April, was fixed upon for the time; the right bank of the Potomac, within the State of Virginia, above the Little Falls bridge, was the place,—pistols the weapons,-distance ten paces; each party to be attended by two seconds and a surgeon, and myself at liberty to attend as a mutual friend. There was to be no practising with pistols, and there was none; and the words "one," "two," "three," "stop," after the word "fire," were, by agreement between the seconds, and for the humane purpose of reducing the result as near as possible to chance, to be given out in quick succession. The Virginia side of the Potomac was taken at the instance of Mr. Randolph. He went out as a Virginia senator, refusing to compromise that character, and, if he fell in defence of its rights, Virginia soil was to him the chosen ground to receive his blood. There was a statute of the State against duelling within her limits; but, as he merely went out to receive a fire without returning it, he deemed that no fighting, and were not used, and are not to be found in the consequently no breach of her statute. This

ANN

plained to me, as I alone was the depository of

The week's delay which the seconds had contrived was about expiring. It was Friday evening, or rather night, when I went to see Mr. Clay for the last time before the duel. There had been some alienation between us since the time of the presidential election in the House of Representatives, and I wished to give evidence that there was nothing personal in it. The family were in the parlor-company present-and some of it staid late. The youngest child, I believe James, went to sleep on the sofa-a circumstance which availed me for a purpose the next day. Mrs. Clay was, as always since the death of her daughters, the picture of desolation, but calm, conversable, and without the slightest apparent consciousness of the impending event. When all were gone, and she also had left the parlor, I did what I came for, and said to Mr. Clay, that, notwithstanding our late political differences, my personal feelings towards him were the same as fomerly, and that, in whatever concerned his life or honor my best wishes were with him. He expressed his gratification at the visit and the declaration, and said it was what he would have expected of me. We parted at midnight.

Saturday, the 8th of April-the day for the duel-had come, and almost the hour. It was noon, and the meeting was to take place at  $4\frac{1}{2}$ o'clock. I had gone to see Mr. Randolph before the hour, and for a purpose; and, besides, it was so far on the way, as he lived half way to Georgetown, and we had to pass through that place to cross the Potomac into Virginia at the Little Falls bridge. I had heard nothing from him on the point of not returning the fire since the first communication to that effect, eight days before. I had no reason to doubt the steadiness of his determination, but felt a desire to have fresh assurance of it after so many days' delay, and so near approach of the trying moment. I knew it would not do to ask him the questionany question which would imply a doubt of his word. His sensitive feelings would be hurt and annoyed at it. So I fell upon a scheme to get at the inquiry without seeming to make it. I told him of my visit to Mr. Clay the night beforeof the late sitting-the child asleep-the unconscious tranquillity of Mrs. Clay; and added, I could not help reflecting how different all that might be the next night. He understood me perfectly, and immediately said, with a quietude of look and expression which seemed to rebuke an unworthy doubt, "I shall do nothing to disturb the sleep of the child or the repose of the mother," and went on with his employment-(his seconds being engaged in their preparations in a different room)-which was, making codicils to his will, all in the way of remembrance to friends; the bequests slight in value, but invaluable in tenderness of feeling and beauty of expression, and always appropriate to the receiver. To Mr. Macon he gave some English shillings, to keep the game when he played whist. His namesake, John Randolph Bryan, then at school in Baltimore, and since married to his niece, had been sent for to see him, but sent off before the hour for going out, to save the boy from a possible shock at seeing him brought back. He wanted some gold-that coin not being then in circulation, and only to be obtained by favor or purchase—and sent his faithful man, Johnny, to the United States Branch Bank to get a few pieces, American being the kind asked for. Johnny returned without the gold, and delivered the excuse that the bank had none. Instantly Mr. Randolph's clear silver-toned voice was heard above its natural pitch, exclaiming, "Their name is legion! and they are liars from the beginning. Johnny, bring me my horse." His own saddle-horse was brought him-for he never rode Johnny's, nor Johnny his, though both, and all his hundred horses, were of the finest English blood-and rode off to the bank down Pennsylvania avenue, now Corcoran & Riggs's-Johnny following, as always, forty paces behind. Arrived at the bank, this scene, according to my informant, took place:

"Mr. Randolph asked for the state of his account, was shown it, and found to be some four thousand dollars in his favor. He asked for it. The teller took up packages of bills, and civilly asked in what sized notes he would have it. 'I want money,' said Mr. Randolph, putting emphasis on the word; and at that time it required a bold man to intimate that United States Bank notes were not money. The teller, beginning to understand him, and willing to make sure, said, inquiringly, 'You want silver?' 'I want my money!' was the reply. Then the teller, lifting boxes to the counter, said politely: 'Have you a cart, Mr. Randolph, to put it in?' 'That is my business, sir,' said he. By that time the attention of the cashier (Mr. Richard Smith) was attracted to what was going on, who came up, and understanding the question, and its cause, tolde

Mr. Randolph there was a given to his servant; that t should have what he wante

In fact, he had only app which he wanted for a sp brought about a compromise were received, the cart and with; but the account in bar check taken for the amount returned and delivered me a I was to open if he was kille if he was not; also an open read before I got to the groun a request to feel in his left by was killed, and find so man believe nine-take three for n same number to Tatnall and make seals to wear in remem! were all three at Mr. Randolp and soon sat out, Mr. Randoly in a carriage, I following him I have already said that the quick after giving the word reason which could not be told To Mr. Randolph, who did not who, though agreeing to be sho to be hit, this rapidity of count and quick arrival at the comm sented no objection. With Mr. ferent. With him it was all a and gave rise to some proposal ateness in counting off the tir communicated to Col. Tatnall, Mr. Randolph, had an ill effect u and, aided by an untoward ground, unsettled for a moment mination which he had formed n Clay. I now give the words of

"When I repeated to Mr. Cla the manner in which it would b pressed some apprehension that accustomed to the use of the p not be able to fire within the tim reason alone desired that it migh I mentioned to Col. Tatnall the Clay. He replied, 'If you insist time must be prolonged, but I sho regret it.' I informed him I did i prolonging the time, and I was swould acquiesce. The original a carried out."

I knew nothing of this until it v speak with the seconds or princ Mr. Randolph there was a mistake in the answer given to his servant; that they had gold, and he should have what he wanted."

a quietude

to rebuke

pose of the

ment-(his cations in a codicils to nbrance to

, but invalauty of ex-

he receiver.

sh shillings,

whist. His en at school

is niece, had

f before the

rom a possi-

back. He ing then in

by favor or an, Johnny,

o get a few

asked for.

and delivered

. Instantly

voice was

com the be-

norse." His nim-for he his, though

were of the

to the bank

Corcoran &

ways, forty ;, this scene, te of his ace some four

isked for it.

and civilly

have it. 'I putting em-

e it required

States Bank

beginning to e sure, said,

I want my teller, lifting

'Have you

', . That is time the at-

Smith) was

came up, and cause, told

ce:

In fact, he had only applied for a few pieces, which he wanted for a special purpose. This brought about a compromise. The pieces of gold were received, the cart and the silver dispensed with; but the account in bank was closed, and a check taken for the amount on New-York. He returned and delivered me a sealed paper, which I was to open if he was killed-give back to him if he was not; also an open slip, which I was to read before I got to the ground. This slip was a request to feel in his left breeches pocket, if he was killed, and find so many pieces of gold-I believe nine-take three for myself, and give the same number to Tatnall and Hamilton each, to make seals to wear in remembrance of him. We were all three at Mr. Randolph's lodgings then, and soon sat out, Mr. Randolph and his seconds in a carriage, I following him on horseback.

I have already said that the count was to be quick after giving the word "fire," and for a reason which could not be told to the principals. To Mr. Randolph, who did not mean to fire, and who, though agreeing to be shot at, had no desire to be hit, this rapidity of counting out the time and quick arrival at the command "stop" presented no objection. With Mr. Clay it was different. With him it was all a real transaction, and gave rise to some proposal for more deliberateness in counting off the time; which being communicated to Col. Tatnall, and by him to Mr. Randolph, had an ill effect upon his feelings, and, aided by an untoward accident on the ground, unsettled for a moment the noble determination which he had formed not to fire at Mr. Clay. I now give the words of Gen. Jesup:

"When I repeated to Mr. Clay the 'word' in the manner in which it would be given, he expressed some apprehension that, as he was not accustomed to the use of the pistol, he might not be able to fire within the time, and for that reason alone desired that it might be prolonged. I mentioned to Col. Tatnall the desire of Mr. Clay. He replied, 'If you insist upon it, the time must be prolonged, but I should very much regret it.' I informed him I did not insist upon prolonging the time, and I was sure Mr. Clay would acquiesce. The original agreement was carried out."

I knew nothing of this until it was too late to which was conducted with the utmost delicacy, speak with the seconds or principals. I had but which, in itself, was of a nature to be inexpres-

crossed the Little Falls bridge just after them. and come to the place where the servants and carriages had stopped. I saw none of the gentlemen, and supposed they had all gone to the spot where the ground was being marked off; but on speaking to Johnny, Mr. Randolph, who was still in his carriage and heard my voice, looked out from the window, and said to me: "Colonel, since I saw you, and since I have been in this carriage, I have heard something which may make me change my determination. Col. Hamilton will give you a note which will explain it." Col. Hamilton was then in the carriage, and gave me the note, in the course of the evening, of which Mr. Randolph spoke. I readily comprehended that this possible change of determination related to his firing; but the emphasis with which he pronounced the word "may" clearly showed that his mind was undecided, and left it doubtful whether he would fire or not. No further conversation took place between us; the preparations for the duel were finished; the parties went to their places; and I went forward to a piece of rising ground, from which I couldsee what passed and hear what was said. The faithful Johnny followed me close, speaking not a word, but evincing the deepest anxiety for his beloved master. The place was a thick forest, and the immediate spot a little depression, or basis, in which the parties stood. The principals saluted each other courteously as they took their stands. Col. Tatnall had won the choice of position, which gave to Gen. Jesup the delivery of the word. They stood on a line east and westa small stump just behind Mr. Clay; a low gravelly bank rose just behind Mr. Randolph. This latter asked Gen. Jesup to repeat the word as he would give it; and while in the act of doing so, and Mr. Randolph adjusting the butt of his pistol to his hand, the muzzle pointing downwards, and almost to the ground, it fired. Instantly Mr. Randolph turned to Col. Tatnall and said: "I protested against that hair trigger." Col. Tatnall took blame to himself for having sprung the hair. Mr. Clay had not then received his pistol. Senator Johnson, of Louisiana (Josiah), one of his seconds, was carrying it to him, and still several steps from him. This untimely fire, though clearly an accident, necessarily gave rise to some remarks, and a species of inquiry, which was conducted with the utmost delicacy, sibly painful to a gentleman's feelings. Mr. Clay stopped it with the generous remark that the fire was clearly an accident: and it was so unanimously declared. Another pistol was immediately furnished; and exchange of shots took place, and, happily, without effect upon the persons, Mr. Randolph's bullet struck the stump behind Mr. Clay, and Mr. Clay's knocked up the earth and gravel behind Mr. Randolph, and in a line with the level of his hips, both bullets having gone so true and close that it was a marvel how they missed. The moment had come for me to interpose. I went in among the parties and offered my mediation; but nothing could be done. Mr. Clay said, with that wave of the hand with which he was accustomed to put away a trifle, "This is child's play!" and required another fire. Mr. Randolph also demanded another fire. The seconds were directed to reload. While this was doing I prevailed on Mr. Randolph to walk away from his post, and renewed to him, more pressingly than ever, my importunities to yield to some accommodation; but I found him more determined than I had ever seen him, and for the first time impatient, and seemingly annoyed and dissatisfied at what I was doing. He was indeed annoyed and dissatisfied. The accidental fire of his pistol preyed upon his feelings. He was doubly chagrined at it, both as a circumstance susceptible in itself of an unfair interpretation, and as having been the immediate and controlling cause of his firing at Mr. Clay. He regretted this fire the instant it was over. He felt that it had subjected him to imputations from which he knew himself to be free—a desire to kill Mr. Clay, and a contempt for the laws of his beloved State; and the annoyances which he felt at these vexatious circumstances revived his original determination, and decided him irrevocably to carry it out.

It was in this interval that he told me what he had heard since we parted, and to which he alluded when he spoke to me from the window of the carriage. It was to this effect: That he had been informed by Col. Tatnall that it was proposed to give out the words with more deliberation. This information grated harshly upon his feelings. It unsettled his purpose, and brought his mind to the inquiry (as he now told me, and as I found it expressed in the note which he had immediately written in pencil to apprise me o' his possible change), whether, under these circumstances, he might not "disable" his adversary? This note is so characteristic, and such an essential part of this affair, that I here give its very words, so far as relates to this point. It ran thus:

"Information received from Col. Tatnall since I got into the carriage may induce me to change my mind, of not returning Mr. Clay's fire. I seek not his death. I would not have his blood upon my hands—it will not be upon my soul if shed in self-defence—for the world. He has determined, by the use of a long, preparatory caution by words, to get time to kill me. May I not, then, disable him? Yes, if I please."

It has been seen, by the statement of Gen. Jesup, already given, that this "information" was a misapprehension; that Mr. Clay had not applied for a prolongation of time for the purpose of getting sure aim, but only to enable his unused hand, long unfamiliar with the pistol, to fire within the limited time; that there was no prolongation, in fact, either granted or insisted upon; but he was in doubt, and General Jesup having won the word, he was having him repeat it in the way he was to give it out, when his finger touched the hair-trigger. How unfortunate that I did not know of this in time to speak to General Jesup, when one word from him would have set all right, and saved the imminent'risks incurred! This inquiry, "May I not disable him?" was still on Mr. Randolph's mind, and dependent for its solution on the rising incidents of the moment, when the accidental fire of his pistol gave the turn to his feelings which solved the doubt. But he declared to me that he had not aimed at the life of Mr. Clay; that he did not level as high as the knees-not higher than the knee-band; "for it was no mercy to shoot a man in the knee:" that his only object was to disable him and spoil his aim. And then added, with a beauty of expression and a depth of feeling which no studied oratory can ever attain, and which I shall never forget, these impressive words: "I would not have seen him fall mortally, or even doubtfully wounded, for all the land that is watered by the King of Floods and all his tributary streams." He left me to resume his post, utterly refusing to explain out of the Senate any thing that he had said in it, and with the positive declaration that he would not return the next fire to be the only one in da the fire of Mr. Clay, sa in the same place, saw pistol-discharge it in th do not fire at you, Mr. advancing and offering l the same spirit. They m Mr. Randolph saying, i coat, Mr. Clay-(the b the skirt of the coat. which Mr. Clay promp 'I am glad the debt is 1 up, and was prompt to p obliged to keep secret i of all was extreme at thi most critical affair; and v lighter hearts than we sup with Mr. Randolph us wanted dinner that teristic time of it. A re bank to say that they ha take, $130 that day." He is your rule not to corre the time, and at your co answer the runner had t Mr. Randolph said, 'I wi people must be honest, i asked for the sealed pa opened it, took out a chec my favor, and with which have him carried, if killed, under his patrimonial oaks at Washington, with an him. He took the gold pocket, and said to us (I I), 'Gentlemen, Clay's ba you of your seals. I am will have them made for y most characteristically, so cerned. He went to the he and inquired for the Bent had often told him there dated on that side from my Carolina. But the name v a coat of arms-among the rampant. That is the fam the arms engraved on the s have since habitually worn; Factis non verbis: of whi accustomed to say the non into et. But. enough. I re not merely to relate an ever nder these cirole" his adveristic, and such that I here give to this point. It

I. Tatnall since the me to change Clay's fire. I have his blood ipon my soul if id. He has dereparatory caume. May I not, se."

tement of Gen. "information" r. Clay had not for the purpose able his unused e pistol, to fire iere was no proor insisted upon; al Jesup having im repeat it in when his finger unfortunate that o speak to Genhim would have nent' risks incursable him?" was ad dependent for s of the moment, pistol gave the the doubt. But not aimed at the t level as high as knee-band; "for in in the knee;" ole him and spoil a beauty of exwhich no studied ich I shall never : " I would not · even doubtfully at is watered by ll his tributary e his post, utterly Senate any thing the positive decirn the next fire. woods, and kept who I then knew to be the only one in danger. I saw him receive the fire of Mr. Clay, saw the gravel knocked up in the same place, saw Mr. Randolph raise his pistol-discharge it in the air; heard him say, 'I do not fire at you, Mr. Clay; and immediately advancing and offering his hand. He was met in the same spirit. They met half way, shook hands, Mr. Randolph saying, jocosely, ' You owe me a coat, Mr. Clay-(the bullet had passed through the skirt of the coat, very near the hip)-to which Mr. Clay promptly and happily replied, 'I am glad the debt is no greater.' I had come up, and was prompt to proclaim what I had been obliged to keep secret for eight days. The joy of all was extreme at this happy termination of a most critical affair; and we immediately left, with lighter hearts than we brought. I stopped to sup with Mr. Randolph and his friends-none of us wanted dinner that day-and had a characteristic time of it. A runner came in from the bank to say that they had overpaid him, by mistake, $130 that day." He answered, 'I believe it is your rule not to correct mistakes, except at the time, and at your counter.' And with that answer the runner had to return. When gone, Mr. Randolph said, 'I will pay it on Monday: people must be honest, if banks are not.' He asked for the sealed paper he had given me, opened it, took out a check for $1,000, drawn in my favor, and with which I was requested to have him carried, if killed, to Virginia, and buried under his patrimonial oaks-not let him be buried at Washington, with an hundred hacks after him. He took the gold from his left breeches pocket, and said to us (Hamilton, Tatnall, and I), 'Gentlemen, Clay's bad shooting shan't rob you of your seals. I am going to London, and will have them made for you;' which he did, and most characteristically, so far as mine was concerned. He went to the herald's office in London and inquired for the Benton family, of which I had often told him there was none, as we only dated on that side from my grandfather in North Carolina. But the name was found, and with it a coat of arms-among the quarterings a lion rampant. That is the family, said he; and had the arms engraved on the seal, the same which I have since habitually worn; and added the motto.

Factis non verbis: of which he was afterwards accustomed to say the non should be changed into et. But, enough. I run into these details, not merely to relate an event, but to show character; and if I have not done it, it is not for want of material, but of ability to use it.

On Monday the parties exchanged cards, and social relations were formally and courteously restored. It was about the last high-toned duel that I have witnessed, and among the highest toned that I have ever witnessed, and so happily conducted to a fortunate issue—a result due to the noble character of the seconds as well as to the generous and heroic spirit of the principals. Certainly duelling is bad, and has been put down, but not quite so bad as its substitute—revolvers, bowie-knives, blackguarding, and street-assasinations under the pretext of self-defence.

CHAPTER XXVII.

DEATH OF MR. GAILLARD.

HE was a senator from South Carolina, and had been continuously, from the year 1804. He was five times elected to the Senate-the first time for an unexpired term-and died in the course of a term; so that the years for which he had been elected were nearly thirty. He was nine times elected president of the Senate pro tempore, and presided fourteen years over the deliberations of that body,-the deaths of two Vice-Presidents during his time (Messrs. Clinton and Gerry), and the much absence of another (Gov. Tompkins), making long continued vacancies in the President's chair,—which he was called to fill. So many elections, and such long continued service, terminated at last only by death, bespeaks an eminent fitness both for the place of Senator, and that of presiding officer over the Senate. In the language of Mr. Macon, he seemed born for that station. Urbane in his manners, amiable in temper, scrupulously impartial, attentive to his duties, exemplary patience, perfect knowledge of the rules, quick and clear discernment, uniting absolute firmness of purpose, with the greatest gentleness of manners, setting young Senators right with a delicacy and amenity, which spared the confusion of a mistake-preserving order, not by authority of rules, but by the graces of deportment: such were the qualifications which commended him to the presidency of the Senate, and which facilitated the transaction of business while preserving the decorum of the body. There was probably not an instance of disorder, or a disagreeable scene in the chamber, during his long continued presidency. He classed democratically in politics, but was as much the favorite of one side of the house as of the other, and that in the high party times of the war with Great Britain, which so much exasperated party spirit.

Mr. Gaillard was, as his name would indicate, of French descent, having issued from one of those Huguenot families, of which the bigotry of Louis XIV., dominated by an old woman, deprived France, for the benefit of other countries.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION IN RELA-TION TO THE ELECTION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT.

THE attempt was renewed at the session of 1825-'26 to procure an amendment to the constitution, in relation to the election of the two first magistrates of the republic, so as to do away with all intermediate agencies, and give the election to the direct vote of the people. Several specific propositions were offered in the Senate to that effect, and all substituted by a general proposition submitted by Mr. Macon-"that a select committee be appointed to report upon the best and most practicable mode of electing the President and Vice-President:" and, on the motion of Mr. Van Buren, the number of the committee was raised to nine-instead of five-the usual number. The members of it were appointed by Mr. Calhoun, the Vice-President, and were carefully selected, both geographically as coming from different sections of the Union, and personally and politically as being friendly to the object and known to the country. They were: Mr. Benton, chairman, Mr. Macon, Mr. Van Buren, Mr. Hugh L. White of Tennessee, Mr. Findlay of Pennsylvania, Mr. Dickerson of New Jersey, Mr. Holmes of Maine, Mr. Hayne of South Carolina, and Col. Richard M. Johnson of Kentucky. The committee agreed upon a proposition of amendment, dispensing with elec-vote of the people was to be taken; and obviating all excuse for caucuses and conventions to concentrate public opinion by proposing a second election between the two highest in the event of no one receiving a majority of the whole number of district votes in the first election. The plan reported was in these words:

"That, hereafter the President and Vice-President of the United States shall be chosen by the People of the respective States, in the manner following: Each State shall be divided by the legislature thereof, into districts, equal in number to the whole number of senators and representatives, to which such State may be entitled in the Congress of the United States; the said districts to be composed of contiguous territory, and to contain, as nearly as may be, an equal number of persons, entitled to be represented under the constitution, and to be laid off, for the first time, immediately after the ratification of this amendment, and afterwards at the session of the legislature next ensuing the appointment of representatives, by the Congress of the United States; or oftener, if deemed necessary by the State; but no alteration, after the first, or after each decennial formation of districts, shall take effect, at the next ensuing election, after such That, on the first Thursday, alteration is made. and succeeding Friday, in the month of August of the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight, and on the same days in every fourth year thereafter, the citizens of each State who possess the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature, shall meet within their respective districts, and vote for a President and Vice-President of the United States, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with himself: and the person receiving the greatest number of votes for President, and the one receiving the greatest number of votes for Vice-President in each district shall be holden to have received one vote: which fact shall be immediately certified to the Governor of the State to each of the senators in Jongress from such State, and to the President of the Senate. The right of affixing the places in the districts at which the elections shall be held, the manner of holding the same, and of canvassing the votes and certifying the returns, is reserved, exclusively, to the legislatures of the States. The Congress of the United States shall be in session on the second Monday of October, in the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight, and on the same day in every fourth year thereafter: and the President of the Senate, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, shall open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted. The person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be President, if such number be equal to a majority of tors, providing for districts in which the direct | the whole number of votes given; but if no person have such majority shall be held, on the f ceeding Friday, in the m next ensuing, between two highest numbers, for which second election -sult certified, and the e manner as in the fir g the greatest number shall be the President. 1 sons shall have received t number of votes, at the House of Representatives them for President, as is r constitution. The person number of votes for Viceelection, shall be the Vi number be equal to a m number of votes given, an such majority, then a secon place, between the persons l numbers, on the same day tion is held for President, a the highest number of vote shall be the Vice-President. persons shall have received of votes in the second electi shall choose one of them for now provided in the constit second election shall be ne of Vice-President, and not no of President, then the Senate President, from the person highest numbers in the first prescribed in the constitution

The prominent features of t are: 1. The abolition of electvote of the people; 2. A secon the two highest on each list, v majority of the whole; 3. [ mode of election.—The advan would be to get rid of all t which the selection of their two is now taken out of the hands usurped by self-constituted, ille sible bodies,-and place it in th er, and disinterested hands-the themselves. If adopted, there text for caucuses or conventions, the House of Representatives,— State is balanced by the small received a majority of the whole tricts in the first election, then principle - the demos krateo-t govern-is satisfied. If no one majority, then the first election popular nomination of the two hi nation by the people themselvesen; and obviaconventions to osing a second n the event of whole number on. The plan and Vice-Preschosen by the n the manner livided by the equal in numrs and repreay be entitled ates; the said uous territory, y be, an equal e represented, aid off, for the ratification of at the session e appointment s of the United essary by the first, or after cts, shall take on, after such irst Thursday, nth of August, hundred and days in every of each State, uisite for elech of the State eir respective ent and Vicee of whom, at of the same n receiving the ident, and the r of votes for Il be holden to t shall be imr of the State, ess from such Senate. The ne districts at he manner of ing the votes, served, exclu-States. The 1 be in session n the year one 7-eight, and on nereafter: and presence of ntatives, shall tes shall then the greatest all be Presia majority of but if no person have such majority, then a second election shall be held, on the first Thursday and succeeding Friday, in the month of December, then next ensuing, between the persons having the two highest numbers, for the office of President: which second election shall be conducted, the result certified, and the votes counted, in the ie manner as in the first; and the person havthe greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President. But, if two or more persons shall have received the greatest and equal number of votes, at the second election, the House of Representatives shall choose one of them for President, as is now prescribed by the constitution. The person having the greatest number of votes for Vice-President, at the first election, shall be the Vice-President, if such number be equal to a majority of the whole number of votes given, and, if no person have such majority, then a second election shall take place, between the persons having the two highest numbers, on the same day that the second election is held for President, and the person having the highest number of votes for Vice-President, shall be the Vice-President. But if two or more persons shall have received the greatest number of votes in the second election, then the Senate shall choose one of them for Vice-President, as is now provided in the constitution. But, when a second election shall be necessary, in the case of Vice-President, and not necessary in the case of President, then the Senate shall choose a Vice-President, from the persons having the two highest numbers in the first election, as is now prescribed in the constitution."

The prominent features of this plan of election are: 1. The abolition of electors, and the direct vote of the people; 2. A second election between the two highest on each list, when no one has a majority of the whole; 3. Uniformity in the mode of election.-The advantages of this plan would be to get rid of all the machinery by which the selection of their two first magistrates is now taken out of the hands of the people, and usurped by self-constituted, illegal, and irresponsible bodies,—and place it in the only safe, proper, and disinterested hands—those of the people themselves. If adopted, there would be no pretext for caucuses or conventions, and no resort to the House of Representatives, -where the largest State is balanced by the smallest. If any one received a majority of the whole number of districts in the first election, then the democratic principle - the demos krateo—the majority to govern-is satisfied. If no one receives such popular nomination of the two highest—a nomi-

two the election is sure to be made on the second trial. But to provide for a possible contingency-too improbable almost ever to occurand to save in that case the trouble of a third popular election, a resort to the House of Representatives is allowed; it being nationally unimportant which is elected where the candidates were exactly equal in the public estimation .-Such was the plan the committee reported; and it is the perfect plan of a popular election, and has the advantage of being applicable to all elections, federal and State, from the highest to the lowest. The machinery of its operation is easy and simple, and it is recommended by every consideration of public good, which requires the abandonment of a defective system, which has failedthe overthrow of usurping bodies, which have seized upon the elections—and the preservation to the people of the business of selecting, as well as electing, their own high officers. The plan was unanimously recommended by the whole committee, composed as it was of experienced men taken from every section of the Union. But it did not receive the requisite support of twothirds of the Senate to carry it through that body; and a similar plan proposed in the House of Representatives received the same fate there -reported by a committee, and unsustained by two-thirds of the House: and such, there is too much reason to apprehend, may be the fate of future similar propositions, originating in Congress, without the powerful impulsion of the people to urge them through. Select bodies are not the places for popular reforms. These reforms are for the benefit of the people, and should begin with the people; and the constitution itself, sensible of that necessity in this very case, has very wisely made provision for the popular initiative of constitutional amendments. The fifth article of that instrument gives the power of beginning the reform of itself to the States, in their legislatures, as well as to the federal government in its Congress: and there is the place to begin, and before the people themselves in their elections to the general assembly. And there should be no despair on account of the failures already suffered. No great reform is carried suddenly. It requires years of persevering exertion to produce the unanimity of opinion which majority, then the first election stands for a is necessary to a great popular reformation: but because it is difficult, it is not impossible. The nation by the people themselves—out of which greatest reform ever effected by peaceful means in the history of any government was that of the parliamentary reform of Great Britain, by which the rotten boroughs were disfranchised, populous towns admitted to representation, the elective franchise extended, the House of Commons purified, and made the predominant branch—the master branch of the British government. And how was that great reform effected? By a few desultory exertions in the parliament itself? No. but by forty years of continued exertion, and by incessant appeals to the people themselves. The society for parliamentary reform, founded in 1792, by Earl Grey and Major Cartwright, succeeded in its efforts in 1832; and in their success there is matter for encouragement, as in their conduct there is an example for imitation. They carried the question to the people, and kept it there forty years, and saw it triumph—the two patriotic founders of the society living to see the consummation of their labors, and the country in the enjoyment of the inestimable advantage of a "Reformed Parliament."

CHAPTER XXIX.

REDUCTION OF EXECUTIVE PATRONAGE.

In the session 1825-'26, Mr. Macon moved that the select committee, to which had been committed the consideration of the propositions for amending the constitution in relation to the election of President and Vice-President, should also be charged with an inquiry into the expediency of reducing Executive patronage, in cases in which it could be done by law consistently with the constitution, and without impairing the efficiency of the government. The motion was adopted, and the committee (Messrs. Benton, Macon, Van Buren, White of Tennessee, Findlay of Pennsylvania, Dickerson, Holmes, Hayne, and Johnson of Kentucky) made a report, accompanied by six bills; which report and bills, though not acted upon at the time, may still have their use in showing the democratic principles, on practical points of that day (when some of the fathers of the democratic church were still among us);and in recalling the administration of the government, to the simplicity and economy of its early days. The six bills reported were. 1. To regulate the publication of the laws of the United States, and of the public advertisements. 2. To secure in office the faithful collectors and disbursers of the revenue, and to displace defaulters. 3. To regulate the appointment of postmasters. 4. To regulate the appointment of cadets. 5. To regulate the appointment of midshipmen. 6. To prevent military and naval officers from being dismissed the service at the pleasure of the President.—In favor of the general principle, and objects of all the bills, the report accompanying them, said:

"In coming to the conclusion that Executive patronage ought to be diminished and regulated, on the plan proposed, the committee rest their opinion on the ground that the exercise of great patronage in the hands of one man, has a constant tendency to sully the purity of our institutions, and to endanger the liberties of the country. This doctrine is not new. A jealousy of power, and of the influence of patronage, which must always accompany its exercise, has ever been a distinguished feature in the American character. It displayed itself strongly at the period of the for-mation, and of the adoption, of the federal constitution. At that time the feebleness of the old confederation had excited a much greater dread of anarchy than of power-'of anarchy among the members than of power in the head '-and although the impression was nearly universal that a government of more energetic character had become indispensably necessary, yet, even under the influence of this conviction-such was the dread of power and patronage-that the States, with extreme reluctance, yielded their assent to the establishment of the federal government. Nor was this the effect of idle and visionary fears, on the part of an ignorant multitude, without knowledge of the nature and tendency of power. On the contrary, it resulted from the most extensive and profound political knowledge,-from the heads of statesmen, unsurpassed, in any age, in sagacity and patriotism. Nothing could reconcile the great men of that day to a constitution of so much power, but the guards which were put upon it against the abuse of power. Dread and jealousy of this abuse displayed itself throughout the instrument. To this spirit we are indebted for the freedom of the press, trial by jury, liberty of conscience, freedom of debate, responsibility to constituents, power of impeachment, the control of the Senate over appointments to office; and many other provisions of a like character. But the committee cannot imagine that the jealous foresight of the time, great as it was, or that any human sagacity, could have foreseen, and placed a competent guard upon, every possible avenue to the abuse of power. The nature of a constitutional act excludes the possibility of combining minute per fection with general excelle tion of all possible vigilance ought to have been done, he much of what has been atten insufficient and unavailing in mains for us to do, and much posterity to do—for those un do, on whom will devolve guarding the temple of the keeping alive the vestal flam

"The committee believe th ing in the spirit of the cons to multiply the guards, and barriers, against the possible a community could be imag laws should execute themse power of government should ment of laws-in such a sta government would carry on out jar or friction. Parties w and the movements of the poli but little more disturb the pa they are disturbed by the ope laws of the material world. case. The scene shifts from gion, where laws execute then tre of real life, wherein they as and military officers, by arm courts of justice, by the collecment of revenue, with all its jobs, and contracts; and in the ality, we behold the working of discover the reason why so ma any country, and in all ages, to ard of POWER, wheresoever, an it may be raised.

"The patronage of the feder the beginning, was founded u two millions of dollars, It is no twenty-two millions; and, with many now living, must operate whole revenue must, in a few applicable to subjects of patron about one half, say ten millions priated to the principal and inte debt, which, from the nature volves but little patronage. In few years, this debt, without g ment, must be paid off. A shor and a faithful application of t must speedily accomplish that m ject. Unless the revenue be ther as difficult in republics as in patronage of the federal govern already is, must, in the lapse of ceive a vast accession of strengtl itself will be doubled, and inst being applicable to objects of whole will take that direction. tion of the public debt, and the i nue, will multiply in a four-fold of ber of persons in the service of t ernment, the quantity of public hands, and the number of object applicable; but as each person

V·or I.—6

1. To rethe United nts. 2. To and disbursfaulters. 3. nasters. 4. lets. 5. To nen. 6. To from being of the Preinciple, and companying at Executive d regulated. ee rest their cise of great as a constant institutions. ountry. This f power, and must always een a distinharacter. It d of the forfederal coness of the old reater dread archy among head '-and ly universal tic character ry, yet, even n-such was ge-that the yielded their federal govof idle and norant multiture and tenr, it resulted and political smen unsurd patriotism. men of that ower, but the nst the abuse nis abuse disnent. To this edom of the ence, freedom uents, power e Senate over other provimmittee canat of the time, nan sagacity apetent guard the abuse of ional act ex-

minute per

fection with general excellence. After the exertion of all possible vigilance, something of what ought to have been done, has been omitted; and much of what has been attempted, has been found insufficient and unavailing in practice. Much remains for us to do, and much will still remain for posterity to do—for those unborn generations to do, on whom will devolve the sacred task of guarding the temple of the constitution, and of keeping alive the vestal flame of liberty.

The committee believe that they will be acting in the spirit of the constitution, in laboring to multiply the guards, and to strengthen the barriers, against the possible abuse of power. If a community could be imagined in which the laws should execute themselves-in which the power of government should consist in the enactment of laws-in such a state the machine of government would carry on its operations without jar or friction. Parties would be unknown, and the movements of the political machine would but little more disturb the passions of men, than they are disturbed by the operations of the great laws of the material world. But this is not the case. The scene shifts from this imaginary region, where laws execute themselves, to the theatre of real life, wherein they are executed by civil and military officers, by armies and navies, by courts of justice, by the collection and disbursement of revenue, with all its train of salaries, jobs, and contracts; and in this aspect of the reality, we behold the working of PATRONAGE, and discover the reason why so many stand ready, in any country, and in all ages, to flock to the standard of POWER, wheresoever, and by whomsoever, it may be raised.

"The patronage of the federal government at the beginning, was founded upon a revenue of two millions of dollars. It is now operating upon twenty-two millions; and, within the lifetime of many now living, must operate upon fifty. The whole revenue must, in a few years, be wholly applicable to subjects of patronage. At present about one half, say ten millions of it, are appropriated to the principal and interest of the public debt, which, from the nature of the object, involves but little patronage. In the course of a few years, this debt, without great mismanagement, must be paid off. A short period of peace, and a faithful application of the sinking fund, must speedily accomplish that most desirable object. Unless the revenue be then reduced, a work as difficult in republics as in monarchies, the patronage of the federal government, great as it already is. must, in the lapse of a few years, receive a vast accession of strength. The revenue itself will be doubled, and instead of one half being applicable to objects of patronage, the whole will take that direction. Thus, the reduction of the public debt, and the increase of revenue, will multiply in a four-fold degree the number of persons in the service of the federal government, the quantity of public money in their hands, and the number of objects to which it is applicable; but as each person employed will have a circle of greater or less diameter, of which he is the centre and the soul—a circle composed of friends and relations, and of individuals employed by himself on public or on private account—the actual increase of federal power and patronage by the duplication of the revenue, will be, not in the arithmetical ratio, but in geometrical progression—an increase almost beyond the power of the mind to calculate or to comprehend."

This was written twenty-five years ago. Its anticipations of increased revenue and patronage are more than realized. Instead of fifty millions of annual revenue during the lifetime of persons then living, and then deemed a visionary speculation, I saw it rise to sixty millions before I ceased to be a senator; and saw all the objects of patronage expanding and multiplying in the same degree, extending the circle of its influence, and, in many cases, reversing the end of its creation. Government was instituted for the protection of individuals—not for their support. Office was to be given upon qualifications to fill it-not upon the personal wants of the recipient. Proper persons were to be sought out and appointed-(by the President in the higher appointments, and by the heads of the different branches of service in the lower ones); and importunate suppliants were not to beg themselves into an office which belonged to the public, and was only to be administered for the public good. Such was the theory of the government. Practice has reversed it. Now office is sought for support, and for the repair of dilapidated fortunes; applicants obtrude themselves, and prefer "claims" to office. Their personal condition and party services, not qualification, are made the basis of the demand: and the crowds which congregate at Washington, at the change of an administration, supplicants for office, are humiliating to behold, and threaten to change the contests of parties from a contest for principle into a struggle for

The bills which were reported were intended to control, and regulate different branches of the public service, and to limit some exercises of executive power. 1. The publication of the government advertisements had been found to be subject to great abuse—large advertisements, and for long periods, having been often found to be given to papers of little circulation, and sometimes of no circulation at all, in places where the advertisement was to operate—the only effect of that favor being to conciliate the support of the paper, or to sustain an efficient one. For remedy, the bill for that purpose provided for the selection, and the limitation of the numbers, of the newspapers which were to publish the federal laws and advertisements, and for the periodical report of their names to Congress. 2. The four years' Limitation law was found to operate contrary to its intent, and to have become the facile means of getting rid of faithful disbursing officers, instead of retaining them. The object of the law was to pass the disbursing officers every four years under the supervision of the appointing power, for the inspection of their accounts, in order that defaulters might be detected and dropped, while the faithful should be ascertained and continued. Instead of this wholesome discrimination, the expiration of the four years' term came to be considered as the termination and vacation of all the offices on which it fell, and the creation of vacancies to be filled by new appointments at the option of the President. The bill to remedy this evil gave legal effect to the original intention of the law by confining the vacation of office to actual defaulters. The power of the President to dismiss civil officers was not attempted to be curtailed, but the restraints of responsibility were placed upon its exercise by requiring the cause of dismission to be communicated to Congress in each case. The section of the bill to that effect was in these words: "That in all nominations made by the President to the Senate, to fill vacancies occasioned by an exercise of the President's power to remove from office, the fact of the removal shall be stated to the Senate at the same time that the nomination is made, with a statement of the reasons for which such officer may have been removed." This was intended to operate as a restraint upon removals without cause, and to make legal and general what the Senate itself, and the members of the committee individually, had constantly refused to do in isolated cases. It was the recognition of a principle essential to the proper exercise of the appointing power, and entirely consonant to Mr. Jefferson's idea of removals; but never admitted by any administration, nor enforced by the Senate against any one-always waiting the legal enactment. The opinion of nine such senators as composed the committee who proposed to legalize this principle, all of them democratic, and most of them aged and experienced, should stand for a persuasive reason why this hensive than the one proposed, and should extend principle should be legalized. 3. The appointment of military cadets was distributed according to the Congressional representation, and which has been adopted in practice, and perhaps become the patronage of the member from a district instead of the President. 5. The selection of midshipmen was placed on the same footing, and has been followed by the same practical consequence. 6. To secure the independence of the army and navy officers, the bill proposed to do. what never has been done by law,—define the tenure by which they held their commissions. and substitute "good behavior" for the clause which now runs "during the pleasure of the President." The clause in the existing commission was copied from those then in use, derived from the British government; and, in making army and navy officers subject to dismission at the will of the President, departs from the principle of our republican institutions, and lessens the independence of the officers.

V'ог I.—6

CHAPTER XXX.

EXCLUSION OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS FROM CIVIL OFFICE APPOINTMENTS.

An inquiry into the expediency of amending the constitution so as to prevent the appointment of any member of Congress to any federal office of trust or profit, during the period for which he was elected, was moved at the session 1825-26, by Mr. Senator Thomas W. Cobb, of Georgia; and his motion was committed to the consideration of the same select committee to which had been referred the inquiries into the expediency of reducing executive patronage, and amending the constitution in relation to the election of President and Vice-President. The motion as submitted only applied to the term for which the senator or representative was elected—only carried the exclusion to the end of his constitutional term; but the committee were of opinion that such appointments were injurious to the independence of Congress and to the purity of legislation; and believed that the limitation on the eligibility of members should be more compre-

to the President's term un served as well as to his the possibility for a member ment from the President t. lent a subservient vote. directed their chairman (A accordingly. This was do made, chiefly founded upon federal convention which fr and the proceedings of the States which adopted it-sl exclusion of members of Cor appointments was actually vention on a full vote, and s sence of some members; and so as to leave an inadequate clause in the constitution in medy which had been at firs showed that conventions of s and some of the earlier Con to obtain amendments to the off members of Congress enti patronage. Some extracts f here given to show the sense of the constitution on this Thus:

"That, having had recourse t times in which the constitution committee find that the propos to them, had engaged the de federal convention which frame and of several of the State c ratified it.

"In an early stage of the ses convention, it was resolved, as

"Article 6, section 9. The House (of Congress) shall be ine capable of holding, any office un of the United States, during the they shall respectively be elected bers of the Senate shall be ineli capable of holding any such offi afterwards ?

"It further appears from the j clause, in the first draft of the c adopted with great unanimity; wards, in the concluding days of was altered, and its intention det jority of a single vote, in the ab the States by which it had been

"Following the constitution in ventions which ratified it, and the that, in the New-York convention mended, as follows:

"'That no senator or repreduring the time for which he v appointed to any office under the the United States.

The appointbuted accordentation, and and perhaps mber from a The selection same footing, ractical consendence of the roposed to do, .-define the commissions, for the clause easure of the existing comen in use, deent; and, in ibject to disdeparts from stitutions, and of amending e appointment v federal office d for which he sion 1825-26, o, of Georgia; the considerto which had he expediency and amending ne election of he motion as for which the elected-only his constituere of opinion ious to the inthe purity of limitation on more compreshould extend to the President's term under whom the member served as well as to his own-so as to cut off the possibility for a member to receive an appointment from the President to whom he might have lent a subservient vote: and the committee directed their chairman (Mr. Benton) to report accordingly. This was done; and a report was made, chiefly founded upon the proceedings of the federal convention which framed the constitution, and the proceedings of the conventions of the States which adopted it-showing that the total exclusion of members of Congress from all federal appointments was actually adopted in the convention on a full vote, and struck out in the absence of some members; and afterwards modified so as to leave an inadequate, and easily evaded clause in the constitution in place of the full remedy which had been at first provided. It also showed that conventions of several of the States, and some of the earlier Congresses, endeavored to obtain amendments to the constitution to cut off members of Congress entirely from executive patronage. Some extracts from that report are here given to show the sense of the early friends of the constitution on this important point.

Χ.

GRESS FROM

"That, having had recourse to the history of the times in which the constitution was formed, the committee find that the proposition now referred to them, had engaged the deliberations of the federal convention which framed the constitution, and of several of the State conventions which ratified it.

"In an early stage of the session of the federal convention, it was resolved, as follows:

"'Article 6, section 9. The members of each House (of Congress) shall be ineligible to, and incapable of holding, any office under the authority of the United States, during the time for which they shall respectively be elected; and the members of the Senate shall be ineligible to, and incapable of holding any such office for one year afterwards.'

"It further appears from the journal, that this clause, in the first draft of the constitution, was adopted with great unanimity; and that afterwards, in the concluding days of the session, it was altered, and its intention defeated, by a majority of a single vote, in the absence of one of the States by which it had been supported.

"Following the constitution into the State conventions which ratified it, and the committee find, that, in the New-York convention, it was recommended, as follows:

"That no senator or representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any office under the authority of the United States.

"By the Virginia convention, as follows:

"That the members of the Senate and House of Representatives shall be ineligible to, and incapable of holding, any civil office under the authority of the United States, during the term for which they shall respectively be elected."

"By the North Carolina convention, the same amendment was recommended, in the same words

"In the first session of the first Congress, which was held under the constitution, a member of the House of Representatives submitted a similar proposition of amendment; and, in the third session of the eleventh Congress, James Madison being President, a like proposition was again submitted, and being referred to a committee of the House, was reported by them in the following words:

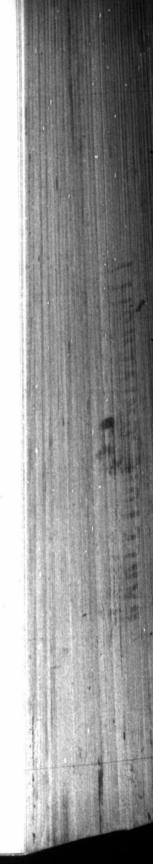

"'No senator or representative shall be appointed to any civil office, place, or emolument, under the authority of the United States, until the expiration of the presidential term in which such person shall have served as a senator or representative.'

"Upon the question to adopt this resolution, the vote stood 71 yeas, 40 navs,—wanting but three votes of the constitutional number for referring it to the decision of the States.

"Having thus shown, by a reference to the venerable evidence of our early history, that the principle of the amendment now under consideration, has had the support and approbation of the first friends of the constitution, the committee will now declare their own opinion in favor of its correctness, and expresses its belief that the ruling principle in the organization of the federal government demands its adoption."

It is thus seen that in the formation of the constitution, and in the early ages of our government, there was great jealousy on this headgreat fear of tampering between the President and the members-and great efforts made to keep each independent of the other. For the safety of the President, and that Congress should not have him in their power, he was made independent of them in point of salary. By a constitutional provision his compensation was neither to be diminished nor increased during the term for which he was elected :- not diminished, lest Congress should starve him into acquiescence in their views ;-not increased, lest Congress should seduce him by tempting his cupidity with an augmented compensation. That provision secured the independence of the President; but the independence of the two Houses was still to be provided for; and that was imperfectly effected by two provisions—the first, prohibiting office holders under the federal government from taking a seat in either House; the second, by prohibiting their appointment to any civil office that might have been created, or its emoluments increased, during the term for which he should have been elected. These provisions were deemed by the authors of the federalist (No. 55) sufficient to protect the independence of Congress, and would have been, if still observed in their spirit, as well as in their letter, as was done by the earlier Presidents. A very strong instance of this observance was the case of Mr. Alexander Smythe, of Virginia, during the administration of President Monroe. Mr. Smythe had been a member of the House of Representatives, and in that capacity had voted for the establishment of a judicial district in Western Virginia, and by which the office of judge was created. His term of service had expired: he was proposed for the judgeship: the letter of the constitution permitted the appointment: but its spirit did not. Mr. Smythe was entirely fit for the place, and Mr. Monroe entirely willing to bestow it upon him. But he looked to the spirit of the act, and the mischief it was intended to prevent, as well as to its letter: and could see no difference between bestowing the appointment the day after, or the day before, the expiration of Mr. Smythe's term of service: and he refused to make the appointment. This was protecting the purity of legislation according to the intent of the constitution; but it has not always been so. A glaring case to the contrary occurred in the person of Mr. Thomas Butler King, under the presidency of Mr. Fillmore Mr. King was elected a member of Congress for the term at which the office of collector of the customs at San Francisco had been created, and had resigned his place: but the resignation could not work an evasion of the constitution, nor affect the principle of its provision. He had been appointed in the recess of Congress, and sent to take the place before his two years had expired -and did take it; and that was against the words of the constitution. His nomination was not sent in until his term expired-the day after it expired-having been held back during the regular session; and was confirmed by the Senate. I had then ceased to be a member of the Senate, and know not whether any question was raised on the nomination; but if I had been, there should have been a question.

But the constitutional limitation upon the appointment of members of Congress, even when spirit, as done by Mr. Monroe, is but a very small restraint upon their appointment, only applying to the few cases of new offices created, or of compensation increased, during the period of their membership. The whole class of regular vacancies remain open! All the vacancies which the President pleases to create, by an exercise of the removing power, are opened! and between these two sources of supply, the fund is ample for as large a commerce between members and the President-between subscrvient votes on one side, and executive appointments on the otheras any President, or any set of members, might choose to carry on. And here is to be noted a wide departure from the theory of the government on this point, and how differently it has worked from what its early friends and advocates expected. I limit myself now to Hamilton. Madison and Jay; and it is no narrow limit which includes three such men. Their names would have lived for ever in American history, among those of the wise and able founders of our government, without the crowning work of the "Essays" in behalf of the constitution which have been embodied under the name of "FEDER-ALIST"-and which made that name so respectable before party assumed it. The defects of the constitution were not hidden from them in the depths of the admiration which they felt for its perfections; and these defects were noted, and as far as possible excused, in a work devoted to its just advocation. This point (of dangerous commerce between the executive and the legislative body) was obliged to be noticed-forced upor their notice by the jealous attacks of the "ANTI-FEDERALISTS "-as the opponents of the constitution were called: and in the number 55 of their work, they excused, and diminished, this defect in these terms:

"Sometimes we are told, that this fund of corruption (Executive appointments) is to be exhausted by the President in subduing the virtue of the Senate. Now, the fidelity of the other House is to be the victim. The improbability of such a mercenary and perfidious combination of the several members of the government, standing on as different foundations as republican principles will well admit, and at the same time accountable to the society over which they are placed, ought alone to quiet this apprehension. But, fortunately, the constitution has provided a still further safeguard. The members of the Congress are rendered ineligible to any civil executed beyond its letter and according to its offices that may be created, or of which the emoluments may be incr of their election. No of dealt out to the existing may become vacant by and to suppose that these purchase the guardians of the people themselves, is by which events ought t substitute an indiscrim jealousy, with which all re

Such was their defencegreat abilities, and ardent votion, could furnish. Th danger. To diminish its q with a brilliant declamati mained, was their resource the working of the government ing to their supposition, the been good. I have taken t italies the ruling words con tion which I have made "ordinary casualties." deaths, resignations, remo ment, and dismissions by tl nate. This, in fact, would small amount of vacancies di term; and as new offices, an compensation, were exclude undoubtedly good, and even contempt with which the obj But what has been the fact? working of the government how stands this narrow lim to "ordinary casualties?" the main stay of the argume was knocked from under it a government; and so knock from construction. In the ve constitution a construction w strument which enabled the I as many vacancies as he ple moment that he pleased. Th yielding to him the kingly prer ing officers without the form the consent of the other part power. The authors of the l foreseen this construction: so had asserted the contrary: and from the premises, "that the c was appurtenant to the app they had maintained in that a work-(No. 77)-that, as the benate was necessary to the ap

but a very ent, only apes created, or the period of ss of regular cancies which in exercise of and between and is ample members and t votes on one n the othermbers, might to be noted a f the governerently it has and advocates to Hamilton, narrow limit Their names rican history, ounders of our g work of the itution which ne of "FEDERme so respectdefects of the a them in the hey felt for its e noted, and as devoted to its angerous comthe legislative -forced upor of the "ANTI> nis fund of cor-) is to be exuing the virtue 7 of the other aprobability of combination of rnment, standepublican prinsame time acthich they are apprehension. has provided nembers of the to any civil of which the

of the constitu-

per 55 of their

ed, this defect

of their election. No offices, therefore, can be dealt out to the existing members, but such as may become vacant by ordinary casualties; and to suppose that these would be sufficient to nurchase the guardians of the people, selected by the people themselves, is to renounce every rule by which events ought to be calculated, and to substitute an indiscriminate and unbounded jealousy, with which all reasoning must be vain."

Such was their defence—the best which their great abilities, and ardent zeal, and patriotic devotion, could furnish. They could not deny the danger. To diminish its quantum, and to cover with a brilliant declamation the little that remained, was their resource. And, certainly if the working of the government had been according to their supposition, their defence would have been good. I have taken the liberty to mark in italies the ruling words contained in the quotation which I have made from their works-"ordinary casualties." And what were they? deaths, resignations, removals upon impeachment, and dismissions by the President and Senate. This, in fact, would constitute a very small amount of vacancies during the presidential term; and as new offices, and those of increased compensation, were excluded, the answer was undoubtedly good, and even justified the visible contempt with which the objection was repulsed. But what has been the fact? what has been the working of the government at this point? and how stands this narrow limitation of vacancies to "ordinary casualties?" In the first place, • the main stay of the argument in the Federalist was knocked from under it at the outset of the government; and so knocked by a side-blow from construction. In the very first year of the constitution a construction was put on that instrument which enabled the President to create as many vacancies as he pleased, and at any moment that he pleased. This was effected by yielding to him the kingly prerogative of dismissing officers without the formality of a trial, or the consent of the other part of the appointing power. The authors of the Federalist had not foreseen this construction: so far from it they had asserted the contrary: and arguing logically from the premises, "that the dismissing power was appurtenant to the appointing power," they had maintained in that able and patriotic work-(No. 77)-that, as the consent of the benate was necessary to the appointment of an emoluments may be increased, during the term officer, so the consent of the same body would be equally necessary to his dismission from office. But this construction was overruned by the first Congress which sat under the constitution. The power of dismission from office was abandoned to the President alone; and, with the acquisition of this prerogative, the power and patronage of the presidential office was instantly increased to an indefinite extent; and the argument of the Federalist against the capacity of the President to corrupt members of Congress, founded on the small number of places which he could use for that purpose, was totally everthrown. This is what has been done by construction. Now for the effects of legislation: and without going into an enumeration of statutes so widely extending and increasing executive patronage in the multiplication of offices, jobs, contracts, agencies, retainers, and sequiturs of all sorts, holding at the will of the President, it is enough to point to a single act—the four years' limitation act; which, by vacating almost the entire civil list-the whole "Blue Book "the 40,000 places which it registers—in every period of a presidential term--puts more offices at the command of the President than the authors of the Federalist ever dreamed of; and enough to equip all the members and all their kin if they chose to accept his favors. But this is not the end. Large as it opens the field of patronage, it is not the end. There is a practice grown up in these latter times, which, upon every revolution of parties, makes a political exodus among the adversary office-holders, marching them off into the wilderness, and leaving their places for new-comers. This practice of itself, also unforeseen by the authors of the Federalist, again oversets their whole argument, and leaves the mischief from which they undertook to defend the constitution in a degree of vigor and universality of which the original opposers of that mischief had never formed the slightest conception.

Besides the direct commerce which may take place between the Executive and a member, there are other evils resulting from their appointment to office, wholly at war with the theory of our government, and the purity of its action. Responsibility to his constituents is the corner-stone and sheet-anchor, in the system of representative government. It is the substance without which representation is but a shadow. To secure that responsibility the constitution has provided that the members shall be periodically returned to their constituents-those of the House at the end of every two years, those of the Senate at the end of every six-to pass in review before them-to account for what may have been done amiss, and to receive the reward or censure of good or bad conduct. This responsibility is totally destroyed if the President takes a member out of the hands of his constituents, prevents his return home, and places him in a situation where he is independent of their censure. Again: the constitution intended that the three departments of the government,-the executive, the legislative, and the judicial-should be independent of each other: and this independence ceases, between the executive and legislative, the moment the members become expectants and recipients of presidential favor;

-the more so if the President should have owed his office to their nomination. Then it becomes a commerce, upon the regular principle of trade-a commerce of mutual benefit. For this reason Congress caucuses for the nomination of presidential candidates fell under the ban of public opinion, and were ostracised above twenty years ago-only to be followed by the same evil

in a worse form, that of illegal and irresponsible

"conventions;" in which the nomination is an election, so far as party power is concerned; and into which the member glides who no longer dares to go to a Congress caucus; -- whom the constitution interdicts from being an electorand of whom some do not blush to receive office.

and even to demand it, from the President whom they have created. The framers of our government never foresaw-far-seeing as they were-

this state of things, otherwise the exclusion of members from presidential appointments could never have failed as part of the constitution.

(after having been first adopted in the original draught of that instrument); nor repulsed when recommended by so many States at the adoption of the constitution; nor rejected by a majority of one in the Congress of 1789, when proposed as an amendment, and coming so near to adoption that there were always members in the market. waiting to render votes, and to receive office; and that in any closely contested, or nearly balanced question, in which the administration took an interest, they could turn the decision which way they pleased by the help of these marketable votes. It was a humiliating revelation to a young senator—but true; and I have seen too much of it in my time-seen members whose every vote was at the service of government-to whom a seat in Congress was but the stepping-stone to executive appointment-to whom federal office was the pabulum for which their stomachs yearned-and who to obtain it. were ready to forget that they had either constituents or country. And now, why this mortifying exhibition of a disgusting depravity? I answer-to correct it :- if not by law and constitutional amendment (for it is hard to get lawgivers to work against themselves), at least by the force of public opinion, and the stern rebuke of popular condemnation.

When I first came to the Senate thirty years ago, aged members were accustomed to tell me

I have mentioned Mr. Monroe as a President who would not depart, even from the spirit of the constitution, in appointing, not a member. but an ex-member of Congress, to office. Others of the earlier Presidents were governed by the same principle, of whom I will only mention (for his example should stand for all) General Washington, who entirely condemned the practice. In a letter to General Hamilton (vol. 6 page 53, of Hamilton's Works), he speaks of his objections to these appointments as a thing well known to that gentleman, and which he was only driven to think of in a particular instance, from the difficulty of finding a Secretary of State, successor to Mr. Edmund Randolph. No less than four persons had declined the offer of it; and seeing no other suitable person without going into the Senate, he offered it to Mr. Rufus King of that body-who did not accept it: and for this offer, thus made in a case of so much urgency, and to a citizen so eminently fit, Washington felt that the honor of his administration required him to show a justification. would the Father of his country have thought if members had come to him to solicit office? and especially, if these members (a thing almost blasphemous to be imagined in connection with his name) had mixed in caucuses and

CHAPTER

DEATH OF THE EX-PRESIDENCE AND THOMAS JE

It comes within the scope of the deaths and characters of who have died during my ti contemporaries, and who h with the founding or early eral government. This gives a chapter with the names of and Mr. Jefferson-two of political men of the revolu public life together, died or July 4th, 1826,—exactly fift had both put their hands to t Independence which placed a the theatre of the world. De enough of similitude in their excuse the belief in the interp providence, and to justify the terious reverence with which the incident demise was received country. The parallel between plete. Born nearly at the Adams the elder, they took th life-with the same successearthly career at the same time, way:-in the regular course of pose and tranquillity of retireme of their families, and on the labors had contributed to make

Born, one in Massachusetts, the ginia, they both received liberal braced the same profession (the mixed literature and science w

by the House.

Thus far I have spoken of this abuse as a potentiality—as a possibility—as a thing which might happen: the inexorable law of history requires it to be written that it has happened, is happening, becomes more intense, and is ripening into a chronic disease of the body politic.

thirty years ed to tell me 1 the market, eceive office; d. or nearly dministration the decision help of these ating revela-; and I have een members ce of governess was but ointment-to um for which to obtain it, ad either convhy this morlepravity? I law and conhard to get ves), at least as a President the spirit of a member, ffice. Others verned by the only mention all) General ned the pracailton (vol. 6, speaks of his a thing well thich he was ular instance, Secretary of andolph. No d the offer of erson without to Mr. Rufus cept it: and e of so much tly fit, Washdministration tion. What have thought solicit office? (a thing aln connection aucuses and conventions to procure his nomination for President? Certainly he would have given them a look which would have sent such suppliants for ever from his presence. And I, who was senator for thirty years, and never had office for myself or any one of my blood, have a right to condemn a practice which my conduct rebukes, and which the purity of the government requires to be abolished, and which the early Presidents carefully avoided.

the stern re-

CHAPTER XXXI.

DEATH OF THE EX-PRESIDENTS JOHN ADAMS AND THOMAS JEFFERSON.

It comes within the scope of this View to notice the deaths and characters of eminent public men who have died during my time, although not my contemporaries, and who have been connected with the founding or early working of the federal government. This gives me a right to head a chapter with the names of Mr. John Adams and Mr. Jefferson-two of the most eminent political men of the revolution, who, entering public life together, died on the same day,-July 4th, 1826,—exactly fifty years after they had both put their hands to that Declaration of Independence which placed a new nation upon the theatre of the world. Doubtless there was enough of similitude in their lives and deaths to excuse the belief in the interposition of a direct providence, and to justify the feeling of mysterious reverence with which the news of their coincident demise was received throughout the country. The parallel between them was complete. Born nearly at the same time, Mr. Adams the elder, they took the same course in life-with the same success-and ended their earthly career at the same time, and in the same way:-in the regular course of nature, in the repose and tranquillity of retirement, in the bosom of their families, and on the soil which their labors had contributed to make free.

Born, one in Massachusetts, the other in Virginia, they both received liberal educations, embraced the same profession (that of the law), studies and pursuits, and entered early into the ripening contest with Great Britain-first in their counties and States, and then on the broader field of the General Congress of the Confederated Colonies. They were both members of the Congress which declared Independence-both of the committee which reported the Declarationboth signed it-were both employed in foreign missions - both became Vice-Presidents - and both became Presidents. They were both working men; and, in the great number of efficient laborers in the sause of Independence which the Congresses of the Revolution contained, they were doubtless the two most efficient-and Mr. Adams the more so of the two. He was, as Mr. Jefferson styled him, "the Colossus" of the Congress - speaking, writing, counselling - a member of ninety different committees, and (during his three years' service) chairman of twenty-five-chairman also of the board of war and board of appeals: his soul on fire with the cause, left no rest to his head, hands, or tongue. Mr. Jefferson drew the Declaration of Independence, but Mr. Adams was "the pillar of its support, and its ablest advocate and defender." during the forty days it was before the Congress. In the letter which he wrote that night to Mrs. Adams (for, after all the labors of the day, and such a day, he could still write to her), he took a glowing view of the future, and used those expressions, "gloom" and "glory," which his son repeated in the paragraph of his message to Congress in relation to the deaths of the two ex-Presidents, which I have heard criticized by those who did not know their historical allusion, and could not feel the force and beauty of their application. They were words of hope and confidence when he wrote them, and of history when he died. "I am well aware of the toil, and blood, and treasure, that it will cost to maintain this Declaration, and to support and defend these States; yet through all the gloom, I can see the rays of light and glory!" and he lived to see it-to see the glory-with the bodily, as well as with the mental eye. And (for the great fact will bear endless repetition) it was he that conceived the idea of making Washington commander-in-chief, and prepared the way for his unanimous nomination.

In the division of parties which ensued the establishment of the federal government, Mr. mixed literature and science with their legal Adams and Mr. Jefferson differed in systems of policy, and became heads of opposite divisions, but without becoming either unjust or unkind to each other. Mr. Adams sided with the party discriminated as federal; and in that character became the subject of political attacks, from which his competitor generously defended him, declaring that "a more perfectly honest man never issued from the hands of his Creator;" and, though opposing candidates for the presidency, neither would have any thing to do with the election, which they considered a question between the systems of policy which they represented, and not a question between themselves. Mr. Jefferson became the head of the party then called republican-now democratic; and in that character became the founder of the political school which has since chiefly prevailed in the United States. He was a statesman: that is to say, a man capable of conceiving measures useful to the country and to mankind---able to recommend them to adoption, and to administer them when adopted. I have seen many politicans-a few statesmen-and, of these few, he their pre-eminent head. He was a republican by nature and constitution, and gave proofs of it in the legislation of his State, as well as in the policy of the United States. He was no speaker, but a most instructive and fascinating talker; and the Declaration of Independence, even if it had not been sistered by innumerable classic productions, would have placed him at the head of political writers. I never saw him but once, when I went to visit him in his retirement; and then I felt, for four hours, the charms of his bewitching talk. I was then a young senator, just coming on the stage of public life-he a patriarchal statesman just going off the stage of natural life, and evidently desirous to impress some views of policy upon me-a design in which he certainly did not fail. I honor him as a patriot of the Revolution-as one of the Founders of the Republic -- as the founder of the political school to which I belong; and for the purity of character which he possessed in common with his compatriots, and which gives to the birth of the United States a beauty of parentage which the genealogy of no other nation can show?

CHAPTER XXXII.

BRITISH INDEMNITY FOR DEPORTED SLAVES

In this year was brought to a conclusion the long-continued controversy with Great Britain in relation to the non-fulfilment of the first article of the treaty of Ghent (1814), for the restitution of slaves carried off by the British troops in the war of 1812. It was a renewal of the misunderstanding, but with a better issue, which grew up under the seventh article of the treaty of peace of 1783 upon the same subject. The power of Washington's administration was not able to procure the execution of that article. either by restoration of the slaves or indemnity. The slaves then taken away were carried to Nova Scotia, where, becoming an annoyance, they were transferred to Sierra Leone; and thus became the foundation of the British African colony there. The restitution of deported slaves, stipulated in the first article of the Ghent treaty, could not be accomplished between the two powers; they disagreed as to the meaning of words; and after seven years of vain efforts to come to an understanding, it was agreed to refer the question to arbitrament. The Emperor Alexander accepted the office of arbitrator, executed it, and decided in favor of the United States. That decision was as unintelligible to Great Britain as all the previous treaty stipulations on the same subject had been. She could not understand it. A second misunderstanding grew up, giving rise to a second negotiation, which was concluded by a final agreement to pay the value of the slaves carried off. In 1827 payment was made—twelve years after the injury and the stipulation to repair it, and after continued and most strenuous exertions to obtain redress.

The case was this: it was a part of the system of warfare adopted by the British, when operating in the slave States, to encourage the slaves to desert from their owners, promising them freedom; and at the end of the war these slaves were carried off. This carrying off was foreseen by the United States Commissioners at Ghent, and in the first article of the treaty was provided against in these words; "all places taken, &c. shall be restored without delay, &c., or carrying away any of the artillery, or other public property originally capture places, and which shall ren exchange of the ratification any slaves or other priva British Government under limitation which applied to that which was private also only such slaves as were within the forts, and which the time of the exchange of struction which would have were induced to run away whole; and all that left the change of ratifications, which ed the rest. She adhered to given to the parallel article in and by which all slaves take were held to be lawful prize of der the British proclamation, a pensated for. The United States confined this local limitation t nant to the forts; and held the vate property, subject to restitu compensation, if carried away a how acquired.

The point was solemnly car Emperor Alexander, the United S ed by their minister, Mr. Henry Great Britain by Sir Charles Bag Nesselrode and Capo D'Istrias r guments to be laid before the Majesty's decision was perempto United States of America are en indemnification from Great Britain property carried away by the 1 and, as the question regards slav cally, for all such slaves as were by the British forces from the pla tories of which the restitution was the treaty, in quitting the said place ries." This was explicit; but the ter understook to understand it as to slaves who voluntarily joined troops to free themselves from bond came from places never in posses tish troops; and he submitted a et to the Russian minister, Count to be laid before the Emperor. T Alexander gave an answer which is ategorical reply to unfounded dubi said: "the Emperor having, by the r ant of the two plenipotentiaries, giv property originally captured in the said posts or places, and which shall remain therein upon the exchange of the ratifications of this treaty, or any slaves or other private property." The British Government undertook to extend the limitation which applied to public property to that which was private also; and so to restore only such slaves as were originally captured within the forts, and which remained therein at the time of the exchange of ratifications—a construction which would have excluded all that were induced to run away, being nearly the whole; and all that left the forts before the exchange of ratifications, which would have included the rest. She adhered to the construction given to the parallel article in the treaty of 1783, and by which all slaves taken during the war were held to be lawful prize of war, and free under the British proclamation, and not to be compensated for. The United States, on the contrary, confined this local limitation to things appurtenant to the forts; and held the slaves to be private property, subject to restitution, or claim for compensation, if carried away at all, no matter how acquired.

The point was solemnly carried before the Emperor Alexander, the United States represented by their minister, Mr. Henry Middleton, and Great Britain by Sir Charles Bagot—the Counts Nesselrode and Capo D'Istrias receiving the arguments to be laid before the Emperor. His Majesty's decision was peremptory; "that the United States of America are entitled to a just indemnification from Great Britain for all private property carried away by the British forces; and as the question regards slaves more especally, for all such slaves as were carried away by the British forces from the places and territories of which the restitution was stipulated by the treaty, in quitting the said places and territones." This was explicit; but the British minister understook to understand it as not applying to slaves who voluntarily joined the British troops to free themselves from bondage, and who came from places never in possession of the ish troops; and he submitted a note to that et to the Russian minister, Count Nesselrode, to be laid before the Emperor. To this note Alexander gave an answer which is a model of ategorical reply to unfounded dubitation. He said: "the Emperor having, by the mutual consent of the two plenipotentiaries, given an opinion, founded solely upon the sense which results from the text of the article in dispute, does not think himself called upon to decide here any question relative to what the laws of war permit or forbid to the belligerents; but, always faithful to the grammatical interpretation of the first article of the treaty of Ghent, his Imperial Majesty declares, a second time, that it appears to him, according to this interpretation, that, in quitting the places and territories of which the treaty of Ghent stipulates the restitution to the United States, his Britannic Majesty's forces had no right to carry away from the same places and territories, absolutely, any slave, by whatever means he had fallen or come into their power." This was the second declaration, the second decision of the point; and both parties having bound themselves to abide the decision, be it what it might, a convention was immediately concluded for the purpose of carrying the Emperor's decision into effect, by establishing a board to ascertain the number and value of the deported slaves. It was a convention formally drawn up, signed by the ministers of the three powers, done in triplicate, ratified, and ratifications exchanged, and the affair considered finished. Not so the fact! New misunderstanding, new negotiation, five years more consumed in diplomatic notes, and finally a new convention concluded! Certainly it was not the value of the property in controversy, not the amount of money to be paid, that led Great Britain to that pertinacious resistance, bordering upon cavilling and bad faith. It was the loss of an advantage in war—the loss of the future advantage of operating upon the slave States through their slave property, and which advantage would be lost if this compensation was enforced,-which induced her to stand out so long against her own stipulations, and the decisions of her own accepted arbitrator.

This new or third treaty, making indemnity for these slaves, was negotiated at London, November, 1826, between Mr. Gallatin on the part of the United States, and Messrs. Huskisson and Addington on the part of Great Britain. It commenced with reciting that "difficulties having arisen in the execution of the convention concluded at St. Petersburg, July 12th, 1822, under the mediation of his majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, between the United States of America and Great Britain, for the purpose of carrying into effect the decision of his Imperial Majesty eat Britain e first artior the restiitish troops of the missue, which the treaty bject. The on was not hat article, indemnity. ied to Nova e, they were became the plony there. tipulated in could not be 3; they dis-; and, after o an underquestion to ler accepted und decided lecision was

D SLAVES.

A second to a second by a final aves carried welve years to repair it, us exertions all the pre-subject had the system hen operathe slaves to them freehese slaves ras foreseen

i at Ghent,
y was prolaces taken,
&c., or carother public

upon the differences which had arisen between the said United States and Great Britain as to the true construction and meaning of the first article of the treaty of Ghent, therefore the said parties agree to treat again," &c. The result of this third negotiation was to stipulate for the payment of a gross sum to the government of the United States, to be by it divided among those whose slaves had been carried off: and the sum of one million two hundred and four thousand nine hundred and sixty dollars was the amount agreed upon. This sum was satisfactory to the claimants, and was paid to the United States for their benefit in the year 1827 - just twelve years after the conclusion of the war, and after two treaties had been made, and two arbitrations rendered to explain the meaning of the first treaty, and which fully explained itself. Twelve years of persevering exertion to obtain the execution of a treaty stipulation which solely related to private property, and which good faith and sheer justice required to have been complied with immediately! At the commencement of the session of Congress, 1827-28, the President, Mr. John Quincy Adams, was able to communicate the fact of the final settling and closing up of this demand upon the British government for the value of the slaves carried off by its troops. The sum received was large, and ample to pay the damages; but that was the smallest part of the advantage gained. The example and the principle were the main points—the enforcement of such a demand against a government so powerful, and after so much resistance, and the condemnation which it carried, and the responsibilty which it implied—this was the grand advantage. Liberation and abduction of slaves was one of the modes of warfare adopted by the British, and largely counted on as a means of harassing and injuring one half of the Union. It had been practised during the Revolution, and indemnity avoided. If avoided a second time, impunity, would have sanctioned the practice and rendered it inveterate; and in future wars, not only with Great Britain but with all powers, this mode of annoyance would have become an ordinary resort, leading to servile insurrections. The indemnity exacted carried along with it the condemnation of the practice, as a spoliation of private property to be atoned for; and was both a compensation for the past and a warning for the future. It implied a responsibility which no a dead letter, although containing the precise power, or art, or time could evade, and the principle of which being established, there will be no need for future arbitrations.

I have said that this article in the treaty of Ghent for restitution, or compensation, for de ported slaves was brought to a better issue than its parallel in the treaty of peace of 1783. By the seventh article of this treaty it was declared that the evacuation (by the British troops) should be made "without carrying away any negroes or other property belonging to the American inhabitants." Yet three thousand slaves were carried away (besides ten times that number-27,000 in Virginia alone—perishing of disease in the British camps); and neither restitution nor compensation made for any part of them. Both were resisted-the restitution by Sir Guy Carleton in his letter of reply to Washington's demand, declaring it to be an impossible infamy in a British officer to give up those whom they had invited to their standard; but reserving the point for the consideration of his government, and in the mean time, allowing and facilitating the taking of schedules of all slaves taken awaynames, ages, sex, former owners, and States from which taken. The British government resisted compensation upon the ground of war captures; that, being taken in war, no matter how, they became, like other plunder, the property of the captors, who had a right to dispose of it as they pleased, and had chosen to set it free; that the slaves, having become free belonged to nobody, and consequently it was no breach of the treaty stipulation to carry them away. This ground was contested by the Congress of the confederation to the end of its exist. ence, and afterwards by the new federal government, from its commencement until the claim for indemnity was waived or abandoned, at the conclusion of Jay's treaty, in 1796. The very first message of Washington to Congress when he became President, presented the inexecution of the treaty of peace in this particular, among others, as one of the complaints justly existing against Great Britain; and all the diplomacy of his administration was exerted to obtain redress-in vain. The treaties of '94 and '96 were both signed without allusion to the subject; and, being left unprovided for in these treaties, the claim sunk into the class of obsolete demands; and the stipulation remained in the treaty words, and the additional o the Emperor Alexander too manded compensation and ments founded in the laws o had been received for that upon private property; alth the confederation adopted t and even ordered each State conies of the schedules of t it; and hopes of indemnity extinguished by the treaty bitter complaint against that gress debates of the time, an abundantly show.

Northern men did their du getting compensation (and, more establishing the princip be compensation in such ca carried away in the war of of the commissioners at Gheni stipulation for indemnity were Adams, Russell, Gallatin, fro Clay and Bayard from the Northern negotiator (Mr. G. Northern President (Mr. John finally obtained it; and it is a thy of remark that this North who was finally successful, wa bater in Congress, in '96, who d argument (in my opinion surpa of Mr. Madison), against the g the British Government resisted of this article of the treaty.

I am no man to stir up old cla federal government; and, I de which exhumes such claims, and cility with which they are consider in the hands of speculators who g next to nothing, for them. But I the argument on which the Fre claim is now receiving so much applies with infinitely more force t whose slaves were taken during t Revolution than in behalf of these ation claims. They were contribut their persons in the camp or counci voluntary or tax contributions-to dence of their country when they w spoiled of their property. They de these slaves to support their families were supporting their country. T debt to British merchants, and relied and the prinere will be no

the treaty of sation, for detter issue than of 1783. By was declared troops) should any negroes or American ind slaves were hat numberg of disease in restitution nor f them. Both by Sir Guy Washington's ossible infamy se whom they t reserving the vernment, and, facilitating the taken awayrs, and States sh government ground of war war, no matter inder, the proight to dispose chosen to set it come free, beatly it was no to carry them ed by the Connd of its exist. federal governintil the claim abandoned, at in 1796. The on to Congress nted the inexethis particular, mplaints justly and all the diwas exerted to aties of '94 and sion to the subr in these treaof obsolete deed in the treaty ng the precise words, and the additional one "negroes," on which the Emperor Alexander took the stand which commanded compensation and dispensed with arguments founded in the laws of war. Not a shilling had been received for that immense depredation upon private property; although the Congress of the confederation adopted the strongest resolves, and even ordered each State to be furnished with copies of the schedules of the slaves taken from it; and hopes of indemnity were kept alive until extinguished by the treaty of '96. It was a bitter complaint against that treaty, as the Congress debates of the time, and the public press, abundantly show.

Northern men did their duty to the South in getting compensation (and, what is infinitely more, establishing the principle that there shall be compensation in such cases) for the slaves carried away in the war of 1812. A majority of the commissioners at Ghent who obtained the stipulation for indemnity were Northern men-Adams, Russell, Gallatin, from the free, and Clay and Bayard from the slave States. A Northern negotiator (Mr. Gallatin), under a Northern President (Mr. John Quincy Adams), finally obtained it; and it is a coincidence worthy of remark that this Northern negotiator, who was finally successful, was the same debater in Congress, in '96, who delivered the best argument (in my opinion surpassing even that of Mr. Madison), against the grounds on which the British Government resisted the execution of this article of the treaty.

I am no man to stir up old claims against the federal government; and, I detest the trade which exhumes such claims, and deplore the facility with which they are considered-too often in the hands of speculators who gave nothing, or next to nothing, for them. But I must say that the argument on which the French spoliation claim is now receiving so much consideration, applies with infinitely more force to the planters whose slaves were taken during the war of the Revolution than in behalf of these French spoliation claims. They were contributing-some in their persons in the camp or council, all in their voluntary or tax contributions—to the independence of their country when they were thus despoiled of their property. They depended upon these slaves to support their families while they were supporting their country. They were in pensation for these slaves to pay those debts, at the very moment when compensation was abandoned by the same treaty which enforced the payment of the debts. They had a treaty obligation for indemnity, express in its terms, and since shown to be valid, when deprived of this stipulation by another treaty, in order to obtain general advantages for the whole Union. This is something like taking private property for public use. Three thousand slaves, the property of ascertained individuals, protected by a treaty stipulation, and afterwards abandoned by another treaty, against the entreaties and remonstrances of the owners, in order to obtain the British commercial treaty of '94, and its supplement of '96: such is the case which this revolutionary spoliation of slave property presents, and which puts it immeasurably ahead of the French spoliation claims prior to 1800. There is but four years' difference in their ages-in the dates of the two treaties by which they were respectively surrendered—and every other difference between the two cases is an argument of preference in favor of the losers under the treaty of 1796. Yet I am against both, and each, separately or together; and put them in contrast to make one stand as an argument against the other. But the primary reason for introducing the slave spoliation case of 1783, and comparing its less fortunate issue with that of 1812 was to show that Northern men will do justice to the South; that Northern men pottained for the South an indemnity and security in our day which a Southern Administration, with Washington at its head, had not been able to obtain in the days of our fathers.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

MEETING OF THE FIRST CONGRESS ELECTED UNDER THE ADMINISTRATION OF MR. ADAMS.

THE nineteenth Congress, commencing its legal existence, March the 4th, 1825, had been chiefly elected at the time that Mr. Adams' administratives elaves to support their families while they were supporting their country. They were in white to British merchants, and relied upon com-

majority of the Senate was in opposition. The elections for the twentieth Congress-the first under his administration—were looked to with great interest, both as showing whether the new President was supported by the country, and his election by the House sanctioned, and also as an index to the issue of the ensuing presidential election. For, simultaneously with the election in the House of Representatives did the canvass for the succeeding election begin—General Jackson being the announced candidate on one side, and Mr. Adams on the other; and the event involving not only the question of merits between the parties, but also the question of approved or disapproved conduct on the part of the representatives who elected Mr. Adams. The elections took place, and resulted in placing an opposition majority in the House of Representatives, and increasing the strength of the opposition majority in the Senate. The state of parties in the House was immediately tested by the election of speaker, Mr. John W. Taylor, of New-York, the administration candidate, being defeated by Mr. Andrew Stevenson, of Virginia, in the opposition. The appointment of the majority of members on all the committees, and their chairmen, in both Houses adverse to the administration, was a regular consequence of the inflamed state of parties, although the proper conducting of the public business would demand for the administration the chairman of several important committees, as enabling it to place its measures fairly before the House. The speaker (Mr. Stevenson) could only yield to this just sense of propriety in the case of one of the committees, that of foreign relations, to which Mr. Edward Everett, classing as the political and personal friend of the President, was appointed chairman. In other committees, and in both Houses, the stern spirit of the times prevailed; and the organization of the whole Congress was adverse to the administration.

The presidential message contained no new recommendations, but referred to those previously made, and not yet acted upon; among which internal improvement, and the encouragement of home industry, were most prominent. It gave an account of the failure of the proposed congress of Panama; and, consequently, of the inutility of all our exertions to be represented there. And, as in this final and valedictory notice by Mr. Adams of that once far-famed congress, he took occasion to disclaim some views attributed to him, I deem it just to give him the benefit of his own words, both in making the disclaimer, and in giving the account of the abortion of an impracticable scheme which had so lately been prosecuted, and opposed, with so much heat and violence in our own country. He said of it:

"Disclaiming alike all right and all intention of interfering in those concerns which it is the prerogative of their independence to regulate as to them shall seem fit, we hail with joy every indication of their prosperity, of their harmony, of their persevering and inflexible homage to those principles of freedom and of equal rights which are alone suited to the genius and temper of the American nations. It has been therefore with some concern that we have observed indications of intestine divisions in some of the republics of the South, and appearances of less union with one another, than we believe to be the interest of all. Among the results of this state of things has been that the treaties concluded at Panama do not appear to have been ratified by the contracting parties, and that the meeting of the Congress at Tacubaya has been indefinitely postponed. In accepting the invitations to be represented at this Congress, while a manifestation was intended on the part of the United States, of the most friendly disposition towards the Southern republics by whom it had been proposed, it was hoped that it would furnish an opportunity for bringing all the nations of this hemisphere to the common acknowledgment and adoption of the principles, in the regulation of their international relations, which would have secured a lasting peace and harmony between them, and have promoted the cause of mutual benevolence throughout the globe. But as obstacles appear to have arisen to the reassembling of the Congress, one of the two ministers commissioned on the part of the United States has returned to the bosom of his country, while the minister charged with the ordinary mission to Mexico remains authorized to attend at the conferences of the Congress whenever they may be resumed."

This is the last that was heard of that so much vaunted Congress of American nations, and in the manner in which it died out of itself, among those who proposed it, without ever having been reached by a minister from the United States, we have the highest confirmation of the soundness of the objections taken to it by the opposition members of the two Houses of our Congress.

In stating the condition of the finances, the message, without intending it, gave proof of the paradoxical proposition, first, I believe, broached by myself, that an annual of a fourth or a fifth below ture, is sufficient to meet ture; and consequently the sity to levy as much as is vide by law for keeping a co treasury when the receipts a to the expenditure. He said

"The balance in the to of January last was six n dred and fifty-eight thousan eighty-six dollars and eigh receipts from that day to th ber last, as near as the re received can show, amount t eight hundred and eighty-s hundred and eighty-one dolla cents. The receipts of the estimated at four millions five teen thousand, added to the al gregate of twenty-one millio thousand dollars of receipts. of the year may perhaps amou millions three hundred thousand ing a small excess over the re these twenty-two millions, upw been applied to the discharge of the public debt; the whole ar approaching seventy-four million January last, will on the first da fall short of sixty-seven millio The balance in the treasury on uary next, it is expected, will exc four hundred and fifty thousand exceeding that of the first of though falling short of that exhib of January last."

In this statement the expenditu are shown to exceed the income, a abalance, about equal to one fourt. in the treasury at the end of t that the balance was larger at th preceding year, and nearly the sai of the year before. And the m have added, that these balances we same at the end of every quarter of and every day of every quarterfrom the impossibility of applying r icts until there has been time to ap in the time of those balances of wh ams speaks, there was a law to retai loss in the treasury; and now there retain six millions; while the curren atherate of a fourth or a fifth of the many times greater than the sum ord mained; and cannot be reduced to by regular payments from the trea

m some views o give him the n making the count of the me which had posed, with so a country. He

1 all intention which it is the to regulate as with joy every heir harmony ble homage to f equal rights, ius and temper been therefore observed indiome of the rearances of less believe to be results of this e treaties conr to have been s, and that the ibaya has been ting the invitangress, while a the part of the adly disposition by whom it that it would ing all the nammon acknowinciples, in the relations, which e and harmony d the cause of he globe. But isen to the reof the two mint of the United

> of that so much nations, and in of itself, among ver having been United States, of the soundby the opposies of our Con-

of his country,

h the ordinary

rized to attend

gress whenever

ne finances, th ve proof of th elieve, broache by myself, that an annual revenue to the extent the revenue itself is reduced below the exof a fourth or a fifth below the annual expenditure is sufficient to meet that annual expenditure; and consequently that there is no necessity to levy as much as is expended, or to provide by law for keeping a certain amount in the treasury when the receipts are equal, or superior to the expenditure. He said:

"The balance in the treasury on the first of January last was six millions three hundred and fifty-eight thousand six hundred and eighty-six dollars and eighteen cents. The receipts from that day to the 30th of September last, as near as the returns of them yet received can show, amount to sixteen millions eight hundred and eighty-six thousand five hundred and eighty-one dollars and thirty-two cents. The receipts of the present quarter, estimated at four millions five hundred and fifteen thousand, added to the above, form an aggregate of twenty-one millions four hundred thousand dollars of receipts. The expenditures of the year may perhaps amount to twenty-two millions three hundred thousand dollars, presenting a small excess over the receipts. But of these twenty-two millions, upwards of six have been applied to the discharge of the principal of the public debt; the whole amount of which, approaching seventy-four millions on the first of January last, will on the first day of next year fall short of sixty-seven millions and a half. The balance in the treasury on the first of January next, it is expected, will exceed five millions four hundred and fifty thousand dollars; a sum exceeding that of the first of January, 1825, though falling short of that exhibited on the first of January last."

In this statement the expenditures of the year are shown to exceed the income, and yet to leave abalance, about equal to one fourth of the whole in the treasury at the end of the year; also that the balance was larger at the end of the preceding year, and nearly the same at the end of the year before. And the message might have added, that these balances were about the same at the end of every quarter of every year, and every day of every quarter—all resulting from the impossibility of applying money to objets until there has been time to apply it. Yet in the time of those balances of which Mr. Adams speaks, there was a law to retain two milloss in the treasury; and now there is a law to Main six millions; while the current balances, atherate of a fourth or a fifth of the income, are many times greater than the sum ordered to be Mained; and cannot be reduced to that sum, regular payments from the treasury, until penditure. This is a financial paradox, sustainable upon reason, proved by facts, and visible in the state of the treasury at all times; yet I have endeavored in vain to establish it; and Congress is as careful as ever to provide an annual income equal to the annual expenditure; and to make permanent provision by law to keep up a reserve in the treasury; which would be there of itself without such law as long as the revenue comes within a fourth or a fifth of the expenditure.

The following members composed the two Houses at this, the first session of the twentieth

SENATE.

Maine—John Chandler, Albion K. Parris. NEW HAMPSHIRE—Samuel Bell, Levi Wood-

Massachusetts-Nathaniel Silsbee, Daniel Webster.

CONNECTICUT—Samuel A. Foot, Calvin Willey. RHODE ISLAND-Nehemiah R. Knight, Asher Robbins.

VERMONT-Dudley Chase, Horatio Seymour. New-York-Martin Van Buren, Nathan San-

New Jersey-Mahlon Dickerson, Ephraim Bateman.

Pennsylvania-William Marks, Isaac D.

Delaware-Louis M'Lane, Henry M. Ridge-MARYLAND-Ezekiel F. Chambers, Samuel

VIRGINIA-Littleton W. Tazewell, John Tyler. NORTH CAROLINA-John Branch, Nathaniel

South Carolina-William Smith, Robert Y.

Georgia—John M'Pherson Berrien, Thomas W. Cobb.

KENTUCKY-Richard M.Johnson, John Rowan TENNESSEE-John H. Eaton, Hugh L. White. Оню-William H. Harrison, Benjamin Rug-

LOUISIANA-Dominique Bouligny, Josiah S. Johnston.

Indiana—William Hendricks, James Noble. Mississippi-Powhatan Ellis, Thomas H. Wil-

ILLINOIS-Elias K. Kane, Jesse B. Thomas. ALABAMA-John McKinley, William R. King. MISSOURI-David Barton, Thomas H. Benton.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Maine-John Anderson, Samuel Butman, Rufus M'Intire, Jeremiah O'Brien, James W. Ripley, Peleg Sprague, Joseph F. Wingate-7. NEW HAMPSHIRE-Ichabod Bartlett, David

AN

for themselves.

ley, Issac C. Bates, B. W. Crowninshield, John Davis, Henry W. Dwight, Edward Everett, Benjamin Gorham, James L. Hodges, John Locke, John Reed, Joseph Richardson, John Varnum-15.

RHODE ISLAND—Tristam Burges, Dutee J. Pearce-2

Connecticut—John Baldwin, Noyes Barber, Ralph J. Ingersoll, Orange Merwin, Elisha Phelps, David Plant-6.

VERMONT—Daniel A. A. Buck, Jonathan Hunt, Rolin C. Mallary, Benjamin Swift, George E. Wales-5.

NEW-YORK-Daniel D. Barnard, George O. Belden, Rudolph Bunner, C. C. Cambreleng, Samuel Chase, John C. Clark, John D. Dickinson, Jonas Earll, jr., Daniel G. Garnsey, Nathaniel Garrow, John I. De Graff, John Hallock, jr., Selah R. Hobbie, Michael Hoffman, Jeromus Johnson, Richard Keese, Henry Markell, H. C. Martindale, Dudley Marvin, John Magee, John Maynard, Thomas J. Oakley, S. Van Rensselaer, Henry R. Storrs, James Strong, John G. Stower, Phineas L. Tracy, John W. Taylor, G. C. Ver-planck, Aaron Ward, John J. Wood, Silas Wood, David Woodcock, Silas Wright, jr.—34.

New Jersey—Lewis Condict, George Hol-combe, Isaac Pierson, Samuel Swan, Edge Thompson, Ebenezer Tucker—6

PENNSYLVANIA-William Addams, Samuel Anderson, Stephen Barlow, James Buchanan, Richard Coulter, Chauncey Forward, Joseph Fry, jr., Innes Green, Samuel D. Ingham, George Kremer, Adam King, Joseph Lawrence, Daniel H. Miller, Charles Miner, John Mitchell, Samuel M'Kean, Robert Orr, jr., William Ramsay, John Sergeant, James S. Stevenson, John B. Sterigere, Andrew Stewart, Joel B. Sutherland, Espy Van Horn, James Wilson, George Wolf-26.

DELAWARE-Kensy Johns. jr.-1.

MARYLAND-John Barney, Clement Dorsey. Levin Gale, John Leeds Kerr, Peter Little, Michael C. Sprigg, G. C. Washington, John C. Weems, Ephraim K. Wilson-9.

VIRGINIA—Mark Alexander, Robert Allen, Wm. S. Archer, Wm. Armstrong, jr., John S. Barbour, Philip P. Barbour, Burwell Bassett, N. H. Claiborne, Thomas Davenport, John Floyd, Isaac Leffler, Lewis Maxwell, Charles F. Mercer, William M'Coy, Thomas Newton, John Randolph, William C. Rives, John Roane, Alexander Smyth, A Stevenson, John Talliaferro, James Trezvant—22.

NORTH CAROLINA-Willis Alston, Daniel L. Barringer, John H. Bryan, Samuel P. Carson, Henry W. Conner, John Culpeper, Thomas H. Hall, Gabriel Holmes, John Long, Lemuel Sawyer, A. H. Shepperd, Daniel Turner, Lewis Williams—13.

South Carolina-John Carter, Warren R. Davis, William Drayton, James Hamilton, jr., George M'Duffie, William D. Martin, Thomas This twentieth Congress, as all others that have

R. Mitchell, Wm. T. Nuckolls, Starling Tucker

GEORGIA-John Floyd, Tomlinson Fort, Charles E. Haynes, George R. Gilmer, Wilson Lumpkin, Wiley Thompson, Richard H. Wilde-7. KENTUCKY-Richard A. Buckner, James Clark. Henry Daniel, Joseph Lecompte, Robert P Letcher, Chittenden Lyon, Thomas Metcalfe, Robert M'Hatton, Thomas P. Moore, Charles A. Wickliffe, Joel Yancey, Thomas Chilton-12.

TENNESSEE-John Bell, John Blair, David Crockett, Robert Desha, Jacob C. Isacks, Pryor Lea, John H. Marable, James C. Mitchell, James K. Polk—9.

Ohio-Mordecai Bartley, Philemon Beecher, William Creighton, jr., John Davenport, James Findlay, Wm. M'Lean, William Russell. John Sloane, William Stanberry, Joseph Vance, Samuel F. Vinton, Elisha Whittlesey, John Woods, John C. Wright—14.

LOUISIANA-William L. Brent, Henry H. Gurley, Edward Livingston-3.

Indiana—Thomas H. Blake, Jonathan Jennings, Oliver H. Smith -3.

MISSISSIPPI-William Haile-1. Illinois—Joseph Duncan—1. ALABAMA-Gabriel Moore, John M'Kee.

George W. Owen-3. Missouri-Edward Bates-1.

DELEGATES.

ARKANSAS TERRITORY—A. H. Sevier. MICHIGAN TERRITORY-Austin E. Wing. FLORIDA TERRITORY-Joseph M. White.

This list of members presents an immense array of talent, and especially of business talent; and in its long succession of respectable names, many will be noted as having attained national reputations-others destined to attain that distinction-while many more, in the first class of useful and respectable members, remained without national renown for want of that faculty which nature seems most capriciously to have scattered among the children of men-the faculty of fluent and copious speech ;-giving it to some of great judgment-denying it to others of equal, or still greater judgment-and lavishing it upon some of no judgment at all. The national eyes are fixed upon the first of these classes—the men of judgment and copious speech; and even those in the third class obtain national notoriety; while the men in the second class—the men of judgment and few words-are extremely valued and respected in the bodies to which they belong, and have great weight in the conduct of business. They are, in fact, the business men, often more practical and efficient than the great orators

CHAPTER

REVISION OF THE

THE tariff of 1828 is an er being the event from whi "nullification" takes its orig a serious division dates betw the South. It was the world manufacturers; and was co benefit of the woollen interes chiefly designed to favor that facturing industry. But, like the kind, it required help from get itself along; and that hel obtained by admitting other benefits of the bill. And so, special benefit, intended for the particular interest, became ge with including all manufactur at least as many as were neces the strength necessary to carry tions of different States, chief were favored by additional dut imports; as lead in Missouri hemp of Kentucky; and thus, to the object of the bill, many necessitated to vote for it. Mr. tucky, well exposed the conditi this respect, in showing his own i which he made, and in which he

"He was not opposed to the ta of revenue, honestly devoted to t purposes of revenue—on the co friendly to a tariff of that charac perverted by the ambition of poli and the secret influence of inordin purposes of individual, and section he could not be seduced by the names, or terms, however attract his individual support.

"It is in vain, Mr. President, sai talled the American System—nam things. There is but one American that is delineated in the State and I arling Tucker linson Fort, lilmer, Wilson 1 H. Wilde-7 r, James Clark, te, Robert P mas Metcalfe, re, Charles A. Chilton-12.

Blair, David Isacks, Pryor litchell, James emon Beecher, enport, James Russell. John Vance, Samuel n Woods, John

it, Henry II. Jonathan Jen-

John M'Kee.

Sevier. 1 E. Wing. M. White.

s an immense jusiness talent; ectable names, tained national attain that dise first class of mained without t faculty which have scattered aculty of fluent some of great of equal, or still ; it upon some tional eyes are sses—the men and even those otoriety; while e men of judgrely valued and h they belong, uct of business. ien, often more great orators. thers that have useful and respectable members; and it will be the pleasant task of this work to do them the justice which their modest merit would not do for themselves.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

REVISION OF THE TARIFF.

THE tariff of 1828 is an era in our legislation. being the event from which the doctrine of "nullification" takes its origin, and from which a serious division dates between the North and the South. Lit was the work of politicians and manufacturers; and was commenced for the benefit of the woollen interest, and upon a bill chiefly designed to favor that branch of manufacturing industry. But, like all other bills of the kind, it required help from other interests to get itself along; and that help was only to be obtained by admitting other interests into the benefits of the bill. And so, what began as a special benefit, intended for the advantage of a particular interest, became general, and ended with including all manufacturing interests-or at least as many as were necessary to make up the strength necessary to carry it. The productions of different States, chiefly in the West, were favored by additional duties on their rival imports; as lead in Missouri and Illinois, and hemp of Kentucky; and thus, though opposed to the object of the bill, many members were necessitated to vote for it. Mr. Rowan, of Kentucky, well exposed the condition of others in this respect, in showing his own in some remarks which he made, and in which he said:

"He was not opposed to the tariff as a system of revenue, honestly devoted to the objects and purposes of revenue—on the contrary, he was friendly to a tariff of that character; but when perverted by the ambition of political aspirants, and the secret influence of inordinate cupidity, to purposes of individual, and sectional ascendency, could not be seduced by the captivation of names, or terms, however attractive, to lend it his individual support.

It is in vain, Mr. President, said he, that it is alled the American System-names do not alter been, contained a large proportion of these most tutions. It is the system of equal rights and privileges secured by the representative principle -a system, which, instead of subjecting the proceeds of the labor of some to taxation, in the view to enrich others, secures to all the proceeds of their labor-exempts all from taxation, except for the support of the protecting power of the government. As a tax necessary to the support of the government, he would support itcall it by what name you please; -as a tax for any other purpose, and especially for the purposes to which he had alluded-it had his individual reprobation, under whatever name it might as-

"It might, he observed, be inferred from what he had said, that he would vote against the bill. He did not wish any doubts to be entertained as to the vote he should give upon this measure, or the reasons which would influence him to give He was not at liberty to substitute his individual opinion for that of his State. He was one of the organs here, of a State, that had, by the tariff of 1824, been chained to the car of the Eastern manufacturers—a State that had been from that time, and was now groaning under the pressure of that unequal and unjust measure-a measure from the pressure of which, owing to the prevailing illusion throughout the United States, she saw no hope of escape, by a speedy return to correct principles;—and seeing no hope of escaping from the ills of the system, she is constrained, on principles of self-defence, to avail herself of the mitigation which this bill presents, in the duties which it imposes upon foreign hemp, spirits, iron, and molasses. The hemp, iron, and distilled spirits of the West, will, like the woollens of the Eastern States, he encouraged to the extent of the tax indirectly imposed by this bill, upon those who shall buy and consume them. Those who may need, and buy those articles, must pay to the grower, or manufacturer of them, an increased price to the amount of the duties imposed upon the like articles of foreign growth or fabric. To this tax upon the labor of the consumer, his individual opinion was opposed. But, as the organ of the State of Kentucky, he felt himself bound to surrender his individual opinion, and express the opinion of his State."

Thus, this tariff bill, like every one admitting a variety of items, contains a vicious principle, by which a majority may be made up to pass a measure which they do not approve. But besides variety of agricultural and manufacturing items collected into this bill, there was another of very different import admitted into it, namely. that of party politics. A presidential election was approaching: General Jackson and Mr. Adams were the candidates—the latter in favor of the "American System"-of which Mr. Clay things. There is but one American System, and (his Secretary of State) was the champion, and that is delineated in the State and Federal consti- indissolubly connected with him in the public was made an administration measure, and became an issue in the canvass; and to this Mr.

Rowan significantly alluded when he spoke of a tariff as being "perverted by the ambition of political aspirants." It was in vain that the manufacturers were warned not to mix their interests with the doubtful game of politics. They yielded to the temptation-yielded as a class, though with individual exceptions-for the sake of the temporary benefit, without seeming to realize the danger of connecting their interests with the fortunes of a political party. This tariff of '28, besides being remarkable for giving birth to "nullification," and heart-burning between the North and the South, was also remarkable for a change of policy in the New England States, in relation to the protective system. Being strongly commercial, these States had hitherto favored free trade; and Mr. Webster was the champion of that trade up to 1824.

At this session a majority of those States, and especially those which classed politically with

Mr. Adams and Mr. Clay, changed their policy:

and Webster became a champion of the protective system. The cause of this change, as then alleged, was the fact that the protective system

other hand, that political calculation had more to do with the change than federal legislation:

one of those which lay at the foundation of parties, and was advocated by General Hamilton in one of his celebrated reports of fifty years ago.

But on this point it is right that New England should speak for herself, which she did at the time of the discussion of the tariff in '28; and through section of the Union had undergone. He said:

mind in the issue of the election. This tariff Now the imputation is precisely of an opposite character. The present measure is pronounced to be exclusively for the benefit of New England. to be brought forward by her agency, and designed to gratify the cupidity of her wealthy establishments. •

"Both charges, sir, are equally without the slightest foundation. The opinion of New England, up to 1824, was founded in the conviction, that, on the whole, it was wisest and best, both for herself and others, that manufacturers should make haste slowly. She felt a reluctance to trust great interests on the foundation of government patronage; for who could tell how long such patronage would last, or with what steadiness. skill, or perseverance, it would continue to be granted? It is now nearly, fifteen years, since. among the first things which I ever ventured to say here, was the expression of a serious doubt, whether this government was fitted by its construction, to administer aid and protection to particular pursuits; whether, having called such pursuits into being by indications of its favor, it would not, afterwards, desert them, when troubles come upon them; and leave them to their fate. Whether this prediction, the result, certainly, of chance, and not of sagacity, will so soon be fulfilled, remains to be seen. "At the same time it is true, that from the very first commencement of the government those who have administered its concerns have held a tone of encouragement and invitation towards those who should embark in manufactures. All the Presidents, I believe, without exception had become the established policy of the governhave concurred in this general sentiment; and ment, and that these States had adapted their the very first act of Congress, laying duties of impost, adopted the then unusual expedient of a industry to it; though it was insisted, on the preamble, apparently for little other purpose than that of declaring, that the duties, which it imposed, were imposed for the encouragement and proand, in fact, the question of this protection was tection of manufactures. When, at the commencement of the late war, duties were doubled, we were told that we should find a mitigation of the weight of taxation in the new aid and succor which would be thus afforded to our own manufacturing labor. Like arguments were urged, and prevailed, but not by the aid of New England votes, when the tariff was afterwards arranged at the close of the war, in 1816. Fithe member, now a senator (Mr. Webster) who nally, after a whole winter's deliberation, the act typified in his own person the change which his of 1824 received the sanction of both Houses of Congress, and settled the policy of the country. What, then, was New England to do? She was "New England, sir, has not been a leader in fitted for manufacturing operations, by the this policy. On the contrary, she held back, heramount and character of her population, by her self, and tried to hold others back from it, from the adoption of the constitution to 1824. Up to by the skill, economy, enterprise, and perseverance of her people. I repeat, what was she unsigns, because she discountenanced the progress der these circumstances, to do? A great and of this policy. It was laid to her charge, then, prosperous rival in her near neighborhood, threat that having established her manufactures herself, ening to draw from her a part, perhaps a great she wished that others should not have the power part, of her foreign commerce; was she to use of rivalling her; and, for that reason, opposed all or to neglect, those other means of seeking her legislative encouragement. Under this angry own prosperity which belonged to her character denunciation against her, the act of 1824 passed. and her condition? Was she to hold out, for see herself losing, on one efforts to sustain herself Nothing was left to New of 1824, but to conform others. Nothing was left that the government had its own policy; and that

The question of a prote not only become political, early years of the federal so. The tariff bills, as the that were passed, declared that they were for the ence factures, as well as for r then the duties imposed such as a revenue system there were no "minimums sis for the calculation of that all which cost less th should be counted to have and be rated at the custom In this early period the So as ready as any part of the l the protection to home indu from the imposition of rever imported articles, and on ar ourselves in time of war; statesmen were amongst the of Congress in promoting tha as 1816, some of her statesmer of protection, not merely as an nue, but as a substantive of these was Mr. Calhoun, of Sou even advocated the minimum for the first time introduced in upon his motion—and applie goods imported. After that tariff bills took a sectional aspe States, with the exception of L her sugar-planting interest), ag New England States also ag Middle and Western States fo 1824 the New England States ( the greatest portion when a sect classed with the protective Stat South alone, as a section, again My personal position was th many others in the three protection opposed to the policy, but going count of the interest of the State tion of some of its productions. ditional duty upon lead, equal to

Vol. I.—7

of an opposite is pronounced New England igency, and deher wealthy es-

ly without the n of New Eng-the conviction, and best, both acturers should uctance to trust of government how long such hat steadiness. continue to be en years, since, ver ventured to serious doubt. ted by its con-1 protection to ring called such s of its favor, it , when troubles n to their fate. ilt, certainly, of so soon be ful-

> , that from the ne government, concerns have d invitation ton manufactures. thout exception. sentiment; and ing duties of imexpedient of a er purpose than which it imposgement and pro-, at the coms were doubled. a mitigation of ew aid and suced to our own rguments were the aid of New was afterwards r. in 1816. Fiperation, the act both Houses of of the country. o do? She was rations, by the ulation, by her of her free labor, e, and perseverat was she, un-A great and borhood, threat

perhaps a great

was she to use of seeking her

Vol. I.—7

o her characte

o hold out, for

see herself losing, on one side, and yet making no efforts to sustain herself on the other? No, sir. Nothing was left to New England, after the act of 1824, but to conform herself to the will of others. Nothing was left to her, but to consider that the government had fixed and determined its own policy; and that policy was protection.

The question of a protective tariff had now not only become political, but sectional. In the early years of the federal government it was not so. The tariff bills, as the first and the second that were passed, declared in their preambles that they were for the encouragement of manufactures, as well as for raising revenue; but Then the duties imposed were all moderatesuch as a revenue system really required; and there were no "minimums," to make a false basis for the calculation of duties, by enacting that all which cost less than a certain amount should be counted to have cost that amount: and be rated at the custom-house accordingly. In this early period the Southern States were as ready as any part of the Union in extending the protection to home industry which resulted from the imposition of revenue duties on rival imported articles, and on articles necessary to ourselves in time of war; and some of her statesmen were amongst the foremost members of Congress in promoting that policy. As late as 1816, some of her statesmen were still in favor of protection, not merely as an incident to revenue, but as a substantive object: and among these was Mr. Calhoun, of South Carolina-who even advocated the minimum provision—then for the first time introduced into a tariff bill, and upon his motion-and applied to the cotton goods imported. After that year (1816) the tariff bills took a sectional aspect—the Southern States, with the exception of Louisiana (led by her sugar-planting interest), against them: the New England States also against them: "the Middle and Western States for them. After 1824 the New England States (always meaning the greatest portion when a section is spoken of) classed with the protective States-leaving the South alone, as a section, against that policy. My personal position was that of a great many others in the three protective sectionsopposed to the policy, but going with it, on account of the interest of the State in the protection of some of its productions. I moved an ad-ever, against the course of the government, and per centum; and it was carried. I moved a duty upon indigo, a former staple of the South, but now declined to a slight production; and I proposed a rate of duty in harmony with the protective features of the bill. No southern member would move that duty, because he opposed the principle: I moved it, that the "American System," as it was called, should work alike in all parts of our America. I supported the motion with some reasons, and some views of the former cultivation of that plant in the Southern States, and its present decline, thus:

> "Mr. Benton then proposed an amendment, to impose a duty of 25 cents per pound on imported indigo, with a progressive increase at the rate of 25 cents per pound per annum, until the whole duty amounted to $1 per pound. He stated his object to be two-fold in proposing this duty, first, to place the American System beyond the reach of its enemies, by procuring a home supply of an article indispensable to its existence; and next, to benefit the South by reviving the cultivation of one of its ancient and valuable staples.

Indigo was first planted in the Carolinas and Georgia about the year 1740, and succeeded so well as to command the attention of the British manufacturers and the British parliament. An act was passed for the encouragement of its production in these colonies, in the reign of George the Second; the preamble to which Mr. B. read, and recommended to the consideration of the Senate. It recited that a regular, ample, and certain supply of indigo was indispensable to the success of British manufacturers; that these manufacturers were then dependent upon foreigners for a supply of this article; and that it was the dictate of a wise policy to encourage the production of it at home. The act then went on to direct that a premium of sixpence sterling should be paid out of the British treasury for every pound of indigo imported into Great Britain, from the Carolinas and Georgia. Under the fostering influence of this bounty, said Mr. B., the cultivation of indigo became great and extensive. In six years after the passage of the act, the export was 217,000 lbs. and at the breaking out of the Revolution it amounted to 1,100,000 lbs. The Southern colonies became rich upon it; for the cultivation of cotton was then unknown; rice and indigo were the staples of the South. After the Revolution, and especially after the great territorial acquisitions which the British made in India, the cultivation of American indigo declined. The premium was no longer paid; and the British government, actuated by the same wise policy which made them look for a home supply of this article from the Carolinas, when they were a part of the British possessions, now looked to India for the same reason. The export of American indigo rapidly declined. In 1800 it had fallen to ditional duty upon lead, equal to one hundred | 400,000 lbs.; in 1814 to 40,000 lbs,; and in the last few years to 6 or 8,000 lbs. In the mean time our manufactories were growing up; and having no supply of indigo at home, they had to import from abroad. In 1826 this importation amounted to 1,150,000 lbs., costing a fraction less than two millions of dollars, and had to be paid for almost entirely in ready money, as it was chiefly obtained from places where American produce was in no demand. Upon this state of facts, Mr. B. conceived it to be the part of a wise and prudent policy to follow the example of the British parliament in the reign of George II. and provide a home supply of this indispensable article. Our manufacturers now paid a high price for fine indigo, no less than $2 50 per pound, as testified by one of themselves before the Committee on Manufactures raised in the House of Representatives. The duty which he proposed was only 40 per cent. upon that value, and would not even reach that rate for four years. It was less than one half the duty which the same bill proposed to lay instanter upon the very cloth which this indigo was intended to dye. In the end it would make all indigo come cheaper to the manufacturer, as the home supply would soon be equal, if not superior to the demand; and in the mean time, it could not be considered a tax on the manufacturer, as he would levy the advance which he had to pay, with a good interest, upon the wearer of the cloth.

"Mr. B. then went into an exposition of the reasons for encouraging the home production of indigo, and showed that the life of the American System depended upon it. Neither cotton nor woollen manufactures could be carried on without indigo. The consumption of that article was prodigious. Even now, in the infant state of our manufactories, the importation was worth two millions of dollars: and must soon be worth double or treble that sum. For this great supply of an indispensable article, we were chiefly indebted to the jealous rival, and vigilant enemy, of these very manufactures, to Great Britain herself. Of the 1,150,000 lbs. of indigo imported, we bring 620,000 lbs. from the British East Indies; which one word from the British government would stop for ever; we bring the further quantity of 120,000 lbs, from Manilla, a Spanish possession, which British influence and diplomacy could immediately stop: and the remainder came from different parts of South America, and might be taken from us by the arts of diplomacy, or by a monopoly of the whole on the part of our rival. A stoppage of a supply of indigo for one year, would prostrate all our manufactories, and give them a blow from which they would not recover in many pears. Great Britain could effect this stoppage to the amount of three fourths of the whole quantity by speaking a single word, and of the remainder by a slight exertion of policy, or the expenditure of a sum sufficient to monopolize for one year, the purchase of what South America sent into the market.

"Mr. B. said he expected a unanimous vote vote for it to secure the life of the American System; to give a proof of their regard for the South: to show that the country south of the Potomac is included in the bill for some other purpose besides that of oppression. The South itself, although opposed to the further increase of duties, should vote for this duty; that the bill, if it passes, may contain one provision favorable to its The West should vote for it through gratitude for fifty years of guardian protection, generous defence, and kind assistance, which the South had given it under all its trials; and for the purpose of enlarging the market, increasing the demand in the South and its ability to purchase the horses, mules, and provisions which the West can sell nowhere else. For himself he had personal reasons for wishing to do this little justice to the South. He was a native of one of these States (N. Carolina)—the bones of his father and his grandfathers rested there. Her Senators and Representatives were his early and his hereditary friends. The venerable Senator before him (Mr. Macon) had been the friend of him and his, through four generations in a straight line; the other Senator (Mr. Branch) was his schoolfellow: the other branch of the legislature, the House of Representatives, also showed him in the North Carolina delegation. the friends of him and his through successive generations. Nor was this all. He felt for the sad changes which had taken place in the South in the last fifty years. Before the Revolution it was the seat of wealth as well as of hospitality. Money, and all that it commanded, abounded there. But how now? All this is reversed.

"Wealth has fled from the South, and settled in the regions north of the Potomac, and this in the midst of the fact that the South, in four staples alone, in cotton, tobacco, rice and indigo (while indigo was one of its staples), had exported produce since the Revolution, to the value of eight hundred million of dollars, and the North had exported comparatively nothing. This sum was prodigious; it was nearly equal to half the coinage of the mint of Mexico since the conquest by Cortez. It was twice or thrice the amount of the product of the three thousand gold and silver mines of Mexico, for the same period of fifty years. Such an export would indicate unparalleled wealth; but what was the fact? In place of wealth, a universal pressure for money was felt; not enough for current expenses; the price of all property down; the country drooping and languishing; towns and cities decaying; and the frugal habits of the people pushed to the verge of universal self-denial, for the preservation of their family estates. Such a result is a strange and wonderful phenomenon. It calls upon statesmen to inquire into the cause; and if they inquire upon the theatre of this strange metamorphosist they will receive one universal answer from all ranks and all ages, that it is federal legislation which has worked this ruin. Under this legislation the exports of the South have an favor of his amendment. The North should been made the basis of the federal revenue. The twenty odd millions a ported goods, are deduc their cotton, rice and to nished price which they in foreign ports, or in th they pay for the article at home. Virginia, the tw may be said to defray the expense of supporting t and of this great sum ann nothing, or next to nothi in the shape of governme expenditure flows in an flows northwardly, in one and perennial stream; it to and of exchange; and th wealth disappears from th the North. Federal legis does it by the simple proce away from the South, and it. If it returned to the even a good part of what States south of the Potor action of this system, as th stand the exhausting influe heat by the refreshing dewa to it at night; but as the e all vegetation destroyed in heat is great, and no dews r South be exhausted of its perty by a course of legislati taking from it, and never ret

"Every new tariff increas action. No tariff has ever y the two Carolinas, and Geor visions, except to increase th upon them. This one alone, tunity to form an exception, I storing the cultivation of one ples,—one of the sources of its Revolution. The tariff of 182 tion to the South, because the tributed to destroy the cult sunk the duty on the foreign ar five to fifteen cents per pound reasons for imposing the duty of posed. What objections can I to it? Not to the quality; for which laid the foundation of t factures, and sustained their re than half a century; not to t the two Carolinas and Georgia much fifty years ago as we nov have now the States of Louisian Mississippi, and the Territories of ansas, to add to the countries w not to the amount of the duty; will be but forty per cent., only duty laid by this bill on the cle and that maximum, not immedia by slow degrees at the end of four to give time for the domestic artic place of the imported. And after tuty on the manufacturer, but on American Sysfor the South; f the Potomac er purpose beouth itself, alease of duties, the bill, if it favorable to its for it through ian protection, ince, which the trials; and for ket, increasing ability to pursions which the himself he had this little jusative of one of ones of his fathere. Her his early and erable Senator the friend of perations in a (Mr. Branch) branch of the entatives, also na delegation, 1gh successive He felt for the e in the South e Revolution it of hospitality. led, abounded is reversed. th, and settled ac, and this in in four staples indigo (while exported provalue of eight he North had This sum was half the coine conquest by he amount of gold and silver period of fifty icate unparalet? In place or money was ises; the price drooping and ying; and the i to the verge reservation of t is a strange ls upon statesnd if they innge metamorversal answer t it is federal ruin. Under e South have

revenue. The

ported goods, are deducted out of the price of their cotton, rice and tobacco, either in the diminished price which they receive for these staples in foreign ports, or in the increased price which they pay for the articles they have to consume at home. Virginia, the two Carolinas and Georgia, may be said to defray three fourths of the annual expense of supporting the federal government; and of this great sum annually furnished by them, nothing, or next to nothing, is returned to them in the shape of government expenditure. That expenditure flows in an opposite direction; it flows northwardly, in one uniform, uninterrupted and perennial stream; it takes the course of trade and of exchange; and this is the reason why wealth disappears from the South and rises up in Federal legislation does all this; it does it by the simple process of eternally taking away from the South, and returning nothing to it. If it returned to the South the whole, or even a good part of what it exacted, the four States south of the Potomac might stand the action of this system, as the earth is enabled to stand the exhausting influence of the sun's daily heat by the refreshing dews which are returned to it at night; but as the earth is dried up, and all vegetation destroyed in regions where the heat is great, and no dews returned, so must the South be exhausted of its money and its property by a course of legislation which is for ever taking from it, and never returning any thing to

"Every new tariff increases the force of this action. No tariff has ever yet included Virginia, the two Carolinas, and Georgia, within its provisions, except to increase the burdens imposed upon them. This one alone, presents the opportunity to form an exception, by reviving and restoring the cultivation of one of its ancient staples, one of the sources of its wealth before the Revolution. The tariff of 1828 owes this reparation to the South, because the tariff of 1816 contributed to destroy the cultivation of indigous sunk the duty on the foreign article, from twentyfive to fifteen cents per pound. These are the reasons for imposing the duty on indigo, now proposed. What objections can possibly be raised to it? Not to the quality; for it is the same which laid the foundation of the British manufactures, and sustained their reputation for more than half a century; not to the quantity; for the two Carolinas and Georgia alone raised as much fifty years ago as we now import, and we have now the States of Louisiana, Alabama, and Mississippi, and the Territories of Florida and Arkansas, to add to the countries which produce it; not to the amount of the duty; for its maximum will be but forty per cent., only one half of the duty laid by this bill on the cloth it is to dye; and that maximum, but immediate, but attained by slow degrees at the end of four years, in order to give time for the domestic article to supply the place of the imported. And after all, it is not a tuty on the manufacturer, but on the wearer of Mr. B.

twenty odd millions annually levied upon im- the goods; from whom he levies, with a good interest on the price of the cloths, all that he expends in the purchase of materials. For once, said Mr. B., I expect a unanimous vote on a clause in the tariff. This indigo clause must have the singular and unprecedented honor of an unanimous voice in its favor. The South must vote for it, to revive the cultivation of one of its most ancient and valuable staples; the West must vote for it through gratitude for past favors-through gratitude for the vote on hemp this night*-and to save, enlarge, and increase the market for its own productions; the North must vote for it to show their disinterestedness; to give one proof of just feeling towards the South; and, above all, to save their favorite American System from the deadly blow which Great Britain can at any moment give it by stopping or interrupting the supplies of foreign indigo; and the whole Union, the entire legislative body, must vote for it, and vote for it with joy and enthusiasm, because it is impossible that Americans can deny to sister States of the Confederacy what a British King and a British Parliament granted to these same States when they were colonies and dependencies of the British crown."

> Mr. Havne, of South Carolina, seconded my motion in a speech of which this is an extract:

"Mr. Hayne said he was opposed to this bill in its principles as well as in its details. It could assume no shape which would make it acceptable to him, or which could prevent it from operating most oppressively and unjustly on his constituents. With these views, he had determined to make no motion to amend the bill in any respect whatever; but when such motions were made by others, and he was compelled to vote on them, he knew no better rule than to endeavor to make the bill consistent with itself. On this principle he had acted in all the votes he had given on this bill. He had endeavored to carry out to its legitimate consequences what gentlemen are pleased to miscall the 'American System.' With a fixed resolution to vote against the bill, he still considered himself at liberty to assist in so arranging the details as to extend to every great interest, and to all portions of the country, as far as may be practicable, equal protection, and to distribute the burdens of the system equally, in order that its benefits as well as its evils may be fully tested. On this principle, he should vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, because it was in strict conformity with all the principles of the bill. As a southern man, he would ask no boon for the South—he should propose nothing; but he must say that the protection of indigo rested on the same principles as every other article proposed

• "The vote on hemp this night." In rejecting Mr. Webster's motion to strike out the duty on hemp, and a vote in which the South went unanimously with the West.-Note by to be protected by this bill, and he did not see how gentlemen could, consistently with their maxims, vote against it. What was the principle on which this bill was professedly founded? If there was any principle at all in the bill, it was that, whenever the country had the capacity to produce an article with which any imported article could enter into competition, the domestic product was to be protected by a duty. Now, had the Southern States the capacity to produce indigo? The soil and climate of those States were well suited to the culture of the article. At the commencement of the Revolution our exports of the article amounted to no less than 1,100,000 lbs. The whole quantity now imported into the United States is only 1,150,000 lbs.; so that the capacity of the country to produce a sufficient quantity of indigo to supply the wants of the manufacturers is unquestionable. It is true that the quantity now produced in the country is not great.

"In 1818 only 700 lbs. of domestic indigo were exported.

Fin 1825 9,955 do. Fin 1826 5,289 do.

"In 1826 "This proves that the attention of the country is now directed to the subject. The senator from Indiana, in some remarks which he made on this subject yesterday, stated that, according to the principles of the American System (so called), protection was not extended to any article which the country was not in the habit of exporting. This is entirely a mistake. Of the articles protected by the tariff of 1824, as well as those included in this bill, very few are exported all. Among these are iron, woollens, hemp, flax, and several others. If indigo is to be protected at all, the duties proposed must surely be considered extremely reasonable, the maximum proposed being much below that imposed by this bill on wool, woollens, and other articles. The duty on indigo till 1816, was 25 cents per pound. It was then (in favor of the manufacturers) reduced to 15 cents. The first increase of duty proposed here, is only to put back the old duty of 25 cents per pound, equal to an ad valorem duty of from 10 to 15 per cent.—and the maximum is only from 40 to 58 per cent. ad valorem, and that will not accrue for several years to come. With this statement of facts, Mr. II. said he would leave the question in the hands of those gentlemen who were engaged in giving this bill the form in which it is to be submitted to the final decision of the Senate."

The proposition for this duty on imported indigo did not prevail. In lieu of the amount proposed, and which was less than any protective duty in the bill, the friends of the "American System" (constituting a majority of the Senate) substituted a nominal duty of five cents on the pound—to be increased five cents annually for ten years—and to remain at fifty. This was only about twenty per centum on the cost of the article, and that only to be attained after a progression of ten years; while all other duties in the bill were from four to ten times that amount -and to take effect immediately. A duty so contemptible, so out of proportion to the other provisions of the bill, and doled out in such miserable drops, was a mockery and insult; and so viewed by the southern members. It increased the odiousness of the bill, by showing that the southern section of the Union was only included in the "American System" for its burdens, and not for its benefits. Mr. McDuffie, in the House of Representatives, inveighed bitterly against it, and spoke the general feeling of the Southern States when he said:

"Sir, if the union of these States shall ever be severed, and their liberties subverted, the historian who records these disasters will have to ascribe them to measures of this description. I do sincerely believe that neither this government nor any free government, can exist for a quarter of a century, under such a system of legislation. Its inevitable tendency is to corrupt, not only the public functionaries, but all those portions of the Union and classes of society who have an interest, real or imaginary, in the bounties it provides, by taxing other sections and other classes. What, sir, is the essential characteristic of a freeman? It is that independence which results from an habitual reliance upon his own resources and his own labor for his support. He is not in fact a freeman, who habitually looks to the government for pecuniary bounties. And I confess that no-thing in the conduct of those who are the prominent advocates of this system, has excited more apprehension and alarm in my mind, than the constant efforts made by all of them, from the Secretary of the Treasury down to the humblest coadjutor, to impress upon the public mind, the idea that national prosperity and individual wealth are to be derived, not from individual industry and economy, but from government boun-An idea more fatal to liberty could not be inculcated. I said, on another occasion, that the days of Roman liberty were numbered when the people consented to receive bread from the public granaries. From that moment it was not the patriot who had shown the greatest capacity and made the greatest sacrifices to serve the republic, but the demagogue who would promise to distribute most profusely the spoils of the plundered provinces, that was elevated to office by a degenerate and mercenary populace. Every thing became venal, even in the country of Fabricas, until finally the empire itself was sold at public auction! And what, sir, is the nature aud tendency of the system we are discussing? It bears an analogy, but too lamentably striking, to that

Roman people. God forbid summate its triumph over t a similar catastrophe, thou event by no means improba legislate periodically in this the election of our Chief question of dividing out t States—degraded into Roma the influential capitalists of this Union! Sir, when I single act like the present, fr lions of dollars may be trans one part of the community consider the disguise of disir under which the basest and bition may perpetrate such and political prostitution. I ca moment, to pronounce this ve rect bounties, the most stur of corruption ever placed in i functionaries. It brings an and wealth into a combination to contemplate, because it is a resist. Do we not perceive, a the extraordinary and mela less than one hundred thous means of this unhallowed com an absolute and despotic conions of eight millions of fre fortunes and destinies of ter will not anticipate or foreboo permit myself to believe that the United States will ever be by this system of bounties and I must say that there are certa Union in which, if a candidate were to come forward with the in his hand, nothing could resiif his adversary were opposed t tem of oppression. Yes, sir, th a talisman which would give a to the candidate who would support it. And although he all the "multiplying villanies most immaculate patriot and pr in the nation could hold no com if he should refuse to grant thi imperial donative."

Allusions were constantly mi nation of manufacturing capi ticians in pressing this bill. The y foundation for the imputation of it had been conceived in a confucturers in the State of Penns been taken up by politicians, an a party measure, and with the of influencing the presidential effects the transfer of protection, had become pendage of our presidential elements in the state of the protection, had become pendage of our presidential elements.

st of the arafter a proher duties in that amount A duty so to the other in such missult; and so in such missult; and so It increased ing that the nly included burdens, and in the House ly against it, the Southern > shall ever be ed, the histo-I have to asription. I do government for a quarter of legislation. , not only the ortions of the ve an interest. provides, by sses. What of a freeman? ults from an urces and his not in fact a e government fess that nore the promiexcited more ind, than the em, from the the humblest olic mind, the d individual ndividual inrnment bouncould not be sion, that the red when the om the pubt was not the capacity and the republic, romise to disthe plundered e by a degenery thing be-Fabricas, unold at public ture aud tenng? It bears iking, to that ourity of the Roman people. God forbid that it should consummate its triumph over the public liberty, by a similar catastrophe, though even that is an event by no means improbable, if we continue to legislate periodically in this way, and to connect the election of our Chief Magistrate with the question of dividing out the spoils of certain States—degraded into Roman provinces—among the influential capitalists of the other States of this Union! Sir, when I consider that, by a single act like the present, from five to ten millions of dollars may be transferred annually from one part of the community to another; when I consider the disguise of disinterested patriotism under which the basest and most profligate ambition may perpetrate such an act of injustice and political prostitution. I cannot hesitate, for a moment, to pronounce this very system of indirect bounties, the most stupendous instrument of corruption ever placed in the hands of public functionaries. It brings ambition and avarice and wealth into a combination, which it is fearful to contemplate, because it is almost impossible to resist. Do we not perceive, at this very moment, the extraordinary and melancholy spectacle of less than one hundred thousand capitalists, by means of this unhallowed combination, exercising an absolute and despotic control over the opinions of eight millions of free citizens, and the fortunes and destinies of ten millions? Sir, I will not anticipate or forebode evil. I will not permit myself to believe that the Presidency of the United States will ever be bought and sold, by this system of bounties and prohibitions. But I must say that there are certain quarters of this Union in which, if a candidate for the Presidency were to come forward with the Harrisburg tariff in his hand, nothing could resist his pretensions, if his adversary were opposed to this unjust system of oppression. Yes, sir, that bill would be a talisman which would give a charmed existence to the candidate who would pledge himself to support it. And although he were covered with all the "multiplying villanies of nature," the most immaculate patriot and profound statesman in the nation could hold no competition with him, if he should refuse to grant this new species of imperial donative."

Allusions were constantly made to the combination of manufacturing capitalists and politicians in pressing this bill. There was evidently foundation for the imputation. The scheme of it had been conceived in a convention of manufacturers in the State of Pennsylvania, and had been taken up by politicians, and was pushed as a party measure, and with the visible purpose of influencing the presidential election. In fact these tariff bills, each exceeding the other in its degree of protection, had become a regular appendage of our presidential elections—coming round in every cycle of four years, with that returning event. The year 1816 was the starting point: 1820, and 1824, and now 1828, having successively renewed the measure, with successive augmentations of duties. The South believed itself impoverished to enrich the North by this system; and certainly a singular and unexpected result had been seen in these two sections. In the colonial state, the Southern were the rich part of the colonies, and expected to do well in a state of independence. They had the exports, and felt secure of their prosperity: not so of the North, whose agricultural resources were few, and who expected privations from the loss of British favor. But in the first half century after Independence this expectation was reversed. The wealth of the North was enormously aggrandized: that of the South had declined. Northern towns had become great cities: Southern cities had decayed, or become stationary; and Charleston, the principal port of the South, was less considerable than before the Revolution. The North became a money-lender to the South, and southern citizens made pilgrimages to northern cities, to raise money upon the hypothecation of their patrimonial estates. And this in the face of a southern export since the Revolution to the value of eight hundred millions of dollars !- a sum equal to the product of the Mexican mines since the days of Cortez! and twice or thrice the amount of their product in the same fifty years. The Southern States attributed this result to the action of the federal government-its double action of levying revenue upon the industry of one section of the Union and expending it in another—and especially to its protective tariffs. To some degree this attribution was just, but not to the degree assumed; which is evident from the fact that the protective system had then only been in force for a short time-since the year 1816; and the reversed condition of the two sections of the Union had commenced before that time. Other causes must have had some effect: but for the present we look to the protective system; and, without admitting it to have done all the mischief of which the South complained, it had yet done enough to cause it to be condemned by every friend to equal justice among the States-by every friend to the harmony and stability of the Union—by all who detested sectional legislation -by every enemy to the mischievous combination of partisan politics with national legislation. And this was the feeling with the mass of the democratic members who voted for the tariff of 1828, and who were determined to act upon that feeling upon the overthrow of the political party which advocated the protective system; and which overthrow they believed to be certain at the ensuing presidential election.

CHAPTER XXXV.

THE PUBLIC LANDS—THEIR PROPER DISPOSITION
—GRADUATED PRICES—PRE-EMPTION RIGHTS—
DONATIONS TO SETTLERS.

About the year 1785 the celebrated Edmund Burke brought a bill into the British House of Commons for the sale of the crown lands, in which he laid down principles in political economy, in relation to such property, profoundly sagacious in themselves, applicable to all sovereign landed possessions, whether of kings or republics—applicable in all countries—and nowhere more applicable and less known or observed, than in the United States. In the course of the speech in support of his bill he said:

"Lands sell at the current rate, and nothing can sell for more. But be the price what it may, a great object is always answered, whenever any property is transferred from hands which are not fit for that property, to those that are. buyer and the seller must mutually profit by such a bargain; and, what rarely happens in matters of revenue, the relief of the subject will go hand in hand with the profit of the Exchequer. * * The revenue to be derived from the sale of the forest lands will not be so considerable as many have imagined; and I conceive it would be unwise to screw it up to the utmost, or even to suffer bidders to enhance, according to their eagerness, the purchase of objects, wherein the expense of that purchase may weaken the capital to be employed in their cultivation. * * * The principal revenue which I propose to draw from these uncultivated wastes, is to spring from the improvement and population of the kingdom; events infinitely more advantageous to the revenues of the crown than the rents of the best landed estate which it can hold. * * * It is thus I would dispose of the unprofitable landed estates of the crown: throw them into the mass of private property; by which they will come, through the course of circulation and through the political secretions of the State, into well-regulated revenue. * *

Thus would fall an expensive agency, with all the influence which attends it."

I do not know how old, or rather, how young I was, when I first took up the notion that sales of land by a government to its own citizens, and to the highest bidder, was false policy; and that gratuitous grants to actual settlers was the true policy, and their labor the true way of extracting national wealth and strength from the soil. It might have been in childhood, when reading the Bible, and seeing the division of the promised land among the children of Israel: it might have been later, and in learning the operation of the feudal system in giving lands to those who would defend them: it might have been in early life in Tennessee, in seeing the fortunes and respectability of many families derived from the 640 acre head-rights which the State of North Carolina had bestowed upon the first settlers. It was certainly before I had read the speech of Burke from which the extract above is taken; for I did not see that speech until 1826; and seventeen years before that time, when a very young member of the General Assembly of Tennessee, I was fully imbued with the doctrine of donations to settlers, and acted upon the principle that was in me, as far as the case admitted in advocating the pre-emption claims of the settlers on Big and Little Pigeon, French Broad and Nolichucky. And when I came to the then Territory of Missouri in 1815, and saw land exposed to sale to the highest bidder, and lead mines and salt springs reserved from sale, and rented out for the profit of the federal treasury, I felt repugnance to the whole system, and determined to make war upon it whenever I should have the power. The time came round with my election to the Senate of the United States in 1820: and the years 1824, '26, and '28, found me doing battle for an ameliorated system of disposing of our public lands; and with some success. The pre-emption system was established, though at first the pre-emption claimant was stigmatized as a trespasser, and repulsed as a criminal; the reserved lead mines and salt springs, in the State of Missouri, were brought into market, like other lands; iron ore lands, in tended to have been withheld from sale, were rescued from that fate, and brought into market Still the two repulsive features of the federal land system—sales to the highest bidder, and donations to no one—with an arbitrary minimum price which placed the cost of and bad, at the same uniforn auctions were over), at one d cents per acre. I resolved to 1 whole system, and especially in ated prices, and donations to ac settlers. I did so in a bill, re for a long time; and in speeches effect upon the public mind tha eral legislation-counteracted a by schemes of dividing the publ money arising from their sale, as It was in support of one of the produced the authority of Burke quoted; and no one took its s more promptly and entirely Jackson. He adopted the prin in one of his annual messages to ( mended that, as soon as the pub ary) debt should be discharged ( of which the lands ceded by tl pledged), that they should CEASE JECT OF REVENUE, AND BE DISPOSE WITH A VIEW TO SETTLEMENT ANI His terms of service expired soon tinction of the debt, so that he had tunity to carry out his wise and ber Mr. Burke considered the re from the sale of crown lands as a no account, compared to the amou derivable from the same lands 1 settlement and cultivation. He w. right! and provably so, both upo experience. The sale of the lan operation. Some money is recei cultivation is disabled to that eximprovement and cultivation. The perennial, and the improved conc farmer enables him to pay taxes, a dutiable goods, and to sell the procommand the imports which pay government, and this is the "w revenue" which comes through the c culation, and through the "political of the State, and which Mr. Burke above all revenue derived from the s Does any one know the comparativ revenue derived respectively from th from the cultivation of lands in any new States where the federal governm proprietor, and the auctioneerer, of and can he tell which mode of raising y, with all

low young that sales itizens, and ; and that is the true of extractm the soil. en reading the prom-1: it might peration of those who en in early ies and refrom the e of North rst settlers. speech of is taken; 1826; and hen a very sembly of he doctrine n the prine admitted. of the setnch Broad. to the then w land ex-. and lead m sale, and il treasury, m, and deer I should id with my 1 States in '28, found system of with some was estaba claimant epulsed as and salt e brought e lands, in sale, were to market he federal pidder, and

minimum

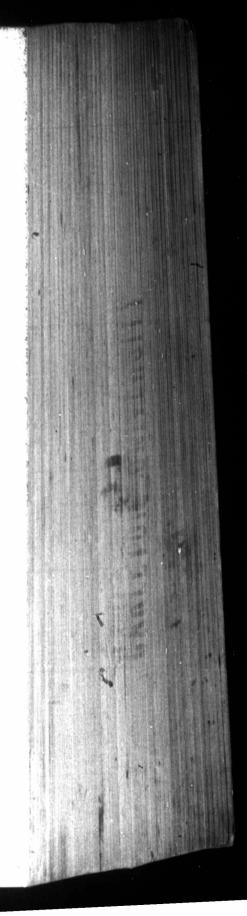

and bad, at the same uniform rate (after the auctions were over), at one dollar twenty-five cents per acre. I resolved to move against the whole system, and especially in favor of graduated prices, and donations to actual and destitute settlers. I did so in a bill, renewed annually for a long time; and in speeches which had more effect upon the public mind than upon the federal legislation-counteracted as my plan was by schemes of dividing the public lands, or the money arising from their sale, among the States. It was in support of one of these bills that I produced the authority of Burke in the extract quoted; and no one took its spirit and letter more promptly and entirely than President Jackson. He adopted the principle fully, and in one of his annual messages to Congress recommended that, as soon as the public (revolutionary) debt should be discharged (to the payment of which the lands ceded by the States were pledged), that they should CEASE TO BE A SUB-JECT OF REVENUE, AND BE DISPOSED OF CHIEFLY WITH A VIEW TO SETTLEMENT AND CULTIVATION. His terms of service expired soon after the extinction of the debt, so that he had not an opportunity to carry out his wise and beneficent design.

Mr. Burke considered the revenue derived from the sale of crown lands as a trifle, and of no account, compared to the amount of revenue derivable from they same lands through their settlement and cultivation. He was profoundly right! and provably so, both upon reason and experience. The sale of the land is a single operation. Some money is received and the cultivation is disabled to that extent from its improvement and cultivation. The cultivation is perennial, and the improved condition of the farmer enables him to pay taxes, and consume dutiable goods, and to sell the products which command the imports which pay duties to the government, and this is the "well-regulated revenue" which comes through the course of circulation, and through the "political secretions" of the State, and which Mr. Burke commends above all revenue derived from the sale of lands. Does any one know the comparative amount of revenue derived respectively from the sales and from the cultivation of lands in any one of our new States where the federal government was the proprietor, and the auctioneerer, of the lands? and can he tell which mode of raising money has price which placed the cost of all lands, good been most productive? Take Alabama, for example. How much has the treasury received for lands sold within her limits? and how much in duties paid on imports purchased with the exports derived from her soil? Perfect exactitude cannot be attained in the answer, but exact enough to know that the latter already exceeds the former several times, ten times over; and is perennial and increasing for ever! while the sale of the land has been a single operation, performed once, and not to be repeated; and disabling the cultivator by the loss of the money it took from him. Taken on a large scale, and applied to the whole United States, and the answer becomes more definite—but still not entirely exact. The whole annual receipts from land sales at this time (1850) are about two millions of dollars: the annual receipts from customs, founded almost entirely upon the direct or indirect productions of the earth, exceed fifty millions of dollars! giving a comparative difference of twenty-five to one for cultivation over sales; and triumphantly sustaining Mr. Burke's theory. I have looked into the respective amounts of federal revenue, received into the treasury from these two sources. since the establishment of the federal government; and find the customs to have vielded, in that time, a fraction over one thousand millions of dollars net-the lands to have yielded a little less than one hundred and thirty millions gross, not forty millions clear after paying all expenses of surveys, sales and management. This is a difference of twenty-five to one-with the further difference of endless future production from one, and no future production from the land once sold; that is to say, the same acre of land is paying for ever through cultivation, and pays but once for itself in purchase.

Thus far I have considered Mr. Burke's theory only under one of its aspects-the revenue aspect: he presents another-that of populationand here all measure of comparison ceases. The sale of land brings no people: cultivation produces population: and people are the true wealth and strength of nations. These various views were presented, and often enforced, in the course of the several speeches which I made in support of my graduation and donation bills: and, on the point of population, and of freeholders, against tenants, I gave utterance to these senti-

"Tenantry is unfavorable to freedom. It lays the foundation for separate orders in society. annihilates the love of country, and weakens the spirit of independence. The farming tenant has, in fact, no country, no hearth, no domestic altar, no household god. The freeholder, on the contrary, is the natural supporter of a free government; and it should be the policy of republics to multiply their freeholders, as it is the policy of monarchies to multiply tenants. We are a republic, and we wish to continue so: then multiply the class of freeholders; pass the public lands cheaply and easily into the hands of the people: sell for a reasonable price, to those who are able to pay; and give, without price, to those who are not. I say give, without price, to those who are not able to pay; and that which is so given, I consider as sold for the best of prices; for a price above gold and silver; a price which cannot be carried away by delinquent officers, nor lost in failing banks, nor stolen by thieves, nor squandered by an improvident and extravagant administration. It brings a price above rubies—a race of virtuous and independent laborers, the true supporters of their country, and the stock from which its best defenders must be drawn.

" What constitutes a State?

Not high-rais'd battlements, nor labored mound, Thick wall, nor mosted gate: Nor cities proud, with spires and turrets crown'd, Nor starr'd and spangled courts, Where low-born baseness wafts perfume to pride: But men! high-minded/men, Who their duties know but know their RIGHTS. And knowing dare maintain them.'

In favor of low prices, and donations, I quoted the example and condition of the Atlantic States of this Union-all settled under liberal systems of land distribution which dispensed almost (or altogether in many instances) with sales for money. I said:

"These Atlantic States were donations from the British crown; and the great proprietors distributed out their possessions with a free and generous hand. A few shillings for a hundred acres, a nominal quitrent, and gifts of a hundred, five hundred, and a thousand acres, to actual settlers: such were the terms on which they dealt out the soil which is now covered by a nation of freemen. Provinces, which now form sovereign States, were sold from hand to hand, for a less sum than the federal government now demands for an area of two miles square. I could name instances. I could name the State of Maine-a name, for more reasons than one, familiar and agreeable to Missouri, and whose pristine territory was sold by Sir Ferdinando Gorges to the proprietors of the Massachusetts Bay, for twelve hundred pounds, provincial money. And well it was for Maine that she was so sold; well it was for her that the modern policy of waiting for the rise, and an American Congress prove itself inferior to a sticking at a minimum of $1 25, was not then in vogue, or else Maine would have been a desert now. Instead of a numerous, intelligent, and virtuous population, we should have had trees and wild beasts. My respectable friend, the senator from that State (Gen. Chandler), would not have been here to watch so steadily the interest of the public, and to oppose the bills which I bring in for the relief of the land claimants. And I mention this to have an opportunity to do justice to the integrity of his heart, and to the soundness of his understanding—qualities in which he is excelled by no senator—and to express my belief that we will come together upon the final passage of this bill: for the cardinal points in our policy are the same—economy in the public expenditures, and the prompt extinc-tion of the public debt. I say, well it was for Maine that she was sold for the federal price of four sections of Alabama pine, Louisiana swamp, or Missouri prairie. Well it was for every State in this Union, that their soil was sold for a song, or given as a gift to whomsoever would take it. Happy for them, and for the liberty of the human race, that the kings of England and the "Lords Proprietors," did not conceive the luminous idea of waiting for the rise. and sticking to a minimum of $1 25 per acre. Happy for Kentucky, Tennessee, and Ohio, that they were settled under States, and not under the federal government. To this happy exemption they owe their present greatness and pros-When they were settled, the State laws prevailed in the acquisition of lands; and donations, pre-emptions, and settlement rights and sales at two cents the acre, were the order of the day. I include Ohio, and I do it with a knowledge of what I say: for ten millions of her soil that which now constitutes her chief wealth and strength,—were settled upon the liberal principles which I mention. The federal system only fell upon fifteen millions of her soil; and, of that quantity, the one half now lies waste and useless. paying no tax to the State, yielding nothing to agriculture, desert spots in the midst of a smiling garden, "waiting for the rise," and exhibiting in high and bold relief, the miserable folly of prescribing an arbitrary minimum upon that article which is the gift of God to man, and which no parental government has ever attempted to convert into a source of revenue and an article of merchandise.'

Against the policy of holding up refuse lands until they should rise to the price of good land and against the reservation of saline and mineral lands, and making money by boiling salt water, and digging lead ore, or holding a body of tenantry to boil and dig, I delivered these sentiments:

"I do trust and believe, Mr. President, that the Executive of this free government will not be second to George the Third in patriotism, nor British Parliament in politic trust and believe that this who ing up land for the rise, end revenue out of the soil of the and renting lead mines salt hanks, with all its train of per and military agents, will be con ished. I trust that the Presid give the subject a place in his r lend the aid of his recommendat of so great an object. The m especially, should fix the attent gress. They are a reproach to we live. National mining is condictate of prudence, by every ma economy, and by the voice of every age and country. And yet in that business. This splend ernment, created for great nat has gone to work among the lead per Louisiana, to give us a secondoubt, of the celebrated "Mississ of John Law. For that scheme more nor less than a project of out of the same identical min President, upon the same ider among the same holes and pits, Law's men in 1720; among the broken picks, and mouldering fur celebrated projector, is our federa now at work; and, that no circum. be wanting to complete the folly of dertaking, the task of extracting from these operations, is confided Treasury, but to the War Departs

"Salines and salt springs are sub same system—reserved from sale, a the purpose of raising revenue. myself that I see the end of this b system. The debate which took weeks ago on the bill to repeal the e upon salt, is every word of it appl bill which I have introduced for the reserved salt springs. I claim the accordingly, and shall expect the su the advocates for the repeal of that ever the bill for the sale of the salin put to the vote."

Argument and sarcasm had their e lation to the mineral and saline reser State in which I lived—the State o An act was passed in 1828 to throw the mass of private property—to sell other public lands. And thus the fe emment, in that State, got rid of a degr uprofitable pursuit; and the State freeholders instead of federal tenants; fably were developed in the hands of in the pursuits of private industry which Is and stagnated in the hands of federal a tenants. But it was continued for se s not then en a desert ligent, and d trees and he senator would not he interest ls which I ants. And inity to do and to the ualities in and to exether upon he cardinal economy in npt extincit was for deral price Louisiana it was for r soil was homsoever ad for the kings of s," did not for the rise, per acre. Ohio, that not under py exempand pros-State laws and donaights, and rder of the h a knowof her soil. wealth and eral princistem only end of that nd useless, nothing to f a smiling hibiting in lly of prehat article which no ted to con> fuse lands rood land nd mineral alt water, ftenantry nents:

article of

ident, that t will not otism, nor ferior to a British Parliament in political wisdom. I do longer (so far as lead ore was concerned) on the trust and believe that this whole system of holding up land for the rise, endeavoring to make revenue out of the soil of the country, leasing and renting lead mines, salt springs, and iron banks, with all its train of penal laws and civil and military agents, will be condemned and abolished. I trust that the President himself will give the subject a place in his next message, and lend the aid of his recommendation to the success of so great an object. The mining operations. especially, should fix the attention of the Congress. They are a reproach to the age in which we live. National mining is condemned by every dictate of prudence, by every maxim of political economy, and by the voice of experience in every age and country. And yet we are engaged in that business. This splendid federal government, created for great national purposes, has gone to work among the lead mines of Upper Louisiana, to give us a second edition, no doubt, of the celebrated "Mississippi Scheme" of John Law. For that scheme was nothing more nor less than a project of making money out of the same identical mines. Yes, Mr. President, upon the same identical theatre, among the same holes and pits, dug by John Law's men in 1720; among the cinders, ashes, broken picks, and mouldering furnaces, of that celebrated projector, is our federal government now at work; and, that no circumstance should be wanting to complete the folly of such an undertaking, the task of extracting "revenue" from these operations, is confided, not to the Treasury, but to the War Department.

"Salines and salt springs are subjected to the same system-reserved from sale, and leased for the purpose of raising revenue. But I flatter myself that I see the end of this branch of the system. The debate which took place a few weeks ago on the bill to repeal the existing duty upon salt, is every word of it applicable to the bill which I have introduced for the sale of the reserved salt springs. I claim the benefit of it accordingly, and shall expect the support of all the advocates for the repeal of that tax, whenever the bill for the sale of the salines shall be but to the vote."

Argument and sarcasm had their effect, in relation to the mineral and saline reserves in the State in which I lived—the State of Missouri. An act was passed in 1828 to throw them into the mass of private property—to sell them like other public lands. And thus the federal govemment, in that State, got rid of a degrading and unprofitable pursuit; and the State got citizen freeholders instead of federal tenants; and profitably were developed in the hands of individuals the pursuits of private industry which languished and stagnated in the hands of federal agents and tenants. But it was continued for some time

Upper Mississippi, and until an argument arrived which commanded the respect of the legislature: it was the argument of profit and loss-an argument which often touches a nerve which is dead to reason. Mr. Polk, in his message to Congress at the session of 1845-'46 (the first of his administration), stated that the expenses of the system during the preceding four yearsthose of Mr. Tyler's administration-were twenty-six thousand one hundred and eleven dollars, and eleven cents; and the whole amount of rents received during the same period was six thousand three hundred and fifty-four dollars, and seventy-four cents: and recommended the abolition of the whole system, and the sale of the reserved mines; which was done; and thus was completed for the Upper Mississippi what I had done for Missouri near twenty years before.

The advantage of giving land to those who would settle and cultivate it, was illustrated in one of my speeches, by reciting the case of "Granny White"-well known in her time to all the population of Middle Tennessee, and especially to all who travelled south from Nashville, along the great road which crossed the "divide" between the Cumberland and Harpeth waters, at the evergreen tree which gave name to the gap-the Holly Tree Gap. The aged woman, and her fortunes, were thus introduced into our senatorial debates, and lodged on a page of our parliamentary history, to enlighten, by her incidents, the councils of national legislation:

"At the age of sixty, she had been left a widow, in one of the counties in the tide-water region of North Carolina. Her poverty was so extreme, that when she went to the county court to get a couple of little orphan grandchildren bound to her, the Justices refused to let her have them, because she could not give security to keep them off the parish. This compelled her to emigrate; and she set off with the two little boys, upon a journey of eight or nine hundred miles, to what was then called "the Cumberland Settlement." Arrived in the neighborhood of Nashville, a generous-hearted Irishman (his name deserves to be remembered—Thomas McCrory) let her have a corner of his land, on her own terms,-a nominal price and indefinite credit. It was fifty acres in extent, and comprised the two faces of a pair of confronting hills, whose precipitous declivities lacked a few degrees, and but a few, of mathematical perpendicularity. Mr. B. said he knew it well, for he had seen the old lady's pumpkins propped and supported with stakes, to prevent their ponderous weight from tearing up the vine, and rolling to the bottom of the hills. There was just room at their base for a road to run between, and not room for a house, to find a level place for its foundation; for which purpose a part of the hill had to be dug away. Yet, from this hopeless beginning, with the advantage of a little piece of ground that was her own, this aged widow, and two little grandchildren, of eight or nine years old, advanced herself to comparative wealth: money, slaves, horses, cattle; and her fields extended into the valley below, and her orphan grandchildren, raised up to honor and independence: these were the fruits of economy and industry, and a noble illustration of the advantage of giving land to the poor. But the federal government would have demanded sixty-two collars and fifty cents for that land, cash in hand; and old Granny White and her grandchildren might have lived in misery and sunk into vice, before the opponents of this bill would have taken less."

I quoted the example of all nations, ancient and modern, republican and monarchical, in favor of giving lands, in parcels suitable to their wants, to meritorious cultivators; and denied that there was an instance upon earth, except that of our own federal government, which made merchandise of land to its citizens-exacted the highest price it could obtain—and refused to suffer the country to be settled until it was paid for. The "promised land" was divided among the children of Israel-the women getting a share where there was no man at the head of the family-as with the daughters of Manasseh. All the Atlantic States, when British colonies, were settled upon gratuitous donations, or nominal sales. Kentucky and Tennessee were chiefly settled in the same way. The two Floridas, and Upper and Lower Louisiana, were gratuitously distributed by the kings of Spain to settlers, in quantities adapted to their means of cultivation -and with the whole vacant domain to select from according to their pleasure. Land is now given to settlers in Canada; and £30,000 sterling, has been voted at a single session of Parliament, to aid emigrants in their removal to these homes, and commencing life upon them. The republic of Colombia now gives 400 acres to a settler: other South American republics give more or less. Quoting these examples, I added:

"Such, Mr. President, is the conduct of the free republics of the South. I say republics: for it is the same in all of them, and it would be tedious and monotonous to repeat their numerous decrees. In fact, throughout the New World, from Hudson's Bay to Cape Horn (with the single exception of these United States), land, the gift of God to man, is also the gift of the government to its citizens. Nor is this wise policy confined to the New World. It prevails even in Asia; and the present age has seen—we ourselves have seen—published in the capital of the European world, the proclamation of the King of Persia, inviting Christians to go to the ancient kingdom of Cyrus, Cambyses and Darius, and there receive gifts of land—first rate, not refuse—with a total exemption from taxes, and the free enjoyment of their religion. Here is the proclamation: listen to it.

The Proclamation.

"'Mirza Mahomed Saul, Ambassador to England, in the name, and by the authority of Abbas Mirza, King of Persia, offers to those who shall emigrate to Persia, gratuitous grants of land, good for the production of wheat, barley, rice, cotton, and fruits,—free from taxes or contributions of any kind, and with the free enjoyment of their religion; THE KING'S OBJECT BEING TO IMPROVE HIS COUNTRY.

"'London, July 8th, 1823.""

The injustice of holding all lands at one uniform price, waiting for the cultivation of the good land to give value to the poor, and for the poorest to rise to the value of the richest, was shown in a reference to private sales, of all articles; in the whole of which sales the price was graduated to suit different qualities of the same article. The heartless and miserly policy of waiting for government land to be enhanced in value by the neighboring cultivation of private land, was denounced as unjust as well as unwise. The new States of the West were the sufferers by this federal land policy. They were in a different condition from other States. In these others the local legislatures held the primary disposal of the soil,—so much as remained vacant within their limits,-and being of the same community, made equitable alienations among their constituents. In the new States it was different. The federal government held the primary disposition of the soil; and the majority of Congress (being independent of the people of these States), was less heedful of their wants and wishes. They were as a stepmother, instead of a natural mother: and the federal government being sole purchaser from foreign nations, and sole recipient of Indian cessions, it became the monopolizer of vacant lands in the West: and this monopoly, like all monopolies, resulted in hardships to those upon whom raised their voice against I came into the national c soon raised there against i a great amelioration has federal land policy during sentiment of Congress, at generally, has become muc alienations; and is approx beneficent systems of the re the members in Congress should not intermit their their policy; and should fi upon the period of the spec federal title to all the land of their respective States; pre-emption rights, by dor sale (of so much as shall be prices,-adapted to the differ tracts, to be estimated account has remained in market unse grants to objects of general national and territorial.

CHAPTER X

CESSION OF A PART OF THE ARKANSAS TO THE CHERO

Arkansas was an organized had been so since the year 181 boundary was established by ac May 1824 (chiefly by the exert delegate, Henry W. Conway),tension of her existing boundar and for national and State reas outside territory-beyond the frontier both to Mexico (then br the Valley of the Mississippi treaty which gave away Texas), merous Indian tribes then being the South Atlantic States to the Mississippi. It was, therefore, a p policy to make her strong-to n class State,—both for her own sa the Union,-and equal to all the her advanced and frontier position sion was on the west-the bour other three sides being fixed and orn (with the States), land, he gift of the or is this wise 1. It prevails has seen—we the capital of mation of the 1s to go to the yses and Dari-first rate, not om taxes, and 2. Here is the ssador to Engthority of Abto those who ous grants of wheat, barley, taxes or contrifree enjoyment JECT BEING TO nds at one uni-

tion of the good for the poorest was shown in a articles; in the as graduated to e article. The of waiting for in value by the e land, was dewise. The new rers by this feda different connese others, the 7 disposal of the int within their mmunity, made ir constituents. it. The federal sposition of the ess (being indetates), was less They were as al mother: and purchaser from t of Indian cesof vacant lands , like all monoiose upon whom public men, had raised their voice against this hard policy before I came into the national councils. My own was soon raised there against it: and it is certain that a great amelioration has taken place in our mederal land policy during my time: and that the sentiment of Congress, and that of the public generally, has become much more liberal in land alienations; and is approximating towards the beneficent systems of the rest of the world. But the members in Congress from the new States should not intermit their exertions, nor vary their policy; and should fix their eyes steadily upon the period of the speedy extinction of the federal title to all the lands within the limits of their respective States;-to be effected by pre-emption rights, by donations, and by the sale (of so much as shall be sold), at graduated prices,-adapted to the different qualities of the tracts, to be estimated according to the time it has remained in market unsold-and by liberal grants to objects of general improvement, both national and territorial.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

CESSION OF A PART OF THE TERRITORY OF ARKANSAS TO THE CHEROKEE INDIANS.

ARKANSAS was an organized territory, and had been so since the year 1819. Her western boundary was established by act of Congress in May 1824 (chiefly by the exertions of her then delegate, Henry W. Conway), -and was an extension of her existing boundary on that side; and for national and State reasons. It was an outside territory-beyond the Mississippi-a frontier both to Mexico (then brought deep into the Valley of the Mississippi by the Florida treaty which gave away Texas), and to the numerous Indian tribes then being removed from the South Atlantic States to the west of the Mississippi, It was, therefore, a point of national policy to make her strong-to make her a first class State,—both for her own sake and that of the Union,-and equal to all the exigencies of her advanced and frontier position. The extension was on the west-the boundaries on the other three sides being fixed and immovableand added a fertile belt-a parallelogram of forty miles by three hundred along her whole western border-and which was necessary to compensate for the swamp lands in front on the river, and to give to her certain valuable salt springs there existing, and naturally appurtenant to the territory, and essential to its inhabitants, Even with this extension the territory was still deficient in arable land-not as strong as her frontier position required her to be, nor susceptible (on account of swamps and sterile districts) of the population and cultivation which her superficial contents and large boundaries would imply her to be. Territorially, and in mere extent. the western addition was a fourth part of the territory: agriculturally, and in capacity for population, the addition might be equal to half of the whole territory; and its acquisition was celebrated as a most auspicious event for Arkansas at the time that it occurred.

In the month of May, 1828, by a treaty negotiated at Washington by the Secretary at War. Mr. James Barbour, on one side, and the chiefs of the Cherokee nation on the other, this new western boundary for the territory was abolishedthe old line re-established: and what had been an addition to the territory of Arkansas, was ceded to the Cherokees. On the ratification of this treaty several questions arose, all raised by myselfsome of principle, some of expediency-as, whether a law of Congress could be abolished by an Indian treaty? and whether it was expedient so to reduce, and thus weaken the territory (and future State) of Arkansas? I was opposed to the treaty, and held the negative of both questions, and argued against them with zeal and perseverance. The supremacy of the treaty-making power I held to be confined to subjects within its sphere, and quoted "Jefferson's Manual," to show that that was the sense in which the clause in the constitution was understood. The treatymaking power was supreme; but that supremacy was within its proper orbit, and free from the invasion of the legislative, executive, or judicial department. The proper objects of treaties were international interests, which neither party could regulate by municipal law, and which required a joint consent, and a double execution, to give it effect. Tried by this test, and this Indian treaty lost its supremacy. The subject was one of ordinary legislation, and specially and exclusively confined to Congress. It was to repeal a law which Congress had made in relation to territory; and to reverse the disposition which Congress had made of a part of its territory. To Congress it belonged to dispose of territory; and to her it belonged to repeal her own laws. The treaty avoided the word "repeal," while doing the thing: it used the word "abolish"-which was the same in effect, and more arrogant and offensive-not appropriate to legislation, and evidently used to avoid the use of a word which would challenge objection. If the word "repeal" had been used, every one would have felt that the ordinary legislation of Congress was flagrantly invaded; and the avoidance of that word, and the substitution of another of the same meaning, could have no effect in legalizing a transaction which would be condemned under its proper name. And so I held the treaty to be invalid for want of a proper subject to act upon, and because it invaded the legislative department.

The inexpediency of the treaty was in the question of crippling and mutilating Arkansas, reducing her to the class of weak States, and that against all the reasons which had induced Congress, four years before, to add on twelve thousand square miles to her domain; and to almost double the productive and inhabitable capacity of the Territory, and future State, by the character of the country added. I felt this wrong to Arkansas doubly, both as a neighbor to my own State, and because, having a friendship for the delegate, as well as for his territory, I had exerted myself to obtain the addition which had been thus cut off. I argued, as I thought, conclusively; but in vain. The treaty was largely ratified, and by a strong slaveholding vote, notwithstanding it curtailed slave territory, and made soil free which was then slave. Anxious to defeat the treaty for the benefit of Arkansas, I strongly presented this consequence, showing that there was, not only legal, but actually slavery upon the amputated part-that these twelve thousand square miles were inhabited, organized into counties, populous in some parts, and with the due proportion of slaves found in a southern and planting State. Nothing would do. It was a southern measure, negotiated, on the record by a southern secretary at war, in reality by the clerk McKinney; and voted for by nineteen approving slaveholding senators against four dissenting. The affirmative vote was: Messrs. Barton, Berrien, Bouligny, Branch. Ezekiel Chambers, Cobb, King of Alabama McKinley, McLane of Delaware, Macon, Ridgely, Smith of Maryland, Smith of South Carolina John Tyler of Virginia, and Williams of Mississippi. The negative was, Messrs. Benton, Eaton, Rowan, and Tazewell.-Mr. Calhoun was then Vice-President, and did not vote; but he was in favor of the treaty, and assisted its ratification through his friends. The House of Representatives voted the appropriations to carry it into effect; and thus acquiesced in the repeal of an act of Congress by the President, Senate, and Cherokee Indians; and these appropriations were voted with the general concurrence of the southern members of the House. And thus another slice, and a pretty large one (twelve thousand square miles), was taken off of slave territory in the former province of Louisiana: which about completed the excision of what had been left for slave State occupation after the Missouri compromise of 1820, and the cession to Texas of contemporaneous date, and previous cessions to Indian tribes. And all this was the work of southern men, who then saw no objection to the Congressional legislation which acted upon slavery in territories-which further curtailed, and even extinguished slave soil in all the vast expanse of the former Louisiana-save and except the comparative little that was left in the State of Missouri, and in the mutilated Territory of Arkansas. The reason of the southern members for promoting this amputation of Arkansas in favor of the Cherokees, was simply to assist in inducing their removal by adding the best part of Arkansas, with its salt springs, to the ample millions of acres west of that territory already granted to them; but it was a gratuitous sacrifice, as the large part of the tribe had already emigrated to the seven millions of acres, and the remainder were waiting for moneyed inducements to follow. And besides, the desire for this removal could have no effect upon the constitutional power of Congress to legislate upon slavery in territories, or upon the policy which curtails the boundaries of a future slave State.

I have said that the amputated part of Arkansas was an organized part of the territory, divided into counties, settled and cultivated. Now, what became of these inhabitants?—their property? and possessi out by the federal gover act was passed, making dred and twenty acres maining part of Arkan family who would retin part; and subjecting a that did not retire. I withdrew. Three hunds land in front to attract tl in the rear to push the power adequate to its obj sand square miles of slav ated by its inhabitants, herds, and slaves; and about it; and the event ha it is necessary to recall important act, in itself, ir State of Arkansas—as be South-and as being nece order to understand subsec

CHAPTER X

RENEWAL OF THE OREGON CONVENTION

THE American settlement a Columbia, or Oregon, was ma an act of private enterprise, d merchant, Mr. John Jacob As and the young town christe name, Astoria: but it was d tenance and stipulated appro ernment of the United States the United States navy-the Thorn, who was with Decati who afterwards blew up his Sound to avoid her capture (blowing himself, crew and say air),-was allowed to command leading vessel, in order to impr terprise the seal of nationality. captured during the war of 18 war detached for that purpose Hillyar, commanding a British Pacific Ocean. No attempt was it during the war; and, at Gher iligny, Branch, of Alabama, Macon, Ridgeouth Carolina lliams of Misessrs. Benton. -Mr. Calhoun not vote; but nd assisted its The House of iations to carry I in the repeal esident. Senate, appropriations currence of the use. And thus re one (twelve en off of slave of Louisiana; cision of what occupation after 1820, and the neous date, and ribes. And all men, who then rressional legisvery in terri-, and even exe vast expanse and except the in the State of Territory of Arthern members of Arkansas in simply to assist adding the best springs, to the of that territory it was a grapart of the tribe seven millions vere waiting for . And besides, > ated part of Arof the territory, and cultivated. abitants?—their

d have no effect of Congress to

ories, or upon the

laries of a future

property? and possessions? They were bought out by the federal government! A simultaneous act was passed, making a donation of three hundred and twenty acres of land (within the remaining part of Arkansas), to each head of a family who would retire from the amputated part; and subjecting all to military removal that did not retire. It was done. They all withdrew. Three hundred and twenty acres of land in front to attract them, and regular troops in the rear to push them, presented a motive power adequate to its object; and twelve thousand square miles of slave territory was evacuated by its inhabitants, with their flocks, and herds, and slaves; and not a word was said about it; and the event has been forgotten. But it is necessary to recall its recollection, as an important act, in itself, in relation to the new State of Arkansas—as being the work of the South-and as being necessary to be known in order to understand subsequent events.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

RENEWAL OF THE OREGON JOINT OCCUPATION CONVENTION.

THE American settlement at the mouth of the Columbia, or Oregon, was made in 1811. It was an act of private enterprise, done by the eminent merchant, Mr. John Jacob Astor, of New-York; and the young town christened after his own name, Astoria: but it was done with the countenance and stipulated approbation of the government of the United States; and an officer of the United States navy-the brave Lieutenant Thorn, who was with Decatur at Tripoli, and who afterwards blew up his ship in Nootka Sound to avoid her capture by the savages (blowing himself, crew and savages all into the air),-was allowed to command his (Mr. Astor's) leading vessel, in order to impress upon the enterprise the seal of nationality. This town was captured during the war of 1812, by a ship of war detached for that purpose, by Commodore Hillyar, commanding a British squadron in the Pacific Ocean. No attempt was made to recover It during the war; and, at Ghent, after some efforts on the part of the British commissioners. to set up a title to it, its restitution was stipulated under the general clause which provided for the restoration of all places captured by either party. But it was not restored. An empty ceremony was gone through to satisfy the words of the treaty, and to leave the place in the hands of the British. An American agent, Mr. John Baptist Prevost, was sent to Valparaiso, to go in a British sloop of war (the Blossom) to receive the place, to sign a receipt for it, and leave it in the hands of the British. This was in the autumn of the year 1818; and coincident with that nominal restitution was the conclusion of a convention in London between the United States and British government, for the joint occupation of the Columbia for ten years-Mr. Gallatin and Mr. Rush the American negotiators-if those can be called negotiators who are tied down to particular instructions. The joint occupancy was provided for, and in these words: "That any country claimed by either party on the northwest coast of America, together with its harbors, bays, and creeks, and the navigation of all rivers within the same, be free and open, for the term of ten years, to the subjects, citizens, and vessels of the two powers; without prejudice to any claim which either party might have to any part of the country."-I was a practising lawyer at St. Louis, no way engaged in politics, at the time this convention was published; but I no sooner saw it than I saw its delusive nature -its one-sidedness-and the whole disastrous consequences which were to result from it to the United States; and immediately wrote and published articles against it: of which the following is an extract:

"This is a specimen of the skill with which the diplomatic art deposits the seeds of a new contestation in the assumed settlement of an existing one,—and gives unequal privileges in words of equality, -and breeds a serious question, to be ended perhaps by war, where no question at all existed. Every word of the article for this joint occupation is a deception and a blunder-suggesting a belief for which there is no foundation, granting privileges for which there is no equivalent, and presenting ambiguities which require to be solved—peradventure by the sword. It speaks as if there was a mutuality of countries on the northwest coast to which the article was applicable, and a mutuality of benefits to accrue to the citizens of both governments by each occupying the country claimed by the other. Not so the fact. There is but one country in question, and that is our own :--and of this the British are to have equal possession with ourselves, and we no possession of theirs. The Columbia is ours; Frazer's River is a British possession to which no American ever went, or ever will go. The convention gives a joint right of occupying the ports and harbors, and of navigating the rivers of each other. This would imply that each government possessed in that quarter, ports, and harbors, and navigable rivers; and were about to bring them into hotch-potch for mutual enjoyment. No such thing. There is but one port. and that the mouth of the Columbia-but one river, and that the Columbia itself: and both port and river our own. We give the equal use of these to the British, and receive nothing in return. The convention says that the "claim" of neither party is to be prejudiced by the joint possession. This admits that Great Britain has a claim—a thing never admitted before by us, nor pretended by her. At Ghent she stated no claim, and could state none. Her ministers merely asked for the river as a boundary, as being the most convenient; and for the use of the harbor at its mouth, as being necessary to their ships and trade; but stated no claim. Our commissioners reported that they (the British commissioners) endeavored 'to lay a nest-egg' for a future pretension; which they failed to do at Ghent in 1815, but succeeded in laying in London in 1818; and before the ten years are out, a full grown fighting chicken will be hatched of that egg. There is no mutuality in any thing. We furnish the whole stake-country, river, harbor; and shall not even maintain the joint use of our own. We shall be driven out of it, and the British remain sole possessors. The fur trade is the object. It will fare with our traders on the Columbia under this convention as it fared with them on the Miami of the Lakes (and on the lakes themselves), under the British treaties of '94 and '96, which admitted British traders into our territories. Our traders will be driven out; and that by the fair competition of trade, even if there should be no foul play. The difference between free and dutied goods, would work that result. The British traders pay no duties: ours pay above an average of fifty per centum. No trade can stand against such odds. But the competition will not be fair. The savages will be incited to kill and rob our traders, and they will be expelled by violence, without waiting the slower, but equally certain process, of expulsion by underselling. The result then is, that we admit the British into our country, our river, and our harbor; and we get no admittance into theirs, for they have none-Frazer's River and New Caledonia being out of the question—that they will become sole possessors of our river, our harbor, and our country; and at the end of the ten years will have an admitted 'claim' to our property, and the actual possession of it."

Thus I wrote in the year 1818, when the joint occupation convention of that year was promulgated. I wrote in advance; and long before the ten years were out, it was all far more than verified. Our traders were not only driven from the mouth of the Columbia River, but from all its springs and branches; -not only from all the Valley of the Columbia, but from the whole region of the Rocky Mountains between 49 and 42 degrees;—not only from all this mountain region, but from the upper waters of all our far distant rivers-the Missouri, the Yellow Stone the Big Horn, the North Platte; and all their mountain tributaries. And, by authentic reports made to our government, not less than five hundred of our citizens had been killed, nor less than five hundred thousand dollars worth of goods and furs robbed from them; -the British remaining the undisturbed possessors of all the Valley of the Columbia, acting as its masters, and building forts from the sea to the mountains This was the effect of the first joint occupation treaty, and every body in the West saw its anproaching termination with pleasure; but the false step which the government had made induced another. They had admitted a "claim" on the part of Great Britain, and given her the sole, under the name of a joint, possession; and now to get her out was the difficulty. It could not be done; and the United States agreed to a further continued "joint" occupation (as it was illusively called in the renewed convention), not for ten years more, but "indefinitely," determinable on one year's notice from either party to the other. The reason for this indefinite and injurious continuance, was set forth in the preamble to the renewed convention (Mr. Gallatin now the sole United States negotiator); and recited that the two governments "being desirous to prevent, as far as possible, all hazard of misunderstanding, and with a view to give further time for maturing measures which shall have for their object a more definite settlement of the claims of each party to the said territory;" did thereupon agree to renew the joint occupation article of the convention of 1818, &c. Thus, we had, by our diplomacy in 1818, and by the permitted non-execution of the Ghent treaty in the delivery of the post and country, hatched a question which threatened a "misunderstanding" between the two countries; and for maturing measures for the settlement of which indefinite time was required—and granted—Great Britain remaining, in the mean ti whole country. This wa and all that we could gra intended to give up the co · I was a member of the newed convention was se and opposed it with all tl which I was master: but of the administration, the ir a remote object, the desire and the delusive argument th it at any time-(a consolat gentle temperaments)-were and fact; and I was left in the question of ratification. myself to opposition to the t as well as opposed; and dis into three resolves; and had executive journal, and made mentary history for future re The resolves were: 1. "7

dient for the United States and treat further in relation to th northwest coast of America, joint occupation by their respe That it is expedient that the article in the convention of 18 expire upon its own limitation. pedient for the government of t to continue to treat with His Bi in relation to said claims, on th paration of interests, and the est permanent boundary between 1 westward of the Rocky Mountain est possible time." These reso voted upon; but the negative ve fication of the convention showed would have been if it had been negative vote was -Messrs. Bel W. Cobb of Georgia, Eaton of To of Mississippi, Johnson of Kentuc Illinois, and Rowan of Kentuck Eighteen years afterwards, and w got to the cry of "inevitable war, gratification to see the whole Senate, and all the United States, occupy the in relation to this joint occupation or even senators stood at the time the remaining, in the mean time, sole occupant of the whole country. This was all that she could ask, and all that we could grant, even if we actually intended to give up the country.

for it was ratified.

· was promul-

ong before the far more than ly driven from

r, but from all

ly from all the

the whole reetween 49 and this mountain

s of all our far

Vellow Stone,

; and all their

thentic reports

than five hund, nor less than vorth of goods

the British resors of all the

its masters, and the mountains.

oint occupation

est saw its ap-

asure; but the

it had made initted a "claim"

d given her the possession; and culty. It could ates agreed to a sation (as it was convention), not tely," determineither party to indefinite, and orth in the pre-

on (Mr. Gallatin egotiator); and

3 " being desirous hazard of mis-

to give further

ich shall have for ettlement of the territory;" did

joint occupation

, &c. Thus, we

and by the per-ent treaty in the

ntry, hatched s

sunderstanding"

nd for maturing

which indefinite

d-Great Britain

. I was a member of the Senate when this renewed convention was sent in for ratification. and opposed it with all the zeal and ability of which I was master: but in vain. The weight of the administration, the indifference of many to a remote object, the desire to put off a difficulty, and the delusive argument that we could terminate it at any time-(a consolation so captivating to gentle temperaments)—were too strong for reason and fact; and I was left in a small minority on the question of ratification. But I did not limit myself to opposition to the treaty. I proposed, as well as opposed; and digested my opinions into three resolves; and had them spread on the executive journal, and made part of our parliamentary history for future reference.

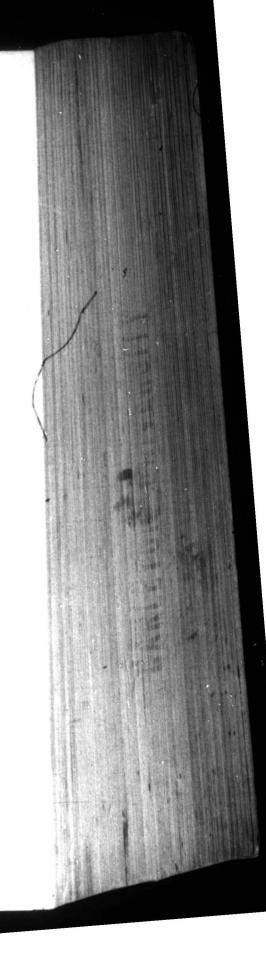

The resolves were: 1. "That it is not expedient for the United States and Great Britain to treat further in relation to their claims on the northwest coast of America, on the basis of a joint occupation by their respective citizens. 2. That it is expedient that the joint-occupation article in the convention of 1818 be allowed to expire upon its own limitation. 3. That it is expedient for the government of the United States to continue to treat with His Britannic Majesty in relation to said claims, on the basis of a separation of interests, and the establishment of a permanent boundary between their dominions westward of the Rocky Mountains, in the shortest possible time." These resolves were not voted upon; but the negative vote on the ratification of the convention showed what the vote would have been if it had been taken. That negative vote was-Messrs. Benton, Thomas W. Cobb of Georgia, Eaton of Tennessee, Ellis of Mississippi, Johnson of Kentucky, Kane of Illinois, and Rowan of Kentucky-in all 7. Eighteen years afterwards, and when we had got to the cry of "inevitable war," I had the gratification to see the whole Senate, all Congress and all the United States, occupy the same ground in relation to this joint occupation on which only even senators stood at the time the convention for it was ratified.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION OF 1828, AND FURTHER ERRORS OF MONS. DE TOCQUEVILLE.

GENERAL JACKSON and Mr. Adams were the candidates; -with the latter, Mr. Clay (his Secretary of State), so intimately associated in the public mind, on account of the circumstances of the previous presidential election in the House of Representatives, that their names and interests were inseparable during the canvass. General Jackson was elected, having received 178 electoral votes to 83 received by Mr. Adams. Mr. Richard Rush, of Pennsylvania, was the vicepresidential candidate on the ticket of Mr. Adams, and received an equal vote with that gentleman: Mr. Calhoun was the vice-presidential candidate on the ticket with General Jackson, and received a slightly less vote-the deficiency being in Georgia, where the friends of Mr. Crawford still resented his believed connection with the "A.B. plot." In the previous election, he had been neutral between General Jackson and Mr. Adams; but was now decided on the part of the General, and received the same vote every where, except in Georgia. In this election there was a circumstance to be known and remembered. Mr. Adams and Mr. Rush were both from the nonslaveholding-General Jackson and Mr. Calhoun from the slaveholding States, and both large slave owners themselves-and both received a large vote (73 each) in the free Statesand of which at least forty were indispensable to their election. There was no jealousy, or hostile, or aggressive spirit in the North at that time against the South!

The election of General Jackson was a triumph of democratic principle, and an assertion of the people's right to govern themselves. That principle had been violated in the presidential election in the House of Representatives in the session of 1824–'25; and the sanction, or rebuke, of that violation was a leading question in the whole anvass. It was also a triumph over the high protective policy, and the federal internal improvement policy, and the latitudinous construction of the constitution; and of the democracy over the federalists, then called national republicans; and was the re-establishment of parties on principle, according to the landmarks of the early ages of the government. For although Mr. Adams had received confidence and office from Mr. Madison and Mr. Monroe, and had classed with the democratic party during the fusion of parties in the "era of good feeling," yet he had previously been federal; and in the re-establishment of old party lines which began to take place after the election of Mr. Adams in the House of Representatives, his affinities, and policy, became those of his former party: and as a party, with many individual exceptions, they became his supporters and his strength. General Jackson, on the contrary, had always been democratic, so classing when he was a senator in Congress under the administration of the first Mr. Adams, and when party lines were most straightly drawn, and upon principle: and as such now receiving the support of men and States which took their political position at that time, and had maintained it ever since-Mr. Macon and Mr. Randolph, for example, and the States of Virginia and Pennsylvania. And here it becomes my duty to notice an error, or a congeries of errors, of Mons. de Tocqueville, in relation to the causes of General Jackson's election; and which he finds exclusively in the glare of a military fame resulting from "a very ordinary achievement, only to be remembered where battles are rare." He says:

"General Jackson, whom the Americans have twice elected to the head of their government, is a man of a violent temper and mediocre talents. No one circumstance in the whole course of his career ever proved that he is qualified to govern a free people; and, indeed, the majority of the enlightened classes of the Union has always been opposed to him. But he was raised to the Presidency, and has been maintained in that lofty station, solely by the recollection of a victory which he gained twenty years ago, under the walls of New Orleans;—a victory which, however, was a very ordinary achievement, and which could only be remembered in a country where battles are rare."—(Chapter 17.)

This may pass for American history, in Europe and in a foreign language, and even finds abottors here to make it American history in the United States, with a preface and notes to enforce and commend it: but America will find historians of her own to do justice to the national, and to individual character. In the mean time I have some knowledge of General Jackson, and the American people, and the two presidential elections with which they honored the General;

and will oppose it, that is, my knowledge, to the flippant and shallow statements of Mons. de Tocqueville. "A man of violent temper." I ought to know something about that—contemporaries will understand the allusion-and I can say that General Jackson had a good temper, kind and hospitable to every body, and a feeling of protection in it for the whole human race, and especially the weaker and humbler part of it. He had few quarrels on his own account; and probably the very ones of which Mons. de Tocqueville had heard were accidental, against his will, and for the succor of friends. "Mediocre talent, and no capacity to govern a free people." In the first place, free people are not governed by any man, but by laws. But to understand the phrase as perhaps intended, that he had no capacity for civil administration, let the condition of the country at the respective periods when he took up, and when he laid down the administration answer. He found the country in domestic distress-pecuniary distress-and the national and state legislation invoked by leading politicians to relieve it by empirical remedies; -tariffs, to relieve one part of the community by taxing the other ;-internal improvement, to distribute public money ;-a national bank, to cure the paper money evils of which it was the author;-the public lands the pillage of broken bank paper;depreciated currency and ruined exchanges;a million and a half of "unavailable funds" in the treasury ;—a large public debt ;—the public money the prey of banks ;-no gold in the country-only twenty millions of dollars in silver, and that in banks which refused, when ther pleased, to pay it down in redemption of their own notes, or even to render back to depositors Stay laws, stop laws, replevin laws, baseless paper, the resource in half the States to save the debtor from his creditor; and national bankrupt laws from Congress, and local insolvent laws in the States, the demand of every session. Indian tribes occupying a half, or a quarter of the area of southern States, and unsettled questions of wrong and insult, with half the powers of Europe Such was the state of the country when General Jackson became President: what was it when he left the Presidency? Protective tariffs an federal internal improvement discarded; the m tional bank left to expire upon its own limit tion; the public lands redeemed from the pilla of broken bank paper; no more "unavailab funds;" an abundant gold a the public debt paid off: independent of banks; the I ed from the States; indemn all foreign powers for all pa 10 new ones committed; seven ed from great powers that I with us before; peace, friendsl with all the world; and the me which, after one great conflict Bank of the United States, and banks in 1837, put an end to b the United States, and all its tra and expansions, panic and sus and empirical relief. This is th the respective periods of the be ending of General Jackson's gives to the flippant imputation for civil government. I pass of "The majority of the enlighter ways opposed to him." A majorit es which Mons. de Tocqueville w in the cities, and along the highly brokers, jobbers, contractors, polit culators-were certainly against l certainly against them: but the r telligence of the country was w sustained him in retrieving the cou deplorable condition in which the classes" had sunk it! and in advanstate of felicity at home, and rewhich has made it the envy and a the civilized world, and the absorbe tions of Europe. I pass on. "Raise vidency and maintained there so recollection of the victory at Neu Here recollection, and military glare. action of their ever previous attribu ome stronger, instead of weaker, up of time. The victory at New Orlean ed in the first week of the year 181. not bear this presidential fruit until fo eighteen years afterwards, and until t ous good seasons had passed without p There was a presidential election in 1 the victory was fresh, and the countr and imaginations dazzled with it: but make Jackson President, or even bring ward as a candidate. The same four ye wards, at the election of 1820—not even didate then. Four years still later, at th # 1824, he became a candidate, and-edge, to the ons. de Toc-." I ought temporaries an say that er, kind and ng of protece, and espefit. He had nd probably equeville had will, and for talent, and le." In the rned by any nd the phrase capacity for a of the counhe took up, Iministration. domestic disnational and politicians to -tariffs, to reby taxing the istribute pubare the paper author ;-the ank paper;exchanges; ble funds" in t :- the public d in the counlars in silver, d, when they uption of their to depositors. laws, baseless tes to save the ional bankrupt olvent laws, in ession. Indian r of the area of stions of wrong ers of Europe when Genera it was it whe tive tariffs an carded; the n its own limit from the pilla e "unavailab funds;" an abundant gold and silver currency; the public debt paid off; the treasury made independent of banks; the Indian tribes removed from the States; indemnities obtained from all foreign powers for all past aggressions, and 10 new ones committed; several treaties obtained from great powers that never would treat with us before; peace, friendship, and commerce with all the world; and the measures established which, after one great conflict with the expiring Bank of the United States, and all her affiliated banks in 1837, put an end to bank dominion in the United States, and all its train of contractions and expansions, panic and suspension, distress and empirical relief. This is the answer which the respective periods of the beginning and the ending of General Jackson's administration gives to the flippant imputation of no capacity for civil government. I pass on to the next. "The majority of the enlightened classes always opposed to him." A majority of those classes which Mons. de Tocqueville would chiefly see in the cities, and along the highways-bankers. brokers, jobbers, contractors, politicians, and speculators-were certainly against him, and he as certainly against them: but the mass of the intelligence of the country was with him! and sustained him in retrieving the country from the deplorable condition in which the "enlightened classes" had sunk it! and in advancing it to that state of felicity at home, and respect abroad, which has made it the envy and admiration of the civilized world, and the absorbent of populations of Europe. I pass on. "Raised to the Prendency and maintained there solely by the recollection of the victory at New Orleans." Here recollection, and military glare, reverse the action of their ever previous attributes, and beome stronger, instead of weaker, upon the lapse of time. The victory at New Orleans was gained in the first week of the year 1815; and did not bear this presidential fruit until fourteen and eighteen years afterwards, and until three previous good seasons had passed without production. There was a presidential election in 1816, when the victory was fresh, and the country ringing. make Jackson President, or even bring him forward as a candidate. The same four years after-

Vol. I.—8

elected;-receiving but 99 electoral votes out of 261. In the year 1828 he was first elected, receiving 178 out of 261 votes; and in 1832 he was a second time elected, receiving 219 out of 288 votes. Surely there must have been something besides an old military recollection to make these two elections so different from the two former; and there was! That something else was principle! and the same that I have stated in the beginning of this chapter as entering into the canvass of 1828, and ruling its issue. I pass on to the last disparagement. "A victory which was a very ordinary achievement, and only to be remembered where battles were rare." Such was not the battle at New Orleans. It was no ordinary achievement. It was a victory of 4,600 citizens just called from their homes, without knowledge of scientific war, under a leader as little schooled as themselves in that particular, without other advantages than a slight field work (a ditch and a bank of earth) hastily thrown up-over double their numbers of British veterans, survivors of the wars of the French Revolution, victors in the Peninsula and at Toulouse, under trained generals of the Wellington school, and with a disparity of loss never before witnessed. On one side 700 killed (including the first, second and third generals); 1400 wounded; 500 taken prisoners. On the other, six privates killed, and seven wounded; and the total repulse of an invading army which instantly fled to its "wooden walls," and never again placed a hostile foot on American soil. Such an achievement is not ordinary, much less "very" ordinary. Does Mons. de Tocqueville judge the importance of victories by the numbers engaged, and the quantity of blood shed. or by their consequences? If the former, the cannonade on the heights of Valmy (which was not a battle, nor even a combat, but a distant cannon firing in which few were hurt), must seem to him a very insignificant affair. Yet it did what the marvellous victories of Champaubert, Montmirail, Chateau-Thierry, Vauchamps and Montereau could not do-turned back the invader, and saved the soil of France from the indimaginations dazzled with it: but it did not iron hoof of the conqueror's horse! and was commemorated twelve years afterwards by the great emperor in a ducal title bestowed upon one wards, at the election of 1820—not even a can- of its generals. The victory at New Orleans bitate then. Four years still later, at the election | did what the connonade at Valmy did—drove back # 1824, he became a candidate, and—was not the invader! and also what it did not do—destroyed the one fourth part of his force. And, therefore, it is not to be disparaged, and will not be, by any one who judges victories by their consequences instead of by the numbers engaged. And so the victory at New Orleans will remain in history as one of the great achievements of the world, in spite of the low opinion which the writer on American democracy entertains of it. But Mons, de Tocqueville's disparagement of General Jackson, and his achievement, does not stop at him and his victory. It goes beyond both, and reaches the American people, their republican institutions, and the elective franchise: It represents the people as incapable of selfgovernment—as led off by a little military glare to elect a man twice President who had not one qualification for the place, who was violent and mediocre, and whom the enlightened classes opposed: all most unjustly said, but still to pass for American history in Europe, and with some Americans at home.

Vol. I.—8

Regard for Mons. de Tocqueville is the cause of this correction of his errors: it is a piece of respect which I do not extend to the riffraff of European writers who come here to pick up the gossip of the highways, to sell it in Europe for American history, and to requite with defamation the hospitalities of our houses. He is not of that class: he is above it: he is evidently not intentionally unjust. But he is the victim of the company which he kept while among us; and his book must pay the penalty of the impositions practised upon him. The character of our country, and the cause of republican government, require his errors to be corrected; and, unhappily, I shall have further occasion to perform that duty.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

RETIRING OF MR. MACON.

PHILOSOPHIC in his temperament and wise in his conduct, governed in all his actions by reason and judgment, and deeply imbued with Bible images, this virtuous and patriotic man (whom Mr Jefferson called "the last of the Romans)" had long fixed the term of his political existence at the age which the Psalmist assigns for the it was with Mr. Macon. His firmness, his par limit of manly life: "The days of our years are threescore years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labor and sorrow, for it is soon cut off and we fly away." He touched that age in 1828: and true to all his purposes, he was true to his resolve in this, and executed it with the quietude and indifference of an ordinary transaction. He was in the middle of a third senatorial term, and in the full possession of all his faculties of mind and body; but his time for retirement had come—the time fixed by himself; but fixed upon conviction and for well-considered reasons and inexorable to him as if fixed by fate. To the friends who urged him to remain to the end of his term, and who insisted that his mind was as good as ever, he would answer, that it was good enough yet to let him know that he ought to quit office before his mind quit him, and that he did not mean to risk the fate of the Archbishon of Grenada. He resigned his senatorial honors as he had worn them-meekly, unostentatiously in a letter of thanks and gratitude to the General Assembly of his State; -and gave to repose at home that interval of thought and quietude which every wise man would wish to place between the turmoil of life and the stillness of eternity. He had nine years of this tranquil enjoyment and died without pain or suffering June 29th, 1837. -characteristic in death as in life. It was eight o'clock in the morning when he felt that the supreme hour had come, had himself full-dressed with his habitual neatness, walked in the room and lay upon the bed, by turns conversing kindly with those who were about him, and showing by his conduct that he was ready and waiting, but hurrying nothing. It was the death of Socrates. all but the hemlock, and in that full faith of which the Grecian sage had only a glimmering. He directed his own grave on the point of a sterile ridge (where nobody would wish to plough). and covered with a pile of rough flint-stone. (which nobody would wish to build with), deeming this sterility and the uselessness of this rock the best security for that undisturbed repose of the bones which is still desirable to those who are indifferent to monuments.

In almost all strongly-marked characters there is usually some incident or sign, in early life, which shows that character, and reveals to the close observer the type of the future man. So triotism, his self-deni and disregard of office esty, integrity, self-cor conduct to the conviction tates of virtue, all so long life, were all shows eighteen, in the miniatu vidual action, and only quent public exhibitions exalted career

He was of that age, and college, at the time of the can Independence. A sm then on the Delaware. P ed it. served a term, retu resumed his studies. In th ern States had become a their own fate, and possil of the war. British fleets there, strongly supported | British cause; and the co was fully counted upon. these States; and Mr. Mac returned to his native count joined a militia company as a ed to South Carolina-then enemy's operations. He had hardships and disasters of th at the fall of Fort Moultrie, SI ton, defeat at Camden; and retreat across the upper part He was in the camp on the le kin when the sudden floodir the brief interval between th Americans and the coming up rested the pursuit of Cornwa Greene to allow some rest to exhausted men. In this camp, thing and with gloomy prospe mons came to Mr. Macon from North Carolina, requiring him ing of the General Assembly, been elected a member, without by the people of his county. I and the incident being talked camp, came to the knowledge Greene was a man himself, and man. He felt at once that, if this his young soldier was no common determined to verify the fact. ] young man, inquired of him, he and then asked for the reason of t of our years are if by reason of ers, yet is their t is soon cut off, ned that age in ses, he was true uted it with the ordinary transacthird senatorial of all his faculties e for retirement mself; but fixed asidered reasons, red by fate. To emain to the end at his mind was wer, that it was w that he ought uit him, and that of the Archbishop senatorial honors unostentatiously, de to the General ave to repose at d quietude which place between the of eternity. He il enjoyment, and June 29th, 1837, ife. It was eight felt that the sumself full-dressed ked in the room conversing kindhim, and showing y and waiting, but death of Socrates, hat full faith of aly a glimmering. e point of a sterile wish to plough), rough flint-stone, build with), deemseness of this rock sturbed repose of > d characters there sign, in early life, nd reveals to the future man. So firmness, his par

ble to those who

triotism, his self-denial, his devotion to duty and disregard of office and emolument; his modesty, integrity, self-control, and subjection of conduct to the convictions of reason and the dictates of virtue, all so steadily exemplified in a long life, were all shown from the early age of eighteen, in the miniature representation of individual action, and only confirmed in the subsequent public exhibitions of a long, beautiful, and exalted career.

He was of that age, and a student at Princeton college, at the time of the Declaration of American Independence. A small volunteer corps was then on the Delaware. He quit his books, joined it, served a term, returned to Princeton, and resumed his studies. In the year 1778 the Souththeir own fate, and possibly involving the issue of the war. British fleets and armies appeared there, strongly supported by the friends of the British cause; and the conquest of the South was fully counted upon. Help was needed in these States; and Mr. Macon, quitting college, returned to his native county in North Carolina, joined a militia company as a private, and marched to South Carolina—then the theatre of the enemy's operations. He had his share in all the hardships and disasters of that trying time; was at the fall of Fort Moultrie, surrender of Charleston, defeat at Camden; and in the rapid winter retreat across the upper part of North Carolina. He was in the camp on the left bank of the Yadkin when the sudden flooding of that river, in the brief interval between the crossing of the Americans and the coming up of the British, arrested the pursuit of Cornwallis, and enabled Greene to allow some rest to his wearied and exhausted men. In this camp, destitute of every thing and with gloomy prospects ahead, a summons came to Mr. Macon from the Governor of North Carolina, requiring him to attend a meeting of the General Assembly, of which he had been elected a member, without his knowledge. by the people of his county. He refused to go: and the incident being talked of through the camp, came to the knowledge of the general. Greene was a man himself, and able to know a man. He felt at once that, if this report was true.

conduct—this preference for a suffering camp over a comfortable seat in the General Assembly? Mr. Macon answered him, in his quaint and sententious way, that he had seen the faces of the British many times, but had never seen their backs, and meant to stay in the army till he did. Greene instantly saw the material the young man was made of, and the handle by which he was to be worked. That material was patriotism; that handle a sense of duty; and laying hold of this handle, he quickly worked the young soldier into a different conclusion from the one that he had arrived at. He told him he could do more good as a member of the General Assembly than as a soldier; that in the army he was but one man, and in the General Assemern States had become a battle-field, big with bly he might obtain many, with the supplies they needed, by showing the destitution and suffering which he had seen in the camp; and that it was his duty to go. This view of duty and usefulness was decisive. Mr. Macon obeyed the Governor's summons; and by his representations contributed to obtain the supplies which enabled Greene to turn back and face Cornwallis, -fight him, cripple him, drive him further back than he had advanced (for Wilmington is South of Camden), disable him from remaining in the South (of which, up to the battle of Guilford, he believed himself to be master); and sending him to Yorktown, where he was captured, and the war ended.

The philosophy of history has not yet laid hold of the battle of Guilford, its consequences and effects. That battle made the capture at Yorktown. The events are told in every history: their connection and dependence in none. It broke up the plan of Cornwallis in the South, and changed the plan of Washington in the North. Cornwallis was to subdue the Southern States, and was doing it until Greene turned upon him at Guilford. Washington was occupied with Sir Henry Clinton, then in New-York, with 12,000 British troops. He had formed the heroic design to capture Clinton and his army (the French fleet co-operating) in that city, and thereby putting an end to the war. All his preparations were going on for that grand consummation when he got the news of the battle of Guilford, this young soldier was no common character; and the retreat of Cornwallis to Wilmington, his indetermined to verify the fact. He sent for the ability to keep the field in the South, and his young man, inquired of him, heard the truth, return northward through the lower part of and then asked for the reason of this unexpected Virginia. He saw his advantage—an easier prev

formance,-who spoke mo was getting up out of his into it, than many others o and he suffered no reporte for him. He was above the pursu above dependence and idler Roman of the elder Cato's fields at the head of his sla of public duty; and did not advancing age rendered him hot sun of summer—the onl when senatorial duties left h

low the plough, or handle t

was the summer of 1817.—th

(he told me) he tried it, and hot for him-then sixty year and the refuser of all office. of him, when I see at Wash men going through a scene of lation, and degradation, to the salvation of the soul does the vilest sinner! His fields, I herds yielded an ample supply ductions. A small crop of tobs heads when the season was goo -purchased the exotics which cessity required, and which the 1 duce. He was not rich, but rich pense hospitality and charity, to 1 in his house, from the President borer-no other title being nec dollar to any man. He was steadfast in his friendsh stake himself for a friend, but wou point of public duty to please or ob this his relations with Mr. Randolp ml instance. He drew a knife to the theatre at Philadelphia, when some naval and military officers spoken in debate, and deemed offens

his house but that of an hon enough to bring up his family (

as accomplished ladies, and mar

omplished gentlemen—one to W

Esq., the other to William Eaton,

oke, my early school-fellow and fi

than half a century; and, above a enough to pay as he went, and ne

-and the same result, if successful. Cornwallis or Clinton, either of them captured, would put an end to the war. Washington changed his plan, deceived Clinton, moved rapidly upon the weaker general, captured him and his 7000 men; and ended the revolutionary war. The battle of Guilford put that capture into Washington's hands; and thus Guilford and Yorktown became connected; and the philosophy of history shows their dependence, and that the lesser event was father to the greater. The State of North Carolina gave General Greene 25,000 acres of western hand for that day's work, now worth a million of dollars; but the day itself has not yet obtained its proper place in American history. The military life of Mr. Macon finished with his departure from the camp on the Yadkin, and his civil public life commenced on his arrival at the General Assembly, to which he had been summoned—that civil public life in which he was continued above forty years by free electionsrepresentative in Congress under Washington, Adams, Jefferson, and Madison, and long the Speaker of the House; senator in Congress under Madison, Monroe, and John Quincy Adams; and often elected President of the Senate, and until voluntarily declining; twice refusing to be Postmaster General under Jefferson; never taking any office but that to which he was elected; and resigning his last senatorial term when it was only half run. But a characteristic trait remains to be told of his military life-one that has neither precedent nor imitation (the example of Washington being out of the line of comparison): he refused to receive pay, or to accept promotion, and served three years as a private through mere devotion to his country. And all the long length of his life was conformable to this patriotic and disinterested beginning: and thus the patriotic principles of the future senator were all revealed in early life, and in the obscurity of an unknown situation. Conformably to this beginning, he refused to take any thing under the modern acts of Congress for the benefit of the surviving officers and soldiers of the Revolution, and voted against them all, saying they had suffered alike (citizens and military), and all been rewarded together in the establishment of independence; that the debt to the army had been settled by pay, by pensions to the wounded, by half-pay and land to the officers; that no military claim could be founded on depreciated con- ly in Congress, always to the point, and briefly tinental paper money, from which the civil functionaries who performed service, and the farmers who furnished supplies, suffered as much as any. On this principle he voted against the bill for Lafayette, against all the modern revolutionary pensions and land bounty acts, and refused to take any thing under them (for many were applicable to himself). His political principles were deep-rooted innate, subject to no change and to no machinery of party. He was democratic in the broad sense of the word, as signifying a capacity in the people for self-government; and in its party sense as in favor of a plain and economical administra tion of the federal government, and against latitudinarian constructions of the constitution. He was a party man, not in the hackneyed sense of the word, but only where principle was concerned; and was independent of party in all his social relations, and in all the proceedings which he disapproved. Of this he gave a strong instance in the case of General Hamilton, whom he deemed honorable and patriotic; and utterly refused to be concerned in a movement proposed to affect him personally, though politically onposed to him. He venerated Washington, admired the varied abilities and high qualities of Hamilton; and esteemed and respected the eminent federal gentlemen of his time. He had affectionate regard for Madison and Monroe; but Mr. Jefferson was to him the full and perfect exemplification of the republican statesman. His almost fifty years of personal and political friendship and association with Mr. Randolph is historical, and indissolubly connects their names and memories in the recollection of their friends. and in history, if it does them justice. He was the early friend of General Jackson, and intimate with him when he was a senator in Congress under the administration of the elder Mr. Adams; and was able to tell Congress and the world who he was when he began to astonish Europe and America by his victories. He was the kind observer of the conduct of young men, encouraging them by judicious commendation when he saw them making efforts to become useful and respectable, and never noting their faults. He was just in all things, and in that most difficult of all things, judging political opponents,-to whom he would do no wrong, not merely in word or act, but in thought. He spoke frequents ich the civil e, and the farered as much ed against the modern revonty acts, and em (for many eep-rooted, inno machinery he broad sense ty in the people party sense, as al administra ıd against latistitution. He neved sense of e was concernv in all his soeedings which ve a strong inamilton, whom c; and utterly ement proposed politically opashington, adgh qualities of pected the emi-1e. He had afd Monroe; but 'ull and perfect can statesman. ial and political Mr. Randolph is ects their names of their friends, ustice. He was on, and intimate tor in Congress der Mr. Adams; d the world who rish Europe and was the kind obmen, encouragdation when he come useful and heir faults. He nat most difficult 1 opponents,-to z, not merely in e spoke frequent

point, and briefly

and wisely; and was one of those speakers which Mr. Jefferson described Dr. Franklin to have been—a speaker of no pretension and great performance,—who spoke more good sense while he was getting up out of his chair, and getting back into it, than many others did in long discourses; and he suffered no reporter to dress up a speech for him.

He was above the pursuit of wealth, but also above dependence and idleness; and, like an old Roman of the elder Cato's time, worked in the fields at the head of his slaves in the intervals of public duty; and did not cease this labor until advancing age rendered him unable to stand the hot sun of summer—the only season of the year when senatorial duties left him at liberty to follow the plough, or handle the hoe. I think it was the summer of 1817,—that was the last time (he told me) he tried it, and found the sun too hot for him—then sixty years of age, a senator, and the refuser of all office. How often I think of him, when I see at Washington robustious men going through a scene of supplication, tribulation, and degradation, to obtain office, which the salvation of the soul does not impose upon the vilest sinner! His fields, his flocks, and his herds yielded an ample supply of domestic productions. A small crop of tobacco—three hogsheads when the season was good, two when bad -purchased the exotics which comfort and necessity required, and which the farm did not produce. He was not rich, but rich enough to dispense hospitality and charity, to receive all guests in his house, from the President to the day laborer-no other title being necessary to enter his house but that of an honest man; rich enough to bring up his family (two daughters) as accomplished ladies, and marry them to acomplished gentlemen—one to William Martin, Esq., the other to William Eaton, Esq., of Roanoke, my early school-fellow and friend for more than half a century; and, above all, he was rich mough to pay as he went, and never to owe a dollar to any man.

He was steadfast in his friendships, and would stake himself for a friend, but would violate no point of public duty to please or oblige him. Of this his relations with Mr. Randolph gave a sigal instance. He drew a knife to defend him in the theatre at Philadelphia, when menaced by some naval and military officers for words professions; yet, when speaker of the House of Representatives, he displaced Mr. Randolph from the head of the committee of ways and means, because the chairman of that committee should be on terms of political friendship with the administration,—which Mr. Randolph had then ceased to be with Mr. Jefferson's. He was above executive office, even the highest the President could give; but not above the lowest the people could give, taking that of justice of the peace in his county, and refusing that of Postmaster-General at Washington. He was opposed to nepotism, and to all quartering of his connections on the government; and in the course of his forty-years' service, with the absolute friendship of many administrations and the perfect respect of all, he never had office or contract for any of his blood. He refused to be a candidate for the vice-presidency, but took the place of elector on the Van Buren ticket in 1836. He was against paper money and the paper system, and was accustomed to present the strong argument against both in the simple phrase, that this was a hard-money government, made by hard-money men, who had seen the evil of papermoney, and meant to save their posterity from it. He was opposed to securityships, and held that no man ought to be entangled in the affairs of another, and that the interested parties alone -those who expected to find their profit in the transaction-should bear the bad consequences, as well as enjoy the good ones, of their own dealings. He never called any one "friend" without being so; and never expressed faith in the honor and integrity of a man without acting up to the declaration when the occasion required it. Thus, in constituting his friend Weldon N. Edwards, Esq., his testamentary and sole executor, with large discretionary powers, he left all to his honor, and forbid him to account to any court or power for the manner in which he should execute that trust. This prohibition was so characteristic, and so honorable to both parties, and has been so well justified by the event, that I give it in his own words, as copied from his will, to wit:

"I subjoin the following, in my own handwriting, as a codicil to this my last will and testament, and direct that it be a part thereof—that is to say, having full faith in the honor and inpoken in debate, and deemed offensive to their be held to account to any court or power whattegrity of my executor above named, he shall not ever for the discharge of the trust confided by me to him in and by the foregoing will."

And the event has proved that his judgment, as always, committed no mistake when it bestowed that confidence. He had his peculiaritiesidiosyncracies, if any one pleases—but they were born with him, suited to him, constituting a part of his character, and necessary to its completeness. He never subscribed to charities, but gave, and freely, according to his means—the left hand not knowing what the right hand did. He never subscribed for new books, giving as a reason to the soliciting agent, that nobody purchased his tobacco until it was inspected; and he could buy no book until he had examined it. He would not attend the Congress Presidential Caucus of 1824, although it was sure to nominate his own choice (Mr. Crawford); and, when a reason was wanted, he gave it in the brief answer that he attended one once and they cheated him, and he had said that he would never attend another. He always wore the same dress-that is to say, a suit of the same material, cut, and color, superfine navy blue—the whole suit from the same piece, and in the fashion of the time of the Revolution; and always replaced by a new one before it showed age. He was neat in his person, always wore fine linen, a fine cambrid stock, a fine fur hat with a brim to it, fair topboots-the boot outside of the pantaloons, on the principle that leather was stronger than cloth. He would wear no man's honors, and when complimented on the report on the Panama mission, which, as chairman of the committee on foreign relations, he had presented to the Senate, he would answer, "Yes; it is a good report; Tazewell wrote it." Left to himself, he was ready to take the last place, and the lowest seat any where; but in his representative capacity he would suffer no derogation of a constitutional or of a popular right. Thus, when Speaker of itself with this discharge of historical duty to his the House, and a place behind the President's memory.

Secretaries had been assigned him in some ceremony, he disregarded the programme; and, as the elect of the elect of all the people, took his place next after those whom the national vote had elected. And in 1803, on the question to change the form of voting for President and Vice-President, and the vote wanting one of the constitutional number of two thirds, he resisted the rule of the House which restricted the speaker's vote to a tie, or to a vote which would make a tie,-claimed his constitutional right to vote as a member, obtained it, gave the vote made the two thirds, and carried the amendment. And, what may well be deemed idiosyncratic in these days, he was punctual in the performance of all his minor duties to the Senate attending its sittings to the moment, attending all the committees to which he was appointed attending all the funerals of the members and officers of the Houses, always in time at every place where duty required him; and refusing double mileage for one travelling, when elected from the House of Representatives to the Senate, or summoned to an extra session. He was an habitual reader and student of the Bible a pious and religious man, and of the "Baptist persuasion," as he was accustomed to express it.

I have a pleasure in recalling the recollections of this wise, just, and good man, and in writing them down, not without profit, I hope, to rising generations, and at least as extending the knowledge of the kind of men to whom we are indebted for our independence, and for the form of government which they established for us. Mr. Macon was the real Cincinnatus of America, the pride and ornament of my native State, my hereditary friend through four generations, my mentor in the first seven years of my senatorial, and the last seven of his senatorial life; and a feeling of gratitude and of filial affection mingles

ADMINIST

CHAPTER

COMMENCEMENT OF GENERAL MINISTRATION

On the 4th of March, 1829, the was inaugurated, with the us and delivered the address which occasion; and which, like all of general declaration of the politic which the new administration w The general terms in which suc necessarily conceived preclude th minute practical views, and leav events the qualification of the gener Such declarations are always in the grounds upon which the ne election had been made, and gener to his supporters, without being re opponents; harmony and concilia special object with every new a & of General Jackson's inaugur. this occasion. It was a general c eratic principles; but of which a fe will bear reproduction in this we ether new and strong, or a revival principles, of late neglected. Thus: man his election had been deprecate leading to a military administration tary he thus expressed himself on of standing armies, and subordinal military to the civil authority: " standing armies as dangerous to f ment in time of peace, I shall not a large our present establishment; no mme; and, as ople, took his national vote e question to resident and ng one of the ls, he resisted estricted the which would ional right to ave the vote, I the amendemed idiosynial in the perto the Senate, ent, attending ras appointed, the members vs in time at him; and reavelling, when ntatives to the a session. He t of the Bible, the "Baptist d to express it. ie recollections nd in writing hope, to rising ing the knowwe are indebtthe form of d for us. Mr. f America, the State, my hemerations, my my senatorial, cal duty to his

al life; and a

ection mingles

in some cere-

ADMINISTRATION OF ANDREW JACKSON.

CHAPTER XL.

COMMENCEMENT OF GENERAL JACKSON'S AD-MINISTRATION.

Ov the 4th of March, 1829, the new President was inaugurated, with the usual ceremonies, and delivered the address which belongs to the occasion; and which, like all of its class, was a general declaration of the political principles by which the new administration would be guided. The general terms in which such addresses are necessarily conceived preclude the possibility of minute practical views, and leave to time and events the qualification of the general declarations. Such declarations are always in harmony with the grounds upon which the new President's election had been made, and generally agreeable to his supporters, without being repulsive to his opponents; harmony and conciliation being an especial object with every new administration. So of General Jackson's inaugural address on this occasion. It was a general chart of democratic principles; but of which a few paragraphs will bear reproduction in this work, as being either new and strong, or a revival of good old principles, of late neglected. Thus: as a military man his election had been deprecated as possibly leading to a military administration: on the contrary he thus expressed himself on the subject of standing armies, and subordination of the military to the civil authority: "Considering standing armies as dangerous to free government, in time of peace, I shall not seek to en-

that salutary lesson of political experience which teaches that the military should be held subordinate to the civil power." On the cardinal doctrine of economy, and freedom from public debt, he said: "Under every aspect in which it can be considered, it would appear that advantage must result from the observance of a strict and faithful economy. This I shall aim at the more anxiously, both because it will facilitate the extinguishment of the national debt-the unnecessary duration of which is incompatible with real independence; - and because it will counteract that tendency to public and private profligacy which a profuse expenditure of money by the government is but too apt to engender." Reform of abuses and non-interference with elections, were thus enforced: "The recent demonstration of public sentiment inscribes, on the list of executive duties, in characters too legible to b overlooked, the task of reform, which will require, particularly, the correction of those abuses that have brought the patronage of the federal government into conflict with the freedom of elections." The oath of office was administered by the venerable Chief Justice, Marshall, to whom that duty had belonged for about thirty years. The Senate, according to custom, having been convened in extra session for the occasion, the cabinet appointments were immediately sent in and confirmed. They were, Martin Van Buren, of New-York, Secretary of State (Mr. James A. Hamilton, of New-York, son of the late General Hamilton, being charged with the duties of the office until Mr. Van Buren could enter upon large our present establishment; nor disregard | them); Samuel D. Ingham, of Pennsylvania,

McDuffie, William T. Nuck

9.
GEORGIA—Thomas F. I Haynes, Wilson Lumpkin,
Wiley Thompson, Richard 1

Wayne—7.
KENTUCKY—James Clark
Thomas Chilton, Henry Dan
R. M. Johnson, John Kinkai
Chittenden Lyon, Robert I
A. Wickliffe, Joel Yancey—1

Tennessee—John Blair, Crockett, Robert Desha, Jac Johnson, Pryor Lea, James Standifer—9.

Standier—9.

Ohio—Mordecai Bartley, William Creighton, James I Goodenow, Wm. W. Irwin, W.
Russell, William Stanberry, Ja
Thomson, Joseph Vance, Sa
Elisha Whittlesey—14.

LOUISIANA—Henry H. Gurton, Edward D. White—3.
INDIANA—Ratliff Boon, Jon John Test—3.

ALABAMA—R. E. B. Baylor, on H. Lewis.—3.

Mississippi—Thomas Hinds— Illinois—Joseph Duncan— Missouri—Spencer Pettis—1

DELEGATES

Michigan Territory—John Arkansas Territory—A. H. Florida Territory—Joseph

Andrew Stevenson, of Virginia speaker of the House, receiving 1 191; and he classing politically Jackson, this large vote in his small one against him (and that thrown away on several different didates), announced a pervading see the people, in harmony with the proton—and showing that political not military glare, had produced election.

CHAPTER XL

TEST ANNUAL MESSAGE OF GENER TO THE TWO HOUSES OF CONC

fur first annual message of a neling always a recommendation

Secretary of the Treasury; John H. Eaton, of Tennessee, Secretary at War; John Branch, of North Carolina, Secretary of the Navy; John M. Berrien, of Georgia, Attorney General; William T. Barry, of Kentucky, Postmaster General; those who constituted the late cabinet, under Mr. Adams, only one of them. (Mr. John McLean, the Postmaster General.) classed politically with General Jackson; and a vacancy having occurred on the bench of the Supreme Court by the death of Mr. Justice Trimble, of Kentucky, Mr. McLean was appointed to fill it; and a further vacancy soon after occurring, the death of Mr. Justice Bushrod Washington (nephew of General Washington), Mr. Henry Baldwin, of Pennsylvania, was appointed in his place. The Twenty-first Congress dated the commencement of its legal existence on the day of the commencement of the new administration, and its members were as follows:

SENATE.

Maine—John Holmes, Peleg Sprague. New Hampshire—Samuel Bell, Levi Woodbury.

Massachusetts—Nathaniel Silsbee, Daniel Webster.

CONNECTICUT—Samuel A. Foot, Calvin Willey.
RHODE ISLAND—Nehemiah R. Knight, Asher Robbins.

VERMONT—Dudley Chase, Horatio Seymour. New-York—Nathan Sanford, Charles E. Dud-

New Jersey—Theodore Frelinghuysen, Mahlon Dickerson.

Pennsylvania—William Marks, Isaac D. Barnard.

Delaware—John M. Clayton, (Vacant.)
Maryland—Samuel Smith, Ezekiel F. Chambers.

VIRGINIA—L. W. Tazewell, John Tyler. NORTH CAROLINA—James Iredell, (Vacant.) SOUTH CAROLINA—William Smith, Robert Y. Hayne.

Georgia—George M. Troup, John Forsyth. Kentucky—John Rowan, George M. Bibb. Tennessee—Hugh L. White, Felix Grundy. Ohio—Benjamin Ruggles, Jacob Burnet. Louisiana—Josiah S. Johnston, Edward Liv-

INDIANA—William Hendricks, James Noble.
MISSISSIPPI—Powhatan Ellis, (Vacant.)
ILLINOIS—Elias K. Kane, John McLane.
ALABAMA—John McKinley, William R. King.
MISSOURI—David Barton, Thomas H. Benton.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MAINE—John Anderson, Samuel Butman, George Evans, Rufus McIntire, James W. Ripley, Joseph F. Wingate—6. (One vacant.) New Hampshire—John Brodhead, Thomas Chandler, Jossph Hammons, Jonathan Harvey. Henry Hubbard, John W. Weeks—6.

Massachusetts—John Bailey, Issac C. Bates B. W. Crowninshield, John Davis, Henry W. Dwight, Edward Everett, Benjamin Gorham, George Grennell, jr., James L. Hodges, Joseph G. Kendall, John Reed, Joseph Richardson, John Varnum—13.

RHODE ISLAND—Tristam Burgess, Dutee J. Pearce—2.

CONNECTICUT—Noyes Barber, Wm. W. Ellsworth, J. W. Huntington, Ralph J. Ingersoll, W. L. Storrs. Eben Young —6.

VERMONT—William Cahoon, Horace Everett, Jonathan Hunt, Rollin C. Mallary, Benjamin Swift—5.

New-York—William G. Angel, Benedict Arnold, Thomas Beckman, Abraham Bockee, Peter I. Borst, C. C. Cambreleng, Jacob Crocheron, Timothy Childs, Henry B. Cowles, Hector Craig, Charles G. Dewitt, John D. Dickinson, Jonas Earll, jr., George Fisher, Isaac Finch, Michael Hoffman, Joseph Hawkins, Jehiel H. Halsey, Perkins King, James W. Lent, John Magee, Henry C. Martindale, Robert Monell, Thomas Maxwell, E. Norton, Gershom Powers, Robert S. Rose, Henry R. Storrs, James Strong, Ambrose Spencer, John W. Taylor, Phineas L. Tracy, Gulian. C. Verplanck, Campbell P. White—34.

New Jersey—Lewis Condict, Richard M. Cooper, Thomas H. Hughes, Isaac Pierson, James F. Randolph, Samuel Swa<sub>II</sub>—6.

Pennsylvania—James Buchanan, Richard Coulter, Thomas H. Crawford, Joshua Evans, Chauncey Forward, Joseph Fry, jr., James Ford, Innes Green, John Gilmore, Joseph Hemphill, Peter Ihrie, jr., Thomas Irwin, Adam King, George G. Leiper, H. A. Muhlenburg, Alem Marr, Daniel H. Miller, William McCreery, William Ramsay, John Scott, Philander Stephens, John B. Sterigere, Joel B. Sutherland, Samuel Smith. Thomas H. Sill—25. (One vacant.)

Delaware—Kensy Johns, jr.—1.
Maryland—Elias Brown, Clement Dorsey,
Benjamin C. Howard, George E. Mitchell, Michael C. Sprigg, Benedict I. Semmes, Richard Spencer, George C. Washington, Ephraim K.
Wilson—9.

VIRGINIA—Mark Alexander, Robert Allen, Wm. S. Archer, Wm. Armstrong, jr., John S. Barbour, Philip P. Barbour, J. T. Boulding, Richard Coke, jr., Nathaniel H. Claiborne, Robert B. Craig, Philip Doddridge, Thomas Davenport, William F. Gordon, Lewis Maxwell, Charles F. Mercer, William McCoy, Thomas Newton, John Roane, Alexander Smyth, Andrew Stevenson, John Taliaferro, James Trezvant—22.

NORTH CAROLINA—Willis Alston, Daniel L. Barringer, Samuel P. Carson, H. W. Conner, Edmund Deberry, Edward B. Dudley, Thomas H. Hall, Robert Potter, William B. Shepard, Augustine H. Shepperd, Jesse Speight, Lewis Williams—12. (One vacant.)

dhead, Thomas nathan Harvey.

Issac C. Bates vis, Henry W. amin Gorham, Hodges, Joseph ph Richardson, gess, Dutee J.

Wm. W. Ells-

Horace Everett, lary, Benjamin

el, Benedict Arn Bockee, Peter cob Crocheron, Hector Craig, ickinson, Jonas h, Michael Hoff-Halsey, Perkins agee, Henry C. Ias Maxwell, E. t S. Rose, Henbrose Spencer, acy, Gulian. C.

-34. t, Richard M. Isaac Pierson, m-6.

nanan, Richard Joshua Evans, jr., James Ford, seph Hemphill, ı, Adam King, ilenburg, Alem McCreery, Winer Stephens, erland, Samuel me vacant.)

> -1. lement Dorsey, 5. Mitchell, Miemmes, Richard 1, Ephraim K.

Robert Allen, g, jr., John S. T. Boulding, H. Claiborne, Iridge, Thomas I, Lewis Maxilliam McCoy, exander Smyth, iaferro, James

ston, Daniel L. I. W. Conner, Dudley, Thomas im B. Shepard, Speight, Lewis

South Carolina—Robert W. Barnwell, James Blair, John Campbell, Warren R. Davis, William Drayton, William D. Martin, George McDuffle, William T. Nuckolls, Starling Tucker

Georgia—Thomas F. Forster, Charles E. Haynes, Wilson Lumpkin, Henry G. Lamar, Wiley Thompson, Richard H. Wilde, James M. Wayne—7.

KENTUCKY—James Clark, N. D. Coleman, Thomas Chilton, Henry Daniel, Nathan Gaither, R. M. Johnson, John Kinkaid, Joseph Lecompte, Chittenden Lyon, Robert P. Letcher, Charles A. Wickliffe, Joel Yancey—12.

TENNESSEE—John Blair, John Bell, David Crockett, Robert Desha, Jacob C. Isacks, Cave Johnson, Pryor Lea, James K. Polk, James Standifer—9.

OHIO—Mordecai Bartley, Joseph H. Crane, William Creighton, James Findlay, John M. Goodenow, Wm. W. Irwin, Wm. Kennon, Wm. Russell, William Stanberry, James Shields, John Thomson, Joseph Vance, Samuel F. Vinton, Elisha Whittlesey—14.

LOUISIANA—Henry H. Gurley, W. H. Overton, Edward D. White—3.

INDIANA—Ratliff Boon, Jonathan Jennings, John Test -3.

ALABAMA—R. E. B. Baylor, C. C. Clay, Dixon H. Lewis.—3.
MISSISSIPPI—Thomas Hinds—1.

ILLINOIS—Joseph Duncan—1.
Missouri—Spencer Pettis—1.

DELEGATES.

Michigan Territory—John Biddle—1.
Arkansas Territory—A. H. Sevier—1.
Florida Territory—Joseph M. White—1.

Andrew Stevenson, of Virginia, was re-elected speaker of the House, receiving 152 votes out of 191; and he classing politically with General Jackson, this large vote in his favor, and the small one against him (and that scattered and thrown away on several different names not candidates), announced a pervading sentiment among the people, in harmony with the presidential election—and showing that political principles, and not military glare, had produced the G neral's election.

CHAPTER XLI.

MRST ANNUAL MESSAGE OF GENERAL JACKSON TO THE TWO HOUSES OF CONGRESS.

The first annual message of a new President, election bing always a recommendation of practical proper.

measures, is looked to with more interest than the inaugural address, confined as this latter must be, to a declaration of general principles. That of General Jackson, delivered the 8th of December, 1829, was therefore anxiously looked for; and did not disappoint the public expectation. It was strongly democratic, and contained many recommendations of a nature to simplify, and purify the working of the government, and to carry it back to the times of Mr. Jefferson to promote its economy and efficiency, and to maintain the rights of the people, and of the States in its administration. On the subject of electing a President and Vice-President of the United States, he spoke thus:

"I consider it one of the most urgent of my duties to bring to your attention the propriety of amending that part of our Constitution which relates to the election of President and Vice-President. Our system of government was, by its framers, deemed an experiment; and they, therefore, consistently provided a mode of remedying its defects.

"To the people belongs the right of electing their chief magistrate: it was never designed that their choice should, in any case, be defeated, either by the intervention of electoral colleges, or by the agency confided, under certain contingencies, to the House of Representatives. Experience proves, that, in proportion as agents to execute the will of the people are multiplied, there is danger of their wishes being frustrated. Some may be unfaithful: all are liable to err. So far, therefore, as the people can, with convenience, speak, it is safer for them to express their own will.

"In this, as in all other matters of public concern, policy requires that as few impediments as possible should exist to the free operation of the public will. Let us, then, endeavor so to amend our system, as that the office of chief magistrate may not be conferred upon any citizen but in pursuance of a fair expression of the will of the majority.

"I would therefore recommend such an amendment of the constitution as may remove all intermediate agency in the election of President and Vice-President. The mode may be so regulated as to preserve to each State its present relative weight in the election; and a failure in the first attempt may be provided for, by confining the second to a choice between the two highest candidates. In connection with such an amendment, it would seem advisable to limit the service of the chief magistrate to a single term. of either four or six years. If, however, it should not be adopted, it is worthy of consideration whether a provision disqualifying for office the Representatives in Congress on whom such an election may have devolved, would not be

This recommendation in relation to our election system has not yet been carried into effect, though doubtless in harmony with the principles of our government, necessary to prevent abuses, and now generally demanded by the voice of the people. But the initiation of amendments to the federal constitution is too far removed from the people. It is in the hands of Congress and of the State legislatures; but even there an almost impossible majority—that of two thirds of each House, or two thirds of the State legislaturesis required to commence the amendment; and a still more difficult majority-that of three fourths of the States-to complete it. Hitherto all attempts to procure the desired amendment has failed; but the friends of that reform should not despair. The great British parliamentary reform was only obtained after forty years of annual motions in parliament; and forty years of organized action upon the public mind through societies, clubs, and speeches; and the incessant action of the daily and periodical press. In the meantime events are becoming more impressive advocates for this amendment than any language could be. The selection of President has gone from the hands of the people—usurped by irresponsible and nearly self-constituted bodies-in which the selection becomes the result of a juggle, conducted by a few adroit managers, who baffle the nomination until they are able to govern it, and to substitute their own will for that of the people. Perhaps another example is not upon earth of a free people voluntarily relinquishing the elective franchise, in a case so great as that of electing their own chief magistrate, and becoming the passive followers of an irresponsible body-juggled, and baffled, and governed by a few dextrous contrivers, always looking to their own interest in the game which they play in putting down and putting up men. Certainly the convention system, now more unfair and irresponsible than the exploded congress caucus system, must eventually share the same fate, and be consigned to oblivion and disgrace. In the meantime the friends of popular election should press the constitutional amendment which would give the Presidential election to the people, and discard the use of an intermediate body which disregards the public will and reduces the people to the condition of political automatons.

Closely allied to this proposed reform was another recommended by the President in rela- the great days of Jefferson and his compeers

tion to members of Congress, and to exclude them generally from executive appointments: and especially from appointments conferred by the President for whom they voted. The evil is the same whether the member votes in the House of Representatives when the election goes to that body, or votes and manages in a Congress caucus, or in a nominating convention. The act in either case opens the door to corrupt practices: and should be prevented by legal, or constitutional enactments, if it cannot be restrained by the feelings of decorum, or repressed by public opinion. On this point the message thus recommended:

"While members of Congress can be constitutionally appointed to offices of trust and profit. it will be the practice, even under the most conscientious adherence to duty, to select them for such stations as they are believed to be better qualified to fill than other citizens; but the purity of our government would doubtless be promoted by their exclusion from all appointments in the gift of the President in whose election they may have been officially concerned. The nature of the judicial office, and the necessity of securing in the cabinet and in diplomatic stations of the highest rank, the best talents and political experience, should, perhaps, except these from the exclusion.

On the subject of a navy, the message contained sentiments worthy of the democracy in its early day, and when General Jackson was a member of the United States Senate. The republican party had a POLICY then in respect to a navy: it was, a navy for DEFENCE, instead of conquest; and limited to the protection of our coasts and commerce. That policy was impressively set forth in the celebrated instructions to the Virginia senators in the year 1800, in which it was said:

"With respect to the navy, it may be proper to remind you that whatever may be the proposed object of its establishment, or whatever may be the prospect of temporary advantages resulting therefrom, it is demonstrated by the experience of all nations, who have ventured far into naval policy, that such prospect is ultimately delusive; and that a navy has ever in practice been known more as an instrument of power, a source of expense, and an occasion of collisions and wars with other nations, than as an instrument of defence, of economy, or of protection to

These were the doctrines of the republican party, in the early stage of our government-in

We had a policy then—the 1 judgment, and of experience and not for conquest: and finable to a limited number of their defensive object-ins aiming at the dominion of the was overthrown by the su combats during the war; and navy became popular, withou of its cost and consequence good fighting did it, withou effect on the military policy. well also, and excited admir. subverting the policy which i armies in time of peace. down in peace: the navy w peace. In this condition found the two branches of the reduced by two successive large body to a very small one although illustrated with mili fusing to recommend an army from a small one during the w during the peace-gradual in ship-building the active pro down the active effect; and th going on for near forty years to his army policy was that of son in relation to the navy pause in the process of ship-b rotting. He recommended a the further building of vessels second class-ships of the lir with a collection of materials and the limitation of our naval ject of commercial protection. include coast defence, his ex shown him that the men on she the land. In a word, he recom policy; and that was the sam publicans of 1798 had adopted, ginia made obligatory upon 1800; and which, under the victories, had yielded to the bli and endless operation of build peaceful ships of war. He said

"In time of peace, we have n ships of war than are requisite t of our commerce. Those not object must lay in the harbors, proper covering, they rapidly de under the best precautions for tion, must soon become useless.

and to exclude appointments; ts conferred by voted. The evil per votes in the the election goes es in a Congress ention. The act prrupt practices; gal, or constitube restrained by ressed by public sage thus recom-

s can be constitrust and profit. er the most conselect them for ed to be better tizens; but the ld doubtless be rom all appointit in whose elecconcerned. The d the necessity 1 diplomatic stapest talents and aps, except these

e message condemocracy in its Jackson was a enate. The reen in respect to ENCE, instead of protection of our policy was imated instructions ie year 1800, in may be proper nay be the pront, or whatever rary advantages nstrated by the we ventured far pect is ultimateever in practice ment of power, sion of collisions n as an instruof protection to > the republican government-in his compeers.

We had a policy then—the result of thought, of indement, and of experience: a navy for defence, and not for conquest: and, consequently, confinable to a limited number of ships, adequate to their defensive object-instead of thousands, aiming at the dominion of the seas. That policy was overthrown by the success of our naval combats during the war; and the idea of a great navy became popular, without any definite view of its cost and consequences. Admiration for good fighting did it, without having the same effect on the military policy. Our army fought well also, and excited admiration; but without subverting the policy which interdicted standing armies in time of peace. The army was cut down in peace: the navy was building up in peace. In this condition President Jackson found the two branches of the service—the army reduced by two successive reductions from a large body to a very small one-6000 men-and although illustrated with military glory yet refusing to recommend an army increase: the navy, from a small one during the war, becoming large during the peace-gradual increase the lawship-building the active process, and rotting down the active effect; and thus we have been going on for near forty years. Correspondent to his army policy was that of President Jackson in relation to the navy; he proposed a pause in the process of ship-building and shiprotting. He recommended a total cessation of the further building of vessels of the first and second class-ships of the line, and frigateswith a collection of materials for future useand the limitation of our naval policy to the object of commercial protection. He did not even include coast defence, his experience having shown him that the men on shore could defend the land. In a word, he recommended a naval

"In time of peace, we have need of no more ships of war than are requisite to the protection of our commerce. Those not wanted for this object must lay in the harbors, where, without proper covering, they rapidly decay; and, even under the best precautions for their preservapolicy; and that was the same which the republicans of 1798 had adopted, and which Virginia made obligatory upon her senators in 1800; and which, under the blaze of shining victories, had yielded to the blind, and aimless, and endless operation of building and rotting peaceful ships of war. He said:

the case with many of our finest vessels; which, though unfinished, will now require immense sums of money to be restored to the condition in which they were, when committed to their proper element. On this subject there can be but little doubt that our best policy would be, to discontinue the building of ships of the first and second class, and look rather to the possession of ample materials, prepared for the emergencies of war, than to the number of vessels which we can float in a season of peace, as the index of our naval power."

This was written twenty years ago, and by a President who saw what he described-many of our finest ships going to decay before they were finished-demanding repairs before they had sailed-and costing millions for which there was no return. We have been going on at the same rate ever since—building, and rotting, and sinking millions; but little to show for forty years of ship-carpentry; and that little nothing to do but to cruise where there is nothing to catch, and to carry out ministers to foreign courts who are not quite equal to the Franklins, Adamses and Jeffersons-the Pinckneys, Rufus Kings, and Marshalls-the Clays, Gallatins and Bayards-that went out in common merchant vessels. Mr. Jefferson told me that this would be the case twenty-five years ago when naval glory overturned national policy, and when a navy board was created to facilitate ship-construction. But this is a subject which will require a chapter of its own, and is only incidentally mentioned now to remark that we have no policy with respect to a navy, and ought to have one-that there is no middle point between defence and conquest-and no sequence to a conquering navy but wars with the world, -and the debt, taxes, pension list, and pauper list of Great Britain.

The mutility of a Bank of the United States as a furnisher of a sound and uniform currency, and of questionable origin under our constitution, was thus stated:

"The charter of the Bank of the United States expires in 1836, and its stockholders will most probably apply for a renewal of their privileges. In order to avoid the evils resulting from precipitancy in a measure involving such important principles, and such deep pecuniary interests, I feel that I cannot, in justice to the parties interested, too soon present it to the deliberate consideration of the legislature and the people. Both the constitutionality and the expediency of the law creating this bank, are well questioned by a large portion of our fellow-citizens; tion, must soon become useless. Such is already and it must be admitted by all, that it has failed in the great end of establishing a uniform and sound currency."

This is the clause which party spirit, and bank tactics, perverted at the time (and which has gone into history), into an attack upon the bank-a war upon the bank-with a bad motive attributed for a war so wanton. At the same time nothing could be more fair, and just, and more in consonance with the constitution which requires the President to make the legislative recommendations which he believes to be proper. It was notice to all concerned—the bank on one side, and the people on the other-that there would be questions, and of high importconstitutionality and expediency-if the present corporators, at the expiration of their charter. should apply for a renewal of their privileges. It was an intimation against the institution, not against its administrators, to whom a compliment was paid in another part of the same message, in ascribing to the help of their "judicious arrangement" the averting of the mercantile pressure which might otherwise have resulted from the sudden withdrawal of the twelve and a half millions which had just been taken from the bank and applied to the payment of the public debt. But of this hereafter. The receipts and expenditures were stated, respectively, for the preceding year, and estimated for the current year, the former at a Graction over twenty-four and a half millionsthe latter a fraction over twenty-six millions-with large balances in the treasury, exhibiting the constant financial paradox, so difficult to be understood, of permanent annual balances with an even, or even deficient revenue. The passage of the message is in these words:

"The balance in the treasury on the 1st of January, 1829, was five millions nine hundred and seventy-two thousand four hundred and thirty-five dollars and eighty-one cents. The receipts of the current year are estimated at twenty-four millions, six hundred and two thousand, two hundred and thirty dollars, and the expenditures for the same time at twenty-six millions one hundred and sixty-four thousand five hundred and ninety-five dollars; leaving a balance in the treasury on the 1st of January next, of four millions four hundred and ten thousand and seventy dollars, eighty-one cents."

Other recommendations contained the sound democratic doctrines—speedy and entire extinction of the public debt—reduction of custom-house duties—equal and fair incidental protection to the great national interests (agriculture, manufactures and commerce)—the disconnection of politics and tariffs—and the duty of retrenchment by discontinuing and abolishing all useless offices. In a word, it was a message of the old republican school, in which President Jackson had been bred; and from which he had never departed; and which encouraged the young disciples of democracy, and consoled the old surviving fathers of that school.

CHAPTER XLII.

THE RECOVERY OF THE DIRECT TRADE WITH THE BRITISH WEST INDIA ISLANDS.

THE recovery of this trade had been a large object with the American government from the time of its establishment. As British colonies we enjoyed it before the Revolution; as revolted colonies we lost it; and as an independent nation we sought to obtain it again. The position of these islands, so near to our ports and shores -the character of the exports they received from us, being almost entirely the product of our farms and forests, and their large amount always considerable, and of late some four millions of dollars per annum—the tropical productions which we received in return, and the large employment it gave to our navigationall combined to give a cherished value to this branch of foreign trade, and to stimulate our government to the greatest exertions to obtain and secure its enjoyment; and with the advantage of being carried on by our own vessels. But these were objects not easily attainable and never accomplished until the administration of President Jackson. All powers are jealous of alien intercourse with their colonies, and have a natural desire to retain colonial trade in their own hands, both for commercial and political reasons; and have a perfect right to do so if they please. Partial and conditional admission to trade with their colonies, or total exclusion from them, is in the discretion of the mother country; and any participation in their trade by virtue of treaty stipulations or legislative enactment, is the result of concession-generally founded in a sense of self-interest, or at best in a calculation of mutual advantage. No less than six negotiations (besides several attempts at "concerted legislation") had been carried on hetween the United States ar this subject; and all, until t General Jackson's administr nothing more than limited year, or for short terms; as pled with conditions which lege. It was a primary obje General Washington's admi knowledge of the action then dates both the value of the ti of getting admission to its par right of Great Britain to adn joyment to others. General practical knowledge on the s seen it enjoyed, and lost-er subjects, lost as revolted co pendent states-and knew its the use and the loss, and was recover it. It was almost the foreign relations, to which he 1 becoming President; and liter his hand to it. For as early as tober, 1789-just six months af tion-in a letter of unofficial ins Gouverneur Morris, then in with his own hand (requesting the British government on the s mercial treaty with the United that he made was to ascertain tl lation to allowing us the "pri trada. Privilege was his word, tion ran thus: "Let it be stro on your mind that the privilege ( productions in our own vessels to and bringing, in return, the produ islands to our ports and marke here as of the highest importance. It was a prominent point in our potiation with Great Britain in instructions to Mr. Jay, in May shows that admission to the tr only asked as a privilege, as in and upon terms of limitation a This is so material to the right of this question, and to the future case and especially of a debate and Senate, of which President Jacks tions through Mr. Van Buren on t jet was made the occasion, that I to give the instructions of Preside ton to Mr. Jay in his own words.

uty of retrenchshing all useless ssage of the old esident Jackson h he had never d the young disthe old surviv-

III.

OT TRADE WITH A ISLANDS.

been a large obnment from the British colonies tion; as revolted independent nan. The position ports and shores ts they received the product of r large amount. some four milhe tropical proreturn, and the our navigationed value to this to stimulate our rtions to obtain with the advanour own vessels. asily attainable ne administration wers are jealous olonies, and have ial trade in their ial and political ight to do so if itional admission r total exclusion n of the mother n in their trade as or legislative ression-generalterest, or at best antage. No less several attempts

been carried on

between the United States and Great Britain on this subject; and all, until the second year of General Jackson's administration, resulting in nothing more than limited concessions for a year, or for short terms; and sometimes coupled with conditions which nullified the privilege. It was a primary object of concern with General Washington's administration; and a knowledge of the action then had upon it elucidates both the value of the trade, the difficulty of getting admission to its participation, and the right of Great Britain to admit or deny its enjoyment to others. General Washington had practical knowledge on the subject. He had seen it enjoyed, and lost-enjoyed as British subjects, lost as revolted colonies and independent states-and knew its value, both from the use and the loss, and was most anxious to recover it. It was almost the first thing, in our foreign relations, to which he put his hand on becoming President; and literally did he put his hand to it. For as early as the 14th of October, 1789—just six months after his inauguration-in a letter of unofficial instructions to Mr. Gouverneur Morris, then in Europe, written with his own hand (requesting him to sound the British government on the subject of a commercial treaty with the United States), a point that he made was to ascertain their views in relation to allowing us the "privilege" of this trada. Privilege was his word, and the instruction ran thus: "Let it be strongly impressed on your mind that the privilege of carrying our productions in our own vessels to their islands, and bringing, in return, the productions of those islands to our ports and markets, is regarded here as of the highest importance," &c.

It was a prominent point in our very first negotiation with Great Britain in 1794; and the instructions to Mr. Jay, in May of that year, shows that admission to the trade was then only asked as a privilege, as in the year '89 and upon terms of limitation and condition. This is so material to the right understanding of this question, and to the future history of the case, and especially of a debate and vote in the Senate, of which President Jackson's instructions through Mr. Van Buren on the same subject was made the occasion, that I think it right to give the instructions of President Washington to Mr. Jay in his own words. They were these:

"If to the actual footing of our commerce and navigation in the British European dominions could be added the privilege of carrying directly from the United States to the British West Indies in our own bottoms generally, or of certain specified burthens, the articles which by the Act of Parliament, 28, Geo. III., chap. 6, may be carried thither in British bottoms, and of bringing them thence directly to the United States in American bottoms, this would afford an acceptable basis of treaty for a term not exceeding fifteen years."

An article was inserted in the treaty in conformity to these principles—our carrying vessels limited in point of burthen to seventy tons and under; the privilege limited in point of duration to the continuance of the then existing war between Great Britain and the French Republic, and to two years after its termination; and restricted in the return cargo both as to the nature of the articles and the port of their destination. These were hard terms, and precarious and the article containing them was "suspended" by the Senate in the act of ratification, in the hope to obtain better; and are only quoted here in order to show that this direct trade to the British West Indies was, from the beginning of our federal government, only sought as a privilege, to be obtained under restrictions and limitations, and subordinately to British policy and legislation. This was the end of the first negotiation; five others were had in the ensuing thirty years, besides repeated attempts at "concerted legislation "-all ending either abortively or in temporary and unsatisfactory arrange

The most important of these attempts was in the years 1822 and 1823: and as it forms an essential item in the history of this case, and shows, besides, the good policy of letting "well-enough" alone, and the great mischief of inserting an apparently harmless word in a bill of which no one sees the drift but those in the secret, I will here give its particulars, adopting for that purpose the language of senator Samuel Smith, of Maryland,—the best qualified of all our statesmen to speak on the subject, he having the practical knowledge of a merchant in addition to experience as a legislator. His statement is this:

"During the session of 1822, Congress was informed that an act was pending in Parliament for the opening of the colonial ports to the commerce of the United States. In consequence, an act was passed authorizing the President (then

Mr. Monroe), in case the act of Parliament was satisfactory to him, to open the ports of the United States to British vessels by his proclamation. The act of Parliament was deemed satisfactory, and a proclamation was accordingly issued, and the trade commenced. Unfortunately for our commerce, and I think contrary to justice, a treasury circular issued, directing the collectors to charge British vessels entering our ports with the alien tonnage and discriminating duties. This order was remonstrated against by the British minister (I think Mr. Vaughan). The trade, however, went on uninterrupted. Congress met, and a bill was drafted in 1823 by Mr. Adams, then Secretary of State, and passed both Houses, with little, if any, debate. I voted for it, believing that it met, in a spirit of reciprocity, the British act of Parliament. This bill. however, contained one little word, "elsewhere," which completely defeated all our expectations. It was noticed by no one. The senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Webster) may have understood its effect. If he did so understand it, he was silent. The effect of that word "elsewhere" was to assume the pretensions alluded to in the instructions to Mr. McLane. (Pretension to a "right" in the trade.) The result was, that the British government shut their colonial ports immediately, and thenceforward. This act of 1822 gave us a monopoly (virtually) of the West India trade. It admitted, free of duty, a variety of articles, such as Indian corn, meal, oats, peas, and beans. The British government thought we entertained a belief that they could not do without our produce, and by their acts of the 27th June and 5th July, 1825, they opened their ports to all the world, on terms far less advantageous to the United States, than those of the act of 1822."

Such is the important statement of General Smith. Mr. Webster was present at the time, and said nothing. Both these acts were clear rights on the part of Great Britain, and that of 1825 contained a limitation upon the time within which each nation was to accept the privilege it offered, or lose the trade for ever. This legislative privilege was accepted by all nations which had any thing to send to the British West Indies, except the United States. Mr. Adams did not accept the proffered privilege-undertook to negotiate for better terms-failed in the attemptand lost all. Mr. Clay was Secretary of State, Mr. Gallatin the United States Minister in London, and the instructions to him were, to insist upon it as a "right" that our produce should be admitted on the same terms on which produce from the British possessions were admitted.-This was the "elsewhere," &c. The British government refused to negotiate; and then Mr.

Gallatin was instructed to waive temporarily the demand of right, and accept the privilege offered by the act of 1825. But in the mean time the year allowed in the act for its accentance had expired, and Mr. Gallatin was told that his offer was too late! To that answer the British ministry adhered; and, from the month of July, 1826, the direct trade to the British West Indies was lost to our citizens, leaving them no mode of getting any share in that trade. either in sending out our productions or receiving theirs, but through the expensive, tedious. and troublesome process of a circuitous voyage and the intervention of a foreign vessel. The shock and dissatisfaction in the United States were extreme at this unexpected bereavement: and that dissatisfaction entered largely into the political feelings of the day, and became a point of attack on Mr. Adams's administration, and an element in the presidential canvass which ended in his defeat.

In giving an account of this untoward event to his government, Mr. Gallatin gave an account of his final interview with Mr. Huskisson, from which it appeared that the claim of "right" on the part of the United States, on which Mr. Gallatin had been instructed to "insist," was "temporarily waived;" but without effect. Irritation. on account of old scores, as expressed by Mr Gallatin-or resentment at our pertinacious persistence to secure a "right" where the rest of the world accepted a "privilege," as intimated by Mr. Huskisson-mixed itself with the refusal; and the British government adhered to its absolute right to regulate the foreign trade of its colonies, and to treat us as it did the rest of the world. The following are passages from Mr. Gallatin's dispatch, from London, September 11, 1827:

"Mr. Huskisson said it was the intention of the British government to consider the intercourse of the British colonies as being exclusively under its control, and any relaxation from the colonial system as an indulgence, to be granted on such terms as might suit the policy of Great Britain at the time it was granted. I said every question of right had, on this occasion, been waived on the part of the United States, the only object of the present inquiry being to ascertain whether, as a matter of mutual convenience, the intercourse might not be opened in a manner satisfactory to both countries. He (Mr. H.) said that it had appeared as if America had entertained the opinion that the British West Indies could no supplies; and that she migh Great Britain to open the iterms she pleased. I disclair or intention on the part of But it appeared to me, and I ito Mr. Huskisson, that he wader the influence of irritated ftof past events, than with a vicinterests of both parties."

This was Mr. Gallatin's lateries in council was issued, into the United States; and he Mr. James Barbour, Secretary to London to replace him, and the repulsed negotiation; but The British government refused tion; and thus the direct access commerce remained sealed again: Adams, at the commencement of Congress, 1827-28, formally confact to that body, and in terms of the properties of the council to the confact of the council the confact of the council the council the council to the council the

"At the commencement of the Congress, they were informed of mexpected exclusion by the Briti of access, in vessels of the United their colonial ports, except thos bordering upon our own territory

"In the amicable discussions wl ceded the adoption of this measur affected harshly the interests of the became a subject of expostulation the principles upon which its ju been placed have been of a diversit It has at once been ascribed to a me to the old long-established princip monopoly, and at the same time to resentment, because the offers of ar lament, opening the colonial ports conditions, had not been grasped at w eagerness by an instantaneous co them. At a subsequent period it h mated that the new exclusion was in because a prior act of Parliament, of ing certain colonial ports, under hea densome restrictions, to vessels of States, had not been reciprocated by son of British vessels from the co their cargoes, without any restriction mion whatever. But, be the mot interdiction what it may, the British g have manifested no disposition, either tion or by corresponding legislative e b recede from it; and we have been incly to understand that neither o which were under the consideration of it their last session, would have bee ive temporarily t the privilege t in the mean for its acceptlatin was told that answer the from the month to the British citizens, leaving re in that trade, tions or receivpensive, tedious. rcuitous voyage gn vessel. The e United States d bereavement: largely into the became a point stration, and an ss which ended > intoward event gave an account Huskisson, from of "right" on which Mr. Galist," was "temlect. Irritation, pressed by Mr ertinacious perre the rest of " as intimated f with the reent adhered to e foreign trade it did the rest passages from don, September

> > e intention of der the intereing exclusiveelaxation from algence, to be suit the policy ras granted. I on this occaof the United resent inquiry matter of mumight not be to both counad appeared as inion that the British West Indies could not exist without her supplies; and that she might, therefore, compel Great Britain to open the intercourse on any terms she pleased. I disclaimed any such belief or intention on the part of the United States. But it appeared to me, and I intimated it, indeed, to Mr. Huskisson, that he was acting rather under the influence of irritated feelings, on account of past events, than with a view to the mutual interests of both parties.'

This was Mr. Gallatin's last dispatch. An order in council was issued, interdicting the trade to the United States; and he returned home. Mr. James Barbour, Secretary at War, was sent to London to replace him, and to attempt again the repulsed negotiation; but without success. The British government refused to open the question: and thus the direct access to this valuable commerce remained sealed against us. President Adams, at the commencement of the session of Congress, 1827-28, formally communicated this fact to that body, and in terms which showed at once that an insult had been received, an injury sustained, redress refused, and ill-will established between the two governments. He said:

"At the commencement of the last session of Congress, they were informed of the sudden and unexpected exclusion by the British government. of access, in vessels of the United States, to all their colonial ports, except those immediately hordering upon our own territory

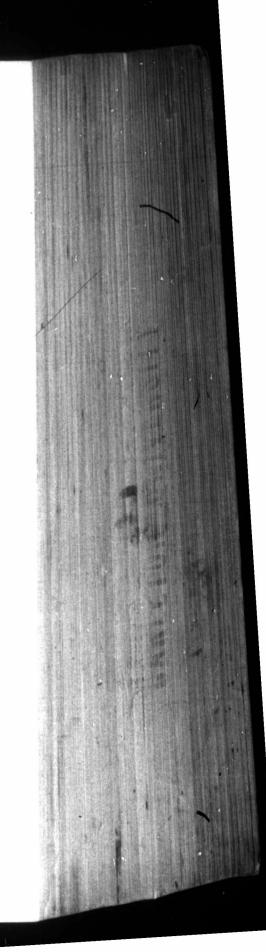

"In the amicable discussions which have sucmeded the adoption of this measure, which, as it affected harshly the interests of the United States. became a subject of expostulation on our part, the principles upon which its justification has been placed have been of a diversified character. It has at once been ascribed to a mere recurrence to the old long-established principle of colonial monopoly, and at the same time to a feeling of resentment, because the offers of an act of Parlament, opening the colonial ports upon certain conditions, had not been grasped at with sufficient eagerness by an instantaneous conformity to them. At a subsequent period it has been intimated that the new exclusion was in resentment, because a prior act of Parliament, of 1822, opening certain colonial ports, under heavy and burdensome restrictions, to vessels of the United States, had not been reciprocated by an admision of British vessels from the colonies, and their cargoes, without any restriction or discrimimation whatever. But, be the motive for the interdiction what it may, the British government have manifested no disposition, either by negotition or by corresponding legislative enactments, to recede from it; and we have been given disfinely to understand that neither of the bills which were under the consideration of Congress sufficient in their concessions to have been rewarded by any relaxation from the British interdict. The British government have not only declined negotiation upon the subject, but, by the principle they have assumed with reference to it, have precluded even the means of negotiation. It becomes not the self-respect of the United States. either to solicit gratuitous favours, or to accept, as the grant of a favor, that for which an ample equivalent is exacted."

This was the communication of Mr. Adams to Congress, and certainly nothing could be more vexatious or hopeless than the case which he presented—an injury, an insult, a rebuff, and a refusal to talk with us upon the subject. Negotiation, and the hope of it, having thus terminated, President Adams did what the laws required of him, and issued his proclamation making known to the country the total cessation of all direct commerce between the United States and the British West India Islands.

The loss of this trade was a great injury to the United States (besides the insult), and was attended by circumstances which gave it the air of punishment for something that was past. It was a rebuff in the face of Europe; for while the United States were sternly and unceremoniously cut off from the benefit of the act of 1825, for omission to accept it within the year, yet other powers in the same predicament (France, Spain and Russia) were permitted to accept after the year; and the "irritated feelings" manifested by Mr. Huskisson indicated a resentment which was finding its gratification. We were ill-treated, and felt it. The people felt it. It was an ugly case to manage, or to endure; and in this period of its worst aspect General Jackson was elected

His position was delicate and difficult. His election had been deprecated as that of a rash and violent man, who would involve us in quarrels with foreign nations; and here was a dissension with a great nation lying in wait for himprepared to his hand—the legacy of his predecessor—either to be composed satisfactorily, or to ripen into retaliation and hostility; for it was not to be supposed that things could remain as they were. He had to choose between an attempt at amicable recovery of the trade by new overtures, or retaliation-leading to, it is not known what. He determined upon the first of these alternatives, and Mr. Louis McLane, of Delaware, # their last session, would have been deemed was selected for the delicate occasion. He was sent minister to London; and in renewing an application which had been so lately and so categorically rejected, some reason had to be given for a persistance which might seem both importunate and desperate, and even deficient in selfrespect; and that reason was found in the simple truth that there had been a change of administration in the United States, and with it a change of opinion on the subject, and on the essential point of a "right" in us to have our productions admitted into her West Indies on the same terms as British productions were received; that we were willing to take the trade as a "privilege," and simply and unconditionally, under the act of Parliament of 1825. Instructions to that effect had been drawn up by Mr. Van Buren, Secretary of State, under the special directions of General Jackson, who took this early occasion to act upon his cardinal maxim in our foreign intercourse: "Ask nothing but what is right-submit to nothing wrong." This frank and candid policy had its effect. The great object was accomplished. The trade was recovered; and what had been lost under one administration, and precariously enjoyed under others, and been the subject of fruitless negotiation for forty years, and under six different Presidents-Washington. John Adams, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Quincy Adams-with all their accomplished secretaries and ministers, was now amicably and satisfactorily obtained under the administration of General Jackson; and upon the basis to give it perpetuity-that of mutual interest and actual reciprocity. The act of Parliament gave us the trade on terms nearly as good as those suggested by Washington in 1789; fully as good as those asked for by him in 1794; better than those inserted in the treaty of that year, and suspended by the Senate; and, though nominally on the same terms as given to the rest of the world, yet practically better, on account of our proximity to this British market; and our superabundance of articles (chiefly provisions and lumber) which it wants. And the trade has been enjoyed under this act ever since, with such entire satisfaction, that there is already an oblivion of the forty years' labor which it cost us to obtain it; and a generation has grown up, almost without knowing to whom they are indebted for its present enjoyment. But it made its sensation at the time, and a great one. The friends of the Jackson administration exulted; the people rejoiced;

gratification was general—but not universal; and these very instructions, under which such great and lasting advantages had been obtained, were made the occassion in the Senate of the United States of rejecting their ostensible author as a minister to London. But of this hereafter.

The auspicious conclusion of so delicate an af. fair was doubtless first induced by General Jack. son's frank policy in falling back upon Washing. ton's ground of "privilege," in contradistinction to the new pretension of "right,"-helped out a little, it may be, by the possible after-clap suggested in the second part of his maxim. Good sense and good feeling may also have had its influence, the trade in question being as desirable to Great Britian as to the United States, and better for each to carry it on direct in their own vessels, than circuitously in the vessels of others; and the articles on each side being of a kind to solicit mutual exchange—tropical productions on one part, and those of the temperate zone on the other. But there was one thing which certainly contributed to the good result, and that was the act of Congress of May 29th, of which General Samuel Smith, senator from Maryland, was the chief promoter; and by which the President was authorized, on the adoption of certain measures by Great Britian, to open the ports of the United States to her vessels on reciprocal terms. The effect of this act was to strengthen General Jackson's candid overture; and the proclamation opening the trade was issued October the 5th. 1830, in the second year of the first term of the administration of President Jackson. And under that proclamation this long desired trade has been enjoyed ever since, and promises to be enjoyed in after time co-extendingly with the dura tion of peace between the two countries.

CHAPTER XLIII.

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE GLOBE NEWSPAPER

AT a presidential levee in the winter of 1839—'31, Mr. Duff Green, editor of the Telegraph newspaper, addressed a person then and now a respectable resident of Washington city (Mr. J. M. Duncanson), and invited him to call at his house, as he had something to say to him which would require a confidentia was made, and the object closed, which was nothing his (Mr. Duncanson's) ass tion of a scheme in relation tial election, in which Ger be prevented from becomin election, and Mr. Calhoun s ward in his place. He info that a rupture was impendi Jackson and Mr. Calhoun ence had taken place bety about (as he alleged) by t Van Buren; that the corre in print, but its publication of arrangements could be mad cratic papers at the most I the States were to be first sec known to the people as demo clusive interest of Mr. Calhou of them as editors; that as so ments were complete, the startle the country with the the difficulty (between Gen Mr. Calhoun), and the motiv all the secured presses, taking Telegraph, would take sides and cry out at the same time would seem to be so universal tion against Mr. Van Buren w so great, that even General Jac would be unable to save him.

Mr. Duncanson was then in in the execution of this scher charge of the Frankfort (Kentuc flattering inducements held out to do so. Mr. Duncanson expre regret at all that he heard—dec friend of General Jackson, and a -opposed to all schemes to pr being a candidate again-a dis success, if attempted—and made termination to reveal the schem abandoned. Mr. Green begged 1 -said that the plan was not full and might not be carried out. T of the first interview. A few d Mr. Green called on Mr. Duncans ed him that a rupture was now de and renewed his proposition that charge of some paper, either as p editor on a liberal salary—one tha not universal; der which such d been obtained. e Senate of the stensible author f this hereafter. so delicate an afy General Jackupon Washingcontradistinction "-helped out a after-clap sugs maxim. Good have had its ineing as desirable nited States, and rect in their own vessels of others: ng of a kind to al productions on erate zone on the 5 which certainly and that was the f which General irvland, was the he President was certain measures orts of the United cal terms. The ien General Jackhe proclamation October the 5th, first term of the son. And under esired trade has comises to be endy with the dura ountries.

Vol. I.—9

LIII.

BE NEWSPAPER

winter of 1830 f the Telegraph then and now a gton city (Mr. J m to call at his say to him which would require a confidential interview. The call was made, and the object of the interview disclosed, which was nothing less than to engage his (Mr. Duncanson's) assistance in the execution of a scheme in relation to the next presidential election, in which General Jackson should be prevented from becoming a candidate for reelection, and Mr. Calhoun should be brought forward in his place. He informed Mr. Duncanson that a rupture was impending between General Jackson and Mr. Calhoun; that a correspondence had taken place between them, brought about (as he alleged) by the intrigues of Mr. Van Buren; that the correspondence was then in print, but its publication delayed until certain arrangements could be made; that the democratic papers at the most prominent points in the States were to be first secured; and men well known to the people as democrats, but in the exclusive interest of Mr. Calhoun, placed in charge of them as editors; that as soon as the arrangements were complete, the Telegraph would startle the country with the announcement of the difficulty (between General Jackson and Mr. Calhoun), and the motive for it; and that all the secured presses, taking their cue from the Telegraph, would take sides with Mr. Calhoun, and cry out at the same time; and the storm would seem to be so universal, and the indignation against Mr. Van Buren would appear to be so great, that even General Jackson's popularity would be unable to save him.

Mr. Duncanson was then invited to take part in the execution of this scheme, and to take charge of the Frankfort (Kentucky) Argus; and flattering inducements held out to encourage him to do so. Mr. Duncanson expressed surprise and regret at all that he heard-declared himself the friend of General Jackson, and of his re-election -opposed to all schemes to prevent him from being a candidate again—a disbeliever in their success, if attempted—and made known his determination to reveal the scheme, if it was not abandoned. Mr. Green begged him not to do so -said that the plan was not fully agreed upon; and might not be carried out. This was the end of the first interview. A few days afterwards Mr. Green called on Mr. Duncanson, and informed him that a rupture was now determined upon. and renewed his proposition that he should take charge of some paper, either as proprietor, or as the farmers and mechanics of the country, and made so cheap as to go into every workshop and cabin. Mr. Duncanson was a practical printer -owned a good job office-was doing a large business, especially for the departments-and only wished to remain as he was. Mr. Green offered, in both interviews, to relieve him from that concern by purchasing it from him, and assured him that he would otherwise lose the printing of the departments, and be sacrificed. Mr. Duncanson again refused to have any thing to do with the scheme, consulted with some friends, and caused the whole to be communicated to General Jackson. The information did not take the General by surprise: it was only a confirmation of what he well suspected and had been wisely providing against. The history of the movement in Mr. Monroe's cabinet to bring him before a military court, for his invasion of Spanish territory during the Seminole war, had just come to his knowledge; the doctrine of nullification had just been broached in Congress; his own patriotic toast: "The Federal Union: it must be preserved "-had been delivered; his own intuitive sagacity told him all the rest-the breach with Mr. Calhoun, the defection of the Telegraph, and the necessity for a new paper at Washington, faithful, fearless and incorruptible.

The Telegraph had been the central metropolitan organ of his friends and of the democratic party, during the long and bitter canvasa which ended in the election of General Jackson. in 1828. Its editor had been gratified with the first rich fruits of victory—the public printing of the two Houses of Congress, the executive patronage, and the organship of the administration. The paper was still (in 1830) in its columns, and to the public eye, the advocate and supporter of General Jackson; but he knew what was to happen, and quietly took his measures to meet an inevitable contingency. In the summer of 1830, a gentleman in one of the public offices showed him a paper, the Frankfort (Kentucky) Argus, containing a powerful and spirited review of a certain nullification speech in Congress. He inquired for the author, ascertained him to be Mr. Francis P. Blair-not the editor, but an occasional contributor to the Argus -and had him written to on the subject of taking charge of a paper in Washington. The application took Mr. Blair by surprise. He was editor on a liberal salary—one that would tell on not thinking of changing his residence and pursuits. He was well occupied where he wasclerk of the lucrative office of the State Circuit Court at the capital of the State, salaried president of the Commonwealth Bank (by the election of the legislature), and proprietor of a farm and slaves in that rich State. But he was devoted to General Jackson and his measures, and did not hesitate to relinquish his secure advantages at home to engage in the untried business of editor at Washington. He came-established the Globe newspaper—and soon after associated with John C. Rives,—a gentleman worthy of the association and of the confidence of General Jackson and of the democratic party: and under their management, the paper became the efficient and faithful organ of the administration during the whole period of his service, and that of his successor, Mr. Van Buren. It was established in time, and just in time, to meet the advancing events at Washington City. All that General Jackson had foreseen in relation to the conduct of the Telegraph, and all that had been communicated to him through Mr. Duncanson, came to pass: and he found himself, early in the first term of his administration, engaged in a triple war-with nullification, the Bank of the United States, and the whig party:-and must have been without defence or support from the newspaper press at Washington had it not been for his foresight in establishing the Globe.

Vol. I.-9

CHAPTER XLIV.

LIMITATION OF PUBLIC LAND SALES. SUSPEN-SION OF SURVEYS. ABOLITION OF THE OFFICE OF SURVEYOR GENERAL. ORIGIN OF THE UNI-TED STATES LAND SYSTEM. AUTHORSHIP OF THE ANTI-SLAVERY ORDINANCE OF 1778. SLA-VERY CONTROVERSY. PROTECTIVE TARIFF. INCEPTION OF THE DOCTRINE OF NULLIFICA-

At the commencement of the session 1829-'30, Mr. Foot, of Connecticut, submitted in the Senate a resolution of inquiry which excited much feeling among the western members of that body. It was a proposition to inquire into the expediency of limiting the sales of the public lands to those then in market—to suspend the surveys of the public lands-and to abolish the office of Surveyor General. The effect of such a resolution, if sanctioned upon inquiry and carried into legislative effect, would have been to check emigration to the new States in the West-to check the growth and settlement of these States and territories-and to deliver up large portions of them to the dominion of wild beasts. In that sense it was immediately taken up by myself. and other western members, and treated as an injurious proposition-insulting as well as injurious-and not fit to be considered by a committee, much less to be reported upon and adopted. I opened the debate against it in a speech. of which the following is an extract:

"Mr. Benton disclaimed all intention of having anything to do with the motives of the mover of the resolution: he took it according to its effect and operation, and conceiving this to be eminently injurious to the rights and interests of the new States and Territories, he should justify the view which he had taken, and the vote he intended to give, by an exposition of facts and reasons which would show the disastrous nature of the practical effects of this resolution.

"On the first branch of these effects-checking emigration to the West-it is clear, that, if the sales are limited to the lands now in market emigration will cease to flow; for these lands are not of a character to attract people at a distance. In Missouri they are the refuse of forty years picking under the Spanish Government and twenty more under the Government of the United States. The character and value of this refuse had been shown, officially, in the reports of the Registers and Receivers, made in obedience to a call from the Senate. Other gentlemen would show what was said of it in their respective States; he would confine himself to his ówn, to the State of Missouri, and show it to be miserable indeed. The St. Louis District, containing two and a quarter millions of acres, was estimated at an average value of fifteen cents per acre; the Cape Girardeau District, containing four and a half millions of acres, was estimated at twelve and a half cents per acre; the Western District, containing one million and three quarters of acres, was estimated at sixty-two and a half cents; from the other two districts there was no intelligent or pertinent return; but assuming them to be equal to the Western District, and the average value of the lands they contain would be only one half the amount of the present minimum price. This being the state of the lands in Missouri which would be subject to sale under the operation of this resolution, no emigrants would be attracted to them. Persons who remove to new countries want new lands, first choices; and if they cannot get these, they have no sufficient inducement to move.

"The second ill effect to result from this resolution, supposing it to ripen into the measures which it implies to be necessary would be in limiting the settlements in tl Territories. This limitation of be the inevitable effect of conf the lands now in market. Th souri, only amount to one th By consequence, only one third Two thirds of the State would inhabitants; the resolution sa period,' and the gentlemen, in expound this certain period to years. They say seventy-two are now in market; that we sel a year; therefore, we have enou demand for seventy-two years. ter their heads to consider that, adapted to the value, all this s lions that is fit for cultivation immediately. They must go on year for seventy-two years, the So the life of man-a long period i nation; the exact period of the H uvity—a long and sorrowful per tory of the Jews; and not less sorrowful in the history of the resolution should take effect.

"The third point of objection is, deliver up large portions of new S ritories to the dominion of wild ber souri, this surrender would be equal of the State, comprising about for square miles, covering the whole Osage River, besides many other paraching within a dozen miles of the capital of the State. All this would edup to wild beasts: for the India tinguished, and the Indians gone; th ple would be excluded from it; I would take it; and all this in viol Divine command to replenish the e crease and multiply upon it, and to I ion over the beasts of the forest, the I air, the fish in the waters, and th things of the earth.

"The fourth point of objection is, ir nd of the land records—the natura abolishing all the offices of the Surveyor These offices are five in number. It i b abolish them all, and the reason a debate is, that they are sinecures; sy, offices which have revenues and n ment. This is the description of a We have one of these offices in Misso how something of it. The Surveyor Colonel McRee, in point of fidelity to belongs to the school of Nathaniel M point of science and intelligence, he be the first order of men that Europe or contains. He and his clerks carry la andgery to the ultimate point of hum: tion, and still fall short of the task befor and this is an office which it is prop abolish under the notion of a sinecure office with revenues, and without emplo The abolition of these offices would invo ressity of removing all their records, a

carried into o check emist-to check e States and portions of its. In that by myself, reated as an well as injud by a comon and adopin a speech, ation of havtives of the according to ng this to be and interests e should jusand the vote tion of facts ie disastrous is resolution. ects-checklear, that, if w in market, · these lands ople at a disfuse of forty Government ament of the value of this a the reports in obedience r gentlemen their respecmself to his show it to be District, conof acres, was een cents per t. containing as estimated e; the Wesn and three at sixty-two wo districts

return; but

Vestern Dis-

e lands they

e amount of

s being the

ch would be of this reso-

:ted to them.

es want new

not get these,

om this reso

the measures

would be in

to move.

limiting the settlements in the new States and depriving the country of all the evidences of the Territories. This limitation of settlement would be the inevitable effect of confining the sales to the lands now in market. These lands in Missouri, only amount to one third of the State. By consequence, only one third could be settled. Two thirds of the State would remain without inhabitants; the resolution says, for 'a certain period,' and the gentlemen, in their speeches, expound this certain period to be seventy-two years. They say seventy-two millions of acres are now in market; that we sell but one million a year; therefore, we have enough to supply the demand for seventy-two years. It does not enter their heads to consider that, if the price was adapted to the value, all this seventy-two millions that is fit for cultivation would be sold immediately. They must go on at a million a year for seventy-two years, the Scripture term of the life of man-a long period in the age of a nation; the exact period of the Babylonish captivity—a long and sorrowful period in the history of the Jews; and not less long nor less sorrowful in the history of the West, if this resolution should take effect.

"The third point of objection is, that it would deliver up large portions of new States and Territories to the dominion of wild beasts. In Missouri, this surrender would be equal to two-thirds of the State, comprising about forty thousand square miles, covering the whole valley of the Osage River, besides many other parts, and approaching within a dozen miles of the centre and rapital of the State. All this would be delivered up to wild beasts: for the Indian title is extinguished, and the Indians gone; the white people would be excluded from it; beasts alone would take it; and all this in violation of the Divine command to replenish the earth, to increase and multiply upon it, and to have dominion over the beasts of the forest, the birds of the air, the fish in the waters, and the creeping things of the earth. "The fourth points of objection is, in the remoal of the land records—the natural effect of abolishing all the offices of the Surveyors General. These offices are five in number. It is proposed wabolish them all, and the reason assigned in debate is, that they are sinecures; that is to av, offices which have revenues and no employment. This is the description of a sinecure. We have one of these offices in Missouri, and I know something of it. The Surveyor General, Colonel McRee, in point of fidelity to his trust, belongs to the school of Nathaniel Macon; in point of science and intelligence, he belongs to he first order of men that Europe or America contains. He and his clerks carry labor and ordgery to the ultimate point of human exertion, and still fall short of the task before them; and this is an office which it is proposed to abolish under the notion of a sinecure, as an me with revenues, and without employment. The abolition of these offices would involve the foundations of all the land titles. This would be sweeping work; but the gentleman's plan would be incomplete without including General Land Office in this city, the principal business of which is to superintend the five Sur veyor General's offices, and for which there could be but little use after they were abolished.

"These are the practical effects of the resolution. Emigration to the new States checked; their settlement limited; a large portion of their surface delivered up to the dominion of beasts; the land records removed. Such are the injuries to be inflicted upon the new States, and we, the senators from those States, are called upon to vote in favor of the resolution which proposes to inquire into the expediency of committing all these enormities! I, for one, will not do it. I will vote for no such inquiry. I would as soon vote for inquiries into the expediency of conflagrating cities, of devastating provinces, and of submerging fruitful lands under the waves of the

"I take my stand upon a great moral principle. that it is never right to inquire into the expediency of doing wrong.

"The proposed inquiry is to do wrong; to inflict unmixed, unmitigated evil upon the new States and Territories. Such inquiries are not to be tolerated. Courts of law will not sustain actions which have immoral foundations; legislative bodies should not sustain inquiries which have iniquitous conclusions. Ceurts of law make it an object to give public satisfaction in the administration of justice; legislative bodies should consult the public tranquillity in the prosecution of their measures. They should not alarm and agitate the country; yet, this inquiry, if it goes on, will give the greatest dissatisfaction to the new States in the West and South. It will alarm and agitate them, and ought to do it. It will connect itself with other inquiries going on elsewhere-in the other end of this building-in the House of Representatives-to make the new States a source of revenue to the old ones, to deliver them up to a new set of masters, to throw them as grapes into the wine press, to be trod and squeezed as long as one drop of juice could be pressed from their hulls. These measures will go together; and if that resolution passes, and this one passes, the transition will be easy and natural, from dividing the money after the lands are sold, to divide the lands before they are sold, and then to renting the land and drawing an annual income, instead of selling it for a price in hand. The signs are portentous; the crisis is alarming; it is time for the new States to wake up to their danger, and to prepare for a struggle which carries ruin and disgrace to them, if the issue is against them.

The debate spread, and took an acrimonious turn, and sectional, imputing to the quarter of the Union from which it came an old, and early messity of removing all their records, and thus policy to check the growth of the West at the outset by proposing to limit the sale of the western lands to a "clean riddance" as they wentselling no tract in advance until all in the rear was sold out. It so happened that the first ordinance reported for the sale and survey of western lands in the Congress of the Confederation, (1785,) contained a provision to this effect; and came from a committee strongly Northern-two to one, eight against four: and was struck out in the House on the motion of southern members, supported by the whole power of the South. I gave this account of the circumstance:

"The ordinance reported by the committee, contained the plan of surveying the public lands, which has since been followed. It adopted the scientific principle of ranges of townships, which has been continued ever since, and found so beneficial in a variety of ways to the country. The ranges began on the Pennsylvania line, and proceeded west to the Mississippi; and since the acquisition of Louisiana, they have proceeded west of that river; the townships began upon the Ohio River, and proceeded north to the Lakes. The townships were divided into sections of a mile square, six hundred and forty acres each; and the minimum price was fixed at one dollar per acre, and not less than a section to be sold together. This is the outline of the present plan of sales and surveys; and, with the modifications it has received, and may receive, in graduating the price of the land to the quality, the plan is excellent. But a principle was incorporated in the ordinance of the most fatal character. It was, that each township should be sold out complete before any land could be offered in the next one! This was tantamount to a law that the lands should not be sold; that the country should not be settled: for it is certain that every township, or almost every one, would contain land unfit for cultivation, and for which no person would give six hundred and forty dollars for six hundred and forty acres. The effect of such a provision may be judged by the fact that above one hundred thousand acres remain to this day unsold in the first land district; the district of Steubenville, in Ohio, which included the first range and first township. If that provision had remained in the ordinance, the settlements would not yet have got out of sight of the Pennsylvania line. It was an unjust and preposterous provision. It required the people to take the country clean before them; buy all as they went; mountains, hills, and swamps; rocks, glens, and prairies. They were to make clean work, as the giant Polyphemus did when he ate up the companions of Ulysses:

'No entrails, blood, nor solid bone remains,'

Nothing could be more iniquitous than such a provision. It was like requiring your guest to eat all the bones on his plate before he should have more meat. To say that township No. 1 should | them in a few years to achieve their independence be sold out complete before township No. 2 should be offered for sale, was like requiring the bones of the first turkey to be eat up before the breast of the second one should be touched. Yet such was the provision contained in the first ordinance for the sale of the public lands, reported by a committee of twelve, of which eight were from the north and four from the south side of the Potomac. How invincible must have been the determination of some politicians to prevent the settlement of the West, when they would thus counteract the sales of the lands which had just been obtained after years of importunity, for the payment of the public debt!

"When this ordinance was put upon its passage in Congress, two Virginians, whose names for that act alone, would deserve the lasting gratitude of the West, levelled their blows against the obnoxious provision. Mr. Grayson moved to strike it out, and Mr. Monroe seconded him; and after an animated and arduous contest, they succeeded. The whole South supported them; not one recreant arm from the South; many scattering members from the North also voted with the South, and in favor of the infant West; proving then, as now, and as it always has been, that the West has true supporters of her rights and interests—unhappily not enough of them—in that quarter of the Union from which the measures have originated that several times threatened to be fatal to her."

Still enlarging its circle, but as yet still confined to the sale and disposition of the public lands. the debate went on to discuss the propriety of selling them to settlers at auction prices, and at an abitrary minimum for all qualities, and a refusal of donations; and in this hard policy the North was again considered as the exacting part of the Union-the South as the favorer of liberal terms, and the generous dispenser of gratuitous grants to the settlers in the new States and Territories. On this point, Mr. Hayne, of South Carolina, thus expressed himself:

"The payment of 'a penny,' or a 'pepper corn,' was the stipulated price which our fathers along the whole Atlantic coast, now composing the old thirteen States, paid for their lands; and even when conditions, seemingly more substantial, were annexed to the grants; such for instance as 'settlement and cultivation;' these were considered as substantially complied with by the cutting down a few trees and erecting a log cabin the work of only a few days. Even these conditions very soon came to be considered as merely nominal, and were never required to be pursued in order to vest in the grantee the fee simple of the soil. Such was the system under which this country was originally settled, and under which the thirteen colonies flourished and grew up that early and vigorous manhood, which enable and I beg gentlemen to recolle fact, that, while they paid subs to the mother country, the who industry were suffered to rema hands. Now, what, let us inqu son which has induced all natio system in the settlement of Can it be any other than this; t only certain means of building a ness, great and prosperous comn not that policy founded on the 1 that the conquest of a new count out "the savage beasts and still mo cutting down and subduing the countering all the hardships and p sarily incident to the conversion ness into cultivated fields, was wo pie of the soil ? And was it not the mother country found ample for the value of the land so grante tions to her power and the new so merce and of wealth, furnished t and populous States? Now, sir, I candid consideration of gentlemen, policy so diametrically opposite to t been invariably pursued by the Un wards the new States in the West I so just and liberal, as we have been to believe. Certain it is, that the mes to the north of us, and the Spanis to the south and west, have been reared up under a very different syst which had been for fifty or a hundred every settler, without any charge bei pense of the survey, were, the mome nto the hands of the United States. sle at the highest price that a public the most favorable seasons, and not u aspirit of the wildest competition, cou with a limitation that they should ne below a certain minimum price; thus sit would seem, the cardinal point of not to settle the country, and facilitate tion of new States, but to fill our coffe ing our lands into gold."

The debate was taking a turn which een to the expectations of the mover ( olution, and which, in leading to sectio mons, would only inflame feelings with ing to any practical result. Mr. Wel this; and to get rid of the whole subject is indefinite postponement; but in ary motion he delivered a speech which in new topics, and greatly enlarged the sc extended the length of the debate which med to terminate. One of these new to ferred to the authorship, and the merit ing the famous ordinance of 1787, for t trament of the Northwestern Territory, recally in relation to the antislavery

No. 2 should, the bones e the breast. Yet such st ordinance ported by a were from side of the re been the prevent the would thus lich had just nity, for the pon its pashose names, lasting graows against son moved to ed him ; and. st, they suc-I them; not any scattervoted with West; provas been, that c rights and of them-in ch the meaies threaten-> still confined nublic lands, propriety of rrices, and at 28, and a red policy the exacting part er of liberal of gratuitous tes and Tere, of South

> > r a 'pepper our fathers v composing lands; and ore substan-, for instance se were con with, by the g a log cabin en these coned as merely be pursued fee simple o er which this under which l grew up t hich enable dependence and I beg gentlemen to recollect, and note the fact, that, while they paid substantially nothing to the mother country, the whole profits of their industry were suffered to remain in their own Now, what, let us inquire, was the reason which has induced all nations to adopt this system in the settlement of new countries? (an it be any other than this; that it affords the only certain means of building up in a wilderness, great and prosperous communities? not that policy founded on the universal belief. that the conquest of a new country, the driving out "the savage beasts and still more savage men," cutting down and subduing the forest, and encountering all the hardships and privations neces sarily incident to the conversion of the wilderness into cultivated fields, was worth the fee simple of the soil? And was it not believed that the mother country found ample remuneration for the value of the land so granted, in the additions to her power and the new sources of commerce and of wealth, furnished by prosperous and populous States? Now, sir, I submit to the candid consideration of gentlemen, whether the policy so diametrically opposite to this, which has been invariably pursued by the United States towards the new States in the West has been quite so just and liberal, as we have been accustomed to believe. Certain it is, that the British colonies to the north of us, and the Spanish and French to the south and west, have been fostered and reared up under a very different system. Lands, which had been for fifty or a hundred years open to every settler, without any charge beyond the expense of the survey, were, the moment they fell nto the hands of the United States, held up for sale at the highest price that a public auction, at the most favorable seasons, and not unfrequently spirit of the wildest competition, could produce; with a limitation that they should never be sold below a certain minimum price; thus making it. is it would seem, the cardinal point of our policy, not to settle the country, and facilitate the formation of new States, but to fill our coffers by coining our lands into gold."

The debate was taking a turn which was foreign to the expectations of the mover of the resdution, and which, in leading to sectional crimimions, would only inflame feelings without leading to any practical result. Mr. Webster saw this; and to get rid of the whole subject, moved is indefinite postponement; but in arguing his motion he delivered a speech which introduced we topics, and greatly enlarged the scope, and ettended the length of the debate which he proposed to terminate. One of these new topics referred to the author-hip, and the merit of passing the famous ordinance of 1787, for the govtement of the Northwestern Territory, and espotally in relation to the antislavery clause which that ordinance contained. Mr. Webster claimed the merit of this authorship for Mr. Nathan Dane-an eminent jurist of Massachusetts, and avowed that "it was carried by the North, and by the North alone." I replied, claiming the authorship for Mr. Jefferson, and showing from the Journals that he (Mr. Jefferson) brought the measure into Congress in the year 1784 (the 19th of April of that year), as chairman of a committee, with the antislavery clause in it, which Mr. Speight, of North Carolina, moved to strike out; and it was struck out the three Southern States present voting for the striking out, because the clause did not then contain the provision in favor of the recovery of fugitive slaves, which was afterwards ingrafted upon it. Mr. Webster says it was struck out because "nine States" did not vote for its retention. That is an error arising from confounding the powers of the confederation. Nine States were only required to concur in measures of the highest import, as declaring war, making peace. negotiating treaties, &c.,-and in all ordinary legislation the concurrence of a bare majority (seven) was sufficient; and in this case there were only six States voting for the retention, New Jersey being erroneously counted by Mr. Webster to make seven. If she had voted the number would have been seven, and the clause would have stood. He was led into the error by seeing the name of Mr. Dick appearing in the call for New Jersey; but New Jersey was not present as a State, being represented by only one member, and it requiring two to constitute the presence of a State. Mr. Dick was indulged with putting his name on the Journal, but his vote was not counted. Mr. Webster says the ordinance reported by Mr. Jefferson in 1784, did not pass into a law. This is a mistake again. It did pass; and that within five days after the antislavery clause was struck out-and that without any attempt to renew that clause, although the competent number (seven) of non-slaveholding States were present-the colleague of Mr. Dick having joined him, and constituted the presence of New Jersey. Two years afterwards, in July 1787, the ordinance was passed over again, as it now stands, and was preeminently the work of the South. The ordinance, as it now stands, was reported by a committee of five members, of whom three were from slaveholding States, and two (and one of them the chairman) were from Virginia alone. It regeived its first reading the day it was reported-its second reading the next day, when one other State had appeared—the third reading on the day ensuing; going through all the forms of legislation, and becoming a law in three days-receiving the votes of the eight States present, and the vote of every member of each State, except one; and that one from a free State north of the Potomac. These details I verified by producing the Journals, and showed under the dates of July 11th, 1787, and July 12th and 13th, the votes actually given for the ordinance. The same vote repealed the ordinance (Mr. Jefferson's) of 1784. I read in the Senate the passages from the Journal of the Congress of the confederation, the passages which showed these votes, and incorporated into the speech which I published, the extract from the Journal which I produced; and now incorporate the same in this work, that the authorship of that ordinance of 1787, and its passage through the old Congress, may be known in all time to come as the indisputable work, both in its conception and consummation, of the South. This is the extract:

THE JOURNAL.

Wednesday, July 11th, 1787.

"Congress assembled: Present, the seven States above mentioned." (Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia—7.)

"The Committee, consisting of Mr. Carrington (of Virginia), Mr. Dane (of Massachusetts), Mr. R. H. Lee (of Virginia), Mr. Kean (of South Carolina), and Mr. Smith (of New York), to whom was referred the report of a committee touching the temporary government of the Western Territory, reported an ordinance for the government of the Territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio; which was read a first time

"Ordered, That to-morrow be assigned for the second reading."

" Thursday, July 12th, 1787.

"Congress assembled: Present, Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia—(8.)

"According to order, the ordinance for the government of the Territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio, was read a second time.

"Ordered, That to-morrow be assigned for the third reading of said ordinance."

" Friday, July 13th, 1787.

"Congress assembled: Present, as yesterday.

"According to order, the ordinance for the government of the Territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio, was read a third time, and passed as follows."

[Here follows the whole ordinance, in the very words in which it now appears among the laws of the United States, with the non-slavery clause, the provisions in favor of schools and education, against impairing the obligation of contracts, laying the foundation and security of all these stipulations in compact, in favor of restoring fugitives from service, and repealing the ordinance of 23d of April, 1784—the one report ed by Mr. Jefferson.]

"On passing the above ordinance, the yeas and nays being required by Mr. Yates:

Massachusetts—Mr. Holten, aye; Mr. Dane.

aye.

New York—Mr. Smith, aye; Mr. Yates, no;

Mr. Harring, aye.

New Jersey—Mr. Clarke, aye; Mr. Scheur-

man, aye.

Delaware—Mr. Kearney, aye; Mr. Mitchell,

aye.
Virginia—Mr. Grayson, aye; Mr. R. H. Lee

aye; Mr. Carrington, aye.

North Carolina—Mr. Blount, aye; Mr. Hawkins, aye.

South Carolina—Mr. Kean, aye; Mr. Hu-

Georgia—Mr. Few, aye; Mr. Pierce, aye.
So it was resolved in the affirmative." (Pagt 754, volume 4.)

The bare reading of these passages from the Journals of the Congress of the old confederation, shows how erroneous Mr. Webster was in these portions of his speech:

"At the foundation of the constitution of these new northwestern States, we are accustomed sir, to praise the lawgivers of antiquity; we help to perpetuate the fame of Solon and Lycurgus; but I doubt whether one single law of any lawgiver, ancient or modern, has produced effects of more distinct, marked, and lasting character, than the ordinance of '87. That instrument, was drawn by Nathan Dane, then, and now, a citizen of Massachusetts. It was adopted as I think I have understood, without the slightest alteration; and certainly it has happened to few men to be the authors of a political measure of more large and enduring consequence. It fixed, for ever, the character of the population in the vast regions northwest of the Ohio, by excluding from them involuntary servitude. It impressed on the soil itself, while it was yet a wilderness, an incapacity to bear up any other than free men. It laid the interdict against personal servitude, in original compact, not only deeper than all local law, but deeper, also, than all local

Under t constitutions. existing, I look upon thi able provision, as a real g its consequences at this never cease to see them, I shall flow. It was a grea of prevention. Sir, I sho no intelligent gentleman to ask whether if such an been applied to his own a wilderness, and before gap of the Alleghany, he would have contributed t ness of that commonwealt not to be doubted, that wh produced an effect not eas measured in the growth extent and increase of the sir, this great measure aga north, and by the north aldeed, individuals elsewhere it was supported as a mea votes of the northern State had been governed by the views now ascribed to he was, of all others, the best her purposes. It was, of means of rendering certain from her own population looked to that consequence She deemed the regulation the States that would spring and advantageous to the con adhered to the principle of it after year, until it was finall "An attempt has been ma the North to the South, the sion of slavery from the nor The journal, without argume futes such attempt. The c was made, March, 1784. Or following, a committee, con Jefferson, Chase, and Howe for a temporary government which was this article: 'tl 1800, there shall be neither untary servitude in any of the wise than in punishment of a party shall have been convic of North Carolina, moved paragraph. The question wa the form then practised: stand, as part of the plan,' & shire, Massachusetts, Rhode cut, New York, New Jersey, -seven States, voted in the a land, Virginia, and South Car North Carolina was div sent of nine States was - nec could not stand, and were stru ly. Mr. Jefferson voted for the overruled by his colleagues.

"In March, the next year of Massachusetts, seconded be Rhode Island, proposed the 1787.

ent, as yesterday. rdinance for the the United States was read a third ordinance, in the pears among the n the non-slavery r of schools and he obligation of 1 and security of ct, in favor of reand repealing the —the one report linance, the year · Yates : , aye ; Mr. Dane,

; Mr. Yates, no;

ye; Mr. Scheur-

e; Mr. Mitchell,

e; Mr. R. H. Lee t, aye; Mr. Haw-

, aye; Mr. Hu-

r. Pierce, ave. mative." (Pagt

assages from the e old confedera-Webster was in stitution of these are accustomed, antiquity; we Solon and Lycursingle law of any produced effects asting character. 'hat instrument, hen, and now, a ras adopted, as I out the slightest happened to few itical measure of uence. It fixed, opulation in the Ohio, by excludrvitude. It imt was yet a wilany other than against personal not only deeper so, than all local constitutions. Under the circumstances then existing, I look upon this original and seasonable provision, as a real good attained. We see its consequences at this moment, and we shall never cease to see them, perhaps, while the Ohio shall flow. It was a great and salutary measure of prevention. Sir, I should fear the rebuke of no intelligent gentleman of Kentucky, were I to ask whether if such an ordinance could have been applied to his own State, while it yet was a wilderness, and before Boon had passed the gap of the Alleghany, he does not suppose it would have contributed to the ultimate greatness of that commonwealth? It is, at any rate. not to be doubted, that where it did apply it has produced an effect not easily to be described, or measured in the growth of the States, and the extent and increase of their population. Now, sir, this great measure again was carried by the north, and by the north alone. There were, indeed, individuals elsewhere favorable to it; but it was supported as a measure, entirely by the votes of the northern States. If New England had been governed by the narrow and selfish views now ascribed to her, this very measure was, of all others, the best calculated to thwart her purposes. It was, of all things, the very means of rendering certain a vast emigration from her own population to the west. She looked to that consequence only to disregard it. She deemed the regulation a most useful one to the States that would spring up on the territory, and advantageous to the country at large. She adhered to the principle of it perseveringly, year after year, until it was finally accomplished.

An attempt has been made to transfer, from the North to the South, the honor of this exclusion of slavery from the northwestern territory. The journal, without argument or comment, refutes such attempt. The cession by Virginia was made, March, 1784. On the 19th of April following, a committee, consisting of Messrs. Jefferson, Chase, and Howell, reported a plan for a temporary government of the territory, in which was this article: 'that, after the year 1800, there shall be neither slavery, nor involuntary servitude in any of the said States, otherwise than in punishment of crimes, whereof the party shall have been convicted.' Mr. Speight, of North Carolina, moved to strike out this paragraph. The question was put, according to the form then practised: 'Shall these words stand, as part of the plan,' &c.? New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania—seven States, voted in the affirmative. Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, in the negative. North Carolina was divided. As the consent of nine States was -necessary, the words could not stand, and were struck out accordingly. Mr. Jefferson voted for the clause, but was overruled by his colleagues.

"In March, the next year [1785], Mr. King of Massachusetts, seconded by Mr. Ellery of article, with this addition: 'And that this regu lation shall be an article of compact, and remain a fundamental principle of the constitutions between the thirteen original States, and each of the States described in the resolve.' &c. On this clause, which provided the adequate and thorough security, the eight northern States at that time voted affirmatively, and the four southern States negatively. The votes of nine States were not yet obtained, and thus, the provision was again rejected by the southern States. The perseverance of the north held out, and two years afterwards the object was attained."

This is shown to be all erroneous in relation to this ordinance. It was not first drawn by Mr. Dane, but by Mr. Jefferson, and that nearly two years before Mr. Dane came into Congress. It was not passed by the North alone, but equally by the South-there being but eight States present at the passing, and they equally of the North and the South-and the South voting unanimously for it, both as States and as individual members, while the North had one member against it. It was not baffled two years for the want of nine States; if so, and nine States had been necessary, it would not have been passed when it was, and never by free State votes alone. There were but eight States (both Northern and Southern) present at the passing; and there were not nine free States in the confederacy at that time. There were but thirteen in all: and the half of these, as nearly as thirteen can be divided, were slave States. The fact is, that the South only delayed its vote for the antislavery clause in the ordinance for want of the provision in favor of recovering fugitives from service. As soon as that was added, she took the lead again for the ordinance-a fact which gives great emphasis to the corresponding provision in the constitution.

Mr. Webster was present when I read these extracts, and said nothing. He neither reaffirmed his previous statement, that Mr. Dane was the author of the ordinance, and that "this great measure was carried by the North, and by the North alone." He said nothing; nor did he afterwards correct the errors of his speech: and they now remain in it; and have given occasion to a very authentic newspaper contradiction of his statement, copied, like my statement to the Senate, from the Journals of the old Congress. It was by Edward Coles, Esq., formerly of Virginia, and private secretary to President Madison, afterwards governor of the State of Illinois, Rhode Island, proposed the formerly rejected and now a citizen of Pennsylvania, resident of Philadelphia. He made his correction through the National Intelligencer, of Washington City; and being drawn from the same sources it agrees entirely with my own. And thus the South is entitled to the credit of originating and passing this great measure—a circumstance to be remembered and quoted, as showing the South at that time in taking the lead in curtailing and restricting the existence of slavery. The cause of Mr. Webster's mistakes may be found in the fact that the ordinance was three times before the old Congress, and once (the third time) in the hands of a committee of which Mr. Dane was a member. It was first reported by a committee of three (April, 1784) of which two were from slave states, (Mr. Jefferson of Virginia and Mr. Chase of Maryland,) Mr. Howard, of Rhode Island; and this, as stated, was nearly two years before Mr. Dane became a member. The antislavery clause was then dropped, there being but six States for it. The next year, the antislavery clause, with some modification, was moved by Mr. Rufus King, and sent as a proposition to a committee: but did not ripen into a law. Afterwards the whole ordinance was passed as it now stands, upon the report of a committee of six, of whom Mr. Dane was one; but not the chairman.

Closely connected with this question of authorship to which Mr. Webster's remarks give rise, was another which excited some warm discussion -the topic of slavery-and the effect of its existence or non-existence in different States. Kentucky and Ohio were taken for examples, and the superior improvement and population of Ohio were attributed to its exemption from the evils of slavery. This was an excitable subject, and the more so because the wounds of the Missouri controversy, in which the North was the undisputed aggressor, were still tender, and hardly scarred over. Mr. Hayne answered with warmth and resented as a reflection upon the slave States this disadvantageous comparison. I replied to the same topic myself, and said:

"I was on the subject of slavery, as connected with the Missouri question, when last on the floor. The senator from South Carolina [Mr. Hayne] could see nothing in the question before the Senate, nor in any previous part of the debate, to justify the introduction of that topic. Neither couldd. He thought he saw the ghost of the Missouri question brought in among us. So did I. He was astonished at the apparition. I was not: for a close observance of the signs in the West had prepared me for this development from the East. I was well prepared for that invective against slavery, and for that amplification of the blessings of exemption from slavery, exemplified in the condition of Ohio, which the senator from Massachusetts indulged in, and which the object in view required to be derived from the Northeast. I cut the root of that derivation by reading a passage from the Journals of the old Congress; but this will not prevent the invective and encomium from going forth to do their office; nor obliterate the line which was drawn between the free State of Ohio and the slave State of Kentucky. If the only results of this invective and encomium were to exalt still higher the oratorical fame of the speaker, I should spend not a moment in remarking upon them. But it is not to be forgotten that the terrible Missouri agitation took its rise from the "substance of two speeches" delivered on this floor; and since that time, antislavery speeches, coming from the same political and geographical quarter, are not to be disregarded here. What was said upon that topic was certainly intended for the north side of the Potomac and Ohio; to the people, then, of that division of the Union, I wish to address myself, and to disabuse them of some erroneous impressions. To them I can truly say, that slavery, in the abstract, has but few advocates or defenders in the slave-holding States, and that slavery as it is, an hereditary institution descended upon us from our ancestors, would have fewer advocates among us than it has, if those who have nothing to do with the subject would only let us alone. The sentiment in favor of slavery was much weaker before those intermeddlers began their operations than it is at present. The views of leading men in the North and the South were indisputably the same in the earlier periods of our government. Of this our legislative history contains the highest proof. The foreign-slave trade was prohibited in Virginia, as soon as the Revolution began. It was one of her first acts of sovereignty. In the convention of that State which adopted the federal constitution, it was an objection to that instrument that it tolerated the African slave-trade for twenty years. Nothing that has appeared since has surpassed the indignant denunciations of this traffic by Patrick Henry, George Mason, and others, in that convention.

"Sir, I regard with admiration, that is to say, with wonder, the sublime morality of those who cannot bear the abstract contemplation of slavery, at the distance of five hundred or a thousand miles off. It is entirely above, that is to say, it affects a vast superiority over the morality of the primitive Christians, the apostles of Christ, and Christ himself. Christ and the apostles appeared in a province of the Roman empire, when that empire was called the Roman world, and that world was filled with slaves. Forty millions was the estimated number, being one-fourth of the whole population. Single individuals held twenty thousand slaves. A freed man, one who had himself been a slave, died the possessor of four thousand bers. The rights of the ov tude of human beings was without protection from la public sentiment. The sc fish-pond, the den of the arena of of the gladiator, wa upon the slightest expressio A law of incredible atrocity sponsible with their own liv master; it was the law t whole household of slaves to assassination of the masteras many as four hundred ha a time. And these slaves w of Europe and of Asia Min other nations, from whom the of the world derive the most of the human mind. Chris number of the slaves-their and their white color, which his own; yet he said nothin he preached no doctrines wh tion and massacre; none whi tion to the state of things in authorize an inferior race of nate that superior race of wh he himself appeared upon ea no such doctrines, but those of which inculcated the duty of ence on the part of the sla kindness on the part of the ma did the same. St Paul sent slave, Onesimus, to his owner apology and supplication. H to harbor a runaway, much 1 from his master; and, least c insurrection."

This allusion to the Missour invective against the free State it, brought a reply from Mr. what their conduct had been at tion of the slavery topic in the United States, and that they t interfere between master and whatever. This is what he sai

"When the present constitution for the ratification of the people, who imagined that the powers of which it proposed to establish not some possible mode, be exerted it ing to the abolition of slavery, would, of course, attract much southern conventions. In that of nor Randolph said:

"I hope there is none here the subject in the calm light of make an objection dishonorable to at the moment they are securin their citizens, an objection is str is a spark of hope that those u rell prepared for and for that amexemption from ondition of Ohio husetts indulged z required to be cut the root of assage from the out this will not ium from going literate the line ee State of Ohio ky. If the only encomium were ical fame of the ment in remark be forgotten that ook its rise from s" delivered on tislavery speech-.l and geographided here. What rtainly intended c and Ohio: to of the Union. disabuse them To them I can ostract, has but ie slave-holding n hereditary inn our ancestors. ong us than it to do with the The sentiment

ker before those ons than it is at en in the North v the same in ment. Of this e highest proof. ibited in Virgian. It was one In the conventhe federal conhat instrument -trade for tweneared since has ciations of this re Mason, and > that is to say, y of those who aplation of sla-Ired or a thoupove, that is to over the moralthe apostles of Christ and the of the Roman led the Roman d with slaves. number, being n. Single indiaves. A freed stave, died the nossessor of four thousand—such were the numhers. The rights of the owners over this multitude of human beings was that of life and death. without protection from law or mitigation from public sentiment. The scourge, the cross, the fish-pond, the den of the wild beast, and the arena of of the gladiator, was, the lot of the slave. upon the slightest expression of the master's will. A law of incredible atrocity made all slaves responsible with their own lives for the life of their master; it was the law that condemned the whole household of slaves to death, in case of the assassination of the master—a law under which as many as four hundred have been executed at a time. And these slaves were the white people of Europe and of Asia Minor, the Greeks and other nations, from whom the present inhabitants of the world derive the most valuable productions of the human mind. Christ saw all this-the number of the slaves—their hapless condition and their white color, which was the same with his own; yet he said nothing against slavery; he preached no doctrines which led to insurrection and massacre; none which, in their application to the state of things in our country, would authorize an inferior race of blacks to exterminate that superior race of whites, in whose ranks he himself appeared upon earth. He preached no such doctrines, but those of a contrary tenor. which inculcated the duty of fidelity and obedience on the part of the slave-humanity and kindness on the part of the master. His apostles did the same. St Paul sent back a runaway slave. Onesimus, to his owner, with a letter of apology and supplication. He was not the man to harbor a runaway, much less to entice him from his master; and, least of all, to excite an insurrection."

This allusion to the Missouri controversy, and invective against the free States for their part in it brought a reply from Mr. Webster, showing what their conduct had been at the first introduction of the slavery topic in the Congress of the United States, and that they totally refused to interfere between master and slave in any way whatever. This is what he said:

"When the present constitution was submitted for the ratification of the people, there were those who imagined that the powers of the government which it proposed to establish might, perhaps, in some possible mode, be exerted in measures tending to the abolition of slavery. This suggestion would, of course, attract much attention in the southern conventions. In that of Virginia, Governor Randolph said:

"I hope there is none here who, considering the subject in the calm light of philosophy, will make an objection dishonorable to Virginia-that, at the moment they are securing the rights of their citizens, an objection is started, that there now held in bondage may, by the operation of the general government, be made free.

"At the very first Congress, petitions on the subject were presented, if I mistake not, from different States. The Pennsylvania society for promoting the abolition of slavery, took a lead. and laid before Congress a memorial, praying Congress to promote the abolition by such powers as it possessed. This memorial was referred, in the House of Representatives, to a select committee consisting of Mr. Foster of New Hampshire: Mr. Gerry of Massachusetts, Mr. Huntington of Connecticut; Mr. Lawrence of New-York; Mr. Sinnickson of New Jersey; Mr. Hartley of Pennsylvania, and Mr. Parker of Virginia; all of them, sir, as you will observe, northern men, but the last. This committee made a report. which was committed to a committee of the whole house, and there considered and discussed on several days; and being amended, although in no material respect, it was made to express three distinct propositions on the subject of slavery and the slave-trade. First, in the words of the constitution, that Congress could not, prior to the year 1808, prohibit the migration or importation of such persons as any of the States, then existing, should think proper to admit. Second, that Congress had authority to restrain the citizens of the United States from carrying on the African slave-trade, for the purpose of supplying foreign countries. On this proposition, our laws against those who engage in that traffic, are founded. The third proposition, and that which bears on the present question, was expressed in the following terms:

" Resolved, That Congress have no authority to interfere in the emancipation of slaves, or in the treatment of them in any of the States; it remaining with the several States alone to provide rules and regulations therein, which humanity and true policy may require.

"This resolution received the sanction of the House of Representatives so early as March, 1790. And now, sir, the honorable member will allow me to remind him, that not only were the select committee who reported the resolution, with a single exception, all northern men. but also that of the members then composing the House of Representatives, a large majority, I believe nearly two thirds, were northern men also.

"The house agreed to insert these resolutions in its journal, and, from that day to this, it has never been maintained or contended that Congress had any authority to regulate, or interfere with, the condition of slaves in the several States. No northern gentleman, to my knowledge, has moved any such question in either house of Con-

"The fears of the South, whatever fears they might have entertained, were allayed and quieted by this early decision; and so remained, till they were excited afresh, without cause, but for collateral and indirect purposes. When it became necessary, or was thought so, by some political is a spark of hope that those unfortunate men persons, to find an unvarying ground for the exclusion of northern men from confidence and from lead in the affairs of the republic, then, and not till then, the cry was raised, and the feeling industriously excited, that the influence of northern men in the public councils would endanger the relation of master and slave. For myself I claim no other merit than that this gross and enormous injustice towards the whole North, has not wrought upon me to change my opinions, or my political conduct. I hope I am above violating my principles, even under the smart of injury and false imputations. Unjust suspicions and undeserved reproach, whatever pain I may experience from them, will not induce me, I trust, nevertheless, to overstep the limits of constitutional duty, or to encroach on the rights of others.

The domestic slavery of the South I leave where

I find it—in the hands of their own governments.

It is their affair, not mine. Nor do I complain of the peculiar effect which the magnitude of that population has had in the distribution of power

under this federal government. We know, sir, that the representation of the states in the other house is not equal. We know that great advantage, in that respect, is enjoyed by the slaveholding States; and we know, too, that the intended equivalent for that advantage, that is to say, the imposition of direct taxes in the same ratio, has become merely nominal; the habit of the government being almost invariably to collect its revenues from other sources, and in other modes. Nevertheless, I do not complain: nor would I countenance any movement to alter this arrangement of representation. It is the original bargain, the compact—let it stand: let the advantage of it be fully enjoyed. The Union itself is too full of benefit to be hazarded in propositions for changing its original basis. I go for the constitution as it is, and for the Union as it is.

But I am resolved not to submit, in silence, to accusations, either against myself individually, or against the North, wholly unfounded and unjust; accusations which impute to us a disposition to evade the constitutional compact, and to extend the power of the government over the internal laws and domestic condition of the States.

All such accusations, wherever and whenever made, all insinuations of the existance of any such purposes, I know, and feel to be groundless and injurious. And we must confide in southern gentlemen themselves; we must trust to those whose integrity of heart and magnanimity of feeling will lead them to a desire to maintain and disseminate truth, and who possess the means of its diffusion with the southern public; we must leave it to them to disabuse that public of its prejudices. But, in the mean time, for my own part, I shall continue to act justly, whether those towards whom justice is exercised, receive it with

This is what Mr. Webster said on the subject of slavery; and although it was in reply to an in-

candor or with contumely."

of the Missouri question, I made no answer impugning its correctness; and must add that I never saw any thing in Mr. Webster inconsistent with what he then said; and believe that the same resolves could have been passed in the same way at any time during the thirty years that I was in Congress.

But the topic which became the leading feature of the whole debate; and gave it an interest which cannot die, was that of nullification-the assumed right of a state to annul an act of Congress—then first broached in our national legislature-and in the discussion of which Mr. Webster and Mr. Hayne were the champion speakers on opposite sides-the latter understood to he speaking the sentiments of the Vice-President Mr. Calhoun. This new turn in the debate was thus brought about: Mr. Hayne, in the sectional nature of the discussion which had grown up. made allusions to the conduct of New England during the war of 1812; and especially to the assemblage known as the Hartford Convention. and to which designs unfriendly to the Union had been attributed. This gave Mr. Webster the rights both of defence and of retaliation; and he found material for the first in the character of the assemblage, and for the second in the public meetings which had taken place in South Carolina on the subject of the tariff-and at which resolves were passed, and propositions adopted significant of resistance to the act; and consequently, of disloyalty to the Union. He, in his turn, made allusions to these resolves and propositions, until he drew out Mr. Hayne into their defence, and into an avowal of what has since obtained the current name of " Nullification;" although at the time (during the debate) it did not at all strike me as going the length which it afterwards avowed; nor have I ever believed that Mr. Hayne contemplated disunion, in any contingency, as one of its results. In entering upon the argument, Mr. Webster first summed up the doctrine, as he conceived it to be avowed

"I understand the honorable gentleman from South Carolina to maintain, that it is a right of the State legislature to interfere, whenever, in their judgment, this government transcends its constitutional limits, and to arrest the operation

"I understand him to maintain this right, asa right existing under the constitution; not as a vective of my own, excited by the recent agitation | right to overthrow it, on the ground of extrems

"I understand him to on the part of the States the purpose of correcting by the general governme of compelling it to conform extent of its powers.

"I understand him to n mate power of judging of tent of its own authority is ly in the general governm it; but that, on the contr lawfully decide for themse for itself, whether, in a give general government transce

"I understand him to in gency of the case, in the o government, require it, suc may, by its own sovereign act of the general governm plainly and palpably uncons

Mr. Hayne, evidently unp fully deny, the propositions a had recourse to a statemen adopted for that purpose, th the Virginia resolutions of 1 affirmed in 1799. He rose in that, for the purpose of being he would state that his proj words of the Virginia resoluti

"That this Assembly do peremptorily declare, that it of the federal government as compact, to which the States ; ited by the plain sense and ir strument constituting that com valid than they are authorize enumerated in that compact; of a deliberate, palpable, and d of other powers, not granted pact, the States who are parties right, and are in duty bound, arresting the progress of the ev taining, within their respective 1: ities, rights, and liberties, appert

Thus were the propositions st -each speaker taking his own his text; which in the end, (and resolutions turned out to be un South Carolina sense) came to be Webster, at one point, giving to practical form, and showing w Carolina doctrine would have a New England if it had been acte Hartford Convention, said:

"Let me here say, sir, that, if t loctrine had been received and de no answer immust add that I ebster inconsistent 1 believe that the passed in the same thirty years that the leading feature ve it an interest nullification-the ul an act of Conour national legisf which Mr. Webhampion speakers understood to be ne Vice-President in the debate was ne, in the sectional h had grown up, of New England especially to the tford Convention, lly to the Union we Mr. Webster f retaliation; and in the character he second in the en place in South he tariff-and at and propositions to the act; and, the Union. He, hese resolves and Mr. Hayne into wal of what has ie of "Nullificaring the debate) it the length which e I ever believed disunion, in any lts. In entering ter first summed l it to be avowed.

> e gentleman from at it is a right of ere, whenever, in nt transcends its est the operation in this right, asa itution; not as a ound of extreme necessity, such as would justify violent revolu-

"I understand him to maintain an authority, on the part of the States, thus to interfere, for the purpose of correcting the exercise of power by the general government, of checking it, and of compelling it to conform to their opinion of the extent of its powers.

"I understand him to maintain that the ultimate power of judging of the constitutional extent of its own authority is not lodged exclusively in the general government, or any branch of it; but that, on the contrary, the States may lawfully decide for themselves, and each State for itself, whether, in a given case, the act of the general government transcends its power.

"I understand him to insist that, if the exigency of the case, in the opinion of any State government, require it, such State government may, by its own sovereign authority, annul an act of the general government, which it deems plainly and palpably unconstitutional."

Mr. Hayne, evidently unprepared to admit, or fully deny, the propositions as broadly laid down, had recourse to a statement of his own; and, adopted for that purpose, the third resolve of the Virginia resolutions of the year 1798-reaffirmed in 1799. He rose immediately and said that, for the purpose of being clearly understood, he would state that his proposition was in the words of the Virginia resolution; and read it-

"That this Assembly doth explicitly and peremptorily declare, that it views the powers of the federal government as resulting from the compact, to which the States are parties, as limited by the plain sense and intention of the instrument constituting that compact, as no farther valid than they are authorized by the grants enumerated in that compact; and that, in case of a deliberate, palpable, and dangerous exercise of other powers, not granted by the said compact, the States who are parties thereto have the right, and are in duty bound, to interpose, for arresting the progress of the evil, and for maintaining, within their respective limits, the authorities, rights, and liberties, appertaining to them."

Thus were the propositions stated, and argued -each speaker taking his own proposition for his text; which in the end, (and as the Virginia resolutions turned out to be understood in the South Carolina sense) came to be identical. Mr. Webster, at one point, giving to his argument a practical form, and showing what the South Carolina doctrine would have accomplished in New England if it had been acted upon by the Hartford Convention, said:

New England, in the times of the embargo and non-intercourse, we should probably not now have been here. The government would, very likely, have gone to pieces, and crumbled into dust. No stronger case can ever arise than existed under those laws; no States can ever entertain a clearer conviction than the New England States then entertained; and if they had been under the influence of that heresy of opinion, as I must call it, which the honorable member espouses, this Union would, in all probability, have been scattered to the four winds. I ask the gentleman, therefore, to apply his principles to that case; I ask him to come forth and declare, whether, in his opinion, the New England States would have been justified in interfering to break up the embargo system, under the conscientious opinions which they held upon it? Had they a right to annul that law? Does he admit or deny? If that which is thought palpably unconstitutional in South Carolina, justifies that State in arresting the progress of the law, tell me, whether that which was thought palpably unconstitutional also in Massachusetts, would have justified her in doing the same thing? Sir, I deny the whole doctrine. It has not a foot of ground in the constitution to stand on. No public man of reputation ever advanced it in Massachusetts, in the warmest times, or could maintain himself upon it there at any time.'

He argued that the doctrine had no foundation either in the constitution, or in the Virginia resolutions-that the constitution makes the federal government act upon citizens within the States, and not upon the States themselves, as in the old confederation: that within their constitutional limits the laws of Congress were supreme-and that it was treasonable to resist them with force: and that the question of their constitutionality was to be decided by the Su preme Court. On this point, he said:

"The people, then, sir, erected this government. They gave it a constitution; and in that constitution they have enumerated the powers which they bestow on it. They have made it a limited government. They have defined its authority. They have restrained it to the exercise of such powers as are granted; and all others, they declare, are reserved to the States or to the people. But, sir, they have not stopped here. If they had, they would have accomplished but half their work. No definition can be so clear as to avoid possibility of doubt; no limitation so precise as to exclude all uncertainty. Who then shall construe this grant of the people? Who shall interpret their will, where it may be supposed they have left it doubtful? With whom do they repose this ultimate right of deciding on the powers of the government? "Let me here say, sir, that, if the gentleman's | Sir, they have settled all this in the fullest mantectrine had been received and acted upon in ner. They have left it with the government itself, in its appropriate branches.

chief end, the main design, for which the whole constitution was framed and adopted was, to establish a government that should not be obliged to act through State agency, or depend on State opinion and State discretion. The people had had quite enough of that kind of government under the confederacy. Under that system, the legal action, the application of law to individuals, belonged exclusively to the States. Congress could only recommend; their acts were not of binding force, till the States had adopted and sanctioned them. Are we in that condition still?

Are we yet at the mercy of State discretion, and State construction? Sir, if we are, then vain will be off attempt to maintain the constitution

under which we sit. But, sir, the people have wisely provided, in the constitution itself, a proper, suitable mode and tribunal for settling questions of constitutional law. There are, in the constitution, grants of powers to Congress, and restrictions on these powers. There are, also, prohibitions on the States. Some authority must, therefore, necessarily exist, having the ultimate jurisdiction to fix and ascertain the interpretation of these grants, restrictions, and prohibitions. The constitution has, itself, pointed out, ordained, and established, that authority.

How has it accomplished this great and essential end? By declaring, sir, that 'the constitution, and the laws of the United States made in pursuance thereof, shall be the supreme law of the land, any thing in the constitution or laws of the supremacy of the constitution and laws of the United States is declared. The people so will it. No State law is to be valid which comes in conflict with the constitution or any law of the United States. But who shall decide this question of interference? To whom lies the last appeal? This, sir. the constitution itself decides also, by declaring 'that the judicial power shall extend to all cases arising under the constitution and laws of the United States.' These two provisions, sir, cover the whole ground. They are, in truth, the key-stone of the arch. With these,

it is a constitution; without them it is a confederacy. In pursuance of these clear and express provisions, Congress established, at its very first session, in the Judicial Act, a mode for carrying them into full effect, and for bringing all questions of constitutional power to the final decision of the Supreme Court. It then, sir, became a government. It then had the means of self-protection; and, but for this, it would, in all probability, have been now among things which are past. Having constituted the government, and declared its powers, the people have farther said, that, since somebody must decide on the extent of these powers, the government shall itself

decide; subject, always, like other popular governments, to its responsibility to the people.

And now, sir, I repeat, how is it that a State

"This, sir, was the first great step. By this,

any State to the contrary notwithstanding.

Sir, the very

With respect to the Virginia resolutions, on which Mr. Hayne relied, Mr. Webster disputed the interpretation put upon them-claimed for them an innocent and justifiable meaning-and exempted Mr. Madison from the suspicion of having penned a resolution asserting the right of a State legislature to annul an act of Congress, and thereby putting it in the power of one State to destroy a form of government which he had just labored so hard to establish. To this effect he said:

"I wish now, sir, to make a remark upon the Virginia resolutions of 1798. I cannot undertake to say how these resolutions were understood by those who passed them. Their language is not a little indefinite. In the case of the exercise, by Congress, of a dangerous power, not granted to them, the resolutions assert the right on the part of the State, to interfere, and arrest the progress of the evil. This is susceptible of more than one interpretation. It may mean no more than that the States may interfere by complaint and remonstrance; or by proposing to the people an alteration of the federal constitution. This would all be quite unobjectionable; or, it may be, that no more is meant than to assert the general right of revolution, as against all gor. ernments, in cases of intolerable oppression, This no one doubts; and this, in my opinion is all that he who framed the resolutions could have meant by it: for I shall not readily believe that he (Mr. Madison) was ever of opinion that a State, under the constitution, and in conformity with it, could, upon the ground of her own opinion of its unconstitutionality, however clear and palpable she might think the case, annul a law of Congress, so far as it should operate on herself, by her own legislative power.'

Mr. Hayne, on his part, disclaimed all imitation of the Hartford Convention; and gave (as the practical part of his doctrine) the pledge of forcible resistance to any attempt to enforce unconstitutional laws. He said:

"Sir, unkind as my allusion to the Hartford Convention has been considered by its supporters. I apprehend that this disclaimer of the gentle man will be regarded as 'the unkindest cut of all.' When the gentleman spoke of the Carolina conventions of Colleton and Abbeville let legislature acquires any power to interfere? me tell him that he spoke of that which never had existence, except in There have, indeed, been n in those districts, compos minded and patriotic mer boast; but we have had no and when South Carolina measure for the redress of tell the gentleman that. that have ever been convention shall consent to take as an find more favor in our eyes mended to us by the sena setts. Sir, we would scorn of difficulties created by a f from the federal governme our grievances. We are constitutional rights, in a tin but if the country should, un m a war to-morrow, we sho to the standard of our co back the common enemy, upon the restoration of our The gentleman has call out our scheme practically. correct in my view of this lows, of course, that the ris established, the federal gover acquiesce in a solemn decisio in its sovereign capacity, at make an appeal to the people to the constitution. This se State (made either through i convention, as may be suppos organ of its sovereign will-a pose now to discuss) binds t ment, under the highest consti not to resort to any means of the citizens of the dissenting S can any collision ensue betwe State governments, unless, i should determine to enforce t stitutional means? What government do, in such a ca the gentleman, to the courts can any man believe that, in the decision of a State, that an a a gross, palpable, and delibera constitution, and the interpos reign authority to protect its usurpation, that juries could merely to register the decrees wholly regardless of the unco acter of their acts? Will the tend that juries are to be coerce at the point of the bayonet? are the United States to enforce pronounced to be unconstitution attempt should be made to o into effect, by force, in what we fer from an attempt to carry i nullified by the courts, or to c lawful and unwarrantable act? gress should pass an agraria emancipating our slaves, or sho

ght to say to the nts and servants e to decide that ts, appointed by transcended the The reply would who made you ? To their own a resolutions, on Vebster disputed jem—claimed for le meaning—and the suspicion of serting the right all an act of Conthe power of one rnment which he stablish. To this remark upon the I cannot underions were undernem. Their lan-In the case of the rerous power, not s assert the right, erfere, and arrest is susceptible of It may mean no interfere by comr proposing to the eral constitution. jectionable; or, it than to assert the against all govable oppression. in my opinion, is resolutions could not readily believe r of opinion that a and in conformity of her own opinion ver clear and pale, annul a law of erate on herself, > claimed all imitaon; and gave (as ne) the pledge of upt to enforce un-

by its supporters, ser of the gende unkindest cut of soke of the Caro-ind Abbeville, let that which never

There have, indeed, been meetings of the people in those districts, composed, sir, of as highminded and patriotic men as any country can boast; but we have had no 'convention' as yet; and when South Carolina shall resort to such a measure for the redress of her grievances, let me tell the gentleman that, of all the assemblies that have ever been convened in this country, the Hartford Convention is the very last we shall consent to take as an example; nor will it find more favor in our eyes, from being recommended to us by the senator from Massachusetts. Sir, we would scorn to take advantage of difficulties created by a foreign war, to wring from the federal government a redress even of our grievances. We are standing up for our constitutional rights, in a time of profound peace but if the country should, unhappily, be involved m a war to-morrow, we should be found flying to the standard of our country-first driving back the common enemy, and then insisting upon the restoration of our rights.

"The gentleman has called upon us to carry out our scheme practically. Now, sir, if I am correct in my view of this matter, then it follows, of course, that the right of a State being established, the federal government is bound to acquiesce in a solemn decision of a State, acting in its sovereign capacity, at least so far as to make an appeal to the people for an amendment to the constitution. This solemn decision of a State (made either through its legislature, or a convention, as may be supposed to be the proper organ of its sovereign will-a point I do not propose now to discuss) binds the federal government, under the highest constitutional obligation, not to resort to any means of coercion against the citizens of the dissenting State. How, then, can any collision ensue between the federal and State governments, unless, indeed, the former should determine to enforce the law by unconstitutional means? What could the federal government do, in such a case? Resort, says the gentleman, to the courts of justice. Now, can any man believe that, in the face of a solemn decision of a State, that an act of Congress is 'a gross, palpable, and deliberate violation of the constitution, and the interposition of its sovereign authority to protect its citizens from the usurpation, that juries could be found ready merely to register the decrees of the Congress, wholly regardless of the unconstitutional character of their acts? Will the gentleman contend that juries are to be coerced to find verdicts at the point of the bayonet? And if not, how are the United States to enforce an act solemnly pronounced to be unconstitutional? But, if the attempt should be made to carry such a law into effect, by force, in what would the case differ from an attempt to carry into effect an act nullified by the courts, or to do any other unlawful and unwarrantable act? Suppose Congress should pass an agrarian law, or a law had existence, except in his own imagination. There have, indeed, been meetings of the people in those districts, composed, sir, of as highmided and patriotic men as any country can boast; but we have had no 'convention' as yet; and when South Carolina shall resort to such a citizens from their operation?

"Sir, if Congress should ever attempt to enforce any such laws, they would put themselves so clearly in the wrong, that no one could doubt the right of the State to exert its protecting

"Sir, the gentleman has alluded to that portion of the militia of South Carolina with which I have the honor to be connected, and asked how they would act in the event of the nullification of the tariff law by the State of South Carolina? The tone of the gentleman, on this subject, did not seem to me as respectful as I could have desired. I hope, sir, no imputation was intended.

[Mr. Webster: "Not at all; just the reverse."]

"Well, sir, the gentleman asks what their leaders would be able to read to them out of Coke upon Littleton, or any other law book, to justify their enterprise? Sir, let me assure the gentleman that, whenever any attempt shall be made from any quarter, to enforce unconstitutional laws, clearly violating our essential rights, our leaders (whoever they may be) will not be found reading black letter from the musty pages of old law books. They will look to the constitution, and when called upon, by the sovereign authority of the State, to preserve and protect the rights secured to them by the charter of their liberties, they will succeed in 'defending them, or 'perish in the last ditch.'"

I do not pretend to give the arguments of the gentlemen, or even their substance, but merely to state their propositions and their conclusions. For myself, I did not believe in anything serious in the new interpretation given to the Virginia resolutions-did not believe in any thing practical from nullification—did not believe in forcible resistance to the tariff laws from South Carolina -did not believe in any scheme of disunionbelieved, and still believe, in the patriotism of Mr. Hayne: and as he came into the argument on my side in the article of the public lands, so my wishes were with him, and I helped him where I could. Of this desire to help, and disbelief in disunion, I gave proof, in ridiculing, as well as I could, Mr. Webster's fine peroration to liberty and union, and really thought it out of place-a fine piece of rhetoric misplaced, for want of circumstances to justify it. He had concluded thus:

gress should pass an agrarian law, or a law "When my eyes shall be turned to behold, emancipating our slaves, or should commit any for the last time, the sun in heaven, may I not see

ments of a once glorious Union; on States dissevered, discordant, belligerent; on a land rent with civil feuds, or drenched, it may be, in fraternal blood! Let their last feeble and lingering glance, rather, behold the gorgeous ensign of the republic, now known and honored throughout the earth, still full high advanced, its arms and trophies streaming in their original lustre, not a stripe erased or polluted, nor a single star obscured, bearing for its motto no such miserable interrogatory as, What is all this worth? Nor those other words of delusion and folly, Liberty first, and Union afterwards: but every where, spread all over in characters of living light, blazing on all its ample folds, as they float over the sea and over the land, and in every wind under the whole heavens, that other sentiment, dear to every true American heart-Liberty and Union, now and for ever, one and inseparable!

These were noble sentiments, oratorically expressed, but too elaborately and too artistically composed for real grief in presence of a great calamity-of which calamity I saw no sign; and therefore deemed it a fit subject for gentle castigation: and essayed it thus:

"I proceed to a different theme. Among the novelties of this debate, is that part of the speech of the senator from Massachusetts which dwells with such elaboration of declamation and ornament, upon the love and blessings of unionthe hatred and horror of disunion. It was a part of the senator's speech which brought into full play the favorite Ciceronian figure of amplification. It was up to the rule in that particular. But, it seemed to me, that there was another rule, and a higher, and a precedent one, which it violated. It was the rule of propriety; that rule which requires the fitness of things to be considered; which requires the time, the place, the subject, and the audience, to be considered; and condemns the delivery of the argument, and all its flowers, if it fails in congruence to these particulars. I thought the essay upon union and disunion had so failed. It came to us when we were not prepared for it; when there was nothing in the Senate, nor in the country to grace its introduction; nothing to give, or to receive, effect to, or from, the impassioned scene that we witnessed. It may be, it was the prophetic cry of the distracted daughter of Priam, breaking into the council, and alarming its tranquil members with vaticinations of the fall of Troy: but to me, it all sounded like the sudden proclamation for an earthquake, when the sun, the earth, the air, announced no such prodigy; when all the elements of nature were at rest, and sweet repose pervading the world. There was a time, and you, and I, and all of us, did see it, sir, when such a speech would have found, in its delivery, every attribute of a just and rigorous propriety! It was at a time, when the five-striped banner was waving over the land him shining on the broken and dishonored frag- of the North! when the Hartford Convention was in session! when the language in the capitol was, "Peaceably, if we can; forcibly, if we must!" when the cry, out of doors, was, "the Potomac the boundary; the negro States by themselves! The Alleghanies the boundary; the Western savages by themselves! The Missippi the boundary, let Missouri be governed by a prefect, or given up as a haunt for wild beasts! That time was the fit occasion for this speech: and if it had been delivered then, either in the hall of the House of Representatives, or in the den of the Hartford Convention, or in the highway among the bearers and followers of the five-striped banner, what effects mustit not have produced! What terror and consternation among the plotters of disunion! But, here, in this loyal and quiet assemblage, in this season of general tranquillity and universal allegiance, the whole performance has lost its effect for want of affinity, connection, or relation, any subject depending, or sentiment expressed, in the Senate; for want of any application, or reference, to any event impending in the country."

> I do not quote this passage for any thing that I now see out of place in that peroration; but for a quite different purpose-for the purpose of showing that I was slow to believe in any design to subvert this Unionthat at the time of this great debate (February and March, 1830) I positively discredited it, and publicly proclaimed my incredulity. I did not want to believe it. I repulsed the belief. I pushed aside every circumstance that Mr. Webster relied on, and softened every expression that Mr. Havne used, and considered him as limiting (practically) his threatened resistance to the tariff act, to the kind of resistance which Virginia made to the alien and sedition laws-which was an appeal to the reason, judgment and feelings of the other States-and which had its effect in the speedy repeal of those laws. Mr. Calhoun had not then uncovered his position in relation to nullification. I knew that Mr. Webster was speaking at him in all that he said to Mr. Hayne: but I would believe nothing against him except upon his own showing, or undoubted evidence. Although not a favorite statesman with me, I felt admiration for his high intellectual endowments, and respect for the integrity and purity of his private life. Mr. Hayne I cordially loved; and believed, and still believe, in the loyalty of his intentions to the Union. They were both from the South-that sister Carolina of which the other was my native State, and in both of which I have relatives and hereditary friends-and for which I still ha none but the wicked ever birth: and I felt as they to the tariff-except their for the present. The occ we arrive at the practical dern nullification doctrin stitution from the political within itself a suicidal p cate the Virginia resolution (and, in their own language cal and preposterous" in been put upon their words

CHAPTER

REPEAL OF THE

A TAX on Salt is an odious all people and in all time. being an article of prime nec to man and to beast, and be them by the Giver of all go not be burthened, nor the use ernment regulation; and th taxation would require it to it is an agent, and a great or ment of many branches of ag chanical industry which add the country and produce reve ports and consumption to whice People hate the salt tax, becaus to have the salt, and cannot ev ernments love the tax for the s cause people are obliged to pay seem to apply to governments narchial, and not to those which tive and popular. But repres ments sometimes have calamities ple-when subjects of taxation for revenue increases: and tl tive governments, like others, mi objects which will supply its ne has twice been the case with the in the United States. The duty was carried up to a high tax in with France (1798), having been and then only imposed as a wa mase as soon as the war was over. artford Convention guage in the capiin; forcibly, if we f doors, was, "the negro States by s the boundary selves! The Misri be governed by t for wild beasts! for this speech; then, either in the ntatives, or in the n, or in the highfollowers of the ts must it not have nsternation among , here, in this loval season of general giance, the whole for want of affinany subject de-t, in the Senate; reference, to any > ge for any thing e in that peroraent purpose-for I was slow to ert this Uniondebate (February ly discredited it, acredulity. I did lsed the belief. I e that Mr. Webry expression that d him as limiting stance to the tariff which Virginia aws-which was aent and feelings had its effect in s. Mr. Calhoun tion in relation to r. Webster was id to Mr. Hayne: inst him except oubted evidence. an with me, I felt ual endowments, nd purity of his ially loved; and the loyalty of They were both crolina of which and in both of ditary friends and for which I still have the affections which none but the wicked ever lose for the land of their birth: and I felt as they did ir all that relates to the tariff—except their remedy. But enough for the present. The occasion will come, when we arrive at the practical application of the modern nullification doctrine, to vindicate the constitution from the political solecism of containing within itself a suicidal principle, and to vindicate the Virginia resolutions, and their authors (and, in their own language), from the "anarchical and preposterous" interpretation which has been put upon their words.

CHAPTER XLV.

REPEAL OF THE SALT TAX.

A TAX on Salt is an odious measure, hated by all people and in all time, and justly, because being an article of prime necessity, indispensable to man and to beast, and bountifully furnished them by the Giver of all good, the cost should not be burthened, nor the use be stinted by government regulation; and the principles of fair taxation would require it to be spared, because it is an agent, and a great one, in the development of many branches of agricultural and mechanical industry which add to the wealth of the country and produce revenue from the exports and consumption to which they give rise. People hate the salt tax, because they are obliged to have the salt, and cannot evade the tax: governments love the tax for the same reason-because people are obliged to pay it. This would seem to apply to governments despotic or monarchial, and not to those which are representative and popular. But representative governments sometimes have calamities—war for example-when subjects of taxation diminish as need for revenue increases: and then representative governments, like others, must resort to the objects which will supply its necessities. This has twice been the case with the article of salt in the United States. The duty on that article was carried up to a high tax in the quasi war with France (1798), having been small before; and then only imposed as a war measure—to ernments work alike on the imposition and release of taxes—easy to get them on in a time of necessity—hard to get them off when the necessity has passed. So of this first war tax on salt. The "speck of war" with France, visible above the horizon in '98, soon sunk below it; and the sunshine of peace prevailed. In the year 1800—two years after the duty was raised to its maximum—the countries were on the most friendly terms; but it was not until 1807, and under the whole power of Mr. Jefferson's administration, that this temporary tax was abolished; and with it the whole system of fishing bounties and allowances founded upon it.

In the war of 1812, at the commencement of the war with Great Britain, it was renewed, with its concomitant of sishing bounties and allowances; but still as a temporary measure, limited to the termination of the war which induced it, and one year thereafter. The war terminated in 1815, and the additional year expired in 1816; but before the year was out, the tax was continued, not for a definite period, but without time-on the specious argument that, if a time was fixed, it would be difficult to get it off before the time was out: but if unfixed, it would be easy to get it off at any time: and all agreed that that was to be soon-that a temporary continuance of all the taxes was necessary until the revenue, deranged by the war, should become regular and adequate. It was continued on this specious argument—and remained in full until General Jackson's administration—and, in part, until this day (1850)—the fishing bounties and allowances in full: and that is the working of all governments in the levy and repeal of taxes. I found the salt tax in full force when I came to the Senate in 1820, strengthened by time, sustained by a manufacturing interest, and by the fishing interest (which made the tax a source of profit in the supposed return of the duty in the shape of bounties and allowances): and by the whole American system; which took the tax into its keeping, as a protection to a branch of home industry. I found efforts being made in each House to suppress this burthen upon a prime necessary of life; and, in the session 1829-'30, delivered a speech in support of the laudable endeavor, of which these are some parts:

and then only imposed as a war measure—to make as soon as the war was over. But all goving that he was no advocate for unprofitable de-

the catalogue of barren orators; but that there were cases in which speaking did good; cases in which moderate abilities produced great results; and he believed the question of repealing the salt tax to be one of those cases. It had certainly been so in England. There the salt tax had been overthrown by the labors of plain men. under circumstances much more unfavorable to their undertaking than exist here. The English salt tax had continued one hundred and fifty years. It was cherished by the ministry, to whom it yielded a million and a half sterling of revenue; it was defended by the domestic salt makers, to whom it gave a monopoly of the home market; it was consecrated by time, having subsisted for five generations; it was fortified by the habits of the people, who were born, and had grown gray under it; and it was sanctioned by the necessities of the State, which required every resource of rigorous taxation. Yet it was overthrown; and the overthrow was effected by two debates, conducted, not by the orators whose renown has filled the world-not by Sheridan, Burke, Pitt, and Fox-but by plain, business men-Mr. Calcraft, Mr. Curwen, and Mr. Egerton. These patriotic members of the British Parliament commenced the war upon the British salt tax in 1817, and finished it in 1822. They commenced with the omens and auspices all against them, and ended with complete suc-They abolished the salt tax in toto. They swept it all off, bravely rejecting all compromises when they had got their adversaries half vanquished, and carrying their appeals home to the people, until they had roused a spirit before which the ministry quailed, the monopolizers trembled, the Parliament gave way, and the tax fell. This example is encouraging; it is full of consolation and of hope; it shows what zeal and perseverance can do in a good cause: it shows that the cause of truth and justice is triumphant when its advocates are bold and faithful. leads to the conviction that the American salt tax will fall as the British tax did, as soon as the people shall see that its continuance is a burthen to them, without adequate advantage to the government, and that its repeal is in their own hands.

"The enormous amount of the tax was the first point to which Mr. B. would direct his attention. He said it was near three hundred per cent. upon Liverpool blown, and four hundred per cent. upon alum salt; but as the Liverpool was a very inferior salt, and not much used in the West, he would confine his observations to the salt of Portugal and the West Indies, called by the general name of alum. The import price of this salt was from eight to nine cents a bushel of fifty-six pounds each, and the duty upon that bushel was twenty cents. Here was a tax of upwards of two hundred per cent. Then the merchant had his profit upon the duty as well as the cost of the article: and when it went the treasury under the laws which intended to through the hands of several merchants before indemnify them for the duty paid on foreign salt bate, and had no ambition to add his name to it got to the consumer, each had his profit upon it; and whenever this profit amounted to fifty per cent. upon the duty, it was upwards of one hundred per cent. upon the salt. Then, the tariff laws have deprived the consumer of thirty. four pounds in the bushel, by substituting weight for measure, and that weight a false one. The true weight of a measured bushel of alum salt is eighty-four pounds; but the British tariff laws, for the sake of multiplying the bushels and increasing the product of the tax, substituted weight for measure; and our tariff laws copied after them, and adopted their standard of fifty-six pounds to the bushel.

"Mr. B. entered into statistical details, to show the aggregate amount of this tax, which he stated to be enormous, and contrary to every principle of taxation, even if taxes were so necessary as to justify the taxing of salt. He stated the importation of foreign salt, in 1829, at six millions of bushels, round numbers; the value seven hundred and fifteen thousand dollars, and the tax at twenty cents a bushel, one million two hundred thousand dollars, the merchant's profit upon that duty at fifty per cent. is six hundred thousand dollars; and the secret or hidden tax, in the shape of false weight for true measure at the rate of thirty pounds in the bushel, was four hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Here, then, is taxation to the amount of about two millions and a quarter of dollars, upon an article costing seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and that article one of prime necessity and universal use, ranking next after bread, in the catalogue of articles for human subsistence.

"The distribution of this enormous tax upon the different sections of the Union, was the next object of Mr. B.'s inquiry; and, for this purpose, he viewed the Union under three great divisions -the Northeast, the South, and the West. To the northeast, and especially to some parts of it. he considered the salt tax to be no burthen but rather a benefit and a money-making business. The fishing allowances and bounties produced this effect. In consideration of the salt duty, the curers and exporters of fish are allowed money out of the treasury, to the amount, as it was intended, of the salt duty paid by them; but it has been proved to be twice as much. The annual allowance is about two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and the aggregate drawn from the treasury since the first imposition of the salt duty in 1789, is shown by the treasury returns to be five millions of dollars. Much of this is drawn by undue means, as is shown by the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, at the commencement of the present session, page eight of the annual report on the finances. The Northeast makes much salt at home, and chiefly by solar evaporation, which fits it for curing fish and provisions. Much of it is proved, by the returns of the salt makers, to be used in the fisheries, while the fisheries are drawing money from

To this section of the Uni is not felt as a burthen.

"Let us proceed to the S there are but few salt worl allowances, as there are no sumers are thrown almos foreign supply, and chiefly blown. The import price of cents a bushel; the weight than that of alum salt; and and directly upon the people, of their consumption. It' upon the South.

"The West is the last see and it will be found to be most oppressive operations of domestic supply is high in quantity, and altogether un greatest purposes for which sa -curing provisions for expor supply is indispensable, and almost. The import price of West Indies, is nine cents a bu ugal, eight cents a bushel. A West could be supplied with Orleans, if the duty was abolis sequence of the duty, it costs t half cents per bushel there, bei import price of the article, and s per bushel at Louisville and oth of the valley of the Mississippi. price, resolved into its componer made up: 1. Eight or nine cer the salt. 2. Twenty cents for o or ten cents for merchant's profit 4. Sixteen or seventeen cents for svile. 5. Fifteen or twenty cent merchant's profit, who counts his his whole outlay. In all, about ser for a bushel of fifty pounds, which no duty, and the tariff regulation measure abolished, would be boug lans, by the measured bushel of weight, for eight or nine cents, brought up the river, by steambox of thirty-three and a third cents weight. It thus appears that the heaviest upon the West. It is an se that the South is the greatest s West wants it for every purpose the and two great purposes besides—cur for export, and salting stock. The sum salt, and on this the duty is onse the price is lower, and the we Twenty cents on salt which costs e ents a bushel is a much heavier du that which costs fifteen cents; and exption in the substitution of weight much greater in alum salt, which marin the West, where the expor Vol. I.—10 much more than the Liverpool blown both the West receives no bountie

mes on account of the salt duties.

I his profit upon mounted to fifty upwards of one salt. Then, the sumer of thirty-betituting weight false one. The het of alum salt ce British tariffing the bushels, the tax, substil our tariff laws I their standard

ul details, to show x, which he staty to every princiere so necessary

He stated the 1829, at six mil-; the value seven dollars, and the one million two nerchant's profit t. is six hundred et or hidden tax, true measure, at bushel, was four urs. Here, then, out two millions in article costing and dollars, and ty and universal in the catalogue rmous tax upon on, was the next for this purpose, e great divisions the West. To some parts of it, no burthen, but taking business. unties produced the salt duty, the allowed money ount, as it was by them; but it much. The anindred and fifty gate drawn from sition of the salt treasury returns Much of this i hown by the re-Treasury, at the ssion, page eight es. The North and chiefly by for curing fish proved, by the used in the fishring money from nich intended to l on foreign salt

To this section of the Union, then, the salt tax is not felt as a burthen.

"Let us proceed to the South. In this section there are but few salt works, and no bounties or allowances, as there are no fisheries. The consumers are thrown almost entirely upon the foreign supply, and chiefly use the Liverpool blown. The import price of this is about fifteen cents a bushel; the weight and strength is less than that of alum salt; and the tax falls heavily and directly upon the people, to the whole amount of their consumption. It is a heavy burthen upon the South.

"The West is the last section to be viewed. and it will be found to be the true seat of the most oppressive operations of the salt tax. The domestic supply is high in price, deficient in quantity, and altogether unfit for one of the greatest purposes for which salt is there wanted curing provisions for exportation. A foreign supply is indispensable, and alum salt is the kind The import price of this kind, from the West Indies, is nine cents a bushels; from Portugal, eight cents a bushel. At these prices, the West could be supplied with this salt at New Orleans, if the duty was abolished; but, in consequence of the duty, it costs thirty-seven and a half cents per bushel there, being four times the import price of the article, and seventy-five cents per bushel at Louisville and other central parts the valley of the Mississippi. This enormous rice, resolved into its component parts, is thus made up: 1. Eight or nine cents a bushel for the salt. 2. Twenty cents for duty. 3. Eight ten cents for merchant's profit at New Orleans. Sixteen or seventeen cents for freight to Loustile. 5. Fifteen or twenty cents for the second merchant's profit, who counts his per centum on is whole outlay. In all, about seventy-five cents for a bushel of fifty pounds, which, if there was duty, and the tariff regulations of weight for measure abolished, would be bought in New Orleans, by the measured bushel of eighty pounds weight, for eight or nine cents, and would be brought up the river, by steamboats, at the rate of thirty-three and a third cents per hundred weight. It thus appears that the salt tax falls heaviest upon the West. It is an error to supose that the South is the greatest sufferer. West wants it for every purpose the South does. and two great purposes besides—curing provision for export, and salting stock. The West uses alum salt, and on this the duty is heaviest, becase the price is lower, and the weight greater. Iwenty cents on salt which costs eight or nine ents a bushel is a much heavier duty than on that which costs fifteen cents; and then the deention in the substitution of weight for measure is much greater in alum salt, which weighs so much more than the Liverpool blown. Like the both the West receives no bounties or allowmees on account of the salt duties. This may Mair in the South, where the imported salt is beef, pork, bacon, cheese, and butter, is prodigious, and the foreign salt re-exported upon the whole of it.

Vol. I.-10

"Mr. B. then argued, with great warmth, that the provision curers and exporters were entitled to the same bounties and allowances with the exporters of fish. The claims of each rested upon the same principle, and upon the principle of all drawbacks-that of a reimbursement of the duty which was paid on the imported salt when re-exported on fish and provisions. The same principle covers the beef and pork of the farmer, which covers the fish of the fisherman; and such was the law in the beginning. The first act of Congress, in the year 1789, which imposed a duty upon salt, allowed a bounty, in lieu of a draw back, on beef and pork exported, as well as fish. The bounty was the same in each case; it was five cents a quintal on dried fish, five cents a barrel on pickled fish, and five on beef and pork. As the duty on salt was increased, the bounties and allowances were increased also. Fish and salted beef and pork fared alike for the first twenty years.

"They fared alike till the revival of the salt tax at the commencement of the late war. Then they parted company; bounties and allowances were continued to the fisheries, and dropped on beef and pork; and this has been the case ever since. The exporters of fish are now drawing at the rate of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars per annum, as a reimbursement for their salt tax: while exporters of provisions draw nothing. The aggregate of the fishing bounties and allowances, actually drawn from the treasury, exceeds five millions of dollars; while the exporters of provisions, who get nothing, would have been entitled to draw a greater sum; for the export in salted provisions exceeds the value of exported fish.

"Mr. B. could not quit this part of his subject, without endeavoring to fix the attention of the Senate upon the provision trade of the West. He took this trade in its largest sense, as including the export trade of beef, pork, bacon, cheese, and butter, to foreign countries, especially the West Indies; the domestic trade to the Lower Mississippi and the Southern States; the neighborhood trade, as supplying the towns in the upper States, the miners in Missouri and the Upper Mississippi, the army and the navy; and the various professions, which, being otherwise employed, did not raise their own provisions. The amount of this trade, in this comprehensive view, was prodigious, and annually increasing, and involving in its current almost the entire population of the West, either as the growers and makers of the provisions, the curers, exporters, or consumers. The amount could scarcely be ascertained. What was exported from New Orleans was shown to be great; but it was only a fraction of the whole trade. He declared it to be entitled to the favorable consideration of Congress, Mreceported upon fish or provisions; but it is and that the repeal of the salt duty was the greatest favor, if an act of justice ought to come under the name of favor, which could be rendered it, as the salt was necessary in growing the hogs and cattle, as well as in preparing the beef and pork for market. A reduction in the price of salt, next to a reduction in the price of land, was the greatest blessing which the federal government could now confer upon the West. Mr. B. referred to the example of England, who favored her provision curers, and permitted them to import alum salt free of duty, for the encouragement of the provision trade, even when her own salt manufacturers were producing an abundant and superfluous supply of common salt. He showed that she did more; that she extended the same relief and encouragement to the Irish; and he read from the British statute book an act of the British Parliament, passed in 1807, entitled 'An act to encourage the export of salted beef and pork from Ireland,' which allowed a bounty of ten pence sterling on every hundred weight of beef and pork so exported, in consideration of the duty paid on the salt which was used in the curing of it. He stated, that, at a later period, the duty had been entirely repealed, and the Irish, in common with other British subjects, allowed a free trade with all the world, in salt; and then demanded, in the most emphatic manner, if the people of the West could not obtain from the American Congress the justice which the oppressed Irish had procured from a British Parliament, composed of hereditary nobles, and filled with representatives of rotten boroughs, and slavish retainers of the king's ministers. "The 'American system' has taken the salt tax under its shelter and protection. The principles of that system, as I understand them, and practise upon them, are to tax, through the custom house, the foreign rivals of our own essential productions, when, by that taxation, an adequate supply of the same article, as good and as cheap, can be made at home. These were the principles of the system (Mr. B. said) when he was initiated, and, if they had changed since, he had not changed with them; and he apprehended a promulgation of the change would produce a schism amongst its followers. Taking these to be the principles of the system, let the salt tax be brought to its test. In the first place, the domestic manufacture had enjoyed all possible protection. The duty was near three hundred per cent. on Liverpool salt, and four hundred upon alum salt; and to this must be added, so far as relates to all the interior manufactories, the protection arising from transportation, frequently equal to two or three hundred per cent. more. This great and excessive protection has been enjoyed, without interruption, for the last eighteen years, and partially for twenty years longer. This surely is time enough for the trial of a manufacture which requires but little skill or experience to carry it on. Now for the results. Have the domestic manufactories produced an adequate supply for the country? They have not;

year (1829) as shown in the returns to the Sec. retary of the Treasury, is about five millions of bushels; the importation of foreign salt, for the same period, as shown by the custom-house returns, is five million nine hundred and forty-five thousand five hundred and forty-seven bushels, This shows the consumption to be eleven millions of bushels, of which five are domestic Here the failure in the essential particular of an adequate supply is more than one half. In the next place, how is it in point of price? Is the domestic article furnished as cheap as the foreign? Far from it, as alrendy shown, and still further, as can be shown. The price of the domestic, along the coast of the Atlantic States, varies, at the works, from thirty-seven and a half to fifty cents; in the interior, the usual prices, at the works, are from thirty-three and a third cents to one dollar for the bushel of fifty pounds, which can nearly be put into a half bushel measure. The prices of the foreign salt, at the import cities, as shown in the customhouse returns for 1829, are, for the Liverpool blown, about fifteen cents for the bushel of fiftysix pounds; for Turk's Island and other West India salt, about nine cents; for St. Ubes and other Portugal salt, about eight cents; for Spanish salt, Bay of Biscay and Gibraltar, about seven cents; from the Island of Malta, six cents. Leaving out the Liverpool salt, which is made by boiling, and, therefore, contains slack and bittern, a septic ingredient, which promotes putrefaction, and renders that salt unfit for curing provisions, and which is not used in the West, and the average price of the strong, pure, alum salt, made by solar evaporation, in hot climates, is about eight cents to the bushel. Here, then, is another lamentable failure. Instead of being sold as cheap as the foreign, the domestic salt is from four to twelve times the price of alum sait. The last inquiry is as to the quality of the domestic article. Is it as good as the foreign? This is the most essential application of the test: and here again the failure is decisive. The domestic salt will not cure provisions for exportation (the little excepted which is made, in the Northeast, by solar evaporation), nor for consumption in the South, nor for long keeping at the army posts, nor for voyages with the navy. For all these purposes it is worthless, and useless, and the provisions which are put up in it are lost, or have to be repacked, at a great expense, in alum salt. This fact is well known throughout the West, where too many citizens have paid the penalty of trusting to domestic salt, to be duped or injured by it any longer.

"And here he submitted to the Senate that the American system, without a gross departure from its original principles, could not cover this duty any longer. It has had the full benefit of that system in high duties, imposed for a long time, on foreign salt; it had not produced an adequate supply for the country, nor half a supply; nor at as cheap a rate, by three hundred or nor half enough. The production of the last one thousand per cent.; and what it did supply

so far from being equal in even be used as a substitu important business of the amount of so much of that eign countries, Mr. B. sho thousand barrels of beef barrels of pork, two million two millions of pounds of b of pounds of cheese; and he ply for the army and navy. in the Sourth, to exceed the

"It cannot be necessary the uses of salt. But, in re England, it was thought w salt was necessary to the fattening of hogs, cattle, she it was a preservative of hay stored moulded and flooded wholesome state, and made e available as food for cattle. makers fleed not speak of pro salt. No quantity of duty w people must have it for the p the duty upon that kind o burthen upon them, without advantage to the salt makers "Mr. B. said, there was n could be used here, in favor duty, which was not used, a

England; and many were u real force, which cannot be American system, by name, into the service of the tax the were; and he read a part of committee on salt duties, in It was the statement of the a salt manufacturers, Mr. Wi was sworn and examined as a 'I will commence by referring gave upon the subject of rock establish the presumption of portance of the salt trade, arisi extent of British capital emplo and the considerable number of ant upon it for support. I, a stated that the salt trade was i state, and that it continued to it cannot be doubted that the s mon with all staple British ma titled to the protection of gove British manufacturers of salt common with other manufactul try, they are entitled to such p ticular from a competition at he manufacturers; and, in consec to see a prohibitory outy on for "Such was the petition of th fecturers. They urged the amo ital, the depressed state of th number of persons dependent a port, the duty of the governme the necessity for a prohibitory salt, and the fact that they we than the country could consume backed them with a call for the eturns to the Secit five millions of reign salt, for the custom-house rered and forty-five ty-seven bushels. to be eleven milive are domestic. 1 particular of an one half. In the of price? Is the s cheap as the endy shown, and

The price of the e Atlantic States. nirty-seven and a nterior, the usual thirty-three and a he bushel of fifty put into a half of the foreign salt 'n in the customfor the Liverpool he bushel of fifty-I and other West for St. Ubes and it cents; for Span-

Gibraltar, about of Malta, six cents. dt, which is made ontains slack and ch promotes putre-t unfit for curing used in the West, strong, pure, alum n, in hot climates, shel. Here, then,

Instead of being he domestic salt is price of alum salt. he quality of the od as the foreign? ication of the test: decisive. The doisions for exportach is made, in the tion), nor for conor long keeping at ges with the navy. vorthless, and useh are put up in it ked, at a great exact is well known too many citizens isting to domestic v it any longer.

to the Senate, that t a gross departure ould not cover this the full benefit of imposed for a long d not produced an try, nor half a supy three hundred or what it did supply so far from being equal in quantity, could not even be used as a substitute for the great and important business of the provision trade. The amount of so much of that trade as went to foreign countries, Mr. B. showed to be sixty-six harrels of pork, two millions of pounds of bacon, two millions of pounds of butter, and one million of pounds of cheese; and he considered the supply for the army and navy, and for consumption in the South, to exceed the quantity exported.

"It cannot be necessary here to dilate upon the uses of salt. But, in repealing that duty in England, it was thought worthy of notice that salt was necessary to the health, growth, and fattening of hogs, cattle, sheep, and horses; that it was a preservative of hay and clover, and restored moulded and flooded hay to its good and wholesome state, and made even straw and chaff available as food for cattle. The domestic salt makers need not speak of protection against alum salt. No quantity of duty will keep it out. The people must have it for the provision trade; and the duty upon that kind of salt is a grievous burthen upon them, without being of the least advantage to the salt makers.

"Mr. B. said, there was no argument which could be used here, in favor of continuing this duty, which was not used, and used in vain, in England; and many were used there, of much real force, which cannot be used here. The American system, by name, was not impressed into the service of the tax there, but its doctrines were; and he read a part of the report of the committee on salt duties, in 1817, to prove it. It was the statement of the agent of the British salt manufacturers, Mr. William Horne, who was sworn and examined as a witness. He said: I will commence by referring to the evidence I rave upon the subject of rock salt, in order to establish the presumption of the national importance of the salt trade, arising from the large extent of British capital employed in the trade, and the considerable number of persons dependant upon it for support. I, at the same time, stated that the salt trade was in a very depressed state, and that it continued to fall off. I think it cannot be doubted that the salt trade, in common with all staple British manufactures, is entitled to the protection of government; and the British manufacturers of salt consider that, in common with other manufacturers of this country, they are entitled to such protection, in particular from a competition at home with foreign manufacturers; and, in consequence, they hope to see a prohibitory outy on foreign salt.'

"Such was the petition of the British manubetween. They urged the amount of their capper, the duty of the government to protect it, than the country could consume. The ministry the revenue, one million five hundred thousand pounds sterling, derived from the salt tax; and with a threat to lay that amount upon something else, if it was taken off of salt. All would not do. Mr. Calcraft, and his friends, appealed thousand barrels of beef, fifty-four thousand to the rights and interests of the people, as overruling considerations in questions of taxation. They denounced the tax itself as little less than impiety, and an attack upon the goodness and wisdom of God, who had filled the bowels of the earth, and the waves of the sea, with salt for the use and blessing of man, and to whom it was denied, its use clogged and fettered, by odious and abominable taxes. They demanded the whole repeal; and when the ministry and the manufacturers, overpowered by the voice of the people, offered to give up three fourths of the tax, they bravely resisted the proposition, stood out for total repeal. and carried it. "Mr. B. could not doubt a like result here, and he looked forward, with infinite satisfaction, to the era of a free trade in salt. The first effect of such a trade would be, to reduce the price of alum salt, at the import cities, to eight or nine cents a bushel. The second effect would be, a return to the measured bushel, by getting rid of the tariff regulation, which substituted weight for measure, and reduced eighty-four pounds to fifty. The third effect would be, to establish a great trade, carried on by barter, between the inhabitants of the United States and the people of the countries which produce alum salt, to the infinite advantage and comfort of both parties. He examined the operation of this barter at New Orleans. He said, this pure and superior salt, made entirely by solar evaporation, came from countries which were deficient in the articles of food, in which the West abounded. It came from the West Indies, from the coasts of Spain and Portugal, and from places in the Mediterranean; all of which are at this time consumers of American provisions, and take from us beef, pork, bacon, rice, corn, corn meal, flour, potatoes, &c. Their salt costs them almost nothing. It is made on the sea beach by the power of the sun, with little care and aid from man. It is brought to the United States as ballast, costing nothing for the transportation across the sea. The duty alone prevents it from coming to the United States in the most unbounded quantity. Remove the duty, and the trade would be prodigious. A bushel of corn is worth more than a sack of salt to the halfstarved people to whom the sea and the sun give as much of this salt as they will rake up and pack away. The levee at New Orleans would be covered-the warehouses would be crammed with salt; the barter trade would beital the depressed state of their business, the come extensive and universal, a bushel of corn, number of persons dependent upon it for sup- or of potatoes, a few pounds of butter, or a few pounds of beef or pork, would purchase a sack the necessity for a prohibitory duty on foreign of salt; the steamboats would bring it up for a salt, and the fact that they were making more trifle; and all the upper States of the Great Valley, where salt is so scarce, so dear, and so acked them with a call for the continuance of | indispensable for rearing stock and curing probe cheaply and abundantly supplied with that Mr. B. concluded with saying, that, next to the reduction of the price of public lands, and the free use of the earth for labor and cultivation, he considered the abolition of the salt tax, and a free trade in foreign salt, as the greatest blessing which the federal government could now bestow upon the people of the West."

CHAPTER XLVI.

BIRTHDAY OF MR. JEFFERSON, AND THE DOC-TRINE OF NULLIFICATION.

THE anniversary of the birthday of Mr. Jefferson (April 13th) was celebrated this year by a numerous company at Washington City. Among the invited guests present were the President and Vice-President of the United States, three of the Secretaries of departments-Messrs. Van Buren, Eaton and Branch—and the Postmaster-General, Mr. Barry—and numerously attended by members of both Houses of Congress, and by citizens. It was a subscription dinner; and as the paper imported, to do honor to the memory of Mr Jefferson as the founder of the political school to which the subscribers belonged. In that sense I was a subscriber to the dinner and attended it; and have no doubt that the mass of the subscribers acted under the same feeling. There was a full assemblage when I arrived, and I observed gentlemen standing about in clusters in the ante-rooms, and talking with animation on something apparently serious, and which seemed to engross their thoughts. I soon discovered what it was-that it came from the promulgation of the twenty-four regular toasts, which savored of the new doctrine of nullification; and which, acting on some previous misgivings, began to spread the feeling, that the dinner was got up to inaugurate that doctrine, and to make Mr. Jefferson its father. Many persons broke off, and refused to attend further; but the company was still numerous, and ardent, as was proved by the number of volunteer votes given-above eighty-in addition to the twenty-four regulars; and the numerous and animated speeches delivered-the report of the whole proceedings filling eleven newspaper columns. When the regular toasts were over, the President was called upon visions, in addition to all its obvious uses, would for a volunteer, and gave it—the one which electrifled the country, and has become historical: "Our Federal Union: It must be preserved." This brief and simple sentiment, receiving emphasis and interpretation from all the attendant circumstances, and from the feeling which had been spreading since the time of Mr. Webster's speech, was received by the public as a proclamation from the President, to announce a plot against the Union, and to summon the people to its defence. Mr. Calhoun gave the next toast: and it did not at all allay the suspicions which were crowding every bosom. It was this: "The Union: next to our Liberty the most dear: may we all remember that it can only be preserved by respecting the rights of the States, and distributing equally the benefit and burthen of the Union." This toast touched all the tender parts of the new question-liberty before union-only to be preserved-State rights-inequality of burthens and benefits. These phrases, connecting themselves with Mr. Hayne's speech, and with proceedings and publications in South Carolina, unveiled NULLIFICATION, as a new and distinct doctrine in the United States, with Mr. Calhoun for its apostle, and a new party in the field of which he was the leader. The proceedings of the day put an end to all doubt about the justice of Mr. Webster's grand peroration, and revealed to the public mind the fact of an actual design tending to dissolve the Union.

Mr Jefferson was dead at that time, and could not defend himself from the use which the new party made of his name-endeavoring to make him its founder ; -and putting words in his mouth for that purpose which he never spoke. He happened to have written in his lifetime, and without the least suspicion of its future great materiality, the facts in relation to his concernin the famous resolutions of Virginia and Kentucky and which absolve him from the accusation brought against him since his death. He counselled the resolutions of the Virginia General Assembly; and the word nullify, or nullification, is not in them, or any equivalent word: he drew the Kentucky resolutions of 1798: and they are equally destitute of the same phrases. He had nothing to do with the Kentucky resolutions of 1799, in which the word "nullification," and as the "rightful remedy," is found; and upon which the South Carolina school relied as their main argument-and from which their doctrine took its name. Well, he had nothin so wrote (as a mere matter without foreseeing its futur William C. Cabell shortly b letter is in Volume III., page ed correspondence. Thus, he cate himself, without knowing would be necessary, and with argumentative demonstration constitutional remedies whi which he did write, alone he left a friend to stand un was laid low in his grave-on long and intimate association gator, and entitled from his c solute credence of all manking Madison, who, in various lette quarto volume by Mr. J. C. M ington City, has given the pro already used, and added other sive. He fully overthrows and attempt " of the nullifiers to n Mr. Jefferson the pedestal of th ey." (Page 286: letter to Mr. N he left behind him a State also rescue of his assailed integrit tive State of Virginia-whose le unanimously, immediately after to make Mr. Jefferson "the p colossal heresy," passed resolve imputation, and declaring that thing in the Virginia resolutions port South Carolina in her doctr tion. These testimonies absolve but the nullifiers killed his birthd; Instead of being renewed annua s his sincere disciples then inter never been heard of since! and th reat man-benefactor of his speci honor which grateful posterity in it, and which the preservation and of his principles require to be paid

CHAPTER XLV

REGULATION OF COMMER

THE constitution of the United Sta Congress the power to regulate cor breign nations. That power has n one which eleccome historical: be preserved." t, receiving em-.11 the attendant ling which had f Mr. Webster's blic as a proclannounce a plot on the people to the next toast; suspicions which t was this: "The most dear: may t be preserved by es, and distributen of the Union." der parts of the ion-only to be ality of burthens connecting themand with proath Carolina, unand distinct doc-Mr. Calhoun for he field of which dings of the day he justice of Mr. d revealed to the lesign tending to > t time, and could which the new avoring to make ords in his mouth ever spoke. He his lifetime, and ' its future great to his concern in ia and Kentucky, the accusation th. He counsela General Assemullification, is not d: he drew the nd they are equalses. He had nov resolutions of ification," and as ; and upon which as their main ardoctrine took its name. Well, he had nothing to do with it! and so wrote (as a mere matter of information, and without foreseeing its future use), in a letter to William C. Cabell shortly before his death. This letter is in Volume III., page 429, of his published correspondence. Thus, he left enough to vindicate himself, without knowing that a vindication would be necessary, and without recurring to the argumentative demonstration of the peaceful and constitutional remedies which the resolutions which he did write, alone contemplated. But he left a friend to stand up for him when he was laid low in his grave-one qualified by his long and intimate association to be his compurgator, and entitled from his character to the absolute credence of all mankind. I speak of Mr. Madison, who, in various letters published in a quarto volume by Mr. J. C. McGuire, of Washington City, has given the proofs which I have already used, and added others equally conclusive. He fully overthrows and justly resents the attempt " of the nullifiers to make the name of Mr. Jefferson the pedestal of their colossal herew." (Page 286: letter to Mr. N. P. Trist.) And he left behind him a State also to come to the rescue of his assailed integrity-his own natire State of Virginia-whose legislature almost manimously, immediately after the attempt to make Mr. Jefferson "the pedestal of this colossal heresy," passed resolves repulsing the imputation, and declaring that there was nothing in the Virginia resolutions '98 '99, to support South Carolina in her doctrine of nullification. These testimonies absolve Mr. Jefferson: but the nullifiers killed his birthday celebrations! Instead of being renewed annually, in all time, shis sincere disciples then intended, they have never been heard of since! and the memory of a rest man-benefactor of his species-has lost an honor which grateful posterity intended to pay it, and which the preservation and dissemination of his principles require to be paid.

CHAPTER XLVII

REGULATION OF COMMERCE.

In constitution of the United States gives to Congress the power to regulate commerce with tential moving cause of forming the present Union.

executed, in the sense intended by the constitution: for the commercial treaties made by the President and the Senate are not the legislative regulation intended in that grant of power; nor are the tariff laws, whether for revenue or protection, any the more so. They all miss the object, and the mode of operating, intended by the constitution in that grant—the true nature of which was explained early in the life of the new federal government by those most competent to do it-Mr. Jefferson, Mr. Madison, and Mr. Wm. Smith of South Carolina, -and in the form most considerate and responsible. Mr. Jefferson, as Secretary of State, in his memorable report "On the restrictions and privileges of the commerce of the United States in foreign countries;" Mr. Madison in his resolutions as a member of the House of Representatives in the year 1793, "For the regulation of our foreign commerce;" and in his speeches in support of his resolutions; and the speeches in reply, chiefly by Mr. William Smith, of South Carolina, speaking (as it was held), the sense of General Hamilton; so that in the speeches and writing of these three early members of our government (not to speak of many other able men then in the House of Representatives), we have the authentic exposition of the meaning of the clause in question, and of its intended mode of operation: for they all agreed in that view of the subject, though differing about the adoption of a system which would then have borne most heavily upon Great Britain. The plan was defeated at that time, and only by a very small majority (52 to 47),—the defeat effected by the mercantile influence, which favored the British trade, and was averse to any discrimination to her disadvantage, though only intended to coerce her into a commercial treatyof which we then had none with her. Afterwards the system of treaties was followed up, and protection to our own industry extended incidentally through the clause in the constitution authorizing Congress to "Lay and collect taxes, duties, imports and excises," &c. So that the power granted in the clause, "To regulate commerce with foreign nations," has never yet been exercised by Congress:-a neglect or omission, the more remarkable as, besides the plain and obvious fairness and benefit of the regulation intended, the power conferred by that clause was the potential moving cause of forming the present con-

AN

The principle of the regulation was to be that of reciprocity—that is, that trade was not to be free on one side, and fettered on the other—that goods were not to be taken from a foreign country, free of duty, or at a low rate, unless that country should take something from us, also free, or at a low rate. And the mode of acting was by discriminating in the imposition of duties between those which had, and had not, commercial treaties with us-the object to be accomplished by an act of Congress to that effect; which foreign nations might meet either by legislation in their imposition of duties; or, and which is preferable, by treaties of specified and limited duration. My early study of the theory, and the working of our government-so often different, and sometimes opposite-led me to understand the regulation clause in the constitution, and to admire and approve it: and as in the beginning of General Jackson's administration, I foresaw the speedy extinction of the public debt, and the consequent release of great part of our foreign imports from duty, I wished to be ready to derive all the benefit from the event which would result from the double process of receiving many articles free which were then taxed, and of sending abroad many articles free which were now met by heavy taxation. With this view, I brought a bill into the Senate in the session 1829-'30, to revive the policy of Mr. Madison's resolutions of 1793—without effect then, but without despair of eventual success. And still wishing to see that policy revived, and seeing near at hand a favorable opportunity for it in the approaching extinction of our present public debt-(and I wish I could add, a return to economy in the administration of the government)—and consequent large room for the reduction and abolition of duties, I here produce some passages from the speech I delivered on my bill of 1830, preceded by some passages from Mr. Madison's speech of 1793, in support of his resolutions, and showing his view of their policy and operation—not of their constitutionality, for of that there was no question: and his complaint was that the identical clause in the constitution which caused the constitution to be framed, had then remained four years without execution. He said:

"Mr. Madison, after some general observations on the report, entered into a more particuar consideration of the subject. He remarked make her enemies feel the extent of her power that the commerce of the United States is not at this day, on that respectable footing to which from its nature and importance, it is entitled He recurred to its situation previous to the adoption of the constitution, when conflicting systems prevailed in the different States. The then existing state of things gave rise to that convention of delegates from the different parts of the Union, who met to deliberate on some general principles for the regulation of commerce, which might be conducive, in their operation, to the general welfare, and that such measures should be adopted as would conciliate the friendship and good faith of those countries who were disposed to enter into the nearest commercial connections with us. But what has been the result of the system which has been pursued ever since? What is the present situation of our commerce? From the situation in which we find ourselves after four years' experiment, he observed, that it appeared incumbent on the United States to see whether they could not now take measures promotive of those objects, for which the government was in a great degree instituted. Measures of moderation, firmness and decision, he was persuaded, were now necessary to be adopted, in order to narrow the sphere of our commerce with those nations who see proper not to meet us on terms of reciprocity.

"Mr. M. took a general view of the probable effects which the adoption of something like the resolutions he had proposed, would produce. They would produce, respecting many articles imported, a competition which would enable countries who did not now supply us with those articles, to do it, and would increase the encouragement on such as we can produce within our. selves. We should also obtain an equitable share in carrying our own produce; we should enter into the field of competition on equal terms, and enjoy the actual benefit of advantages which nature and the spirit of our people entitle us to.

"He adverted to the advantageous situation this country is entitled to stand in, considering the nature of our exports and returns. Our exports are bulky, and therefore must employ much shipping, which might be nearly all our own: our exports are chiefly necessaries of life, or raw materials, the food for the manufacturers of other nations. On the contrary, the chief of what we receive from other countries, we can either do without, or produce substitutes.

"It is in the power of the United States, he conceived, by exerting her natural rights, without violating the rights, or even the equitable pretensions of other nations-by doing no more than most nations do for the protection of their interests, and much less than some, to make her interests respected; for, what we receive from other nations are but luxuries to us, which if we choose to throw aside, we could deprive part of the manufacturers of those luxuries, of even bread, if we are forced to the contest of selfdenial. This being the case, our country may

We stand, with respect to those luxuries, in the relat dividual to the laborer, in fluities for his accommoda do without those luxuries, which gives bread to the lat

"He did not propose, or States should, at present, g which his resolutions point The extent to which the pi those resolutions should be upon filling up the blanks. tent of the principle immed convenient. He wished, onl ture should mark out the g think we can stand; perha the effect wished for, without tion; we need not at first, go

"Another consideration wo said, to be moderate in filling not to wound public credit. risk any sensible diminution of He believed that if the blank judgment, the diminution of t diminution in the quantity of counterbalanced by the increa

"The last resolution he had is in a manner, distinct from nation is bound by the most he conceived, to protect the rig against a violation of them from if they cannot protect, they ar the damage.

"It is a fact authenticated t communications from the Exec are regulations established by nations, contrary to the law of our property is seized and disp way that damages have accrued either to obtain reparation for compensate the damage. It is instance, no doubt, that the 1 thrown upon the United States. partment of government will, no per steps to obtain redress. The nations will certainly not permi reparation when the breach of th evidently appears; at any rate, it individual should not suffer. I smount of the damages that wou the meaning of this resolution, wo

Reproducing these views of Mr with a desire to fortify myself with the better to produce a future pr now give the extract from my o

"Mr. Benton said he rose to asl which he gave notice on Friday las ing so, he meant to avail himself mentary rule, seldom followed here in the place from whence we drev the British Parliament—and stric ed States is not footing to which ce, it is entitled. vious to the adopconflicting sys-States. The then se to that convenrent parts of the on some general commerce, which operation, to the measures should e the friendship s who were discommercial conis been the result en pursued ever situation of our in which we find periment, he obent on the Unicould not now nose objects, for great degree inion, firmness and e now necessary w the sphere of is who see proper procity. of the probable mething like the would produce. ig many articles h would enable oly us with those rease the encouoduce within ourin an equitable duce ; we should n on equal terms, dvantages which de entitle us to. ageous situation d in, considering eturns. Our exe must employ e nearly all our ecessaries of life. e manufacturers ary, the chief of mutries, we can bstitutes.

'nited States, he rat rights, withn the equitable doing no more otection of their ne, to make her ve receive from to us, which, if uld deprive part uxuries, of even contest of selfar country may it of her power

those luxuries, in the relation of an opulent individual to the laborer, in producing the superfluities for his accommodation; the former can do without those luxuries, the consumption of which gives bread to the latter.

"He did not propose, or wish that the United States should, at present, go so far in the line which his resolutions point to, as they might go. The extent to which the principles involved in those resolutions should be carried, will depend upon filling up the blanks. To go the very extent of the principle immediately, might be inconvenient. He wished, only, that the Legislature should mark out the ground on which we think we can stand; perhaps it may produce the effect wished for, without unnecessary irritation; we need not at first, go every length.

Another consideration would induce him, he said, to be moderate in filling up the blanksnot to wound public credit. He did not wish to risk any sensible diminution of the public revenue. He believed that if the blanks were filled with judgment, the diminution of the revenue, from a eminution in the quantity of imports, would be counterbalanced by the increase in the duties.

. The last resolution he had proposed, he said, is in a manner, distinct from the rest. The nation is bound by the most sacred obligation. he conceived, to protect the rights of its citizens against a violation of them from any quarter; or, if they cannot protect, they are bound to repay the damage. "It is a fact authenticated to this House by communications from the Executive, that there are regulations established by some European nations, contrary to the law of nations, by which our property is seized and disposed of in such a way that damages have accrued. We are bound either to obtain reparation for the injustice, or compensate the damage. It is only in the first instance, no doubt, that the burden is to be thrown upon the United States. The proper department of government will, no doubt, take proper steps to obtain redress. The justice of foreign nations will certainly not permit them to deny reparation when the breach of the law of nations evidently appears; at any rate, it is just that the individual should not suffer. He believed the amount of the damages that would come within the meaning of this resolution, would not be very considerable.

Reproducing these views of Mr. Madison, and with a desire to fortify myself with his authority, the better to produce a future practical effect, I now give the extract from my own speech of 1830:

"Mr. Benton said he rose to ask the leave for which he gave notice on Friday last; and in doing so, he meant to avail himself of the parliamentary rule, seldom followed here, but familiar the British Parliament—and strictly right and and to illustrate its operation.

We stand, with respect to the nation exporting proper, when any thing new or unusual is to be proposed, to state the clauses, and make an exposition of the principles of his bill, before he submitted the formal motion for leave to bring

'The tenor of it is, not to abolish, but to provide for the abolition of duties. This phraseology announces that something in addition to the statute-scane power in addition to that of the legislature, is to be concerned in accomplishing the abolition. Then the duties for abolition are described as unnecessary ones; and under this idea is included the twofold conception, that they are useless, either for the protection of domestic industry, or for supplying the treasury with revenue. The relief of the people from sixteen millions of taxes is based upon the idea of an abolition of twelve millions of duties; the additional four millions being the merchant's profit upon the duty he advances; which profit the people pay as a part of the tax, though the government never receives it. It is the merchant's compensation for advancing the duty, and is the same as his profit upon the goods. The improved condition of the four great branches of national industry is presented as the third object of the bill; and their relative importance, in my estimation, classes itself according to the order of my arrangement. Agriculture, as furnishing the means of subsistence to man, and as the foundation of every thing else. is put foremost; manufactures, as preparing and fitting things for our use, stands second, commerce, as exchanging the superfluities of different countries, comes next; and navigation, as furnishing the chief means of carrying on commerce, closes the list of the four great branches of national industry. Though classed according to their respective importance, neither branch is disparaged. They are all great interests—all connected—all dependent upon each other-friends in their nature-for a long time friends in fact, under the operations of our government: and only made enemies to each other, as they now are by a course of legislation, which the approaching extinguishment of the public debt presents a fit opportunity for reforming and ameliorating. The title of my bill declares the intention of the bill to improve the condition of each of them. The abolition of sixteen millions of taxes would itself operate a great improvement in the condition of each; but the intention of the bill is not limited to that incidental and consequential improvement, great as it may be; it proposes a positive, direct, visible, tangible, and countable benefit to each; and this I shall prove and demonstrate, not in this brief illustration of the title of my bill, but at the proper places, in the course of the examination into its provisions and exposition of its principles.

"I will now proceed with the bill, reading each section in its order, and making the remarks in the place from whence we drew our rules- upon it which are necessary to explain its object

The First Section.

"That, for the term of ten years, from and after the first day of January, in the year 1832, or, as soon thereafter as may be agreed upon between the United States and any foreign power, the duties now payable on the importation of the following articles, or such of them as may be agreed upon, shall cease and determine, or be reduced, in favor of such countries as shall, by treaty, grant equivalent advantages to the agriculture, manufactures, commerce, and navigation, of the United States.

"This section contains the principle of abolishing duties by the joint act of the legislative and executive departments. The idea of equivalents, which the section also presents, is not new, but has for its sanction high and venerated authority, of which I shall not fail to avail myself. That we ought to have equivalents for abolishing ten or twelve millions of duties on foreign merchandise is most clear. Such an abolition will be an advantage to foreign powers, for which they ought to compensate us, by reducing duties to an equal amount upon our productions. This is what no law, or separate act of our own, can command. Amicable arrangements alone, with foreign owers, can effect it; and to free such arrangements from serious, perhaps insuperable difficulties, it would be necessary first to lay a foundation for them in an act of Congress. This is what my bill proposes to do. It proposes that Congress shall select the articles for abolition of duty, and then leave it to the Executive to extend the provisions of the act to such powers as will grant us equivalent advantages. The articles enumerated for abolition of duty are of kinds not made in the United States, so that my bill presents no ground of alarm or uneasiness to any branch of domestic

"The acquisition of equivalents is a striking feature in the plan which I propose, and for that I have the authority of him whose opinions will never be invoked in vain, while republican principles have root in our soil. I speak of Mr. Jefferson, and of his report on the commerce and nevigation of the United States, in the year '93, an extract from which I will read."

The Extract.

"Such being the restrictions on the commerce and navigation of the United States, the question is, in what way they may best be removed, modified, or counteracted?

"As to commerce, two methods occur By friendly arrangements with the several nations with whom these restrictions exist: or, 2. By the separate act of our own legislatures, for countervailing their effects.

"There can be no doubt, but that, of these two, friendly arrangements is the most eligible. Instead of embarrassing commerce under piles of regulating laws, duties, and prohibitions, could

of the world-could every country be employed in producing that which nature has best fitted it to produce, and each be free to exchange with others mutual surplusses, for mutual wants the greatest mass possible would then be produced, of those things which contribute to human life and human happiness, the numbers of mankind would be increased, and their condition bettered.

"Would even a single nation begin with the United States this system of free commerce, it would be advisable to begin it with that nation; since it is one by one only that it can be extended to all. Where the circumstances of either party render it expedient to levy a revenue by way of impost on commerce, its freedom might be modified in that particular, by mutual and equivalent measures, preserving it entire in all

"Some nations, not yet ripe for free commerce, in all its extent, might be willing to mollify its restrictions and regulations, for us, in proportion to the advantages which an intercourse with us might offer. Particularly they may concur with us in reciprocating the duties to be levied on each side, or in compensating any excess of duty, by equivalent advantages of another nature. Our commerce is certainly of a character to entitle it to favor in most countries. The commodities we offer are either necessaries of life, or materials for manufacture, or convenient subjects of revenue; and we take in exchange either manufactures, when they have received the last finish of art and industry or mere luxuries. Such customers may reasonably expect welcome and friendly treatment at every market—customers, too, whose demands, increasing with their wealth and population, must very shortly give full employment to the whole industry of any nation whatever, in any line of supply they may get into the habit of calling for from it.

"But, should any nation, contrary to our wishes, suppose it may better find its ad-antage by continuing its system of prohibitions, duties, and regulations, it behooves us to protect our citizens, their commerce and navigation, by counter prohibitions, duties, and regulations, also. Free commerce and navigation are not to be given in exchange for restrictions and vexations; nor are they likely to produce a relaxation of them."

"The plan which I now propose adopts the idea of equivalents and retaliation to the whole extent recommended by Mr. Jefferson. It differs from his plan in two features: first, in the mode of proceeding, by founding the treaties abroad upon a legislative act at home; secondly, in combining protection with revenue, in selecting articles of exception to the system of free trade. This degree of protection he admitted himself, at a later period of his life. It corresponds with the recommendation of President Washington to Congress, in the year '90, and it be relieved from all its shackles, in all parts with that of our present Chief Magistrate, to ourselves, at the commence session of Congress.

"I will not now stop to c fit which will result to ex abolition of duties which wil all the articles enumerated one third, or one half less, th them. Let any one read ove and then look to the sum to pays out annually for them, deduct near fifty per cent. average of the duties and m cluded, with which they no him. This deduction will b one branch of my plan-tl To this must be added the ga to secure equivalents in for the two being added together. chases at home being added t abroad, will give the true mea tages which my plan presents "Let us now see whether th manufactures of the United St better markets abroad than t time. What is the state of the facts reply. England impos shillings sterling a pound u which is ten times its value. equivalent to prohibition on ou visions; and either totally exclu ly taxes, every article, except send to her ports. In Franc subject to a royal monopoly, y king the sole purchaser, and su to the necessity of taking the agents will give. In Germany, other articles, are heavily dutie a transit duty, in addition, wh ascend the Rhine, or other rive the interior. In the West Indi great provision market, our beef usually pay from eight to ten our bacon, from ten to twer pound; live hogs, eight dollars e meal lumber, whiskey, fruit, every thing else, in proportion the different islands, on an ave or exceeding the value of the United States. We export a millions of domestic production manufactures, annually; and it assumed that we have to pay no the shape of duties, for the priv these exports in foreign markets. agriculture. Our manufactures a condition. In many branches the home lemand, and are going abroa foreign markets. They meet with strictions, peremptory exclusions. duties, wherever they go. The qu exported entitles them to national in the list of exports. Their aggre 1828 was about five millions of do ing domestic cottons, to the amour of dollars; soap and candles, to the itry be employed has best fitted it to exchange with r mutual wants uld then be procontribute to huthe numbers of ad their condition

n begin with the free commerce it with that nation: it can be extendstances of either vy a revenue, by 3 freedom might , by mutual and ; it entire in all

e for free come willing to molttions, for us, in which an inter-Particularly they cating the duties ompensating any advantages of e is certainly of or in most couner are either nemanufacture, or ; and we take in when they have and industry, or may reasonably atment at every lemands, increasation, must very the whole indusny line of supply dling for from it. contrary to our ad its advantage hibitions, duties, to protect our navigation, by nd regulations. ation are not to tions and vexa-> pose adopts the ion to the whole fferson. It difes: first, in the ng the treaties nome; secondly, renue, in selectsystem of free on he admitted -It corresn of President e year '90, and f Magistrate, to roduce a relaxa-

session of Congress.

I will not now stop to dilate upon the benefit which will result to every family from an abolition of duties which will enable them to get all the articles enumerated in my bill for about them. Let any one read over the list of articles, and then look to the sum total which he now pays out annually for them, and from that sum deduct near fifty per cent., which is about the average of the duties and merchant's profit included, with which they now come charged to branch of my plan—the abolition clause. To this must be added the gain under the clause to secure equivalents in foreign markets, and the two being added together, the saving in purchases at home being added to the gain in sales shroad, will give the true measure of the advantages which my plan presents.

Let us now see whether the agriculture and manufactures of the United States do not require better markets abroad than they possess at this time. What is the state of these markets? Let facts reply. England imposes a duty of three shillings sterling a pound upon our tobacco, which is ten times its value. She imposes duties equivalent to prohibition on our grain and provisions; and either totally excludes, or enormously taxes, every article, except cotton, that we send to her ports. In France, our tobacco is subject to a royal monopoly, which makes the king the sole purchaser, and subjects the seller to the necessity of taking the price which his agents will give. In Germany, our tobacco, and a transit duty, in addition, when they have to ascend the Rhine, or other rivers, to penetrate the interior. In the West Indies, which is our great provision market, our beef, pork, and flour, pound; live hogs, eight dollars each; corn, cornor exceeding the value of the articles in the United States. We export about forty-five millions of domestic productions, exclusive of assumed that we have to pay near that sum in these exports in foreign markets. So much for agriculture. Our manufactures are in the same condition. In many branches they have met the home lemand, and are going abroad in search of foreign markets. They meet with vexatious restrictions, peremptory exclusions, or oppressive duties, wherever they go. The quantity already exported entitles them to national consideration, in the list of exports. Their aggregate value for 1828 was about five millions of dollars, comprisof dollars; soap and candles, to the value of nine | ternatives: one fraught with relief, the other ourselves, at the commencement of the present hundred thousand dollars; boots, shoes, and saddlery, five hundred thousand dollars; hats, three hundred thousand dollars; cabinet, coach, and other wooden work, six hundred thousand dollars; glass and iron, three hundred thousand dollars; and numerous smaller items. This one third, or one half less, than is now paid for large amount of manufactures pays their value, in some instances more, for the privilege of being sold abroad; and, what is worse, they are totally excluded from several countries from which we buy largely. Such restrictions and impositions are highly injurious to our manufactures; and it is incontestably true, the amount of exports him. This deduction will be his saving under prove it, that what most of them now need is not more protection at home, but a better market abroad; and it is one of the objects of this bill to obtain such a market for them.

"It appears to me [said Mr. B.] to be a fair and practicable plan, combining the advantages of legislation and negotiation, and avoiding the objections to each. It consults the sense of the people, in leaving it to their Representatives to say on what articles duties shall be abolished for their relief; on what they shall be retained for protection and revenue; it then secures the advantage of obtaining equivalents, by referring it to the Executive to extend the benefit of the abolition to such nations as shall reciprocate the favor. To such as will not reciprocate, it leaves every thing as it now stands. The success of this plan can hardly be doubted. It addresses itself to the two most powerful passions of the human heart—interest and fear; it applies itself to the strongest principles of human action profit and loss. For, there is no nation with whom we trade but will be benefited by the inother articles, are heavily dutied, and liable to creased trade of her staple productions, which will result from a free trade in such productions; none that would not be crippled by the loss of such a trade, which loss would be the immediate effect of rejecting our system. Our position enusually pay from eight to ten dollars a barrel; ables us to command the commercial system of our bacon, from ten to twenty-five cents a the globe; to mould it to our own plan, for the benefit of the world and ourselves. The apmeal lumber, whiskey, fruit, vegetables, and proaching extinction of the public debt puts it inevery thing else, in proportion; the duties in to our power to abolish twelve millions of duties, the different islands, on an average, equalling and to set free more than one-half of our entire commerce. We should not forego, nor lose the advantages of such a position. It occurs but seldom in the life of a nation, and once missed, is manufactures, annually; and it may be safely irretrievably gone, to the generation, at least, that saw and neglected the golden opportunity. the shape of duties, for the privilege of selling have complained, and justly, of the burthens upon our exports in foreign countries; a part of our tariff system rests upon the principle of retaliation for the injury thus done us. Retaliation, heretofore, has been our only resource: but reciprocity of injuries is not the way to enrich nations any more than individuals. It is an 'unprofitable contest,' under every aspect. But the present conjuncture, payment of the public debt, in itself a rare and almost unprecedented occurrence in the history of nations, enables us ing domestic cottons, to the amount of a million to enlarge our system; to present a choice of ad-presenting a burthen to foreign nations. The participation, or exclusion, from forty millions of free trade, annually increasing, would not admit of a second thought, in the head of any nation with which we trade. To say nothing of her gains in the participation in such a commerce, what would be her loss in the exclusion from it? How would England, France, or Germany, bear the loss of their linen, silk, or wine trade, with the United States? How could Cuba, St. Domingo, or Brazil, bear the loss of their coffee trade with us? They could not bear it at all. Deep and essential injury, ruin of industry seditions, and bloodshed, and the overthrow of administrations, would be the consequence of such loss. Yet such loss would be inevitable (and not to the few nations, or in the articles only which I have mentioned, for I have put a few instances only by way of example), but to every nation with whom we trade, that would not fall into our system, and throughout the whole list of essential articles to which our abolition extends. Our present heavy duties would continue in force against such nations; they would be abolished in favor of their rivals. We would say to them, in the language of Mr. Jefferson, free trade and navigation is not to be given in exchange for restrictions and vexations! But I feel entire confidence that it would not be necessary to use the language of menace or coercion. Amicable representations, addressed to their sense of selfinterest, would be more agreeable, and not less effectual. The plan cannot fail! It is scarcely within the limits of possibility that it should fail! And if it did, what then? We have lost nothing. We remain as we were. Our present duties are still in force, and Congress can act upon them one or two years hence, in any way they please.

"Here, then, is the peculiar recommendation to my plan, that, while it secures a chance, little short of absolute certainty, of procuring an abolition of twelve millions of duties upon our exports in foreign countries, in return for an abolition of twelve millions of duties upon imports from them, it exposes nothing to risk, the abolition of duty upon the foreign article here being contingent upon the acquisition of the equivalent advantage abroad.

"I close this exposition of the principles of my bill with the single remark, that these treaties for the mutual aboution of duties should be for limited terms, say for seven or ten years, to give room for the modifications which time, and the varying pursuits of industry, may show to be necessary. Upon this idea, the bill is framed. and the period of ten years inserted by way of suggestion and exemplification of the plan. Another feature is too obvious to need a remark, that the time for the commencement of the abolition of duties is left to the Executive, who can accommodate it to the state of the revenue and the extinction of the public debt."

The plan which I proposed in this speech adopted the principle of Mr. Madison's resolutions but reversed their action. The discrimination which he proposed was a levy of five or ten per cent. more on the imports from countries which did not enter into our propositions for reciprocity: my plan, as being the same thing in substance. and less invidious in form, was a levy of five or ten per cent. less on the commerce of the reciprocating nations-thereby holding out an inducement and a benefit, instead of a threat and a penalty.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

ALUM SALT. THE ABOLITION OF THE DUTY UPON IT, AND REPEAL OF THE FISHING BOUNTY AND ALLOWANCES FOUNDED ON IT.

I LOOK upon a salt tax as a curse—as something worse than a political blunder, great as that is-as an impiety, in stinting the use and enhancing the cost by taxation, of an article which God has made necessary to the health and comfort, and almost to the life, of every animated being-the poor dumb animal which can only manifest its wants in mute signs and frantic actions, as well as the rational and speaking man who can thank the Creator for his goodness, and curse the legislator that mars its enjoyment. There is a mystery in salt. It was used in holy sacrifice from the earliest day; and to this time. in the Oriental countries, the stranger lodging in the house, cannot kill or rob while in it, after he has tasted the master's salt. The disciples of Christ were called by their master the salt of the earth. Sacred and profane history abound in instances of people refusing to fight against the kings who had given them salt: and this mysterious deference for an article so essential to man and beast takes it out of the class of ordinary productions, and carries it up close to those vital elements-bread, water, fire, air-which Providence has made essential to life, and spread every where, that craving nature may find its supply without stint, and without tax The venerable Mr. Macon considered a salt tax in sacrilegious point of view—as breaking a sacre law-and fought against ours as long as hi public life lasted; and I, his disciple, not disc teemed by him, commenced fighting by his sid against the odious imposition; and have contin ned it since his death, and til the tax ceases, or my po Many are my speeches, an in my senatorial life of thir other speeches, one limited of salt not made in the Unit pensable to dried or pickled the alum salt, made by solar sea water; and being a kin home, indispensable and inca it had a legitimate claim to e canons of the American syst protected homemade fire-bo because it had a foreign rival made crystallized salt at home nothing to protect in taxing 1 I had failed-we had all failed to abolish the salt tax general to attempt the abolition of the parately; and with it, the fish allowances founded upon it: bill into the Senate to accomp The fishing bounties and allowa ed by some, as a bounty to navipoint of view they would be as is unjust), I was under the nece their origin, as being founded o drawback of the duty paid on th the exported dried or pickled fish with the salt tax, and adjusted to the tax-rising with its increase a is fall-and that, in the beginning exportation of pickled beef and ame degree, and upon the same the bounties and allowances were the fisheries. In the bill introd purpose, I spoke as follows:

"To spare any senator the suppo of rehearsing me a lecture upon the of the fisheries, I will premise that muaintance with the subject-that fisheries to be valuable, for the food he, the commerce they create, t bey perfect, the employment they g ms in the building of vessels; and t on they make of wood, homp and i how that the fishermen applied for at the commencement of our pr f government, which the British gives heries, for the encouragement of 1 mi that they were denied them up at of the then Secretary of State rson). I also know that our fish and allowances go, in no part much of fishing to which the Br

ison's resolutions
he discrimination of five or ten per
a countries which ns for reciprocity;
ing in substance, s a levy of five or reree of the recipding out an inl of a threat and

LVIII.

F THE DUTY UPON IING BOUNTY AND IT.

curse-as someblunder, great as ting the use, and on, of an article to the health and of every animatal which can only rns and frantic acnd speaking man his goodness, and rs its enjoyment. was used in holy and to this time, tranger lodging in hile in it, after he The disciples of ster the salt of the tory abound in infight against the : and this mysteo essential to man class of ordinary close to those vi-, air-which Prolife, and spread ire may find it thout tax ed a salt tax in breaking a sacre

as long as lisciple, not dise

thting by his sic

and have contin

ned it since his death, and shall continue it until the tax ceases, or my political life terminates. Many are my speeches, and reports, against it in my senatorial life of thirty years; and among other speeches, one limited to a particular kind of salt not made in the United States, and indispensable to dried or pickled provisions. This is the alum salt, made by solar evaporation out of water; and being a kind not produced at home, indispensable and incapable of substitute. it had a legitimate claim to exemption from the canons of the American system. That system protected homemade fire-boiled common salt. because it had a foreign rival: we had no sunmade crystallized salt at home; and therefore had nothing to protect in taxing the foreign article. I had failed-we had all failed-in our attempts to abolish the salt tax generally: I determined to attempt the abolition of the alum salt duty separately; and with it, the fishing bounties and allowances founded upon it: and brought a bill into the Senate to accomplish that object. The fishing bounties and allowances being claimed by some, as a bounty to navigation (in which noint of view they would be as unconstitutional is unjust), I was under the necessity of tracing their origin, as being founded on the idea of a drawback of the duty paid on the salt put upon the exported dried or pickled fish-commencing with the salt tax, and adjusted to the amount of the tax-rising with its increase and falling with is fall—and that, in the beginning allowed to the exportation of pickled beef and pork, to the ame degree, and upon the same principle that the bounties and allowances were extended to the fisheries. In the bill introduced for this purpose, I spoke as follows:

*To spare any senator the supposed necessity of rehearsing me a lecture upon the importance the fisheries, I will premise that I have some munintance with the subject—that I know the fiberies to be valuable, for the food they probuce, the commerce they greate, the mariners they perfect, the employment they give to artimsin the building of vessels; and the consumpon they make of wood, homp and iron. I also bow that the fishermen applied for the boun-is at the commencement of our present form government, which the British give to their theries, for the encouragement of navigation; al that they were denied them upon the reut of the then Secretary of State (Mr. Jefmon). I also know that our fishing bounand allowances go, in no part, to that most bounty-whaling-because it is the best school for mariners; and the interests of navigation are their principal object in promoting fishing. No part of our bounties and allowances go to our whale ships, because they do not consume foreign salt on which they have paid duty, and reclaim it as drawback. I have also read the six dozen acts of Congress, general and particular, passed in the last forty yearsfrom 1789 to 1829 inclusively-giving the bounties and allowances which it is my present purpose to abolish, with the alum salt duty on which all this superstructure of legislative enactment is built up. I say the salt tax, and especially the tax on alum salt (which is the kind required for the fisheries), is the foundation of all these bounties and allowances; and that, as they grew up together, it is fair and regular that they should sink and fall together. I recite a dozen of the acts: thus:

"1. Act of Congress, 1789, grants five cents a barrel on pickled fish and salted provisions, and five cents a quintal on dried fish, exported from the United States, in lieu of a drawback of the duties imposed on the importation of the salt used in curing such fish and provisions.

"N. B. Duty on salt, at that time, six cents a bushel.

"2. Act of 1790 increases the bounty in lieu of drawback to ten cents a barrel on pickled fish and salted provisions, and ten cents a quintal on dried fish. The duty on salt being then raised to twelve cents a bushel.

"3. Act of 1792 repeals the bounty in lieu of drawback on dried fish, and in lieu of that, and as a commutation and equivalent therefor, authorizes an allowance to be paid to vessels in the cod fishery (dried fish) at the rate of one dollar and fifty cents a ton on vessels of twenty to thirty tons; with a limitation of one hundred and seventy dollars for the highest allowance to any vessel.

"4. A supplementary act, of the same year, adds twenty per cent. to each head of these allowances.

"5. Act of 1797 increases the bounty on salted provisions to eighteen cents a barrel; on pickled fish to twenty-two cents a barrel; and adds thirty-three and a third per cent. to the allowance in favor of the cod-fishing vessels. Duty on salt, at the same time, being raised to twenty cents a bushel.

"6. Act of 1799 increases the bounty on pickled fish to thirty cents a barrel, on salted provisions to twenty-five.

"7. Act of 1800 continues all previous acts (for bounties and allowances) for ten years, and makes this proviso: That these allowances shall not be understood to be continued for a lower time than the correspondent duties on salt, respectively, for which the said additional allowances were granted, shall be payable.

won). I also know that our fishing bounas and allowances go, in no part, to that ty on imported salt, and for paying bounties on the exportation of pickled fish and salted provisions, and making allowances to fishing vessels -Mr. Jefferson being then President.

"9. Act of 1813 gives a bounty of twenty cents a barrel on pickled fish exported, and allows to the cod-fishing vessels at the rate of two dollars and forty cents the ton for vessels between twenty and thirty tons, four dollars a ton for vessels above thirty, with a limitation of two hundred and seventy-two dollars for the highest allowance; and a proviso, that no bounty or allowance should be paid unless it was proved to the satisfaction of the collector that the fish was wholly cured with foreign salt, and the duty on it secured or paid. The salt duty, at the rate of twenty cents a bushel, was revived as a war tax at the same time. Bounties on salted provisions were omitted.

"10. Act of 1816 continued the act of 1813 in force, which, being for the war only, would otherwise have expired.

"11. Act of 1819 increases the allowance to vessels in the cod fishery to three dollars and fifty cents a ton on vessels from five to thirty; to four dollars a ton on vessels above thirty tons with a limitation of three hundred and sixty dollars for the maximum allowance.

"12. Act of 1828 authorizes the mackerel fishing vessels to take out licenses like the codfishing vessels, under which it is reported by the vigilant Secretary of the Treasury that money is illegally drawn by the mackerel vesselsthe newspapers say to the amount of thirty to fifty thousand dollars per annum.

These recitals of legislative enactments are sufficient to prove that the fishing bounties and allowances are bottomed upon the salt duty, and must stand or fall with that duty. I will now give my reasons for proposing to abolish the duty on alum salt, and will do it in the simplest form of narrative statement; the reasons themselves being of a nature too weighty and obvious to need, or even to admit, of coloring or exaggeration from arts of speech. "1. Because it is an article of indispensable necessity in the provision trade of the United No beef or pork for the army or navy. or for consumption in the South, or for exportation abroad, can be put up except in this kind of salt. If put up in common salt it is rejected absolutely by the commissaries of the army and navy, and if taken to the South must be repacked in alum salt at an expense of one dollar and twelve and a half cents a barrel, before it is exported, or sold for domestic consumption. The quantity of provisions which require this salt, and must have it, is prodigious, and annually increasing. The exports of 1828 were, of beef sixty-six thousand barrels, of pork fifty-four thousand barrels, of bacon one million nine hundred thousand pounds weight, butter and cheese two million pounds weight. The value of these articles was two millions and a quarter of dollars. To this amount must be added the supply for the army and navy, and all that was sent to the South for home consumption, every pound of which had to be cured in this kind of salt, for common salt will not cure it. The Western country is the great producer of provisions; and there is scarcely a farmer in the whole extent of that vast region whose interest does not require a prompt repeal of the duty on this description of salt.

"2. Because no salt of this kind is made in the United States, nor any rival to it, or substitute for it. It is a foreign importation, brought from various islands in the West Indies, belonging to England, France, Spain, and Denmark; and from Lisbon, St. Ubes, Gibraltar, the Bay of Biscay, and Liverpool. The principles of the protecting system do not extend to it: for no quantity of protection can produce a home supply. The present duty, which is far beyond the rational limit of protection, has been in force near thirty years, and has not produced a pound. We are still thrown exclusively upon the foreign supply. The principles of the protecting system can only apply to common salt, the product of which is considerable in the United States; and upon that kind, the present duty is proposed to be left in full force.

"3. Because the duty is enormous, and quadruples the price of the salt to the farmer. The original value of salt is about fifteen cents the measured bushel of eighty-four pounds. But the tariff substitutes weight for measure, and fixes that weight at fifty-six pounds, instead of eighty-four. Upon that fifty-six pounds, a duty of twenty cents is laid. Upon this duty, the retail merchant has his profit of eight or ten cents, and then reduces his bushel from fifty-six to fifty pounds. The consequence of all ___ese operations s, that the farmer pays about three times as much for a weighed bushel of fifty pounds as he would have paid for a measured bushel of eighty-four pounds, if this duty had never been

4. Because the duty is unequal in its operation, and falls heavily on some parts of the community, and produces profit to others. It is a heavy tax on the farmers of the West, who export provisions; and no tax at all, but rather a source of profit, to that branch of the fisheries to which the allowances of the vessels apply. Exporters of provisions have the same claim to these allowances that exporters of fish have. Both claims rest upon the same principle, and upon the principle of all drawbacks, that of refunding the duty paid on the imported salt, which is re exported on salted fish and provisions. The same principle covers the beef and pork of the farmer which covers the fish of the fisherman; and such was the law, as I have-shown, for the first eigh teen years that these bounties and allowance were authorized. Fish and provisions fared alik from 1789 to 1807. Bounties and allowance began upon them together, and fell together. the repeal of the salt tax, in the second term Mr. Jefferson's administration. At the renewa of the salt tax, in 1813, at the commencement the late war, they parted company, and the lat in the exact sense of the prover of one and flesh of the other fishing interest is now drawing dred and fifty thousand dollar the treasury; the provision rai cent, while they export more much, and ought, upon the sa draw more than double as much

"5. Because it is the means of due amount of money from the 1 under the idea of an equivalent fo of duty on the salt used in the The amount of money actually way is about four millions s and fifty thousand dollars, and on at the rate of two hundr thousand dollars per annum, a augmenting. That this amount the legal idea recognizes, or co proved in various ways. 1. By quantity of salt supposed to have with the quantity of fish known exported, within a given year. the year 1828, would exhibit al millions of pounds weight of salt o millions of pounds weight of fish. suppose about a pound and three salt upon each pound of fish. 2. B the value of the salt supposed to have with the value of the fish known to exported. This test would give t and forty-eight thousand dollars duty on about one million of dollar fish; making the duty one fourth of On this basis, the amount of the duty used on exported provisions would hundred thousand dollars. 3. By the increasing allowances for salt w creasing exportation of fish. This te gven periods, the rate of allowance same, would produce this result: I 1820, three hundred and twenty-one four hundred and nineteen quintals of exported, and one hundred and ni thousand seven hundred and twenty-fe mid for the commutation of the salt of in 1828, two hundred and sixty-five two hundred and seventeen quintals of exported, and two hundred and thirty-1 sand one hundred and forty-five dollar the commutation. These comparisons the fact that money is unlawfully dra the treasury by means of these fishing mes, bottomed on the salt duty, and s expressly stated by the Secretary Trasury (Mr. Ingham), in his report i fnances, at the commencement of the Mession of Congress. [See page eight o

6. Because it has become a practic ion of one of the most equitable clause wastitution of the United States-the id of salt, for The Western ovisions; and ole extent of es not require is description is made in the or substitute brought from belonging to rk; and from av of Biscay. he protecting o quantity of supply. The the rational ce near thirty ind. We are oreign supply. stem can only t of which is and upon that d to be left in > us, and quadfarmer. The een cents the pounds. But measure, and ds, instead of ounds, a duty duty, the ret or ten cents, fty-six to fifty se operations ree times as ty pounds, as red bushel of ad never been

> > 1 in its operats of the comhers. It is a Vest, who exbut rather a he fisheries to s apply. Exclaim to these have. Both ple, and upon t of refunding t, which is n is. The same of the farmer an; and su the first eigh nd allowand ons fared alik ad allowand Il together, of econd term of t the renev mencement o , and the lar of one and flesh of the other ever since. The fishing interest is now drawing about two hundred and fifty thousand dollars annually from the treasury; the provision raisers draw not a cent, while they export more than double as much, and ought, upon the same principle, to draw more than double as much money from the treasury. 5. Because it is the means of drawing an undue amount of money from the public treasury, under the idea of an equivalent for the drawback of duty on the salt used in the curing of fish. The amount of money actually drawn in that way is about four millions seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and is now going on at the rate of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars per annum, and constantly augmenting. That this amount is more than the legal idea recognizes, or contemplates, is proved in various ways. 1. By comparing the quantity of salt supposed to have been used. with the quantity of fish known to have been exported, within a given year. This test, for the year 1828, would exhibit about seventy millions of pounds weight of salt on about forty millions of pounds weight of fish. This would suppose about a pound and three quarters of alt upon each pound of fish. 2. By comparing the value of the salt supposed to have been used, with the value of the fish known to have been exported. This test would give two hundred and forty-eight thousand dollars for the salt duty on about one million of dollars' worth of fish; making the duty one fourth of its value. On this basis, the amount of the duty on the salt used on exported provisions would be near six hundred thousand dollars. 3. By comparing the increasing allowances for salt with the degreasing exportation of fish. This test, for two given periods, the rate of allowance being the same, would produce this result: In the year 1820, three hundred and twenty-one thousand four hundred and nineteen quintals of dried fish exported, and one hundred and ninety-eight thousand seven hundred and twenty-four dollars paid for the commutation of the salt drawback : in 1828, two hundred and sixty-five thousand two hundred and seventeen quintals of dried fish emorted, and two hundred and thirty-nine thouand one hundred and forty-five dollars paid for the commutation. These comparisons establish the fact that money is unlawfully drawn from the treasury by means of these fishing allowmes, bottomed on the salt duty, and that fact in the exact sense of the proverb, has made fish | which declares that duties, taxes, and excises, shall be uniform throughout the Union. There is no uniformity in the operation of this tax. Far from it. It empties the pockets of some, and fills the pockets of others. It returns to some five times as much as they pay, and to others it returns not a cent. It gives to the fishing interest two hundred and fifty thousand dollars per annum, and not a cent to the farming interest, which, upon the same principle, would be entitled to six hundred thousand dollars per annum.

Because it has become a practical violation of one of the most equitable clauses in the mustitution of the United States—the clause task which our master set us.'

"7. Because this duty now rests upon a false basis—a basis which makes it the interest of one part of the Union to keep it up, while it is the interest of other parts to get rid of it. It is the interest of the West to abolish this duty: it is the interest of the Northeast to perpetuate it. The former loses money by it; the latter makes money by it; and a tax that becomes a moneymaking business is a solecism of the highest order of absurdity. Yet such is the fact. treasury records prove it, and it will afford the Northeast a brilliant opportunity to manifest their disinterested affection to the West, by giving up their own profit in this tax, to relieve the West from the burthen it imposes upon her.

"8. Because the repeal of the duty will not materially diminish the revenue, nor delay the extinguishment of the public debt. It is a tax carrying money out of the treasury, as well as bringing it in. The issue is two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, perhaps the full amount which accrues on the kind of salt to which the abolition extends. The duty, and the fishing allowances bottomed upon it, falling together as they did when Mr. Jefferson was President, would probably leave the amount of revenue unaffected.

"9. Because it belongs to an unhappy period in the history of our government, and came to us, in its present magnitude, in company with an odious and repudiated set of measures. maximum of twenty cents a bushel on salt was fixed in the year '98, and was the fruit of the same system which produced the alien and sedition laws, the eight per cent. loans, the stamp act, the black cockade, and the standing army in time of peace. It was one of the contrivances of that disastrous period for extorting money from the people, for the support of that strong and splendid government which was then the cherished vision of so many exalted heads. The reforming hand of Jefferson overthrew it, and all the superstructure of fishing allowances which sexpressly stated by the Secretary of the was erected upon it. The exigencies of the late Ireasury (Mr. Ingham), in his report upon the war caused it to be revived for the term of the finances, at the commencement of the present war, and the interest of some, and the neglect of mession of Congress. [See page eight of the reothers, have permitted it to continue ever since. It is now our duty to sink it a second time. We profess to be disciples of the Jeffersonian school; let us act up to our profession, and complete the

CHAPTER XLIX.

BANK OF THE UNITED STATES

It has been already shown that General Jackson in his first annual message to Congress, called in question both the constitutionality and expediency of the national bank, in a way to dangerous" than an incorporated national bank show him averse to the institution, and disposed to see the federal government carried on without the aid of such an assistant. In the same message he submitted the question to Congress, that, if such an institution is deemed essential to the fiscal operations of the government, whether a national one, founded upon the credit of the government, and its revenues, might not be devised, which would avoid all constitutional difficulties, and at the same time secure all | dent's message which related to the bank and its the advantages to the government and country that were expected to result from the present tive reports were made-wholly repudiating all bank. I was not in Washington when this mes- the suggestions of the President, and sustaining sage was prepared, and had had no conversation the actual Bank of the United States under every with the President in relation to a substitute for aspect of constitutionality and of expediency; the national bank, or for the currency which it fur- and strongly presenting it for a renewal of its nished, and which having a general circulation charter. These reports were multiplied without was better entitled to the character of "nation-regard to expense, or numbers, in all the varieal" than the issues of the local or State banks. ties of newspaper and pamphlet publication; We knew each other's opinions on the question of and lauded to the skies for their power and exa bank itself: but had gone no further. I had cellence, and triumphant refutation of all the never mentioned to him the idea of reviving the President's opinions. Thus was the "war of the gold currency—then, and for twenty years—ex-bank" commenced at once, in both Houses of tinet in the United States: nor had I mentioned | Congress, and in the public press; and openly at to him the idea of an independent or sub-trea- the instance of the bank itself, which, forgetting sury—that is to say, a government treasury un-lits position as an institution of the government, connected with any bank—and which was to for the convenience of the government, set itself have the receiving and disbursing of the public up for a power, and struggled for a continued moneys. When these ideas were mentioned to existence—in the shape of a new charter—as a him, he took them at once; but it was not until question of its own, and almost as a right. It the Bank of the United States should be disposed allied itself at the same time to the political parof that any thing could be done on these two ty opposed to the President, joined in all their subjects; and on the latter a process had to be schemes of protective tariff, and national intergone through in the use of local banks as depos- | nal improvement: and became the head of the itories of the public moneys which required sev- American system. With its moneyed and policieral years to show its issue and inculcate its les- | cal power, and numerous interested affiliations, son. Though strong in the confidence of the and its control over other banks, brokers and people, the President was not deemed strong money dealers, it was truly a power, and agreat enough to encounter all the banks of all the one: and, in answer to a question put by Gene States at once. Temporizing was indispensable ral Smith, of Maryland, chairman of the Finance -and even the conciliation of a part of them. | Committee of the Senate already mentioned (and Hence the deposit system-or some years' use appended with other questions and answers to

of local banks as fiscal agents of the government-which gave to the institutions so selected the invidious appellation of "pet banks;" meaning that they were government favorites.

In the mean time the question which the Presi dent had submitted to Congress in relation to a government fiscal agent, was seized upon as an admitted design to establish a government bank -stigmatized at once as a "thousand times more and held up to alarm the country. Committees in each House of Congress, and all the public press in the interest of the existing Bank of the United States, took it up in that sense, and vehemently inveighed against it. Under an instruction to the Finance Committee of the Senate, to report upon a plan for a uniform currency, and under a reference to the Committee of Ways and Means of the House, of that part of the Presicurrency, most ample, elaborate and argumenta-that report), Mr. Biddle, the a power in the national bank t destroy the local banks, which their absolute master; and, control them at will. The que a spirit of friendship to the b view to enable its president to tution as great, just and benefi tion was: " Has the bank at an any of the State banks?" "Never." And, as if that was Biddle went on to say: "There banks which might not have be an exertion of the power of the have been injured. Many ha And more have been, and are lieved, when it is found that the but are suffering under tempor This was proving entirely too my to injure and destroy-to relieve thousand banks of all the States was a power over the business an nearly all the people of those Sta tories: and might be used for evil good; and was a power entirely t trusted to any man, with a heart i or to any government, responsible much less to a corporation without irresponsible to heaven or earth. view of the case which the parties tion had not foreseen; but which v the time; and which, in the progres emment struggle with the bank, re phlications which will be remember generation of that day while me and afterwards known as long as power to transmit to posterity the of national calamities.

CHAPTER

REMOVALS FROM OFFICE.

Lam led to give a particular exami this head, from the great error into which tille has fallen in relation to it, and wh propagated throughout Europe to the pr republican government; and also, bepower itself is not generally understoo f the governns so selected. nks;" meanvorites.

nich the Presi relation to a d upon as an rnment bank nd times more .tional bank-Committees in e public press Bank of the nse, and veheer an instructhe Senate, to currency, and of Ways and of the Presie bank and its d argumentaepudiating all nd sustaining es under every f expediency: enewal of its olied without all the variepublication; ower and exon of all the e "war of the th Houses of and openly at ch, forgetting government, rent, set itself a continued charter-asa a right. It political pard in all their ational interhead of the red and politid affiliations brokers and

r, and a great

put by Gene

f the Finance

entioned (and

1 answers to

a power in the national bank to save, relieve or destroy the local banks, which exhibited it as their absolute master; and, of course able to control them at will. The question was put in a spirit of friendship to the bank, and with a view to enable its president to exhibit the institution as great, just and beneficent. The question was: " Has the bank at any time oppressed any of the State banks?" and the answer: "Never." And, as if that was not enough, Mr. Biddle went on to say: "There are very few banks which might not have been destroyed by an exertion of the power of the bank. None have been injured. Many have been saved. And more have been, and are constantly relieved, when it is found that they are solvent but are suffering under temporary difficulty." This was proving entirely too much. A power to injure and destroy-to relieve and to save the thousand banks of all the States and Territories was a power over the business and fortunes of nearly all the people of those States and Territories: and might be used for evil as well as for good; and was a power entirely too large to be trusted to any man, with a heart in his bosomor to any government, responsible to the people: much less to a corporation without a soul, and irresponsible to heaven or earth. This was a view of the case which the parties to the question had not foreseen; but which was noted at the time; and which, in the progress of the govenment struggle with the bank, received exemphilications which will be remembered by the generation of that day while memory lasts; and afterwards known as long as history has power to transmit to posterity the knowledge of national calamities.

CHAPTER L.

REMOVALS FROM OFFICE.

Lam led to give a particular examination of this head, from the great error into which Tocqueville has fallen in relation to it, and which he has propagated throughout Europe to the prejudice of republican government; and also, because the power itself is not generally understood among that report), Mr. Biddle, the president, showed ourselves as laid down by Mr. Jefferson; and has been sometimes abused, and by each party, but never to the degree supposed by Mons. de Tocqueville. He says; in his chapter 8 on American democracy: "Mr. Quincy Adams, on his entry into office, discharged the majority of the individuals who had been appointed by his predecessor; and I am not aware that General Jackson allowed a single removable functionary employed in the public service to retain his place beyond the first year which succeeded his election." Of course, all these imputed sweeping removals were intended to be understood to have been made on account of party politics-for difference of political opinion-and not for misconduct, or unfitness for office. To these classes of removal (unfitness and misconduct), there could be no objection: on the contrary, it would have been misconduct in the President not to have removed in such cases. Of political removals, for difference of opinion, then, it only remains to speak; and of those officials appointed by his predecessor, it is probable that Mr. Adams did not remove one for political cause; and that M. de Tocqueville, with respect to him, is wrong to the whole amount of his assertion.

I was a close observer of Mr. Adams's administration, and belonged to the opposition, which was then keen and powerful, and permitted nothing to escape which could be rightfully (sometimes wrongfully) employed against him; vet I never heard of this accusation, and have no knowledge or reconcetion at this time of a single instance on which it could be founded. Mr. Adams's administration was not a case, in fact, in which such removals-for difference of political opinion-could occur. They only take place when the presidential election is a revolution of parties; and that was not the case when Mr. Adams succeeded Mr. Monroe. He belonged to the Monroe administration, had occupied the first place in the cabinet during its whole double term of eight years; and of course, stood in concurrence with, and not in opposition to, Mr. Monroe's appointments. Besides, party lines were confused, and nearly obliterated at that time. It was called "the era of good feeling." Mr. Adams was himself an illustration of that feeling. He had been of the federal party-brought early into public life as such—a minister abroad and a senator at home as such; but having divided from his party in giving support to several prominent measures of Mr. Jefferson's administration, he was afterwards several times nominated by Mr. Madison as minister abroad; and on the election of Mr. Monroe he was invited from London to be made his Secretary of State-where he remained till his own election to the Presidency. There was, then, no case presented to him for political removals; and in fact none such were made by him; so that the accusation of M. de Tocqueville, so far as it applied to Mr. Adams, is wholly erroneous, and inexcusably careless.

With respect to General Jackson, it is about equally so in the main assertion—the assertion that he did not allow a single removable functionary to remain in office beyond the first year after his election. On the contrary, there were entire classes—all those whose functions partook of the judicial—which he never touched. Boards of commissioners for adjudicating land titles; commissioners for adjudicating claims under indemnity treaties; judges of the territorial courts; justices of the District of Columbia; none of these were touched, either in the first or in any subsequent year of his administration, except a solitary judge in one of the territories; and he not for political cause, but on specific complaint, and after taking the written and responsible opinion of the then Attorney General, Mr. Grundy. Of the seventeen diplomatic functionaries abroad, only four (three ministers and one chargé des affaires) were recalled in the first year of his administration. In the departments at Washington, a majority of the incumbents remained opposed to him during his administration. Of the near eight thousand deputy postmasters in the United States, precisely four hundred and minety-one were removed in the time mentioned by Mons. de Tocqueville, and they for all causes -for every variety of causes. Of the whole number of removable officials, amounting to many thousands, the totality of removals was about six hundred and ninety and they for all causes. Thus the government archives contradict Mons. de Tocqueville, and vindicate General Jackson's administration from the reproach cast upon it. Yet he came into office under circumstances well calculated to excite him to make removals. In the first place, none of his political friends, though constituting a great majority of the people of the United States, had been appointed to office during the preceding administra- most all offices were in the hands of his politition; and such an exclusion could not be justified | cal foes. I recollect to have heard an officer of

on any consideration. His election was, in some degree, a revolution of parties, or rather a re-establishment of parties on the old line of federal and democratic. It was a change of administration. in which a change of government functionaries. to some extent, became a right and a duty; but still the removals actually made, when political were not merely for opinions, but for conduct under these opinions; and, unhappily, there was conduct enough in too many officials to justify their removal. A large proportion of them including all the new appointments, were inimical to General Jackson, and divided against him on the re-establishment of the old party lines; and many of them actively. Mr. Clay, holding the first place in Mr. Adams's cabinet, took the field against him, travelled into different States, declaimed against him at public meetings; and the precated his election as the greatest of calamities. The subordinates of the government, to a great degree, followed his example, if not in public speeches, at least in public talk and newspaper articles; and it was notorious that these subordinates were active in the presidental election. It was a great error in them. It changed their position. By their position all administrations were the same to them. Their duties were ministerial, and the same under all Presidents. They were noncombatants. By engaging in the election they became combatant, and subjected themselves to the law of victory and defeat-reward and promotion in one case, loss of place in the other. General Jackson, then, on his accession to the Presidency, was in a new situation with respect to parties, different from that of any President since the time of Mr. Jefferson, whom he took for his model, and whose rule he followed. He made many removals, and for cause, but not so many as not to leave a majority in office against him-even in the executive departments in Washington City.

Mr. Jefferson had early and anxiously studied the question of removals. He was the first President that had occasion to make them, and with him the occasion was urgent. His election was a complete revolution of parties, and when elected, he found himself to be almost the only man of his party in office. The democracy had been totally excluded from federal appointment during the administration of his predecessor; al-

the army say that there was but in the service favorable to him. type of the civil service. Justic his party required this state of tered; required his friends to he portionate to their numbers in th office; and required him to have of his friends in the administration ment. The four years' limitation which now vacates within the presidential term the great mass -was not then in force. Resign now, were few. Removals were and the only question was the 1 which they should be made. Mr. Jefferson studied anxiously. its aspects of principle and police and of party duty; and upon con his friends, settled it to his and the The fundamental principle was, th was to have a share in the minis the control of each branch of the in the hands of the administration; were only to be made for cause; a that there should be inquiry into imputed delinquencies. "Official "personal misconduct," "neglige pacity," "inherent vice in the ar partisan electioneering beyond the of the elective franchise;" and when of some branches of the service we onnosed to his administration "-the Jefferson, constituted the law of re was so written down by him imme his inauguration. Thus, March 7th, four days after his induction into wrote to Mr. Monroe:

"Some removals, I know, must They must be as few as possible, do ly and bottomed on some malversa erent disqualification. Where we s the line between retaining all and r yet settled, and will not be until we ministration together; and, perhaps we shall proceed a tatons, balancing or according to the impression we percei

On the 23d of March, 1801, being first month of his administration, Mr wrote thus to Gov. Giles, of Virginia

"Good men, to whom there is no ob a difference of political opinion, practis so far as the right of a private citizen Vol. 1.—11 was, in some er a re-estabfederal and ministration. unctionaries. a duty; but en political. for conduct y, there was als to justify of them, inrere inimical ainst him on y lines; and holding the ook the field t States, dengs; and dest of calamrnment, to a le, if not in lk and newsis that these sidental elec-. It changn all admin-Their duties ler all PresiBy engagmbatant, and victory and ne case, loss ackson, then,

was in a new ifferent from e of Mr. Jefl, and whose emovals, and b leave a man the executy.

busly studied as the first ce them, and His election s, and when ost the only mocracy had appointment lecessor; alof his politian officer of the army say that there was but one field officer in the service favorable to him. This was the type of the civil service. Justice to himself and his party required this state of things to be altered; required his friends to have a share pronortionate to their numbers in the distribution of office; and required him to have the assistance of his friends in the administration of the government. The four years' limitation law-the law which now vacates within the cycle of every presidential term the great mass of the offices -was not then in force. Resignations then, as now, were few. Removals were indispensable, and the only question was the principle upon which they should be made. This question, Mr. Jefferson studied anxiously, and under all its aspects of principle and policy, of national and of party duty'; and upon consultation with his friends, settled it to his and their satisfaction. The fundamental principle was, that each party was to have a share in the ministerial offices. the control of each branch of the service being in the hands of the administration; that removals were only to be made for cause; and, of course, that there should be inquiry into the truth of imputed delinquencies. "Official misconduct." "personal misconduct," "negligence," "incapacity," "inherent vice in the appointment," partisan electioneering beyond the fair exercise of the elective franchise;" and where "the heads of some branches of the service were politically opposed to his administration "-these, with Mr. Jefferson, constituted the law of removals, and was so written down by him immediately after his inauguration. Thus, March 7th, 1801-only four days after his induction into office-he wrote to Mr. Monroe:

"Some removals, I know, must be made. They must be as few as possible, done gradually, and bottomed on some malversation, or inherent disqualification. Where we should draw the line between retaining all and none, is not yet settled, and will not be until we get our administration together; and, perhaps, even then we shall proceed a tatons, balancing our measures according to the impression we perceive them to make."

On the 23d of March, 1801, being still in the first month of his administration, Mr. Jefferson wrote thus to Gov. Giles, of Virginia:

"Good men, to whom there is no objection but idfference of political opinion, practised on only far as the right of a private citizen will justi-fy, are not proper subjects of removal, except in the case of attorneys and marshals. The courts being so decidedly federal and irremovable, it is believed that republican attorneys and marshals, being the doors of entrance into the courts, are indispensably necessary as a shield to the republican part of our fellow-citizens; which, I believe, is the main body of the people."

Six days after, he wrote to Elbridge Gerry, afterwards Vice-President, thus:

"Mr. Adams's last appointments, when he knew he was appointing counsellors and aids for me, not for himself, I set aside as fast as depends on me. Officers who have been guilty of gross abuse of office, such as marshals packing juries, &c., I shall now remove, as my predecessors ought in justice to have done. The instances will be few, and governed by strict rule, and not party passion. The right of opinion shall suffer no invasion from me. Those who have acted well have nothing to fear, however they may have differed from me in opinion: those who have done ill, however, have nothing to hope; nor shall I fail to do justice, lest it should be ascribed to that difference of opinion."

To Mr. Lincoln, his Attorney-General, still writing in the first year of his administration, he says:

"I still think our original idea as to office is best; that is, to depend, for obtaining a just participation, on deaths, resignations and delinquencies. This will least affect the tranquillity of the people, and prevent their giving into the suggestion of our enemies-that ours has been a contest for office, not for principle. This is rather a slow operation, but it is sure, if we pursue it steadily. which, however, has not been done with the undeviating resolution I could have wished. To these means of obtaining a just share in the transaction of the public business, shall be added one more, to wit, removal for electioneering activity, or open and industrious opposition to the principles of the present government, legislative and executive. Every officer of the government may vote at elections according to his conscience; but we should betray the cause committed to our care, were we to permit the influence of official patronage to be used to overthrow that cause. Your present situation will enable you to judge of prominent offenders in your State in the case of the present election. I pray you to seek them, to mark them, to be quite sure of your ground, that we may commit no errors or wrongs; and leave the rest to me. I have been urged to remove Mr. Whittemore, the surveyor of Gloucester, on grounds of neglect of duty and industrious opposition; yet no facts are so distinctly charged as to make the step sure which we should take in this. Will you take the trouble to satisfy yourself on the point?"

This was the law of removals as laid down by

Mr. Jefferson, and practised upon by him, but not to the extent that his principle required, or that public outcry indicated. He told me himself, not long before his death (Christmas, 1824), that he had never done justice to his own party -had never given them the share of office to which there numbers entitled them-had failed to remove many who deserved it, but who were spared through the intercession of friends and concern for their distressed families. General Jackson acted upon the rule of Mr. Jefferson, but no doubt was often misled into departures from the rule; but never to the extent of giving to the party more than their due proportion of office, according to their numbers. Great clamor was raised against him, and the number of so-called "removals" was swelled by an abuse of the term, every case being proclaimed a "removal," where he refused to reappoint an exincumbent whose term had expired under the four years' limitation act. Far from universal removals for opinion's sake, General Jackson, as I have already said, left the majority of his opponents in office, and re-appointed many such whose terms had expired, and who had approved themselves faithful officers.

Having vindicated General Jackson and Mr. Adams from the reproach of Mons. de Tocqueville, and having shown that it was neither a principle nor a practice of the Jefferson school to remove officers for political opinions, I now feel bound to make the declaration, that the doctrine of that school has been too much departed from of late, and by both parties, and to the great detriment of the right and proper working of the

The practice of removals for 'opinion's sake is becoming too common, and is reducing our presidential elections to what Mr. Jefferson deprecated, "a contest of office instead of principle," and converting the victories of each party, so far as office is concerned, into the political extermination of the other; as it was in Great Britain between the whigs and tories in the bitter contests of one hundred years ago, and when the victor made a "clean sweep" of the vanquished, leaving not a wreck behind. Mr. Macaulay thus describes one of those "sweepings:"

"A persecution, such as had never been known before, and has never been known since, raged in every public department. Great numbers of numble and laborious clerks were deprived of walk of life. It converts elections into scram-their bread, not because they had neglected their duties not because they had taken an active part against the ministry, but merely because they had owed they situations to some (whig) nobleman who was against the peace. The proscription extended to tidewaiters, to doorkeepers. One poor man, to whom a pension had been given for his gallantry in a fight with smugglers, was deprived of it because he had been befriended by the (whig) Duke of Grafton. An aged widow, who, on account of her husband's services in the navy, had, many years before, been made house-keeper in a public office, was dismissed from her situation because she was distantly connected by marriage with the (whig) Cavendish family."

This, to be sure, was a tory proscription of whigs, and therefore the less recommendable as an example to either party in the United States. but too much followed by both-to the injury of individuals, the damage of the public service. the corruption of elections, and the degradation of government. De Tocqueville quotes removals as a reproach to our government, and although untrue to the extent he represented, the evil has become worse since, and is true to a sufficient extent to demand reform. The remedy is found in Mr. Jefferson's rule, and in the four years' limitation act which has since been passed; and under which, with removals for cause, and some deaths, and a few resignations, an ample field would be found for new appointments, without the harshness of general and sweeping removals.

I consider "sweeping" removals, as now practised by both parties, a great political evil in our country, injurious to individuals, to the public service, to the purity of elections, and to the harmony and union of the people. Certainly, no individual has a right to an office: no one has an estate or property in a public employment; but when a mere ministerial worker in a subordinate station has learned its duties by experience, and approved his fidelity by his conduct, it is an injury to the public service to exchange him for a novice, whose only title to the place may be a political badge or a partisan service. It is exchanging experience for inexperience, tried ability for untried, and destroying incentive to good conduct by destroying its reward. To the party displaced it is an injury, having become a proficient in that business, expecting to remain in it during good behavior, and finding it difficult, at an advanced age, and with fixed habits, to begin a new career in some new bles for office, and degrades an office for rewards and p vides the people of the Unic parties—each in its turn, and inant, to strip and proscribe

Our government is a U united people, as well as un for benefits as well as for bu as well as in compact; and t one half (each in its turn) from all share in the adminis ernment. Mr. Jefferson's p and reconciled public and pr party rights and duties. The responsible for the well-work ment, and has a right, and is itself, to place its friends at th ferent branches of the publ that, and in the subordinate I party should have its share of this Mr. Jefferson's principle as there are offices too subc proscription, so there are other national for it. This is now the army and navy, and form ledged in the diplomatic depart be again. To foreign nations v be one people—an undivided pe peace as well as in war. Mr. ciple reached this case, and h His election was not a signal recall of all the ministers abroa incontinently by partisans of it fus King, the most eminent of t ters abroad, and at the most Europe, that of St. James, rema for two years after the revolut 1800; and until he requested treated all the while with respec and intrusted with a negotiation ducted to its conclusion. Our policy, eschewing all foreign e jected the office of "minister early epublican policy would nent representation at foreign co voy extraordinary and minister I called out on an emergent occasion home as soon as the emergency the only minister known to our ea then the mission was usually a n posed of both parties. And s again. The present permanent s I neglected their n an active part ly because the c (whig) noble. The proscripto doorkeepers. n had been given smugglers, was n befriended by An aged widow, s services in the zen made housemissed from her antly connected rendish family."

proscription of commendable as e United States. -to the injury e public service. the degradation quotes removals it, and although ited, the evil has ie to a sufficient remedy is found the four years' een passed; and cause, and some , an ample field atments, without eeping removals. als, as now praclitical evil in our 1s, to the public ions, and to the ople. Certainly, in office: no one a public employrial worker in a its duties by exlity by his conlic service to exonly title to the ge or a partisan ience for inexpe-I, and destroying estroying its re-If it is an injury, hat business, exood behavior, and ed age, and with eer in some new ions into scram-

bles for office, and degrades the government into an office for rewards and punishments; and divides the people of the Union into two adverse parties—each in its turn, and as it becomes dominant, to strip and proscribe the other.

Our government is a Union. We want a united people, as well as united States—united for benefits as well as for burdens, and in feeling as well as in compact; and this cannot be while one half (each in its turn) excludes the other from all share in the administration of the government. Mr. Jefferson's principle is perfect. and reconciled public and private interest with party rights and duties. The party in power is responsible for the well-working of the government, and has a right, and is bound by duty to itself to place its friends at the head of the different branches of the public service. After that and in the subordinate places, the opposite party should have its share of employment; and this Mr. Jefferson's principle gives to it. But as there are offices too subordinate for party proscription, so there are others too elevated and national for it. This is now acknowledged in the army and navy, and formerly was acknowledged in the diplomatic department; and should be again. To foreign nations we should, at least, be one people—an undivided people, and that in peace as well as in war. Mr. Jefferson's principle reached this case, and he acted upon it. llis election was not a signal gun, fired for the recall of all the ministers abroad, to be succeeded incontinently by partisans of its own. Mr. Rufus King, the most eminent of the federal ministers abroad, and at the most eminent court of Europe, that of St. James, remained at his post for two years after the revolution of parties in 1800; and until he requested his own recall. treated all the while with respect and confidence. and intrusted with a negotiation which he conducted to its conclusion. Our early diplomatic policy, eschewing all foreign entanglement, rejected the office of "minister resident." That early epublican policy would have no permanent representation at foreign courts. The "envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary," called out on an emergent occasion, and to return home as soon as the emergency was over, was the only minister known to our early history; and then the mission was usually a mixed one, competual succession of "envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary" is a fraud upon the name, and a breach of the old policy of the gov ernment, and a hitching on American diplomacy to the tail of the diplomacy of Europe. It is the actual keeping up of "ministers resident" under a false name, and contrary to a wise and vener able policy; and requires the reform hand of the House of Representatives. But this point will require a chapter of its own, and its elucidation must be adjourned to another and a separate

Mons. de Tocqueville was right in the principle of his reproach, wrong in the extent of his application, but would have been less wrong if he had written of events a dozen years later. I deprecate the effect of such sweeping removals at each revolution of parties, and believe it is having a deplorable effect both upon the purity of elections and the distribution of office, and taking both out of the Frands of the people, and throwing the management of one and the enjoyment of the other into most unfit hands. I consider it as working a deleterious change in the government, making it what Mr. Jefferson feared: and being a disciple of his school, and believing in the soundness and nationality of the rule which he laid down, I deem it good to recall it solemnly to public recollection-for the profit, and hope, of present and of future times

CHAPTER LI.

INDIAN SOVEREIGNTIES WITHIN THE STATES

treated all the while with respect and confidence, and intrusted with a negotiation which he conducted to its conclusion. Our early diplomatic policy, eschewing all foreign entanglement, rejected the office of "minister resident." That carly epublican policy would have no permanent representation at foreign courts. The "envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary," called out on an emergent occasion, and to return home as soon as the emergency was over, was the only minister known to our early history; and then the mission was usually a mixed one, composed of both parties. And so it should be again. The present permanent supply and perment was appealed to; and at the commencement of the session of 1829-'30, in his first annual message, President Jackson brought the subject before the two Houses of Congress, thus :

"The condition and ulterior destiny of the Indian tribes within the limits of some of our States, have become objects of much interest and importance. It has long been the policy of government to introduce among them the arts of civilization, in the hope of gradually reclaiming them from a wandering life. This policy has, however, been coupled with another, wholly incompatible with its success. Professing a desire to civilize and settle them, we have, at the same time, lost no opportunity to purchase their lands and thrust them further into the wilderness. By this means they have not only been kept in a wandering state, but been led to look upon us as unjust, and indifferent to their fate. Thus, though lavish in its expenditures upon the subject, government has constantly defeated its own policy, and the Indians, in general, receding further and further to the West, have retained their savage habits. A portion, however, of the southern tribes, having mingled much with the whites, and made some progress in the arts of civilized life, have lately attempted to erect an independent government within the limits of Georgia and Alabama. These States, claiming to be the only sovereigns within their territories, extended their laws over the Indians; which induced the latter to call upon the United States for protection.

"Under these circumstances, the question presented was, whether the general government had a right to sustain those people in their pretensions? The constitution declares, that "no new States shall be formed or erected within the jurisdiction of any other State," without the consent of its legislature. If the general government is not permitted to tolerate the erection of a confederate State within the territory of one of the members of this Union, against her consent, much less could it allow a foreign and independent government to establish itself there. Georgia became a member of the confederacy which eventuated in our federal union, as a sovereign State, always asserting her claim to certain limits; which, having been originally defined in her colonial charter, and subsequently recognized in the treaty of peace, she has ever since continued to enjoy, except as they have been circumscribed by her own voluntary transfer of a portion of her territory to the United States, in the articles of cession of 1802. Alabama was admitted into the Union on the same footing with the original States, with boundaries which were prescribed by Congress. There is no constitutional, conventional, or legal provision, which allows them less power over the Indians within their borders, than is possessed by Maine or New-York. Would the people of was retained in their cause, and addressed a com

Maine permit the Penobscot tribe to erect an independent government within their State? and, unless they did, would it not be the duty of the general government to support them in resisting such a measure? Would the people of New-York permit each remnant of the Six Nations within her borders, to declare itself an independent people, under the protection of the United States? Could the Indians establish a separate republic on each of their reservations in Ohio? And if they were so disposed, would it be the duty of this government to protect them in the attempt? If the principle involved in the obvious answer to these questions be abandoned, it will follow that the objects of this government are reversed; and that it has become a part of its duty to aid in destroying the States which it was established to protect.

"Actuated by this view of the subject, I informed the Indians inhabiting parts of Georgia and Alabama, that their attempt to establish an independent government would not be countenanced by the Executive of the United States; and advised them to emigrate beyond the Mississippi, or submit to the laws of those States."

Having thus refused to sustain these southern tribes in their attempt to set up independent governments within the States of Alabama and Georgia, and foreseeing an unequal and disagreeable contest between the Indians and the States. the President recommended the passage of an act to enable him to provide for their removal to the west of the Mississippi. It was an old policy, but party spirit now took hold of it, and strenuously resisted the passage of the act. It was one of the closest, and most carnestly contested questions of the session; and finally carried by an inconsiderable majority. The sum of $500,000 was appropriated to defray the expenses of treating with them for an exchange, or sale of territory; and under this act, and with the ample means which it placed at the disposal of the President, the removals were eventually of fected; but with great difficulty, chiefly on ac count of a foreign, or outside influence from politicians and intrusive philanthropists. Georgia was the State where this question took its most serious form. The legislature of the State laid off the Cherokee country into counties, and prepared to exercise her laws within them. The Indians, besides resisting through their political friends in Congress, took counsel and legal advice, with a view to get the question into the Su preme Court of the United States. Mr. Wirk the late Attorney General of the United States, munication to the Governor prising him of the fact; and p "agreed case" should be made ion of the court. Gov. Gilm proposal, and in his answer gar why the State had taken the de tending her jurisdiction, that the had become merged in its ma "half breeds," or descendants who possessed wealth and intell ing under political and fanatical without, were disposed to perpet dence within the State,-(the pa remaining and refusing to join beyond the Mississippi). The "So long as the Cherokees retain tive habits, no disposition was States under the protection of ment they resided, to make them laws. Such policy would have b cause it would have interfered wi of life, the enjoyments peculiar to and the kind of government w with those habits and enjoyments. power of the whites, and of among the Cherokees, that destroy laws, customs and authority of t subjected the nation to the rule of pressive of governments-an oliga is nothing surprising in this resul character of the people, and the cau upon them, it could not have been was this state of things that render tory upon Georgia to vindicate the sofereignty by abolishing all Cherc ment within its limits. Whether gent, or ignorant class, the State of passed no laws violative of the libe security, or private property of any has been the object of humanity, to separate the two classes (the ignor informed Indians) among them, givin of citizenship to those who are cape forming its duties and properly es privileges; and increasing the enjoyn probability of future improvement to ant and idle, by removing them to where the inducements to action will accordance with the character of th

With respect to the foreign interfe this question, by politicians of other

to erect an their State? be the duty port them in the people of the Six Naitself an inection of the s establish a reservations posed, would to protect ciple involved questions be bjects of this at it has beestroying the protect. subject, I ins of Georgia establish an t be countenited States:

> hese southern independent Alabama and and disagreend the States. assage of an ir removal to s an old polild of it, and the act. It arnestly cond finally card the Missis

e States."

The sum of y the expenhange, or sale nd with the : disposal of eventually efhiefly on ac nce from polsts. Georgia took its most he State laid ties, and prethem. The their political and legal adn into the Su . Mr. Wirt, nited States, ressed a com munication to the Governor of the State, apprising him of the fact; and proposing that an agreed case" should be made up for the decision of the court. Gov. Gilmer declined this proposal, and in his answer gave as the reason why the State had taken the decided step of extending her jurisdiction, that the Cherokee tribe had become merged in its management in the "half breeds," or descendants of white men, who possessed wealth and intelligence, and acting under political and fanatical instigations from without, were disposed to perpetuate their residence within the State,—(the part of them still remaining and refusing to join their half tribe beyond the Mississippi). The governor said: "So long as the Cherokees retained their primitive habits, no disposition was shown by the States under the protection of whose government they resided, to make them subject to their laws. Such policy would have been cruel; because it would have interfered with their habits of life, the enjoyments peculiar to Indian people, and the kind of government which accorded with those habits and enjoyments. It was the power of the whites, and of their children among the Cherokees, that destroyed the ancient laws, customs and authority of the tribe, and subjected the nation to the rule of that most oppressive of governments-an oligarchy. There is nothing surprising in this result. From the character of the people, and the causes operating upon them, it could not have been otherwise. It was this state of things that rendered it obligatory upon Georgia to vindicate the rights of her soffereignty by abolishing all Cherokee government within its limits. Whether of the intelligent, or ignorant class, the State of Georgia has passed no laws violative of the liberty, personal security, or private property of any Indian. It has been the object of humanity, and wisdom, to separate the two classes (the ignorant, and the informed Indians) among them, giving the rights of citizenship to those who are capable of performing its duties and properly estimating its privileges; and increasing the enjoyment and the probability of future improvement to the ignorant and idle, by removing them to a situation where the inducements to action will be more in accordance with the character of the Cherokee pseudo philanthropists, the only effect of which was to bring upons ubaltern agents the punishment which the laws inflicted upon its violators, the governor said: "It is well known that the extent of the jurisdiction of Georgia, and the policy of removing the Cherokees and other Indians to the west of the Mississippi, have become party questions. It is believed that the Cherokees in Georgia, had determined to unite with that portion of the tribe who had removed to the west of the Mississippi, if the policy of the President was sustained by Congress. To prevent this result, as soon as it became highly probable.that the Indian bill would pass, the Cherokees were persuaded that the right of self-government could be secured to them by the power of the Supreme Court of the United States, in defiance of the legislation of the general and State governments. It was not known, however, until the receipt of your letter, that the spirit of resistance to the laws of the State, and views of the United States, which has of late been evident among the Indians, had in any manner been occasioned by your advice." Mr. Wirt had been professionally employed by the Cherokees to bring their case before the Supreme Court; but as he classed politically with the party, which took sides with the Indians against Georgia, the governor was the less ceremonious, or reserved in his reply to him.

With respect to the foreign interference with

Judge Clayton, in whose circuit the Indian counties fell, at his first charge to the grand jury assured the Indians of protection, warned the intermeddlers of the mischief they were were doing, and of the inutility of applying to the Supreme Court. He said: "My other purpose is to apprise the Indians that they are not to be oppressed, as has been sagely foretold: that the same justice which will be meted to the citizen shall be meted to them." With respect to intermeddlers he said: "Meetings have been held in all directions, to express opinions on the conduct of Georgia, and Georgia alone—when her adjoining sister States had lately done precisely the same thing; and which she and they had done, in the rightful exercise of their State sovereignty." The judge even showed that one of these intrusive philanthropists had endeavored to interest European sympathy, in behalf of the Cherokees; and quoted from the address of the reverend Mr. Milner, of New-York, to the Foreign Missionary Society in London: "That if the cause of the this question, by politicians of other States and negroes in the West Indias was interesting to its, by the trial of this writ of error at Wash. VETO ON THE MAYSVILLE ington; and for that purpose, and to save the te-

ANNO

THIS was the third veto on the internal improvements within t three different Presidents. Th Madison, on the bill "to set a certain funds for constructing and improving the navigation in order to facilitate, promote, to internal commerce among th and to render more easy and l means and provisions of the cona very long title, and even arguafraid of the President's vetoin a message with the reasons it. The second was that of Mr Cumberland Road bill, which, w of his reasons and arguments, I given in this View. This third subject, and from President Ja time when internal improvement government had become a point of and a part of the American sy: concerted action on the public m for it a degree of popularity: thi der such circumstances was a kil system-which has shown but occasional vitality since. Taker three vetoes, and the three mess them, and the action of Congress in no instance did the House in w nated pass the bills, or either of t tion to the vetoes), may be consid cing all the constitutional reason question; and enough to be studi who wishes to make himself mas of the United States; and it was proposed by the that auditory—and deeply interesting it ought counsel, Mr. Wirt, to try the whole question of to be-if the population in Ireland, groaning bethe right of Georgia, to exercise jurisdiction over neath the degradation of superstition-excited the Indians and Indian country within her lim. their sympathies, he trusted the Indians of North America would also be considered as the objects of their Christian regard. He was grieved, howdious forms of judicial proceedings, he requested ever, to state that there were those in America, the governor to consent to make up an "agreed who acted towards them in a different spirit; and case" for the consideration and decision of that he lamented to say that, at this very moment, the State of Georgia was seeking to subjugate and high court. This proposition Governor Gilmer declined, in firm but civil terms, saying: "Your destroy the liberties both of the Creeks and the suggestion that it would be convenient and sat-Cherokees; the former of whom possessed in isfactory if yourself, the Indians, and the gov. Georgia, ten millions of acres of land, and the ernor would make up a law case to be submitlatter three millions." In this manner European ted to the Supreme Court for the determination sympathies were sought to be brought to bear of the question, whether the legislature of Georupon the question of removal of the Indians-a gia has competent authority to pass laws for the political and domestic question, long since resolvgovernment of the Indians residing within its ed upon by wise and humane American stateslimits, however courteous the manner, and conciliamen-and for the benefit of the Indians themtory the phraseology, cannot but be considered as selves, as well as of the States in which they exceedingly disrespectful to the government of the were. If all that the reverend missionary utter-State. No one knows better than yourself, that ed had been true, it would still have been a very the governor would grossly violate his duty, and improper invocation of European sympathies in exceed his authority, by complying with such a an American domestic question, and against a setsuggestion; and that both the letter and the spirit tled governmental policy: but it was not true. of the powers conferred by the constitution upon The Creeks, with their imputed ten millions of the Supreme Court forbid its adjudging such a acres, owned not one acre in the State; and had case. It is hoped that the efforts of the general not in five years-not since the treaty of cession government to execute its contract with Georgia in 1825: which shows the recklessness with (the compact of 1802), to secure the continuance which the reverend suppliant for foreign sympaand advance the happiness of the Indian tribes thy, spoke of the people and States of his own and to give quiet to the country, may be so efcountry. The few Cherokees who were there, fectually successful as to prevent the necessity of instead of subjugation and destruction of their any further intercourse upon the subject." And liberties, were to be paid a high price for their there was no further intercourse. The day for land, if they chose to join their tribe beyond the Mississippi; and if not, they were to be protectthe execution of Tassels came round: he was hanged: and the writ of the Supreme Court was ed like the white inhabitants of the counties they no more heard of. The remaining Cherokees aflived in. With respect to the Supreme Court, terwards made their treaty, and removed to the the judge declared that he should pay no attenwest of the Mississippi; and that was the end of tion to its mandate—holding no writ of error to the political, and intrusive philanthropical interlie from the Sapreme Court of the United States to his State Court—but would execute the senference in the domestic policy of Georgia. One tence of the law whatever it might be, in defiance Indian hanged, some missionaries imprisoned the of the Supreme Court; and such was the fact. writ of the Supreme Court disregarded, the Indians removed: and the political and pseudo-Instigated by foreign interference, and relying upon its protection one George Tassels, of Inphilanthropic intermeddlers left to the reflection dian descent, committed a homicide in resisting of having done much mischief in assuming to the laws of Georgia-was tried for murder -conbecome the defenders and guardians of a race victed—condemned—and sentenced to be hanged which the humanity of our laws and people were on a given day. A writ of error, to bring the case treating with parental kindness before itself, was obtained from the Supreme Court

CHAPTER LI

BUPTURE BETWEEN PRESIDENT VICE-PRESIDENT CALHO

WITH the quarrels of public me no concern, except as they enter in duct, and influence public events. and as the cause of such events, t roposed by the e question of risdiction over rithin her limror at Washto save the tehe requested ip an "agreed ecision of that vernor Gilmer aying: "Your nient and satand the govto be submitdetermination ature of Geors laws for the ing within its er, and conciliae considered as ernment of the

yourself, that

e his duty, and

g with such a r and the spirit stitution upon adging such a of the general with Georgia he continuance Indian tribes. may be so efre necessity of ubject." And The day for ound: he was me Court was Cherokees afemoved to the was the end of propical interjeorgia. One nprisoned, the arded, the Inand pseudo-

the reflection

assuming to

ians of a race

d people were

CHAPTER LII.

VETO ON THE MAYSVILLE ROAD BILL.

THIS was the third veto on the subject of federal internal improvements within the States, and by three different Presidents. The first was by Mr. Madison, on the bill "to set apart, and pledge certain funds for constructing roads and canals, and improving the navigation of watercourses, in order to facilitate, promote, and give security to internal commerce among the several States: and to render more easy and less expensive the means and provisions of the common defence "___ a very long title, and even argumentative-as if afraid of the President's veto-which it received in a message with the reasons for disapproving it. The second was that of Mr. Monroe on the Cumberland Road bill, which, with an abstract of his reasons and arguments, has already been given in this View. This third veto on the same subject, and from President Jackson, and at a time when internal improvement by the federal government had become a point of party division, and a part of the American system, and when concerted action on the public mind had created for it a degree of popularity: this third veto under such circumstances was a killing blow to the system-which has shown but little, and only occasional vitality since. Taken together, the three vetoes, and the three messages sustaining them, and the action of Congress upon them (for in no instance did the House in which they originated pass the bills, or either of them, in opposition to the vetoes), may be considered as embracing all the constitutional reasoning upon the question; and enough to be studied by any one who wishes to make himself master of the sub-

CHAPTER LIII.

EUPTURE BETWEEN PRESIDENT JACKSON, AND VICE-PRESIDENT CALHOUN.

WITH the quarrels of public men history has no concern, except as they enter into public conduct, and influence public events. In such case, belong to history, which would be an empty tale, devoid of interest or instruction, without the development of the causes, and consequences of the acts which it narrates. Division among chiefs has always been a cause of mischief to their country; and when so, it is the duty of history to show it. That mischief points the moral of much history, and has been made the subject of the greatest of poems:

> "Achilles' wrath, to Greece the direful spring Of woes unnumbered-

About the beginning of March, in the year 1831, a pamphlet appeared in Washington City, issued by Mr. Calhoun, and addressed to the people of the United States, to explain the cause of a difference which had taken place between himself and General Jackson, instigated as the pamphlet alleged by Mr. Van Buren, and intended to make mischief between the first and second officers of the government, and to effect the political destruction of himself (Mr. Calhoun) for the benefit of the contriver of the quarrel—the then Secretary of State; and indicated as a candidate for the presidential succession upon the termination of General Jackson's service. It was the same pamphlet of which Mr. Duncanson, as heretofore related, had received previous notice from Mr. Duff Green, as being in print in his office, but the publication delayed for the maturing of the measures which were to attend its appearance; namely: the change in the course of the Telegraph; its attacks upon General Jackson and Mr. Van Buren; the defence of Mr. Calhoun; and the chorus of the affiliated presses, to be engaged "in getting up the storm which even the popularity of General Jackson could not stand."

The pamphlet was entitled, "Correspondence between General Andrew Jackson and John C. Calhoun, President and Vice-President of the United States, on the subject of the course of the latter in the deliberations of the cabinet of Mr. Monroe on the occurrences of the Seminole war;" and its contents consisted of a prefatory address, and a number of letters, chiefly from Mr. Calhoun himself, and his friends—the General's share of the correspondence being a few brief notes to ascertain if Mr. Crawford's statement was true? and, being informed that, substantially, it was, to decline any further correspondence with Mr. Calhoun, and to promise a full public reply when and as the cause of such events, these quarrels he had the leisure for the purpose and access to the proofs. His words were: "In your and Mr. Crawford's dispute I have no interest whatever; but it may become necessary for me hereafter, when I shall have more leisure, and the documents at hand, to place the subject in its proper light-to notice the historical facts and references in your communication-which will give a very different view to the subject. . . . . Understanding you now, no further communication with you on this subject is necessary." .... And none further appears from General Jackson.

But the general did what he had intimated he would-drew up a sustained reply, showing the subject in a different light from that in which Mr. Calhoun's letters had presented it; and quoting vouchers for all that he said. The case, as made out in the published pamphlet, stood before the public as that of an intrigue on the part of Mr. Van Buren to supplant a rival-of which the President was the dupe-Mr. Calhoun the victim-and the country the sufferer: and the modus operandi of the intrigue was, to dig up the buried proceedings in Mr. Monroe's cabinet, in relation to a proposed court of inquiry on the general (at the instance of Mr. Calhoun), for his alleged, unauthorized, and illegal operations in Florida during the Seminole war. It was this case which the general felt himself bound to-confront—and did; and in confronting which he showed that Mr. Calhoun himself was the sole cause of breaking their friendship; and, consequently, the sole cause of all the consequences which resulted from that breach. Up to that time-up to the date of the discovery of Mr. Calhoun's now admitted part in the proposed measure of the court of inquiry—that gentleman | his Secretary at War (Mr. Calhoun). 3. The had been the general's beau ideal of a statesman and a man-"the noblest work of God," as he publicly expressed it in a toast: against whom he would believe nothing, to whose friends he gave an equal voice in the cabinet, whom he consulted as if a member of his administration; and whom he actually preferred for his successor. This reply to the pamphlet, entitled "An exposition of Mr. Calhoun's course towards General Jackson," though written above twenty years ago, and intended for publication, has never before been given to the public. Its publication becomes essential now. It belongs to a dissension between chiefs which has disturbed the harmony, and loosened the foundations of the answer I ever received from Mr. Calhoun.

Union; and of which the view, on one side, was published in pamphlet at the time, registered in the weeklies and annuals, printed in many napers, carried into the Congress debates, especially on the nomination of Mr. Van Buren; and so made a part of the public history of the times to be used as historical material in after time. The introductory paragraph to the "Exposition" shows that it was intended for immediate publication, but with a feeling of repugnance to the exhibition of the chief magistrate as a newspaper writer: which feeling in the end predominated, and delayed the publication until the expiration of his office-and afterwards, until his death. But it was preserved to fulfil its original purpose, and went in its manuscript form to Mr. Francis P. Blair, the literary legatee of General Jackson; and by him was turned over to me (with trunks full of other papers) to be used in this Thirty Years' View. It had been previously in the hands of Mr. Amos Kendall, as material for a life of Jackson, which he had begun to write, and was by him made known to Mr. Calhoun, who declined "furnishing any further information on the subject." * It is in the fair round-hand writing of a clerk, slightly interlined in the general's hand, the narrative sometimes in the first and sometimes in the third person; vouchers referred to and shown for every allegation; and signed by the general in his own well-known hand. Its matter consists of three parts: 1. The justification of himself, under the law of nations and the treaty with Spain of 1795, for taking military possession of Florida in 1818. 2. The same justification, under the orders of Mr. Monroe and ## * Mr. Kendall's letter to the author is in these words:

"December 29, 1853.—In reply to your note just received, have to state that, wishing to do exact justice to all men in my Life of General Jackson, I addressed a note to Mr. Calhoun stating to him in substance, that I was in possession of the evidences on which the general based his imputation of duplicity touching his course in Mr. Monroe's cabinet upon the Florida war question, and inquiring whether it was his desire to furnish any further information on the subject, or rest upon that which was already before the public (in his publication). A few days afterwards, the Hon. Dixon H. Lewis told methat Mr. Calhoun had received my letter, and had requested him to ask me what was the nature of the evidences among General Jackson's papers to which I alluded. I stated them to him, as embodied in General Jackson's 'Exposition,' to which you refer. Mr. Lewis afterwards informed me that Mr. Calbon had concluded to let the matter rest as it was. This is all the statement of Mr. Calhor him (the general) in all t nole war, and in the move and in the two Houses of gave rise. All these par Jackson, or a history of th only the two latter come w View. To these two par tion of the Exposition is c references to the vouche which having been examinare found in every parti text; and also omitting a s plaint against Mr. Calhou representations in relation daims.

"EXPOSIT

ence with Mr. Calhoun whi I engaged, when the docu hand, to give a statement of moduct in the Seminole car present it in a very differen m which that gentleman ha "Although the time I am subject, engrossed as I am my public duties, is entirely justice, yet from the course houn, from the frequent n my conduct on that occasion hension of my motives for errespondence, from the so ous friends in different parts m compliance with that en w my fellow-citizens the with the documents on which

"It will be recollected th

"I am aware that there a who deem it unfit that the this nation should, under an pear before the public in this ate his conduct. These opin result from too great fastid supposed analogy between h of the first magistrate of whom it is said they can do may be well founded. I, ho erent opinions on this subject that the course I now take judgment of my fellow-citiz conformity with past usage, a the spirit of our popular ins quires that the conduct and man, how elevated soever n should be fairly and freely su russion and decision of the p conviction I have acted hereto not wishing this or any other life to be concealed. I prese fact in connection with the s respondence in this form to on one side, was time, registered in nted in many paess debates, esper. Van Buren; and istory of the times erial in after time. the "Exposition" · immediate publiepugnance to the trate as a newspathe end predomition until the exterwards, until his to fulfil its originanuscript form to ary legatee of Genas turned over to papers) to be used It had been previos Kendall, as manich he had begun ade known to Mr. nishing any furect." * It is in the gned by the genhand. Its mat-. The justification f nations and the or taking military 2. The same jusf Mr. Monroe and Calhoun). 3. The clerk, slightly inand, the narrative

sometimes in the

red to and shown

r is in these words: your note just received, ract justice to all men in ssed a note to Mr. Calt I was in possession of based his imputation of Monroe's cabinet upon ring whether it was his on on the subject, or rest ne public (in his publican. Dixon H. Lewis told letter, and had requested of the evidences among lluded. I stated them to 's 'Exposition,' to which med me that Mr. Calhoun s it was. This is all the lhoun.

statement of Mr. Calhoun's conduct towards him (the general) in all that affair of the Semnole war, and in the movements in the cabinet, and in the two Houses of Congress, to which it gave rise. All these parts belong to a life of Jackson, or a history of the Seminole war; but only the two latter come within the scope of this View. To these two parts, then, this publication of the Exposition is confined-omitting the references to the vouchers in the appendixwhich having been examined (the essential ones) are found in every particular to sustain the text; and also omitting a separate head of complaint against Mr. Calhoun on account of his representations in relation to South Carolina

"EXPOSITION.

"It will be recollected that in my correspondonce with Mr. Calhoun which he has published, lengaged, when the documents should be at hand, to give a statement of facts respecting my moduct in the Seminole campaign, which would present it in a very different light from the one m which that gentleman has placed it.

Although the time I am able to devote to the subject, engrossed as I am in the discharge of my public duties, is entirely inadequate to do it justice, yet from the course pursued by Mr. Calboun, from the frequent misrepresentations of my conduct on that occasion, from the misapprebension of my motives for entering upon that correspondence, from the solicitations of numerous friends in different parts of the country, and in compliance with that engagement, I present w my fellow-citizens the following statement, with the documents on which it rests.

"I am aware that there are some among us who deem it unfit that the chief magistrate of this nation should, under any circumstances, appear before the public in this manner, to vinditate his conduct. These opinions or feelings may asult from too great fastidiousness, or from a supposed analogy between his station and that of the first magistrate of other countries, of whom it is said they can do no wrong, or they my be well founded. I, however, entertain diffrent opinions on this subject. It seems to me that the course I now take of appealing to the judgment of my fellow-citizens, if not in exact onformity with past usage, at least springs from the spirit of our popular institutions, which requires that the conduct and character of every man, how elevated soever may be his station should be fairly and freely submitted to the disussion and decision of the people. Under this conviction I have acted heretofore, and now act, not wishing this or any other part of my public lie to be concealed. I present my whole conact in connection with the subject of that corfirm and enlightened consideration of my fellow

Here follows a justification of Gen. Jackson's conduct under the law of nations, and under the orders to Gen. Gaines, his predecessor in the command.

"Such was the gradation of orders issued by the government. At first they instructed their general 'not to pass the line.' He is next instructed to 'exercise a sound discretion as to the necessity of crossing the line.\(^1\) He is then directed to consider himself 'at liberty to march across the Florida line,' but to halt, and report to the department in case the Indians should shelter themselves under a Spanish fort.' Finally, after being informed of the atrocious massacre of the men, women and children constituting the party of Lieutenant Scott, they order a new general into the field, and direct him to 'adopt the necessary measures to put an end to the conflict, without regard to territorial "lines," or "Spanish forts." Mr. Cal-houn's own understanding of the order issued by him, is forcibly and clearly explained in a letter written by him in reply to the inquiries of Governor Bibb, of Alabama, dated the 13th of May, 1818, in which he says :- ' General Jackson is vested with full power to conduct the war as he may think best.'

"These orders were received by General Jackson at Nashville, on the night of the 12th January, 1818, and he instantly took measures to carry them into effect.

"In the mean time, however, he had received copies of the orders to General Gaines, to take possession of Amelia Island, and to enter Florida, but halt and report to the department, in case the Indians sheltered themselves under a Spanish fort. Approving the policy of the former, and perceiving in the latter, dangers to the army, and injury to the country, on the 6th of January he addressed a confidential letter to the President, frankly disclosing his views on both subjects. The following is a copy of that letter, viz .:-

"NASHVILLE, 6th Jan., 1818.

"SIR :- A few days since, I received a letter from the Secretary of War, of the 17th ult., with inclosures. Your order of the 19th ult. through him to Brevet Major General Gaines to enter the territory of Spain, and chastise the ruthless savages who have been depredating on the property and lives of our citizens, will meet not only the approbation of your country, but the approbation of Heaven. Will you however permit me to suggest the catastrophe that might arise by General Gaines's compliance with the last clause of your order? Suppose the case that the Indians are beaten; they take refuge either in Pensacola or St. Augustine, which open their gates to them: to profit by his victory, General spondence in this form to the indulgent but Gaines pursues the fugitives, and has to halt before the garrison until he can communicate with his government. In the mean time the militia grow restless, and he is left to defend himself by the regulars. The enemy, with the aid of their Spanish friends, and Woodbine's British partisans, or, if you please with Aurey's force, attacks him. What may not be the result? Defeat and massacre. Permit me to remark that the arms of the United States must be carried to any point within the limits of East Florida, where an enemy is permitted and protected, or disgrace attends.

"The Executive Government have ordered, and, as I conceive, very properly. Amelia Island to be taken possession of. This order ought to be carried into execution at all hazards, and simultaneously the whole of East Florida seized, and held as an indemnity for the outrages of Spain upon the property of our citizens. This done, it puts all opposition down, secures our citizens a complete indemnity, and saves us from a war with Great Britain, or some of the continental powers combined with Spain. This can be done without implicating the government. Let it be signified to me through any channel (say Mr. J. Rhea), that the possession of the Floridas would be desirable to the United States, and in sixty days it will be accomplished.

"The order being given for the possession of Amelia Island, it ought to be executed, or our enemies, internal and external, will use it to the disadvantage of the government. If our troops enter the territory of Spain in pursuit of our Indian enemy, all opposition that they meet with must be put down, or we will be involved in danger and disgrace.

"I have the honor, &c. "ANDREW JACKSON. "JAMES MONROE, President U. S.

"The course recommended by General Jackson in this letter relative to the occupation of the Floridas accords with the policy which dictated the secret act of Congress. He recommended no more than the President had a right to do. In consequence of the occupation of Amelia Island by the officers of the Colombian and Mexican governments, and the attempt to occupy the whole province, the President had a right, under the act of Congress, to order General Jackson to take possession of it in the name of the United States. He would have been the more justifiable in doing so, because the inhabitants of the province, the Indian subjects of the King of Spain, whom he was bound not only by the laws of nations, but by treaty to restrain, were in open war with the United States.

"Mr. Calhoun, the Secretary of War, was the first man who read this letter after its reception at Washington. In a letter from Mr. Monroe to General Jackson, dated 21st December, 1818, published in the Calhoun corespondence, page 44, is the following account of the reception, opening and perusal of this letter viz.: 'Your letter of January 6th, was received while I was so-riously indisposed. Observing that it was from you, I handed it to Mr. Calhoun to read, after reading one or two lines only myself. The order to you to take command in that quarter had before been issued. He remarked after perusing the letter, that it was a confidential one relating to Florida, which I must answer.

"In accordance with the advice of Mr. Calhoun and availing himself of the suggestion contained in the letter, Mr. Monroe sent for Mr. John Rhea (then a member of Congress), showed him the confidential letter, and requested him to answer it. In conformity with this request Mr Rhea did answer the letter, and informed General Jackson that the President had shown him the confidential letter, and requested him to state that he approved of its suggestions. This answer was received by the general on the second night he remained at Big Creek, which is four miles in advance of Hartford, Georgia, and before his arrival at Fort Scott, to take command of the troops in that quarter. "General Jackson had already received or. ders, vesting him with discretionary powers in relation to the measures necessary to put an end to the war. He had informed the President in his confidential letter, that in his judgment it was necessary to seize and occupy the whole of Florida. This suggestion had been considered by Mr. Calhoun and the President, and approved. From this confidential correspondence before he entered Florida, it was understood on both sides, that under the order received by him he would occupy the whole province, if an occasion to do so should present itself; as Mr. Calhoun wrote to Governor Bibb, he was 'authorized to conduct the war as he thought best;' and how he 'thought best' to conduct it was then made known to the Executive, and approved, before he struck a blow.

"In the approval given by Mr. Monroe upon the advice of Mr. Calhoun to the suggestions of General Jackson, he acted in strict obedience to the laws of his country. By the secret act of Congress, the President was authorized, under circumstances then existing, to seize and occupy all Florida. Orders had been given which were sufficiently general in their terms to cover that object. The confidential correspondence, and private understanding, made them, so far as regarded the parties, as effectually orders to take and occupy the Province of Florida as if that object had been declared on their face.

"Under these circumstances General Jackson entered Florida with a perfect right, according to international law, and the constitution and laws of his country, to take possession of the whole territory. He was clothed with all the power of the President, and authorized 'to conduct the war as he thought best.' He had or ders as general and comprehensive as words could make them: he had the confidential approbation of the President to his cofidential recommendation to seize Florida: and he entered the province with the full justice and policy but and the orders of the privately explained and fy him in expelling ev extending the jurisdict over every inch of its to

" Nevertheless, Ger knowledge of the situa expected to find a justif conduct of the Spanish trary, had he found or that the agents and offi instigating, encouraging ans, had used all the n prevent and put an end to have incurred the respo fortresses and expelling But he wrote to the Pre the campaign with oth these he was not disapp

"As he approached S tained that it was a pla source of supply for the had been held within its were appropriated to the obtained supplies of amm found a maket for their p mandant's family resided the chief instigator of th negroes and Indians unde to drive out the feeble Sp entire possession of the fo tion for themselves and a States. In these circums found enough to justify h sponsibility of seizing an with an American garriso

"The Indians had be Marks occupied. 'No fact which would justify Gene ing the responsibility of Spanish posts in Florida war as at an end, and was considerable portion of his formed that a portion of th been received, fed and su authorities in Pensacola. his march upon that point received a letter from the his entry into Florida as the rights of Spain, requir treat from the Territory, a of refusal to use force to e iaration of hostilities on th authorities, instead of rer crease the necessity for th because it was manifest to the American army then lef under the belief that there find a safe retreat, would co incursions upon our front tury; and General Jackson he left any portion of his Indians, and retired with ived while I was soing that it was from lhoun to read, after myself. The order that quarter had berked after perusing idential one relating super.'

dvice of Mr. Calhoun suggestion contained sent for Mr. John ngress), showed him to rith this requested him to rith this request Mr. and informed General had shown him the sted him to state that is. This answer was the second night he hich is four miles in rigia, and before his ake command of the already received orretionary powers in necessary to put an formed the President at in his judgment it occupy the whole of had been considered resident, and approvcorrespondence before understood on both · received by him he rovince, if an occasion self; as Mr. Calhoun ne was 'authorized to ught best;' and how ct it was then made and approved, before by Mr. Monroe upon to the suggestions of in strict obedience to By the secret act of as authorized, under g, to seize and occupy een given which were ir terms to cover that correspondence, and de them, so far as really orders to take and lorida as if that obtheir face.

nces General Jackson erfect right, according the constitution and ake possession of the clothed with all the nd authorized to conhit best.' He had orprehensive as words the confidential approhis cofidential recomt: and he entered the province with the full knowledge that not only justice and policy but the laws of his country, and the orders of the President as publicly and privately explained and understood, would justify him in expelling every Spanish garrison, and extending the jurisdiction of the United States over every inch of its territory.

at Nevertheless, General Jackson, from his knowledge of the situation of affairs in Florida, expected to find a justification for himself in the conduct of the Spanish authorities. On the contrary, had he found on entering the province that the agents and officers of Spain, instead of instigating, encouraging and supplying the Indians, had used all the means in their power to prevent and put an end to hostilities, he would not have incurred the responsibility of seizing their fortresses and expelling them from the country. But he wrote to the President, and entered upon the campaign with other expectations, and in these he was not disappointed. "As he approached St. Marks it was ascertained that it was a place of rendezvous and a source of supply for the Indians. Their councils had been held within its walls: its storehouses were appropriated to their use: they had there obtained supplies of ammunition: there they had found a maket for their plunder: and in the commandant's family resided Alexander Arbuthnot. the chief instigator of the war. Moreover, the negroes and Indians under Ambrister threatened to drive out the feeble Spanish garrison and take entire possession of the fort, as a means of protection for themselves and annoyance to the United States. In these circumstances General Jackson found enough to justify him in assuming the responsibility of seizing and occupying that post with an American garrison. "The Indians had been dispersed, and St. Marks occupied. No facts had as yet appeared which would justify General Jackson in assuming the responsibility of occupying the other Spanish posts in Florida. He considered the war as at an end, and was about to discharge a considerable portion of his force, when he was informed that a portion of the hostile Indians had been received, fed and supplied by the Spanish authorities in Pensacola. He therefore directed his march upon that point. On his advance he received a letter from the governor, denouncing his entry into Florida as a violent outrage on the rights of Spain, requiring his immediate retreat from the Territory, and threatening in case of refusal to use force to expel him. This declaration of hostilities on the part of the Spanish authorities, instead of removing, tended to increase the necessity for the General's advance, because it was manifest to both parties that if the American army then left Florida, the Indians, under the belief that there they would always find a safe retreat, would commence their bloody incursions upon our frontiers with redoubled fury; and General Jackson was warned that if he left any portion of his army to restrain the Spaniards would be openly united with the Indians to expel the whole, and thus it became as necessary in order to terminate the war to destroy or capture the Spanish force at Pensacola as the Indians themselves. In this attitude of the Spanish governor, and in the fact that the hostile Indians were received, fed, clothed, furnished with munitions of war, and that their plunder was purchased in Pensacola, General Jackson found a justification for seizing that post also, and holding it in the name of the United States.

"St. Augustine was still in the hands of the Spaniards, and no act of the authorities or people of that place was known to General Jackson previous to his return to Tennessee, which would sustain him in assuming the responsibility of occupying that city. However, about the 7th of August, 1818, he received information that the Indians were there also received and supplied. On that day, therefore, he issued an order to General Gaines, directing him to collect the evidences of these facts, and if they were well founded, to take possession of that place. The following is an extract from that order:

"'I have noted with attention Major Twiggs' letter marked No. 5. I contemplated that the agents of Spain or the officers of Fort St. Augustine would excite the Indians to hostility and furnish them with the means. It will be necessary to obtain evidence substantiating this fact, and that the hostile Indians have been fed and furnished from the garrison of St. Augustine. This being obtained, should you deem your force sufficient, you will proceed to take and garrison with American troops, Fort St. Augustine, and hold the garrison prisoners until you hear from the President of the United States, or transport them to Cuba, as in your judgment under existing circumstances you may think best.'

"An order had some time before been given to the officer of ordnance at Charleston, to have in readiness a battery train, and to him General Gaines was referred.

"The order to take St. Augustine has often been adduced as evidence of General Jackson's determination to do as he pleased, without regard to the orders or wishes of his government. Though justifiable on the ground of self-defence, it would never have been issued but for the confidential orders given to General Gaines and Colonel Bankhead, to take possession of Amelia Island forcibly, if not yielded peaceably, and when possessed, to retain and fortify it; and the secret understanding which existed between him and the government, in consequence of which he never doubted that he was acting in compliance with the wishes, and in accordance with the orders and expectations of the President and Secretary of War.

find a safe retreat, would commence their bloody meursions upon our frontiers with redoubled thry; and General Jackson was warned that if he left any portion of his army to restrain the laft any portion of his main force, the laft and retired with his main force, the nent defence of Florida, which was agreeable to the confidential orders to General Gaines and Col. Bankhead before referred to. Of this he informed the Secretary of War in a dispatch dated 2d, June, 1818, of which the following is an extract:-

"'Captain Gadsden is instructed to prepare and report on the necessary defences as far as the military reconnoissances he has taken will permit, accompanied with plans of existing works; what additions or improvements are necessary, and what new works should, in his opinion, be erected to give permanent security to this important territorial addition to our republic. As soon as the report is prepared, Captain Gadsden will receive orders to repair to Washington City with some other documents which I may wish to confide to his charge.'

"This plan was completed and forwarded to Mr. Calhoun on the 10th of the succeeding August, by Captain Gadsden himself, with a letter from General Jackson, urging the necessity not only of retaining possession of St. Marks, but Pensacola. The following is a part of that letter:

"Captain Gadsden will also deliver you his report made in pursuance of my order, accompanied with the plans of the fortifications thought necessary for the defence of the Floridas, in connection with the line of defence on our Southern frontier.

"'This was done under the belief that the government will never jeopardize the safety of the Union, or the security of our frontier, by surrendering those posts, and the possession of the Floridas, unless upon a sure guaranty agreeable to the stipulations of the articles of capitulation, that will insure permanent peace, tranquillity and security to our Southern frontier. It is believed that Spain can never furnish this guaranty. As long as there are Indians in Florida, and it is possessed by Spain, they will be excited to war, and the indiscriminate murder of our citizens, by foreign agents combined with the officers of Spain. The duplicity and conduct of Spain for the last six years fully prove this. It was on a belief that the Floridas would be held that my order was given to Captain Gadsden to make the report he has done.'

"Again: 'By Captain Gadsden you will receive some letters lately inclosed to me, detailing the information that the Spaniards at Fort St. Augustine are again exciting the Indians to war against us, and a copy of my order to General Gaines on this subject. It is what I expected, and proves the justice and sound policy of not only holding the posts we are now in possession of, but of possessing ourselves of St. Augustine. This, and this alone can give us peace and security on "our Southern frontier."

"It is thus clearly shown that in taking possession of St. Marks and Pensacola, and giving orders to take St. Augustine, I was acting within the letter as well as spirit of my orders, and in accordance with the secret understanding between the government and myself, and under a full persuasion that these fortresses would never again be permitted by our government to pass under the dominion of Spain. From the time of writing my confidential letter of the 6th of January to the date of this dispatch, the 10th of August, 1818, I never had an intimation that the wishes of the government had changed, or that less was expected of me, if the occasion should prove favorable, than the occupation of the whole of Florida. On the contrary, either by their direct approval of my measures, or their silence, the President and Mr. Calhoun gave me reason to suppose that I was to be sustained, and that the Floridas after being occupied were to be held for the benefit of the United States. Upon receiving my orders on the 11th of January, I took instant measures to bring into the field a sufficient force to accomplish all the objects suggested in my confidential letter of the 6th, of which I informed the War Department, and Mr. Calhoun in his reply dated 29th January, 1818, after the receipt of my confidential letter, and a full knowledge and approbation of my views says:-

"The measures you have taken to bring an efficient force into the field are approbated, and a confident hope is entertained that a speedy and successful termination of the Indian war will follow your exertions.'

"Having received further details of my preparations, not only to terminate the Seminole war, but, as the President and his Secretary well knew, to occupy Florida also, Mr. Calhoun on the 6th February, writes as follows:—

of your letter of the 20th ult., and to acquaint you with the entire approbation of the President of all the measures you have adopted to terminate the rupture with the Indians.

"On the 13th of May following, with a full knowledge that I intended if a favorable occasion presented itself to occupy Florida, and that the design had the approbation of the Presideut, Mr. Calboun wrote to Governor Bibb, of Alabama, the letter already alluded to, concluding as follows:—

"General Jackson is vested with full powers to conduct the war in the manner he may deem best.'

"On the 25th of March, 1818, I informed Mr. Calhoun that I intended to occupy St. Marks, and on the 8th of April I informed him that it was done.

"Not a whisper of disapprobation or of doubt reached me from the government.

"On the 5th May I wrote to Mr. Calhoun that I was about to move upon Pensacola with a view of occupying that place.

"Again, no reply was ever given disapproving or discountenancing this movement.

"On the 2d of June I informed Mr. Calhoun that I had on the 24th May entered Pensacola, and on the 28th had received the surrender of that Barraneas.

"Again no reply was given to this letter expressing any disapproval of these acts.

"In fine, from the re reply to my confidential 1818, through Mr. Rhea President's private let 1818, I received no insti from the government pu operations in Florida we the President and Secre and approved. I had 1 acted in every respect in their views, and that wit that they had authorized ready at all times and u to sustain me; and tha reasons and justifiable cau of Florida, they would private understanding wi demnity for the spoliation ish subjects on our citizen the peace of our Southern ing to rest my vindication on the hostile conduct of t sons, bearing all the respon expected my government. claims upon Spain, and the frontier would again be ex sons for not again delivering session of Spain. "It was late in August be information of the decision restore the posts, and about it stated in the Georgia Jou had been divided in relatio sued by me in Florida; and letter in a Nashville paper, ment had been made in the which was attributed to Mr extract it is expressly stat triumphantly vindicated by Mr. Adams. Being convinc had pursued was justified 1 public policy, by the laws state of things to which I ha the instructions, intimation of the government, and belie had been communicated to a the cabinet, I considered th by Mr. Crawford was founde foreign to the public interes mimical to me; and therefo lic and explicit intimations of m the cabinet, I was prepared that Mr. Crawford was bent and was the author of the me inet to which they referred. entertained this belief in r which I am rejoiced to avail r occasion to say I did him in was impossible that I should proposition to punish or cens from either the President or well knew that I had expres dent my opinion that Flor

taken, and had offered to ta

give me an intimation through rself, and under a esses would never vernment to pass From the time of of the 6th of Janpatch, the 10th of intimation that the d changed, or that he occasion should pation of the whole y, either by their es, or their silence. in gave me reason sustained, and that ied were to be held States. Upon reof January, I took to the field a suffie objects suggested the 6th, of which I t, and Mr. Calhoun ry, 1818, after the er, and a full knowviews savs :-taken to bring an > details of my preinate the Seminole 1 his Secretary well so, Mr. Calhoun on ollows:-

are approbated, and ned that a speedy

the Indian war will owledge the receipt ilt., and to acquaint ion of the President adopted to termidians.

lowing, with a full a favorable occasion owida, and that the f the Presideut, Mr. libb, of Alabama, the luding as follows:ed with full powers anner he may deem 818, I informed Mr. occupy St. Marks, formed him that it obation or of doubt nent.

te to Mr. Calhoun pon Pensacola with ce.

r given disapproving vement.

formed Mr. Calhoun entered Pensacola, the surrender of the n to this letter ex these acts.

"In fine, from the receipt of the President's reply to my confidential letter of 6th January, 1818, through Mr. Rhea, until the receipt of the President's private letter, dated 19th July, 1818. I received no instructions or intimations from the government public or private that my operations in Florida were other than such as the President and Secretary of War expected and approved. I had not a doubt that I had acted in every respect in strict accordance with their views, and that without publicly avowing that they had authorized my measures they were ready at all times and under all circumstances to sustain me; and that as there were sound reasons and justifiable cause for taking possession of Florida, they would in pursuance of their private understanding with me retain it as indemnity for the spoliations committed by Spanish subjects on our citizens, and as security for the peace of our Southern frontier. I was willing to rest my vindication for taking the posts on the hostile conduct of their officers and garrisons, bearing all the responsibility myself: but I expected my government would find in their claims upon Spain, and the danger to which our frontier would again be exposed, sufficient reasons for not again delivering them into the possession of Spain.

"It was late in August before I received official information of the decision of the government to restore the posts, and about the same time I saw it stated in the Georgia Journal that the cabinet had been divided in relation to the course pursued by me in Florida; and also an extract of a letter in a Nashville paper, alleging that a movement had been made in the cabinet against me which was attributed to Mr. Crawford, in which extract it is expressly stated that I had been triumphantly vindicated by Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Adams. Being convinced that the course I had pursued was justified by considerations of public policy, by the laws of nations, by the state of things to which I have referred, and by the instructions, intimations, and acquiescence of the government, and believing that the latter had been communicated to all the members of the cabinet, I considered that such a movement by Mr. Crawford was founded on considerations foreign to the public interests, and personally mimical to me; and therefore, after these public and explicit intimations of what had occurred m the cabinet, I was prepared to, and did believe that Mr. Crawford was bent on my destruction, and was the author of the movement in the cabinet to which they referred. I the more readily entertained this belief in relation to him (in which I am rejoiced to avail myself of this public was desirable to do so, which intimation was given; that they had given me orders broad enough to sanction all that was done; that Mr. Calhoun had expressly interpreted those orders as vesting me 'with full power to conduct the war as he (I) might think best; 'that they had expressly approved of all my preparations, and in silence witnessed all my operations. Under these circumstances it was impossible for me to believe, whatever change might have taken place in their views of public policy, that either the President or Mr. Calhoun could have originated or countenanced any proposition tending to cast censure upon me, much less to produce my arrest, trial, and punishment.

"If these facts and statements could have left room for a doubt in relation to Mr. Calhoun's approval of my conduct and of his friendship for me, I had other evidence of a nature perfectly conclusive. In August, 1818, Colonel A. P. Hayne, Inspector General of the Southern Division, who had served in this campaign, came to Washington to settle his accounts, and resign his staff appointment in the army. He was the fellow-citizen and friend of Mr. Calhoun, and held constant personal interviews with him for some weeks in settling his accounts. On the 24th September he addressed a letter to me, stating that he had closed his public accounts entirely to his satisfaction, and in relation to public affairs among other things remarks :-"The course the administration has thought proper to adopt is to me inexplicable. They retain St. Marks, and in the same breath give up Pensacola. Who can comprehend this? The American nation possesses discernment, and will judge for themselves. Indeed, sir, I fear that Mr. Monroe has on the present occasion yielded to the opinion of those about him. I cannot believe that it is the result of his own honest convictions. Mr. Calhoun certainly thinks with you altogether, although after the decision of the cabinet, he must of course nominally support what has been done.' And in another letter, dated 21st January, 1819, he says: 'Since I last saw you I have travelled through West and East Tennessee, through Kentucky, through Ohio, through the western and eastern part of Pennsylvania, and the whole of Virginia—have been much in Baltimore and Philadelphia, and the united voice of the people of those States and towns (and I have taken great pains to inform myself) approve of your conduct in every respect. And the people of the United States at large entertain precisely the same opinion with the people of those States. So does the administration. to wit: Mr. Monroe, Mr. Calhoun, and Mr. occasion to say I did him injustice) because it Adams. Mr. Monroe is your friend. He has was impossible that I should suspect that any identified you with himself. After the most maproposition to punish or censure me could come ture reflection and deliberation upon all of your from either the President or Mr. Calhoun, as I operations, he has covered your conduct. But I well knew that I had expressed to the Presi- am candid to confess that he did not adopt this dent my opinion that Florida ought to be line of conduct (in my mind) as soon as he ought taken and had offered to take it if he would to have done. Mr. Adams has done honor to give me an intimation through Mr. Rhea that it his country and himself.'

not intend to deceive; I had no doubt, and have the contrary that Mr. Crawford was opposed to none now, that he derived his impressions from conversations with Mr. Calhoun himself; nor have I any doubt that Mr. Calhoun purposely conveyed those impressions that they might be communicated to me. Without other evidence than this letter, how could I have understood Mr. Calhoun otherwise than as approving my whole conduct, and as having defended me in the cabinet? How could I have understood any seeming dissent in his official communications otherwise than as arising from his obligation to give a 'nominal support' to the decision of the cabinet which in reality he disapproved?

"The reply to my confidential letter, the approval of my preparations, the silence of Mr. Calhoun during the campaign, the enmity of Mr. Crawford, the language of the newspapers, the letters of Colonel Hayne, and other letters of similar import from other gentlemen who were on familiar terms with the Secretary of War, left no doubt on my mind that Mr. Calhoun approved of my conduct in the Seminole war altogether; ' had defended me against an attack of Mr. Crawford in the cabinet, and was, throughout the struggle in Congress so deeply involving my character and fame, my devoted and zealous friend. This impression was confirmed by the personal kindness of Mr. Calhoun towards me, during my visit to this city, pending the proceedings of Congress relative to the Seminole war, and on every after occasion. Nor was such conduct confined to me alone, for however inconsistent with his proposition in the cabinet, that I should 'be punished in some form,' or in the language of Mr. Adams, as to what passed there that General Jackson should be brought to trial,' in several conversations with Colonel Richard M. Johnson, while he was preparing the counter report of the Military Committee of the House of Representatives, Mr. Calhoun always spoke of me with respect and kindness, and approved of my course.

"So strong was my faith in Mr. Calhoun's friendship that the appointment of Mr. Lacock. shortly after he had made his report upon the Seminole war in the Senate, to an important office, although inexplicable to me, did not shake it.

"I was informed by Mr. Rankin (member of the House of Representatives from Mississippi), and others in 1823 and 1824, once in the presence of Colonel Thomas H. Williams (of Mississippi) of the Senate, that I had blamed Mr. Crawford unjustly and that Mr. Calhoun was the instigator of the attacks made upon me: yet in consequence of the facts and circumstances already recapituated tending to prove Mr. Calhoun's approval of my course, I could not give the assertion the least

"Again in 1825 Mr. Cobb told me that I blamed Mr. Crawford wrongfully, both for the attempt to injure me in the cabinet, and for having an agency in framing the resolutions which houn does not inform me that I was in error

"Colonel Hayne is a man of honor, and did my conduct in the Seminole war. He stated on those resolutions and always asserted that General Jackson had a sufficient defence whenever he chose to make it, and that the attempt to censure him would do Nim good, and recoil upon its authors;' yet it was impossible for me to believe that Mr. Calhoun had been my enemy; on the contrary I did not doubt that he had been my devoted friend, not only through all those difficulties, but in the contest for the Presidency which ended in the election of Mr.

'In the Spring of 1828 the impression of Mr. Calhoun's rectitude and fidelity towards me was confirmed by an incident which occurred during the progress of an effort to reconcile all misunderstanding between him and Mr. Crawford and myself. Colonel James A. Hamilton of New-York inquired of Mr. Calhoun himself. at Washington, 'whether at any meeting of Mr. Monroe's cabinet the propriety of arresting General Jackson for any thing done during the Semindle war had been at any time discussed?' Mr. Calhoun replied, 'Never: such a measure was not thought of, much less discussed. The only point before the cabinet was the answer to be given to the Spanish government.' In consequence of this conversation Colonel Hamilton wrote to Major Lewis, a member of the Nashville committee, that 'the Vice-President, who you know was the member of the cabinet best acquainted with the subject, told me General Jack. son's arrest was never thought of, much less discussed.' Information of this statement renewed and strengthened the impression relative to the friendship of Mr. Calhoun, which I had entertained from the time of the Seminole war.

"In a private letter to Mr. Calhoun dated 25th May, 1828, written after the conversation with Colonel Hamilton had been communicated to me, I say in relation to the Seminole war:

"'I can have no wish at this day to obtain an explanation of the orders under which I acted whilst charged with the campaign against the Semipole Indians in Florida. I viewed them when received as plain and explicit, and called for by the situation of the country. I executed them faithfully, and was happy in reply to my reports to the Department of War to receive your approbation for it.'

"Again: 'The fact is, I never had the least ground to believe (previous to the reception of Mr. Monroe's letter of 19th July, 1818) that any difference of opinion between the government and myself existed on the subject of my powers. So far from this, to the communications which I made showing the construction which I placed upon them, there was not only no difference of opinion indicated in the replies of the Executive but as far as I received replies, an entire approva. of the measures which I had adopted.

"This was addressed directly from me to Mr. Calhoun, in May, 1828. In his reply Mr. Calhe (Mr. Cobb) offered in Congress censuring He does not tell me that he disapproved my con duct, and thought I our for a violation of order me that he or any o cabinet council a court court. He says nothin impression already mad ing which might not hav who had been obliged port ' to a decision which reply, dated 10th July,

Any discussion of I agree with you, would are matters of history, a historian as they stand. pose that the justification ernment depended on a them. It is sufficient for honestly issued, and hon involving the question w ted strictly in accordance they were issued. Hones are all that can be requir that they existed on both It was certainly impos that Mr. Calhoun had ury court of inquiry with a punishment for violation ( mitted were 'honestly e. he never doubted that honest and patriotic. could not have doubted, Mr. Calhoun had zealous est and patriotic' acts in against the supposed atta as had long before been ot have doubted that M with me altogether,' as I ] Colonel Hayne. I could that Mr. Calhoun had eve my compliance with my the never did suppose, th lepended on a critical con and that it was sufficie honestly executed.'

"By the unlimited aut me by my orders; by the v of my confidential letter an advised by Mr. Calhoun; proval of all my preparator silence of the government di by uncontradicted publicati pers; by positive assurances riends of Mr. Calhoun; by aration to Colonel Hamilt is own assurance that he honesty or patriotism with my orders, which he 'deem out inquiring 'whether th strictly in accordance with they were issued,' I was au and did believe that Mr. Ca devoted friend, defending on and private, my whole condi war. With these impression discharge of the duties of Presi

ar. He stated on a was opposed to ys asserted that sufficient defence, and that the addo him good, and it was impossible houn had been my id not doubt that I, not only through he contest for the he election of Mr.

e impression of Mr. elity towards me nt which occurred ort to reconcile all im and Mr. Crawames A. Hamilton . Calhoun himself. any meeting of Mr. y of arresting Genone during the Seme discussed?' Mr. ch a measure was scussed. The only the answer to be nment.' In conse-Colonel Hamilton ber of the Nashville President, who you he cabinet best acd me General Jackught of, much less this statement reimpression relative houn, which I had the Seminole war. Mr. Calhoun dated er the conversation been communicated

e Seminole war: day to obtain an exwhich I acted whilst against the Seminole I them when received of for by the situation them faithfully, and ports to the Departapprobation for it.' never had the least to the reception of th July, 1818) that ween the government abject of my powers. munications which I ction which I placed only no difference of ies of the Executive es, an entire approva. d adopted.

ectly from me to Mr.
n his reply Mr. Calthat I was in error disapproved my con duct, and thought I ought to have been punished for a violation of orders. He does not inform me that he or any other had proposed in the cabinet council a court of inquiry, or any other court. He says nothing inconsistent with the impression already made upon my mind—nothing which might not have been expected from one who had been obliged to give a 'nominal support' to a 'decision which he disapproved. His reply, dated 10th July, 1828, is in these words:

"Any discussion of them' (the orders) 'now, agree with you, would be unnecessary. They are matters of history, and must be left to the historian as they stand. In fact I never did suppose that the justification of yourself or the government depended on a critical construction of them. It is sufficient for both that they were honestly issued, and honestly executed, without involving the question whether they were executed strictly in accordance with the intention that they were issued. Honest and patriotic motives are all that can be required, and I never doubted that they existed on both sides.'

It was certainly impossible for me to conceive that Mr. Calhoun had urged in cabinet council a court of inquiry with a view to my ultimate punishment for violation of orders which he admitted were 'honestly executed,' especially as he never doubted that my 'motives' were honest and patriotic.' After this letter I could not have doubted, if I had before, that Mr. Calhoun had zealously vindicated my honest and patriotic' acts in Mr. Monroe's cabinet wainst the supposed attacks of Mr. Crawford, as had long before been announced. I could not have doubted that Mr. Calhoun 'thought with me altogether,' as I had been informed by Colonel Hayne. I could not have conceived that Mr. Calhoun had ever called in question my compliance with my orders, when he says 'never did suppose' that my 'justification lepended on a critical construction of them, and that it was sufficient that they were nonestly executed.'

By the unlimited authority conferred on me by my orders; by the writing and reception my confidential letter and the answer thereto advised by Mr. Calhoun; by the positive approval of all my preparatory measures and the silence of the government during my operations; by uncontradicted publications in the newspaers; by positive assurances received through the friends of Mr. Calhoun; by Mr. Calhoun's decaration to Colonel Hamilton; and finally by is own assurance that he never doubted the honesty or patriotism with which I executed my orders, which he 'deemed sufficient' withat inquiring 'whether they were executed strictly in accordance with the intention that they were issued,' I was authorized to believe and did believe that Mr. Calhoun had been my devoted friend, defending on all occasions, public and private, my whole conduct in the Seminole war. With these impressions I entered upon the "Recent disclosures prove that these impressions were entirely erroneous, and that Mr. Calhoun himself was the author of the proposition made in the cabinet to subject me to a court of inquiry, with a view to my ultimate punishment for a violation of orders.

"My feelings towards Mr. Calhoun continued of the most friendly character until my suspicions of his fairness were awakened by the following incident. The late Marshal of the District of Columbia (Mr. Tench Ringold), conversing with a friend of mine in relation to the Seminole war, spoke in strong terms of Mr. Monroe's support of me; and upon being informed that I had always regarded Mr. Calhoun as my firm and undeviating friend and supporter, and particularly on that occasion, Mr. Ringold replied that Mr. Calhoun was the first man to move in the cabinet for my punishment, and that he was against me on that subject. Informed of this conversation, and recurring to the repeated declarations that had been made to me by different persons and at different times, that Mr. Calhoun, and not Mr. Crawford, was the person who had made that movement against me in the cabinet, and observing the mysterious opposition that had shown itself, particularly among those who were known to be the friends and partisans of Mr. Calhoun, and that the measures which I had recommended to the consideration of Congress, and which appeared to have received the approbation of the people, were neglected or opposed in that quarter whence I had a right to believe they would have been brought forward and sustained, I felt a desire to see the written statement which I had been informed Mr. Crawford had made, in relation to the proceedings of the cabinet, that I might ascertain its true character. I sought and obtained it, in the manner heretofore stated, and immediately sent it to Mr. Calhoun, and asked him frankly whether it was possible that, the information given in it was correct? His answer, which he has given to the world, indeed, as I have before stated, surprised, nay, astonished me. I had always refused to believe, notwithstanding the various assurances I had received, that Mr. Calhoun could be so far regardless of that duty which the plainest principles of justice and honor imposed upon him, as to propose the punishment of a subordinate officer for the violation of orders which were so evidently discretionary as to permit me as he (Mr. Calhoun) informed Governor Bibb, to conduct the war as he may think best.' But the fact that he so acted has been affirmed by all who were present on the occasion, and admitted by himself.*

*Mr. Calhoun in his conversation with Colonel Hamilton, that they were issued,' I was authorized to believe and did believe that Mr. Calhoun had been my devoted friend, defending on all occasions, public and private, my whole conduct in the Seminole war. With these impressions I entered upon the discharge of the duties of President, in March, 1829.

"That Mr. Calhoun, with his knowledge of facts and circumstances, should have dared to make such a proposition, can only be accounted for from the sacredly confidential character which he attaches to the proceedings of a cabinet council. His views of this subject are strongly expressed in his printed correspondence, page 15. 'I am not at all surprised,' says he, 'that Mr. Crawford should feel that he stands in need of an apology for betraying the deliberations of the cabinet. It is, I believe, not only the first instance in our country, but one of a very few instances in any country, or any age, that an individual has felt himself absolved from the high obligations which honor and duty impose on one situated as he was.' It was under this veil. which he supposed to be for ever impenetrable, that Mr. Calhoun came forward and denounced those measures which he knew were not only impliedly, but positively authorized by the President himself. He proposed to take preparatory steps for the punishment of General Jackson, whose 'honest and patriotic motives he never doubted,' for the violation of orders which he admits were 'honestly executed.' That he ex-

to be given to the Spanish government." By the last branch of the answer the denial is made to embrace the whole subject in any form it might have assumed, and therefore deprives Mr. Calhoun of all grounds of cavil or escape by alleging that he only proposed a military inquiry, and not an arrest, and that he did not therefore answer the inquiry in the negative. But again when Colonel Hamilton submitted to Mr. Calhoun his recollection of the conversation that Mr. Calhoun might correct it if erroneous, and informed him that he did so because he intended to communicate in to Major Lewis, Mr. Calhoun did not question the correctness of Colonel Hamilton's recollection of the conversation; he does not qualify or alter it; he does not say, as in frankness he was bound to do-" It is true, the proposition to arrest General Jackson was not discussed, but an inquiry into his conduct in that war was discussed on a proposition to that end made by me." He does not say that the answer to the Spanish government was not the only point before the cabinet, but he endeavors, without denying as was alleged by Colonel Hamilton that this part of the conversation was understood between them to be confidential, to prevent him from making it public, and to that end and that alone he writes a letter of ten pages on the sacredness of cabinet deliberations. Why, let us ask, did Mr. Calhoun upon reflection feel so much solicitude to prevent a disclosure of his answer to Colonel Hamilton, which if true could not injure him? At first, although put upon his guard he admits that this part of the conversation was not confidential. although it referred to what was, as well as what was not done in cabinet council. The reason is to be found in his former involutions, and in the fact that the answer was not true, and in his apprehension that if that answer was made public, Mr. Crawford, who entertained the worst opinions of Mr. Calhoun, and who had suffered in General Jackson's opinion on this subject, would immediately disclose the whole truth, as he has since done; and that thus the veil worn out, of the sacredness of cabinet deliberations under which Mr. Calhoun upon second thought had endeavored to conceal himself, would be raised, and he would be exposed to public indignation and scorn. This could alone be the motive for his extreme anxiety to prevent Colonel Hamilton from communicating the result of an inquiry made by him from the best and purest motives, to the persons who had prompted that inquiry from like motives.

pected to succeed with his proposition so long as there was a particle of honor, honesty, or prodence left to President Monroe, is not to be imagined. The movement was intended for some future contingency, which perhaps Mr. Calhoun himself only can certainly explain.

"The shape in which this proposition was made is variously stated. Mr. Calhoun, in the printed correspondence, page 15, says: 'I was of the impression that you had exceeded your orders and acted on your own responsibility, but I neither questioned your patriotism nor your mo tives. Believing that where orders were transcended, investigation as a matter of course ought to follow, as due in justice to the government and the officer, unless there be strong reasons to the contrary, I came to the [cabinet] meeting under the impression that the usual course ought to be pursued in this case, which I supported by presenting fully and freely all the arguments that occurred to me.'

Mr. Crawford, in his letter to Mr. Forsyth. published in the same correspondence, page 9 says: 'Mr. Calhoun's proposition in the cabinet was, that General Jackson should be punished in some form, or reprehended in some form. I am not positively certain which.'

Mr. Adams, in a letter to Mr. Crawford dated 30th July, 1830, says: 'The main point upon which it was urged that General Jackson should be brought to trial, was, that he had violated his orders by taking St. Marks and Pensacola.

"Mr. Crowninshield, in a letter to Mr. Crawford, dated 25th July, 1830, says: 'I remember too, that Mr. Calhoun was severe upon the conduct of General Jackson, but the words par ticularly spoken have slipped my memory.

"From the united testimony it appears that Mr. Calhoun made a proposition for a court of inquiry upon the conduct of General Jackson. upon the charge of having violated his orders in taking St. Marks and Pensacola, with a view to his ultimate trial and punishment, and that he was severe in his remarks upon that conduct But the President would listen to no such proposition. Mr. Crawford, in his letter to Mr. Calhoun, dated 2d October, 1830, says: You remembered the excitement which your proposition produced in the mind and on the feelings of the President, and did not dare to ask him any question tending to revive his recollection of that proposition. This excitement was very natural. Hearing the very member of his cabi net whom he had consulted upon the subject of General Jackson's confidential letter, and who had advised the answer which had approved be forehand the capture of St. Marks and Pensacola and who on the 8th September, 1818, wrote to General Jackson, that 'St. Marks will be retained till Spain shall be ready to garrison if with a sufficient force, and Fort Gadsden, and any other position in East or West Florida within the Indian country, which may be deemed eligible, will be retained so long as there is an danger, which, it is hope security,' make a pror stamp his character with ishment of General Jack it was impossible that be excited. He must he man, or less, to have belt ing violent philippics as for those acts, without th

"Mr. Calhoun's prope he knew it would be, an the veil of cabinet secrec sions of regard and friend son! It was then that 1 sations he induced Colone inform General Jackson, ing that he had violated be punished, he disapprov supported the more friend net and thought with h was no half-way feeling complete and entire was tl General Jackson was pas the next winter on his v toasted 'John C. Calhe man, the noblest work paint the workings of the when he read that toast !!

"But Mr. Calhoun was attack made by him upo character and fame in the Monroe's cabinet. At the gress the same subject w both houses. Mr. Cobb ca resolutions of censure in th tatives, where, after a long ants were signally defeated. a committee in the Senate the affair from the 18th D 24th February, 1819, when full of bitterness against ( charged him with a violat constitution of his count orders; disregard of the pr and almost every crime w can commit.

"It was not suspected a report owed any of its bitter vet that such was the fact i the strongest proof! "While the attacks upo were in progress in Congress city was thought to be neces Colonel Robert Butler, th wrote to him to that effect. wards Mr. Calhoun accosted in an abrupt manner why General Jackson to come to Butler answered, 'that he i tice was done him in pers turned from him without spe with an air of anger and ve an indelible impression on It was obvious enough that out rather feared General Ja position so long as c, honesty, or prue, is not to be imaintended for some rhaps Mr. Calhoun oposition was made oun, in the printed s: 'I was of the seded your orders, sponsibility, but I ptism nor your mo orders were transter of course ought to the government be strong reasons he [cabinet] meetat the usual course case, which I supand freely all the oe.'

Vol. I.—12

ter to Mr. Forsyth, espondence, page 9, sition in the cabinet should be punished in some form, I am to Mr. Crawford, s: 'The main point at General Jackson l, was, that he had ing St. Marks and letter to Mr. Craw-0, says: 'I rememwas severe upon the but the words par d my memory. iony it appears that sition for a court of of General Jackson, riolated his orders in acola, with a view to shment, and that he s upon that conduct. isten to no such proin his letter to Mr. r, 1830, says: 'You t which your propoand on the feelings not dare to ask him revive his recollection excitement was very member of his cabi 1 upon the subject of ntial letter, and who rich had approved be Marks and Pensacola ember, 1818, wrote to t. Mark's will be re ready to garrison it d Fort Gadsden, and or West Florida with hich may be deemed

o long as there is any

danger, which, it is hoped, will afford the desired security,' make a proposition which went to stamp his character with treachery, by the punishment of General Jackson for those very acts, it was impossible that Mr. Monroe should not be excited. He must have been more than human, or less, to have beheld Mr. Caihoun uttering violent philippics against General Jackson for those acts, without the strongest emotion.

"Mr. Calhoun's proposition was rejected, as he knew it would be, and he came from behind the veil of cabinet secrecy all smiles and professions of regard and friendship for General Jackson! It was then that by his deceitful conversations he induced Colonel Hayne and others . to inform General Jackson, that so far from thinking that he had violated his orders and ought to be punished, he disapproved and only nominally supported the more friendly decision of the cabinet and thought with him altogether! There was no half-way feeling in his friendship! So complete and entire was the deception, that while General Jackson was passing through Virginia the next winter on his way to Washington, he toasted 'John C. Calhoun,' as 'an honest man, the noblest work of God.' Who can paint the workings of the guilty Calhoun's soul when he read that toast !!

"But Mr. Calhoun was not content with the attack made by him upon General Jackson's character and fame in the dark recesses of Mr. Monroe's cabinet. At the next session of Congress the same subject was taken in hand in both houses. Mr. Cobb came forward with his resolutions of censure in the House of Representatives where after a long discussion, the assailants were signally defeated. Mr. Lacock headed a committee in the Senate which was engaged in the affair from the 18th December, 1818, to the 24th February, 1819, when they made a report full of bitterness against General Jackson. It charged him with a violation of the laws and constitution of his country; disobedience of orders; disregard of the principles of humanity. and almost every crime which a military man can commit.

"It was not suspected at the time that this report owed any of its bitterness to Mr. Calhoun, yet that such was the fact is now susceptible of the strongest proof!

"While the attacks upon General Jackson were in progress in Congress his presence in the city was thought to be necessary by his friends. Colonel Robert Butler, then in Washington, wrote to him to that effect. A few days afterwards Mr. Calhoun accosted him, and asked him in an abrupt manner why he had written to General Jackson to come to the city. Colonel Butler answered, 'that he might see that justice was done him in person.' Mr. Calhoun turned from him without speaking another word with an air of anger and vexation which made an indelible impression on the colone?'s mind. It was obvious enough that he did not desire, out rather feared General Jackson's presents.

Vol. I.—12

the city. Colonel Butler's letter to General Jackson, dated the 9th June, 1831, is in these words:

"'When in Washington in the winter of 1818 -'19, finding the course which Congress appeared to be taking on the Seminole question, I wrote you that I esteemed it necessary that you should be present at Washington. Having done so, I communicated this fact to our friend Bronaugh, who held the then Secretary of War in high estimation. The succeeding evening, while at the French Minister's, he came to me and inquired in a tone somewhat abrupt, what could induce me to write for General Jackson to come to the city-(Bronaugh having informed him that I had done so)-to which I replied, perhaps as sternly, that he may in person have justice done him. The Secretary turned on his heel, and so ended the conversation; but there was a something inexplicable in the countenance that subsequent events have given meaning to. After your arrival at Washington, we were on a visit at the Secretary's, and examining a map—(the Yellow Stone expedition of the Secretary's being the subject of conversation)-Mr. Lacock, of the Senate, was announced to the Secretary, who remarked-"Do not let him come in now, General Jackson is here, but will soon be gone, when I can see him." There was nothing strange in all this; but the whispered manner and apparent agitation fastened on my mind the idea that Mr. Calhoun and Lacock understood each other on the Seminole matter. Such were my impressions at the time.

"On my arrival, however, in January, 1819, Mr. Calhoun treated me with marked kindness. The latter part of Colonel Butler's letter, as to Mr. Lacock, is confirmed by my own recollection that one day when Mr. Calhoun and myself were together in the War Department, the messenger announced Mr. Lacock at the door: Mr. Calhoun, in a hurried manner, pronounced the name of General Jackson, and Mr. Lacock did not come in. This circumstance indicated an intimacy between them, but I inferred nothing from it unfavorable to Mr. Calhoun.

"In speaking of my confidential letter to Mr. Monroe (printed correspondence, page 19). Mr. Calhoun states, that after reading it when received, 'I thought no more of it. Long after, I think it was at the commencement of the next session of Congress, I heard some allusion which brought that letter to my recollection. It was from a quarter which induced me to believe that it came from Mr. Crawford. I called and mentioned it to Mr. Monroe, and found that he had entirely forgotten the letter. After searching some time he found it among some other papers, and read it, as he told me, for the first time."

turned from him without speaking another word with an air of anger and vexation which made an indelible impression on the coloner's mind. It was obvious enough that he did not desire, out rather feared General Jackson's presence in

Probably he applied to Mr. Calhoun for information, and Mr. Calhoun went to the President, and requested a sight of that letter that he might communicate its contents to Mr. Lacock. Mr. Lacock was appointed upon the committee on the Seminole war, on the 18th December. On the 21st of that month the recollection of the confidential letter was first in the mind of Mr. Monroe, for on that day, in a letter to General Jackson, he gives an account of its reception, and the disposition made of it. Probably, therefore, it was about the time that Mr. Lacock undertook the investigation of this affair in the Senate, and that it was for his information that Mr. Calhoun called on Mr. Monroe to inquire about this letter.

"Nay, it is certain that the existence and contents of this letter were about that time communicated to Mr. Lacock: that he conversed freely and repeatedly with Mr. Calhoun upon the whole subject: that he was informed of all that had passed: the views of the President, of Mr. Calhoun, and the cabinet, and that Mr. Calhoun coincided with Mr. Lacock in all his views.

"These facts are stated upon the authority of Mr. Lacock himself. "The motives of these secret communications to Mr. Lacock by Mr. Calhoun cannot be mistaken. By communicating the contents of the confidential letter, and withholding the fact that an approving answer had been returned, he wished to impress Mr. Lacock with the belief that General Jackson had predetermined before he entered Florida, to seize the Spanish posts, right or wrong, with orders or without. Acting under this impression, he would be prepared to discredit and disbelieve all General Jackson's explanations and defences, and put the worst construction upon every circumstance disclosed in the investigation. By this perfidy General Jackson was deprived of all opportunity to make an effectual defence. To him Mr. Calhoun was all smiles and kindness. He believed him bis friend, seeking by all proper means, in public and private, to shield him from the attacks of his enemies. Having implicit confidence in Mr. Calhoun and the President, he would sooner have endured the tortures of the inquisition than have disclosed their answer to his letter through Mr. Rhea. The tie which he felt, Mr. Calhoun felt not. He did not scruple to use one side of a correspondence to destroy a man, his friend, who confided in him with the faith and affection of a brother-when he knew that man felt bound by obligations from which no considerations short of a knowledge of his own perfidy could absolve him, to hold the other side in eternal silence. General Jackson had no objection to a disclosure of the whole correspondence. There was nothing in it of which he was ashamed, or which on his own account be wished to conceal. Public policy know at that time how far the government had tween them (and by his obligations as a brother approved beforehand of his proceedings. But had he known that Mr. Calhoun was attempt ing to destroy him by secretly using one side of the correspondence, he would have been justified by the laws of self-defence in making known the other. He saw not, lifeard not, imagined not, that means so perfidious and dishonorable were in use to destroy him. It never entered his confiding heart that the hand he shook with the cordiality of a warm friend was secretly pointing out to his enemies the path by which they might ambuscade and destroy him. He was incapable of conceiving that the honeyed tongue, which to him spake nothing but kindness, was secretly conveying poison into the ears of Mr. Lacock, and other members of Congress. It could not enter his mind that his confidential letters, the secrets of the cabinet and the opinions of its members, were all secretly arrayed against him by the friend in whom he implicitly confided, misinterpreted and distorted, without giving him an opportunity for self-defence or explanation.

"Mr. Calhoun's object was accomplished. Mr. Lacock made a report far transcending in bitterness any thing which even in the opinion of General Jackson's enemies the evidence seemed to justify. This extraordinary and unaccountable severity is now explained. It proceeded from the secret and perfidious representations of Mr. Calhoun, based on General Jackson's confidential letter. Mr. Lacock ought to be partially excused, and stand before the world comparatively justified. For most of the injustice done by his report to the soldier who had risked all for his country, Mr. Calhoun is the responsible man. As dark as this transaction is, a shade is yet to be added. It was not enough that General Jackson had been deceived and betrayed by a professing friend; that the contents of his confidential correspondence had been secretly communicated to his open enemies, while all information of the reply was withheld: it was not enough that an official report overflowing with bitterness had gone out to the world to blast his fame, which must stand for ever recorded in the history of his country. Lest some accident might expose the evidences of the understanding under which he acted, and the duplicity of his secret accuser, means must be taken to procure the destruction of the answer to the confidential letter through Mr. Rhea. They were these. About the time Mr. Lacock made his report General Jackson and Mr. Rhea were both in the city of Washington. Mr. Rhea called on General Jackson, as he said at the request of Mr. Monroe, and begged him on his return home to burn his reply. He said the President feared that by the death of General Jackson, or some other accident, it might fall into the hands of those who would make an improper use of it. He therefore conjured him by the friendship which had always existed be mason) to destroy it o Believing Mr. Monroe his devoted friends, ar that any incident coul quire or justify its us promise he solicited, an turn to Nashville he bu on his letter-book oppo dential letter to Mr. Me "Mr. Rhea's letter

12th April, 1819. "Mr. Calhoun's ma completely triumphant sailed General Jackson caused it to be publicly his friend. While the toasting him as 'an I work of God,' he was tial correspondence to the basis of a document blast his fame and ruin timation of his country should bring the truth t eduplicity, he procures and Mr. Rhea the destru answer to the confider was an old man and Go feeble. In a few years a to have any knowledge o their graves. Every tra beforehand by the gove tions of General Jackson ated and the undivided forever rest on his head. dent or policy bring to Mr. Calhoun, he might c this reply, and challenge might defend his course i tenuate his disclosures to taining before the public believed General Jackson and ought to have been pur the written reply if once o be recalled from the flam eral Jackson still be living not be considered more Calhoun's denial. In any to him that this letter sho through his management, it was destroyed. "Happily however for t and the cause of public just reply is still alive; and fr the time, is able to give an this transaction. He test writing of the letter, to i means taken to secure its Overton, to whom the lette shown, testifies directly to letter, and to the fact that terwards told him it was de

"These, with the stateme son himself, and the entry which was seen by several wo, fix these facts beyond

5 proceedings. But lhoun was attempt. etly using one side ould have been jus--defence in making not, leard not, imarfidious and dishontroy him. It never t that the hand he f a warm friend was enemies the path by de and destroy him. ing that the honeyed e nothing but kindng poison into the ner members of Con-· his mind that his crets of the cabinet. embers, were all sen by the friend in ided, misinterpreted ing him an opportu-lanation.

as accomplished. Mr.

transcending in bit en in the opinion of the evidence seemed inary and unaccountained. It proceeded dious representations eneral Jackson's conbock ought to be parefore the world commost of the injustice he soldier who had

, Mr. Calhoun is the saction is, a shade is not enough that Geneceived and betrayed at the contents of his ce had been secretly enemies, while all invas withheld: it was it is report overflowing must stand for ever of his country. Lest ose the evidences of which he acted, and accuser, means must lestruction of the analysis of the country. The support of the actual of the support of the su

About the time Mr.
About the time Mr.
General Jackson and ecity of Washington ral Jackson, as he said nroe, and begged him irn his reply. He said; by the death of Genher accident, it might see who would make an eherefore conjured him had always existed be obligations as a broker mason) to destroy it on his return to Nashville. Believing Mr. Monroe and Mr. Calhoun to be his devoted friends, and not deeming it possible that any incident could occur which would require or justify its use, he gave Mr. Rhea the promise he solicited, and accordingly after his return to Nashville he burnt Mr. Rhea's letter, and on his letter-book opposite the copy of his confidential letter to Mr. Monroe made this entry:—"Mr. Rhea's letter in answer is hurnt this 12th April, 1819. "Mr. Calhoun's management was thus far completely triumphant. He had secretly assailed General Jackson in cabinet council, and caused it to be publicly announced that he was his friend. While the confiding soldier was toasting him as 'an honest man, the noblest work of God,' he was betraying his confidential correspondence to his enemy, and laying the basis of a document which was intended to blast his fame and ruin his character in the estimation of his countrymen. Lest accident should bring the truth to light, and expose his aduplicity, he procures through the President and Mr. Rhea the destruction of the approving answer to the confidential lettera Mr. Rhea was an old man and General Jackson's health feeble. In a few years all who were supposed to have any knowledge of the reply would be in their graves. Every trace of the approval given beforehand by the government to the operations of General Jackson would soon be obliterated and the undivided responsibility would forever rest on his head. At least, should accident or policy bring to light the duplicity of Mr. Calhoun, he might deny all knowledge of this reply, and challenge its production. He might defend his course in the cabinet and extenuate his disclosures to Mr. Lacock, by maintaining before the public that he had always believed General Jackson violated his orders and ought to have been punished. At the worst, the written reply if once destroyed could never be recalled from the flames; and should General Jackson still be living, his assertion might not be considered more conclusive than Mr. Calhoun's denial. In any view it was desirable to him that this letter should be destroyed, and through his management, as is verily believed, it was destroyed.

"Happily however for the truth of history and the cause of public justice, the writer of the reply is still alive; and from a journal kept at the time, is able to give an accurate account of this transaction. He testifies directly to the writing of the letter, to its contents, and the means taken to secure its destruction. Judge Overton, to whom the letter was confidentially shown, testifies directly to the existence of the letter, and to the fact that General Jackson afterwards told him its contents.

terwards told him it was destroyed.

These, with the statement of General Jackson himself, and the entry in his letter-book which was seen by several persons many years we, fix these facts beyond a doubt.

"Certainly the history of the world scarcely presents a parallel to this transaction. It has been seen with what severity Mr. Calhoun denounced Mr. Crawford for revealing the secret proceedings of the cabinet: with what justice may a retort of tenfold severity be made upon him, when he not only reveals to Mr. Lacock the proceedings of the cabinet, but the confidential letter of a confiding friend, not for the benefit of that friend, but through misrepresentation of the transaction and concealment of the reply, to aid his enemies in accomplishing his destruction. It was doubtless expected that Mr. Lacock would produce a document which would overwhelm General Jackson and destroy him in public estimation. In that event the proceedings of the cabinet would no longer have been held sacred. The erroneous impression made on the public mind would have been corrected, and the world have been informed that Mr. Calhoun not only disappreved the acts of General Jackson, but had in the cabinet attempted in vain to procure his punishment. As the matter stood, the responsibility of attacking the General rested on Mr. Crawford, and had the decision of the people been different, the responsibility of defending him would have been thrown exclusively upon Mr. Adams, and Mr. Calhoun would have claimed the merit of the attack. But until the public should "decide, it was not prudent to lose the friendship of General Jackson, which might be of more service to Mr. Calhoun than the truth. It was thus at the sacrifice of every principle of honor and friendship that Mr. Calhoun managed to throw all responsibility on his political rivals, and profit by the result of these movements whatever it might be. It cannot be doubted, however, that Mr. Calhoun expected the entire prostration of General Jackson, and managed to procure the destruction of Mr. Rhea's letter, for the purpose of disarming the friend he had betrayed, that he might, with impunity when the public should have pronounced a sentence of condemnation, have come forward and claimed, the merit of having been the first to denounce him.

"The people however sustained General Jackson against the attacks of all his enemies, public and private, open and secret, and therefore it became convenient for Mr. Calhoun to retain his mask, to appear as the friend of one whom the people had pronounced their friend, and to let Mr. Crawford bear the unjust imputation of having assailed him in the cabinet.

"It must be confessed that the mask was worn with consummate skill. Mr. Calhoun was understood by all of General Jackson's friends to be his warm and able defender. When, in 1824, Mr. Calhoun was withdrawn from the lists as a candidate for the Presidency, the impression made on the friends of General Jackson was that he did it to favor the election of their favorite, when it is believed to be susceptible of proof that he secretly flattered the friends of Mr. Adams with the idea that he was with them. It is certain that for the Vice-Presidency he continued to secure nearly all the Adams votes, most of the Jackson votes, and even half of the Clay votes in Kentucky. But never did the friends of General Jackson doubt his devotion to their cause in that contest, until the publication of his correspondence with General Jackson. In a note, page 7, he undeceives them by saying:

"'When my name was withdrawn from the list of presidential candidates, I assumed a perfectly neutral position between General Jackson and Mr. Adams. I was decidedly opposed to a congressional caucus, as both those gentlemen were also, and as I bore very friendly personal and political relations to both, I would have been well satisfied with the election of either.

"I have now given a faithful detail of the circumstances and facts which transpired touching my movements in Florida, during the Seminole campaign.

"When Mr. Calhoun was secretly misinterpreting my views and conduct through Mr. Speer to the citizens of South Carolina, I had extended to him my fullest confidence, inasmuch as I consulted him as if he were one of my cabinet, showed him the written rules by which my administration was to be governed, which he apparently approved, received from him the strongest professions of friendship, so much so that I would have scorned even a suggestion that he was capable of such even a Supposed unworthy conduct.
"ANDREW JACKSON."

Such is the paper which General Jackson left behind him for publication, and which is so essential to the understanding of the events of the time. From the rupture between General Jackson and Mr. Calhoun (beginning to open in 1830, and breaking out in 1831), dates calamitous events to this country, upon which history cannot shut her eyes, and which would be a barren relation without the revelation of their cause. Justice to Mr. Monroe (who seemed to hesitate in the cabinet about the proposition to censure or punish Gen. Jackson), requires it to be distinctly brought out that he had either never read, or had entirely forgotten General Jackson's confidential letter, to be answered through the venerable representative from Tennessee (Mr. John Rhea), and the production of which in the cabinet had such a decided influence on Mr. Calhoun's proposition-and against it. This is well told in the letter of Mr. Crawford to Mr. Forsyth-is enforced in the "Exposition," and referred to in the "correspondence," but deserves to be reproduced in Mr. Crawford's own words. He says: "Indeed, my own viewa on the subject had undergone a material change after the cabinet had been convened. Mr. Calhonn made some allusion to a letter the General had written to the President, who had forgotten that he had received such a letter, but said if he had received such an one, he could find it: and went directly to his cabinet and brought the letter out. In it General Jackson approved of the determination of the government to break up Amelia Island and Galveston; and gave it also as his opinion that the Floridas should be taken by the United States. He added it might be a delicate matter for the Executive to decide; but if the President approved of it, he had only to give a hint to some confidential member of Congress, say Mr. Johnny Ray (Rhea), and he would do it, and take the responsibility of it on himself. I asked the President if the letter had been answered. He replied, No; for that he had no recollection of having received it. I then said that I had no doubt that General Jack. son, in taking Pensacola, believed he was doing what the Executive wished. After that letter was produced unanswered I should have opposed the infliction of punishment upon the General, who had considered the silence of the President as a tacit consent. Yet it was after this letter was produced and read that Mr. Calhoun made his proposition to the cabinet for punishing the General. You may show this letter to Mr. Calhoun, if you please." It was shown to him by General Jackson, as shown in the "correspondence," and in the "Exposition;" and is only reproduced here for the sake of doing justice to Mr. Monroe.

CHAPTER LIV.

BREAKING UP OF THE CABINET, AND APPOINT MENT OF ANOTHER.

THE publication of Mr. Calhoun's pamphlet was quickly followed by an event which seemed to be its natural consequence—that of a breaking up, and reconstructing the President's cabinet. Several of its members classed as the political friends of Mr. Calhoun, and could hardly expect to remain as ministers to General Jackson while adhering to that gentleman. The Secretary of State, Mr. Van 1 gory of future presiden that character obnoxion became the cause of att dent. He determined to termination carried with obligatory resignations of one of whom published h Mr. Eaton, Secretary at the ground of original dis place, and a design to qu ble moment-which he be ed. Mr. Ingham, Secreta Mr. Branch, of the Navy. torney General, placed th of compliance with the Pr the three latter, the two friends of Mr. Calhoun; tl on this occasion, was con him, but not of his political unt business was cour transacted in writing as conversations, and all in lecorum. Far from attem use for his conduct in the of the retiring Secretaries, them letters of respect, in mony to their acceptable essociated with him, and resignations exclusively on termination to reorganize in fact, that determination after the appearance of M phlet. After that Mr. Van ] main, as being viewed un Mordecai, the Jew, sitting Mr. Eaton, as his supporter do what he wished, in follo The supporters of Mr. Calhou eptionable their conduct ha be, could neither expect, nor among the President's co after the broad rupture wit Mr. Barry, Postmaster Gene of that office who had be abinet councils, and classing Mr. Van Buren, did not res his place vacated by the app ister to Spain. Mr. Van Br was soon followed by the ap ister to London; and Mr. Governor of Florida; and, or d, my own views material change ned. Mr. Calhoun the General had o had forgotten tter, but said if e could find it: t and brought the son approved of ment to break up and gave it also s should be taken led it might be a ve to decide; but t, he had only to 1 member of Connea), and he would ity of it on himif the letter had No; for that he g received it. I hat General Jackved he was doing After that letter hould have opposed apon the General, e of the President s after this letter 1r. Calhoun made for punishing the s letter to Mr. Calshown to him by the "correspond-;" and is only re-

LIV.

VET, AND APPOINT THER.

of doing justice to

oun's pamphlet was t which seemed to -that of a breaking President's cabinet. sed as the political could hardly expect General Jackson leman. The Secre tary of State, Mr. Van Buren, was in the category of future presidential aspirants; and in that character obnoxious to Mr. Calhoun, and became the cause of attacks upon the President. He determined to resign; and that determination carried with it the voluntary, or obligatory resignations of all the others—each one of whom published his reasons for his act. Mr. Eaton, Secretary at War, placed his upon the ground of original disinclination to take the place, and a design to quit it at the first suitable moment-which he believed had now arrived. Mr. Ingham, Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. Branch, of the Navy, and Mr. Berrien. Attorney General, placed theirs upon the ground of compliance with the President's wishes. Of the three latter, the two first classed as the friends of Mr. Calhoun; the Attorney General, on this occasion, was considered as favoring him, but not of his political party. The unpleaunt business was courteously conductedtransacted in writing as well as in personal sonversations, and all in terms of the utmost lecorum. Far from attempting to find an exmse for his conduct in the imputed misconduct of the retiring Secretaries, the President gave them letters of respect, in which he bore testimony to their acceptable deportment while associated with him, and placed the required resignations exclusively on the ground of a determination to reorganize his cabinet. And, in fact, that determination became unavoidable after the appearance of Mr. Calhoun's pamphlet. After that Mr. Van Buren could not remain, as being viewed under the aspect of Mordecai, the Jew, sitting at the king's gate." Mr. Eaton, as his supporter, found a reason to do what he wished, in following his example. The supporters of Mr. Calhoun, howsoever unexeptionable their conduct had been, and might be could neither expect, nor desire, to remain among the President's confidential advisers after the broad rupture with that gentleman. Mr. Barry, Postmaster General, and the first of that office who had been called to the abnet councils, and classing as friendly to Mr. Van Buren, did not resign, but soon had his place vacated by the appointment of minister to Spain. Mr. Van Buren's resignation was soon followed by the appointment of minister to London; and Mr. Eaton was made of Mr. Barry, became his successor at Ma-

The new cabinet was composed of Edward Livingston of Louisiana, Secretary of State: Louis McLane of Delaware (recalled from the London mission for that purpose). Secretary of the Treasury; Lewis Cass of Ohio, Secretary at War; Levi Woodbury of New Hampshire. Secretary of the Navy; Amos Kendall of Kentucky, Postmaster General; Roger Brooke Taney of Maryland, Attorney General. This change in the cabinet made a great figure in the party politics of the day, and filled all the opposition newspapers, and had many sinister reasons assigned for it-all to the prejudice of General Jackson, and Mr. Van Buren - to which neither of them replied, though having the easy means of vindication in their handsthe former in the then prepared "Exposition" which is now first given to the public-the latter in the testimony of General Jackson, also first published in this THIRTY YEARS' VIEW, and in the history of the real cause of the breach between General Jackson and Mr. Calhoun, which the "Exposition" contains. Mr. Crawford was also sought to be injured in the published "correspondence," chiefly as the alleged divulger, and for a wicked purpose, of the proceedings in Mr. Monroe's cabinet in relation to the proposed military court on General Jackson. Mr. Calhoun arraigned him as the divulger of that cabinet secret, to the faithful keeping of which, as well as of all the cabinet proceedings, every member of that council is most strictly enjoined. Mr. Crawford's answer to this arraignment was brief and pointed. He denied the divulgation-affirmed that the disclosure had been made immediately after the cabinet consultation, in a letter sent to Nashville, Tennessee, and published in a paper of that city, in which the facts were reversed-Mr. Crawford being made the mover of the court of inquiry proposition, and Mr. Calhoun the defender of the General; and he expresed his belief that Mr. Calhoun procured that letter to be written and published, for the purpose of exciting General Jackson against him; (which belief the Exposition seems to confirm)—and declaring that he only spoke of the cabinet proposition after the publication of that letter, and for the purpose of contradicting it, and telling the fact, Governor of Florida; and, on the early death that Mr. Calhoun made the proposition for the court, and that Mr. Adams and himself resisted, and defeated it. His words were: "My apology for having disclosed what passed in a cabinet meeting, is this: In the summer after that meeting, an extract of a letter from Washington was published in a Nashville paper, in which it was stated that I had proposed to arrest General Jackson, but that he was triumphantly defended by Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Adams. This letter I have always believed was written by Mr. Calhoun, or by his direction. It had the desired effect. General Jackson became extremely inimical to me, and friendly to Mr. Calhoun. In stating the arguments of Mr. Adams to induce Mr. Monroe to support General Jackson's conduct throughout, adverting to Mr. Monroe's apparent admission, that if a young officer had acted so, he might be safely punished, Mr. Adams said—that if General Jackson had acted so, that if he had been a subaltern officer, shooting was too good for him. This, however, was said with a view of driving Mr. Monroe to an unlimited support of what General Jackson had done, and not with an unfriendly view to the General. Mr. Calhoun's proposition in the cabinet was, that General Jackson should be punished in some form, I am not positive which. As Mr. Calhoun did not propose to arrest General Jackson, I feel confident that I could not have made use of that word in my relation to you of the circumstances which transpired in the cabinet." This was in the letter to Mr. Forsyth, of April 30th, 1830, and which was shown to General Jackson, and by him communicated to Mr. Calhoun; and which was the second thing that brought him to suspect Mr. Calhoun, having repulsed all previous intimations of his hostility to the General, or been quieted by Mr. Calhoun's answers. The Nashville letter is strongly presented in the "Exposition" as having come from Mr. Calhoun, as believed by Mr. Crawford.

Upon the publication of the "correspondence," the Telegraph formerly the Jackson organ, changed its course, as had been revealed to Mr. Duncanson-came out for Mr. Calhoun, and against General Jackson and Mr. Van Buren, followed by all the affiliated presses which awaited its lead. The Globe took the stand for which it was established; and became the faithful, fearless, incorruptible, and powerful to the rights of the people, and giving such us supporter of General Jackson and his adminia tration, in the long, vehement, and eventful contests in which he became engaged

CHAPTER LV.

MILITARY ACADEMY.

THE small military establishment of the United States seemed to be almost in a state of dissolution about this time, from the frequency of desertion; and the wisdom of Congress was taxed to find a remedy for the evil. It could devise no other than an increase of pay to the rank and file and non-commissioned officers; which upon trial, was found to answer but little purpose. In an army of 6000 the desertions were 1450 in the year; and increasing. Mr. Macon from his home in North Carolina, having his attention directed to the subject by the debates in Congress, wrote me a letter, in which he laid his finger upon the true cause of these deser tions, and consequently showed what should be the true remedy. He wrote thus:

"Why does the army, of late years, deser more than formerly? Because the officers have een brought up at West Point, and not among the people. Soldiers desert because not attached to the service, or not attached to the officers. West Point cadets prevent the promotion of good sergeants, and men cannot like a service which denies them promotion, nor like officers who get all the commissions. The increase of pay will not cure the evil, and nothing but promotion will. In the Revolutionary army, we had many distinguished officers, who entered the army as privates.'

This is wisdom, and besides carrying conviction for the truth of all it says, it leads to reflections upon the nature and effects of our national military school, which extend beyond the evil which was the cause of writing it. Since the act of 1812, which placed this institution upon its present footing, giving its students a legal right to appointment (as constructed and practised), it may be assumed that there is not a government in Europe, and has been none since the commencement of the French revolution (when the nobles had pretty nearly a monopoly of army appointments), so unfriendly due advantages to son nity over the rest. Of the ranks in all the c Austria, Russia, Pruss Britain, of which ther trious examples. Two the empire rose from t Ney, Mass ma, Oudino dotte. In Great Brita Royal Military College commissions are now g life, and to non-commi turn lately made to pa eighteen years-from 18 of citizens who received the number of non-com moted, was 446; and th pointed from the Roys 473. These citizen appo of those who purchased mode for citizens to get and which largely increa class of appointmentswith the approbation of there valid. But exclusi sion during the same pe the number of citizens commissioned officers pr nearly four times the cadets appointed. Now. service during any equal he years, since the Mili full operation under the the inquiry to the period s 1812, for during that wa general officers in service life, and who procured tl meritorious non-commiss not having at first been them. How many? Few pointed, or non-commisio -only in new or tempor being held to belong to t I will mention two in my own knowledge, to il of obtaining a commissio regular regiments—one th Hermann Thorn, son of York. The young man ha of cadet at West Point; :

obtain it, and having a st.

sought service in Europe,

on and his adminisment, and eventful e engaged

R LV.

DEMY.

hment of the United in a state of dissoluthe frequency of de-Congress was taxed vil. It could devise of pay to the rank oned officers; which nswer but little pur the desertions were easing. Mr. Macon Carolina, having his ibject by the debates tter, in which he laid ause of these deser owed what should be te thus:

of late years, deserause the officers have Point, and not among it because not attachtached to the officers int the promotion of cannot like a service tion, nor like officers ins. The increase of and nothing but proolutionary army, we officers, who entered sides carrying convicits anys, it leads to reand effects of our machich extend beyond se of writing it. Since laced this institution giving its students at (as constructed and med that there is not, and has been none of the French revolud pretty nearly a moments), so unfriendly e, and giving such up due advantages to some parts of the commu nity over the rest. Officers can now rise from the ranks in all the countries of Europe-in Austria, Russia, Prussia, as well as in Great Britain, of which there are constant and illustrious examples. Twenty-three marshals of the empire rose from the ranks-among them Ney, Mass 'na, Oudinot, Murat, Soult, Bernadotte. In Great Britain, notwithstanding her Royal Military College, the largest part of the commissions are now given to citizens in civil life, and to non-commissioned officers. A return lately made to parliament shows that in eighteen years—from 1830 to 1847—the number of citizens who received commissions, was 1,266; the number of non-commissioned officers promoted, was 446; and the number of cadets apnointed from the Royal Military College was 473. These citizen appointments were exclusive of those who purchased commissions—another mode for citizens to get into the British army, and which largely increases the number in that class of appointments-sales of commissions, with the approbation of the government, being there valid. But exclusive of purchased commission during the same period of eighteen years. the number of citizens appointed, and of noncommissioned officers promoted, were, together. nearly four times the number of government cadets appointed. Now, how has it been in our service during any equal number of years, or all the years, since the Military Academy got into full operation under the act of 1812? I confine the inquiry to the period subsequent to the war of 1812 for during that war there were field and general officers in service who came from civil life, and who procured the promotion of many meritorious non-commissioned officers; the act not having at first been construed to exclude them. How many? Few or none, of citizens appointed, or non-commissioned officers promoted -only in new or temporary corps-the others being held to belong to the government cadets.

I will mention two instances coming within my own knowledge, to illustrate the difficulty of obtaining a commission for a citizen in the regular regiments—one the case of the late Capt. Hermann Thorn, son of Col. Thorn, of New-York. The young man had applied for the place of cadet at West Point; and not being able to obtain it, and having a strong military turn, he sought service in Europe and found it in Austria; and was admitted into a hussar regiment on the confines of Turkey, without commission, but with the pay, clothing, and ration of a corporal; with the privilege of associating with officers, and a right to expect a commission if he proved himself worthy. These are the exact terms, substituting sergeant for corporal, en which cadets were received into the army, and attached to companies, in Washington's time. Young Thorn proved himself to be worthy; received the commission; rose in five years to the rank of first lieutenant; when, the war breaking out between the United States and Mexico, he asked leave to resign, was permitted to do so, and came home to ask service in the regular army of the United States. His application was made through Senator Cass and others, he only asking for the lowest place in the gradation of officers, so as not to interfere with the right of promotion in any one. The application was refused on the ground of illegality, he not having graduated at West Point. Afterwards I took up the case of the young man, got President Polk to nominate him, sustained the nomination before the Senate; and thus got a start for a young officer who soon advanced himself, receiving two brevets for gallant conduct and several wounds in the great battles of Mexico; and was afterwards drowned, conducting a detachment to California, in crossing his men over the great Colorado of the West.

Thus Thorn was with difficulty saved. The other case was that of the famous Kit Carson also nominated by President Polk. I was not present to argue his case when he was rejected, and might have done no good if I had been, the place being held to belong to a cadet that was waiting for it. Carson was rejected because he did not come through the West Point gate. Being a patriotic man, he has since led many expeditions of his countrymen, and acted as guide to the United States officers, in New Mexico, where he lives. He was a guide to the detachment that undertook to rescue the unfortunate Mrs. White, whose fate excited so much commiseration at the time; and I have the evidence that if he had been commander, the rescue would have been effected, and the unhappy woman saved from massacre.

of cadet at West Point; and not being able to obtain it, and having a strong military turn, he sought service in Europe, and found it in Austral the law of the land, so settled by construction and senatorial acquiescence; and consequently that no American citizen is to enter the regular army except through the gate of the United States Military Academy; and few can reach that gate except through the weight of a family connection, a political influence, or the instrumentality of a friend at court. Genius in obscurity has no chance; and the whole tendency of the institution is to make a governmental, and not a national army. Appointed cadet by the President, nominated officer by him, promoted upon his nomination, holding commission at his pleasure, receiving his orders as law, looking to him as the fountain of honor, the source of preferment, and the dispenser of agreeable and profitable employment—these cadet officers must naturally feel themselves independent of the people, and dependent upon the President; and be irresistibly led to acquire the habits and felings which, in all ages, have rendered regular armies obnoxious to popular governments.

The instinctive sagacity of the people has long since comprehended all this, and conceived an aversion to the institution which has manifested itself in many demonstrations against it -sometimes in Congress, sometimes in the State legislatures, always to be met, and triumphantly met, by adducing Washington as the father and founder of the institution .- No adduction could be more fallacious. Washington is no more the father of the present West Point than he is of the present Mount Vernon. The West Point of his day was a school of engineering and artillery, and nothing more; the cadet of his day was a young soldier, attached to a company, and serving with it in the field and in the camp, "with the pay, clothing, and ration of serreant" (act of 1794); and in the intervals of acive service, if he had shown an inclination for the profession, and a capacity for its higher branches, then he was sent, in the "discretion" of the President, to West Point, to take instruction in those higher branches, namely, artillery and engineering, and nothing more. All the drills both of officerand private-all the camp duty-all the trainings in the infantry, the cavalry, and the rifle -were then left to be taught in the field and the camp-a better school than any academy; and under officers who were to lead them into action-better teachers than any school-room And all without any additional professors. expense to the United States.

All was right in the time of Washington, and afterwards, up to the act of 1812. None became cadets then but those who had a stomach for the hardships, as well as taste for the pleasures of a soldier's life-who, like the Young Norval on the Grampian Hills, had felt the soldiers blood stir in their veins, and longed to be off to the scene of war's alarms, instead of standing guard over flocks and herds. Cadets were not then sent to a superb school, with the emeluments of officers, to remain four years at public expense, receiving educations for civil as well as military life, with the right to have commissions and be provided for by the government: or with the secret intent to quit the service as soon as they could do better-which most of them soon do. The act of 1812 did the mischief; and that insidiously and by construction. while ostensibly keeping up the old idea of cadets serving with their companies, and only detached when the President pleased, to get instruction at the academy. It runs thus: "The cadets heretofore appointed in the service of the United States, whether of artillery, cavalry, riflemen, or infantry, or may be in future appointed or hereinafter provided, shall at no time exceed 250; that they may be attached, at the discretion of the President of the United States as students to the Military Academy; and be subject to the established regulations thereof."

The deception of this clause is in keeping up the old idea of these cadets being with their companies, and by the judgment of the President detached from their companies, and attached, as students, to the Military Academy. The President is to exercise a "discretion," by which the cadet is transferred for a while from his company to the school, to be there as a student; that is to say, like a student, but still retaining his original character of quasi officer in his company. This change from camp to school, upon the face of the act, was to be as formerly, a question for the President to decide, dependent for its solution upon the military indications of the young man's character, and his capacity for the higher branches of the service; and this only permissive in the President. He "may" attach, &c. Now, all this is illusion. Cadets are not sent to companies, whe ther of artillery, infantry, cavalry, or riflemen. The President exercises no "discretion" about detaching them from their company and attach students, and go righ four years' education whether they have an not. That is the fir the act: others follow Another clause says, t cles, with the consent to serve five years, ur This is deceptive, sugge no existence, and takin to be performed. It dier's enlistment, when and was a fiction inve the act. The language listed soldier, bound to the usual soldier's ter dier-this apparent pri reality a gentleman st ments of an officer, obta lic expense, instead of c ranks. The whole clau no stronger term, and which the legislative h explains; and that was, tutional on its face, and the forms, and become a bers who denied the Congress to establish t nary university; and ot policy and expediency of this manner. To get ov selection of the students statute, of a soldier's e they sign articles of en but only to appease the scruples; and I have m riods of my service in th ginal articles brought in exhibited, to prove that enlisted soldier, and not fore constitutionally in a five years being found to at all, as the student m within a year after his ed of them did, it was extend without effect, except in of unwilling service from quit; as the greater part officer in the time of the thirty-six cadets who had commissioned at the sam

ing them as students

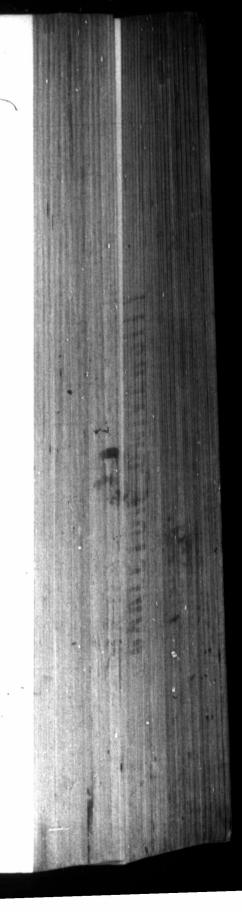

of Washington, and 312. None became had a stomach for e for the pleasures the Young Norval felt the soldiers longed to be off to instead of standing Cadets were not with the emeluour years at public for civil as well as t to have commisy the government; quit the service as er-which most of 1812 did the misnd by construction, the old idea of capanies, and only depleased, to get in-It runs thus: "The in the service of the tillery, cavalry, riflein future appointed Il at no time exceed ached, at the discrehe United States as ademy; and be sublations thereof." use is in keeping up ts being with their gment of the Presimpanies, and attachary Academy. The a "discretion," by ed for a while from to be there as a stua student, but still icter of quasi officer ange from camp to e act, was to be, as President to decide, upon the military nan's character, and branches of the sersive in the President. ow, all this is illu-; to companies, whe cavalry, or riflemen. "discretion" about company and attach 'ng them as students. They are appointed as students, and go right off to school, and get four years' education at the public expense, whether they have any taste for military life, or not. That is the first large deception under the act: others follow, until it is all deception. Another clause says, the cadet shall "sign articles, with the consent of his parent or guardian. to serve five years, unless sooner discharged." This is deceptive, suggesting a service which has no existence, and taking a bond for what is not 0 be performed. It is the language of a soldier's enlistment, where there is no enlistment; and was a fiction invented to constitutionalize the act. The language makes the cadet an enlisted soldier, bound to serve the United States the usual soldier's term, when this paper soldier-this apparent private in the ranks-is in reality a gentleman student, with the emoluments of an officer, obtaining education at public expense, instead of carrying a musket in the ranks. The whole clause is an illusion, to use no stronger term, and put in for a purpose which the legislative history of the day well explains; and that was, to make the act constitutional on its face, and enable it to get through the forms, and become a law. There were members who denied the constitutional right of Congress to establish this national eleemosyparv university; and others who doubted the policy and expediency of officering the army in this manner. To get over these objections, the selection of the students took the form, in the statute, of a soldier's enlistment; and in fact they sign articles of enlistment, like recruits, but only to appease the constitution and satisfy scruples; and I have myself, in the early periods of my service in the Senate, seen the original articles brought into secret session and exhibited, to prove that the student was an enlisted soldier, and not a student, and therefore constitutionally in service. The term of five years being found to be no term of service at all, as the student might quit the service within a year after his education, which many without effect, except in procuring a few years there were only about half a dozen then in service; so that this great national establishment is mainly a school for the gratuitous education of those who have influence to get there. The act provides that these students are to be instructed in the lower as well as the higher branches of the military art; they are to be "trained and taught all the duties incident to a regular camp." Now, all this training and teaching, and regular camp duty, was done in Washington's time in the regular camp itself, and about as much better done as substance is better than form, and reality better than imitation, with the advantage of training each officer to the particular arm of the service to which he was to belong, and in which he would be expected to excel.

Gratuitous instruction to the children of the living is a vicious principle, which has no foundation in reason or precedent. Such instruction, to the children of those who have died for their country, is as old as the first ages of the Grecian republics, as we learn from the oration which Thucydides puts into the mouth of Pericles at the funeral of the first slain of the Peloponnesian war: and as modern as the present British Military Royal Academy; which, although royal, makes the sons of the living nobility and gentry pay; and only gives gratuitous instruction and support to the sons of those who have died in the public service. And so, I believe, of other European military schools.

Thesa are vital objections to the institution; but they do not include the high practical evil which the wisdom of Mr. Macon discerned, and with which this chapter opened-namely, a monopoly of the appointments. That is effected in the fourth section, not openly and in direct terms (for that would have rendered the act unconstitutional on its face), but by the use of words which admit the construction and the practice, and therefore make the law, which now is, the legal right of the cadet to receive a com mission who has received the academical diplo ma for going through all the classes. This gives of them did, it was extended to eight; but still to these cadets a monopoly of the offices, to the exclusion of citizens and non-commissioned offiof unwilling service from those who mean to cers; and it deprives the Senate of its constituquit; as the greater part do. I was told by an tional share in making these appointments. By officer in the time of the Mexican war that, of a "regulation," the academic professors are to thirty-six cadets who had graduated and been recommend at each annual examination, five commissioned at the same time with himself, cadets in each class, on account of their particular merit, whom the President is to attach to companies. This expunges the Senate, opens the door to that favoritism which natural parents find it hard to repress among their own children, and which is proverbial among teachers. By the constitution, and for a great public purpose, and not as a privilege of the body, the Senate is to have an advising and consenting power over the army appointments: by practice and construction it is not the President and Senate, but the President and the academy who appoint the officers. The President sends the student to the academy: the academy gives a diploma, and that gives him a right to the commission-the Senate's consent being an obligatory form. The President and the academy are the real appointing power, and the Senate nothing but an office for the registration of their appointments. And thus the Senate, by construction of a statute and its own acquiescence, has ceased to have control over these appointments: and the whole body of army officers is fast becoming the mere creation of the President and of the military academy. The effect of this mode of appointment will be to create a governmental, instead of a national army; and the effect of this exclusion of non-commissioned officers and privates from promotion, will be to degrade the regular soldier into a mercenary, serving for pay without affection for a country which dishonors him. Hence the desertions and the correlative evil of diminished enlistments on the part of native-born Americans.

Courts of law have invented many fictions to facilitate trials, but none to give jurisdiction. The jurisdiction must rest upon fact, and so should the constitutionality of an act of Congress; but this act of 1812 rests its constitutionality upon fictions. It is a fiction to suppose that the cadet is an enlisted soldier-a fiction to suppose that he is attached to a company and thence transferred, in the "discretion" of the President, to the academy-a fiction to suppose that he is constitutionally appointed in the army by the President and Senate. The very title of the act is fictitious, giving not the least hint, not even in the convenient formula of "other purposes" of the great school it was about to create.

It is entitled, "An act making further provision for the corps of engineers;" when five out of the six sections which it contains go to make further provision for two hundred and 66 ty students at a national military and civil university. As now constituted, our academy is an imitation of the European military schools which create governmental and not national of ficers-which make routine officers, but cannot create military genius-and which block up the way against genius-especially barefooted granius-such as this country abounds in and which the field alone can develope. "My children."-the French generals were accustomed to say to the young conscripts during the Revolution-" Myachildren, there are some captains among you, and the first campaign will show who they are, and they shall have their places," And such expressions, and the system in which they are founded, have brought out the military genius of the country in every age and nation, and produced such officers as the schools can never make.

The adequate remedy for these evils is to repeal the act of 1812, and remit the academy to its condition in Washington's time, and as enlarged by several acts up to 1812. Then no one would wish to become a cadet but he that had the soldier in him, and meant to stick to his profession, and work his way up from the "pay, ration, and clothing of a sergeant," to the rank of field-officer or general. Struggles for West Point appointments would then cease and the boys on the "Grampian Hills" would have their chance. This is the adequate remedy. If that repeal cannot be had, then a subordinate and half-way remedy may be found in giving to citizens and non-commissioned officers a share of the commissions, equal to what ther get in the British service, and restoring the Senate to its constitutional right of rejecting as well as confirming cadet nominations.

These are no new views with me. I have kept aloof from the institution. During the almost twenty years that I was at the head of the Senate's Committee on Military Affairs, and would have been appropriately a "visitor" at West Point at some of the annual examinations, I never accepted the function, and have never even seen the place. I have been always against the institution as now established, and have long intended to bring my views of it before the country; and now fulfil that intention.

CHAPT

BANK OF THE UNITED OF CH

FROM the time of Pres tions against the recha annual message of 1829. less and pervading act Bank in all parts of the -in the newspapers, in in State legislatures, eve riodical literature, in th conciliation of presses at ducted in a way to opera the public mind, and to in the forum of the peopl forward in the national same time but little was on the other side. The one way. I determined it in the Senate, and m: fore I succeeded—the thi friends throwing every of even friends holding me course, which was to wai for the renewed charter then to oppose it. I fores was followed, the Bank out a contest-that she majority was installed in gress-then present her ar barren speeches in oppos lop the renewed charter th &1830, '31, I succeeded in portunity of delivering a sp done a little irregularly h tive resolution against the ter, and taking the oppor leave to introduce the reso against the re-charter. M on the character of the spe make-one which should tracks of objection, avoid avoid the problem of co take up the institution in having too much power ove government,-over busines too much disposed to exerci prejudice of the freedom ; should prevail in a republic

vo hundred and fif itary and civil unied, our academy is n military schools nd not national ofofficers, but cannot which block up the ally barefooted meabounds in, and velope. "My chils were accustomed ots during the Reve are some captains ampaign will show have their places." he system in which ght out the militaevery age and nacers as the schools

these evils is to renit the academy to 's time, and as ento 1812. Then no cadet but he that meant to stick to is way up from the f a sergeant," to the eral. Struggles for would then cease. npian Hills" would the adequate remebe had, then a subdy may be found in mmissioned officers equal to what they and restoring the right of rejecting as minations.

with me. I have ution. During the
was at the head of n Military Affairs, priately a "visitor"
he annual examinafunction, and have I have been always now established, and g my views of it be w fulfil that inten

CHAPTER LVI.

BANK OF THE UNITED STATES.—NON-RENEWAL OF CHARTER.

FROM the time of President Jackson's intimations against the recharter of the Bank, in the annual message of 1829, there had been a ceaseless and pervading activity in behalf of the Bank in all parts of the Union, and in all forms -in the newspapers, in the halls of Congress, in State legislatures, even in much of the periodical literature, in the elections, and in the conciliation of presses and individuals-all conducted in a way to operate most strongly upon the public mind, and to conclude the question in the forum of the people before it was brought forward in the national legislature. At the same time but little was done, or could be done on the other side. The current was all setting one way. I determined to raise a voice against it in the Senate, and made several efforts before I succeeded—the thick array of the Bank friends throwing every obstacle in my way, and even friends holding me back for the regular course, which was to wait until the application for the renewed charter to be presented; and then to oppose it. I foresaw that, if this course was followed, the Bank would triumph without a contest-that she would wait until a majority was installed in both Houses of Congress-then present her application-hear a few barren speeches in opposition ;-and then gallop the renewed charter through. In the session of 1830, '31, I succeeded in creating the first opportunity of delivering a speech against it; it was done a little irregularly by submitting a negative resolution against the renewal of the charter, and taking the opportunity while asking leave to introduce the resolution, to speak fully against the re-charter. My mind was fixed upon the character of the speech which I should make-one which should avoid the beaten tracks of objection, avoid all settled points, avoid the problem of constitutionality-and take up the institution in a practical sense, as having too much power over the people and the government,-over business and politics-and too much disposed to exercise that power to the prejudice of the freedom and equality which exist in our country. But I knew it was not sufficient to pull down: we must build up also The men of 1811 had committed a fatal error. when most wisely refusing to re-charter the institution of that day, they failed to provide a substitute for its currency, and fell back upon the local banks, whose inadequacy speedily made a call for the re-establishment of a national bank. I felt that error must be avoided—that another currency of general circulation must be provided to replace its notes; and I saw that currency in the gold coin of the constitution. then an ideal currency in the United States, having been totally banished for many years by the erroneous valuation adopted in the time of Gen. Hamilton, Secretary of the Treasury. I proposed to revive that currency, and brought it forward at the conclusion of my first speech (February, 1831) against the Bank, thus:

"I am willing to see the charter expire, without providing any substitute for the present bank. I am willing to see the currency of the federal government left to the hard money mentioned and intended in the constitution: I am willing to have a hard money government, as that of France has been since the time of assignats and mandats. Every species of paper might be left to the State authorities, un recognized by the federal government, and only touched by it for its own convenience when equivalent to gold and silver. Such a currency filled France with the precious metals, wher England, with her overgrown bank, was a prey to all the evils of unconvertible paper. It furnished money enough for the imperial government when the population of the empire was three times more numerous, and the expense of government twelve times greater, than the population and expenses of the United States; and, when France possessed no mines of gold or silver, and was destitute of the exports which command the specie of other countries. The United States possess gold mines, now yielding half a million per annum, with every prospect of equalling those of Peru. But this is not the best dependence. We have what is superior to mines, namely, the exports which command the money of the world; that is to say, the food which sustains life, and the raw materials which sustain manufactures. Gold and silver is the best currency for a republic; it suits the men of middle property and the working people best; and if I was going to establish a working man's party, it should be on the basis of hard money:—a hard money party, against a paper party."

on much disposed to exercise that power to the projudice of the freedom and equality which abould prevail in a republic, to be allowed to rhetoricians, but the practical, sensible, upright business men, to whom countries are usually indebted for all beneficial legislation: the Sir Henry Parnells, the Mr. Joseph Humes, the Mr. Edward Ellices, the Sir William Pulteneys; and men of that class, legislating for the practical concerns of life, and merging the orator in the man of business.

THE SPEECH-EXTRACTS.

"Mr. Benton commenced his speech in support of the application for the leave he was about to ask, with a justification of himself for bringing forward the question of renewal at this time. when the charter had still five years to run; and bottomed his vindication chiefly on the right he possessed, and the necessity he was under to answer certain reports of one of the committee of the Senate, made in opposition to certain resolutions relative to the bank, which he had submitted to the Senate at former sessions, and which reports he had not had an opportunity of answering. He said it had been his fortune, or chance, some three years ago, to submit a resolution in relation to the undrawn balances of public money in the hands of the bank, and to accompany it with some poor remarks of unfavorable implication to the future existence of that institution. My resolution [said Mr. B.] was referred to the Committee on Finance, who made a report decidedly adverse to all my views, and eminently favorable to the bank, both as a present and future institution. This report came on the 13th of May, just fourteen days before the conclusion of a six months' session, when all was hurry and precipitation to terminate the business on hand, and when there was not the least chance to engage the attention of the Senate in the consideration of any new subject. The report was, therefore, laid upon the table unanswered, but was printed by order of the Senate, and that in extra numbers, and widely diffused over the country by means of the newspaper press. At the commencement of the next session, it being irregular to call for the consideration of the past report, I was under the necessity to begin anew, and accordingly submitted my resolution a second time, and that quite early in the session; say on the first day of January. It was my wish and request that this resolution might be discussed in the Senate, but the sentiment of the majority was different, and a second reference of it was made to the Finance Committee. A second report of the same purport with the first was a matter of course; but what did not seem to me to be a matter of course was this; that this second report should not come in until the 20th day of February, just fourteen days again before the end of the session, for it was then the short session, and the Senate as much pinched as before for time to finish the business on hand. No answer could be made to it, but the report was printed, with the former of applause; greeted with every species of acreport appended to it; and thus, united like the clamation; reprinted in most of the papers, and

Siamese twins, and with the apparent, but not real sanction of the Senate, they went forth together to make-the tour of the Union in the columns of the newspaper press. Thus, I was a second time out of court; a second time nonsuited for want of a replication, when there was no time to file one. I had intended to begin de novo, and for the third time, at the opening of the ensuing session; but, happily, was anticipated and prevented by the annual message of the new President [General Jackson], which brought this question of renewing the bank charter directly before Congress. A reference of this part of the message was made, of course. to the Finance Committee: the committee, of course, again reported, and with increased ardor, in favor of the bank. Unhappily this third report, which was an amplification and reiteration of the two former, did not come in until the session was four months advanced, and when the time of the Senate had become engrossed, and its attention absorbed, by the numerous and important subjects which had accumulated upon the calendar. Printing in extra numbers, general circulation through the newspaper press, and no answer, was the catastrophe of this third reference to the Finance Committee. Thus was I nonsuited for the third time. The fourth session has now come round; the same subject is again before the same committee on the reference of the part of the President's second annual message which relates to the bank; and, doubtless, a fourth report of the same import with the three preceding ones, may be expected. But when? is the question. And, as I cannot answer that question, and the session is now two thirds advanced, and as I have no disposition to be cut off for the fourth time, I have thought proper to create an occasion to deliver my own sentiments. by asking leave to introduce a joint resolution, adverse to the tenor of all the reports, and to give my reasons against them, while supporting my application for the leave demanded; a course of proceeding which is just to myself and unjust to no one, since all are at liberty to answer me. These are my personal reasons for this step, and a part of my answer to the objection that I have begun too soon. The conduct of the bank, and its friends, constitutes the second branch of my justification. It is certainly not 'too soon' for them, judging by their conduct, to engage in the question of renewing the bank charter. In and out of Congress, they all seem to be of one accord on this point. Three reports of committees in the Senate, and one from a committee of the House of Representatives, have been made in favor of the renewal; and all these reports, instead of being laid away for future se-instead of being stuck in pigeon holes, and labelled for future attention, as things coming forth prematurely, and not wanted for present servicehave, on the contrary, been universally received by the bank and its friends, in one great tempest every effort made to gi and the highest effect, contain. In addition to session, within a few da copies of the exposition have-been printed by ord thing never before done, zon the merits of the bank land, here expressed son ment; but Mr. B. affirm stance if not to the letter does not look as if the b it was too soon to discuss ing the charter; and, u their sentiments, I shall the proof, that they do no branch of my justification public duty; upon a sens advantageous to the peop debtors and stockholders lar. The renewal of the which concerns the people are to have any hand in th tion-if they are even to l fore it is done, it is high t representatives in Congre each other's mind upon it. five years to run; and if probably be at some sho three years, before the tir time sooner that a chance the renewal through Co therefore, have no time to have any hand in the decis tion. To the bank itself i ous at least, if not desirable once, that it may avoid (if newal) the trouble and ex branches upon 'the eve of risk and inconvenience of yond the term of its exister upon mortgages, and indefin it must be also advantageou be notified in advance of th dulgences: so that, to eve and private, political and and particular, full discuss decision, is just and proper.

"I hold myself justified, the reasons given, for proceed application; but, as example authoritative than reason, I to produce one, which is as thority as it is appropriate tion, and which happens to the Senate as completely as for it. I speak of what has the Parliament of Great Brits that the charter of the Bank expire, upon its own limitat the same time with the char the United States, namely, and as far back as 1824, no le before its expiration, the ques was debated, and that with apparent, but not ney went forth to ne Union in the coss. Thus. I was a second time nonation, when there ad intended to betime, at the openat, happily, was anhe annual message al Jackson], which enewing the bank ress. A reference as made, of course, the committee, of ith increased ardor. opily this third reion and reiteration me in until the sesced, and when the e engrossed, and its merous and imporumulated upon the numbers, general paper press, and no of this third referttee. Thus was I The fourth sesthe same subject is nittee on the referent's second annual bank; and, doubtme import with the be expected. But as I cannot answer is now two thirds isposition to be cut e thought proper to ny own sentiments, a joint resolution, he reports, and to n, while supporting lemanded; a course myself and unjust berty to answer me. ns for this step, and bjection that I have ct of the bank, and cond branch of my not 'too soon' for act, to engage in the ak charter. In and em to be of one acreports of commitrom a committee of es, have been made all these morts, for future se-inn holes, and labelled s coming forth preor present serviceuniversally received in one great tempest every species of acst of the papers, and every effort made to give the widest diffusion, and the highest effect, to the arguments they contain. In addition to this, and at the present session, within a few days past, three thousand copies of the exposition of the affairs of the Bank have-been printed by order of the two Houses, a thing never before done, and now intended to blanon the merits of the bank. [Mr. Smith, of Maryland, here expressed some dissent to this statement; but Mr. B. affirmed its correctness in substance if not to the letter, and continued.] This does not look as if the bank advocates thought it was too soon to discuss the question of renewing the charter; and, upon this exhibition of their sentiments, I shall rest the assertion and the proof, that they do not think so. The third branch of my justification rests upon a sense of public duty; upon a sense of what is just and advantageous to the people in general, and to the debtors and stockholders of the bank in particular. The renewal of the charter is a question which concerns the people at large; and if they are to have any hand in the decision of this question-if they are even to know what is done before it is done, it is high time that they and their representatives in Congress should understand each other's mind upon it. The charter has but five years to run; and if renewed at all, will probably be at some short period, say two or three years, before the time is out, and at any time sooner that a chance can be seen to gallop the renewal through Congress. The people, therefore, have no time to lose, if they mean to have any hand in the decision of this great question. To the bank itself, it must be advantageous at least, if not desirable, to know its fate at once, that it may avoid (if there is to be no renewal) the trouble and expense of multiplying branches upon 'the eve of dissolution, and the risk and inconvenience of extending loans beyond the term of its existence. To the debtors upon mortgages, and indefinite accommodations. t must be also advantageous, if not desirable, to be notified in advance of the end of their indulgences: so that, to every interest, public and private, political and pecuniary, general and particular, full discussion, and seasonable decision, is just and proper.

"I hold myself justified, Mr. President, upon the reasons given, for proceeding in my present application; but, as example is sometimes more authoritative than reason, I will take the liberty to produce one, which is as high in point of authority as it is appropriate in point of application, and which happens to fit the case before the Senate as completely as if it had been made for it. I speak of what has lately been done in the Parliament of Great Britain. It so happens, that the charter of the Bank of England is to expire, upon its own limitation, nearly about the same time with the charter of the Bank of the United States, namely, in the year 1833; and as far back as 1824, no less than nine years before its expiration, the question of its renewal the British House of Commons. I will read some extracts from that debate, as the fairest way of presenting the example to the Senate, and the most effectual mode of securing to myself the advantage of the sentiments expressed by British statesman.

The Extracts.

"'Sir Henry Parnell.-The House should no longer delay to turn its attention to the expediency of renewing the charter of the Bank of England. Heretofore, it had been the regular custom to renew the charter several years before the existing charter had expired. The last renewal was made when the existing charter had eleven years to run: the present charter had nine years only to continue, and he felt very anxious to prevent the making of any agreement between the government and the bank for a renewal, without a full examination of the policy of again conferring upon the Bank of England any exclusive privilege. The practice had been for government to make a secret arrangement with the bank; to submit it immediately to the proprietors of the bank for their approbation, and to call upon the House the next day to confirm it, without affording any opportunity of fair deliberation. So much information had been obtained upon the banking trade, and upon the nature of currency in the last fifteen years, that it was particularly necessary to enter upon a full investigation of the policy of renewing the bank charter before any negotiation should be entered upon between the government and the bank; and he trusted the government would not commence any such negotiation until the sense of Parliament had been taken on this important subject.'

"'Mr. Hume said it was of very great importance that his majesty's ministers should take immediate steps to free themselves from the trammels in which they had long been held by the bank. As the interest of money was now nearly on a level with what it was when the bank lent a large sum to government, he hoped the Chancellor of the Exchequer would not listen to any application for a renewal of the bank charter, but would pay off every shilling that had been borrowed from the bank. * * * * * Let the country gentlemen recollect that the bank was now acting as pawn-broker on a large scale, and lending money on estates, a system entirely contrary to the original intention of that institution. * * * * * * He hoped, before the expiration of the charter, that a regular in quiry would be made into the whole subject.'

the Parliament of Great Britain. It so happens, hat the charter of the Bank of England is to pure, upon its own limitation, nearly about the United States, namely, in the year 1833; the United States, namely, in the year 1833; ects. ** ** * * He hoped that the exclusive charter would never again be granted; and that with great freedom, in cautious how they entertained any such propositions: The right honorable Chancellor of the Exchequer [Mr. Robinson] had protested against the idea of straining any point to the prejudice of the bank; he thought, however, that the bank had very little to complain of, when their stock, after all their past profits, was at 238.

"'The Chancellor of the Exchequer deprecated the discussion, as leading to no practical

"'Mr. Alexander Baring objected to it as premature and unnecessary.'

"Sir William Pulteney (in another debate). The prejudices in favor of the present bank have proceeded from the long habit of considering it as a sort of pillar which nothing can shake. * * * * * * * The bank has been supported, and is still supported, by the fear and terror which, by means of its monopoly, it has had the power to inspire. It is well known, that there is hardly an extensive trader, a manufacturer, or a banker, either in London, or at a distance from it, to whom the bank could not do a serious injury, and could often bring on even insolvency. I consider the power given by the monopoly to be of the nature of all other despotic power, which corrupts the despot as much as it corrupts the slave. * * * * * * It is in the nature of man, that a monopoly must necessarily be ill-conducted. * * * * * * sarily be ill-conducted. * * Whatever language the [private] bankers may feel themselves obliged to hold, yet no one can believe that they have any satisfaction in being, and continuing, under a dominion which has proved so grievous and so disastrous. * * * * I can never believe that the merchants and bankers of this country will prove unwilling to emancipate themselves, if they can do it without risking the resentment of the bank. No man in France was heard to complain, openly, of the Bastile while it existed. The merchants and bankers of this country have the blood of Englishmen, and will be happy to relieve themselves from a situation of perpetual terror, if they could do it consistently with a due regard to their own interest.'

"Here is authority added to reason—the force of a great example added to the weight of unanswerable reasons, in favor of early discussion; so that, I trust, I have effectually put aside that old and convenient objection to the 'time' that most flexible and accommodating objection, which applies to all seasons, and all subjects, and is just as available for cutting off a late debate, because it is too late, as it is for stilling an analy consequence it is too late, as it is for stilling an arly one, because it is too early.

"But, it is said that the debate will injure the stockholders; that it depreciates the value of their property, and that it is wrong to sport with the vested rights of individuals. This complaint, supposing it to come from the stockholders themselves, is both absurd and ungrateful. It absurd, because the stockholders, at teast so many of them as are not foreigners, it.]

must have known when they accepted a charter of limited duration, that the approach of its expiration would renew the debate upon the propriety of its existence; that every citizen had a right, and every public man was under an obligation, to declare his sentiments freely; that there was nothing in the charter, numerous as its peculiar privileges were, to exempt the bank from that freedom of speech and writing, which extends to all our public affairs: and that the charter was not to be renewed here, as the Bank of England charter had formerly been renewed, by a private arrangement among its friends, suddenly produced in Congress, and galloped through without the knowledge of the country. The American part of the stockholders (for I would not reply to the complaints of the foreigners) must have known all this; and known it when they accepted the charter. They accepted it, subject to this known consequence; and, therefore, the complaint about injuring their property is absurd. That it is ungrateful, must be apparent to all who will reflect upon the great privileges which these stockholders will have enjoyed for twenty vears, and the large profits they have already derived from their charter. They have been dividing seven per cent. per annum, unless when prevented by their own mismanagement; and have laid up a real estate of three millions of dollars for future division; and the money which has done these handsome things, instead of being diminished or impaired in the process. is still worth largely upwards of one hundred cents to the dollar: say, one hundred and twerty-five cents. For the peculiar privileges which enabled them to make these profits, the stockholders ought to be grateful: but, like all persons who have been highly favored with undue benefits, they mistake a privilege for a right-a favor for a duty-and resent, as an attack upon their property, a refusal to prolong their undue There is no ground for these comadvantages. plaints, but for thanks and benedictions rather. for permitting the bank to live out its numbered days! That institution has forfeited its charter. It may be shut up at any hour. It lives from day to day by the indulgence of those whom it daily attacks; and, if any one is ignorant of this fact, let him look at the case of the Bank of the United States against Owens and others, decided in the Supreme Court, and reported in the 2d Peters.

"[Here Mr. B. read a part of this case, showing that it was a case of usury at the rate of forty-six per cent. and that Mr. Sergeant, comsel for the bank, resisted the decision of the Supreme Court, upon the ground that it would expose the charter of the bank to forfeiture; and that the decision was, nevertheless, given upon that ground; so that the bank, being convicted of taking usury, in violation of its charter, was liable to be deprived of its charter, at any time that a scire facials should issue against

1

"Mr. B. resumed. consideration of the re dulged in adverting t parliamentary practice sary to read now in c bility of any necessity after. It is the rule w to be present-which, withdraw-during the tion in which his prive cerned; and authorize the Journal of any von given under the predic motive. I demand the Senate may read the ru "[The Secretary read

"Where the private are concerned in a bil withdraw. And where appeared, his voice has after a division. In a cato the laws of decency, principles of the social to any man to be a judge for the honor of the Heimmemorial observance.

hered to.'
"First: Mr. President of the charter of the Ban because I look upon the too great and powerful to ernment of free and equitat of the purse; a powing that of the sword; and to a degree and extent bank to draw to itself too power of this Union; and dividual property of the cithe money power of the and indirect.

"[The Vice-President 1] Benton that he was out of right to go into the merit the motion which he had begged pardon of the Vice-President to proceed. He saight to proceed. He saight to proceed. He saight to proceed the parliamentary rul bring in a joint resolution, he had a right to state his sons constituted his speec was debatable, and the was wer him. The Vice-Pre Mr. Benton to proceed.]

Mr. B. resumed. The chank is now prodigious, and reewal of the charter, mu boundless and uncontrollably athorized to own effects, la amount of fifty-five million to issue notes to the ammillions more. This make add in addition to this vas spening for an unlimited incadispensation in the charter

y accepted a charter the approach of its e debate upon the that every citizen olic man was under sentiments freely; the charter, numees were, to exempt of speech and writour public affairs; not to be renewed nd charter had forprivate arrangement produced in Conwithout the know-American part of ald not reply to the ) must have known n they accepted the ubject to this known ore, the complaint ty is absurd. That apparent to all who at privileges which enjoyed for twenty s they have already They have been annum, unless when ismanagement; and of three millions of n; and the money some things, instead aired in the process, urds of one hundred e hundred and tweniliar privileges which se profits, the stockul: but, like all perfavored with undue ivilege for a right-a it, as an attack upon prolong their undue round for these combenedictions rather. live out its numbern has forfeited its up at any hour. It e indulgence of those 1, if any one is ignook at the case of the s against Owens and reme Court, and re-> rt of this case, showusury at the rate of Mr. Sergeant, counthe decision of the ground that it would bank to forfeiture; i, nevertheless, given the bank, being conviolation of its charved of its charter, at s should issue against

"Mr. B. resumed. Before I proceed to the consideration of the resolution, I wish to be indulged in adverting to a rule or principle of parliamentary practice, which it is only necessary to read now in order to avoid the possibility of any necessity for recurring to it hereafter. It is the rule which forbids any member to be present-which, in fact, requires him to withdraw-during the discussion of any question in which his private interest may be concerned; and authorizes the expurgation from the Journal of any vote which may have been given under the predicament of an interested motive. I demand that the Secretary of the Senate may read the rule to which I allude. The Secretary read the following rule:

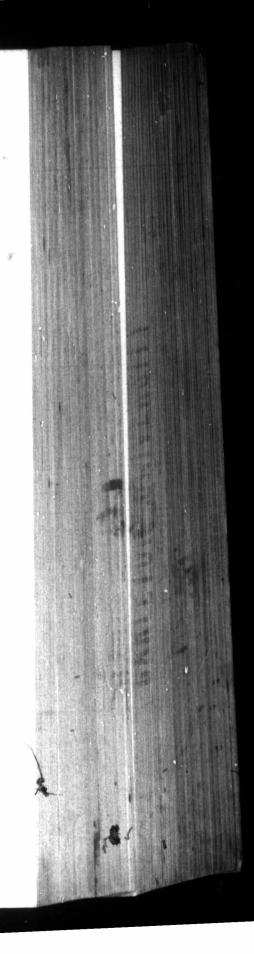

"Where the private interests of a member are concerned in a bill or question, he is to withdraw. And where such an interest has appeared, his voice has been disallowed, even after a division. In a case so contrary, not only to the laws of decency, but to the fundamental principles of the social compact, which denies to any man to be a judge in his own cause, it is for the honor of the House that this rule, of immemorial observance, should be strictly ad-

First: Mr. President, I object to the renewal of the charter of the Bank of the United States, because I look upon the bank as an institution too great and powerful to be tolerated in a government of free and equal laws. Its power is that of the purse; a power more potent than that of the sword; and this power it possesses to a degree and extent that will enable this hank to draw to itself too much of the political power of this Union; and too much of the individual property of the citizens of these States. The money power of the bank is both direct and indirect.

"[The Vice-President here intimated to Mr. Benton that he was out of order, and had not a right to go into the merits of the bank upon the motion which he had made. Mr. Benton begged pardon of the Vice-President, and respectfully insisted that he was in order, and had a right to proceed. He said he was proceeding upon the parliamentary rule of asking leave to bring in a joint resolution, and, in doing which, he had a right to state his reasons, which reasons constituted his speech; that the motion was debatable, and the whole Senate might answer him. The Vice-President then directed Mr. Benton to proceed.]

"Mr. B. resumed. The direct power of the bank is now prodigious, and in the event of the menewal of the charter, must speedily become boundless and uncontrollable. The bank is now authorized to own effects, lands inclusive, to the amount of fifty-five millions of dollars, and to issue notes to the amount of thirty-five millions more. This makes ninety millions;

more notes as Congress, by law, may permit. This opens the door to boundless emissions: for what can be more unbounded than the will and pleasure of successive Congresses? The indirect power of the bank cannot be stated in figures; but it can be shown to be immense. In the first place, it has the keeping of the public moneys, now amounting to twenty-six millions per annum (the Post Office Department included), and the gratuitous use of the undrawn balances, large enough to constitute, in themselves, the capital of a great State bank. In the next place, its promissory notes are receivable, by law, in purchase of all property owned by the United States, and in payment of all debts due them; and this may increase its power to the amount of the annual revenue, by reating a demand for its notes to that amount. In the third place, it wears the name of the United States, and has the federal government for a partner; and this name, and this partnership, identifies the credit of the bank with the credit of the Union. In the fourth place, it is armed with authority to disparage and discredit the notes of other banks, by excluding them from all payments to the United States; and this, added to all its other powers, direct and indirect, makes this institution the uncontrollable monarch of the moneyed system of the Union. To whom is all this power granted? To a company of private individuals, many of them foreigners, and the mass of them residing in a remote and narrow corner of the Union, unconnected by any sympathy with the fertile regions of the Great Valley, in which the natural power of this Union—the power of numbers—will be found to reside long before the renewed term of a second charter would expire. By whom is all this power to be exercised? By a directory of seven (it may be), governed by a majority, of four (it may be); and none of these elected by the people, or responsible to them. Where is it to be exercised? At a single city, distant a thousand miles from some of the States, receiving the produce of none of them (except one); no interest in the welfare of any of them (except one); no commerce with the people; with branches in every State; and every branch subject to the secret and absolute orders of the supreme central head: thus constituting a system of centralism, hostile to the federative principle of our Union, encroaching upon the wealth and power of the States, and organized upon a principle to give the highest effect to the greatest power. This mass of power, thus concentrated, thus ramified, and thus directed, must necessarily become, under a prolonged existence, the absolute monopolist of American money, the sole manufacturer of paper currency, and the sole authority (for authority it will be) to which the federal government, the State governments, the great cities, corporate bodies, merchants, and in addition to this vast sum, there is an traders, and every private citizen, must, of nemening for an unlimited increase: for there is cessity apply, for every loan which their exigendispensation in the charter to issue as many cies may demand. The rich ruleth the poor, and the borrower is the servant of the lender.' Such are the words of Holy Writ; and if the authority of the Bible admitted of corroboration. the history of the world is at hand to give it. But I will not cite the history of the world, but one eminent example only, and that of a nature so high and commanding, as to include all others; and so near and recent, as to be directly applicable to our own situation. I speak of what happened in Great Britain, in the year 1795, when the Bank of England, by a brief and unceremonious letter to Mr. Pitt, such as a miser would write to a prodigal in a pinch, gave the proof of what a great moneyed power could do, and would do, to promote its own interest, in a crisis of national alarm and difficulty. I will read the letter. It is exceedingly short; for after the compliments are omitted, there are but three lines of it. It is, in fact, about as long as a sentence of execution, leaving out the prayer of the judge. It runs thus:

"'It is the wish of the Court of Directors that the Chancellor of the Exchequer would settle his arrangements of finances for the present year, in such manner as not to depend upon any further assistance from them, beyond what is already agreed for.'

"Such were the words of this memorable note, sufficiently explicit and intelligible; but to appreciate it fully, we must know what was the condition of Great Britain at that time? Remember it was the year 1795, and the beginning of that year, than which a more portentous one never opened upon the British empire. The war with the French republic had been raging for two years; Spain had just declared war against Great Britain; Ireland was bursting into rebellion; the fleet in the Nore was in open mutiny; and a cry for the reform of abuses, and the reduction of taxes, resounded through the land. It was a season of alarm and consternation, and of imminent actual danger to Great Britain; and this was the moment which the Bank selected to notify the minister that no more loans were to be expected! What was the effect of this notification? It was to paralyze the government, and to subdue the minister to the purposes of the bank. From that day forth Mr. Pitt became the minister of the bank; and, before two years were out, he had succeeded in bringing all the departments of government, King, Lords, and Commons, and the Privy Council, to his own slavish condition. He stopped the specie payments of the bank, and made its notes the lawful currency of the land. In 1797 he obtained an order in council for this purpose; in the same year an act of parliament to confirm the order for a month, and afterwards a series of acts to continue it for twenty years. This was the reign of the bank. For twenty years it was a dominant power in England; and, during that disastrous period, the public debt was increased about £400,000,000 sterling, equal nearly to two thousand millions of dollars, and that by paper loans from a the year 1795.

bank which, according to its own declarations had not a shilling to lend at the commencement of the period! I omit the rest. I say nothing of the general subjugation of the country banks. the rise in the price of food, the decline in wages the increase of crimes and taxes, the multiplication of lords and beggars, and the frightful demoralization of society. I omit all this. I only seize the prominent figure in the picture, that of a government arrested in the midst of war and danger by the veto of a moneyed corporation; and only permitted to go on upon condition of assuming the odium of stopping specie payments, and sustaining the promissory notes of an insolvent bank, as the lawful currency of the land. This single feature suffices to fix the character of the times; for when the government becomes the 'servant of the lender' the people themselves become its slaves. Cannot the Bank of the United States, if re-chartered act in the same way? It certainly can, and just as certainly will, when time and opportunity shall serve, and interest may prompt. It is to no purpose that gentlemen may come forward, and vaunt the character of the United States Bank, and proclaim it too just and merciful to oppress the state. I must be permitted to repudiate both the pledge and the praise. The security is insufficient, and the encomium belongs to Constantinople. There were enough such in the British Parliament the year before nay, the day before the bank stopped; yet their pledges and praises neither prevented the stoppage, nor made good the damage that ensued. There were gentlemen in our Congress to pledge themselves in 1810 for the then expiring bank, of which the one now existing is a second and deteriorated edition; and if their securityship had been accepted, and the old bank re-chartered, we should have seen this government greeted with a note, about August, 1814-about the time the British were burning this capitol-of the same tenor with the one received by the younger Pitt in the year 1795; for, it is incontestable, that that bank was owned by men who would have glorified in arresting the government, and the war itself, for want of money. Happily, the wisdom and patriotism of Jefferson, under the providence of God, prevented that infamy and ruin, by preventing the renewal of the old bank charter.

Secondly. I object to the continuance of this bank, because its tendencies are dangerous and pernicious to the government and the people.

"What are the tendencies of a great moneyed power, connected with the government, and controlling its fiscal operations? Are they not dangerous to every interest, public and private -political as well as pecuniary? I say they are; and briefly enumerate the heads of each

"1. Such a bank tends to subjugate the gov ernment, as I have already shown in the histo ry of what happened to the British minister

"2. It tends to colli ernment and the bank as has been fully experie frauds upon the peop understanding, called t which the government ed, became liable to pay

3. It tends to create ing public loans, and supplies of paper, for 1 The British debt is born land. That bank was was nothing more nor than an act of Parliar ration of a company of ernment loan. The 1 the interest £80,000; management £4,000. A and origin, the germ debt, which is now £ funded items included). terest of £30,000,000, ar annual management.

"4. It tends to beget an wars by furnishing the m on without recurrence to is the ready example for wars for the restoration of were kept up by loans and of bank paper. The peop interest in these wars, whi £600,000,000 of debt in addition to the supplies rai The kings she put back upo were not able to sit on it. on; twice they tumbled o all that now remains of so and money is, the debt, w axes, which are intolerabl titles of some warriors, and Capet Bourbons, who are r hands.

5. It tends to aggravate t tmes; to make the rich ri morer; to multiply nabobs w deepen and widen the gu Dires from Lazarus. A gre a favorable to great capita minciple of money to favor r wable to small capitalists; he of money to eschew the I mte. It is injurious to the leause they receive no fav rice of the property they mised to the paper maximum main at the silver minimum. 6. It tends to make and to 1 the flux and retlux of paper md sudden contractions, per on which can be repeated li stilential visitations, in ev any years; at every periodic imag millions from the actu merty to the Neptunes who and reflux of paper. The own declarations the commencement est. I say nothing the country banks, he decline in wages, taxes, the multiplind the frightful demit all this. I only in the picture, that the midst of war moneyed corporao go on upon condiof stopping specie e promissory notes he lawful currency ature suffices to fix for when the govrant of the lender,' e its slaves. Cannot ates, if re-chartered, certainly can, and time and opportust may prompt. It men may come forcter of the United it too just and mer-I must be permit-edge and the praise.

VOL. I.—13

and the encomium
There were enough
ent the year before.
stopped; yet their prevented the stoplamage that ensued.
r Congress to pledge
then expiring bank,
sting is a second and f their securityship old bank re-charters government greetist, 1814—about the ing this capitol—of 18t, 1814—about the ing this capitol—of one received by the 1995; for, it is incorrecting the govern-for want of money patriotism of Jeffer-of God, prevented preventing the re-

ter.
e continuance of this s are daugerous and ent and the people.
s of a great moneyed to government, and tons? Are they not t, public and privat e uniary? I say they the heads of each

o subjugate the gov shown in the histo e British minister i

"2 It tends to collusions between the government and the bank in the terms of the loans, as has been fully experienced in England in those frauds upon the people, and insults upon the understanding, called three per cent. loans, in which the government, for about £50 borrow ed, became liable to pay £100.

3. It tends to create public debt, by facilitating public loans, and substituting unlimited supplies of paper, for limited supplies of coin. The British debt is born of the Bank of England. That bank was chartered in 1694, and was nothing more nor less in the beginning, than an act of Parliament for the incorporation of a company of subscribers to a government loan. The loan was £1,200,000; the interest £80,000; and the expenses of management £4,000. And this is the birth and origin, the germ and nucleus of that debt, which is now £900,000,000 (the unfunded items included), which bears an interest of £30,000,000, and costs £260,000 for annual management.

"4. It tends to beget and prolong unnecessary wars, by furnishing the means of carrying them on without recurrence to the people. England is the ready example for this calamity. Her wars for the restoration of the Capet Bourbons were kept up by loans and subsidies created out of bank paper. The people of England had no interest in these wars, which cost them about $\frac{4600,000,000}{600}$ of debt in twenty-five years, in addition to the supplies raised within the year. The kings she put back upon the French throne were not able to sit on it. Twice she put them on; twice they tumbled off in the mud; and all that now remains of so much sacrifice of life and money is, the debt, which is eternal, the taxes, which are intolerable, the pensions and tiles of some warriors, and the keeping of the Capet Bourbons, who are returned upon their

45. It tends to aggravate the inequality of fortnes; to make the rich richer, and the poor porer; to multiply nabobs and paupers; and udeepen and widen the gulf which separates lives from Lazarus. A great moneyed power is favorable to great capitalists; for it is the principle of money to favor money. It is unfamiliate to small capitalists; for it is the principle of money to eschew the needy and unfortunate. It is injurious to the laboring classes; because they receive no favors, and have the pice of the paper maximum, while wages remain at the silvet minimum.

is. Ittends to make and to break fortunes, by the flux and reflux of taper. Profuse issues, and sudden contractions, perform this operation, which can be repeated, like planetary and stilential visitations, in every cycle of so may years; at every periodical return, transfiring millions from the actual possessors of property to the Neptunes who preside over the mand reflux of paper. The last operation of this kind performed by the Bank of England, about five years ago, was described by Mr. Alexander Baring, in the House of Commons, in terms which are entitled to the knowledge and remembrance of American citizens. I will read his description, which is brief, but impressive. After describing the profuse issues of 1823–24, he painted the reaction in the following terms:

"'They, therefore, all at once, gave a sudden jerk to the horse on whose neck they had before suffered the reins to hang loose. They contracted their issues to a considerable extent. The change was at once felt throughout the country. A few days before that, no one knew what to do with his money; now, no one knew where to get it. * * * * The London bankers found it necessary to follow the same course towards their country correspondents, and these again towards their customers, and each individual towards his debtor. The consequence was obvious in the late panic. Every one, desirous to obtain what was due to him, ran to his banker, or to any other on whom he had a claim; and even those who had no immediate use for their money, took it back, and let it lie unemployed in their pockets, thinking it unsafe in others' hands. The effect of this alarm was, that houses which were weak went immediately. Then went second rate houses; and, lastly, houses which were solvent went, because their securities were unavailable. The daily calls to which each individual was subject put it out of his power to assist his neighbor. Men were known to seek for assistance, and that, too, without finding it, who, on examination of their affairs, were proved to be worth 200,000 pounds, -men, too, who held themselves so secure, that, if asked six months before whether they could contemplate such an event, they would have said it would be impossible, unless the sky should fall, or some other event equally improbable should occur.'

"This is what was done in England five years ago, it is what may be done here in every five years to come, if the bank charter is renewed. Sole dispenser of money, it cannot omit the oldest and most obvious means of amassing wealth by the flux and reflux of paper. The game will be in its own hands, and the only answer to be given is that to which I have alluded: 'The Sultan is too just and merciful to abuse his power.'

"Thirdly. I object to the renewal of the charter, on account of the exclusive privileges, and anti-republican monopoly, which it gives to the stockholders. It gives, and that by an act of Congress, to a company of individuals, the exclusive legal privileges:

"1. To carry on the trade of banking upon the revenue and credit, and in the name, of the United States of America.

"2. To pay the revenues of the Union in their own promissory notes.

"3. To hold the moneys of the United States in denosit, without making compensation for the this extraordinary privilege is, that the United nndrawn balances.

Vol. I.—13

"4. To discredit and disparage the notes of other banks, by excluding them from the collection of the federal revenue.

"5. To hold real estate, receive rents, and retain a body of tenantry.

"6. To deal in pawns, merchandise, and bills of exchange.

"7. To establish branches in the States without their consent.

"8. To be exempt from liability on the failure of the bank

'9. To have the United States for a partner. "10. To have foreigners for partners.

"11. To be exempt from the regular administration of justice for the violations of their charter.

"12. To have all these exclasive privileges secured to them as a monopoly, in a pledge of the public faith not to grant the like privileges to any other company.

"These are the privileges, and this the monopoly of the bank. Now, let us examine them, and ascertain their effect and bearing. Let us contemplate the magnitude of the power which they create and ascertain the compatibility of this power with the safety of this republican government, and the rights and interests of its free and equal constituents.

"1. The name, the credit, and the revenues of the United States are given up to the use of this company, and constitute in themselves an immense capital to bank upon. The name of the United States, like that of the King, is a tower of strength; and this strong tower is now an outwork to defend the citadel of a moneyed corporation. The credit of the Union is incalculable; and, of this credit, as going with the name, and being in partnership with the United States, the same corporation now has possession. The revenues of the Union are twenty-six millions of dollars, including the post-office; and all this is so much capital in the hands of the bank, because the revenue is received by it, and is payable in its promissory notes.

"2. To pay the revenues of the United States in their own notes, until Congress, by law, shall otherwise direct. This is a part of the charter. incredible and extraordinary as it may appear. The promissory notes of the bank are to be received in payment of every thing the United States may have to sell—in discharge of every debt due to her until Congress, by law, shall otherwise direct; so that, if this bank, like its prototype in England, should stop payment, its first, and six millions at the end of the second promissory notes would still be receivable at every custom-house, land-office, post-office, and | ible, and I leave every senator to make it: office, by every collector of public moneys, throughout adding, that we have paid $1,469,375 in interest the Union, until Congress shall meet, pass a upon that loan, either to the bank or its transrepealing law, and promulgate the repeal. Other ferrees. This is a strong case; but I have a banks depend upon their credit for the receiva- stronger one. It is known to every body, that bility of their notes; but this favored institution | the United States subscribed seven millions to has law on its side, and a chartered right to the capital stock of the bank, for which she compel the reception of its paper by the federal gave her stock note, bearing an interest of five States becomes virtually bound to stand security for the bank, as much so as if she had signed a bond to that effect; and must stand forward to sustain the institution in all emergencies, in order to save her own revenue. This is what has already happened, some ten years ago in the early progress of the bank, and when the immense aid given it by the federal government enabled it to survive the crisis of its own over. whelming mismanagement.

3. To hold the moneys of the United States in deposit, without making compensation for the use of the undrawn balances.—This is a right which I deny; but, as the bank claims it and, what is more material, enjoys it; and as the people of the United States have suffered to a vast extent in consequence of this claim and enjoyment, I shall not hesitate to set it down to the account of the bank. Let us then examine the value of this privilege, and its effect upon the interest of the community; and in the first place, let us have a full and accurate view of the amount of these undrawn balances. from the establishment of the bank to the ure sent day. Here it is! Look! Read!

"See, Mr. President, what masses of money, and always on hand. The paper is covered all over with millions: and yet, for all these vast sums, no interest is allowed; no compensation is made to the United States. The Bank of England, for the undrawn balances of the public money, has made an equitable compensation to the British government; namely, a permanent loan of half a million sterling, and a tenporary loan of three millions for twenty years. without interest. Yet, when I moved for a like compensation to the Untied States the proposition was utterly rejected by the Finance Committee, and treated as an attempt to violate the charter of the bank. At the same time it is incontestable, that the United States have been borrowing these undrawn balances from the bank, and paying an interest upon their own money. I think we can identify one of these loans. Let us try. In May, 1824, Congress authorized a loan of five millions of dollars to pay the awards under the treaty with Spain commonly called the Florida treaty. The bank of the United States took that loan, and paid the money for the United States in January and March, 1825. In looking over the statement of undrawn balances, it will be seen that ther amounted to near four millions at the end of the quarter of that year. The inference is irresistgovernment. The immediate consequence of per cent. per annum. I have a statement from the Register of the Treasury pears that, up to the 30th da nited States had paid four dred and twenty-five thousar est upon that note; when i statement of balances exhibit States, for the whole period est was accruing, had the hall once the double, of these seve hands of the bank. This is a that of the five million loan strongest. The strongest car year 1817, when the bank we the United States owed, amo sum of about fourteen million ters bearing an interest of 11 the same year, the commission ing fund were authorized by a to purchase that stock at six which was then its market p authority, the amount of about a half was purchased; the re ing to about thirteen million has continued unpurchased t after costing the United State lions in interest since 1817, the about four millions in value from sixty-five to nearly ni here is a clear loss of ten milli the United States. In 1817 sh off thirteen millions and a quar eight millions and a half of do maying six millions of interest. twelve millions and a half to debt. By referring to the state balances, it will be seen that th had during the whole year 1 sem of above ten millions o hands of the bank, being a mi more than enough to have boug of the three per cent. stock. therefore, naturally comes up, applied to the redemption of th lions and a quarter, according contained in the act of Congres Certainly the bank needed the was just getting into operation, run to escape bankruptcy abou any bank that ever was saved fi destruction. This is the large: we have sustained, on account ing the bank with the gratuito rast deposits. But, to show n I will now state the smallest that has come within my know ase of the bonus of fifteen hu dollars which the bank was to pa States, in three equal instalmen chase of its charter. Nominally been paid, but out of what mone out of our own; for the statem money was there, and further, sl still there; for, on the 30th day which is the latest return, t $2,550,664 in the hands of th nited States had paid four millions seven hunters bearing an interest of three per cent. In to purchase that stock at sixty-five per cent.,

hat the United o stand security ne had signed a and forward to emergencies, in This is what n years ago, in and when the ral government of its own over-

United States inpensation for ces.—This is a bank claims it, joys it; and as s have suffered e of this claim sitate to set it k. Let us then ilege, and its efommunity; and. ull and accurate drawn balances. bank to the pre-Read!

nasses of money. or is covered all r all these vast no compensation . The Bank of ices of the puble compensation ramely, a permarling, and a tenor twenty years, I moved for a tied States, the 1 by the Finance attempt to vio-At the same ie United States ndrawn balances in interest upon can identify one 1 May, 1824, Connillions of dollars eaty with Spain, reaty. The bank t loan, and paid s in January and the statement of seen that they at the end of the nd of the second erence is irresistto make it; only 69.375 in interest ank or its transe; but I have a every body, that seven millions to ik, for which she n interest of fire a statement from the Register of the Treasury, from which it ap- is above $750,000 more than the amount of pears that, up to the 30th day of June last, the the bonus.

"One word more upon the subject of these dred and twenty-five thousand dollars in interbalances. It is now two years since I made an est upon that note; when it is proved by the effort to repeal the 4th section of the Sinking statement of balances exhibited, that the United Fund act of 1817; a section which was intended States, for the whole period in which that interto limit the amount of surplus money which est was accruing, had the half, or the whole, and might be kept in the treasury, to two millions once the double, of these seven millions in the of dollars; but, by the power of construction, hands of the bank. This is a stronger case than was made to authorize the keeping of two milthat of the five million loan, but it is not the lions in addition to the surplus. I wished to strongest. The strongest case is this: in the repeal this section, which had thus been conyear 1817, when the bank went into operation. strued into the reverse of its intention, and to the United States owed, among other debts, a revive the first section of the Sinking Fund act sum of about fourteen millions and three-quarof 1790, which directed the whole of the surplus on hand to be applied, at the end of each year, the same year, the commissioners of the sink- to the payment of the public debt. My argument ing fund were authorized by an act of Congress was this: that there was no necessity to keep any surplus; that the revenue, coming in as fast which was then its market price. Under this as it went out, was like a perennial fountain. authority, the amount of about one million and which you might drain to the last drop, and not a half was purchased; the remainder, amountexhaust; for the place of the last drop would be ing to about thirteen millions and a quarter, supplied the instant it was out. And I suphas continued unpurchased to this day; and, ported this reasoning by a reference to the after costing the United States about six milannual treasury reports, which always exhibit lions in interest since 1817, the stock has risen a surplus of four or five millions; and which about four millions in value; that is to say, were equally in the treasury the whole year from sixty-five to nearly ninety-five. Now, round, as on the last day of every year. here is a clear loss of ten millions of dollars to was the argument, which in fact availed nothing; the United States. In 1817 she could have paid but now I have mathematical proof of the truth off thirteen millions and a quarter of debt, with of my position. Look at this statement of eight millions and a half of dollars: now, after balances; look for the year 1819, and you will paring six millions of interest, it would require find but three hundred thousand dollars on hand twelve millions and a half to pay off the same for that year; look still lower for 1821, and you debt. By referring to the statement of undrawn will find this balance but one hundred and eightybalances, it will be seen that the United States two thousand dollars. And what was the conhad during the whole year 1817, an average sequence? Did the Government stop? Did sem of above ten millions of dollars in the the wheels of the State chariot cease to turn hands of the bank, being a million and a half round in those years for want of treasury oil? more than enough to have bought in the whole Not at all. Every thing went on as well as of the three per cent. stock. The question, before; the operations of the treasury were as therefore, naturally comes up, why was it not perfect and regular in those two years of insigapplied to the redemption of these thirteen mil- nificant balances, as in 1817 and 1818, when five lions and a quarter, according to the authority and ten millions were on hand. This is proof; contained in the act of Congress of that year? this is demonstration; it is the indubitable Certainly the bank needed the money; for it evidence of the senses which concludes arguwas just getting into operation, and was as hard ment, and dispels uncertainty; and, as my run to escape bankruptcy about that time, as proposal for the repeal of the 4th Section of the any bank that ever was saved from the brink of | Sinking Fund act of 1817 was enacted into a destruction. This is the largest injury which law at the last session of Congress, upon the we have sustained, on account of accommodat- recommendation of the Secretary of the Treaing the bank with the gratuitous use of these sury, a vigilant and exemplary officer, I trust ust deposits. But, to show myself impartial, that the repeal will be acted upon, and that the I will now state the smallest case of injury bank platter will be wiped as clean of federal that has come within my knowledge: it is the money in 1831, as it was in 1821. Such cleanuse of the bonus of fifteen hundred thousand taking from that dish will allow two or three dollars which the bank was to pay to the United millions more to go to the reduction of the public States, in three equal instalments, for the pur- debt; and there can be no danger in taking the chase of its charter. Nominally, this bonus has last dollar, as reason and experience both prove. ben paid, but out of what moneys? Certainly But, to quiet every apprehension on this point, out of our own; for the statement shows our to silcnee the last suggestion of a possibility of money was there, and further, shows that it is any temporary deficit, I recur to a provision still there; for, on the 30th day of June last, contained in two different clauses in the bank which is the latest return, there was still charter, copied from an amendment in the charter $2550,664 in the hands of the bank, which of the Bank of England, and expressly made, at the instance of the ministry, to meet the contingency of a temporary deficiency in the annual revenue. The English provision is this: that the government may borrow of the bank half a million sterling, at any time, without a special act of parliament to authorize it. The provision in our charter is the same, with the single substitution of dollars for pounds. It is, in words and intention, a standing authority to borrow that limited sum, for the obvious purpose of preventing a constant keeping of a sum of money in hand as a reserve, to meet contingencies which hardly ever occur. This contingent authority to effect a small loan has often been used in England-in the United States, never; possibly, because there has been no occasion for it; probably, because the clause was copied mechanically from the English charter, and without the perception of its practical bearing. Be this as it may, it is certainly a wise and prudent provision, such as all governments should, at all times, be clothed with.

"If any senator thinks that I have exaggerated the injury suffered by the United States, on account of the uncompensated masses of public money in the hands of the bank, I am now going to convince him that he is wrong. I am going to prove to him that I have understated the case; that I have purposely kept back a large part of it; and that justice requires a further development. The fact is, that there are two different deposits of public money in the bank; one in the name of the Treasurer of the United States, the other in the name of disbursing officers. The annual average of the former has been about three and a half millions of dollars, and of this I have said not a word. But the essential character of both deposits is the same; they are both the property of the United States; both permanent; both available as so much capital to the bank; and both uncompensated.

I have not ascertained the average of these deposits since 1817, but presume it may equal the amount of that bonus of one million five hundred thousand dollars for which we sold the charter, and which the Finance Committee of the Senate compliments the bank for paying in three, instead of seventeen, annual instalments; and shows how much interest they lost by doing so. Certainly, this was a disadvantage to the

"Mr. President, it does seem to me that there is something ominous to the bank in this contest for compensation on the undrawn balances. It is the very way in which the struggle began in the British Parliament which has ended in the overthrow of the Bank of England. It is the way in which the struggle is beginning here. My resolutions of two and three years ago are the causes of the speech which you now hear; and, as I have reason to believe, some others more worthy of your hearing, which will come at the proper time. The question of compensation for balances is now mixing itself up here, as in England, with the question of renewing that to many of them. Subjugation, in prefer the charter; and the two, acting together, will fall with combined weight upon the public mind and certainly eventuate here as they did there

"4. To discredit and disparage the notes of all other banks, by excluding them from the collection of the federal revenue. This results from the collection—no, not the collection, but the receipt of the revenue having been communicated to the bank, and along with it the virtual execution of the joint resolution of 1816, to regulate the collection of the federal revenue. The execution of that resolution was intended to be vested in the Secretary of the Treasury-a disinterested arbiter between rival banks; but it may be considered as virtually devolved upon the Bank of the United States, and powerfully increases the capacity of that institution to destroy, or subjugate, all other banks. This power to disparage the notes of all other banks. is a power to injure them; and, added to all the other privileges of the Bank of the United States. is a power to destroy them! If any one doubts, this assertion, let him read the answers of the president of the bank to the questions put to him by the chairman of the Finance committee, These answers are appended to the committee's report of the last session in foror of the bank and expressly declare the capacity of the federal bank to destroy the State banks. The worthy chairman [Mr. Smith, of Md.] puts this question; 'Has the bank at any time oppressed any of the State banks.' The president Mr. Biddle], answers, as the whole world would answer to a question of oppression, that it never had; and this response was as much as the interrogatory required. But it did not content the president of the bank; he chose to go further, and to do honor to the institution over which he presided, by showing that it was as just and generous as it was rich and powerful. He therefore, adds the following words, for which as a seeker after evidence, to show the alarming and dangerous character of the bank, I return him my unfeigned thanks: 'There are very few banks which might not have been destroyed by an exertion of the power of the bank. "This is enough! proof enough! not for me alone, but for all who are unwilling to see a moneyed domination set up-a moneyed oligarchy established in this land, and the entire Union subjected to its sovereign will. The power to destroy all other banks is admitted and declared; the inclination to do so is known to all rational beings to reside with the power! Policy may restrain the destroying faculties for the present; but they exist; and will come forth when interest prompts and policy permits They have been exercised; and the general prostration of the Southern and Western banks attest the fact. They will be exercised (the charter being renewed), and the remaining State banks will be swept with the besom of destruction. Not that all will have their signs knocked down, and their doors closed up. Far worse than ence to destruction, will be th Every planet must have its tyranny must have its inst knight is followed by his squir of beasts, the royal quadruped. dues the forest, must have a si animal to spring his prey. mperial bank, when installed midable and lasting power. T spared by the sword, will be r roke. They will become subc the great machine. Their place subordination will be one degree of the legitimate branches; th perform the work which it wou outable for the legitimate bran This will be the fate of the Sta are allowed to keep up their s open their doors; and thus the nower of the Union would fall in one single institution, whose invisible mandates, emanating would pervade the Union, giving money according to its own so absolute pleasure. To a favore individual, or a class of individu the central power, the golden stre would flow direct. To all such mandates of the High Director s the fabled god made his terrest and desire, enveloped in a showe to others-to those not favored hated-the mandates of this would be as 'the planetary plagi its poison in the sick air; ' de death to all who minister to their a state of things! What a cond federacy of States! What grou and terrible apprehension, when mer of such vast extent, so man States, so many rival commercial sectional jealousy, such violent p such fierce contests for power, th but one moneyed tribunal, before rival and contending elements mu: one single dispenser of money, to citizen, every trader, every me manufacturer, every planter, ever every city, every State, and the f ment itself, must apply, in every the most indispensable loan! an hoe of the fact, that, in every e man rights, the great moneyed i the world have uniformly been for dkings and nobles, against the live of the people:

5. To hold real estate, receive tain a body of tenantry. This pr tile to the nature of our republicar and inconsistent with the nature banking institution. Republic olders, not landlords and tenants the corporators in this bank, and last India Company, there is not: ed body of landlords in any cour together, will ne public mind ey did there. he notes of all om the collecis results from ction, but the communicated ne virtual exe-316, to regulate nue. The exentended to be Treasury-a al banks; but nally devolved tes, and powert institution to banks. This ill other banks, added to all the e United States. any one doubts answers of the restions out to ince committee. be committee's or of the bank. y of the federal s. The worthy outs this quese oppressed any president [Mr. e world would on, that it never s much as the did not content ose to go further, tion over which was as just and powerful. He, ords, for which > ere are very few en destroyed by bank. rough! not for swilling to see a a moneyed oli-1, and the entire eign will. The nks is admitted do so is known with the power! ving faculties for and will come d policy permits and the general d Western banks e exercised (the e remaining State resom of destruceir signs knocked ow the alarming

e bank, I return

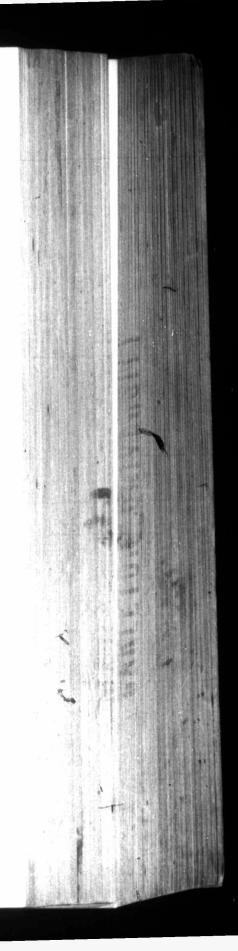

Far worse than gation, in preferinvisible mandates, emanating from a centre, money according to its own sovereign will and the central power, the golden stream of Pactalus mandates of the High Directory would come as the fabled god made his terrestrial visit of love and desire, enveloped in a shower of gold. But hoe of the fact, that, in every contest for human rights, the great moneyed institutions of of the people:

the corporators in this bank, and in the British marshal, sole bidder and sole purchaser.

The base is a sole bidder and sole purchaser.

What is the legal effect of this vast capacity to acquire, and this legal power to retain, real

one to destruction, will be the fate of many. face of the earth whose laws emanate from a Reery planet must have its satellites; every legislative body. Banks are instituted to progranny must have its instruments; every mote trade and industry, and to aid the governwight is followed by his squire; even the king ment and its citizens with loans of money. The of beasts, the royal quadruped, whose roar sub- whole argument in favor of banking—every ardues the forest, must have a small, subservient gument in favor of this bank—rests upon that animal to spring his prey. Just so of this idea. No one, when this charter was granted, mperial bank, when installed anew in its for- presumed to speak in favor of incorporating a midable and lasting power. The State banks, society of landlords, especially foreign landlords, grared by the sword, will be passed under the to buy lands, build houses, rent tenements, and They will become subordinate parts in retain tenantry. Loans of money was the obthe great machine. Their place in the scale of | ject in view, and the purchase of real estate is gbordination will be one degree below the rank incompatible with that object. Instead of reof the legitimate branches; their business, to maining bankers, the corporators may turn land perform the work which it would be too disre- speculators: instead of having money to lend, ntable for the legitimate branches to perform. They may turn you out tenants to vote. To an ap-This will be the fate of the State banks which plication for a loan, they may answer, and answer are allowed to keep up their signs, and to set truly, that they have no money on hand; and the open their doors; and thus the entire moneyed reason may be, that they have laid it out in land. nower of the Union would fall into the hands of This seems to be the case at present. A com one single institution, whose inexorable and mittee of the legislature of Pennsylvania has just applied for a loan; the president of the would pervade the Union, giving or withholding bank, nothing loth to make a loan to that great state, for twenty years longer than the charter absolute pleasure. To a favored State, to an has to exist, expresses his regret that he canindividual, or a class of individuals, favored by not lend but a limited and inadequate sum. The funds of the institution, he says, will not permit would flow direct. To all such the munificent it to advance more than eight millions of dollars. And why? because it has invested three millions in real estato! To this power to hold real estate, is superadded the means to acquire it. The bank to others-to those not favored-and to those is now the greatest moneyed power in the hated-the mandates of this same directory Union; in the event of the renewal of its charwould be as 'the planetary plague which hangs | ter, it will soon be the sole one. Sole dispenser is noison in the sick air; death to them! of money, it will soon be the chief owner of prodeath to all who minister to their wants! What perty. To unlimited means of acquisition, would a state of things! What a condition for a con- be united perpetuity of tenure; for a corporation feleracy of States! What grounds for alarm never dies, and is free from the operation of the and terrible apprehension, when in a confede- laws which govern the descent and distribution of per of such vast extent, so many independent real estate in the hands of individuals. The lim-Sides so many rival commercial cities, so much litations in the charter are vain and illusory. sectional jealousy, such violent political parties, They insult the understanding, and mock the such fierce contests for power, there should be credulity of foolish believers. The bank is first but one moneyed tribunal, before which all the limited to such acquisitions of real estate as are real and contending elements must appear! but necessary to its own accommodation; then comes one single dispenser of money, to which every a proviso to undo the limitation, so far as it condizen, every trader, every merchant, every cerns purchases upon its own mortgages and manufacturer, every planter, every corporation, executions! This is the limitation upon the every city, every State, and the federal govern- capacity of such an institution to acquire real ment itself, must apply, in every emergency, for estate. As if it had any thing to do but to make the most indispensable loan! and this, in the loans upon mortgages, and push executions upon judgments! Having all the money, it would be the sole lender; mortgages being the road to theworld have uniformly been found on the side loans, all borrowers must travel that road. okings and nobles, against the lives and liberties. When birds enough are in the net, the fowler draws his string, and the heads are wrung off. 5. To hold real estate, receive rents, and re- So when mortgages enough are taken, the loans tina body of tenantry. This privilege is hos- are called in; discounts cease; curtailments are be to the nature of our republican government, made; failures to pay ensue; writs issue; adinconsistent with the nature and design of judgments and executions follow; all the mortbanking institution. Republics want free-blers not landlords and tenants; and, except torney of the bank appears at the elbow of the of mortmain? And of a kind more odious and I been answered, in the towns and cities referred dangerous than that mortmain of the church which it baffled the English Parliament so many ages to abolish. The mortmain of the church of the military scourge of Egypt. If this is done was a power in an ecclesiastical corporation to hold real estate, independent of the laws of distribution and descent: the mortmain of the bank the bank is on its best behavior, what may she is a power in a lay corporation to do the same thing. The evil of the two tenures is identical; the difference between the two corporations is no more than the difference between parsons and money-changers; the capacity to do mischief incomparably the greatest on the part of the lay corporators. The church could only operate upon the few who were thinking of the other world: the bank, upon all who are immersed in addition to all its other attributes, is an incorpothe business or the pleasures of this. The means of the church were nothing but prayers; the means of the bank is money! The church received what it could beg from dying sinners; the bank may extort what it pleases from the whole living generation of the just and unjust. Such is the parallel between the mortmain of the two corporations. They both end in monopoly of estates and perpetuity of succession; and the bank is the greatest monopolizer of the two. Monopolies and perpetual succession are the bane of republics. Our ancestors took care to provide against them, by abolishing entails and primogeniture. Even the glebes of the church, lean and few as they were in most of the States, fell under the republican principle of limited tenures. All the States abolished the anti-republican tenures; but Congress re-establishes them, and in bank is at liberty to act the pawnbroker and a manner more dangerous and offensive than before the Revolution. They are now given, not generally, but to few; not to natives only, but your stores, gentlemen! They must do it or to foreigners also; for foreigners are large owners of this bank. And thus, the principles of tion on the day, the pawn is forfeited, and the the Revolution sink before the privileges of an bank takes possession. On the other hand it incorporated company. The laws of the States may lay out its rents for goods; it may sell as fall before the mandates of a central directory real estate, now worth three millions of dollars in Philadelphia. Foreigners become the land- for goods. Thus the bank is an incorporate lords of free-born Americans; and the young company of pawnbrokers and merchants, as well and flourishing towns of the United States are as an incorporation of landlords and land-species verging to the fate of the family boroughs which laters; and this derogatory privilege, like the belong to the great aristocracy of England.

"Let no one say the bank will not avail itself | charter of 1694. Bills of exchange are also subof its capacity to amass real estate. The fact is, jected to the traffic of this bank. It is a traffic it has already done so. I know towns, yea, unconnected with the trade of banking, danger cities, and could name them, if it might not seem ous for a great bank to hold and now operating invidious from this elevated theatre to make a most injuriously in the South and West. It's public reference to their misfortunes, in which the process which drains these quarters of the this bank already appears as a dominant and Union of their gold and silver, and stifles the engrossing proprietor. I have been in places growth of a fair commerce in the products of the where the answers to inquiries for the owners country. The merchants, to make remittance of the most valuable tenements, would remind buy bills of exchange from the branch banks you of the answers given by the Egyptians to instead of buying produce from the farmers similar questions from the French officers, on The bills are paid for in gold and silver; and their march to Cairo. You recollect, no doubt, eventually, the gold and silver are sent to the sir, the dialogue to which I allude: 'Who mother bank, or to the branches in the Easten owns that palace?' 'The Mameluke;' 'Who cities, either to meet these bills, or to replaced this country house?' 'The Mameluke;' 'These their coffers, and to furnish vast loans to favorite gardens?' 'The Mameluke;' "That field covered States or individuals. The bills sell cheap, sy estate? Is it not the creation of a new species with rice?' 'The Mameluke.'-And thus have to, with the single exception of the name of the Bank of the United States substituted for that under the first charter, what may not be expected under the second? If this is done while not do when freed from all restraint and delivered up to the boundless cupidity and remoreless exactions of a moneyed corporation?

"6. To deal in pawns, merchandise, and bills of exchange. I hope the Senate will not require me to read dry passages from the charter to prove what I say. I know I speak a thing nearly incredible when I allege that this bank, in rated company of pawnbrokers! The allegation staggers belief, but a reference to the charter will dispel incredulity. The charter, in the first part forbids a traffic in merchandise; in the after part, parmits it. For truly this instrument seems to have been framed upon the principles of contraries; one principle making limitations. and the other following after with provisos to undo them. Thus is it with lands, as I have iust showe; thus is it with merchandise as I now show. The bank is forbidden to deal in merchandise-proviso, unless in the case of goods pledged for money lent, and not redeemed to the day; and, proviso, again, unless for goods which shall be the proceeds of its lands. With the help of these two provisos, it is clear that the limitation is undone; it is clear that the merchant, to any extent that it pleases. It may say to all the merchants who want loans. Pledge do worse; and, if any accident prevents relengothers, is copied from the old Bank of England a fraction of one per cent.; tl a good remittance to the merch the operation is doubly good : of one per cent. on bills of e profit to the institution which business, while the collection the branches of all the hard n try is a still more considerable this system, the best of the \ do not speak of those which h and sunk under the weight opinion, but those which de confidence—sunk ten years age tem, the entire West is now u general, and invisible drain of and, if not quickly arrested. soon be, so far as the preciou orned, no more than the em molated victim. 47. To establish branches States without their consent. their resistance. No one can ing and injurious tendency of derogates from the sovereig tramples upon her laws; inju and commerce; lays open he the attacks of centralism; imp of her citizens; and fastens; bosom to suck out her gold It derogates from her sovereis central institution may imp branches upon the State with and in defiance of her resistar ready been done. The State four years ago, by a resolve o remonstrated against the intri upon her. She protested as Was the will of the State res contrary, was not a branch forced upon her, as if, by the s action, to make a striking and lay of the omnipotence of tl mility of the State ? 2. It tr aws; because, according to the Surreme Court, the bank and a wholly independent of State le tramples on them again, becar foreigners to hold lands and ter State, contrary to the laws of and because it admits of the n which is condemned by all the in the Union. 3. It injures her the bank stock, under the depreme Court, is not liable to thus, foreigners, and non-resic who monopolize the money o hold its best lands and town the in its elections, and suc and silver, and perform no are exempted from paying taxe to their wealth, for the suppe whose laws they trample up benefits they usurp. 4. It sul to the dangerous manœuvres a tentralism, by means of the t

And thus have nd cities referred the name of the tituted for that If this is done y not be expectis done while what may she raint and deliverand remoreless tion?

randise, and bills e will not require the charter to eak a thing nearat this bank, in es, is an incorpo-The allegation o the charter will r, in the first part, ise; in the after this instrument on the principles king limitations, with provises to lands, as I have merchandise, as I idden to deal in in the case of and not redeemed i, unless for goods its lands. With s, it is clear that is clear that the pawnbroker and t pleases. It may Mant loans. Pledge v must do it or prevents redemp forfeited, and the he other hand it s: it may sell to s an incorporated nerchants, as well is and land-speciprivilege, like the Bank of England range are also subnk. It is a traffic banking, dangerand now operating and West. It is e quarters of the er, and stitles the he products of the make remittances. the branch banks, from the farmers, 1 and silver; aid, er are sent to the hes in the Eastern

lls, or to replensh

st loans to favorite

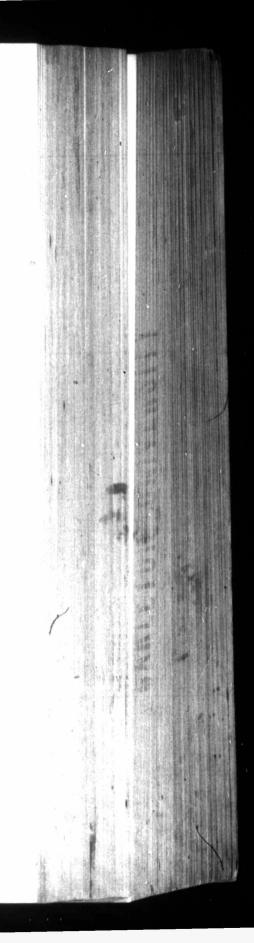

lls sell cheap, say

the operation is doubly good; for even the half of one per cent. on bills of exchange is a great profit to the institution which monopolizes that husiness, while the collection and delivery to the branches of all the hard money in the county is a still more considerable advantage. Under this system, the best of the Western banks-1 do not speak of those which had no foundations. and sunk under the weight of neighborhood opinion, but those which deserved favor and confidence—sunk ten years ago. Under this system, the entire West is now undergoing a silent, general, and invisible drain of its hard money; and if not quickly arrested, these States will soon be, so far as the precious metals are congrand, no more than the empty skin of an immolated victim.

7. To establish branches in the different States without their consent, and in defiance of their resistance. No one can deny the degrading and injurious tendency of this privilege. It derogates from the sovereignty of a State; tramples upon her laws; injures her revenue and commerce; lays open her government to the attacks of centralism; impairs the property of her citizens; and fastens a vampire on her bosom to suck out her gold and silver. 1. It derogates from her sovereignty, because the central institution may impose its intrusive branches upon the State without her consent, and in defiance of her resistance. This has already been done. The State of Alabama, but four years ago, by a resolve of her legislature. upon her. She protested against the favor. Was the will of the State respected? On the contrary, was not a branch instantaneously forced upon her, as if, by the suddenness of the action, to make a striking and conspicuous display of the omnipotence of the bank, and the nullity of the State? 2. It tramples upon her hws; because, according to the decision of the Sureme Court, the bank and all its branches are wholly independent of State legislation; and it foreigners to hold lands and tenements in every State, contrary to the laws of many of them; and because it admits of the mortmain tenure, which is condemned by all the republican States in the Union. 3. It injures her revenue, because the bank stock, under the decision of the Suthus, foreigners, and non-resident Americans, who monopolize the money of the State, who hold its best lands and town lots, who medand silver, and perform no military duty, are exempted from paying taxes, in proportion whose laws they trample upon, and whose centralism, by means of the tenants, debtors, assets are never assez, that is to say, enough, afraction of one per cent.; they are, therefore, bank officers, and bank money, which the cenagood remittance to the merchant. To the bank tral directory retain in the State, and may embody and direct against it in its elections, and in its legislative and judicial proceedings. 5. It tends to impair the property of the citizens, and, in some instances, that of the States, by destroying the State banks in which they have invested their money. 6. It is injurious to the commerce of the States (I speak of the Western States), by substituting a trade in bills of exchange, for a trade in the products of the country. 7. It fastens a vampire on the bosom of the State, to suck away its gold and silver, and to co-operate with the course of trade, of federal legislation, and of exchange, in draining the South and West of all their hard money. The Southern States, with their thirty millions of annual exports in cotton, rice, and tobacco, and the Western States, with their twelve millions of provisions and tobacco exported from New Orleans, and five millions consumed in the South, and on the lower Mississippi,—that is to say, with three fifths of the marketable productions of the Union, are not able to sustain thirty specie paying banks; while the minority of the States north of the Potomac, without any of the great staples for export, have above four hundred of such banks. These States, without rice, without cotton, without tobacco, without sugar, and with less flour and provisions, to export, are saturated with gold and silver; while the Southern and Western States, with all the real sources of wealth, are in a state of the utmost destitution. For this calamitous reversal of the natural order of things, the Bank remonstrated against the intrusion of a branch of the United States stands forth pre-eminently culpable. Yes, it is pre-eminently culpable and a statement in the 'National Intelligencer' of this morning (a paper which would overstate no fact to the prejudice of the bank), cites and proclaims the fact which proves this culpability. It dwells, and exults, on the quantity of gold and silver in the vaults of the United States Bank. It declares that institution to be 'overburdened' with gold and silver; and well may it be so overburdened, since it has lifted the load tramples on them again, because it authorizes entirely from the South and West. It calls these metals 'a drug' in the hands of the bank; that is to say, an article for which no purchaser can' be found. Let this 'drug,' like the treasures of the dethroned Dev of Algiers, be released from the dominion of its keeper; let a part go back to the South and West, and the bank will no preme Court, is not liable to taxation. And longer complain of repletion, nor they of de-

"8. Exemption of the stockholders from individua, tiability on the failure of the bank. This to in its elections, and suck out its gold privilege derogates from the common law, is contrary to the principle of partnerships, and injurious to the rights of the community. It is a to their wealth, for the support of the State peculiar privilege granted by law to these corporators, and exempting them from liability, except benefits they usurp. 4. It subjects the State in their corporate capacity, and to the amount of to the dangerous manœuvres and intrigues of the assets of the corporation. Unhappily these when occasion comes for recurring to them. When a bank fails, its assets are always less than its debts; so that responsibility fails the instant that liability accrues. Let no one say that the bank of the United States is too great to fail. One greater than it, and its prototype. has failed, and that in our own day, and for twenty years at a time: the Bank of England failed in 1797, and the Bank of the United States was on the point of failing in 1819. The same cause, namely, stockjobbing and overtrading, carried both to the brink of destruction; the same means saved both, namely, the name, the credit, and the helping hand of the governments which protected them. Yes, the Bank of the United States may fail; and its stockholders live in splendor upon the princely estates acquired with its notes, while the industrious classes. who hold these notes, will be unable to receive a shilling for them. This is unjust. It is a vice in the charter. The true principle in banking requires each stockholder to be liable to the amount of his shares; and subjects him to the summary action of every holder on the failure of the institution, till he has paid up the amount of his subscription. This is the true principle. It has prevailed in Scotland for the last century. and no such thing as a broken bank has been known there in all that time.

"9. To have the United States for a partner. Sir, there is one consequence, one result of all partnerships between a government and individuals, which should of itself, and in a mere mercantile point of view, condemn this association on the part of the federal government. It is the principle which puts the strong partner forward to bear the burden whenever the concern is in danger. The weaker members flock to the strong partner at the approach of the storm, and the necessity of venturing more to save what he has already staked, leaves him no alternative. He becomes the Atlas of the firm. and bears all upon his own shoulders. This is the principle: what is the fact? Why, that the United States has already been compelled to sustain the federal bank; to prop it with her revenues and its credit in the trials and crisis of its early administration. I pass over other instances of the damage suffered by the United States on account of this partnership; the immense standing deposits for which we receive no compensation; the loan of five millions of our own money, for which we have paid a million and a half in interest; the five per cent. stock note, on which we have paid our partners four million seven hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars in interest; the loss of ten millions on the three per cent, stock, and the ridiculous catastrophe of the miserable bonus, which has been paid to us with a fraction of our own money: I pass over all this, and come to the point of a direct loss, as a partner, in the dividends upon the stock itself. Upon this naked point of profit and loss, to be decided by a rule in arithmetic, we have sustained a direct and heavy loss. The stock held by the United States, as every body knows, was subscribed, not paid. It was a stock note, deposited for seven millions of dollars, bearing an interest of five per cent. The inducement to this subscription was the seductive conception that, by paying five per cent on its note, the United States would clear four or five per cent. in getting a dividend of eight or ten. This was the inducement; now for the realization of this fine conception. Let us see it. Here it is; an official return from the Register of the Treasury of interest paid, and of dividends received. The account stands thus:

Interest paid by the United States, $4,725,000 Dividends received by the United States, 4,629,496

Loss to the United States,

$95.574

"Disadvantageous as this partnership must be to the United States in a moneyed point of view there is a far more grave and serious aspect under which to view it. It is the political aspect resulting from the union between the bank and the government. This union has been tried in England, and has been found there to be just as disastrous a conjunction as the union between church and state. It is the conjunction of the lender and the borrower, and Holy Writ has told us which of these categories will be master of the other. But suppose they agree to drop rivalry, and unite their resources. Suppose they combine, and make a push for political power: how great is the mischief which they may not accomplish! But, on this head, I wish to use the language of one of the brightest patriots of Great Britain; one who has shown himself in these modern days, to be the worthy successor of those old iron barons whose patriotism commanded the unpurchasable eulogium of the elder Pitt. I speak of Sir William Pulteney, and his speech against the Bank of England, in 1797.

"THE SPEECH :- EXTRACT.

"I have said enough to show that government has been rendered dependent on the bank. and more particularly so in the time of war; and though the bank has not yet fallen into the hands of ambitious men, yet it is evident that it might in such hands, assume a power sufficient to control and overawe, not only the ministers, but king, lords, and commons. * * * * * As the bank has thus become dangerous to government, it might, on the other hand, by uniting with an ambitious minister, become the mean of establishing a fourth estate, sufficient to in volve this nation in irretrievable slavery, and ought, therefore, to be dreaded as much as a cer tain East India bill was justly dreaded, at a pe riod not very remote. I will not sav that the present minister (the younger Pitt), by en deavoring, at this crisis, to take the Bank England under his protection, can have an view to make use, hereafter, of that engine t perpetuate his own power, and to enable him domineer over our constitusupposed, it would only sitertain a very different tradeavoring to overset a rivathem when intending to selves. My object is to against all risk either from to government, or as the men."

the Union from all chance hank. I wish to provide as well as its enmity-ag its hug, as well as from i provide against all risk, an fthis risk and hazard were muntered by King, Lords Great Britain, they must c to be encountered by the p States, who are but common "10. To have foreigners Mr. President, will be a stra in the West. The downrigh of that unsophisticated region mean what they signify, and the United States' is the I States. How great then mu ment to learn that this belie tion, and that this bank (its contrary notwithstanding) is hank of foreigners as it is of t ment. Here I would like to ist of the names and natio almost incredible fact. But pinch. It is the report of Ways and Means, in the Hou ires, for the last session of Coport admits that foreigners of of the stock of this bank; inows that the federal governmillions also.

except to public documents.

these I learn as much as will

"Thus it is proved that deply interested in this bar States itself. In the event of marter they will be much mor d than at present; for a pro the stock to two hundred and ettled state of things in Eu them to make great investme purpose to say that the fore annot be voters or directors. that suggestion is this: the for money; they pay down the ca mommodations; they are lend as; and in a great moneyed tockholders must have the gr The name of this bank is a dec public. It is not the bank of t mment, as its name would im States which compose this Uni of private individuals, foreigners ires, denizens, and naturalized m twenty-eight millions of th

r the United States, bscribed, not paid. for seven millions t of five per centription was the sesying five per cent. would clear four lividend of eight or it; now for the reion. Let us see it, from the Register id, and of dividends s thus:

States, $4,725,000 ed States, 4,629,426

$95,574

artnership must be leved point of view. and serious aspect the political aspect, ween the bank and has been tried in there to be just as the union between conjunction of the Holy Writ has told s will be master of agree to drop rivales. Suppose they or political power: which they may not head, I wish to use orightest patriots of shown himself, in e worthy successor ose patriotism comlogium of the elder Pulteney, and his ngland, in 1797.

XTRACT.

endent on the bank, ne time of war; and allen into the hands ident that it might, er sufficient to conthe ministers, but * * * * * e dangerous to gover hand, by unting become the means ate, sufficient to in show that govern-

e dangerous to gover hand, by uniting become the means ate, sufficient to inevable slavery, and sid as much as a certly dreaded, at a pell not say that the nger Pitt), by entake the Bank of ion, can have any en, of that engine the nd to enable him to domineer over our constitution: if that could be supposed, it would only show that men can entertain a very different train of ideas, when endearoring to overset a rival, from what occurs to them when intending to support and fix themselves. My object is to secure the country against all risk either from the bank as opposed to government, or as the engine of ambitious

"And this is my object also. I wish to secure the Union from all chance of narm from this bank. I wish to provide against its friendship, as well as its enmity—against all danger from its hug, as well as from its blow. I wish to provide against all risk, and every hazard; for, if this risk and hazard were too great to be encountered by King, Lords, and Commons, in Great Britain, they must certainly be too great to be encountered by the people of the United States, who are but commons alone.

10. To have foreigners for partners. This, Mr. President, will be a strange story to be told in the West. The downright and upright people of that unsophisticated region believe that words mean what they signify, and that 'the Bank of the United States' is the Bank of the United States. How great then must be their astonishment to learn that this belief is a false conception, and that this bank (its whole name to the contrary notwithstanding) is just as much the bank of foreigners as it is of the federal government. Here I would like to have the proof-a ist of the names and nations, to establish this almost incredible fact. But I have no access except to public documents, and from one of these I learn as much as will answer the present minch. It is the report of the Committee of Wars and Means, in the House of Representatres, for the last session of Congress. That renort admits that foreigners own seven millions of the stock of this bank; and every body hows that the federal government owns seven nillions also.

"Thus it is proved that foreigners are as deply interested in this bank as the United States itself. In the event of a renewal of the marter they will be much more deeply interestd than at present; for a prospect of a rise in the stock to two hundred and fifty, and the unattled state of things in Europe, will induce them to make great investments. It is to no purpose to say that the foreign stockholders annot be voters or directors. The answer to that suggestion is this: the foreigners have the money; they pay down the cash, and want no mommodations; they are lenders, not borrows: and in a great moneyed institution, such tockholders must have the greatest influence. The name of this bank is a deception upon the public. It is not the bank of the federal govmment as its name would import, nor of the States which compose this Union; but chiefly Invate individuals, foreigners as well as natres, denizens, and naturalized subjects. They wm twenty-eight millions of the stock, the federal government but seven millions, and these seven are precisely balanced by the stock of the aliens. The federal government and the aliens are equal, owning one fifth each; and there would be as much truth in calling it the English Bank as the Bank of the United States. Now mark a few of the privileges which this charter gives to these foreigners. To be landholders, in defiance of the State laws, which forbid aliens to hold land; to be landlords by incorporation, and to hold American citizens for tenants; to hold lands in mortmain; to be pawnbrokers and merchants by incorporation; to pay the revenue of the United States in their own notes; in short, to do every thing which I have endeavored to point out in the long and hideous list of exclusive privileges granted to this bank. If I have shown it to be dangerous for the United States to be in partnership with its own citizens, how much stronger is not the argument against a partnership with foreigners? a prospect for loans when at war with a foreign power, and the subjects of that power large owners of the bank here, from which alone, or from banks liable to be destroyed by it, we can obtain money to carry on the war! state of thirgs, if, in the division of political parties, one of these parties and the foreigners, coalescing, should have the exclusive control of all the money in the Union, and, in addition to the money, should have bodies of debtors, tenants, and bank officers stationed in all the States. with a supreme and irresponsible system of centralism to direct the whole! Dangers from such contingencies are too great and obvious to be insisted upon. They strike the common sense of all mankind, and were powerful considerations with the old whig republicans for the non-renewal of the charter of 1791. Mr. Jefferson and the whig republicans staked their political existence on the non-renewal of that charter. They succeeded; and, by succeeding, prevented the country from being laid at the mercy of British and ultra-federalists for funds to carry on the last war. It is said the United States lost forty millions by using depreciated currency during the last war. That, probably, is a mistake of one half. But be it so! For what are forty millions compared to the loss of the war itself-compared to the ruin and infamy of having the government arrested for want of money—stopped and paralyzed by the reception of such a note as the younger Pitt received from the Bank of England in 1795?

"11. Exemption from due course of law for violations of its charter.—This is a privilege which affects the administration of justice, and stands without example in the annals of republican legislation. In the case of all other delinquents, whether persons or corporations, the laws take their course against those who offend them. It is the right of every citizen to set the laws in motion against every offender; and it is the constitution of the law, when set in motion to work through, like a machine, regardless of powers and principalities, and cutting down the guilty which may stand in its way. Not so in the case of this bank. In its behalf, there are barriers erected between the citizen and his oppressor, between the wrong and the remedy, between the law and the offender. Instead of a right to sue out a scire facias or a quo warranto, the injured citizen, with an humble petition in his hand, must repair to the President of the United States, or to Congress, and crave their leave to do so. If leave is denied (and denied it will be whenever the bank has a peculiar friend in the President, or a majority of such friends in Congress, the convenient pretext being always at hand that the general welfare requires the bank to be sustained), he can proceed no further. The machinery of the law cannot be set in motion, and the great offender laughs from behind his barrier at the impotent resentment of its helpless victim. Thus the bank, for the plainest violations of its charter. and the greatest oppressions of the citizen, may escape the pursuit of justice. Thus the administration of justice is subject to be strangled in its birth for the shelter and protection of this bank. But this is not all. Another and most alarming mischief results from the same extraordinary privilege. It gives the bank a direct interest in the presidential and congressional elections: it gives it need for friends in Congress and in the presidential chair. Its fate, its very existence, may often depend upon the friendship of the President and Congress; and, in such cases, it is not in human nature to avoid using the immense means in the hands of the bank to influence the elections of these officers. Take the existing fact—the case to which I alluded at the commencement of this speech. There is a case made out, ripe with judicial evidence, and big with the fate of the bank. It is a case of usury at the rate of forty-six per cent., in violation of the charter, which only admits an interest of six. The facts were admitted, in the court below, by the bank's demurrer; the law was decided, in the court above, by the supreme judges. The admission concludes the facts; the decision concludes the law. The forfeiture of the charter is established; the forfeiture is incurred; the application of the forfeiture alone is wanting to put an end to the institution. An impartial President or Congress might let the laws take their course; those of a different temper might interpose their veto. What a crisis for the bank! It beholds the sword of Damocles suspended over its head! What an interest in keeping those away who might suffer the hair to be cut!

"12. To have all these unjust privileges secured to the corporators as a monopoly, by a pledge of the public faith to charter no other bank. - This is the most hideous feature in the whole mass of deformity. If these banks are beneficial institutions, why not several? one at least, and each of the charter of the Bank of England.

independent of the other, to each great section of the Union? If malignant, why create one? The restriction constitutes the monopoly, and renders more invidious what was sufficiently hateful in itself. It is, indeed, a double monopoly, legislative as well as banking; for the Congress of 1816 monopolized the power to grant these monopolies. It has tied up the hands of its successors; and if this can be done on one subject, and for twenty years, why not upon all subjects, and for all time? Here is the form of words which operate this double engrossment of our rights: 'No other bank shall be established by any future law of Congress, during the continuance of the corporation hereby enacted, for which the faith of Congress is hereby pledged? with a proviso for the District of Columbia And that no incident might be wanting to complete the title of this charter, to the utter reprobation of whig republicans, this compound monopoly, and the very form of words in which it is conceived, is copied from the charter of the Bank of England !- not the charter of William and Mary, as granted in 1694 (for the Bill of Rights was then fresh in the memories of Englishmen), but the charter as amended, and that for money, in the memorable reign of Queen Anne, when a tory queen, a tory ministry, and a tory parliament, and the apostle of toryism, in the person of Dr. Sacheverell, with his sermons of divine right, passive obedience. and non-resistance, were riding and ruling over the prostrate liberties of England! This is the precious period, and these the noble authors, from which the idea was borrowed, and the very form of words copied, which now figure in the charter of the Bank of the United States, constituting that double monopoly, which restricts at once the powers of Congress and the rights of the citizens.

"These, Mr. President, are the chief of the exclusive privileges which constitute the monopoly of the Bank of the United States. I have spoken of them, not as they deserved, but as my abilities have permitted. I have shown you that they are not only evil in themselves, but copied from an evil example. I now wish to show you that the government from which we have made this copy has condemned the original; and after showing this fact, I think I shall be able to appeal, with sensible effect, to all liberal minds to follow the enlightened example of Great Britain, in getting rid of a dangerous and invidious institution, after having followed her perniciou example in assuming it. For this purpose, I will have recourse to proof, and will read from British state papers of 1826. I will read extract from the correspondence between Earl Liver pool, first Lord of the Treasury, and Mr. Rob inson. Chancellor of the Exchequer, on the of side, and the Governor and Deputy Governor of the Bank of England on the other; the sub ject being the renewal, or rather non-renewa

Treasury and Chancello the Governor and Dep Bank of England .- Ext

"The failures which ha land, unaccompanied as the same occurrences in Scotlar there must have been an system of banking in one p and a solid and substantial * * In Scotland, ther thirty banks (three charter have stood firm amidst all tl money market in England, a tresses to which the manufac ral interests in Scotland, as have occasionally been subject scription must necessarily be generally understood and ap banking. * * * * The may, perhaps, propose, as th mer occasion, the extension exclusive privilege, as to the neighborhood, beyond the price of this concession [imme exclusive privileges]. It wo to be regretted that they s such condition. * * * what passed before, that Par agree to it. * * * * S out of fashion; and what ex bank, under present circum that theirs will be renewed?

Answer of the Court of Dir

"'Under the uncertainty in of Directors find themselves w death of the bank, and the may have on the interests o ourt cannot feel themselves ju mending to the proprietors to lege which they now enjoy, sai firmed as it is by the solemn a lature.'-Jan. 20.

Second communication from Extract.

"The First Lord of the Tres ellor of the Exchequer have co swer of the bank of the 20th cannot but regret that the Co should have declined to recomme of Proprietors the consideration brered by the First Lord of the T Chancellor of the Exchequer to and Deputy Governor on the 13t statement contained in that pa the First Lord of the Treasury allor of the Exchequer so full a I the points to which it rela have nothing further to add, would have been, and still are, re great section of y create one? monopoly, and was sufficiently double monopg; for the Conpower to grant up the hands of be done on one hy not upon all e is the form of engrossment of Il be established during the coneby enacted, for nereby pledged; wanting to comthe utter reprocompound moords in which it e charter of the arter of William (for the Bill of emories of Eng-3 amended, and orable reign of en, a tory minisd the apostle of Sacheverell, with assive obedience. and ruling over nd! This is the noble authors. wed, and the very ow figure in the ed States, consti-

> the chief of the titute the monop-States. I have served, but as my e shown you that selves, but copied wish to show you ch we have made original; and, afshall be able to all liberal mind aple of Great Brious and invidious ed her pernicion his purpose, I wil Il read from Bri vill read extract ween Earl Liver ry, and Mr. Rob equer, on the ou Deputy Governo e other; the sul ther non-renewa England.

thich restricts at

nd the rights of Communications from the First Lord of the Treasury and Chancellor of the Exchequer to the Governor and Deputy Governor of the Rank of England.—Extracts.

"The failures which have occurred in England, unaccompanied as they have been by the same occurrences in Scotland, tend to prove that there must have been an unsolid and delusive system of banking in one part of Great Britain. and a solid and substantial one in the other. * In Scotland, there are not more than thirty banks (three chartered), and these banks have stood firm amidst all the convulsions of the money market in England, and amidst all the distresses to which the manufacturing and agricultural interests in Scotland, as well as in England, have occasionally been subject. Banks of this description must necessarily be conducted upon the generally understood and approved principles of hanking. * * * * The Bank of England may, perhaps, propose, as they did upon a former occasion, the extension of the term of their exclusive privilege, as to the metropolis and its neighborhood, beyond the year 1833, as the price of this concession [immediate surrender of exclusive privileges]. It would be very much to be regretted that they should require any such condition. * * * It is obvious, from what passed before, that Parliament will never agree to it. * * * * Such privileges are out of fashion; and what expectation can the bank, under present circumstances, entertain that theirs will be renewed?'-Jan. 13.

Answer of the Court of Directors .- Extract.

"'Under the uncertainty in which the Court of Directors find themselves with respect to the death of the bank, and the effect which they may have on the interests of the bank, this ourt cannot feel themselves justified in recommending to the proprietors to give up the privikee which they now enjoy, sanctioned and confirmed as it is by the solemn acts of the legislature.'-Jan. 20.

Second communication from the Ministers .-Extract.

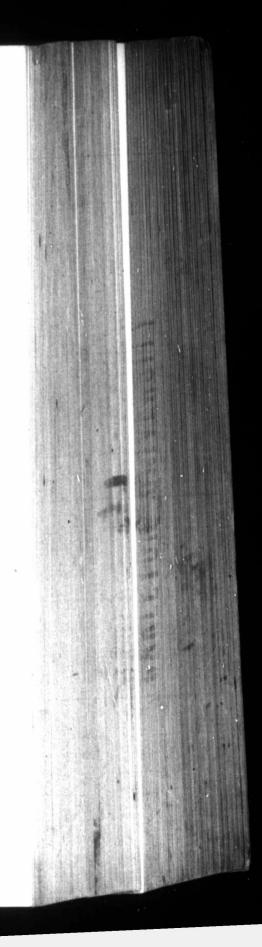

color of the Exchequer have considered the answer of the bank of the 20th instant. They annot but regret that the Court of Directors should have declined to recommend to the Court Proprietors the consideration of the paper debreed by the First Lord of the Treasury and the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the Governor the First Lord of the Treasury and the Chan-

as far as possible, any specific questions which might be put, for the purpose of removing the uncertainty in which the court of directors state themselves to be with respect to the details of the plan suggested in that paper.'—Jan. 23.

Second answer of the Bank.—Extract.

"'The Committee of Treasury [bank] having taken into consideration the paper received from the First Lord of the Treasury and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, dated January 23d, and finding that His Majesty's ministers persevere in their desire to propose to restrict immediately the exclusive privilege of the bank, as to the number of partners engaged in banking to a certain distance from the metropolis, and also continue to be of opinion that Parliament would not consent to renew the privilege at the expiration of the period of their present charter; finding, also, that the proposal by the bank of establishing branch banks is deemed by His Majesty's ministers inadequate to the wants of the country, are of opinion that it would be desirable for this corporation to propose, as a basis, the act of 6th of George the Fourth, which states, the conditions on which the Bank of Ireland relinquished its exclusive privileges; this corporation waiving the question of a prolongation of time, although the committee [of the bankl cannot agree in the opinion of the First Lord of the Treasury and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, that they are not making a considerable sacrifice, adverting especially to the Bank of Ireland remaining in possession of that privilege five years longer than the Bank of England.' -January 25.

"Here, Mr. President, is the end of all the exclusive privileges and odious monopoly of the Bank of England. That ancient and powerful institution, so long the haughty tyrant of the moneyed world—so long the subsidizer of kings and ministers-so long the fruitful mother of national debt and useless wars-so long the prolific manufactory of nabobs and paupers-so long the dread dictator of its own terms to parliament—now droops the conquered wing, lowers its proud crest, and quails under the blows of its late despised assailants. It first "The First Lord of the Treasury and Chan- puts on a courageous air, and takes a stand upon privileges sanctioned by time, and confirmed by solemn acts. Seeing that the ministers could have no more to say to men who would talk of privileges in the nineteenth century, and being reminded that parliament was inexorable the bully suddenly degenerates into the craven, and, from showing fight, calls for quarter. The diand Deputy Governor on the 13th instant. The rectors condescend to beg for the smallest remstatement contained in that paper appears to nant of their former power, for five years only; for the city of London even; and offer to send Mor of the Exchequer so full and explicit on branches into all quarters. Denied at every If the points to which it related, that they point, the subdued tyrant acquiesces in his fate: he nothing further to add, although they announces his submission to the spirit and intelwill have been, and still are, ready to answer, ligence of the age; and quietly sinks down into the humble, but safe and useful condition of a Scottish provincial bank.

"And here it is profitable to pause; to look back, and see by what means this ancient and powerful institution-this Babylon of the banking world-was so suddenly and so totally prostrated. Who did it? And with what weapons? Sir, it was done by that power which is now regulating the affairs of the civilized world. It was done by the power of public opinion, invoked by the working members of the British parliament. It was done by Sir Henry Parnell, who led the attack upon the Wellington ministry, on the night of the 15th of November; by Sir William Pulteney, Mr. Grenfell, Mr. Hume, Mr. Edward Ellice, and others, the working members of the House of Commons, such as had, a few years before, overthrown the gigantic oppressions of the salt tax. These are the men who have overthrown the Bank of England. They began the attack in 1824, under the discouraging cry of too soon, too soon-for the charter had then nine years to run'! and ended with showing that they had began just soon enough. They began with the ministers in their front, on the side of the bank, and ended with having them on their own side, and making them co-operators in the attack, and the instruments and inflicters of the fatal and final blow. But let us do justice to these ministers. Though wrong in the beginning, they were right in the end; though monarchists, they behaved like republicans. They were not Polignacs. They yielded to the intelligence of the age; they yielded to the spirit which proscribes monopolies and privileges, and in their correspondence with the bank directors, spoke truth and reason and asserted liberal principles, with a point and power which quickly put an end to dangerous and obsolete pretensions. They told the bank the mortifying truths, that its system was unsolid and delusive—that its privileges and monopoly were out of fashion-that they could not be prolonged for five years even-nor suffered to exist in London alone; and, what was still more cutting, that the banks of Scotland, which had no monopoly, no privilege, no connection with the government, which paid interest on deposits, and whose stockholders were responsible to the amount of their shares-were the solid and substantial banks, which alone the public interest could hereafter recognize. They did their business, when they undertook it, like true men; and, in the single phrase, 'out of fashion,' achieved the most powerful combination of solid argument and contemptuous sarcasm, that ever was compressed into three words. It is a phrase of electrical power over the senses and passions. It throws back the mind to the reigns of the Tudors and Stuarts—the termagant Elizabeth and the pedagogue James—and rouses within us all the shame and rage we have been accustomed to feel at the view of the scandalous sales of privileges and monopolies which were the disgrace and oppression of these wretched to show how it stood—the mass of the demo times. Out of fashion! Yes; even in England. the land of their early birth, and late protection, And shall they remain in fashion here? Shall republicanism continue to wear, in America the antique costume which the doughty champions of antiquated fashion have been compelled to doff in England? Shall English lords and ladies continue to find, in the Bank of the United States, the unjust and odious privileges which they can no longer find in the Bank of England? Shall the copy survive here, after the original has been destroyed there? Shall the young whelp triumph in America, after the old lion has been throttled and strangled in England? No! never! The thing is impossible! The Bank of the United States dies, as the Bank of England dies, in all its odious points, upon the limitation of its charter; and the only circumstance of regret is, that the generous deliverance is to take effect two years earlier in the British monarchy than in the American republic. It came to us of war-it will go away with peace. It was born of the war of 1812-it will die in the long peace with which the world is blessed. The arguments on which it was created will no longer apply. Times have changed; and the policy of the republic changes with the times. The war made the bank; peace will unmake it. The baleful planet of fire, and blood, and every human woe, did bring that pestilence upon us; the benignant star of peace shall chase it away."

This speech was not answered. Confident in its strength, and insolent in its nature, the great moneyed power had adopted a system in which she persevered, until hard knocks drove her out of it: it was to have an anti-bank speech treated with the contempt of silence in the House, and caricatured and belittled in the newspapers; and according to this system my speech was treated. The instant it was delivered, Mr. Webster called for the vote, and to be taken by yeas and/navs. which was done; and resulted differently from what was expected-a strong vote against the bank-20 to 23; enough to excite uneasiness, but not enough to pass the resolution and legitimate a debate on the subject. The debate stopped with the single speech; but it was a speech to be read by the people—the masses the millions; and was conceived and delivered for that purpose; and was read by them; and has been complimented since, as having cripple the bank, and given it the wound of which afterwards died; but not within the year and day which would make the slayer responsible for the homicide. The list of yeas and nay was also favorable to the effect of the speed Though not a party vote, it was sufficiently s mcy against the bankdemocrats against it. Th

"YEAS. - Messrs. Ba Brown, Dickerson, Dudle Hayne, Iredell, King, N Sanford, Smith of S. C., T White, Woodbury-20.

"NAYS .- Messrs. Barton Clayton, Root, Frelinghu ncks, Johnston, Knight, Noble, Robbins, Robinson Silsbee, Smith of Md., Spra

CHAPTER

ERROR OF DE TOCQUEVILL THE HOUSE OF REPRI

I HAVE had occasion several errors of Monsieur de Tocqu mon American democracy. thority in Europe, where i greral languages; and is sou made authority here, where it into English, and published preface to recommend it. It view to enlighten European w democratic government, and andid intent; but abounds v prejudice of that form of go must do it great mischief, be shroad, if not corrected. A f of this kind-one which goes mpresentative government, occ this work, where he finds a g the members comprising the Congress, attributing an imm to the Senate, and discovering Merence in the different mode members—the popular election and the legislative elections of *On entering the House of Re Tashington, one is struck with meanor of that great assembly mently does not discover a m min its walls. Its members becare individuals, whose nar secretions to the mind; they are layers, men in trade, or even per the lower classes of society. mich education is very general, even in England, late protection on here? Shall in America the ghty champions en compelled to lords and ladies of the United privileges which ank of England? fter the original Shall the young ter the old lion led in England? mpossible! The , as the Bank of points, upon the the only circumerous deliverance er in the British can republic. It way with peace. 12-it will die in world is blessed. s created will no panged; and the with the times.

e will unmake it.

blood, and every

stilence upon us;

Il chase it away. ed. Confident in nature, the great , system in which cks drove her out ink speech treated in the House, and newspapers; and peech was treated. Ar. Webster called by yeas and/nays, I differently from vote against the excite uneasiness, resolution and leject. The debate ech; but it was a ole-the massesived and delivered ead by them; and as having cripple wound of which i hin the year and slaver responsible of yeas and nay fect of the speech was sufficiently s lass of the demo $_{\mbox{\scriptsize racy}}$  against the bank—the mass of the anti-democrats against it. The names were :—

"Yeas. — Messrs. Barnard, Benton, Bibb, Brown, Dickerson, Dudley, Forsyth, Grundy, Hayne, Iredell, King, McKinley, Poindexter, Sanford, Smith of S. C., Tazewell, Troup, Tyler, White, Woodbury—20.

"Nays.—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Burnet, Chase, (layton, Root, Frelinghuysen, Holmes, Hendncks, Johnston, Knight, Livingston, Marks, Noble, Robbins, Robinson, Ruggles, Seymour, Silsbee, Smith of Md., Sprague, Webster, Willey -93."

CHAPTER LVII.

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

I HAVE had occasion several times to notice the errors of Monsieur de Tocqueville, in his work onn American democracy. That work is authority in Europe, where it has appeared in greral languages; and is sought by some to be made authority here, where it has been translated into English, and published with notes, and a preface to recommend it. It was written with riew to enlighten European opinion in relation to democratic government, and evidently with a andid intent; but abounds with errors to the weiudice of that form of government, which must do it great mischief, both at home and broad, if not corrected. A fundamental error of this kind—one which goes to the root of moresentative government, occurs in chapter 8 this work, where he finds a great difference in the members comprising the two Houses of Congress, attributing an immense superiority with Senate, and discovering the cause of the Merence in the different modes of electing the members—the popular elections of the House, mod the legislative elections of the Senate. He

'On entering the House of Representatives at Takington, one is struck with the vulgar demon of that great assembly. The eye frewally does not discover a man of celebrity whim its walls. Its members are almost all decire individuals, whose names present no mecations to the mind; they are mostly village layers, men in trade, or even persons belonging the lower classes of society. In a country in thich education is very general, it is said that the representatives of the people do not always know how to write correctly. At a few yards' distance from this spot is the door of the Senate. which contains within a small space a large proportion of the celebrated men in America. Scarcely an individual is to be found in it, who does not recall the idea of an active and illustrious career. The Senate is composed of eloquent advocates, distinguished generals, wise magistrates, and statesmen of note, whose language would at all times do honor to the most remarkable parliamentary debates of Europe. What, then, is the cause of this strange contrast? and why are the most able citizens to be found in one assembly rather than in the other? Why is the former body remarkable for its vulgarity, and its poverty of talent, whilst the latter seems to enjoy a monopoly of intelligence and of sound judgment? Both of these assemblies emanate from the people. From what cause, then, does so startling a difference arise? The only reason which appears to me adequately to account for it is, that the House of Representatives is elected by the populace directly, and that of the Senate is elected by an indirect application of universal suffrage; but this transmission of the popular authority through an assembly of chosen men operates an important change in it, by refining its discretion and improving the forms which it adopts. Men who are chosen in this manner, accurately represent the majority of the nation which governs them; but they represent the elevated thoughts which are current in the community, the generous propensities which prompt its nobler actions, rather than the petty passions which disturb, or the vices which disgrace it. The time may be already anticipated at which the American republics will be obliged to introduce the plan of election by an elected body more frequently into their system of representation, or they will incur no small risk of perishing miserably among the shoals of democracy."

The whole tenor of these paragraphs is to disparage the democracy—to disparage democratic government-to attack fundamentally the principle of popular election itself. They disqualify the people for self-government, hold them to be incapable of exercising the elective franchise, and predict the downfall of our republican system, if that franchise is not still further restricted, and the popular vote—the vote of the people-reduced to the subaltern choice of persons to vote for them. These are profound errors on the part of Mons. de Tocqueville, which require to be exposed and corrected; and the correction of which comes within the scope of this work, intended to show the capacity of the people for self-government, and the advantage of extending-instead of restricting-the privilege of the direct vote. He seems to look upon the members of the two Houses as different orders of beings-different classes-a higher and a lower class; the former placed in the Senate by the wisdom of State legislatures, the latter in the House of Representatives by the folly of the people—when the fact is, that they are not only of the same order and class, but mainly the same individuals. The Senate is almost entirely made up out of the House! and it is quite certain that every senator whom Mons. de Tocqueville had in his eye when he bestowed such encomium on that body had come from the House of Representatives! placed there by the popular vote, and afterwards transferred to the Senate by the legislature; not as new men just discovered by the superior sagacity of that body, but as public men with national reputations, already illustrated by the operation of popular elections. And if Mons. de Tocqueville had chanced to make his visit some years sooner, he would have seen almost every one of these senators, to whom his exclusive praise is directed, actually sitting in the other House.

Away, then, with his fact! and with it, away with all his fanciful theory of wise elections by small electoral colleges, and silly ones by the people! and away with all his logical deductions, from premises which have no existence, and which would have us still further to "refine popular discretion," by increasing and extending the number of electoral colleges through which it is to be filtrated. Not only all vanishes, but his praise goes to the other side, and redounds to the credit of popular elections; for almost every distinguished man in the Senate or in any other department of the government, now or heretofore—from the Congress of Independence down to the present day-has owed his first elevation and distinction to popular electionsto the direct vote of the people, given, without the intervention of any intermediate body, to the visible object of their choice; and it is the same in other countries, now and always. The English, the Scotch and the Irish have no electoral colleges; they vote direct, and are never without their ablest men in the House of Commons. The Romans voted direct; and for five hundred years-until fair elections were detsroyed by force and fraud-never failed to elect consuls and prætors, who carried the glory of their country beyond the point at which they had found it. These are causes enough to account for any or

The American people know this-know that popular election has given them every eminent public man that they have ever had—that it is the safest and wisest mode of political electionmost free from intrigue and corruption; and instead of further restricting that mode, and reducing the masses to mere electors of electors they are, in fact, extending it, and altering constitutions to carry elections to the people, which were formerly given to the general assemblies Many States furnish examples of this. Even the constitution of the United States has been overruled by universal public sentiment in the greatest of its elections-that of President and Vice-President. The electoral college by that instrument, both its words and intent, was to have been an independent body, exercising its own discretion in the choice of these high officers. On the contrary, it has been reduced to a mere formality for the registration of the votes which the people prepare and exact. The speculations of Monsieur de Tocqueville are, therefore, groundless; and must be hurtful to representative government in Europe, where the facts are unknown; and may be injurious among ourselves. where his book is translated into English, with a preface and notes to recommend it.

Admitting that there might be a difference between the appearance of the two Houses, and between their talent, at the time that Mons. de Tocqueville looked in upon them, yet that difference, so far as it might then have existed. was accidental and temporary, and has already vanished. And so far as it may have appeared, or may appear in other times, the difference in favor of the Senate may be found in causes very different from those of more or less judgment and virtue in the constituencies which elect the two Houses. The Senate is a smaller body, and therefore may be more decorous; it is composed of older men, and therefore should be graver, its members have usually served in the highest branches of the State governments, and in the House of Representatives, and therefere should be more experienced; its terms of service are longer, and therefore give more time for talent to mature, and for the measures to be carried which confer fame. Finally, the Senate is in great part composed of the pick of the House, and therefore gains double-by brilliant accession to itself and abstraction from the other.

casional, or general di itself in the decorun Houses. But there is found in the practice o caucus system and r brings in men unknow. them out as they begin ceeded by other new be turned out to make r all by virtue of arrange dividual interests, and 1 The injury of these qualities of the House State, is readily conceiv the delegations of Stat not prevail-in some So ern States, for example. seem invidious, and is n ment of the general fact cate an evil which requ terms of service are good sponsibility, and two yes but every contrivance is sistent with the re-eligib constitution, which prev continuing a member as useful to them. Statesm in any country; and in Great Britain, great poli only been acquired after l and even 50 years; and only been carried by an e of persevering exertion 1 commenced them. Earl ( wright-I take the aristo cratic leaders of the mo British parliamentry refo of annual consecutive exert the Society for Parliamer and carried the reform in 56 burgs, half disfranchisii chising 41 new towns; and of voters by extending t householders-extorting, 1 concession from power and right that was ever obtain means. Yet this was on years' continued annual e did it, but it took them for The same may be said of measures—Catholic emanci

peal, abolition of the slave

w this-know that nem every eminent ver had-that it is political electionorruption; and inhat mode, and reectors of electors. , and altering conthe people, which reneral assemblies. es of this. Even ed States has been c sentiment in the at of President and al college by that and intent, was to y, exercising its own these high officers. reduced to a mere of the votes which . The speculations , therefore, groundrepresentative govthe facts are unis among ourselves, into English, with > mend it. ght be a difference he two Houses, and time that Mons. de them, yet that difthen have existed, ery, and has already may have appeared, es, the difference in ound in causes very e or less judgment cies which elect the a smaller body, and rous: it is composed should be graver, erved in the highest rnments, and in the nd therefere should erms of service are more time for talent asures to be carried ly, the Senate is in pick of the House, -by brilliant accesion from the other. account for any 00

casional, or general difference which may show itself in the decorum or ability of the two Houses. But there is another cause, which is found in the practice of some of the States—the caucus system and rotation in office-which brings in men unknown to the people, and turns them out as they begin to be useful; to be succeeded by other new beginners, who are in turn turned out to make room for more new ones; all by virtue of arrangements which look to individual interests, and not to the public good.

The injury of these changes to the business qualities of the House and the interests of the State, is readily conceivable, and very visible in the delegations of States where they do, or do not prevail-in some Sorthern and some Nouthern States, for example. To name them might seem invidious, and is not necessary, the statement of the general fact being sufficient to indicate an evil which requires correction. Short terms of service are good on account of their responsibility, and two years is a good legal term; but every contrivance is vicious, and also inconsistent with the re-eligibility permitted by the constitution, which prevents the people from continuing a member as long as they deem him useful to them. Statesmen are not improvised in any country; and in our own, as well as in Great Britain, great political reputations have only been acquired after long service-20, 30, 40, and even 50 years; and great measures have only been carried by an equal number of years of persevering exertion by the same man who commenced them. Earl Grey and Major Cartwright-I take the aristocratic and the democratic leaders of the movement-only carried British parliamentry reform after forty years of annual consecutive exertion. They organized the Society for Parliamentry Reform in 1792, and carried the reform in 1832—disfranchising 56 burgs, half disfranchising 31 others, enfranthising 41 new towns; and doubling the number concession from power and corruption to popular right that was ever obtained by civil and legal means. Yet this was only done upon forty did it, but it took them forty years.

measures-Catholic emancipation, corn law re-

others; each requiring a lifetime of continued exertion from devoted men. Short service, and not popular election, is the evil of the House of Representatives; and this becomes more apparent by contrast-contrast between the North and the South—the caucus, or rotary system, not prevailing in the South, and useful members being usually continued from that quarter as long as useful; and thus with fewer members, usually showing a greater number of men who have attained a distinction. Monsieur de Tocqueville is profoundly wrong, and does great injury to democratic government, as his theory countenances the monarchial idea of the incapacity of the people for self-government. They are with us the best and safest depositories of the political elective power. They have not only furnished to the Senate its ablest members through the House of Representatives, but have sometimes repaired the injustice of State legislatures, which repulsed or discarded some eminent men. The late Mr. John Quincy Adams, after forty years of illustrious service-after having been minister to half the great courts of Europe, a senator in Congress, Secretary of State, and President of the United States-in the full possession of all his great faculties, was refused an election by the Massachusetts legislature to the United States Senate, where he had served thirty years before. Refused by the legislature, he was taken up by the people, sent to the House of Representatives, and served there to octogenarian age-attentive, vigilant and capable-an example to all, and a match for half the House to the last. The brilliant, incorruptible, sagacious Randolph—friend of the people, of the constitution, of economy and hard moneyscourge and foe to all corruption, plunder and jobbing-had nearly the same fate; dropped from the Senate by the Virginia general assembly, restored to the House of Representatives by the people of his district, to remain there till, of voters by extending the privilege to £10 following the example of his friend, the wise householders-extorting, perhaps, the greatest Macon, he voluntarily withdrew. I name no more, confining myself to instances of the illus-

I have been the more particular to correct years' continued annual exertions. Two men this error of De Tocqueville, because, while disparaging democratic government generally, it The same may be said of other great British | especially disparages that branch of our government which was intended to be the controlling peal, abolition of the slave trade, and many part. Two clauses of the constitution-one vesting the House of Representatives with the sole power of originating revenue bills, the other with the sole power of impeachment-sufficiently attest the high function to which that House was appointed. They are both borrowed from the British constitution, where their effect has been seen in controlling the course of the whole government, and bringing great criminals to the bar. No sovereign, no ministry holds out an hour against the decision of the House of Commons. Though an imperfect representation of the people, even with the great ameliorations of the reform act of 1832, it is at once the democratic branch, and the master-branch of the British government. Wellington administrations have to retire before it. Bengal Governors-General have to appear as criminals at its bar. It is the theatre which attracts the talent, the patriotism, the high spirit, and the lofty ambition of the British empire; and the people look to it as the master-power in the working of the government, and the one in which their will has weight. No rising man, with ability to acquire a national reputation, will quit it for a peerage and a seat in the House of Lords. Our House of Representatives, with its two commanding prerogatives and a perfect representation, should not fall below the British House of Commons in the fulfilment of its mission. It should not become second to the Senate, and in the beginning it did not. For the first thirty years it was the controlling branch of the government, and the one on whose action the public eye was fixed. Since then the Senate has been taking the first place, and people have looked less to the House. This is an injury above what concerns the House itself. It is an injury to our institutions, and to the people. The high functions of the House were given to it for wise purposes-for paramount national objects. It is the immediate representation of the people, and should command their confidence and their hopes. As the sole originator of tax bills, it is the sole dispenser of burthens on the people, and of supplies to the government. As sole authors of impeachment, it is the grand inquest of the nation, and has supervision over all official delinquencies. Duty to itself, to its high functions, to the people, to the constitution, and to the character of democratic government, require it to resume and maintain its controlling place in the machinery and working of our federal government: and that is what it has commenced doing in the last two or three sessions—and with happy results to the economy of the public service—and in preventing an increase of the evils of our diplomatic representation abroad.

CHAPTER LVIII.

THE TWENTY-SECOND CONGRESS.

This body commenced its first session the 5th of December, 1831, and terminated that session July 17th, 1832; and for this session alone belongs to the most memorable in the annals of our government. It was the one at which the great contest for the renewal of the charter of the Bank of the United States was brought on and decided—enough of itself to entitle it to lasting remembrance, though replete with other important measures. It embraced, in the list of members of the two Houses, much shining talent, and a great mass of useful ability, and among their names will be found many, then most eminent in the Union, and others destined to become so. The following are the names:

SENATE.

MAINE—John Holmes, Peleg Sprague. NEW HAMPSHIRE—Samuel Bell, Isaac Hill. MASSACHUSETTS—Daniel Webster, Nathaniel Silsbee.

RHODE ISLAND—Nehemiah R. Knight, Asher Robbins.

CONNECTICUT—Samuel A. Foot, Gideon Tomlinson.

VERMONT-Horatio Seymour, Samuel Prentiss.

New-York—Charles E. Dudley, Win. Marcy, New Jersey—M. Dickerson, Theodore Frelinghuysen. Pennsylvania—Geo. M. Dallas, Win. Wil-tins.

DELAWARE—John M. Clayton, Arnold Nau-

Delaware—John M. Clayton, Arnold Muain.
Maryland—E. F. Chambers, Samuel Smith

WARYLAND—E. F. Chambers, Samuel Smith Virginia—Littleton W. Tazewell, John Tyer.

NORTH CAROLINA—B. Brown, W. P. Mangum.

SOUTH CAROLINA—Robert Y. Hayne, S. D. Miller.

GEORGIA—George M. Troup, John Forsyth. KENTUCKY—George M. Bibb, Henry Clay. TENNESSEE—Felix Grundy, Hugh I., White. Ohio—Benjamin Ruggles, Thomas Ewing. LOUISIANA-J. S. Joj

Indiana—William He Mississippi—Powhata

ILLINOIS—Elias K. K.
ALABAMA—William I
MISSOURI—Thomas II

HOUSE OF REPR

From MAINE—John A George Evans, Cornelius vis, Edward Kavanagh, I New Hampshire—Joh

Chandler, Joseph Hamm Joseph M. Harper, John Massachusetts—John than Appleton, Isaac C. Bi Rufus Choate, Henry A Davis, Edward Everett, James L. Hodges, Jose Reed. (One vacancy.)

RHODE ISLAND—Tristal Pearce.

Connecticut—Noyes Ellsworth, Jabez W. Hun gersoll, William L. Storrs, Vermont—Heman All

Horace Everett, Jonathan
New York—William (
Barstow, Joseph Bonick, W
T. Bergen, John C. Brodl
ley, John A. Collier, Bates breleng, John Dickson, Ch
F. Doubleday, William H man, Freeborn G. Jewett, Lasing, James Lent, Jol
Pitcher, Edmund H. Pendle
Erastus Root, Nathan Sol Phineas L. Tracy, Gulian (
ric Whittlesey, Samuel J.
Wheeler, Campbell P White

iel Wardwell.

New Jersey—Lewis Con
Richard M. Cooper, Thomas
Fitz Randolph, Isaac South

Pennsylvania—Robert / George Burd, John C. B George Burd, John C. B Crawford, Richard Coulter Lewis Dewart, Joshua E. John Gilmore, William He Peter Ihrie, jun., Adam King K. Mann, Robert McCoy, berg, T. M. McKennan, Davidrew Stewart, Samuel A. Sn phens, Joel B. Sutherland, J Delaware—John J. Milli Belaware—John J. Milli Markland—Benjamin, C.

Maryland—Benjamin C Jenifer, John L. Kerr, Ge Benedict I. Semmes, John Thomas, George C. Washing thington.

Virginia—Mark Alexand William S. Archer, William Vol., I.—14 t it has commencree sessions-and nomy of the puban increase of the entation abroad.

VIII.

CONGRESS

first session the erminated that sesr this session alone ole in the annals of one at which the of the charter of es was brought on 'to entitle it to lastdete with other imaced, in the list of nuch shining talent, ability, and among any, then most emiers destined to bethe names:

leg Sprague. 1 Bell, Isaac Hill. Webster, Nathaniel

h R. Knight, Asher . Foot, Gideon Tom-

nour, Samuel Pren-

Dudley, Wm. Marcy. rson, Theodore Fre-

. Dallas, Wm. Wil-

layton, Arnold Nau-

bers, Samuel Smith Tazewell, John Ty-

Brown, W. P. Man-

ert Y. Hayne, S. D.

oup, John Forsyth. Bibb, Henry Clay. ndy, Hugh L. White. s, Thomas Ewing.

Louisiana-J. S. Johnston, Geo. A. Wagga-

INDIANA—William Hendricks, Robert Hanna. MISSISSIPPI-Powhatan Ellis, Geo. Poindex-

ILLINOIS—Elias K. Kane, John M. Robinson. ALABAMA—William R. King, Gabriel Moore. MISSOURI-Thomas H. Benton, Alex. Buck-

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

From MAINE-John Anderson, James Bates, George Evans, Cornelius Holland, Leonard Jarvis, Edward Kavanagh, Rufus McIntire.

NEW HAMPSHIRE-John Brodhead, Thomas Chandler, Joseph Hammons, Henry Hubbard, Joseph M. Harper, John W. Weeks.

Massachusetts-John Quincy Adams, Nathan Appleton, Isaac C. Bates, George N. Briggs, James L. Hodges, Joseph G. Kendall, John Reed. (One vacancy.)

RHODE ISLAND-Tristam Burgess, Dutee J.

CONNECTICUT—Noyes Barber, William W. Ellsworth, Jabez W. Huntington, Ralph I. Ingersoll, William L. Storrs, Ebenezer Young.

VERMONT-Heman Allen, William Cahoon, Horace Everett, Jonathan Hunt, William Slade. NEW YORK-William G. Angel, Gideon H. Barstow, Joseph Bouck, William Babcock, John T. Bergen, John C. Brodhead, Samuel Beardsley, John A. Collier, Bates Cooke, C. C. Cambreleng, John Dickson, Charles Dayan, Ulysses F. Doubleday, William Hogan, Michael Hoffman, Freeborn G. Jewett, John King, Gerrit Y. Lansing, James Lent, Job Pierson, Nathaniel Pitcher, Edmund H. Pendleton, Edward C. Reed, Erastus Root, Nathan Soule, John W. Taylor, Phineas L. Tracy, Gulian C. Verplanck, Frederic Whittlesey, Samuel J. Wilkin, Grattan H. Wheeler, Campbell P White, Aaron Ward, Daniel Wardwell.

New Jersey—Lewis Condict, Silas Condict, Richard M. Cooper, Thomas H. Hughes, James Fitz Randolph, Isaac Southard.

PENNSYLVANIA-Robert Allison, John Banks, George Burd, John C. Bucher, Thomas H. Crawford, Richard Coulter, Harmar Denny, Lewis Dewart, Joshua Evans, James Ford, John Gilmore, William Heister, Henry Horn, Peter Ihrie, jun., Adam King, Henry King, Joel K. Mann, Robert McCoy, Henry A. Muhlenberg, T. M. McKennan, David Potts, jun., Andrew Stewart. Samuel A. Smith, Philander Stephens, Joel B. Sutherland, John G. Watmough. Delaware-John J. Milligan.

Maryland-Benjamin C. Howard, Daniel Jenifer, John L. Kerr, George E. Mitchell, Benedict I. Semmes, John S. Spence, Francis Thomas, George C. Washington, J. T. H. Worthington.

VIRGINIA-Mark Alexander, Robert Allen, Vol. I.—14

S. Barbour, Thomas T. Bouldin, Nathaniel H. Claiborne, Robert Craig, Joseph W. Chinn, Richard Coke, jun., Thomas Davenport, Philip Dodd. dge, Wm. F. Gord n, Charles C. Johnston, John Y. Mason, Lewis Maxwell, Charles F. Mercer, William McCoy, Thomas Newton, John M. Patton, John J. Roane, Andrew Ste-

NORTH CAROLINA-Dan'l L. Barringer, Laughlin Bethune, John Branch, Samuel P. Carson, Henry W. Conner, Thomas H. Hall, Micajah T. Hawkins, James J. McKay, Abraham Rencher, William B. Shepard, Augustine H. Shepperd, Jesse Speight, Lewis Williams.

South Carolina-Robert W. Barnwell, Jas. Blair, Warren R. Davis, William Drayton, John M. Felder, J. R. Griffin, Thomas R. Mitchell, George McDuffie, Wm. T. Nuckolls.

GEORGIA-Thomas F. Foster, Henry G. La-Rufus Choate, Henry A. S. Dearborn, John mar, Daniel Newnan, Wiley Thompson, Richard Davis, Edward Everett, George Grennell, jun., H. Wilde, James M. Wayne. (One vacancy.)

KENTUCKY-John Adair, Chilton Allan, Henry Daniel, Nathan Gaither, Albert G. Hawes, R. M. Johnson, Joseph Lecompte, Chittenden Lyon, Robert P. Letcher, Thomas A. Marshall, Christopher Tompkins, Charles A. Wick-

TENNESSEE-Thomas D. Arnold, John Bell, John Blair, William Fitzgerald, William Hall, Jacob C. Isacks, Cave Johnson, James K. Polk James Standifer.

Оню—Joseph H. Crane, Eleutheros Cooke William Creighton, jun., Thomas Corwin, James Findlay, William W. Irwin, William Kennon, Humphrey H. Leavitt, William Russel, William Stanberry, John Thomson, Joseph Vance, Sainuel F. Vinton, Elisha Whittlesey.

LOUISIANA-H. A. Bullard, Philemon Thomas, Edward D. White.

Indiana—Ratliff Boon, John Carr, Jonathan McCarty.

Mississippi-Franklin E. Plummer.

Illinois-Joseph Duncan.

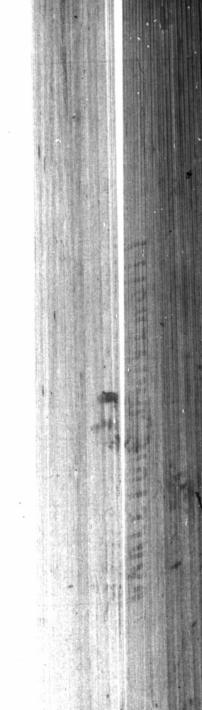

ALABAMA-Clement C. Clay, Dixon H. Lewis, Samuel W. Mardis.

Missouri-William H. Ashley.

DELEGATES.

MICHIGAN-Austin E. Wing. ARKANSAS-Ambrose H. Sevier. FLORIDA—Joseph M. White.

Andrew Stevenson, Esq., of Virginia, was reelected speaker; and both branches of the body being democratic, they were organized, in a party sense, as favorable to the administration, although the most essential of the committees. when the Bank question unexpectedly sprung up, were found to be on the side of that institution. In his message to the two Houses, the President presented a condensed and general William S. Archer, William Armstrong, John view of our relations, political and commercial, with foreign nations, from which the leading passages are here given:

"After our transity n from the state of coronies to that of an independent nation, many points were found necessary to be settled between us and Great Britain. Among them was the demarcation of boundaries, not described with sufficient precision in the treaty of peace. Some of the lines that divide the States and territories of the United States from the British provinces, have been definitively fixed. That, however, which separates us from the provinces of Canada and New Brunswick to the North and the East, was still in dispute when I came into office. But I found arrangements made for its settlement, over which I had no control. The commissioners who had been appointed under the provisions of the treaty of Ghent, having been unable to agree, a convention was made with Great Britain by my immediate predecessor in office, with the advice and consent of the Senate, by which it was agreed 'that the points of difference which have arisen in the settlement of the boundary line between the American and British dominions, as described in the fifth article of the treaty of Ghent, shall be referred, as therein provided, to some friendly sovereign or State, who shall be invited to investigate, and make a decision upon such points of difference: and the King of the Netherlands having, by the late President and his Britannic Majesty, been designated as such friendly sovereign, it became my duty to carry, with good faith, the agreement, so made, into full effect. To this end I caused all the measures to be taken which were necessary to a full exposition of our case to the sovereign arbiter; and nominated as minister plenipotentiary to his court, a distinguished citizen of the State most interested in the question, and who had been one of the agents previously employed for settling the controversy. On ? the 10th day of January last, His Majesty the King of the Netherlands delivered to the plenipotentiaries of the United States, and of Great Britain, his written opinion on the case referred to him. The papers in relation to the subject will be communicated, by a special message, to the proper branch of the government, with the perfect confidence that its wisdom will adopt such measures as will secure an amicable settlement of the controversy, without infringing any constitutional right of the States immediately

"In my message at the opening of the last session of Congress, I expressed a confident hope that the justice of our claims upon France, urged as they were with perseverance and signal ability by our minister there, would finally be acknowledged. This hope has been realized. A treaty has been signed, which will immediately be laid before the Senate for its approbation; and which, containing stipulations that require legislative acts, must have the concurrence of both Houses before it can be carried into effect.

"Should this treaty receive the proper sans tion, a source of irritation will be stopped, that has, for so many years, in some degree alienated from each other two nations who, from interest as well as the remembrance of early associations ought to cherish the most friendly relations-an encouragement will be given for perseverance in the demands of justice, by this new proof, that if steadily pursued, they will be listened to-and admonition will be offered to those powers if any, which may be inclined to evade them, that they will never be abandened. Above all a just confidence will be inspired in our fellowcitizens, that their government will exert all the powers with which they have invested it, in support of their just claims upon foreign nations: at the same time that the frank acknowledge ment and provision for the payment of those which were addressed to our equity, although unsupported by legal proof, affords a practical illustration of our submission to the Divine rule of doing to others what we desire they should

"Sweden and Denmark having made compensation for the irregularities committed by their vessels, or in their ports, to the perfect satisfaction of the parties concerned, and having me newed the treaties of commerce entered into with them, our political and commercial relations with those powers continue to be on the most friendly footing.

"With Spain, our differences up to the 22d of February, 1819, were settled by the treaty of Washington of that date; but, at a subsequent period, our commerce with the states formerly colonies of Spain, on the continent of America was annoyed and frequently interrupted by her public and private armed ships. They captured many of our vessels prosecuting a lawful commerce, and sold them and their cargoes; and at one time, to our demands for restoration and indemnity, opposed the allegation, that they were taken in the violation of a blockade of all the ports of those states. This blockade was declaratory only, and the inadequacy of the force to maintain it was so manifest, that this allegation was varied to a charge of trade in contraband of war. This, in its turn, was also found un tenable; and the minister whom I sent with instructions to press for the reparation that was due to our injured fellow-citizens, has transmitted an answer to his demand, by which the capture are declared to have been legal, and are justified because the independence of the states of America never having been acknowledged by Spain, s had a right to prohibit trade with them under her old colonial laws. This ground of defend was contradictory, not only to those which has been formerly alleged, but to the uniform practice and established laws of nations; and ha been abandoned by Spain herself in the convertion which granted indemnity to British subject for captures made at the same time, under the same circumstances, and for the same allegation with those of which we complain.

"I. however, indulge reflection will lead to oth fident, that when his Cat monvinced of the justice of to preserve friendly relat countries, which it is my maintain, will induce him mand. I have therefore messenger, with instruction bring the case once more to the end that if, which I to believe, the same deci be deemed an unfriendly d be persisted in, the matt adjournment, be laid befor tional judges of what is pr negotiation for redress of in

"The conclusion of a t with France, seemed to pr portunity to renew our clain on other powers, and partie those upon Naples; more course of former negotiatio our failure to induce France was used as an argumen desires of the merchants wh sufferers, have therefore bee mission has been instituted nose of obtaining for them a too long delayed. This in resolved on, it was put in waiting for the meeting of C state of Europe created a events that might have rende ineffectual.

"Our demands upon the Two Sicilies are of a peculia juries on which they are four nor are the atrocity and pe those injuries were perpetrat extenuated. The sole groun nity has been refused is the a the tenure by which the mon: seizures held his crown. T unfounded in any principle of -now universally abandone powers upon whom the respon past rulers bore the most he tonably be given up by his whose counsels will receive an high sense of honor and regar re said to characterize him; a onfidence that the talents of missioned for that purpose wil the just claims of our injured of light as will enable me, before y bannounce that they have I seured. Precise instructions. bringing the negotiation to a s ben given, and will be obeyed "In the late blockade of Ter Portuguese fleet captured sever and committed other excesses, muon was demanded; and I w dispatching an armed force,

e the proper sane ill be stopped, that me degree alienated who, from interest f early associations, endly relations-an for perseverance in nis new proof, that, be listened to-and to those powers, red to evade them. idened. Above all pired in our fellowat will exert all the lave invested it, in pon foreign nations; frank acknowledgpayment of those ur equity, although affords a practical n to the Divine rule desire they should > aving made compencommitted by their the perfect satisfaced, and having remerce entered into d commercial relantinue to be on the ces up to the 22d of d by the treaty of but, at a subsequent the states formerly intinent of America, y interrupted by her ips. They captured uting a lawful comneir cargoes; and at for restoration and ation, that they were blockade of all the s blockade was deequacy of the force est, that this allegaf trade in contraband was also found unwhom I sent with reparation that was izens, has transmitted v which the captures gal, and are justified the states of America ledged by Spain, she ide with them under is ground of defend v to those which had to the uniform prace of nations; and has nerself in the conver ity to British subject ame time, under the r the same allegation nplain.

reflection will lead to other views, and feel confident, that when his Catholic Majesty shall be convinced of the justice of the claim, his desire to preserve friendly relations between the two countries, which it is my earnest endeavor to maintain, will induce him to accede to our demand. I have therefore dispatched a special messenger, with instructions to our minister to bring the case once more to his consideration : to the end that if, which I cannot bring myself to believe, the same decision, that cannot but be deemed an unfriendly denial of justice, should be persisted in, the matter may, before your adjournment, be laid before you, the constitutional judges of what is proper to be done when negotiation for redress of injury fails.

The conclusion of a treaty for indemnity with France, seemed to present a favorable opportunity to renew our claims of a similar nature on other powers, and particularly in the case of those upon Naples; more especially as, in the course of former negotiations with that power, our failure to induce France to render us justice was used as an argument against us. The desires of the merchants who were the principal sufferers, have therefore been acceded to, and a mission has been instituted for the special purpose of obtaining for them a reparation already too long delayed. This measure having been resolved on, it was put in execution without waiting for the meeting of Congress, because the meffectual.

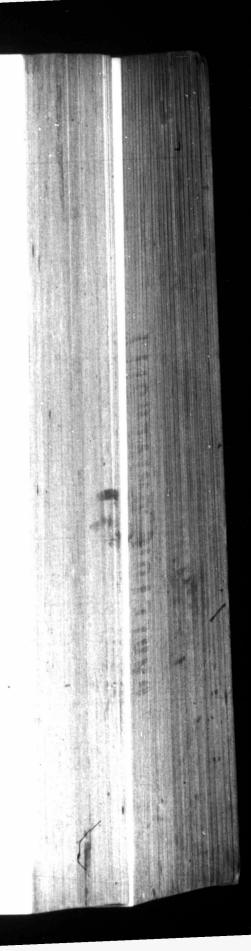

"Our demands upon the government of the Two Sicilies are of a peculiar nature. The injuries on which they are founded are not denied. nor are the atrocity and perfidy under which those injuries were perpetrated attempted to be extenuated. The sole ground on which indemnity has been refused is the alleged illegality of the tenure by which the monarch who made the sezures held his crown. This defence, always unfounded in any principle of the law of nations -now universally abandoned, even by those powers upon whom the responsibility for acts of past rulers bore the most heavily, will unquestonably be given up by his Sicilian Majesty, whose counsels will receive an impulse from that high sense of honor and regard to justice which re said to characterize him; and I feel the fullest wundence that the talents of the citizen commissioned for that purpose will place before him the just claims of our injured citizens in such a light as will enable me, before your adjournment. bannounce that they have been adjusted and secured. Precise instructions, to the effect of bringing the negotiation to a speedy issue, have ken given, and will be obeyed.

"In the late blockade of Terceira, some of the Portuguese fleet captured several of our vessels, and committed other excesses, for which repamuon was demanded; and I was on the point of

"I however, indulge the hope that further recurrence of a similar violence, and protect our citizens in the prosecution of their lawful contmerce, when official assurances, on which I relied. made the sailing of the ships unnecessary. Since that period, frequent promises have been made that full indemnity shall be given for the injuries inflicted and the losses sustained. In the performance there has been some, perhaps unavoidable, delay; but I have the fullest confidence that my earnest desire that this business may at once be closed, which our minister has been instructed strongly to express, will very soon be gratified. I have the better ground for this hope, from the evidence of a friendly d.sposition which that government has shown by an actual reduction in the duty on rice, the produce of our Southern States, authorizing the anticipation that this important article of our export will soon be admitted on the same footing with that produced by the most favored nation.

"With the other powers of Europe, we have fortunately had no cause of discussions for the redress of injuries. With the Empire of the Russias, our political connection is of the most friendly, and our commercial of the most liberal kind. We enjoy the advantages of navigation and trade, given to the most favored nation; but it has not yet suited their policy, or perhaps has not been found convenient from other considerations, to give stability and reciprocity to those privileges, by a commercial treaty. The illhealth of the minister last year charged with gate of Europe created an apprehension of making a proposition for that arrangement, did erents that might have rendered our application not permit him to remain at St. Petersburg; and the attention of that government, during the whole of the period since his departure, having been occupied by the war in which it was engaged, we have been assured that nothing could have been effected by his presence. A minister will soon be nominated, as well to effect this important object, as to keep up the relations of amity and good understanding of which we have received so many assurances and proofs from his Imperial Majesty and the Emperor his predecessor.

"The treaty with Austria is opening to us an important trade with the hereditary dominions of the Emperor, the value of which has been hitherto little known, and of course not sufficiently appreciated. While our commerce finds an entrance into the south of Germany by means of this treaty, those we have formed with the Hanseatic towns and Prussia, and others now in negotiation, will open that vast country to the enterprising spirit of our merchants on the north; a country abounding in all the materials for a mutually beneficial commerce, filled with enlightened and industrious inhabitants, holding an important place in the politics of Europe, and to which we owe so many valuable citizens, The ratification of the treaty with the Porte was sent to be exchanged by the gentleman appointed our chargé d'affaires to that court. Some difficulties occurred on his arrival; but at the date depatching an armed force, to prevent any of his last official dispatch, he supposed they had been obviated, and that there was every prospect of the exchange being speedily effected.

"This finishes the connected view I have thought it proper to give of our political and commercial relations in Europe. Every effort in my power will be continued to strengthen and extend them by treaties founded on principles of the most perfect reciprocity of interest, neither asking nor conceding any exclusive advantage. but liberating, as far as it lies in my power, the activity and industry of our fellow-citizens from the shackles which foreign restrictions may im-

"To China and the East Indies, our commerce continues in its usual extent, and with increased facilities, which the credit and capital of our merchants afford, by substituting bills for payments in specie. A daring outrage having been committed in those seas by the plunder of one of our merchantmen engaged in the pepper trade at a port in Sumatra, and the piratical perpetrators belonging to tribes in such a state of society that the usual course of proceeding between civilized nations could not be pursued. I forthwith dispatched a frigate with orders to require immediate satisfaction for the injury, and indemnity to the sufferers.

Few changes have taken place in our connections with the independent States of America since my last communication to Congress. The ratification of a commercial treaty with the United Republics of Mexico has been for some time under deliberation in their Congress, but was still undecided at the date of our last dispatches. The unhappy civil commotions that have prevailed there, were undoubtedly the cause of the delay; but as the government is now said to be tranquillized, we may hope soon to receive the ratification of the treaty and an arrangement for the demarcation of the boundaries between us. In the mean time, an important trade has been opened, with mutual benefit, from St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, by caravans, to the interior provinces of Mexico. This commerce is protected in its progress through the Indian countries by the troops of the United States, which have been permitted to escort the caravans beyond our boundaries to the settled part of the Mexican territory.

"From Central America I have received assurances of the most friendly kind, and a gratifying application for our good offices to remove a supposed indisposition towards that government in a neighboring state: this application was immediately and successfully complied with. They gave us also the pleasing intelligence, that differences which had prevailed in their internal affairs had been peaceably adjusted. Our treaty with this republic continues to be faithfully observed, and promises a great and beneficial commerce between the two countries; a commerce of the greatest importance, if the magnificent project of a ship canal through the dominions is hoped, fellow-citizens, may be of some use it

Ocean, now in serious contemplation, shall be executed

"I have great satisfaction in communicating the success which has attended the exertions of our minister in Colombia to procure a very considerable reduction in the duties on our flour in that republic. Indemnity, also, has been stipulated for injuries received by our merchants from illegal seizures; and renewed assurances are given that the treaty between the two countries shall be faithfully observed.

"Chili and Peru seem to be still threatened with civil commotions; and, until they shall be settled, disorders may naturally be apprehended requiring the constant presence of a naval force in the Pacific Ocean, to protect our fisheries and guard our commerce.

"The disturbances that took place in the Em. pire of Brazil, previously to, and immediately consequent upon, the abdication of the late Emperor, necessarily suspended any effectual application for the redress of some past injuries suffered by our citizens from that government while they have been the cause of others in which all foreigners seem to have participated Instructions have been given to our minister there, to press for indemnity due for losses occasioned by these irregularities, and to take care that our fellow-citizens shall enjoy all the privileges stipulated in their favor, by the treaty lately made between the two powers; all which the good intelligence that prevails between our minister at Rio Janeiro and the regency gives us the best reason to expect.

"I should have placed Buenos Avres on the list of South American powers, in respect to which nothing of importance affecting us was to be communicated, but for occurrences which have lately taken place at the Falkland Islands in which the name of that republic has been used to cover with a show of authority acts injurious to our commerce, and to the property and liberty of our fellow-citizens. In the course of the present year, one of our vessels engaged in the pursuit of a trade which we have always enjoyed without molestation, has been captured by a band acting, as they pretend, under the authority of the government of Buenos Avres. I have therefore given orders for the dispatch of an armed vessel, to join our squadron in those seas and aid in affording all lawful protection to our trade which shall be necessary; and shall, without delay, send a minister to inquire into the nature of the circumstances, and also of the claim, if any, that is set up by that government to those is ands. In the mean time, I submit the case to the consideration of Congress, to the end that they may clothe the Executive with such authority and means as they may deem necessary for pro viding a force adequate to the complete protection of our fellow-citizens fishing and trading in

"This rapid sketch of our foreign relations if of that state, from the Atlantic to the Pacific so much of your legislation as may bear on that important subject; while try at large a source of 1 contemplation of our po connection with the rest with all-having subject with few, and those susce ment—extending our con sides, and on none by any and mutually beneficial m blessing of Providence, ho prosperity which can be ourse with foreign nati eternal principles of justic will which are binding the individuals of whom t

"I have great satisfac statement of our affairs our national policy enable any indiscreet exposure of ments is usually conceal Having none but a straigh to pursue—guided by a sin hear the strongest lightnolitical combinations to entangle us, no complicated and in subjecting all we h sideration of our citizens, a of the world, we give no as tions, and lay ourselves on

This clear and succinct ac our foreign relations makes with these affairs as they the a riew of questions to be powers which were to refrom the firm and friendly would be urged. Turning coms the message thus spec showing a gradual increase. of the public debt, and that; lions was about double the ditures, exclusive of what the

"The state of the public fi shown by the Secretary of t report which he will presen I will here, however, congrat prosperous condition. The the present year will not fa even million seven hundred and the expenditures for all the public debt will not exce even hundred thousand. T count of the principal and in during the year, will exceed s shalf of dollars: a greater s upplied to that object, out of t pear since the enlargement of except the two years follo thereafter. The amount which pplied to the public debt fron templation, shall be n in communicating ided the exertions of procure a very conluties on our flour in also, has been stipuour merchants from wed assurances are en the two countries

o be still threatened d, until they shall be ally be apprehended, ence of a naval force tect our fisheries and

ook place in the Emto, and immediately ation of the late Emd any effectual applime past injuries sufm that government cause of others, in to have participated. iven to our minister y due for losses occaies, and to take care all enjoy all the privifavor, by the treaty vo powers; all which, prevails between our and the regency gives

Buenos Ayres on the owers, in respect to ice affecting us was to ccurrences which have Falkland Islands, in public has been used thority acts injurious ne property and liber-In the course of the vessels engaged in the re have always enjoyas been captured by a ad, under the authority ienos Ayres. I have the dispatch of an armdron in those seas, and protection to our trade ; and shall, without inquire into the nature also of the claim, if any, vernment to those isl-I submit the case to ess, to the end that they e with such authority eem necessary for pro

> our foreign relations it may be of some use in on as may bear on that

o the complete protec fishing and trading in

important subject; while it affords to the country at large a source of high gratification in the contemplation of our political and commercial connection with the rest of the world. At peace with all-having subjects of future difference with few, and those susceptible of easy adjustment—extending our commerce gradually on all sides, and on none by any but the most liberal and mutually beneficial means—we may, by the blessing of Providence, hope for all that national prosperity which can be derived from an interourse with foreign nations, guided by those eternal principles of justice and reciprocal good will which are binding as well upon States as the individuals of whom they are composed.

+I have great satisfaction in making this statement of our affairs, because the course of our national policy enables me to do it without any indiscreet exposure of what in other governnents is usually concealed from the people. Having none but a straightforward, open course to pursue—guided by a single principle that will hear the strongest light-we have happily no political combinations to form, no alliances to entangle us, no complicated interests to consult; and in subjecting all we have done to the consideration of our citizens, and to the inspection of the world, we give no advantage to other nations, and lay ourselves open to no injury.'

This clear and succinct account of the state of our foreign relations makes us fully acquainted with these affairs as they then stood, and presents a riew of questions to be settled with several nowers which were to receive their solution from the firm and friendly spirit in which they would be urged. Turning to our domestic concerns, the message thus speaks of the finances; showing a gradual increase, the rapid extinction of the public debt, and that a revenue of 27 millons was about double the amount of all expenditures, exclusive of what that extinction absorb-

"The state of the public finances will be fully shown by the Secretary of the Treasury, in the report which he will presently lay before you. I will here, however, congratulate you upon their prosperous condition. The revenue received in the present year will not fall short of twentyeven million seven hundred thousand dollars; and the expenditures for all objects other than the public debt will not exceed fourteen million even hundred thousand. The payment on acwunt of the principal and interest of the debt, during the year, will exceed sixteen millions and shalf of dollars: a greater sum than has been upplied to that object, out of the revenue, in any year since the enlargement of the sinking fund. except the two years following immediately 1829, to the 1st of January next, which is less than three years since the administration has been placed in my hands, will exceed forty millions of dollars."

On the subject of government insolvent debtors, the message said:

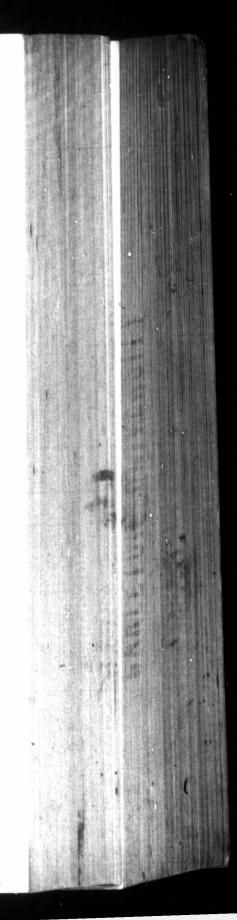

"In my annual message of December, 1829, I had the honor to recommend the adoption of a more liberal policy than that which then prevailed towards unfortunate debtors to the government; and I deem it my duty again to invite your attention to this subject. Actuated by similar views, Congress at their last session passed an act for the relief of certain insolvent debtors of the United States: but the provisions of that law have not been deemed such as were adequate to that relief to this unfortunate class of our fellow-citizens, which may be safely extended to them. The points in which the law appears to be defective will be particularly communicated by the Secretary of the Treasury: and I take pleasure in recommending such an extension of its provisions as will unfetter the enterprise of a valuable portion of our citizens, and restore to them the means of usefulness to themselves and the community."

Recurring to his previous recommendation in favor of giving the election of President and Vice-President to the direct vote of the people, the message says:

"I have heretofore recommended amendments. of the federal constitution giving the election of President and Vice-President to the people, and limiting the service of the former to a single term. So important do I consider these changes in our fundamental law, that I cannot, in accordance with my sense of duty, omit to press them upon the consideration of a new Congress. For my views more at large, as well in relation to these points as to the disqualification of members of Congress to receive an office from a President in whose election they have had an official agency, which I proposed as a substitute, I refer you to my former messages."

And concludes thus in relation to the Bank of the United States:

"Entertaining the opinions heretofore expressed in relation to the Bank of the United States, as at present organized, I felt it my duty, in my former messages, frankly to disclose them, in or-der that the attention of the legislature and the people should be seasonably directed to that important subject, and that it might be considered and finally disposed of in a manner best calculated to promote the ends of the constitution, and subserve the public interests. Having thus conscientiously discharged a constitutional duty, I threafter. The amount which will have been deem it proper, on this occasion, without a more uplied to the public debt from the 4th of March, particular reference to the views of the subject

1. The instructions drawn. Van Buren as Secretar direction of the President, McLane, for his guidance in open the negotiation for the

2 Making a breach of fr first and second officers of President Jackson and Via—for the purpose of thwa helping himself to the Pres 3. Breaking up the cabin

4. Introducing the syste (removal from office for opsame purpose.

A formal motion was m of Maine, to raise a comm send for persons and pape receive sworn testimony, an committee's opinion, to the looked so much like preferr as well as trying it, that dropped; and all reliance v numerous and elaborate spe all carefully prepared, and tion, though delivered in secr of the nomination was not e in the public mind was inter the unusual process of the e and intended publication of the speakers went through mula, repeated with equal pr abjuring all sinister motive selves to be wholly governed duty; describing the pain arraigning a gentleman w deportment were so urbane; nothing but a sense of duty force them to the reluctant a painful task. The accomp plimented, in a way to be r this excess of patriotism, whi inflict so much self-distress public good; and I, most u the misery of one of the gen and ridiculous conclusion b then expressed, to leave it for the present to the investigation of an enlightend people and their representatives."

CHAPTER LIX.

REJECTION OF MR. VAN BUREN, MINISTER TO ENGLAND.

At the period of the election of General Jackson to the Presidency, four gentlemen stood prominent in the political ranks, each indicated by his friends for the succession, and each willing to be the General's successor. They were Messrs. Clay and Webster, and Messrs. Calhoun and Van Buren; the two former classing politically against General Jackson-the two latter with him. But an event soon occurred to override all political distinction, and to bring discordant and rival elements to work together for a common object. That event was the appointment of Mr. Van Buren to be Secretary of State—a post then looked upon as a stepping-stone to the Presidency-and the imputed predilection of General Jackson for him. This presented him as an obstacle in the path of the other three, and which the interest of each required to be got out of the way. The strife first, and soon, began in the cabinet, where Mr. Calhoun had several friends; and Mr. Van Buren, seeing that General Jackson's administration was likely to be embarrassed on his account, determined to resign his post-having first seen the triumph of the new administration in the recovery of the British West India trade, and the successful commencement of other negotiations, which settled all outstanding difficulties with other nations, and shed such lustre upon Jackson's diplomacy. He made known his design to the President, and his wish to retire from the cabinet—did so—received the appointment of minister to London, and immediately left the United States; and the cabinet, having been from the beginning without harmony or cohesion, was dissolved-some resigning voluntarily, the rest under requisition-as already related in the chapter on the dissolution of the cabinet. The voluntary resigning members were classed as friends to Mr. Van Buren, the involuntary as opposed to him, and two of them (Messrs. Ingham and Branch) as friends to Mr. Calhoun; and became, of course, alienated from General Jackson.

I was particularly grieved at this breach between Mr. Branch and the President, having known him from boyhood—been school-fellows together, and being well acquainted with his inviolable honor and long and faithful attachment to General Jackson. It was the complete extinction of the cabinet, and a new one was formed.

Mr. Van Buren had nothing to do with this dissolution, of which General Jackson has borne voluntary and written testimony, to be used in this chapter; and also left behind him a written account of the true cause, now first published in this Thirty Years' View, fully exonerating Mr. Van Buren from all concern in that event and showing his regret that it had occurred. But the whole catastrophe was charged upon him by his political opponents, and for the unworthy purpose of ousting the friends of Mr. Calhoun and procuring a new set of members entirely devoted to his interest. This imputation was negatived by his immediate departure from the country, setting out at once upon his mission. without awaiting the action of the Senate on his nomination. This was in the summer of 1831 Early in the ensuing session—at its very commencement, in fact-his nomination was sent in and it was quickly perceptible that there was to be an attack upon him-a combined one; the three rival statesmen acting in concert, and each backed by all his friends. No one outside of the combination, myself alone excepted, could believe it would be successful. I saw they were masters of the nomination from the first day, and would reject it when they were ready to exhibit a case of justification to the country: and so informed General Jackson from an early period in the session. The numbers were sufficient: the difficulty was to make up a case to satisfy the people; and that was found to be a tedious business.

Fifty days were consumed in these preliminaries—to be precise, fifty-one; and that in addition to months of preparation before the Senate met. The preparation was long, but the attack vigorous; and when commenced, the business was finished in two days. There were about a dozen set speeches against him, from as many different speakers—about double the number that spoke against Warren Hastings—and but four off-hand replies for him; and it was evident that the three chiefs had brought up all their friends to the work. It was an unprecedented array of numbers and talent against out his breach between nt, having known ol-fellows together, with his inviolable ttachment to Geneplete extinction of as formed.

ng to do with this

Jackson has borne

ony, to be used in hind him a written ow first published fully exonerating cern in that event had occurred. But larged upon him by for the unworthy ls of Mr. Calhoun. nembers entirely deimputation was neeparture from the upon his mission. of the Senate on his he summer of 1831. -at its very comination was sent in. le that there was to combined one; the in concert, and each To one outside of the cepted, could believe w they were masters first day, and would dy to exhibit a case ry: and so informed rly period in the sesficient: the difficulty isfy the people; and us business.

ed in these prelimione; and that in paration before the on was long, but the en commenced, the odays. There were against him, from as yout double the numrren Hastings—and or him; and it was had brought up all

i had brought up all

It was an unpreceded talent against one individual, and he absent,—and of such amenity of manners as usually to disarm political opposition of all its virulence. The causes of objection were supposed to be found in four different heads of accusation; each of which was elaborately proved:

1. The instructions drawn up and signed by Mr. Van Buren as Secretary of State, under the direction of the President, and furnished to Mr. McLane, for his guidance in endeavoring to rement the negotiation for the West India trade.

2 Making a breach of friendship between the first and second officers of the government—president Jackson and Vice-President Calhoun—for the purpose of thwarting the latter, and helping himself to the Presidency.

3. Breaking up the cabinet for the same pur-

4. Introducing the system of "proscription" (removal from office for opinion's sake), for the same purpose.

A formal motion was made by Mr. Holmes, of Maine, to raise a committee with power to send for persons and papers, administer oaths. receive sworn testimony, and report it, with the committee's opinion, to the Senate; but this looked so much like preferring an impeachment, as well as trying it, that the procedure was dropped; and all reliance was placed upon the numerous and elaborate speeches to be delivered, all carefully prepared, and intended for publication, though delivered in secret session. Rejection of the nomination was not enough-a killing off in the public mind was intended; and therefore the unusual process of the elaborate preparation and intended publication of the speeches. All the speakers went through an excusatory formula repeated with equal precision and gravity; abjuring all sinister motives; declaring themselves to be wholly governed by a sense of public duty; describing the pain which they felt at arraigning a gentleman whose manners and deportment were so urbane; and protesting that nothing but a sense of duty to the country could force them to the reluctant performance of such a painful task. The accomplished Forsyth complimented, in a way to be perfectly understood. this excess of patriotism, which could voluntarily inflict so much self-distress for the sake of the public good; and I, most unwittingly, brought the misery of one of the gentlemen to a sudden

It was Mr. Gabriel Moore, of Alabama, who sat near me, and to whom I said, when the vote was declared, "You have broken a minister, and elected a Vice-President." He asked how? and I told him the people would see nothing in it but a combination of rivals against a competitor. and would pull them all down, and set him up. "Good God!" said he, "why didn't you tell me that before I voted, and I would have voted the other way." It was only twenty minutes before, for he was the very last speaker, that Mr. Moore had delivered himself thus, on this very interesting point of public duty against private feeling:

"Under all the circumstances of the case, notwithstanding the able views which have been presented, and the impatience of the Senate, I feel it a duty incumbent upon me, not only in justification of myself, and of the motives which govern me in the vote which I am about to give, but, also, in justice to the free and independent people whom I have the honor in part to represent, that I should set forth the reasons which have reluctantly compelled me to oppose the confirmation of the present nominee. Sir, it is proper that I should declare that the evidence adduced against the character and conduct of the late Secretary of State, and the sources from which this evidence emanates, have made an impression on my mind that will require of me, in the conscientious though painful discharge of my duty, to record my vote against his nomina-

The famous Madame Roland, when mounting the scaffold, apostrophized the mock statue upon it with this exclamation: "Oh Liberty! how many crimes are committed in thy name!" After what I have seen during my thirty years of inside and outside views in the Congress of the United States, I feel qualified to paraphrase the apostrophe, and exclaim: "Oh Politics! how much bamboozling is practised in thy game!"

were the pain which they felt at deportment were so urbane; and protesting that deportment were so urbane, and fovernor Moore of Alabama—just a dozen, and equal to a record. Only four spoke on the side of the nomination; General Smith of Marvland, Mr. Forsyth, Mr. Bedford Brown, and Mr. Marcy. Messrs. Clay and Webster, and their friends, chiefly confined themselves to the instructions on the West India trade; the friends of Mr. Calhoun paid most attention to the cabinet rupture, the separation of old friends, and the system of proscription. Against the instructions it was alleged, that they begged as a favor what was due as a right; that they took the side of Great Britain against our own country; and carried our party contests, and the issue of our party elections, into diplomatic negotiations with foreign countries; and the following clause from the instructions to Mr. McLane was quoted to sustain these allegations:

"In reviewing the causes which have preceded and more or less contributed to a result so much regretted, there will be found three groundsupon which we are most assailable: 1. In our too long and too tenaciously resisting the right of Great Britain to impose protecting duties in her colonies. 2. In not relieving her vessels from the restriction of returning direct from the United States to the colonies after permission had been given by Great Britain to our vessels to clear out from the colonies to any other than a British port. And, 3. In omitting to accept the terms offered by the act of Parliament of July, 1825, after the subject had been brought before Congress and deliberately acted upon by our government. It is, without doubt, to the combined operation of these (three) causes that we are to attribute the British interdict; you will therefore see the propriety of possessing yourself fully of all the explanatory and mitigating circumstances connected with them, that you may be able to obviate, as far as practicable, the unfavorable impression which they have produced."

This was the clause relied upon to sustain the allegation of putting his own country in the wrong, and taking the part of Great Britain, and truckling to her to obtain as a favor what was due as a right, and mixing up our party contests with our foreign negotiations. The fallacy of all these allegations was well shown in the replies of the four senators, and especially by General Smith, of Maryland; and has been further shown in the course of this work, in the chapter on the recovery of the British West India trade. But there was a document at that time in the Department of State, unknown to the friends of Mr. Van Buren in the Senate, which would not only have exculpated him, but turned the attacks of his assailants against them selves. The facts were these: Mr. Gallatin while minister at London, on the subject of this trade, of course sent home dispatches, addressed to the Secretary of State (Mr. Clay), in which he gave an account of his progress, or rather of the obstacles which prevented any progress, in the attempted negotiation. There were two of these dispatches, one dated September 22, 1826 the other November the 14th, 1827. The latter had been communicated to Congress in full, and printed among the papers of the case; of the former only an extract had been communicated. and that relating to a mere formal point. It so happened that the part of this dispatch of September, 1826, . tot communicated, contained Mr. Gallatin's report of the causes which led to the refusal of the British to treat-their refusal to permit us to accept the terms of their act of 1825, after the year limited for acceptance had expired-and which led to the order in council. cutting us off from the trade; and it so happened that this report of these causes, so made by Mr. Gallatin, was the original from which Mr. Van Buren copied his instructions to Mr. McLane! and which were the subject of so much censure in the Senate. I have been permitted by Mr. Everett, Secretary of State under President Fillmore-(Mr. Webster would have given me the same permission if I had applied during his time, for he did so in every case that I ever asked)-to examine this dispatch in the Department of State, and to copy from it whatever I wanted; I accordingly copied the following:

"On three points we were perhaps vulnerable.
"1. The delay of renewing the negotiation.

"2. The omission of having revoked the restriction on the indirect intercourse when that of Great Britain had ceased.

"3. Too long an adherence to the opposition to her right of laying protecting duties. This might have been given up as soon as the act of 1825 passed. These are the causes assigned for the late measure adopted towards the United States on that subject; and they have undoubtedly, had a decisive effect as far as relates to the order in council, assisted as they were by the belief that our object was to compel this country to regulate the trade upon our own terms."

This was a passage in the unpublished part of that dispatch, and it shows itself to be the original from which Mr. Van Buren copied, substituting the milder term of 'assailable' where

Mr. Gallatin had applied to Mr. Adams's administra contents of that dispatch were entirely forgotten by he spoke against Mr. Van received by him above fou time. They were probably the rest of the opposition selves; and the omission t print them could not have design to suppress what v debate in the Senate, as the printing had taken place lo sion of using the document The way I came to the omitted paragraph was thi upon the chapter of his re Mr. Van Buren for his view he sent me back a manuscri which he had drawn up in livered in New-York, at som which his friends could get u but which he never delive partly from an indispositio newspapers for character forbearance of temper—and ing on his return to the Unit was not at all hurt by his script speech contained this and I trust that I have used i cally for the right, and withou the wrong. It disposes of on but the gentlemen were wro broad view of this British question. Jackson took the W and he and Washington were enjoyment of colonial trade i solicited, and not a right to be the terms of the enjoyment the mother country. The a were wrong again in making t matter of attack upon Mr. Va were not his instructions, but on's. By the constitution the dent's, and the senators dero instrument in treating his se withor. The President alone d our foreign relations, and agned by the Secretaries of bree as coming from him, and thenticated by the formula, " I

w the President to say," &c ants against them e: Mr. Gallatin. he subject of this patches, addressed r. Clay), in which gress, or rather of 1 any progress, in here were two of ptember 22, 1896 1827. The latter ngress in full, and the case; of the en communicated mal point. It so s dispatch of Septed, contained Mr. s which led to the t-their refusal to is of their act of or acceptance had order in council. and it so happened s, so made by Mr. m which Mr. Van to Mr. McLane! f so much censure permitted by Mr. der President Fillnave given me the oplied during his case that I ever tch in the Departrom it whatever I > erhaps vulnerable, the negotiation. revoked the re-

the following:

to the opposition ing duties. This soon as the act of auses assigned for wards the United 1 they have, unct as far as relates sted as they were vas to compel this le upon our own unpublished part vs itself to be the Buren copied, subassailable" where Mr. Gallatin had applied that of "vulnerable" to Mr. Adams's administration. Doubtless the contents of that dispatch, in this particular, were entirely forgotten by Mr. Clay at the time he spoke against Mr. Van Buren, having been received by him above four years before that time. They were probably as little known to the rest of the opposition senators as to ourselves; and the omission to communicate and print them could not have occurred from any design to suppress what was material to the above the senate, as the communication and printing had taken place long before this occasion of using the document had occurred.

The way I came to the knowledge of this omitted paragraph was this: When engaged upon the chapter of his rejection, I wrote to Mr. Van Buren for his view of the case; and he sent me back a manuscript copy of a speech which he had drawn up in London, to be debrered in New-York, at some "public dinner," which his friends could get up for the occasion ; but which he never delivered, or published. nartly from an indisposition to go into the newspapers for character-much from a real forbearance of temper-and possibly from seeing on his return to the United States, that he was not at all hurt by his fall. That manuscript speech contained this omitted extract, and I trust that I have used it fairly and beneficially for the right, and without invidiousness to the wrong. It disposes of one point of attack ; but the gentlemen were wrong in their whole broad view of this British West India trade question. Jackson took the Washington ground, and he and Washington were both right. The enjoyment of colonial trade is a privilege to be solicited, and not a right to be demanded; and the terms of the enjoyment are questions for the mother country. The assailing senators were wrong again in making the instructions a matter of attack upon Mr. Van Buren. They were not his instructions, but President Jackma's. By the constitution they were the President's, and the senators derogated from that instrument in treating his secretary as their withor. The President alone is the conductor of our foreign relations, and the dispatches signed by the Secretaries of State only have three as coming from him, and are usually authenticated by the formula, "I am instructed by the President to say," &c., &c. It was a constitutional blunder, then, in the senators to treat Mr. Van Buren as the author of these instructions; it was also an error in point of fact. General Jackson himself specially directed them; and so authorized General Smith to declare in the Senate—which he did.

Breaking up the cabinet, and making dissension between General Jackson and Mr. Calhoun, was the second of the allegations against Mr. Van Buren. Repulsed as this accusation has been by the character of Mr. Van Buren. and by the narrative of the "Exposition," it has yet to receive a further and most authoritative contradiction, from a source which admits of no cavil-from General Jackson himself-in a voluntary declaration made after that event had passed away, and when justice alone remained the sole object to be accomplished. It was a statement addressed to "Martin Van Bumen, President of the United States," dated at the Hermitage, July 31st, 1840, and ran in these words:

"It was my intention as soon as I heard that Mr. Calhoun had expressed his approbation of the leading measures of your administration, and had paid you a visit, to place in your possession the statement which I shall now make; but bad health, and the pressure of other business have constantly led me to postpone it. What I have reference to is the imputation that has been sometimes thrown upon you, that you had an agency in producing the controversy which took place between Mr. Calhoun and myself, in consequence of Mr. Crawford's disclosure of what occurred in the cabinet of Mr. Monroe relative to my military operations in Florida during his administration. Mr. Calhoun is doubtless already satisfied that he did you injustice in holding you in the slightest degree responsible for the course I pursued on that occasion: but as there may be others who may still be disposed to do you injustice, and who may hereafter use the circumstance for the purpose of impairing both your character and his, I think it my duty to place in your possession the following emphatic declaration, viz.: That I am not aware of your ever saying a word to me relative to Mr. Calhoun, which had a tendency to create an interruption of my friendly relations with him: -that you were not consulted in any stage of the correspondence on the subject of his conduct in the cabinet of Mr. Monroe :- and that, after this correspondence became public, the only sentiment you ever expressed to me about it was that of deep regret that it should have occurred. You are at liberty to show this letter to Mr. Calhoun and make what other use of it you may think proper for the purpose of correcting the erroneous impressions which have prevailed on this subject."

A testimony more honorable than this in behalf of a public man, was never delivered, nor one more completely disproving a dishonorable imputation, and showing that praise was due where censure had been lavished. Mr. Van Buren was not the cause of breaking up the cabinet, or of making dissension between old friends, or of raking up the buried event in Mr. Monroe's cabinet, or of injuring Mr. Calhoun in any way. Yet this testimony, so honorable to him, was never given to the public, though furnished for the purpose, and now appears for the first time in print.

Equally erroneous was the assumption, taken for granted throughout the debate, and so extensively and deeply impressed upon the public mind, that Mr. Calhoun was the uniform friend of General Jackson in the election-his early supporter in the canvass, and steadfast adherent to the end. This assumption has been rebutted by Mr. Calhoun himself, who, in his pamphlet against General Jackson, shows that he was for himself until withdrawn from the contest by Mr. Dallas at a public meeting, in Philadelphia, in the winter of 1823-4; and after that was perfectly neutral. His words are: " When my name was withdrawn from the list of presidential candidates, I assumed a perfectly neutral position between Gen. Jackson and Mr. Adams." This clears Mr. Van Buren again, as he could not make a breach of friendship where none existed, or supplant a supporter where there was no support: and that there was none from Mr. Calhoun to Gen. Jackson, is now authentically declared by Mr. Calhoun himself. Yet this head of accusation, with a bad motive assigned for it, was most perseveringly urged by his friends, and in his presence, throughout the whole debate.

Introducing the "New-York system of proscription" into the federal government, was the last of the accusations on which Mr. Van Buren was arraigned; and was just as unfounded as all the rest. Both his temper and his judgment was against the removal of faithful officers because of difference of political opinion, or even for political conduct against himself—as the whole tenor of his conduct very soon after, and when he became President of the United States, abundantly showed. The departments at Washington, and some part of every State in the Union, gave proofs of his forbearance in this particular.

I have already told that I did not speak in the debate on the nomination of Mr. Van Buren; and this silence on such an occasion may require explanation from a man who does not desire the character of neglecting a friend in a pinch. I had strong reasons for that abstinence. and they were obliged to be strong to produce it. I was opposed to Mr. Van Buren's going to England as minister. He was our intended candidate for the Presidency, and I deemed such a mission to be prejudicial to him and the party. and apt to leave us with a candidate weakened with the people by absence, and by a residence at a foreign court. I was in this state of mind when I saw the combination formed against him, and felt that the success of it would be his and our salvation. Rejection was a bitter medicine, but there was health at the bottom of the draught. Besides, I was not the guardian of Messrs. Clay, Webster, and Calhoun, and was quite willing to see them fall into the pit which they were digging for another. I said nothing in the debate; but as soon as the vote was over I wrote to Mr. Van Buren a very plain letter. only intended for himself, and of which I kept no copy; but having applied for the original for use in this history, he returned it to me, on the condition that I should tell, if I used it, that in a letter to General Jackson, he characterized it as "honest and sensible." Honest, I knew it to be at the time; sensible, I believe the event has proved it to be; and that there was no mistake in writing such a letter to Mr. Van Buren. has been proved by our subsequent intercourse. It was dated January 28, 1832, and I subjoin it in full, as contemporaneous testimony, and as an evidence of the independent manner in which I spoke to my friends-even those I was endeavoring to make President. It ran thus:

"Your faithful correspondents will have informed you of the event of the 25th. Nobedy would believe it here until after it happened, but the President can bear me witness that I prepared him to expect it a month ago. The public will only understand it as a political movement against a rival; it is right, however, that you should know that without an auxiliary cause the political movement against you would not have succeeded. There were gentlemen voting against you who would no for a reason which was str own minds, and which (it dissemble) has hurt you many candid and disinter saving this much, I must upon this head of objectior out of itself, and to be a current and accumulating You doubtless know what and it does not become me but for myself, when I find of Lodi, I neither stop to I to start again. Forward, sav, make you governor o roll have been governor be back. Some say, come to of some of your friends; I s be only parleying with the middle of the bridge, and The vice-presidency is the place in the Senate can be c for that, then a place in t desirable. The Baltimore in the month of May, and in the discretion of your New-York, and your leadi have you nominated; and think you ought to be I President, on the Jackson you with him; a few cardin old democratic school migl ontending for on your own nasty of '98 (the federalists the United States in its inte of the United States has dr. and wields at its pleasure, t and federal internal improve up for yourself, and to rais can unite the scattered ele you will have to take positio and represent principles wh derstood; you will have to from the enemy by partitic people can see. The dynasty the Bank of the United Sta party, the federal internal i are against you. Now, if them, the people, and mysel ple can see nothing betw worth contending for, in a view. This is a very plain don't like it, you will throw sider it as not having been w I mean to retire upon my have mind and body to pu to see the right principles

The prominent idea in the people would see the rejlight that I did—as a combinarival—as a political bluwould work out the other w instead of foes in power."

The departments t of every State in orbearance in this

I did not speak ation of Mr. Van ch an occasion may nan who does not cting a friend in a or that abstinence. strong to produce n Buren's going to s our intended cand I deemed such a im and the party. indidate weakened ind by a residence this state of mind on formed against of it would be his ı was a bitter medithe bottom of the ot the guardian of Calhoun, and was I into the pit which ner. I said nothing s the vote was over a very plain letter. id of which I kept for the original for ned it to me, on the if I used it, that in , he characterized it Honest, I knew it I believe the event it there was no misto Mr. Van Buren, sequent intercourse. 32, and I subjoin it testimony, and as an manner in which I 10se I was endeavor-

dents will have inthe 25th. Nobody fter it happened, but witness that I preth ago. The public political movement , however, that you an auxiliary cause inst you would not re gentlemen voting ran thus:

against you who would not have done so except for a reason which was strong and clear in their own minds, and which (it would be improper to dissemble) has hurt you in the estimation of many candid and disinterested people. After saying this much, I must also say, that I look upon this head of objection as temporary, dying out of itself, and to be swallowed up in the current and accumulating topics of the day. You doubtless know what is best for yourself, and it does not become me to make suggestions; but for myself, when I find myself on the bridge of Lodi, I neither stop to parley, nor turn back to start again. Forward, is the word. Some sav, make you governor of New-York; I say, you have been governor before: that is turning back. Some say, come to the Senate in place of some of your friends; I say, that of itself will be only parleying with the enemy while on the middle of the bridge, and receiving their fire. The vice-presidency is the only thing, and if a place in the Senate can be coupled with the trial for that, then a place in the Senate might be desirable. The Baltimore Convention will meet in the month of May, and I presume it will be in the discretion of your immediate friends in New-York, and your leading friends here, to have you nominated; and in all that affair I think you ought to be passive. 'For Vice-President,' on the Jackson ticket, will identify you with him; a few cardinal principles of the old democratic school might make you worth contending for on your own account. The dynasty of '98 (the federalists) has the Bank of the United States in its interest; and the Bank of the United States has drawn into its vortex. and wields at its pleasure, the whole high tariff and federal internal improvement party. To set up for yourself, and to raise an interest which can unite the scattered elements of a nation, you will have to take positions which are visible, and represent principles which are felt and understood; you will have to separate yourself from the enemy by partition lines which the people can see. The dynasty of '98 (federalists). the Bank of the United States, the high tariff party, the federal internal improvement party, are against you. Now, if you are not against them, the people, and myself, as one of the people can see nothing between you and them worth contending for, in a national point of view. This is a very plain letter, and if you don't like it, you will throw it in the fire; consider it as not having been written. For myself, I mean to retire upon my profession, while I have mind and body to pursue it; but I wish to see the right principles prevail, and friends instead of foes in power." The prominent idea in this letter was, that the people would see the rejection in the same light that I did—as a combination to put down a rival—as a political blunder—and that it prevailed in England. On the evening of the day, on the morning of which all the London newspapers heralded the rejection of the American minister, there was a great party at Prince Talleyrand's-then the representative at the British court, of the new King of the French. Louis Phillippe. Mr. Van Buren, always master of himself, and of all the proprieties of his position, was there, as if nothing had happened; and received distinguished attentions, and complimentary allusions. Lord Aukland, grandson to the Mr. Eden who was one of the Commissioners of Conciliation sent to us at the beginning of the revolutionary troubles, said to him, "It is an advantage to a public man to be the subject of an outrage "-a remark, wise in itself, and prophetic in its application to the person to whom it was addressed. He came home-apparently gave himself no trouble about what had happened—was taken up by the people—elected, successively, Vice-President and Presidentwhile none of those combined against him ever attained either position.

There was, at the time, some doubt among their friends as to the policy of the rejection, but the three chiefs were positive in their belief that a senatorial condemnation would be political death. I heard Mr. Calhoun say to one of his doubting friends, "It will kill him, sir, kill him dead. He will never kick sir, never kick;" and the alacrity with which he gave the casting votes, on the two occasions, both vital, on which they were put into his hands, attested the sincerity of his belief, and his readiness for the work. How those tie-votes, for there were two of them, came to happen twice, "hand-running," and in a case so important, was matter of marvel and speculation to the public on the outside of the locked-up senatorial door. It was no marvel to those on the inside, who saw how it was done. The combination had a superfluity of votes, and, as Mr. Van Buren's friends were every one known, and would sit fast, it only required the superfluous votes on one side to go out; and thus an equilibrium between the two lines was established. When all was finished, the injunction of secrecy was taken off the proceedings, and the dozen set speeches delivered in secret session immediately published-which shows that they were delivered for effect, not upon the Senate, but upon the public mind. would work out the other way. The same idea The whole proceeding illustrates the impolicy, as well as peril to themselves, of rival public men sitting in judgment upon each other, and carries a warning along with it which should not be lost

As an event affecting the most eminent public men of the day, and connecting itself with the settlement of one of our important foreign commercial questions—as belonging to history, and already carried into it by the senatorial debates—as a key to unlock the meaning of other conduct—I deem this account of the REJECTION of Mr. Van Buren a necessary appendage to the settlement of the British West India trade question—as an act of justice to General Jackson's administration (the whole of which was involved in the censure then cast upon his Secretary of State), and as a sunbeam to illuminate the labyrinth of other less palpable concatenations.

CHAPTER LX.

BANK OF THE UNITED STATES—ILLEGAL AND VICIOUS CURRENCY.

In his first annual message, in the year 1829, President Jackson, besides calling in question the unconstitutionality and general expediency of the Bank, also stated that it had failed in furnishing a uniform currency. That declaration was greatly contested by the Bank and its advocates, and I felt myself bound to make an occasion to show it to be well founded, and to a greater extent than the President had intimated. It had in fact issued an illegal and vicious kind of paper -authorized it to be issued at all the branches -in the shape of drafts or orders payable in Philadelphia, but voluntarily paid where issued, and at all the branches; and so made into a local currency, and constituting the mass of all its paper seen in circulation; and as the greatest quantity was usually issued at the most remote and inaccessible branches, the payment of the drafts were well protected by distance and difficulty; and being of small denominations, loitered and lingered in the hands of the labor-'ng people until the "wear and tear" became a large item of gain to the Bank, and the difficulty of presenting them at Philadelphia an effectual bar to their payment there. The origin of this kind of currency was thus traced by me: It was invented hy a Scotch banker of Aberdeen, whe issued notes payable in London, always of small denominations, that nobody should take them up to London for redemption. The Bank of Ireland seeing what a pretty way it was to issue notes which they could not practically be compelled to pay, adopted the same trick. Then the English country bankers followed the example. But their career was short. The British parliament took hold of the fraud, and suppressed it in the three kingdoms. That parliament would tolerate no currency issued at one place, and, payable at another.

The mode of proceeding to get at the question of this vicious currency was the same as that pursued to get at the question of the non-renewal of the charter—namely, an application for leave to bring in a joint resolution declaring it to be illegal, and ordering it to be suppressed; and in asking that leave to give the reasons for the motion: which was done, in a speech of which the following are some parts:

"Mr. Benton rose to ask leave to bring in his promised resolution on the state of the currency. He said he had given his notice for the leave he was about to ask, without concerting or consulting with any member of the Senate. The object of his resolution was judicial, not political; and he had treated the senators not as counsellors. but as judges. He had conversed with no one. neither friend nor adversary; not through contempt of counsel, or fear of opposition, but from a just and rigorous regard to decorum and propriety. His own opinion had been made up through the cold, unadulterated process of legal research; and he had done nothing, and would do nothing, to prevent, or hinder, any other senator from making up his opinion in the same way. It was a case in which politics, especially partisan politics, could find no place; and in the progress of which every senator would feel himself retiring into the judicial office-becoming one of the judices selecti-and searching into the stores of his own legal knowledge, for the judgment, and the reasons of the judgment, which he must give in this great cause, in which a nation is the party on one side, and a great moneyed corporation on the other. He [Mr. B.] believed the currency, against which his resolution was directed, to be illegal and dangerous; and so believing, it had long been his determination to bring the question of its legality before the Senate and the people; and that without regard to the powerful resentment, to the effects of which he might be exposing himself. He had adopted the form of a declaratory resolution, because it was intended to declare the true sense of the charter upon a disputed point. He made his resolution joint in its character, that it might have the action of both H single in its object, that t not be embarrassed wit The form of the resolution state his reasons for askir the importance of it requi clearly stated. The Sens and its duties. It is the House of Representatives, bank corporation, to exam of its proceedings, and to infractions of its charter; come a duty, since the ver the charter to try these int very question, and that wi a scire facias or the pre party, and had given judgm poration; a decision which pelled, by the strongest conv to consider both as extraju

"The resolution, continu asking leave to bring in, e ject. It declares against orders, AS A CURRENCY. It I arraign. I make no inqu barrass my subject with terial inquiries-I make modes of contract and pay mitted, or not permitted, United States, in the condu ings and individual transac lies with the currency; for rency and private dealings bank has made a distinctio in the nature of things, as draw, and as clear as word currency concerns the publiof that currency is taken 1 guardianship of the charter: s enacted for it : private de viduals: and it is for individ bargains, to take care of The charter of the Bank of authorized, but not regula dealings of the bank; it is f the regulation of currency. tion I take my stand. I es the broad and clear distin makes, and the charter sanct currency! I eschew all inq of making bargains for the bills of exchange, buying and ver bullion, building houses, h and servants, purchasing no in supplies of fuel and station

"1. I object to it because see of currency upon construction of currency, sir, was the greater of which the bank was created in the twelfth article, expreperform; and I cannot pay so to the understandings of the famed that charter, as to supplemental that charter, as to supplemental that charter is to supplemental th of Aberdeen, whe idon, always of ody should take tion. The Bank y way it was to ot practically be ame trick. Then followed the exshort. The Brite fraud, and supns. That parliancy issued at one et at the question the same as that on of the non-rely, an application solution declaring to be suppressed: e the reasons for e, in a speech of parts:

ave to bring in his te of the currency. ce for the leave he certing or consultenate. The object not political; and not as counsellors, rsed with no one, not through conposition, but from decorum and proad been made up ed process of legal othing, and would er, any other senanion in the same politics, especially place; and in the or would feel him-1 office—becoming and searching into knowledge, for the of the judgment, eat cause, in which e side, and a great ther. He [Mr. B.] t which his resolual and dangerous; been his determinaits legality before nd that without rement, to the effects ig himself. He had story resolution, belare the true sense ed point. He made racter, that it might have the action of both Houses of Congress; and single in its object, that the main design might not be embarrassed with minor propositions. The form of the resolution gave him a right to state his reasons for asking leave to bring it in; the importance of it required those reasons to be clearly stated. The Senate, also, has its rights and its duties. It is the right of the Senate and House of Representatives, as the founder of the bank corporation, to examine into the regularity of its proceedings, and to take cognizance of the infractions of its charter; and this right has become a duty, since the very tribunal selected by the charter to try these infractions had tried this very question, and that without the formality of a scire facias or the presence of the adverse party, and had given judgment in favor of the corporation; a decision which he [Mr. B.] was compelled, by the strongest convictions of his judgment, to consider both as extrajudicial and erroneous.

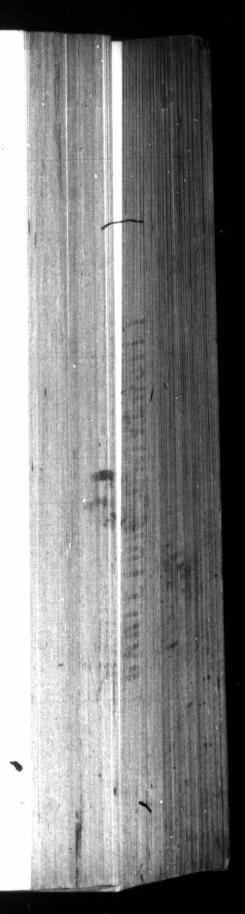

The resolution, continued Mr. B., which I am asking leave to bring in, expresses its own object. It declares against the legality of these orders, AS A CURRENCY. It is the currency which larraign. I make no inquiry, for I will not emharrass my subject with irrelevant and immaterial inquiries-I make no inquiry into the modes of contract and payment which are permitted, or not permitted, to the Bank of the United States, in the conduct of its private dealings and individual transactions. My business lies with the currency; for, between public currency and private dealings, the charter of the bank has made a distinction, and that founded in the nature of things, as broad as lines can draw, and as clear as words can express. The currency concerns the public; and the soundness of that currency is taken under the particular guardianship of the charter; a special code of law is enacted for it: private dealings concern individuals: and it is for individuals, in making their bargains, to take care of their own interests. The charter of the Bank of the United States has authorized, but not regulated, certain private dealings of the bank; it is full and explicit upon the regulation of currency. Upon this distinction I take my stand. I establish myself upon the broad and clear distinction which reason makes, and the charter sanctions. I arraign the currency! I eschew all inquiry into the modes of making bargains for the sale or purchase of bills of exchange, buying and selling gold or silver bullion, building houses, hiring officers, clerks, and servants, purchasing necessaries, or laying in supplies of fuel and stationery.

"1. I object to it because it authorizes an issue of currency upon construction. The issue of currency, sir, was the great and main business for which the bank was created, and which it is, in the twelfth article, expressly authorized to perform; and I cannot pay so poor a compliment to the understandings of the eminent men who framed that charter, as to suppose that they left the main business of the bank to be found, by mastruction, in an independent phrase, and that is nothing but a blank piece of paper in the hands phrase to be found but once in the whole charter. I cannot compliment their understandings with the supposition that, after having authorized and defined a currency, and subjected it to numerous restrictions, they had left open the door to the issue of another sort of currency, upon construction, which should supersede the kind they had prescribed, and be free from every restriction to which the prescribed currency was subject. Let us recapitulate. Let us sum up the points of incompatibility between the characteristics of this currency, and the requisites of the charter: let us group and contrast the frightful features of their flagrant illegality. 1. Are they signed by the president of the bank and his principal cashier? They are not! 2. Are they under the corporate seal? Not at all! 3. Are they drawn in the name of the corporation? By no means! 4. Are they subject to the double limitation of time and amount in case of credit? They are not; they may exceed sixty days' time, and be less than one hundred dollars! 5. Are they limited to the minimum size of five dollars? Not at all! 6. Are they subject to the supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury? Not in the least! 7. The prohibition against suspending specie payments? They are not subject to it! 8. The penalty of double interest for delayed payment? Not subject to it! 9. Are they payable where issued? Not at all, neither by their own terms, nor by any law applicable to them! 10. Are they payable at other branches? So far from it, that they were invented to avoid such payment! 11. Are they transferable by delivery? No; by indorsement! 12. Are they receivable in payment of public dues? So far from it, that they are twice excluded from such payments by positive enactments! 13. Are the directors liable for excessive issues? Not at all! 14. Has the holder a right to sue at the branch which issues the order? No, sir, he has a right to go to Philadelphia and sue the directors there! a right about equivalent to the privilege of going to Mecca to sue the successors of Mahomet for the bones of the prophet! Fourteen points of contrariety and difference. Not a feature of the charter in the faces of these orders. Every mark a contrast; every lineament a contradiction; all announcing, or rather denouncing, to the world, the positive fact of a spurious progeny; the incontestable evidence of an illegitimate and bastard issue.

"I have now, Mr. President, brought this branch bank currency to the test of several provisions in the charter, not all of them, but a few which are vital and decisive. The currency fails at every test; and upon this failure I predicate an argument of its total illegality. Thus far I have spoken upon the charter, and have proved that if this currency can prevail, that instrument, with all its restrictions and limitations, its jealous, prohibitory constitution, and multiplied enactments for the safety of the public, of the bank. I will now have recourse to another class of arguments -a class extrinsic to the charter, but close to the subject-indispensable to fair examination, and directly bearing upon the illegal character of this currency.

"1. In the first place, I must insist that these orders cannot possibly serve for currency, because they are subject to the law of indorsable paper. The law which governs all such paper is too universally known to be enlarged upon nere. Presentation for acceptance and payment, notice of default in either, prompt return of the dishonored paper; and all this with rigorous punctuality, and a loss of recourse for the slightest delay at any point, are the leading features of this law. Now it is too obvious that no paper subject to the law of indorsement can answer the purposes of circulation. It will die on the hands of the holders while passing from one to another, instead of going to the place of payment. Now it is incontestable that these orders are instruments negotiable by indorsement, and by indorsement alone. Whether issued under the charter, or under the general laws of the land, they are still subject to the law of indorsable paper. They are the same in either case as if drawn by one citizen upon another. And this is a point which I mean to make clear: for many worthy people believe there is some peculiar law for bank paper, which takes it out of the operation of the general laws of the land. Not so the fact. The twelfth fundamental article of the bank constitution declares that the bills or notes to be issued by the bank shall be negotiable in the same manner as if issued by a private person; that is to say, those payable to a named person or his order, by indorsement, in like manner and with the like effect as foreign bills of exchange; and those made payable to bearer shall be negotiable by delivery alone; in the same manner, we may add, as a silver dollar. So much for these orders, if drawn under the charter; if not drawn under it, they are then issued under the general law of the land, or without any law at all. Taken either under the charter or out of it, it comes to the same point, namely, that these orders are subject to the same law as if drawn by one private person upon another. This is enough to fix their character, and to condemn them as a circulating medium; it is enough for the people to know; for every citizen knows enough of law to estimate the legal value of an unaccepted order, drawn upon a man five hundred or one thousand miles off! But it has the word bearer on the back! Yes, sir, and why not on the face as easily as on the back? Our school-time acquaintance, Mr. President, the gentleman from Cork, with his coat buttoned behind, had a sensible, and, I will add, a lawful reason for arraying himself in that grotesque habiliment; but what reason can the bank have for putting bearer on the back of the order, where it has no effect upon its negotiable character, and omitting it on the face, where it would have governed the character, and secured follow them; and, in a little while, the species to the holder all the facilities for the prompt and easy recovery of the contents of a paper transferable by mere delivery? The only effect of this preposterous or cunning indorsement must be to bamboozle the ignorant—pardon the low word, sir-to bamboozle the ignorant with the belief that they are handling a currency which may at any time be collected without proof, trouble, or delay; while in reality it is a currency which reserves to the bank all the legal defences which can be set up to prevent the recovery of a parcel of old, unaccepted, unpresented unauthorized bills of exchange.

"2. I take a second exception to these orders as a currency. It is this, that being once paid they are done with. A note transferable by delivery, may be reissued, and its payment demanded again, and so on for ever. But a hill of exchange, or any paper subject to the same law with a bill of exchange, is incapable of reissue, and is payable but once. The payment once made. extinguishes the debt; the paper which evidenced it is dead in law, and cannot be resuscitated by any act of the parties. That payment can be plead in bar to any future action. This law applies to checks and orders as well as to bills of exchange; it applies to bank checks and orders as well as to those of private persons, and this allegation alone would annihilate every pretension of these branch bank orders to the character of currency.

"The bank went into operation with the beginning of the year 1817; established eighteen branches, half a dozen of which in the South and West; issued its own notes freely, and made large issues of notes payable at all these branches. The course of trade carried the branch notes of the South and West to the Northeast; and nothing in the course of trade brought them back to the West. They were payable in all demands to the federal government; merchants in Philadelphia, New-York, and Boston received them in payment of goods, and gave them-not back again in payment of Southern and Western produce-but to the collectors of the customs. Become the money of the government, the bank had to treat them as cash. The fourteenth section of the charter made them receivable in all payments to the government, and another clause required the bank to transfer the moneys of the government to any point ordered; these two clauses (the transfer clause being harmless without the receiving one contained in the fourteenth section) laid the bank under the obligation to cash all the notes of all the branches wherever presented; for, if she did not do it, she would be ordered to transfer the notes to the place where they were payable, and then to transfer the silver to the place where it was wanted; and both these operations she had to perform at her own expense. The Southern and Western branch notes flowed to the Northeast; the gold and silver of the South and West were ordered to

of the South and West. Northeast; but the notes and in mail stages than t wagons; and the parent and the branches in Newhausted by the double of for their own, and for Se branch notes besides, were ping payment at the end Cheves then came into stopped the issue of Sor branch paper, and saved t vency! Application was gress to repeal the fourt charter, and thus relieve obligation to cash its notes gress refused to do so. A at the same time to repeal fundamental article of the bank, for the purpose of reand principal cashier of th the labor of signing the notes. Congress refused th And here every thing reste continued president. The em branches ceased to do no bank notes or bills we bearing the signatures of th principal cashier, and none Southern and Western bra of the stockholders became the prospect of a renewed the actual view of the inacti of the bank in the South and retired. He withdrew from had saved from bankruptcy, not render useful to the Sou then ensued a set of operation bank to do the things which fused to do for it; that is to operation of the fourteenth se of the twelfth fundamental : the signature of the notes an These operations resulted in the branch bank orders. flooding the country, circula considered every where as go cause they are voluntarily branches, and erroneously land office and custom-hous the bank its present appare temporary popularity, and its sound and uniform currency. rative; an appalling one, it i but let it stand for nothing if the proof.

"I have now established, N trust and believe, the truth of of my proposition, namely, tha branch bank orders is unau charter, and illegal. I will no in support of the second branc tion, namely, that this curre suppressed.

"The mere fact of the illega

s for the prompt ntents of a paper The only effect ing indorsement prant-pardon the the ignorant with dling a currency collected without e in reality it is a bank all the legal to prevent the reepted, unpresented on to these orders t being once paid te transferable by d its payment dever. But a bill of ct to the same law able of reissue, and vment once made er which evidenced be resuscitated by payment can be action. This law as well as to bills checks and orders persons, and this ilate every preteners to the character ration with the betablished eighteen hich in the South notes freely, and avable at all these trade carried the and West to the the course of trade West. They were he federal governelphia, New-York, payment of goods, gain in payment of oduce-but to the Become the money had to treat them tion of the charter 1 payments to the lause required the of the government two clauses (the ess without the refourteenth section) oligation to cash all wherever presentt. she would be orto the place where to transfer the silwanted; and both perform at her own d Western branch east; the gold and st were ordered to e while, the specie of the South and West was transferred to the Northeast; but the notes went faster on horses and in mail stages than the silver could go in wagons; and the parent bank in Philadelphia. and the branches in New-York and Boston, exhausted by the double operation of providing for their own, and for Southern and Western branch notes besides, were on the point of stopping payment at the end of two years. Mr. Cheves then came into the presidency; he stopped the issue of Southern and Western branch paper, and sayed the bank from insolvency! Application was then made to Congress to repeal the fourteenth section of the charter, and thus relieve the bank from this obligation to cash its notes every where. Congress refused to do so. Application was made at the same time to repeal a part of the twelfth fundamental article of the constitution of the bank, for the purpose of relieving the president and principal cashier of the parent bank from the labor of signing the five and ten dollar notes. Congress refused that application also. And here every thing rested while Mr. Cheves continued president. The Southern and Western branches ceased to do business as banks; no bank notes or bills were seen but those hearing the signatures of the president and his principal cashier, and none of these payable at Southern and Western branches. The profits of the stockholders became inconsiderable, and the prospect of a renewed charter was lost in the actual view of the inactivity and uselessness of the bank in the South and West. Mr. Cheves retired. He withdrew from an institution he had saved from bankruptcy, but which he could not render useful to the South and West; and then ensued a set of operations for enabling the bank to do the things which Congress had refused to do for it; that is to say, to avoid the operation of the fourteenth section, and so much of the twelfth fundamental article as related to the signature of the notes and bills of the bank. These operations resulted in the invention of the branch bank orders. These orders, now flooding the country, circulating as notes, and considered every where as gold and silver (because they are voluntarily cashed at several branches, and erroneously received at every land office and custom-house), have given to the bank its present apparent prosperity, its temporary popularity, and its delusive cry of a sound and uniform currency. This is my narbut let it stand for nothing if not sustained by the proof.

"I have now established, Mr. President, as I trust and believe, the truth of the first branch of my proposition, namely, that this currency of charter, and illegal. I will now say a few words in support of the second branch of the proposition, namely, that this currency ought to be hold to be sufficient to justify this suppression. In a country of laws, the laws should be obeyed. No private individual should be allowed to trample them under foot; much less a public man, or public body; least of all, a great moneyed corporation wielding above one hundred millions of dollars per annum, and boldly contending with the federal government for the sceptre of political power-money is power! The Bank of the United States possesses more money than the federal government; and the question of power is now to be decided between them. That question is wrapped up in the case before you. It is a case of clear conviction of a violation of the laws by this great moneyed corporation; and that not of a single statute, and by inadvertence, and in a small matter, which concerns but few, but in one general, sweeping, studied, and systematic infraction of a whole code of laws-of an entire constitution, made for its sole government and restraint-and the pernicious effects of which enter into the revenues of the Union, and extend themselves to every moneyed transaction between man and This is the case of violated law which stands before you; and if it goes unpunished. then do I say, the question of political power is decided between the bank and the government. The question of supremacy is at an end. Let there be no more talk of restrictions or limitation in the charter. Grant a new one. Grant it upon the spot. Grant it without words! Grant it in blank! to save the directors from the labor of re-examination! the court from the labor of constructions! and yourselves from the radation of being publicly trampled under foot. "I do insist, Mr. President, that this currency ought to be suppressed for illegality alone, even if no pernicious consequences could result from its circulation. But pernicious consequences do result. The substituted currency is not the equivalent of the branch bank notes, whose place it has usurped; it is inferior to those notes in vital particulars, and to the manifest danger and loss of the people.

"In the first place, these branch bank orders are not payable in the States in which they are issued. Look at them! they are nominally payable in Philadelphia Look at the law! It gives the holder no right to demand their contents at the branch bank, until the order has been to Philadelphia, and returned. I lay no stress upon the insidious circumstance that these rative; an appalling one, it must be admitted; orders are now paid at the branch where issued. and at other branches. That voluntary, delusive payment may satisfy those who are willing to swallow a gilded hook; it may satisfy those who are willing to hold their property at the will of the bank. For my part, I want law for branch bank orders is unauthorized by the my rights. I look at the law, to the legal rights of the holder, and say that he has no right to demand payment at the branch which issued the order. The present custom of paying ppressed. is voluntary, not compulsory; it depends upon "The mere fact of the illegality, sir, I should the will of the bank, not upon law; and none but tyrants can require, or slaves submit to, a tenure at will. These orders, even admitting them to be legal, are only payable in Philadelphia; and to demand payment there, is a delusive and impracticable right. For the body of the citizens cannot go to Philadelphia to get the change for the small orders; merchants will not remit them; they would as soon carry up the fires of hell to Philadelphia; for the bank would consign them to ruin if they did. These orders are for the frontiers; and it is made the interest and the policy of merchants to leave them at home, and take a bill of exchange at a nominal premium. Brokers alone will ever carry them, and that as their own, after buying them out of the hands of the people at a discount fixed by themselves.

"This contrivance, Mr. President, of issuing bank paper at one place, payable at another and a distant place, is not a new thing under the sun; but its success, if it succeeds here, will be a new thing in the history of banking. This contrivance, sir, is of European origin. It began in Scotland some years ago, with a banker in Aberdeen, who issued promissory notes payable in London. Then the Bank of Ireland set her branches in Sligo, Cork, and Belfast, at the same work; and they made their branch notes payable in Dublin. The English country bankers took the hint, and put out their notes payable in London. The mass of these notes were of the smaller denominations, one or two pounds sterling, corresponding with our five and ten dollar orders; such as were handled by the laboring classes, and who could never carry them to London and Dublin to demand their contents. At this point the British Imperial Parliament took cognizance of the matter; treated the issue of such notes as a vicious practice, violative of the very first idea of a sound currency, and particularly dangerous to the laboring classes. The parliament suppressed the practice. This all happened in the year 1826; and now this practice, thus suppressed in England, Scotland, and Ireland, is in full operation in our America! and the directors of the Bank of the United States are celebrated, as the greatest of financiers, for picking up an illegal practice of Scottish origin, and putting it into operation in the United States, and that, too, in the very year in which it was suppressed in Great Britain!"

Leave was not given to introduce the joint resolution. The friends of the bank being a majority in the Senate, refused the motion, but felt themselves bound to make defence for a currency so illegal and vicious. Further discussion was stopped for that time; but afterwards, on the question of the recharter, the illegality of this kind of currency was fully established, and a clause put into the new charter to sup-

but tyrants can require, or slaves submit to, a tenure at will. These orders, even admitting them to be legal, are only payable in Philadelphia; and to demand payment there, is a delusive and impracticable right. For the body of the citizens cannot go to Philadelphia to get the change for the small orders; merchants will not

CHAPTER LXI.

ERROR OF MONS. DE TOCQUEVILLE IN RELATION TO THE BANK OF THE UNITED STATES, THE PRESIDENT, AND THE PEOPLE.

The first message of President Jackson, delivered at the commencement of the session of 1829–30, confirmed the hopes which the democracy had placed in him. It was a message of the Jeffersonian school, and re-established the land-marks of party, as parties were when founded on principle. Its salient point was the Bank of the United States, and the non-renewal of its charter. He was opposed to the renewal, both on grounds of constitutionality and expediency; and took this early opportunity of so declaring, both for the information of the people, and of the institution, that each might know what they had to rely upon with respect to him. He said:

"The charter of the Bank of the United States expires in 1836, and its stockholders will probably apply for a renewal of their privileges. In order to avoid the evils resulting from precipitancy in a measure involving such important principles, and such deep pecuniary interests, I feel that I cannot, in justice to the parties interested, too soon present it to the deliberate consideration of the legislature and the people. Both the constitutionality and the expediency of the law creating this bank are well questioned by a large portion of our fellow-citizens; and it must be admitted by all that it has failed in the great end of establishing a uniform and sound currency."

This passage was the grand feature of the message, rising above precedent and judicial decisions, going back to the constitution and the foundation of party on principle; and risking a contest at the commencement of his administration, which a mere politician would have put off to the last. The Supreme Court had decided in favor of the constitutionality of the institution; a democracic Congress, in chartering a second bank, had yielded the question, both of constitutionality and expediency. Mr. Ma hank charter in 1816, yield without surrendering his effect was the same in beha and against the constitution tegrity of party founded on down the greatest landmar ed a power of construction limitations of the constitution at liberty to pass any law cessary to carry into effect The whole argument for th the word "necessary" at merated powers granted to rise to the first great div Washington's time—the fed the construction which wo tional bank; the democrati s then called,) being agains It was not merely the bar mey opposed, but the latit tion which would authorize i mable Congress to substitu other cases for the words of do what it pleased under the -a plea under which they to their own will as under the clause. It was the turnin strong and splendid governm ing what it pleased, and government on the other, li constitution. The construct point, because it made a gap though which Congress cou measures which it deemed t still there were great objection elf. Experience had shown to be a political machine, adve ment, mingling in the election the country, corrupting the pr its influence in the only way neved power-by corruption son's objections reached both -the unconstitutionality of th emediency. It was a return and Hamiltonian times of the bon of General Washington, words of the constitution, and pretations of its administrator Such a message, from such a pt to look back when he had ard-electrified the democra put an end to the of the remedy in se has been taken private bankers in ase which requires

Vol. I.—15

LXI.

VILLE IN RELATION ITED STATES, THE LE.

ident Jackson, det of the session of s which the democwas a message of re-established the sewere when found-point was the Bank non-renewal of its o the renewal, both ty and expediency; nity of so declaring, ne people, and of the mow what they had him. He said:

of the United States skholders will probheir privileges. In ulting from precipi ing such important ecuniary interests, I to the parties interthe deliberate cond the people. Both e expediency of the well questioned by a titizens; and it must a failed in the great rrm and sound cur-

d feature of the mesind judicial decisions, ion and the foundaand risking a contest. his administration, id have put off to the had decided in favor he institution; a deering a second bank, th of constitutionality.

and expediency. Mr. Madison, in signing the bank charter in 1816, yielded to the authorities without surrendering his convictions. But the effect was the same in behalf of the institution, and against the constitution, and against the integrity of party founded on principle. It threw down the greatest landmark of party, and yielded a power of construction which nullified the limitations of the constitution, and left Congress at liberty to pass any law which it deemed newasary to carry into effect any granted power. The whole argument for the bank turned upon the word "necessary" at the end of the enumerated powers granted to Congress; and gave rise to the first great division of parties in Washington's time-the federal party being for the construction which would authorize a natonal bank; the democratic party (republican, s then called,) being against it.

It was not merely the bank which the democmey opposed, but the latitudinarian construction which would authorize it, and which would mable Congress to substitute its own will in other cases for the words of the constitution, and do what it pleased under the plea of "necessary" -a plea under which they would be left as much to their own will as under the "general welfare" clause. It was the turning point between a strong and splendid government on one side, doing what it pleased, and a plain economical government on the other, limited by a written constitution. The construction was the main noint because it made a gap in the constitution bough which Congress could pass any other measures which it deemed to be "necessars:" still there were great objections to the bank itself. Experience had shown such an institution to be a political machine, adverse to free government, mingling in the elections and legislation of the country, corrupting the press; and exerting ts influence in the only way known to the moneved power-by corruption. General Jack son's objections reached both heads of the case -the unconstitutionality of the bank, and its inmediency. It was a return to the Jeffersonian and Hamiltonian times of the early administraton of General Washington, and went to the words of the constitution, and not to the interretations of its administrators, for its meaning. Such a message, from such a man-a man not pt to look back when he had set his face forard-electrified the democratic spirit of the country. The old democracy felt as if they were to see the constitution restored before they ded -the young, as if they were summoned to the reconstruction of the work of their fathers. It was evident that a great contest was coming on, and the odds entirely against the President. On the one side, the undivided phalanx of the federal party (for they had not then taken the name of whig); a large part of the democratic party, vielding to precedent and judicial decision; the bank itself, with its colossal money power-its arms in every State by means of branches-its power over the State banks—its power over the business community-over public men who should become its debtors or retainers-its organization under a single head, issuing its orders in secret, to be obeyed in all places and by all subordinates at the same moment. Such was the formidable array on one side: on the other side a divided democratic party, disheartened by division, with nothing to rely upon but the goodness of their cause, the prestige of Jackson's name, and the presidential power; -good against any thing less than two-thirds of Congress on the final question of the re-charter; but the risk to run of his non-election before the final question came on.

Under such circumstances it required a strong sense of duty in the new President to commence his career by risking such a contest; but he believed the institution to be unconstitutional and dangerous, and that it ought to cease to exist; and there was a clause in the constitution-that constitution which he had sworn to supportwhich commanded him to recommend to Congress, for its consideration, such measures as he should deem expedient and proper. Under this sense of duty, and under the obligation of this oath, President Jackson had recommended to Congress the non-renewal of the bank charter, and the substitution of a different fiscal agent for the operations of the government-if any such agent was required. And with his accustomed frankness, and the fairness of a man who has nothing but the public good in view, and with a disregard of self which permits no personal consideration to stand in the way of a discharge of a public duty, he made the recommendation six years before the expiration of the charter, and in the first message of his first term; thereby taking upon his hands such an enemy as the Bank of the United States, at the very commencement of his administration.

Vol. I.-15

That such a recommendation against such an institution should bring upon the President and his supporters, violent attacks, both personal and political, with arraignment of motives as well as of reasons, was naturally to be expected; and that expectation was by no means disappointed. Both he and they, during the seven years that the bank contest (in different forms) prevailed, received from it—from the newspaper and periodical press in its interest, and from the public speakers in its favor of every grade-an accumulation of obloquy, and even of accusation, only lavished upon the oppressors and plunderers of nations-a Verres, or a Hastings. This was natural in such an institution. But President Jackson and his friends had a right to expect fair treatment from history-from disinterested history-which should aspire to truth, and which has no right to be ignorant or careless. He and they had a right to expect justice from such history; but this is what they have not received. A writer, whose book takes him out of that class of European travellers who requite the hospitality of Americans by disparagement of their institutions, their country, and their character—one whose general intelligence and candor entitle his errors to the honor of correction-in brief, M. de Tocqueville-writes thus of President Jackson and the Bank of the United

"When the President attacked the bank, the country was excited and parties were formed; the well-informed classes rallied round the bank, the common people round the President. But it must not be imagined that the people had formed a rational opinion upon a question which offers so many difficulties to the most experienced statesman. The bank is a great establishment, which enjoys an independent existence, and the people, accustomed to make and unmake whatever it pleases, is startled to meet with this obstacle to its authority. In the midst of the perpetual fluctuation of society, the community is irritated by so permanent an institution, and is led to attack in order to see whether it can be shaken or controlled, like all other institutions of the country." -- (Chapter 10.)

Of this paragraph, so derogatory to President Jackson and the people of the United States, every word is an error. Where a fact is alleged, it is an error; where an opinion is expressed, it an error; where a theory is invented, it is fanciful and visionary. President Jackson did They came thus. the bank and its leading antinot attack the bank; the bank attacked him, and Jackson friends believed that the institution for political as well as pecuniary motives; and under the lead of politicians. When General Jackson, in his first message, of December, 1829 expressed his opinion to Congress against the renewal of the bank's charter, he attacked no right or interest which the bank possessed. It was an institution of limited existence, enjoying great privileges,—among others a monopoly of national banking, and had no right to any prolongation of existence or privilege after the termination of its charter-so far from it if there was to be another bank, the doctrine of equal rights and no monopolies or perpetuities required it to be thrown open to the free competition of all the citizens. The reasons given by the President were no attack upon the bank He impugned neither the integrity nor the skill of the institution, but repeated the objections of the political school to which he belonged and which were as old as Mr. Jefferson's cabinet opinion to President Washington, in the year 1791, and Mr. Madison's great speech in the House of Representatives in the same year. He therefore, made no attack upon the bank, either upon its existence, its character, or any one of its rights. On the other hand, the bank did attack President Jackson, under the lead of politicians, and for the purpose of breaking him down. The facts were these: President Jackson had communicated his opinion to Congress in December, 1829, against the renewal of the charter; near three years afterwards, on the 9th of January, 1832, while the charter had yet above three years to run, and a new Congress to be elected before its expiration, and the presidential election impending-(General Jackson and Mr. Clay the candidates)—the memorial of the president and directors of the bank was suddenly presented in the Senate of the United States, for the renewal of its charter.

Now, how came that memorial to be presented at a time so inopportune? so premature, so inevitably mixing itself with the presidential election, and so encroaching upon the rights of the people, in snatching the question out of their hands, and having it decided by a Congress not elected for the purpose-and to the usurpation of the rights of the Congress elected for the purpose? How came all these anomalies? all these violations of right, decency and propriety?

was stronger than the Pres heat him in the election-t in Congress (as it then s charter,-driving him upon rendering him odious if he u him if (after what he ha This was the opinion of th friendly to the bank, and in dent. But the bank had Congress also friendly to between these two classes opposition of opinion on the for the new charter. It wa in communications betwee Philadelphia, then slow and coach conveyances, over mir waters, to come to conclucult point. Mr. Biddle and in doubt, for it would not matter, unless all the frier Congress acted together. I certainty, General Cadwallac friend and confidant of Mr usual envoy in all the delicate or troubles, was sent to Was result; and the union of 1 bank party in favor of the Te came, and the mode of ope he machinery of caucus—th vhich a few govern many. wing of different politics, sa headed by Mr. Clay, the othe Smith, of Maryland. The 1 agreed, but the democratic b and Mr. Clay's strong will dor the resolution was taken to bound to go together.

I had a friend in one of th informed me regularly of the p eventually that the point wa bank—that General Cadwalla with the news, and with injunmemorial immediately at Was given day. The day arrived, morial, and my friend came t reason why; which was, that 1 overturned in the bad roads a Cadwallader in the shoulder, a but that the delay would only and then the memorial would It did so; and on Monday, the 1832 was presented in the Sena niary motives; and When General of December, 1829 ongress against the ter, he attacked no ank possessed. It existence, enjoying iers a monopoly of o right to any proprivilege after the -so far from it, if nk, the doctrine of lies or perpetuities n to the free compeie reasons given by ck upon the bank. tegrity nor the skill ed the objections of h he belonged, and Jefferson's cabinet ington, in the year great speech in the the same year. He. pon the bank, either cter, or any one of hand, the bank did under the lead of ose of breaking him : President Jackson nion to Congress in he renewal of the afterwards, on the the charter had yet nd a new Congress ration, and the presi--(General Jackson s)-the memorial of s of the bank was Senate of the United

> s charter. orial to be presented ? so premature, so rith the presidential g upon the rights of question out of their d by a Congress not nd to the usurpation ress elected for the hese anomalies? all cency and propriety? and its leading antithat the institution was stronger than the President—that it could heat him in the election—that it could beat him in Congress (as it then stood), and carry the charter.-driving him upon the veto power, and rendering him odious if he used it, and disgracing him if (after what he had said) he did not. This was the opinion of the leading politicians friendly to the bank, and inimical to the President. But the bank had a class of friends in Congress also friendly to Gen. Jackson; and between these two classes there was vehement opposition of opinion on the point of moving for the new charter. It was found impossible. in communications between Washington and Philadelphia, then slow and uncertain, in stage each conveyances, over miry roads and frozen waters, to come to conclusions on the difficult point. Mr. Biddle and the directors were in doubt, for it would not do to move in the matter, unless all the friends of the bank in Congress acted together. In this state of unortainty, General Cadwallader, of Philadelphia, friend and confidant of Mr. Biddle, and his usual envoy in all the delicate bank negotiations or troubles, was sent to Washington to obtain a result; and the union of both wings of the bank party in favor of the desired movement.  $\eta_{e \text{ came}}$ , and the mode of operation was through he machinery of caucus—that contrivance by thich a few govern many. The two wings wing of different politics, sat separately, one headed by Mr. Clay, the other by Gen. Samuel Smith, of Maryland. The two caucuses disagreed, but the democratic being the smaller, and Mr. Clay's strong will dominating the other, bound to go together. I had a friend in one of these councils who informed me regularly of the progress made, and eventually that the point was carried for the hank-that General Cadwallader had returned with the news, and with injunctions to have the memorial immediately at Washington, and by a given day. The day arrived, but not the memorial, and my friend came to inform me the reason why; which was, that the stage had got werturned in the bad roads and crippled Gen. Cadwallader in the shoulder, and detained him; but that the delay would only be of two days; and then the memorial would certainly arrive. t did so; and on Monday, the 9th of January, a senator from Pennsylvania, and resident of Philadelphia, where the bank was established. Mr. Dallas was democratic, and the friend of General Jackson, and on presenting the memorial, as good as told all that I have now written, bating only personal particulars. He

"That being requested to present this document to the Senate, praying for a renewal of the existing charter of the bank, he begged to be indulged in making a few explanatory remarks. With anhesitating frankness he wished it to be understood by the Senate, by the good commonwealth which it was alike his duty and his pride to represent with fidelity on that floor, and by the people generally, that this application, at this time, had been discouraged by him. Actuated mainly, if not exclusively, by a desire to preserve to the nation the practical benefits of the institution, the expediency of bringing it forward thus early in the term of its incorporation, during a popular representation in Congress which must cease to exist some years before that term expires, and on the eve of all the excitement incident to a great political movement, struck his mind as more than doubtful. He felt deep solicitude and apprehension lest, in the progress of inquiry, and in the development of views, under present circumstances, it might be drawn into real or imaginary conflict with some higher, some more favorite, some more immediate wish or purpose of the American people; and from such a conflict. what sincere friend of this useful establishment would not strive to save or rescue it, by at least a temporary forbearance or delay?"

This was the language of Mr. Dallas, and it was equivalent to a protest from a well-wisher of the bank against the perils and improprieties of its open plunge into the presidential canvass, the resolution was taken to proceed, and all for the purpose of defeating General Jackson and electing a friend of its own. The prudential counsels of such men as Mr. Dallas did not prevail; political counsels governed; the bank charter was pushed-was carried through both Houses of Congress-dared the veto of Jackson -received it-roused the people-and the bank and all its friends were crushed. Then it affected to have been attacked by Jackson; and Mons. de Tocqueville has carried that fiction into history, with all the imaginary reasons for a groundless accusation, which the bank had invented.

The remainder of this quotation from Mons. de Tocqueville is profoundly erroneous, and deserves to be exposed, to prevent the mischiefs 832 was presented in the Senate by Mr. Dallas, which his book might do in Europe, and even in America, among that class of our people who look to European writers for information upon their own country. He speaks of the wellinformed classes who rallied round the bank; and the common people who had formed no rational opinion upon the subject, and who joined General Jackson. Certainly the great business community, with few exceptions, comprising wealth, ability and education, went for the bank, and the masses for General Jackson; but which had formed the rational opinion is seen by the event. The "well-informed" classes have bowed not merely to the decision, but to the intelligence of the masses. They have adopted their opinion of the institution-condemned it-repudiated it as an "obsolete idea;" and of all its former advocates, not one exists now. All have yielded to that instinctive sagacity of the people. which is an overmatch for book-learning; and which being the result of common sense, is usually right; and being disinterested, is always honest. I adduce this instance—a grand national one-of the succumbing of the well-informed classes to the instinctive sagacity of the people, not merely to correct Mons. de Tocqueville, but for the higher purpose of showing the capacity of the people for self-government. The rest of the quotation, "the independent existence—the people accustomed to make and unmake-startled at this obstacle-irritated at a permanent institution-attack in order to shake and control;" all this is fancy, or as the old English wrote it, fantasy-enlivened by French vivacity into witty theory, as fallacious as witty.

I could wish I were done with quotations from Mons. de Tocqueville on this subject; but he forces me to make another extract from his book, and it is found in his chapter 18, thus:

"The slightest observation enables us to appreciate the advantages which the country derives from the bank. Its notes are taken on the borders of the desert for the same value as in Philadelphia. It is nevertheless the object of great animosity. Its directors have proclaimed their hostility to the President, and are accused. not without some show of probability, of having abused their influence to thwart his election. The President, therefore, attacks the establishment with all the warmth of personal enmity; and he is encouraged in the pursuit of his revenge by the conviction that he is supported by the secret propensities of the majority. It always holds a great number of the notes issued by the provincial banks, which it can at any time oblige them to convert into cash. It has by all the history of the case; to say nothing itself nothing to fear from a similar demand as the extent of its resources enables it to meet all claims. But the existence of the provincia banks is thus threatened, and their operations are restricted, since they are only able to issue a quantity of notes duly proportioned to their capital. They submit with impatience to this salutary control. The newspapers which they have bought over, and the President, whose interest renders him their instrument, attack the bank with the greatest vehemence. They rouse the local passions and the blind democratic instinct of the country to aid in their cause; and they assert that the bank directors form a permanent aristocratic body, whose influence must ultimately be felt in the government, and must affect those principles of equality-upon which society rests in America."

Now, while Mons. de Tocqueville was arranging all this fine en omium upon the bank and all this censure upon its adversaries, the whole of which is nothing but a French translation of the bank publications of the day, for itself and against President Jackson-during all this time there was a process going on in the Congress of the United States, by which it was proved that the bank was then insolvent, and living from day to day upon expedients; and getting hold of property and money by contrivances which the law would qualify as swindling-plundering its own stockholders-and bribing individuals institutions, and members of legislative bodies wherever it could be done. Those fine notes of which he speaks, were then without solid value. The salutary restraint attributed to its control over local banks was soon exemplified in its forcing many of them into complicity in its crimes, and all into two general suspensions of specie payments, headed by itself. Its solidity and its honor were soon shown in open bankruptcy-in the dishonor of its notes-the violation of sacred deposits—the disappearance of its capital—the destruction of institutions connected with it-the extinction of fifty-six millions of capital (its own, and that of others drawn into its vortex); -and the ruin or damage of families, both foreign and American, who had been induced by its name, and by its delusive exhibitions of credit, to invest their money in its stock. Placing the opposition of President Jackson to such an institution to the account of base and personal motives-to feelings of revenge because he had been unable to seduce it into his support-is an error of fact manifested of his own personal characte in Congress during the ex national bank, and was ago same grounds of unconstitut pediency. He delivered his second one before it had man to him. His first opposit grainst the institution-with monduct : he knew nothing neither said, or insinuated as Subsequently, when miscond he charged it; and openly Equally unfounded is the ins place, of subserviency to loc instrument of local banks! h made the friend, even, of the who was all his life a hard opposer of all banks-the de quent banks in his own Sta stroke of his pen, in the reces mainst its will, in the summ all their notes from the list ments! and whose last messa in his farewell address to the them earnestly and affection whole system of paper mon which he feelingly described a upon the most meritorious 1 munity, and the part least ab the productive classes.

The object of this chapter error of Mons. de Tocqueville history, and to do justice to and the democracy: and my tas have done it for me-have ansu tion on which the bank contr and have nullified every argui the bank-and that both with, erence to its misconduct. As has been proved to be "unner country is found to do infinitel it than with it. During the tw existence there was pecuniary country—periodical returns of ontraction, deranged currency, r panies and convulsions in the me the almost twenty years which ince, these calamitous words 1 eard: and the contrast of the make the condemnation of one, f the other. There was no nistence of the bank: there has milar demand, as bles it to meet all of the provincia I their operations nly able to issue ortioned to their npatience to this apers which they sident, whose iniment, attack the ence. They rouse ad democratic intheir cause; and ectors form a perse influence must rnment, and must ality-upon which neville was arrangpon the bank, and ersaries, the whole ench translation of day, for itself and luring all this time in the Congress of it was proved that t, and living from and getting hold of rivances which the ing—plundering its ing individuals, inlegislative bodies,

Those fine notes then without solid at attributed to its soon exemplified in ato complicity in its eral suspensions of itself. Its solidity own in open bankits notes-the vio--the disappearance tion of institutions tinction of fifty-six and that of others -and the ruin or reign and American, ts name, and by its edit, to invest their g the opposition of an institution to the motives-to feelings een unable to seduce ror of fact manifested ase; to say nothing of his own personal character. He was a senator in Congress during the existence of the first national bank, and was against it; and on the same grounds of unconstitutionality and of inexnediency. He delivered his opinion against this second one before it had manifested any hostility to him. His first opposition was abstractagainst the institution—without reference to its onduct; he knew nothing against it then, and neither said, or insinuated any thing against it. Subsequently, when misconduct was discovered, he charged it; and openly and responsibly. Equally unfounded is the insinuation in another place, of subserviency to local banks. He, the instrument of local banks! he who could not be made the friend, even, of the great bank itself; who was all his life a hard money man-an opposer of all banks-the denouncer of delinquent banks in his own State; who, with one troke of his pen, in the recess of Congress, and gainst its will, in the summer of 1836, struck all their notes from the list of land-office payments! and whose last message to Congress, and in his farewell address to the people, admonished them earnestly and affectionately against the whole system of paper money—the evils of which he feelingly described as falling heaviest upon the most meritorious part of the community, and the part least able to bear themthe productive classes.

The object of this chapter is to correct this error of Mons. de Tocqueville, and to vindicate history, and to do justice to General Jackson and the democracy: and my task is easy. Events have done it for me-have answered every question on which the bank controversy depended, and have nullified every argument in favor of the bank-and that both with, and without reference to its misconduct. As an institution, it has been proved to be "unnecessary," and the country is found to do infinitely better without it than with it. During the twenty years of its existence there was pecuniary distress in the country-periodical returns of expansion and contraction, deranged currency, ruined exchanges. panics and convulsions in the money market. In the almost twenty years which have elapsed since, these calamitous words have never been leard: and the contrast of the two periods will make the condemnation of one, and the eulogy of the other. There was no gold during the gold currency ever since, and that before we got California. There were general suspensions of specie payments during its time; and none since. Exchanges were deranged during its existence: they have been regular since its death. Labor and property lived the life of "up and down"-high price one day, no price another day-while the bank ruled: both have been "up" all the time, since it has been gone. We have had a war since-a foreign war-which tries the strength of financial systems in all countries; and have gone through this war not only without a financial crisis, but with a financial triumph—the public securities remaining above par the whole time; and the government paying to its war debt creditors a reward of twenty dollars upon the hundred to get them to accept their pay before it is due; and in this shining side of the contrast, experience has invalidated the decision of the Supreme Court, by expunging the sole argument upon which the decision rested. "Necessity," "necessary to carry into effect the granted powers," was the decision of the court. Not so, the voice of experience. That has proved such an institution to be unnecessary. Every granted power, and some not granted, have been carried into effect since the extinction of the national bank, and since the substitution of the gold currency and the independent treasury; and all with triumphant success-the war power above all, and most successfully exercised of all. And this sole foundation for the court's decision in favor of the constitutionality of the bank being removed, the decision itself vanishes-disappears-"like the baseless fabric of a vision, leaving not a wreck behind." But there will be a time hereafter for the celebration of this victory of the constitution over the Supreme Court—the only object of this chapter being to vindicate General Jackson and the people from the errors of Mons. de Tocqueville in relation to them and the bank: which is done.

CHAPTER LXII.

EXPENSES OF THE GOVERNMENT,

make the condemnation of one, and the eulogy of the other. There was no gold during the mistance of the bank: there has been an ample every increase of expense was closely scrutinized.

by them, and brought to the test of the clearest necessity. Some increase was incident to the growing condition of the country; but every item beyond the exigencies of that growth was subjected to severe investigation and determined opposition. In the execution of this policy the expenses proper of the government—those incident to working its machinery-were, immediately after my entrance into the Senate, and after the army and other reductions of 1820 and '21 had taken effect-just about eight millions of dollars. The same expenditure up to the beginning of the year 1832—a period of about ten years-had risen to thirteen and a half millions: and, adverting to this increase in some current debate, and with a view to fix attention upon the growing evil, I stated to the Senate that these expenses had nearly doubled since I had been a member of the Senate. This statement drew a reply from the veteran chairman of the Senate's committee on finance (General Smith, of Maryland), in opposition to my statement: which, of course, drew further remarks from me. Both sets of remarks are valuable at this day-instructive in the picture they present between 1822-1832-and 1850. Gen. Smith's estimate of about ten millions instead of eight-though predicated on the wrong basis of beginning to count before the expenses of the army reduction had taken effect, and counting in the purchase of Florida, and some other items of a nature foreign to the support of government-even his estimate presents a startling point of comparison with the same expenditure of the present day: and calls for the revival of that spirit of economy which distinguished the democracy in the earlier periods of the government. Some passages from the speech of each senator (General Smith and Mr. Benton) will present this brief, but important inquiry, in its proper point of view. Gen. Smith said:

"I will now come, Mr. President, t. my principal object. It is the assertion, 'that, since the year 1821, the expenses of the government had nearly doubled; and I trust I shall be able to show that the senator from Missouri [Mr. Benton] had been under some misapprehension. The Senate are aware of the effect which such an assertion, coming from such high authority, must have upon the public mind. It certainly had its effect even upon this enlightened body. I mentioned to an honorable senator a few days since, that the average ordinary expenditure of the government for the last nine years did not exceed the sum of twelve and a half millions. But, said was an extraordinary payment, and such as could the senator, the expenditures have greatly in. creased during that period. I told him I thought they had not; and I now proceed to prove, that with the exception of four years, viz., 1821, 1822 1823. and 1824, the expenditures of the government have not increased. I shall endeavor to show the causes of the reduction of expenses during those years, and that they afford no criteria by which to judge of the necessary expenses of government, and that they are exceptions to the general rate of expenditures, arising from particular causes. But even they exhibit an expenditure far above the one half of the present annual ordinary expenses.

"In the year 1822, which was the period when the senator from Missouri [Mr. Benton] took his seat in the Senate, the ordinary expenses of the government amounted to the sum of $9,827.643. The expenses of the year 1823, amounted to $9.784,154. I proceed, Mr. President, to show the cause which thus reduced the ordinary expenses during these years. I speak in the presence of gentlemen, some of whom were then in the House of Representatives, and will correct me if my recollection should lead me into error. During the session of the year 1819-'20 the President asked a loan, I think, of five millions to defray the expenses of the government, which he had deemed necessary, and for which estimates had, as usual, been laid before Congress. A loan of three millions only was granted; and in the next session, another loan of, I think, seven millions was asked, in order to enable the Executive to meet the amount of expenses estimated for, as necessary for the year 1821. A loan of five millions was granted, and in the succeeding vear another loan of five hundred thousand dollars was asked, and refused. Congress were dissatisfied that loans should be required in time of profound peace, to meet the common expenses of the nation; and they refused to grant the amount asked for in the estimates, although this amount would have been granted if there had been money in the treasury to meet them with out resorting to loans. The Committee of Ways and Means (and it was supported by the House) lessened some of the items estimated for and refused others. No item, except such as was indispensably necessary, was granted. By the adoption of this course, the expenditures were reduced, in 1821, to $10,723,479, and to the sums already mentioned for the two years, Isand 1823, and the current expenses of 1824. $10,330,144. The consequence was, that the treasury was restored to a sound state, so that Congress was enabled, in the year 1825, to appropriate the full amount of the estimate. The expenditures of 1824 amounted to $15,330,144. This large expenditure is to be attributed to the payment made to Spain in that year, of $5,000,000 for the purchase of Florida. I entertained doubts whether I ought to include this sum in the expenditures; but, bn full consideration, I deemed it proper to include it. It may be said that it not again occur. So is the of awards under the Trea and 1828, amounting to same character, too, are th the purchase of lands from removal of the Indians: several States for moneys late war; and a variety of charges on the treasury.'

The error of this state of the calculation, and in t which did not belong to th the government, and in b fore the year of reductionin a period of ten years mad two millions above the o answered thus:

"Mr. Benton rose in repl Maryland. Mr. B. said tl in a former debate, seeme orasion of the elaborate which the senator from Ma through. Mr. B. said he h in debate; it was a genera treated as an account stat. officer. His remark was, th diture had nearly doubled member of the Senate. used, nor the mode of the the accuracy of an account signify a great and inordina paratively short time. He Senate this day with the being called to justify that long arraignment of it as ready at all times to jus quickly do it. Mr. B. said the remark, he had no state his eye, but he had two g before him, which all the tions upon earth, and all comparative statements of : not shake or alter, which we he came into the Senate tl government was worked for nine millions of dollars : and payments for the last veal message, were about fourtee quarters. The sum estim expenditures, by the Secreta was thirteen and a half n millions were recommended to meet increased expendi these were two great facts eye, and which he would produce no proofs as to the because the President's me tary's report were so recei universally reprinted, that recollect, or turn to their is statement upon their o

es have greatly intold him I thought ceed to prove, that, rs, viz., 1821, 1829 ures of the governshall endeavor to uction of expenses they afford no crinecessary expenses y are exceptions to tures, arising from n they exhibit an a half of the present was the period when r. Benton] took his ary expenses of the sum of $9,827,643, 1823, amounted to President, to show ed the ordinary ex-I speak in the of whom were then ves, and will correct I lead me into error. year 1819-'20 the ink, of five millions. e government, which 1 for which estimates efore Congress. A vas granted; and in oan of, I think, seven to enable the Exef expenses estimated ar 1821. A loan of nd in the succeeding hundred thousand sed. Congress were d be required in time he common expenses refused to grant the imates, although this ranted if there had to meet them with-Committee of Ways orted by the House) estimated for, and except such as was as granted. By the e expenditures were 723,479, and to the · the two years, 1820 t expenses of 1824, zence was, that the sound state, so that he year 1825, to apf the estimate. The nted to $15,330,144. be attributed to the at year, of $5,000,000 I entertained doubts this sum in the exsideration. I deemed may be said that it nt, and such as could not again occur. So is the payment on account of awards under the Treaty of Ghent, in 1827 and 1828, amounting to $1,188,716. Of the same character, too, are the payments made for the purchase of lands from the Indians; for the removal of the Indians; for payments to the several States for moneys advanced during the late war; and a variety of other extraordinary charges on the treasury."

The error of this statement was in the basis of the calculation, and in the inclusion of items which did not belong to the expenses proper of the government, and in beginning to count before the year of reduction-the whole of which. in a period of ten years made an excess of twentytwo millions above the ordinary expenses. I ankwered thus:

"Mr. Benton rose in reply to the senator from Maryland. Mr. B. said that a remark of his. in a former debate, seemed to have been the occasion of the elaborate financial statements which the senator from Maryland had just gone through. Mr. B. said he had made the remark in debate; it was a general one, and not to be treated as an account stated by an accounting officer. His remark was, that the public expenditure had nearly doubled since he had been a member of the Senate. Neither the words used nor the mode of the expression, implied the accuracy of an account; it was a remark to signify a great and inordinate increase in a comparatively short time. He had not come to the Senate this day with the least expectation of being called to justify that remark, or to hear a long arraignment of it argued; but he was ready at all times to justify, and he would quickly do it. Mr. B. said that when he made the remark, he had no statement of accounts in his eye, but he had two great and broad facts before him, which all the figures and calculations upon earth, and all the compound and comparative statements of arithmeticians, could not shake or alter, which were-first, that when he came into the Senate the machinery of this government was worked for between eight and nine millions of dollars; and, secondly, the actual payments for the last year, in the President's message, were about fourteen millions and threequarters. The sum estimated for the future expenditures, by the Secretary of the Treasury, was thirteen and a half millions; but fifteen millions were recommended by him to be levied to meet increased expenditures. Mr. B. said these were two great facts which he had in his eye, and which he would justify. He would produce no proofs as to the second of his facts, because the President's message and the Secretary's report were so recently sent in, and so universally reprinted, that every person could recollect, or turn to their contents, and verify recollection. He would verify his first statement only by proofs, and for that purpose would refer to the detailed statements of the public expenditures, compiled by Van Zandt and Watterston, and for which he had just sent to the room of the Secretary of the Senate. Mr. B. would take the years 1822-'3; for he was not simple enough to take the years before the reduction of the army, when he was looking for the lowest expenditure. Four thousand men were disbanded, and had remained disbanded ever since; they were disbanded since he came into the Senate; he would therefore date from that reduction. This would bring him to the years 1822-'3, when you, sir (the Vice-President), was Secretary of War. What was the whole expenditure of the government for each of those years? It stood thus:

> $17,676,592 63 1823, 15,314,171 00

"These two sums include every head of expenditure-they include public debt, revolutionary and invalid pensions; three heads of temporary expenditure. The payments on account of the public debt in those two years, were—

> $7,848,919 12 In 1822, 5,530,016 41 1823,

"Deduct these two sums from the total expenditure of the years to which they refer, and you will have-

> For 1822. $9,727,673 41 1823, 9,784,155 59

"The pensions for those years were—Revolutionary. Invalid. Aggregate. 1822, $1,642,590 94 $305,608 46 $1,947,199 40 1,449,097 04 331,491 48 1,730,588 52

"Now, deduct these pensions from the years to which they refer, and you will have just about $8,000,000 as the expense of working the machinery of government at the period which I had in my eye. But the pensions have not yet totally ceased; they are much diminished since 1822, 1823, and in a few years must cease. The revolutionary pensioners must now average seventy years of age; their stipends will soon cease. I hold myself well justified, then, in saying, as I did, that the expenditures of the government have nearly doubled in my time. The remark had no reference to administrations. There was nothing comparative in it; nothing intended to put up, or put down, any body. The burdens of the people is the only thing I wish to put down. My service in the Senate has extended under three administrations, and my periods of calculation extend to all three. My opinion now is, that the machinery of this government, after the payment of the public debt, should be worked for ten millions or les, and two millions more for extraordinaries; in all twelve millions; but this is a point for future is statement upon their own examination or discussion. My present object is to show a great increase in a short time; and to show that, not to affect individuals, but to show the necessity of practising what we all profess—economy. am against keeping up a revenue, after the debt and pensions are paid, as large, or nearly as large, as the expenditure was in 1822, 1823, with these items included. I am for throwing down my load, when I get to the end of my journey. am for throwing off the burden of the debt, when I get to the end of the debt. The burden of the debt is the taxes levied on account of it. I am for abolishing these taxes; and this is the great question upon which parties now go to trial before the American people. One word more, and I am done for the present. The senator for Maryland, to make up a goodly average for 1822, and 1823, adds the expenditure of 1824, which includes, besides sixteen millions and a half for the public debt, and a million and a half for pensions, the sum of five millions for the purchase of Florida. Sir, he must deduct twenty-two millions from that computation; and that deduction will bring his average for those years to agree very closely with my statement.'

It was something at the time this inquiry took place to know which was right-General Smith, or myself. Two millions, more or less, per annum in the public expenditures, was then something-a thing to be talked about, and accounted for, among the economical men of that day. It seems to be nothing now, when the increases are many millions per annum-when personal and job legislation have become the frequent practice—when contracts are legislated to adventurers and speculators—when the halls of Congress have come to be considered the proper place to lay the foundations, or to repair the dilapidations of millionary fortunes: and when the public fisc, and the national domain may consider themselves fortunate sometimes in getting off with a loss of two millions in a single operation.

CHAPTER LXIII.

BANK OF THE UNITED STATES-RECHARTER COMMENCEMENT OF THE PROCEEDINGS.

In the month of December 1831, the "National Republicans" (as the party was then called which afterwards took the name of "whig), assembled in convention at Baltimore to nominate candidates of their party for the presidential, and vice-presidential election, which was to take place in the autumn of the ensuing year The struction.

nominations were made-Henry Clay of Kentucky, for President; and John Sergeant of Pennsylvania for Vice-President: and the nominations accepted by them respectively. Afterwards, and according to what was usual on such occasions, the convention issued an address to the people of the United States, setting forth the merits of their own, and the demerits of the opposite candidate; and presenting the party issues which were to be tried in the ensuing elections. So far as these issues were political they were legitimate subjects to place before the people: so far as they were not political, they were illegitimate, and wrongfully dragged into the political arena, to be made subservient to party elevation. Of this character were the topics of the tariff, of internal improvement, the removal of the Cherokee Indians, and the renewal of the United States Bank charter. Of these four subjects, all of them in their nature unconnected with politics, and requiring for their own good to remain so unconnected, I now notice but one-that of the renewal of the charter of the existing national bank; -and which was now presented as a party object, and as an issue in the election, and under all the exaggerated aspects which party tactics consider lawful in the prosecution of their aims. The address said:

"Next to the great measures of policy which protect and encourage domestic industry, the most important question, connected with the economical policy of the country, is that of the bank. This great and beneficial institution, by facilitating exchanges between different parts of the Union, and maintaining a sound, ample, and healthy state of the currency, may be said to supply the body politic, economically viewed, with a continual stream of life-blood, without which it must inevitably languish, and sink into exhaustion. It was first conceived and organ-.zed by the powerful mind of Hamilton. After having been temporarily shaken by the honest though groundless scruples of other statesmen, it has been recalled to existence by the general consent of all parties, and with the universal approbation of the people. Under the ablest and most faithful management it has been for many years past pursuing a course of steady and constantly increasing influence. Such is the institution which the President has gone out of his way in several successive messages, without a pretence of necessity or plausible motive, in the first instance six years before his suggestion could with any propriety be acted upon, to denounce to Congress as a sort of nuisance, and consign, as far as his influence extends, to immediate de-quate motive is assigned institution is known to efficient and prosperous that any bank ever did o told in ten words, that objects for which it was abolished. Another inst as a substitute, which, so given of it can be underst than a machine in the ha for fabricating and issuin check or responsibility, to Congress, the Presiden time, his opinion on these concise and authoritative timates that he shall cons an expression of the opini they ought to be acted President be re-elected. certain that the bank will institution which he has r thing like it, substituted i "Are the people of the I for this? Are they ready most valuable establishme price of a chief magistrate. vises upon a subject, with th evidently unacquainted, in the opinion of his own office the enterprising, liberal, hi ligent merchants of the U tenance such a measure? of the West, who find in th States a never-failing sour which is so essential to t which they can get nowh lend their aid in drying up own prosperity? Is then people or section of the Uni sentiment of common prude

all the principles of republ

to place in the hands of th

ment the means of an irresited issue of paper money—

means of corruption without

If such be, in fact, the wishe will act with consistency and for General Jackson, as Pres

States; for, by his re-electi trous effects will certainly be fully and three times over pl

to negative any bill that ma chartering the bank, and th

that the additional influence acquire by a re-election, w

to carry through Congress

substitute which he has repe

"For this denunciation

Thus the bank question was an issue in the election be friends which classed politic tent Jackson; but it had enry Clay of Ken-John Sergeant of lent: and the nomispectively. Aftert was usual on such sued an address to tates, setting forth the demerits of the esenting the party ried in the ensuing sues were political s to place before the e not political, they fully dragged into ade subservient to acter were the topics provement, the rens, and the renewal charter. Of these their nature unconuiring for their own ed, I now notice but the charter of the ad which was now , and as an issue in the exaggerated asnsider lawful in the > res of policy which nestic industry, the connected with the ntry, is that of the icial institution, by en different parts of a sound, ample, and cv. may be said to onomically viewed, life-blood, without guish, and sink into onceived and organof Hamilton. After aken by the honest of other statesmen, ence by the general th the universal apnder the ablest and has been for many of steady and con-Such is the institugone out of his way 3, without a pretence tive, in the first inggestion could with on, to denounce to ace, and consign, as s, to immediate de

The address said:

"For this denunciation no pretext of any adequate motive is assigned. At a time when the institution is known to all to be in the most efficient and prosperous state—to be doing all that any bank ever did or can do, we are briefly told in ten words, that it has not effected the objects for which it was instituted, and must be abolished. Another institution is recommended as a substitute, which, so far as the description given of it can be understood, would be no better than a machine in the hands of the government for fabricating and issuing paper money without check or responsibility, In his recent message to Congress, the President declares, for the third time his opinion on these subjects, in the same concise and authoritative style as before, and intimates that he shall consider his re-election as an expression of the opinion of the people that they ought to be acted on. If, therefore, the President be re-elected, it may be considered certain that the bank will be abolished, and the institution which he has recommended, or something like it, substituted in its place.

"Are the people of the United States prepared for this? Are they ready to destroy one of their most valuable establishments to gratify the caprice of a chief magistrate, who reasons, and advises upon a subject, with the details of which he is evidently unacquainted, in direct contradiction to the opinion of his own official counsellors? Are the enterprising, liberal, high-minded, and intelligent merchants of the Union willing to countenance such a measure? Are the cultivators of the West, who find in the Bank of the United States a never-failing source of that capital, which is so essential to their prosperity, and which they can get nowhere else, prepared to lend their aid in drying up the fountain of their own prosperity? Is there any class of the people or section of the Union so lost to every sentiment of common prudence, so regardless of all the principles of republican government, as to place in the hands of the executive department the means of an irresponsible and unlimited issue of paper money-in other words, the means of corruption without check or bounds? If such be, in fact, the wishes of the people, they will act with consistency and propriety in voting for General Jackson, as President of the United States; for, by his re-election, all these disastrous effects will certainly be produced. He is fully and three times over pledged to the people to negative any bill that may be passed for rechartering the bank, and there is little doubt that the additional influence which he would acquire by a re-election, would be employed to carry through Congress the extraordinary substitute which he has repeatedly proposed."

Thus the bank question was fully presented as an issue in the election by that part of its friends, without whose aid the recharter could not be got through Congress; and the result produced which was contemplated with hope and pleasure—responsibility of a veto thrown upon the President. The consent of this wing was necessary: and it was obtained as related in a previous chapter, through the instrumentality of a caucus—that contrivance of modern invention by which a few govern many-by which the many are not only led by the few, but subjugated by them, and turned against themselves: and after having performed at the caucus as a figurante (to make up a majority), become real actors in doing what they condemn. The two wings of the bank friends were brought together by this machinery, as already related in chapter lxi.; and operations for the new charter immediately commenced, in conformity to the decision. On the 9th day of January the memorial of the President, Directors & Company of the Bank was presented in each House --by Mr. Dallas in the Senate, and Mr. McDuffie in the House of Representatives; and while condemning the time of bringing forward the question of the recharter, Mr. Dallas, in further intimation of his previously signified opinion of its then dangerous introduction, said: "He became a willing, as he was virtually an instructed agent, in promoting to the extent of his humble ability, an object which, however dangerously timed its introduction might seem, was in itself as he conceived, entitled to every consideration and favor." Mr. Dallas then moved for a select committee to revise, consider, and report upon the memorial-which motion was granted, and Messrs. Dallas, Webster, Ewing of Ohio, Hayne of South Carolina, and Johnston of Louisiana, were appointed the committee-elected for that purpose by a vote of the Senate-and all except one favorable to the recharter.

In the House of Representatives Mr. McDuffie did not ask for the same reference-a select committee-but to the standing committee of Ways and Means, of which he was chairman, and which was mainly composed of the same members as at the previous session when it reported so elaborately in favor of the bank. The reason of this difference on the point of the reference was understood to be this: that in the Senate the committee being elective, and the frends which classed politically against Presi- majority of the body favorable to the bank, a tent Jackson; but it had also democratic favorable committee was certain to be had on ballot-while in the House the appointment of the committee being in the hands of the Speaker (Mr. Stevenson), and he adverse to the institution, the same favorable result could not be safely counted on; and, therefore, the select committee was avoided, and the one known to be favorable was preferred. This led to an adverse motion to the memorial at this time;—an intimation enrefer to a select committee—in support of which motion Mr. Wayne of Georgia, since appointed one of the justices of the Supreme Court, said:

"That he had on a former occasion expressed his objection to the reference of this subject to the Committee of Ways and Means; and he should not trouble the House by repeating now what he had advanced at the commencement of the session in favor of the appointment of a select committee; but he called upon gentlemen to consider what was the attitude of the Committee of Ways and Means in reference to the bank question, and to compare it with the attitude in which that question had been presented to the House by the President of the United the House. Mr. Archer of Virginia, said: States; and he would ask, whether it was not manifestly proper to submit the memorial to a committee entirely uncommitted upon the subject. But this was not the object for which he had risen; the present question had not come upon him unexpectedly; he had been aware before he entered the House that a memorial of this kind would this morning be presented; and when he looked back upon the occurrences of the last four weeks, and remembered what had taken place at a late convention in Baltimore, and the motives which had been avowed for bringing forward the subject at this time, he must say that gentlemen ought not to permit a petition of this kind to receive the attention of the House. Who could doubt that the presentation of that memorial was in fact a party measure, intended to have an important operation on persons occupying the highest offices of the government? If, however, it should be considered necessary to enter upon the subject at the present time, Mr. Wayne said he was prepared to meet it. But when gentlemen saw distinctly before their eyes the motive of such a proceeding, he hoped that, notwithstanding there might be a majority in the House in favor of the bank, gentlemen would not lend themselves to that kind of action. Could it be necessary to take up the question of rechartering the bank at the present session? Gentlemen all knew that four years must pass before its charter would expire, and that Congress had power to extend the period, if further time was necessary to wind up its affairs. It was known that other subjects of an exciting character must come up during the present session; and could there be any necessity or propriety in throwing additional matter into the House, calculated to raise that excitement yet higher ?"

Mr. McDuffie absolved himself from all connection with the Baltimore national republican convention, and claimed like absolution for the directory of the bank; and intimated that a caucus consultation to which democratic members were party, had led to the presentation of tirely true, only it should have comprehended all the friends of the bank of both political parties. A running debate took place on these motions, in which many members engaged. Admitting that the parliamentary law required a friendly committee for the application, it was vet urged that that committee should be a select one, charged with the single subject, and with leisure to make investigations; -which leisure the Committee of Ways did not possess -and could merely report as formerly, and without giving any additional information to

"As regarded the disposal of the memorial tt appeared clear to him that a select committee would be the proper one. This had been the disposal adopted with all former memorials Why vary the mode now? The subject was of a magnitude to entitle it to a special committee. As regarded the Committee of Ways and Means. with its important functions, were not its hands to be regarded as too full for the great attention which this matter must demand? It was to be remarked, too, that this committee, at a former session, with little variety in its composition, had, in the most formal manner, expressed its opinion on the great question involved. We ought not, as had been said, to put the memorial to a nurse which would strangle it. Neither would it be proper to send it to an inquest in which its fate had been prejudged. Let it go to either the Committee of Ways and Means, or a select committee: the chairman of that committee would stand as he ought, in the same relation to it. If the last disposal were adopted, too, the majority of the committee would consist, under the usage in that respect, of friends of the measure. The recommendation of this mode was, that it would present the nearest approach to equality in the contest, of which the case almitted.

"Mr. Mitchell, of South Carolina, said that he concurred entirely in the views of his friend from Georgia [Mr. Wayne]. He did not think that the bank question ought to be taken up at all this session; but if it were, it ought most unquestionably to be referred to a select committee. He saw no reason, however, for its being referred at all. The member from South Carolina [Mr. McDuffie] tells us, said Mr. M, that it involves the vast amount of fifty millions of dollars; that this is dispersed to every class of people in our widely if the question of rechai now, it would hazard the interests. Mr. M. said tance to this argument. met lately at Philadelp for, by a solemn resolut tionary with the presider the question to Congres they had thought that have endangered their in have said so? This fac ment of the member from hank question was dec party question which co any House. It has been a few years. It was reje by the vote of the Vicewards passed this House It would divide the who on that floor, feelings of bitterness. Not a party the member from South ( remember that this quest into federalists and repub constitutional question, a who thought with him. in all their strength. Br Committe of Ways and 1 mitted before to a select currency. If the question as whether we should sel did, whether we should s would not object to its Committee of Ways and M a question of revenue. It the constitution-one of v the greatest complexityof the most distinguished It was a party question in things out of doors. Thos be blind to every thing ar it every where-we see it Sir, we have now on han engross every thought and perhaps involves the destin topic of such magnitude as mainder of the session; ] hope, therefore, this memor table, and, if not, that it select committee."

Mr. Charles Johnston, o

"The bank has been of la peatedly charged with usin funds of the people of these upon and controlling public mean to express any opinio alsehood of this accusation cient consequence to dema quiry. The bank was ful violating its charter, in th number of small drafts to a payable, in the language of th nself from all connational republican absolution for the intimated that a democratic memthe presentation of -an intimation enave comprehended both political parok place on these members engaged entary law required application, it was tee should be a sesingle subject, and stigations ;-which ays did not possess as formerly, and nal information to Virginia, said:

of the memorial, tt a select committee This had been the former memorials. The subject was of a special committee. of Ways and Means, were not its hands the great attention and? It was to be nmittee, at a former in its composition. anner, expressed its tion involved. We to put the memorial trangle it. Neither it to an inquest in udged. Let it go to ays and Means, or a man of that commitin the same relation ere adopted, too, the would consist, under friends of the mea-1 of this mode was, nearest approach to which the case ad-

Carolina, said that e views of his friend He did not think ht to be taken up at were, it ought most red to a select comon, however, for its member from South ells us, said Mr. M. ount of fifty millions persed to every class of people in our widely extended country; and if the question of rechartering were not decided now, it would hazard these great and complicated interests. Mr. M. said he attached no importance to this argument. The stockholders who met lately at Philadelphia thought differently, for by a solemn resolution, they left it discretionary with the president of the bank to propose the question to Congress when he saw fit. If they had thought that a postponement would have endangered their interests, would they not have said so? This fact does away the ergument of the member from South Carolina. The bank question was decided by the strongest party question which could be put to this or any House. It has been twice discussed within a few years. It was rejected once in the Senate by the vote of the Vice-President, and it afterwards passed this House with a majority of two. It would divide the whole country, and excite on that floor, feelings of the most exasperated hitterness. Not a party question? Does not the member from South Carolina [Mr. McDuffie] remember that this question divided the country into federalists and republicans? It was a great constitutional question, and he hoped all those who thought with him, would rally against it in all their strength. But why refer it to the Committe of Ways and Means? It was committed before to a select committee on national currency. If the question was merely financial, as whether we should sell our stock, and, if we did whether we should sell it to the bank, he would not object to its being referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. But it was not a question of revenue. It was one of policy and the constitution—one of vast magnitude and of the greatest complexity-requiring a committee of the most distinguished abilities on that floor. It was a party question in reference to men and things out of doors. Those who deny this, must be blind to every thing around them-we hear it every where-we see it in all which we read. Sir, we have now on hand a topic which must engross every thought and feeling-a topic which perhaps involves the destinies of this nation-a topic of such magnitude as to occupy us the remainder of the session; I mean the tariff. I hope, therefore, this memorial will be laid on the table, and, if not, that it will be referred to a select committee."

Mr. Charles Johnston, of Virginia, said:

"The bank has been of late distinctly and repeatedly charged with using its funds, and the funds of the people of these States, in operating upon and controlling public opinion. He did not mean to express any opinion as to the truth or falsehood of this accusation, but it was of sufficient consequence to demand an accurate inquiry. The bank was further charged with violating its charter, in the issue of a great number of small drafts to a large amount, and from New-York [Mr. Cambreleng], "nowhere;' this charge, also, deserved inquiry. There were other charges of maladministration which equally deserved inquiry; and it was his [Mr. J.'s] in tention, at a future day, unless some other gentleman more versed in the business of the House anticipated him, to press these inquiries by a series of instructions to the committee intrusted with the subject. Mr. J. urged as an objection to referring this inquiry to the Committee of Ways and Means, that so much of their time would be occupied with the regular and important business connected with the fiscal operations of the government, that they could not spare labor enough to accomplish the minute investigations wanted at their hands. We had been further told that all the members of that committee were friendly to the project of rechartering the bank, and the honorable gentleman [Mr. Mercer] had relied upon the fact, as a fair exponent of public opinion in favor of the bank. He [Mr. J.] added, that although he could by no means assent to the force of this remark, yet that it furnished strong reason for those who wished a close scrutiny of the administration of the bank, to wish some gentlemen placed on the committee of inquiry, who would be actuated by the zeal of fair opposition to the bank; he conceded that a majority of the committee should be composed of its friends. He concluded, by hoping that the memorial would be referred to a select committee."

Finally the vote was taken, and the memoria referred to the Committee of Ways and Means but by a slender majority—100 against 90—and 24 members absent, or not voting. The members of the committee were: Messrs. McDuffie of South Carolina; Verplanck of New-York, Ingersoll, of Connecticut; Gilmore, of Pennsy. vania; Mark Alexander, of Virginia; Wilde, & Georgia; and Gaither, of Kentucky.

CHAPTER LXIV.

BANK OF THE UNITED STATES—COMMITTEE OF INVESTIGATION ORDERED.

SEEING the state of parties in Congress, and the tactics of the bank-that there was a majority in each House for the institution, and no intention to lose time in arguing for it-our course of action became obvious, which was-to attack incessantly, assail at all points, display the evil of the institution, rouse the people—and prepare payable, in the language of the honorable member | them to sustain the veto. It was seen to be the policy of the bank leaders to carry the charter first, and quietly through the Senate; and afterwards, in the same way in the House. We determined to have a contest in both places, and to force the bank into defences which would engage it in a general combat, and lay it open to side-blow, as well as direct attacks. With this view a great many amendments and inquiries were prepared to be offered in the Senate, all of them proper, or plausible, recommendable in themselves, and supported by acceptable reasons; which the friends of the bank must either answer, or reject without answer; and so incur odium. In the House it was determined to make a move, which, whether resisted or admitted by the bank majority, would be certain to have an effect against the institution-namely, an investigation by a committee of the House, as provided for in the charter. If the investigation was denied, it would be guilt shrinking from detection; if admitted, it was well known that misconduct would be found. I conceived this movement, and had charge of its direction. I preferred the House for the theatre of investigation, as most appropriate, being the grand inquest of the nation; and, besides, wished a contest to be going on there while the Senate was engaged in passing the charter; and the right to raise the committee was complete, in either House. Besides the right reserved in the charter, there was a natural right, when the corporation was asked for a renewed lease, to inquire how it had acted under the previous one. I got Mr. Clayton, a new member from Georgia (who had written a pamphlet against the bank in his own State), to take charge of the movement; and gave him a memorandum of seven alleged breaches of the charter, and fifteen instances of imputed misconduct, to inquire into, if he got his committee; or to allege on the floor, if he encountered resistance.

On Thursday, the 23d of February, Mr. Clayton made his motion—"That a select committee be appointed to examine into the affairs of the Bank of the United States, with power to send for persons and papers, and to report the result of their inquiries to the House." This motion was objected to, and its consideration postponed until the ensuing Monday. Called up on that day, an attempt was made to repulse it from the consideration of the House. Mr. Watmough, a representative from Pennsylvania, posed. He would not say that such resistance and from the city, a friend to the bank, and from his locality and friendship supposed to be familiar with its wishes, raised the question of consideration-that is, called on the House to decide whether they would consider Mr. Clay. ton's motion; a question which is only raised under the parliamentary law where the motion is too frivolous, or flagrantly improper, to receive the attention of the House. It was a false move on the part of the institution; and the more so as it seemed to be the result of deliberation, and came from its immediate representative. Mr. Polk, of Tennessee, saw the advantage presented; and as the question of consideration was not debated the demanded, as the only mode of holding the movement to its responsibility, the yeas and nays on Mr. Watmough's question. But it went off on a different pointa point of order—the question of consideration not lying after the House has taken action on the subject; and in this case that had been done -very little action to be sure-only postponing the consideration from one day to another; but enough to satisfy the rule; and so the motion of Mr. Watmough was disallowed; and the question of consideration let in. Another movement was then made to cut off discussion and get rid of the resolution, by a motion to lay it on the table, also made by a friend of the bank [Mr. Lewis Williams, of North Carolina]. This motion was withdrawn at the instance of Mr. McDuffie, who began to see the effect of these motions to suppress, not only investigation but congressional discussion; and, besides, Mr. Mc-Duffie was a bold man, and an able debater, and had examined the subject, and reported in favor of the bank, and fully believed in its purity; and was, therefore, the less averse to debate. But resistance to investigation was continued by others, and was severely animadverted upon by several speakers—among others, by Mr. Polk, of Tennessee, who said:

"The bank asks a renewal of its charter; and ought its friends to object to the inquiry? He must say that he had been not a little surprised at the unexpected resistance which had been offerred to the resolution under consideration, by the friends and admirers of this institution-by those who, no doubt, sincerely believed its continued existence for another term of twenty years to be essential to the prosperity of the country. He repeated his surprise that its friends should be found shrinking from the investigation pro-

afforded any fair ground might be something "ro mark." He would not feel himself authorized t perceived that such ar probably would, be drav what ground was the in it that it was improper unusual? The charter o ized a committee of eithe examine its books, and re whenever either House 1 an examination. A con upon a former occasion. amination, and he would before he sat down. Up the bank memorial to t legislature, a select comn with power to send for they chose to do so. W was presented to that Ho course pursued by the fri motion to refer it to a sel posed. It was committee mittee of Ways and Mea respect to that committee question of rechartering t have been prejudged by tl the President of the Unit subject of the bank to the December, 1829, a select of by the friends of the bank. message was referred to th and Means. Precisely th at the commencement of t sent session of Congress, was made of that part of President upon the subje friends of this institution ways to commit it to th committee whose opinions the occasion first referre made a report favorable to sent forth to the public,not a report founded upon the affairs of the bank. A we were modestly asked monopoly for twenty yea examination having taken p had reported a bill to that us no facts in relation to of the bank. They had no cessary to ask to be invest amine either into its prese the manner in which its at ducted.

"He would now call the a to the examination of the b mittee of this House in the the order of the House. port of that committee in h mittee visited the bank at examined its books, and sci They examined on oath the the directors and officers of 1 to the bank, and p supposed to be 1 the question of on the House to nsider Mr. Claych is only raised where the motion improper, to rese. It was a false stitution; and the result of deliberediate representasaw the advantage n of consideration nded, as the only ent to its respon-Mr. Watmough's a different pointn of consideration s taken action on hat had been done -only postponing v to another; but and so the motion allowed; and the n. Another moveoff discussion, and a motion to lay it riend of the bank h Carolina]. This he instance of Mr. the effect of these r investigation, but 1. besides, Mr. Mcl an able debater. et, and reported in ly believed in its the less averse to investigation was s severely animaders-among others, tho said:

> of its charter; and the inquiry? He ot a little surprised which had been ofr consideration, by his institution-by ly believed its conerm of twenty years rity of the country. t its friends should investigation prohat such resistance afforded any fair grounds of inference that there might be something "rotten in the state of Denmark." He would not say this; for he did not feel himself authorized to do so; but was it not perceived that such an inference might, and probably would, be drawn by the public? On what ground was the inquiry opposed? Was it that it was improper? Was it that it was nnusual? The charter of the bank itself authorized a committee of either House of Congress to examine its books, and report upon its condition, whenever either House may choose to institute an examination. A committee of this House, upon a former occasion, did make such an examination, and he would refer to their report before he sat down. Upon the presentation of the bank memorial to the other branch of the legislature, a select committee had been invested with power to send for persons and papers, if they chose to do so. When the same memorial was presented to that House, what had been the course pursued by the friends of the bank? A motion to refer it to a select committee was opposed. It was committed to their favorite Committee of Ways and Means. He meant no disrespect to that committee, when he said that the question of rechartering the bank was known to have been prejudged by that committee. When the President of the United States brought the subject of the bank to the notice of Congress in December, 1829, a select committee was refused by the friends of the bank, and that portion of the message was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. Precisely the same thing occurred at the commencement of the last and at the present session of Congress, in the reference which was made of that part of the messages of the President upon the subject of the bank. The friends of this institution have been careful always to commit it to the same committee, a committee whose opinions were known. Upon the occasion first referred to, that committee made a report favorable to the bank, which was sent forth to the public, -not a report of facts, not a report founded upon an examination into the affairs of the bank. At the present session. we were modestly asked to extend this bank monopoly for twenty years, without any such examination having taken place. The committee had reported a bill to that effect, but had given us no facts in relation to the present condition of the bank. They had not even deemed it necessary to ask to be invested with power to examine either into its present condition, or into the manner in which its affairs have been conducted. "He would now call the attention of the House to the examination of the bank, made by a committee of this House in the year 1819, and under the order of the House. He then held the report of that committee in his hand. That committee visited the bank at Philadelphia; they examined its books, and scrutinized its conduct. They examined on oath the president, a part of

was the result? They discovered many and flagrant abuses. They found that the charter had been violated in divers particulars, and they so reported to this House. He would not detain the House, however, with the details of that document. Gentlemen could refer to it, and satisfy themselves. It contained much valuable information, as bearing upon the proposition now before the House. It was sufficient to say that at that period, within three years after the bank had gone into existence, it was upon the very verge of bankruptcy. This the gentleman from South Carolina would not deny. The report of the committee to which he had alluded authorized him to say that there had been gross mismanagement, he would not use any stronger term, and in the opinion of that committee (an opinion never reversed by Congress) a palpable violation of the charter. Now sir, this was the condition of the bank in 1819. The indulgence of Congress induced them not to revoke the charter. The bank had gone on in its operations. Since that period no investigation or examination had taken place. All we knew of ita doings, since that period, was from the ex parts reports of its own officers. These may all be correct, but, if they be so, it could do no harm to ascertain the fact."

Mr. Clayton then justified his motion for the committee, first upon the provisions of the charter (article 23) which gave to either House of Congress the right at all times to appoint a com mittee to inspect the books, and to examine in to the proceedings of the bank; and to report whether the provisions of the charter had been violated; and he treated as a revolt against this provision of the charter, as well as a sign of guilt, this resistance to an absolute right on the part of Congress, and most proper to be exercised when the institution was soliciting the continuation of its privileges; and which right had been exercised by the House in 1819, when its committee found various violations of the charter, and proposed a scire facias to vacate it: - which was only refused by Congress, not for the sake of the bank, but for the community-whose distresses the closing of the bank might aggravate. Next, he justified his motion on the ground of misconduct in the bank in seven instances of violated charter, involving forfeiture; and fifteen instances of abuse, which required correction, though not amounting to forfeiture of the charter. All these he read to the House, one by one, from a narrow slip of paper, which he continued rolling round his finger all the time. The memorandum was mine-in my handwritthe directors and officers of the bank. And what | ing-given to him to copy, and amplify, as they were brief memoranda. He had not copied them; and having to justify suddenly, he used the slip I had given him-rolling it on his finger, as on a cylinder, to prevent my handwriting from being seen: so he afterwards told me himself. The reading of these twenty-two heads of accusation, like so many counts in an indictment, sprung the friends of the bank to their feet-and its foes also-each finding in it something to rouse them—one to the defence, the other to the attack. The accusatory list was as fol-

"First: Violations of charter amounting to forfeiture :

"1. The issue of seven millions, and more, of branch bank orders as a currency.

"2. Usury on broken bank notes in Ohio and Kentucky: nine hundred thousand dollars in Ohio, and nearly as much in Kentucky. See 2 Peters' Reports, p. 527, as to the nature of the

"3. Domestic bills of exchange, disguised loans to take more than at the rate of six per cent. Sixteen millions of these bills for December last. See monthly statements.

4. Non-user of the charter. In this, that from 1819 to 1826, a period of seven years, the South and West branches issued no currency of any kind. See the doctrine on non-user of charter and duty of corporations to act up to the end of their institution, and forfeiture for neg-

"5. Building houses to rent. See limitation in their charter on the right to hold real pro-

"6. In the capital stock, not having due proportion of coin. 7. Foreigners voting for directors, through their trustees. "Second: Abuses worthy of inquiry, not amounting to forfeiture, but going, if true, clearly to show the inexpediency of renewing the charter.

"1. Not cashing its own notes, or receiving in deposit at each branch, and at the parent bank, the notes of each other. By reason of this practice, notes of the mother bank are at a discount at many, if not all, of her branches, and completely negatives the assertion of 'sound and uniform currency.'

"2. Making a difference in receiving notes from the federal government and the citizens of the States. This is admitted as to all notes above five dollars.

"3. Making a difference between members of Congress and the citizens generally, in both granting loans and selling bills of exchange. It is believed it can be made to appear that members can obtain bills of exchange without, citizens with a premium; the first give nominal endorsers, the other must give two sufficient resident endorsers.

"4. The undue accumulation of proxies in the hands of a few to control the election for

"5. A strong suspicion of secret understand. ing between the bank and brokers to job in stocks, contrary to the charter. For example to buy up three per cent. stock at this day; and force the government to pay at par for that stock; and whether the government deposits may not be used to enhance its own debts

"6. Subsidies and loans, directly or indirectly. to printers, editors, and lawyers, for purposes other than the regular business of the bank

"7. Distinction in favor of merchants in selling bills of exchange.

8. Practices upon local banks and debtors to make them petition Congress for a renewal of its charter, and thus impose upon Congress by false clamor

"9. The actual management of the bank whether safely and prudently conducted. See monthly statements to the contrary.

"10. The actual condition of the bank, her debts and credits; how much she has increased debts and diminished her means to pay in the last year; how much she has increased her credits and multiplied her debtors, since the President's message in 1829, without ability to take up the notes she has issued, and pay her

"11. Excessive issues, all on public deposits. "12. Whether the account of the bank's prosperity be real or delusive.

"13. The amount of gold and silver coin and bullion sent from Western and Southern branches of the parent bank since its establishment in 1817. The amount is supposed to be fifteen or twenty millions, and, with bank interest on bank debts, constitutes a system of the most intolerable oppression of the South and West, The gold and silver of the South and West have been drawn to the mother bank, mostly by the agency of that unlawful currency created by branch bank orders, as will be made fully to ap-

"14. The establishment of agencies in different States, under the direction and management of one person only, to deal in bills of exchange, and to transact other business properly belonging to branch banks, contrary to the charter.

"15. Giving authority to State banks to discount their bills without authority from the Secretary of the Treasury."

Upon the reading of these charges a heated and prolonged discussion took place, in which more than thirty members engaged (and about an equal number on each side); in which the friends of the bank lost so much ground in the public estimation, in making direct opposition to investigation, that it became necessary to give up that species of opposition-declare in favor of examination-but so conducted as to be na eatory, and worse than tion was to have the in Committee of Ways and which involved many d mentary law-from pro respect which the bank innocent. By all parliar mittee must be compose to the inquiry-hearty mover always to be its contrary, the mover wa very champion of the B the investigating chairma to whom it was to go, just reported so warml this proposition had so chairman of the Committee Mr. McDuffie) objected refusing to take the office an institution of which fender. Propositions wer the committee appointed b the appointment of the c hands of the Speaker (wl hamentary rule, would sele hers favorable to inquiry) hallot the bank having a n could reverse the parliam to the institution a commit of to probe it. Unbecom dous to the institution itse was it came within a tie was only lost by the casting Investigation of some kind. mittee, becoming then inevit that could be done in favor restrict its scope; and this time and matter; and also a isstitution to be examined. duced a resolution to limit operations of the mother bar the twenty-seven branches, t were nearer than the parent the points of inquiry to bread was to cut off the abuses; al wa short day (the 21st of A being far advanced; so as to ligation to be baffled for the v mason given for these restric the investigation within the ession—so as to insure action pefore the adjournment of (

tion of proxies in ol the election for secret understand. brokers to job in ter. For example, ck at this day; and y at par for that vernment deposits its own debts. rectly or indirectly. vyers, for purposes ess of the bank. merchants in sell-

anks and debtors to s for a renewal of its on Congress by false

nent of the bank. ly conducted. See ontrary.

a of the bank, her h she has increased neans to pay in the has increased her debtors since the without ability to issued, and pay her on public deposits. of the bank's pros-and silver coin and id Southern branchts establishment in sed to be fifteen or bank interest on vstem of the most ie South and West. outh and West have bank, mostly by the irrency created by be made fully to ap-

f agencies in differon and management n bills of exchange, ss properly belongry to the charter. State banks to disauthority from the charges a heated and place, in which more zed (and about an de); in which the much ground in the direct opposition to e necessary to give on-declare in favor iducted as to be nix tion was to have the investigation made by the Committee of Ways and Means-a proposition which involved many departures from parliamentary law-from propriety-and from the respect which the bank owed to itself, if it was innocent. By all parliamentary law such a committee must be composed of members friendly to the inquiry-hearty in the cause-and the contrary, the mover was to be excluded: the very champion of the Bank defence was to be the investigating chairman; and the committee iust reported so warmly for the Bank. But this proposition had so bad a look that the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means Mr. McDuffie) objected to it himself, utterly refusing to take the office of prosecutor against an institution of which he was the public defender. Propositions were then made to have the committee appointed by ballot, so as to take the appointment of the committee out of the bands of the Speaker (who, following the parfamentary rule, would select a majority of memhers favorable to inquiry); and in the vote by ballot, the bank having a majority in the House, mild reverse the parliamentary rule, and give to the institution a committee to shield, instead of to probe it. Unbecoming, and even suspigous to the institution itself as this proposition was only lost by the casting vote of the Speaker. Investigation of some kind, and by a select committee, becoming then inevitable, the only thing that could be done in favor of the bank was to restrict its scope; and this was done both as to time and matter; and also as to the part of the isstitution to be examined. Mr. Adams introduced a resolution to limit the inquiry to the operations of the mother bank, thereby skipping the twenty-seven branches, though some of them were nearer than the parent bank; also limiting the points of inquiry to breaches of the charter, being far advanced; so as to subject full inves-

estory, and worse than useless. One proposiopenly admitting its connection with the presidential election. On seeing his proposed inquiry thus restricted, Mr. Clayton thus gave vent to

"I hope I may be permitted to take a parting leave of my resolution, as I very plainly perceive that it is going the way of all flesh. I discover the bank has a complying majority at present in this House, and at this late hour of the night are determined to carry things in their own mover always to be its chairman: here, on the way; but, sir, I view with astonishment the conduct of that majority. When a speaker rises in favor of the bank, he is listened to with great attention; but when one opposed to it attempts to address the House, such is the intentional to whom it was to go, was the same that had noise and confusion, he cannot be heard; and, sir, the gentleman who last spoke but one in favor of an inquiry, had to take his seat in a scene little short of a riot. I do not understand such conduct. When I introduced my resolution, I predicated it upon the presumption that every thing in this House would, when respectfully presented, receive a respectful consideration, and would be treated precisely as all other questions similarly situated are treated. I expected the same courtesy that other gentlemen received in the propositions submitted by them, that it would go to a committee appointed in the usual form, and that they would have the usual time to make their report. I believed, for I had no right to believe otherwise, that all committees of this House were honest, and that they had too much respect for themselves, as well as for the House, to trifle with any matter confided to their investigation. Believing this, I did expect my resolution would be submitted in the accustomed way; and if this House had thought was it came within a tie vote of passing, and proper to trust me, in part, with the examination of the subject to which it refers, I would have proceeded to the business in good faith, and reported as early as was practicable with the important interests at stake. It has been opposed in every shape; vote upon vote has been taken upon it, all evidently tending to evade inquiry; and now it is determined to compel the committee to report in a limited time, a thing unheard of before in this House, and our inquiries are to be confined entirely to the mother bank; whereas her branches, at which more than half the frauds and oppressions complained of have been committed, are to go unexamined, and we are to be limited to breaches of the charter when the abuses charged are nubastocut off the abuses; also limiting the time merous and fiagrant, and equally injurious to the community. We are only to examine the washort day (the 21st of April)-March then books of the parent bank, the greatest part of which may be accidentally from home, at some igntion to be baffled for the want of time. The of the branches. If the bank can reconcile it to herself to meet no other kind of investigation but reason given for these restrictions was to bring this, she is welcome to all the advantages which the investigation within the compass of the such an insincere and shuffling course is calculatsession—so as to insure action on the application ed to confer; the people of this country are too before the adjournment of Congress—thereby intelligent not to understand exactly her object."

by these restrictions, were two modes of extorting double and treble compensation for the use of money, one by turning a loan note into a bill of exchange, and the other by forcing the borrower to take his money upon a domestic bill instead of on a note-both systematically practised upon in the West, and converting nearly all the Western loans into enormously usurious transactions. Mr. Clayton gave the following description of the first of these modes of extorting usury:

"I will now make a fuller statement; and I think I am authorized to say that there are gentlemen in this House from the West, and under my eye at present, who will confirm every word I say. A person has a note in one of the Western branch banks, and if the bank determines to extend no further credit, its custom is, when it sends out the usual notice of the time the note falls due, to write across the notice, in red ink, these three fatal words-well understood in that country-' Payment is expect-This notice, thus rubricated, becomes a death-warrant to the credit of that customer, unless he can raise the wind, as it is called, to pay it off, or can discount a domestic bill of exchange. This last is done in one of two ways. If he has a factor in New Orleans who is in the habit of receiving and selling his produce, he draws upon him to pay it off at maturity. The bank charges two per centum for two months, the factor two and a half, and thus, if the draft is at sixty days, he pays at the rate of twentyseven per centum. If, however, he has no factor, he is obliged to get some friend who has one to make the arrangement to get his draft accepted. For this accommodation he pays his friend one and a half per cent., besides the two per cent. to the bank, and the two and a half per cent. to the acceptor; making, in this mode of arrangement, thirty-six per cent. which he pays before he can get out of the clutches of the bank for that time, twelve per cent. of which in either case, goes to the bank; and so little conscience have they, in order to make this, they will subject a poor and unfortunate debtor to the other enormous burdens, and consequently to absolute beggary. For it must be obvious to every one that such a per cent. for money, under the melancholy depreciation of produce every where in the South and West, will soon wind up the affairs of such a borrower. No people under the heavens can bear it; and unless a stop is put to it, in some way or other, I predict the Western people will be in the most deplorable situation it is possible to conceive. There is another great hardship to which this debtor is liable, if he should not be able to furnish the produce; or, which is sometimes the case, if it is sacrificed in the sale of it at the Carson of North Carolina . Leavitt of Ohio

Among the abuses cut off from examinations time the draft becomes due, whereby it is protested for want of funds, it returns upon him with the additional cost of ten per cent. for non-payment. Now, sir, that is what is meant by domestic bills of exchange, disguised as loans to take more than six per cent.; for, mark, Mr Speaker, the bank does not purchase a bill of exchange by paying out cash for it, and receiving the usual rate of exchange, which varies from one-quarter to one per cent.; but it merely delivers up the poor debtor's note which was previously in bank, and, what is worse, just as well secured as the domestic bill of exchange which they thus extort from him in lieu thereof And while they are thus exacting this per cent, from him, they are discounting bills for others not in debt to them at the usual premium of one per cent. The whole scene seems to present the picture of a helpless sufferer in the hands of a ruffian, who claims the merit of charity for discharging his victim alive, after having torn away half his limbs from his body.

> The second mode was to make the loan take the form of a domestic bill from the beginning: and this soon came to be the most general practice. The borrowers finding that their notes were to be metamorphosed into bills payable in a distant city, readily fell into the more convenient mode of giving a bill in the first instance payable in some village hard by where they could go to redeem it without giving commissions to intermediate agents in the shape of endorsers and brokers. The profit to the bank in this operation was to get six per centum interest, and two per cent. exchange; which, on a sixty days' bill, was twelve per cent. per annum; and, added to the interest, eighteen per cent. per annum; with the addition of ten per centum damages if the bill was protested; and of this character were the mass of the loans in the West-a most scandalous abuse, but cut off. with a multitude of others, from investigation from the restrictions placed upon the powers of the committee.

The supporters of the institution carried their point in the House, and had the investigation in their own way; but with the country it was different. The bank stood condemned upon its own conduct, and badly crippled by the attacks upon her. More than a dozen speakers assailed her: Clayton, Wayne, Foster of Georgia; J.M. Patton, Archer, and Mark Alexander of Virginia; James K. Polk of Tennessee; Cambreleng, Beardsley, Hoffman and Angel of New-York; Mitchell and Blair of South Carolina;

The speakers on the other and Drayton of South Car ford, Coulter, Watmough Daniel of Kentucky; Je Huntington of Connecticu of New-York; Evans of Virginia; Wilde of Georg matched both in numbers difference between attack a hold accusation and shrin conduct of the bank, friends investigation, then in tryin hands of friends, then rest tion, and the noise and co many of the anti-bank spec gave to the assailants the and the tone of victory thre and created a strong suspici Certainly its conduct was unon the hypothesis of a g picion of which would be p tection; and such, eventual the fact. In justice to Mr ing advocate of the bank, it ed that the attempts to still did not come from him but representative of the bank he twice discountenanced at tempts, requesting them to no doubt all the defenders time believed in its integr only followed the lead of its in the course which they pu I became convinced that t vent, as well as criminal; amination was death; and 1 not face it.

The committee appointe Clayton, Richard M. John Francis Thomas of Maryland leng of New-York, opposed the Bank; Messrs. McDu Adams, and Watmough, in ommittee was composed ac liamentary rule—the majori object-but one of them (C Kentucky), was disqualified and indulgent disposition for of criminal inquisition; and the House, after he returned looked at a bank-book, or while he was at Philadelphia

Vol. I.-16

vhereby it is proeturns upon him ten per cent. for is what is meant disguised as loans, t.; for, mark, Mr. purchase a bill of for it, and receivage, which varies ent.; but it mere-'s note which was is worse, just as bill of exchange im in lieu thereof. ting this per cent. ig bills for others isual premium of ene seems to press sufferer in the ms the merit of victim alive, after bs from his body.

nake the loan take om the beginning: most general prac-; that their notes to bills payable in to the more con-Il in the first ine hard by, where thout giving comits in the shape of profit to the bank six per centum inchange; which, on e per cent. per anerest, eighteen per iddition of ten per as protested; and iss of the loans in abuse, but cut off, from investigation upon the powers ution carried their I the investigation the country it was ondemned upon its pled by the attacks n speakers assailed r of Georgia; J. M. Alexander of Virennessee; Cambrend Angel of Newof South Carolina; · Leavitt of Ohio The speakers on the other side were: McDuffle and Drayton of South Carolina; Denny, Crawford, Coulter, Watmough, of Pennsylvania; Daniel of Kentucky; Jenifer of Maryland; Huntington of Connecticut; Root and Collins of New-York; Evans of Maine; Mercer of Virginia; Wilde of Georgia. Pretty equally matched both in numbers and ability; but the difference between attack and defence—between hold accusation and shrinking palliation—the conduct of the bank, friends, first in resisting all investigation, then in trying to put it into the hands of friends, then restricting the examination and the noise and confusion with which many of the anti-bank speeches were salutedgave to the assailants the appearance of right, and the tone of victory throughout the contest; and created a strong suspicion against the bank. Certainly its conduct was injudicious, except upon the hypothesis of a guilt, the worst susnicion of which would be preferable to open detection; and such, eventually, was found to be the fact. In justice to Mr. McDuffie, the leading advocate of the bank, it must be remembered that the attempts to stifle, or evade inquiry. did not come from him but from the immediate representative of the bank neighborhood-that he twice discountenanced and stopped such attempts, requesting them to be withdrawn; and no doubt all the defenders of the bank at the time believed in its integrity and utility, and only followed the lead of its immediate friends in the course which they pursued. For myself I became convinced that the bank was insolvent as well as criminal; and that, to her, examination was death; and therefore she could in invalidating the report of the majority against the bank, disputed the reality of the majority, saying that the good nature of Colonel Johnson had merely licensed it. On the other hand, the committee was as favorably composed for the bank-Mr. Adams and Mr. McDuffie both able writers and speakers, of national reputation, investigating minds, ardent temperaments, firm believers in the integrity and usefulness of the corporation; and of char acter and position to be friendly to the institu tion without the imputation of an undue mo tive. Mr. Watmough was a new member, but acceptable to the bank as its immediate representative, as the member that had made the motions to baffle investigation; and as being from his personal as well as political and social relations, in the category to form, if necessary, its channel of confidential communication with the committee.

The committee made three reports—one by the majority, one by the minority, and one by Mr. Adams alone. The first was a severe recrimination of the bank on many points-usury, issuing branch bank orders as a currency, selling coin, selling stock obtained from government under special acts of Congress, donations for roads and canals, building houses to rent or sell, loans unduly made to editors, brokers, and members of Congress. The adversary reports were a defence of the bank on all these points, and the highest encomiums upon the excellence of its management, and the universality of its utility: but too much in the spirit of the advocate to retain the character of legislative reports-which admit of nothing but facts stated, inductions drawn, and opinions expressed. Both, or ra-The committee appointed were: Messrs, ther all three sets of reports, were received as Clayton, Richard M. Johnson of Kentucky, veracious, and lauded he victorious, by the Francis Thomas of Maryland, and Mr. Cambre- respective parties which they favored; and king of New-York, opposed to the recharter of quoted, as settling for ever the bank question, the Bank; Messrs. McDuffle, John Quincy each way. But, alas, for the effect of the pro-Adams, and Watmough, in favor of it. The gress of events! In a few brief years all this committee was composed according to the par- attack and defence-all this elaboration of acculamentary rule—the majority in favor of the sation, and refinement of vindication—all this object-but one of them (Colonel Johnson of zeal and animosity, for and against the bank-Kentucky), was disqualified by his charitable the whole contest-was eclipsed and superseand indulgent disposition for the invidious task ded by the actualities of the times—the majority of criminal inquisition; and who frankly told report, as being behind the facts: the minority, the House, after he returned, that he had never as resting upon vanished illusions. And the looked at a bank-book, or asked a question great bank itself, antagonist of Jackson, called while he was at Philadelphia; and, Mr. Adams, imperial by its friends, and actually constituting ashes - and invoking from the community, through the mouth of the greatest of its advocates (Mr. Webster), the oblivion and amnesty of an "obsolete idea."

Vol. I.—16

It is not the design of this View to explore these reports for the names of persons implicated (some perhaps unjustly), in the criminating statements of the majority. The object proposed in this work does not require that interference with individuals. The conduct of the institution is the point of inquiry; and in that conduct will be found the warning voice against the dangers and abuses of such an establishment in all time to come.

CHAPTER LXV.

THE THREE PER CENT. DEBT, AND LOSS IN NOT PAYING IT WHEN THE RATE WAS LOW, AND cents was brought up as an instance of loss in-THE MONEY IN THE BANK OF THE UNITED STATES WITHOUT INTEREST.

THERE was a part of the revolutionary debt. incurred by the States and assumed by Congress, amounting to thirteen and a quarter millions of dollars, on which an interest of only three per centum was allowed. Of course, the stock of this debt could be but little over fifty cents in the dollar in a country where legal interest was six per centum, and actual interest often more. In 1817, when the Bank of the United States went into operation, the price of that stock was sixty-four per centum—the money was in bank, more than enough to pay it-a gratuitous deposit, bringing no interestand which was contained in her vaults-her situation soon requiring the aid of the federal government to enable her to keep her doors open. I had submitted a resolve early in my term of service to have this stock purchased at its market value; and for that purpose to enlarge the power of the commissioners of the sinking fund, then limited to a price a little below the current rate: a motion which was resisted and defeated thousand copies of a report of the British House by the friends of the bank. I then moved a resolve that the bank pay interest on the deposits: which was opposed and defeated in like manner. Eventually, and when the rest of the public debt should be paid off, and the payment of these | would interest one. There was not a farmer in a power in the State-prostrate in dust and thirteen and a quarter millions would become obligatory under a policy which eschewed all debt-a consummation then rapidly approaching, under General Jackson's administration-it was clear that the treasury would pay one hundred cents on the dollar on what could be then purchased for sixty-odd, losing in the mean time the interest on the money with which it could be paid. It made a case against the bank, which it felt itself bound to answer, and did so through senator Johnson, of Louisiana: who showed that the bank paid the debt which the commissioners of the sinking fund required. This  $w_{as}$ true; but it was not the point in the case. The point was that the money was kept in deposit to sustain the bank, and the enlargement of the powers of the commissioners resisted to prevent them from purchasing this stock at a low rate in view of its rise to par: which soon took place; and made palpable the loss to the United States. At the time of the solicited renewal of the charter, this non-payment of the three per curred on account of the bank; and gave rise to the defence from Mr. Johnson; to which I replied:

> "Mr. Benton had not intended, he said, to sar a word in relation to this question, nor should he now rise to speak upon it, but from what had fallen from the senator from New Jersey. That gentleman had gone from the resolution to the bank, and from the bank he had gone to statements respecting his resolutions on alum salt, which were erroneous. Day by day, memorials were poured in upon us by command of the bank, all representing, in the same terms, the necessity of renewing its charter. These memorials, the tone of which, and the time of their presentation, showed their common origin were daily ordered to be printed. These papers, forming a larger mass than we ever had on our tables before, and all singing, to the same tune, the praises of the bank, were ordered to be printed without hesitation. The report which he had moved to have printed for the benefit of the farmers, was struck at by the senator of New Jersey. In the first place, the senator was in error as to the cost of printing the report. He had stated it to be one thousand nine hundred dollars, whereas it was only one thousand one hundred dollars. A few days ago, two of Commons on the subject of railroads was ordered to be printed. Following the language of that resolution, he had moved the printing of another report of that body, which would interest a thousand of our citizens, where that report

America who would not dee covered the whole saline k unacquainted with its natur of it than a blind man had o was of the highest value to grazier. It showed the effect dom upon the animal kingd were the results of the wisd first talents of Great Britain. the senator, that the bank ai sound currency, he would dis dates. In 1817 the bank we In three or four years after were chartered in Kentucky, and the United States Bank, able to put them down, was bankruptcy. With the use o public money, it was hardly day to sustain itself. Eleven as he could demonstrate, the maintaining the bank during for a waggon load of specie Mr. Cheves informs us, it w bankrupt. In addition to the emment deposits, to the exten was necessary to sustain it; an eleven millions by the diversio to this purpose. Congress at chase of the thirteen millions -at that time, they buld hav at sixty-five cents, now they y per cent. This was one iten lost, and the other was the stock from that time to the pi to six millions more. It was Cheves that the United States existence to the local banks-1 and forbearance of the banks of Boston, notwithstanding its refrom Ohio and Kentucky, wh country, destroyed its local 1 down the value of every descri perty. The United States Ba called by the senator the po The orders on the branches—tl in Dan and made payable in their origin with a Scotchman; character was discovered, they oppressive to the poor; and t was cried up as the poor man those same orders, in paper so s the bank notes, that the people iscern the difference between thought that the people might hature of the little cashier and th or the great cashier and the The stockholders were foreign extent-they were lords and I lergymen and military officers whose behalf our sympathy re countess dowagers, and th whom owned more of the stoc essed in sixteen States of this I s would become ich eschewed all rapidly approachdministration-it ould pay one hunnat could be then in the mean time which it could be the bank, which and did so through na: who showed hich the commisjuired. This was t in the case. The s kept in deposit nlargement of the resisted to prevent tock at a low rate. which soon took loss to the United olicited renewal of t of the three per nstance of loss ink; and gave rise to ison; to which I aded, he said, to say destion, nor should it, but from what from New Jersey. om the resolution ink he had gone to solutions on alum Day by day, meus by command of n the same terms, its charter. These th, and the time of neir common origin, ited. These papers, we ever had on our g, to the same tune, ere ordered to be

The report which of for the benefit of by the senator of ace, the senator was printing the report. Housand nine huns only one thousand few days ago, two of the British House ct of railroads was lowing the language oved the printing of which would interest, where that report was not a farmer in America who would not deem it a treasure. It overed the whole saline kingdom; and those unacquainted with its nature had no more idea of it than a blind man had of the solar rays. It was of the highest value to the farmer and the grazier. It showed the effect of the mineral kingdom upon the animal kingdom; and its views were the results of the wisdom, experience, and first talents of Great Britain. The assertion of the senator, that the bank aided in producing a sound currency, he would disprove by facts and dates. In 1817 the bank went into operation. In three or four years after, forty-four banks were chartered in Kentucky, and forty in Ohio; and the United States Bank, so far from being able to put them down, was on the verge of hankruptcy. With the use of eight millions of public money, it was hardly able, from day to day to sustain itself. Eleven millions of dollars. as he could demonstrate, the people had lost by maintaining the bank during this crisis. But for a waggon load of specie from the mint, as Mr. Cheves informs us, it would have become hankrupt. In addition to this, the use of govemment deposits, to the extent of eight millions. was necessary to sustain it; and the country lost eleven millions by the diversion of those deposits to this purpose. Congress authorized the purchase of the thirteen millions of three per cents. -at that time, they could have been purchased at sixty-five cents, now they were at ninety-six per cent. This was one item of the amount ost and the other was the interest on the stock from that time to the present, amounting to six millions more. It was shown by Mr. Cheves that the United States Bank owed its existence to the local banks—to the indulgence and forbearance of the banks of Philadelphia and Boston, notwithstanding its receipt of the silver from Ohio and Kentucky, which drained that muntry, destroyed its local banks, and threw down the value of every description of its property. The United States Bank currency was called by the senator the poor man's friend. The orders on the branches—these drafts issued in Dan and made payable in Beersheba-had their origin with a Scotchman; and, when their character was discovered, they were stopped as oppressive to the poor; and this bank, which was cried up as the poor man's friend, issued those same orders, in paper so similar to that of the bank notes, that the people could not readily discern the difference between them. It was thought that the people might mistake the signature of the little cashier and the little president for the great cashier and the great president. The stockholders were foreigners, to a great ntent-they were lords and ladies-reverend tergymen and military officers. The widows, whose behalf our sympathy was required, ere countess downgers, and the Barings, some whom owned more of the stock than was posessed in sixteen States of this Union."

CHAPTER LXVI.

BANK OF THE UNITED STATES—BILL FOR THE RECHARTER REPORTED IN THE SENATE—AND PASSED THAT BODY.

THE first bank of the United States, chartered in 1791, was a federal measure, conducted under the lead of General Hamilton—opposed by Mr. Jefferson, Mr. Madison and the republican party; and became a great landmark of party, not merely for the bank itself, but for the latitudinarian construction of the constitution in which it was founded, and the great door which it opened to the discretion of Congress to do what it pleased, under the plea of being "necessary" to carry into effect some granted power. The non-renewal of the charter in 1811, was the act of the republican party, then in possession of the government, and taking the opportunity to terminate, upon its own limitation, the existence of an institution, whose creation they had not been able to prevent. The charter of the second bank, in 1816, was the act of the republican party, and to aid them in the administration of the government, and, as such, was opposed by the federal party-not seeming then to understand that, by its instincts, a great moneyed corporation was in sympathy with their own party, and would soon be with it in action -which this bank soon was—and now struggled for a continuation of its existence under the lead of those who had opposed its birth, and against the party which created it. Mr. Webster was a federal leader on both occasionsagainst the charter, in 1816; for the recharter, in 1832—and in his opening speech in favor of the renewal, according to the bill reported by the Senate's select committee, and in allusion to these reversals of positions, and in justification of his own, he spoke thus, addressing him self to the Vice-President, Mr. Calhoun:

"A considerable portion of the active part of life has elapsed, said Mr. W., since you and I, Mr. President, and three or four other gentlemen, now in the Senate, acted our respective parts in the passage of the bill creating the present Bank of the United States. We have lived to little purpose, as public men, if the experience of this period has not enlightened our judgments, and enabled us to revise our opinions; and to correct any errors into which we may have fallen, if such errors there were, either in regard to the

of its constitution. I trust it will not be unbecoming the occasion, if I allude to your own important agency in that transaction. The bill incorporating the bank, and giving it a constitution, proceeded from a committee of the House of Representatives, of which you were chairman, and was conducted through that House under your distinguished lead. Having recently looked back to the proceedings of that day, I must be permitted to say that I have perused the speech by which the subject was introduced to the consideration of the House, with a revival of the happiness of the mass of the community feeling of approbation and pleasure with which I heard it; and I will add, that it would not, perhaps, now, be easy to find a better brief synopsis of those principles of currency and of banking, which, since they spring from the nature of money and of commerce, must be essentially the same, at all times, in all commercial communities, than that speech contains. The other gentlemen now with us in the Senate, all of them, I believe, concurred with the chairman of the committee, and voted for the bill. My own vote was against it. This is a matter of little importance; but it is connected with other circumstances, to which I will, for a moment, advert. The gentlemen with whom I acted on that occasion, had no doubts of the constitutional power of Congress to establish a national bank; nor had we any doubts of the general utility of an institution of that kind. We had, indeed, most of us, voted for a bank, at a preceding session. But the object of our regard was not whatever might be called a bank. We required that it should be established on certain principles, which alone we deemed safe and useful, made subject to certain fixed liabilities, and so guarded that it could neither move voluntarily, nor be moved by others out of its proper sphere of action. The bill, when first introduced, contained features, to which we should never have assented, and we set ourselves accordingly to work with a good deal of zeal, in order to effect sundry amendments. In some of those proposed amendments, the chairman, and those who acted with him, finally concurred. Others they opposed. The result was, that several most important amendments, as I thought, prevailed. But there still remained, in my opinion, objections to the bill, which justified a persevering opposition till they should be removed."

He spoke forcibly and justly against the evils of paper money, and a depreciated currency, meaning the debased issues of the local banks, for the cure of which the national bank was to be the instrument-not foreseeing that this great bank was itself to be the most striking exemplification of all the evils which he depicted. He said:

of political evils. It undermines the virtues paid by the bank to the United States for is general utility of a national bank, or the details necessary for the support of the social system and encourages propensities destructive of its happiness. It wars against industry, frugality, and economy; and it fosters the evil spirits of extravagance and speculation. Of all the contrivances for cheating the laboring classes of mankind, none has been more effectual than that which deludes them with paper money, This is the most effectual of inventions to fertilize the rich man's field, by the sweat of the poor man's brow. Ordinary tyranny, oppression, excessive taxation, these bear lightly on compared with fraudulent currencies, and the robberies committed by depreciated paper. Our own history has recorded for our instruction enough, and more than enough, of the demoralizing tendency, the injustice, and the intolerable oppression on the virtuous and well disposed of a degraded paper currency, authorized by law or any way countenanced by government,

> He also spoke truly on the subject of the small quantity of silver currency in the United States—only some twenty-two millions—and not a particle of gold; and deprecated the small bank note currency as the cause of that evil He said:

> "The paper circulation of the country is, at this time, probably seventy-five or eighty millions of dollars. Of specie we may have twenty or twenty-two millions: and this, principally, in masses in the vaults of the banks. Now, sign this is a state of things which, in my judgment, leads constantly to overtrading, and to the consequent excesses and revulsions which so often disturb the regular course of commercial

"Why have we so small an amount of specie in circulation? Certainly the only reason is, because we do not require more. We have but to ask its presence, and it would return. But we voluntarily banish it by the great amount of small bank notes. In most of the States the banks issue notes of all low denominations, down even to a single dollar. How is it poss ble, under such circumstances, to retain spece in circulation? All experience shows it to be impossible. The paper will take the place of the gold and silver. When Mr. Pitt, in the year 1797, proposed in Parliament to authorize the Bank of England to issue one pound notes, Mr. Burke lay sick at Bath of an illness from which he never recovered; and he is said to have written to the late Mr. Canning, 'Tell Mr. Pitt that if he consents to the issuing of one pound notes, he must never expect to see guinea again.

The bill provided that a bonus of $500,000 "A disordered currency is one of the greatest in three equal annual instalments should be exclusive privileges: Mr. modify the section, so as to over the entire term of the stence-$150,000 a year was opposed both to the 1 sive privilege, and said:

"The proper compensat make, provided this exclusi to it, would be to reduce th loans and discounts. A r would be felt by the people bonus would not be felt ome into the treasury, as shed immediately on son unconstitutional in its nat its application. He was 1 wheme for getting money present. The difficulty la The struggle now was to ke treasury,-to prevent the ac plus; and the reception of to aggravate that difficulty surplus. Kings might receiv exclusive privileges to mone In that case his subjects 1 and he would receive the public, it was incomprehensi should sell to a company the money out of themselves. the grant of an exclusive pr posed to the sale of privileg or sold, he was in favor of re the way that would be mo whole body of the people; reduction of interest would b object. A bank, which had credit and revenue of the Ur upon, could well afford to 1 counts for less than six per centum would be high intere and he had no doubt, if tin the application, that applicat be made to take the charter

I opposed action on the sub The bank charter had yet 1 and two years after that to winding up its affairs; in al the dissolution of the corp would remit the final decision which would sit between 1 there was not only to be a ne before that time, but a new new apportionment of the which there would be a grea members, and especially in th operation of the present ban hous. The stockholders had recharter at this session: tl the social system destructive of its nst industry, fruit fosters the evil speculation. Of all the laboring classes more effectual than with paper money, of inventions to ferby the sweat of the ry tyranny, oppresiese bear lightly on of the community, currencies, and the reciated paper. Our for our instruction ough, of the demorice, and the intoleraus and well disposed, y, authorized by law. y government.

the subject of the rrency in the United y-two millions—and deprecated the small he cause of that evil of the country is at y-five or eighty milwe may have twenty nd this, principally in he banks. Now, sin, iich, in my judgment, trading, and to the revulsions which so course of commercial an amount of specie in ie only reason is, benore. We have but to ould return. But we the great amount of ost of the States the 1 low denominations lar. How is it possiances, to retain speci erience shows it to be will take the place of hen Mr. Pitt, in the arliament to authorize ssue one pound notes, ath of an illness from ed; and he is said to 1r. Canning, 'Tell Mr. to the issuing of one never expect to see t a bonus of $500,000 instalments should be e United States for its exclusive privileges: Mr. Webster moved to modify the section, so as to spread the payment over the entire term of the bank's proposed existence—$150,000 a year for fifteen years. I was opposed both to the bonus, and the exclusive privilege, and said:

"The proper compensation for the bank to make, provided this exclusive privilege was sold to it would be to reduce the rate of interest on loans and discounts. A reduction of interest would be felt by the people; the payment of a honus would not be felt by them. It would ome into the treasury, and probably be lavshed immediately on some scheme, possibly unconstitutional in its nature, and sectional in its application. He was not in favor of any wheme for getting money into the treasury at present. The difficulty lay the other way. The struggle now was to keep money out of the treasury,—to prevent the accumulation of a surplus; and the reception of this bonus would go to aggravate that difficulty, by increasing that surplus. Kings might receive bonuses for selling exclusive privileges to monopolizing companies. In that case his subjects would bear the loss, and he would receive the profit; but, in a republic, it was incomprehensible that the people should sell to a company the privilege of making money out of themselves. He was opposed to the grant of an exclusive privilege; he was opposed to the sale of privileges; but if granted, or sold he was in favor of receiving the price in the way that would be most beneficial to the whole body of the people; and, in this case, a reduction of interest would best accomplish that object. A bank, which had the benefit of the credit and revenue of the United States to bank upon could well afford to make loans and discounts for less than six per centum. Five per centum would be high interest for such a bank; and he had no doubt, if time was allowed for the application, that applications enough would be made to take the charter upon these terms."

I opposed action on the subject at this session. The bank charter had yet four years to run, and two years after that to remain in force for winding up its affairs; in all, six years before the dissolution of the corporation: and this would remit the final decision to the Congress which would sit between 1836 and 1838, and there was not only to be a new Congress elected before that time, but a new Congress under a new apportionment of the representation, in which there would be a great augmentation of members, and especially in the West, where the operation of the present bank was most injutious. The stockholders had not applied for the teclarter at this session: that was the act of the directors and politicians, or rather of the politicians and directors; for the former governed the decision. The stockholders in their meeting last September only authorized the president and directors to apply at any time before the next triennial meeting—at any time within three years; and that would carry the application to the right time. I, therefore, inveighed against the present application, and insisted that:

"Many reasons oppose the final action of Congress upon this subject at the present time. We are exhausted with the tedium, if not with the labors of a six months' session. Our hearts and minds must be at home, though our bodies are here. Mentally and bodily we are unable to give the attention and consideration to this question, which the magnitude of its principles, the extent and variety of its details, demand from us. Other subjects of more immediate and pressing interest must be thrown aside, to make way for it. The reduction of the price of the public lands, for which the new States have been petitioning for so many years, and the modification of the tariff, the continuance of which seems to be weakening the cement which binds this Union together, must be postponed, and possibly lost for the session, if we go on with the bank question. Why has the tariff been dropped in the Senate? Every one recollects the haste with which that subject was taken up in this chamber; how it was pushed to a certain point; and how suddenly and gently it has given way to the bank bill! Is there any union of interest—any conjunction of forces -any combined plan of action-any alliance, offensive or defensive, between the United States Bank and the American system? Certainly they enter the field together, one here, the other yonder (pointing to the House of Representatives), and leaving a clear stage to each other, they press at once upon both wings, and announce a perfect non-interference, if not mutual aid, in the double victory which is to be achieved. Why have the two bills reported by the Committee on Manufactures, and for taking up which notices have been given: why are they so suddenly, so easily, so gently, abandoned? Why is the land bill, reported by the same committee, and a pledge given to call it up when the Committee on Public Lands had made their counter report, also suffered to sleep on the table? The counter report is made; it is printed; it lies on every table; why not go on with the lands, when the settlement of the question of the amount of revenue to be derived from that source precedes the tariff question. and must be settled before we can know how much revenue should be raised from imports.

tous. The stockholders had not applied for the was the act of gress on this subject. The House of Representa-ied our bank charter from tate them in their improve work? At first the bank ing from an exclusive p denied. Formerly the several years before it wa than a year to run, and is

A motion was made by bama, declaratory of the admit, or deny the establi the mother bank within tl their loans and issues, if sh and in support of that mo this speech:

"The amendment offere Alabama [Mr. Moore] wa rights of the States, both t these branch banks into th them, like other property amendment was struck ou to a legislative declaration existed, and would operate the decision of the Suprem It is to no purpose to say the amendment will leave t the subject; and the rights soever they may be, will That is the state of the is silent upon the subject and in that silence the spoken, and nullified the That court has decided t United States is independent consequently, that she may the States in defiance of them there without the pa is the decision; and the de the law of the land; so th clause is put into the char that the new charter will one was. The voice of th now heard in that silence. premacy of the bank, and t States; and, unless we int tervail that voice by a legis will be impossible for the cept by measures which n template.

"Mr. B. regretted that he papers any report of the arg from Virginia [Mr. Tazewe the right of the States to it was an argument brief, p ave-lucid as a sunbeam, di mortal as the stroke of fa speakers. Since the deliver they had sat in dumb show, mute as the dead, and prese tives had appointed a committee to investigate the affairs of the bank; they had proceeded to the limit of the time allotted them—had reported adversely to the bank—and especially against the renewal of the charter at this session; and had argued the necessity of further examina-Would the Senate proceed while this tions. unfinished investigation was depending in the other end of the building? Would they act so as to limit the investigation to the few weeks which were allowed to the committee, when we have from four to six years on hand within which to make it? The reports of this committee, to the amount of some 15,000 copies had been ordered to be printed by the two Houses, to be distributed among the people. For what purpose? Certainly that the people might read them-make up their minds upon their contents-and communicate their sentiments to their representatives. But these reports are not yet distributed; they are not yet read by the people; and why order this distribution without waiting for its effect, when there is so much time on hand? Why treat the people with this mockery of a pretended consultation—this illusive reference to their judgment while proceeding to act before they can read what we have sent to them? Nay, more; the very documents upon which the reports are founded are vet unprinted! The Senate is actually pushed into this discussion without having seen the evidence which has been collected by the investigating committee, and which the Senate itself has ordered to be printed for the information of its members.

"The decision of this question does not belong to this Congress, but to the Congress to be elected under the new census of 1830. looked to him like usurpation for this Congress to seize upon a question of this magnitude, which required no decision until the new and full representation of the people shall come in; and which, if decided now, though prematurely and by usurpation, is irrevocable, although it cannot take effect until 1836;—that is to say, until three years after the new and full representaion would be in power. What Congress is his? It is the apportionment of 1820, formed on a population of ten millions. It is just going out of existence. A new Congress, apportioned upon a representation of thirteen millions, is already provided for by law; and after the 4th of March next-within nine months from this day—will be in power, and entitled to the seats in which we sit. That Congress will contain thirty members more than the present one. Three millions of people—a number equal to that which made the revolution—are now unrepresented, who will be then represented. The West alone—that section of the Union which suffers most from the depredations of the bank the question now, is to free it from all restraint, -loses twenty votes! In that section alone a million of people lose their voice in the decision in all our affairs—elections, State, federal, presof this great question. And why? What excuse? What necessity? What plea for this "Mr.

sudden haste which interrupts an unfinished investigation—sets aside the immediate business of the people—and usurps the rights of our successors? No plea in the world, except that a gigantic moneyed institution refuses to wait and must have her imperial wishes immediately gratified. If a charter was to be granted, it should be done with as little invasion of the rights of posterity-with as little encroachment upon the privileges of our successors—as possible. Once in ten years, and that at the commencement of each full representation under a new census, would be the most appropriate time; and then charters should be for ten, and not twenty years. "Mr. B. had nothing to do with motives. He neither preferred accusations, nor pronounced absolutions: but it was impossible to shut his eves upon facts, and to close up his reason against the induction of inevitable inferences. The presidental election was at hand; -it would come in four months; -and here was a question which in the opinion of all, must affect that election -in the opinion of some, may decide it-which is pressed on for decision four years before it is necessary to decide it, and six years before it ought to be decided. Why this sudden pressure? Is it to throw the bank bill into the hands of the President, to solve, by a practical reference, the disputed problem of the executive veto, and to place the President under a cross fire from the opposite banks of the Potomac River? HelMr. B.] knew nothing about that veto, but he knew something of human nature, and something of the rights of the people under our representative form of government; and he would be free to say that a veto which would stop the encroachment of a minority of Congress upon the rights of its successors-which would arrest a frightful act of legislative usurpation-which would retrieve for the people the right of deliberation and of action-which would arrest the overwhelming progress of a gigantic moneyed institutionwhich would prevent Ohio from being deprived of five votes, Indiana from losing four, Tennessee four, Illinois two, Alabama two, Kentucky, Mississippi and Missouri one each -which would lose six votes to New-York and two to Pennsyl vania; a veto, in short, which would protect the rights of three millions of people, now unrepre sented in Congress, would be an act of constitu tional justice to the people, which ought to raise the President, and certainly would raise him to a higher degree of favor in the estimation of every republican citizen of the community than he now enjoyed. By passing on the charter now, Congress would lose all check and control over the institution for the four years it had yet to run. The pendency of the question was a rol over its head for these four years; to decide and turn it loose to play what part it pleased

"Mr. B. turned to the example of England

upts an unfinished immediate business he rights of our sucworld, except that a on refuses to wait, wishes immediately s to be granted, it ttle invasion of the little encroachment uccessors—as possind that at the compresentation under a e most appropriate rould be for ten, and

o with motives. He ns, nor pronounced possible to shut his up his reason against nferences. The pre-.nd ;-it would come vas a question which. affect that election ay decide it-which our years before it is six years before it his sudden pressure? bill into the hands r a practical reference. e executive veto, and r a cross fire from the nac River? HelMr. at veto, but he knew re, and something of er our representative he would be free to ld stop the encroachgress upon the rights ould arrest a frightpation-which would right of deliberation arrest the overwhelmnoneyed institution-from being deprived losing four, Tennessee two, Kentucky, Mis each -which would and two to Pennsyl rich would protect the people, now unrepre be an act of constitu which ought to raise would raise him, to a he estimation of every mmunity than he not he charter now, Con and control over the years it had yet to e question was a rol four years; to decide e it from all restraint what part it pleased s, State, federal, presi-

example of England

and begged the republican Senate of the United States to take a lesson from the monarchial parliament of Great Britain. We copied their evil ways; why not their good ones? We copied our bank charter from theirs; why not imitate them in their improvements upon their own work? At first the bank had a monopoly resulting from an exclusive privilege: that is now denied. Formerly the charter was renewed several years before it was out: it now has less than a year to run, and is not yet rechartered."

Amotion was made by Mr. Moore of Alabama, declaratory of the right of the States to admit, or deny the establishment of branches of the mother bank within their limits, and to tax their loans and issues, if she chose to admit them: and in support of that motion Mr. Benton made this speech:

"The amendment offered by the senator from Alabama [Mr. Moore] was declaratory of the rights of the States, both to refuse admission of these branch banks into their limits, and to tax them, like other property, if admitted: if this amendment was struck out, it was tantamount to a legislative declaration that no such rights existed, and would operate as a confirmation of the decision of the Supreme Court to that effect. It is to no purpose to say that the rejection of the amendment will leave the charter silent upon the subject; and the rights of the States, whatsoever they may be, will remain in full force. That is the state of the existing charter. It is silent upon the subject of State taxation; and in that silence the Supreme Court has spoken, and nullified the rights of the States. That court has decided that the Bank of the United States is independent of State legislation! consequently, that she may send branches into the States in defiance of their laws, and keep them there without the payment of tax. This is the decision; and the decision of the court is the law of the land; so that, if no declaratory clause is put into the charter, it cannot be said that the new charter will be silent, as the old one was. The voice of the Supreme Court is now heard in that silence, proclaiming the supremacy of the bank, and the degradation of the States; and, unless we interpose now to countervail that voice by a legislative declaration, it will be impossible for the States to resit it, except by measures which no one wishes to contemplate.

"Mr. B. regretted that he had not seen in the papers any report of the argument of the senator from Virginia [Mr. Tazewell] in vindication of the right of the States to tax these branches. It was an argument brief, powerful, and conclusive-lucid as a sunbeam, direct as an arrow, and mortal as the stroke of fate to the adversary speakers. Since the delivery of that argument, they had sat in dumb show, silent as the grave, nations the realization of the Abbé Sieyes's famous conception of a dumb legislature. Before the States surrendered a portion of their sovereignity to create this federal government, they possessed the unlimited power of taxation; in the act of the surrender, which is the constitution, they abridged this unlimited right but in two particulars—exports and imports—which they agreed no longer to tax, and therefore retained the taxing power entire over all other subjects. This was the substance of the argument which dumbfounded the adversary; and the distinction which was attempted to be set up between tangible and intangible, visible and invisible, objects of taxation; between franchises and privileges on one side, and material substances on the other, was so completely blasted and annihilated by one additional stroke of lightning, that the fathers of the distinction really believed that they had never made it! and sung their palinodes in the face of the House.

"The argument that these branches are necessary to enable the federal government to carry on its fiscal operations, and, therefore, ought to be independent of State legislation, is answered and expunged by a matter of fact, namely, that Congress itself has determined otherwise, and that in the very charter of the bank. The charter limits the right of the federal government to the establishment of a single branch, and that one in the District of Columbia! The branch at this place, and the parent bank at Philadelphia, are all that the federal government has stipulated for. All beyond that, is left to the bank itself; to establish branches in the States or not, as it suited its own interest; or to employ State banks, with the approbation of the Secretary of the Treasury, to do the business of the branches for the United States. Congress is contented with State banks to do the business of the branches in the States; and, therefore, authorizes the very case which gentlemen apprehend and so loudly deprecate, that New-York may refuse her assent to the continuance of the branches within her limits, and send the public deposits to the State banks. This is what the charter contemplates. Look at the charter; see the fourteenth article of the constitution of the bank; it makes it optionary with the directors of the bank to establish branches in such States as they shall think fit, with the alternative of using State banks as their substitutes in States in which they do not choose to establish branches. This brings the establishment of branches to a private affair, a mere question of profit and loss to the bank itself; and cuts up by the roots the whole argument of the necessity of these branches to the fiscal operations of the federal government. The establishment of branches in the States is, then, a private concern, and presents this question: Shall non-residents and aliens even alien enemies, for such they may behave a right to carry on the trade of banking within the limits of the States, without their mute as the dead, and presenting to our imagi- consent, without liability to taxation, and without amenability to State legislation? The suggestion that the United States owns an interest in this bank, is of no avail. If she owned it all, it would still be subject to taxation, like all other property is which she holds in the States. The lands which she had obtained from individuals in satisfaction of debts, were all subject to taxation; the public lands which she held by grants from the States, or purchases from foreign powers, were only exempted from taxation by virtue of compacts, and the payment of five percentum on the proceeds of the sales for that exemption."

The motion of Mr. Moore was rejected, and by the usual majority.

Mr. Benton then moved to strike out so much of the bill as gave to the bank exclusive privileges, and to insert a provision making the stockholders liable for the debts of the institution; and in support of his motion quoted the case of the three Scottish banks which had no exclusive privilege, and in which the stockholders were liable, and the superior excellence of which over the Bank of England was admitted and declared by English statesmen. He said:

"The three Scottish banks had held each other in check, had proceeded moderately in all their operations, conducted their business regularly and prudently, and always kept themselves in a condition to face their creditors; while the single English bank, having no check from rival institutions, ran riot in the wantonness of its own unbridled power, deluging the country, when it pleased, with paper, and filling it with speculation and extravagance; drawing in again when it pleased, and filling it with bankruptcy and pauperism; often transcending its limits, and twice stopping payment, and once for a period of twenty years. There can be no question of the incomparable superiority of the Scottish banking system over the English banking system, even in a monarchy; and this has been officially announced to the Bank of England by the British ministry, as far back as the year 1826, with the authentic declaration that the English system of banking must be assimilated to the Scottish system, and that her exclusive privilege could never be renewed. This was done in a correspondence between the Earl of Liverpool, first Lord of the Treasury, and Mr. Robinson, Chancellor of the Exchequer, on one side, and the Governor and Deputy Governor of the Bank of England on the other. In their letter of the 18th January, 1826, the two ministers, adverting o the fact of the stoppage of payment, and repeated convulsions of the Bank of England, while the Scottish banks had been wholly free from such calamities, declared their conviction that there existed an unsound and delusive system of banking in England, and a sound and official assurance of the British government, that neither His Majesty's ministers, nor parliament, would ever agree to renew the charter of the Bank of England with their exclusive privileges! Exclusive privileges, they said, were out of fashion! Nor is it renewed to this day, though the charter is within nine months of its expursion!

"In the peculiar excellence of the Scottish plan, lies a few plain and obvious principles, closely related to republican ideas. First, No exclusive privileges. Secondly. Three independent banks to check and control each other. and diffuse their benefits, instead of one to do as it pleased, and monopolize the moneyed power. Thirdly. The liability of each stockholder for the amount of his stock, on the failure of the bank to redeem its notes in specie. Fourthly, The payment of a moderate interest to depositors. Upon these few plain principles, all of them founded in republican notions, equal rights. and equal justice, the Scottish banks have advanced themselves to the first rank in Europe, have eclipsed the Bank of England, and caused it to be condemned in its own country, and have made themselves the model of all future banking institutions in Great Britain. And now, it would be a curious political phenomenon, and might give rise to some interesting speculations on the advance of free principles in England and their decline in America, if the Scottish republican plan of banking should be rejected here. while preferred there; and the British monarchial plan, which is condemned there, should be perpetuated here! and this double incongruity committed without necessity, without excuse, without giving the people time to consider, and to communicate their sentiments to their constituents, when there is four, if not six years, for them to consider the subject before final decision is required!"

The clause for continuing the exclusive privilege of the bank, was warmly contested in the Senate, and arguments against it drawn from the nature of our government, as well as from the example of the British parliament, which had granted the monopoly to the Bank of England in her previous charters, and denied it on the last renewal. It owed its origin in England to the high tory times of Queen Anne, and its extinction to the liberal spirit of the present century. Mr. Benton was the chief speaker of this point; and—

18th January, 1826, the two ministers, adverting to the fact of the stoppage of payment, and repeated convulsions of the Bank of England, while the Scottish banks had been wholly free from such calamities, declared their conviction that there existed an unsound and delusive system of banking in England, and a sound and solid system in Scotland! And they gave the

to the observance of created. He said the granted, was an exclus and an invasion of the gresses, as well as of of the Union, for the run, and which might as this was the last ti ever make head agains which raised itself in overbalance every other ment. This exclusive the genius of our gov emment of equal righ privileges; and it is cle constitution, which or privileges in two solit each of these founde the case of authors a Congress is authorized time, the exclusive priv writings and discoveri this charter there is no be well said there is n monopoly is far more now than when first charter was not grante of individuals, but lay to it; but now it is to ticular set, and many all of whom, or their enjoyed the privilege fo company succeeds now i continued for fifteen yes themselves in wealth a be enabled be perpetu transmit it as a private terity. Our governmen office : all officers, from t are amenable to that pri to remain in power thir should one company ha moneyed power of Amer Can it be the wish of an oligarchy with unbound existence, to lay the fo and monarchy in this A

"The restriction upor war with every principle and legislative equality. given to one Congress th it has given it to every has a right to establi Congress has. The pow our successors is nowh we can do our successor: is always equal to its amend; to do, and to un of each. But here the a ourselves cannot amend cannot amend—and wh forbidden to imitate, or 1 shows the danger of ass If the power to establi been expressly granted, t.

tish government, that sters, nor parliament, w the charter of the r exclusive privileges! said, were out of fashto this day, though months of its expiraence of the Scottish d obvious principles, can ideas. First. No condly. Three indeid control each other, instead of one to do ze the moneyed power. each stockholder for on the failure of the in specie. Fourthly. te interest to deposilain principles, all of n notions, equal rights, ottish banks have adfirst rank in Europe, f England, and caused own country, and have el of all future banking ritain. And now, it ical phenomenon, and iteresting speculations sciples in England and if the Scottish repubould be rejected here, the British monarchial there, should be pers double incongruity ssity, without excuse, time to consider, and entiments to their conour, if not six years, for ect before final decision

ing the exclusive priarmly contested in the ainst it drawn from the t, as well as from the parliament, which had the Bank of England and denied it on the s origin in England to ueen Anne, and its exspirit of the present is the chief speaker on es in the charter which vilege, and imposed the the object of his motion art of the 21st section, other bank should be ire law of the United nuance of that charter, ith of the United States to the observance of the monopoly thereby created. He said the privilege of banking, here granted, was an exclusive privilege, a monopoly, and an invasion of the rights of all future Congresses, as well as of the rights of all citizens of the Union, for the term the charter had to run, and which might be considered perpetual; as this was the last time that the people could ever make head against the new political power which raised itself in the form of the bank to overbalance every other power in the government. This exclusive privilege is contrary to the genius of our government, which is a government of equal rights, and not of exclusive privileges; and it is clearly unauthorized by the constitution, which only admits of exclusive privileges in two solitary, specified cases, and each of these founded upon a natural right, the case of authors and inventors; to whom Congress is authorized to grant, for a limited time, the exclusive privilege of selling their own writings and discoveries. But in the case of this charter there is no natural right, and it may be well said there is no limited time; and the monopoly is far more glaring and indefensible now than when first granted; for then the charter was not granted to any particular set of individuals, but lay open to all to subscribe to it; but now it is to be continued to a particular set, and many of them foreigners, and all of whom, or their assignees, had already enjoyed the privilege for twenty years. If this company succeeds now in getting their monopoly continued for fifteen years, they will so intrench themselves in wealth and power, that they will be enabled perpetuate their charter, and transmit it as a private inheritance to their posterity. Our government delights in rotation of office; all officers, from the highest to the lowest. are amenable to that principle; no one is suffered to remain in power thirty-five years; and why should one company have the command of the moneyed power of America for that long period? Can it be the wish of any person to establish an oligarchy with unbounded wealth and perpetual existence, to lay the foundation for a nobility and monarchy in this America!

"The restriction upon future Congresses is at war with every principle of constitutional right and legislative equality. If the constitution has given to one Congress the right to charter banks, it has given it to every one. If this Congress has a right to establish a bank, every other Congress has. The power to tie the hands of our successors is nowhere given to us; what we can do our successors can; a legislative body is always equal to itself. To make, and to amend; to do, and to undo; is the prerogative of each. But here the attempt is to do what we ourselves cannot amend—what our successors cannot amend—and what our successors are forbidden to imitate, or to do in any form. This shows the danger of assuming implied powers. If the power to establish a national bank had power, being once exerted, would be exhausted. and no further legislation would remain to be done; but this power is now assumed upon con struction, after having been twice rejected, in the convention which framed the constitution, and is, therefore, without limitation as to number or character. Mr. Madison was express in his opinions in the year 1791, that, if there was one bank chartered, there ought to be several! The genius of the British monarchy, he said, favored the concentration of wealth and power. In America the genius of the government required the diffusion of wealth and power. The establishment of branches did not satisfy the prin ciple of diffusion. Several independent banks alone could do it. The branches, instead of lessening the wealth and power of the single institution, greatly increased both, by giving to the great central parent bank an organization and ramification which pervaded the whole Union, drawing wealth from every part, and subjecting every part to the operations, political and pecuniary, of the central institution. But this restriction ties up the hands of Congress from granting other charters. Behave as it mayplunge into all elections-convulse the country with expansions and contractions of paper currency-fail in its ability to help the merchants to pay their bonds-stop payment, and leave the government no option but to receive its dishonored notes in revenue payments-and still it would be secure of its monopoly; the hands of all future Congresses would be tied up; and no rival or additional banks could be established. to hold it in check, or to supply its place.

"Is this the Congress to do these things? Is this the Congress to impose restrictions upon the power of their successors? Is this the Congress to tie the hands of all Congresses till the year 1851? In nine months this Congress is defunct! A new and full representation of the people will come into power. Thirty additional members will be in the House of Representatives; three millions of additional people will be represented. The renewed charter is not to take effect till three years after this full representation is in power! And are we to forestall and anticipate them? Take their proper business out of their hands-snatch the sceptre of legislation from them-do an act which we cannot amend-which they cannot amend—which is irrevocable and intangible; and, to crown this act of usurpation, deliberately set about tying the hands, and imposing a restriction upon a Congress equal to us in constitutional power, superior to us in representative numbers, and better entitled to act upon the subject, because the present charter is not to expire, nor the new one to take effect, until three years after the new Congress shall be in power! It is in vain to say that this reasoning would apply to other legislative measures, and require the postponement of the land bill and the tariff bill. Both these bills require immebeen expressly granted, then the exercise of that diate decision, and therein differ from the bank bill, which requires no decision for three years to come. But the difference is greater still; for the land bill and tariff bill are ordinary acts of legislation, open to amendment, or repeal, by ourselves and successors; but the charter is to be irrevocable, unamendable, binding upon all Massachusetts; Smith (Gen. Samuel), of Mary. Congresses till the year 1851. This is rank usurpation; and if perpetrated by Congress, and afterwards arrested by an Executive veto, the President will become the true representative of the people, the faithful defender of their rights, and the defender of the rights of the new Congress which will assemble under the new census.

"Mr. B. concluded his remarks by showing the origin, and also the extinction, of the doctrine in England. A tory parliament in the reign of Forsyth, of Georgia; Grundy, of Tennessee; Queen Anne had first granted an exclusive privi- Hayne, of South Carolina; Hill, of New Hamplege to the Bank of England, and imposed a restriction upon the right of future parliaments to establish another bank; and the ministry of 1826 had condemned this doctrine, and pro- York; Miller, of South Carolina; Moore, of scribed its continuance in England. The charter Alabama; Tazewell, of Virginia; Troup, of granted to the old Bank of the United States and to the existing bank had copied those obnoxious clauses; but now that they were condemned in England as too unjust and odious for that monarchial country, they ought certainly to be discarded in this republic, where equal rights was the vital principle and ruling feature of all our institutions."

All the amendments proposed by the opponents of the bank being inexorably voted down, after a debate which, with some cessations, continued from January to June, the final vote was taken, several senators first taking occasion to THE bill which had passed the Senate after a show they had no interest in the institution. long and arduous contest, quickly passed the Mr. Benton had seen the names of some mem- House, with little or no contest at all. The bers in the list of stockholders; and early in session was near its end; members were wearied; the debate had required that the rule of parlia- the result foreseen by every body-that the mentary law should be read, which excludes the bill would pass—the veto be applied—and the interested member from voting, and expunges whole question of charter or no charter go before his vote if he does, and his interest is afterwards the people in the question of the presidential discovered. Mr. Dallas said that he had sold election. Some attempts were made by the his stock in the institution as soon as it was adversaries of the bill to amend it, by offering known that the question of the recharter would amendments, similar to those which had been come before him: Mr. Silsbee said that he had offered in the Senate; but with the same result disposed of his interest before the question came in one House as in the other. They were all before Congress: Mr. Webster said that the in-voted down by an inexorable majority; and it sertion of his name in the list of stockholders was evident that the contest was political, and · was a mistake in a clerk of the bank. The vote relied upon by one party to bring them into was then taken on the passage of the bill, and power; and deprecated by the other as the stood: YEAS: Messrs. Bell, of New Hampshire; flagrant prostitution of a great moneyed corp-Buckner, of Missouri; Chambers, of Maryland; ration to partisan and election purposes. The Clay! of Kentucky; Clayton, of Delaware; Dal- question was soon put; and decided by the follas of Pennsylvania; Ewing, of Ohio; Foot, of lowing votes: Connecticut; Frelinghuysen, of New Jersey; Hendricks, of Indiana; Holmes, of Maine Jo- Allison, Appleton, Armstrong, Arnold, Ashley Island; Naudain, of Delaware; Poindexter, of Mississippi; Prentiss, of Vermont; Robbins of Rhode Island; Robinson, of Illinois; Ruggles. of Ohio; Seymour, of Vermont; Silsbee, of land; Sprague, of Maine; Tipton, of Indiana Tomlinson, of Connecticut; Waggaman, of Louisiana; Webster, of Massachusetts; and Wilkins, of Pennsylvania: 28. NAYS: Messrs. Benton, of Missouri; Bibb, of Kentucky; Brown of North Carolina; Dickerson, of New Jersey: Dudley, of New-York; Ellis, of Mississippi; shire; Kane, of Illinois; King, of Alabama: Mangum, of North Carolina; Marcy, of New-Georgia; Tyler, of Virginia; Hugh L. White of Tennessee: 20.

CHAPTER LXVII.

BANK OF THE UNITED STATES-BILL FOR THE RENEWED CHARTER PASSED IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

YEAS. - Messrs. Adams, C. Allan, H. Allen sish S. Johnston, of Louisiana; Knight, of Rhode Babcock, Banks, N. Barber, J. S. Barbour, Bar

ringer, Barstow, I. C. Bullard, Burd, Burges, dict, S. Condit, E. Co Corwin, Coulter, Craig, ton, Daniel, J. Davis, D Doddridge, Drayton, Evans, E. Everett. H. Grennell, Hodges, Heis ington, Ihrie, Ingersol Kendall, H. King, Kerr, Maxwell, McCoy, McD Milligan, Newton, Pea Potts, Randolph, J. Ree W. B. Shepard, A. H. Southard, Spence, Stank Storrs, Sutherland, Ta kins, Tracy, Vance, Very ton. Watmough, E. W E. D. White, Wickliffe.

NAYS .- Messrs. Adai Archer, J. Bates, Bear thune, James Blair, Joh Branch, Cambreleng, Claiborne, Clay, Clayto Davis, Dayan, Doubled Foster, Gaither, Gordon Hall, Hammons, Harper man, Hogan, Holiand, H Cave Johnson, Kavanag King, Lamar, Leavitt, 1 Mardis, Mason, McCar Mitchell, Newnan, Nuc Polk, E. C. Reed, Renche Standifer, F. Thomas, W son, Ward, Wardwell, V C. P. White, Wilde, Wo

CHAPTER

THE

THE act which had pass the renewal of the bank to the President on the returned by him to the ginated, on the 10th, wit first objection was to t which it granted to corpo enjoyed them, the great v and the inadequacy of t them. He said:

"Every monopoly, and are granted at the expens ought to receive a fair millions which this act the stockholders of the ex directly or indirectly out vare; Poindexter. of ermont; Robbins, of of Illinois; Ruggles, ermont; Silsbee, of n. Samuel), of Mary-Tipton, of Indiana it; Waggaman, of Massachusetts: and 28. NAYS: Messrs. of Kentucky; Brown, rson, of New Jersey; Illis, of Mississippi; indy, of Tennessee: Hill, of New Hamp-King, of Alabama: na; Marcy, of New-Carolina; Moore, of Virginia; Troup, of ia; Hugh L. White

LXVII.

ATES-BILL FOR THE ED IN THE HOUSE OF

d the Senate, after a , quickly passed the contest at all. The embers were wearied; very body-that the be applied—and the or no charter go before n of the presidential were made by the amend it, by offering hose which had been with the same result ther. They were all able majority; and it est was political, and to bring them into by the other as the great moneyed corpction purposes. The ad decided by the fol-

C. Allan, H. Allen rong, Arnold, Ashley er, J. S. Barbour, Bar Rollard, Burd, Burges, Choate, Collier, L. Con-Potts, Randolph, J. Reed, Root, Russel, Semmes, W. B. Shepard, A. H. Shepperd, Slade, Smith, ments of $200,000 each. E. D. White, Wickliffe, Williams, Young.-106. Archer, J. Bates, Beardsley, Bell, Bergen, Be-Hall, Hammons, Harper, Hawes, Hawkins, Hoffman, Hogan, Holland, Howard, Hubbard, Jarvis, Cave Johnson, Kavanagh, Kennon, A. King, J. C. P. White, Wilde, Worthington.-84.

CHAPTER LXVIII.

THE VETO.

THE act which had passed the two Houses for to the President on the 4th day of July, and enjoyed them, the great value of these privileges, them. He said:

ringer, Barstow, I. C. Bates, Briggs, Bucher, American people. It is due to thems therefore, if their government sell monopolies and exclusive dict, S. Condit, E. Cooke, B. Cooke, Cooper, privileges, that they should at least exact for Corwin, Coulter, Craig, Crane, Crawford, Creighton, Daniel, J. Davis, Dearborn, Denny, Dewart, The value of the monopoly in this case may be hoddridge, Drayton, Ellsworth, G. Evans, J. correctly ascertained. The twenty-eight millions Evans, E. Everett, H. Everett, Ford, Gilmore, of stock would probably be at an advance of Grennell, Hodges, Heister, Horn, Hughes, Hunt- fifty per cent., and command, in market, at least ington, Ihrie, Ingersoll, Irvin, Isacks, Jenifer, Kendall, H. King, Kerr, Letcher, Mann, Marshall, ment of the present loans. The present value Maxwell, McCoy, McDuffie, McKennan, Mercer, of the monopoly, therefore, is seventeen millions Miligan, Newton, Pearce, Pendleton, Pitcher, of dollars, and this the act proposes to sell for three millions, payable in fifteen annual instal-

Southard, Spence, Stanberry, Stephens, Stewart, Storrs, Sutherland, Taylor, P. Thomas, Tompkins, Tracy, Vance, Verplanck, Vinton, Washing-of the government. The present corporation ton Watmough, E. Whittlesey, F. Whittlesey, has enjoyed its monopoly during the period stipulated in the original contract. If we must NAYS. - Messrs. Adair, Alexander, Anderson, have such a corporation, why should not the government sell out the whole stock, and thus thune, James Blair, John Blair, Bouck, Bouldin, secure to the people the full market value of Branch, Cambreleng, Carr, Chandler, Chinn, the privileges granted? Why should not Con-Claiborne, Clay, Clayton, Coke, Conner, W. R. gress create and sell the twenty-eight millions Davis, Dayan, Doubleday, Felder, Fitzgerald, of stock, incorporating the purchasers with all Foster, Gaither, Gordon, Griffin, T. H. Hall, W. the powers and privileges secured in this act, and putting the premium upon the sales into the

"But this act does not permit competition in King Lamar, Leavitt, Lecompte, Lewis, Lyon, the purchase of this monopoly. It seems to be Marlis, Mason, McCarty, McIntire, McKay, predicated on the erroneous idea that the present Mitchell, Newnan, Nuckolls, Patton, Pierson, stockholders have a prescriptive right, not only Polk E. C. Reed, Rencher, Roane, Soule, Speight, to the favor, but to the bounty of the government. It appears that more than a fourth part ward. Wardwell, Wayne, Weeks, Wheeler, of the stock is held by foreigners, and the residue is held by a few hundred of our citizens, chiefly of the richest class. For their benefit does this act exclude the whole American people from competition in the purchase of this monopoly, and dispose of it for many millions less than it is worth. This seems the less excusable, because some of our citizens, not now stockholders, petitioned that the door of competition might be opened, and offered to take a charter on terms much more favorable to the government and country.

" But this proposition, although made by men the renewal of the bank charter, was presented whose aggregate wealth is believed to be equal to all the private stock in the existing bank, has been set aside, and the bounty of our governreturned by him to the House in which it oriment is proposed to be again bestowed on the ginated, on the 10th, with his objections. His few who have been fortunate enough to secure first objection was to the exclusive privileges the stock, and at this moment yield the power wheat granted to corporators who had already of the existing institution. I cannot perceive the justice or policy of this course. If our government must sell monopolies, it would seem and the inadequacy of the sum to be paid for to be its duty to take nothing less than their full value; and if gratuities must be made once in fifteen or twenty years, let them not be "Every monopoly, and all exclusive privileges, bestowed on the subjects of a foreign governare granted at the expense of the public, which ment, nor upon a designated or favored class of ought to receive a fair equivalent. The many men in our own country. It is but justice and nullions which this act proposes to bestow on good policy, as far as the nature of the case will the stockholders of the existing bank, must come admit, to confine our favors to our own fellowdirectly or indirectly out of the earnings of the citizens, and let each in his turn enjoy an oppor tunity to profit by our bounty. In the bearings of the act before me upon these points, I find ample reasons why it should not become a law.'

The President objected to the constitutionality of the bank, and argued against the force of precedents in this case, and against the applicability and the decision of the Supreme Court in 1ts favor. That decision was in the case of the Maryland branch, and sustained it upon an argument which carries error, in point of fact, upon its face. The ground of the decision was, that the bank was "necessary" to the successful conducting of the "fiscal operations" of the government; and that Congress was the judge of that necessity. Upon this ground the Maryland branch, and every branch except the one in the District of Columbia, was without the constitutional warrant which the court required. Congress had given no judgment in favor of its necessity - but the contrary - a judgment against it: for after providing for the mother bank at Philadelphia, and one branch at Washington City, the establishment of all other branches was referred to the judgment of the bank itself, or to circumstances over which Congress had no control, as the request of a State legislature founded upon a subscription of 2000 shares within the State-with a dispensation in favor of substituting local banks in places where the Secretary of the Treasury, and the directors of the national bank should agree. All this was contained in the fourteenth fundamental article of the constitution of the corporation-which

"The directors of said corporation shall establish a competent office of discount and deposit in the District of Columbia, whenever any law of the United States shall require such an establishment: also one such office of discount and deposit in any State in which two thousand shares shall have been subscribed or may be held, whenever, upon application of the legislature of such State, Congress may, by law, require the same: Provided, the directors aforesaid shall not be bound to establish such office before the whole of the capital of the bank shall be paid up. And it shall be lawful for the directors of the corporation to establish offices of discount and deposit where they think fit, within the United States or the territories thereof, and to commit the management of the said, and the business thereof, respectively to such persons, and under such regulations, as they shall deem proper, not being contrary to the laws or the constitution of the bank. Or, instead of establishing such offices, It shall be lawful for the directors of the said | cedent, and by the decision of the Suprema corporation, from time to time, to employ any other bank or banks, to be first approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, at any place or places that they may deem safe and proper, to manage and transact the business proposed aforesaid other than for the purposes of discount; to be managed and transacted by such offices, under such agreements, and subject to such regulations as they shall deem just and proper."

These are the words of the fourteenth fundamental article of the constitution of the bank, and the conduct of the corporation in establishing its branches was in accordance with this article. They placed them where they pleased-at first governed wholly by the question of profit and loss to itself-afterwards, and when it was seen that the renewed charter was to be resisted by the members from some States, governed by the political consideration of creating an interest to defeat the election, or control the action of the dissenting members. Thus it was in my own case. A branch in St. Louis was refused to the application of the business community-established afterwards to govern me. And thus, it is seen the Supreme Court was in error—that the judgment of Congress in favor of the "necessity" of branches only extended to one in the District of Columbia; and as for the bank itself, the argument in its favor and upon which the Supreme Court made its decision, was an argument which made the constitutionality of a measure dependent not upon the words of the constitution, but upon the opinion of Congress for the time being upon the question of the "necessity" of a particular measure—a question subject to receive different decisions from Congress at different timeswhich actually received different decisions in 1791, 1811, and 1816: and, we may now add the decision of experience since 1836-during which term we have had no national bank: and the fiscal business of the government as well as the commercial and trading business of the country, has been carried on with a degree of success never equalled in the time of the existence of the national bank. I, therefore, believe that the President was well warranted in challenging both the validity of the decision of the Supreme Court, and the obligatory force of precedents: which he did, as follows:

"It is maintained by the advocates of the bank, that its constitutionality, in all its features, ought to be considered as settled by pre-

Court. To this conclu Mere precedence is a d thority, and should not h questions of constitution the acquiescence of the can be considered as well this being the case on thi against the bank might l One Congress, in 1791. bank; another, in 1811. d Congress, in 1815, decide other, in 1816, decided in the present Congress, the drawn from that source v ort to the States, the exindicial, and executive opi have been, probably, to th to one. There is nothin fore, which, if its authorit to weigh in favor of the a

"If the opinion of the S the whole ground of this control the co-ordinate au ernment. The Congress, court, must each for itself opinion of the constitution who takes an oath to sup swears that he will support it and not as it is underst as much the duty of the tives, of the Senate, and decide upon the constituti resolution which may be p passage or approval, as i ndges, when it may be for judicial decision. The has no more authority ove opinion of Congress has c on that point the Preside both. The authority of the not, therefore, be permitted gress, or the Executive, w legislative capacities, but t fluence as the force of the

"But in the case relie Court have not decided that this corporation are compa tution. It is true that the the law incorporating the 1 al exercise of power by Co into view the whole opini the reasoning by which the onclusion, I understand th that inasmuch as a bank means for carrying into et powers of the general gove law incorporating it is in a provision of the constitutio Congress shall have power which shall be necessary an those powers into executio themselves that the word constitution, means 'needfu tial,' 'conducive to,' and th e, to employ any t approved by the ny place or places proper, to manage oposed aforesaid f discount; to be uch offices, under such regulations oper."

fourteenth fundan of the bank, and in establishing its with this article. pleased-at first tion of profit and when it was seen to be resisted by s, governed by the ing an interest to the action of the was in my own was refused to the nunity-establish-And thus, it is seen or-that the judghe "necessity" of e in the District of itself, the argument he Supreme Court iment which made sure dependent not titution, but upon ie time being upon y" of a particular to receive different different timeserent decisions in we may now add ince 1836-during no national bank; he government, as trading business of on with a degree of time of the exist-I, therefore, believe warranted in chalthe decision of the e advocates of the lity, in all its fea-I as settled by pren of the Suprema ratory force of pre-

Court. To this conclusion I cannot assent. Mere precedence is a dangerous source of authority, and should not be regarded as deciding questions of constitutional power, except where the acquiescence of the people and the States can be considered as well settled. So far from this being the case on this subject, an argument against the bank might be based on precedent. One Congress, in 1791, decided in favor of a bank; another, in 1811, decided against it. One Congress, in 1815, decided against a bank; another, in 1816, decided in its favor. Prior to the present Congress, therefore, the precedents drawn from that source were equal. If we reort to the States, the expressions of legislative, judicial, and executive opinions against the bank have been, probably, to those in its favor, as four to one. There is nothing in precedent, therefore, which, if its authority were admitted, ought to weigh in favor of the act before me.

"If the opinion of the Supreme Court covered the whole ground of this act, it ought not to control the co-ordinate authorities of this government. The Congress, the Executive, and the court, must each for itself be guided by its own opinion of the constitution. Each public officer who takes an oath to support the constitution, swears that he will support it as he understands it and not as it is understood by others. It is as much the duty of the House of Representatives of the Senate, and of the President, to decide upon the constitutionality of any bill or resolution which may be presented to them for passage or approval, as it is of the supreme judges, when it may be brought before them for judicial decision. The opinion of the judges has no more authority over Congress than the opinion of Congress has over the judges; and on that point the President is independent of beth. The authority of the Supreme Court must not therefore, be permitted to control the Congress, or the Executive, when acting in their legislative capacities, but to have only such infrence as the force of their reasoning may de-

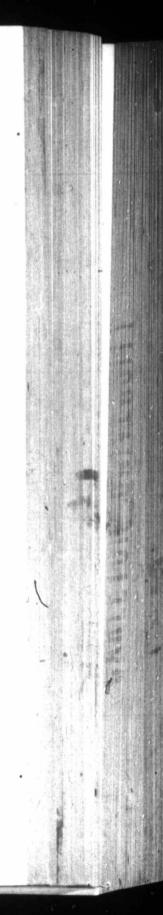

"But in the case relied upon, the Supreme Court have not decided that all the features of this corporation are compatible with the constipation. It is true that the court have said that the law incorporating the bank is a constitutional exercise of power by Congress. But taking iato view the whole opinion of the court, and the reasoning by which they have come to that conclusion, I understand them to have decided that inasmuch as a bank is an appropriate means for carrying into effect the enumerated powers of the general government, therefore the law incorporating it is in accordance with that provision of the constitution which declares that Congress shall have power 'to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying those powers into execution.' Having satisfied themselves that the word 'necessary,' in the constitution, means 'needful,' 'requisite,' 'essenvenient, a useful, and essential instrument in the prosecution of the government's 'fiscal operations,' they conclude that to 'use one must be within the discretion of Congress; and that the act to incorporate the Bank of the United States, is a law made in pursuance of the constitution.' 'But,' say they, 'where the law is not prohibited, and is really calculated to effect any of the objects intrusted to the government, to undertake here to inquire into the degree of its necessity, would be to pass the line which circumscribes the judicial department, and to tread on legislative ground.' "The principle, here affirmed, is, that the 'degree of its necessity,' involving all the details of a banking institution, is a question exclusively for legislative consideration. A bank is constitutional; but it is the province of the legislature to determine whether this or that particular power, privilege, or exemption, is 'necessary and proper' to enable the bank to discharge its duties to the government; and from their decision there is no appeal to the courts of justice. Under the decision of the Supreme Court, therefore, it is the exclusive province of Congress and the President to decide whether the particular features of this act are 'necessary and proper,' in order to enable the bank to perform, conveniently and efficiently, the public duties assigned to it as a fiscal agent, and therefore constitutional; or unnecessary and improper, and therefore unconstitutional."

With regard to the misconduct of the institution, both in conducting its business and in resisting investigation, the message spoke the general sentiment of the disinterested country when

"Suspicions are entertained, and charges are made, of gross abuses and violations of its charter. An investigation unwillingly conceded, and so restricted in time as necessarily to make it incomplete and unsatisfactory, discloses enough to excite suspicion and alarm. In the practices of the principal bank, partially unveiled in the absence of important witnesses, and in numerous charges confidently made, and as yet wholly uninvestigated, there was enough to induce a majority of the committee of investigation, a committee which was selected from the most able and honorable members of the House of Representatives, to recommend a suspension of further action upon the bill, and a prosecution of the inquiry. As the charter had yet four years to run, and as a renewal now was not necessary to the successful prosecution of its business, it was to have been expected that the bank itself, conscious of its purity, and proud of its character, would have withdrawn its application for the present, and demanded the severest scrutiny into all its transactions. In their declining to do so, there seems to be an additional reason tial,' conducive to,' and that 'a bank' is a con- why the functionaries of the government should proceed with less haste, and more caution, in the renewal of their monopoly."

The appearance of the veto message was the signal for the delivery of the great speeches of the advocates of the bank. Thus far they had held back, refraining from general debate, and limiting themselves to brief answers to current objections. Now they came forth in all their strength, in speeches elaborate and studied, and covering the whole ground of constitutionality and expediency; and delivered with unusual warmth and vehemence. Mr. Webster, Mr. Clay, Mr. Clayton of Delaware, and Mr. Ewing of Ohio, thus entered the lists for the bank. And why these speeches, at this time, when it was certain that speaking would have no effect in overcoming the veto—that the constitutional majority of two thirds of each House to carry it, so far from being attainable, would but little exceed a bare majority? The reason was told by the speakers themselves-fully told, as an ately before the election, the directors apply for appeal to the people—as a transfer of the question to the political arena—to the election fields. and especially to the presidential election, then his judgment, or of encountering all their hosimpending, and within four months of its consummation-and a refusal on the part of the corporation to submit to the decision of the constituted authorities. This was plainly told by Mr. Webster in the opening of his argument; frightful distress was predicted: and the change of the chief magistrate was presented as the only means of averting an immense calamity on one hand, or of securing an immense benefit on the other. He said:

"It is now certain that, without a change in our public councils, this bank will not be continued, nor will any other be established, which, according to the general sense and language of mankind, can be entitled to the name. In three years and nine months from the present moment, the charter of the bank expires; within that period, therefore, it must wind up its concerns. It must call in its debts, withdraw its bills from circulation, and cease from all its ordinary operations. All this is to be done in three years and nine months; because, although there is a provision in the charter rendering it lawful to use the corporate name for two years after the expiration of the charter, yet this is allowed only for the purpose of suits, and for the sale of the estate belonging to the bank, and upon by all the speakers, and the alarming picfor no other purpose whatever. The whole active business of the bank, its custody of public deposits, its transfers of public moneys, its dealing in exchange, all its loans and discounts, All thinking men must now admit that, as the and all its issues of bills for circulation, must present bank must close its concerns in less than cease and determine on or before the 3d day of March, 1836; and, within the same period, its debts must be collected, as no new contract can be made with it, as a corporation, for the renewal of loans, or discount of notes or bills after that time.

Mr. Senator White of Tennessee, seizing upon this open entrance into the political arena by the bank, thanked Mr. Webster for his candor. and summoned the people to the combat of the great moneyed power, now openly at the head of a great political party, and carrying the fortunes of that party in the question of its own continued existence. He said:

"I thank the senator for the candid avowal that unless the President will sign such a char ter as will suit the directors, they intend to interfere in the election, and endeavor to displace him. With the same candor I state that, after this declaration, this charter shall never be renewed with my consent.

"Let us look at this matter as it is. Immedi a charter, which they think the President at any other time will not sign, for the express ourpose of compelling him to sign contrary to tility in the canvass, and at the polls. Suppose this attempt to have succeeded, and the President. through fear of his election, had signed this charter, although he conscientiously believes it will be destructive of the liberty of the people who have elected him to preside over them, and preerve their liberties, so far as in his power. What next? Why, whenever the charter is likely to expire hereafter, they will come, as they do now, on the eve of the election, and compel the chief magistrate to sign such a charter as they may dictate, on pain of being turned out and disgraced. Would it not be far better to gratify this moneyed aristocracy, to the whole extent at once, and renew their charter for ever? The temptation to a periodical interference in our elections would then be taken away.

"Sir, if, under these cirumstances, the charter is renewed, the elective franchise is destroyed and the liberties and prosperity of the people are delivered over to this moneyed institution to be disposed of at their discretion. Against this I enter my solemn protest."

The distress to be brought upon the country by the sudden winding up of the bank, the sudden calling in of all its debts, the sudden withdrawal of all its capital, was pathetically dwelt ture thus presented by Mr. Clayton:

"I ask, what is to be done for the country?

four years, the pecuniary cial embarrassments, cons struction, must exceed any been known in our histor bank can be established and a half millions of the ing to foreigners, must b Europe. Seven millions of paid to the government, no but to remain, as the Pro posited in a branch of the ssues of the local banks. able resourses of the presen as appears by the repo $82,057,483, are to be longer, and nearly fifty n notes discounted, on person must be paid to the bank must pay over all their del stitution, and curtail their or resort, for the relief of old plan of emitting more up by speculators at a heav

This was an alarming pie especially as the corporation to create the distress which summation frightfully reali -but a picture equally un itous. Two years was the after the expiration of its c poration had accepted in its up its business; and there to run before these two year The section 21, of the char contingency thus:

"And notwithstanding tl term for which the said co a shall be lawful to use the and capacity, for the purpe final settlement and liquid and accounts of the corpora and disposition of their esta mixed: but not for any oth other manner whatever, nor f two years after the expirat incorporation.'

Besides the two years giv after the expiration of its ch ly well known, and has sir own case, and was done b bank, and may be by any e that the directors may appo up their concerns; and who to any limited time. The f that which was created in 1 isll-had no two years, or wlowed for winding up its aff ore the 3d day of same period, its new contract can ation, for the reof notes or bills, ssee, seizing upon olitical arena by er for his candor, he combat of the enly at the head carrying the forestion of its own

he candid avowal sign such a char they intend to ineavor to displace I state that, after shall never be re-

as it is. Immedi lirectors apply for the President at , for the express sign contrary to ng all their hose polls. Suppose and the President, I signed this charly believes it will f the people who er them, and preas in his power. er the charter is ney will come, as the election, and sign such a charter f being turned out be far better to icv, to the whole charter for ever? eal interference in ken away.

tances, the charter e is destroyed and of the people are linstitution, to be 1. Against this I upon the country he bank, the sudthe sudden withpathetically dwelt the alarming piclayton:

for the country? admit that, as the ncerns in less than four years, the pecuniary distress, the commerrial embarrassments, consequent upon its destruction, must exceed any thing which has ever been known in our history, unless some other bank can be established to relieve us. Eight and a half millions of the bank capital, belonging to foreigners, must be drawn from us to Europe. Seven millions of the capital must be paid to the government, not to be loaned again, but to remain, as the President proposes, deposited in a branch of the treasury, to check the sues of the local banks. The immense available resourses of the present institution, amounting as appears by the report in the other House, $ $82,057,483, are to be used for banking no longer, and nearly fifty millions of dollars in notes discounted, on personal and other security. must be paid to the bank. The State banks must pay over all their debts to the expiring institution, and curtail their discounts to do so. or resort, for the relief of their debtors, to the old plan of emitting more paper, to be bought been wicked if executed. up by speculators at a heavy discount."

This was an alarming picture to present, and especially as the corporation had it in its power to create the distress which it foretold-a consummation frightfully realized three years later -but a picture equally unjustifiable and gratuitous. Two years was the extent of the time, after the expiration of its charter, that the corporation had accepted in its charter for winding up its business; and there were now four years to run before these two years would commence. The section 21, of the charter, provided for the contingency thus:

And notwithstanding the expiration of the term for which the said corporation is created, a shall be lawful to use the coporate name, style and capacity, for the purpose of suits for the final settlement and liquidation of the affairs and accounts of the corporation, and for the sale and disposition of their estate real, personal and mixed: but not for any other purpose, or in any ther manner whatever, nor for a period exceeding two years after the expiration of said term of incorporation."

Besides the two years given to the institution after the expiration of its charter, it was perfectly well known, and has since been done in its own case, and was done by the first national bank, and may be by any expiring corporation, up their concerns; and who will not be subject

tion of its charter—and the question of the renewal was not decided until within the last days of the existence of its charter-yet there was no distress, and no pressure upon its debtors. A trust was created; and the collection of debts conducted so gently that it is not yet finished. The trustees are still at work: and within this year, and while this application for a renewed charter to the second bank is going on, they announce a dividend of some cents on the share out of the last annual collections; and intimate no time within which they will finish; so that this menace of distress from the second bank, if denied a renewal four years before the expiration of its charter, and four years before the commencement of the two years to which it is entitled, was entirely gratuitous, and would have

Mr. Clay concluded the debate on the side of the bank application, and spoke with great ardor and vehemence, and with much latitude of style and topic-though as a rival candidate for the Presidency, it was considered by some, that a greater degree of reserve might have been commendable. The veto, and its imputed undue exercise, was the theme of his vehement declamation. Besides discrediting its use, and denouncing it as of monarchial origin, he alluded to the popular odium brought upon Louis the 16th by its exercise, and the nickname which it caused to be fastened upon him. He said:

"The veto is hardly reconcilable with the genius of representative government. It is to tally irreconcilable with it, if it is to be frequently employed in respect to the expediency of measures, as well as their constitutionality. It is a feature of our government borrowed from a prerogative of the British King. And it is remarkable that in England it has grown obsolete, not having been used for upwards of a century. At the commencement of the French Revolution, in discussing the principles of their constitution, in the national convention, the veto held a conspicuous figure. The gay, laughing population of Paris bestowed on the King the appellation of Monsieur Veto, and on the Queen that of Madame

Mr. Benton saw the advantage which this dethat the directors may appoint trustees to wind | nunciation and allusion presented, and made relentless use of it. He first vindicated the use to any limited time. The first national bank- and origin of the veto, as derived from the instithat which was created in 1791, and expired in tution of the tribunes of the people among the istl-had no two years, or any time whatever, Romans, and its exercise always intended for the wlowed for winding up its affairs after the expira- | benefit of the people; and, under our constitution, its only effect to refer a measure to the people, for their consideration, and to stay its execution until the people could pass upon it, and to adopt or reject it at an ensuing Congress. It was a power eminently just and proper in a representative government, and intended for the benefit of the whole people; and, therefore, placed in the hands of the magistrate elected by the whole. On the allusion to the nickname on the King and Queen of France, he said:

"He not only recollected the historical incident to which the senator from Kentucky had alluded but also the character of the decrees to which the unfortunate Louis the 16th had affixed his vetoes. One was the decree against the emigrants, dooming to death and confiscation of estate every man, woman, and child who should attempt to save their lives by flying from the pike, the guillotine, and the lamp-post. The other was a decree exposing to death the ministers of religion who could not take an oath which their consciences repulsed. To save tottering age, trembling mothers, and affrighted children from massacre—to save the temples and altars of God from being stained by the blood of his ministers-were the sacred objects of those vetoes; and was there any thing to justify a light or reproachful allusion to them in the American Senate? The King put his constitutional vetoes to these decrees; and the canaille of Saint Antoine and Marceau-not the gay and laughing Parisians, but the bloody canaille, instigated by leaders more ferocious than themselves-began to salute the King as Monsieur Veto, and demand his head for the guillotine. And the Queen, when seen at the windows of her prison, her locks pale with premature white, the effect of an agonized mind at the ruin she witnessed, the poissardes saluted her also as Madame Veto; and the Dauphin came in for the epithet of the Little Veto. All this was terrible in France, and in the disorders of a revolution #but why revive their remembrance in this Congress, successor to those which were accustomed to call this king our great ally? and to compliment him on the birth of that child, stigmatized le petit veto, and perishing prematurely under the inhumanities of the convention inflicted by the hand of Simon, the jailer? The two elder vetoes. Monsieur and Madame, came to the guillotine in Paris, and the young one to a death, compared to which the guillotine was mercy. And now, why this allusion? what application of its moral? Surely it is not pointless; not devoid of meaning and practical application. We have no bloody guillotines here, but we have political ones sharp axes falling from high, and cutting off political heads! Is the service of that axe invoked here upon 'General Andrew Veto?' If so, and the invocation should be successful, then Andrew Jackson, like Louis 16th, will cease to be in any body's way in their march to power."

Mr. Clay also introduced a fable, not taken from Æsop—that of the cat and the eagle—the moral of which was attempted to be turned against him. It was in allusion to the President's message in relation to the bank, and the conduct of his friends since in "attacking" the institution; and said:

"They have done so; and their condition now reminds me of the fable invented by Dr. Franklin, of the Eagle and the Cat, to demonstrate that Æsop had not exhausted invention, in the construction of his memorable fables. The eagle, you know, Mr. President, pounced, from his lofty flight in the air, upon a cat, taking it to be a pig. Having borne off his prize, he quickly felt most painfully the claws of the cat thrust deeply into his sides and body. Whilst flying, he held a parley with the supposed pig. and proposed to let go his hold, if the other would let him alone. No, says puss, you brought me from yonder earth below, and I will hold fast to you until you carry me back; a condition to which the eagle readily assented."

Mr. Benton gave a poetical commencement to this fable; and said:

"An eagle towering in his pride of beight was-not by a mousing owl, but by a pig under a jimpson weed-not hawked and killed but caught and whipt. The opening he thought grand; the conclusion rather bathotic. The mistake of the sharp-eyed bird of Jove he thought might be attributed to old are donming the sight, and to his neglect of his speciacles that morning. He was rather surprised at the whim of the cat in not choosing to fall, seeing that a cat (unlike a politician sometimes) always falls on its legs; but concluded it was a piece of pride in puss, and a wish to assimiste itself still closer to an aeronaut; and having cone up pendant to a balloon, it would come down artistically, with a parachute spread over it head. It was a pretty fable, and well told; be the moral—the application? . Esop always he a moral to his fable; and Dr. Franklin, his in puted continuator in this particular, these not yet the rival of his master in fabulous rem tation, yet had a large sprinkling of practical sensel and never wrote or spoke without point and an application. And now, what the point here? And the senator from K tucky has not left that to be inferred; he la told it himself. General Jackson is the cas' the bank is the cat; the parley is the proper tion of the bank to the President to sign! charter, and it will support him for the predency-if not, will keep his claws stuck mass sides. But, Jackson, different from the engine with his cat, will have no compromise, or largain with the bank. One or the other shall fall! and be dashed into atoms!

"Having disposed of these preliminary topics

Mr. B. came to the matte on the bank, which had on side of the friends of that return of the veto messa bank question now, he ex hate it before? Then w converts; now, none can are lips unsealed now, wh grave when this act was o the Senate? The senator self at the end of one of tions, declared that he e converts. Then, why spe. other gentlemen speak a this post facto-post mor -debate?-The deed is is finished. Speaking can of senators, and make ther still less can it change the him recall his veto. Th whom do they speak? they speak? Sir! exclain facto debate is not for the ident, nor to alter the fate of to rouse the officers of the l forts of its mercenaries in people-to bring out its stre ence, by inspiring hope, and cruits at the polls to vote as son. Without an avowal this: but we have not arowal. The senator from Webster), who opened y his speech with showing th put down; that he stood a rier between the bank an that the road to success wa boxes at the presidential e of this debate is then know avowed; the bank is in t the war; a battering ram of the Romans, but of the ? not to beat down the walls to beat down the citadel to batter down the rights of , stroy a hero and patriot; t tions, and to elect a Bank bank power. "The bank is in the field batant, and a fearful and tr presidential election. If s an end of American liberty public. The forms of electi for a while, as the forms of tions were permitted in R years of the republic; but only. The President of the ident of the United States, cousins in the royal sense will elect each other. The cessors; they will transmit descendants, and that by tion. The great Napoleon hereditary emperor by virt of the constitution of the fable, not taken and the eagle—the ted to be turned sion to the Presithe bank, and the n "attacking" the heir condition now ted by Dr. Frankit, to demonstrate I invention, in the le fables. The eapounced, from his a cat, taking it to nis prize, he quickvs of the cat thrust y. Whilst flying. supposed pig. and f the other would s, you brought me nd I will hold fast ick; a condition to commencement to

Vol. I.—17

is pride of beight but by a pig under ed and killed, but pening he thought ier bathotic. The bird of Jove he ed to old age dimeglect of his speciarather surprised at hoosing to fall, seeitician sometimes). concluded it was a a wish to assimilate ut; and having cose would come down te spread over its and well told; let Lesop always had or. Franklin, his ma particular, thesele er in fabulous repar spoke without a And now, what senator from a be inferred; le rlev is the proresident to sim him for the pres claws stuck mass ent from the cage compromise, or laror the other shall ms!

e preliminary topics

Mr. B. came to the matter in hand—the debate on the bank, which had only commenced on the side of the friends of that institution since the return of the veto message. Why debate the bank question now, he exclaimed, and not debate it before? Then was the time to make converts; now, none can be expected. Why are lips unsealed now, which were silent as the grave when this act was on its passage through the Senate? The senator from Kentucky himwif at the end of one of his numerous peroraother gentlemen speak a whole day? Why this post facto-post morten-this posthumous of senators, and make them reverse their votes; they speak? Sir! exclaimed Mr. B., this post facto debate is not for the Senate, nor the President, nor to alter the fate of the bank bill. It is to rouse the officers of the bank—to direct the efforts of its mercenaries in their designs upon the people-to bring out its stream of corrupting influence, by inspiring hope, and to embody all its recruits at the polls to vote against President Jackson. Without an avowal we would all know this; but we have not been left without an arowal. The senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Webster), who opened yesterday, commenced put down; that he stood as an impassable barher between the bank and a new charter; and to batter down the rights of the people; to destroy a hero and patriot; to command the elections, and to elect a Bank President by dint of "The bank is in the field (said Mr. B.), a combatant, and a fearful and tremendous one, in the presidential election. If she succeeds, there is for a while, as the forms of the consular elections were permitted in Rome, during the last only. The President of the bank, and the Pres-

Vol. I.—17

servative Senate and the Tribunitial Assembly made him emperor by construction; and the same construction which was put upon the 22d article of the French constitution of the year VIII. may be as easily placed upon the 'general welfare' clause in the constitution of these United States.

"The Bank is in the field, and the West,the Great West, is the selected theatre of her operations. There her terrors, her seductions. her energies, her rewards and her punishments, tions, declared that he expected to make no are to be directed. The senator from Massaonverts. Then, why speak three hours? and chusetts opened yesterday with a picture of the ruin in the West, if the bank were not rechartered; and the senator from Kentucky, Mr. debate?—The deed is done. The bank bill Clay, wound up with a retouch of the same picis finished. Speaking cannot change the minds ture to day, with a closeness of coincidence which showed that this part of the battle still less can it change the President, and make ground had been reviewed in company by the him recall his veto. Then why speak? To associate generals and duplicate senators. Both whom do they speak? With what object do agree that the West is to be ruined if the bank be not rechartered; and rechartered it cannot be, unless the reto President is himself retoed. This is certainly candid. But the gentlemen's candor did not stop there. They went on to show the modus operandi; to show how the ruin would be worked, how the country would be devastated,-if Jackson was not put down, and the bank rechartered. The way was this: The West owes thirty millions of dollars to the bank; the bank will sue every debtor within two years after its charter expires; there will be no money in the country to pay the judgments, all property his speech with showing that Jackson must be will be sold at auction; the price of all property will fall; even the growing crops, quite up to Boon's Lick, will sink in value and lose half their that the road to success was through the ballot price! This is the picture of ruin now, drawn by boxes at the presidential election. The object the senator from Massachusetts; these the words of this debate is then known, confessed, declared, of a voice now pleading the cause of the West arowed; the bank is in the field; enlisted for against Jackson, the sound of which voice never the war; a battering ram—the catapulta, not happened to be heard in favor of the West during of the Romans, but of the National Republicans; the late war, when her sons were bleeding under not to beat down the walls of hostile cities, but the British and the Indians, and Jackson was peto beat down the citadel of American liberty; rilling life and fortune to save and redeem her.

"This is to be the punishment of the West if she votes for Jackson; and by a plain and natural inference, she is to have her reward for putting him down and putting up another. Thirty millions is the bank debt in the West; and these thirty millions they threaten to collect by writs of execution if Jackson is re-elected; an end of American liberty—an end of the re- but if he be not elected, and somebody else be public. The forms of election may be permitted elected, then they promise no forced payments shall be exacted,—hardly any payment at all! The thirty millions it is pretended will almost years of the republic; but it will be for a while, be forgiven; and thus a bribe of thirty millions is deceitfully offered for the Western vote, ident of the United States, will be cousins, and with a threat of punishment, if it be not taken! cousins in the royal sense of the word. They But the West, and especially the State of Ohio, will elect each other. They will elect their suc- is aware that Mr. Clay does not use the bank cessors; they will transmit their thrones to their power, in extending charities-coercion is his descendants, and that by legislative construct mode of appeal-and when President Clay and tion. The great Napoleon was decreed to be President Biddle have obtained their double hereditary emperor by virtue of the 22d article sway, all these fair promises will be forgotten. of the constitution of the republic. The con- Mr. B. had read in the Roman history of the victorious generals, returning from Asiatic conquests, and loaded with oriental spoil, bidding in the market for the consulship, and purchasing their elections with the wealth of conquered kingdoms; but he had never expected to witness a bid for the presidency in this young and free republic. He thought he lived too early,too near the birth of the republic,-while every thing was vet too young and innocent,-to see the American presidency put up at auction. But he affirmed this to be the case now; and called upon every senator, and every auditor, who had heard the senator from Massachusetts the day before, or the senator from Kentucky on that day, to put any other construction, if they could, upon this seductive offer to the West, of indefinite accommodation for thirty millions of debt, if she would vote for one gentleman, and the threat of a merciless exaction of that debt, if she voted for another?

"Mr. B. demanded how the West came to be selected by these two senators as the theatre for the operation of all the terrors and seductions of the bank debt? Did no other part of the country owe money to the bank? Yes! certainly, fifteen millions in the South, and twenty-five millions north of the Potomac. Why then were not the North and the South included in the fancied fate of the West? Simply because the presidential election could not be affected by the bank debt in those quarters. The South was irrevocably fixed; and the terror, or seduction, of the payment, or non-payment, of her bank debt, would operate nothing there. The North owed but little, compared to its means of payment, and the presidential election would turn upon other points in that region. The bank debt was the argument for the West; and the bank and the orators had worked hand in hand, to produce, and to use, this argument. Mr. B. then affirmed, that the debt had been created for the very purpose to which it was now applied; an electioneering, political purpose; and this he proved by a reference to authentic documents.

" First: He took the total bank debt, as it existed when President Jackson first brought the bank charter before the view of Congress in December, 1829, and showed it to be $40,216,000; then he took the total debt as it stood at present, being $70,428,000; and thus showed an increase of thirty millions in the short space of two years and four months. This great increase had occurred since the President had delivered opinions against the bank, and when as a prudent, and law abiding institution, it ought to have been reducing and curtailing its business, or at all events, keeping it stationary. He then showed the annual progress of this increase, to demonstrate that the increase was faster and faster, as the charter drew nearer and nearer to its termination, and the question of its renewal pressed closer and closer upon the people. He showed that the increase the first year after the message of 1829 was four millions and a quarter; ha half; at every other branch, curtailments an empire being put up to sale; he had read of in the second year, which was last year, about nineteen millions, to wit, from $44,052,000, to $63,026 452; and the increase in the four first months of the present year was nearly five millions, being at the rate of about one million and a quarter a month since the bank had applied for a renewal of her charter! After having shown this enormous increase in the sum total of the debt, Mr. B. went on to show where it had taken place; and this he proved to be chiefly in the West, and not merely in the West, but principally in those parts of the West in which the presidential election was held to be most doubtful and critical.

"He began with the State of Louisiana, and showed that the increase there, since the delivery of the message of 1829, was $5,061,161; in Kentucky, that the increase was $3,009,838 that in Ohio, it was $2,079,207. Here was an increase of ten millions in three critical and doubtful States. And so on, in others. Having shown this enormous increase of debt in the West, Mr. B. went on to show, from the time and circumstances and subsequent events, that they were created for a political purpose, and had already been used by the bank with that view. He then recurred to the two-and-twenty circulars, or writs of execution, as he called them, issued against the South and West, in January and February last, ordering curtailments of all debts, and the supply of reinforcements to the Northeast. He showed that the reasons assigned by the bank for issuing the orders of curtailments were false; that she was not deprived of public deposits, as she asserted; for she then had twelve millions, and now has twelve millions of these deposits; that she was not in distress for money, as she asserted, for she was then increasing her loans in other quarters, at the rate of a million and a quartera month, and had actually increased them ten millions and a half from the date of the first order of curtailment, in October, 1831, to the end of May, 1832! Her reasons then assigned for curtailing at the Western branches, were false, infamously false, and were proved to be so. by her own returns. The true reasons were political: a foretaste and prelude to what is now threatened. It was a manœuvre to press the debtors-a turn of the screw upon the borrowers-to make them all cry out and join in the clamors and petitions for a renewed charter! This was the reason, this the object; and a most wanton and cruel sporting it was with the property and feelings of the unfortunate debtors The overflowing of the river at Louisville and Cincinnati, gave the bank an opportunity of showing its gracious condescension in the temporary and slight relaxation of her orders at those places; but there, and every where else in the West, the screw was turned far enough to make the screams of the victims reach their representatives in Congress. In Mobile, alone, half a million was curtailed out of a million and going on; and all this for pe e followed up by the electi that it is the effect of the ve the veto message and President up as the cause of these have been going on for half "Connected with the cre debt. was the establishmen branches, and the promise of gead of remaining stationar action of Congress, the bank ermined to spread and exte mly in debts, but in new br Natchez, St. Louis, were favo at the eleventh hour. Newhver done her; and, at one o at Itica), the Senate could j sity to the federal governmen it to be established, and which opinion of the Supreme Cou overturn the laws and consti the Senate could judge of th the fact that twenty-five dollar deposit to the credit of the U surer, and that, at the last r deposit was precisely two dolla This extension of branches an at the approaching termination was evidence of the determina to be rechartered at all haza: to create an interest to carr mite of the will of the people. mises for new branches, is and same kind. Thirty new branc in contemplation, and about t læs have been induced each t self was the favored spot of loca upon the condition, well under on should not be re-elected should elect a representative to

"Mr. B., having shown wh Western debt was created, exa the alleged necessity for its propollection, if the charter was 1 denied the existence of any s point of law. He affirmed that take as much time as she pleas debts, and could be just as debtors as she chose. All th ras to convert a few of her dir tes, as the old Bank of the U done, the affairs of which wer gently that the country did no ended. Mr. B. appealed to what mitted to be bank authority o was the opinion of the senator (Mr. Clay), not in his speech a the bank charter, in 1811, but is tat year against allowing it tim dars. The bank then asked to its affairs; a cry was raised th rould be ruined, if time was no the senator from Kentucky then my, by referring the bank to it s last year, about n $44,052,000, to e in the four first as nearly five milat one million and bank had applied r! After having e in the sum total to show where it he proved to be erely in the West, s of the West in on was held to be of Louisiana, and e, since the delivery is $5,061,161; in was $3,009,838 207. Here was an three critical and in others. Having ise of debt in the ow, from the time quent events, that itical purpose, and he bank with that he two-and-twenty tion, as he called outh and West, in dering curtailments f reinforcements to that the reasons ning the orders of t she was not deshe asserted; for ons, and now has sits; that she was as she asserted, for oans in other quaron and a quarter a acreased them ten e date of the first tober, 1831, to fhe sons then assigned rn branches, were ere proved to be so, true reasons were lude to what is now euvre to press the v upon the borrowout and join in the renewed charter! object; and a most was with the pronfortunate debtors er at Louisville and an opportunity of cension in the tem n of her orders at every where else is rned far enough to tims reach their re

In Mobile, alone, out of a million and

h, curtailments are

roing on; and all this for political effect, and to of followed up by the electioneering fabrication that it is the effect of the veto message. Yes! the veto message and President, are to be held un as the cause of these curtailments, which have been going on for half a year past!

"Connected with the creation of this new whit was the establishment of several new branches, and the promise of many more. Intead of remaining stationary, and awaiting the wion of Congress, the bank showed itself deremined to spread and extend its business, not mly in debts, but in new branches. Nashville. Vatchez, St. Louis, were favored with branches the eleventh hour. New-York had the same have done her; and, at one of these (the branch st Uica), the Senate could judge of the necessty to the federal government which occasioned it to be established, and which necessity, in the verturn the laws and constitution of a State: he Senate could judge of this necessity, from the fact that twenty-five dollars is rather a large posit to the credit of the United States Treagner and that, at the last returns, the federal boosit was precisely two dollars and fifty cents! This extension of branches and increase of debt. at the approaching termination of the charter, was evidence of the determination of the bank to be rechartered at all hazards. It was done spite of the will of the people. Numerous promises for new branches, is another trick of the lares have been induced each to believe that itm should not be re-elected, and that they should elect a representative to vote for the re-

Western debt was created, examined next into try the alleged necessity for its prompt and rigorous melection, if the charter was not renewed; he denied the existence of any such necessity in point of law. He affirmed that the bank could betors as she chose. All that she had to do msto convert a few of her directors into trustes as the old Bank of the United States had done the affairs of which were wound up so ently that the country did not know when it mided. Mr. B. appealed to what would be admitted to be bank authority on this point: it (Mr. Clay), not in his speech against renewing the bank charter, in 1811, but in his report of that year against allowing it time to wind up its plairs. The bank then asked time to wind up right to constitute trustees to wind up its affairs. The Congress acted upon the suggestion by refusing the time; the bank acted upon the suggestion by appointing trustees; the debtors hushed their cries, and the public never heard of the subject afterwards. The pretext of an unrenewed charter is not necessary to stimulate the bank to the pressure of Western debtors. Look at Cincinnati! what but a determination to make its power felt and feared occasioned the pressure at that place? And will that disposition ever be wanting to such an institution as that of the Bank of the United States?

"The senator from Kentucky has changed his opinion about the constitutionality of the bank; but has he changed it about the legality of the trust? If he has not, he must surrender his alarms for the ruin of the West; if he has, the law itself is unchanged. The bank may act nominon of the Supreme Court, is sufficient to under it; and if she does not, it is because she will not; and because she chooses to punish the West for refusing to support her candidate for the presidency. What then becomes of all this cry about ruined fortunes, fallen prices, and the loss of growing crops? All imagination or cruel tyranny! The bank debt of the West is thirty millions. She has six years to pay it in; and, at all events, he that cannot pay in six years, can hardly do it at all. Ten millions are in bills of exchange; and, if they are real bills, they will to create an interest to carry her through, in be payable at maturity, in ninety or one hundred and twenty days; if not real bills, but disguised loans, drawing interest as a debt, and premium sme kind. Thirty new branches are said to be as a bill of exchange, they are usurious and void, in contemplation, and about three hundred vil- and may be vacated in any upright court.

"But, the great point for the West to fix its of was the favored spot of location; but, always attention upon is the fact that, once in every ten you the condition, well understood, that Jack- years, the capital of this debt is paid in annual interest; and that, after paying the capital many times over in interest, the principal will have to be paid at last. The sooner, then, the capital is Mr. B. having shown when and why this | paid and interest stopped, the better for the coun-

Mr. Clay and Mr. Webster had dilated largely upon the withdrawal of bank capital from the West. Mr. B. showed, from the bank documents, that they had sent but 938,000 doltake as much time as she pleased to collect her lars of capital there; that the operation was the ibls, and could be just as gentle with her other way, a ruinous drain of capital, and that in hard money, from the West. He went over the tables which showed the annual amount of these drains, and demonstrated its ruinous nature upon the South and West. He showed the tendency of all branch bank paper to flow to the Northeast, the necessity to redeem it annually with gold and silver, and bills of exchange, and us the opinion of the senator from Kentucky | the inevitable result, that the West would eventually be left without either hard money, or branch bank paper.

"Mr. Clay had attributed all the disasters of the late war, especially the surrender of Detroit, affairs; a cry was raised that the country and the Bladensburg rout, to the want of this would be ruined, if time was not allowed; but bank. Mr. B. asked if bank credits, or bank he senator from Kentucky then answered that advances, could have inspired courage into the r, by referring the bank to its common law bosom of the unhappy old man who had been the cause of the surrender of Detroit? or, could have made those fight who could not be inspired by the view of their capitol, the presence of their President, and the near proximity of their families and firesides? Andrew Jackson conquered at New Orleans, without money, without arms, without credit—aye, without a bank. He got even his flints from the pirates. He scouted the idea of brave men being produced by the bank. If it had existed, it would have been a burthen upon the hands of the government. It was now, at this hour, a burthen upon the hands of the government, and an obstacle to the payment of the public debt. It had procured a payment of six millions of the public debt to be delayed, from July to October, under the pretext that the merchants could not pay their bonds, when these bonds were now paid, and twelve millions of dollars-twice the amount intended to have been paid—lies in the vaults of the bank to be used by her in beating down the veto message, the author of the message, and all who share his opinions. The bank was not only a burthen upon the hands of the government now, but had been a burthen upon it in three years after it startedwhen it would have stopped payment, as all America knows, in April 1819, had it not been for the use of eight millions of public deposits, and the seasonable arrival of wagons loaded with specie from Kentucky and Ohio.

"Mr. B. defended the old banks in Kentucky, Ohio, and Tennessee, from the aspersions which had been cast upon them. They had aided the government when the Northern bankers, who now scoff at them, refused to advance a dollar. They had advanced the money which enabled the warriors of the West to go forth to battle. They had crippled themselves to aid their government. After the war they resumed specie payments, which had been suspended with the consent of the legislatures, to enable them to extend all their means in aid of the national struggle. This resumption was made practicable by the Treasury deposit, in the State institutions. They were withdrawn to give capital to the branches of the great monopoly, when first extended to the West. These branches, then, produced again the draining of the local banks, which they had voluntarily suffered for the sake of government during the war. They had sacrificed their interests and credit to sustain the credit of the national treasury—and the treasury surrendered them, as a sacrifice to the national bank. They stopped payment under the pressure and extortion of the new establishments, introduced against the consent of the people and legislatures of the Western States. The paper of the Western banks depreciated—the stock of the States and of individual stockholders was sacrificed—the country was filled with a spurious currency, by the course of an institution which, it was pretended, was established to prevent such a calamity States was thus established on the ruins of the United States to depend upon foreigners in a banks, and foreigners and non-residents were fat- point so material to our existence? The bank tened on their spoils. They were stripped of their specie to pamper the imperial bank. They fell victims to their patriotism, and to the establishment of the United States bank; and it was unjust and unkind to reproach them with a fate which their patriotism, and the establishmen of the federal bank brought upon them.

"Mr. Clay and Mr. Webster had rebuked the President for his allusion to the manner in which the bank charter had been pushed through Congress, pending an unfinished investigation, reluctantly conceded. Mr. B. demanded if that was not true? He asked if it was not wrong to push the charter through in that manner, and if the President had not done right to stop it, to balk this hurried process, and to give the people time for consideration and enable them to act? He c had only brought the subject to the notice of the Congress and the people, but had not recommended immediate legislation, before the subject had been canvassed before the nation. It was a gross perversion of his messages to quote them in favor of immediate decision without previous investigation. He was not evading the question. The veto message proved that. He sought time for the people, not for himself, and in that he coincided with a sentiment lately expressed by the senator himself (from Kentucky) at Cincinnati; he was coinciding with the example of the British parliament, which had not yet decided the question of rechartering the Bank of England, and which had just raised an extraordinary committee of thirty-one members to examine the bank through all her departments; and, what was much more material, he had coincided with the spirit of our constitution, and the rights of the people, in preventing an expiring minority Congress from usurping the powers and rights of their successors. The President had not evaded the question. He had met it fully. He might have said nothing about it in his messages of 1829, '30, and '31. He might have remained silent, and had the support of both parties; but the safety and interest of the country required the people to be awakened to the consideration of the subject. He had waked them up; and now that they are awake, he has secured them time for consideration. Is this evasion?

"Messrs. C. and W. had attacked the President for objecting to foreign stockholders in the Bank of the United States. Mr. B. maintained the solidity of the objection, and exposed the futility of the argument urged by the duplicate senators. They had asked if foreigners did not hold stock in road and canal companies? Mr. B. said, ves. but these road and canal companies did not happen to be the bankers of the United States! The foreign stockholders in this bank were the bankers of the United States. They held its moneys; they collected its revenues; they almost controlled its finances; they were to give or withhold aid in war as well as peace, and, it might The Bank of the United be, against their own government. Was the

was a national institution. stitution to be the private It was called the Bank of t ought it to be the bank of try of Great Britain? Th tucky had once objected to himself. He did this in h bank in 1811; and althoug constitutional doctrines of B.] never understood that satiments then expressed of ruption in our councils and wielded the moneyed power told us then that the power of ed that of the sword-and w to the hands of foreigners history, said Mr. B., admoni foreign influence. The mos from foreigners is through me of orators and statesmen, poison the councils, and to I a country. Foreigners nov this bank; they may own What a temptation to the elections! By carrying a l jority of Congress, to suit only become masters of the also of the political power And can it be supposed the holders are indifferent to th tion? that they, and their indifference, the re-election disappoint their hopes of achievement at New Orlean mento of the most signal def and ever sustained?

The President, in his n terized the exclusive privileg monopoly.' To this Mr. xception, and ascended to the word to demonstrate it and the incorrectness of the ion. Mr. B. defended the the term, and said that he w too, but not Greek author cend, not to the Greek root. test of the word, and show had applied the term to the with still more offensive epi President had used. Mr. commented upon several pas Sir William Pulteney, in the ommons, against renewing Bank of England, in which t was repeatedly applied to th terms to display its dangerou ter. In one of the passages said: 'The bank has been su supported, by the fear and t means of its monopoly, it has inspire.' In another, he sai power given by the monopol ire of all other despotic pov the despot as much as it c In a third passage he said: were stripped of perial bank. They n, and to the estabbank; and it was the them with a fate the establishmen upon them.

er had rebuked the he manner in which ished through Connvestigation, relucmanded if that was not wrong to push nanner, and if the to stop it, to balk give the people time them to act? Her to the notice of the ut had not recoma, before the subject ne nation. It was a sages to quote them n without previous vading the question, it. He sought time self, and in that he lately expressed by entucky) at Cincin-1 the example of the ad not yet decided the Bank of Engsed an extraordinary iembers to examine artments; and, what had coincided with on, and the rights of n expiring minority ie powers and rights President had not ad met it fully. He out it in his messages might have remained of both parties; but he country required to the consideration vaked them up; and ie has secured them this evasion? attacked the Presi-1 stockholders in the Mr. B. maintained the I exposed the futility re duplicate senators. es did not hold stock 3? Mr. B. said, yes. mpanies did not hap-United States! The bank were the bank-They held its moneys. s; they almost coawere to give or withpeace, and, it might vernment. Was the upon foreigners in a xistence? The bank was a national institution. Ought a national institution to be the private property of aliens? It was called the Bank of the United States, and ought it to be the bank of the nobility and gentry of Great Britain? The senator from Kentucky had once objected to foreign stockholders himself. He did this in his speech against the bank in 1811; and although he had revoked the constitutional doctrines of that speech, he [Mr. RInever understood that he had revoked the satiments then expressed of the danger of corruntion in our councils and elections, if foreigners wielded the moneyed power of our country. He told us then that the power of the purse commanddthat of the sword-and would he commit both to the hands of foreigners? All the lessons of history, said Mr. B., admonish us to keep clear of foreign influence. The most dangerous influence from foreignersis through money. The corruption of orators and statesmen, is the ready way to noison the councils, and to betray the interest of a country. Foreigners now own one fourth of his bank; they may own the whole of it! What a temptation to them to engage in our elections! By carrying a President, and a majority of Congress, to suit themselves, they not only become masters of the moneyed power, but also of the political power, of this republic. And can it be supposed that the British stockholders are indifferent to the issue of this election? that they, and their agents, can see with indifference, the re-election of a man who may disappoint their hopes of fortune, and whose achievement at New Orleans is a continued memento of the most signal defeat the arms of Engand ever sustained?

The President, in his message, had characerized the exclusive privilege of the bank as 'a sonopoly.' To this Mr. Webster had taken eption, and ascended to the Greek root of word to demonstrate its true signification. and the incorrectness of the President's application. Mr. B. defended the President's use of the term, and said that he would give authority too, but not Greek authority. He would ascend, not to the Greek root, but to the English st of the word, and show that a whig baronet ad applied the term to the Bank of England oith still more offensive epithets than any the resident had used. Mr. B. then read, and mmented upon several passages of a speech of r William Pulteney, in the British House of mmons, against renewing the charter of the ank of England, in which the term monopoly was repeatedly applied to that bank; and other rms to display its dangerous and odious char-In one of the passages the whig baronet 'The bank has been supported, and is still ported, by the fear and terror which, by the ans of its monopoly, it has had the power to gire.' In another, he said: 'I consider the wer given by the monopoly to be of the nate of all other despotic power, which corrupts despot as much as it corrupts the slave!

the private bankers may feel themselves bound to hold, he could not believe they had any satisfaction in remaining subject to a power which might destroy them at any moment.' In a fourth: 'No man in France was heard to complain of the Bastile while it existed; yet when it fell, it came down amidst the universal acclamations of the nation!'

"Here, continued Mr. B., is authority, English authority, for calling the British bank in England a monopoly; and the British bank in America is copied from it. Sir Wm. Pulteney goes further than President Jackson. He says, that the Bank of England rules by fear and terror. He calls it a despot, and a corrupt despot. He speaks of the slaves corrupted by the bank; by whom he doubtless means the nominal debtors who have received ostensible loans. real douceurs-never to be repaid, except in dishonorable services. He considers the praises of the country bankers as the unwilling homage of the weak and helpless to the corrupt and powerful. He assimilates the Bank of England, by the terrors which it inspires, to the old Bastile in France, and anticipates the same burst of emancipated joy on the fall of the bank, which was heard in France on the fall of the Bastile. And is he not right? And may not every word of his invective be applied to the British bank in America, and find its appropriate application in well-known, and incontestable facts here? Well has he likened it to the Bastile; well will the term apply in our own country. Great is the fear and terror now inspired by this bank. Silent are millions of tongues, under its terrors which are impatient for the downfall of the mon ument of despotism, that they may break forth into joy and thanksgiving. The real Bastile was terrible to all France; the figurative Bas tile is terrible to all America; but above all to the West, where the duplicate senators of Kentucky and Massachusetts, have pointed to the reign of terror that is approaching, and drawn up the victims for an anticipated immolation. But, exclaimed Mr. B., this is the month of July; a month auspicious to liberty, and fatal to Bastiles. Our dependence on the crown of Great Britain ceased in the month of July; the Bastile in France fell in the month of July, Charles X. was chased from France by the three glorious days of July; and the veto message, which is the Declaration of Independence against the British bank, originated on the fourth of July, and is the signal for the downfall of the American Bastile, and the end of despotism. The time is auspicious; the work will go on; down with the British bank; down with the Bastile; away with the tyrant, will be the patriotic cry of Americans; and down it will go.

"The duplicate senators, said Mr. B., have occupied themselves with criticising the President's idea of the obligation of his oath in contaction of all other despotic power, which corrupts the despot as much as it corrupts the slave!' think that the President ought to be bound, the Congress ought to be bound, to take the constitution which the Supreme Court may deal out to them! If so, why take an oath? The oath is to bind the conscience, not to enlighten the head. Every officer takes the oath for himself; the President took the oath for himself; administered by the Chief Justice, but not to the Chief Justice. He bound himself to observe the constitution of the Chief Justice's interpretation of the constitution; and his message is in conformity to his oath. This is the oath of duty and of right. It is the path of Jefferson, also, who has laid it down in his writings," that each department judges the constitution for itself, and that the President is as independent of the Supreme Court as the Supreme Court is of the President.

"The senators from Kentucky and Massachusetts have not only attacked the President's idea of his own independence in construing the constitution, but also the construction he has put upon it in reference to this bank. They deny its correctness, and enter into arguments to disprove it, and have even quoted authorities which may be quoted on both sides. One of the senators, the gentleman from Kentucky, might have spared his objection to the President on this point. He happened to think the same way once himself; and while all will accord to him the right of changing for himself, few will allow him the privilege of rebuking others for not keeping up with him in the rigadoon dance of changeable opinions.

"The President is assailed for showing the drain upon the resources of the West, which is made by this bank. How assailed? With any documents to show that he is in error? No! not at all! no such document exists. The President is right, and the fact goes to a far greater extent than is stated in his message. He took the dividend profits of the bank,—the net, and not the gross profits; the latter is the true measure of the burthen upon the people. The annual drain for net dividends from the West, is $1,600,000. This is an enormous tax. But the gross profits are still larger. Then there is the specie drain, which now exceeds three millions of dollars per annum. Then there is the annual mortgage of the growing crop to redeem the fictitious and usurious bills of exchange which are now substituted for ordinary loans, and which sweeps off the staple products of the South and West to the Northeastern cities.-The West is ravaged by this bank. New Orleans, especially, is ravaged by it; and in her impoverishment, the whole West suffers; for she is thereby disabled from giving adequate prices for Western produce. Mr. B. declared that this British bank, in his opinion, had done, and would do, more pecuniary damage to New Orleans, than the British army would have done if they had conquered it in 1815. He verified this opinion by referring to the immense dividend, upwards of half a million a year, drawn from the branch there; the immense amounts of specie drawn from it; the produce carried off to meet the domestic bills of exchange; and the eight and a half millions of debt existing there, of which five millions were created in the last two years to answer electioneering purposes, and the collection of which must paralyze, for years, the growth of the city. From further damage to New Or. leans, the veto message would save that great city. Jackson would be her saviour a second time. He would save her from the British bank as he had done from the British army; and if any federal bank must be there, let it be an independent one; a separate and distinct bank, which would save to that city, and to the Valley of the Mississippi, of which it was the great and cherished emporium, the command of their own moneyed system, the regulation of their own commerce and finances, and the accommodation of their own citizens. "Mr. B. addressed himself to the Jackson bank men, present and absent. They might continue to be for a bank and for Jackson; but they could not be for this bank, and for Jackson. This bank is now the open, as it long has been the secret, enemy of Jackson. It is now in the hands of his enemies, wielding all its own money-wielding even the revenues and the credit of the Union-wielding twelve millions of dollars, half of which were intended to be paid to the public creditors on the first day of July, but which the bank has retained to itself by a false representation in the pretended behalf of the merchants. All this moneyed power, with an organization which pervades the continent, working every where with unseen hands, is now operating against the President; and it is impossible to be in favor of this power and also in favor of him at the same time. Choose ye between them! To those who think a bank to be indispensable, other alternatives present themselves. They are not bound nor wedded to this. New American banks may be created. Read, sir, Henry Parnell. See his invincible reasoning, and indisputable facts, to show that the Bank of England is too powerful for the monarchy of Great Britain! Study his plan for breaking up that gigantic institution, and establishing three or four independent banks in its place, which would be so much less dangerous to liberty. and so much safer and better for the people. In these alternatives, the friends of Jackson, who are in favor of national banks, may find the accomplishment of their wishes without a sacrifice of their principles, and without committing the suicidal solecism of fighting against him while professing to be for him.

"Mr. B. addressed himself to the West—the great, the generous, the brave, the patriotic the devoted West. It was the selected field of lattle. There the combined forces, the national republicans, and the national republican bank were to work together, and to fight together. The holy allies understand each other. They are able to speak in each other's names, and to promise and threaten in For this campaign the ban thirty millions in the We the associate leaders use th purposes. Vote for Jacks ments, and executions shall of destruction, throughout West! Vote against him! rence is basely promised! pretended, will, perhaps, be events, hardly ever collecbribe of thirty millions is the West; and, lest the se may not be sufficient on of destruction are brand Wretched, infatuated men. think the West is to be bo know of the generous sons region! poor, indeed, in poi in all the treasures of the qualities of freemen and re the noble feelings which l upon a bribe or a threat. West, with moccasins on h shirt drawn around him, dignation the highest bribe offer him. The wretch (se a significant gesture) who d expiate the insult with his

"Mr. B. rapidly summe the dangerous power of the sent audacity of her cone debt of seventy millions of ganization which extended Union, and she was sole mis power of the pepublic. Sh into the political arena, to the presidential election. that election, she would wi power by getting control Governors of States, judge resentatives and senators belong to her. The Senate long to her; for, there la firm nominations and to try to get possession of the Se of a majority of the Stat acquired. The war is no if he is defeated, all the 1 prey. What individual cou against the power of the flushed with a victory over conquerors of Bonaparte? ment would fall into the h power. An oligarchy wou tablished; and that oligare tions, would ripen into a m ments must have their end this republic must perish; trusted, was far distant : & should come in glory, and 1 had her Pharsalia, and G and this republic, more ill than Greece or Rome, was glorious as theirs. She wo

he domestic bills nd a half millions ich five millions vears to answer the collection of rs, the growth of age to New Or. I save that great saviour a second the British bank ish army; and if re, let it be an innd distinct bank, and to the Valley was the great and nand of their own ion of their own ne accommodation

f to the Jackson

nt. They might for Jackson; but ink, and for Jackopen, as it long of Jackson. It is mies, wielding all ven the revenues -wielding twelve ich were intended itors on the first oank has retained ation in the prets. All this moncation which perevery where with ating against the le to be in favor vor of him at the ween them! To be indispensable, nemselves. They

this. New Amer-Read, sir, Henry reasoning, and inthe Bank of Engnonarchy of Great breaking up that blishing three or its place, which gerous to liberty, er for the people. iends of Jackson, l banks, may find wishes without a and without comof fighting against r him.

to the West-the e, the patriotic, the lected field of batorces, the national republican bank, to fight together. each other. They er's names, and to promise and threaten in each other's behalf. For this campaign the bank created its debt of thirty millions in the West; in this campaign the associate leaders use that debt for their own purposes. Vote for Jackson! and suits, judgments, and executions shall sweep, like the besom of destruction, throughout the vast region of the West! Vote against him! and indefinite indul-gence is basely promised! The debt itself, it is pretended, will, perhaps, be forgiven; or, at all events, hardly ever collected! Thus, an open bribe of thirty millions is virtually offered to the West; and, lest the seductions of the bribe may not be sufficient on one hand, the terrors of destruction are brandished on the other! Wretched, infatuated men, cried Mr. B. Do they think the West is to be bought? Little do they know of the generous sons of that magnificent region! poor, indeed, in point of money, but rich in all the treasures of the heart! rich in all the qualities of freemen and republicans!\rich in all the noble feelings which look with equal scorn upon a bribe or a threat. The hunter of the West, with moccasins on his feet, and a hunting shirt drawn around him, would repel with indignation the highest bribe that the bank could offer him. The wretch (said Mr. Benton, with a significant gesture) who dared to offer it, would explate the insult with his blood. "Mr. B. rapidly summed up with a view of the dangerous power of the bank, and the present audacity of her conduct. She wielded a debt of seventy millions of dollars, with an organization which extended to every part of the Union, and she was sole mistress of the moneyed power of the pepublic. She had thrown herself into the political arena, to control and govern the presidential election. If she succeeded in that election, she would wish to consolidate her power by getting control of all other elections. Governors of States, judges of the courts, representatives and senators in Congress, all must belong to her. The Senate especially must belong to her; for, there lay the power to confirm nominations and to try impeachments; and. to get possession of the Senate, the legislatures of a majority of the States would have to be acquired. The war is now upon Jackson, and if he is defeated, all the rest will fall an easy prey. What individual could stand in the States against the power of the bank, and that bank flushed with a victory over the conqueror of the conquerors of Bonaparte? The whole government would fall into the hands of this moneyed power. An oligarchy would be immediately established; and that oligarchy, in a few generations, would ripen into a monarchy. All governments must have their end; in the lapse of time, this republic must perish; but that time, he now trusted, was far distant; and when it comes, it should come in glory, and not in shame. Rome had her Pharsalia, and Greece her Chæronea; and this republic, more illustrious in her birth than Greece or Rome, was entitled to a death as

-perish in corruption-no! A field of arms and of glory, should be her end. She had a right to a battle-a great, immortal battlewhere heroes and patriots could die with the liberty which they scorned to survive, and consecrate, with their blood, the spot which marked a nation's fall.

"After Mr. B. had concluded his remarks, Mr. Clay rose and said:-

"The senator from Missouri expresses dissatisfaction that the speeches of some senators should fill the galleries. He has no ground for uneasiness on this score. For if it be the fortune of some senators to fill the galleries when they speak, it is the fortune of others to empty them, with whatever else they fill the chamber. The senator from Missouri has every reason to be well satisfied with the effect of his performance to day; for among his auditors is a lady of great literary eminence. [Pointing to Mrs. Royal.] The senator intimates, that in my remarks on the message of the President, I was deficient in a proper degree of courtesy towards that officer. Whether my deportment here be decorous or not, I should not choose to be decided upon by the gentleman from Missouri. I answered the President's arguments, and gave my own views of the facts and inferences introduced by him into his message. The President states that the bank has an injurious operation on the interests of the West, and dwells upon its exhausting effects, its stripping the country of its currency, &c., and upon these views and statements I commented in a manner which the occasion called for. But, if I am to be indoctrinated in the rules of decorum, I shall not look to the gentleman for instruction. I shall not strip him of his Indian blankets to go to Boon's Lick for lessons in deportment, nor yet to the Court of Versailles, which he eulogizes. There are some peculiar reasons why I should not go to that senator for my views of decorum, in regard to my bearing towards the chief magistrate, and why he is not a fit instructor. I never had any personal rencontre with the President of the United States. I never complained of any outrages on my person committed by him. I never published any bulletins respecting his private brawls. The gentleman will understand my allusion. [Mr. B. said: He will understand you, sir, and so will you him.] I never complained, that while a brother of mine was down on the ground, senseless or dead, he received another blow. I have never made any declaration like these relative to the individual who is President. There is also a singular prophecy as to the consequences of the election of this individual, which far surpasses, in evil foreboding, whatever I may have ever said in regard to his election. I never made any prediction so sinister, nor made any declaration so harsh, as that which is contained in the prediction to which I allude. I never declared my apprehension and belief, that if he were elected, we should be glorious as theirs. She would not die by poison obliged to legislate with pistols and dirks by our side. At this last stage of the session I do not rise to renew the discussion of this question. I only rose to give the senator from Missouri a full acquittance, and I trust there will be no further occasion for opening a new account with

"Mr. B. replied. It is true, sir, that I had an affray with General Jackson, and that I did complain of his conduct. We fought, sir; and we fought, I hope, like men. When the explosion was over, there remained no ill will, on either side. No vituperation or system of petty persecution was kept up between us. Yes, sir, it is true, that I had the personal difficulty, which the senator from Kentucky has had the delicacy to bring before the Senate. But let me tell the senator from Kentucky there is no ad-'journed question of veracity' between me and General Jackson. All difficulty between us ended with the conflict; and a few months after it, I believe that either party would cheerfully have relieved the other from any peril; and now we shake hands and are friendly when we meet. I repeat, sir, that there is no 'adjourned question of veracity' between me and General Jackson, standing over for settlement. If there had been, a gulf would have separated us as deep as hell.

'Mr. B. then referred to the prediction alleged by Mr. Clay, to have been made by him. have seen, he said, a placard, first issued in Missouri, and republished lately. It first appeared in 1825, and stated that I had said, in a public address, that if General Jackson should be elected, we must be guarded with pistols and dirks to defend ourselves while legislating here. This went the rounds of the papers at the time. A gentleman, well acquainted in the State of Missouri (Col. Lawless), published a handbill denying the truth of the statement, and calling upon any person in the State to name the time and place, when and where, any such address had been heard from me, or any such declaration made. Colonel Lawless was perfectly familiar with the campaign, but he could never meet with a single individual, man, woman, or child, in the State, who could recollect to have ever heard any such remarks from me. No one came forward to reply to the call. No one had ever heard me make the declaration which was charged upon me. The same thing has lately been printed here, and, in the night, stuck up in a placard upon the posts and walls of this city. While its author remained concealed, it was impossible for me to hold him to account, nor could I make him responsible, who, in the dark, sticks it to the posts and walls: but since it is in open day introduced into this chamber I am enabled to meet it as it deserves to be met. I see who it is that uses it here, and to his face [pointing to Mr. Clay] I am enabled to pronounce it, as I now do, an atrocious calumny.

"Mr. Clay.—The assertion that there is 'an adjourned question of veracity' between me and Gen. Jackson, is, whether made by man or mas-

tain charge against me, and he referred to with nesses to prove it. I denied the truth of the charge. He called upon his witness to prove I-leave it to the country to say, whether that witness sustained the truth of the President's allegation. That witness is now on his passage to St. Petersburg, with a commission in his pocket. [Mr. B. here said aloud, in his place, the Mississippi and the fisheries-Mr. Adams and the fisheries-every body understands it.] Mr. C. said, I do not yet understand the senator. He then remarked upon the 'prediction' which the senator from Missouri had disclaimed. Can he, said Mr. C., look to me, and say that he never used the language attributed to him in the placard which he refers to? He says, Col. Lawless denies that he used the words in the State of Missouri. Can you look me in the face, sir [addressing Mr. B.], and say that you never used that language out of the State of Missouri?

"Mr. B. I look, sir, and repeat that it is an atrocious calumny; and I will pin it to him who repeats it here.

"Mr. Clay. Then I declare before the Senate that you said to me the very words—

"[Mr. B. in his place, while Mr. Clay was yet speaking, several times loudly repeated the word 'false, false, false.']

"Mr. Clay said, I fling back the charge of atrocious calumny upon the senator from Missouri.

A call to order was here heard from several senators.

"The President, pro tem., said, the senator from Kentucky is not in order, and must take

"Mr. Clay. Will the Chair state the point of order

"The Chair, said Mr. Tazewell (the President pro tem.), can enter in no explanations with the

"Mr. Clay. I shall be heard. I demand to know what point of order can be taken against me, which was not equally applicable to the senator from Missouri.

"The President, pro tem., stated, that he considered the whole discussion as out of order. He would not have permitted it, had he been in the chair at its commencement.

"Mr. Poindexter said, he was in the chair at the commencement of the discussion, and did not then see fit to check it. But he was now of the opinion that it was in not in order.

"Mr. B. I apologize to the Senate for the manner in which I have spoken; but not to the senator from Kentucky.

"Mr. Clay. To the Senate I also offer an apology. To the senator from Missouri none.

"The question was here called for, by several senators, and it was taken, as heretofore re-

The conclusion of the debate on the side of the bank was in the most impressive form to the ter absolutely false. The President made a cer- fears and apprehensions of the country, and well calculated to alarm an Mr. Webster concluded presenting a direful picture was sustained, and portra constitution before it had year of its age. He conclu seeing in how few years h charity of the world's sile the institution which his into a great and beneficent to the well working of the well conducting of their aff

"Mr. President, we ha epoch. We are entering the government and the country, hitherto untried appalling aspect. This m contemplation of a future bles the past. Its principl that public opinion has su the experience of the govern It denies first principles. heretofore received as ind to the judiciary the inter demands to divide with Co of statutes. It extends t pretension over every pow But this is not all. It pro istrate of the Union in the away the powers of that go he has been chosen to pr for this purpose, modes even under the influence towards high official stat regard as respectable. It judice which may betray view of their own interests sion which may lead then pulses of their understandi specious topics of State rig croachment, against that w of the States have affirmed in which all of them have a in an unsparing manner, t and ill-will against that a its author is the official he that liberty is in danger, when it puts forth claims unknown and unheard of. the public freedom, when n dangers that freedom as i pretences. This, even, is n ly seeks to influence the po It wantonly attacks whole for the purpose of turning a judices and resentments of a state paper which finds 1 for its use; no passion too address and its solicitation sage. It remains, now, for United States to choose bet referred to wit he truth of the ritness to prove to say, whether h of the Presiis now on his h a commission uid aloud, in his e fisheries-Mr. ry body underyet understand d upon the 'prem Missouri had C., look to me. e language attriich he refers to? hat he used the Can you look Mr. B.], and say eat that it is an sin it to him who uage out of the

before the Senate ords— Mr. Clay was yet ly repeated the he charge of atrofrom Missouri. ard from several said, the senator r, and must take

· state the point

ell (the President unations with the

rd. I demand to be taken against applicable to the ated, that he conas out of order. t, had he been in s in the chair at scussion, and did But he was now

t in order.
e Senate for the 1; but not to the

I also offer an Missouri none. led for, by several as heretofore re-

e on the side of essive form to the country, and well calculated to alarm and rouse a community. Mr. Webster concluded with this peroration, presenting a direful picture of distress if the veto was sustained, and portrayed the death of the constitution before it had attained the fiftieth year of its age. He concluded thus—little foreseing in how few years he was to invoke the charity of the world's silence and oblivion for the institution which his rhetoric then exalted into a great and beneficent power, indispensable to the well working of the government, and the well conducting of their affairs by all the people:

"Mr. President, we have arrived at a new epoch. We are entering on experiments with the government and the constitution of the country, hitherto untried, and of fearful and appalling aspect. This message calls us to the contemplation of a future, which little resembles the past. Its principles are at war with all that public opinion has sustained, and all which the experience of the government has sanctioned. It denies first principles. It contradicts truths heretofore received as indisputable. It denies to the judiciary the interpretation of law, and demands to divide with Congress the origination of statutes. It extends the grasp of Executive pretension over every power of the government. But this is not all. It presents the Chief Magistrate of the Union in the attitude of arguing away the powers of that government over which he has been chosen to preside; and adopting, for this purpose, modes of reasoning which. even under the influence of all proper feeling towards high official station, it is difficult to regard as respectable. It appeals to every prejudice which may betray men into a mistaken view of their own interests; and to every passion which may lead them to disobev the impulses of their understanding. It urges all the specious topics of State rights, and national encroachment, against that which a great majority of the States have affirmed to be rightful, and in which all of them have acquiesced. It sows, in an unsparing manner, the seeds of jealousy and ill-will against that government of which its author is the official head. It raises a cry that liberty is in danger, at the very moment when it puts forth claims to power heretofore unknown and unheard of. It affects alarm for the public freedom, when nothing so much endangers that freedom as its own unparalleled pretences. This, even, is not all. It manifestly seeks to influence the poor against the rich. It wantonly attacks whole classes of the people, for the purpose of turning against them the prejudices and resentments of other classes. It is a state paper which finds no topic too exciting for its use; no passion too inflammable for its address and its solicitation. Such is this message. It remains, now, for the people of the United States to choose between the principles here avowed and their government. These cannot subsist together. The one or the other must be rejected. If the sentiments of the message shall receive general approbation, the constitution will have perished even earlier than the moment which its enemies originally allowed for the termination of its existence. It will not have survived to its fiftieth year."

On the other hand, Mr. White, of Tennessee, exalted the merit of the veto message above all the acts of General Jackson's life, and claimed for it a more enduring fame, and deeper gratitude than for the greatest of his victories: and concluded his speech thus:

"When the excitement of the time in which we act shall have passed away, and the historian and biographer shall be employed in giving his account of the acts of our most distinguished public men, and comes to the name of Andrew Jackson; when he shall have recounted all the great and good deeds done by this man in the course of a long and eventful life, and the circumstances under which this message was communicated shall have been stated, the conclusion will be, that, in doing this, he has shown a willingness to risk more to promote the happiness of his fellow-men, and to secure their liberties, than by the doing of any other act whatever."

And such, in my opinion, will be the judgment of posterity—the judgment of posterity, if furnished with the material to appreciate the circumstances under which he acted when signing the message which was to decide the question of supremacy between the bank and the government.

CHAPTER LXIX.

THE PROTECTIVE SYSTEM.

The cycle had come round which, periodically, and once in four years, brings up a presidential election and a tariff discussion. The two events seemed to be inseparable; and this being the fourth year from the great tariff debate of 1828, and the fourth year from the last presidential election, and being the long session which precedes the election, it was the one in regular course in which the candidates and their friends make the greatest efforts to operate upon public opinion through the measures which they propose, or oppose in Congress. Added to this, the election being one on which not only a change of political parties depended, but also a second trial of the election in the House of Representatives in 1824-'25, in which Mr. Adams and Mr. Clay triumphed over General Jackson, with the advantage on their side now of both being in Congress: for these reasons this session became the most prolific of party topics, and of party contests, of any one ever seen in the annals of our Congress. And certainly there were large subjects to be brought before the people, and great talents to appear in their support and defence. The renewal of the national bank charter—the continuance of the protective system—internal improvement by the federal government—divi- | He said: sion of the public land money, or of the lands themselves-colonization society-extension of pension list-Georgia and the Cherokees-Georgia and the Supreme Court-imprisoned missionaries—were all brought forward, and pressed with zeal, by the party out of power; and pressed in a way to show their connection with the presidential canvass, and the reliance upon them to govern its result. The party in power were chiefly on the defensive; and it was the complete civil representation of a military attack and defence of a fortified place—a siege—with its open and covert attacks on one side, its repulses and sallies on the other—its sappings and minings, as well as its open thundering assaults. And this continued for seven long months-from December to July; fierce in the beginning, and becoming more so from day to day until the last hour of the last day of the exhausted session. It was the most fiery and eventful session that I had then seen-or since seen, except one—the panic session of 1834-'35.

The two leading measures in this plan of operations—the bank and the tariff—were brought forward simultaneously and quickly,-on the same day, and under the same lead. The memorial for the renewal of the bank charter was presented in the Senate on the 9th day of January: on the same day, and as soon as it was referred, Mr. Clay submitted a resolution in relation to the tariff, and delivered a speech of three days' duration in support of the American system. The President, in his message, and in view of the approaching extinction of the public debtthen reduced to an event of certainty within the ensuing year-recommended the abolition of comfort, not produced at home. Mr. Clay proposed to make the reduction in subordination to the preservation of the "American system." and this opened the whole question of free trade and protection; and occasioned that field to be trod over again with all the vigor of a fresh ere ploration. Mr. Clay opened his great speech with a retrospect of what the condition of the country was for seven years before the tarriff of 1824. and what it had been since—the first a period of unprecedented calamity, the latter of equally unprecedented prosperity:-and he made the two conditions equally dependent upon the absence and presence of the protective system.

"Eight years ago, it was my painful duty to present to the other House of Congress an unexaggerated picture of the general distress pervading the whole land. We must all yet remember some of its frightful features. We all know that the people were then oppressed and borne down by an enormous load of debt; that the value of property was at the lowest point of depression; that ruinous sales and sacrifices were every where made of real estate; that stop laws and relief laws and paper money were adopted to save the people from impending destruction; that a deficit in the public revenue existed, which compelled government to seize upon, and divert from its legitimate object, the appropriation to the sinking fund, to redeem the national debt; and that our commerce and navigation were threatened with a complete paralysis. In short, sir, if I were to select any term of seven years since the adoption of the present constitution, which exhibited a scene of the most wide-spread dismay and desolation, it would be exactly the term of seven years which immediately preceded the establishment of the tariff of 1824.

This was a faithful picture of that calamitous period, but the argument derived from it was a two-edged sword, which cut, and deeply, into another measure, also lauded as the cause of the public prosperity. These seven years of national distress which immediately preceded the tariff of 1824, were also the same seven years which immediately followed the establishment of the national bank; and which, at the time it was chartered, was to be the remedy for all the distress under which the country labored: besides, the protective system was actually commenced in the year 1816-contemporaneously with the establishment of the national bank. Before 1816, protection to home industry had been an inciduties on numerous articles of neccessity or dent to the levy of revenue; but in 1816 it be came an object. Mr. Cla origin and progress of the

"It began on the ever n July-the 4th of July, 17 which stands recorded in t ing the illustrious signature ton, laid the corner stone of That there might be no mi ter, it was then solemly pro rican people and to the wo eary for "the encouragementantiactures," that duties in vain to urge the small ar of protection then extended ple was then established b constitution, with the fath their head. And it cannot that, if the government had and the subject untried, a gr tection would have been ar supposed necessary. Short minds of Jefferson and Han to act on this interesting sul of it appertaining to the dep affairs and of the treasury, ively filled, they presented. which yet remain monumen wisdom, and came to the sam tection to American indust argued that foreign restriction tions, and foreign high dutie at home, by American res prohibitions, and American Hamilton, surveying the enti ing at the inherent nature of it with an ability which, if ex been surpassed, and earnestly tection.

"The wars of the French ed about this period, and stre into the United States through nels, opened or enlarged by t merce which our neutrality e cute. We forgot, or overloo prosperity, the necessity of e mestic manufactures. Then Napoleon, and the British orde our embargo, non-intercours and war, followed in rapid national measures, amounting sion, for the period of their foreign commerce, afforded the encouragement to increase in accordingly, they every where these measures of restriction as continued the manufacturers their enterprises by every ass by public sentiment, and by le It was about that period ( Carolina bore her high testimo of the policy, in an act of h preamble of which, now be Whereas the establishment ar of domestic manufactures is co Mr. Clay proubordination to ican system. on of free trade that field to be r of a fresh exreat speech with a of the country tarriff of 1824, first a period of tter of equally he made the at upon the abtective system.

painful duty to ongress an unral distress peraust all vet reatures. We all oppressed and d of debt; that lowest point of and sacrifices state; that stop er money were 1 impending depublic revenue rnment to seize mate object, the d, to redeem the commerce and ith a complete re to select any adoption of the bited a scene of nd desolation, it ven years which lishment of the

> that calamitous d from it was a nd deeply, into the cause of the years of nationeceded the tariff ven years which dishment of the he time it was v for all the disabored: besides, ally commenced eously with the k. Before 1816, d been an inciit in 1816 it be came an object. Mr. Clay thus deduced the origin and progress of the protective policy:

"It began on the ever memorable 4th day of July-the 4th of July, 1789. The second act which stands recorded in the statute book, bearing the illustrious signature of George Washington, laid the corner stone of the whole system. That there might be no mistake about the matter, it was then solemly proclaimed to the American people and to the world, that it was necessary for "the encouragement and protection of manufactures," that duties should be laid. It is in vain to urge the small amount of the measure of protection then extended. The great princiwas then established by the fathers of the constitution, with the father of his country at their head. And it cannot now be questioned, that, if the government had not then been new and the subject untried, a greater measure of protection would have been applied, if it had been supposed necessary. Shortly after, the master minds of Jefferson and Hamilton were brought to act on this interesting subject. Taking views of it appertaining to the departments of foreign fairs and of the treasury, which they respectively filled, they presented, severally, reports which yet remain monuments of their profound wisdom, and came to the same conclusion of protection to American industry. Mr. Jefferson argued that foreign restrictions, foreign prohibitions, and foreign high duties, ought to be met, at home, by American restrictions, American prohibitions, and American high duties. Mr. Hamilton, surveying the entire ground, and looking at the inherent nature of the subject, treated it with an ability which, if ever equalled, has not been surpassed, and earnestly recommended pro-

The wars of the French revolution commened about this period, and streams of gold poured into the United States through a thousand channels opened or enlarged by the successful commerce which our neutrality enabled us to prosecute. We forgot, or overlooked, in the general prosperity, the necessity of encouraging our domestic manufactures. Then came the edicts of Napoleon, and the British orders in council; and our embargo, non-intercourse, non-importation. and war, followed in rapid succession. These national measures, amounting to a total suspension, for the period of their duration, of our foreign commerce, afforded the most efficacious encouragement to american manufactures; and, accordingly, they every where sprung up. Whilst these measures of restriction and this state of war continued the manufacturers were stimulated in their enterprises by every assurance of support, by public sentiment, and by legislative resolves. It was about that period (1808) that South Carolina bore her high testimony to the wisdom of the policy, in an act of her legislature, the preamble of which, now before me, reads: Whereas the establishment and encouragement of domestic manufactures is conducive to the interest of a State, by adding new incentives to industry, and as being the means of disposing, to advantage, the surplus productions of the agriculturist: And whereas, in the present unexampled state of the world, their establishment in our country is not only expedient, but politic, in rendering us independent of foreign nations. The legislature, not being competent to afford the most efficacious aid, by imposing duties on foreign rival articles, proceeded to incorporate a company.

Peace, under the Treaty of Ghent, returned in 1815, but there did not return with it the golden days which preceded the edicts levelled at our commerce by Great Britain and France. It found all Europe tranquilly resuming the arts and the business of civil life. It found Europe no longer the consumer of our surplus, and the employer of our navigation, but excluding, or heavily burdening, almost all the productions of our agriculture, and our rivals in manufactures, in navigation, and in commerce. It found our country, in short, in a situation totally different from all the past-new and untried. It became necessary to adapt our laws, and especially our laws of impost, to the new circumstances in which we found ourselves. It has been said that the tariff of 1816 was a measure of mere revenue; and that it only reduced the war duties to a peace standard. It is true that the question then was, how much, and in what way, should the double duties of the war be reduced? Now, also, the question is, on what articles shall the duties be reduced so as to subject the amount of the future revenue to the wants of the government? Then it was deemed an inquiry of the first importance, as it should be now, how the reduction should be made, so as to secure proper encouragement to our domestic industry. That this was a leading object in the arrangement of the tariff of 1816, I well remember, and it is demonstrated by the language of Mr. Dallas.

"The subject of the American system was again brought up in 1820, by the bill reported by the chairman of the Committee on Manufactures, now a member of the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States, and the principle was successfully maintained by the representatives of the people; but the bill which they passed was defeated in the Senate. It was revived in 1824, the whole ground carefully and deliberately explored, and the bill then introduced, receiving all the sanctions of the constitution. This act of 1824 needed amendments in some particulars, which were attempted in 1828, but ended in some injuries to the system; and now the whole aim was to save an existing system—not to create a new one."

And he summed up his policy thus:

"1. That the policy which we have been considering ought to continue to be regarded as the genuine American system.

"2. That the free trade system, which is proposed as its substitute, ought really to be considered as the British colonial system.

"3. That the American system is beneficial to all parts of the Union, and absolutely necessary to much the larger portion.

"4. That the price of the great staple of cotton, and of all our chief productions of agriculture, has been sustained and upheld, and a decline averted by the protective system."

"5. That, if the foreign demand for cotton has been at all diminished by the operation of that system, the diminution has been more than compensated in the additional demand created at home.

"6. That the constant tendency of the system, by creating competition among ourselves, and between American and European industry, rec.procally acting upon each other, is to reduce prices of manufactured objects.

"7. That, in point of fact, objects within the scope of the policy of protection have greatly fallen in price.

"8. That if, in a season of peace, these benefits are experienced, in a season of war, when the foreign supply might be cut off, they would be much more extensively felt.

"9. And, finally, that the substitution of the British colonial system for the American system, without benefiting any section of the Union, by subjecting us to a foreign legislation, regulated by foreign interests, would lead to the prostration of our manufactures, general impoverishment, and ultimate ruin."

Mr. Clay was supported in his general views by many able speakers—among them, Dickerson and Frelinghuysen of New Jersey; Ewing of Ohio; Holmes of Maine; Bell of New Hampshire; Hendricks of Indiana; Webster and Silsbee of Massachusetts; Robbins and Knight of Rhode Island; Wilkins and Dallas of Pennsylvania; Sprague of Maine; Clayton of Delaware; Chambers of Maryland; Foot of Connecticut. On the other hand the speakers in opposition to the protective policy were equally numerous, ardent and able. They were: Messrs. Hayne and Miller of South Carolina; Brown and Mangum of North Carolina; Forsyth and Troup of Georgia; Grundy and White of Tennessee; Hill of New Hampshire; Kane of Illinois; Benton of Missouri; King and Moore of Alabama; Poindexter of Mississippi; Tazewell and Tyler of Virginta; General Samuel Smith of Maryland. I limit the enumeration to the Senate. In the House the subject was still more fully debated, according to its numbers; and like the bank question, gave rise to heat; and was kept alive to the last day.

General Smith of Maryland, took up the interest of manufactures, as far as it could be question at once as bearing upon the harmony and stability of the Union—as unfit to be pressed on that account as well as for its own demerits—avowed himself a friend to incidental protection, for which he had always voted, and even voted for the act of 1816—which he considered going far enough; and insisted that all "manufacturers" were doing well under it, and did not need the acts of 1824 and 1828, which were made for "capitalists"—to enable them to engage in manufacturing; and who had not the requisite skill and care, and suffered, and called upon Congress for more assistance. He said:

総

"We have arrived at a crisis. Yes, Mr. President, at a crisis more appalling than a day of battle. I adjure the Committee on Manufactures to pause—to reflect on the dissatisfaction of all the South. South Carolina has expressed itself strongly against the tariff of 1828 stronger than the other States are willing to speak. But, sir, the whole of the South feel deeply the oppression of that tariff. In this respect there is no difference of opinion. The South-the whole Southern States-all, consider it as oppressive. They have not yet spoken; but when they do speak, it will be with a voice that will not implore, but will demand redress. How much better, then, to grant redress? How much better that the Committee on Manufactures heal the wound which has been inflicted? I want nothing that shall injure the manufacturer. I only want justice.

"I am, Mr. President, one of the few survivors of those who fought in the war of the revolution. We then thought we fought for liberty -for equal rights. We fought against taxation, the proceeds of which were for the benefit of others. Where is the difference, if the people are to be taxed by the manufacturers or by any others? I say manufacturers—and why do I say so? When the Senate met, there was a strong disposition with all parties to ameliorate the tariff of 1828; but I now see a change, which makes me almost despair of any thing effectual being accomplished. Even the small concessions made by the senator from Kentucky [Mr. Clay], have been reprobated by the lobby members, the agents of the manufacturers. I am told they have put their fiat on any change whatever, and hence, as a consequence, the change in the course and language of gentlemen, which almost precludes all hope. Those interested men hang on the Committee on Manufactures like an incubus. I say to that committee, depend upon your own good judgments-survey the whole subject as politicians -discard sectional interests, and study only the common weal-act with these views-and thus relieve the oppressions of the South.

"I have ever, Mr. President, supported the done incidentally. I sup Lowndes's bill of 1816, committee, and that bill p tures sufficiently, except be had reported fifteen dollars reduced it to nine dollars enabled the manufacturers tions of certain articles. their business by their s and few, if any, hats are n quantities are exported, an ticles of leather, from tann harness or saddle, have bee portation; and why? Be conducted by their own h abor, and they are now tariff of 1828, to enable th the manufactures of the say the rich, who entered in the act of 1824, which prov affair, and many of them su act of 1816, I repeat, gav that was necessary or prop mdustrious and frugal co But, sir, the capitalist wh capital in manufactures, w with ordinary profit; and

Mr. Clay, in his opening to the Southern discontent; protective tariff, in a way t to be serious, and entitled t sideration of statesmen; system an overruling nece and value to other parts of danger to its existence laid and not in the continuance system." On this point h thus:

"And now, Mr. Presiden few observations on a delic approach with all the respec serious and grave nature. deed, been rendered necessa the gentleman from South bearance to notice the topi as his argument throughou by an ability and dignity w the Senate. The gentleman tion which might possibly and I submit to him whethe it be not proper. The decl in his printed speech, is: ' interest might have taught relieving ourselves from the wanted but the will to have with every article embrace system, free of duty, withou pation, on our part, than a s ceive them.' [Here Mr. I marked that the passages,

a the harmony is unfit to be a soft its own and to incidental anys voted, and—which he commissisted that all under it, and and 1828, which enable them to ho had not the ered, and called ice. He said:

Yes, Mr. Presithan a day of se on Manuface dissatisfaction a has expressed riff of 1828—5 are willing to the South feel tariff. In this f opinion. The states—all, conhave not yeak it will be seak it will be have not yet beak, it will be ore, but will der, then, to grant at the Committen ound which has g that shall inwant justice.

war of the revoought for liberty it against taxae for the benefit ence, if the peoufacturers or by urers-and why e met, there was arties to amelioow see a change, air of any thing Even the small ator from Kenprobated by the of the manufacput their fiat on nce, as a consese and language ecludes all hope. the Committee s. I say to that own good judgect as politicians and study only hese views-and the South.

t, supported the

r as it could be done incidentally. I supported the late Mr. Lowndes's bill of 1816. I was a member of his committee, and that bill protected the manufactures sufficiently, except bar iron. Mr. Lowndes had reported fifteen dollars per ton. The House reduced it to nine dollars per ton. That act enabled the manufacturers to exclude importations of certain articles. The hatters carry on their business by their sons and apprentices, and few, if any, hats are now imported. Large quantities are exported, and preferred. All articles of leather, from tanned side to the finest harness or saddle, have been excluded from importation; and why? Because the business is conducted by their own hard hands, their own labor, and they are now heavily taxed by the tariff of 1828, to enable the rich to enter into the manufactures of the country. Yes, sir, I say the rich, who entered into the business after the act of 1824, which proved to be a mushroom affair, and many of them suffered severely. The act of 1816, I repeat, gave all the protection that was necessary or proper, under which the mdustrious and frugal completely succeeded. But, sir, the capitalist who had invested his capital in manufactures, was not to be satisfied with ordinary profit; and therefore the act of

Mr. Clay, in his opening speech had adverted to the Southern discontent at the working of the protective tariff, in a way that showed he felt it to be serious, and entitled to enter into the consideration of statesmen; but considered this system an overruling necessity of such want and value to other parts of the Union, that the danger to its existence laid in the abandonment, and not in the continuance of the "American system." On this point he expressed himself

"And now, Mr. President, I have to make a few observations on a delicate subject, which I approach with all the respect that is due to its serious and grave nature. They have not, indeed, been rendered necessary by the speech of the gentleman from South Carolina, whose forbearance to notice the topic was commendable, as his argument throughout was characterized by an ability and dignity worthy of him and of the Senate. The gentleman made one declaration which might possibly be misinterpreted, and I submit to him whether an explanation of it be not proper. The declaration, as reported in his printed speech, is: 'the instinct of selfinterest might have taught us an easier way of relieving ourselves from this oppression. It wanted but the will to have supplied ourselves with every article embraced in the protective system, free of duty, without any other participation, on our part, than a simple consent to receive them.' [Here Mr. Hayne rose, and remarked that the passages, which immediately preceded and followed the paragraph cited, he thought, plainly indicated his meaning, which related to evasions of the system, by illicit introduction of goods, which they were not disposed to countenance in South Carolina.] I am happy to hear this explanation, But, sir, it is impossible to conceal from our view the fact that there is great excitement in South Carolina; that the protective system is openly and violently denounced in popular meetings; and that the legislature itself has declared its purpose of resorting to counteracting measures: a suspension of which has only been submitted to, for the purpose of allowing Congress time to retrace its steps. With respect to this Union, Mr. President, the truth cannot be too generally proclaimed, nor too strongly inculcated, that it is necessary to the whole and to all the parts-necessary to those parts, indeed, in different degrees, but vitally necessary to each; and that, threats to disturb or dissolve it, coming from any of the parts, would be quite as indiscreet and improper, as would be threats from the residue to exclude those parts from the pale of its benefits. The great principle, which lies at the foundation of all free governments, is, that the majority must govern; from which there is nor can be no appeal but to the sword. That majority ought to govern wisely, equitably, moderately, and constitutionally; but, govern it must, subject only to that terrible appeal. If ever one, or several States, being a minority, can, by menacing a dissolution of the Union, succeed in forcing an abandonment of great measures, deemed essential to the interests and prosperity of the whole, the Union, from that moment, is practically gone. It may linger on, in form and name, but its vital spirit has fled for ever! Entertaining these deliberate opinions, I would entreat the patriotic people of South Carolina—the land of Marion, Sumpter, and Pickens; of Rutledge, Laurens, the Pickneys, and Lowndes; of living and present names, which I would mention if they were not living or present—to pause, solemnly pause! and contemplate the frightful precipice which lies directly before them. To retreat, may be painful and mortifying to their gallantry and pride; but it is to retreat to the Union, to safety, and to those brethren, with whom, or, with whose ancestors, they, or their ancestors, have won, on the fields of glory, imperishable renown. To advance, is to rush on certain and inevitable disgrace and destruction.

"The danger to our Union does not lie on the side of persistance in the American system, but on that of its abandonment. If, as I have supposed and believe, the inhabitants of all north and east of James River, and all west of the mountains, including Louisiana, are deeply interested in the preservation of that system, would they be reconciled to its overthrow? Can it be expected that two thirds, if not three fourths, of the people of the United States would consent to the destruction of a policy believed to be indispensably necessary to their prosperity? When, too, this sacrifice is made at the instance of a single interest, which they verily believe will not be promoted by it? In estimating the degree of peril which may be incident to two opposite courses of human policy, the statesman would be short-sighted who should content himself with viewing only the evils, real or imaginary, which belong to that course which is in practical operation. He should lift himself up to the contemplation of those greater and more certain dangers which might inevitably attend the adoption of the alternative course. What would be the condition of this Union, if Pennsylvania and New-York, those mammoth, members of our confederacy, were firmly persuaded that their industry was paralyzed, and their prosperity blighted, by the enforcement of the British colonial system, under the delusive name of free trade? They are now tranquil, and happy, and contented, conscious of their welfare and feeling a salutary and rapid circulation of the products of home manufactures and home industry througout all their great arteries. But let that be checked, let them feel that a foreign system is to predominate, and the sources of their subsistence and comfort dried up; let New England and the West, and the Middle States, all feel that they too are the victims of a mistaken policy, and let these vast portions of our country despair of any favorable change, and then, indeed, might we tremble for the continuance and safety of this Union!"

Here was an appalling picture presented: dissolution of the Union, on either hand, and one or the other of the alternatives obliged to be taken. If persisted in, the opponents to the protective system, in the South, were to make the dissolution; if abandoned, its friends, in the North, were to do it. Two citizens, whose word was law to two great parties, denounced the same event, from opposite causes, and one of which causes was obliged to occur. The crisis required a hero-patriot at the head of the government, and Providence had reserved one for the occasion. There had been a design, in some, to bring Jackson forward for the Presidency, in 1816, and again, in 1820, when he held back. He was brought forward, in 1824, and defeated. These three successive postponements brought him to the right years, for which Providence seemed to have destined him, and which he would have missed, if elected at either of the three preceding elections. It was a reservation above human wisdom or foresight; and gave to the American people (at the moment they wanted him) the man of head, and heart, and nerve, to do what the crisis required: who possessed the confidence of the people, and who knew no apt we are to magnify partial into universal discourse, in any danger, but that of duty and patriotism; and had no feeling, in any extremity but that God and the people would sustain him. Such a man was wanted, in 1832, and was found found before, but reserved for use now.

The representatives from the South, generally but especially those from South Carolina, while depicting the distress of their section of the Union, and the reversed aspect which had come upon their affairs, less prosperous now than before the formation of the Union, attributed the whole cause of this change to the action of the federal government, in the levy and distribution of the public revenue; to the protective system. which was now assuming permanency, and increasing its exactions; and to a course of expenditure which carried to the North what was levied on the South. The democratic party generally concurred in the belief that this system was working injuriously upon the South, and that this injury ought to be relieved; that it was a cause of dissatisfaction with the Union, which a regard for the Union required to be redressed: but all did not concur in the cause of Southern eclipse in the race of prosperity which their representatives assigned; and, among them, Mr. Dallas, who thus spoke:

"The impressive and gloomy description of the senator from South Carolina [Mr. Hayne], as to the actual state and wretched prospects of his immediate fellow-citizens, awakens the liveliest sympathy, and should command our attention. It is their right; it is our duty. I cannot feel indifferent to the sufferings of any portion of the American people; and esteem it inconsistent with the scope and purpose of the federal constitution, that any majority, no matter how large, should connive at, or protract the oppression or misery of any minority, no matter how small. I disclaim and detest the idea of making one part subservient to another; of feasting upon the extorted substance of my countrymen; of enriching my own region, by draining the fertility and resources of a neighbor; of becoming wealthy with spoils which leave their legitimate owners impoverished and desolate. But, sir, l want proof of a fact, whose existence, at least as described, it is difficult even to conceive; and above all, I want the true causes of that fact to be ascertained; to be brought within the reach. of legislative remedy, and to have that remedy of a nature which may be applied without producing more mischiefs than those it proposes to cure. The proneness to exaggerate social evils is greatest with the most patriotic. Temporary embarrassment is sensitively apprehended to be permanent. Every day's experience teaches how

tress, and with what diff nation rescues itself from not do, sir, to act upon t delineations of a gifted or become enlisted, by ard crusade against establish it will not do to demolish del to the sounds of plai the temple at the call c

"What, sir, is the cause Has any gentleman vet it? Can any one do mor gumentatively assume it? nor competent to flatter. able senator from South C

'To add perfume Wasteful and ridiculo

But, if he has failed to dis the evils he deplores, who c the warm and indiscrimi with which he has assailed ing domestic manufactures a frankly avows that he would are other causes, besides t contributed to produce the depicted.' What are those what proportion have they of this dark shadowing is singly, and to all in combin tariff be at all felt or denou causes were not in operatio fact, its influence, its discrimi ities its oppressions, but for be shaken, by the elasticity haustless spirit of the South, the lion's mane?' These inc satisfactorily answered before required to legislate away an t be the root of all evil, let demolished. If its poisonous partial, let us preserve such noxious. If, as the luminary and salutary in itself, let us guished, because of the sha darkness which obscure its br its vivifying power.

"That other causes still, Southern distress, do exist, ca They combine with the one I h are equally unconnected with t policy. One of these it is pec advert to; and when I mentio able senators not to suppose t mint of taunt, of reproach, or tion. Regarding it as a misfor as a fault; as a disease inherit perhaps to be alleviated, but ould feel self-condemned w ther than as an existing fact. memerit, apart from the question most just considerations. I r haracter of Southern labor, in f duty and paany extremity ald sustain him. , and was found use now.

outh, generally Carolina, while section of the which had come s now than be-, attributed the e action of the and distribution otective system, anency, and inourse of expendiwhat was levied party generally his system was South, and that 1: that it was a Union, which a o be redressed; use of Southern ity which their mong them, Mr.

> v description of na [Mr. Hayne], hed prospects of wakens the livemand our attenr duty. I cannot s of any portion esteem it inconose of the federal , no matter how tract the oppres-, no matter how ie idea of making ; of feasting upon countrymen; of draining the feror; of becoming e their legitimate plate. But, sir, l stence, at least as o conceive; and, es of that fact to within the reach. have that remedy lied without proose it proposes to rate social evils is tic. Temporary pprehended to be ience teaches how nto universal distress, and with what difficulty an excited imagination rescues itself from despondency. It will not do, sir, to act upon the glowing or pathetic delineations of a gifted orator; it will not do to become enlisted, by ardent exhortations, in a crusade against established systems of policy; it will not do to demolish the walls of our citadel to the sounds of plaintiff eloquence, or fire the temple at the call of impassioned enthusians.

"What, sir, is the cause of Southern distress? Has any gentleman yet ventured to designate it? Can any one do more than suppose, or argumentatively assume it? I am neither willing nor competent to flatter. To praise the honorable senator from South Carolina, would be

'To add perfume to the violet— Wasteful and ridiculous excess.'

But, if he has failed to discover the source of the evils he deplores, who can unfold it? Amid the warm and indiscriminating denunciations with which he has assailed the policy of protecting domestic manufactures and native produce, he frankly avows that he would not 'deny that there are other causes, besides the tariff, which have contributed to produce the evils which he has depicted.' What are those 'other causes?' In what proportion have they acted? How much of this dark shadowing is ascribable to each singly, and to all in combination? Would the tariff be at all felt or denounced, if these other causes were not in operation? Would not, in fact its influence, its discriminations, its inequalites its oppressions, but for these 'other causes,' be shaken, by the elasticity and energy, and exhaustless spirit of the South, as 'dew-drops from the lion's mane?' These inquiries, sir, must be satisfactorily answered before we can be justly required to legislate away an entire system. If the the root of all evil, let it be exposed and demolished. If its poisonous exhalations be but partial, let us preserve such portions as are innoxious. If, as the luminary of day, it be pure and salutary in itself, let us not wish it extinguished, because of the shadows, clouds, and darkness which obscure its brightness or impede its vivifying power.

"That other causes still, Mr. President, for outhern distress, do exist, cannot be doubted. They combine with the one I have indicated, and are equally unconnected with the manufacturing policy. One of these it is peculiarly painful to dvert to; and when I mention it, I beg honorable senators not to suppose that I do it in the pint of taunt, of reproach, or of idle declamaion. Regarding it as a misfortune merely, not is a fault; as a disease inherited, not incurred; perhaps to be alleviated, but not eradicated, I ould feel self-condemned were I to treat it ther than as an existing fact, whose merit or merit, apart from the question under debate, is hielded from commentary by the highest and most just considerations. I refer, sir, to the haracter of Southern labor, in itself, and in its influence on others. Incapable of adaptation to the ever-varying changes of human society and existence, it retains the communities in which it is established, in a condition of apparent and comparative inertness. The lights of science, and the improvements of art, which vivify and accelerate elsewhere, cannot penetrate, or, if they do, penetrate with dilatory inefficiency, among its operatives. They are merely instinctive and passive. While the intellectual industry of other parts of this country springs elastically forward at every fresh impulse, and manual labor is propelled and redoubled by countless inventions, machines, and contrivances, instantly understood and at once exercised, the South remains stationary, inaccessible to such encouraging and invigorating aids. Nor is it possible to be wholly blind to the moral effect of this species of labor upon those freemen among whom it exists. A disrelish for humble and hardy occupation; a pride adverse to drudgery and toil; a dread that to partake in the employments allotted to color, may be accompanied also by its degradation, are natural and inevitable. The high and lofty qualities which, in other scenes and for other purposes, characterize and adorn our Southern brethren, are fatal to the enduring patience, the corporal exertion, and the painstaking simplicity, by which only a successful veomanry can be formed. When, in fact, sir, the senator from South Carolina asserts that 'slaves are too improvident, too incapable of that minute, constant, delicate attention, and that persevering industry which is essential to the success of manufacturing establishments,' he himself admits the defect in the condition of Southern labor, by which the progress of his favorite section must be retarded. He admits an inability to keep pace with the rest of the world. He admits an inherent weakness; a weakness neither engendered nor aggravated by the tariff-which, as societies are now constituted and directed, must drag in the rear, and be distanced in the common race.'

Thus spoke Mr. Dallas, senator from Pennsylvania; and thus speaking, gave offence to no Southern man; and seemed to be well justified in what he said, from the historical fact that the loss of ground, in the race of prosperity, had commenced in the South before the protective system began—before that epoch year, 1816, when it was first installed as a system, and so installed by the power of the South Carolina vote and talent. But the levy and expenditure of the federal government was, doubtless, the main cause of this Southern decadence—so unnatural in the midst of her rich staples—and which had commenced before 1816.

It so happened, that while the advocates of the American system were calling so earnestly for government protection, to enable them to sustain themselves at home, that the custom-house books were showing that a great many species of our manufactures, and especially the cotton, were going abroad to far distant countries; and sustaining themselves on remote theatres against all competition, and beyond the range of any help from our laws. Mr. Clay, himself, spoke of this exportation, to show the excellence of our fabrics, and that they were worth protection; I used the same fact to show that they were independent of protection; and said:

"And here I would ask, how many and which are the articles that require the present high rate of protection? Certainly not the cotton manufacture; for, the senator from Kentucky [Mr. Clay], who appears on this floor as the leading champion of domestic manufactures, and whose admissions of fact must be conclusive against his arguments of theory! this senator tells you, and dwells upon the disclosure with triumphant exultation, that American cottons are now exported to Asia, and sold at a profit in the cotton markets of Canton and Calcutta! Surely, sir, our tariff laws of 1824 and 1828 are not in force in Bengal and China. And I appeal to all mankind for the truth of the inference, that, if our cottons can go to these countries, and be sold at a profit without any protection at all, they can stay at home, and be sold to our own citizens, without loss, under a less protection than fifty and two hundred and fifty per centum! One fact, Mr. President, is said to be worth a thousand theories; I will add that it is worth a hundred thousand speeches; and this fact that the American cottons now traverse the one-half of the circumference of this globe--cross the equinoctial line; descend to the antipodes; 'seek foreign markets on the double theatre of British and Asiatic competition, and come off victorious from the contest-is a full and overwhelming answer to all the speeches that have been made, or ever can be made, in favor of high protecting duties on these cottons at home. The only effect of such duties is to cut off importations—to create monopoly at home—to enable our manufacturers to sell their goods higher to their own christian fellow-citizens than to the pagan worshippers of Fo and of Brahma! to enable the inhabitants of the Ganges and the Burrampooter to wear American cottons upon cheaper terms than the inhabitants of the Ohio and Mississippi. And every Western citizen knows the fact, that when these shipments of American cottons were making to the extremities of Asia, the price of these same cottons was actually raised twenty and twentyfive per cent., in all the towns of the West; with this further difference to our prejudice, that we can only pay for them in money, while the in-habitants of Asia make payment in the products "This is what the gentleman's admission effect of recovery from prostration, and in spit of their own country.

proved; but I do not come here to argue upon admissions, whether candid or unguarded, of the adversary speakers. I bring my own facts and proofs; and, really, sir, I have a mind to complain that the gentleman's admission about cottons has crippled the force of my argument; that it has weakened its effect by letting out half at a time, and destroyed its novelty, by an anticipated revelation. The truth is, I have this fact (that we exported domestic cottons) treasured up in my magazine of material! and intended to produce it, at the proper time, to show that we exported this article, not to Canton and Calcutta alone, but to all quarters of the globe; not a few cargoes only, by way of experiment, but in great quantities, as a regular trade, to the amount of a million and a quarter of dollars. annually; and that, of this amount, no less than forty thousand dollars' worth, in the year 1830. had done what the combined fleets and armies of the world could not do; it had scaled the rock of Gibraltar, penetrated to the heart of the British garrison, taken possession of his Britannic Majesty's soldiers, bound their arms, legs, and bodies, and strutted in triumph over the ramparts and batteries of that unattackable fortress. And now, sir, I will use no more of the gentleman's admissions; I will draw upon my own resources; and will show nearly the whole list of our domestic manufactures to be in the same flourishing condition with cottons, actually going abroad to seek competition, without protection in every foreign clime, and contending victoriously with foreign manufactures wherever they can encounter them. I read from the customhouse returns, of 1830—the last that has been printed. Listen to it: "This is the list of domestic manufactures exported to foreign countries. It comprehends the whole, or nearly the whole, of that long catalogue of items which the senator from Kentucky [Mr. Clay] read to us, on the second day of his discourse; and shows the whole to be going abroad, without a shadow of protection, to seek competition, in foreign markets, with the foreign goods of all the world. The list of articles I have read, contains near fifty varieties of manufactures (and I have omitted many minor articles) amounting, in value, to near six millions of dollars! And now behold the diversity of human reasoning! The senator from Kentucky exhi bits a list of articles manufactured in the United States, and argues that the slightest diminuted in the enormous protection they now enjoy, will overwhelm the whole in ruin, and cover the country with distress; I read the same identical list, to show that all these articles go abroad and contend victoriously with their foreign makers."

Mr. Clay had attributed to the tariffs of 182 and 1828 the reviving and returning prospent of the country, while in fact it was the mer of these tariffs, instead of 1 ness had been brought to disastrous period which en ment of the Bank of the U1 speriod of stagnation, of s up, of getting clear of loads ing afresh. It was the stre the burthen under which he trate, and getting on his West I knew that this was t our revived prosperity was of our own resources, inde spite of federal legislation; 1 my speech. I said:

"The fine effects of the h prosperity of the West have this floor: with how much i are indebted to the high to ands and our navigable riv tain we are indebted to the prosperity we enjoy. In al the soil, the people of the We have an abundant supply of heast and a large surplus to have the comfortable living w stes for itself in a rich soil they are poor. They have no works which imply the preser power! No Appian or Fla roads paved or McAdamized what are made upon borrowed ducts; no bridges of stone a able streams; no edifices ded no schools for the fine arts: n for which an ordinary scholar gre. And why none of those people of the West no taste f ments, for the useful and the literature? Certainly they h taste for them; but they hav enough for private and current to defray our current expense saries! without thinking of ments. We have no money! which has been told too oft too dolefully in the book of la was composed for the death mad-to be denied or suppre have no adequate supply of mo Have they no exports? sbroad? Certainly they have the marching myriads of living taking their departure from West, defiling through the goi berland, the Alleghany, and mountains, or traversing the pla diverging as they march, and selves all over that vast segme ral circle which lies between the Mississippi and the estuary to argue upon nguarded, of the 7 own facts and a mind to comssion about cotmy argument; letting out half elty, by an anti-3, I have this fact ttons) treasured 1! and intended ie, to show that Canton and Calof the globe; not experiment, but lar trade, to the arter of dollars. unt, no less than n the year 1830 eets and armies had scaled the o the heart of the on of his Britaneir arms, legs, and h over the ramtackable fortress. re of the gentlew upon my own ly the whole list to be in the same ns, actually going ithout protection. contending victo> manufactures excomprehends the f that long cataor from Kentucky second day of his hole to be going protection, to seek s, with the foreign list of articles I varieties of manumany minor artiear six millions of diversity of human n Kentucky exhiured in the United ightest diminution ey now enjoy, wil in, and cover th the same identica articles go abroa their foreign rival

Vol. I.—18

res wherever they rom the custom-

ast that has been the tariffs of 1824 turning prospering t it was the men ration, and in spit of these tariffs, instead of by their help. Business had been brought to a stand during the disastrous period which ensued the establishment of the Bank of the United States. It was a period of stagnation, of settlement, of paying, up, of getting clear of loads of debt; and starting afresh. It was the strong man, freed from the burthen under which he had long been prostate, and getting on his feet again. In the West I knew that this was the process, and that our revived prosperity was entirely the result of our own resources, independent of, and in spite of federal legislation; and so declared it in my speech. I said:

"The fine effects of the high tariff upon the prosperity of the West have been celebrated on this floor: with how much reason, let facts respond and the people judge! I do not think we are indebted to the high tariff for our fertile lands and our navigable rivers; and I am certain we are indebted to these blessings for the prosperity we enjoy. In all that comes from the soil, the people of the West are rich. They have an abundant supply of food for man and heast, and a large surplus to send abroad. They have the comfortable living which industry crestes for itself in a rich soil; but, beyond this, they are poor. They have none of the splendid works which imply the presence of the moneyed power! No Appian or Flaminian ways; no mads paved or McAdamized; no canals, except what are made upon borrowed means; no aqueducts; no bridges of stone across our innumerable streams; no edifices dedicated to eternity; no schools for the fine arts: not a public library for which an ordinary scholar would not apologge. And why none of those things? Have the people of the West no taste for public improvements, for the useful and the fine arts, and for literature? Certainly they have a very strong taste for them; but they have no money! not enough for private and current uses, not enough to defray our current expenses, and buy necessiries! without thinking of public improvements. We have no money! and that is a tale which has been told too often here—chanted too volefully in the book of lamentations which was composed for the death of the Maysville mid-to be denied or suppressed now. They have no adequate supply of money. And why? Have they no exports? Nothing to send abroad? Certainly they have exports. Behold the marching myriads of living animals annually taking their departure from the heart of the West, defiling through the gorges of the Cumberland, the Alleghany, and the Apalachian mountains, or traversing the plains of the South, diverging as they march, and spreading themselves all over that vast segment of our territomal circle which lies between the debouches of the Mississippi and the estuary of the Potomac!

Behold, on the other hand, the flying steamboats, and the fleets of floating arks, loaded with the products of the forest, the farm, and the pasture, following the course of our noble rivers, and bearing their freights to that great city which revives, upon the banks of the Mississippi, the name* of the greatest of the emperors that ever reigned upon the banks of the Tiber, and who eclipsed the glory of his own heroic exploits by giving an order to his legions never to levy a contribution of salt upon a Roman citizen! Behold this double line of exports, and observe the refluent currents of gold and silver which result from them! Large are the supplies-millions are the amount which is annually poured into the West from these double exportations; enough to cover the face of the earth with magnificent improvements, and to cram every industrious pocket with gold and silver. But where is this money? for it is not in the country! Where does it go? for go it does, and scarcely leaves a vestige of its transit behind! Sir, it goes to the Northeast! to the seat of the American system! there it goes! and thus it goes!"

Mr. Clay had commenced his speech with an apology for what might be deemed failing powers on account of advancing age. He said he was getting old, and might not be able to fulfil the expectation, and requite the attention, of the attending crowd; and wished the task could have fallen to younger and abler hands. This apology for age when no diminution of mental or bodily vigor was perceptible, induced several speakers to commence their repliés with allusions to it, generally complimentary, but not admitting the fact. Mr. Hayne gracefully said, that he had lamented the advances of age, and mourned the decay of his elequence, so eloquently as to prove that it was still in full vigor; and that he had made an able and ingenious argument, fully sustaining his high reputation as an accomplished orator. General Smith, of Maryland, said that he could not complain himself of the infirmities of age, though older than the senator from Kentucky, nor could find in his years any apology for the insufficiency of his speech. Mr. Clay thought this was intended to be a slur upon him, and replied in a spirit which gave rise to the following sharp encounter:

"Mr. Smith then rose, and said he was sorry to find that he had unintentionally offended the honorable gentleman from Kentucky. In referring to the vigorous age he himself enjoyed, he had not supposed he should give offence to others who complained of the infirmities of age. The gentleman from Kentucky was the last who should take the remark as disparaging to his vigor and personal appearance; for, when that gentleman spoke to us of his age, he heard a young lady near him exclaim—"Old, why I think he is mighty pretty." The honorable gentleman, on Friday last, made a similitude where none existed. I, said Mr. S., had suggested the necessity of mutual forbearance in settling the tariff, and, thereupon, the gentleman vociferated loudly and angrily about removals from office. He said I was a leader in the system. I deny the fact. I never exercised the least influence in effecting a removal, and on the contrary. I interfered, successfully, to prevent the removal of two gentlemen in office. I am charged with making a committee on roads and canals, adverse to internal improvement. If this be so, it is by mistake. I certainly supposed every gentleman named on that committee but one to be friendly to internal improvement. To the committee on manufactures I assigned four out of five who were known to be friendly to the protective system. The rights of the minority, he had endeavored, also, in arranging the committee, to secure. The appointment of the committees he had found one of the most difficult and onerous tasks he had ever undertaken. Onethird of the house were lawyers, all of whom wanted to be put upon some important committee. The oath which the senator had tendered, he hoped he would not take. In the year 1795, Mr. S. said, he had sustained a protective duty against the opposition of a member from Pittsburg. Previous to the year 1822, he had always given incidental support to manufactures, in fixing the tariff. He was a warm friend to the tariff of 1816, which he still regarded as a wise and beneficial law. He hoped, then, the gentleman would not take his oath.

<sup>* &</sup>quot;Aurelian," whose name was given to the military station (presidium) which was afterwards corrupted into "Opleans."

"Mr. Clay placed, he said, a high value on the compliment of which the honorable senator was the channel of communication; and he the more valued it, inasmuch as he did not recollect more than once before, in his life, to have received a similar compliment. He was happy to find that the honorable gentleman disclaimed the system of proscription; and he should, with his approbation, hereafter cite his authority in opposition. to it. The Committee on Roads and Canals. whatever were the gentleman's intentions in constructing it, had a majority of members whose votes and speeches against internal improvements were matter of notoriety. The gentleman's appeal to his acts in '95, is perfectly safe; for, old as I am, my knowledge of his course does not extend back that far. He would take the period which the gentleman named, since 1822. It comes, then, to this: The honorable gentleman was in favor of protecting manufactures; but he had turned—I need not use the word-he has abandoned manufactures.

Thus:

'Old politicians chew on wisdom past, And totter on in blunders to the last,'

"Mr. Smith.—The last allusion is unworthy of the gentleman. Totter, sir, I totter? Though some twenty years older than the gentleman, I can yet stand firm, and am yet able to correct his errors. I could take a view of the gentleman's course, which would show how inconsistent he has been. [Mr. Clay exclaimed: 'Take it, sir, take it—I dare you.' [Cries of "order."] No, sir, said Mr. S., I will not take it. I will not so far disregard what is due to the dignity of the Senate."

Mr. Hayne concluded one of his speeches with a declaration of the seriousness of the Southern resistance to the tariff, and with a feeling appeal to senators on all sides of the house to meet their Southern brethren in the spirit of conciliation, and restore harmony to a divided people by removing from among them the never-failing source of contention. He said:

"Let not gentlemen so far deceive themselves as to suppose that the opposition of the South to the protecting system is not based on high and lofty principles. It has nothing to do with party politics, or the mere elevation of men. It rises far above all such considerations. Nor is it influenced chiefly by calculations of interest but is founded in much nobler impulses. The instinct of self-interest might have taught us an easier way of relieving ourselves from this oppression. It wanted but the will, to have supplied ourselves with every article embraced in the protective system, free of duty, without any other participation on our part than a simple consent to receive them. But, sir, we have scorned in a contest for our rights, to resort to any but open and fair means to maintain them. The spirit with which we have entered into this business, is akin to that which was kindled in the bosom of our fathers when they were made the victims of oppression; and if it has not displayed itself in the same way, it is because we have ever cherished the strongest feelings of confratemity towards our brethren, and the warmest and most devoted attachment to the Union. If we have been, in any degree, divided among ourselves in this matter, the source of that division, let gentlemen be assured, has not arisen so much from any difference of opinion as to the true character of the oppression, as from the different degrees of hope of redress. All parties have for years past been looking forward to this crisis for the fulfilment of their hopes, or the confirmation of their fears. And God grant that the result may be auspicious.

"Sir, I call upon gentlemen on all sides of the House to meet us in the true spirit of conciliation and concession. Remove, I carnestly beseeb you, from among us, this never-failing source of contention. Dry up at its source this fountain of the waters of bitterm mony which has been of affection and confidence ed. And it is in your pout there is but one my which it can—by doing ed he assured that he to who indebted for this blessing the second founder of the regarded, in all aftertimangel visiting the trouble cal dissensions, and restricted the second founder of the regarded, in all aftertimangel visiting the trouble cal dissensions, and restricted the second founder of the second founder of

I take pleasure in quot Hayne. They are words of tice—of sorrow more than ton more than menace——of supplication for forbe appeal to the high tariff p al catastrophe by ceasing a deration, his expostulation appeal—had no effect on the tective system continued theme throughout the session any sensible amelior though with a reduction of comfort and convenience President Jackson.

CHAPTER

PUBLIC LANDS.-DISTRIBU'

THE efforts which had bee ameliorate the public land of their sale and dispositio their effect—the effect w perseverance in a just cause ed to a third reading in the price of lands which had less than one half-to fifty the pre-emption principle h blished, securing the settle fixed price. Two other pr nations to actual settlers, a the States in which they li within a reasonable and lim that was wanting to compl system which the graduat and these bills were making promised them an eventua indications were favorable dom past, the last.

sion is unworthy totter? Though the gentleman, I able to correct w of the gentlew how inconsisxclaimed: 'Take Tries of "order."] take it. I will e to the dignity his speeches with s of the Southern h a feeling appeal buse to meet their it of conciliation, led people by reever-failing source

eceive themselves

on of the South to ased on high and g to do with partion of men. It erations. Nor is tions of interest. r impulses. The have taught us an res from this opwill, to have supcticle embraced in luty, without any than a simple conwe have scorned resort to any but ntain them. The entered into this h was kindled in hev were made the has not displayed ause we have ever s of confraternity he warmest and he Union. If we vided among ource of that division. not arisen so much on as to the true from the different .ll parties have for ard to this crisis es. or the confirlod grant that the on all sides of the pirit of conciliation earnestly beseech er-failing source of urce this fountain of the waters of bitterness. Restore that harmony which has been disturbed—that mutual affection and confidence which has been impaired. And it is in your power to do it this day; but there is but one means under heaven by which it can—by doing equal justice to all. And be assured that he to whom the country shall be indebted for this blessing, will be considered as the second founder of the republic. He will be regarded, in all aftertimes, as the ministering angel visiting the troubled waters of our political dissensions, and restoring to the element its healing virtues."

I take pleasure in quoting these words of Mr. Hayne. They are words of moderation and of justice—of sorrow more than anger—of expostulation more than menace—of loyalty to the Union—of supplication for forbearance;—and a moving appeal to the high tariff party to avert a national catastrophe by ceasing to be unjust. His moderation, his expostulation, his supplication, his appeal—had no effect on the majority. The protective system continued to be an exasperating them throughout the session, which ended without any sensible amelioration of the system, though with a reduction of duty on some articles of comfort and convenience: as recommended by President Jackson.

CHAPTER LXX.

PUBLIC LANDS.-DISTRIBUTION TO THE STATES

THE efforts which had been making for years to ameliorate the public land system in the feature of their sale and disposition, had begun to have their effect—the effect which always attends perseverance in a just cause. A bill had ripened to a third reading in the Senate reducing the price of lands which had been long in market less than one half-to fifty cents per acre-and the pre-emption principle had been firmly established, securing the settler in his home at a fixed price. Two other principles, those of donations to actual settlers, and of the cession to the States in which they lie of all land not sold within a reasonable and limited period, were all that was wanting to complete the ameliorated system which the graduation bills proposed; and these bills were making a progress which promised them an eventual success. All the indications were favorable for the speedy accomplishment of these great reforms in the land system when the session of 1831-'32 opened, and with it the authentic annunciation of the extinction of the public debt within two years-which event would remove the objection of many to interfering with the subject, the lands being pledged to that object. This session, preceding the presidential election, and gathering up so many subjects to go into the canvass, fell upon the lands for that purpose, and in the way in which magazines of grain in republican Rome, and money in the treasury in democratic Athens, were accustomed to be dealt with by candidates for office in the periods of election; that is to say, were proposed for distribution. A plan for dividing out among the States for a given period the money arising from the sale of the lands, was reported from the Committee on Manufactures by Mr. Clay, a member of that committee-and which properly could have nothing to do with the sale and disposition of the lands. That report, after a general history, and view of the public lands, came to these conclusions:

"Upon full and thorough consideration, the committee have come to the conclusion that it is inexpedient either to reduce the price of the public lands, or to cede them to the new States. They believe, on the contrary, that sound policy coincides with the duty which has devolved on the general government to the whole of the States, and the whole of the people of the Union, and enjoins the preservation of the existing system as having been tried and approved after long and triumphant experience. But, in consequence of the extraordinary financial prosperity which the United States enjoy, the question merits examination, whether, whilst the general government steadily retains the control of this great national resource in its own hands, after the payment of the public debt, the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, no longer needed to meet the ordinary expenses of government, may not be beneficially appropriated to some other objects for a limited time.

"Governments, no more than individuals, should be seduced or intoxicated by prosperity, however flattering or great it may be. The country now happily enjoys it in a most unexampled degree. We have abundant reason to be grateful for the blessings of peace and plenty, and freedom from debt. But we must be forgetful of all history and experience, if we indulge the delusive hope that we shall always be exempt from calamity and reverses. Seasons of national adversity, of suffering, and of war, will assuredly come. A wise government should expect, and provide for them. Instead of wasting or squandering its resources in a period of general prosperity, it should husband and cherish them for those times of trial and difficulty, which, in the dispensations of Providence, may be certainly anticipated. Entertaining these views, and as the proceeds of the sales of the public lands are not wanted for ordinary revenue, which will be abundantly supplied from the imposts, the committee respectfully recommend that an appropriation of them be made to some other purpose, for a limited time, subject to be resumed in the contingency of war. Should such an event unfortunately occur, the fund may be withdrawn from its peaceful destination, and applied in aid of other means, to the vigorous prosecution of the war, and, afterwards to the payment of any debt which may be contracted in consequence of its existence. And when peace shall be again restored, and the debt of the new war shall have been extinguished, the fund may be again appropriated to some fit object other than that of the ordinary expenses of government. Thus may this great resource be preserved and rendered subservient, in peace and in war, to the common benefit of all the States composing'the

"The inquiry remains, what ought to be the specific application of the fund under the restriction stated? After deducting the ten per cent. proposed to be set apart for the new States, a portion of the committee would have preferred that the residue should be applied to the objects of internal improvement, and colonization of the free blacks, under the direction of the general government. But a majority of the committee believes it better, as an alternative for the scheme of cession to the new States, and as being most, likely to give general satisfaction, that the residue be divided among the twenty-four States, according to their federal representative population, to be applied to education, internal improvement, or colonization, or to the redemption of any existing debt contracted for internal improvements, as each State, judging for itself, shall deem most conformable with its own interests and policy. Assuming the annual product of the sales of the public lands to be three millions of dollars, the table hereto annexed, marked C, shows what each State would be entitled to receive, according to the principle of division which has been stated. In order that the propriety of the proposed appropriation should again, at a day not very far distant, be brought under the review of Congress, the committee would recommend that it be limited to a period of five years, subject to the condition of war not breaking out in the mean time. By an appropriation so restricted as to time, each State will be enabled to estimate the probable extent of its proportion, and to adapt its measures of education, improvement, colonization, or extinction of existing debt, accordingly.

"In conformity with the views and principles which the committee have now submitted, they beg leave to report a bill, entitled 'An act to appropriate, for a limited time, the proceeds of the sales of the public lands of the United States.'"

The impropriety of originating such a bill in the committee on manufactures was so clear that acquiescence in it was impossible. The chairman of the committee on public lands immediately moved its reference to that committee; and although there was a majority for it in the Senate, and for the bill as it came from the committee on manufactures, yet the reference was immediately voted; and Mr. Clay's report and bill sent to that committee, invested with general authority over the whole subject. That committee, through its chairman, Mr. King of Alabama, made a counter report, from which some extracts are here given:

"The committee ventures to suggest that the view which the committee on manufactures has taken of the federal domain, is fundamentally erroneous; that it has misconceived the true principles of national policy with respect to wild lands; and, from this fundamental mistake, and radical misconception, have resulted the great errors which pervade the whole structure of their report and bill.

"The committee on manufactures seem to contemplate the federal domain merely as an object of revenue, and to look for that revenue solely from the receivers of the land offices; when the science of political economy has ascertained such a fund to be chiefly, if not exclusively, valuable under the aspect of population and cultivation, and the eventual extraction of revenue from the people in its customary modes of taxes and imposts.

"The celebrated Edmund Burke is supposed to have expressed the sum total of political wisdom on this subject, in his well-known propositions to convert the forest lands of the British crown into private property; and this committee, to spare themselves further argument, and to extinguish at once a political fallacy which ought not to have been broached in the nimetenth century, will make a brief quotation from the speech of that eminent man.

the forest lands will not be so considerable as many have imagined; and I conceive it would be unwise to screw it up to the utmost, or even to suffer bidders to enhance, according to their eagerness, the purchase of objects wherein the expense of that purchase may weaken the captal to be employed in their cultivation.

The principal revenue which I propose to draw from these uncultivated wastes, is to spring from the improvement and cultivation of the kingdom

erents infinitely more advanues of the Crown, than the landed estates which it can it is thus that I would dispose he landed estates of the office into the mass of private they will come, through the ion, and through the political tate, into well-regulated refuse would fall an expensible influence which attends

"This committee takes le sentiments here expressed 1 inspirations of political wisc and justice have been tested countries, and particularly in our own country. lands of the United States instructive lessons of the value of cultivation, and the culations. These lands w time they were acquired by pay off the public debt imr the government, and to furi for distribution. Calculati millions were made upon tl treachery was raised again: then Secretary of the Treas the year 1791, in which the visionary calculations was e value of the lands soberly s amon twenty cents per acr periment of nearly fifty ye the sales of the public land the public debt, have bare penses of managing the lar nue derived from cultivation cipal and interest of the del supported the federal gove expenditure infinitely beyon those who established it. of the sales are but thirty-e lars, from which the large tem are to be deducted; wl from the customs, after pay collection, amount to $556 mense amount of revenue & of soil reduced to private duties are derived from i goods are received in excha the exports, with a small d ducts of the sea, are the and the forest. This is it is only one half of the half must be shown, and v vation of the soil, in its giving birth to commerce supplying employment to professions connected wit branches of national indus ness of selling the land is a operation, auxiliary to no jurious to the young States of their currency, and exte of the federal government and principles submitted, they led 'An act to he proceeds of of the United such a bill in ras so clear that le. The chairlands immedihat committee: ty for it in the e from the comreference was ay's report and ested with gensubject. That n, Mr. King of suggest that the anufactures has s fundamentally nceived the true n respect to wild tal mistake, and sulted the great ole structure of ort, from which

actures seem to in merely as an or that revenue he land offices; onomy has ascerfly, if not excluect of population al extraction of customary modes

arke is supposed l of political wis--known proposids of the British and this commiter argument, and al fallacy which ched in the nineef quotation from

from the sale of considerable as onceive it would e utmost, or even ecording to their ects wherein the weaken the capitivation. * * * I propose to draw s, is to spring from n of the kingdom events infinitely more advantageous to the revelanded estates which it can hold. * * * * It is thus that I would dispose of the unprofitable landed estates of the Crown-throw them into the mass of private property—by which they will come, through the course of circulation, and through the political secretions of the state, into well-regulated revenue. * * * * Thus would fall an expensive agency, with all the influence which attends it.'

sentiments here expressed by Mr. Burke are the of science to the industrial pursuits. inspirations of political wisdom; that their truth and justice have been tested in all ages and all countries, and particularly in our own age and in our own country. The history of the public lands of the United States furnishes the most instructive lessons of the inutility of sales, the value of cultivation, and the fallacy of large calculations. These lands were expected, at the time they were acquired by the United States, to pay off the public debt immediately, to support the government, and to furnish large surplusses for distribution. Calculations for a thousand millions were made upon them, and a charge of treachery was raised against General Hamilton, then Secretary of the Treasury, for his report in the year 1791, in which the fallacy of all these visionary calculations was exposed, and the real value of the lands soberly set down at an averamof twenty cents per acre. Yet, after an experiment of nearly fifty years, it is found that the sales of the public lands, so far from paying the public debt, have barely defrayed the expenses of managing the lands; while the revenue derived from cultivation has paid both principal and interest of the debts of two wars, and supported the federal government in a style of expenditure infinitely beyond the conceptions of those who established it. The gross proceeds of the sales are but thirty-eight millions of dollars, from which the large expenses of the system are to be deducted; while the clear receipts from the customs, after paying all expenses of collection, amount to $556,443,830. This imcollection, amount to $556,443,830. mense amount of revenue springs from the use of soil reduced to private property. For the duties are derived from imported goods; the goods are received in exchange for exports; and the exports, with a small deduction for the products of the sea, are the produce of the farm and the forest. This is a striking view, but it is only one half of the picture. The other half must be shown, and will display the cultivation of the soil, in its immense exports, as giving birth to commerce and navigation, and supplying employment to all the trades and professions connected with these two grand branches of national industry; while the business of selling the land is a meagre and barren operation, auxiliary to no useful occupation, injurious to the young States, by exhausting them of their currency, and extending the patronage machinery of the land office department. nues of the Crown, than the rents of the best has been the difference between the revenue received from the sales and from the cultivation of the land; but no powers of cultivation can carry out the difference, and show what it will be: for, while the sale of the land is a single operation, and can be performed but once, the extraction of revenue from its cultivation is an annual and perpetual process, increasing in productiveness through all time, with the increase of population, the amelioration of soils, the im-"This committee takes leave to say that the provement of the country, and the application

> "This committee have said that the bill reported by the Committee on Manufactures, to divide the proceeds of the sales of public lands among the several States, for a limited time, is a bill wholly inadmissible in principle, and essentially erroneous in its details.

"They object to the principle of the bill, because it proposes to change—and that most injuriously and fatally for the new States, the character of their relation to the federal government, on the subject of the public lands. That relation, at present, imposes on the federal government the character of a trustee, with the power and the duty of disposing of the public lands in a liberal and equitable manner. The principle of the bill proposes to substitute an individual State interest in the lands, and would be perfectly equivalent to a division of the lands among the States; for, the power of legislation being left in their hands, with a direct interest in their sales, the old and populous States would necessarily consider the lands as their own, and govern their legislation accordingly. Sales would be forbid or allowed; surveys stopped or advanced; prices raised or lowered; donations given or denied; old French and Spanish claims confirmed or rejected; settlers ousted; emigrations stopped, precisely as it suited the interest of the old States; and this interest, in every instance, would be precisely opposite to the interest of the new States. In vain would some just men wish to act equitably by these new States; their generous efforts would expose them to attacks at home. A new head of electioneering would be opened; candidates for Congress would rack their imaginations, and exhaust their arithmetic, in the invention and display of rival projects for the extraction of gold from the new States; and he that would promise best for promoting the emigration of dollars from the new States, and preventing the emigration of people to them, would be considered the best qualified for federal legislation. If this plan of distribution had been in force heretofore, the price of the public lands would not have been reduced, in 1819-'20, nor the relief laws passed, which exonerated the new States from a debt of near twenty millions of dollars. If adopted now, these States may bid adieu to their sovereignty and independence! They will become the feudatory vassals of the paramount States! Their of the federal government in the complicated subjection and dependence will be without limit or remedy. The five years mentioned in the bill had as well be fifty or five hundred. The State that would surrender its sovereignty, for ten per centum of its own money, would eclipse the folly of Esau, and become a proverb in the annals of folly with those who have sold their birthright for 'a mess of pottage.'

After these general objections to the principle and policy of the distribution project, the report of the Committee on Public Lands went on to show its defects, in detail, and to exhibit the special injuries to which it would subject the new States, in which the public lands lay. It

"The details of the bill are pregnant with injustice and unsound policy.

"1. The rule of distribution among the States makes no distinction between those States which did or did not make cessions of their vacant land to the federal government. Massachusetts and Maine, which are now selling and enjoying their vacant lands in their own right, and Connecticut, which received a deed for two millions of acres from the federal government, and sold them for her own benefit, are put upon an equal footing with Virginia, which ceded the immense domain which lies in the forks of the Ohio and Mississippi, and Georgia, which ceded territory for two States. This is manifestly unjust.

"2. The bill proposes benefits to some of the States, which they cannot receive without dishonor, nor refuse without pecuniary prejudice. Several States deny the power of the federal government to appropriate the public moneys to objects of internal improvement or to colonization. A refusal to accept their dividends would subject such States to loss; to receive them, would imply a sale of their constitutional principles for so much money. Considerations connected with the harmony and perpetuity of our confederacy should forbid any State to be compelled to choose between such alternatives.

"3. The public lands, in great part, were granted to the federal government to pay the debts of the Revolutionary War; it is notorious that other objects of revenue, to wit, duties on imported goods, have chiefly paid that debt. It would seem, then, to be just to the donors of the land, after having taxed them in other ways to pay the debt, that the land should go in relief of their present taxes; and that, so long as any revenue may be derived from them, it should go into the common treasury, and diminish, by so much, the amount of their annual contributions.

"4. The colonization of free people of color, on the western coast of Africa, is a delicate question for Congress to touch. It connects itself indissolubly with the slave question, and cannot be agitated by the federal legislature, without rousing and alarming the apprehensions of all the slaveholding States, and lighting up lately blazed in the Missouri question. The harmony of the States, and the durability of this confederacy, interdict the legislation of the federal legislature upon this subject. The existence of slavery in the United States is local and sectional. It is confined to the Southern and Middle States. If it is an evil, it is an evil to them. and it is their business to say so. If it is to be removed, it is their business to remove it. Other States put an end to slavery, at their own time. and in their own way, and without interference from federal or State legislation, or organized societies. The rights of equality demand, for the remaining States, the same freedom of thought and immunity of action. Instead of assuming the business of colonization, leave it to the slaveholding States to do as they please; and leave them their resources to carry into effect their resolves. Raise no more money from them than the exigencies of the government require, and then they will have the means, if they feel the inclination, to rid themselves of a burden which it is theirs to bear and theirs to remove.

"5. The sum proposed for distribution, though nominally to consist of the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands, is, in reality, to consist of their gross proceeds. The term net, as applied to revenue from land offices or customhouses, is quite different. In the latter, its signification corresponds with the fact, and implies a deduction of all the expenses of collection; in the former, it has no such implication, for the expenses of the land system are defrayed by appropriations out of the treasury. To make the whole sum received from the land offices a fund for distribution, would be to devolve the heavy expenses of the land system upon the customhouse revenue: in other words, to take so much from the custom-house revenue to be divided among the States. This would be no small item. According to the principles of the account drawn up against the lands, it would embrace-

"1. Expenses of the general land office.

"2. Appropriations for surveying.

"3. Expenses of six surveyor generals' offices.

"4. Expenses of forty-four land offices. "5. Salaries of eighty-eight registers and re-

"6. Commissions on sales to registers and receivers.

"7. Allowance to receivers for depositing money.

8. Interest on money paid for extinguishing Indian titles.

"9. Annuities to Indians.

"10. Future Indian treaties for extinguishing

"11. Expenses of annual removal of Indians.

"These items exceed a million of dollars. They are on the increase, and will continue to grow at least until the one hundred and thirteen million five hundred and seventy-seven thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine acres of land within the limits of the States and territories now covered the fires of the extinguished conflagration which by Indian title shall be released from such title

The reduction of these ite come, from the proposed fi must certainly be made to between the profession and bill; and this reduction mig thing for division among th gross proceeds of the land s were large; they exceeded ars; but they were equally ago, and gave birth to some lations then, which vanishe dine of the land revenue ion. The proceeds of 181 those of 1823 were $916. sales twelve years ago resul sive issue of bank paper, v were produced by the sever by Congress. A detached of the product of the sales; of years presents the only a rectness; and this average would be about one million So that after all expenses ar five per centum now payabl and ten per centum propose may be nothing worth dividir certainly nothing worth the which the assumption of the tion must excite among the nothing worth the danger of States which deny the powe improvement, to choose be which involve a sale of thei side, or a loss of their divide certainly nothing worth the States, which must result for of their territory into the those who are to have the 1 over it, and a direct interest to degrade and impoverish t

The two sets of reports w numbers, and the distribution in the Senate, and passed tha arrested in the House of I motion to postpone it to a day -equivalent to rejection-p majority: and thus this firs distribution of public prop time, gotten rid of.

CHAPTER

SETTLEMENT OF FRENCH A CLAIMS.

Ir was now near thirty ye vince of Louisiana had been it a mass of population own question. The durability of this ation of the fede-The existence is local and secuthern and Midan evil to them, o. If it is to be remove it. Other their own time, out interference or organized sodemand, for the dom of thought ead of assuming e it to the slavelease; and leave into effect their from them than ent require, and if they feel the a burden which remove. tribution, though proceeds of the eality, to consist term net, as apfices or customthe latter, its fices or customthe latter, its he fact, and imises of collection; plication, for the defrayed by apy. To make the nd offices a fund evolve the heavy ipon the customto take so much e to be divided dd be no small es of the account rould embrace and office.

ying.
generals' offices.
nd offices.
registers and re-

registers and refor depositing or extinguishing

or extinguishing

oval of Indians of dollars. They time to grow at thirteen million thousand eight land within the ies now covered from such title The reduction of these items, present and to come, from the proposed fund for distribution, must certainly be made to avoid a contradiction between the profession and the practice of the bill; and this reduction might leave little or nothing for division among the distributees. The gross proceeds of the land sales for the last year were large; they exceeded three millions of dollars; but they were equally large twelve years aro, and gave birth to some extravagant calculations then, which vanished with a sudden dedine of the land revenue to less than one milion. The proceeds of 1819 were $3,274,422; those of 1823 were $916,528. The excessive siles twelve years ago resulted from the excessive issue of bank paper, while those of 1831 were produced by the several relief laws passed by Congress. A detached year is no evidence of the product of the sales; an average of a series of years presents the only approximation to correctness; and this average of the last ten years would be about one million and three quarters. So that after all expenses are deducted, with the five per centum now payable to the new States, and ten per centum proposed by the bill, there may be nothing worth dividing among the States; ertainly nothing worth the alarm and agitation which the assumption of the colonization question must excite among the slaveholding States; nothing worth the danger of compelling the old States which deny the power of federal internal improvement, to choose between alternatives which involve a sale of their principles on one side, or a loss of their dividends on the other; certainly nothing worth the injury to the new States, which must result from the conversion of their territory into the private property of those who are to have the power of legislation over it, and a direct interest in using that power to degrade and impoverish them."

The two sets of reports were printed in extra numbers, and the distribution bill largely debated in the Senate, and passed that body: but it was arrested in the House of Representatives. A motion to postpone it to a day beyond the session—equivalent to rejection—prevailed by a small majority: and thus this first attempt to make distribution of public property, was, for the time, gotten rid of.

CHAPTER LXXI.

SETTLEMENT OF FRENCH AND SPANISH LAND CLAIMS.

It was now near thirty years since the province of Louisiana had been acquired, and with it a mass of population owning and inhabiting lands, the titles to which in but few instances ever had been perfected into complete grants; and the want of which was not felt in a new country where land was a gratuitous gift to every cultivator, and where the government was more anxious for cultivation than the people were to give it. The transfer of the province from France and Spain to the United States, found the mass of the land titles in an inchoate state; and coming under a government which made merchandise out of the soil, and among a people who had the Anglo-Saxon avidity for landed property, some legislation and tribunal was necessary to separate the perfect from the imperfect titles; and to provide for the examination and perfection of the latter. The treaty of cession protected every thing that was "property;" and an inchoate title fell as well within that category as a perfect one. Without the treaty stipulation the law of nations would have operated the same protection, and to the same degree; and that in the case of a conquered as well as of a ceded people. The principle was acknowledged: the question was to apply it, and to carry out the imperfect titles as the ceding government would have done, if it had continued. This was attempted through boards of commissioners, placed under limitations and restrictions, which cut off masses of claims to which there was no objection except in the confirming law; and with the obligation of reporting to Congress for its sanction the claims which it found entitled to confirmation: -a condition which, in the distance of the lands and claimants from the seat of government, their ignorance of our laws and customs, their habitude to pay for justice, and their natural distrust of a new and alien domination, was equivalent in its effects to the total confiscation of most of the smaller claims, and the quarter or the half confiscation of the larger ones in the division they were compelled to make with agents-or in the forced sales which despair, or necessity forced upon them. This state of things had been going on for almost thirty years in all Louisiana-ameliorated occasionally by slight enlargements of the powers of the boards, and afterwards of the courts to which the business was transferred, but failing at two essential points, first, of acknowledging the validity of all claims which might in fact have been completed if the French or Spanish government had continued under which they originated; secondly in not providing a cheap, speedy and local tribunal to decide summarily upon claims, and definitively when their decisions were in their favor.

In this year but after an immense number of people had been ruined, and after the country had been afflicted for a generation with the curse of unsettled land titles-an act was passed, founded on the principle which the case required, and approximating to the process which was necessary to give it effect. The act of 1832 admitted the validity of all inchoate claims-all that might in fact have been perfected under the previous governments; and established a local tribunal to decide on the spot, making two classes of claims-one coming under the principle acknowledged, the other not coming under that principle, and destitute of merit in law or equity—but with the ultimate reference of their decisions to Congress for its final sanction. The principle of the act, and its mode of operation, was contained in the first section, and in these words:

"That it shall be the duty of the recorder of land titles in the State of Missouri, and two commissioners to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to examine all the unconfirmed claims to land in that State, heretofore filed in the office of the said recorder, according to law, founded upon any incomplete grant, concession, warrant, or order of survey, issued by the authority of France or Spain, prior to the tenth day of March, one thousand eight hundred and four; and to class the same so as to show, first, what claims, in their opinion, would, in fact, have been confirmed, according to the laws, usages, and customs of the Spanish government, and the practices of the Spanish authorities under them, at New Orleans, if the government under which said claims originated had continued in Missouri; and secondly, what claims, in their opinion, are destitute of merit, in law or equity, under such laws, usages, customs, and practice of the Spanish authorities aforesaid; and shall also assign their reasons for the opinions so to be given. And in examining and classing such claims, the recorder and commissioners shall take into consideration, as well the testimony heretofore taken by the boards of commissioners and recorder of land titles upon those claims, as such other testimony as may be admissible under the rules heretofore existing for taking such testimony before said boards and recorder: and all such testimony shall be taken within twelve months after the passage of this act."

Under this act a thirty years' disturbance of land titles was closed (nearly), in that part of Upper Louisiana, now constituting the State of Missouri. The commissioners executed the act in the liberal spirit of its own enactment, and Congress confirmed all they classed as coming under the principles of the act. In other parts of Louisiana, and in Florida, the same harassing and ruinous process had been gone through in respect to the claims of foreign origin-limitations, as in Missouri, upon the kind of claims which might be confirmed, excluding minerals and saline waters-limitations upon the quantity to be confirmed, so as to split or grant, and divide it between the grantee and the government-the former having to divide again with an agent or attorney-and limitations upon the inception of the titles which might be examined. so as to confine the origination to particular officers, and forms. The act conformed to all previous ones, of requiring no examination of a title which was complete under the previous governments.

CHAPTER LXXII.

"EFFECTS OF THE VETO,"

UNDER this caption a general register commenced in all the newspapers opposed to the election of General Jackson (and they were a great majority of the whole number published). immediately after the delivery of the veto message, and were continued down to the day of election, all tending to show the disastrous consequences upon the business of the country, and upon his own popularity, resulting from that act. To judge from these items it would seem that the property of the country was nearly destroyed, and the General's popularity entirely; and that both were to remain in that state until the bank was rechartered. Their character was to show the decline which had taken place in the price of labor, produce, and property—the stoppage and suspension of buildings, improve ments, and useful enterprises—the renunciation of the President by his old friends-the scarcity of money and the high rate of interest-and the consequent pervading distress of the whole community. These lugubrious memorandums of calamities produced by the conduct of one man were duly collected from they were chronicled and Register," for the informa a few items now selected to tation will show to what of distressing the countrybe true), or of alarming it false), was carried by the ration, which, according to power to destroy all loc quently to injure the wommunity. The followitems—a small number of showing the character of the selection of the sel

"On the day of the rece bank veto in New-York, fo ty-seven shares of Unite were sold at a decline of the rates of the preceding Cincinnati that, within tv reached that city, building dollars to three dollars per consternation is represent the city. An intelligent from, at Cincinnati, states, best informed men there caused a depreciation of t city, of from twenty-five one third per cent."-"A sembled at Richmond, E against the veto."-" The v of citizens, in Mason county. assembled to hear the spee candidates for the legislat the administration candida drew themselves from the o they could support the adr er."-"Lexington, Kentuck signed by fifty citizens of formerly supporters of C nounced their renunciation all others, in the like situa to assemble in public meet sentiments. A large and ving ensued."—"Louisville, Forty citizens, ex-friends called a meeting, to expres the veto, declaring that t support him. In consequer meetings ever held in Lou and condemned the veto, th internal improvement polic and accused him of a brea coming a second time a car dency."-"At Pittsburg, se of General Jackson called who had renounced him, w and respectably attended, and the bank applauded as perity of the country."_"

), in that part of ting the State of executed the act n enactment, and classed as coming

In other parts e same harassing gone through in n origin-limitae kind of claims cluding minerals upon the quantiplit or grant, and and the governlivide again with itations upon the ight be examined. on to particular conformed to all examination of a der the previous

XXII.

VETO."

al register coms opposed to the and they were a mber published). of the veto mesn to the day of ne disastrous conf the country, and sulting from that is it would seem intry was nearly pularity entirely; in that state un-Their character had taken place ind property-the uildings, improve--the renunciation

ends—the scarcity

interest-and the

of the whole commemorandums of

nduct of one mar

were duly collected from the papers in which they were chronicled and registered in "Niles' Register," for the information of posterity; and a few items now selected from the general registration will show to what extent this business of distressing the country—(taking the facts to be true), or of alarming it (taking them to be false), was carried by the great moneyed corporation, which, according to its own showing, had power to destroy all local banks; and consequently to injure the whole business of the community. The following are a few of these items—a small number of each class, by way of showing the character of the whole:

"On the day of the receipt of the President's hank veto in New-York, four hundred and thirty-seven shares of United States Bank stock were sold at a decline of four per centum from the rates of the preceding day. We learn from Cincinnati that, within two days after the veto mached that city, building-bricks fell from five dollars to three dollars per thousand. A general consternation is represented to have pervaded thecity. An intelligent friend of General Jackson, at Cincinnati, states, as the opinion of the best informed men there, that the veto has caused a depreciation of the real estate of the city, of from twenty-five to thirty-three and one third per cent."—"A thousand people assembled at Richmond, Kentucky, to protest against the veto."—" The veto reached a meeting of citizens, in Mason county, Kentucky, which had assembled to hear the speeches of the opposing candidates for the legislature, on which two of the administration candidates immediately withdrew themselves from the contest, declaring that they could support the administration no longer."-"Lexington, Kentucky: July 25th. A call, signed by fifty citizens of great respectability. formerly supporters of General Jackson, announced their renunciation of him, and invited all others, in the like situation with themselves, to assemble in public meeting and declare their sentiments. A large and very respectable meeting ensued."—"Louisville, Kentucky: July 18. Forty citizens, ex-friends of General Jackson, called a meeting, to express their sentiments on the veto, declaring that they could no longer support him. In consequence, one of the largest meetings ever held in Louisville was convened, and condemned the veto, the anti-tariff and antiinternal improvement policy of General Jackson, and accused him of a breach of promise, in becoming a second time a candidate for the Presidency."-"At Pittsburg, seventy former friends of General Jackson called a meeting of those who had renounced him, which was numerously and respectably attended, the veto condemned, and the bank applauded as necessary to the prosperity of the country."-" Irish meeting in Philadelphia. A call, signed by above two thousand naturalized Irishmen, seceding from General Jackson, invited their fellow-countrymen to meet and choose between the tyrant and the bank, and gave rise to a numerous assemblage in Independence Square, at which strong resolutions were adopted, renouncing Jackson and his measures, opposing his re-election and sustaining the bank."-" The New Orleans emporium mentions, among other deleterious effects of the bank veto, at that place, that one of the State banks had already commenced discounting four months' paper, at eight per centum."-" Cincinnati farmers look here! We are credibly informed that several merchants in this city, in making contracts for their winter supplies of pork, are offering to contract to pay two dollars fifty cents per hundred, if Clay is elected, and one dollar fifty cents, if Jackson is elected. Such is the effect of the veto. This is something that people can understand."-" Baltimore. A great many mechanics are thrown out of employment by the stoppage of building. The prospect ahead is, that we shall have a very distressing winter. There will be a swift reduction of prices to the laboring classes. Many who subsisted upon labor, will lack regular employment, and have to depend upon chance or charity; and many will go supperless to bed who deserve to be filled."—"Cincinnati. Facts are stubborn things. It is a fact that, last year, before this time, $300,000 had been advanced, by citizens of this place, to farmers for pork, and now, not one dollar. So much for the veto."-" Brownsville, Pennsylvania. We understand, that a large manufacturer has discharged all his hands, and others have given notice to do so. We understand, that not a single steamboat will be built this season, at Wheeling, Pittsburg, or Louisville,"—" Niles' Register editorial. No King of England has dared a practical use of the word veto,' for about two hundred years, or more: and it has become obsolete in the United Kingdom of Great Britain; and Louis Philippe would hardly retain his crown three days, were he to veto a deliberate act of the two French Chambers, though supported by an army of 100,000 men."

All this distress and alarm, real and factitious, was according to the programme which prescribed it, and easily done by the bank, and its branches in the States: its connection with money-dealers and brokers; its power over its debtors, and its power over the thousand local banks, which it could destroy by an exertion of its strength, or raise up by an extension of its favor. It was a wicked and infamous attempt, on the part of the great moneyed corporation, to govern the election by operating on the business and the fears of the people—destroying some and alarming others.

CHAPTER LXXIII.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION OF 1882.

GENERAL JACKSON and Mr. Van Buren were the candidates, on one side; Mr. Clay and Mr. John Sergeant, of Pennsylvania, on the other, and the result of no election had ever been looked to with more solicitude. It was a question of systems and of measures, and tried in the persons of men who stood out boldly and unequivocally in the representation of their respective sides, Renewal of the national bank charter, continuance of the high protective policy, distribution of the public land money, internal improvement by the federal government, removal of the Indians, interference between Georgia and the Cherokees, and the whole American system were staked on the issue, represented on one side by Mr. Clay and Mr. Sergeant, and opposed, on the other, by General Jackson and Mr. Van Buren. The defeat of Mr. Clay, and the consequent condemnation of his measures, was complete and overwhelming. He received but forty-nine votes out of a totality of two hundred and eighty-eight! And this result is not to be attributed, as done by Mons. de Tocqueville, to military fame. General Jackson was now a tried statesman, and great issues were made in his person, and discussed in every form of speech and writing, and in every forum, State, and federal-from the halls of Congress to township meetings-and his success was not only triumphant but progressive. His vote was a large increase upon the preceding one of 1828, as that itself had been upon the previous one of 1824. The result was hailed with general satisfaction, as settling questions of national disturbance, and leaving a clear field, as it was hoped, for future temperate and useful legislation. The vice-presidential election, also, had a point and a lesson in it. Besides concurring with General Jackson in his systems of policy, Mr. Van Buren had, in his own person, questions which concerned himself, and which went to his character as a fair and honorable man. He had been rejected by the Senate as minister to the court of Great Britain, under circumstances to give éclat to the rejection, being then at his post; and on accusations of prostituting official station to party intrigue and elevation, and humbling his country before Great Britain to obtain as a favor what was due as a right. He had also been accused of breaking up friendship between General Jackson and Mr. Calhoun, for the purpose of getting a rival out of the way-contriving for that purpose the dissolution of the cabinet, the resuscitation of the buried question of the punishment of General Jackson in Mr. Monroe's cabinet, and a system of intrigues to destroy Mr. Calhoun-all brought forward imposingly in senatorial and Congress debates, in pamphlets and periodicals, and in every variety of speech and of newspaper publication; and all with the avowed purpose of showing him unworthy to be elected Vice-President. Yet, he was elected- and triumphantly -receiving the same vote with General Jackson. except that of Pennsylvania, which went to one of her own citizens, Mr. William Wilkins, then senator in Congress, and afterwards Minister to Russia, and Secretary of War. Another circumstance attended this election, of ominous character, and deriving emphasis from the state of the times. South Carolira refused to vote in it: that is to say, voted with neither party, and threw away her vote upon citizens who were not candidates, and who received no vote but her own; namely, Governor John Floyd of Virginia, and Mr. Henry Lee of Massachusetts: a dereliction not to be accounted for upon any intelligible or consistent reason, seeing that the rival candidates held the opposite sides of the system of which the State complained, and that the success of one was to be its overthrow; of the other, to be its confirmation. This circumstance, coupled with the nullification attitude which the State had assumed, gave significance to this separation from the other States in the matter of the election: a separation too marked not to be noted, and interpreted by current events too clearly to be misunderstood. Another circumstance attended this election, of a nature not of itself to command commemoration, but worthy to be remembered for the lesson it reads to all political parties founded upon one idea, and especially when that idea has nothing political in it; it was the anti-masonic vote of the State of Vermont, for Mr. Wirt, late United States Attorney-General, for President; and for Mr. Amos Ellmaker of Pennsylvania, for Vice-President. The cause of that vote was this:

some years before, a citi Mr. Morgan, a member ternity, had disappeared which induced the belief t ly put to death, by order rulging their secret. A grew out of this belief, sp ing States, with an outco and all secret societies, a suppression. Politicians rent; turned it into the made it potent in govern taining dominion over so elections, "anti-masonry," asm was called, aspired to took to govern presidentia ing them to interrogatori their masonic faith; and e didates of their own for th The trial was made in th Wirt and Ellmaker, and re seven votes—the vote of 1 in showing the weakness of consequent inutility as a po rest is soon told. Anti-ma have a distinctive existence death, left a lesson to all po edinone idea-especially wl thing political in it.

CHAPTER I

FIRST ANNUAL MESSAGE OF 80N AFTER HIS SECON

This must have been an or honest exultation to Generic election after a four years' to tration, over an opposition after having assumed responsed by a majority so triumply age directed to the same months before, had been declared and consigning himself demantion. He doubtless en elation when drawing up that a right to the enjoyment; but that feeling appeared in the which, abstaining from all refutes.

intrigue and ele try before Great at was due as a ed of breaking un kson and Mr. Calg a rival out of urpose the disso. ascitation of the ment of General net, and a system oun-all brought ial and Congress riodicals, and in newspaper pubowed purpose of elected Vice-Preand triumphantly General Jackson hich went to one um Wilkins, then vards Minister to Another circumf ominous characa the state of the d to vote in it: either party, and tizens who were ived no vote but John Floyd of f Massachusetts: ted for upon any a, seeing that the site sides of the plained, and that ts overthrow; of n. This circumification attitude gave significance her States in the ation too marked eted by current erstood. Another ction, of a nature memoration, but or the lesson it ounded upon one idea has nothing

i-masonic vote of

Wirt, late United

'resident; and for vlvania, for Vice-

t vote was this:

some years before, a citizen of New-York, one Mr. Morgan, a member of the Freemason fraternity, had disappeared, under circumstances which induced the belief that he had been secretly put to death, by order of the society, for divulging their secret. A great popular ferment grew out of this belief, spreading into neighboring States, with an outcry against all masons. and all secret societies, and a demand for their suppression. Politicians embarked on this current; turned it into the field of elections, and made it potent in governing many. After obtaining dominion over so many local and State elections, "anti-masonry," as the new enthusiasm was called, aspired to higher game, undertook to govern presidential candidates, subjecting them to interrogatories upon the point of their masonic faith; and eventually set up candidates of their own for these two high offices. The trial was made in the persons of Messrs. Wirt and Ellmaker, and resulted in giving them seven votes—the vote of Vermont alone—and, in showing the weakness of the party, and its consequent inutility as a political machine. The rest is soon told. Anti-masonry soon ceased to have a distinctive existence; died out, and, in its death, left a lesson to all political parties foundedinone idea - especially when that idea has nothing political in it.

CHAPTER LXXIV.

FIRST ANNUAL MESSAGE OF PRESIDENT JACK-80N AFTER HIS SECOND ELECTION.

This must have been an occasion of great and honest exultation to General Jackson—a reelection after a four years' trial of his administation, over an opposition so formidable, and after having assumed responsibilities so vast, and by a majority so triumphant—and his message directed to the same members, who, four months before, had been denouncing his measures, and consigning himself to popular condemnation. He doubtless enjoyed a feeling of elation when drawing up that message, and had a right to the enjoyment; but no symptom of that feeling appeared in the message itself, which, abstaining from all reference to the eleclion, wholly confined itself to business topics.

and in the subdued style of a business paper. Of the foreign relations he was able to give a good, and therefore, a brief account; and proceeding quickly to our domestic affairs gave to each head of these concerns a succinct consideration. The state of the finances, and the pub lic debt, claimed his first attention. The receipts from the customs were stated at twentyeight millions of dollars-from the lands at two millions-the payments on account of the public debt at eighteen millions; -and the balance remaining to be paid at seven millions-to which the current income would be more than adequate notwithstanding an estimated reduction of three or four millions from the customs in consequence of reduced duties at the preceding session. He closed this head with the fol lowing view of the success of his administration in extinguishing a national debt, and his congratulations to Congress on the auspicious and

"I cannot too cordially congratulate Congress and my fellow-citizens on the near approach of that memorable and happy event, the extinction of the public debt of this great and free nation. Faithful to the wise and patriotic policy marked out by the legislation of the country for this object, the present administration has devoted to it all the means which a flourishing commerce has supplied, and a prudent economy preserved, for the public treasury. Within the four years for which the people have confided the executive power to my charge, fifty-eight millions of dollars will have been applied to the payment of the public debt. That this has been accomplished without stinting the expenditures for all other proper objects, will be seen by referring to the liberal provision made, during the same period, for the support and increase of our means of maritime and military defence, for internal improvements of a national character, for the removal and preservation of the Indians and, lastly, for the gallant veterans of the Revo

To the gratifying fact of the extinction of the debt, General Jackson wished to add the substantial benefit of release from the burthens which it imposed—an object desirable in itself, and to all the States, and particularly to those of the South, greatly dissatisfied with the burthens of the tariff, and with the large expendiditures which took place in other quarters of the Union. Sixteen millions of dollars, he stated to be the outlay of the federal government for all objects exclusive of the public debt; so that ten millions might be subject to reduction:

and this to be effected so as to retain a protecting duty in favor of the articles essential to our defence and comfort in time of war. On this point he said:

"Those who take an enlarged view of the condition of our country, must be satisfied that the policy of protection must be ultimately limited to those articles of domestic manufacture which are indispensable to our safety in time of war. Within this scope, on a reasonable scale, it is recommended by every consideration of patriotism and duty, which will doubtless always secure to it a liberal and efficient support. But beyond this object, we have already seen the operation of the system productive of discontent. In some sections of the republic, its influence is deprecated as tending to concentrate wealth into a few hands, and as creating those germs of dependence and vice which, in other countries, have characterized the existence of monopolies, and proved so destructive of liberty and the general good. A large portion of the people, in one section of the republic, declares it not only inexpedient on these grounds, but as disturbing the equal relations of property by legislation, and therefore unconstitutional and unjust."

On the subject of the public lands his recommendations were brief and clear, and embraced the subject at the two great points which distinguish the statesman's view from that of a mere politician. He looked at them under the great aspect of settlement and cultivation, and the release of the new States from the presence of a great foreign landholder within their limits. The sale of the salable parts to actual settlers at what they cost the United States, and the cession of the unsold parts within a reasonable time to the States in which they lie, was his wise recommendation; and thus expressed:

"It seems to me to be our true policy that the public lands shall cease, as soon as practicable, to be a source of revenue, and that they be sold to settlers in limited parcels, at a price barely sufficient to reimburse to the United States the expense of the present system, and the cost arising under our Indian compacts. The advantages of accurate surveys and undoubted titles, now secured to purchasers, seem to forbid the abolition of the present system, because none can be substituted which will more perfectly accomplish these important ends. It is desirable, however, that, in convenient time, this machinery be withdrawn from the States, and that the right of soil, and the future disposition of it, be surrendered to the States, respectively, in which it lies.

"The adventurous and hardy population of the West, besides contributing their equal share reward for defence—a frechold, and arms to de of taxation under our impost system, have, in the progress of our government, for the lands they occupy, paid into the treasury a large proportion of forty millions of dollars, and, of the revenue received therefrom, but a small part has been expended amongst them. When, to the disadvantage of their situation in this respect, we add the consideration that it is their labor alone which gives real value to the lands and that the proceeds arising from their sale are distributed chiefly among States which had not originally any claim to them, and which have enjoyed the undivided emolument arising from the sale of their own lands, it cannot be expected that the new States will remain longer contented with the present policy, after the payment of the public debt. To avert the consequences which may be apprehended from this cause, to put an end for ever to all partial and interested legislation on the subject, and to afford to every American citizen of enterprise, the opportunity of securing an independent freehold, it seems to me, therefore, best to abandon the idea of raising a future revenue out of the public lands."

These are the grounds upon which the members from the new States should unite and stand. The Indian title has been extinguished within their limits; the federal title should be extinguished also. A stream of agriculturists is constantly pouring into their bosom-many of them without the means of purchasing land -and to all of them the whole of their means needed in its improvement and cultivation. Donations then, or sales at barely reimbursing prices, is the wise policy of the government: and a day should be fixed by Congress in every State (regulated by the quantity of public land within its limits), after which the surrender of the remainder should take effect within the State; and the whole federal machinery for the sale of the lands be withdrawn from it. In thus filling the new States and Territories with independent landholders-with men having a stake in the soil-the federal government would itself be receiving, and that for ever, the two things of which every government has need namely, perennial revenue, and military service. The cultivation of the lands would bring in wellregulated revenue through the course of circulation, and, what Mr. Burke calls, "the political secretions of the State." Their population would be a perpetual army for the service of the country when needed. It is the true and original defence of nations-the incitement and fend it. It is a source of ed standing armies, and sl and pre-eminently below above all to the republic so abounding in the mean fenders, and needing then nothing of nearer domain expanse from the Missi ocean, all needing settlers it with freeholders, and enders that are requiredges, or exterior foreignes necessary to appear in arm ry point of view, and as as efficient defence of the nat our distant public territory overed with freehold settle

On the subject of the renthe message said:

"I am happy to inform and humane policy of tra esstern to the western side the remnants of our aborigin own consent, and upon ju steadily pursued, and is app consummation. By referen the Secretary of War, and submitted with it, you wi which has been made since the arrangement of the variou with our Indian relations. every subject involving any of ing jurisdiction, or of peculia: happily disposed of, and the c gains ground among the Ind moval to the country assign States for their permanent the only hope of their ultima

"With that portion of th ever, living within the State been found impracticable, a atisfactory adjustment. Suc to remove all the grounds of bring to a termination the di they are involved, that I direct propositions to be made to t many the documents herewith annot but have seen in these of the strongest disposition, of povernment, to deal justly a hem. An ample indemnity wa present possessions, a liberal p future support and improvemen for their private and political r difference of opinion may have ing the just claims of these 1 probably be none respecting the propositions, and very little re pediency of their immediate ac system, have, in ent, for the lands sury a large proollars, and, of the but a small part them. When, to ation in this reon that it is their alue to the lands. g from their sale States which had them, and which molument arising ands, it cannot be will remain longer licy, after the payavert the consehended from this to all partial and subject, and to af-1 of enterprise, the independent freee, best to abandon revenue out of the > n which the memshould unite and been extinguished al title should be a of agriculturists neir bosom-many of purchasing land ole of their means and cultivation. parely reimbursing the government; Congress in every tity of public land 1 the surrender of effect within the machinery for the rawn from it. In d Territories with ith men having a government would for ever, the two ernment has need ad military service. rould bring in wellhe course of circucalls, "the politi-Their population for the service of It is the true and > > the incitement and

ld, and arms to de fend it. It is a source of defence which preceded standing armies, and should supersede them; and pre-eminently belongs to a republic, and above all to the republic of the United States. 80 abounding in the means of creating these defenders, and needing them so much. To say nothing of nearer domains, there is the broad expanse from the Mississippi to the Pacific ocean, all needing settlers and defenders. Cover it with freeholders, and you have all the detenders that are required—all that interior savages, or exterior foreigness, could ever render necessary to appear in arms. In a mere militam point of view, and as assuring the cheap and efficient defence of the nation, our border, and our distant public territory, should be promptly overed with freehold settlers.

On the subject of the removal of the Indians, the message said:

"I am happy to inform you, that the wise and humane policy of transferring from the estern to the western side of the Mississippi, the remnants of our aboriginal tribes, with their own consent, and upon just terms, has been steadily pursued, and is approaching, I trust, its masummation. By reference to the report of the Secretary of War, and to the documents submitted with it, you will see the progress which has been made since your last session in the arrangement of the various matters connected with our Indian relations. With one exception, every subject involving any question of conflicting jurisdiction, or of peculiar difficulty, has been happily disposed of, and the conviction evidently gains ground among the Indians, that their removal to the country assigned by the United States for their permanent residence, furnishes the only hope of their ultimate prosperity.

"With that portion of the Cherokees, however, living within the State of Georgia, it has been found impracticable, as yet, to make a atisfactory adjustment. Such was my anxiety to remove all the grounds of complaint, and to bring to a termination the difficulties in which they are involved, that I directed the very liberal propositions to be made to them which accompany the documents herewith submitted. They cannot but have seen in these offers the evidence of the strongest disposition, on the part of the prernment, to deal justly and liberally with them. An ample indemnity was offered for their present possessions, a liberal provision for their intere support and improvement, and full security for their private and political rights. Whatever difference of opinion may have prevailed respecting the just claims of these people, there will probably be none respecting the liberality of the

were, however, rejected, and thus the position of these Indians remains unchanged, as do the views communicated in my message to the Senate, of February 22, 1831.

The President does not mention the obstacles which delayed the humane policy of transferring the Indian tribes to the west of the Mississippi, nor allude to the causes which prevented the remaining Cherokees in Georgia from accepting the liberal terms offered them, and joining the emigrated portion of their tribe on the Arkansas; but these obstacles and causes were known to the public, and the knowledge of them was carried into the parliamentary, the legislative, and the judicial history of the country. These removals were seized upon by party spirit as soon as General Jackson took up the policy of his predecessors, and undertook to complete what they had began. His injustice and tyranny to the Indians became a theme of political party vituperation; and the South, and Georgia especially, a new battle-field for political warfare. The extension of her laws and jurisdiction over the part of her territory still inhabited by a part of the Cherokees, was the signal for concentrating upon that theatre the sympathies, and the interference of politicians and of missionaries. Congress was appealed to; and refused the intervention of its authority. The Supreme Court was applied to to stay, by an injunction, the operation of the laws of Georgia on the Indian part of the State; and refused the application, for want of jurisdiction of the question. It was applied to to bring the case of the missionaries before itself, and did so, reversing the judgment of the Georgia State Court, and pronouncing one of its own; which was disregarded. It was applied to to reverse the judgment in the case of Tassells, and the writ of error was issued to bring up the case; and on the day appointed Tassells was hanged. The missionaries were released as soon as they ceased their appeals to the Supreme Court, and addressed themselves to the Governor of Georgia, to whom belonged the pardoning power; and the correspondence and communications which took place between themselves and Governor Lumpkin showed that they were emissaries, as well as missionaries, and acting a prescribed part for the "good of the country"—as they expressed it. They came from the North, and returned to repositions, and very little respecting the ex-lediency of their immediate acceptance. They and justly, at this political interference in her it as soon as released. All Georgia was outraged, affairs, and this intrusive philanthropy in behalf of Indians to whom she gave the same protection as to her own citizens, and at these attempts, so repeatedly made to bring her before the Supreme Court. Her governors (Troup, Gilmer, and Lumpkin,) to whom it successively belonged to represent the rights and dignity of the State, did so with firmness and moderation; and, in the end, all her objects were attained, and the interference and intrusion ceased; and the issue of the presidential election rebuked the political and ecclesiastical intermeddlers in her affairs.

A passage in the message startled the friends of the Bank of the United States, and, in fact, took the public by surprise. It was an intimation of the insolvency of the bank, and of the insecurity of the public deposits therein; and a recommendation to have the affairs of the institution thoroughly investigated. It was in these terms:

"Such measures as are within the reach of the Secretary of the Treasury have been taken to enable him to judge whether the public deposits in that institution may be regarded as entirely safe: but as his limited power may prove inadequate to this object, I recommend the subject to the attention of Congress, under the firm belief that it is worthy their serious investigation. An inquiry into the transactions of the institution, embracing the branches as well as the principal bank, seems called for by the credit which is given throughout the country to many serious charges impeaching its character, and which, if true, may justly excite the apprehension that it is no longer a safe depository of the money of the people."

This recommendation gave rise to proceedings in Congress, which will be noted in their proper place. The intimation of insolvency was received with scorn by the friends of the great corporation-with incredulity by the massesand with a belief that it was true only by the few who closely observed the signs of the times, and by those who confided in the sagacity and provident foresight of Jackson (by no means inconsiderable either in number or judgment). For my own part I had not suspicioned insolvency when I commenced my opposition to the renewed charter; and was only brought to that suspicion, and in fact, conviction, by seeing the flagrant manner in which the institution resisted investigation, when proposed under circumstances which rendered it obligatory to its honor; and which could only be so resisted from a consciousness that, if searched, something would be found worse than any thing charged. The only circumstance mentioned by the President to countenance suspicion was the conduct of the bank in relation to the payment of five millions of the three per cent. stock, ordered to have been paid at the bank in the October preceding (and where the money, according to its returns, was in deposit); and instead of paying which the bank secretly sent an agent to London to obtain delay from the creditors for six, nine and twelve months; and even to purchase a part of the stock on its account-which was done-and in clear violation of its charter (which forbids the institution to traffic in the stocks of the United States). This delay, with the insufficient and illegal reason given for it (for no reason could be legal or sufficient while admitting the money to be in her hands, and that which the bank gave related to the cholera, and the ever-ready excuse of accommodation to the public), could only be accounted for from an inability to produce the funds; in other words, that while her returns to the treasury admitted she had the money, the state of her vaults showed that she had it not. This view was further confirmed by her attempt to get a virtual loan to meet the payment, if delay could not be obtained or the stock purchased, in the application to the London house of the Baring to draw upon it for the amount uncovered by delay or by purchase.

But the salient passage in the message—the one which gave it a new and broad emphasis in the public mind—was the part which related to the attitude of South Carolina. The proceedings of that State had now reached a point which commanded the attention of all America and could not be overlooked in the President's message. Organized opposition, and forcible resistance to the laws, took their open form; and brought up the question of the governmental enforcement of these laws, or submission to their violation. The question made a crisis; and the President thus brought the subject before Congress:

"It is my painful duty to state, that in one quarter of the United States, opposition to the revenue laws has risen to a height which theatens to thwart their execution, if not to endanger the integrity of the Union. Whatever obstructions may be thrown in the way of the judicial authorities of the general government, it is hoped they will be able, peaceably, to over ome them by the prudence and the patriotism of the this reasonable reliance of good sense of all portions be disappointed, it is be themselves are fully adeques of such attempts as may should the exigency arise, ton of the existing laws in cause whatever, prompt no Congress, with the sugnand measures as may be meet it."

Nothing could be more and even conciliatory than of this indispensable not muld not avoid bringing t tice of Congress; and coul a more unexceptionable ma was that of justice and mi administration of the laws and if any things further promised an immediate no the mean time, and in a message, he had shown his as it depended on him, to plaint of the burthens of th reduction of many millions pensation permitted by t public debt within the curr means already provided an of an abolition of ten to ty lars of duties.

CHAPTER

BANK OF THE UNITED STA ING THE THREE PER CE INVESTIGATION.

The President in his messal commendations which concurred that the seven millions of some that experiment parts of the message mittees, Mr. Speight, of No that this latter clause be ser tee; to which Mr. Wayne, an amendment, that the corpower to bring persons before the seven management of the seven power to bring persons before the seven management.

mme them by the prudence of their own officers, something would and the patriotism of the people. But should ng charged. The this reasonable reliance on the moderation and good sense of all portions of our fellow-citizens by the President be disappointed, it is believed that the laws he conduct of the themselves are fully adequate to the suppression nt of five millions of such attempts as may be immediately made. lered to have been should the exigency arise, rendering the execuer preceding (and tion of the existing laws impracticable, from any cause whatever, prompt notice of it will be given ) its returns, was to Congress, with the suggestion of such views paying which the and measures as may be deemed necessary to London to obtain x, nine and twelve Nothing could be more temperate, subdued, a part of the stock one-and in clear ch forbids the incks of the United e insufficient and or no reason could and even conciliatory than the tone and language of this indispensable notice. The President muld not avoid bringing the subject to the notice of Congress; and could not have done it in a more unexceptionable manner. His language was that of justice and mildness. The peaceful administration of the laws were still relied upon, and if any things further became necessary he promised an immediate notice to Congress. In the mean time, and in a previous part of his message, he had shown his determination, so far ssit depended on him, to remove all just complaint of the burthens of the tariff by effecting a reduction of many millions of the duties :- a dispensation permitted by the extinction of the public debt within the current year, and by the means already provided, and which would admit of an abolition of ten to twelve millions of dollars of duties.

CHAPTER LXXV.

MANK OF THE UNITED STATES—DELAY IN PAYING THE THREE PER CENTS—COMMITTEE OF INVESTIGATION.

The President in his message had made two recommendations which concerned the bank—one that the seven millions of stock held therein by the United States should be sold, the other that a committee should be appointed investigate its condition. On the question of referring the different parts of the message to appropriate committees, Mr. Speight, of North Carolina, moved that this latter clause be sent to a select committee; to which Mr. Wayne, of Georgia, proposed an amendment, that the committee should have power to bring persons before them, and to examine them on oath, and to call upon the bank and its branches for papers. This motion gave rise to a contest similar to that of the preceding session on the same point, and by the same actors—and with the same result in favor of the bank—the debate being modified by some fresh and material incidents. Mr. Wickliffe, of Kentucky, had previously procured a call to be made on the Secretary of the Treasury for the report which his agent was employed in making upon the condition of the bank; and wished the motion for the committee to be deferred until that report came in. He said:

"He had every confidence, both from his own judgment and from information in his possession, that when the resolution he had offered should receive its answer, and the House should have the report of the agent sent by the Secretary of the Treasury to inquire into the affairs of the bank, with a view to ascertain whether it was a safe depository for the public funds, the answer would be favorable to the bank and to the entire security of the revenue. Mr. W. said he had hoped that the resolution he had offered would have superseded the necessity of another bank discussion in that House, and of the consequences upon the financial and commercial operations of the country, and upon the credit of our currency. He had not understood, from a hasty reading of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, that that officer had expressed any desire for the appointment of any committee on the subject. The secretary said that he had taken steps to obtain such information as was within his control, but that it was possible he might need further powers hereafter. What had already been the effect throughout the country of the broadside discharged by the mesage at the bank? Its stock had, on the reception of that message, instantly fallen down to 104 per cent. Connected with this proposition to sell the stock, a loss had already been incurred by the government of half a million of dollars. What further investigations did gentlemen require? What new bill of indictment was to be presented? There was one in the secretary's report, which was also alluded to in the message: it was, that the bank had, by its unwaranted action, prevented the government from redeeming the three per cent. stock at the time it desired. But what was the actual state of the fact? What had the bank done to prevent such redemption? It had done nothing more nor less than what it had been sequired by the government to do."

The objection to inquiry, made by Mr. Wickliffe, that it depreciated the stock, and made a loss of the difference to its holders, was entirely fallacious, as fluctuations in the price of stocks state, that in one opposition to the eight which threatn, if not to endanon. Whatever obin the way of the eneral government, peaceably, to over

mitting the money

t which the bank

nd the ever-ready

the public), could

a inability to prods, that while her sitted she had the

s showed that she further confirmed

al loan to meet the

be obtained or the

tion to the London

w upon it for the

1 the message-the broad emphasis in

rt which related to

na. The proceed-

sched a point which all America, and ne President's mes-

i, and forcible re-

eir open form; and the governmental

submission to their

e a crisis; and the ubject before Con-

r by purchase.

are greatly under the control of those who gamble in them, and who seize every circumstance, alternately to depress and exalt them; and the fluctuations affect nobody but those who are buyers or sellers. Yet this objection was gravely resorted to every time that any movement was made which affected the bank; and arithmetical calculations were gravely gone into to show, upon each decline of the stock, how much money each stockholder had lost. On this occasion the loss of the United States was set down at half a million of dollars:-which was recovered four days afterwards upon the reading of the report of the treasury agent, favorable to the bank, and which enabled the dealers to put up the shares to 112 again. In the mean time nobody lost any thing but the gamblers; and that was nothing to the public, as the loss of one was the gain of the other: and the thing balanced itself. Holders for investment neither lost, nor gained. For the rest, Mr. Wayne, of Georgia, replied:

"It has been said that nothing was now before the House to make an inquiry into the condition of the bank desirable or necessary. He would refer to the President's message, and to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, both suggesting an examination, to ascertain if the bank was, or would be in future, a safe depository for the public funds. Mr. W. did not say it was not, but an inquiry into the fact might be very proper notwithstanding; and the President and Secretary, in suggesting it, had imputed no suspicion of the insolvency of the bank. Eventual ability to discharge all of its obligations is not of itself enough to entitle the bank to the confidence of the government. Its management, and the spirit in which it is managed, in direct reference to the government, or to those administering it, may make investigation proper. What was the Executive's com-plaint against the bank? That it had interfered with the payment of the public debt, and would postpone the payment of five millions of it for a year after the time fixed upon for its redemption, by becoming actually or nominally the possessors of that amount of the three per centum stock, though the charter prohibited it from holding such stock, and from all advantages which might accrue from the purchase of it. True, the bank had disavowed the ownership. But of that sum which had been bought by Baring, Brothers, & Co., under the agreement with the agent of the bank, at ninety-one and a half, and the cost of which had been charged to the bank, who would derive the benefit of the difference between the cost of it and the par value, which the government will pay? Mr. W. knew this gain would be effected | and a quarter-leaving forty-two millions and by what may be the rate of exchange between the United States and England, but still there would be gain, and who was to receive it? Baring, Brothers, & Co.? No. The bank was, by agreement, charged with the cost of it, in a separate account, on the books of Baring, Brothers, & Co., and it had agreed to pay interest upon the amount, until the stock was redeemed.

"The bank being prohibited to deal in such stock, it would be well to inquire, even under the present arrangements with Baring, Brothers. & Co., whether the charter, in this respect, was substantially complied with. Mr. W. would not now go into the question of the policy of the arrangement by the bank concerning the three per cents. It may eventuate in great public benefit, as regards the commerce of the country; but if it does, it will be no apology for the temerity of an interference with the fixed policy of the government, in regard to the payment of the national debt; a policy, which those who administer the bank knew had been fixed by all who, by law, can have any agency in its payment. Nor can any apology be found for it in the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury of the 19th of July last to Mr. Biddle; for, at Philadelphia, the day before, on the 18th, he employed an agent to go to England, and had given instructions to make an arrangement, by which the payment of the public debt was to be postponed until October, 1833.

Mr. Watmough, representative from the district in which the bank was situated, disclaimed any intention to thwart any course which the House was disposed to take; but said that the charges against the bank had painfully affected the feelings of honorable men connected with the corporation, and injured its character; and deprecated the appointment of a select committee; and proposed the Committee of Ways and Means—the same which had twice reported in favor of the bank :- and he had no objection that this committee should be clothed with all the powers proposed by Mr. Wayne to be conferred upon the select committee. In this state of the question the report of the treasury agent came in, and deserves to be remembered in contrast with the actual condition of the bank as afterwards discovered, and as a specimen of the imposing exhibit of its affairs which a moneyed corporation can make when actually insolvent The report, founded on the statements furnished by the institution itself, presented a superb condition-near eighty millions of assets (to be precise, $79,593,870), to meet all demands against it, amounting to thirty-seven millions a quarter for the stockho five millions would rein seven and a quarter mil dend. Mr. Polk stated t mere compendium of the showing nothing which show; and especially noth lions of unavailable funds tained to exist, and which ing for eighteen years. non-payment of the three

"The Secretary of the public notice that the who per cents would be paid or The bank was apprised and on its application the consented to suspend th third of this stock until th bank paying the interest But if the condition of t prosperous, as has been re make so great a sacrifice & that large amount for t sake of deferring the paym of the Treasury, on the 1 that two thirds of the stoo on the first of October; an ly what did the bank do agent to London, without treasury, and for what? 5,000,000 dollars, for that the transaction. From thi that the bank was unable t public deposits. They the cation to the treasury, st would hold up such certifi trol, to suit the convenienc but was it on this account agent to London? Did 1 bank himself assign this rea very different account of that the bank apprehende the cholera might produce country, and that the bank in an attitude to meet tl and that with this view an make an arrangement with holding three millions of th

The motion of Mr. Wat inquiry to the Committee was carried; and that comn first, on the point of post of a part of the three per c ness being now closed by of that stock, it no longer portant or practicable point not call for any action of Co econdly, on the point of the change between but still there receive it? Bahe bank was, by cost of it, in a of Baring, Broto pay interest k was redeemed to deal in such uire, even under Baring, Brothers. this respect, was Mr. W. would of the policy of concerning the entuate in great commerce of the ill be no apolorference with the ent, in regard to debt; a policy, e bank knew had w, can have any can any apology the Secretary of July last to Mr. ne day before, on nt to go to Eng-ons to make an

Vol. I.-19

ment of the pub-

d until October.

ive from the distuated, disclaimed course which the but said that the painfully affected n connected with ts character; and a select committtee of Ways and twice reported in had no objection e clothed with all Wayne to be contee. In this state the treasury agent membered in conon of the bank as a specimen of the which a moneyed actually insolvent. atements furnished nted a superb conof assets (to be neet all demands irty-seven millions y-two millions and a quarter for the stockholders; of which thirtyfire millions would reimburse the stock, and seven and a quarter millions remain for dividend. Mr. Polk stated that this report was a mere compendium of the monthly bank returns, showing nothing which these returns did not show; and especially nothing of the eight millions of unavailable funds which had been ascertained to exist, and which had been accumulating for eighteen years. On the point of the non-payment of the three per cents, he said:

"The Secretary of the Treasury had given public notice that the whole amount of the three per cents would be paid off on the first of July. The bank was apprised of this arrangement. and on its application the treasury department consented to suspend the redemption of one third of this stock until the first of October, the bank paying the interest in the mean while. But if the condition of the bank was so very prosperous, as has been represented, why did it make so great a sacrifice as to pay interest on that large amount for three months, for the sake of deferring the payment? The Secretary of the Treasury, on the 19th July, determined that two thirds of the stock should be paid off on the first of October; and, on the 18th of July what did the bank do? It dispatched an agent to London, without the knowledge of the treasury, and for what? In effect, to borrow 5,000,000 dollars, for that was the amount of the transaction. From this fact Mr. P. inferred that the bank was unable to go on without the public deposits. They then made a communication to the treasury, stating that the bank would hold up such certificates as it could control, to suit the convenience of the government; but was it on this account that they sent their agent to London? Did the president of the bank himself assign this reason? No; he gave a very different account of the matter; he said that the bank apprehended that the spread of the cholera might produce great distress in the country, and that the bank wished to hold itself in an attitude to meet the public exigencies, and that with this view an agent was sent to make an arrangement with the Barings for withholding three millions of the stock.'

The motion of Mr. Watmough to refer the inquiry to the Committee of Ways and Means, was carried; and that committee soon reported: first, on the point of postponing the payment of a part of the three per cents, that the business being now closed by the actual payment of that stock, it no longer presented any important or practicable point of inquiry, and did not call for any action of Congress upon it; and, econdly, on the point of the safety of the public deposits, that there could be no doubt of the entire soundness of the whole bank capital, after meeting all demands upon it, either by its bill holders or the government; and that such was the opinion of the committee, who felt great confidence in the well-known character and intelligence of the directors, whose testimony supported the facts on which the committee's opinion rested. And they concluded with a resolve which they recommended to the adoption of the House, "That the government deposits may, in the opinion of the House, be safely continued in the Bank of the United States." Mr. Polk, one of the committee, dissented from the report, and argued thus against it:

"He hoped that gentlemen who believed the time of the House, at this period of the session. to be necessarily valuable, would not press the consideration of this resolution upon the House at this juncture. During the small remainder of the session, there were several measures of the highest public importance which remained to be acted on. For one, he was extremely anxious that the session should close by 12 o'clock to-night, in order that a sitting upon the Sabbath might be avoided. He would not proceed in expressing his views until he should understand from gentlemen whether they intended to press the House to a vote upon this resolution. [A remark was made by Mr. Ingersoll, which was not heard distinctly by the reporter.] Mr. P. proceeded. As it had been indicated that gentlemen intended to take a vote upon the resolution, he would ask whether it was possi-ble for the members of the House to express their opinions on this subject with an adequate knowledge of the facts. The Committee of Ways and Means had spent nearly the whole session in the examination of one or two points connected with this subject. The range of investigation had been, of necessity, much less extensive than the deep importance of the subject required; but, before any opinion could be properly expressed, it was important that the facts developed by the committee should be understood. There had been no opportunity for this, and there was no necessity for the expression of a premature opinion unless it was considered essential to whitewash the bank. If the friends of the bank deemed it indispensably necessary, in order to sustain the bank, to call for an expression of opinion, where the House had enjoyed no opportunity of examining the testimony and proof upon which alone a correct opinion could be formed, he should be compelled, briefly, to present one or two facts to the House. It had been one of the objects of the Committee of Ways and Means to ascertain the circumstances relative to the postponement of the redemption of the three per cent. stock by the bank. With the mass of other important duties devolving upon the committee, as full an investigation of the condition of the bank as was desirable could not be expected. The committee, therefore, had been obliged to limit their inquiries to this subject of the three per cents; the other subjects of investigation were only incidental. Upon this main subject of inquiry the whole committee, majority as well as minority, were of opinion that the bank had exceeded its legitimate authority, and had taken measures which were in direct violation of its charter. He would read a single sentence from the report of the majority, which conclusively established this position. In the transactions upon this subject, the majority of the committee expressly say, in their report, that 'the bank exceeded its legitimate authority, and that this proceeding had no sufficient warrant in the correspondence of the Secretary of the Treasury.' Could language be more explicit? It was then the unanimous opinion of the committee, upon this main topic of inquiry, that the bank had exceeded its legitimate authority, and that its proceedings relative to the three per cents had no sufficient warrant in the correspondence of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Bank of the United States, it must be remembered, had been made the place of deposit for the public revenues, for the purpose of meeting the expenditures of the government. With the public money in its vaults, it was bound to pay the demands of the government. Among these demands upon the public money in the bank, was that portion of the public debt of which the redemption had been ordered. Had the bank manifested a willingness to pay out the public money in its possession for this object? On examination of the evidence it would be found that, as early as March, 1832, the president of the bank, without the knowledge of the government directors, had instituted a correspondence with certain holders of the public debt, for the purpose of procuring a postponement of its redemption. There was, at that time, no cholera, which could be charged with giving occasion to the correspondence. When public notice had been given by the Secretary of the Treasury of the redemption of the debt, the president of the bank immediately came to Washington, and requested that the redemption might be postponed. And what was the reason then assigned by the president of the bank for this postponement? Why, that the measure would enable the bank to afford the merchants great facilities for the transaction of their business under an extraordinary pressure upon the money market. What was the evidence upon this point? The proof distinctly showed that there was no extraordinary pressure. The monthly statements of the bank established that there was, in fact, a very considerable curtailment of the facilities given to the merchants in the commercial cities.

"The minority of the Committee of Ways had directly interfered with the redemption of and Means had not disputed the ability of the public debt, for the obvious reason that it bank to discharge its debts in its own convenient time; but had the bank promptly paid the public money deposited in its vaults when called for? As early as October, 1831, the bank had anticipated that during the course of 1832 it would not be allowed the undisturbed and permanent use of the public deposits. In the circular orders to the several branches which were then issued the necessity was stated for collecting the means for refunding those deposits from the loans which were then outstanding. Efforts were made by the branches of the West to make collections for that object; but those efforts entirely failed. The debts due upon loans made by the Western branches had not been curtailed. by the Western branches had not been curtailed.

It was found impossible to curtail them. As the list of discounts had gon down, the list of domestic bills of exchange hid gone up. The application before alluded to was made in March to Mr. Ludlow, of New-York, who represented about 1,700,000 of the public debt to postpone its redemption. This expedient also failed. Then the president of the bank came to Washington for the purpose of procuring the postponement of the period of redemption, upon the ground that an extraordinary pressure existed, and the public interest would be promoted by enabling the bank to use the public money in affording facilities to the merchants of the commercial cities. And what next? In July, the president of the bank and the exchange committee, without the knowledge of the head of the treasury, or of the board of directors of the bank, instituted a secret mission to England, for the purpose of negotiating in effect a loan of five millions of dollars, for which the bank was to pay interest, The propriety or object of this mission was not laid before the board of directors, and no clue was afforded to the government. Mr. Cadwalader went to England upon this secret mission. On the 1st of October the bank was advised of the arrangement made by Mr. Cadwalader, by which it was agreed, in behalf of the bank to purchase a part of the debt of the foreign holders. and to defer the redemption of a part. Now, it was well known to every one who had taken the trouble to read the charter of the bank, that it was expressly prohibited from purchasing public stock. On the 15th October it was discovered that Cadwalader had exceeded his instructions. This discovery by the bank took place immediately after the circular letter of Baring, Brothers, & Co., of London, announcing that the arrangement had been published in one of the New-York papers. This circular gave the first information to the government, or to any one in this country, as far as he was advised, excepting the exchange committee of the bank, of the object of Cadwalader's mission. In the limited time which could now be spared for this discussion, it was impossible to go through the particulars of this scheme. It would be seen on examination of the transaction, that the bank had directly interfered with the redemption of was unable to refund th cholera was not the groun with Ludlow. It was brought the president of t to request the postponen of the debt; nor was it t the resolution of the exc hank to send Cadwalader disorder was, the important bank found itself to con diminish its loans. It l report of the majority of certificates of the greate per cents had been surr said that there was now this debt outstanding. I seem, from the correspone and two millions of the c tificates had been surrend the bank becoming debto instead of the government to suppose this has not correspondence shows th been sent home under thi this brief explanation of t in relation to the public of whether it was necessary of the bank by adopting t

The vote on the resol resulted in a large major Those who voted in the Anderson of Maine; Will York: William S. Arche Bates of Maine; Samue York: John T. Bergen of Bethune of North Caro Tennessee; Joseph Bouck C. Brodhead of New-Yo Indiana; Clement C. Clay W. Connor of North Car of New-York; Thomas Da William Fitzgerald of Ter of Georgia; Nathan Ga William F. Gordon of V Hall of North Carolina; of New Hampshire; -Hoffman of New-York; I sylvania; Henry Hubbard Adam King of Pennsylvan of Kentucky; Chittenden Joel K. Mann of Kentucky of Alabama; John Y. Masathan McCarty of Indiana; of South Carolina; Job Pi James K. Polk of Tenness of New-York; Nathan So Jesse Speight of North Car

ts own convenient tly paid the public was unable to refund the public deposits. The sholera was not the ground of the correspondence when called for 2 bank had anticiwith Ludlow. It was not the cholera which of 1832 it would brought the president of the bank to Washington ed and permanent to request the postponement of the redemption the circular orders of the debt; nor was it the cholera which led to were then issued the resolution of the exchange committee of the llecting the means bank to send Cadwalader to England. The true from the loans disorder was, the impossibility in which the Efforts were hank found itself to concentrate its funds and e West to make diminish its loans. It had been stated in the it those efforts enreport of the majority of the committee, that the ertificates of the greater portion of the three upon loans made not been curtailed. per cents had been surrendered. It had been said that there was now less than a million of curtail them. As this debt outstanding. In point of fact, it would down, the list of sem, from the correspondence, that between one d gone up. The made in March and two millions of the debts of which the certificates had been surrendered, had been paid by debt to postpone the bank becoming debtor to the foreign holder instead of the government. The directors appear also failed. Then to suppose this has not been the case, but the me to Washington orrespondence shows that the certificates have the postponement hen sent home under this arrangement. After upon the ground this brief explanation of the conduct of the bank e existed, and the moted by enabling in relation to the public deposits, he would ask whether it was necessary to sustain the credit noney in affording of the bank by adopting this resolution." of the commercial July, the president committee, without f the treasury, or ne bank, instituted for the purpose of

of five millions of

as to pay interest.

is mission was not

ctors, and no clue

ent. Mr. Cadwal-

his secret mission.

nk was advised of

r. Cadwalader, by

If of the bank to the foreign holders.

f a part. Now it

ne who had taken

r of the bank, that

from nurchasing

ctober it was disexceeded his in-

by the bank took circular letter of

ondon, announcing n published in one is circular gave the

ment, or to any one advised, excepting

the bank, of the

n. In the limited

red for this discus-

through the partivould be seen, on

on, that the bank

the redemption of

ous reason that it

The vote on the resolution was taken, and resulted in a large majority for it-109 to 46. Those who voted in the negative were: John Anderson of Maine; William G. Angel of New-York: William S. Archer of Virginia; James Bates of Maine; Samuel Beardsley of New-York: John T. Bergen of New-York; Laughlin Bethune of North Carolina; John Blair of Tennessee; Joseph Bouck of New-York; John C. Brodhead of New-York; John Carr of Indiana: Clement C. Clay of Alabama; Henry W. Connor of North Carolina; Charles Dayan of New-York; Thomas Davenport of Virginia; William Fitzgerald of Tennessee; — Clayton of Georgia; Nathan Gaither of Kentucky William F. Gordon of Virginia; Thomas H. Hall of North Carolina; Joseph W. Harper of New Hampshire; - Hawkins; Michael Hoffman of New-York; Henry Horn of Pennsylvania; Henry Hubbard of New Hampshire; Adam King of Pennsylvania; Joseph Lecompte of Kentucky; Chittenden Lyon of Kentucky; Joel K. Mann of Kentucky; Samuel W. Marchs of Alabama; John Y. Mason of Virginia; Jonathan McCarty of Indiana; Thomas R. Mitchell of South Carolina; Job Pierson of New-York; James K. Polk of Tennessee; Edward C. Reed of New-York; Nathan Soule of New-York; Jesse Speight of North Carolina; Jas. Standifer of Tennessee; Francis Thomas of Maryland: Wiley Thompson of Georgia; Daniel Wardwell of New-York; James M. Wayne of Georgia: John W. Weeks of New Hampshire: Campbell P. White of New-York: J. T. H. Worthington of Marvland. And thus the bank not only es caped without censure, but received high commendation; while its conduct in relation to the three per cents placed it unequivocally in the category of an unfaithful and prevaricating agent; and only left open the inquiry whether its conduct was the result of inability to pay the sum required, or a disposition to make something for itself, or to favor its debtors—the most innocent of these motives being negatived by the sinister concealment of the whole transaction from the government (after getting delay from it), its concealment from the public, its concealment even from its own board of directors-its entire secrecy from beginning to end—until accidentally discovered through a London letter published in New-York. These are the same three per cents, the redemption of which through an enlargement of the powers of the sinking fund commissioners I had endeavored to effect some years before, when they could have been bought at about sixty-six cents in the dollar, and when my attempt was defeated by the friends of the bank. They were now paid at the rate of one hundred cents to the dollar, losing all the time the interest on the deposits, in bank, and about four millions for the appreciation of the stock. The attempt to get this stock redeemed, or interest on the deposits, was one of my first financial movements after I came into the Senate; and the ease with which the bank defeated me, preventing both the extinction of the debt and the payment of interest on the deposits, convinced me how futile it was to attempt any legislation unfavorable to the bank in a case which concerned itself.

CHAPTER LXXVI.

ABOLITION OF IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

The philanthropic Col. R. M. Johnson, of Kentucky, had labored for years at this humane consummation; and finally saw his labors successful. An act of Congress was passed abolishing all imprisonment for debt, under process from the courts of the United States: the only extent to which an act of Congress could go, by force of its enactments; but it could go much further, and did, in the force of example and influence; and has led to the cessation of the practice of imprisoning the debtors, in all, or nearly all, of the States and Territories of the Union; and without the evil consequences which had been dreaded from the loss of this remedy over the person. It led to a great many oppressions while it existed, and was often relied upon in extending credit, or inducing improvident people to incur debt, where there was no means to pay it, or property to meet it, in the hands of the debtor himself; but reliance wholly placed upon the sympathies of third persons, to save a friend or relative from confinement in a prison. The dower of wives, and the purses of fathers, brothers, sisters, friends, were thus laid under contribution by heartless creditors; and scenes of cruel oppression were witnessed in every State. Insolvent laws and bankrupt laws were invented to cover the evil, and to separate the unfortunate from the fraudulent debtor; but they were slow and imperfect in operation, and did not reach the cases in which a cold and cruel calculation was made upon the sympathies of friends and relatives, or upon the chances of catching the debtor in some strange and unbefriended place. A broader remedy was wanted, and it was found in the total abolition of the practice, leaving in full force all the remedies against fraudulent evasions of debt. In one of his reports on the subject, Col. Johnson thus deduced the history of this custom, called "barbarous," but only to be found in civilized countries:

"In ancient Greece, the power of creditors over the persons of their debtors was absolute; and, as in all cases where despotic control is tolerated, their rapacity was boundless. They compelled the insolvent debtors to cultivate their lands like cattle, to perform the service of beasts of burden, and to transfer to them their sons and daughters, whom they exported as slaves to foreign countries.

"These acts of cruelty were tolerated in Atheas, during her more barbarous state, and in perfect consonance with the character of a people who could elevate a Draco, and bow to his mandates. registered in blood. But the wisdom of Solom corrected the evil. Athens felt the benefit of "the reform; and the pen of the historian has recorded the name of her lawgiver as the benefactor of man. In ancient Rome, the condition of the unfortunate poor was still more abject. The cruelty of the Twelve Tables against insolvent | but without legislative sanction. In the eleventh debtors should be held up as a beacon of warn. ing to all modern nations. After judgment was obtained, thirty days of grace were allowed before a Roman was delivered into the power of his creditor. After this period, he was retained in a private prison, with twelve ounces of rice for his daily sustenance. He might be bound with a chain of fifteen pounds weight; and his misery was three times exposed in the market-place, to excite the compassion of his friends. At the expiration of sixty days, the debt was discharged by the loss of liberty or life. The insolvent debtor was either put to death or sold in foreign slavery beyond the Tiber. But, if several creditors were alike obstinate and unrelenting, they might legally dismember his body, and satiate their revenge by this horrid partition, Though the refinements of modern criticisms have endeavored to divest this ancient cruelty of its horrors, the faithful Gibbon, who is not remarkable for his partiality to the poorer class. preferring the liberal sense of antiquity, draws this dark picture of the effect of giving the creditor power over the person of the debtor. No sooner was the Roman empire subverted than the delusion of Roman perfection began to vanish. and then the absurdity and cruelty of this system began to be exploded—a system which convulsed Greece and Rome, and filled the world with misery, and, without one redeeming benefit, could no longer be endured-and, to the honor of humanity, for about one thousand years, during the middle ages, imprisonment for debt was generally abolished. They seemed to have understood what, in more modern times. we are less ready to comprehend, that power, in any degree, over the person of the debtor, is the same in principle, varying only in degree, whether it be to imprison, to enslave, to brand, to dismember, or to divide his body. But, as the lapse of time removed to a greater distance the cruelties which had been suffered, the cupidity of the affluent found means again to introduce the system; but by such slow gradations, that the unsuspecting poor were scarcely conscious of the

"The history of English jurisprudence furnishes the remarkable fact, that, for many centuries, personal liberty could not be violated for debt. Property alone could be taken to satisfy a pecuniary demand. It was not until the reign of Henry III., in the thirteenth century, that the principle of imprisonment for debt was recognized in the land of our ancestors, and that was in favor of the barons alone; the nobility against their bailiffs, who had received their rents and had appropriated them to their own use. Here was the shadow of a pretext. The great objection to the punishment was, that it was inflicted at the pleasure of the baron, without a trial: an evil incident to aristocracies, but obnoxious to republics. The courts, under the pretext of imputed crime, or constructive violence, on the part of the debtor, soon began to extend the principle, vear of the reign of Edw successor of Henry, the debtors was extended to merchants excepted, on ac doxy in religion—and was geverity. This extension on the part of the monar obtained by the barons n the throne; and, to count the merchants, a numerou were selected by the mona the same authority over th "But England was not roke. She could endure an she could tolerate a mona not yet resign her unfortu nately, to the prison. The chants had gained the power ret more than sixty years ment dared to venture ano the principle. During th ment for debt had, in some velty. The incarceration to make the impression tha fortune, had brought on h that he was, therefore, unw tion of the law, and too deg of the world. Parliament t reign of Edward III., in the to extend the principle to ty This measu and detinue. for the impositions which w duced by judicial usurpation in the most cruel oppression one hundred and fifty years menture to outrage the senti and indignant people, by ex to ordinary creditors. But bundation, and an irresponsi the superstructure. From rear of the reign of Edwar teenth of Henry VIII., the n Parliament. In the mean mity of the courts was emp duction of artificial forms a extend the power of impris cases not provided for by st diction of the court called th tended to all crimes or distu peace. Under this court of tion, the debtor was arres alled the writ of Middlesey trespass or outrage against nity of the crown. Thus, I struction, the person who o was supposed to be, what ev not to be, a violator of the fender against the dignity while his body was held i crime, he was proceeded again for which he was not liabl statute. The jurisdiction of mon pleas extended to civil tween individuals upon pri

To sustain its importance u

eacon of warnr judgment was ere allowed bethe power of his was retained in nces of rice for be bound with and his misery narket-place, to riends. At the was discharged The insolvent or sold in for-But, if several nd unrelenting. his body, and norrid partition. odern criticisms icient cruelty of who is not rethe poorer class, antiquity, draws giving the crehe debtor. No subverted than began to vanish, stem which confilled the world redeeming beneed-and, to the t one thousand nprisonment for They seemed to modern times. 1, that power, in he debtor, is the degree, whether o brand to dis-But, as the lapse stance the cruelcupidity of the > conscious of the isprudence furfor many cent be violated for taken to satisfy t until the reign entury, that the t was recognized and that was in nobility against their rents and own use. Here The great object it was inflicted hout a trial: an it obnoxious to e pretext of imence, on the part nd the principle, In the eleventh troduce the sys-

ms, that the un-

year of the reign of Edward I., the immediate successor of Henry, the right of imprisoning debtors was extended to merchants—Jewish merchants excepted, on account of their heterodoxy in religion—and was exercised with great gerrity. This extension was an act of policy on the part of the monarch. The ascendency obtained by the barons menaced the power of the throne; and, to counteract their influence, the merchants, a numerous and wealthy class, were selected by the monarch, and invested with the same authority over their debtors.

"But England was not yet prepared for the roke. She could endure an hereditary nobility she could tolerate a monarchy; but she could not yet resign her unfortunate sons, indiscriminately, to the prison. The barons and the merchants had gained the power over their victims; ret more than sixty years elapsed before Parliament dared to venture another act recognizing the principle. During this period, imprisonment for debt had, in some degree, lost its norelty. The incarceration of the debtor began to make the impression that fraud, and not misfortune, had brought on his catastrophe, and that he was, therefore, unworthy of the protection of the law, and too degraded for the society of the world. Parliament then ventured, in the reign of Edward III., in the fourteenth century, hextend the principle to two other cases—debt and detinue. This measure opened the door for the impositions which were gradually introduced by judicial usurpation, and have resulted in the most cruel oppression. Parliament, for one hundred and fifty years afterwards, did not renture to outrage the sentiments of an injured and indignant people, by extending the power to ordinary creditors. But they had laid the bundation, and an irresponsible judiciary reared the superstructure. From the twenty-fourth year of the reign of Edward III., to the nineteenth of Henry VIII., the subject slumbered m Parliament. In the mean time, all the ingemity of the courts was employed, by the introduction of artificial forms and legal fictions, to extend the power of imprisonment for debt in cases not provided for by statute. The jurisdiction of the court called the King's Bench, extended to all crimes or disturbances against the peace. Under this court of criminal jurisdiction the debtor was arrested by what was alled the writ of Middlesex, upon a supposed trespass or outrage against the peace and dignity of the crown. Thus, by a fictitious construction, the person who owed his neighbor was supposed to be, what every one knew him not to be, a violator of the peace, and an offender against the dignity of the crown; and while his body was held in custody for this crime, he was proceeded against in a civil action, for which he was not liable to arrest under statute. The jurisdiction of the court of common pleas extended to civil actions arising between individuals upon private transactions.

with that of its rival, this court also adopted its fictions, and extended its power upon artificial construction, quite as far beyond its statutory prerogative; and upon the fictitious plea of trespass, constituting a legal supposition of outrage against the peace of the kingdom, authorized the writ of capias, and subsequent imprisonment, in cases where a summons only was warranted by law. The court of exchequer was designed to protect the king's revenue, and had no legal jurisdiction, except in cases of debtors to the public. The ingenuity of this court found means to extend its jurisdiction to all cases of debt between individuals, upon the fictitious plea that the plaintiff, who instituted the suit, was a debtor to the king, and rendered the less able to discharge the debt by the default of the defendant. Upon this artificial pretext, that the defendant was debtor to the king's debtor, the court of exchequer, to secure the king's revenue, usurped the power of arraigning and imprisoning debtors of every description. Thus, these rival courts, each ambitious to sustain its relative importance, and extend its jurisdiction, introduced, as legal facts, the most palpable fictions, and sustained the most absurd solecisms as legal syllogisms.

"Where the person of the debtor was, by statute, held sacred, the courts devised the means of construing the demand of a debt into the supposition of a crime, for which he was subject to arrest on mesne process; and the evidence of debt, into the conviction of a crime against the peace of the kingdom, for which he was deprived of his liberty at the pleasure of the offended party. These practices of the courts obtained by regular gradation. Each act of usurpation was a precedent for similar outrages, until the system became general, and at length received the sanction of Parliament. The spirit of avarice finally gained a complete triumph over personal liberty. The sacred claims of misfortune were disregarded, and, to the iron grasp of poverty, were added the degradation of infamy, and the misery of the dungeon.

"While imprisonment for debt is sanctioned, the threats of the creditor are a source of perpetual distress to the dependent, friendless debtor, holding his liberty by sufferance alone. Temptations to oppression are constantly in view. The means of injustice are always at hand; and even helpless females are not exempted from the barbarous practice. In a land of liberty, enjoying, in all other respects, the freest and happiest government with which the world was ever blessed, it is matter of astonishment that this cruel custom, so anomalous to all our institutions, inflicting so much misery upon society, should have been so long endured."

for which he was not liable to arrest under statute. The jurisdiction of the court of common pleas extended to civil actions arising between individuals upon private transactions. To sustain its importance upon a scale equal from the suppression of any false and vicious principle in legislation. It is a false and vicious principle in the system of credit to admit a calculation for the chance of payment, founded on the sympathy and alarms of third parties, or on the degradation and incarceration of the debtor himself. Such a principle is morally wrong, and practically unjust; and there is no excuse for it in the plea of fraud. The idea of fraud does not enter into the contract at its original formation; and if occurring afterwards, and the debtor undertakes to defraud his creditor, there is a code of law made for the case; and every case should rest upon its own circumstances. As an element of credit, imprisonment for debt is condemned by morality, by humanity, and by the science of political economy; and its abolition has worked well in reducing the elements of credit to their legitimate derivation in the personal character, visible means, and present securities of the contracting debtor. And, if in that way, it has diminished in any degree the wide circle of credit, that is an additional advantage gained to the good order of society and to the solidity of the social edifice. And thus, as in so many other instances, American legislation has ameliorated the law derived from our English ancestors, and given an example which British legislation may some day follow.-In addition to the honor of seeing this humane act passed during his administration, General Jackson had the further and higher honor of having twice recommended it to the favorable consideration of Congress.

CHAPTER LXXVII.

SALE OF UNITED STATES STOCK IN THE NATIONAL BANK.

The President in his annual message had recommended the sale of this stock, and all other stock held by the United States in corporate companies, with the view to disconnecting the government from such corporations, and from all pursuits properly belonging to individuals. And he made the recommendation upon the political principle which condemns the partnership of the government with a corporation; and upon the economical principle which condemns the national pursuit of any branch of industry and leaves the profit, or loss of all such pursuits to individual enterprise; and upon the belief in this instance, that the partnership was unsafethat the firm would fail—and the stockholders lose their investment. In conformity to this recommendation, a bill was brought into the House of Representatives to sell the public stock held in the Bank of the United States, being seven millions of dollars in amount, and consisting of a national stock bearing five per centum interest. The bill was met at the threshold by the parliamentary motion which implies the unworthiness of the subject to be considered: namely, the motion to reject the bill at the first reading. That reading is never for consideration, but for information only; and, although debatable, carries the implication of unfitness for debate, and of some flagrant enormity which requires rejection, without the honor of the usual forms of legislation. That motion was made by a friend of the bank, and seconded by the member (Mr. Watmough) supposed to be familiar with the wishes of the bank directory. The speakers on each side gave vent to expressions which showed that they felt the indignity that was offered to the bill, one side in promoting-the other in opposing the motion. Mr. Wickliffe, the mover, said: "He was impelled, by a sense of duty to his constituents and to his country, to do in this case, what he had never done before-to move the rejection of a bill at its first reading. There are cases in which courtesy should yield to the demands of justice and public duty; and this, in my humble opinion, is one of them. It is a bill fraught with ruin to all private interests, except the interest of the stockjobbers of Wall-street." Mr. Watmough expressed his indignation and amazement at the appearance of such a bill, and even fell upon the committee which reported it with so much personality as drew a call to order from the Speaker of the House. "He expressed his sincere regret at the neccessity which compelled him to intrude upon the House, and to express his opinion on the bill, and his indignation against this persecution of a national institution. He was at a loss to say which feeling predominated in his bosom—amazement, at the want of financial skill in the supporters of the bill -or detestation of the unrelenting spirit of the administration persecution on that floor of an inditution admitted by the men of the times to be absol existence and safety of th that of the constitution its basis. He said, he was sill at such a crisis, could committee of this House; ras diminished when he source from which it came committee of Ways and M the parental care of the g neessee. Need he say mor Now, the member thus r after being pointed out as hill required nothing more Polk, afterwards President But parliamentary law is sons, and would consider outrage of the allusion equa the case of the youngest an member; and the languag show the indignities to w subjected in the House for any step concerning the ba against that corporation. emment stock was no inju the bank: it was no extinct of capital but a mere trans to private stockholders-si place daily among the private only injury could be to the stock in the possible decli withdrawal of a large stock! a damage, in the eye of the without injury; that is, the stockholder having a rig the assignment of reasons to corporation; and consequer out and withdraw when he i be unsafe, or unprofitably p ble of a better investment.

Mr. Polk remarked upon mexpected opposition to the House was pow forced to a common domain the House was pow forced to a common domain the house was pow forced to a common domain that the bank—with its This eulogy or censure had nection with a proposition to stock. It was a plain busine bill authorized the Secretary sell the stock upon such term men of the times to be absolutely essential to the existence and safety of this Union, and almost to that of the constitution itself which formed its basis. He said, he was amazed that such a bill at such a crisis, could emanate from any committee of this House; but his amazement TAS diminished when he recalled to mind the source from which it came. It came from the Committee of Ways and Means, and was under the parental care of the gentleman from Tenneessee. Need he say more?"

nch of industry

all such pursuits

oon the belief, in ip was unsafe-

he stockholders

formity to this ought into the

the public stock

ed States, being ant, and consist-

five per centum

he threshold by implies the un-

be considered;

bill at the first

r for considera-

; and, although

on of unfitness

grant enormity

ut the honor of

That motion was und seconded by supposed to be

bank directory.

vent to expres-

elt the indignity

side in promote motion. Mr.

e was impelled.

uents and to his t he had never

tion of a bill at cases in which nands of justice

y humble opin-

I fraught with

ept the interest

et." Mr. Wat-

on and amaze-

a bill, and even eported it with

Il to order from

e expressed his which compelled

and to express his indignation

ational institu-

which feeling azement, at the

orters of the bill

ng spirit of the

at floor of an in-

Now, the member thus referred to, and who, after being pointed out as the guardian of the hill required nothing more to be said, was Mr. Polk, afterwards President of the United States. But parliamentary law is no respecter of persons, and would consider the indecorum and outrage of the allusion equally reprehensible in the case of the youngest and least considerable member; and the language is noted here to show the indignities to which members were subjected in the House for presuming to take any step concerning the bank which militated against that corporation. The sale of the goverament stock was no injury to the capital of the bank: it was no extinction of seven millions of capital but a mere transfer of that amount w private stockholders-such transfer as took place daily among the private stockholders. The only injury could be to the market price of the stock in the possible decline involved in the withdrawal of a large stockholder; but that was a damage, in the eye of the law and of morality, without injury; that is, without injusticethe stockholder having a right to do so without the assignment of reasons to be judged of by the corporation; and consequently a right to sell out and withdraw when he judged his money to be unsafe, or unprofitably placed, and susceptible of a better investment.

Mr. Polk remarked upon the unusual but not unexpected opposition to the bill; and said if the House was pow forced to a decision, it would be done without opportunity for deliberation. He vindicated the bill from any necessary connection with the bank-with its eulogy or censure. This eulogy or censure had no necessary connection with a proposition to sell the government stock. It was a plain business proceeding. The bill authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to ell the stock upon such terms as he should deem dimition admitted by the wisest and the best best for the government. It was an isolated proposition. It proposed to disenthral the government from a partnership with this incorporat ed company. It proposed to get rid of the interest which the government had in this moneyed monopoly; and to do so by a sale of the government stocks, and on terms not below the market price. He was not disposed to depreciate the value of the article which he wished to sell. He was willing to rest upon the right to sell. The friends of the bank themselves raised the question of solvency, it would seem, that they might have an opportunity, to culogize the institution under the forms of a defence. This was not the time for such a discussion-for an inquiry into the conduct and condition of the bank.

The argument and the right were with the supporters of the bill; but they signified nothing against the firm majority, which not only stood by the corporation in its trials, but supported it in its wishes. The bill was immediately rejected, and by a summary process which inflicted a new indignity. It was voted down under the operation of the "previous question," which, cutting off all debate, and all amendments, consigns a measure to instant and silent decision-like the "mort sans phrase" (death without talk) of the Abbé Sièves, at the condemnation of Louis the Sixteenth. But the vote was not very triumphant—one of the leanest majorities, in fact, which the bank had received: one hundred and two to ninety-one.

The negative votes were:

"Messrs. Adair, Alexander, R. Allen, Anderson, Angel, Archer, Barnwell, James Bates, Beardsley, Bell, Bergen, Bethune, James Blair, John Blair, Boon, Bouck, Bouldin, John Brodhead, John C. Brodhead, Cambreleng, Chandler, Chinn, Claiborne, Clay, Clayton, Coke, Connor, Davenport, Dayan, Doubleday, Draper, Felder, Ford, Foster, Gaither, Gilmore, Gordon, Griffin, Thomas H. Hall, William Hall, Harper, Hawkins, Hoffman, Holland, Horn, Howard, Hubbard, Isacks, Jarvis, Jewett, Richard M. Johnson, Cave Johnson, Kavanagh, Kennon, Adam King, John King, Lamar, Lansing, Leavitt, Lecompte, Lewis, Lyon, Mann, Mardis, Mason, McCarty, Wm. McCoy, McIntire, McKay, Mitchell, Newnan, Nuckolls, Patton, Pierson, Plummer, Polk, Edward C. Reed, Roane, Soule, Speight, Standifer, John Thompson, Verplanck, Ward, Wardwell, Wayne, Weeks, Campbell, P. White, Worthington.

Such was the result of this attempt, on the part of the government, to exercise the most ordinary right of a stockholder to sell its shares: opposed, insulted, defeated; and by the power of the bank in Congress, of whose members subsequent investigations showed above fifty to be borrowers from the institution; and many to be on the list of its retained attorneys. But this was not the first time the government had been so treated. The same thing had happened once before, and about in the same way; but without the same excuse of persecution and enmity to the corporation; for, it was before the time of General Jackson's Presidency; to wit, in the year 1827, and under the Presidency of Mr. Quincy Adams. Mr. Philip P. Barbour, representative from Virginia, moved an inquiry, at that time, into the expediency of selling the United States stock in the bank: the consideration of the resolution was delayed a week, the time necessary for a communication with Philadelphia. At the end of the week, the resolution was taken up, and summarily rejected. Mr. Barbour had placed his proposition wholly upon the ground of a public advantage in selling its stock, unconnected with any reason disparaging to the bank, and in a way to avoid, as he believed, any opposition. He said:

"The House were aware that the government holds, at this time, stock of the Bank of the United States, to the amount of seven millions of dollars, which stock was at present worth in market about twenty-three and one half per cent. advance above its par value. If the whole of this stock should now be sold by the government, it would net a profit of one million and six hundred thousand dollars above the nominal amount of the stock. Such being the case, he thought it deserved the serious consideration of the House, whether it would not be a prudent and proper measure now to sell out that stock. It had been said, Mr. B. observed, by one of the best writers on political economy, with whom he was acquainted, that the pecuniary affairs of nations bore a close analogy to those of private households: in both, their prosperity mainly depended on a vigilant and effective management of their resources. There is, said Mr. B., an amount of between seventeen and eighteen millions of the stock of the United States now redeemable, and an amount of nine millions more, which will be redeemable next year. If the interest paid by the United States on this debt is compared with the dividend it receives on its stock in the Bank of the United States, it will be found that a small advantage would be gained | tion at their hands.

by the sale of the latter, in this respect; since the dividends on bank stock are received semi-annually, while the interest of the United States' securities is paid quarterly; this, however, he waived as a matter of comparatively small moment. It must be obvious, he said, that the addition of one million six hundred thousand dollars to the available funds of the United States will produce the extinguishment of an equivalent amount of the public debt, and consequently relieve the interest payable thereon, by which a saving would accrue of about one hundred thousand dollars per annum."

This was what Mr. Barbour said, at the time of offering the resolution. When it came up for consideration, a week after, he found his motion not only opposed, but his motives impeached, and the most sinister designs imputed to himself—to him! a Virginian country gentleman, honest and modest; ignorant of all indirection; upright and open; a stranger to all guile; and with the simplicity and integrity of a child. He deeply felt this impeachment of motives, certainly the first time in his life that an indecent imputation had ever fallen upon him; and he feelingly deprecated the intensity of the outrage. He said:

"We shall have fallen on evil times, indeed, if a member of this House might not, in the integrity of his heart, rise in his place, and offer for consideration a measure which he believed to be for the public weal, without having all that he said and did imputed to some hidden motive, and referred to some secret purpose which was never presented to the public eye."

His proposition was put to the vote, and received eight votes besides his own. They were: Messrs. Mark Alexander, John Floyd, John Roane, and himself, from Virginia; Thomas H. Hall, and Daniel Turner, of North Carolina; Tomlinson Foot of Connecticut; Joseph Lecompte, and Henry Daniel, of Kentucky. And this was the result of that first attempt to sell the United States stock in a bank chartered by itself and bearing its name. And now, why resuscitate these buried recollections? I answer: for the benefit of posterity! that they may have the benefit of our experience without the humiliation of having undergone it, and know what kind of a master seeks to rule over them if another national bank shall ever seek incorpora

CHAPTER

NULLIFICATION ORDINALI

It has been seen that th American system, and e feature of a high protes issue in the presidential that the long session of was occupied by the fri bringing forward to the points, and staking its fa election. That issue wa and the Congress election poraneously with the pr same character. The fat tem was sealed. Its legislation was to cease. on all hands; and it w that all the States, dissat would be satisfied with and regular extinction, u the approaching session ( expectation was only di State-that of South Ca aloof from the president away her vote upon citize didates-and doing nothi of General Jackson, wi interests and wishes were Instead of quieting her ap rating her passion for success of the election se and the 24th of Novembe the election which decide she issued her ordinance it, taking into her own violent redress which she That ordinance makes an our Union, which requires to understand the events history of subsequent ev words:

"ORDINA

&quot;An ordinance to null Congress of the United be laws laying duties an portation of foreign com

&quot;Whereas the Congress by various acts, purporti

is respect; since e received semihe United States' his, however, he tively small mosaid, that the aded thousand dolhe United States nt of an equivaand consequently reon, by which a ne hundred thou-said, at the time en it came up for found his motion s impeached, and ted to himselfentleman, honest irection; upright le; and with the hild. He deeply ves, certainly the lecent imputation e feelingly depreage. He said:

I times, indeed, if t not, in the ins place, and offer hich he believed ut having all that e hidden motive. rpose which was the vote, and rewn. They were: hn Floyd, John nia; Thomas H. North Carolina; ut; Joseph Le-Kentucky. And t attempt to sell ank chartered by nd now, why reions? I answer: at they may have ithout the humiand know what le over them if er seek incorpora

CHAPTER LXXVIII.

NULLIFICATION ORDINANCE IN SOUTH CARO-

 $I_T$  has been seen that the whole question of the American system, and especially its prominent feature of a high protective tariff, was put in issue in the presidential canvass of 1832; and that the long session of Congress of that 'year was occupied by the friends of this system in bringing forward to the best advantage all its points, and staking its fate upon the issue of the election. That issue was against the system: and the Congress elections taking place contemporaneously with the presidential were of the same character. The fate of the American system was sealed. Its domination in federal legislation was to cease. This was acknowledged on all hands; and it was naturally expected that all the States, dissatisfied with that system, would be satisfied with the view of its speedy and regular extinction, under the legislation of the approaching session of Congress; and that expectation was only disappointed in a single State-that of South Carolina. She had held aloof from the presidential election-throwing away her vote upon citizens who were not candidates-and doing nothing to aid the election of General Jackson, with whose success her interests and wishes were apparently identified. Instead of quieting her apprehensions, and moderating her passion for violent remedies, the success of the election seemed to inflame them; and the 24th of November, just a fortnight after the election which decided the fate of the tariff. she issued her ordinance of nullification against it, taking into her own hands the sudden and violent redress which she prescribed for herself. That ordinance makes an era in the history of our Union, which requires to be studied in order to understand the events of the times, and the history of subsequent events. It was in these words:

"ORDINANCE.

"An ordinance to nullify certain acts of the Congress of the United States, purporting to be laws laying duties and imposts on the importation of foreign commodities.

Whereas the Congress of the United States, duties and imposts on foreign imports, but in reality intended for the protection of domestic manufactures, and the giving of bounties to classes and individuals engaged in particular employments, at the expense and to the injury and oppression of other classes and individuals, and by wholly exempting from taxation certain foreign commodities, such as are not produced or manufactured in the United States, to afford a pretext for imposing higher and excessive duties on articles similar to those intended to be protected, hath exceeded its just powers under the constitution, which confers on it no authority to afford such protection, and hath violated the true meaning and intent of the constitution, which provides for equality in imposing the burdens of taxation upon the several States and portions of the confederacy: And whereas the said Congress, exceeding its just power to impose taxes and collect revenue for the purpose of effecting and accomplishing the specific objects and purposes which the constitution of the United States authorizes it to effect and accomplish, hath raised and collected unnecessary revenue for objects unauthorized by the consti-

"We, therefore, the people of the State of South Carolina, in convention assembled, do declare and ordain, and it is hereby declared and ordained, that the several acts and parts of acts of the Congress of the United States, purporting to be laws for the imposing of duties and imposts on the importation of foreign commodities, and now having actual operation and effect within the United States, and, more especially, an act entitled 'An act in alteration of the several acts imposing duties on imports,' approved on the nineteenth day of May, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight, and also an act entitled An act to alter and amend the several acts imposing duties on imports,' approved on the fourteenth day of July, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-two, are unauthorized by the constitution of the United States, and violate the true meaning and intent thereof, and are null, void, and no law, nor binding upon this State, its officers or citizens; and all promises, contracts, and obligations, made or entered into, or to be made or entered into, with purpose to secure the duties imposed by the said acts, and all judicial proceedings which shall be hereafter had in affirmance thereof, are and shall be held utterly null and void.

"And it is further ordained, that it shall not be lawful for any of the constituted authorities, whether of this State or of the United States, to enforce the payment of duties imposed by the said acts within the limits of this State; but it shall be the duty of the legislature to adopt such measures and pass such acts as may be necessary to give full effect to this ordinance, and to prevent the enforcement and arrest the operation of the said acts and parts of acts of the Congress of the United States within the limits of by various acts, purporting to be acts laying this State, from and after the 1st day of February next, and the duty of all other constituted authorities, and of all persons residing or being within the limits of this State, and they are hereby required and enjoined to obey and give effect to this ordinance, and such acts and measures of the legislature as may be passed or adopted in obedience thereto.

"And it is further ordained, that in no case of law or equity, decided in the courts of this State, wherein shall be drawn in question the authority of this ordinance, or the validity of such act or acts of the legislature as may be passed for the purpose of giving effect thereto, or the validity of the aforesaid acts of Congress, imposing duties, shall any appeal be taken or allowed to the Supreme Court of the United States, nor shall any copy of the record be permitted or allowed for that purpose; and if any such appeal shall be attempted to be taken, the courts of this State shall proceed to execute and enforce their judgments, according to the laws and usages of the State, without reference to such attempted appeal, and the person or persons attempting to take such appeal may be dealt with as for a contempt of the court.

"And it is further ordained, that all persons now holding any office of honor, profit, or trust, civil or military, under this State (members of the legislature excepted), shall, within such time, and in such manner as the legislature shall prescribe, take an oath well and truly to obey. execute, and enforce this ordinance, and such act or acts of the legislature as may be passed in pursuance thereof, according to the true intent and meaning of the same; and on the neglect or omission of any such person or persons so to do, his or their office or offices shall be forthwith vacated, and shall be filled up as if such person or persons were dead or had resigned; and no person hereafter elected to any office of honor, profit, or trust, civil or military (members of the legislature excepted), shall, until the legislature shall otherwise provide and direct, enter on the execution of his office, or be in any respect competent to discharge the duties thereof, until he shall, in like manner, have taken a similar oath; and no juror shall be empannelled in any of the courts of this State, in any cause in which shall be in question this ordinance, or any act of the legislature passed in pursuance thereof, unless he shall first, in addition to the usual oath, have taken an oath that he will well and truly obey, execute, and enforce this ordinance, and such act or acts of the legislature as may be passed to carry the same into operation and effect, according to the true intent and meaning thereof.

"And we, the people of South Carolina, to the end that it may be fully understood by the government of the United States, and the people of the co-States, that we are determined to maintain this our ordinance and declaration, at every hazard, do further declare that we will not submit to the application of force, on the part of the federal government, to reduce this State to obedience; but that we will consider the passage, by Congress, of any act authorizing the employment of a military or naval force against the State of South Carolina, her constitutional authorities or citizens; or any act abolishing or closing the ports of this State, or any of them or otherwise obstructing the free ingress and egress of vessels to and from the said ports, or any other act on the part of the federal government, to coerce the State, shut up her ports, destroy or harass her commerce, or to enforce the acts hereby declared to be null and void, otherwise than through the civil tribunals of the country, as inconsistent with the longer continuance of South Carolina in the Union; and that the people of this State will thenceforth hold themselves absolved from all further obligation to maintain or preserve their political connection with the people of the other States. and will forthwith proceed to organize a separate government, and do all other acts and things which sovereign and independent States may of right do.

"Done in convention at Columbia, the twenty-fourth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirtytwo, and in the fifty-seventh year of the declaration of the independence of the United States of America.'

This ordinance placed the State in the attitude of open, forcible resistance to the laws of the United States, to take effect on the first day of February next ensuing-a period within which it was hardly possible for the existing Congress, even if so disposed, to ameliorate obnoxious laws; and a period a month earlier than the commencement of the legal existence of the new Congress, on which all reliance was placed. And, in the mean time, if any attempt should be made in any way to enforce the obnoxious laws except through her own tribunals sworn against them, the fact of such attempt was to terminate the continuance of South Carolina in the Union-to absolve her from all connection with the federal government-and to establish her as a separate government, not only unconnected with the United States, but unconnected with any one State. This ordinance, signed by more than a hundred citizens of the greatest respectability, was officially communicated to the President of the United States; and a case presented to him to test his patriotism, his courage, and his fidelity to his inauguration oath-an oath taken in the presence of God and man, of Heaven and earth, "to take care that the laws of the Union were faithfully the event soon proved, wed, that he was not false try, and his oath. With for extraordinary power in his annual message State, and proceeded to the exercise of the power

CHAPTER

PROCLAMATION AGAIN

THE ordinance of nullifi dent Jackson in the firs and on the tenth of that tion was issued, of which essential and leading parts

"Whereas a convention of South Carolina have pa which they declare 'that parts of acts of the Congres purporting to be laws for 1 and imposts on the import modities, and now having effect within the United pecially' two acts for the s on the 29th of May, 1828 July, 1832, 'are unauthori tion of the United States, meaning and intent there void, and no law,' nor bind that State, or its officers: & nance, it is further declare any of the constituted auth of the United States to enf the duties imposed by the same State, and that it is th ture to pass such laws as give full effect to the said of

And whereas, by the further ordained, that in no decided in the courts of said be drawn in question the variance, or of the acts of the be passed to give it effect, on the United States, no appeal the Supreme Court of the shall any copy of the record lowed for that purpose, and tempting to take such appears as for a contempt of court:

And, finally, the said ord the people of South Carolin said ordinance at every haz will consider the passage of a abolishing or closing the por or otherwise obstructing the consider the pasauthorizing the aval force against her constitutional act abolishing or e, or any of them free ingress and the said ports, or he federal governup her ports, deor to enforce the Il and void others tribunals of the the longer conthe Union; and will thenceforth a all further oblive their political the other States. organize a sepaer acts and things

lumbia, the twenthe year of our adred and thirtyear of the declathe United States

ent States may of

State in the attice to the laws of ct on the first day -a period within for the existing to ameliorate oba month earlier ne legal existence h all reliance was ne, if any attempt to enforce the obher own tribunals of such attempt ace of South Caroher from all conernment—and to ernment, not only States, but uncon-

This ordinance, ed citizens of the fficially communie United States; o test his patriotlity to his inaugun the presence of d earth, "to take on were faithfully was Jackson; and the event soon proved, what in fact no one doubted that he was not false to his duty, his country, and his oath. Without calling on Congress for extraordinary powers, he merely adverted in his annual message to the attitude of the State, and proceeded to meet the exigency by the exercise of the powers he already possessed.

CHAPTER LXXIX.

PROCLAMATION AGAINST NULLIFICATION.

THE ordinance of nullification reached President Jackson in the first days of December, and on the tenth of that month the proclamation was issued, of which the following are the essential and leading parts:

"Whereas a convention assembled in the State of South Carolina have passed an ordinance, by which they declare 'that the several acts and parts of acts of the Congress of the United States, purporting to be laws for the imposing of duties and imposts on the importation of foreign comeffect within the United States, and more especially' two acts for the same purposes passed on the 29th of May, 1828, and on the 114th of July, 1832, 'are unauthorized by the constitution of the United States, and violate the true meaning and intent thereof, and are null and void, and no law,' nor binding on the citizens of that State, or its officers: and by the said ordinance it is further declared to be unlawful for any of the constituted authorities of the State or of the United States to enforce the payment of the duties imposed by the said acts within the same State, and that it is the duty of the legislature to pass such laws as may be necessary to give full effect to the said ordinance:

And whereas, by the said ordinance, it is further ordained, that in no case of law or equity decided in the courts of said State, wherein shall be drawn in question the validity of the said ordinance, or of the acts of the legislature that may be passed to give it effect, or of the said laws of the United States, no appeal shall be allowed to the Supreme Court of the United States, nor shall any copy of the record be permitted or allowed for that purpose, and that any person attempting to take such appeal shall be punished

as for a contempt of court: "And, finally, the said ordinance declares that the people of South Carolina will maintain the said ordinance at every hazard; and that they will consider the passage of any act, by Congress, abolishing or closing the ports of the said State. or otherwise obstructing the free ingress or egress of vessels to and from the said ports, or any other act of the federal government to coerce the State, shut up her ports, destroy or harass her commerce, or to enforce the said acts otherwise than through the civil tribunals of the coun try, as inconsistent with the longer continuance of South Carolina in the Union; and that the people of the said State will thenceforth hold themselves absolved from all further obligation to maintain or preserve their political connection with the people of the other States, and will forthwith proceed to organize a separate government, and do all other acts and things which sovereign and independent States may of right do:

"And whereas the said ordinance prescribes to the people of South Carolina a course of conduct in direct violation of their duty as citizens of the United States, contrary to the laws of their country, subversive of its constitution, and having for its object the destruction of the Union-that Union which, coeval with our political existence, led our fathers, without any other ties to unite them than those of patriotism and a common cause, through a sanguinary struggle to a glorious independence—that sacred Union, hitherto inviolate, which, perfected by our happy constitution, has brought us, by the favor of Heaven, to a state of prosperity at home, and high consideration abroad, rarely, if ever, equalled in the history of nations: modities, and now having actual operation and preserve this bond of our political existence from destruction, to maintain inviolate this state of national honor and prosperity, and to justify the confidence my fellow-citizens have reposed in me, I, Andrew Jackson, President of the United States, have thought proper to issue this my proclamation, stating my views of the constitution and laws applicable to the measures adopted by the convention of South Carolina, and to the reasons they have put forth to sustain them, declaring the course which duty will require me to pursue, and, appealing to the understanding and patriotism of the people, warn them of the consequences that must inevitably result from an observance of the dictates of the convention.

"Strict duty would require of me nothing more than the exercise of those powers with which I am now, or may hereafter be, invested, for preserving the peace of the Union, and for the execution of the laws. But the imposing aspect which opposition has assumed in this case, by clothing itself with State authority, and the deep interest which the people of the United States must all feel in preventing a resort to stronger measures, while there is a hope that any thing will be yielded to reasoning and remonstrance, perhaps demanded, and will certainly justify, a full exposition to South Carolina and the nation of the views I entertain of this important question, as well as a distinct enunciation of the course which my sense of duty will require me to pursue.

"The ordinance is founded, not on the indefeasible right of resisting acts which are plainly unconstitutional and too oppressive to be endured, but on the strange position that any one State may not only declare an act of Congress void, but prohibit its execution; that they may do this consistently with the constitution; that the true construction of that instrument permits a State to retain its place in the Union, and yet. be bound by no other of its laws than those it may choose to consider as constitutional. It is true, they add, that to justify this abrogation of a law, it must be palpably contrary to the constitution; but it is evident, that to give the right of resisting laws of that description, coupled with the uncontrolled right to decide what laws deserve that character is to give the power of resisting all laws. For as, by the theory, there is no appeal, the reasons alleged by the State, good or bad, must prevail. If it should be said that public opinion is a sufficient check against the abuse of this power, it may be asked why it is not deemed a sufficient guard against the passage of an unconstitutional act by Congress. There is, however, a restraint in this last case, which makes the assumed power of a State more indefensible, and which does not exist in the other. There are two appeals from an unconstitutional act passed by Congress—one to the judiciary. the other to the people and the States. There is no appeal from the State decision in theory. and the practical illustration shows that the courts are closed against an application to review it, both judges and jurors being sworn to decide in its favor. But reasoning on this subject is superfluous, when our social compact, in express terms, declares that the laws of the United States, its constitution, and treaties made under it, are the supreme law of the land; and, for greater caution, adds 'that the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any thing in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.' And it may be asserted without fear of refutation, that no federative government could exist without a similar provision. Look for a moment to the consequence. If South Carolina considers the revenue laws unconstitutional, and has a right to prevent their execution in the port of Charleston, there would be a clear constitutional objection to their collection in every other port, and no revenue could be collected any where; for all imposts must be equal. It is no answer to repeat, that an unconstitutional law is no law, so long as the question of its legality is to be decided by the State itself; for every law operating injuriously upon any local interest will be perhaps thought, and certainly represented, as unconstitutional, and, as has been shown, there is no appeal.

"If this doctrine had been established at an earlier day, the Union would have been dissolved in its infancy. The excise law in Pennsylvania, the embargo and non-intercourse law in the Eastern States, the carriage tax in Virginia, were all deemed unconstitutional, and were more unequal in their operation than any of the laws now complained of; but fortunately none of States, whose delegates framed, and whose con-

those States discovered that they had the right now claimed by South Carolina. The war, into which we were forced to support the dignity of the nation and the rights of our citizens, might have ended in defeat and disgrace, instead of victory and honor, if the States who supposed it a runious and unconstitutional measure, had thought they possessed the right of nullifying the act by which it was declared, and denying supplies for its prosecution. Hardly and unequally as those measures bore upon several members of the Union, to the legislatures of none did this efficient and peaceable remedy, as it is called suggest itself. The discovery of this important feature in our constitution was reserved to the present day. To the statesmen of South Carolina belongs the invention, and upon the citizens of that State will unfortunately fall the evils of reducing it to practice.

"If the doctrine of a State veto upon the laws of the Union carries with it internal evidence of its impracticable absurdity, our constitutional history will also afford abundant proof that it would have been repudiated with indignation had it been proposed to form a feature in our government.

"In our colonial state, although dependent on another power, we very early considered ourselves as connected by common interest with each other. Leagues were formed for common defence, and, before the declaration of independence, we were known in our aggregate character as the United Colonies of America. That decisive and important step was taken jointly We declared ourselves a nation by a joint, not by several acts, and when the terms of our confederation were reduced to form, it was in that of a solemn league of several States by which they agreed that they would collectively form one nation for the purpose of conducting some certain domestic concerns and all foreign relations. In the instrument forming that Union is found an article which declares that every State shall abide by the determinations of Congress on all questions which, by that confederation, should be submitted to them.

"Under the confederation, then, no State could legally annul a decision of the Congress, or refuse to submit to its execution; but no provision was made to enforce these decisions. Congress made requisitions, but they were not complied with. The government could not operate on individuals. They had no judiciary, no means of collecting revenue.

"But the defects of the confederation need not be detailed. Under its operation we could scarcely be called a nation. We had neither prosperity at home, nor consideration abroad This state of things could not be endured and our present happy constitution was formed but formed in vain, if this fatal doctrine prevail. It was formed for important objects that are announced in the preamble made in the name and by the authority of the people of the United rentions approved it. among these objects, the a more perfect Union.' even if there were no supremacy to the const Inited States over thos be conceived that an in purpose of 'forming a m that of the confederation od by the assembled wis to substitute for that co government dependent local interest, the party prevailing faction in a plain, unsophisticated un the question, will give s preserve the Union. Me pursuit of an impractica have devised one that is

"The constitution dec powers of the United S arising under the laws of that such laws, the constit be paramount to the State The judiciary act prescrib the case may be brought United States: by appeal, shall decide against this p tution. The ordinance d no appeal; makes the S the constitution and laws forces judges and jurors t disregard their provisions penal in a suitor to attent further declares that it sh the authorities of the Un State, to enforce the paym by the revenue laws withi

Here is a law of the L pretended to be unconstitu authority of a small major single State. Here is a pr tution which is solemnly a authority.

"On such expositions ar dinance grounds not only right to annul the laws of but to enforce it by a threat Union, if any attempt is m

"This right to secede is ture of the constitution, v compact between sovereign served their whole sovere are subject to no superior made the compact, they c their opinion, it has been d other States. Fallacious a soning is, it enlists State p cates in the honest prejudic not studied the nature of o ciently to see the radical er

"The people of the Unite constitution, acting throug tures in making the compact they had the right na. The war, into port the dignity of our citizens, might race, instead of vicwho supposed it a nal measure, had right of nullifying lared, and denying

Hardly and un pore upon several legislatures of none le remedy, as it is scovery of this imution was reserved statesmen of South ion, and upon the fortunately fall the veto upon the laws nternal evidence of our constitutional ndant proof that it 1 with indignation n a feature in our ough dependent on ly considered ourn interest with each d for common deration of indepenaggregate character America. That dewas taken jointly tion by a joint not e terms of our conorm, it was in that al States by which d collectively form of conducting some nd all foreign relaorming that Union eclares that every rminations of Conby that confederathem.

then, no State could the Congress, or ren; but no provision ecisions. Congress were not complied d not operate on iniciary, no means of confederation need operation we could

We had neither nsideration abroad. not be endured, and ion was formed, but octrine prevail. It bjects that are ande in the name and ople of the United ed, and whose concontions approved it. The most important its provisions, and acting in separate conventions among these objects, that which is placed first in rank, on which all the others rest, is 'to form a more perfect Union.' Now, is it possible that even if there were no express provision giving supremacy to the constitution and laws of the United States over those of the States—can it be conceived that an instrument made for the purpose of 'forming a more perfect Union' than that of the confederation, could be so constructally the assembled wisdom of our country, as to substitute for that confederation a form of government dependent for its existence on the local interest, the party spirit of a State, or of a prevailing faction in a State? Every man of plain unsophisticated understanding, who hears the question, will give such an answer as will preserve the Union. Metaphysical subtlety in pursuit of an impracticable theory, could alone have devised one that is calculated to destroy it.

"The constitution declares that the judicial powers of the United States extend to cases arising under the laws of the United States and that such laws, the constitution and treaties shall he paramount to the State constitutions and laws. The judiciary act prescribes the mode by which the case may be brought before a court of the United States: by appeal, when a State tribunal shall decide against this provision of the constitution. The ordinance declares there shall be no appeal; makes the State law paramount to the constitution and laws of the United States: forces judges and jurors to swear that they will disregard their provisions; and even makes it penal in a suitor to attempt relief by appeal. It further declares that it shall not be lawful for the authorities of the United States, or of that State, to enforce the payment of duties imposed by the revenue laws within its limits.

"Here is a law of the United States, not even pretended to be unconstitutional, repealed by the authority of a small majority of the voters of a single State. Here is a provision of the constitution which is solemnly abrogated by the same

"On such expositions and reasonings, the ordinance grounds not only an assertion of the right to annul the laws of which it complains, but to enforce it by a threat of seceding from the Union, if any attempt is made to execute them.

"This right to secede is deduced from the nature of the constitution, which, they say, is a compact between sovereign States, who have preserved their whole sovereignty, and, therefore, are subject to no superior; that, because they made the compact, they can break it when, in their opinion, it has been departed from, by the other States. Fallacious as this course of reasoning is, it enlists State pride, and finds advocates in the honest prejudices of those who have not studied the nature of our government sufficiently to see the radical error on which it rests,

"The people of the United States formed the constitution, acting through the State legislatures in making the compact, to meet and discuss when they ratified those provisions; but, the terms used in its construction show it to be a government in which the people of all the States collectively are represented. We are one people in the choice of the President and Vice-President. Here the States have no other agency than to direct the mode in which the votes shall be given. Candidates having the majority of all the votes are chosen. The electors of a majority of States may have given their votes for one candidate, and yet another may be chosen. The people, then, and not the States, are represented in the executive branch

"In the House of Representatives, there is this difference: that the people of one State do not, as in the case of President and Vice-President. all vote for the same officers. The people of all the States do not vote for all the members. each State electing only its own representatives. But this creates no material distinction. When chosen, they are all representatives of the United States, not representatives of the particular State from which they come. They are paid by the United States, not by the State, nor are they accountable to it for any act done in the performance of their legislative functions; and however they may in practice, as it is their duty to do, consult and prefer the interests of their particular constituents, when they come in conflict with any other partial or local interest. vet it is their first and highest duty, as representatives of the United States, to promote the general good.

"The constitution of the United States, then, forms a government, not a league; and whether it be formed by compact between the States, or in any other manner, its character is the same. It is a government in which all the people are represented, which operates directly on the people individually, not upon the States—they retained all the power they did not grant. each State, having expressly parted with so many powers as to constitute, jointly with the other States, a single nation, cannot, from that period, possess any right to secede, because such secession does not break a league, but destroys the unity of a nation; and any injury to that unity is not only a breach which would result from the contravention of a compact, but it is an offence against the whole Union. To say that any State may at pleasure secede from the Union, is to say that the United States are not a nation; because it would be a solecism to contend that any part of a nation might dissolve its connection with the other parts, to their injury or ruin, without committing any offence. Secession, like any other revolutionary act, may be morally justified by the extremity of oppression; but, to call it a constitutional right, is confounding the meaning of terms; and can only be done through gross error, or to deceive those who are willing to assert a right, but would pause before they made a revolution, or incur the penalties consequent on a failure.

not only admonish you, as the First Magistrate of our common country, not to incur the penalty of its laws, but use the influence that a father would over his children whom he saw rushing to certain ruin. In that paternal language, with that paternal feeling, let me tell you, my countrymen, that you are deluded by men who are either deceived themselves, or wish to deceive you. Mark under what pretences you have been led on to the brink of insurrection and treason, on which you stand! First, a diminution of the value of your staple commodity, lowered by over production in other quarters, and the consequent diminution in the value of your lands, were the sole effect of the tariff laws.

"The effect of those laws was confessedly injurious, but the evil was greatly exaggerated by the unfounded theory you were taught to believe, that its burdens were in proportion to your exports, not to your consumption of imported articles. Your pride was roused by the assertion that a submission to those laws was a state of vassalage, and that resistance to them was equal, in patriotic merit, to the oppositions our fathers offered to the oppressive laws of Great Britain. You were told this opposition might be peaceably, might be constitutionally made; that you might enjoy all the advantages of the Union, and bear none of its burdens. Eloquent appeals to your passions, to your State pride, to your native courage, to your sense of real injury, were used to prepare you for the period when the mask, which concealed the hideous features of disunion, should be taken off. It fell, and you were made to look with complacency on objects which, not long since, you would have regarded with horror. Look back to the arts which have brought you to this state; look forward to the consequences to which it must inevitably lead! Look back to what was first told you as an inducement to enter into this dangerous course. The great political truth was repeated to you, that you had the revolutionary right of resisting all laws that were palpably unconstitutional and intolerably oppressive; it was added that the right to nullify a law rested on the same principle, but that it was a peaceable remedy! This character which was given to it, made you receive with too much confidence the assertions that were made of the unconstitutionality of the law, and its oppressive effects. Mark, my fellowcitizens, that, by the admission of your leaders, the unconstitutionality must be palpable, or it will not justify either resistance or nullification! What is the meaning of the word palpable, in the sense in which it is here used? That which is apparent to every one; that which no man of ordinary intellect will fail to perceive. Is the unconstitutionality of these laws of that description? Let those among your leaders who once approved and advocated the principle of protective duties, answer the question; and let them choose whether they will be considered as incapable, then, of perceiving that which must those, once respected, by whom it is uttered,

"Fellow-citizens of my native State, let me have been apparent to every man of common understanding, or as imposing upon your confi dence, and endeavoring to mislead you now, In either case they are unsafe guides in the perilous path they urge you to tread. Ponder well on this circumstance, and you will know how to appreciate the exaggerated language they address to you. They are not champions of liberty emulating the fame of our revolutionary fathers; nor are you an oppressed people. contending, as they repeat to you, against worse than colonial vassalage.

'You are free members of a flourishing and happy Union. There is no settled design to oppress you. You have indeed felt the unequal operation of laws which may have been unwisely, not unconstitutionally passed; but that inequality must necessarily be removed. At the very moment when you were madly urged on to the unfortunate course you have begun, a change in public opinion had commenced. The nearly approaching payment of the public debt. and the consequent necessity of a diminution of duties, had already produced a considerable reduction, and that, too, on some articles of general consumption in your State. The importance of this change was underrated, and you were authoritatively told that no further alleviation of your burdens was to be expected, at the very time when the condition of the country imperiously demanded such a modification of the duties as should reduce them to a just and equitable scale. But, as if apprehensive of the effect of this change in allaying your discontents, you were precipitated into the fearful state in which you now find yourselves.

"I adjure you, as you honor their memory as you love the cause of freedom, to which they dedicated their lives; as you prize the peace of your country, the lives of its best citizens and your own fair fame, to retrace your steps. Snatch from the archives of your State the disorganizing edict of its convention; bid its members to reassemble, and promulgate the decided expressions of your will to remain in the path which alone can conduct you to safety, prosperity and honor. Tell them that, compared to disunion, all other evils are light, because that brings with it an accumulation of all. Declare that you will never take the field unless the star-spangled banner of your country shall float over you; that you will not be stigmatized when dead, and dishonored and scorned while you live, as the authors of the first attack on the constitution of your country. Its destroyers you cannot be. You may disturb its peace, you may interrupt the course of its prosperity, you may cloud its reputation for stability, but its tranquillity will be restored, its prosperity will return, and the stain upon its national character will be transferred, and remain an eternal blot on the memory of those who caused the disorder.

"Fellow-citizens of the United States, the threat of unhallowed disunion, the names of the array of military f the approach of a crisi the continuance of our our political existence, free governments, may ture demanded a free, ciation, not only of m principles of action; asserted of a right by a of the Union, and eve pleasure, a frank expos relation to the origin and and the construction I by which it was create Having the fullest confi the legal and constitutio which has been expre confidence, on your un determination to execu the Union by all constit if possible, by moderate. necessity of a recourse to will of Heaven that the r curse on man for the s blood should fall upon called down by any offe the United States.

"Fellow-citizens: Th before you. On your un government depends the question it involves, whe will be preserved, and th us as one people shall be can doubt that the unan decision will be express inspire new confidence in and that the prudence, courage which it will brin transmit them unimpair our children."

CHAPTER

MESSAGE ON THE SOUTH , ING

In his annual message to ing of the session 1832-'. adverted to the proceeding hinting at their characte Union, expressing his bereducing the duties which public debt would permi put an end to those proc did not, and those proceed the executive government powers than it possessed promised to make a commi y man of common ug upon your confi mislead you now. Isafe guides in the to tread. Ponder and you will know aggerated language are not champions of our revolutionoppressed people, you, against worse

f a flourishing and o settled design to eed felt the unequal have been unwisely, ed; but that ineremoved. At the ere madly urged on vou have begun, a I commenced. The of the public debt. ty of a diminution iced a considerable n some articles of State. The imporinderrated, and you at no further allevibe expected, at the ion of the country a modification of them to a just and apprehensive of the ng your discontents. the fearful state in onor their memory. dom, to which they 1 prize the peace of ts best citizens, and retrace your steps. your State the disntion; bid its memmulgate the decided remain in the path to safety, prosperity t, compared to dislight, because that ion of all. Declare the field unless the r country shall float be stigmatized when scorned while you first attack on the ry. Its destroyers isturb its peace, you its prosperity, you for stability, but its . its prosperity will s national character iain an eternal blot caused the disorder. United States, the nion, the names of whom it is uttered, the array of military force to support it, denote the approach of a crisis in our affairs, on which the continuance of our unexampled prosperity, our political existence, and perhaps that of all free governments, may depend. The conjunc-ture demanded a free, a full, and explicit enun-ciation, not only of my intentions, but of my principles of action; and, as the claim was asserted of a right by a State to annul the laws of the Union, and even to secede from it at pleasure, a frank exposition of my opinions in relation to the origin and form of our government. and the construction I give to the instrument by which it was created, seemed to be proper. Having the fullest confidence in the justness of the legal and constitutional opinion of my duties. which has been expressed, I rely, with equal confidence, on your undivided support in my determination to execute the laws, to preserve the Union by all constitutional means, to arrest, if possible, by moderate, but firm measures, the necessity of a recourse to force; and, if it be the will of Heaven that the recurrence of its primeval curse on man for the shedding of a brother's blood should fall upon our land, that it be not called down by any offensive act on the part of the United States.

"Fellow-citizens: The momentous case is before you. On your undivided support of your porerment depends the decision of the great question it involves, whether your sacred Union will be preserved, and the blessings it secures to us as one people shall be perpetuated. No one can doubt that the unanimity with which that decision will be expressed, will be such as to inspire new confidence in republican institutions, and that the prudence, the wisdom, and the courage which it will bring to their defence, will transmit them unimpaired and invigorated to our children."

CHAPTER LXXX.

MESSAGE ON THE SOUTH CAROLINA PROCEED-

Is his annual message to Congress at the opening of the session 1832-'33, the President had adverted to the proceedings in South Carolina, hinting at their character as inimical to the Union, expressing his belief that the action in reducing the duties which the extinction of the public debt would permit and require, would put an end to those proceedings; and if they did not, and those proceedings continued, and the executive government should need greater powers than it possessed to overcome them, he promised to make a communication to Congress, showing the state of the question,—what had been done to compose it,—and asking for the powers which the exigency demanded. The proceedings not ceasing, and taking daily a more aggravated form in the organization of troops, the collection of arms and of munitions of war, and in declarations hostile to the Union, he found himself required, early in January, to make the promised communication; and did so in a message to both Houses, of which the following are the essential parts which belong to history and posterity:

"Since the date of my last annual message, I have had officially transmitted to me by the Governor of South Carolina, which I now communicate to Congress, a copy of the ordinance passed by the convention which assembled at Columbia, in the State of South Carolina, in November last, declaring certain acts of Congress therein mentioned, within the limits of that State, to be absolutely null and void, and making it the duty of the legislature to pass such laws as would be necessary to carry the same into effect from and after the 1st of February next

"The consequences to which this extraordinary defiance of the just authority of the government might too surely lead, were clearly foreseen, and it was impossible for me to hesitate as to my own duty in such an emergency.

"The ordinance had been passed, however, without any certain knowledge of the recommendation which, from a view of the interests of the nation at large, the Executive had determined to submit to Congress; and a hope was indulged that, by frankly explaining his sentiments, and the nature of those duties which the crisis would devolve upon him, the authorities of South Carolina might be induced to retrace their steps. In this hope, I determined to issue my proclamation of the 10th of December last, a copy of which I now lay before Congress.

"I regret to inform you that these reasonable expectations have not been realized, and that the several acts of the legislature of South Carolina, which I now lay before you, and which have, all and each of them, finally passed, after a knowledge of the desire of the administration to modify the laws complained of, are too well calculated, both in their positive enactments, and in the spirit of opposition which they obviously encourage, wholly to obstruct the collection of the revenue within the limits of that State.

"Up to this period, neither the recommendation of the Executive in regard to our financial policy and impost system, nor the disposition manifested by Congress promptly to act upon that subject, nor the unequivocal expression of the public will, in all parts of the Union, appears to have produced any relaxation in the measures of opposition adopted by the State of South Carolina; nor is there any reason to hope that the ordinance and laws will be abandoned.

"I have no knowledge that an attempt has been made, or that it is in contemplation, to reassemble either the convention or the legislature; and it will be perceived that the interval before the 1st of February is too short to admit of the preliminary steps necessary for that purpose. It appears, moreover, that the State authorities are actively organizing their military resources, and providing the means, and giving the most solemn assurances of protection and support to all who shall enlist in opposition to the revenue laws.

'A recent proclamation of the present Governor of South Carolina has openly defied the authority of the Executive of the Union, and general orders from the head quarters of the State announced his determination to accept the services of volunteers, and his belief that, should their country need their services, they will be found at the post of honor and duty, ready to lay down their lives in her defence. Under these orders, the forces referred to are directed to 'hold themselves in readiness to take the field at a moment's warning;' and in the city of Charleston, within a collection district and a port of entry, a rendezvous has been opened for the purpose of enlisting men for the magazine and municipal guard. Thus, South Carolina presents herself in the attitude of hostile preparation, and ready even for military violence, if need be, to enforce her laws for preventing the collection of the duties within her limits.

"Proceedings thus announced and matured must be distinguished from menaces of unlawful resistance by irregular bodies of people, who, acting under temporary delusion, may be restrained by reflection, and the influence of public opinion, from the commission of actual outrage. In the present instance, aggression may be regarded as committed when it is officially authorized, and the means of enforcing it fully provided.

"Under these circumstances, there can be no doubt that it is the determination of the authorities of South Carolina fully to carry into effect their ordinance and laws after the 1st of February. It therefore becomes my duty to bring the subject to the serious consideration of Congress, in order that such measures as they, in their wisdom, may deem fit, shall be seasonably provided; and that it may be thereby understood that, while the government is disposed to remove all just cause of complaint, as far as may be practicable consistently with a proper regard to the interests of the community at large, it is, nevertheless, determined that the supremacy of the laws shall be maintained.

"In making this communication, it appears to me to be proper not only that I should lay before you the acts and proceedings of South Carolina, but that I should also fully acquaint you | South Carolina; that the die has been at last with those steps which I have already caused to cast, and South Carolina has at length appealed be taken for the due collection of the revenue and with my views of the subject generally, that the suggestions which the constitution requires me to make, in regard to your future legislation may be better understood.

"This subject, having early attracted the anxious attention of the Executive, as soon as it was probable that the authorities of South Carolina seriously meditated resistance to the faithful execution of the revenue laws, it was deemed advisable that the Secretary of the Treasury should particularly instruct the officers of the United States, in that part of the Union, as to the nature of the duties prescribed by the existing laws.

"Instructions were accordingly issued, on the sixth of November, to the collectors in that State, pointing out their respective duties, and enjoining upon each a firm and vigilant, but discreet performance of them in the emergency then apprehended.

I herewith transmit copies of these instructions, and of the letter addressed to the district attorney, requesting his co-operation. These instructions were dictated in the hope that, as the opposition to the laws, by the anomalous proceeding of nullification, was represented to be of a pacific nature, to be pursued, substantially, according to the forms of the constitution. and without resorting, in any event, to force or violence, the measures of its advocates would be taken in conformity with that profession; and on such supposition, the means afforded by the existing laws would have been adequate to meet any emergency likely to arise.

"It was, however, not possible altogether to suppress apprehension of the excesses to which the excitement prevailing in that quarter might lead; but it certainly was not foreseen that the meditated obstruction to the laws would so soon openly assume its present character.

"Subsequently to the date of those instructions, however, the ordinance of the convention was passed, which, if complied with by the people of that State, must effectually render inoperative the present revenue laws within her

"This solemn denunciation of the laws and authority of the United States has been followed up by a series of acts, on the part of the authorities of that State, which manifest a determination to render inevitable a resort to those measures of self-defence which the paramount duty of the federal government requires; but, upon the adoption of which, that State will proceed to execute the purpose it has avowed in this ordinance, of withdrawing from the Union.

"On the 27th of November, the legislature assembled at Columbia; and, on their meeting the Governor laid before them the ordinance of the convention. In his message, on that occasion, he acquaints them that 'this ordinance has thus become a part of the fundamental law of

to her ulterior soverei confederacy, and has served rights. The power is not a ques onger argue. It is su it, and that the act compatibility with our to all laws passed by within the authorized drawn in question, w exerted in a case in wh palpably, deliberately, That it brings up a con mentous interest, is no denied. This crisis p which is referable to been commanded by th sovereignty, to take ca of this State, their will measure of legislation. to employ at this crisis such enactments as ma it utterly impossible to the duties imposed by t nullified.' He proceeds every citizen with a civ may claim, if he pleas goods, seized under the giving security to abide law, and, at the same constitute treason again bill of pains and pena and punish disobedience points too obvious to rec one word, you must su You must look to and contingencies. In your courts of judicature mus but you must look to th conflict of jurisdiction ar and the courts of the Ur

"The Governor also a clearances, in violation of and, to prepare for the happen, unless the Unite surrender their authorit disregarding his oath, refi laws of the Union, he re revision of the militia sy vernor "be authorized to of Charleston and its dep of two thousand voluntee or files;' and that they be ary brigade, consisting of valry, field and heavy ar be 'armed and equipped, nals, completely for the f priations be made for sup in our munitions of war. volunteer draughts, he 1 Governor be authorized ' of ten thousand voluntee visions of the State, to ranged in regiments and cers to be selected by the ion of the revenue, bject generally, that onstitution requires ur future legislation.

Vol. I.—20

y attracted the anxve, as soon as it was s of South Carolina e to the faithful exeit was deemed adthe Treasury should ficers of the United nion, as to the nased by the existing lingly issued, on the collectors in that espective duties, and and vigilant, but disthe emergency then ies of these instrucessed to the district o-operation. These in the hope that, as s, by the anomalous was represented to e pursued, substans of the constitution. ly event, to force or advocates would be hat profession; and eans afforded by the en adequate to meet assible altogether to he excesses to which a that quarter might not foreseen that the e laws would so soon haracter.

ite of those instrucce of the convention lied with by the peoffectually render innue laws within her

ion of the laws and ites has been follow-, on the part of the vhich manifest a deable a resort to these hich the paramount iment requires; but, ich, that State will pose it has avowed in ving from the Union. mber, the legislature nd, on their meeting iem the ordinance of essage, on that occaat 'this ordinance has e fundamental law of e die has been at last as at length appealed to her ulterior sovereignty as a member of this confederacy, and has planted herself on her reserved rights. The rightful exercise of this power is not a question which we shall any onger argue. It is sufficient that she has willed it and that the act is done; nor is its strict compatibility with our constitutional obligation to all laws passed by the general government, within the authorized grants of power, to be drawn in question, when this interposition is exerted in a case in which the compact has been palpably, deliberately, and dangerously violated. That it brings up a conjuncture of deep and momentous interest, is neither to be concealed nor denied. This crisis presents a class of duties which is referable to yourselves. You have been commanded by the people, in their highest sovereignty, to take care that, within the limits of this State, their will shall be obeyed.' 'The measure of legislation,' he says, 'which you have to employ at this crisis, is the precise amount of such enactments as may be necessary to render it utterly impossible to collect, within our limits, the duties imposed by the protective tariffs thus nullified.' He proceeds: 'That you should arm every citizen with a civil process, by which he may claim, if he pleases, a restitution of his goods, seized under the existing imposts, on his giving security to abide the issue of a suit at law, and, at the same time, define what shall constitute treason against the State, and, by a bill of pains and penalties, compel obedience, and punish disobedience to your awn laws, are points too obvious to require any discussion. In one word, you must survey the whole ground. You must look to and provide for all possible contingencies. In your own limits, your own courts of judicature must not only be supreme, but you must look to the ultimate issue of any conflict of jurisdiction and power between them

"The Governor also asks for power to grant clearances, in violation of the laws of the Union; and, to prepare for the alternative which must happen, unless the United States shall passively surrender their authority, and the Executive disregarding his oath, refrain from executing the laws of the Union, he recommends a thorough revision of the militia system, and that the Governor "be authorized to accept, for the defence of Charleston and its dependencies, the services of two thousand volunteers, either by companies orfiles;' and that they be formed into a legionary brigade, consisting of infantry, riflemen, cavalry, field and heavy artillery; and that they be 'armed and equipped, from the public arsenals completely for the field; and that approprations be made for supplying all deficiencies in our munitions of war.' In addition to these volunteer draughts, he recommends that the Governor be authorized 'to accept the services of ten thousand volunteers from the other divisions of the State, to be organized and ar-

and the courts of the United States.

Vol. I.—20

and that this whole force be called the 'State Guard.'

