It is painful to see the unceasing efforts to alarm the South by imputations against the North of unconstitutional designs on the subject of slavery. You are right, I have no doubt, in believing that no such intermeddling disposition exists in the body of our Northern brethren. Their good faith is sufficiently guaranteed by the interest they have as merchants, as ship owners, and as manufacturers, in preserving a Union with the slaveholding States. On the other hand what madness in the South to look for greater safety in disunion. It would be worse than jumping into the fire for fear of the frying pan. The danger from the alarms is, that the pride and resentment exerted by them may be an overmatch for the dictates of prudence; and favor the project of a Southern convention, insidiously revived, as promising by its councils, the best securities against grievances of every sort from the North."-So wrote Mr. Madison to Mr. Clay, in June 1833. It is a writing every word of which is matter for grave reflection, and the date at the head of all. It is dated just three months after the tariff "compromise" of 1833, which, in arranging the tariff question for nine years, was supposed to have quieted the South -put an end to agitation, and to the idea of a Southern convention-and given peace and harmony to the whole Union. Not so the fact-at least not so the fact in South Carolina. Agitation did not cease there on one point, before it began on another: the idea of a Southern convention for one cause, was hardly abandoned before it was "insidiously revived" upon another. I use the language of Mr. Madison in qualifying this revival with a term of odious import: for no man was a better master of our language than he was—no one more scrupulously just in all his judgments upon men and things—and no one occupying a position either personally, politically, or locally, to speak more advisedly on the subject of which he spoke. He was pained osee the efforts to alarm the South on the subect of slavery, and the revival of the project for Southern convention; and he feared the effect resentment of Southern people. His letter was not to a neighbor, or to a citizen in private life, but to a public man on the theatre of national action, and one who had acted a part in composing national difficulties. It was evidently written for a purpose. It was in answer to Mr. Clay's expressed belief, that no design hostile to Southern slavery existed in the body of the Northern people—to concur with him in that belief-and to give him warning that the danger was in another quarter-in the South itself: and that it looked to a dissolution of the Union. It was to warn an eminent public man of a new source of national danger, more alarming than the one he had just been composing.

About the same time, and to an old and confidential friend (Edward Coles, Esq., who had been his private secretary when President), Mr. Madison also wrote: "On the other hand what more dangerous than nullification, or more evident than the progress it continues to make, either in its original shape or in the disguises it assumes? Nullification has the effect of putting powder under the constitution and the Union, and a match in the hand of every party to blow them up at pleasure. And for its progress, hearken to the tone in which it is now preached: cast your eyes on its increasing minorities in the most of the Southern States, without a decrease in any of them. Look at Virginia herself, and read in the gazettes, and in the proceedings of popular meetings, the figure which the anarchical principle now makes, in contrast with the scouting reception given to it but a short time ago. It is not probable that this offspring of the discontents of South Carolina will ever approach success in a majority of the States: but a susceptibility of the contagion in the Southern States is visible: and the danger not to be concealed, that the sympathy arising from known causes, and the inculcated impression of a permanent incompatibility of interests between the South and the North, may put it in the power of popular leaders, aspiring to the highest stations, to unite the South on some critical occasion, in a course that will end in creating a new theatre of great though inferior interest. In pursuing this course, the first and most obvious step is nullification, the next secession, and the last a farewell separation."

In this view of the dangers of nullification in its hich these alarms should have on the pride and new "disguise"—the susceptibility of the South to

from that State, himself the subject of slavery in the it his duty to present tho the District of Columbia. manded that they be read;

"He demanded the que them, which, he said, was a tion, which any member ha He demanded it on behalf he represented; he demande titions were in themselves nearly one half of the States demanded it, because the que one over which neither this any power whatever; and an put to that agitation which p a section of the country, a checked, would endanger the Union. That the petitions j a gross, false, and malicious States represented on this flo man who in his heart could de itself, not only good, but the I these petitions should not be not been the practice of the Ser tions which reflected on any in of their body; and should the representatives of sovereign St tions to be brought there, wilfi almost wickedly, slandering so States of this Union? Were less protected than individual floor? He demanded the quest the petitions, because they aske a violation of the constitution. of emancipation exclusively belo eral States. Congress had no the subject, no more in this I State of South Carolina: it was the individual State to determine touched by Congress. He hims stood, and the people of his Stat stand, that this was an emancipal Those who have moved in it rega as the weak point through which ment should be made upon the (said Mr. C.), of the South, are h it. We will meet this question twere the direct question of en the States. It is a movement wh which must be, arrested, in limine. of the constitution will give wa stroyed. He demanded the quest ing the petitions, because of the ag would result from discussing the danger to be apprehended was fro tion of the question on that floor. fear those incendiary publications circulated abroad, and which cou its contagious influence—its fatal action upon an "inculcated incompatibility of interests" between the North and the South-its increase in the slave States - its progress, first to secession, of the aggrieved States; the proceedings of and then to "farewell separation:" in this view of the old danger under its new disguise, Mr. Madison, then eighty-four years old, writes with the wisdom of age, the foresight of experience, the spirit of patriotism, and the "pain" of heart which a contemplation of the division of those States excited which it had been the pride, the glory, and the labor of his life to unite. The slavery turn which was given to the Southern agitation was the aspect of the danger which filled his mind with sorrow and misgiving:—and not without reason. A paper published in Washington City, and in the interest of Mr. Calhoun, was incessant in propagating the slavery alarm—in denouncing the North-in exhorting the Southern States to unity of feeling and concert of action as the only means of saving their domestic institutions. The language had become current in some parts of the South, that it was impossible to unite the Southern States upon the tariff question: that the sugar interest in Louisiana would prevent her from joining: that it was a mistake to have made that issue: that the slavery question was the right one. And coincident with this current language were many publications, urging a Southern convention, and concert of action. Passing by all these, which might be deemed mere newspaper articles, there was one which bore the impress of thought and authenticitywhich assumed the convention to be a certainty. the time only remaining to be fixed, and the cause for it to be in full operation in the Northern States. It was published in the Charleston Mercury in 1835,—was entitled the "Crisis' -and had the formality of a manifesto; and after dilating upon the aggressions and encroachments of the North, proceeded thus:

"The proper time for a convention of the slaveholding States will be when the legislatures of Pennsylvania, Massachusetts and New-York shall have adjourned without passing laws for the suppression of the abolition societies. Should either of these States pass such laws, it would be well to wait till their efficacy should be tested. The adjournment of the legislatures of the Northern States without adopting any measures effectually to put down Garrison, Tappan and their associates, will present an issue which must she met by the South, or it will be vain for us ever profusion of petitions for the abolition of slaws

after to attempt any thing further than for the State to provide for her own safety by defensive measures of her own. If the issue presented is to be met, it can only be done by a convention which, to be of any value, must embody and make known the sentiments of the whole South and contain the distinct annunciation of our fixed and unaltered determination to obtain the redress of our grievances, be the consequences what they may. We must have it clearly understood that, in framing a constitutional union with our Northern brethren, the slaveholding States consider themselves as no more liable to any more interference with their domestic concerns than if they had remained entirely independent of the other States, and that, as such interference would, among independent nations, be a just cause of war, so among members of such a confederacy as ours, it must place the several States in the relation towards each other of open enemies. To sum up in a few words the whole argument on this subject, we would say that the abolitionists can only be put down by legislation in the States in which they exist and this can only be brought about by the embodied opinion of the whole South, acting upon public opinion at the North, which can only be effected through the instrumentality of a convention of the slaveholding States.'

It is impossible to read this paragraph from the "Crisis," without seeing that it is idential with Mr. Calhoun's report and speech upon incendiary publications transmitted through the mail. The same complaint against the North; the same exaction of the suppression of abolition societies; the same penalty for omitting to suppress them; that penalty always the samea Southern convention, and secession—and the same idea of the contingent foreign relation to each other of the respective States, always treated as a confederacy, under a compact Upon his arrival at Washington at the commencement of the session 1835—'36, all his conduct was conformable to the programme laid dom in the "Crisis," and the whole of it calculated to produce the event therein hypothetically asnounced; and, unfortunately, a double set of movements was then in the process of being carried on by the abolitionists, which favored his purposes. One of these was the mail trans mission into the slave States of incendiary pub lications; and it has been seen in what manne he availed himself of that wickedness to pred cate upon it a right of Southern secession; the other was the annoyance of Congress with ing further than for the own safety by defensive If the issue presented is e done by a convention es; the proceedings of alue, must embody and nents of the whole South act annunciation of our termination to obtain the ces, be the consequences must have it clearly unng a constitutional union ethren, the slaveholding elves as no more liable to with their domestic conremained entirely inde-States, and that, as such ong independent nations, r, so among members of ours, it must place the elation towards each other sum up in a few words n this subject, we would sts can only be put down tates in which they exist, prought about by the emwhole South, acting upon North, which can only be instrumentality of a condding States."

> ead this paragraph from seeing that it is identical port and speech upon intransmitted through the plaint against the North; the suppression of aboline penalty for omitting to enalty always the same-, and secession-and the ingent foreign relation to respective States, always eracy, under a compact shington at the commence 835-'36, all his conduct ne programme laid down he whole of it calculated therein hypothetically and unately, a double set of in the process of being olitionists, which favored ' these was the mail trans States of incendiary pub been seen in what manne that wickedness to pred f Southern secession; t rance of Congress with for the abolition of slaver in the District of Columbia; and his conduct with respect to these petitions, remains to be shown. Mr. Morris, of Ohio, presented two from that State, himself opposed to touching the subject of slavery in the States, but deeming it his duty to present those which applied to the District of Columbia. Mr. Calhoun demanded that they be read; which being done,—

"He demanded the question on receiving them, which, he said, was a preliminary question, which any member had a right to make. He demanded it on behalf of the State which he represented; he demanded it, because the petitions were in themselves a foul slander on nearly one half of the States of the Union; he demanded it, because the question involved was one over which neither this nor the House had anv power whatever; and and a stop might be put to that agitation which prevailed in so large a section of the country, and which, unless checked, would endanger the existence of the That the petitions just read contained a gross, false, and malicious slander, on eleven States represented on this floor, there was no man who in his heart could deny. This was, in itself, not only good, but the highest cause why these petitions should not be received. Had it not been the practice of the Senate to reject petitions which reflected on any individual member of their body; and should they who were the representatives of sovereign States permit petitions to be brought there, wilfully, maliciously, almost wickedly, slandering so many sovereign States of this Union? Were the States to be less protected than individual members on that floor? He demanded the question on receiving the petitions, because they asked for what was a violation of the constitution. The question of emancipation exclusively belonged to the several States. Congress had no jurisdiction on the subject, no more in this District than the State of South Carolina: it was a question for the individual State to determine, and not to be touched by Congress. He himself well understood, and the people of his State should understand, that this was an emancipation movement. Those who have moved in it regard this District as the weak point through which the first movement should be made upon the States. We (said Mr. C.), of the South, are bound to resist it. We will meet this question as firmly as if it were the direct question of emancipation in the States. It is a movement which ought to, which must be, arrested, in limine, or the guards of the constitution will give way and be destroyed. He demanded the question on receiving the petitions, because of the agitation which would result from discussing the subject. The danger to be apprehended was from the agitation of the question on that floor. He did not fear those incendiary publications which were counteracted. But he dreaded the agitation which would rise out of the discussion in Congress on the subject. Every man knew that there existed a body of men in the Northern States who were ready to second any insurrectionary movement of the blacks; and that these men would be on the alert to turn these discussions to their advantage. He dreaded the discussion in another sense. It would have a tendency to break asunder this Union. What effect could be brought about by the interference of these petitioners? Could they expect to produce a change of mind in the Southern people? No; the effect would be directly the opposite. The more they were assailed on this point, the more closely would they cling to their institutions. And what would be the effect on the rising generation, but to inspire it with odium against those whose mistaken views and misdirected zeal menaced the peace and security of the Southern States. The effect must be to bring our institutions into odium. As a lover of the Union, he dreaded this discussion; and asked for some decided measure to arrest the course of the evil. There must, there shall be some decided step, or the Southern people never will submit. And how are we to treat the subject? By receiving these petitions one after another, and thus tampering, trifling, sporting with the feelings of the South? No, no, no! The abolitionists well understand the effect of such a course of proceeding. It will give importance to their movements, and accelerate the ends they propose. Nothing can, nothing will stop these petitions but a prompt and stern rejection of them. We must turn them away from our doors, regardless of what may be done or said. If the issue must be, let it come, and let us meet it, as, I hope, we shall be prepared to do.'

This was new and extreme ground taken by Mr. Calhoun. To put the District of Columbia and the States on the same footing with respect to slavery legislation, was entirely contrary to the constitution itself, and to the whole doctrine of Congress upon it. The constitution gave to Congress exclusive jurisdiction over the District of Columbia, without limitation of * subjects; but it had always refused, though often petitioned, to interfere with the subject of slavery in the District of Columbia so long as it existed in the two States (Maryland and Virginia) which ceded that District to the federal government. The doctrine of Mr. Calhoun was, therefore, new; his inference that slavery was to be attacked in the States through the opening in the District, was gratuitous; his "demand" (for that was the word he constantly used), that circulated abroad, and which could easily be these petitions should be refused a reception, was a harsh motion, made in a harsh manner; his assumption that the existence of the Union was at stake, was without evidence and contrary to evidence; his remedy, in State resistance, was disunion; his eagerness to catch at an "issue," showed that he was on the watch for "issues," and ready to seize any one that would get up a contest; his language was all inflammatory, and calculated to rouse an alarm in the slaveholding States:—for the whole of which he constantly assumed to speak. Mr. Morris thus replied to him:

"In presenting these petitions he would say, on the part of the State of Ohio, that she went to the entire extent of the opinions of the senator from South Carolina on one point. We deny, said he, the power of Congress to legislate concerning local institutions, or to meddle in any way with slavery in any of the States; but we have always entertained the opinion that Congress has primary and exclusive legislation over this District; under this impression, these petitioners have come to the Senate to present their petitions. The doctrine that Congress have no power over the subject of slavery in this District is to me a new one; and it is one that will not meet with credence in the State in which I reside. I believe these petitioners have the right to present themselves here, placing their feet on the constitution of their country, when they come to ask of Congress to exercise those powers which they can legitimately exercise. I believe they have a right to be heard in their petitions, and that Congress may afterwards dispose of these petitions as in their wisdom they may think proper. Under these impressions, these petitioners come to be heard, and they have a right to be heard. Is not the right of petition a fundamental right? I believe it is a sacred and fundamental right, belonging to the people, to petition Congress for the redress of their grievances. While this right is secured by the constitution, it is incompetent to any legislative body to prescribe how the right is to be exercised, or when, or on what subject; or else this right becomes a mere mockery. If you are to tell the people that they are only to petition on this or that subject, or in this or that manner, the right of petition is but a mockery. It is true we have a right to say that no petition which is couched in disrespectful language shall be received; but I presume there is a sufficient check provided against this in the responsibility under which every senator presents a petition. Any petition conveyed in such language would always meet with his decided disapprobation. But if we deny the right of the people to petition in this instance, I would ask how far they have the right. While they believe they possess the right, no denial of it by Congress will prevent them from exercising it."

Mr. Bedford Brown, of North Carolina, entirely dissented from the views presented by Mr. Calhoun, and considered the course he proposed, and the language which he used, exactly calculated to produce the agitation which he professed to deprecate. He said:

"He felt himself constrained, by a sense of duty to the State from which he came, deeply and vitally interested as she was in every thing connected with the agitating question which had unexpectedly been brought into discussion that morning, to present, in a few words, his views as to the proper direction which should be given to that and all other petitions relating to slavery in the District of Columbia. He felt himself more specially called on to do so from the aspect which the question had assumed in consequence of the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Calhoun], to refuse to receive the petition. He had believed from the first time he had reflected on this subject. and subsequent events had but strengthened that conviction, that the most proper disposition of all such petitions was to lay them on the table, without printing. This course, while it indicated to the fanatics that Congress will yield no countenance to their designs, at the same time marks them with decided reprobation by a refusal to print. But, in his estimation another reason gave to the motion to lay them on the table a decided preference over any other proceedings by which they should be met. peculiar merit of this motion, as applicable to this question, is, that it precludes all debate and would thus prevent the agitation of a subject in Congress which all should deprecate as fraught with mischief to every portion of this happy and flourishing confederacy. Mr. B. said that honorable gentlemen who advocated this motion had disclaimed all intention to produce agitation on this question. He did not pretend to question the sincerity of, their declarations, and, while willing to do every justice to their motives, he must be allowed to say that no method could be devised better calculated in his judgment, to produce such a result. He (Mr. B.) most sincerely believed that the best interests of the Southern States would be most consulted by pursuing such a course here as would harmonize the feelings of every section, and avoid opening for discussion so dangerous and delicate a question. He believed all the senators who were present a few days since, when a petition of similar character had been presented by an honorable senator, had, by their votes to lay it on the table, sanctioned the course which he now suggested. [Mr. Calhork, in explanation, said that himself and his colleague were absent from the Senate on the occasion alluded to.] Mr. B. resumed his remarks, and said that he had made no reference to the votes of any particular members of that body, but what he had said was, that a similar petition had been laid on the ection from any one, and c unanimous vote of the senator then, was a most emphatic de tlemen representing the No well as those from other parts this vote, that they will entert legislation on the question of District of Columbia. Why, B. should we now adopt a me calculated to disturb the harn the Senate, which had been former vote? Why (he would of honorable gentlemen who p to refuse to receive the petition beneficial purpose do they pro sisting in such a course it we doubt, open a wide range of disc not fail to call forth a great div in relation to the extent of the under the constitution. Nor w fined to that question alone, i expression which had fallen fro gentleman from Virginia [Mr. course of this debate. That ger clared his preference for a direc by the Senate, as to the consti of Congress to emancipate slaves of Columbia. He, for one, prote speaking, against opening this P the halls of Congress. For all practical purposes, an overwhel of the members representing States were, with the South, in any interference with slavery in Columbia. If there was half a branches of Congress who did no tire opposition to any interference in this District or elsewhere, h learn it. Was it wise, was it p magnanimous, in gentlemen rep Southern States, to urge this matte and say to our Northern friends Gentlemen, we all agree in the dusion, that Congress should no this question, but we wish to know for arriving at this conclusion; w declare, by your votes, whether J this result because you think it und or not?' Mr. B. said that he w none in zeal in sustaining and supp extent of his ability, what he belie true interest of the South; but he leave to say that, when the almos of both branches of Congress, for purposes, was with us, against all on this subject, he should not haza and quiet of the country by going o expedition in pursuit of abstract ed

Mr. King, of Georgia, was still n than Mr. Brown in deprecating the Calhoun pursued, and charging upon North Carolina, enviews presented by ed the course he prohich he used, exactly e agitation which he Ie said:

rained, by a sense of hich he came, deeply she was in every thing ating question which rought into discussion , in a few words, his irection which should ther petitions relating of Columbia. He felt alled on to do so from stion had assumed, in ion of the gentleman . Calhoun], to refuse He had believed from lected on this subject, had but strengthened nost proper disposition s to lay them on the This course, while it s that Congress will their designs, at the th decided reprobation But, in his estimation, ne motion to lay them ference over any other y should be met. The otion, as applicable to precludes all debate the agitation of a sub-.ll should deprecate as every portion of this nfederacy. Mr. B. said n who advocated this 1 intention to produce He did not pretend of, their declarations, every justice to their lowed to say that no d better calculated in e such a result. He believed that the best States would be most uch a course here is lings of every section, iscussion so dangerous

He believed all the ent a few days since, ar character had been e senator, had, by their table, sanctioned the gested. [Mr. Calhors, himself and his colthe Senate on the ocr. B. resumed his rehad made no reference cular members of that said was, that a similar petition had been laid on the table without objection from any one, and consequently by a unanimous vote of the senators present. then, was a most emphatic declaration, by gentlemen representing the Northern States as well as those from other parts of the Union, by this vote, that they will entertain no attempt at legislation on the question of slavery in the District of Columbia. Why, then asked Mr. B, should we now adopt a mode of proceeding calculated to disturb the harmonious action of the Senate, which had been produced by the former vote? Why (he would respectfully ask of honorable gentlemen who press the motion to refuse to receive the petition) and for what beneficial purpose do they press it? By persisting in such a course it would, beyond all doubt, open a wide range of discussion, it would not fail to call forth a great diversity of opinion in relation to the extent of the right to petition under the constitution. Nor would it be confined to that question alone, judging from an expression which had fallen from an honorable gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TYLER], in the course of this debate. That gentleman had de-clared his preference for a direct negative vote by the Senate, as to the constitutional power of Congress to emancipate slaves in the District of Columbia. He, for one, protested, politically speaking, against opening this Pandora's box in the halls of Congress. For all beneficial and practical purposes, an overwhelming majority of the members representing the Northern States were, with the South, in opposition to any interference with slavery in the District of Columbia. If there was half a dozen in both branches of Congress who did not stand in entire opposition to any interference with slavery, in this District or elsewhere, he had yet to learn it. Was it wise, was it prudent, was it magnanimous, in gentlemen representing the Southern States, to urge this matter still further, and say to our Northern friends in Congress, Gentlemen, we all agree in the general condusion, that Congress should not interfere in this question, but we wish to know your reasons for arriving at this conclusion; we wish you to declare, by your votes, whether you arrive at this result because you think it unconstitutional or not?' Mr. B. said that he would yield to none in zeal in sustaining and supporting, to the extent of his ability, what he believed to be the true interest of the South; but he should take leave to say that, when the almost united will of both branches of Congress, for all practical purposes, was with us, against all interference on this subject, he should not hazard the peace and quiet of the country by going on a Quixotic expedition in pursuit of abstract constitutional questions."

Mr. King, of Georgia, was still more pointed than Mr. Brown in deprecating the course Mr.

of increasing the slavery agitation, and giving the abolitionists ground to stand upon in giving them the right of petition to defend. He said:

"This being among the Southern members a mere difference of form in the manner of disposing of the subject, I regret exceedingly that the senator from Carolina has thought it his duty (as he doubtless has) to press the subject upon the consideration of the Senate in such form as not only to permit, but in some measure to create, a necessity for the continued agitation of the subject. For he believed, with others, that nothing was better calculated to increase agitation and excitement than such motions as that of the senator from South Carolina. What was the object of the motion? Senators said, and no doubt sincerely, that their object was to quiet the agitation of the subject. Well, (said Mr. K.,) my object is precisely the same. We differ, then, only in the means of securing a common end; and he could tell the Senators that the value of the motion as a means would likely be estimated by its tendency to secure the end desired. Would even an affirmative vote on the motion quiet the agitation of the subject? He thought, on the contrary, it would much increase it. How would it stop the agitation? What would be decided? Nothing, except it be that the Senate would not receive the particular memorial before it. Would that prevent the presentation of others? Not at all; it would only increase the number, by making a new issue for debate, which was all the abolitionists wanted; or, at any rate, the most they now expected. These petitions had been coming here without intermission ever since the foundation of the government, and he could tell the senator that if they were each to be honored by a lengthy discussion on presentment, an honor not heretofere granted to them, they would not only continue to come here, but they would thicken upon us so long as the government remained in exist-We may seek occasions (said Mr. K.) to rave about our rights; we may appeal to the guaranties of the constitution, which are denied; we may speak of the strength of the South, and pour out unmeasured denunciations against the North; we may threaten vengeance against the abolitionists, and menace a dissolution of the Union, and all that; and thus exhausting ourselves mentally and physically, and setting down to applaud the spirit of our own efforts, Arthur Tappan and his pious fraternity would very coolly remark: 'Well, that is precisely what I wanted; I wanted agitation in the South; I wished to provoke the "aristocratic slaveholder" to make extravagant demands on the North, which the North could not consistently surrender them. I wished them, under the pretext of securing their own rights, to encroach upon the rights of all the American people. In short, I wish to change the issue; upon the present Calhoun pursued, and charging upon it the effect issue we are dead. Every movement, every demonstration of feeling among our own people, shows that upon the present issue the great body of the people is against us. The issue must be changed, or the prospects of abolition are at an end.' This language (Mr. K. said) was not conjectured, but there was much evidence of its truth. Sir (said Mr. K.), if Southern senators were actually in the pay of the abolition directory on Nassau-street they could not more effectually co-operate in the views and administer to the wishes of these enemies to the peace and quiet of our country."

Mr. Calhoun was dissatisfied at the speeches of Mr. Brown and Mr. King, and considered them as dividing and distracting the South in their opposition to his motion, while his own course was to keep them united in a case where union was so important, and in which they stood but a handful in the midst of an overwhelming majority. He said:

"I have heard with deep mortification and regret the speech of the senator from Georgia; not that I suppose that his arguments can have much impression in the South, but because of their tendency to divide and distract the Southern delegation on this, to us, allmomentous question. We are here but a handful in the midst of an overwhelming majority. It is the duty of every member from the South, on this great and vital question, where union is so important to those whom we represent, to avoid every thing calculated to divide or distract our ranks. I (said Mr. C.), the Senate will bear witness, have, in all that I have said on this subject, been careful to respect the feelings of Southern members who have differed from me in the policy to be pursued. Having thus acted, on my part, I must express my surprise at the harsh expressions, to say the least, in which the senator from Georgia has indulged.'

The declaration of this overwhelming majority against the South brought a great number of the non-slaveholding senators to their feet, to declare the concurrence of their States with the South upon the subject of slavery, and to depreciate the abolitionists as few in number in any of the Northern States; and discountenanced. reprobated and repulsed wherever they were found. Among these, Mr. Isaac Hill of New Hampshire, thus spoke:

"I do not (said he) object to many of the positions taken by senators on the abstract question of Northern interference with slavery in the South. But I do protest against the excitement that is attempted on the floor of Congress, to be kept up against the North. I do protest against the array that is made here of the acts have been in the habit of making charitable to of a few misguided fanatics as the acts of the ligious institutions subservient to political pur-

whole or of a large portion of the people of the North. I do protest against the countenance that is here given to the idea that the people of the North generally are interfering with the rights and property of the people of the South

There is no course that will better suit the few Northern fanatics than the agitation of the question of slavery in the halls of Congressnothing will please them better than the discussions which are taking place, and a solemn vota of either branch denying them the right to prefer petitions here, praying that slavery may be abolished in the District of Columbia. A denial of that right at once enables them, and not without color of truth, to cry out that the contest going on is 'a struggle between power and

"Believing the intentions of those who have moved simultaneously to get up these petitions at this time, to be mischief, I was glad to see the first petition that came in here laid on the table without discussion, and without reference to any committee. The motion to lay on the table precludes all debate; and, if decided affirmatively, prevents agitation. It was with the view of preventing agitation of this subject that I moved to lay the second set of petitions on the table. A senator from the South (Mr. Calhoun) has chosen a different course; he has interposed a motion which opens a debate that may be continued for months. He has chosen to agitate this question; and he has presented that question, the decision of which, let senators vote as they may, will best please the agitators who are urging the fanatics forward.

"I have said the people of the North were more united in their opposition to the plans of the advocates of antislavery, than on any other subject. This opposition is confined to no political party; it pervades every class of the community. They deprecate all interference with the subject of slavery, because they believe such interference may involve the existence and welfare of the Union itself, and because they understand the obligations which the non-slaveholding States owe to the slaveholding States by the compact of confederation. It is the strong desire to perpetuate the Union; it is the determination which every patriotic and virtuous citizen has made, in no event to abandon the 'ark of our safety,' that now impels the united North to take its stand against the agitators of the antislavery project. So effectually has the strong public sentiment put down that agitstion in New England, that it is now kept alive only by the power of money, which the agitators have collected, and apply in the hiring of agents, and in issues from presses that are kept in their employ. "The antislavery movement, which brings in petitions from various parts of the country as ing Congress to abolish slavery in the District of Columbia, originates with a few persons, who poses, and who have even c those charitable association are set on foot by men who l continue to have, influence w religious teachers of differe They have issued and sent o calling for a united effort to the abolition of slavery in thi of the clergymen who have of the agitators, have done so tive. Some of them, discoveri the agitators-discovering that calculated to make the cond worse, and to create animosity ple of the North and the Sout their course, and desisted from plication of a mistaken philan having enlisted deeply their for sue the unprofitable labor. T the names of inconsiderate n many of whom do not know, scribe their papers, what they others of whom, placing implie religious teacher, are taught to thereby doing a work of disint lence, which will be requited 1 future life.

"Now, sir, as much as I abho weak or wicked men who are m tion question at the North, I bad an opinion of them as I have who are attempting to make proceedings an object of alarn South.

"Of all the vehicles, tracts, newspapers, printed and circulat litionists, there is no ten or t that have contributed so much ment as a single newspaper print I need not name this paper whe that, for the last five years, it has to produce a Northern and Soutl fan the flame of sectional preju wider the breach, to drive hard which shall divide the North fro It is the newspaper which, in 183 create that state of things, in retariff, which would produce inevi between the two sections of the which urged to that crisis in So terminating in her deep disgrace-

"[Mr. Calhoun here interrupted called him to order. Mr. H. took Mr. Hubbard (being in the chair) the remarks of Mr. H. did not im tives of any man-they were on of the effects of certain proceeding State of South Carolina, and that out of order.]

"Mr. H. resumed: It is the new condemns or ridicules the well-me an officer of the government to st lation of incendiary publications holding States, and which designed the number and the efforts of the N n of the people of the inst the countenance dea that the people of interfering with the e people of the South. at will better suit the n the agitation of the a halls of Congressbetter than the discusace, and a solemn vote them the right to preg that slavery may be of Columbia. A deenables them, and not cry out that the conle between power and ens of those who have get up these petitions nief, I was glad to see ne in here laid on the and without reference motion to lay on the ; and, if decided affirion. It was with the ion of this subject that nd set of petitions on m the South (Mr. Calent course; he has inh opens a debate that nths. He has chosen and he has presented n of which, let senators ics forward.

est please the agitators ple of the North were osition to the plans of ery, than on any other is confined to no politiery class of the commu-1 interference with the e they believe such inthe existence and welnd because they underch the non-slaveholding eholding States by the 1. It is the strong denion; it is the determiotic and virtuous citizen o abandon the 'ark of pels the united North st the agitators of the o effectually has the put down that agitanat it is now kept alive ioney, which the agitaapply in the hiring of m presses that are kept rement, which brings in arts of the country ask. slavery in the District with a few persons, who f making charitable reervient to political pur noses, and who have even controlled some of litionists. It is the newspaper which libels the those charitable associations. The petitions are set on foot by men who have had, and who continue to have, influence with ministers and religious teachers of different denominations. They have issued and sent out their circulars calling for a united effort to press on Congress the abolition of slavery in this District. Many of the clergymen who have been instruments of the agitators, have done so from no bad motive. Some of them, discovering the purpose of the agitators-discovering that their labors were calculated to make the condition of the slave worse, and to create animosity between the people of the North and the South, have paused in their course, and desisted from the further application of a mistaken philanthropy. Others, having enlisted deeply their feelings, still pursue the unprofitable labor. They present here the names of inconsiderate men and women, many of whom do not know, when they subscribe their papers, what they are asking; and others of whom, placing implicit faith in their religious teacher, are taught to believe they are thereby doing a work of disinterested benevolence, which will be requited by rewards in a future life.

"Now, sir, as much as I abhor the doings of weak or wicked men who are moving this abolition question at the North, I yet have not as bad an opinion of them as I have of some others who are attempting to make of these puerile proceedings an object of alarm to the whole South.

"Of all the vehicles, tracts, pamphlets, and newspapers, printed and circulated by the abolitionists, there is no ten or twenty of them that have contributed so much to the excitement as a single newspaper printed in this city. I need not name this paper when I inform you that, for the last five years, it has been laboring to produce a Northern and Southern party-to fan the flame of sectional prejudice—to open wider the breach, to drive harder the wedge, which shall divide the North from the South. It is the newspaper which, in 1831-'2, strove to create that state of things, in relation to the tariff, which would produce inevitable collision between the two sections of the country, and which urged to that crisis in South Carolina, terminating in her deep disgrace

"[Mr. Calhoun here interrupted Mr. Hill and alled him to order. Mr. H. took his seat, and Mr. Hubbard (being in the chair) decided that the remarks of Mr. H. did not impugn the motives of any man-they were only descriptive of the effects of certain proceedings upon the State of South Carolina, and that he was not out of order.]

"Mr. H. resumed: It is the newspaper which condemns or ridicules the well-meant efforts of an officer of the government to stop the circuation of incendiary publications in the slaveholding States, and which designedly magnifies the number and the efforts of the Northern abo-whole North by representing the almost united people of that region to be insincere in their efforts to prevent the mischief of a few fanatical and misguided persons who are engaged in the abolition cause.

"I have before me a copy of this newspaper (the United States Telegraph), filled to the brim with the exciting subject. It contains, among other things, a speech of an honorable senator (Mr. Leigh of Virginia), which I shall not be surprised soon to learn has been issued by thousands and tens of thousands from the abolition mint at New-York, for circulation in the South. Surely the honorable senator's speech, containing that part of the Channing pamphlet, is most likely to move the Southern slaves to a servile war, at the same time the Channing extracts and the speech itself are most admirably calculated to awaken the fears or arouse the indignation of their masters. The circulation of such a speech will effect the object of the abolitionists without trenching upon their funds. Let the agitation be kept up in Congress, and let this newspaper be extensively circulated in the South, filled with such speeches and such extracts as this exhibits, and little will be left for the Northern abolitionists to do. They need do no more than send in their petitions: the late printer of the Senate and his friends in Congress, will create enough of excitement to effect every object of those who direct the movements of the abolitionists."

At the same moment that these petitions were presented in the Senate, their counterparts were presented in the House, with the same declarations from Northern representatives in favor of the rights of the South, and in depreciation of the number and importance of the abolitionists in the North. Among these, Mr. Franklin Pierce, of New Hampshire, was one of the most emphatic on both points. He said:

"This was not the last memorial of the same character which would be sent here. It was perfectly apparent that the question must be met now, or at some future time, fully and explicitly, and such an expression of this House given as could leave no possible room to doubt as to the opinions and sentiments entertained by its members. He (Mr. P.), indeed, considered the overwhelming vote of the House, the other day, laying a memorial of similar tenor, and he believed, the same in terms, upon the table, as fixing upon it the stamp of reprobation. He supposed that all sections of the country would be satisfied with that expression; but gentlemen seemed now to consider the vote as equivocal and evasive. He was unwilling that any imputation should rest upon the North, in consequence of the misguided and fanatical zeal of a few - comparatively very few-who, however honest might have been their purposes, he believed had done incalculable mischief, and whose movements, he knew, received no more sanction among the great mass of the people of the North, than they did at the South. For one, he (Mr. P.), while he would be the last to infringe upon any of the sacred reserved rights of the people, was prepared to stamp with disapprobation, in the most express and unequivocal terms, the whole movement upon this subject. Mr. P. said he would not resume his seat without tendering to the gent-eman from Virginia (Mr. Mason), just and generous as he always was, his acknowledgments for the admission frankly made in the opening of his remarks. He had said that, during the period that he had occupied a seat in this House (as Mr. P. understood him), he had never known six men seriously disposed to interfere with the rights of the slaveholders at the South. Sir. said Mr. P. gentlemen may be assured there was no such disposition as a general sentiment prevailing among the people; at least he felt confidence in asserting that, among the people of the State which he had the honor in part to represent, there was not one in a hundred who did not entertain the most sacred regard for the rights of their Southern brethren-nay, not one in five hundred who would not have those rights protected at any and every hazard. There was not the slightest disposition to interfere with any rights secured by the constitution, which binds together, and which he humbly hoped ever would bind together, this great and glorious confederacy as one family. Mr. P. had only to say that, to some sweeping charges of improper interference, the action of the people of the North at home, during the last year, and the vote of their representatives here the other day, was a sufficient and conclusive answer."

The newspaper named by Mr. Hill was entirely in the interest of Mr. Calhoun, and the course which it followed, and upon system, and incessantly to get up a slavery quarrel between the North and the South, was undeniable-every daily number of the paper containing the proof of its incendiary work. Mr. Calhoun would not reply to Mr. Hill, but would send a paper to the Secretary's table to be read in contradiction of his statements. Mr. Calhoun then handed to the Secretary a newspaper containing an article impugning the statement made by Mr. Pierce, in the House of Representatives, as to the small number of the abolitionists in the State of New Hampshire; which was read, and which contained scurrilous reflections on Mr. Pierce, and severe strictures on the state of slavery in he meant no disrespect to Mr. Pierce, "but the South. Mr. Hill asked for the title of the newspaper; and it was given, "The Herald of | as if an abolition newspaper was better author

Freedom." Mr. Hill said it was an abolition paper, printed, but not circulated, at Concord New Hampshire. He said the same paper had been sent to him, and he saw in it one of Mr. Calhoun's speeches; which was republished as good food for the abolitionists; and said he thought the Senate was well employed in listening to the reading of disgusting extracts from an hireling abolition paper, for the purpose of impugning the statements of a member of the House of Representatives, defending the South there, and who could not be here to defend himself. It was also a breach of parliamentary law for a member in one House to attack what was said by a member in another. Mr. Pierce's statement had been heard with great satisfaction by all except Mr. Calhoun; but to him it was so repugnant, as invalidating his assertion of a great abolition party in the North, that he could not refrain from this mode of contradicting it. It was felt by all as disorderly and improper. and the presiding officer then in the chair (Mr. Hubbard, from New Hampshire) felt himself called upon to excuse his own conduct in not having checked the reading of the article. He

"He felt as if an apology was due from him to the Senate, for not having checked the reading of the paragraphs from the newspaper which had just been read by the Secretary. He was wholly ignorant of the contents of the paper, and could not have anticipated the purport of the article which the senator from South Carolina had requested the Secretary to read. He untlerstood the senator to say that he wished the paper to be read, to show that the statement made by the senator from New Hampshire, as to the feelings and sentiments of the people of that State upon the subject of the abolition of slavery, was not correct. It certainly would have been out of order, for any senator to have a luded to the remarks made by a member of the House of Representatives, in debate; and in his judgment, it was equally out of order to permit paragraphs from a newspaper to be read in the Senate, which went to impugn the course of any member of the other House; and he should not have permitted the paper to have been read, without the direction of the Senate, if he had been aware of the character of the

Mr. Calhoun said he was entitled to the floor and did not like to be interrupted by the chair wished the real state of things to be known"- ity than a statement from a r in the House. It happened coming into the Senate Chan scene was going on; and, prised, and feeling much agg no right to speak for himse author of this View to main his statement against the scu tion of it which had been re therefore, stood up-

"To say a word on the subi the member of the House of from New Hampshire, whose House of Representatives had in the newspaper article read a table. He had the pleasure of quaintance with that gentleman respect for him, both on his own of his venerable and patriotic lately Governor of New Hamps happened (said Mr. B.) that, in t of the reading of this article, th House of Representatives, who contradicted, was coming into th ber, and his whitening countena deep emotion excited in his boso ment which that gentleman ha House was in the highest degr and agreeable to the people of t States. He had said that not c dred in his State was in favor of ists: an expression uuderstood not as an arithmetical proposition by figures, but as a strong moc that these abolitionists were fe In that sense it was understood, a welcome and agreeable piece of i the people of the slaveholding newspaper article contradicts him the number of the abolitionists, ar ous signers to their petition. N E.), the member of the House of tives (Mr. Pierce) has this momme that he knows nothing of the and knows nothing to change his c the small number of abolitionists Mr. B. thought, therefore, that h ought not to be considered as discre newspaper publication; and he, for still give faith to his opinion."

In his eagerness to invalidate th of Mr. Pierce, Mr. Calhoun had o solecism of action in which it in His bill to suppress the mail transm endiary publications was still before not yet decided; and here was mat the Senate, and to go forth as part evelings, the most incendiary and dial had yet been seen. This oversight wa id it was an abolition circulated, at Concord. id the same paper had saw in it one of Mr. ich was republished as itionists; and said he vell employed in listenisgusting extracts from per, for the purpose of ts of a member of the s, defending the South be here to defend himh of parliamentary law use to attack what was nother. Mr. Pierce's I with great satisfaction n; but to him it was ating his assertion of a he North, that he could de of contradicting it. sorderly and improper, then in the chair (Mr. mpshire) felt himself is own conduct in not ng of the article. He ogy was due from him ving checked the readn the newspaper which he Secretary. He was contents of the paper, cipated the purport of ator from South Caro-Secretary to read. He to say that he wished how that the statement m New Hampshire, as nents of the people of ect of the abolition of It certainly would or any senator to have made by a member of atives, in debate; and qually out of order to i newspaper to be read t to impugn the course other House; and he ed the paper to have rection of the Senate, the character of the us entitled to the floor errupted by the chair to Mr. Pierce, "but hings to be known" per was better author ity than a statement from a member in his place in the House. It happened that Mr. Pierce was coming into the Senate Chamber as this reading scene was going on; and, being greatly surprised, and feeling much aggrieved, and having no right to speak for himself, he spoke to the author of this View to maintain the truth of his statement against the scurrilous contradiction of it which had been read. Mr. Benton, therefore, stood up—

"To say a word on the subject of Mr. Pierce. the member of the House of Representatives, from New Hampshire, whose statements in the House of Representatives had been contradicted in the newspaper article read at the Secretary's table. He had the pleasure of an intimate acquaintance with that gentleman, and the highest respect for him, both on his own account and that of his venerable and patriotic father, who was lately Governor of New Hampshire. It had so happened (said Mr. B.) that, in the very moment of the reading of this article, the member of the House of Representatives, whose statement it contradicted, was coming into the Senate Chamber, and his whitening countenance showed the deep emotion excited in his bosom. The statement which that gentleman had made in the House was in the highest degree consolatory and agreeable to the people of the slaveholding States. He had said that not one in five hundred in his State was in favor of the abolitionists: an expression understood by every body, not as an arithmetical proposition worked out by figures, but as a strong mode of declaring that these abolitionists were few in number. In that sense it was understood, and was a most welcome and agreeable piece of information to the people of the slaveholding States. The newspaper article contradicts him, and vaunts the number of the abolitionists, and the numerous signers to their petition. Now (said Mr. E), the member of the House of Representatives (Mr. Pierce) has this moment informed me that he knows nothing of these petitions, and knows nothing to change his opinion as to the small number of abolitionists in his State. Mr. B. thought, therefore, that his statement ought not to be considered as discredited by the newspaper publication; and he, for one, should still give faith to his opinion."

In his eagerness to invalidate the statement of Mr. Pierce, Mr. Calhoun had overlooked a solecism of action in which it involved him. His bill to suppress the mail transmission of incendiary publications was still before the Senate, not yet decided; and here was matter read in the Senate, and to go forth as part of its proceedings, the most incendiary and diabolical that had yet been seen. This oversight was a solution of the senate of the senate by the author of this View, who, after vindicating the statement of Mr. Pierce, went on to expose this solecism, and—

"Took up the bill reported by the select committee on incendiary publications, and read the section which forbade their transmission by mail, and subjected the postmasters to fine and loss of office, who would put them up for transmission; and wished to know whether this incendiary publication, which had been read at the Secretary's table, would be included in the prohibition, after being so read, and thus becoming a part of our debates? As a publication in New Hampshire, it was clearly forbid; as part of our congressional proceedings would it still be forbid? There was a difficulty in this, he said, take it either away. If it could still be inculcated from this floor, then the prohibition in the bill was mere child's play; if it could not, and all the city papers which contained it were to be stopped, then the other congressional proceedings in the same paper would be stopped also; and thus the people would be prevented from knowing what their representatives were doing. It seemed to him to be but liame work to stop incendiary publications in the villages where they were printed, and then to circulate them from this chamber among the proceedings of Congress; and that, issuing from this centre, and spreading to all the points of the circumference of this extended Union, one reading here would give it ten thousand times more notoriety and diffusion than the printing of it in the village could do. He concluded with expressing his wish that the reporters would not copy into their account of debate the paper that was read. It was too offensive to the member of the House [Mr. Pierce], and would be too disagreeable to the people of the slaveholding States, to be entitled to a place in our debates, and to become a part of our congressional history, to be diffused over the country in gazettes, and transmitted to posterity in the volumes of debates. He hoped they would all omit it."

The reporters complied with this request, and the Congress debates were spared the pollution of this infusion of scurrility, and the permanent record of this abusive assault upon a member of the House because he was a friend to the South. But it made a deep impression upon senators; and Mr. King, of Georgia, adverted to it a few days afterwards to show the strangeness of the scene—Southern senators attacking their Northern friends because they defended the South. He said:

bedings, the most incendiary and diabolical that but yet been seen. This oversight was perceived other House, from New Hampshire [Mr.

Pierce 1. to whose diligence and determined efforts he had heard attributed, in a great degree, the present prostrate condition of the abolitionists in that State. He had been the open and active friend of the South from the beginning, and had encountered the hostility of the abolitionists in every form. He had made a statement of the strength and prospects of the abolitionists in his State, near the commencement of the session, that was very gratiflying to the people of the South. This statement was corroborated by one of the senators from that State a few days after, and the senator from Carolina rose, and, without due reflection, he was very sure, drew from his pocket a dirty sheet, an abolition paper, containing a scurrilous article against the member from New Hampshire, which pronounced him an impostor and a liar. The same thing in effect had just been repeated by the senator from Mississippi against one of the best friends of the South, Governor Marcy, of New-York. [Here Mr. Calhoun rose to explain, and said he had intended, by the introduction of the paper, no disrespect to the member from New Hampshire; and Mr. Black also rose to say he only wished to show the course the abolitionists were pursuing, and their future views.] Mr. King said he had been interrupted by the senators, but corrected by neither of them. He was not attacking their motives, but only exposing their mistakes. The article read by his friend from Carolina was abusive of the member from New Hampshire, and contradicted his statements. The article read by his friend from Mississippi against Governor Marcy was of a similar character. abused, menaced, and contradicted him. These abusive productions would seem to be credited and adopted by those who used them as evidence, and incorporated them in their speeches. Here, then, was a contest in the North between the most open and avowed friends of the South and the abolitionists; and we had the strange exhibition of Southern gentlemen apparently espousing the cause of the latter, who were continually furnishing them evidence with which to aid them in the contest. Did gentlemen call this backing their friends? What encouragement did such treatment afford to our friends at the North to step forth in our be-half?"

Mr. King did not limit himself to the defence of Mr. Pierce, but went on to deny the increase of abolitionism at the North, and to show that it was dying out there until revived by agitation here. He said:

"A great deal had been stated in one form or other, and in one quarter or other, as to the numbers and increase of these disturbers of the peace; and he did not undertake to say what was the fact. He learned, and thought it probable, that they had increased since the com- things altogether forced. Agents are hired to mencement of the session, and had heard also the increase attributed to the manner in which the subject had been treated here. However this might be, what he insisted on was, that those base productions were no evidence of the fact. or of any fact; and especially should not be used by Southern men, in opposition to the statements of high-minded, honorable men at the North, who were the active and efficient friends of the South."

As an evidence of the manner in which the English emissary, George Thompson, had been treated in the North, upon whose labors so much stress had been laid in the South Mr. King read from an English newspaper (the Leeds Mercury), Thompson's own account of his mission as written to his English employers:

"Letters of a most distressing nature have been received from Mr. George Thompson, the zealous and devoted missionary of slave emancipation, who has gone from this country to the United States, and who writes from Boston. He says that 'the North (that is, New England, where slavery does not exist), has universally sympathized with the South, in opposition to the abolitionists; that 'the North har let fall the mask;' that 'merchants and me banics, priests and politicians, have alike stool forth the defenders of Southern despots, and the furious denouncers of Northern philanthropy;' that all parties of politics, especially the supporters of the two rivals for the presidential office (Van Buren and Webster), vie with each other in denouncing the abolitionists; and that even religious men shun them, except when the abolitionists can fairly gain a hearing from them. With regard to himself, he speaks as follows: 'Rewards are offered for my abdue tion and assassination; and in every direction I meet with those who believe they would be doing God and their country service by depriving me of life. I have appeared in public, and some of my escapes from the hands of my foes have been truly providential. On Friday last, I narrowly escaped losing my life in Concord New Hampshire.' 'Boston, September II.-This morning a short gallows was found stand ing opposite the door of my house, 23 Bay-street, in this city, now occupied by Garrison. Two halters hung from the beam, with the work above them, By order of Judge Lynch!""

Mr. Hill corroborated the account which this emissary gave of his disastrous mission, and added that he had escaped from Concord in the night, and in woman's clothes: and then said:

"The present agitation in the North is kept up by the application of money; it is a state of guised in the character of mir pel, to preach abolition of slav does not exist; and presses a employment to scatter abol through the country. Deny th to the misguided men and wo duced from no bad motive to abolition of slavery in the Dis and you do more to increase th will thousands of dollars paid who traverse the country to dis tracts and to spread abolition tinue to debate abolition in Congress, and you more effe the incendiary views of the mo than any thing they can do for may suit those who have been all their political projects, to tr ject of abolition will now avail will be likely to find, in the end ple have too strong attachment Inion, to which we owe all our happiness, to be thrown from th every agitating blast which may the land."

Mr. Webster gave his opinion ceiving the petitions, not to gran but to yield to a constitutional rig of the petitioners; and said:

"He thought they ought to b ferred, and considered. That v usually done with petitions on o and what had been uniformly do with petitions on this subject also believed they had an undoubted rig and that Congress had undoubted authority over the subjects to wh tions related, would not be satisfi fusal to receive the petitions, nor reception of them, followed by a vote rejecting their prayer. In p arms there was some difference b two modes of proceeding, but it we sidered as little else than a differe form. He thought the question n time be met, considered, and discus matter, as in others, Congress must reasons. It was in vain to attempt door against petitions, and expect to avoid discussion. On the present first of these petitions, he had been that it ought to be referred to the I He was of that opinion still ct could not be stifled. It must be and he wished it should be discuss dispassionately, and fully, in all its brall its bearings. To reject the pray ttion at once, without reference or tion, was not respectful; and in this ng could be possibly gained by going usual course of respectful considerati The trial votes were had upon th i, and had heard also the ne manner in which the d here. However this ted on was, that those to evidence of the fact, ially should not be used possition to the statehonorable men at the ive and efficient friends

e manner in which the the Thompson, had been upon whose labors so laid in the South, Mr. nglish newspaper (the pson's own account of this English employers; listressing nature have George Thompson, the ssionary of slave emanrom this country to the o writes from Boston. th (that is, New Engdoes not exist), has d with the South,' in onists; that 'the North politicians, have alike ers of Southern despots, ers of Northern philanes of politics, especially wo rivals for the presiren and Webster), vie ancing the abolitionists; men shun them, except an fairly gain a hearing rd to himself, he speaks re offered for my abdue and in every direction I believe they would be untry service by deprivappeared in public, and m the hands of my foes ential. On Friday last, ing my life in Concord oston, September II.allows was found stand my house, 23 Bay-street, pied by Garrison. Two beam, with the words of Judge Lynch!"

> I the account which this disastrous mission, and ped from Concord in the clothes: and then said:

on in the North is kept f money; it is a state of l. Agents are hired, disguised in the character of ministers of the Gospel, to preach abolition of slavery where slavery does not exist; and presses are kept in constant employment to scatter abolition publications through the country. Deny the right of petition to the misguided men and women who are induced from no bad motive to petition for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, and you do more to increase their numbers than will thousands of dollars paid to the emissaries who traverse the country to distribute abolition tracts and to spread abolition doctrines. Continue to debate abolition in either branch of Congress, and you more effectually subserve the incendiary views of the movers of abolition than any thing they can do for themselves. It may suit those who have been disappointed in all their political projects, to try what this subject of abolition will now avail them. Such men will be likely to find, in the end, that the people have too strong attachment for that happy Union, to which we owe all our prosperity and happiness, to be thrown from their propriety at every agitating blast which may be blown across

Mr. Webster gave his opinion in favor of reciving the petitions, not to grant their prayer, but to yield to a constitutional right on the part of the petitioners; and said:

"He thought they ought to be received, referred, and considered. That was what was usually done with petitions on other subjects. and what had been uniformly done, heretofore, with petitions on this subject also. Those who believed they had an undoubted right to petition, and that Congress had undoubted constitutional authority over the subjects to which their petitions related, would not be satisfied with a refusal to receive the petitions, nor with a formal reception of them, followed by an immediate vote rejecting their prayer. In parliamentary Arms there was some difference between these two modes of proceeding, but it would be considered as little else than a difference in mere form. He thought the question must at some time be met, considered, and discussed. In this matter, as in others, Congress must stand on its reasons. It was in vain to attempt to shut the door against petitions, and expect in that way to avoid discussion. On the presentment of the first of these petitions, he had been of opinion that it ought to be referred to the proper committee. He was of that opinion still. The subject could not be stiffed. It must be discussed, and he wished it should be discussed calmly, dispassionately, and fully, in all its branches, and ill its bearings. To reject the prayer of a petion at once, without reference or consideraon, was not respectful; and in this case nothng could be possibly gained by going out of the sual course of respectful consideration."

The trial votes were had upon the petition of the Society of Friends, the Caln petition; and on Mr. Calhoun's motion to refuse to receive it. His motion was largely rejected—35 to 10. The vote to receive was: Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing of Illinois, Ewing of Ohio, Goldsborough, Grundy, Hendricks, Hill, Hubbard, Kent, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Knight, Linn, Mc-Kean, Morris, Naudain, Niles, Prentiss, Robbins, Robinson, Ruggles, Shepley, Southard, Swift, Tallmadge, Tipton, Tomlinson, Wall, Webster, Wright. The nays were: Messrs. Black, Calhoun, Cuthbert, Leigh, Moore, Nicholas, Porter, Preston, Walker, White.

The motion to reject the petition being thus lost (only a meagre minority of the Southern members voting for it), the motion to reject its prayer next came on; and on that motion Mr. Calhoun refused to vote, saying:

"The Senate has by voting to receive this petition, on the ground on which the reception was placed, assumed the principle that we are bound to receive petitions to abolish slavery, whether in this District or the States; that is to take jurisdiction of the question of abolishing slavery whenever and in whatever manner the abolitionists may think proper to present the question. He considered this decision pregnant with consequences of the most disastrous character. When and how they were to occur it was not for him to predict; but he could not be mistaken in the fact that there must follow a long train of evils. What, he would ask, must hereafter be the condition on this floor of the senators from the slaveholding States? No one can expect that what has been done will arrest the progress of the abolitionists. Its effects must be the opposite, and instead of diminishing must greatly increase the number of the petitions. Under the decision of the Senate, we of the South are doomed to sit here and receive in silence, however outrageous or abusive in their language towards us and those whom we represent, the petitions of the incendiaries who are making war on our institutions. Nay, more, we are bound, without the power of resistance to see the Senate, at the request of these incendiaries, whenever they think proper to petition, extend its jurisdiction on the subject of slavery over the States as well as this District. Thus deprived of all power of effectual resistance, can any thing be considered more hopeless and degrading than our situation; to sit here, year after year, session after session, hearing ourselves and our constituents vilified by thousands of incendiary publications in the form of petitions, of which the Senate, by its decision, is bound to take jurisdiction, and against which we must rise like culprits to defend ourselves, or permit them to go uncontradicted and unresisted? We must ultimately be not only degraded in our own estimation and that of the world, but be exhausted and worn out in such a contest."

and neither of these objects had any relation to emancipation or the slave trade, in the States.

Mr. Preston, the colleague of Mr. Calhoun, gave

This was a most unjustifiable assumption on the part of Mr. Calhoun, to say that in voting to receive this petition, confined to slavery in the District of Columbia, the Senate took jurisdiction of the question in the States-jurisdiction of the question of abolishing slavery whenever, and in whatever manner, the abolitionists might ask. It was unjustifiable towards the Senate, and giving a false alarm to the South. The thirty-five senators voting to receive the petition wholly repudiated the idea of interfering with slavery in the States. Twelve of them were from the slaveholding States, so that Mr. Calhoun was outvoted in his own half of the Union. The petition itself was confined to the object of emancipation and the suppression of the slave trade in the District of Columbia, where it alleged, and truly that Congress possessed jurisdiction; and there was nothing either in the prayer, or in the language of the petition to justify the inferences drawn from its reception, or to justify the assumption that it was an insult and outrage to the senators from the slaveholding States. It was a brief and temperate memorial in these words:

"The memorial of Caln Quarterly Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends, commonly called Quakers, respectfully represents: That. having long felt deep sympathy with that portion of the inhabitants of these United States which is held in bondage, and having no doubt that the happiness and interests, moral and pecuniary, of both master and slave, and our whole community, would be greatly promoted if the inestimable right to liberty was extended equally to all, we contemplate with extreme regret that the District of Columbia, over which you possess entire control, is acknowledged to be one of the greatest marts for the traffic in the persons of human beings in the known world, notwithstanding the principles of the constitution declare that all men have an unalienable right to the blessing of liberty. We therefore earnestly desire that you will enact such laws as will secure the right of freedom to every human being residing within the constitutional jurisdiction of Congress, and prohibit every species of traffic in the persons of men, which is as inconsistent in principle and inhuman in practice as the foreign slave trade."

This was the petition. It was in favor of emancipation in the District, and prayed the suppression of the slave trade in the District; of Representatives. The vote was:

and neither of these objects had any relation to emancipation or the slave trade, in the States, Mr. Preston, the colleague of Mr. Calhoun, gave his reasons for voting to reject the prayer of the petition, having failed in his first object to reject the petition itself: and Mr. Davis, of Massachusetts, repulsed the inferences and assumptions of Mr. Calhoun in consequence of the vote to receive the petition. He denied the justice of any suggestion that it portended mischief to the South, to the constitution, or to the Union; or that it was to make the District the headquarters of abolitionists, and the stepping-stone and entering wedge to the attack of slavery in the States: and said:

"Neither the petition on which the debate had arisen, nor any other that he had seen, proposed directly or indirectly to disturb the Union unless the abolition of slavery in this District or the suppression or regulation of the slave trade within it, would have that effect. For himself, Mr. D. believed no purpose could be further than this from the minds of the petitioners. He could not determine what thoughts or motives might be in the minds of men, but he judged by what was revealed; and he could not persuade himself that these petitioners were not attached to the Union and that they had (as had been suggested) any ulterior purpose of making this District the head-quarters of future operation—the stronghold of antislavery—the stepping-stone to an attack upon the constitutional rights of the South. He was obliged to repudiate these inferences as unjust for he had seen no proof to sustain them in any of the petitions that had come here. The petitioners entertained opinions coincident with their fellow-citizens as to the power of Congress to legislate in regard to slavery in this District; and being desirous that slavery shound cease here, if it could be abolished upon just principles; and, if not, that the traffic carried on here from other quarters should be suppressed or regulated, they came here to ask Congress to investigate the matter. This was all; and he could see no evidence in it of a clardestine purpose to disregard the constitution or to disturb the Union.

The vote was almost unanimous on Mr. Buchanan's motion—34 to 6; and those six against it, not because they were in favor d granting the prayer of the memorialists but because they believed that the petition ought to be referred to a committee, reported upon, and then rejected—which was the ancient mode of treating such petitions; and also the mode in which they were now treated in the Hose of Representatives. The vote was:

"Yeas—Messrs. Benton, chanan, Clay, Crittenden, C Illinois, Ewing of Ohio, Gold Hill, Hubbard, King of Alab gia, Leigh, Linn, McKean, Niles, Porter, Preston, Robb gles, Shepley, Tallmadge, T Walker, Wall, White, Wrigh "Nays—Messrs. Davis, Il Prentiss, Swift, Webster—6;2

After this decision, Mr. We that he had in hand several which he had forborne to prefrom Pennsylvania should be that now he should, on an early them, and move to dispose of in which it had been his opinion that all such petitions should he that is, referred to a committee tion and inquiry.

The action of the House of will now be seen on the supetitions; for duplicates of rally went to that body; and the lead of a South Carolina mentage majorities of the House, posed of very differently from the Calhoun demanded in the Sense way that he deemed so fatal to the States. Mr. Henry L. Pinckney, ton district, moved that it be—

"Resolved, That all the me have been offered, or may hereafte to this House, praying for the slavery in the District of Colum the resolutions offered by an hono from Maine (Mr. Jarvis), with th thereto proposed by an honorable Virginia (Mr. Wise), together other paper or proposition that m ted in relation to the subject, be select committee, with instruction that Congress possesses no constitu ity to interfere in any way with th of slavery in any of the States of racy: and that in the opinion of Congress ought not to interfere, with slavery in the District of C cause it would be a violation of the unwise, impolitic, and dangerous to Assigning such reasons for these as, in the judgment of the committee best calculated to enlighten the pub allay excitement, to repress agitation and maintain the just rights of the sl States, and of the people of this D to restore harmony and tranquilling the various sections of this Union."

objects had any relation slave trade, in the States, que of Mr. Calhoun, gave o reject the prayer of the in his first object to reand Mr. Davis, of Massainferences and assumpconsequence of the vote. He denied the justice it portended mischief to itution, or to the Union; the District the heads, and the stepping-stone the attack of slavery in > on on which the debate er that he had seen, proctly to disturb the Union, slavery in this District regulation of the slave I have that effect. For ed no purpose could be the minds of the petiletermine what thoughts 1 the minds of men, but s revealed; and he could that these petitioners he Union and that they ested) any ulterior purdistrict the head-quarters the stronghold of antistone to an attack upon ts of the South. He was ese inferences as unjust, of to sustain them in any ad come here. The petipinions coincident with s to the power of Conegard to slavery in this sirous that slavery shound be abolished upon just that the traffic carried quarters should be supthey came here to ask the matter. This was o evidence in it of a clasegard the constitution or > > nost unanimous on Mr.

> > 34 to 6; and those six > > they were in favor of > > of the memorialists, but > > that the petition ough > > mmittee, reported upatich was the ancient mole > > ons; and also the mole > > ow treated in the Home
> > The vote was:

"Yeas—Messrs. Benton, Black, Brown, Buchanan, Clay, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Ewing of Illinois, Ewing of Ohio, Goldsborough, Grundy, Hill, Hubbard, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Leigh, Linn, McKean, Moore, Nicholas, Niles, Porter, Preston, Robbins, Robinson, Ruggles, Shepley, Tallmadge, Tipton, Tomlinson, Walker, Wall, White, Wright—34.

"Nays—Messrs. Davis, Hendricks, Knight, Prentiss, Swift, Webster—6."

After this decision, Mr. Webster gave notice that he had in hand several similar petitions, which he had forborne to present till this one from Pennsylvania should be disposed of; and that now he should, on an early occasion, present them, and move to dispose of them in the way in which it had been his opinion from the first that all such petitions should have been treated; that is, referred to a committee for consideration and inquiry.

The action of the House of Representatives will now be seen on the subject of these petitions; for duplicates of the same generally went to that body; and there, under the lead of a South Carolina member, and with large majorities of the House, they were disposed of very differently from the way that Mr. Calboun demanded in the Senate, and in the way that he deemed so fatal to the slaveholding states. Mr. Henry L. Pinckney, of the Charleston district, moved that it be—

"Resolved, That all the memorials which have been offered, or may hereafter be presented to this House, praying for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia; and also the resolutions offered by an honorable member from Maine (Mr. Jarvis), with the amendment thereto proposed by an honorable member from Virginia (Mr. Wise), together with every other paper or proposition that may be submitted in relation to the subject, be referred to a select committee, with instructions to report: that Congress possesses no constitutional authority to interfere in any way with the institution of slavery in any of the States of this confedemcy: and that in the opinion of this House, Congress ought not to interfere, in any way, with slavery in the District of Columbia, because it would be a violation of the public faith, unwise, impolitic, and dangerous to the Union. Assigning such reasons for these conclusions, as, in the judgment of the committee, may be est calculated to enlighten the public mind, to allay excitement, to repress agitation, to secure and maintain the just rights of the slave-holding States, and of the people of this District, and restore harmony and tranquillity amongst the various sections of this Union."

On putting the question the motion was divided, so as to have a separate vote on the different propositions of the resolve; and each was carried by large, and some by nearly unanimous majorities. On the first division, To refer all the memorials to a select committee, the vote was 174 to 48. On the second division, That Congress possesses no constitutional authority to interfere, in any way, with the institution of slavery in any of the States, the vote was 201 to 7—the seven negatives being Mr. John Quincy Adams, Mr. Harmer Denny of Pennsylvania, Mr. William Jackson, Mr. Horace Everett of Vermont, Mr. Rice Garland of Louisiana, Mr. Thomas Glascock of Georgia, Mr. William Jackson, Mr. John Robertson of Virginia; and they, because opposed to voting on such a proposition, deemed gratuitous and intermeddling. On the third division, of the resolve, That Congress ought not to interfere in any way with slavery in the District of Columbia, the vote stood 163 to 47. And on the fourth division, giving as reasons for such non-interference, Because it would be a violation of the public faith, unwise, impolitic, and dangerous to the Union, the vote was, 127 to 75. On the last division, To assign reasons for this report, the vote stood 167 to 6. So the committee was ordered, and consisted of Mr. Pinckney, Mr. Hamer of Ohio, Mr. Pierce of New Hampshire, Mr. Hardin of Kentucky, Mr. Jarvis of Maine, Mr. Owens of Georgia, Mr. Muhlenberg of Pennsylvania, Mr. Dromgoole of Virginia, and Mr. Turrill of New-York. The committee reported, and digested their report into two resolutions, first, That Congress possesses no constitutional authority to interfere, in any way, with the institution of slavery in any State of this confederacy. Secondly, That Congress ought not to interfere in any way with slavery in the District of Columbia. And, "for the purpose of arresting agitation, and restoring tranquillity to the public mind," they recommended the adoption of this resolve: "That all petitions, memorials, resolutions, propositions, or papers relating in any way to the subject of slavery, or the abolition of slavery, shall, without either being printed or referred, be laid upon the table; and that no further action whatever be had upon them." All these resolutions were adopted; and the latter one by a vote of 117 to 68; so that the House came in relation to these memorials. Mr. Adams, whose votes, taken by themselves, might present him as acting with the abolitionists, was entirely opposed to their objects, and was governed by a sense of what appeared to him to be the right of petition, and also the most effectual way of putting an end to an agitation which he sincerely deprecated. And on this point it is right that he should be heard for himself, as speaking for himself when Mr. Pinckney's motion was before the House. He cessfully in one instance. An effort was made then said:

"But, sir, not being in favor of the object of the petitions, I then gave notice to the House and to the country, that upon the supposition that these petitions had been transmitted to me under the expectation that I should present them, I felt it my duty to say, I should not support them. And, sir, the reason which I gave at that time for declining to support them was precisely the same reason which the gentleman from Virginia now gives for reconsidering this motionnamely, to keep the discussion of the subject out of the House. I said, sir, that I believed this discussion would be altogether unprofitable to the House and to the country; but, in deference to the sacred right of petition, I moved that these fifteen petitions, all of which were numerously signed, should be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, at the head of which was, at that time, a distinguished citizen of Virginia, now, I regret to say—and the whole country has occasion to regret-no more. These petitions were thus referred, and, after a short period of time, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia made a report to this House, which report was read, and unanimously accepted; and nothing more has been heard of these petitions from that day to this. In taking the course I then took, I was not sustained by the unanimous voice of my own constituents; there were many among them, persons as respectable and as entitled to consideration as any others, who disapproved of the course I pursued on that occasion.

"Attempts were made within the district I then represented to get up meetings of the people to instruct me to pursue a different course, or to multiply petitions of the same character. These efforts were continued during the whole of that long session of Congress; but, I am gratified to add, without any other result than that, from one single town of the district which I had the honor to represent, a solitary petition was forwarded before the close of the session, with a request that I would present it to the House. Sir, I did present it, and it was referred to the same Committee on the District of Columbia, and I believe nothing more has been heard of it to the same course which the Senate had taken was perfectly satisfied that the true and only method of keeping this subject out of discussion was, to take that course; to refer all petitions of this kind to the Committee on the District of Columbia, or some other committee of the House, to receive their report, and to accept it unanimously. This does equal justice to all parties in the country; it avoids the discussion of this agitating question on the one hand and, on the other, it pays a due respect to the right of the constituent to petition. Two years afterwards, similar petitions were present. ed, and at that time an effort made, without success, to do that which has now been done sucto lay these petitions on the table; the House did not accede to the proposition: they referred the petitions as they had been before referred and with the same result. For, from the moment that these petitions are referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, they go to the family vault 'of all the Capulets,' and you will never hear of them afterwards.

"At the first session of the last Congress a gentleman from the State of New-York, a distinguished member of this House, now no longer here, which I regret to say, although I do not doubt that his place is well supplied, presented one or more petitions to this effect, and delivered a long and eloquent speech of two hours in support of them. And what was the result? He was not answered: not a word was said but the vote of the House was taken; the petitions were referred to the Committe on the District and we have heard nothing more of them since. At the same session, or probably at the very last session, a distinguished member of this House from the State of Connecticut, presented one or more petitions to the same effect, and declared in his place that he himself concurred in all the opinions expressed. Did this declaration light up the flame of discord in this House? Sir, h was heard with patience and complacency. H moved the reference of the petitions to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and there they went to sleep the sleep of death. Mr. Adams, speaking from recollection, was [there porter is requested by him to state] mistaken with respect to the reference of the petitions presented at the last session of Congress to the committee. They were then for the first time laid on the table, as was the motion to prin one of them. At the preceding session of last Congress, as at all former times, all such po tions had been referred to committees and profe ed when so desired. Why not adopt the same course now? Here is a petition which has been already referred to the Committee on the Dis trict of Columbia. Leave it there, and, my wo for it, sir, you will have just such a result as la taken place time after time before. Your Com mittee on the District certainly is not an aboli committee. You will have a fit, proper, and all report from them; the House, sub silentio, since. From the experience of this session, I adopt it, and you will hear no more about

But if you are to reconside these petitions on the table resolution that this House more petitions, what will b In a large portion of this coun member who votes with you at the next election, and sor who is not prepared to lay th table."

There was certainly reason ams proposed, and encourage course, from the good effect attended it in other cases; an good effect which he affirm that course, the committee an have come to the same conc mous, instead of a divided ve His course was also conform earliest action of Congress upo was in the session of Congress ing the first under the constitut questions of abolishing the for and of providing for domestic en before it; and then, as in the Memorial, from the Religious S. there was discussion as to the upon it-which ended in referr to a special committee, without in committee, a majority being fro holding States, reported against both points; and on the question in the States, the resolve which recommended (after having been in phraseology), read thus: " have no authority to interfere pation of slaves, or in the trea within any of the States; it re the several States to provide a: therein which humanity and tr require." And under this resolve. ment of the subject, the slavery que quieted; and remained so until rev time. In the discussion which then Madison was entirely in favor of se tition to a committee; and thought to get up an agitation in the coun by opposing that course. He said

"The question of sending the ommittee was no otherwise impor d that the true and only s subject out of discussion rse; to refer all petitions mmittee on the District of other committee of the ir report, and to accept it loes equal justice to all ; it avoids the discussion estion on the one hand, t pays a due respect to tituent to petition. Two lar petitions were presentn effort made, without such has now been done sucnce. An effort was made on the table; the House proposition: they referred had been before referred esult. For, from the moitions are referred to the strict of Columbia, they go of all the Capulets,' and of them afterwards. on of the last Congress a State of New-York, a disf this House, now no longer to say, although I do not is well supplied, presented to this effect, and delivered speech of two hours in sup-what was the result? He ot a word was said, but the s taken; the petitions were mitte on the District, and ng more of them since. At probably at the very last ed member of this House, nnecticut, presented one or e same effect, and declared nimself concurred in all the Did this declaration light rd in this House? Sir, he nce and complacency. He e of the petitions to the District of Columbia, and eep the sleep of death. Mr. m recollection, was [the reby him to state] mistaken reference of the petitions session of Congress to the rere then for the first time was the motion to print ne preceding session of the > red to committees and pro-Why not adopt the sm is a petition which has bea the Committee on the list. Leave it there, and, my wan ave just such a result ash or time before. You Cont certainly is not an abolish ill have a fit, proper, and all he House, sub sidenio, si ill hear no more about

Il former times, all such per

But if you are to reconsider the vote, and to lay these petitions on the table; if you come to the resolution that this House will not receive any more petitions, what will be the consequence? In a large portion of this country every individual member who votes with you will be left at home at the next election, and some one will be sent who is not prepared to lay these petitions on the table."

There was certainly reason in what Mr. Adams proposed, and encouragement to adopt his course, from the good effect which had already attended it in other cases; and from the further good effect which he affirmed, that, in taking that course, the committee and the House would have come to the same conclusion by a unanimous instead of a divided vote, as at present. His course was also conformable to that of the earliest action of Congress upon the subject. It was in the session of Congress of 1789-'90-being the first under the constitution—that the two questions of abolishing the foreign slave trade, and of providing for domestic emancipation, came before it; and then, as in the case of the Caln Memorial, from the Religious Society of Friends, there was discussion as to the mode of acting upon it-which ended in referring the memorial to a special committee, without instructions. That committee, a majority being from the non-slaveholding States, reported against the memorial on both points; and on the question of emancipation in the States, the resolve which the committee recommended (after having been slightly altered in phraseology), read thus: "That Congress have no authority to interfere in the emancipation of slaves, or in the treatment of them within any of the States; it remaining with the several States to provide any regulations therein which humanity and true policy may require." And under this resolve, and this treatment of the subject, the slavery question was then quieted; and remained so until revived in our own time. In the discussion which then took place Mr. Madison was entirely in favor of sending the petition to a committee; and thought the only way to get up an agitation in the country, would be by opposing that course. He said:

"The question of sending the petition to a mommittee was no otherwise important than as gentlemen made it so by their serious opposition. Had they permitted the commitment of the memorial, as a matter of course, no notice would have been taken of it out of doors: it could never have been blown up into a decision of the question respecting the discouragement of the African slave trade, nor alarm the owners with an apprehension that the general government were about to abolish slavery in all the States. Such things are not contemplated by any gentleman, but they excite alarm by their extended objections to committing the memorials. The debate has taken a serious turn; and it will be owing to this alone if an alarm is created: for, had the memorial been treated in the usual way, it would have been considered, as a matter of course; and a report might have been made so as to give general satisfaction. If there was the slightest tendency by the commitment to break in upon the constitution, he would object to it: but he did not see upon what ground such an event could be apprehended. The petition did not contemplate even a breach of the constitution: it prayed, in general terms, for the interference of Congress so far as they were constitutionally authorized."

This chapter opens and concludes with the words of Mr. Madison. It is beautiful to behold the wise, just, and consistent course of that virtuous and patriotic man—the same from the beginning to the ending of his life; and always in harmony with the sanctity of the laws, the honor and interests of his country, and the peace of his fellowcitizens. May his example not be lost upon us. This chapter has been copious on the subject of slavery. It relates to a period when a new point of departure was taken on the slave question; when the question was carried into Congress with avowed alternatives of dissolving the Union; and conducted in a way to show that dissolution was an object to be attained, not prevented; and this being the starting point of the slavery agitation which has since menaced the Union, it is right that every citizen should have a clear view of its origin, progress, and design. From the beginning of the Missouri controversy up to the year 1835, the author of this View looked to the North as the point of danger from the slavery agitation: since that time he has looked to the South for that danger, as Mr. Madison did two years earlier. Equally opposed to it in either quarter, he has opposed it

ANN

CHAPTER CXXXVI.

REMOVAL OF THE CHEROKEES FROM GEORGIA.

THE removal of the Creek Indians from this State was accomplished by the treaty of 1826, and that satisfied the obligations of the United States to Georgia, under the compact of 1802, so far as the Creek tribe was concerned. But the same obligation remained with respect to the Cherokees, contracted at the same time, and founded on the same valuable consideration, namely: the cession by Georgia to the United States of her western territory, now constituting the two States of Alabama and Mississippi. And twenty-five years' delay, and under incessant application, the compact had been carried into effect with respect to the Creeks; it was now thirty-five years since it was formed, and it still remained unexecuted with respect to the Cherokees. Georgia was impatient and importunate, and justly so, for the removal of this tribe, the last remaining obstacle to the full enjoyment of all her territory. General Jackson was equally anxious to effect the removal, both as an act of justice to Georgia, and also to Alabama (part of whose territory was likewise covered by the Cherokees), and also to complete the business of the total removal of all the Indians from the east to the west side of the Mississippi. It was the only tribe remaining in any of the States, and he was in the last year of his presidency, and the time becoming short, as well as the occasion urgent, and the question becoming more complex and difficult. Part of the tribe had removed long before. Faction split the remainder that staid behind. Intrusive counsellors, chiefly from the Northern States, came in to inflame dissension, aggravate difficulties, and impede removal. For climax to this state of things, party spirit laid hold of it, and the politicians in opposition to General Jackson endeavored to turn it to the prejudice of his administration. Nothing daunted by this combination of obstacles, General Jackson pursued his plan with firmness and vigor, well seconded by his Secretary at War, Mr. Cassthe War Department being then charged with the administration of the Indian affairs. In the pointed to treat with the half tribe in treorgia and Alabama. It was very judiciously composed to accomplish its purpose, being partly military and partly ecclesiastic. General William Car. roll, of Tennessee, well known to all the Southern Indians as a brave and humane warrior, and the Reverend John F. Schermerhorn, of New-York well known as a missionary laborer, composed the commissiom; and it had all the success which the President expected.

In the winter of 1835-'36, a treaty was negotiated, by which the Cherokees, making clean disposal of all their possessions east of the Mississippi, ceded the whole, and agreed to go West, to join the half tribe beyond that river. The consideration paid them was ample, and besides the moneyed consideration, they had large inducements, founded in views of their own welfare, to make the removal. These inducements were set out by themselves in the preamble to the treaty, and were declared to be: "A desire to get rid of the difficulties experienced by a residence within the settled parts of the United States; and to reunite their people, by joining those who had crossed the Mississippi; and to live in a country beyond the limits of State sovereignties, and where ther could establish and enjoy a government of their choice, and perpetuate a state of society, which might be most consonant with their views, habits and condition, and which might tend to their individual comfort, and their advancement in civilization." These were sensible reasons for desiring a removal, and, added to the moneyed consideration, made it immensely desirable to the Indians. The direct consideration was five millions of dollars, which, added to stipulations to pay for the improvements on the ceded lands-to defay the expenses of removal to their new homes beyond the Mississippi-to subsist them for our year after their arrival-to commute school funds and annuities-to allow pre-emptions and pay for reserves-with some liberal grants of money from Congress, for the sake of quieting complaints-and some large departmental is lowances, amounted, in the whole, to more than twelve millions of dollars! Being almost a much for their single extinction of Indian title in the corner of two States, as the whole prove ince of Louisiana cost! And this in addition seven millions of acres granted for their me autumn of 1835, a commission had been ap- home, and making a larger and a better home than the one they had left moneyed transaction, the a gether, and out of all propor the Indians; but relief to th to the Indians, and the comp humane policy, were overrul which sanctioned the enorm paid.

Advantageous as this treat dians, and desirable as it was was earnestly opposed in the saved by one vote. The disco the Cherokees, and the intra and party spirit, pursued it to and organized an opposition to great chiefs then opposed to the of General Jackson-Mr. Cla and Mr. Calhoun. Immediatel was communicated to the Sena sented a memorial and protest the "Cherokee nation," as they the faction that protested; and from several individual Cherol were printed and referred to the mittee on Indian Affairs, and when the merits of the treaty amined. The examination was extending at intervals for nearl -from March 7th to the end of suming very nearly a complete On the 18th of May Mr. Clay n which, as disclosing the grounds tion to the treaty, deserves to be own words. It was a motion to r lution of ratification, and to adop in its place: "That the instrumer purporting to be a treaty conclusion Echota on the 29th of December, 1 the United States and the chiefs, h people of the Cherokee tribe of Inc supplementary articles thereto ar not made and concluded by auth part of the Cherokee tribe, compe it; and, therefore, without reference and conditions of the said agreeme plementary articles, the Senate can to and advise the ratification there treaty, binding upon the Cherokee tion;" concluding with a recomme the President to treat again with the east of the Mississippi for the whol their possessions on this side of

he half tribe in treorgia ery judiciously composed se, being partly military

General William Car. nown to all the Southern humane warrior, and the rmerhorn, of New-York, onary laborer, composed it had all the success pected.

-'36, a treaty was negoherokees, making clean possessions east of the whole, and agreed to go tribe beyond that river. d them was ample, and consideration, they had anded in views of their the removal. These inut by themselves in the y, and were declared to rid of the difficulties exe within the settled parts and to reunite their peotho had crossed the Misin a country beyond the eignties, and where they ov a government of their a state of society, which nt with their views, habits ich might tend to their inheir advancement in civilinsible reasons for desiring to the moneyed consideray desirable to the Indians. ion was five millions of to stipulations to pay for the ceded lands-to defar al to their new homes be -to subsist them for one val-to commute school to allow pre-emptions and h some liberal grants of 3, for the sake of quieting e large departmental aln-the whole, to more than ollars! Being almost # extinction of Indian title States, as the whole prov ! And this in addition to res granted for their new arger and a better home than the one they had left. Considered as a moneyed transaction, the advantage was altogether, and out of all proportion, on the side of the Indians; but relief to the States, and quiet to the Indians, and the completion of a wise and humane policy, were overruling considerations, which sanctioned the enormity of the amount

Advantageous as this treaty was to the Indians, and desirable as it was to both parties, it was earnestly opposed in the Senate; and only saved by one vote. The discontented party of the Cherokees, and the intrusive counsellors, and party spirit, pursued it to Washington city, and organized an opposition to it, headed by the great chiefs then opposed to the administration of General Jackson-Mr. Clay, Mr. Webster, and Mr. Calhoun. Immediately after the treaty was communicated to the Senate, Mr. Clay presented a memorial and protest against it from the "Cherokee nation," as they were entitled by the faction that protested; and also memorials from several individual Cherokees; all which were printed and referred to the Senate's Committee on Indian Affairs, and duly considered when the merits of the treaty came to be examined. The examination was long and close, extending at intervals for nearly three months -from March 7th to the end of May-and assuming very nearly a complete party aspect. On the 18th of May Mr. Clay made a motion which, as disclosing the grounds of the opposition to the treaty, deserves to be set out in its own words. It was a motion to reject the resolution of ratification, and to adopt this resolve in its place: "That the instrument of writing, purporting to be a treaty concluded at New Echota on the 29th of December, 1835, between the United States and the chiefs, head men and people of the Cherokee tribe of Indians, and the supplementary articles thereto annexed, were not made and concluded by authority, on the part of the Cherokee tribe, competent to bind it; and, therefore, without reference to the terms and conditions of the said agreement and supplementary articles, the Senate cannot consent to and advise the ratification thereof, as a valid treaty, binding upon the Cherokee tribe or nation;" concluding with a recommendation to the President to treat again with the Cherokees ast of the Mississippi for the whole, or any of

The vote on this resolve and recommendation was, 29 yeas to 15 nays; and it requiring twothirds to adopt it, it was, of course, lost. Butit showed that the treaty itself was in imminent danger of being lost, and would actually be lost, in a vote, as the Senate then stood. The whole number of the Senate was forty-eight; only forty-four had voted. There were four members absent, and unless two of these could be got in, and vote with the friends of the treaty, and ne one got in on the other side, the treaty was rejected. It was a close pinch, and made me recollect what I have often heard Mr. Randolph say, that there were always members to get out of the way at a pinching vote, or to lend a hand at a pinching vote. Fortunately the four absent senators were classified as friends of the administration, and two of them came in to our side, the other two refusing to go to the other side: thus saving the treaty by one vote. The vote stood, thirty-one for the treaty, fifteen against it; and it was only saved by a strong Northern vote. The yeas were: Messis. Benton of Missouri; Black of Mississippi; Brown of North Carolina; Buchanan of Pennsylvania; Cuthbert of Georgia; Ewing of Illinois; Goldsborough of Maryland; Grundy of Tennessee; Hendricks of Indiana; Hubbard of New Hampshire; Kent of Maryland; King of Alabama; King of Georgia; Linn of Missouri; McKean of Pennsylvania; Mangum of North Carolina; Moore of Alabama; Morris of Ohio; Niles of Connecticut; Preston of South Carolina; Rives of Virginia; Robinson of Illinois; Ruggles and Shepley of Maine; N. P. Tallmadge of New-York; Tipton of Illinois; Walker of Mississippi; Wall of New Jersey; White of Tennessee; and Wright of New-York-31. The nays were: Messrs. Calhoun of South Carolina; Clay of Kentucky; Clayton of Delaware; Crittenden of Kentucky; Davis of Massachusetts; Ewing of Ohio; Leigh of Virginia; Naudain of Delaware, Porter of Louisiana; Prentiss of Vermont; Robbins of Rhode Island; Southard of New Jersey; Swift of Vermont; Tomlinson of Connecticut; and Webster of Massachusetts-15. Thus the treaty was barely saved. One vote less in its favor, or one more against it, and it would have been lost. Two members were absent. If either had come in and voted with the opposition, it would have been lost. It was their possessions on this side of that river. saved by the free State vote—by the fourteen free State affirmative votes, which precisely balanced and neutralized the seven slave State negatives. If any one of these fourteen had voted with the negatives, or even been absent at the vote, the treaty would have been lost; and thus the South is indebted to the North for this most important treaty, which completed the relief of the Southern States—the Chickasaws, Creeks and Choctaws having previously agreed to remove, and the treaties with them (except with the Greeks) having been ratified without serious opposition.

serious opposition. The ratification of this treaty for the removal of the Cherokees was one of the most difficult and delicate questions which we ever had to manage, and in which success seemed to be impossible up to the last moment. It was a Southern question, involving an extension of slavery, and was opposed by all three of the great opposition leaders; who only required a minority of one third to make good their point. At best, it required a good Northern vote, in addition to the undivided South, to carry the treaty; but, with the South divided, it seemed hardly possible to obtain the requisite number to make up for that defection; yet it was done, and done at the very time that the systematic plam had commenced, to charge the Northern States with a design to abolish slavery in the South. And I, who write history, not for applause, but for the sake of the instruction which it affords, gather up these dry details from the neglected documents in which they lie hidden, and bring them forth to the knowledge and consideration of all candid and impartial men, that they may see the just and fraternal spirit in which the free States then acted towards their brethren of the South. Nor can it fail to be observed, as a curious contrast, that, in the very moment that Mr. Calhoun was seeing cause for Southern alarm lest the North should abolish slavery in the South, the Northern senators were extending the area of slavery in Georgia by converting Indian soil into slave soil: and that against strenuous exertions made by him-

CHAPTER CXXXVII.

EXTENSION OF THE MISSOURI BOUNDARY.

This was a measure of great moment to Missouri and full of difficulties in itself, and requiring a double process to accomplish it—an act of Congress to extend the boundary, and an Indian treaty to remove the Indians to a new home. It was to extend the existing boundary of the State so as to include a triangle between the existing line and the Missouri River, large enough to form seven counties of the first class, and fertile enough to sustain the densest population. The difficulties were threefold: 1. To make still larger a State which was already one of the largest in the Union. 2. To remove Indians from a possession which had just been assigned to them in perpetuity. 3. To alter the Missouri compromise line in relation to slave territors. and thereby convert free soil into slave soil The two first difficulties were serious-the third formidable: and in the then state of the public mind in relation to slave territory, this enlargement of a great slave State, and by convening free soil into slave, and impairing the compromise line, was an almost impossible undertaking and in no way to be accomplished without generous co-operation from the members of the free States. They were a majority in the House of Representatives, and no act of Congress could pass for altering the compromise line without their aid: they were equal in the Senate, where no treaty for the removal of the Indians could be ratified except by a concurrence of two thirds. And all these difficulties to be overcome at a time when Congress was inflamed with angry debates upon abolition petitions, transmission of incendiary publications, imputed designs to abolish slavery; and the appearance of the criminating article in South Carolina titled the "Crises," announcing a Southern convention and a secession if certain Northen States did not suppress the abolition strains within their limits within a limited time.

In the face of all these discouraging obtacs the two Missouri senators, Messrs. Benton all Linn, commenced their operations. The first step was to procure a bill for the alteration the compromise line and the extension of the step was the compromise line and the extension of the step was the compromise line and the extension of the step was the step was boundary: it was obtained Committee, reported by 1 of Delaware: and passed material opposition. It v Representatives; and fou opposition to its passage. ated with the Sac and Fox country had been assigned. the requisite two thirds. ing an act of generous ju Missouri, was the noble ans members gave to the imput ing slavery in the States! a and by an addition equal in 6 as Delaware and Rhode Isla tility equal to one of the tl And this accomplished by process of altering a compro to be perpetual, and the reconv had been slave, and made fre free to slave. And all this wl the least disposition to imped sion of a slave State, there wer enough to cover an oppositio objections to enlarging a Stat gest in the Union-to removi from a home to which they h moved under a national pledge als-and to disturbing the cor 1820 on which the Missouri a settled; and the line between for ritory fixed for national reason ever. The author of this Vie parcel of all that transactionthe anxiety of the State to obta -her joy at obtaining it-the gr. felt to the Northern members aid it could not have been do magnanimous assistance under cumstances he now records as or -(this work contains many other lingness of the non-slaveholding pa to be just and generous to their brethren, even in disregard of cheri and offensive criminations. It w great proof to this effect at this id the ratification of the Georgia C being the other.

CXXXVII

E MISSOURI BOUNDARY.

great moment to Missouri in itself, and requiring a omplish it-an act of Conboundary, and an Indian Indians to a new home. existing boundary of the a triangle between theex. issouri River. large enough s of the first class, and fern the densest population hreefold: 1. To make still was already one of the 1. 2. To remove Indians ich had just been assigned . 3. To alter the Missouri elation to slave territory. free soil into slave soil ilties were serious - the 1 in the then state of the n to slave territory, this enslave State, and by convertand impairing the compreost impossible undertaking e accomplished without a 1 from the members of the ere a majority in the House ad no act of Congress could compromise line without equal in the Senate, where moval of the Indians could by a concurrence of two ese difficulties to be overen Congress was inflamed upon abolition petition, diary publications, imputed avery; and the appearance ticle in South Carolina en unnouncing a Southern conssion if certain Northen ress the abolition societies ithin a limited time. hese discouraging obstacls nators, Messrs. Benton in neir operations. The first a bill for the alteration and the extension of the boundary: it was obtained from the Judiciary Committee, reported by Mr. John M. Clayton of Delaware: and passed the Senate without material opposition. It went to the House of Representatives; and found there no serious opposition to its passage. A treaty was negotiated with the Sac and Fox Indians to whom the country had been assigned, and was ratified by the requisite two thirds. And this, besides doing an act of generous justice to the State of Missouri, was the noble answer which Northern members gave to the imputed design of abolishing slavery in the States! actually extending it! and by an addition equal in extent to such States as Delaware and Rhode Island; and by its fertility equal to one of the third class of States. And this accomplished by the extraordinary process of altering a compromise line intended tobe perpetual, and the reconversion of soil which had been slave, and made free, back again from free to slave. And all this when, had there been the least disposition to impede the proper extension of a slave State, there were plausible reasons enough to cover an opposition, in the serious objections to enlarging a State already the largest in the Union-to removing Indians again from a home to which they had just been removed under a national pledge of no more removals-and to disturbing the compromise line of 1820 on which the Missouri question had been settled; and the line between free and slave territory fixed for national reasons, to remain for ever. The author of this View was part and parcel of all that transaction—remembers well the anxiety of the State to obtain the extension -her joy at obtaining it-the gratitude which all felt to the Northern members without whose aid it could not have been done; and whose magnanimous assistance under such trying circumstances he now records as one of the proofs -(this work contains many others)-of the willinguess of the non-slaveholding part of the Union to be just and generous to their slaveholding brethren, even in disregard of cherished prejudices and offensive criminations. It was the second great proof to this effect at this identical session, the ratification of the Georgia Cherokee treaty being the other.

CHAPTER CXXXVIII.

ADMISSION OF THE STATES OF ARKANSAS AND MICHIGAN INTO THE UNION.

THESE two young States had applied to Congress for an act to enable them to hold a convention, and form State constitutions, preparatory to admission into the Union. Congress refused to pass the acts, and the people of the two territories held the convention by their own authority, formed their constitutions—sent copies to Congress, praying admission as States. They both applied at this session, and the proceedings on their respective applications were simultaneous in Congress, though in separate bills. That of Michigan was taken up first, and had been brought before each House in a message from the President in these words:

"By the act of the 11th of January, 1805, all that part of the Indian Territory lying north of a line drawn due 'east from the southerly bend or extreme of Lake Michigan until it shall intersect Lake Erie, and east of a line drawn from the said southerly bend, through the middle of said lake, to its northern extremity, and thence, due north, to the northern boundary of the United States,' was erected into a separate Territory, by the name of Michigan. The Territory comprised within these limits being part of the district of country described in the ordinance of the 13th of July, 1787, which provides that, whenever any of the States into which the same should be divided should have sixty thousand free inhabitants, such State should be admitted by its delegates 'into the Congress of the United States, on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever, and shall be at liberty to form a permanent constitution and State government, provided the constitution and government so to be formed shall be republican, and in conformity to the principles contained in these articles, the inhabitants thereof have, during the present year, in pursuance of the right secured by the ordinance, formed a constitution and State government. That instrument, together with various other documents connected therewith, has been transmitted to me for the purpose of being laid before Congress, to whom the power and duty of admitting new States into the Union exclusively appertains; and the whole are herewith communicated for your early deci-

The application was referred to a select committee, Mr. Benton the chairman; and a memorial, entitled from the "Legislature of Michigan,"

was also referred to the same committee, though objected to by some senators as purporting to come from a State which, as yet, had no existence. But the objection was considered by others as being one of form—that it might be considered as coming from the people of Michigan-and was not even material in that point of view, as the question was already before the Senate on the President's Message. Some objection was also made to the boundaries, as being too large, and as trenching upon those of Indiana and Ohio. A bill was reported for the admission of the State, in support of which Mr. Benton said, the committee had included in the proposed limits a considerable portion of territory on the northwest, and had estimated the superficial contents of the State at 60,000 square miles. The territory attached contained but a very small portion of Indian population. It was necessary to make her large and strong, being a frontier State both to the Indians and to the British possessions. It should have a large front on Lake Superior. The principal points of objection, of a permanent character, were, that the proceedings of the people were revolutionary, in forming a constitution without a previous act of Congress; and her constitution incomsistent with that of the United States in admitting aliens to vote before naturalization. To the first it was answered that she had applied for an act of Congress two years ago, and was denied by the then dominant party, and that it was contradictory to object to her, for not having that which had been refused to be given; and on the second, that the same thing had been done for a quarter of a century. On the latter point Mr. Buchanan said:

"Michigan confined herself to such residents and inhabitants of her territory as were there at the signing of her constitution; and to those alone she extended the right of suffrage. Now, we had admitted Ohio and Illinois into this Union; two sister States, of whom we ought certainly to be very proud. He would refer senators to the provision in the constitution of Ohio on that subject. By it, all white male inhabitants, twenty-one years of age, or upwards, having resided one year in the State, are entitled to vote. Michigan had made the proper distinction; she had very properly confined the elective franchise to inhabitants within the State at the time of the adoption of her constitution; but Ohio had given the right of suffrage as to all future time to all her white inhabitants over the age of twenty-one years; a case embracing | movement, Mr. Buchanan answered:

all time to come, and not limited as in the constitution of Michigan. He had understood that since the adoption of her constitution, Ohio had repealed this provision by law. He did not know whether this was so or not; but here it was, as plain as the English language could make it, that all the white male inhabitants of Ohio, above the age of twenty-one years, were entitled to vote at her elections. Well, what had Illinois done in this matter? He would read an extract from her constitution, by which it would appear that only six months' previous residence was required to acquire the right of The constitution of Illinois was suffrage. therefore still broader and more liberal than that of Ohio. There, in all elections, all white male inhabitants above the age of twenty-one years, having resided in the State six months previous to the election, shall enjoy the rights of an elector. Now, sir, it had been made a matter of preference by settlers to go to Illinois. instead of the other new States, where they must become citizens before they could vote: and he appealed to the senators from Illinois whether this was not now the case, and whether any man could not now vote in that State after a six months' residence.

[Mr. Robinson said that such was the fact.] "Now, here were two constitutions of States, the senator from one of which was most strenuously opposed to the admission of Michigan who had not extended the right of suffrage as far as was done by either of them. Did Michigan do right in thus fixing the elective franchise? He contended that she did act right; and if she had not acted so, she would not have acted in obedience to the spirit, if not the very letter, of the ordinance of 1787. Michigan took the right ground, while the States of Ohio and Illinois went back in making perpetual in their constitution what was contained in the ordinance. When Congress admitted them and Indiana on this principle, he thought it very ungracious in any of their senators or representatives to declare that Michigan should not be admitted, because she has extended the right of suffrage to the few persons within her limits at the adoption of her constitution. He felt inclined to go a good deal further into this subject; but as he was exceedingly anxious that the decision should be made soon, he would not extend his remarks any further. It appeared to him that an amendment might very well be made to this bill, requiring that the assent of the people of Michigan shall be given to the change of boundary. He did hope that by this bill all objections would be removed; and that this State, so ready to rush into our arms, would not be repulsed, because of the absence of some formalities, which, perhaps, were very proper, but certainly not indispensable.

On the other point, that of a revolutionary

"I think their course but if there is any thing it, it is to be attributed to gress. For three years, th at your door, and asking fo gress to form a constitution into the Union; but thei been heeded, and have been Not being able to be admi sought, they have been force course, and stand upon the cured to them by the const irrepealable ordinance. T census of the territory; t constitution, elected their of machinery of a State govern put in operation: they are action. Having assumed thi demand admission as a ma demand it as an act of jus Are they now to be repelled they must retrace their steps Union in the way they at firs could not obtain the sanction I fear the consequences of tremble at an act of such inju

The bill passed the Senate vote-twenty-four to eighteen all senators in the opposition. the House of Representatives From the time of the admissi it had been the practice to slave State together, or alter keep up a numerical equilibriu -a practice resulting from sor existing, from the beginning, I classes of States. In 1820, wh controversy inflamed that jealo Massachusetts divided herself tory for the formation of a (Maine) to balance Missouri; Congress for the admission of b contemporaneously, March, 1820 when the slave question again flamed, and a State of each kind the proceedings for that purpo nearly together as possible, not t in the same bill. The moment Michigan bill had passed the S Arkansas was taken up, under t Buchanan, to whom the Arkansas been confided, as that of Michigan Benton. This latter senator allue cumstance to show that the people States had no fear of trusting th interests to the care of senators themselves on the slavery questio t limited as in the con-He had understood that. r constitution, Ohio had by law. He did not so or not; but here it English language could ite male inhabitants of twenty-one years, were elections. Well, what is matter? He would r constitution, by which ly six months' previous to acquire the right of tution of Illinois was and more liberal than n all elections, all white the age of twenty-one the State six months shall enjoy the rights it had been made a matttlers to go to Illinois, ew States, where they before they could vote; e senators from Illinois ow the case, and whether vote in that State after > that such was the fact.] o constitutions of States f which was most streadmission of Michigan, the right of suffrage as er of them. Did Michifixing the elective franthat she did act right; d so, she would not have he spirit, if not the very ice of 1787. Michigan while the States of Ohio in making perpetual in t was contained in the igress admitted them and ple, he thought it very their senators or reprehat Michigan should not ne has extended the right persons within her limits r constitution. He felt eal further into this subxceedingly anxious that made soon, he would not ny further. It appeared nent might very well be iring that the assent of n shall be given to the He did hope that by this d be removed; and that rush into our arms, would se of the absence of some haps, were very proper pensable.

> > , that of a revolutionary

"I think their course is clearly justifiable: but if there is any thing wrong or unusual in it, it is to be attributed to the neglect of Congress. For three years, they have been rapping at your door, and asking for the consent of Congress to form a constitution, and for admission into the Union; but their petitions have not heen heeded, and have been treated with neglect. Not being able to be admitted in the way they sought, they have been forced to take their own course, and stand upon their rights-rights secured to them by the constitution and a solemn irrepealable ordinance. They have taken the census of the territory; they have formed a constitution, elected their officers, and the whole machinery of a State government is ready to be put in operation: they are only awaiting your action. Having assumed this attitude, they now demand admission as a matter of right: they demand it as an act of justice at your hands. Are they now to be repelled, or to be told that they must retrace their steps, and come into the Union in the way they at first sought to do, but could not obtain the sanction of Congress? Sir. I fear the consequences of such a decision; I tremble at an act of such injustice."

The bill passed the Senate by rather a close vote-twenty-four to eighteen; the latter being all senators in the opposition. It then went to the House of Representatives for concurrence. From the time of the admission of new States. it had been the practice to admit a free and slave State together, or alternately, so as to keep up a numerical equilibrium between them -a practice resulting from some slight jealousy existing, from the beginning, between the two classes of States. In 1820, when the Missouri controversy inflamed that jealousy, the State of Massachusetts divided herself to furnish territory for the formation of a new free State (Maine) to balance Missouri; and the acts of Congress for the admission of both, were passed contemporaneously, March, 1820. Now, in 1836, when the slave question again was much inflamed, and a State of each kind to be admitted, the proceedings for that purpose were kept as nearly together as possible, not to include them in the same bill. The moment, then, that the Michigan bill had passed the Senate, that of Arkansas was taken up, under the lead of Mr. Buchanan, to whom the Arkansas application had been confided, as that of Michigan had been to Mr. Benton. This latter senator alluded to this circumstance to show that the people of these young States had no fear of trusting their rights and

"It was worthy of notice, that, on the presentation of these two great questions for the admission of two States, the people of those States were so slightly affected by the exertions that had been made to disturb and ulcerate the public mind on the subject of slavery, as to put them in the hands of senators who might be supposed to entertain opinions on that subject different from those held by the States whose interests they were charged with. Thus, the people of Arkansas had put their application into the hands of a gentleman representing a non-slaveholding State; and the people of Michigan had put their application into the hands of a senator (himself) coming from a State where the institutions of slavery existed; affording a most beautiful illustration of the total impotence of all attempts to agitate and ulcerate the public mind on the worn-out subject of slavery. He would further take occasion to say, that the abolition question seemed to have died out; there not having been a single presentation of a petition on that subject, since the general jail delivery ordered by the Senate."

Mr. Swift, of Vermont, could not vote for the admission of Arkansas, because the constitution of the State sanctioned perpetual slavery; and said:

"That, although he felt every disposition to vote for the admission of the new State into the Union, yet there were operative reasons under which he must vote against it. On looking at the constitution submitted by Arkansas, he found that they had made the institution of slavery perpetual; and to this he could never give his assent. He did not mean to oppose the passage of the bill, but had merely risen to explain the reasons why he could not vote for it."

Mr. Buchanan felt himself bound by the Missouri compromise to vote for the admission, and pointed out the ameliorating feature in the constitution which guaranteed the right of jury trials to slaves; and said:

flamed, and a State of each kind to be admitted, the proceedings for that purpose were kept as nearly together as possible, not to include them in the same bill. The moment, then, that the Michigan bill had passed the Senate, that of Michigan bill had passed the Senate, that of Buchanan, to whom the Arkansas application had been confided, as that of Michigan had been to Mr. Beaton. This latter senator alluded to this circumstance to show that the people of these young States had no fear of trusting their rights and interests to the care of senators differing from themselves on the slavery question. He said:

"That, on the subject of slavery, this constitution of any of the slavely lith and the Union. It preserved the very words of the other constitutions, in regard to slavery; but there were other provisions in it in favor of the slaves, and among them a provision which secured to them the right of trial by jury; thus putting them in that particular, on an equal footing with the whites. He considered the question as to slavery in the new South Western States; and the committee, therefore, did not deem it right to interfere with the question of slavery in Arkansas."

Mr. Prentiss, of Vermont, opposed the admission, on account of the "revolutionary" manner in which the State had held her convention, without the authorization of a previous act of Congress, and because her constitution had given perpetual sanction to slavery; and, referring to the reasons which induced him to vote against the admission of Michigan, said:

"That he must also vote against the admission of Arkansas. He viewed the movements of these two territories, with regard to their admission into the Union, as decidedly revolutionary, forming their constitution without the previous consent of Congress, and importunately knocking at its doors for admission. The objections he had to the admission of Arkansas, particularly, were, that she had formed her constitution without the previous assent of Congress, and in that constitution had made slavery perpetual, as noticed by his colleague. He regretted that he was compelled to vote against this bill; but he could not, in the discharge of his duty, do otherwise."

Mr. Morris, of Ohio, spoke more fully on the objectionable point than other senators, justifying the right of the people of a territory, when amounting to 60,000 to meet and form their own constitution—regretting the slavery clause in the constitution of Arkansas, but refusing to vote against her on that account, as she was not restrained by the ordinance of 1787, nor had entered into agreement against slavery. He said:

"Before I record my vote in favor of the passage of the bill under consideration, I must ask the indulgence of the Senate for a moment, while I offer a few of the reasons which govern me in the vote I shall give. Being one of the representatives of a free State, and believing slavery to be wrong in principle, and mischievous in practice, I wish to be clearly understood on the subject, both here and by those I have the honor to represent. I have objections to the constitution of Arkansas, on the ground that slavery is recognized in that constitution, and settled and established as a fundamental principle in her government. I object to the existence of this principle forming a part of the organic law in any State; and I would vote against the admission of Arkansas, as a member of this Union. if I believed I had the power to do so. The wrong, in a moral sense, with which I view slavery, would be sufficient for me to do this, did I not consider my political obligations, and the duty, as a member of this body, I owe to the constitution under which I now act, clearly require of me the vote I shall give. I hold that any portion of American citizens, who may re-

States, whenever their numbers shall amount to that which would entitle them to a representation in the House of Representatives in Congress, have the right to provide for themselves a constitution and State government, and to be admitted into the Union whenever they shall so apply; and they are not bound to wait the action of Congress in the first instance, except there is some compact or agreement requiring them to do so. I place this right upon the broad, and, I consider, indisputable ground, that all persons, living within the jurisdiction of the United States, are entitled to equal privileges; and it ought to be matter of high gratification to us here, that, in every portion even the most remote, of our country, our people are anxious to obtain this high privilege at as early a day as possible. It furnishes clear proof that the Union is highly esteemed, and has its foundation deep in the hearts of our fellow-citizens.

"By the constitution of the United States. power is given to Congress to admit new States into the Union. It is in the character of a State that any portion of our citizens, inhabiting any part of the territory of the United States, must apply to be admitted into the Union; a State government and constitution must first be formed. It is not necessary for the power of Congress, and I doubt whether Congress has such power, to prescribe the mode by which the people shall form a State constitution; and, for this plain reason, that Congress would be entirely incompetent to the exercise of any coercive power to carry into effect the mode they might prescribe. I cannot, therefore, vote against the admission of Arkansas into the Union, on the ground that there was no previous act of Congress to authorize the holding of her convention. As a member of Congress, I will not look be yond the constitution that has been presented. I have no right to presume it was formed by incompetent persons, or that it does not fully express the opinions and wishes of the people of that country. It is true that the United States shall guarantee to every State in the Union a republican form of government: meaning, in my judgment, that Congress shall not permit any power to establish, in any State, a government without the assent of the people of such State; and it will not be amiss that we remember here, also, that that guaranty is to the State, and not as to the formation of the government by the people of the State; but should it be admitted that Congress can look into the constitution of a State, in order to ascertain its character, before such State is admitted into the Union, yet I contend that Congress cannot object to it for the want of a republican form, if it contains the great principle that all power is inherent the people, and that the government drew all its just powers from the governed.

the constitution under which I now act, clearly require of me the vote I shall give. I hold that any portion of American citizens, who may reside on a portion of the territory of the United admission into the Union, and that constitution is being republican in its for the people who prepared : tion here are sufficiently them to a representative lieving, also, that Congress to regulate the system of have established for their dinance of 1787 not oper have they entered into an United States that slavery ted in their State, have the lot for themselves, though made this choice. Yet, be ernment has no right to int tion of slavery in any of th what shall or shall not be in the different States, or 1 perty of any kind shall be these are exclusively quest I cannot, as a member of th vote to admit this State into her constitution recognizes t ence of slavery."

Mr. Alexander Porter, o vote against the admission, "revolutionary" proceeding the formation of their cons previous act of .Congress. Mr. Clay voted upon the sar were but six votes against the ly: Mr. Clay, Mr. Knight of Porter, Mr. Prentiss, Mr. I Island, and Mr. Swift. It is Robbins and Mr. Knight vo ground with Mr. Clay and Mr bill was easily passed, and th together to the House of Repr they gave rise to proceeding which still survives, and a kno therefore, becomes necessary. were made the special order Wednesday, the 8th of June, ( adjourn on the 4th of July; a bill having priority on the ca first passed the Senate. Mr. V on the announcement of the Mi the chair, as the business be moved to postpone its conside ensuing Monday, in order to I Arkansas bill. Mr. Thomas, o jected to the motion and said:

"He would call the attention the position of the two bills of table, and endeavor to show that ment is entirely unnecessary." from the Senate. By the rules numbers shall amount to le them to a representa-Representatives in Conprovide for themselves a government, and to be n whenever they shall so ot bound to wait the ache first instance, except t or agreement requiring ace this right upon the ndisputable ground, that in the jurisdiction of the tled to equal privileges; tter of high gratification ry portion, even the most our people are anxious rilege at as early a day as lear proof that the Union 1 has its foundation deep low-citizens.

on of the United States cress to admit new States is in the character of a of our citizens, inhabiting ory of the United States nitted into the Union; a constitution must first be cessary for the power of t whether Congress has be the mode by which the te constitution; and, for t Congress would be enne exercise of any coercive ect the mode they might herefore, vote against the s into the Union, on the no previous act of Conholding of her convention. ress, I will not look bethat has been presented. nime it was formed by inthat it does not fully ex-I wishes of the people of ie that the United States ery State in the Uniona ernment: meaning, in my ess shall not permit any any State, a government the people of such State; s that we remember here, y is to the State, and not the government by the ut should it be admitted ok into the constitution ascertain its character. idmitted into the Union, gress cannot object to it blican form, if it contains t all power is inherent e government drew all its overned.

e territory of Arkansas, mselves a State governd their constitution for ion, and that constitution being republican in its form, and believing that the people who prepared and sent this constitution here are sufficiently numerous to entitle them to a representative in Congress, and believing, also, that Congress has no right or power to regulate the system of police these people have established for themselves, and the ordinance of 1787 not operating on them, nor have they entered into any agreement with the United States that slavery should not be admitted in their State, have the right to choose this lot for themselves, though I regret that they made this choice. Yet, believing that this government has no right to interfere with the question of slavery in any of the States, or prescribe what shall or shall not be considered property in the different States, or by what tenure property of any kind shall be holden, but that all these are exclusively questions of State policy, I cannot, as a member of this body, refuse my vote to admit this State into the Union, because her constitution recognizes the right and existence of slavery."

Mr. Alexander Porter, of Louisiana, would vote against the admission, on account of the "revolutionary" proceedings of the people in the formation of their constitution, without a previous act of .Congress. It is believed that Mr. Clay voted upon the same ground. There were but six votes against the admission; namely: Mr. Clay, Mr. Knight of Rhode Island, Mr. Porter, Mr. Prentiss, Mr. Robbins of Rhode Island, and Mr. Swift. It is believed that Mr. Robbins and Mr. Knight voted on the same ground with Mr. Clay and Mr. Porter. So, the bill was easily passed, and the two bills went together to the House of Representatives, where they gave rise to proceedings, the interest of which still survives, and a knowledge of which, therefore, becomes necessary. The two bills were made the special order for the same day, Wednesday, the 8th of June, Congress being to adjourn on the 4th of July; and the Michigan bill having priority on the calendar, as it had first passed the Senate. Mr. Wise, of Virginia. on the announcement of the Michigan bill, from the chair, as the business before the House, moved to postpone its consideration until the ensuing Monday, in order to proceed with the Arkansas bill. Mr. Thomas, of Maryland, objected to the motion and said:

"He would call the attention of the House to the position of the two bills on the Speaker's table, and endeavor to show that this postpone-two, I may say three, questions will arise, to be decided before they can become a law, so far as this House is concerned. We must first order each of these bills to be read a third time; the next question then will be, when shall the bill be read a third time? And the last question to be decided will be, shall the bill pass? Why, then, should Southern men now make an effort to give precedence to the bill for the admission of Arkansas into the Union? If they manifest distrust, must we not expect that fears will be entertained by Northern members, that unreasonable opposition will be made to the admission of Michigan? Let us proceed harmoniously, until we find that our harmony must be interrupted. We shall lose nothing by so doing. If a majority of the House be in favor of reading a third time the Michigan bill, they will order it to be done. After that vote has been taken, we can refuse to read the bill a third time, go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, then consider the Arkansas bill, report it to the House, order it to be read a third time, and in this order proceed to read them each a third time, if a majority of the House be in favor of that proceeding. Let it not be said that Southern men may be taken by surprise, if the proceeding here respectfully recommended be adopted. If the friends of Arkansas are sufficiently numerous to carry now the motion to postpone, they can arrest at any time the action of the House on the Michigan bill, until clear undubitable indications have been given that the Missouri compromise is not to be disregarded."

These latter words of Mr. Thomas revealed the point of jealousy between some Southern and Northern members, and brought the observance of the Missouri compromise fully into view, as a question to be tried. Mr. Wise, after some remarks, modified his motion by moving to refer both bills to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, with instructions to incorporate the two bills in o one bill. Mr. Patton, of Virginia, opposed the latter motion, and gave his reasons at length against it. If his colleague would so modify his motion as to move to refer both bills to the Committee of the Whole House, without the instructions, he would vote for it. Mr. Bouldin, of Virginia, successor to Mr. Randolph, said:

"He agreed with his colleague [Mr. Patton] in a fact too plain for any to overlook, that both bills must be acted on separately, and that one must have the preference in point of time. Michigan had it at that time-he was willing it should hold it. His colleague [Mr. Patton] seemed to think that in the incipient steps in rement is entirely unnecessary. These bills are lation to this bill, it would be well enough to from the Senate. By the rules of this House, suffer Michigan to hold her present position;

would be well to require of the House (or rather of the non-slaveholding portion of the Union) to give some unequivocal guaranty to the South that no difficulty would be raised as to the reception of Arkansas in regard to negro slavery. Mr. B. was willing to go on with the bill for the admission of Michigan. He had the most implicit confidence in the House, particularly alluding to the non-slaveholding part of the Union, that no serious difficulty would be made as to the admission of Arkansas in regard to negro slavery. If there were any serious difficulties to be raised in the House to the admission of Arkansas, upon the ground of negro slavery, he wished immediate notice of it. If his confidence was misplaced, he wished to be corrected as soon and as certainly as possible. If there really was any intention in the House of putting the South under any difficulty, restraint, limit, any shackle or embarrassment on the South on account of negro slavery (some gentlemen said slavery, but he said negro slavery), he wished to know it. If there were any individuals having such feeling, he wished to know them; he wished to hear their names upon yeas and nays. If there were a majority, he should act promptly, decisively, immediately upon it, and had no doubt all the South would do the same. There might be some question as to the claim of non-slaveholding States to stop the progress of Southern habits and Southern influence Northward. As to Arkansas, there could be no question; and if seriously pressed, such claims could leave no doubt on the minds of the South as to the object of those who pressed them, or the course to be pursued by them. Such a stand being taken by the non-slaveholding States, it would make little difference whether Michigan was in or out of this Union. He said he would sit down, again assuring the House, and the gentlemen particularly from the non-slaveholding States, of his entire confidence that no such thing would be seriously attempted by any considerable numbers of this House

Mr. Lewis, of North Carolina, took decided ground in favor of giving the Arkansas bill the priority of decision; and expressed himself thus:

"He should vote for the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Wise] to lay the bill for the admission of Michigan into the Union on the table, until the bill for the admission of Arkansas should be first passed. He should do this, for the obvious reason that there were I should be recreant to the trust they have redangers, he would not say how great, which posed in me, if I suffered the bill for the admisbeset Arkansas, and which did not beset Michigan. The question of slavery could be moved testation. The extraordinary circumstances as a condition for the admission of Arkansas, and | under which I rise to address the committee it could not as a condition to the admission of impel me to brevity and succinctness; but they Michigan. I look upon the Arkansas question would afford me no justification for a passive as therefore the weaker of the two, and for that acquiescence in the admission of Arkansas into reason I would give it precedence. Besides, upon the Union, with all the sins of its constitution the def cate question which may be involved in upon its head.

but that, before the final passage of the bill, it the admission of Arkansas, we may be the weaker party in this House. For that reason, if gentlemen mean to offer no obstructions to the admission of Arkansas, let them give the assurance by helping the weaker party through with the weaker question. We of the South cannot, and will not as I pledge myself, offer any objections to the domestic institutions of Michigan with regard to slavery. Can any gentleman make the same pledge that no such proposition shall come from the North? Besides, the two bills are not now on an equal footing. The bill for the admission of Arkansas must be sent to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The bil. for the admission of Michigan need not necessarily go to that committee. It will therefore pass in perfect safety, while we shall be left to get Arkansas along, through the tedious stages of commitment, as well as we can. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Sutherland] says that these two bills will be hostages for the safety of each other. Not, sir, if you pass the stronger bill in advance of the weaker. Besides, the North want no hostages on this subject, Their institutions cannot be attacked. We of the South want a hostage, to protect us on a delicate question; and the effect of giving precedence to the Michigan bill is to deprive us of that hostage."

> Mr. Cushing, of Massachusetts, addressed the committee at length on the subject, of which only the leading passages can be given. He said:

The House has now continued in session for the space of eighteen or nineteen hours, without any interval of refreshment or rest. It is impossible to mistake the intentions of the ruling majority. I see clearly that the committee is resolved to sit out the debate on these important bills for the admission of Michigan and Arkansas into the Union. This, it is apparent, the majority have the power as well as the right to do. Whether it be just and reasonable, is another question. I shall not quarrel, however, with the avowed will of the House. It has done me the favor to hear me with patience on other occasions; and I cannot render it the unfit return of trespassing on its indulgence at this unseasonable hour, nor seek to defeat its purposes by speaking against time. But having been charged with sundry memorials from citizens of Massachusetts and New Hampshire, remonstrating against that clause in the constitution of Arkansas which relates to the subject of slavery, sion of Arkansas to pass without a word of pro-

"The constitution of Ark cated to Congress in the men of that Territory, praying t the Union, contains the follo General Assembly shall have laws for the emancipation of consent of the owners. Th power to prevent emigrants bringing with them such pers slaves by the laws of any of States.' This provision of t Arkansas is condemned by present on this occasion as wrong on general principles of as unjust to the inhabitants holding States. They object effect, a provision to render sla the new State of Arkansas. bating such a clause. The I kansas is forbidden to emancipa in its jurisdiction, even though to indemnify fully their owners to exclude slaves from being i State. I cannot, by any vote sanction a constitution of go undertakes in this way to fore the progress of civilization and o In order to do justice to the un ions of the North, without, in vading the rights, real or suppos my colleague [Mr. Adams], the whose unsleeping mind there i escapes, has moved an amendme the admission of Arkansas into that, if the amendment be adopte read as follows: 'The State of mitted into the Union upon the ex that the people of the said State s fere with the primary disposal of within the said State, nor shall on any of the lands of the Unite the said State; and nothing in th construed as an assent by Congre cle in the constitution of the sain to slavery and to the emancipatio or] to all or to any of the propositio the ordinance of the said convention of Arkansas, nor to deprive the Arkansas of the same grants, subje restrictions, which were made to Missouri.' This amendment is, ac judgment, reasonable and proper the very least that any member fr can ropose in vindication of the principles of himself and his consti "It is opposed, however, by the rom Virginia [Mr. Wise], with hi igor and ability. He alleges c verse to the motion. He inte rends of the proposed amendment ts force, effect, and purposes, in em to challenge response; or w ate, if not distinctly and promptly eave the objections which those in mpliedly convey, to be taken as co

s, we may be the weaker or that reason, if gentleructions to the admission re the assurance by helprough with the weaker 1th cannot, and will not. any objections to the f Michigan with regard gentleman make the h proposition shall come les, the two bills are not. The bill for the adst be sent to a Commitstate of the Union. The Michigan need not nenittee. It will therefore hile we shall be left to ough the tedious stages as we can. The gentle-[Mr. Sutherland] says ill be hostages for the Not, sir, if you pass the of the weaker. Besides, stages on this subject. t be attacked. We of age, to protect us on a he effect of giving prebill is to deprive us of > achusetts, addressed the n the subject, of which s can be given. He said:

continued in session for nineteen hours, without ent or rest. It is imposentions of the ruling manat the committee is repate on these important Michigan and Arkansas it is apparent, the mas well as the right to do. l reasonable, is another quarrel, however, with House. It has done me th patience on other ocender it the unfit return ulgence at this unseasondefeat its purposes by But having been chargorials from citizens of Hampshire, remonstratin the constitution of to the subject of slavery, the trust they have red the bill for the admiswithout a word of proordinary circumstances address the committee succinctness; but they stification for a passive nission of Arkansas into sins of its constitution

"The constitution of Arkansas, as communirated to Congress in the memorial of the people of that Territory, praying to be admitted into the Union, contains the following clause: 'The General Assembly shall have no power to pass laws for the emancipation of slaves without the consent of the owners. They shall have no power to prevent emigrants to this State from bringing with them such persons as are deemed slaves by the laws of any one of the United States.' This provision of the constitution of Arkansas is condemned by those whom I represent on this occasion as anti-republican, as wrong on general principles of civil polity, and as unjust to the inhabitants of the non-slaveholding States. They object to it as being, in effect, a provision to render slavery perpetual in the new State of Arkansas. I concur in reprohating such a clause. The legislature of Arkansas is forbidden to emancipate the slaves within its jurisdiction, even though it should be ready to indemnify fully their owners. It is forbidden to exclude slaves from being imported into the State. I cannot, by any vote of mine, ratify or sanction a constitution of government which undertakes in this way to foreclose in advance the progress of civilization and of liberty for ever. In order to do justice to the unchangeable opinions of the North, without, in any respect, invading the rights, real or supposed, of the South, my colleague [Mr. Adams], the vigilant eye of whose unsleeping mind there is nothing which escapes, has moved an amendment of the bill for the admission of Arkansas into the Union, so that if the amendment be adopted, the bill would read as follows: 'The State of Arkansas is admitted into the Union upon the express condition that the people of the said State shall never interfere with the primary disposal of the public lands within the said State, nor shall they levy a tax on any of the lands of the United States within the said State; and nothing in this act shall be construed as an assent by Congress [to the article in the constitution of the said State relating to slavery and to the emancipation of the slaves, or to all or to any of the propositions contained in the ordinance of the said convention of the people of Arkansas, nor to deprive the said State of Arkansas of the same grants, subject to the same restrictions, which were made to the State of Missouri.' This amendment is, according to my judgment, reasonable and proper in itself, and the very least that any member from the North and principles of himself and his constituents.

"It is opposed, however, by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Wise], with his accustomed igor and ability. He alleges considerations diverse to the motion. He interrogates the eem to challenge response; or which, at any ate, if not distinctly and promptly met, would ave the objections which those interrogatories impliedly convey, to be taken as confessed and might pervade the universe, and at another admitted by our significant silence. What may be the opinions of Martin Van Buren as to this particular bill, what his conduct formerly in reference to a similar case, is a point concerning which I can have no controversy with the gentleman from Virginia. I look only to the merits of the qusetion before the committee. There is involved in it a principle which I regard as immeasurably more important than the opinion of any individual in this nation, however high his present situation or his possible destinythe great principle of constitutional freedom. The gentleman from Virginia, who, I cheerfully admit, is always frank and honorable in his course upon this floor, has just declared that. as a Southern man, he had felt it to be his duty to come forward and take a stand in behalf of an institution of the South. That institution is slavery. In like manner, I feel it to be my duty, as a Northern man, to take a counter stand in conservation of one among the dearest of the institutions of the North. This institution is liberty. It is not to assail slavery, but to defend liberty, that I speak. It is demanded of us, Do you seek to impose restrictions on Arkansas, in violation of the compromise under which Missouri entered the Union? I might content myself with replying that the State of Massachusetts was not a party to that compromise. She never directly or indirectly assented Most of her Representatives in Congress voted against it. Those of her Representatives who, regarding that compromise in the light of an act of conciliation important to the general interests of the Union, voted for it, were disavowed and denounced at home, and were stig? matized even here by a Southern member as over-compliant towards the exactingness of the South. On the first introduction of this subject to the notice of the House, the gentleman from Virginia made a declaration, which I particularly noticed at the time, for the purpose of having the tenor of the declaration distinctly understood by the House and by the country. The gentleman gave it to be known that, if members from the North held themselves not engaged by the terms of the compromise under which Missouri entered into the Union, neither would members from the South hold themselves engaged thereby; and that, if we sought to impose restrictions affecting slave property on the one hand, they might be impelled, on the other hand, to introduce slavery into the heart of the North. I heard the suggestion with the feelings natural to one born and bred in a land of equality and freedom. I took occasion to protest, in the surprised impulse of the moment, against the idea of putting restrictions on liberty in one quarter of the Union, in retaliation of the finds of the proposed amendment in regard to attempt to limit the spread of slavery in anis force, effect, and purposes, in terms which other quarter. I held up to view the inconsistency and inconsequence of uttering the warmest eulogiums on freedom one day, of pouring out aspirations that the spirit of liberty time threatening the North with the establishment of Slavery within its borders, if a Northern member should deprecate the legal perpetuation of slavery in a proposed new State of the West. It did not fall within the rules of pertinent debate to pursue the subject at that time; and I have but a single idea to present now, in addition to what I then observed. It is not possible for me to judge whether the gentleman from Virginia, and any of his friends or fellowcitizens at the South, deliberately and soberly cherish the extraordinary purpose which his language implied. I trust it was but a hasty thought, struck out in the ardor of debate. To introduce slavery into the heart of the North? Vain idea! Invasion, pestilence, civil war, may conspire to exterminate the eight millions of free spirits who now dwell there. This, in the long lapse of ages incalculable, is possible to happen. You may raze to the earth the thronged cities, the industrious villages, the peaceful hamlets of the North. You may lay waste its fertile valleys and verdant hill-sides. You may plant its very soil with salt, and consign it to everlasting desolation. You may transform its beautiful fields into a desert as bare as the blank face of the sands of Sahara. You may reach the realization of the infernal boast with which Attila the Hun marched his barbaric hosts into Italy, demolishing whatever there is of civilization or prosperity in the happy dwellings of the North, and reducing their very substance to powder, so that a squadron of cavalry shall gallop over the site of populous cities, unimpeded as the wild steeds on the savannas of the West. All this you may do: it is within the bounds of physical possibility. But I solemnly assure every gentleman within the sound of my voice. I proclaim to the country and to the world, that, until all this be fully accomplished to the uttermost extremity of the letter, you cannot, you shall not, introduce slavery into the heart of the North.'

A point of order being raised whether the two bills were not required by a rule of the House to go before the Committee of the Whole, the Speaker, Mr. Polk, decided in the affirmative-the Arkansas bill, upon the ground of containing an appropriation for the salary of judges; and that of Michigan because it provided for judges, which involved a necessity for an appropriation. The two bills then went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Speight, of North Carolina, in the chair. Many members spoke, and much of the speaking related to the boundaries of Michigan, and especially the line between herself and the State of Ohio-to which no surviving interest attaches. The debate, therefore, will only be pursued as it presents points of present and future interest. These may be assumed under three heads: 1. The formation of constitutions without the previous assent of Congress: and this was applicable to both States. 2. The right of aliens to vote before naturalization. 3. The right of Arkansas to be admitted with slavery by virtue of the rights of a State,—by virtue of the third article of the treaty which ceded Louisiana to the United States—and by virtue of the Missouri compromise. On these points, Mr. Hamer, of Ohio, spoke thus:

"One of the principal objections urged against their admission at this time is, that their proceedings have been lawless and revolutionary; and that, for the example's sake, if for no other reason, we should reject their application, and force them to go back and do all their work over again. I cannot assent to this proposition Two ways are open to every territory that desires to emerge from its dependent condition and become a State. It may either petition Congress for leave to form a State constitution, and when that permission is given, proceed to form it, and present the new State constitution for our approbation; or they may meet, in the first instance, form the constitution, and offer it for our approval. There is no impropriety in either mode. It is optional with Congress, at last, to admit the State or not, as may be thoughterpedient. If they wish to admit her, they can do it by two acts of Congress; one to authorize the formation of a constitution, and the other to approve of it when made; or by one act allowing the prayer of the petitioners to become a State, and approving of their constitution at the same time. This latter course is the one adopted in the present case. There is nothing disrespectful in it. Indeed, there is much to justify the Territory in its proceeding. Year after year they petitioned for leave to forms constitution, and it was refused, or their application was treated with neglect. Wearied with repeated instances of this treatment, they have formed a constitution, brought it to us, and asked us to sanction it, and admit them into the Union. We have the authority to do this; and if their constitution is republican, we ought m do it. There is no weight in this objection, and I will dismiss it without further remark. As other objection is, that aliens have aided in make ing this constitution, and are allowed the right of suffrage in all elections by the provisions contains. As to the first point, it is sufficient to say that all the new States northwest of the Ohio formed their constitutions precisely in the same way. The ordinance of 1787 does not me quire sixty thousand citizens of the Unite States to be resident within the limits of and State, in order to authorize a constitution at admission into the Union. It requires the number of 'free inhabitants;' and the who resides there, if he be a 'free inhabitant is entitled to vote in the e to the convention; and after whether the people will acc formed by their convention the construction and practice north of the Ohio; and as th that there are but a few hu Michigan, it would be hard constitution, because some of participated in its formation. just to do so, if we had the po no authority to do it; for if dinance as of any validity, it habitants' to vote in framing ments which are to be created of its influence. We will not maining point in this objection that it has no more force in it "The constitution allows all v over twenty-one years of age, l months in Michigan, to vote and every white male inhabita State at the time of signing t allowed the same privilege. undoubtedly confer on aliens frage; and it is contended that tion of the constitution of the That instrument declares that ' be admitted by the Congress in that 'the United States shall gu State in this Union a republican ment;' and that 'the citizens shall be entitled to all privileges of citizens in the several States. of 1787 provides that the constitu ed northwest of the Ohio 'shall "It is an error not very uncom that the right of suffrage is insep ted with the privilege of citizen investigation of the subject will s not so. The privileges are t A State cannot make an Americ inder the constitution of the hall be entitled to the rights hroughout the Union. The pov he federal government. We p uralization laws, by which alie formed into citizens. We do so a funtion of the United States, you his authority. But, on the other control over the right of suffr rent States. That belongs e tate legislation and State authori almost all the States; and yet osed that Congress could interfe erules adopted by the people in one, I presume. Why then at olithere? Other States have me provisions. Look at the Obio and other new States, and at they require residence only, a aship, to enable a man to vote. confer this right upon all per limits. It gives them no rights its of the State. It cannot mak ler three heads: 1. The ions without the previous and this was applicable to right of aliens to vote be-3. The right of Arkansas slavery by virtue of the virtue of the third article ceded Louisiana to the by virtue of the Missouriese points, Mr. Hamer, of

oal objections urged against is time is, that their prowless and revolutionary; mple's sake, if for no other eject their application, and ck and do all their work t assent to this proposition. to every territory that dem its dependent condition It may either petition Conm a State constitution, and on is given, proceed to form new State constitution for they may meet, in the first constitution, and offer it for s is no impropriety in either Il with Congress, at last, to iot, as may be thoughtens to admit her, they can do Congress; one to authorize constitution, and the other en made; or by one act alof the petitioners to become ing of their constitution at his latter course is the one sent case. There is nothing Indeed, there is much to

Indeed, there is much by ry in its proceeding. For titioned for leave to forms was refused, or their application, brought it to us and nit, and admit them into the authority to do this; and a is republican, we ought to weight in this objection, and ithout further remark. In that aliens have aided in maken, and are allowed the rist point, it is sufficiently be first point, it is sufficiently be sufficiently in the reduced of the constitutions precisely in the reduced of the constitutions of the Constitutions of the Union. It requires the inhabitants; and the air free inhabitants.

is entitled to vote in the election of delegates to the convention; and afterwards in deciding whether the people will accept the constitution formed by their convention. Such has been the construction and practice in all the country north of the Ohio; and as the last census shows that there are but a few hundreds of aliens in Michigan, it would be hard to set aside their constitution, because some of these may have participated in its formation. It would be unjust to do so, if we had the power; but we have no authority to do it; for if we regard the ordinance as of any validity, it allows all 'free inhabitants' to vote in framing the State governments which are to be created within the sphere of its influence. We will now turn to the remaining point in this objection, and we shall see that it has no more force in it than the other.

"The constitution allows all white male citizens over twenty-one years of age, having resided six months in Michigan, to vote at all elections; and every white male inhabitant residing in the State at the time of signing the constitution is allowed the same privilege. These provisions undoubtedly confer on aliens the right of suffrage; and it is contended that they are in violation of the constitution of the United States. That instrument declares that 'new States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union ; that 'the United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government;' and that 'the citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States.' The ordinance of 1787 provides that the constitution to be formed northwest of the Ohio 'shall be republican.

"It is an error not very uncommon to suppose that the right of suffrage is inseparably connected with the privilege of citizenship. A slight investigation of the subject will prove that this not so. The privileges are totally distinct. A State cannot make an American citizen who, ander the constitution of the United States hall be entitled to the rights of citizenship froughout the Union. The power belongs to the federal government. We pass all the naralization laws, by which aliens are transformed into citizens. We do so under the constitution of the United States, conceding to us his authority. But, on the other hand, we have control over the right of suffrage in the different States. That belongs exclusively to tate legislation and State authority. It varies almost all the States; and yet who ever supsed that Congress could interfere to change a rules adopted by the people in regard to it? one, I presume. Why then attempt to consolit here? Other States have adopted the me provisions. Look at the constitutions (blio and other new States, and you will find at they require residence only, and not citizelin, to enable a man to vote. Each State a confer this right upon all persons within plimits. It gives them no rights beyond the its of the State. It cannot make them citizen who, as the right of suffrage in the different States have adopted the me provisions. Look at the constitutions (blio and other new States, and you will find at they require residence only, and not citizenship, to enable a man to vote. Each State and the right upon all persons within plimits. It gives them no rights beyond the its of the State. It cannot make them citizen who, as a provision of the law, will at the proper of the law, will be as perpetual as the proper of the law and meet invasionally and the prosperite only of the reach of that the whose who are strife, and disquieted by tunus by this just, humane, and ben shall consolidate our liberties government what Mr. Jefferson or one, if the law, will are the call. Its provisions will zens, for that would violate the naturalization laws; or, rather, it would render them nugatory It cannot give them a right to vote in any other State, for that would infringe upon the authority of such State to regulate its own affairs. It simply confers the right of aiding in the choice of public officers whilst the alien remains in the State; it does not make him a citizen; nor is it of the slightest advantage to him beyond the boundaries of Michigan."

Mr. Hamer concluded his remarks with a feeling allusion to the distractions which had prevailed during the Missouri controversy, a congratulation upon their disappearance under the Missouri compromise, and an earnest exhortation to harmony and the preservation of good feeling in the speedy admission of the two States; and said:

"We can put an end to a most distracting contest, that has agitated our country from Maine to Georgia, and from the Atlantic to the most remote settlement upon the frontier. There was a time when the most painful anxiety pervaded the whole nation; and whilst each one waited with feverish impatience for further intelligence from the disputed territory, he trembled lest the ensuing mail should bear the disastrous tidings of a civil strife in which brother had fallen by the hand of brother, and the soil of freedom had been stained by the blood of her own sons. But the storm has passed. The usual good fortune of the American people has prevailed. The land heaves in view, and a haven, with its wide-spread arms, invites us to enter. After so long an exposure to the fury of a tempest that was apparently gathering in our political horizon, let us seize the first opportunity to steer the ship into a safe harbor, far beyond the reach of that elemental war that threatened her security in the open sea. Let us pass this bill. It does justice to all. It conciliates all. Its provisions will carry peace and harmony to those who are now agitated by strife, and disquieted by tumults and disorders. By this just, humane, and beneficent policy, we shall consolidate our liberties, and make this government what Mr. Jefferson, more than thirty years ago, declared it to be, 'the strongest government on earth; the only one where every man, at the call of the law, will fly to the standard of the law, and meet invasions of the public order as his own personal concern.' With this policy on the part of the government, and the spirit of patriotism that now animates our citizens in full vigor, united America may bid defiance to a world in arms; and should Providence continue to smile upon our country, we may confidently anticipate that the freedom, the happiness, and the prosperity, which we now enjoy, will be as perpetual as the lofty mountains that crown our continent, or the noble

Mr. Adams commenced a speech in Committee of the Whole, which was finished in the House, and being prepared for publication by himself, and therefore free from error, is here given-all the main parts of it-to show his real position on the slavery question, so much misunderstood at the time on account of his tenacious adherence to the right of petition. He said:

"I cannot, consistently with my sense of my obligations as a citizen of the United States. and bound by oath to support their constitution, I cannot object to the admission of Arkansas into the Union as a slave State; I cannot propose or agree to make it a condition of her admission, that a convention of her people shall expunge this article from her constitution. She is entitled to admission as a slave State, as Louisiana and Mississippi, and Alabama, and Missouri, have been admitted, by virtue of that article in the treaty for the acquisition of Louisiana, which secures to the inhabitants of the ceded territories all the rights, privileges, and immunities, of the original citizens of the United States; and stipulates for their admission, conformably to that principle, into the Union. Louisiana was purchased as a country wherein slavery was the established law of the land. As Congress have not power in time of peace to abolish slavery in the original States of the Union, they are equally destitute of the power in those parts of the territory ceded by France to the United States by the name of Louisiana, where slavery existed at the time of the acquisition. Slavery is in this Union the subject of internal legislation in the States, and in peace is cognizable by Congress only, as it is tacitly tolerated and protected where it exists by the constitution of the United States, and as it mingles in their intercourse with other nations. Arkansas, therefore, comes, and has the right to come into the Union with her slaves and her slave laws. It is written in the bond, and, however I may lament that it ever was so written, I must faithfully perform its obligations. I am content to receive her as one of the slaveholding States of this Union; but I am unwilling that Congress, in accepting her constitution, should even lie under the imputation of assenting to an article in the constitution of a State which withholds from its legislature the power of giving freedom to the slave. Upon this topic I will not enlarge. Were I disposed so to do. twenty hours of continuous session have too much exhausted my own physical strength, and the faculties as well as the indulgence of those who might incline to hear me, for me to trespass longer upon their patience. When the bill shall be reported to the House, I may, perhaps, again ask to be heard, upon renewing there, as I intend, the motion for this amendment.'

the whole night, the committee rose and reported the two bills to the House. Of the arduousness of this session, which began at ten in the morning of Thursday, and was continued until eleven o'clock the next morning, Mr. Adams, who remained at his post the whole time, gave this account in a subsequent notice of the sitting.

"On Thursday, the 9th of June, the House went into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon two bills; one to fix the Northern boundary of the State of Ohio, and for the conditional admission of the State of Michigan into the Union; and the other for the admission of the State of Arkansas into the Union The bill for fixing the Northern boundary of the State of Ohio, and the conditional admission of Michigan into the Union, was first taken up for consideration, and gave rise to debates which continued till near one o'clock of the morning of Friday, the 10th of June: repeated motions to adjourn had been made and rejected. The committee had twice found itself without quorum, and had been thereby compelled to rise and report the fact to the House. In the first instance there had been found within private calling distance a sufficient number of members who, though absent from their duty of attendance upon the House, were upon the alert to appear and answer to their names to make a quorum to vote against adjourning, and then to retire again to their amusement or repose. Upon the first restoration of the quorum by operation, the delegate from Arkansas said that if the committee would only take up and read the bill, he would not urge any discussion upon it then, and would consent to the committee's rising, and resuming the subject at the next sta ting of the House. The bill was according read; a motion was then made for the commi tee to rise, and rejected; an amendment to the bill was moved, on taking the question upon which there was no quorum. The usual espedient of private call to straggling members was found ineffectual. A call of the House was or dered, at one o'clock in the morning. This operation, to be carried through all its stars must necessarily consume about three hours time, during which the House can do no other business. Upon this call, after the names of a the members had been twice called over and the absentees for whom any valid or plauside excuse was offered had been excused, there mained eighty-one names of members, who h the rules of the House, were to be taken in custody as they should appear, or were to sent for, and taken into custody wherever the might be found, by special messengers appoint for that purpose. At this hour of the night city of Washington was ransacked by the special messengers, and the members of House were summoned from their beds to After a session of twenty-five hours, including before the House, to answer for their about

After hearing the excuses of bers, and the acknowledged a third, they were all excused payment of fees; which fees two or three hundred dolla become a charge upon the pe with their money. By this four and five o'clock of the quorum of the House was obt any vote of the House, the chair, which was resumed by the Committee of the Whole

Mr. Adams resumed his se addressed the committee, par to Mr. Cushing. Confusion, became great in the Hall. spoke; and cries of "order," were frequent. Personal refle an affair of honor followed bet em members, happily adjusted shed. The chairman, Mr. SI exertions, had procured attent of Massachusetts. Afterwards addressed the committee. Mr of him whether in his own opini ment should be adopted, the Sta would, by this bill, be admitted answered-" Certainly, sir. Th amendment the shadow of a rest upon the State. It leaves the S rest, to regulate the subject of herself by her own laws." The Adams was rejected, only thirty voting for it; being not one thi bers from the non-slaveholding S The wote was taken on the Mic nd was ordered to a third readin 153 to 45. The nays were:

Messrs. John Quincy Adams, eremiah Bailey, John Bell. Geor William B. Calhoun, George Ch hambers, Timothy Childs, W orace Everett, William J. Gi rennell, jr., John K. Griffin, ideon Hard, Benjamin Hardin, J bner Hazeltine, Samuel Hoar, J. ersoll, Daniel Jenifer, Abbott La ncoln, Thomas C. Love, Samson an McCarty, Thomas M. T. harles F. Mercer, John J. Milli orris, James Parker, James A. en C. Phillips, David Potts, jr., ohn Robertson, David Russell, W ohn N. Steele, John Taliaferro nderwood, Lewis Williams, Sherr enry A. Wise.

It is remarkable that this list of committee rose and reported House. Of the arduousness began at ten in the mornwas continued until eleven orning, Mr. Adams, who rethe whole time, gave this ent notice of the sitting:

ie 9th of June, the House e of the Whole on the state two bills; one to fix the of the State of Ohio, and for ssion of the State of Michiand the other for the adof Arkansas into the Union the Northern boundary of ad the conditional admission e Union, was first taken up d gave rise to debates which one o'clock of the morning of June : repeated motions n made and rejected. The ce found itself without en thereby compelled to rise to the House. In the first been found within private fficient number of members from their duty of attendise, were upon the alert to to their names to make a inst adjourning, and then to amusement or repose. Upon of the quorum by ate from Arkansas said that ould only take up and read not urge any discussion upon consent to the committee g the subject at the next st-The bill was accordingly s then made for the commit ected; an amendment to the 1 taking the question upon 10 quorum. The usual erall to straggling members was A call of the House was orock in the morning. This rried through all its stage. onsume about three hours of the House can do no other ais call, after the names of a een twice called over, and whom any valid or plausible had been excused, there mames of members, who, louse, were to be taken in rould appear, or were to into custody wherever the special messengers appoint At this hour of the night on was ransacked by the s, and the members of noned from their beds w

y of these special messeng

to answer for their about

After hearing the excuses of two of these members, and the acknowledged no good reason of a third, they were all excused in a mass, without payment of fees; which fees, to the amount of two or three hundred dollars, have of course become a charge upon the people, and to be paid with their money. By this operation, between four and five o'clock of the morning, a small quorum of the House was obtained, and, without any vote of the House, the speaker left the chair, which was resumed by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Adams resumed his seat, and Mr. Wise addressed the committee, particularly in reply to Mr. Cushing. Confusion, noise and disorder became great in the Hall. Several members spoke; and cries of "order," and "question" were frequent. Personal reflections passed, and an affair of honor followed between two Southern members, happily adjusted without bloodshed. The chairman, Mr. Speight, by great exertions, had procured attention to Mr. Hoar, of Massachusetts. Afterwards Mr. Adams again addressed the committee. Mr. Wise inquired of him whether in his own opinion, if his amendment should be adopted, the State of Arkansas would, by this bill, be admitted? Mr. Adams answered—"Certainly, sir. There is not in my amendment the shadow of a restriction proposed upon the State. It leaves the State, like all the rest, to regulate the subject of slavery within herself by her own laws." The motion of Mr. Adams was rejected, only thirty-two members voting for it; being not one third of the members from the non-slaveholding States.

The wote was taken on the Michigan bill first nd was ordered to a third reading by a vote of 153 to 45. The nays were:

Messrs. John Quincy Adams, Heman Allen, eremiah Bailey, John Bell. George N. Briggs, Villiam B. Calhoun, George Chambers, John hambers, Timothy Childs, William Clark, horace Everett, William J. Graves, George rennell, jr., John K. Griffin, Hiland Hall. ideon Hard, Benjamin Hardin, James Harper, bner Hazeltine, Samuel Hoar, Joseph R. In-rsoll, Daniel Jenifer, Abbott Lawrence, Levi incoln Thomas C. Love, Samson Mason, Jonaan McCarty, Thomas M. T. McKennan, harles F. Mercer, John J. Milligan, Mathias oris, James Parker, James A. Pearce, Steben C. Phillips, David Potts, jr., John Reed, ohn Robertson, David Russell, William Slade, ohn N. Steele, John Taliaferro, Joseph R. nderwood, Lewis Williams, Sherrod Williams, enry A. Wise.

with Mr. Adams, and ends with Mr. Wise—a proof that all the negative votes, were not given upon the same reasons.

The vote was immediately after taken on ordering to a third reading the bill for the admission of the State of Arkansas; which was so ordered by a vote of 143 to 50. The nays were:

"Messrs. John Quincy Adams, Heman Allen, Joseph B. Anthony, Jeremiah Bailey, William K. Bond, Nathaniel B. Borden, George N. Briggs, William B. Calhoun, Timothy Childs, William Clark, Joseph H. Crane, Caleb Cushing, Edward Darlington, Harmer Denny, George Evans, Horace Everett, Philò C. Fuller, George Grennell, jr., Hiland Hall, Gideon Hard, James Harper, Abner Hazeltine, Joseph Henderson, William Hiester, Samuel Hoar, William Jackson, Henry F. Janes, Benjamin Jones, John Laporte, Abbott Lawrence, George W. Lay, Levi Lincoln, Thomas C. Love, Samson Mason, Jonathan McCarthy, Thomas M. T. McKennan, Mathias Morris, James Parker, Dutee J. Pearce, Stephen C. Phillips, David Potts, jr., John Reed, David Russell, William N. Shinn, William Slade, John Thomson, Joseph R. Underwood, Samuel F. Vinton, Elisha Whittlesey, Lewis Williams."

Here again the beginning and the ending of the list of voters is remarkable, beginning again with Mr. Adams, and terminating with Mr. Lewis Williams, of North Carolina—two gentlemen wide apart in their political courses, and certainly voting on this occasion on different principles.

From the meagreness of these negative votes, it is evident that the struggle was, not to pass the two bills, but to bring them to a vote. This was the secret of the arduous session of twentyfive hours in the House. Besides the public objections which clogged their admissionboundaries in one, slavery in the other, alien voting, and (what was deemed by some), revolutionary conduct in both in holding conventions without authority of Congress; besides these publie reasons, there was another cause operating silently, and which went more to the postponement than to the rejection of the States. This cause was political and partisar, and grew out of the impending presidential election, to be held before Congress should meet again. Mr. Van Buren was the democratic candidate; General William Heary Harrison was the candidate of the opposition; and Mr. Hugh L. White, of Tennessee, was brought forward by a fraction which divided from the democratic party. The It is remarkable that this list of nays begins new States, it was known, would vote, if now admitted, for Mr. Van Buren; and this furnished a reason to the friends of the other candidates (even those friendly to eventual admission, and on which some of them were believed to act), to wish to stave off the admission to the ensuing session.—The actual negative vote to the admission of each State, was not only small, but nearly the same in number, and mixed both as to political parties and sectional localities; so as to exclude the idea of any regular or considerable opposition to Arkansas as a slave State. The vote which would come nearest to referring itself to that cause was the one on Mr. Adams' proposed amendment to the State constitution; and there the whole vote amounted only to 32; and of the sentiments of the greater part of these, including Mr. Adams himself, the speech of that gentleman must be considered the authentic exponent; and will refer their opposition, not to any objection to the admission of the State as slave-holding but to an unwillingness to appear upon the record as assenting to a constitution which forbid emancipation, and made slavery perpetual. The number actually voting to reject the State, and keep her out of the Union, because she admitted slavery, must have been quite small-not more in proportion, probably, than what it was in the Senate.

CHAPTER CXXXIX.

ATTEMPTED INQUIRY INTO THE MILITARY ACADEMY.

This institution, soon after its organization under the act of 1812, began to attract public attention, as an establishment unfriendly to the rights of the people, of questionable constitutionality, as being for the benefit of the rich and influential; and as costing an enormous sum for each officer obtained from it for actual service. Movements against it were soon commenced in Congress, and for some years perseveringly continued, principally under the lead of Mr. Newton Cannon, and Mr. John Cooke, representatives from the State of Tennessee. Their speeches and statements made considerable impression upon the public mind, but very little upon Congress, where no amelioration of any kind could be obtained, either in the organization of the institution, or in the practical administration which had grown up under it. In the session of 1834-'35 these efforts were renewed, chiefly induced by Mr. Albert Gallatin Hawes, representative from Kentucky, who moved for, and attained the appointment of a committee of twenty-four, one from each State; which made a report, for which no consideration could be procured—not even the printing of the report. Baffled in their attempts to get at their objectin the usual forms of legislation, the members opposed to the institution resorted to the extraordinary mode of attacking its existence in an appropriation bill: that is to say, resisting appropriations for its support-a mode of proceeding entirely hopeless of success, but justifiable, as ther believed, under the circumstances; and at all events as giving them an opportunity to get their objections before the public.

It was at the session of 1835-'36, that this form of opposition took its most determined course; and some brief notices of what was said then may still be of service in awakening a spirit of inquiry in the country, and promoting investigations which have so long been requested and denied. But it was not until after another attempt had failed to do any thing through a committee at this session also, that the ultimate resource of an attack upon the appropriation for the support of the institution was resorted to Early in the session Mr. Hawes offered this resolution: "That a select committee of nine be appointed to inquire into what amendments, if any, are expedient to be made to the laws relating to the military Academy at West Point in the State of New-York; and also into the erpediency of modifying the organization of said institution; and also whether it would not comport with the public interest to abolish the same: with power in the committee to report by bill or otherwise." Mr. Hawes, in support of his motion reminded the House of the sp pointment of the committee of the last sessing of its report, and his inability to obtain actia upon it, or to procure an order for its printing The resolution which he now submitted variety but in one particular from that which he had offered the year before, and that was in them duced number of the committee asked in Twenty-four was a larger number than coll be induced to enter into any extended or patient investigation; and he now proposed a commi

tee of nine only. His resolution of inquiry, to obtain a report mation of the people, and th House-a species of resolution as a matter of course; and he he be no objection to his motion. of New-York, objected to the a select committee, and though ought to go to the standing con tary affairs. Mr. F. O. J. St wished to hear some reason as motion. It seemed to him tha mittee ought to be raised; but i the institution were fearful of a tee and would assign that fear preferring the standing commit withdraw his objection. Mr. Br chusetts, believed the subject w ferred to the military committee reference to that committee of a in the President's message to t and so believing, he made it a poi the Speaker to decide, whether Mr. Hawes could be entertained. Mr. Polk, said that the motion v quiry; and he considered the ret President's message as not applyin Mr. Briggs adhered to his belief th ought to go to a standing committ mittee had made an elaborate repo session, which was now on the files of and if gentlemen wished informa they could order it to be printed Reynoids, of Illinois, said it was that members of this House, frien stitution, were so strenuous in the to investigation. If it was an institu on a proper basis, and conducted on republican principles, they had no from investigation; if otherwise the and the great dread of investigation comething wrong. His constituent satisfied with this Academy, and ex to represent them fairly in doing his orm, or to abolish it; and he sho ppoint them. The member from Ma Ir. Briggs, he said, had endeavor his inquiry, by making it a point of ecided by the Speaker; which aug or the integrity of the institution that attempt to stifle inquiry, he he member from New-York, Mr.

administration In the session renewed, chiefly Hawes, repremoved for, and committee of e: which made ration could be g of the report. at their object in members opposne extraordinary in an appropriag appropriations ceeding entirely ifiable, as they ices; and at all portunity to get

35-'36, that this nost determined of what was said wakening a spirit promoting invesbeen requested ntil after another thing through a that the ultimate appropriation for was resorted to es offered this remittee of nine be at amendments, if e to the laws rev at West Point, d also into the exganization of said it would not comst to abolish the nmittee to report Hawes, in support House of the sp f the last session, v to obtain action r for its printing submitted varied hat which he had hat was in the re mittee asked for umber than could xtended or patient roposed a commi tee of nine only. His resolution was only one of inquiry, to obtain a report for the information of the people, and the action of the House—a species of resolution usually granted as a matter of course; and he hoped there would be no objection to his motion. Mr. Wardwell. of New-York, objected to the appointment of a select committee, and thought the inquiry anght to go to the standing committee on military affairs. Mr. F. O. J. Smith, of Maine. wished to hear some reason assigned for this motion. It seemed to him that a special committee ought to be raised; but if the friends of the institution were fearful of a select committee, and would assign that fear as a motive for preferring the standing committee, he would withdraw his objection. Mr. Briggs, of Massachusetts, believed the subject was already referred to the military committee in the general reference to that committee of all that related in the President's message to this Academy; and so believing, he made it a point of order for the Speaker to decide, whether the motion of Mr. Hawes could be entertained. The Speaker. Mr. Polk, said that the motion was one of inouiry: and he considered the reference of the President's message as not applying to the case. Mr. Briggs adhered to his belief that the subject ought to go to a standing committee. The committee had made an elaborate report at the last session, which was now on the files of the House: and if gentlemen wished information from it. they could order it to be printed. Mr. John Revnoids of Illinois said it was astonishing that members of this House, friends of this institution, were so strenuous in their opposition to investigation. If it was an institution founded on a proper basis, and conducted on proper and republican principles, they had nothing to fear from investigation; if otherwise the people had: and the great dread of investigation portended omething wrong. His constituents were dissatisfied with this Academy, and expected him to represent them fairly in doing his part to reorm, or to abolish it; and he should not disppoint them. The member from Massachusetts. Ir. Briggs, he said, had endeavored to stifle his inquiry, by making it a point of order to be ecided by the Speaker; which augured badly or the integrity of the institution. Failing that attempt to stifle inquiry, he had joined he member from New-York, Mr. Wardwell, in the attempt to send it to a committee where no inquiry would be made and in violation of parliamentary practice. He, Mr. Reynolds, had great respect for the members of the military committee; but some of them, and perhaps all, had expressed an opinion in favor of the institution. Neither the chairman, nor any member of the committee had asked for this inquiry: it was the law of parliament, and also of reason and common sense, that all inquiries should go to committees disposed to make them; and it was without precedent or justification, and injurious to the fair conducting of business, to take an inquiry out of the hands of a member that moves it, and is responsible for its adequate prosecution, and refer it to a committee that is against it, or indifferent to it. When a member gets up, and moves an inquiry touching any branch of the public service, or the official conduct of any officer, he incurs a responsibility to the moral sense of the House and of the country. He assumes that there is something wrong—that he can find it out if he has a chance; and he is entitled to a chance, both for his own sake and the country; and not only to have his committee, but to be its chairman, and to have a majority of the members favorable to its object. If it were otherwise members would have but poor encouragement to move inquiries for the public service. Cut off himself from the performance of his work, an indifferent or prejudiced committee may neglect inquiry, or pervert it into defence; and subject the mover to the imputation of preferring false and frivolous motions; and so discredit him, while injuring the public, and sheltering abuse. Under a just report he believed the Academy would wither and die. Under its present organization it is a monopoly for the gratuitous education of the sons and connections of the rich and influential-to be afterwards preferred for army appointments, or even for civil appointments; and to be always provided for as the children of the government, getting not only gratuitous education, but a preference in appointments. A private soldier, though a young David, slaying Goliath, could get no appointment in our army. He must stand back for a West-Pointer, even the most inefficient, who through favor, or driving. had gone through his course and got his diploma. Promotion was the stimulus and the reward to merit. We, members of Congress, rise the performance of any duty here which he feat from the ranks of the people when we come here, and have to depend upon merit to get here. Why not let the same rule apply in the army, and give a chance to merit there, instead of giving all the offices to those who may have no turn for war, who only want support, and get it by public patronage, and favor, because they have official friends or parents? The report made at the last session looks bad for the Academy. Let any one read it, and he will feel that there is something wrong. If the friends of the institution would suffer that report to be printed, and let it go to the people, it would be a great satisfaction. Mr. Wardwell said the last Congress had refused to print the report; and asked why it was that these complaints against the Academy came from the West? Was it because the Western engineers wanted the employment on the roads and bridges in place of the regular officers. Mr. Hannegan, of Indiana, said he was a member of the military committee which made the report at the last session, and which Mr. Wardwell had reminded them the House refused to order to be printed. And why that refusal? Because the friends of the Academy took post behind the two-thirds rule; and the order for printing could not be obtained because two-thirds of the House could not be got to suspend the rule, even for one hour, and that the morning hour. The friends of the Academy rallied, he said, to prevent the suspension of the rule, and to prevent publicity to the report. Mr. Hamer, of Ohio, said, why oppose this inquiry? The people desire it. A large portion of them believed the Academy to be an aristocratical institution, which ought to be abolished; others believe it to be republican, and that it ought to be cherished. Then why not inquire, and find out which is right, and legislate accordingly? Mr. Abijah Mann, of New-York, said there was a considerable interest in the States surrounding this institution, and he had seen a strong disposition in the members coming from those States to defend it against all charges. He was a member of the committee of twenty-four at the last session, and concurred partially in the report which was made, which was, to say the least of it, an elaborate examination of the institution from its foundation. He knew that in doing so he had incurred some censure from a part of his own State; but he never had flinched, and never would flinch, from it incumbent upon him to discharge. He had found much to censure, and believed if the friends of the institution would take the trouble to investigate it as the committee of twenty-four had done, they would find more to censure in the principle of the establishment than they were aware of. There were abuses in this institution, developed in that report, of a character that would not find, he presumed, a single advocate upon that floor when they came to be published. He believed the principle of the institution was utterly inconsistent with the principle of all other institutions; but he was not for exterminating it. Reformation was his object. It was the only avenue by which the people of the country could approach the offices of the army-the only gateway by which they could be reached. The principle was wrong and the practice bad. We saw individuals continually pressing the government for admission into this institution, to be educated professedly for the military service, but very frequently, and too generally with the secret design in their hearts to devote themselves to the civil pursuits of society; and this was a fraud upon the government, and a poor way for the future officer to begin his educational life. When the report of the twenty-four came to be printed, as he hoped it would, it would be seen that this institution cost the government by far too much for the education of these young men. Whether it sprung from abuse or not, such was the fact when they looked at utility connected with the expenditure If he recollected the report aright it proved that not more than two out of five who entered the institution remained there long enough to graduate; and not two more out of five graduates who entered the army. If his memory served him right the report would show that every graduate coming from that institution in thelast ten years, had cost the United States more than five thousand dollars; and previously a must larger sum; and he believed within one yest the graduates had cost upwards of thirty those sand dollars. If there be any truth in the statements the institution must be mismanaged or misconducted, and ought to be thoroughly investigated and reformed. And he appears to the friends of the Academy to withdraw the opposition, and suffer the report to be printed and the select committee to be raised; but appealed in vain. The opposit and the two-thirds rule again effectually used to balk the fr It was after this second failu subject regularly through a c published report, that the fri resorted to the last alternative tack upon the appropriation. for this was not presented until the session, when Mr. Franklin Hampshire, delivered a well-cons reasoned speech against the instit on facts, and sustained by con highest degree condemnatory of and which will be given in the n

CHAPTER CX

MILITARY ACADEMY-SPEECH OF

Mr. Chairman;—An attempt wa the last Congress to bring the sub organization of the Military Acade country, through a report of a con same thing has been done during session, again and again, but all proved alike unsuccessful! Still cease to call for appropriations; yo people's money for the support of tion, while you refuse them the lig to enable them to judge of the your annual requisitions. Whether proposed to be appropriated, by tl your table, is too great or too small ufficient to cover the current exp institution, is a matter into which I resent inquire; but I shall feel bou the bill in every stage of its progress tote a single dollar until the resolu ury, presented by my friend from Mr. Hawes), at an early day in hall be first taken up and disposed ware, sir, that it will be said, because, eard the same declaration on a fo on, that this is not the proper time he merits of the institution; that tl take provision for expenses alread part; and whatever opinions maj ed upon the necessity of a reor he appropriation must be made. I men who are opposed to the princi stitution, and to those who believe t ist, which ought to be exposed and at now is their only time, and thi portunity, during the present sess. n their object, and I trust they wil ist the bill until its friends shall fine Vol. I.-41 appealed in vain. The opposition was kept up. and the two-thirds rule again resorted to, and effectually used to balk the friends of inquiry. It was after this second failure to get at the subject regularly through a committee and a published report, that the friends of inquiry resorted to the last alternative—that of an attack upon the appropriation. The opportunity for this was not presented until near the end of the session, when Mr. Franklin Pierce, of New Hampshire, delivered a well-considered and wellreasoned speech against the institution, bottomed on facts, and sustained by conclusions, in the highest degree condemnatory of the Academy; and which will be given in the next chapter.

which he feat

harge. He had believed if the

ake the trouble

of twenty-four

to censure in

nent than they

ruses in this in-

rt, of a character

ned, a single ad-

hey came to be

nciple of the in-

at with the prin-

but he was not

tion was his ob-

, by which the

roach the offices

y by which they

iple was wrong

individuals con-

ent for admission

cated professedly

y frequently, and

design in their

the civil pursuits

id upon the gov-

e future officer to

hen the report of

nted, as he hoped

t this institution

oo much for the

Whether it sprung

ne fact when they

h the expenditure

ght it proved that

e who entered the

r enough to grade

of five graduates

is memory served

show that every

titution in the last

I States more than previously a much

within one yest

ds of thirty those ny truth in the st be mismanage

to be thorough

And he appeals

to withdraw the

ort to be printed

CHAPTER CXL.

MILITARY ACADEMY-SPEECH OF MR. PIERCE.

"Mr. Chairman:—An attempt was made during the last Congress to bring the subject of the reorganization of the Military Academy before the country, through a report of a committee. The same thing has been done during the present session, again and again, but all efforts have proved alike unsuccessful! Still, you do not case to call for appropriations; you require the people's money for the support of the institution, while you refuse them the light necessary to enable them to judge of the propriety of your annual requisitions. Whether the amount proposed to be appropriated, by the bill upon your table, is too great for too small, or precisely sufficient to cover the current expenses of the institution, is a matter into which I will not at resent inquire; but I shall feel bound to oppose the bill in every stage of its progress. I cannot rote a single dollar until the resolution of iniry, presented by my friend from Kentucky Mr. Hawes), at an early day in the session, hall be first taken up and disposed of. I am ware, sir, that it will be said, because I have eard the same declaration on a former occaon, that this is not the proper time to discuss he merits of the institution; that the bill is to take provision for expenses already incurred part; and whatever opinions may be entered upon the necessity of a reorganization, he appropriation must be made. I say to genmen who are opposed to the principles of the stitution, and to those who believe that abuses ist, which ought to be exposed and corrected, at now is their only time, and this the only ortunity, during the present session, to atin their object, and I trust they will steadily be raised; but st the bill until its friends shall find it neces- dreaded levelling principle.

sary to take up the resolution of inquiry, and give it its proper reference.

"Sir, why has this investigation been resisted? Is it not an institution which has already cost this country more than three millions of dollars, for which you propose, in this very bill, an appropriation of more than one hundred and thirty thousand dollars, and which, at the same time, in the estimation of a large portion of the citizens of this Union, has failed, eminently failed, to fulfil the objects for which it was established, of sufficient interest and importance to claim the consideration of a committee of this House, and of the House itself? I should have expected the resolution of the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. Hawes), merely proposing an inquiry, to pass without opposition, had I not witnessed the strong sensation, nay, excitement, that was produced here, at the last session, by the presentation of his yet unpublished report. Sir, if you would have an exhibition of highly excited feeling, it requires little observation to learn that you may produce it at any moment by attacking such laws as confer exclusive and gratuitous privileges. The adoption of the resolution of inquiry, at the last session of Congress, and the appointment of a select committee under it, were made occasion of newspaper paragraphs, which, in tone of lamentation and direful prediction, rivalled the most highly wrought specimens of the panic era. One of those articles I have preserved, and have before me. It commences thus: 'The architects of ruin.—This name has been appropriately given to those who are leading on the base, the ignorant, and the unprincipled, in a remorseless war upon all the guards and defences of society.'

"I introduce it here merely to show what are, in certain quarters, considered the guards and defences of society. After various compliments, similar to that just cited, the article proceeds: 'All this is dangerous as novel, and the ultimate results cannot be contemplated without anxiety. If this spirit extends, who can check it? "Down with the Bank;" "down with the Military Academy;" "down with the Judiciary;" "down with the Senate;" will be followed by watchwords of a worse character.' Here, Mr. Chairman, you have the United States Bank first, and then the Military Academy, as the guards and defences of your country. If it be so, you are, indeed, feebly protected. One of these guards and defences is already tottering. And who are the 'architects of ruin' that have resolved its downfall? Are they the base, the ignorant, and the unprincipled? No, sir. The most pure and patriotic portion of your community: the staid, industrious, intelligent farmers and mechanics, through a public servant, who has met responsibilities and seconded their wishes, with equal intrepidity and success, in the camp and in the cabinet, have accomplished this great work. Mr. Chairman, there is no real danger to be apprehended from this much-

Vol. I.-41

"From the middling interest you have derived | than myself. My earliest recollections connect your most able and efficient support in the most gloomy and trying periods of your history. And what have they asked in return? Nothing but the common advantages and blessings of a free government, administered under equal and impartial laws. They are responsible for no portion of your legislation, which, through its partial and unjust operation, has shaken this Union to its centre. That has had its origin in a different quarter, sustained by wealth, the wealth of monopolies, and the power and influence which wealth, thus accumulated and disposed, never fails to control. Indeed, sir, while far from demanding at your hands special favors for themselves, they have not, in my judgment, been sufficiently jealous of all legislation conferring exclusive and gratuitous privileges.

That the law creating the institution, of which I am now speaking, and the practice under it, is strongly marked by both these characteristics, is apparent at a single glance. It is gratuitous, because those who are so fortunate as to obtain admission there, receive their education without any obligation, except such as a sense of honor may impose, to return, either by service or otherwise, the slightest equivalent. It is exclusive, inasmuch as only one youth, out of a population of more than 47,000, can participate in its advantages at the same time; and those who are successful are admitted at an age, when their characters cannot have become developed, and with very little knowledge of their adaptation, mental or physical, for military life. system disregards one of those great principles which, carried into practice, contributed, perhaps, more than any other to render the arms of Napoleon invincible for so many years. Who does not percieve that it destroys the very life and spring of military ardor and enthusiasm, by utterly foreclosing all hope of promotion to the soldier and non-commissioned officer? However meritorious may be his services, however pre-eminent may become his qualifications for command, all is unavailing. The portcullis is dropped between him and preferment; the wisdom of your laws having provided another criterion than that of admitted courage and conduct, by which to determine who are worthy of command. They have made an Academy, where a certain number of young gentlemen are educated annually at the public expense, and to which there is, of consequence, a general rush, not so much from sentiments of patriotism and a taste for military life, as from motives less worthy—the avenue, and the only avenue, to rank in your army. These are truths, Mr. Chairman, which no man will pretend to deny; and I leave it for this House and the nation to determine whether they do not exhibit a spirit of exclusiveness, alike at variance with the genius of your government, and the efficiency and chivalrous character of your military force.

"Sir, no man can feel more deeply interested in the army, or entertain a higher regard for it, themselves fondly and gratefully with the names of the brave men who, relinquishing the quiet and security of civil life, were staking their all upon the defence of their country's rights and honor. One of the most distinguished among that noble band now occupies and honors a seat upon this floor. It is not fit that I should indulge in expressions of personal respect and admiration, which I am sure would find a hearty response in the bosom of every member of this committee. I allude to him merely to express the hope that, on some occasion, we may have upon this subject, the benefit of his experience and observation. And if his opinions shall differ from my own, I promise carefully to review every step by which I have been led to my present conclusions. You cannot mistake me, sir: I refer to the hero of Erie. I have declared myself the friend of the army. Satisfy me, then what measures are best calculated to render it effective and what all desire it to be, and I go for the proposition with my whole heart.

"But I cannot believe that the Military Academy, as at present organized, is calculated to accomplish this desirable end. It may, and undoubtedly does, send forth into the country much military knowledge; but the advantage which your army, or that which will constitute your army in time of need, derives from it, is by no means commensurate with the expense you incur. Here, Mr. Chairman, permit me to say that I deny, utterly, the expediency, and the right to educate, at the public expense, any number of young men who, on the completion of their education, are not to form a portion of your military force, but to return to the walks of private life. Such was never the operation of the Military Academy, until after the law of 1812; and the doctrine, so far as I have been able to ascertain, was first formally announced by a distinguished individual, at this time suffciently jealous of the exercise of executive patronage, and greatly alarmed by what he conceives to be the tendencies of this government to centralism and consolidation. It may be found in the report of the Secretary of Wa communicated to Congress in 1819.

"If it shall, upon due consideration, recein the sanction of Congress and the country. I am see no limit to the exercise of power and govern ernment patronage. Follow out the print ple, and where will it lead you? You could upon the national government the absolut guardianship of literature and science, militar and civil; you need not stop at military science any one, in the wide range of sciences, become at once a legitimate and constitutional object your patronage; you are confined by no limbut your discretion; you have no check but you own good pleasure. If you may afford instra tion, at the public expense, in the languages, philosophy, in chemistry, and in the exact ences, to young gentlemen who are under obligation to enter the service of their count but are, in fact, destined for you not, by parity of reaso means of a legal, or theologica cation, on the ground that the bounty will carry forth a fun ledge, that may, at some time cumstances, produce a benefic promote 'the general welfare' even some of us may live to this 'general welfare' of your leave us little ground to boast of limited powers. But I di this time to discuss the abst constitutional right. I will re ency alone; and, whether the p its exercise, in an institution lil sive of the only principle upor conducted at the public exper profitable to the public servicean admission into your school, a there, secondary to an appointn Sir, this distinctive feature c your legislation, and all executi

tions, down to 1810. "I may as well notice here, an answer which has always b objections have been raised to tl an answer which, if it has not r tisfactory to minds that yield th readily to strong reasons than of great names, has yet, unque cised a powerful influence upon t It has not gone forth upon the individual merely, but has been 1 world with the approbation of a former Congress. It is this: tl tion has received, at different t tion of such names as Washingto Jefferson; and this has been clai boldness, and in a form so impos to forbid any question of its acci were correct, in point of fact, it tled to the most profound respect tion, and no change should be urg weight of such authority, without eration, and thorough conviction ( Unfortunately for the advocates of tion, and fortunately for the int country, this claim cannot be sus ference to executive documents, i report of General Knox, in 1790 of Mr. Jefferson's administration.

"The error has undoubtedly i curred, by confounding the Milit at West Point as it was, with the demy at West Point as it is. T Secretary Knox, just referred to, ned by this distinctive feature—th amposed to be organized munity,' a defence to the community,' a military ountry, 'to serve in the field, or on r in the fortifications of the seaommander in-chief may direct.' A iod, the report of the Secretary o

lections connect with the names ishing the quiet taking their all itry's rights and nguished among nd honors a seat that I should in-1 respect and adld find a hearty r member of this nerely to express on, we may have. of his experience ppinions shall difrefully to review en led to my premistake me, sir: I have declared

Satisfy me, then, ated to render it it to be, and I go hole heart. the Military Aca-1, is calculated to

It may, and uninto the country out the advantage ich will constitute rives from it, is by 1 the expense you permit me to say pediency, and the iblic expense, any the completion of m a portion of your n to the walks of er the operation of I after the law of far as I have been formally announced I, at this time suffise of executive pad by what he conof this government ation. It may be Secretary of War, n 1819.

onsideration, receive d the country. I an of power and gor you? You could ment the absolut and science, militar p at military science of sciences, become nstitutional object confined by no im we no check but you u may afford instra in the languages, and in the exact st n who are under vice of their country but are, in fact, destined for civil life, why may you not, by parity of reasoning, provide the means of a legal, or theological, or medical education, on the ground that the recipients of your bounty will carry forth a fund of useful knowledge, that may, at some time, under some circumstances, produce a beneficial influence, and promote 'the general welfare ?' Sir, I fear that even some of us may live to see the day when this 'general welfare' of your constitution will leave us little ground to boast of a government of limited powers. But I did not propose at this time to discuss the abstract question of constitutional right. I will regard the expediency alone; and, whether the power exist or not. its exercise, in an institution like this, is subversive of the only principle upon which a school. conducted at the public expense, can be made profitable to the public service—that of making an admission into your school, and an education there, secondary to an appointment in the army. Sir this distinctive feature characterized all your legislation, and all executive recommendations, down to 1810. "I may as well notice here, as at any time, an answer which has always been ready when objections have been raised to this institutionan answer which, if it has not proved quite satisfactory to minds that yield their assent more readily to strong reasons than to the authority of great names, has yet, unquestionably, exercised a powerful influence upon the public mind. It has not gone forth upon the authority of an individual merely, but has been published to the world with the approbation of a committee of a former Congress. It is this: that the institution has received, at different times, the sanction of such names as Washington, Adams, and Jefferson; and this has been claimed with such boldness, and in a form so imposing, as almost to forbid any question of its accuracy. If this were correct, in point of fact, it would be entitled to the most profound respect and consideration, and no change should be urged against the weight of such authority, without mature deliberation, and thorough conviction of, expediency. Unfortunately for the advocates of the institution, and fortunately for the interests of the country, this claim cannot be sustained by reference to executive documents, from the first report of General Knox, in 1790, to the close of Mr. Jefferson's administration. "The error has undoubtedly innocently occurred, by confounding the Military Academy at West Point as it was, with the Military Academy at West Point as it is. The report of Secretary Knox, just referred to, is characterzed by this distinctive feature—that the corps proposed to be organized were 'to serve as an actual defence to the community,' and to constiute a part of the active military force of the wuntry, 'to serve in the field, or on the frontier, in the fortifications of the sea-coast, as the ommander-in-chief may direct.' At a later pe-McHenry), communicated to Congress in 1800 although it proposed a plan for military schools, differing in many essential particulars from those which had preceded it, still retained the distinctive feature just named as characterizing the report of General Knox.

"With regard to educating young men gratuitously, which, whatever may have been the design, I am prepared to show is the practical operation of the Academy, as at present organized, I cannot, perhaps, exhibit more clearly the sentiments of the Executive at that early day, urgent as was the occasion, and strong as must have been the desire, to give strength and efficiency to the military force, than by reading one or two paragraphs from a supplementary report of Secretary McHenry, addressed to the chairman of the Committee of Defence, on the 31st January, 1800.

The Secretary says: 'Agreeably to the plan of the Military Academy, the directors thereof are to be officers taken from the army; consequently, no expense will be incurred by such appointments. The plan also contemplates that officers of the army, cadets, and non-commissioned officers, shall receive instruction in the Academy. As the rations and fuel which they are entitled to in the army will suffice for them in the Academy, no additional expense will be required for objects of maintenance while there. The expenses of servants and certain incidental expenses relative to the police and administration, may be defrayed by those who shall be admitted, out of their pay and emoluments.'

"You will observe, Mr. Chairman, from the phraseology of the report that all were to constitute a part of your actual military force; and that whatever additional charges should be incurred, were to be defrayed by those who might receive the advantages of instruction. These were provisions, just, as they are important. Let me call your attention for a moment to a report of Col. Williams, which was made the subject of a special message, communicated to Congress by Mr. Jefferson, on the 18th of March, 1808. The extract I propose to read, as sustaining fully the views of Mr. McHenry upon this point, is in the following words: 'It might be well to make the plan upon such a scale as not only to take in the minor officers of the navy, but also any youths from any of the States who might wish for such an education, whether designed for the army or navy, or neither, and let them be assessed to the value of their education, which might form a fund for extra or contingent expenses. Sir, these are the true doctrines upon this subject; doctrines worthy of the administration under which they were promulgated, and in accordance with the views of statesmen in the earlier and purer days of the Republic. Give to the officers of your army the highest advantages for perfection in all the branches of military science, and let those advantages be open to all, in rotation, and under such terms and regulations tod, the report of the Secretary of War (Mr. as shall be at once impartial toward the officers and advantageous to the service; but let all young gentlemen who have a taste for military life, and desire to adopt arms as a profession, prepare themselves for subordinate situations at their own expense, or at the expense of their parents or guardians, in the same manner that the youth of the country are qualified for the professions of civil life. Sir. while upon this subject of gratuitous education, I will read an extract from 'Dupin's Military Force of Great Britain,' to show what favor it finds in another country, from the practice and experience of which we may derive some advantages, however far from approving of its institutions generally. The extract is from the 2d vol. 71st page, and relates to the terms on which young gentlemen are admitted to the junior departments of the Royal Military College at Sandhurst.

"First: The sons of officers of all ranks, whether of the land or sea forces, who have died in the service, leaving their families in pecuniary distress; this class are instructed, boarded, and habited gratutiously by the State; being required only to provide their equipments on admission, and to maintain themselves in linen. Secondly: The sons of all officers of the army above the rank of subalterns actually in the service, and who pay a sum proportioned to their ranks, according to a scale per annum regulated by the supreme hard. The sons of living naval officers of rank not below that of master and commander, are also admitted on payment of annual stipends, similar to those of corresponding ranks in the army. The orphan sons of officers, who have not left their families in pecuniary difficulties, are admitted into this class on paying the stipends required of officers of the rank held by their parents at the time of their decease. Thirdly: The sons of noblemen and private gentlemen who pay a yearly sum equivalent to the expenses of their education, board, and clothing, according to a rate regulated from time to time by the commissioners.' Sir, let it be remembered that these are the regulations of a government which, with all its wealth and power, is, from its structure and practice, groaning under the accumulated weight of pensions, sinecures, and gratuities, and yet you observe, that only one class, 'the sons of officers of all ranks, whether of the land or sea forces, who have died in the service, leaving their families in pecuniary distress,' are educated gratuitously.

"I do not approve even of this, but I hold it up in contrast with your own principles and practice. If the patience of the committee would warrant me, Mr. Chairman, I could show, by reference to Executive communications, and the concurrent legislation of Congress in 1794, 1796. 1802, and 1808, that prior to the last mentioned date, such an institution as we now have was neither recommended nor contemplated. Upon this point I will not detain you longer; but when hereafter confronted by the authority of great names, I trust we shall be told where the expressions of approbation are to be found. We may then judge of their applicability to the Military Academy as at present organized. I am far from desiring to see this country destitute of a Military Academy; but I would have it a school of practice, and instruction, for officers actually in the service of the United States: not an institution for educating gratuitously, young gentlemen, who, on the completion of their term. or after a few months' leave of absence, resign their commissions and return to the pursuits of civil life. If any one doubts that this is the practical operation of your present system, I refer him to the annual list of resignations, to be found in the Adjutant General's office.

"Firmly as I am convinced of the necessity of a reorganization, I would take no step to create an unjust prejudice against the institution. All that I ask, and, so far as I know, all that any of the opponents of the institution ask is that after a full and impartial investigation it shall stand or fall upon its merits. I know there are graduates of the institution who are ornaments to the army, and an honor to their country; but they, and not the seminary, are entitled to the credit. Here I would remark once for all, that I do not reflect upon the officers or pupils of the Academy; it is to the principles of the institution itself, as at present or ganized, that I object. It is often said that the graduates leave the institution with sentiments that but ill accord with the feelings and opinions of the great mass of the people of that government from which they derive the means of education, and that many who take commissions possess few qualifications for the command of men, either in war or in peace. Most of the members of this House have had more or less intercourse with these young gentlemen, and I leave it for each individual to form his own opinion of the correctness of the charges. Thus much I will say for myself, that I believe that these, and greater evils, are the natural, if not the inevitable, result of the principles in which this institution is founded; and any system of education, established upon similar principles, on government patronage alone, will produce like results, now and for ever. Sir, what are some of these results? By the report of the Secretary of War, dated January, 1831, we are informed that, "by an estimate of the last fire years (preceding that date), it appears that the supply of the army from the corps of graduated cadets, has averaged about twenty-two annually, while those who graduated are about forty, making in each year an excess of eighteen. The number received annually into the Academy are rages one hundred, of which only the number stated, to wit, forty, pass through the prescribed course of education at schools, and by come supernumerary lieutenants in the army. By the report of the Secretary of War, De cember, 1830, we are informed, that "the num graduates has been at an avers excess, which is annually incre eighty-seven in waiting until take place, and show that in probably, and in the succeedir there will be an excess beyond ing law authorizes to be comm will then be 106 supernumerar lieutenants appurtenant to th average annual expense of $80 results here disclosed were no Mr. Madison, is apparent from his messages of 1810 and 1811.

"In passing the law of 1812 and the President acted for th they expected those who shoul to act in a similar manner. T patriotism and resentment were holding the privileges of freeme vaded, our glorious stars and st ed and national and individual 1 in the dust. The war was pen cessity for increasing the militar country was obvious and pressir gent occasion for increased faciliti instruction, equally apparent. Si circumstances like these, when we enemies abroad, but, I blush to s home, that the institution, as at ized, had its origin. It will hardly that it was the original design sugment the number of persons i yond the wants of the public servireport of the Secretary shows, that prior to 1831, the Academy h eighteen supernumeraries annually operation of this character has no s recommendation of Mr. Madison. demonstrates, further, the fruit utility of this institution, by show that but two-fifths of those wh Academy graduate, and that but a than one-fifth enter the public serv not the fault of the administration my; it is not the fault of the your who are sent there; on your prese tablishment there can be but little them, particularly in the acquisition science. There can hardly be but the mind of the student, and that obtain an education for the purposes
The difficulty is, that the instituti ired both the occasion that called i nce, and its original design. I have narked, that the Academy was ma arged to correspond with the army tually to be called into service. or a moment at facts, and observe uch wisdom, justice, and sound pol ain the provisions of the law of 1812. uthorized force of 1813, after the dec ar, was 58,254; and in October, military establishment amounted to 6 he act of March, 1815, the peace esta as limited to 10,000, and now hard ability to the organized, I country desti-I would have tion, for officers ed States: not uitously, young n of their term. absence, resign the pursuits of hat this is the at system, I reignations, to be office.

f the necessity ke no step to t the institution. know, all that titution ask, is, investigation, it nerits. I know titution who are 1 honor to their e seminary, are would remark. t upon the offiit is to the prinas at present oren said that the with sentiments ngs and opinions of that governhe means of eduake commissions the command of e. Most of the had more or less gentlemen, and I o form his own e charges. Thus t I believe that ne natural, if not inciples in which d any system of imilar principles, ne, will produce Sir, what are he report of the ary, 1831, we are te of the last five appears that the corps of graduated nty-two annually, are about forty of eighteen. The the Academy are only the number through the protection to schools, and be ats in the army. ary of War, De d, that " the num y from this corps

the number

graduates has been at an average of forty. This excess, which is annually increasing, has placed eighty-seven in waiting until vacancies shall take place, and show that in the next year, probably, and in the succeeding one, certainly, there will be an excess beyond what the existing law authorizes to be commissioned. There will then be 106 supernumerary brevet second lieutenants appurtenant to the army, at an average annual expense of $80,000. Sir, that results here disclosed were not anticipated by Mr. Madison, is apparent from a recurrence to his messages of 1810 and 1811.

"In passing the law of 1812, both Congress and the President acted for the occasion, and they expected those who should succeed them to act in a similar manner. Their feelings of patriotism and resentment were aroused, by beholding the privileges of freemen wantonly invaded, our glorious stars and stripes disregarded and national and individual rights trampled in the dust. The war was pending. The necessity for increasing the military force of the country was obvious and pressing, and the urgent occasion for increased facilities for military instruction, equally apparent. Sir, it was under circumstances like these, when we had not only enemies abroad, but, I blush to say, enemies at home, that the institution, as at present organzed, had its origin. It will hardly be pretended that it was the original design of the law to augment the number of persons instructed, beyond the wants of the public service. Well, the report of the Secretary shows, that for five years prior to 1831, the Academy had furnished eighteen supernumeraries annually. A practical operation of this character has no sanction in the recommendation of Mr. Madison. The report demonstrates, further, the fruitfulness and utility of this institution, by showing the fact, that but two-fifths of those who enter the Academy graduate, and that but a fraction more than one-fifth enter the public service. This is not the fault of the administration of the Academy; it is not the fault of the young gentlemen who are sent there; on your present peace establishment there can be but little to stimulate them, particularly in the acquisition of military science. There can hardly be but one object in the mind of the student, and that would be to obtain an education for the purposes of civil life. The difficulty is, that the institution has outlived both the occasion that called it into existence, and its original design. I have before renarked, that the Academy was manifestly enarged to correspond with the army and militia tually to be called into service. Look then or a moment at facts, and observe with how ain the provisions of the law of 1812. The total uthorized force of 1813, after the declaration of ar, was 58,254; and in October, 1814, the allitary establishment amounted to 62,428. By he act of March, 1815, the peace establishment as limited to 10,000, and now hardly exceeds that number. Thus you make a reduction of more than 50,000 in your actual military force, to accommodate the expenses of the government to its wants. And why do you refuse to do the same with your grand system of public education? Why does that remain unchanged? Why not reduce it at once, at least to the actual wants of the service, and dispense with your corps of supernumerary lieutenants? Sir, there is, there can be but one answer to the question, and that may be found in the war report of 1819, to which I have before had occasion to allude. The Secretary says, 'the cadets who cannot be provided for in the army will return to private life, but in the event of a war their knowledge will not be lost to the country.' Indeed, sir, these young gentlemen, if they could be induced to take the field, would, after a lapse of ten or fifteen years, come up from the bar, or it may be the pulpit, fresh in military science, and admirably qualified for command in the face of an enemy. The magazine of facts, to prove at the same glance the extravagance and unfruitfulness of this institution, is not easily exhausted: but I am admonished by the lateness of the hour to omit many considerations which I regard as both interesting and important. I will only detain the committee to make a single statement, placing side by side some aggregate results. There has already been expended upon the institution more than three millions three hundred thousand dollars. Between 1815, and 1821, thirteen hundred and eighteen students were admitted into the Academy; and of all the cadets who were ever there, only two hundred and sixty-five remained in the service at the end of 1830. Here are the expenses you have incurred, and the products you have realized.

"I leave them to be balanced by the people. But for myself, believing as I do, that the Academy stands forth as an anomaly among the institutions of this country; that it is at variance with the spirit, if not the letter of the constitution under which we live; so long as this House shall deny investigation into its principles and practical operation, I, as an individual member. wil refuse to appropriate the first dollar for its support."

CHAPTER CXLI.

EXPUNGING RESOLUTION-PERORATION OF SEN-ATOR BENTON'S SECOND SPEECH.

"THE condemnation of the President, combining as it did all that illegality and injustice could inflict, had the further misfortune to be co-operative in its effect with the conspiracy of the Bank of the United States to effect the most wicked and universal scheme of mischief which the annals of modern times exhibit. It was a plot against the government, and against the property of the country. The government was to be upset, and property revolutionized. Six hundred banks were to be broken—the general currency ruined—myriads bankrupted—all business stopped—all property sunk in valueall confidence destroyed! that out of this wide spread ruin and pervading distress, the vengeful institution might glut its avarice and ambition, trample upon the President, take possession of the government, reclaim its lost deposits, and perpetuate its charter. These crimes, revolting and frightful in themselves, were to be accomplished by the perpetration of a whole system of subordinate and subsidiary crime! the people to be deceived and excited; the President to be calumniated; the effects of the bank's own conduct to be charged upon him; meetings got up; business suspended; distress deputations or ganized; and the Senate chamber converted into a theatre for the dramatic exhibition of all this fictitious woe. That it was the deep and sad misfortune of the Senate so to act, as to be cooperative in all this scene of mischief, is too fully proved by the facts known, to admit of denial. I speak of acts, not of motives. The effect of the Senate's conduct in trying the President and uttering alarm speeches, was to co-operate with the bank, and that secondarily, and as a subordinate performer; for it is incontestable that the bank began the whole affair; the little book of fifty pages proves that. The bank began it; the bank followed it up; the bank attends to it now. It is a case which might well be entered on our journal as a State is entered against a criminal in the docket of a court: the Bank of the United States versus President Jackson: on impeachment for removing the deposits. The entry would be justified by the facts, for these are the indubitable facts. The bank started the accusation; the Senate took it up. The bank furnished arguments; the Senate used them. The bank excited meetings; the Senate extolled them. The bank sent deputations; the senators received them with honor. The deputations reported answers for the President which he never gave; the Senate repeated and enforced these answers. Hand in hand throughout the whole process, the bank and the Senate acted together, and succeeded in getting up the most serious and afflicting panic ever known in this country. The whole country was agitated. Cities, towns, and villages, the entire country and the whole earth seemed to be in commotion against one man. A revolution was proclaimed! the overthrow of all law was announced! the substitution of one man's will for the voice of the whole government, was daily asserted! the public sense was astounded and bewildered with dire and portentous annunciations! In the midst of all this machinery of alarm and distress. many good citizens lost their reckoning; sensible heads went wrong; stout hearts quailed; old friends gave way; temporizing counsels came in; and the solitary defender of his country was arged to yield! Oh, how much depended upon that one man at that dread and awful point of time! If he had given way, then all was gone! An insolent, rapacious, and revengeful institution would have been installed in sovereign power. The federal and State governments, the Congress, the Presidency, the State legislatures all would have fallen under the dominion of the bank; and all departments of the government would have been filled and administered by the debtors, pensioners, and attorneys of that institution. He did not yield, and the country was saved. The heroic patriotism of one man prevented all this calamity, and saved the Republic from becoming the appendage and fiel of a moneyed corporation. And what has been his reward? So far as the people are concerned, honor, gratitude, blessings, everlasting benedictions; so far as the Senate is concerned, dishonor, denunciation, stigma, infamy. And shall these two verdicts stand? Shall our journal bear the verdict of infamy, while the hearts of the people glow and palpitate with the verdid

of honor?

"President Jackson has done more for the human race than the whole tribe of politicians put together; and shall he remain stignatized and condemned for the most glorious acins of his life? The bare attempt to stigmatize Mr. Jefferson was not merely expunged, but cut of from the journal; so that no trace of it remains upon the Senate records. The designs are the same in both cases; but the aggravations of inexpressibly greater in the case of President Jackson. Referring to the journals of the House of Representatives for the character of the them, tempt against President Jefferson, and the tempt against President Jefferson aga sons for repulsing it, and it attempt was made to crimina and to charge him upon the violation of the laws; and that made at a time, and under circ ously calculated to excite uni the minds of the people against trate. Such was precisely the charge; and the effect of the President Jackson, with the di the proceeding against Preside many ten thousand times mo aggravated; commencing as it carried on by a violent political 1 to sentence and condemnation; if believed, to destroy the Pres the administration, and to put a representative government. Yo end to elective and representati For what are all the attacks Jackson's administration but a people who elect and re-elect hi his administration, and by app their own? To condemn such a supported, is to condemn the po the elective principle, to conde mental principle of our gover establish the favorite dogma of t that the people are incapable of s and will surrender themselves as into the hands of military chiefts "Great are the services w Jackson has rendered his countr ral he has extended her frontiers and carried her renown to the h glory. His civil administration h transcended his warlike exploits. procured from the great powers spoliations committed on our former administrations, and who administrations were reclaimed and friendship with the whole we is more, the respect of the who character of our America exalte so exalted that the American ci the continent of Europe, and the sudden and great elevation o character, might feel as if he h hundred feet high. Such is the p At home we behold a brilliant ecene; the public debt paid,—tax the gold currency restored, - ever known in was agitated. ntire country in commotion as proclaimed! anounced! the r the voice of asserted! the ewildered with ions! In the m and distress. koning; sensirts quailed; old unsels came in; is country was depended upon awful point of n all was gone! engeful institued in sovereign overnments, the tate legislatures, dominion of the the government inistered by the nevs of that inand the country tism of one man id saved the Rendage and fief of what has been ple are concerned, erlasting benedics concerned, disfamy. And shall Shall our journal nile the hearts of tribe of politihe remain stigmaost glorious action

t to stigmatize Mr.
unged, but cut out trace of it remains e designs are the aggravations an case of President
arrals of the House
haracter of the the grson, and the 19

with the verdict

sons for repulsing it, and it is seen that the attempt was made to criminate Mr. Jefferson, and to charge him upon the journals with a violation of the laws; and that this attempt was made at a time, and under circumstances insidiously calculated to excite unjust suspicion in the minds of the people against the Chief Magistrate. Such was precisely the character of the charge; and the effect of the charge against President Jackson, with the difference only that the proceeding against President Jackson, was many ten thousand times more revolting and aggravated; commencing as it did in the Bank, carried on by a violent political party, prosecuted to sentence and condemnation; and calculated, if believed, to destroy the President, to change the administration, and to put an end to popular representative government. Yes, sir, to put an end to elective and representative government! For what are all the attacks upon President Jackson's administration but attacks upon the people who elect and re-elect him, who approve his administration, and by approving, make it their own? To condemn such a President, thus supported, is to condemn the pople, to condemn the elective principle, to condemn the fundamental principle of our government; and to establish the favorite dogma of the monarchists, that the people are incapable of self-government, and will surrender themselves as collared slaves into the hands of military chieftains.

"Great are the services which President Jackson has rendered his country. As a General he has extended her frontiers, saved a city, and carried her renown to the highest pitch of glory. His civil administration has rivalled and transcended his warlike exploits. Indemnities procured from the great powers of Europe for spoliations committed on our citizens under former administrations, and which, by former administrations were reclaimed in vain; peace and friendship with the whole world, and, what is more, the respect of the whole world; the character of our America exalted in Europe; 80 exalted that the American citizen treading the continent of Europe, and contemplating the sudden and great elevation of the national character, might feel as if he himself was an hundred feet high. Such is the picture abroad! At home we behold a brilliant and grateful ecene; the public debt paid,—taxes reduced, the gold currency restored, - the Southern States released from a useless and dangerous population,—all disturbing questions settled, a gigantic moneyed institution repulsed in its march to the conquest of the government,-the highest prosperity attained, - and the Hero Patriot now crowning the list of his glorious services by covering his country with the panoply of defence, and consummating his measures for the restoration and preservation of the currency of the constitution. We have had brilliant and prosperous administrations; but that of President Jackson eclipses, surpasses, and casts into the shade, all that have preceded it. And is he to be branded, stigmatized, condemned, unjustly and untruly condemned; and the records of the Senate to bear the evidence of this outrage to the latest posterity? Shall this President, so glorious in peace and in war, so successful at home and abroad, whose administration, now, hailed with applause and gratitude by the people, and destined to shine for unnumbered ages in the political firmament of our history: shall this President, whose name is to live for ever, whose retirement from life and services will be through the gate that leads to the temple of everlasting fame; shall he go down to posterity with this condemnation upon him; and that for the most glorious action of his life?

"Mr. President, I have some knowledge of history, and some acquaintance with the dangers which nations have encountered, and from which heroes and statesmen have saved them. I have read much of ancient and modern history, and nowhere have I found a parallel to the services rendered by President Jackson in crushing the conspiracy of the Bank, but in the labors of the Roman Consul in crushing the conspiracy of Catiline. The two conspiracies were identical in their objects; both directed against the government, and the property of the country. Cicero extinguished the Catilinarean conspiracy, and saved Rome; President Jackson defeated the conspiracy of the Bank, and saved our America. Their heroic service was the same, and their fates have been strangely alike. Cicero was condemned for violating the laws and the constitution; so has been President Jackson. The consul was refused a hearing in his own defence: so has been President Jackson. The life of Cicero was attempted by two assassins; twice was the murderous pistol levelled at our President. All Italy, the whole Roman world, hated rival, and all pretexted with the public bore Cicero to the Capitol, and tore the sentence of the consul's condemnation from the fasti of the republic: a million of Americans, fathers and heads of families, now demand the expurgation of the sentence against the President. Cicero, followed by all that was virtuous in Rome, repaired to the temple of the tutelary gods, and swore upon the altar that he had saved his country: President Jackson, in the temple of the living God, might take the same oath, and find its response in the hearts of millions. Nor shall the parallel stop here; but after times, and remote posterities shall render the same honors to each. Two thousand years have passed, and the great actions of the consul are fresh and green in history. The school-boy learns them; the patriot studies them; the statesman applies them: so shall it be with our patriot President. Two thousand years hence,-ten thousand,nay, while time itself shall last, for who can contemplate the time when the memory of this republic shall be lost? while time itself shall last, the name and fame of Jackson shall remain and flourish; and this last great act by which he saved the government from subversion, and property from revolution, shall stand forth as the seal and crown of his heroic services. And if any thing that I myself may do or say, shall survive the brief hour in which I live, it will be the part which I have taken, and the efforts which I have made, to sustain and defend the great defender of his country.

"Mr. President, I have now finished the view which an imperious sense of duty has required me to take of this subject. I trust that I have proceeded upon proofs and facts, and have left nothing unsustained which I feel it to be my duty to advance. It is not my design to repeat, or to recapitulate; but there is one further and vital consideration which demands the notice of a remark, and which I should be faithless to the genius of our government, if I should pretermit. It is known, sir, that ambition for office is the bane of free States, and the contentions of rivals the destruction of their country. These contentions lead to every species of injustice, and to every variety of violence, and all cloaked with the pretext of the public good. Civil wars and banishment at Rome; civil wars, and the ostracism at Athens; bills of attainder, star-chamber prosecutions, and impeachments in England; all to get rid of some envied, or good: such has been the history of free States for two thousand years. The wise men who framed our constitution were well aware of all this danger and all this mischief, and took effectual care, as they thought, to guard against it, Banishment, the ostracism, the star-chamber prosecutions, bills of attainder, all those summary and violent modes of hunting down a rival, which deprive the victim of defence by depriving him of the intervention of an accusing body to stand between the accuser and the trying body; all these are proscribed by the genius of our constitution. Impeachments alone are permitted; and these would most usually occur for political offences, and be of a character to enlist the passions of many, and to agitate the country. An effectual guard it was supposed, was provided against the abuse of the impeachment power, first, by requiring a charge to be preferred by the House of Representatives, as the grand Inquest of the nation: and next, in confining the trial to the Senate, and requiring a majority of two-thirds to convict. The gravity, the dignity, the age of the senators, and the great and various powers with which they were invested-greater and more various than are united in the same persons under any other constitutional government upon earth—these were supposed to make the Senate a safe depository for the impeachment power; and if the plan of the constitution is followed out it must be admitted to be so. But if a public officer can be arraigned by his rivals before the Senate for impeachable offences with out the intervention of the House of Representatives, and if he can be pronounced guilty by a simple majority, instead of a majority of two thirds, then has the whole frame of our government miscarried, and the door left wide open to the greatest mischief which has ever afflicted the people of free States. Then can rivals and competitors go on to do what it was intended they should never do; accuse, denounce, ondemn, and hunt down each other! Great has been the weight of the American Senate. Time was when its rejections for office were fatal # character; time is when its rejections are rather passports to public favor. Why this sad and ominous decline? Let no one deceive himsel Public opinion is the arbiter of character is our enlightened day; it is the Areopagus from which there is no appeal! pronounced against the Senat the President, and condemne it had sustained the Senate, t have been ruined! as it has must be ruined, if it perseve and goes on to brave public or stitution, it must be ruined!

CHAPTER C

DISTRIBUTION OF THE LAI

"The great loss of the bank depreciation of the securities; to regain a capital is to restore large portion of them consists which are so far below their int the present prices could not 1 nated by any reasonable man. be entertained of their ultimate States themselves, unaided, ca claim against them; they will Congress adopt the measures c their relief. A division of th among the States, which would to pay their debts—or a pledge of sales for that purpose-wou security. Either of these acts confidence, and enhance the val of property." This paragraph a Philadelphia National Gazette, to Mr. Biddle, President of th United States; and connects t with all the plans for distribut land money among the States, shape of a direct distribution, or of a deposit of the surplus revenu he purpose of enhancing the valtocks held by it. That instituti have interfered in the federal romote or to baffle the passa eemed to be favorable or otherw rests; and this resort to the brough an act of Congress was hance of the spirit of interferer ibution had become, very ne easure; and of the party of wl as a member, and Mr. Clay the c with the public y of free States wise men who vell aware of all f, and took effecguard against it. he star-chamber all those sumhunting down a n of defence by ion of an accus-

accuser and the

roscribed by the

Impeachments ese would most nces, and be of a ns of many, and ffectual guard it against the abuse st, by requiring a House of Repreest of the nation; al to the Senate, wo-thirds to conv, the age of the rious powers with greater and more the same persons l government upon o make the Senate eachment power; cution is followed be so. But if a ned by his rivals able offences with ouse of Represennounced guilty by a majority of twoame of our governr left wide open to has ever afflicted Then can rivals and at it was intended ise, denounce, conother! Great has rican Senate. Time office were fatal to ejections are rather Why this sad and one deceive himself

ter of character is the Areopagus from which there is no appeal! That arbiter has pronounced against the Senate. It has sustained the President, and condemned the Senate. If it had sustained the Senate, the President must have been ruined! as it has not, the Senate must be ruined, if it perseveres in its course. and goes on to brave public opinion !-as an institution, it must be ruined!

CHAPTER CXLII.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE LAND REVENUE.

"THE great loss of the bank has been in the depreciation of the securities; and the only way to regain a capital is to restore their value. A large portion of them consists of State stocks, which are so far below their intrinsic worth that the present prices could not have been anticinated by any reasonable man. No doubt can beentertained of their ultimate payment. The States themselves, unaided, can satisfy every daim against them; they will do it speedily, if Congress adopt the measures contemplated for their relief. A division of the public lands among the States, which would enable them all to pay their debts-or a pledge of the proceeds of sales for that purpose—would be abundant security. Either of these acts would inspire confidence, and enhance the value of all kinds of property." This paragraph appeared in the Philadelphia National Gazette, was attributed to Mr. Biddle, President of the Bank of the United States; and connects that institution with all the plans for distributing the public and money among the States, either in the hape of a direct distribution, or in the disguise of a deposit of the surplus revenue; and this for he purpose of enhancing the value of the State tocks held by it. That institution was known o have interfered in the federal legislation, to romote or to baffle the passage of laws, as eemed to be favorable or otherwise to her incrests; and this resort to the land revenue arough an act of Congress was an eminent inance of the spirit of interference. This disibution had become, very nearly, a party easure; and of the party of which the bank

the author of the scheme—had introduced it at several sessions—and now renewed it. Mr. Webster also made a proposition to the same effect at this session. It was the summer of the presidential election; and great calculations were made by the party which favored the distribution upon its effect in adding to their popularity. Mr. Clay limited his plan of distribution to five years; but the limitation was justly considered as nothing—as a mere means of beginning the system of these distributions—which once began, would go on of themselves, while our presidential elections continued, and any thing to divide could be found in the treasury. Mr. Benton opposed the whole scheme, and confronted it with a proposition to devote the surplus revenue to the purposes of national defence; thereby making an issue, as he declared, between the plunder of the country and the defence of the country. He introduced an antagonistic bill, as he termed it, devoting the surplus moneys to the public defences; and showing by reports from the war and navy departments that seven millions a year for fifteen years would be required for the completion of the naval defences, and thirty millions to complete the military defences; of which nine millions per annum could be beneficially expended; and then went on to say:

"That the reports from which he had read, taken together, presented a complete system of preparation for the national defence; every arm and branch of defence was to be provided for; an increase of the navy, including steamships; appropriate fortifications, including steam batteries; armories, foundries, arsenals, with ample supplies of arms and munitions of war; an increase of troops for the West and Northwest a line of posts and a military road from the Red River to the Wisconsin, in the rear of the settlements, and mounted dragoons to scour the country; every thing was considered; all was reduced to system, and a general, adequate, and appropriate plan of national defence was presented sufficient to absorb all the surplus revenue, and wanting nothing but the vote of Congress to carry it into effect. In this great system of national defence the whole Union was equally interested; for the country, in all that concerned its defences, was but a unit, and every section was interested in the defence of every other section, and every individual citizen was interested in the defence of the whole population. It was in vain to say that the navy was on the sea, and the fortifications on the seaboard, and that the citizens in the interior States, or as a member, and Mr. Clay the chief. He was in these remote defences. Such an idea was in the valley of the Mississippi, had no interest mistaken and delusive. The inhabitant of Missouri and of Indiana had a direct interest in keeping open the mouths of the rivers, defending the seaport towns, and preserving a naval force that would protect the produce of his labor in crossing the ocean, and arriving safely in foreign markets. All the forts at the mouth of the Mississippi were just as much for the benefit of the western States, as if those States were down at the mouth of that river. So of all the forts on the Gulf of Mexico. Five forts are completed in the delta of the Mississippi; two are completed on the Florida or Alabama coast; and seven or eight more are projected; all calculated to give security to western commerce in passing through the Gulf of Mexico. Much had been done for that frontier, but more remained to be done; and among the great works contemplated in that quarter were large establishments at Pensacola, Key West, or the Dry Tortugas. Large military and naval stations were contemplated at these points, and no expenditure or preparations could exceed in amount the magnitude of the interests to be protected. On the Atlantic board the commerce of the States found its way to the ocean through many outlets, from Maine to Florida; in the West, on the contrary, the whole commerce of the valley of the Mississippi, all that of the Alabama, of western Florida, and some part of Georgia, passes through a single outlet, and reaches the ocean by passing between Key West and Cuba. Here, then, is an immense commerce collected into one channel, compressed into one line, and passing, as it were, through one gate. This gives to Key West and the Dry Tortugas an importance hardly possessed by any point on the globe; for, besides commanding the commerce of the entire West, it will also command that of Mexico, of the West Indies, of the Caribbean sea, and of South America down to the middle of that continent at its most eastern projection, Cape Roque. To understand the cause of all this (Mr. B. said), it was necessary to look to the trade winds, which, blowing across the Atlantic between the tropics, strike the South American continent at Cape Roque, follow the retreating coast of that continent up to the Caribbean sea, and to the Gulf of Mexico, creating the gulf stream as they go, and by the combined effect of a current in the air and in the water, sweeping all vessels from this side Cape Roque into its stream, carrying them round west of Cuba and bringing them out between Key West and the Havana. These two positions, then, constitute the gate through which every thing must pass that comes from the valley of the Mississippi, from Mexico, and from South America as low down as Cape Roque. As the masters of the Mississippi, we should be able to predominate in the Gulf of Mexico; and, to do so, we must have great establishments at Key West and Pensacola. Such establishments are now proposed; and every citizen of the West should look upon them as the guardians of his own immediate interests, the indispensable safe guard to his own commerce; and to him the highest, most sacred, and most beneficial object to which surplus revenue could be applied. The Gulf of Mexico should be considered as the estuary of the Mississippi. A naval and military supremacy should be established in that gulf. cost what it might; for without that supremacy the commerce of the entire West would lie at the mercy of the fleets and privateers of inimical

"Mr. B. returned to the immediate object of his remarks—to the object of showing that the defences of the country would absorb every surplus dollar that would ever be found in the treasury. He recapitulated the aggregates of those heads of expenditure; for the navy, about forty millions of dollars, embracing the increase of the navy, navy yards, ordnance, and repairs of vessels for a series of years; for fortifications, about thirty millions, reported by the engineer department; and which sum, after reducing the size of some of the largest class of forts not vet commenced, would still be large enough, with the sum reported by the ordnance department amounting to near thirty millions, to make a totality not much less than one hundred millions; and far more than sufficient to swallow up all the surpluses which will ever be found to exst in the treasury. Even after deducting much from these estimates, the remainder will still go beyond any surplus that will actually be found Every person knows that the present year is no criterion for estimating the revenue; excess of paper issues has inflated all business, and led to excess in all branches of the revenue; next year it will be down, and soon fall as much below the usual level as it now is above it. More than that; what is now called a surplus in the treasury is no surplus, but a mere accumulation for want of passing the appropriation bills. The whole of it is pledged to the bills which are piled upon our tables, and which we cannot get passed; for the opposition is strong enough to arrest the appropriations, to dam up the money in the treasury; and then call that a surplus which would now be in a course of expenditure, the necessary appropriation bills could be passed

"The public defences will require near one hundred millions of dollars; the annual amount required for these defences alone amount to thirteen or fourteen millions. The engined department answers explicitly that it can bear ficially expend six millions of dollars annually the ordnance that it can beneficially expend three millions; the navy that it can beneficially expend several millions; and all this for a sense of years. This distribution bill has five years to run, and in that time, if the money is applied to defence instead of distribution, the great work of national defence will be so far completed a to place the United States in a condition to cause her rights and her interests, her flag and be soil, to be honored and respected by the whole

The bill was passed in the S a vote somewhat close-25 t

Messrs. Black, Buchanan, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing of Oh Hendricks, Kent, Knight, Leigh gum, Naudain, Nicholas, Porte ton, Robbins, Southard, Swift, ster, White.

NAYS.—Messrs. Benton, Cal Ewing of Illinois, Grundy, Hill of Alabama, King of Georgia, I. ris, Niles, Rives, Robinson, R Tallmadge, Walker, Wright.

Being sent to the House for became evident that it could no and then the friends of distribut fell upon a new mode to effect in a form to gain the votes of who held distribution to be a constitution—among them Mr. took the lead in the movemen bill before the Senate to regulat the public moneys in the dep this was turned into distributio public moneys with the States, their representation in Congress when Congress should call for i called a deposit with the State of the States pledged for return The deposit was defended on the on which Mr. Calhoun had pro the constitution two years befor there was no other way to get ric And to a suggestion from Mr. V moneys, when once so deposited got back again, Mr. Calhoun ans

"But the senator from Newthe measure, that it would, in et a distribution, on the ground, a that the States would never re not doubt but that they would, refund by the government; bu Congress will in fact never make rests this conclusion on the su there would be a majority of the to it. He admits, in case the r become deficient, that the sout States would prefer to refund the than to raise the imposts to m but he insists that the contrary case with the manufacturing State prefer to increase the imposts to quota, on the ground that the i duties would promote the interes tures. I cannot agree with the those States would assume a posi lispensable safe and to him the beneficial object be applied. The dered as the esval and military ed in that gulf, that supremacy st would lie at teers of inimical rediate object of howing that the bsorb every suround in the treagregates of those avy, about forty the increase of e, and repairs of for fortifications by the engineer fter reducing the s of forts, not yet rge enough, with ance department, llions, to make a hundred millions; o swallow up all be found to exist deducting much under will still go actually be found. present year is no evenue; excess of isiness, and led to venue ; next year ll as much below we it. More than arplus in the tresaccumulation for iation bills. The e bills which are ich we cannot get strong enough to dam up the money all that a surplus e of expenditure, il lls could be passed. require near one the annual amount alone amount to The engineer y that it can bene dollars annually; peneficially expend t it can beneficially I all this for a series bill has five years ne money is applied tion, the great work so far completed s a condition to cause

s, her flag and he

pected by the whole

The bill was passed in the Senate, though by a vote somewhat close—25 to 20. The yeas were:

Messrs. Black, Buchanan, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Goldsborough, Hendricks, Kent, Knight, Leigh, McKean, Mangum, Naudain, Nicholas, Porter, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, Webster, White.

NATS.—Messrs. Benton, Calhoun, Cuthbert, Ewing of Illinois, Grundy, Hill, Hubbard, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Linn, Moore, Morris, Niles, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Shepley, Tallmadge, Walker, Wright.

Being sent to the House for concurrence it became evident that it could not pass that body; and then the friends of distribution in the Senate fell upon a new mode to effect their object, and in a form to gain the votes of many members who held distribution to be a violation of the constitution-among them Mr. Calhoun ;-who took the lead in the movement. There was a bill before the Senate to regulate the keeping of the public moneys in the deposit banks; and this was turned into distribution of the surplus public moneys with the States, in proportion to their representation in Congress, to be returned when Congress should call for it: and this was called a deposit with the States; and the faith of the States pledged for returning the money. The deposit was defended on the same argument on which Mr. Calhoun had proposed to amend the constitution two years before; namely that there was no other way to get rid of the surplus. And to a suggestion from Mr. Wright that the moneys, when once so deposited might never be got back again, Mr. Calhoun answered:

"But the senator from New-York objects to the measure, that it would, in effect, amount to a distribution, on the ground, as he conceives, that the States would never refund. He does not doubt but that they would, if called on to refund by the government; but he says that Congress will in fact never make the call. He rests this conclusion on the supposition that there would be a majority of the States opposed to it. He admits, in case the revenue should become deficient, that the southern or staple States would prefer to refund their quota, rather than to raise the imposts to meet the deficit; but he insists that the contrary would be the case with the manufacturing States, which would prefer to increase the imposts to refunding their quota, on the ground that the increase of the duties would promote the interests of manufactures. I cannot agree with the senator that untenable as to refuse to refund a deposit which their faith would be plighted to return, and rest the refusal on the ground of preferring to lay a tax, because it would be a bounty to them, and would consequently throw the whole burden of the tax on the other States. But, be this as it may, I can tell the senator that, if they should, take a course so unjust and monstrous, he may be assured that the other States would most unquestionably resist the increase of the imposts; so that the government would have to take its choice, either to go without the money, or call on the States to refund the deposits."

Mr. Benton took an objection to this scheme of deposit, that it was a distribution under a false name, making a double disposition of the same money; that the land money was to be distributed under the bill already passed by the Sengte: and he moved an amendment to except that money from the operation of the deposit to be made with the States. He said it was hardly to be supposed that, in the nineteenth century, a grave legislative body would pass two bills for dividing the same money; and it was to save the Senate from the ridicule of such a blunder that he called their attention to it, and proposed the amendment. Mr. Calhoun said there was a remedy for it in a few words, by adding a proviso of exception, if the land distribution bill became a law. Mr. Benton was utterly opposed to such a proviso-a proviso to take effect if the same thing did not become law in another bill. Mr. Morris also wished to know if the Senate was about to make a double distribution of the same money? As far it respected the action of the Senate the land bill was, to all intents and purposes, a law. It had passed the Senate, and they were done with it. It had changed its title from "bill" to "act." It was now the act of the Senate, and they could not know what disposition the House would make of it. Mr. Webster believed the land bill could not pass the House; that it was put to rest there; and therefore he had no objection to voting for the second one: thus admitting that, under the name of "distribution" the act could not pass the House, and that a change of name was indispensable. Mr. Wright made a speech of statements and facts to show that there would be no surplus; and taking up that idea, Mr. Benton spoke thus:

duties would promote the interests of manufactures. I cannot agree with the senator that those States would assume a position so utterly bankrupt Treasury, and in proving to the people that utter ruin must ensue from the removal ing, we come forward with unabated resolution of the deposits from the Bank of the United The same Senate, nothing abated in confidence from the failure of former predictions, is now engaged in celebrating the prosperity of the country, and proclaiming a surplus of forty, and fifty, and sixty millions of dollars in that same Treasury, which so short a time since they thought was going to be bankrupt. Both occupations are equally unfortunate. Treasury is in no more danger of bursting from distension now, than it was of collapsing from depletion then. The ghost of the panic was driven from this chamber in May, 1834, by the report of Mr. Taney, showing that all the sources of the national revenue were in their usual rich and bountiful condition; and that there was no danger of bankruptcy. The speech and statement, so brief and perspicuous, just delivered by the senator from New York [Mr. Wright], will perform the same office upon the distribution spirit, by showing that the appropriations of the session will require nearly as much money as the public Treasury will be found to contain. The present exaggerations about the surplus will have their day, as the panic about an empty Treasury had its day; and time, which corrects all things, will show the enormity of these errors which excite the public mind, and stimulate the public appetite, for a division of forty, fifty, and sixty millions of surplus treasure."

The bill being ordered to a third reading, with only six dissenting votes, the author of this View could not consent to let it pass without an attempt to stigmatize it, and render it odious to the people, as a distribution in disguise—as a deposit never to be reclaimed; as a miserable evasion of the constitution; as an attempt to debauch the people with their own money; as plundering instead of defending the country; as a cheat that would only last till the presidential election was over; for there would be no money to deposit after the first or second quarter; -and as having the inevitable effect, if not the intention, to break the deposit banks; and, finally, as disappointing its authors in their schemes of popularity: in which he was prophetic; as, out of half a dozen aspirants to the presidency, who voted for it, no one of them ever attained that place. The following are parts of his speech:

"I now come, Mr. President (continued Mr. B.), to the second subject in the bill—the distribution feature—and to which the objections are, not of detail, but of principle; but which objections are so strong, in the mind of myself and some friends, that, far from shrinking from the contest, and sneaking away in our little to renew our opposition, and to signalize our dissent; anxious to have it known that we contended to the last against the seductions of a measure, specious to the view, and tempting to the taste, but fraught with mischief and fearful consequences to the character of this government, and to the stability and harmony of this confederacy.

"Stripping this enactment of statutory verbiage, and collecting the provisions of the section into a single view, they seem to be these: 1. The public moneys, above a specific sum, are to be deposited with the States, in a specified ratio; 2. The States are to give certificates of deposit, payable to the United States; but no time, or contingency, is fixed for the payment: 3. The Secretary of the Treasury is to sell and assign the certificates, limited to a ratable proprotion of each, when necessary to meet appropriations made by Congress; 4. The certificates so assigned are to bear an interest of five per cent., payable half yearly; 5. To bear no interest before assignment; 6. The principal to be payable at the pleasure of the State.

This, Mr. President, is the enactment; and what is such an enactment? Sir, I will tell you what it is. It is, in name, a deposit; in form a loan; in essence and design, a distribution Names cannot alter things; and it is as idle to call a gift a deposit, as it would be to call a stab of the dagger a kiss of the lips. It is a distribution of the revenues, under the name of a deposit, and under the form of a loan. It is known to be so, and is intended to be so; and all this verbiage about a deposit is nothing but the device and contrivance of those who have been for years endeavoring to distribute the revenues, sometimes by the land bill, sometimes by direct propositions, and sometimes by proposed amendments to the constitution. Finding all these modes of accomplishing the object met and frustrated by the constitution, they fall upon this invention of a deposit, and exult in the success of an old scheme under a new name. That it is no deposit, but a free gift, and a regular distribution, is clear and demonstrable, not only from the avowed principles, declared intentions and systematic purposes of those who conduct the bill, but also from the means devised to & fect their object. Names are nothing. The thing done gives character to the transaction; and the imposition of an erroneous name cannot change that character. This is no deposit. It has no feature, no attribute, no characteristic no quality of a deposit. A deposit is a trust requiring the consent of two parties, leaving w one the rights of ownership, and imposing a the other the duties of trustee. The depositor retains the right of property, and reserves the privilege of resumption; the depositary is bound to restore. But here the right of property is parted with; the privilege of resumption # surrendered; the obligation to render back is minority of six, where we were left last even- not imposed. On the contrary, our money put where we cannot reach warrant cannot pursue it. 7 keep the money, free of interes ed to meet appropriations; an tary of the Treasury is-to do the State? No! but to sell a tificate; and the State is to pa interest half yearly, and the pleases. Now, these appropri be made. The members of yet born-the race of represer known-who will vote appro tional objects, to be paid out o treasuries. Sooner will the ta the price of public land be rais the assignability of the certifi by law. The contingency will which the Secretary is to assign will stand as a loan for ever, At the end of some years, the tion will be rescinded; the ce be cancelled by one general, un nious vote in Congress. The c posit, like the mask after a pla aside; and the delivery of the out to be, what it is now inter from the beginning. This will first chapter. And now, how the Senate to practise this inc do by a false name what cannot true one. The constitution, by ment of many who conduct th admit of a distribution of the further back than the last sessi the commencement of the preser position was made to amend the permit this identical distributi That proposition is now upon c the action of Congress. All at vered that a change of names w a change of the constitution. word 'distribute,' and insert tl at;' and, incontinently, the im moved: the constitution difficult ed; the division of the money This, at least, is quick work. It though not the exploit of the commits nobody, though not th the non-committal school. After admitted to be a very compenamending the constitution, and the framers of that instrument r to think of. Is this fancy, or is we legislating, or amusing oursel tasmagoria? Can we forget tha upon the calendar a proposition constitution, to effect this very d that the only difference between and this thirteenth section, is i the word 'deposit' for the word

"Having shown this pretended a distribution in disguise, and to non of the constitution, Mr. B. pr amine its effects, and to trace its quences upon the federal govern

bated resolution to signalize our wn that we conseductions of a and tempting to thief and fearful of this governharmony of this

of statutory versions of the secem to be these: specific sum, are es, in a specified ve certificates of | States; but no or the payment: iry is to sell and to a ratable proy to meet appro-The certificates terest of five per To bear no intee principal to be State.

enactment; and Sir, I will tell you eposit; in form, a n, a distribution nd it is as idle to d be to call a stab ps. It is a distrier the name of a of a loan. It is ded to be so; and sit is nothing but f those who have to distribute the and bill, sometimes ometimes by prostitution. Finding ing the object met tion, they fall upon d exult in the sucnew name. That rift, and a regular onstrable, not only eclared intentions, those who conduct eans devised to efare nothing. The to the transaction; neous name cannot s is no deposit. It no characteristic deposit is a trust parties, leaving to , and imposing on tee. The depositor y, and reserves the the depositary is he right of property e of resumption to render back rary, our money put where we cannot reach it. Our treasury warrant cannot pursue it. The States are to keep the money, free of interest, until is is needed to meet appropriations; and then the Secretary of the Treasury is-to do what ?-call upon the State? No! but to sell and assign the certificate; and the State is to pay the assignee an interest half yearly, and the principal when it pleases. Now, these appropriations will never be made. The members of Congress are not vet born-the race of representatives is not yet known-who will vote appropriations for national objects, to be paid out of their own State treasuries. Sooner will the tariff be revived, or the price of public land be raised. Sooner will the assignability of the certificate be repealed by law. The contingency will never arrive, on which the Secretary is to assign: so the deposit will stand as a loan for ever, without interest. At the end of some years, the nominal transaction will be rescinded; the certificates will all be cancelled by one general, unanimous, harmonious vote in Congress. The disguise of a deposit, like the mask after a play, will be thrown aside; and the delivery of the money will turn out to be, what it is now intended to be, a gift from the beginning. This will be the end of the first chapter. And now, how unbecoming in the Senate to practise this indirection, and to do by a false name what cannot be done by its true one. The constitution, by the acknowledgment of many who conduct this bill, will not admit of a distribution of the revenues. Not further back than the last session, and again at the commencement of the present session, a proposition was made to amend the constitution, to permit this identical distribution to be made. That proposition is now upon our calendar, for the action of Congress. All at once, it is discovered that a change of names will do as well as a change of the constitution. Strike out the vord 'distribute,' and insert the word 'depoat;' and, incontinently, the impediment is removed: the constitution difficulty is surmounted; the division of the money can be mac. This, at least, is quick work. It looks magical, though not the exploit of the magician. It commits nobody, though not the invention of the non-committal school. After all, it must be admitted to be a very compendious mode of amending the constitution, and such a one as the framers of that instrument never happened to think of. Is this fancy, or is it fact? we legislating, or amusing ourselves with phantasmagoria? Can we forget that we now have upon the calendar a proposition to amend the constitution, to effect this very distribution, and that the only difference between that resolution and this thirteenth section, is in substituting the word 'deposit' for the word 'distribute?'

"Having shown this pretended deposit to be a distribution in disguise, and to be a mere evanon of the constitution, Mr. B. proceeded to exnine its effects, and to trace its ruinous consequences upon the federal government and the States. It is brought forward as a temporary measure, as a single operation, as a thing to be done but once; but what career, either for good or for evil, ever stopped with the first step? It is the first step which costs the difficulty; that taken, the second becomes easy, and repetition habitual. Let this distribution, in this disguise, take effect; and future distribution will be common and regular. Every presidential election will bring them, and larger each time; as the consular elections in Rome, commencing with distributions of grain from the public granaries, went on to the exhibitions of games and shows, the remission of debts, largesses in money, lands, and provisions; until the rival candidates openly bid against each other, and the diadem of empire was put up at auction, and knocked down to the last and highest bidder. The purity of elections may not yet be affected in our young and vigorous country; but how long will it be before voters will look to the candidates for the magnitude of their distributions, instead of looking to them for the qualifications which the presidential office requires?

"The bad consequences of this distribution of money to the States are palpable and frightful. It is complicating the federal and State systems, and multiplying their points of contact and hazards of collision. Take it as ostensibly presented, that of a deposit or loan, to be repaid at some future time; then it is establishing the relation of debtor and creditor between them: a relation critical between friends, embarrassing between a State and its citizens; and eminently dangerous between confederate States and their common head. It is a relation always deprecated in our federal system. The land credit system was abolished by Congress, fifteen years ago, to get rid of the relation of debtor and creditor between the federal government and the citizens of the States; and seven or eight millions of debt, principal and interest, was then The collection of a large debt surrendered. from numerous individual debtors, was found to be almost impossible. How much worse if the State itself becomes the debtor! and more, if all the States become indebted together! Any attempt to collect the debt would be attended. first with ill blood, then with cancellation. It must be the representatives of the States who are to enforce the collection of the debt. This they would not do. They would stand together against the creditor. No member of Congress could vote to tax his State to raise money for the general purposes of the confederacy. No one could vote an appropriation which was to become a charge on his own State treasury. Taxation would first be resorted to, and the tariff and the public lands would become the fountain of supply to the federal government. Taken as a real transaction—as a deposit with the States, or a loan to the States—as this measure professes to be, and it is fraught with consequences adverse to the harmony of the federal system, and fraught with new burdens upon the customs, and upon the lands; taken as a fiction to avoid the constitution, as a John Doe and Richard Roe invention to convey a gift under the name of a deposit, and to effect a distribution under the disguise of a loan, and it is an artifice which makes derision of the constitution, lets down the Senate from its lofty station; and provides a facile way for doing any thing that any Congress may choose to do in all time to come. It is only to depose one word and instal another-it is merely to change a nameand the frowning constitution immediately smiles on the late forbidden attempt.

"To the federal government the consequences of these distributions must be deplorable and destructive. It must be remitted to the helpless condition of the old confederacy, depending for its supplies upon the voluntary contributions of the States. Worse than depending upon the voluntary contributions, it will be left to the gratuitous leavings, to the eleemosynary crumbs, which remain upon the table after the feast of the States is over. God grant they may not prove to be the feasts of the Lapithæ and Centaurs! But the States will be served first: and what remains may go to the objects of common defence and national concern for which the confederacy was framed, and for which the power of raising money was confided to Congress. The distribution bills will be passed first, and the appropriation bills afterwards; and every appropriation will be cut down to the lowest point, and kept off to the last moment. To stave off as long as possible, to reduce as low as possible, to defeat whenever possible, will be the tactics of federal legislation; and when at last some object of national expenditure has miraculously run the gauntlet of all these assaults, and escaped the perils of these multiplied dangers, behold the enemy still ahead, and the recapture which awaits the devoted appropriation, in the shape of an unexpended balance, on the first day of January then next ensuing. Thus it is already; distribution has occupied us all the session. A proposition to amend the constitution, to enable us to make the division, was brought in in the first month of the session. The land bill followed, and engrossed months, to the exclusion of national defence. Then came the deposit scheme, which absorbs the remainder of the session. For nearly seven months we have been occupied with distribution, and the Senate has actually passed two bills to effect the same object, and to divide the same identical money. Two bills to divide money, while one bill cannot be got through for the great objects of national defence named in the constitution. We are now near the end of the seventh month of the session. The day named by the Senate for the termination of the session is long passed by; the day fixed by the two Houses is close at hand. The year is half gone, and the season for labor largely lost; yet what is the state of the general, national, and most essential appropriations? Not a shilling is yet voted for fortifications; not a shilling for the ordnance; no thing for filling the empty ranks of the skeleton army; nothing for the new Indian treaties: nothing for the continuation of the Cumberland road; nothing for rebuilding the burnt-down Treasury; nothing for the custom-house in New Orleans; nothing for extinguishing the rights of private corporators in the Louisville canal and making that great thoroughfare free to the commerce of the West; nothing for the western armory, and arsenals in the States which have none; nothing for the extension of the circuit court system to the new States of the West and Southwest; nothing for improving the mint machinery; nothing for keeping the mints regularly supplied with metals for coining; nothing for the new marine hospitals; nothing for the expenses of the visitors now gone to the Military Academy; nothing for the chain of posts and the military road along the Western and Northwestern frontier. All these, and a long list of other objects, remain without a cent to this day; and those who have kept them off now coolly turn upon us, and say the money cannot be expended if appropriated, and that, on the first of January, it must fall into the surplus fund to be divided. Of the bills passed, many of the most essential character have been delay. ed for months, to the great injury of individuals and of the public service. Clerks and salaried officers have been borrowing money at usury to support their families, while we, wholly absorbed with dividing surpluses, were withholding from them their stipulated wages. Laborers at Harper's Ferry Armory have been without money to go to market for their families, and some have lived three weeks without meat, because we must attend to the distribution bills before we can attend to the pay bills. Disbursing officers have raised money on their own account, to supply the want of appropriations. Even the annual Indian Annuity Bill has but just got through; the Indians even-the poor Indians, as they were wont to be called-even they have had to wait, in want and misery for the annual stipends solemnly guarantied by treaties. All this has already taken place un der the deplorable influence of the distribution

"The progress which the distribution spirit has made in advaancing beyond its own pretensions, is a striking feature in the history of the case, and ominous of what may be expected from its future exactions. Originally the proposition was to divide the surplus. It was the surplus, and nothing but the surplus, which was to be taken; that bona fide and inevitable surplus which remained after all the defences were provided for, and all needed appropriations fully made. Now the defences are postponed and decried; the needful appropriations are rejected, stinted, and deferred, till they cannot be used; and, instead of the surplus, it is the integral revenue, it is the money in the Treasury, it is seized upon and divided out. ed balances which are now t sire and the prize of medi The word surplus is not in the which has figured in so man has been the subject of so which has been the cause of in the public mind, and of so n that word is not in the bill studiously, systematically exc of expression is adopted to co in the Treasury, a small sum appropriated by law to the necessary objects. A recapti priated money is intended; a dentical money which we at session is to be seized upon o January, torn away from the it was dedicated, and absorbed general distribution. And w cormorant appetite of distribu feeds, and becomes more rave It set out for the surplus; not expended balances, save five m it will take all. But it is sufficie the thing as it is; it is sufficien this bill as seizing upon the une on the first day of January, objects to which they are appr witness its effect upon the law the existence of the federal go

"Such, then, is the progress

tion spirit; a cormorant appeti

feeds, ravening as it gorges; se

priated moneys, and leaving the ment to starve upon crumbs, anition. But this appetite is n for this seizure. There is anot connected with the movements and founded in the deep-seated servation. For six months the been stimulated with the story of surplus money in the Tres months ago, the grave Senate States carried the rash joke of asseveration so far as to pass a b the distribution of that vast su land bill which was to do it, swelling dividends on the 1st da ing them out every ninety days, the splendid distribution of prize four million lottery, in eightee he commencement of the drawir months ago that we passed th attempts then made to convince they were deluded, were vain and four millions they were promi millions they were to have, sixt they began to want; and slates a just as busy then in figuring ou of the sixty-four millions, to be of July, as they now are in fig dividends under the forty, fifty, lions, which are to begin on the pext. And now behold the en ne ordnance; nos of the skeleton Indian treaties; f the Cumberland the burnt-down tom-house in New ishing the rights Louisville canal, zhfare free to the ig for the western States which have on of the circuit s of the West and roving the mint eping the mints tals for coining; ospitals; nothing s now gone to the for the chain of long the Western All these, and a in without a cent ave kept them off d say the money iated, and that, on Il into the surplus ills passed, many r have been delayury of individuals erks and salaried noney at usury to re, wholly absorb were withholding ages. Laborers at ve been without their families, and ss without meat, e distribution bills ay bills. Disbursy on their own acof appropriations. uity Bill has but ns even-the poor to be called-even at and misery, for ily guarantied by ly taken place un of the distribution distribution spirit nd its own pretenthe history of the may be expected Originally the prorplus. It was the surplus, which was and inevitable sur-I the defences were ppropriations fully postponed and de ations are rejected y cannot be used it is the integral the Treasury, it is aw, which is to be seized upon and divided out. It is the unexpended balances which are now the object of all desire and the prize of meditated distribution. The word surplus is not in the bill! that word. which has figured in so many speeches, which has been the subject of so much speculation. which has been the cause of so much delusion in the public mind, and of so much excited hope; that word is not in the bill! It is carefully. studiously, systematically excluded, and a form of expression is adopted to cover all the money in the Treasury, a small sum excepted, although appropriated by law to the most sacred and necessary objects. A recapture of the appropriated money is intended; and thus the very identical money which we appropriate at this session is to be seized upon on the first day of January, torn away from the objects to which it was dedicated, and absorbed in the fund for general distribution. And why? because the cormorant appetite of distribution grows as it feeds, and becomes more ravenous as it gorges. It set out for the surplus; now it takes the unexpended balances, save five millions; next year it will take all. But it is sufficient to contemplate the thing as it is; it is sufficient to contemplate this bill as seizing upon the unexpended balances on the first day of January, regardless of the objects to which they are appropriated; and to witness its effect upon the laws, the policy, and the existence of the federal government.

Such, then, is the progress of the distribution spirit; a cormorant appetite, growing as it feeds, ravening as it gorges; scizing the appropriated moneys, and leaving the federal government to starve upon crumbs, and to die of inanition. But this appetite is not the sole cause for this seizure. There is another reason for it, connected with the movements in this chamber, and founded in the deep-seated law of self-preservation. For six months the public mind has been stimulated with the story of sixty millions of surplus money in the Treasury; and two months ago, the grave Senate of the United States carried the rash joke of that illusory asseveration so far as to pass a bill to commence the distribution of that vast sum. It was the land bill which was to do it, commencing its swelling dividends on the 1st day of July, dealing them out every ninety days, and completing the splendid distribution of prizes, in the sixtyfour million lottery, in eighteen months from he commencement of the drawing. It was two months ago that we passed this bill; and all attempts then made to convince the people that they were deluded, were vain and useless. Sixtyfour millions they were promised, sixty-four millions they were to have, sixty-four millions they began to want; and slates and pencils were just as busy then in figuring out the dividends of the sixty-four millions, to begin on the 1st of July, as they now are in figuring out the dividends under the forty, fifty, and sixty millions, which are to begin on the 1st of January pext. And now behold the end of the first chapter. The 1st of July is come, but the sixtyfour millions are not in the Treasury! It is not there; and any attempt to commence the distribution of that sum, according to the terms of the land bill, would bankrupt the Treasury, stop the government, and cause Congress to be called together, to levy taxes or make loans. So much for the land bill, which two months ago received all the praises which are now bestowed upon the deposit bill. So the drawing had to be postponed, the performance had to be adjourned, and the 1st of January was substituted for the 1st of July. This gives six months to go upon, and defers the catastrophe of the mountain in labor until the presidential election is over. Still the first of January must come; and the ridicule would be too great, if there was nothing, or next to nothing, to divide. And nothing, or next to nothing, there would be, if the appropriations were fairly made, and made in time, and if nothing but a surplus was left to divide. There would be no more in the deposit bank, in that event, than has usually been in the Bank of the United States—say ten, or twelve, or fourteen, or sixteen millions; and from which, in the hands of a single bank, none of those dangers to the country were then seen which are now discovered in like sums in three dozen unconnected and independent banks. Even after all the delays and reductions in the appropriations, the surplus will now be but a trifle-such a trifle as must expose to ridicule, or something worse, all those who have tantalized the public with the expectation of forty, fifty, or sixty millions to divide. To avoid this fate, and to make up something for distribution, then, the unexpended balances have been fallen upon; the law of 1795 is nullified; the fiscal year is changed; the policy of the government subverted; reason, justice, propriety outraged; all contracts, labor, service, salaries cut off, interrupted, or reduced; appropriations recaptured, and the government paralyzed. Sir, the people are deceived; they are made to believe that a surplus only, an unavoidable surplus, is to be divided, when the fact is that appropriated moneys are to be seized.

"Sir, I am opposed to the whole policy of this measure. I am opposed to it as going to sap the foundations of the Federal Government, and to undo the constitution, and that by evasion, in the very point for which the constitution was made. What is that point? A Treasury! a Treasury! a Treasury of its own, unconnected with, and independent of the States. It was for this that wise and patriotic men wrote, and spoke, and prayed for the fourteen years that intervened from the declaration of independence, in 1776, to the formation of the constitution in 1789. It was for this that so many appeals were made, so many efforts exerted, so many fruitless attempts so long repeated, to obtain from the States the power of raising revenue from imports. It was for this that the convention of 1787 met, and but for this they never would have met. The formation of a federal treasury, unconnected with the States, and indepenent of the States, was the cause of the meeting of that convention; it was the great object of its labors; it was the point to which all its exertions tended, and it was the point at which failure would have been the failure of the whole object of the meeting, of the whole frame of the general government, and of the whole design of the constitution. With infinite labor, pains, and difficulty, they succeeded in erecting the edifice of the federal treasury; we, not builders, but destroyers, "architects of ruin," undo in a night what they accomplished in many years. We expunge the federal treasury; we throw the federal government back upon States for supplies; we unhinge and undo the constitution; and we effect our purpose by an artifice which derides, mocks, ridicules that sacred instrument, and opens the way to its perpetual evasion by every paltry performer that is able to dethrone one word, and exalt

another in its place.

"I object to the time for another reason. There is no necessity to act at all upon this subject, at this session of Congress. The distribution is not to take effect until after we are in session again, and when the true state of the treasury shall be known. Its true state cannot be known now; but enough is known to make it questionable whether there will be any surplus, requiring a specific disposition, over and beyond the wants of the country. Many appropriations are yet behind; two Indian wars are yet to be finished; when the wars are over, the vanquished Indians are to be removed to the West; and when there, either the Federal Government or the States must raise a force to protect the people from them. Twenty-five thousand Creeks, seven thousand Seminoles, eighteen thousand Cherokees, and others, making a totality of seventy-two thousand, are to be removed; and the expenses of removal, and the year's subsistence afterwards, is close upon seventy dollars per head. It is a problem whether there will be any surplus worth disposing of. The surplus party themselves admit there will be a disappointment unless they go beyond the surplus, and seize the appropriated moneys. The Senator from New-York [Mr. Wright], has made an exposition, as candid and perspicuous as it is patriotic and unanswerable. showing that there will be an excess of appropriations over the money in the treasury on the day that we adjourn; and that we shall have to depend upon the accruing revenue of the remainder of the year to meet the demands which we authorize. This is the state of the surplus question: problematical, debatable; the weight of the evidence and the strength of the argument entirely against it; time enough to ascertain the truth, and yet a determination to reject all evidence, refuse all time, cost what it may to the constitution, the gov. ernment, the good of the States, and the purity of elections. The catastrophe of the land bill project ought certainly to be a warning to us, Two months ago it was pushed through as the only means of saving the country, as the blessed act which was to save the republic. It was to commence on the first day of July its magnificent operations of distributing sixty. four millions; now it lies a corpse in the House of Representatives, a monument of haste and folly, its very authors endeavoring to super-sede it by another measure, because it could not take effect without ruining the country: and, what is equally important to them, ruining themselves.

"Admitting that the year produces more revenue than is wanting, is it wise, is it states. manlike, is it consonant with our experience to take fright at the event, and throw the money away? Did we not have forty millions of income in the year 1817? and did we not have an empty treasury in 1819? Instead of taking fright and throwing the money away, the statesman should look into the cause of things; he should take for his motto the prayer of Virgil: Cognoscere causa rerum. Let me know the cause of things; and, learning this cause, act accordingly. If the redundant supply is accidental and transient, it will quickly correct itself; if founded in laws, alter them. This is the part not merely of wisdom, but of common sense: it was the conduct of 1817. when the excessive supply was seen to be the effect of transient causes-termination of the war and efflorescence of the paper system-and left to correct itself, which it did in two years It should be the conduct now, when the excessive income is seen to be the effect of the laws and the paper system combined, and when legislation or regulation is necessary to correct it Reduction of the tariff; reduction of the price of land to actual settlers; rejection of bank paper from universal receivability for public dues; these are the remedies. After all, the whole evil may be found in a single cause, and the whole remedy may be seen in a single measure. The public lands are exchangeable for paper. Seven hundred and fifty machines are at work striking off paper; that paper is performing the grand rounds, from the banks to the public lands, and from the lands to the banks. Every body, especially a public man may take as much as his trunks can carry The public domain is changing into paper; th. public treasury is filling up with paper; the new States are deluged with paper; the currency is ruining with paper; farmers, settlers, cultvators, are outbid, deprived of their selected homes, or made to pay double for them, by public men loaded, not like Philip's ass, with bags of gold, but like bank advocates, with bales of paper. Sir, the evil is in the unbrided state of the paper system, and in the unchedel ruen on to the object, and divide the money, receivability of paper for federal dues. Here the evil. Banks are our mast seven hundred and fifty! a federal Congress, like a chain slave, lies helpless and powerle

"Sir, I can see nothing b which side I may, from this fa riding money; not surplus me priated funds; not by an amei derisory evasion of the constitu to end? History shows us tha revolutions never end them : the mence innovations never limit a great innovation, constituting in figure of speech, but in real in the form of our government divide the surplus; we are r appropriated funds. To preve tions except to the powerful Si next step; and the small State must oppose all appropriations, vision of the whole. They wi together in the Senate, and opp tions. It will not do for the take all the appropriations fir of the distribution afterwards be no way to prevent it but to priations, divide out the mo States, and let each State lay A new surplus party will super surplus party, as successive fac each other in chaotic revoluti make Congress the quæstor of lect money for the States to ac will be their argument: the S what they need, and can lay or the best advantage, and to suit t State will want roads and no canals and no roads; one will other troops; one wants ships. cars; one wants high school chools; one is for the useful for the fine arts, for lyceums, atl ms, arts, statuary, painting, r paper State will want all for ba things go on, and Congress will wriation to make, except to the is head clerks, and their under urown pay, like it was under on, may be remitted to our ow ight dollars a day may be vote apported by the argument tha tter men for four dollars a da alf the money, and have the wo uch is the progress in this roa say of this measure, as I said r, the land bill: if I could be ni pass, that good might come willing to let this bill pass. on, a revulsion must take pla deracy cannot go to ruin. Thi ace in the hearts of the people v from nullification in disguise, a llification in arms. One word now ten years since schemes

re broached upon this floor. Vol. I.—42

tution, the govs, and the purity of the land bill warning to us. shed through, as country, as the the republic. It day of July its stributing sixtyrpse in the House ent of haste and voring to superbecause it could ing the country; it to them, ruining produces more rewise, is it statesh our experience, t, and throw the have forty millions and did we not 9? Instead of takmoney away, the he cause of things; tto the prayer of rerum. Let me and, learning this he redundant supent, it will quickly laws, alter them. of wisdom, but of conduct of 1817, was seen to be the -termination of the paper system-and it did in two years. ow, when the excesne effect of the laws ned, and when legisssary to correct it. luction of the price ; rejection of bank eivability for public lies. After all, the a single cause, and seen in a single meare exchangeable for I fifty machines are ; that paper is perfrom the banks to m the lands to the scially a public man s trunks can carry ging into paper; th. up with paper; the h paper; the currency mers, settlers, cultved of their selected double for them, by ke Philip's ass, with ank advocates with vil is in the unbrided and in the unchecked federal dues. Herei the evil. Banks are our masters; not one, but seven hundred and fifty! and this splendid federal Congress, like a chained and chastised slave, lies helpless and powerless at their feet. "Sir, I can see nothing but evil, turn on which side I may, from this fatal scheme of diriding money; not surplus money, but appropriated funds; not by an amendment, but by a derisory evasion of the constitution. Where is it to end? History shows us that those who begin revolutions never end them; that those who commence innovations never limit them. Here is a great innovation, constituting in reality-not in figure of speech, but in reality—a revolution in the form of our government. We set out to divide the surplus; we are now dividing the appropriated funds. To prevent all appropriations except to the powerful States, will be the next step; and the small States, in self-defence, must oppose all appropriations, and go for a division of the whole. They will have to stand together in the Senate, and oppose all appropria-tions. It will not do for the large States to take all the appropriations first, and the bulk of the distribution afterwards; and there will be no way to prevent it but to refuse all appropriations, divide out the money among the States, and let each State lay it out for itself. A new surplus party will supersede the present surplus party, as successive factions supersede each other in chaotic revolutions. They will make Congress the quæstor of provinces, to collect money for the States to administer. This will be their argument: the States know best what they need, and can lay out the money to the best advantage, and to suit themselves. One State will want roads and no canals; another canals and no roads; one will want forts, another troops; one wants ships, another steamears; one wants high schools, another low chools; one is for the useful arts, another is for the fine arts, for lyceums, athenæums, museums, arts, statuary, painting, music; and the mper State will want all for banks. Thus will ings go on, and Congress will have no appropriation to make, except to the President, and is head clerks, and their under clerks. Even urown pay, like it was under the confederaion, may be remitted to our own States. The ight dollars a day may be voted to them, and apported by the argument that they can get etter men for four dollars a day; and so save alf the money, and have the work better done. uch is the progress in this road to ruin. Sir. say of this measure, as I said of its progenir, the land bill: if I could be willing to let willing to let this bill pass. A recoil, a reacon, a revulsion must take place. This con-deracy cannot go to ruin. This Union has a ace in the hearts of the people which will save from nullification in disguise, as well as from illification in arms. One word of myself. It now ten years since schemes of distribution

Vol. I.—42

re broached upon this floor. They began with a senator from New Jersey, now Secretary of the navy (Mr. Dickerson). denounced by many, for their unconstitutionality, their corrupting tendencies, and their fatal effects upon the federal and State governments. I took my position then, have stood upon it during all the modifications of the original scheme; and continue standing upon it now. My answer then was, pay the public debt and reduce the taxes; my answer now is, provide for the public defences, reduce the taxes, and bridle the paper system. On this ground I have stood-on this I stand; and never did I feel more satisfaction and more exultation in my vote, when triumphant in numbers, than I now do in a minority of six."

The bill went to the House, and was concurred in by a large majority—one hundred and fiftyfive to thirty-eight-although, under the name of distribution, there was no chance for it to pass that House. Deeming the opposition of this small minority courageous as well as meri torious, and deserving to be held in honorable remembrance, their names are here set down; to wit:

Messrs. Michael W. Ash, James M. H. Beale, Benning M. Bean, Andrew Beaumont, John W. Brown, Robert Burns, John F. H. Claiborne, Walter Coles, Samuel Cushman, George C. Dromgoole, John Fairfield, William K. Fuller, Ransom H. Gillet, Joseph Hall, Thomas L. Hamer, Leonard Jarvis, Cave Johnson, Gerrit Y. Lansing, Gideon Lee, George Loyall, Abijah Mann, jr., John Y. Mason, James J. McKay, John McKeon, Isaac McKim, Gorham Parks, Franklin Pierce, Henry L. Pinckney, John Roane, James Rogers, Nicholas Sickles, William Taylor, Francis Thomas, Joel Turrill, Aaron Vanderpoel, Aaron Ward, Daniel Wardweil. Henry A. Wise.

The bill passed the House, and was approved by the President, but with a repugnance of feeling, and a recoil of judgment, which it required great efforts of friends to overcome; and with a regret for it afterwards which he often and publicly expressed. It was a grief that his name was seen to such an act. It was a most unfortunate act, a plain evasion of the constitution for a bad purpose-soon gave a sad overthrow to the democracy—and disappointed every calculation made upon it. Politically, it was no advantage to its numerous and emulous supporters-of no disservice to its few determined opponents-only four in number, in the Senate, the two senators from Mississippi voting against it. for reasons found in the constitution of their

that body, what could have better prospects of success, committee which had had the subject.

"Mr. B. said he had wished a select committee for the chathe wished to have revived without circulation, and to the government from the ban He had failed in his attemnommittee; and, as an indicate the senate, he could now do not it in debate the ideas white wished to have ripened into I the instrumentality of a committee in the instrumental interpretation in the instrumental interpre

"Mr. B. said he had dem bank of circulation ought to this district; and, he would furnish currency, except of to be authorized any where: doing? We are breeding six at a birth, to issue $2,250,000 ( and on what terms? No bon capital; none on the circulati of interest in lieu of bonus but what the stockholders ple no liability on the part of the failure of these corporations notes and pay their debts. Th doing; and now let us see w taxes these six corporations the business part of the comr. ductive classes among which th petuated. First, there is the six corporation governments; must have a government, like dom; and the persons who corporation governments must by the people, and that accord fixed by themselves and not Each of these six banks must he cashier, clerks, and messengers; lic to protest notes; and its at suits. The aggregate salaries, f sites, of all these officers of th be the first tax on the people. profits to the stockholders, T of banks are usually eight to t present; the gross profits are s more; and the gross profits are pay. Assuming the gross profit

State. To the States, it was of no advantage, raising expectations which were not fulfilled, and upon which many of them acted as realities, and commenced enterprises to which they were inadequate. It was understood that some of Mr. Van Buren's friends favored the President's approval, and recommended him to sign it-induced by the supposed effect which its rejection might have on the democratic party in the election. The opponents of the bill did not visit the President to give him their opinions, nor had he heard their arguments. If they had seen him, their opinions concurring with his own feelings and judgment, his conduct might have been different, and the approval of the act withheld. It might not have prevented the act from becoming a law, as two thirds in each House might have been found to support it; but it would have deprived the bill of the odor of his name, and saved himself from subsequent regrets. In a party point of view, it was the commencement of calamities, being an efficient cause in that general suspension of specie payments, which quickly occurred, and brought so much embarrassment on the Van Buren administration, ending in the great democratic defeat of 1840. But of this hereafter.

CHAPTER CXLIII.

RECHARTER OF THE DISTRICT BANKS—SPEECH OF MR. BENTON: THE PARTS OF LOCAL AND TEMPORARY INTEREST OMITTED.

"MR. BENTON rose to oppose the passage of the bill, notwithstanding it was at the third reading, and that it was not usual to continue opposition, which seemed to be useless, at that late stage. But there were occasions when he never took such things into calculation, and when he continued to resist pernicious measures, regardless of common usages, as long as the forms of parliamentary proceeding would allow him to go on. Thus he had acted at the passing of the United States Bank charter, in 1832; thus he did at the passing of the resolution against President Jackson, in 1834; and thus he did at the passing of the famous land bill, at the present session. He had continued to speak against all these measures, long after speaking seemed to be of any avail; and, far from regretting, he had reason to rejoice at the course that he had pursued. The event proved him to be right; for all these measures, though floated through this chamber upon the swelling wave of a resistless and impatient majority, had quickly run their brief career. Their day of triumph had been short. The bank charter perished at the first general election; the condemnatory resolution was received by the continent in a tempest of execration; and the land bill, that last hope of expiring party, has dropped an abortion from the Senate. It is dead even here, in this chamber, where it originated—where it was once so omnipotent that, to speak against it, was deemed by some to be an idle consumption of time and by others to be an unparliamentary demonstra. tion against the ascertained will of the House Yet, that land bill is finished. That brief candle is out. The Senate has revoked that bill has retracted, recanted, and sung its palinode over that unfortunate conception. It has sent out a committee-an extraordinary committee of nine-to devise some other scheme for dividing that same money which the land bill divides! and, in doing so, the Senate has authentically declared a change of opinion, and a revocation of its sentiments in favor of that bill. Thus it has happened, in recent and signal cases, that by continuing the contest after the battle seemed to be lost, the battle was in fact gained; and so it may be again. These charters may yet be defeated; and whether they will be or not is nothing to me. I believe them to be wronggreatly, immeasurably wrong !- and shall continue to oppose them without regard to calculations, or consequences, until the rules of parliamentary proceeding shall put an end to the contest. Mr. B. said he had moved for a select committee, at the commencement of the session. to examine into the condition of these banks and he had done so with no other object than to endeavor to provide some checks and guarts for the security of the country against the abuse and excesses of the paper system. The select committee had not been raised. The standing Committee on the District of Columbia had been charged with the subject; and, seeing that they had made a report adverse to his opinions, and brought in a bill which he could not sanction, it would be his part to act upon the meager materials which had been placed before the See ste, and endeavor to accomplish as a member of that body, what could have been attempted, with better prospects of success, as a member of a committee which had had the management of the subject.

egretting, he had

that he had pur-

to be right; for

ted through this

ve of a resistless

uickly run their riumph had been

rished at the first

natory resolution

it in a tempest of that last hope of an abortion from

ere, in this cham-

ere it was once so nst it, was deemed ption of time, and

entary demonstra-

will of the House.

That brief can-revoked that bill;

sung its palinode

otion. It has sent rdinary committee

r scheme for divid-

he land bill divides!

has authentically

a, and a revocation

that bill. Thus it

1 signal cases, that, er the battle seemed fact gained; and so

narters may yet be

will be or not, is

them to be wrong-

ng !-and shall con-

ut regard to calcula-

il the rules of par-

1 put an end to the d moved for a select

ement of the session

ion of these banks,

no other object than

e checks and guards

ry against the abuses system. The select aised. The standing of Columbia had been

and, seeing that they

to his opinions, and could not sanction

act upon the meagne

placed before the Ser

"Mr. B. said he had wished to have been on aselect committee for the charter of these banks; he wished to have revived the idea of a bank without circulation, and to have disconnected the government from the banking of the district. He had failed in his attempt to raise such a committee; and, as an individual member of the Senate, he could now do no more than mention in debate the ideas which he would have wished to have ripened into legislation through the instrumentality of a committee.

"Mr. B. said he had demonstrated that no bank of circulation ought to be authorized in this district; and, he would add, that none to furnish currency, except of large notes, ought to be authorized any where; yet what are we doing? We are breeding six little corporations at a birth, to issue $2,250,000 of paper currency: and on what terms? No bonus; no tax on the capital; none on the circulation; no reduction of interest in lieu of bonus or tax; no specie but what the stockholders please to put in; and no liability on the part of the stockholders for a failure of these corporations to redeem their notes and pay their debts. This is what we are doing; and now let us see what burdens and taxes these six corporations will impose upon the business part of the community-the productive classes among which they are to be perpetuated. First, there is the support of these six corporation governments; for every bank must have a government, like a State or kingdom: and the persons who administer these corporation governments must be paid, and paid. by the people, and that according to the rates fixed by themselves and not by the people. Each of these six banks must have its president. cashier, clerks, and messengers; its notary public to protest notes; and its attorney to bring suits. The aggregate salaries, fees, and perquisites, of all these officers of the six banks will be the first tax on the people. Next comes the profits to the stockholders. The nett profits of banks are usually eight to ten per cent. at present; the gross profits are several per cent. more; and the gross profits are what the people per cent., and the annual levy upon the community will be about $270,000. The third loss to the community will be on the fluctuations of prices of labor and property, and the rise and fall of stocks, from the expansions and contractions of currency, produced by making money plenty or scarce, as it suits the interest of the bank managers. This item cannot be calculated, and depends entirely upon the moderation and consciences of the Neptunes who preside over the flux and reflux of the paper ocean; and to whom all tides, whether of ebb or flow, and all conditions of the sea, whether of calm or storm, are equally welcome, equally auspicious, and equally productive. Then come three other heads of loss to the community, and of profit to the bank: loss of notes from wear and tear, counterfeits imposed upon the people for good notes, and good notes rejected by the banks for counterfeits; and then the loss to the holders from the stoppage and failure of banks, and the shav ing in of notes and stocks. Such are the bur dens and taxes to be imposed upon the people to give them a paper currency, when, if the paper currency were kept away, and only large notes used, as in France, they would have a gold and silver currency without paying a tax to any body for it, and without being subject to any of the frightful evils resulting from the paper system.

"Objecting to all banks of circulation, but not able to suppress them entirely, Mr. B. suggested some ameliorations in the charters proposed to be granted to render them less dangerous to the community. 1. The liability of the stockholders for all the debts of the institution, as in the Scottish banks. 2. The bank stock to be subject to taxation, like other property. 3. To issue or receive no note of less than twenty dollars. 4. The charters to be repealable at the will of Congress: and he gave reasons for each of these improvements; and first for the liability of the stockholders. He said:

icto protest notes; and its attorney to bring suits. The aggregate salaries, fees, and perquisites, of all these officers of the six banks will be the first tax on the people. Next comes the profits to the stockholders. The nett profits of banks are usually eight to ten per cent. at present; the gross profits are several per cent. at more; and the gross profits are what the people pay. Assuming the gross profits to be twelve in the distribution of this liability were strong and palpable. A man that owes should pay while has property to pay with; and it is iniquitous and unjustifiable that a bank director, or stockholder, should riot in wealth while the business part of the community should hold the bank notes which they have put into circulation, and be able to get nothing for them after the bank had closed its doors. Such exemptions are some trary to the rights of the community, and one of the great causes of the failure of banks. A liability in the stockbrokers is one of the best securities which the public can have for the correct management and solvency of the institution. The famous Scottish banks, which, in upwards of one hundred years' operations, had neither once convulsed the country with contractions and expansions, nor once stopped payment, were constituted upon this principle. All the country banks in England, and all the bankers on the continent of Europe, were liable to a still greater degree; for in them each stockholder, or partner, was liable, individually, for the whole amount of the debts of the bank. The principle proposed to be incorporated in these charters strikes the just medium between the common law principle, which makes each partner liable for the whole debts of the firm; and the corporation principle in the United States, which absolves each from all liability, and leaves the penniless and soulless carcase of a defunct and eviscerated bank alone responsible to the community. Liability to the amount of the stock was an equitable principle, and with summary process for the recovery of the amounts of notes and deposits, and the invalidity of transfers of stock to avoid this liability, would be found a good remedy for a great evil. If the stockholders in the three banks which stopped payment in this city during the panic session had been thus liable, the notes would not have been shaved out of the hands of the holders; if the bank which stopped in Batimore at the same time, had been subject to this principle, the riots, which have afflicted that city in consequence of that stoppage, would not have taken place. Instead of these losses and riots, law and remedy would have prevailed; every stockholder would have been summoned before a justice of the peace—judgment granted against him on motion -for the amount held by the complainant; and so on, until all were paid, or he could plead that he had paid up the whole amount of his stock."

The evil of small notes he classed under three general heads: 1. The banishment of gold and silver. 2. Encouragement to counterfeiting. 3. Throwing the burthens and losses of the paper system upon the laboring and smalldealing part of the community, who have no share in the profits of banking, and should not be made to bear its losses. On these points, he said: feiting was chiefly directed! They were the

"The instinct of banks to sink their circulation to the lowest denomination of notes which can be forced upon the community, is a trait in the system universally proved to exist wherever banks of circulation have been permitted to give a currency to a country; and the effect of that instinct has always been to banish gold and silver. When the Bank of England was chartered, in the year 1694, it could issue no note less than £100 sterling; that amount was gradually reduced by the persevering efforts of the bank, to £50; then to £20; then to £15: then to £10; at last to £5; and finally to £2 and £1. Those last denominations were not reached until the year 1797, or until one hundred and three years after the institution of the bank; and as the several reductions in the size of the notes, and the consequent increase of paper currency took place, gold became more and more scarce; and with the issue of the one and two pound notes, it totally disappeared from the country.

"This effect was foretold by all political economists, and especially by Mr. Burke, then aged and retired from public life, who wrote from his retreat, to Mr. Canning, to say to Mr. Pitt, the Prime Minister, these prophetic words: 'If this bill for the one and two pounds is permitted to pass, we shall never see another guinea in England.' The bill did pass, and the prediction was fulfilled; for not another guinea, half guinea, or sovereign, was seen in England, for circulation, until the bill was repealed two and twenty years afterwards! After remaining nearly a quarter of a century without a gold circulation, England abolished her one and two pound notes, limited her paper currency to £5 sterling, required all Bank of England notes to be paid in gold, and allowed four years for the act to take effect. Before the four years were out, the Bank of England reported to Parliament that it was ready to begin gold payments; and commenced accordingly, and has continued them ever since.

"The encouragement of counterfeiting was the next great evil which Mr. B. pointed out as be longing to a small note currency; and of all the denominations of notes, he said those of one and two pounds in England (corresponding with fives and tens in the United States), were those to which the demoralizing business of counter-chosen game of the forging that, for the obvious reasons t were small enough to pass cur sons not much acquainted wit large enough to afford some sate for the expense and labor counterfeit, and the risk of p fives, the profits are too small risk. Too many have to be t before an article of any value and the change to be got in one for a small article, is too ! and upwards, though the pre passing them, yet the dange also greater. On account of note is not only more closely it is received, and the passer o bered, but the circulation of t fined to business men and I silver change will not be given ing small articles. The fives the United States, like the £ land, are the peculiar game and this is fully proved by the of the forgery department in According to returns made to t ment for twenty-two years-fi -the period in which the one notes were allowed to circu number of prosecutions for ( passing counterfeit notes of t land, was 998: in that number capital convictions; 530 inferior 155 acquittals: and the sum of million and a quarter of dolla ed by the bank in attending Of this great number of prose turns show that the mass of offences connected with the on notes. The proportion may b in the number of counterfeit n denominations detected at the in a given period of time-January, 1812, to the 10th of Al a period of six years and three the twenty-two years that th pound notes continued to circul tions were, of one pound notes 107,238; of two pound notes, pound notes, 5,826; of ten po of twenty pound notes, 54. Of pounds, 35. The proportion of their circula of notes which y, is a trait in exist wherever permitted to nd the effect of to banish gold f England was could issue no at amount was ering efforts of ; then to £15. id finally to £2 itions were not atil one hundred titution of the tions in the size ent increase of ld became more issue of the one ally disappeared

by all political Mr. Burke, then life, who wrote ng, to say to Mr. prophetic words: vo pounds is peree another guinea s, and the predicother guinea, half 1 in England, for repealed two and After remaining y without a gold 1 her one and two er currency to £5 England notes to four years for the e four years were rted to Parliament old payments; and nas continued them interfeiting was the pointed out as be ney; and of all the id those of one and corresponding with States), were those usiness of counter!! They were the chosen game of the forging depredator! and that, for the obvious reasons that fives and tens were small enough to pass currently among persons not much acquainted with bank paper, and large enough to afford some profit to compensate for the expense and labor of producing the counterfeit, and the risk of passing it. Below fives, the profits are too small for the labor and risk. Too many have to be forged and passed before an article of any value can be purchased; and the change to be got in silver, in passing one for a small article, is too little. Of twenty and upwards, though the profit is greater on passing them, yet the danger of detection is also greater. On account of its larger size, the note is not only more closely scrutinized before it is received, and the passer of it better remembered, but the circulation of them is more confined to business men and large dealers, and silver change will not be given for them in buying small articles. The fives and tens, then, in the United States, like the £1 and £2 in England, are the peculiar game of counterfeiters, and this is fully proved by the criminal statistics of the forgery department in both countries. According to returns made to the British Parliament for twenty-two years—from 1797 to 1819 -the period in which the one and two pound notes were allowed to circulate, the whole number of prosecutions for counterfeiting, or passing counterfeit notes of the Bank of England, was 998: in that number there were 313 capital convictions; 530 inferior convictions; and 155 acquittals: and the sum of £249,900, near a million and a quarter of dollars, was expended by the bank in attending to prosecutions. Of this great number of prosecutions, the returns show that the mass of them were for offences connected with the one and two pound notes. The proportion may be distinctly seen in the number of counterfeit notes of different denominations detected at the Bank of England in a given period of time-from the 1st of January, 1812, to the 10th of April, 1818—being a period of six years and three months out of the twenty-two years that the one and two pound notes continued to circulate. The detections were, of one pound notes, the number of 107,238; of two pound notes, 17,787; of five pound notes, 5,826; of ten pound notes, 419; of twenty pound notes, 54. Of all above twenty to the other sizes may be well seen in the tables for this brief period; but to have any idea of the mass of counterfeiting done upon those small notes, the whole period of twenty-two years must be considered, and the entire kingdom of Great Britain taken in; for the list only includes the number of counterfeits detected at the counter of the bank; a place to which the guilty never carry their forgeries, and to which a portion only of those circulating in and about London could be carried. The proportion of crime connected with the small notes is here shown to be enormously and frightfully great. The same results are found in the United States. Mr. B. had looked over the statistics of crime connected with the counterfeiting of bank notes in the United States, and found the ratio between the great and small notes to be about the same that it was in England. He had had recourse to the most authentic data-Bicknell's Counterfeit Detector-and there found the editions of counterfeit notes of the local or State banks, to be eight hundred and eighteen, of which seven hundred and fifty-six were of ten dollars and under; and sixty-two editions only were of twenty dollars and upwards. Of the Bank of the United States and its branches, he found eighty-two editions of fives; seventy-one editions of tens; twenty-six editions of twenties; and two editions of fifties; still showing that in the United States, as well as in England, on local banks as well as that of the United States, the course of counterfeiting was still the same; and that the whole stress of the crime fell upon the five and ten dollar notes in this country, and their corresponding classes, the one and two pound notes in England. Mr. B. also exhibited the pages of Bicknell's Counterfeit Detector, a pamphlet covered over column after column with its frightful lists, nearly all under twenty dollars; and he called upon the Senate in the sacred name of the morals of the country-in the name of virtue and morality-to endeavor to check the fountain of this crime, by stopping the issue of the description of notes on which it exerted nearly its whole force.

ions were, of one pound notes, the number of l07,238; of two pound notes, 17,787; of five pound notes, 5,826; of ten pound notes, 419; of twenty pound notes, 54. Of all above twenty pounds, 35. The proportion of ones and twos them, and the still greater difficulty (in most cases impossible) of getting witnesses to attend in person, in States in which they do not reside, the counterfeiters all choosing to practise their crime and circulate their forgeries in States which do not contain the banks whose paper they are imitating. So difficult is it to obtain the attendance of witnesses in other States, that the crime of counterfeiting is almost practised with impunity. The notes under $20 feed and supply this crime; let them be stopped, and ninety-nine hundredths of this crime will stop with them.

ANNO

"A third objection which Mr. B. urged against the notes under twenty dollars was, that nearly the whole evils of that part of the paper system fell upon the laboring and small dealing part of the community. Nearly all the counterfeits lodged in their hands, or were shaved out of their hands. When a bank failed, the mass of its circulation being in small notes, sunk upon their hands. The gain to the banks from the wear and tear of small notes, came out of them; the loss from the same cause, falling upon them. The ten or twelve per cent, annual profit for furnishing a currency in place of gold and silver (for which no interest would be paid to the mint or the government), chiefly falls upon them; for the paper currency is chiefly under twenty dollars. These evils they almost exclusively bear, while they have, over and above all these, their full proportion of all the evils resulting from the expansions and contractions which are incessantly going on, totally destroying the standard of value, periodically convulsing the country; and in every cycle of five or six years making a lottery of all property, in which all the prizes are drawn by bank managers and their friends.

"He wished the basis of circulation throughout the country to be in hard money. Farmers, laborers, and market people, ought to receive their payments in hard money. They ought not to be put to the risk of receiving bank notes in all their small dealings. They are no judges of good or bad notes. Counterfeits are sure to fall upon their hands; and the whole business of counterfeiting was mainly directed to such notes as they handle—those under twenty dollars.

"Mr. B. said he here wished to fix the attention of those who were in favor of a respectable paper currency—a currency of respectable-sized notes of twenty dollars and upwards-on the great fact, that the larger the specie basis, the larger and safer would be the superstructure of paper which rested upon it; the smaller that specie basis, the smaller and more unsafe must be the paper which rested on it. The currency of England is $300,000,000, to wit: £8,000,000 sterling (near $40,000,000) in silver; £22,000,000 sterling (above $100,000,000) in gold; and about £30,000,000 sterling (near $150,000,000) in bank notes. The currency of the United States is difficult to be ascertained, from the multitude of banks, and the incessant ebb and flow of their issues; calculations vary; but all put the paper circulation at less than $100,000 000. and the proportion of specie and paper, at more than one half paper. This is agreed upon all hands, and is sufficient for the practical result that an increase of our specie to $100,000,000 and the suppression of small notes, will give a larger total circulation than we now have, and a safer one. The total circulation may then be $200,000,000,in the proportions of half paper and half specie; and the specie, half gold and half silver. This would be an immense improvement upon our present condition, both in quantity and in quality; the paper part would become respectable from the suppression of notes under twenty dollars, which are of no profit except to the banks which issue them, and the counterfeiters who imitate them; the specie part would be equally improved by becoming one half gold. Mr. B. could not quit this important point, namely, the practicability of soon obtaining a specie currency of $100,000,000, and the one half gold, without giving other proofs to show the facility with which it has been every where done when attempted. He referred to our own history immediately after the Revolution, when the disappearance of paper money was instantly followed, as if by magic, by the appearance of gold and silver; to France, where the energy of the great Napoleon, then first consul, restored an abundant supply of gold and silver in one year; to England, where the acquisition of gold was at the rate of $24,000,000 per annum for four years after the notes under five pounds were ordered to be suppressed; and he referred with triumph to our own present history, when, in defiance of an immense and powerful political and moneyed combination against gold, we will have $20,000,000 of that metal in t years of President Jackson's

"Mr. B. took this occasion gret that the true idea of ha lost in this country, and that little conception of a bank, e of currency. A bank of disc in contradistinction to a bank hardly thought of in the Uni may be news to some bank pr pose that nothing can be don to issue millions of paper, to le bankers in London and Paris. of Europe, issue no paper; a may be news to them to lear and Manchester, two cities w about as much business as cities as this our Washington happen to have no banks to them. They use money and and have banks of discount as banks of circulation. Mr. Ga upon Currency, thus speaks of incorporated country banks is as numerous, and have been a same advantages, and the same advantages, and the same advantages, and the same advantages, and the same advantages, and prosperous, will does exist, and where that was bills of exchange drawn on the case in Lancashire, which is and Manchester, and where su ninety days after date, are is successive holder, and circulate ous persons before they read destination, and are paid by the "Mr. B. greatly regretted the

those in Liverpool and Manch vogue in the United States. right kind of banks. They diwere wholly free from misc money; they kept money; credits on books; they bought exchange; and these bills, cir many hands, and indorsed by the purpose of large bank not dangers, and became stronger were passed. To the banks it business to sell them, because change and interest. To the spectable-sized wards—on the pecie basis, the perstructure of e smaller that are unsafe must

The currency rit: £8,000,000 er; £22,000,000 in gold; and r $150,000,000) of the United ained, from the cessant ebb and vary; but all put n $100,000,000; 1 paper, at more agreed upon all practical result. to $100,000,000 iotes, will give a e now have, and tion may then be of half paper and If gold and half mense improveon, both in quanr part would bepression of notes e of no profit exue them, and the :hem; the specie oved by becoming not quit this imcticability of soon $100,000,000, and ving other proofs hich it has been mpted. He referrediately after the pearance of paper d, as if by magic, silver; to France, eat Napoleon, then dant supply of gold England, where the rate of $24,000,000 er the notes under be suppressed; and our own present of an immense and neyed combination against gold, we will have acquired about $20,000,000 of that metal in the two concluding years of President Jackson's administration.

"Mr. B. took this occasion to express his regret that the true idea of banks seemed to be lost in this country, and that here we had but little conception of a bank, except as an issuer of currency. A bank of discount and deposit. in contradistinction to a bank of circulation, is hardly thought of in the United States; and it may be news to some bank projectors, who supnose that nothing can be done without banks to issue millions of paper, to learn that the great bankers in London and Paris, and other capitals of Europe, issue no paper; and, still more, it may be news to them to learn that Liverpool and Manchester, two cities which happen to do about as much business as a myriad of such cities as this our Washington put together, also happen to have no banks to issue currency for them. They use money and bills of exchange, and have banks of discount and deposit, but no hanks of circulation. Mr. Gallatin, in his Essay upon Currency, thus speaks of them:

"There are, however, even in England, where incorporated country banks issuing paper are as numerous, and have been attended with the same advantages, and the same evils, as our country banks, some extensive districts, highly industrious and prosperous, where no such bank does exist, and where that want is supplied by bills of exchange drawn on London. This is the case in Lancashire, which includes Liverpool and Manchester, and where such bills, drawn at ninety days after date, are indorsed by each successive holder, and circulate through numerous persons before they reach their ultimate destination, and are paid by the drawee.'

"Mr. B. greatly regretted that such banks as those in Liverpool and Manchester were not in rogue in the United States. They were the right kind of banks. They did great good, and were wholly free from mischief. They lent money; they kept money; they transferred credits on books; they bought and sold bills of exchange; and these bills, circulating through many hands, and indorsed by each, answered the purpose of large bank notes, without their dangers, and became stronger every time they were passed. To the banks it was a profitable business to sell them, because they got both exchange and interest. To the commercial community they were convenient, both as a remittance and as funds in hand. To the community they were entirely safe. Banks of discount and deposit in the United States, issuing no currency, and issuing no bank note except of $100 and upwards, and dealing in exchange, would be entitled to the favor and confidence of the people and of the federal government. Such banks only should be the depositories of the public moneys.

"It is the faculty of issuing paper currency which makes banks dangerous to the country, and the height to which this danger has risen in the United States, and the progress which it is making, should rouse and alarm the whole community. It is destroying all standard of value. It is subjecting the country to demoralizing and ruinous fluctuations of price. It is making a lottery of property, and making merchandise of money, which has to be bought by the ticket holders in the great lottery at two and three per cent. a month. It is equivalent to the destruction of weights and measures, and like buying and selling without counting, weighing, or measuring. It is the realization, in a different form, of the debasement and arbitrary alteration of the value of coins practised by the kings of Europe in former ages, and now by the Sultan of Turkey. It is extinguishing the idea of fixed. moderate, annual interest. Great duties are thus imposed upon the legislator; and the first of these duties is to revive and favor the class of banks of discount and deposit; banks to make loans, keep money, transfer credits on books. buy and sell exchange, deal in bumon; but to issue no paper. This class of banks should be revived and favored; and the United States could easily revive them by confiding to them the public deposits. The next great duty of the legislator is to limit the issues of banks of circulation, and make them indemnify the community in some little degree, by refunding, in annual taxes, some part of their undue gains.

"The progress of the banking business is alarming and deplorable in the United States. It is now computed that there are 750 banks and their branches in operation, all having authority to issue currency; and, what is worse, all that currency is receivable by the federal government. The quantity of chartered bank capital, as it is called, is estimated at near $800,000,000; the amount of this capital reported by the banks to have been paid in is dollars, all levied upon the people; then came about $300,000,000; and the quantity of paper money which they are authorized by their charters to issue is about $750,000,000. How much of this is actually issued can never be known with any precision; for such are the fluctuations in the amount of a paper currency, flowing from 750 fountains, that the circulation of one day cannot be relied upon for the next. The amount of capital, reported to be paid in, is, however, well ascertained, and that is fixed at $300,000,000. This, upon its face, and without recourse to any other evidence, is proof that our banking system, as a whole, is unsolid and delusive, and a frightful imposition upon the people. Nothing but specie can form the capital of a bank; there are not above sixty or seventy millions of specie in the country, and, of that, the banks have not the one half. Thirty millions in specie is the extent; the remainder of the capital must have been made up of that undefinable material called 'specie funds,' or 'funds equivalent to specie,' the fallacy of which is established by the facts already stated, and which show that all the specie in the country put together is not sufficient to meet the one fifth part of these 'specie funds,' or 'funds equivalent to specie.' The equivalent, then, does not exist! endit alone exists; and any general attempt to realize these 'specie funds,' and turn them into specie, would explode the whole banking system, and cover the country with ruin. There may be some solid and substantial banks in the country, and undoubtedly there are better and worse among them; but as a whole-and it is in that point of view the community is interested—as a whole, the system is unsolid and delusive; and there is no safety for the country until great and radical | their error was trifling, compared to the improreforms are effected.

"The burdens which these 750 banks impose upon the people were then briefly touched by Mr. B. It was a great field, which he had not time to explore, but which could not, in justice, be entirely passed by. First, there were the salaries and fees of 750 sets of bank officers: presidents, cashiers, clerks, messengers, notaries public to protest notes, and attorneys to sue on the fact, that the banking system of the United them; all these had salaries, and good salaries, paid by the people, though the people had no hand in fixing these salaries: next, the profits to the stockholders, which, at an average of ten was also the most expensive and burdensome per centum gross would give thirty millions of and gave the most undue advantages to one part the profits to the brokers, first cousins to the bankers, for changing notes for money, or for other notes at par; then the gain to the banks and their friends on speculations in property. merchandise, produce, and stocks, during the periodical visitations of the expansions and contractions of the currency; then the gain from the wear and tear of notes, which is so much loss to the people; and, finally, the great chanter of counterfeiting which, without being profitable to the bank, is a great burden to the people, on whose hands all the counterfeits sink The amount of these burdens he could not compute; but there was one item about which there was no dispute-the salaries to the officers and the profits to the stockholders-and this presenter an array of names more numerous, and an amount of money more excessive, than was to be found in the 'Blue Book,' with the Army and Navy Register inclusive.

"Mr. B. said this was a faint sketch of the burdens of the banking system as carried on in the United States, where every bank is a coiner of paper currency, and where every town in some States, must have its banks of circulation. while such cities as Liverpool and Manchester have no such banks, and where the paper money of all these machines receive wings to fly over the whole continent, and to infest the whole land, from their universal receivability by the federal government in payment of all dues at their custom-houses, land-offices, post-offices, and by all the district attorneys, marshals, and clerks, employed under the federal judiciary. The improvidence of the States, in chartering such institutions, is great and deplorable; but vidence of the federal government in taking the paper coinage of all these banks for the currency of the federal government, maugre that clause in the constitution which recognizes nothing but gold and silver for currency, and which was intended for ever to defend and preserve this Union from the evils of paper money.

"Mr. B. averred, with a perfect knowledge of States was on a worse footing than it was in any country upon the face of the earth; and that, in addition to its deep and dangerous defects, it of the community over anot doubt but that this banking burdensome to the free citize States than ever the feudal s villeins, and serfs, and peasant what did they get in return f ien? A pestiferous currency when they might have a gold paying interest, or suffering los like those in Liverpool and Mar currency except as bills of ex the Bank of France, issued no of 500 and 1,000 francs (say 8 or even, like the Bank of Er note under £5 sterling, and pay with how much real capital is tem, so burdensome to the peo States, carried on? About $30.0 about $30,000,000 of specie rests raid in, and on which the comm interest, and giving profits to ba ly yielding their faith and con whole $300,000,000 was a solid silver, instead of being, as it i specie, and nine tenths paper cr Other senators spoke against these banks, without the amel charters which the public welfa without effect. The amendme jected, and the bill passed for the whole six by a large vote-

YEAS.-Messrs. Black, Buch Clay, Crittenden, Cuthbert, I Ohio, Goldsborough, Hendricks, King of Alabama, Knight, I Nicholas, Porter, Prentiss, R Swift, Tallmadge, Tomlinson, W. NAYS.-Messrs. Benton, Ew King of Georgia, Linn, McKean. is Niles, Robinson, Ruggles, White, Wright.

yeas and nays were:

CHAPTER CX

INDEPENDENCE OF T

DURING several months memo coming in from public meetings i in favor of acknowledging the i fexas-the public feeling in beha ole; then came cousins to the money, or for in to the banks is in property ks, during the nsions and conthe gain from ch is so much the great chaphout being prorden to the peounterfeits sink could not comout which there the officers and -and this prenumerous, and essive, than was with the Army

it sketch of the as carried on in bank is a coiner every town, in ks of circulation. and Manchester the paper money wings to fly over nfest the whole eivability by the nt of all dues at ices, post-offices. ys, marshals, and federal judiciary. tes, in chartering deplorable; but red to the impronent in taking the s for the currency rugre that clause mizes nothing but nd which was inreserve this Union fect knowledge of tem of the United than it was in any earth; and that, in ngerous defects, it and burdensome, antages to one part of the community over another. He had no doubt but that this banking system was more burdensome to the free citizens of the United States than ever the feudal system was to the cileins, and serfs, and peasants of Europe. And what did they get in return for this vast burten? A pestiferous currency of small paper! when they might have a gold currency without paying interest, or suffering losses, if their banks. like those in Liverpool and Manchester, issued no currency except as bills of exchange; or, like the Bank of France, issued no notes but those of 500 and 1,000 francs (say $100 and $500): or even, like the Bank of England, issued no note under £5 sterling, and payable in gold. And with how much real capital is this banking system, so burdensome to the people of the United States, carried on? About $30,000,000! Yes; on about $30,000,000 of specie rests the $300,000,000 mid in, and on which the community are paying interest, and giving profits to bankers, and blindly yielding their faith and confidence, as if the whole $300,000,000 was a solid bed of gold and silver, instead of being, as it is, one tenth part specie, and nine tenths paper credit!"

Other senators spoke against the recharter of these banks, without the amelioration of their charters which the public welfare required; but without effect. The amendments were all reiected, and the bill passed for the recharter of the whole six by a large vote-26 to 14. The veas and nays were:

YEAS.—Messrs, Black, Buchanan, Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Goldsborough, Hendricks, Hubbard, Kent, King of Alabama, Knight, Leigh, Naudain, Nicholas, Porter, Prentiss, Rives, Southard, Swift, Tallmadge, Tomlinson, Walker, Webster.

NAYS.-Messrs. Benton, Ewing of Illinois, King of Georgia, Linn, McKean, Mangum, Mor-Niles, Robinson, Ruggles, Shepley, Wall, White, Wright.

CHAPTER CXLIV.

INDEPENDENCE OF TEXAS.

DURING several months memorials had been wming in from public meetings in different cities in favor of acknowledging the independence of

of that small revolted province, strong from the beginning of the contest, now inflamed into rage from the massacres of the Alamo and of Goliad. Towards the middle of May news of the victory of San Jacinto arrived at Washington. Public feeling no longer knew any bounds. The people were exalted—Congress not less so and a feeling for the acknowledgment of Texian independence, if not universal, almost general. The sixteenth of May-the first sitting of the Senate after this great news-Mr. Mangum, of North Carolina, presented the proceedings of a public meeting in Burke county, of that State, praying Congress to acknowledge the independence of the young republic. Mr. Preston said: "The effects of that victory had opened up a curtain to a most magnificent scene. This invader had come at the head of his forces, urged on by no ordinary impulse—by an infuriate fanaticism-by a superstitious catholicism, goaded on by a miserable priesthood, against that invincible Anglo-Saxon race, the van of which now approaches the del Norte. It was at once a war of religion and of liberty. And when that noble race engaged in a war, victory was sure to perch upon their standard. This was not merely the retribution of the cruel war upon the Alamo, but that tide which was swollen by this extraordinary victory would roll on: and it was not in the spirit of prophecy to say where it would stop." Mr. Walker, of Mississippi, said:

"He had, upon the 22d of April last, called the attention of the Senate to the struggle in Texas, and suggested the reservation of any surplus that might remain in the treasury, for the purpose of acquiring Texas from whatever government might remain the government de facto of that country. At that period (said Mr. W.) no allusion had been made, he believed, by any one in either House of Congress to the situation of affairs in Texas. And now (said Mr. W.), upon the very day that he had called the attention of the Senate to this subject, it appeared that Santa Anna had been captured, and his army overthrown. Mr. W. said he had never doubted this result. When on the 22d of April last, resolutions were introduced before the Senate by the senator from Ohio (Mr. Morris), requesting Congress to recognize the independence of Texas, he (Mr. W.) had opposed laying these resolutions on the table, and advocated their reference to a committee of the Senate. Mr. W. said he had addressed the Senate then under very different circumstances lexas-the public feeling in behalf of the people from those which now existed. The cries of the expiring prisoners at the Alamo were then resounding in our ears; the victorious usurper was advancing onward with his exterminating warfare, and, in the minds of many, all was gloom and despondency; but Mr. W. said that the published report of our proceedings demonstrated that he did not for a moment despond; that his confidence in the rifle of the West was firm and unshaken; and that he had then declared that the sun was not more certain to set in the western horizon, than that Texas would maintain her independence; and this sentiment he had taken occasion to repeat in the debate on this subject in the Senate on the 9th of May last. Mr. W. said that what was then prediction was now reality; and his heart beat high, and his pulse throbbed with delight, in contemplating this triumph of liberty. Sir (said Mr. W.), the people of the valley of the Mississippi never could have permitted Santa Ana and his myrmidons to retain the dominion of Texas."

Mr. Walker afterwards moved the reference of all the memorials in relation to Texas to the Committee on Foreign Relations. If the accounts received from Texas had been official (for as yet there were nothing but newspaper accounts of the great victory), he would have moved for the immediate recognition of the Texian independence. Being unofficial, he could only move the reference to the committee in the expectation that they would investigate the facts and bring the subject before the Senate in a suitable form for action. Mr. Webster said:

"That if the people of Texas had established a government de facto, it was undoubtedly the duty of this government to acknowledge their independence. The time and manner of doing so, however, were all matters proper for grave and mature consideration. He should have been better satisfied, had this matter not been moved again till all the evidence had been collected, and until they had received official information of the important events that had taken place in Texas. As this proceeding had been moved by a member of the administration party, he felt himself bound to understand that the Executive was not opposed to take the first steps now, and that in his opinion this proceeding was not dangerous or premature. Mr. W. was of opinion that it would be best not to act with precipitation. If this information was true, they would doubtless before long hear from Texas herself; for as soon as she felt that she was a country, and had a country, she would naturally present her claims to her neighbors, to be recognized as an independent nation. He did not say that it would be necessary to wait for this event, but he thought it would be discreet to do so. He would be one of the first to acknowledge the independence of Texas, on reasonable proof that she had established a government. There were views connected with Texas which he would not now present, as it would be premature to do so; but he would observe that he had received some information from a respectable source, which turned his attention to the very significant expression used by Mr. Monroe in his message of 1822, that no European Power should ever be permitted to establish a colony on the American continent. He had no doubt that attempts would be made by some European government to obtain a cession of Texas from the government of Mexico.

Mr. King, of Alabama, counselled moderation and deliberation, although he was aware that in the present excited feeling in relation to Texas, every prudent and cautious course would be misunderstood, and a proper reserve be probably construed into hostility to Texian independence; but he would, so long as he remained a member on that floor, be regardless of every personal consideration, and place himself in opposition to all measures which he conceived were calculated to detract from the exalted character of this country for good faith, and for undeviating adherence to all its treaty stipulations. He then went on to say:

"He knew not whether the information received of the extraordinary successes of the Texans was to be relied on or not; he sincerely hoped it might prove true; no man here felt a deeper detestation of the bloodthirsty wretches who had cruelly butchered their defenceless prisoners, than he did; but, whether true or false, did it become wise, discreet, prudent men, bound by the strongest considerations to preserve the honor and faith of the country, to be hurried along by the effervescence of feeling and at once abandon the course, and, he would say, the only true course, which this government has invariably, heretofore, pursued towards foreign powers? We have uniformly (said Mr. K.) recognized the existing governments-the governments de facto; we have not stopped to inquire whether it is a despotic or constitutional government; whether it is a republic or a des potism. All we ask is, does a government actually exist? and, Laving satisfied ourselves of that fact, we look no further, but recognize it as it is. It was on this principle (said Mr. K.)this safe, this correct principle, that we recognize nized what was called the Republic of France founded on the ruins of the old monarchy; then the consular government; a little after, the imperial; and when that was crushed by a combi nation of all Europe, and that extraordinary man who wielded it was driven into exile, we again acknowledged the kingly government of the House of Bourbon, and now the constitu tional King Louis Philippe of Orleans.

"Sir (said Mr. K.), we take are; we ask not how governm lished—by what revolutions the into existence. Let us see an iterament in Texas, and he would the senator from Mississippi from South Carolina in pressing recognition, and establishing we cordial and friendly relations."

Mr. Calhoun went beyond all and advocated not only immed of the independence of Texas, the neons admission into the Unio of acting on both questions togotherent session; and saw an interpolation of the power to annoy them. And the power to annoy them.

"He was of opinion that it w strength to the cause of Texas, t days, until they received official the victory and capture of Santa to obtain a more unanimous vote recognition of Texas. He had l opinion, from the beginning, th Mexico being able to reduce To great danger of Mexico, herself, I by the Texans. The result of placed the ruler of Mexico in the Texans: and they were now abl tate what terms they pleased to 1 terms with the opposition in Me traordinary meeting had given a l men a most powerful control over of Mexico; he trusted, they w victory with moderation. He ha mind not only to recognize the in Texas, but for her admission into t if the Texans managed their aff they would soon be called upon question. No man could suppos that that country could ever com the dominion of Mexico; and he that it was not for our intere should be an independent comm us and Mexico. There were por why Texas should be a part of th Southern States, owning a slave p deeply interested in preventing from having the power to annoy navigating and manufacturing in North and the East were equally making it a part of this Union. they would soon be called on t questions; and when they did ac for acting on both together—for r independence of Texas, and for into the Union. Though he felt licitude on this subject, he was for deliberately, and cautiously, but time with decision and firmness. not violate their neutrality; be were once satisfied that Texas h ablished a governmented with r present, as it the would obne information turned his at-appression used f 1822, that no be permitted to itcan continent would be made to obtain a cesent of Mexico.

elled moderation as aware that in slation to Texas, ourse would be erve be probably in independence: nained a member f every personal f in opposition to a were calculated character of this undeviating adations. He then

e information recesses of the Texnot; he sincerely man here felt a dthirsty wretches their defenceless whether true or eet, prudent men, iderations to prethe country, to be escence of feeling, rse, and, he would h this government rsued towards foniformly (said Mr. governments-the ive not stopped to ic or constitutional republic or a desa government actuisfied ourselves of but recognize it as de (said Mr. K.)ple, that we recoglepublic of France, ld monarchy; then, little after, the imrushed by a combithat extraordinary iven into exile, we igly government of now the constitu of Orleans.

"Sir (said Mr. K.), we take things as they are; we ask not how governments are established—by what revolutions they are brought into existence. Let us see an independent government in Texas, and he would not be behind the senator from Mississippi nor the senator from South Carolina in pressing forward to its recognition, and establishing with it the most cordial and friendly relations."

Mr. Calhoun went beyond all other speakers, and advocated not only immediate recognition of the independence of Texas, but her simultaneous admission into the Union; was in favor of acting on both questions together, and at the present session; and saw an interest in the slaveholding States in preventing Texas from having the power to annoy them. And he said:

"He was of opinion that it would add more strength to the cause of Texas, to wait for a few days, until they received official confirmation of the victory and capture of Santa Anna, in order to obtain a more unanimous vote in favor of the recognition of Texas. He had been of but one opinion, from the beginning, that, so far from Mexico being able to reduce Texas, there was great danger of Mexico, herself, being conquered by the Texans. The result of one battle had placed the ruler of Mexico in the power of the fexans; and they were now able, either to dictate what terms they pleased to him, or to make terms with the opposition in Mexico. This extraordinary meeting had given a handful of brave men a most powerful control over the destinies of Mexico; he trusted they would use their victory with moderation. He had made up his mind not only to recognize the independence of Texas but for her admission into this Union; and if the Texans managed their affairs prudently, they would soon be called upon to decide that question. No man could suppose for a moment that that country could ever come again under the dominion of Mexico; and he was of opinion that it was not for our interests that there should be an independent community between us and Mexico. There were powerful reasons why Texas should be a part of this Union. The Southern States, owning a slave population, were deeply interested in preventing that country from having the power to annoy them; and the navigating and manufacturing interests of the North and the East were equally interested in making it a part of this Union. He thought they would soon be called on to decide these questions; and when they did act on it, he was for acting on both together-for recognizing the independence of Texas, and for admitting her into the Union. Though he felt the deepest solicitude on this subject, he was for acting calmly, deliberately, and cautiously, but at the same time with decision and firmness. They should not violate their neutrality; but when they were once satisfied that Texas had established a government, they should do as they had done in all other similar cases: recognize her as an independent nation; and if her people, who were once citizens of this Republic, wished to come back to us, he would receive them with open arms. If events should go on as they had done, he could not but hope that, before the close of the present session of Congress, they would not only acknowledge the independence of Texas, but admit her into the Union. He hoped there would be no unnecessary delay, for, in such cases, delays were dangerous; but that they would act with unanimity, and act promptly."

The author of this View did not reply to Mr. Calhoun, being then on ill terms with him; but he saw in the speech much to be considered and remembered—the shadowings forth of coming * events; the revelation of a new theatre for the slavery agitation; and a design to make the Texas question an element in the impending election. Mr. Calhoun had been one of Mr. Monroe's cabinet, at the time that Texas was ceded to Spain, and for reasons (as Mr. Monroe stated to General Jackson, in the private letter heretofore quoted) of internal policy and consideration; that is to say, to conciliate the free States, by amputating slave territory, and preventing their opposition to future Southern presidential candidates. He did not use those precise words, but that was the meaning of the words used. The cession of Texas was made in the crisis of the Missouri controversy; and both Mr. Monroe and Mr. Calhoun received the benefit of the conciliation it produced: Mr. Monroe in the re-election, almost unanimous, of 1820; and Mr. Calhoun in the vice-presidential elections of 1824 and 1828; in which he was so much a favorite of the North as to get more votes than Mr. Adams received in the free States, and owed to them his honorable election by the people. when all others were defeated, on the popular vote. Their justification (that of Mr. Monroe's cabinet) for this cession of a great province, was, that the loss was temporary-"that it could be got back again whenever it was wanted "-but the victory of San Jacinto was hardly foreseen at that time. It was these reasons (Northern conciliation, and getting it back when we pleased) that reconciled General Jackson to the cession, at the time it was made. One of the foremost to give away Texas, Mr. Calhoun was the very foremost to get her back; and at an immense cost to our foreign relations and domestic peace. The immediate admission of Texas into the Union, was his plan. She was at war with Mexico-we at peace: to incorporate her into the Union, was to adopt her war. We had treaties of amity with Mexico: to join Texas in the war, was to be faithless to those treaties. We had a presidential election depending; and to discuss the question of Texian admission into our Union, was to bring that element into the canvass, in which all prudent men who were adverse to the admission (as Mr. Van Buren and his friends were), would be thrown under the force of an immense popular current: while all that were in favor of it would expect to swim high upon the waves of that current. The proposition was incredibly rash, tending to involve us in war and dishonor; and also disrespectful to Texas herself, who had not asked for admission; and extravagantly hasty, in being broached before there was any official news of the great victory. Before the debate was over, the author of this View took an opportunity to reply, without reference to other speakers, and to give reasons against the present admission of Texas. But there was one of Mr. Calhoun's reasons for immediate admission, which to him was enigmatical, and at that time, incomprehensible; and that was, the prevention of Texas "from having the power to annoy" the Southern slave States. We had just been employed in suppressing, or exploding, this annoyance, in the Northeast; and, in the twinkling of an eye, it sprung up in the Southwest, two thousand miles off, and quite diagonally from its late point of apparition. That sudden and so distant re-appearance of the danger, was a puzzle, remaining unsolved until the Tyler administration, and the return of Mr. Duff Green from London, with the discovery of the British abolition plot; which was to be planted in Texas, spread into the South, and blow up its slavery. Mr. Bedford Brown, and others, answered Mr. Calhoun. Mr. Brown

"He regarded our national character as worth infinitely more than all the territorial possessions of Mexico, her wealth, or the wealth of all other nations added together. We occupied a standing among the nations of the earth, of which we might well be proud, and which we ought not to permit to be tarnished. We have, said Mr. B., arrived at that period of our history, as a nation, when it behooves us to act with the greatest wisdom and circumspection. But a few years since as a nation, we were comparatively | terests or honor of the United States; but the

in a state of infancy; we were now, in the confidence of youth, and with the buoyancy of spirit incident to this period of our existence as a nation, about to enter on 'man's estate.' Power. ful in resources, and conscious of our strength let us not forget the sacred obligations of jus tice and good faith, which form the indispensable basis of a nation's character—greatness and freedom; and without which, no people could long preserve the blessings of self-government. Republican government was based on the principles of justice; and for it to be administered on any other, either in its foreign or domestic affairs, was to undermine its foundation and to

Mr. Rives concurred in the necessity for caution; and said:

"This government should act with moderstion, calmness, and dignity; and, because he wished the Senate to act with that becomine moderation, calmness, and dignity, which ought to characterize its deliberations on international subjects, it was his wish that the subject might be referred. If it was postponed, it would come up again for discussion, from morning to morning, to the exclusion of most of the business of the Senate, as there was nothing to prevent the presentation of petitions every morning to excite discussion. It was for the purpose of avoiding these discussions, that he should rote to refer it at once to the Committee on Foreign Relations. A prominent member of that committee had been long and intimately acquainted with the subject of our foreign relations, and there were members on it representing all the different sections of the country, to whose charge he believed the subject could be safely committed. It would seem, from the course of debate this morning, that gentlemen supposed the question of the recognition of the independence of Texas, or its admission into this Union, was directly before the Senate; and some gentlemen had volunteered their opinions in advance of the report of the committee. He did not vote to refer it to the committee to receive its quietas, but that they might give their views upon it: nor did he feel as if he were called upon to express an opinion upon the propriety of the measure. It was strange that senators, who stated that their opinions were made up, should oppose the reference."

Mr. Niles, of Connecticut, was entirely in favor of preserving the national faith inviolate. and its honor untarnished, and ourselves from the imputation of base motives in our future conduct in relation to Texas, and said:

"This was a case in which this government should act with caution. In ordinary cases of this kind the question was only one of fact, and was but little calculated to compromit the in-question in regard to Texas w and vastly more important. T on our own borders, and its in of them, emigrants from the and most of the brave men army, who are so heroically fig the province, are citizens of the who have engaged in this bold lanteers. Were this governme tate in acknowledging the i Texas, might it not be exposed of having encouraged these e citizens? There is another more importance. Should the Texas be followed by its an United States, the reasons for gatory to the national faith stronger. If we, by our own a clothe the constituted authorit vince with the power of sove and then accept a cession of th those authorities, might there n son to charge us with having independence of the country as a possession of it? These and c tions require that this governn with caution; yet, when the proj t will be our duty to act, and t But he trusted that all would tance of preserving the nationa tional honor. They should no pure, but free from injurious st more to be prized than any exte tory, wealth, population, or ot which enters into the elements ( perity or power."

The various memorials were committee on foreign relations, co Clay, Mr. King of Georgia, Mr. Mangum, and Mr. Porter of Lo reported early, and unanimously recognition of the independence soon as satisfactory information ceived, showing that she had a ci in operation capable of perform and fulfilling the obligations power. In the report which ac Resolution, its author, Mr. Clay.

"Sentiments of sympathy as civil liberty, which have always people of the United States, have adoption of the resolution, and tations of popular feeling whi referred to the committee, recom knowledgment of the independe The committee shares fully in a ments; but a wise and pruder should not act solely on the imp lowever natural and laudable i now, in the conuovancy of spirit existence as a naestate.' Powerof our strength bligations of jusn the indispensaer-greatness and no people could self-government. ased on the prinbe administered reign or domestic oundation and to necessity for cau-

act with moderaand, because he ith that becoming gnity, which ought ns on international the subject might ned, it would come morning to mornst of the business nothing to prevent every morning, to or the purpose of hat he should vote nmittee on Foreign ember of that comtimately acquainted reign relations, and epresenting all the try, to whose charge d be safely commithe course of debate a supposed the queshe independence of this Union, was dind some gentlemen ons in advance of the He did not vote to receive its quietas, their views upon it; e called upon to expropriety of the measenators, who stated nade up, should op-> cut, was entirely in ional faith inviolate, and ourselves from otives in our future as, and said:

nich this government In ordinary cases of s only one of fact and o compromit the in-nited States; but the question in regard to Texas was very different, and vastly more important. That is a country on our own borders, and its inhabitants, most of them, emigrants from the United States: and most of the brave men constituting its and most or so heroically fighting to redeem the province, are citizens of the United States, who have engaged in this bold enterprise as vounteers. Were this government to be precipitate in acknowledging the independence of Texas, might it not be exposed to a suspicion of having encouraged these enterprises of its citizens? There is another consideration of more importance. Should the independence of Texas be followed by its annexation to the Inited States, the reasons for suspicions derogatory to the national faith might be still stronger. If we, by our own act, contribute to clothe the constituted authorities of the province with the power of sovereignty over it, and then accept a cession of the country from those authorities, might there not be some reason to charge us with having recognized the independence of the country as a means of getting material country as a means of getting possession of it? These and other considerations require that this government should act with caution; yet, when the proper time arrives it will be our duty to act, and to act promptly. But he trusted that all would feel the importance of preserving the national faith and national honor. They should not only be kept pure, but free from injurious suspicions, being more to be prized than any extension of territory, wealth, population, or other acquisition, which enters into the elements of national prosperity or power."

The various memorials were referred to the committee on foreign relations, consisting of Mr. Clay, Mr. King of Georgia, Mr. Tallmadge, Mr. Mangum, and Mr. Porter of Louisiana; which reported early, and unanimously, in favor of the recognition of the independence of Texas, as soon as satisfactory information should be received, showing that she had a civil government in operation capable of performing the duties and fulfilling the obligations of a civilized power. In the report which accompanied the Resolution, its author, Mr. Clay, said:

"Sentiments of sympathy and devotion to civil liberty, which have always animated the people of the United States, have prompted the proposed of the resolution, and other manifestations of popular feeling which have been referred to the committee, recommending an ac-grave a measure as that of recognizing the independence of a new Power, until it has satisfactory information, and has fully deliberated.

The committee has no information respecting the recent movements in Texas, except such as is derived from the public prints. According to that, the war broke out in Texas last autumn. Its professed object, like that of our revolutionary contest in the commencement, was not separation and independence, but a redress of grievances. In March last, independence was proclaimed, and a constitution and form of government were established. No means of ascertaining accurately the exact amount of the population of Texas are at the command of the committee. It has been estimated at some sixty or seventy thousand souls. Nor are the precise limits of the country which passes under the denomination of Texas known to the committee. They are probably not clearly defined, but they are supposed to be extensive, and sufficiently large, when peopled, to form a respectable Power."

Mr. Southard concurred in the views and conclusion of the report, but desired to say a few words in reply to that part of Mr. Calhoun's speech which looked to the "balance of power, and the perpetuation of our institutions," as a reason for the speedy admission of Texas into the Union, and said:

"I should not have risen to express these notions, if I had not understood the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Calhoun] to declare that he regarded the acknowledgment of the indepence of Texas as important, and principally important, because it prepared the way for the speedy admission of that State as a member of our Union; and that he looked anxiously to that event, as conducing to a proper balance of power, and to the perpetuation of our institutions. I am not now, sir, prepared to express an opinion on that question-a question which all must foresee will embrace interests as wide as our Union, and as lasting in their consequences as the freedom which our institutions secure. When it shall be necessarily presented to me, I shall endeavor to meet it in a manner suitable to its magnitude, and to the vital interests which it involves; but I will not, on the present resolution, anticipate it; nor can I permit an inference, as to my decision upon it, to be drawn from the vote which I now give. That vote is upon this resolution alone, and confined to it, founded upon principles sustained by the laws of nations, upon the unvarying practice of our government, and upon the facts as they are now known to exist. It relates to the independence knowledgment of the independence of Texas. It relates to the independence for the independence of Texas, not to the admission of Texas into the committee shares fully in all these sentitions, but a wise and prudent government thould not act solely on the impulse of feeling, however natural and laudable it may be. It aght to avoid all precipitation, and not adopt so that the remarks of the senator should lead, in or out of this chamber, to the inference that all those who vote for the resolution concur with him in opinion. The question which he has started should be left perfectly open and free."

The vote in favor of the Resolution reported by Mr. Clay was unanimous-39 senators present and voting. In the House of Representatives a similar resolution was reported from the House Committee of foreign relations. Mr. John Y. Mason, of Virginia, chairman; and adopted by a vote of 113 to 22. The nays were: Messrs. John Quincy Adams, Heman Allen, Jeremiah Bailey, Andrew Beaumont, James W. Bouldin, William Clark, Walter Coles, Edward Darlington, George Grennell, jr., Hiland Hall, Abner Hazeltine, William Hiester, Abbott Lawrence, Levi Lincoln, Thomas C Love, John J. Milligan, Dutee J. Pearce, Stephen C. Phillips, David Potts, jr., John Reed, David Russell, William Slade.

It is remarkable that in the progress of this Texas question both Mr. Adams and Mr. Calhoun reversed their positions—the former being against, and the latter in favor, of its alienation in 1819; the former being against, and the latter in favor of its recovery in 1836-'44.-Mr. Benton was the last speaker in the Senate in favor of the recognition of independence; and his speech being the most full and earefully historical of any one delivered, it is presented entire in the next chapter; and, it is believed, that in going more fully than other speakers did into the origin and events of the Texas Revolution, it will give a fair and condensed view of that remarkable event, so interesting to the American people.

CHAPTER CXLV.

TEXAS INDEPENDENCE-MR. BENTON'S SPEECH.

'Mr. Benton rose and said he should confine himself strictly to the proposition presented in the resolution, and should not complicate the practical question of recognition with speculations on the future fate of Texas. Such speculations could have no good effect upon either of the countries interested; upon Mexico, Texas, or the United States. Texas has not asked for admission into this Union. Her independence is still contested by Mexico. Her boundaries and other important points in her political condition, are not yet adjusted. To discuss the quastion of her admission into this Union, under these circumstances, is to treat her with disrespect, to embroil ourselves with Mexico, to compromise the disinterestedness of our motives in the eyes of Europe; and to start among ourselves prematurely, and without reason, a question which, whenever it comes, cannot be without its own intrinsic difficulties and perplexities.

"Since the three months that the affairs of Texas have been the subject of repeated discussion in this chamber, I have imposed on myself a reserve, not the effect of want of feeling, but the effect of strong feeling, and some judgment combined, which has not permitted me to give utterance to the general expression of my sentiments. Once only have I spoken, and that at the most critical moment of the contest, and when the reported advance of the Mexicans upon Nacogdoches, and the actual movement of General Gaines and our own troops in that it. rection, gave reason to apprehend the encounter of flags, or the collision of arms, which might compromise individuals or endanger the peace of nations. It was then that I used those words. not entirely enigmatical, and which have since been repeated by some, without the prefix of their important qualifications, namely; that while neutrality was the obvious line of our duty and of our interest, yet there might be emergencies in which the obligation of duty could have no force, and the calculations of interest could have no place; when, in fact, a man should have no head to think! nothing but a heart to feel! and an arm to strike! and I illustrated this sentiment. It was after the affair of Goliad, and the imputed order to unpeople the country, with the supposititious case of prisoners assassinated women violated, and children slaughtered; and these horrors to be perpetrated in the presence or hearing of an American army. In such a case I declared it to be my sentiment—and I now repeat it, for I feel it to be in me-in such a case. I declared it to be my sentiment, that treaties were nothing, books were nothing, laws were nothing! that the paramount law of God and nature was every thing! and that the American soldier, hearing the cries of helplessness and weakness, and remembering only that he was a man, and born of woman, and the father of children, should fly to the rescue, rent the perpetration of crime manity and dishonor the age sentiment not upon impulsior eration; not for theatrical eff for action; not as vague deel an eye to possible or probable view to the public justification and his men, if, under circum to humanity, they should nob the impulsions of the heart inssulting the musty leaves of b

"Beyond this I did not go, a instance, I do not speak. D prescribed to the United State trality; and this condition she filled. Our young men have fight; but they have gone wit of the laws, and against the or ernment. They have gone upo which, in all time, has carried of all ages to seek renown in t ries of distant war. Our foreig is not repealed. Unlike Eng war now raging in Spain, we 1 interference by repealing our pe not stimulated action by wif cles. No member of our Congi Evans in the British Parliam seat to levy troops in the stree olis, and to lead them to battle the land torn by civil discor against armaments to invade fr in full force. Proclamations h neutral dispositions. Prosecu ordered against violators of law in the gulf, and a land force on been directed to enforce the po ernment; and so far as acts ha vantage has been on the side the Texian armed schooner Inv brought into an American port ship of war. If parties and in to Texas to fight, the act is pa tional, compromising none but t selves, and may take place on as on the other. The conduct of tion has been strictly neutral; to that administration, and from victions, I have conformed to it mg the language which would posing the acts which might in d perplexities. at the affairs of f repeated discusmposed on myself ent of feeling, but nd some judgment mitted me to give ression of my senpoken, and that at f the contest, and of the Mexicans ctual movement of troops in that dihend the encounter arms, which might endanger the peace I used those words. I which have since hout the prefix of , namely; that while ine of our duty and ight be emergencies duty could have no interest could have ian should have no a heart to feel! and ustrated this sentiir of Goliad, and the e the country, with isoners assassinated en slaughtered; and ated in the presence army. In such a case ment-and I now reı me-in such a case, ntiment, that treaties nothing, laws were unt law of God and nd that the American of helplessness and ig only that he was a

Her boundaries ner political con-

To discuss the his Union, under ther with disrent Mexico, to compfour motives in the tamong ourselves ason, a question unnot be without

and the father of children, should fly to the rescue, and strike to prevent the perpetration of crimes which shock humanity and dishonor the age. I uttered this sentiment not upon impulsion, but with consideration; not for theatrical effect, but as a rule for action; not as vague declamation, but with an eye to possible or probable events, and with a view to the public justification of General Gaines and his men, if, under circumstances appalling to humanity, they should nobly resolve to obey the impulsions of the heart instead of coldly consulting the musty leaves of books and treaties.

"Beyond this I did not go, and, except in this instance, I do not speak. Duty and interest prescribed to the United States a rigorous neutrality; and this condition she has faithfully fulfilled. Our young men have gone to Texas to fight; but they have gone without the sanction of the laws, and against the orders of the Government. They have gone upon that impulsion which, in all time, has carried the heroic youth of all ages to seek renown in the perils and glories of distant war. Our foreign enlistment law is not repealed. Unlike England, in the civil war now raging in Spain, we have not licensed interference by repealing our penalties: we have not stimulated action by withdrawing obstacles. No member of our Congress, like General Evans in the British Parliament, has left his seat to levy troops in the streets of the metropolis, and to lead them to battle and to victory in the land torn by civil discord. Our statute against armaments to invade friendly powers is in full force. Proclamations have attested our neutral dispositions. Prosecutions have been ordered against violators of law. A naval force the gulf, and a land force on the Sabine, have been directed to enforce the policy of the government; and so far as acts have gone, the advantage has been on the side of Mexico; for the Texian armed schooner Invincible has been brought into an American port by an American ship of war. If parties and individuals still go to Texas to fight, the act is particular, not national, compromising none but the parties themselves, and may take place on one side as well as on the other. The conduct of the administration has been strictly neutral; and, as a friend to that administration, and from my own convictions I have conformed to its policy, avoidmg the language which would irritate, and opposing the acts which might interrupt pacific and commercial communications. Mexico is our nearest neighbor, dividing with us the continent of North America, and possessing the elements of a great power. Our boundaries are co-terminous for more than two thousand miles. We have inland and maritime commerce. She has mines; we have ships. General considerations impose upon each power the duties of reciprocal friendship; especial inducements invite us to uninterrupted commercial intercourse. As a western senator, coming from the banks of the Mississippi, and from the State of Missouri, I cannot be blind to the consequences of interrupting that double line of inland and maritime commerce, which, stretching to the mines of Mexico, brings back the perennial supply of solid money which enriches the interior, and enables New Orleans to purchase the vast accumulation of agricultural produce of which she is the emporium. Wonderful are the workings of commerce, and more apt to find out its own proper channels by its own operations than to be guided into them by the hand of legislation. New Orleans now is what the Havana once was -the entrepot of the Mexican trade, and the recipient of its mineral wealth. The superficial reader of commercial statistics would say that Mexico but slightly encourages our domestic industry; that she takes nothing from our agriculture, and but little from our manufactures. On the contrary, the close observer would see a very different picture. He would see the products of our soil passing to all the countries of Europe, exchanging into fine fabrics, and these returning in the ships of many nations, our own predominant, to the city of New Orleans; and thence going off in small Mexican vessels to Matamoros, Tampico, Vera Cruz, and other Mexican ports. The return from these ports is in the precious metals; and, to confine myself to a single year, as a sample of the whole, it may be stated that, of the ten millions and three quarters of silver coin and bullion received in the United States, according to the custom-house returns during the least year, eight millions and one quarter of it came from Mexico alone, and the mass of it through the port of New Orleans. This amount of treasure is not received for nothing, nor, as it would seem on the commercial tables, for foreign fabrics unconnected with American industry, but, in reality, for domestic productions changed into foreign fabrics, and giving double employment to the navigation of the country. New Orleans has taken the place of the Havana; it has become the entrepot of this trade; and many circumstances, not directed by law, or even known to lawgivers, have combined to produce the result. First, the application of steam power to the propulsion of vessels, which, in the form of towboats, has given to a river city a prompt and facile communication with the sea; then the advantage of full and assorted cargoes, which brings the importing vessel to a point where she delivers freight for two different empires; then the marked advantage of a return cargo, with cheap and abundant supplies, which are always found in the grand emporium of the great West; then the discriminating duties in Mexican ports in favor of Mexican vessels, which makes it advantageous to the importer to stop and transship at New Orleans; finally, our enterprise, our police, and our free institutions, our perfect security, under just laws, for life, liberty, person and property. These circumstances, undirected by government, and without the knowledge of government, have given to New Orleans the supreme advantage of being the entrepot of the Mexican trade; and have presented the unparalleled spectacle of the noblest valley in the world, and the richest mines in the world, sending their respective products to meet each other at the mouth of the noblest river in the world; and there to create in lapse of time, the most wonderful city which any age or country has everybeheld. A look upon the map of the great West, and a tolerable capacity to calculate the aggregate of geographical advantages, must impress the beholder with a vast opinion of the future greatness of New Orleans; but he will only look upon one half of the picture unless he contemplates this new branch of trade which is making the emporium of the Mississippi the entrepot of Mexican commerce, and the recipient of the Mexican mines, and which, though now so great, is still in its infancy. Let not government mar a consummation so auspicious in its aspect, and teeming with so many rich and precious results. Let no unnecessary collision with Mexico interrupt our commerce, turn back the streams of three hundred mines to the Havana, and give a wound to a noble city which must be felt to the headspring and source of every stream that pours its tribute into the King of Floods.

"Thus far Mexico has no cause of complaint. The conduct of our government has been that of rigorous neutrality. The present motion does not depart from that line of conduct; for the proposed recognition is not only contingent upon the de facto independence of Texas, but it follows in the train, and conforms to the spirit, of the actual arrangements of the President General Santa Anna, for the complete separation of the two countries. We have authentic information that the President General has agreed to an armistice; that he has directed the evacuation of the country; that the Mexican army is in full retreat; that the Rio Grande, a limit ar beyond the discovery and settlement of La Sale in 1684, is the provisional boundary; and that negotiations are impending for the establishment of peace on the basis of separation. Mexico has had the advantage of these arrangements, though made by a captive chief, in the unmolested retreat and happy extrication of her troops from their perilous position. Under these circumstances, it can be no infringement of neutrality for the Senate of the United States to adopt a resolution for the contingent and qualified acknowledgment of Texian independence. Even after the adoption of the resolution, it will remain inoperative upon the hands of the President until he shall have the satisfactory information which shall enable him to act without detriment to any interest, and without infraction of any law.

"Even without the armistice and provisional treaty with Santa Anna, I look upon the separation of the two countries as being in the fixed order of events, and absolutely certain to take place. Texas and Mexico are not formed for union. They are not homogeneous, I speak of Texas as known to La Salle, the bay of St. Bernard-(Matagorda)-and the waters which belong to it, being the western boundary. Ther do not belong to the same divisions of country nor to the same systems of commerce, nor to the same pursuits of business. They have no affinities-no attractions-no tendencies to conlesce. In the course of centuries, and while Mexico has extended her settlements infinitely further in other directions-to the head of the Rio Grande in the north, and to the bay of Sa Francisco in the northwest; yet no settlement had been extended east, along the neighboring coast of the Gulf of Mexico. The rich and deep cotton and sugar lands of Te very door of Mexico, yet req tion of a laborious industry t ductive, have presented no mining and pastoral populati For ages this beautiful agricul region had lain untouched. \ and by another race, its settle and the presence of this race but increased, the obstacles to 1 nature. Sooner or later, separ. evitable; and the progress of accelerated the operation of na liad has torn Texas from Me decreed independence; San Jac What the massacre decreed, th ed; and the day of the marty must for ever be regarded as th between Texas and Mexico. I cally, not morally; that mass political blunder, a miscalculat a mistake. It was expected t resistance, to subdue rebellion in blood, and to extinguish air the contrary, it has given life to the cause of Texas. It has her own citizens, and imparted the energies of revenge and given to her the sympathics an of the civilized world. It has and money, and claims upon th upon the sensibilities of the hun struggle goes on, not only ou Europe will send its chivalry to test. I repeat it; that cruel Alamo, and that black day of Go political faults. The blood of th seed of the church. The blood matriots is the dragon's teeth earth from which heroes, full gr leap into life, and rush into bat the Mexican, guiltless of that Anglo-American steel for the de if this war continues. Many we at San Jacinto, whose cries, in 1 abjuring Goliad and the Alamo, their devoted lives from the av rance of the slaughtered garriso acred prisoners.

"Unhappy day, for ever to be landay morning, March 6, 1836 lanted garrison of the Alamo, v

Vol. I.—43

e of complaint, has been that ent motion does onduct; for the contingent upon exas, but it folto the spirit, of resident General eparation of the entic information as agreed to an d the evacuation ican army is in ande, a limit far ment of La Sale ndary; and that the establishment ion. Mexico has ngements, though e unmolested ref her troops from ler these circumnent of neutrality States to adopt a and qualified acependence. Even olution, it will reands of the Presisatisfactory inforim to act without ad without infrac-

ice and provisional ok upon the separabeing in the fixed ely certain to take are not formed for rozeneous. I sreak Salle, the bay of St. d the waters which rn boundary. They divisions of country of commerce, nor to ness. They have no no tendencies to concenturies, and while settlements infinitely -to the head of the nd to the bay of San it; yet no settlement long the neighboring o. The rich and deep cotton and sugar lands of Texas, though at the very door of Mexico, yet requiring the application of a laborious industry to make them productive, have presented no temptation to the mining and pastoral population of that empire. For ages this beautiful agricultural and planting region had lain untouched. Within a few years, and by another race, its settlement has begun; and the presence of this race has not smoothed, but increased, the obstacles to union presented by nature. Sooner or later, separation would be inevitable; and the progress of human events has accelerated the operation of natural causes. Goliad has torn Texas from Mexico; Goliad has decreed independence; San Jacinto has sealed it! What the massacre decreed, the victory has sealed; and the day of the martyrdom of prisoners must for ever be regarded as the day of disunion between Texas and Mexico. I speak of it politically, not morally; that massacre was a great political blunder, a miscalculation, an error, and a mistake. It was expected to put an end to resistance, to subdue rebellion, to drown revolt in blood, and to extinguish aid in terror. On the contrary, it has given life and invincibility to the cause of Texas. It has fired the souls of her own citizens, and imparted to their courage the energies of revenge and despair. It has given to her the sympathies and commiseration of the civilized world. It has given her men and money, and claims upon the aid and a hold upon the sensibilities of the human race. If the struggle goes on, not only our America, but Europe will send its chivalry to join in the contest. I repeat it; that cruel morning of the Alamo, and that black day of Goliad, were great political faults. The blood of the martyr is the seed of the church. The blood of slaughtered patriots is the dragon's teeth sown upon the earth, from which heroes, full grown and armed. leap into life, and rush into battle. Often will the Mexican, guiltless of that blood, feel the Anglo-American steel for the deed of that day, if this war continues. Many were the innocent at San Jacinto, whose cries, in broken Spanish, bjuring Goliad and the Alamo, could not save their devoted lives from the avenging remembrance of the slaughtered garrison and the masacred prisoners.

"Unhappy day, for ever to be deplored, that unday morning, March 6, 1836, when the ununted garrison of the Alamo, victorious in so many assaults over twenty times their number perished to the last man by the hands of those, part of whom they had released on parole two months before, leaving not one to tell how they first dealt out to multitudes that death which they themselves finally received. Unhappy day, that Palm Sunday, March 27, when the five hundred and twelve prisoners at Goliad, issuing from the sally port at dawn of day, one by one, under the cruel delusion of a return to their families, found themselves enveloped in double files of cavalry and infantry, marched to a spot fit for the perpetration of the horrid deed-and there, without an instant to think of parents, country, friends, and God-in the midst of the consternation of terror and surprise, were inhumanly set upon, and pitilessly put to death, in spite of those moving cries which reached to heaven, and regardless of those supplicating hands, stretched forth for mercy, from which arms had been taken under the perfidious forms of a capitulation. Five hundred and six perished that morning-young, vigorous, brave, sons of respectable families, and the pride of many a parent's heart—and their bleeding bodies, torn with wounds, and many yet alive, were thrown in heaps upon vast fires, for the flames to consume what the steel had mangled. Six only escaped, and not by mercy, but by miracles. And this was the work of man upon his brother; of Christian upon Christian; of those upon those who adore the same God, invoke the same heavenly benediction, and draw precepts of charity and mercy from the same divine fountain. Accursed be the ground on which the dreadful deed was done! Sterile, and set apart, let it for ever be! No fruitful cultivation should ever enrich it; no joyful edifice should ever adorn it; but shut up, and closed by gloomy walls, the mournful cypress, the weeping willow, and the inscriptive monument, should for ever attest the foul deed of which it was the scene, and invoke from every passenger the throb of pity for the slain, and the start of horror for the slayer. And you, neglected victims of the Old Mission and San Patricio, shall you be forgotten because your numbers were fewer, and your hapless fate more concealed? No! but to you also justice shall be done. One common fate befell you all; one common memorial shall perpetuate your names, and embalm your memories. Inexorable history will sit in judgment upon all concerned, and will reject the plea of government orders, even if those orders emanated from the government, instead of being dictated to it. The French National Convention, in 1793, ordered all the English prisoners who should be taken in battle to be put to death. The French armies refused to execute the decree. They answered, that French soldiers were the protectors, not the assassins of prisoners; and all France, all Europe, the whole civilized world, applauded the noble reply.

"But let us not forget that there is some relief to this black and bloody picture-some alleviation to the horror of its appalling features. There was humanity, as well as cruelty, at Goliad-humanity to deplore what it could not prevent. The letter of Colonel Fernandez does honor to the human heart. Doubtless many other officers felt and mourned like him, and spent the day in unavailing regrets. The ladies, Losero and others, of Matamoros, saving the doomed victims in that city, from day to day, by their intercessions, appear like ministering angels. Several public journals, and many individuals, in Mexico, have given vent to feelings worthy of Christians, and of the civilization of the age; and the poor woman on the Gaudaloupe, who succored and saved the young Georgian (Hadaway), how nobly she appears! He was one of the few that escaped the fate of the Georgia battalion sent to the Old Mission. Overpowered by famine and despair, without arms and without comrades, he entered a solitary house filled with Mexican soldiers hunting the fugitives of his party. His action amazed them; and, thinking it a snare, they stepped out to look for the armed body of which he was supposed to be the decoy. In that instant food was given him by the humane woman, and instant flight to the swamp was pointed out. He fled, receiving the fire of many guns as he went; and, escaping the perils of the way, the hazards of battle at San Jacinto, where he fought, and of Indian massacre in the Creek nation, when the two stages were taken and part of his travelling companions killed, he lives to publish in America that instance of devoted humanity in the poor woman of the Gaudaloupe. Such acts as all these deserve to be commemorated. They relieve the revolting picture of military barbarity—soften the resentments of nations and redeem a people from the offence of individuals.

"Great is the mistake which has prevailed in Mexico, and in some parts of the United States. on the character of the population which has gone to Texas. It has been common to disparage and to stigmatize them. Nothing could be more unjust; and, speaking from knowledge either personally or well acquired (for it falls to my lot to know, either from actual acquaintance or good information, the mass of its inhabitants), I can vindicate them from erroneous imputations, and place their conduct and character on the honorable ground which they deserve to occupy. The founder of the Texian colony was Mr. Moses Austin, a respectable and enterprising native of Connecticut, and largely engaged in the lead mines of Upper Louisiana when I went to the Territory of Missouri in 1815. The Dresent head of the colony, his son, Mr. Stephen F. Austin, then a very young man, was a member of the Territorial Legislature, distinguished for his intelligence, business habits, and gentlemanly conduct. Among the grantees we distinguish the name of Robertson, son of the patriarchal founder and first settler of West Tennessee. Of the body of the emigrants, most of them are heads of families or enterprising young men, gone to better their condition by receiving grants of fine land in a fine climate, and to continue to live under the republican form of government to which they had been accustomed There sits one of them (pointing to Mr. Carson late member of Congress from North Carolina and now Secretary of State for Texas). We all know him; our greetings on his appearance in this chamber attest our respect; and such as we know him to be, so do I know the multitude of those to be who have gone to Texas. Ther have gone, not as intruders, but as grantees; and to become a barrier between the Mexicans and the marauding Indians who infested ther

"Heartless is the calumny invented and propagated, not from this floor, but elsewhere of the cause of the Texian revolt. It is said to be a war for the extension of slavery. It had a well be said that our own Revolution was awr for the extension of slavery. So far from a that no revolt, not even our own, ever had a more just and a more sacred origin. The settlers in Texas went to live under the form a government which they had left behind in the United States—a government which extends a borders.

many guarantees for life, lib the pursuit of happiness, and can and English ancestors so many hundred years. A s changes in government, and t of rulers, annoyed and dist they remained tranquil und which did not immediately b In 1822 the republic of 1821 the imperial diadem of Itur was deposed and banished. shot, and Victoria made Pre and Bravo disputed the pro toria; and found, in banishi issue known among Mexican civil war. Pedraza was elect rero overthrew him the next tamente overthrew Guerrer Santa Anna overthrew Bust him all the forms of the con whole frame of the federative his own will, and by force, San the existing Congress, convened the two Houses into one, called and made it the instrument for out trial, the constitutional Vic mez Farias, putting Barragal annihilating the State governr lishing a consolidated governm was monarch, under the retaine of President. Still, the Texian arms: they did not acquiesce, revolt. They retained their S in operation, and looked to t older and more powerful than cate the general cause, and to federal constitution of 1824. 1835, this was still her position. Mexican armed vessel appear of Texas, and declared her p At the same time, General Cos West with an army of fifteer with orders to arrest the Stat disarm the inhabitants, leaving five hundred souls; and to redu unconditional submission. Go selected point for the commence cution of these orders; and the the arms, those trusty rifles wh had brought with them from th which were their defence agains resource for game, and the guard has prevailed in he United States, ation which has common to dis-. Nothing could from knowledge nired (for it falls actual acquaintmass of its inhabiom erroneous imluct and character :h they deserve to Texian colony was le and enterprising argely engaged in siana when I went in 1815. The preson, Mr. Stephen man, was a memture, distinguished habits, and gentlee grantees we disertson, son of the st settler of West the emigrants, most lies or enterprising heir condition by ren a fine climate, and e republican form of ad been accustomed. nting to Mr. Carson, om North Carolina for Texas). We all on his appearance in espect; and such as know the multitude ne to Texas. Ther ers, but as grantees tween the Mexicans s who infested their > ny invented and proor, but elsewhere, on volt. It is said to be f slavery. It had as Revolution was a wr ery. So far from it our own, ever had a cred origin. The seive under the form of had left behind in the nent which extends as many guarantees for life, liberty, property, and the pursuit of happiness, and which their Amercan and English ancestors had vindicated for so many hundred years. A succession of violent changes in government, and the rapid overthrow of rulers, annoyed and distressed them; but they remained tranquil under every violence which did not immediately bear on themselves. In 1822 the republic of 1821 was superseded by the imperial diadem of Iturbide. In 1823 he was deposed and banished, returned and was shot, and Victoria made President. Mentuno and Bravo disputed the presidency with Victoria; and found, in banishment, the mildest issue known among Mexicans to unsuccessful civil war. Pedraza was elected in 1828; Guerrero overthrew him the next year. Then Bustamente overthrew Guerrero; and, quickly, Santa Anna overthrew Bustamente, and, with him, all the forms of the constitution, and the whole frame of the federative government. By his own will, and by force, Santa Anna dissolved the existing Congress, convened another, formed the two Houses into one, called it a convention; and made it the instrument for deposing, without trial, the constitutional Vice-President, Gomez Farias, putting Barragan into his place, annihilating the State governments, and establishing a consolidated government, of which he was monarch, under the retained republican title of President. Still, the Texians did not take up arms: they did not acquiesce, but they did not revolt. They retained their State government in operation, and looked to the other States. older and more powerful than Texas, to vindicate the general cause, and to re-establish the federal constitution of 1824. In September, 1835 this was still her position. In that month, & Mexican armed vessel appeared off the coast of Texas, and declared her ports blockaded. At the same time, General Cos appeared in the West with an army of fifteen hundred men, with orders to arrest the State authorities, to disarm the inhabitants, leaving one gun to every five hundred souls; and to reduce the State to unconditional submission. Gonzales was the selected point for the commencement of the execution of these orders; and the first thing was the arms, those trusty rifles which the settlers had brought with them from the United States, which were their defence against savages, their resource for game, and the guard which converted their houses into castles stronger than those 'which the king cannot enter.' A detachment of General Cos's army appeared at the village of Gonzales, on the 28th of September, and demanded the arms of the inhabitants; it was the same demand, and for the same purpose, which the British detachment, under Major Pitcairn, had made at Lexington, on the 19th of April, 1775. It was the same demand! and the same answer was given—resistance—battle—victory! for the American blood was at Gonzales as it had been at Lexington; and between using their arms, and surrendering their arms, that blood can never hesitate. Then followed the rapid succession of brilliant events, which, in two months, left Texas without an armed enemy in her borders, and the strong forts of Goliad and the Alamo, with their garrisons and cannon, the almost bloodless prizes of a few hundred Texian rifles. This was the origin of the revolt; and a calumny more heartless can never be imagined than that which would convert this just and holy defence of life, liberty, and property, into an aggression for the extension of slavery.

"Just in its origin, valiant and humane in its conduct, sacred in its object, the Texian revolt has illustrated the Anglo-Saxon character, and given it new titles to the respect and admiration of the world.

"It shows that liberty, justice, valor-moral, physical, and intellectual power-discriminate that race wherever it goes. Let our America rejoice, let Old England rejoice, that the Brassos and Colorado, new and strange names-streams far beyond the western bank of the Father of Floods-have felt the impress, and witnessed the exploits of a people sprung from their loins, and carrying their language, laws, and customs, their magna charta and its glorious privileges, into new regions and far distant climes. Of the individuals who have purchased lasting renown in this young war, it would be impossible, in this place to speak in detail, and invidious to discriminate; but there is one among them whose position forms an exception, and whose early association with myself justifies and claims the tribute of a particular notice. I speak of him whose romantic victory has given to the Jacinto* that immortality in grave and serious history which the

* Hyacinth: hyacinthus: huakinthos: water flower

diskos of Apollo had given to it in the fabulous pages of the heathen mythology. General Houston was born in the State of Virginia, county of Rockbridge: he was appointed an ensign in the army of the United States, during the late war with Great Britain, and served in the Creek campaign under the banners of Jackson. I was the lieutenant colonel of the regiment to which he belonged, and the first field officer to whom he reported. I then marked in him the same soldierly and gentlemanly qualities which have since distinguished his eventful career: frank, generous, brave; ready to do, or to suffer, whatever the obligations of civil or military duty imposed; and always prompt to answer the call of honor, patriotism, and friendship. Sincerely do I rejoice in his victory. It is a victory without alloy, and without parallel, except at New Orleans. It is a victory which the civilization of the age, and the honor of the human race, required him to gain: for the nineteenth century is not the age in which a repetition of the Goliad matins could be endured. Nobly has he answered the requisition; fresh and luxuriant are the laurels which adorn his brow. "It is not within the scope of my present purpose, to speak of military events, and to celebrate the exploits of that vanguard of the Anglo-Saxons who are now on the confines of the ancient empire of Montezuma; but that combat of the San Jacinto! it must for ever remain in the catalogue of military miracles. Seven hundred and fifty citizens, miscellaneously armed with rifles, muskets, belt pistols, and knives, under a leader who had never seen service, except as a subaltern, march to attack near double their numbers—march in open day across a clear prairie, to attack upwards of twelve hundred veterans, the elite of an invading army of seven thousand, posted in a wood, their flanks secured, front intrenched; and commanded by a general trained in civil wars, victorious in numberless battles; and chief of an empire of which no man becomes chief except as conqueror. In twenty minutes, the position is forced. The combat becomes a carnage. The flowery prairie is stained with blood; the hyacinth is no longer blue, but scarlet. Six hundred Mexicans are dead; six hundred more are prisoners, half wounded; the President General himself is a prisoner; the camp and baggage all which, in giving the Secretary of the Treasur, taken; and the loss of the victors, six killed and twenty wounded. Such are the results, and which no European can believe, but those who saw Jackson at New Orleans. Houston is the pupil of Jackson; and he is the first self-made general, since the time of Mark Antony, and the King Antigonus, who has taken the general of the army and the head of the government cantive in battle. Different from Antony, he has spared the life of his captive, though forfeited by every law, human and divine.

"I voted, in 1821, to acknowledge the absolute independence of Mexico; I vote now to recognize the contingent and expected independence of Texas. In both cases, the vote is given upon the same principle-upon the principle of disjunction where conjunction is impossible or disastrous. The Union of Mexico and Spain had become impossible; that of Mexico and Texas is no longer desirable or possible. A more fatal present could not be made than that of the future incorporation of the Texas of La Salle with the ancient empire of Montezuma. They could not live together, and extermination is not the genius of the age; and, besides is more easily talked of than done. Bloodshed only could be the fruit of their conjunction: and every drop of that blood would be the dragon's teeth sown upon the earth. No wise Mexican should wish to have this Trojan horse shut up within their walls."

CHAPTER CXLVI.

THE SPECIE CIRCULAR.

The issue of the Treasury order, known as the "Specie Circular," was one of the events which marked the foresight, the decision, and the invincible firmness of General Jackson. It was issued immediately after the adjournment of Congress, and would have been issued before the adjournment, except for the fear that Congress would counteract it by law. It was an order to all the land-offices to reject paper money, and receive nothing but gold and silver in payment of the public lands; and was issued under the authority of the resolution of the year 1816 discretionary authority to specie paying banks in rever him also the right to reject ber of these banks had no the quantity of notes issued facility of obtaining loans s temptation to converting s real estate, so tempting, that of paper from seven hundred : their course towards the new public domain—discharging ume there collected torrents land-offices. The sales were millions a month, with the pr ed increase after the rise of was this increase from the lan that surplus which the conburlesqued to divide among there was no limit to this co land into inconvertible paper house branch of the revenue in the amount to be receive amount of duties to be paid: bu branch there was no limit. I that point that the remedy for that reason, the "Specie Ci ed in its application to the totally forbade the sale of the any thing but hard money. ] incalculable value to the U1 issued by President Jackson in of the will both of the majorit of his cabinet.

Before the adjournment of concert with the President, th View had attempted to get an : stop the evil; and in support that effect gave his opinion of t of the benefits which would re pression. He said:

"He was able to inform th happened that the sales of the deceived all calculations, and 1 millions a year to five millions this: speculators went to bank ten, twenty, fifty thousand dol small notes, usually under tw engaged to carry off these note tance, sometimes five hundred miles; and there laid them out Being land-office money, they w the country; many of these sn never return at all, and their clear gain to the bank; others for a long time; and the bank

re the results, and re, but those who

Houston is the he first self-made k Antony, and the en the general of government capm Antony, he has a, though forfeited inc.

wledge the abso-I vote now to rexpected independs, the vote is given on the principle of n is impossible or Mexico and Spain at 'of Mexico and e or possible. A be made than that of the Texas of La ire of Montezuma. , and extermination re; and, besides, is done. Bloodshed their conjunction; I would be the drae earth. No wise e this Trojan horse

CXLVI.

RCULAR.

ry order, known as a one of the events th, the decision, and Jeneral Jackson. It ter the adjournment we been issued before or the fear that Control by law. It was an to reject paper money, ald and silver in payand was issued under the of the year 1816 etary of the Treasury.

discretionary authority to receive the notes of specie paying banks in revenue payments, gave him also the right to reject them. The numher of these banks had now become so great, the quantity of notes issued so enormous, the facility of obtaining loans so universal, and the temptation to converting shadowy paper into real estate, so tempting, that the rising streams of paper from seven hundred and fifty banks took their course towards the new States, seat of the public domain—discharging in accumulated volume there collected torrents upon the different land-offices. The sales were running up to five millions a month, with the prospect of unbounded increase after the rise of Congress; and it was this increase from the land sales which made that surplus which the constitution had been burlesqued to divide among the States. And there was no limit to this conversion of public land into inconvertible paper. In the customhouse branch of the revenue there was a limit in the amount to be received—limited by the amount of duties to be paid: but in the land-office branch there was no limit. It was therefore at that point that the remedy was wanted; and, for that reason, the "Specie Circular" was limited in its application to the land-offices; and totally forbade the sale of the public lands for any thing but hard money. It was an order of incalculable value to the United States, and issued by President Jackson in known disregard of the will both of the majority of Congress and of his cabinet.

Before the adjournment of Congress, and in concert with the President, the author of this View had attempted to get an act of Congress to stop the evil; and in support of his motion to that effect gave his opinion of the evil itself, and of the benefits which would result from its suppression. He said:

"He was able to inform the Senate how it happened that the sales of the public lands had deceived all calculations, and run up from four millions a year to five millions a quarter; it was this: speculators went to banks, borrowed five, ten, twenty, fifty thousand dollars in paper, in small notes, usually under twenty dollars, and engaged to carry off these notes to a great distance, sometimes five hundred or a thousand miles; and there laid them out for public lands. Being land-office money, they would circulate in the country; many of these small notes would never return at all, and their loss would be a clear gain to the bank; others would not return for a long time; and the bank would draw interest on them for years before they had to redeem them. Thus speculators, loaded with paper, would outbid settlers and cultivators, who had no undue accommodations from banks, and who had nothing but specie to give for lands, or the notes which were its real equivalent. Mr. B. said that, living in a new State, it came within his knowledge that such accommodations as he had mentioned were the main cause of the excessive sales which had taken place in the public lands, and that the effect was equally injurious to every interest concerned-except the banks and the speculators: it was injurious to the treasury, which was filling up with paper; to the new States, which were flooded with paper; and to settlers and cultivators, who were outbid by speculators, loaded with this borrowed paper. A return to specie payments for lands is the remedy for all these evils."

Having exposed the evil, and that to the country generally as well as to the federal treasury, Mr. B. went on to give his opinion of the benefits of suppressing it; and said:

"It would put an end to every complaint now connected with the subject, and have a beneficial effect upon every public and private interest. Upon the federal government its effect would be to check the unnatural sale of the public lands to speculators for paper; it would throw the speculators out of market, limit the sales to settlers and cultivators, stop the swelling increases of paper surpluses in the treasury, put an end to all projects for disposing of surpluses; and relieve all anxiety for the fate of the public moneys in the deposit banks. Upon the new States, where the public lands are situated, its effects would be most auspicious. It would stop the flood of paper with which they are inundated. and bring in a steady stream of gold and silver in its place. It would give them a hard-money currency, and especially a share of the gold currency; for every emigrant could then carry gold to the country. Upon the settler and cultivator who wished to purchase land its effect would be peculiarly advantageous. He would be relieved from the competition of speculators; he would not have to contend with those who received undue accommodations at banks, and came to the land-offices loaded with bales of bank notes which they had borrowed upon condition of carrying them far away, and turning them loose where many would be lost, and never get back to the bank that issued them. All these and many other good effects would thus be produced, and no hardship or evil of any kind could accrue to the meritorious part of the country; for the settler and cultivator who wishes to buy land for use, or for a settlement for his children, or to increase his farm, would have no difficutly in getting hard money to make his purchase. He has no undue accommodations from banks. has no paper but what is good; such as he can readily convert into specie. To him the exaction of specie payments from all purchasers would be a rule of equality, which would enable him to purchase what he needs without competition with fictitious and borrowed capital."

Mr. B. gave a view of the actual condition of the paper currency, which he described as hideous and appalling, doomed to a catastrophe; and he advised every prudent man, as well as the government, to fly from its embrace. His voice, and his warning, answered no purpose. He got no support for his motion. A few friends were willing to stand by him, but the opposition senators stood out in unbroken front against it, reinforced largely by the friends of the administration: but it is in vain to attribute the whole opposition to the measure merely to the mistaken opinions of friends, and the resentful policy of foes. There was another cause operating to the same effect; and the truth of history requires it to be told. There were many members of Congress engaged in these land speculations, upon loans of bank paper; and who were unwilling to see a sudden termination of so profitable a game. The rejection of the bill it was thought would be sufficient; and on the news of it the speculation redoubled its activity. But there was a remedy in reserve for the cure of the evil which they had not foreseen, and which was applied the moment that Congress was gone. Jackson was still President! and he had the nerve which the occasion required. He saw the public lands fleeting away-saw that Congress would not interfere—and knew the majority of his cabinet to be against his interference. He did as he had often done in councils of war -called the council together to hear a decision. He summoned his cabinet—laid the case before them-heard the majority of adverse opinions » -and directed the order to issue. His private Secretary, Mr. Donelson, was directed to prepare a draught of the order. The author of this View was all the while in the office of this private Secretary. Mr. Donelson came to him, with the President's decision, and requested him to draw up the order. It was done-the rough draught carried back to the council-put into official form-signed-issued. It was a second edition of the removal of the deposits scene, and made an immense sensation. The disappointed speculators raged. Congress was considered insulted, the cabinet defied, the banks disgraced. But the vindication of the measure soon came, in the discovery of the fact, that some tens of millions of this bank paper was on its way to the land-offices to be changed into land—when overtaken by this fatal "Specie Circular," and turned back to the sources from which it came.

CHAPTER CXLVII.

DEATH OF MR. MADISON, FOURTH PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

HE died in the last year of the second term of the presidency of General Jackson, at the advanced age of eighty-six, his mind clear and active to the last, and greatly occupied with solicitous concern for the safety of the Union which he had contributed so much to establish He was a patriot from the beginning. "When the first blood was shed in the streets of Boston. he was a student in the process of his education at Princeton College, where the next year, he received the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He was even then so highly distinguished by the power of application and the rapidity of progress. that he performed all the exercises of the two senior collegiate years in one-while at the same time his deportment was so exemplary. that Dr. Witherspoon, then at the head of the college, and afterwards himself one of the most eminent patriots and sages of our revolution always delighted in bearing testimony to the excellency of his character at that early stage of his career; and said to Thomas Jefferson long afterwards, when they were all colleagues in the revolutionary Congress, that in the whole career of Mr. Madison at Princeton, he had never known him say, or do, an indiscreet thing" So wrote Mr. John Quincy Adams in his discourse upon the "Life of James Madison," written at the request of the two Houses of Congress: and in this germ of manhood is to be seen all the qualities of head and heart which mature age, and great events, so fully developed and which so nobly went into the formation of national character while constituting his own: the same quick intellect, the same laborious application, the same purity of morals, the same decorum of deportment. He had a rare combination of talent—a speaker, a writer, a comsellor. In these qualites of the mind he classed with General Hamilton; and wa only eminent public man of h classed, and so equally contended fields of intellectual action. Mr accustomed to say he was the could answer Hamilton. Perspic closeness of reasoning, and stric the unity of his subject, were istics of his style; and his speech and his dispatches from the Sta may be equally studied as mode plomatic and parliamentary as formation, as examples of integr ing public questions: and as illuamenity with which the most e and the most critical correspon conducted by good sense, good t temper. Mr. Madison was one founders of our present united ( ment, equally efficient in the work which framed the constitution a labors which secured its adoption with General Hamilton in the c in the Federalist—both members gress and of the convention at and working together in both bo tainment of the same end, until parties in Washington's time bes old friends, and to array again former cordial political co-labo first writer of one party, Gen wrote some leading papers, which writer of the other party, Mr. called upon to answer: but with on the part of either their prev their decorum of character, and respect for each other. Nothin said could give an unpleasant pe to the other; and, though writin rowed names, their productions known to each other and the pu but' themselves could imitate Purity, modesty, decorum—a mc perance, and virtue in every this characteristics of Mr. Madison's ners; and it is grateful to look b elevation and beauty of persona the illustrious and venerated fo Republic, leaving such virtuous 1 ters to be admired, as well as suc to be preserved. The offer of t the memory of one of the purest

n its way to land—when ircular," and nich it came.

VII.

H PRESIDENT

econd term of on, at the adind clear and occupied with of the Union h to establish. ning. "When eets of Boston, f his education next year, he · of Arts. He guished by the lity of progress, ises of the two -while at the so exemplary. he head of the one of the most our revolution, stimony to the hat early stage omas Jefferson e all colleagues hat in the whole inceton, he had adiscreet thing." lams in his disames Madison! two Houses of f manhood is to and heart which fully developed the formation of tuting his own: me laborious apmorals, the same had a rare coma writer, a coune mind he classed only eminent public man of his day who so classed, and so equally contended in three of the fields of intellectual action. Mr. Jefferson was accustomed to say he was the only man that could answer Hamilton. Perspicuity, precision, closeness of reasoning, and strict adherence to the unity of his subject, were the characteristics of his style; and his speeches in Congress, and his dispatches from the State Department, may be equally studied as models of style, diplomatic and parliamentary as sources of information, as examples of integrity in conducting public questions: and as illustrations of the amenity with which the most earnest debate, and the most critical correspondence, can be conducted by good sense, good taste, and good temper. Mr. Madison was one of the great founders of our present united federal government, equally efficient in the working convention which framed the constitution and the written labors which secured its adoption. Co-laborer with General Hamilton in the convention and in the Federalist—both members of the old Congress and of the convention at the same time. and working together in both bodies for the attainment of the same end, until the division of parties in Washington's time began to estrange old friends, and to array against each other former cordial political co-laborers. As the first writer of one party, General Hamilton wrote some leading papers, which, as the first writer of the other party, Mr. Madison was called upon to answer: but without forgetting on the part of either their previous relations, their decorum of character, and their mutual respect for each other. Nothing that either said could give an unpleasant personal feeling to the other; and, though writing under borrowed names, their productions were equally known to each other and the public; for none but' themselves could imitate themselves. Purity, modesty, decorum—a moderation, temperance, and virtue in every thing - were the characteristics of Mr. Madison's life and manners; and it is grateful to look back upon such elevation and beauty of personal character in the illustrious and venerated founders of our Republic, leaving such virtuous private characters to be admired, as well as such great works to be preserved. The offer of this tribute to the memory of one of the purest of public men with General Hamilton; and was, perhaps, the is the more gratefully rendered, private reasons mixing with considerations of public duty. Mr. Madison is the only President from whom he ever asked a favor, and who granted immediately all that was asked—a lieutenant-colonelcy in the army of the United States in the late war with Great Britain.

CHAPTER CXLVIII.

DEATH OF MR. MONROE, FIFTH PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

HE died during the first term of the administration of President Jackson, and is appropriately noticed in this work next after Mr. Madison, with whom he had been so long and so intimately associated, both in public and in private life; and whose successor he had been in successive high posts, including that of the presidency itself. He is one of our eminent public characters which have not attained their due place in history; nor has any one attempted to give him that place but one-Mr John Quincy Adams-in his discourse upon the life of Mr. Monroe. Mr. Adams, and who could be a more competent judge? places him in the first tine of American statesmen, and contributing, during the fifty years of his connection with the public affairs, a full share in the aggrandisement and advancement of his country. His parts were not shining, but solid. He lacked genius, but he possessed judgment: and it was the remark of Dean Swift, well illustrated in his own case and that of his associate friends, Harley and Bolingbroke (three of the rarest geniuses that ever acted together, and whose cause went to ruin notwithstanding their wit and eloquence), that genius was not necessary to the conducting of the affairs of state: that judgment, diligence, knowledge, good intentions, and will, were sufficient. Mr. Monroe was an instance of the soundness of this remark, as well as the three brilliant geniuses of Queen Anne's time, and on the opposite side of it. Mr. Monroe had none of the mental qualities which dazzle and astonish mankind; but he had a discretion which seldom committed a mistake—an integrity that always looked to the public good-a firmness of will which carried him resolutely upon his object-a diligence that mastered every subject—and a perseverance that yielded to no obstacle or reverse. He began his patriotic career in the military service, at the commencement of the war of the revolutionwent into the general assembly of his native State at an early age-and thence, while still young, into the continental Congress. There he showed his character, and laid the foundation of his future political fortunes in his uncompromising opposition to the plan of a treaty with Spain by which the navigation of the Mississippi was to be given up for twenty-five years in return for commercial privileges. It was the qualities of judgment, and perseverance, which he displayed on that occasion, which brought him those calls to diplomacy in which he was afterwards so much employed with three of the then greatest European powers-France, Spain, Great Britain. And it was in allusion to this circumstance that President Jefferson afterwards, when the right of deposit at New Orleans had been violated by Spain, and when a minister was wanted to recover it, said, "Monroe is the man: the defence of the Mississippi belongs to him." And under this appointment he had the felicity to put his name to the treaty which secured the Mississippi, its navigation and all the territory drained by its western waters, to the United States for ever. Several times in his life he seemed to miscarry, and to fall from the top to the bottom of the political ladder: but always to reascend as high, or higher than ever. Recalled by Washington from the French mission, to which he had been appointed from the Senate of the United States, he returned to the starting point of his early career-the general assembly of his State—served as a member from his county-was elected Governor; and from that post restored by Jefferson to the French mission, soon to be followed by the embassies to Spain and England. Becoming estranged from Mr. Madison about the time of that gentleman's first election to the presidency, and having returned from his missions a little mortified that Mr. Jefferson had rejected his British treaty without sending it to the Senate, he was again at the foot of the political ladder, and apparently out of favor with those who were at its top.

Nothing despairing, he went back to the old starting point-served again in the Virginia general assembly—was again elected Governor: and from that post was called to the cabinet of Mr. Madison, to be his double Secretary of State and War. He was the effective power in the declaration of war against Great Britain. His residence abroad had shown him that unavenged British wrongs was lowering our character with Europe, and that war with the "mistress of the seas" was as necessary to our respectability in the eyes of the world, as to the security of our citizens and commerce upon the ocean. He brought up Mr. Madison to the war point. He drew the war report which the committee on foreign relations presented to the House-that report which the absence of Mr. Peter B. Porter the chairman, and the hesitancy of Mr. Grundy. the second on the committee, threw into the hands of Mr. Calhoun, the third on the list and the youngest of the committee; and the presentation of which immediately gave him a national reputation. Prime mover of the war he was also one of its most efficient supporters. taking upon himself, when adversity pressed the actual duties of war minister, financier, and foreign secretary at the same time. He was an enemy to all extravagance, to all intrigue, to all indirection in the conduct of business. Mr. Jefferson's comprehensive and compendious eulogium upon him, as brief as true, was the faithful description of the man-"honest and brave." He was an enemy to nepotism, and no consideration or entreaty-no need of the support which an office would give, or intercession from friends-could ever induce him to appoint a relative to any place under the government. He had opposed the adoption of the constitution until amendments were obtained; but these had, he became one of its firmest supporters, and labored faithfully, anxiously and devotedly, to administer it in its purity. He was the first President under whom the author of this View served, commencing his first senatorial term with the commencement of the second presidential term of this last of the men of the revolution who were spared to fill the office in the great Republic which they had founded

CHAPTER CX

DEATH OF CHIEF JUSTICE M

HE died in the middle of the s General Jackson's presidency, ha justice of the Supreme Court States full thirty-five years, pr while (to use the inimitable la Randolph), "with native digni tending grace." He was supre high judicial station :- a solid i reasoning powers, acute and pen with manners and habits to suit the sancity of the ermine: -att laborious: grave on the bench intercourse of life: simple in his exorably just. Seen by a strang room, and he would be taken for try gentleman, without claims to ready to take the lowest place i at table, and to act his part with env body. Spoken to, and closel would be seen to be a gentlem breeding, of winning and preposse just as much mind as the occ him to show. Coming to man's beginning of the revolution he fol rent into which so many young to become eminent, so ardently served in the army, and with no vation, under the eyes of Washing to Congress at an early age he House of Representatives in th elder Mr. Adams, and found in o minent questions of the day a st fitted to his acute and logical turn case of the famous Jonathan Rol to be an American citizen, recl British government as a deserter and hanged at the yard-arm of an of-war. Party spirit took up th was one to inflame that spirit. spoke in defence of the admin made the master speech of the da were such master speakers in Madison, Gallatin, William B. ( Livingston, John Randolph. It subject, adapted to the legal minshall, requiring a legal pleading:

he plead it. Mr. Randolph has oft the Virginia ed Governor; he cabinet of etary of State power in the Britain. His nat unavenged haracter with nistress of the spectability in ecurity of our e ocean. He ar point. He committee on House-that eter B. Porter. f Mr. Grundy hrew into the on the list and and the prerave him a naof the war, he nt supporters, ersity pressed, , financier, and ie. He was an intrigue, to all business. Mr. ompendious eutrue, was the -" honest and nepotism, and no need of the ive, or intercesinduce him to

under the go-

he adoption of

ients were ob-

ame one of its

faithfully, anx-

ter it in its puri-

under whom the

mencing his first

encement of the last of the men

ed to fill the office

y had founded

k to the old

CHAPTER CXLIX.

DEATH OF CHIEF JUSTICE MARSHALL

 $\ensuremath{\text{He}}$  died in the middle of the second term of General Jackson's presidency, having been chief justice of the Supreme Court of the United States full thirty-five years, presiding all the while (to use the inimitable language of Mr. Randolph), "with native dignity and unpretending grace." He was supremely fitted for high judicial station:—a solid judgment, great reasoning powers, acute and penetrating mind: with manners and habits to suit the purity and the sancity of the ermine :- attentive, patient. laborious: grave on the bench, social in the intercourse of life: simple in his tastes, and inexorably just. Seen by a stranger come into a room, and he would be taken for a modest country gentleman, without claims to attention, and ready to take the lowest place in company, or at table, and to act his part without trouble to env body. Spoken to, and closely observed, he would be seen to be a gentleman of finished breeding, of winning and prepossessing talk, and just as much mind as the occasion required him to show. Coming to man's estate at the beginning of the revolution he followed the current into which so many young men, destined to become eminent, so ardently entered; and served in the army, and with notice and observation, under the eyes of Washington. Elected to Congress at an early age he served in the House of Representatives in the time of the elder Mr. Adams, and found in one of the prominent questions of the day a subject entirely fitted to his acute and logical turn of mind-the case of the famous Jonathan Robbins, claiming to be an American citizen, reclaimed by the British government as a deserter, delivered up, and hanged at the yard-arm of an English manof-war. Party spirit took up the case, and it was one to inflame that spirit. Mr. Marshall spoke in defence of the administration, and made the master speech of the day, when there were such master speakers in Congress as Madison, Gallatin, William B. Giles, Edward Livingston, John Randolph. It was a judicial subject, adapted to the legal mind of Mr. Marshall, requiring a legal pleading: and well did to say that it distanced competition-leaving all associates and opponents far behind, and carrying the case. Seldom has one speech brought so much fame, and high appointment to any one man. When he had delivered it his reputation was in the zenith: in less than nine brief months thereafter he was Secretary at War, Secretary of State, Minister to France, and Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. Politically, he classed with the federal party, and was one of those high-minded and patriotic men of that party, who, acting on principle, commanded the respect of those even who deemed them wrong.

CHAPTER CL.

DEATH OF COL. BURR, THIRD VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

HE was one of the few who, entering the war of independence with ardor and brilliant prospects, disappointed the expectations he had created, dishonored the cause he had espoused, and ended in shame the career which he had opened with splendor. He was in the adventurous expedition of Arnold through the wilderness to Quebec, went ahead in the disguise of a priest to give intelligence of the approach of aid to General Montgomery, arrived safely through many dangers, captivated the General by the courage and address which he had shown, was received by him into his military family; ard was at his side when he was killed. Returning to the seat of war in the Northern States he was invited by Washington, captivated like Montgomery by the soldierly and intellectual qualities he had shown, to his headquarters, with a view to placing him on his staff; but he soon perceived that the brilliant young man lacked principle; and quietly got rid of him. The after part of his life was such as to justify the opinion which Washington had formed of him; but such was his address and talent as to rise to high political distinction: Attorney General of New-York, Senator in Congress, and Vice-President of the United States. At the close of the presidential election of 1800, he stood equal with Mr. Jefferson in he plead it. Mr. Randolph has often been heard the vote which he received, and his undoubted successor at the end of Mr. Jefferson's term. But there his honors came to a stand, and took a downward turn, nor ceased descending until he was landed in the abyss of shame, misery, and desolation. He intrigued with the federalists to supplant Mr. Jefferson-to get the place of President, for which he had not received a single vote-was suspected, detected, baffledlost the respect of his party, and was thrown upon crimes to recover a position, or to avenge his losses. The treasonable attempt in the West, and the killing of General Hamilton, ended his career in the United States. But although he had deceived the masses, and reached the second office of the government, with the certainty of attaining the first if he only remained still, yet there were some close observers whom he never deceived. The early mistrust of Washington has been mentioned: it became stronger as Burr mounted higher in 'the public favor; and in 1794, when a senator in Congress, and when the republican party had taken him for their choice for the French mission in the place of Mr. Monroe recalled, and had sent a committee of which Mr. Madison was chief to ask his nomination from Washington, that wise and virtuous man peremptorily refused it, giving as a categorical reason, that his rule was invariable, never to appoint an immoral man to any office. Mr. Jefferson had the same ill opinion of him, and, notwithstanding his party zeal, always considered him in market when the federalists had any high office to bestow. But General Hamilton was most thoroughly imbued with a sense of his unworthiness, and deemed it due to his country to balk his election over Jefferson; and did so. His letters to the federal members of Congress painted Burr in his true character, and dashed far from his grasp, and for ever, the gilded prize his hand was touching. For that frustration of his hopes, four years afterwards, he killed Hamilton in a duel, having on the part of Burr the spirit of an assassination-cold-blooded, calculated, revengeful, and falsely-pretexted. He alleged some trivial and recent matter for the challenge, such as would not justify it in any code of honor; and went to the ground to kill upon an old grudge which he was ashamed to avow. Hard was the fate of Hamilton-losing his life at the early age of forty-two for having done justice to his country in the person of the man to whom he stood most politically opposed, and the chief of the party by which he had been constrained to retire from the scene of public life at the age of thirty-four-the age at which most others begin it-he having accomplished gigantic works. He was the man most eminently and variously endowed of all the eminent men of his day-at once soldier and statesman, with a head to conceive, and a hand to execute: a writer an orator, a jurist: an organizing mind, able to grasp the greatest system; and administrative to execute the smallest details: wholly turned to the practical business of life, and with a capacity for application and production which teemed with gigantic labors, each worthy to be the sole product of a single master intellect; but lavished in litters from the ever teeming fecundity of his prolific genuis. Hard his fate, when withdrawing from public life at the age of thirty-four, he felt himself constrained to appeal to posterity for that justice which contemporaries withheld from him. And the appeal was not in vain. Statues rise to his memory; history embalms his name: posterity will do iustice to the man who at the age of twenty was "the principal and most confidential aid of Washington," who retained the love and confidence of the Father of his country to the last; and to whom honorable opponents, while opposing his systems of policy, accorded honor, and patriotism, and social affections, and transcendental abilities.—This chapter was commenced to write a notice of the character of Colonel Burr; but that subject will not remain under the pen. At the appearance of that name, the spirit of Hamilton starts up to rebuke the intrusion-to drive back the foul apparition to its gloomy abode-and to concertrate all generous feeling on itself.

CHAPTER CLI.

DEATH OF WILLIAM B. GILES, OF VIRGINIA.

He also died under the presidency of General Jackson. He was one of the eminent public men coming upon the stage of action with the establishment of the new constitution—with the change from a League to a Union; from the confederation to the unity of the States—and was one of the most conspicue annals of our Congress. He ha speaking talent which is most e lative bodies, and which is so set-speaking. He was a debater sidered by Mr. Randolph to be, Representatives, what Charles ted to be in the British House the most accomplished debater v try had ever seen. But their a tages were very different, and the practice very opposite. Mr. Fox self in the House, speaking on Mr. Giles out of the House, ta body. Mr. Fox, a ripe scholar, a ature, and imbued with all the the classics in all time; Mr. Gile nor studied, but talked incessa men, rather debating with them and drew from this source of in from the ready powers of his n means of speaking on every su fulness which the occasion requi ness which confounds an advereffect which a lick in time alv He had the kind of talent which to complete the circle of all so which sustained the administrati ferson. Macon was wise, Rand Gallatin and Madison able in a Giles was the ready champion, a the combat-always furnished w change to meet every bill. H member of the House; then sen ernor; and died at an advanced as Henry, without doing justice to the transmission of his labors to cause, like Henry, he had been de cation and in reading. He was friend of all the eminent men of 1 sufficiently bespeaks him a gentlem and heart, as well as a statesma:

CHAPTER CL

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION (

Mr. Van Buren was the candidate ratic party; General Harrison th y opposed, and he had been cene of public age at which accomplished nost eminently e eminent men tesman, with a ecute: a writer. z mind, able to administrative. wholly turned and with a caduction which h worthy to be er intellect; but teeming fecund his fate, when at the age of rained to appeal hich contempo-1 the appeal was s memory: hisrity will do juse of twenty was fidential aid of love and confintry to the last; nents, while opaccorded honor, ctions, and tranapter was comthe character of ect will not ree appearance of lton starts up to re back the foul -and to concenself.

CLI.

S, OF VIRGINIA

idency of General ie eminent public of action with the onstitution-with Minion; from the f the States-and was one of the most conspicuous in the early annals of our Congress. He had that kind of speaking talent which is most effective in legislative bodies, and which is so different from set-speaking. He was a debater; and was considered by Mr. Randolph to be, in our House of Representatives, what Charles Fox was admitted to be in the British House of Commons: the most accomplished debater which his country had ever seen. But their acquired advantages were very different, and their schools of practice very opposite. Mr. Fox perfected himself in the House, speaking on every subject; Mr. Giles out of the House, talking to every body. Mr. Fox, a ripe scholar, addicted to litersture, and imbued with all the learning of all the classics in all time; Mr. Giles neither read nor studied, but talked incessantly with able men, rather debating with them all the while: and drew from this source of information, and from the ready powers of his mind, the ample means of speaking on every subject with the fulness which the occasion required, the quickness which confounds an adversary, and the effect which a lick in time always produces. He had the kind of talent which was necessary to complete the circle of all sorts of ability which sustained the administration of Mr. Jefferson. Macon was wise, Randolph brilliant. Gallatin and Madison able in argument; but Giles was the ready champion, always ripe for the combat-always furnished with the ready change to meet every bill. He was long a member of the House; then senator, and governor; and died at an advanced age, like Patrick Henry, without doing justice to his genius in the transmission of his labors to posterity; because, like Henry, he had been deficient in education and in reading. He was the intimate friend of all the eminent men of his day, which sufficiently bespeaks him a gentleman of manners and heart, as well as a statesman of head and

CHAPTER CLII.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION OF 1886.

MILVAN BUREN was the candidate of the demo-

the opposition; and Mr. Hugh L. White that of a fragment of the democracy. Mr. Van Buren was elected, receiving one hundred and seventy electoral votes, to seventy-three given to General Harrison, and twenty-six given to Mr. White. The States voting for each, were: -Mr. Van Buren: Maine, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia, North Carolina, Louisiana, Mississippi, Illinois, Alabama, Missouri, Michigan, Arkansas. For General Harrison: Vermont, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana. For Mr. White: Georgia and Tennessee. Massachusetts complimented Mr. Webster by bestowing her fourteen votes upon him; and South Carolina, as in the two preceding elections, threw her vote away upon a citizen not a candidate, and not a child of her soil-Mr. Mangum of North Carolina—disappointing the expectations of Mr. White's friends, whose standing for the presidency had been instigated by Mr. Calhoun, to divide the democratic party and defeat Mr. Van Buren. Colonel Richard M. Johnson, of Kentucky, was the democratic candidate for the vicepresidency, and received one hundred and fortyseven votes, which, not being a majority of the whole number of votes given, the election was referred to the Senate, to choose between the two highest on the list; and that body being largely democratic, he was duly elected: receiving thirty-three out of forty-nine senatorial votes. The rest of the vice-presidential vote, in the electoral colleges, had been between Mr. Francis Granger, of New York, who received seventy-seven votes; Mr. John Tyler, of Virginia, who received forty-seven; and Mr. William Smith, of South Carolina, complimented by Virginia with her twenty-three votes. Mr. Granger, being the next highest on the list, after Colonel Johnson, was voted for as one of the two referred to the Senate; and received sixteen votes. A list of the senators voting for each will show the strength of the respective parties in the Senate, at the approaching end of President Jackson's administration; and how signally all the efforts intended to overthrow him had ended in the discomfiture of their authors, and converted an absolute majority of the whole Senate into a meagre minority of one third. The votes for Colonel Johnson were: Mr. Benton of Missouri; Mr. Black of Mississippi; Mr. gratic party; General Harrison the candidate of Bedford Brown of North Carolina; Mr. Buchanan of Pennsylvania; Mr. Cuthbert of Georgia; Mr. Dana of Maine; Mr. Ewing of Illinois; Mr. Fulton of Arkansas; Mr. Grundy of Tennessee; Mr. Hendricks of Indiana; Mr. Hubbard of Maine; Mr. William Rufus King of Alabama; Mr. John P. King of Georgia; Mr. Louis F. Linn of Missouri; Mr. Lucius Lyon of Michigan; Mr. McKean of Pennsylvania; Mr. Gabriel Moore of Alabama; Mr. Morris of Ohio; Mr. Alexander Mouton of Louisiana; Mr. Wilson C. Nicholas of Louisiana; Mr. Niles of Connecticut; Mr. John Norvell of Michican; Mr. John Page of New Hampshire; Mr. Richard E. Parker of Virginia; Mr. Rives of Virginia; Mr. John M. Robinson of Illinois; Mr. Ruggles of Maine; Mr. Ambrose H. Sevier of Arkansas; Mr. Peleg Sprague of Maine; Mr. Robert Strange of North Carolina; Mr. Nathaniel P. Talmadge of New York; Mr. Tipton of Indiana; Mr. Robert J. Walker of Mississippi; Mr. Silas Wright of New York. Those voting for Mr. Francis Granger were: Mr. Richard H. Bayard of Delaware; Mr. Clay; Mr. John M. Clayton of Delaware; Mr. John Crittenden of Kentucky; Mr. John Davis of Massachusetts; Mr. Thomas Ewing of Ohio; Mr. Kent of Maryland; Mr. Nehemiah Knight of Rhode Island; Mr. Prentiss of Vermont; Mr. Asher Robbins of Rhode Island; Mr. Samuel L. Southard of New Jersey; Mr. John S. Spence of Maryland; Mr. Swift of Vermont; Mr. Gideon Tomlinson of Connecticut; Mr. Wall of New Jersey; Mr. Webster. South Carolina did not vote, neither in the person of Mr. Calhoun nor in that of his colleague, Mr. Preston: an omission which could not be attributed to absence or accident, as both were present; nor fail to be remarked and considered ominous in the then temper of the State, and her refusa' to vote in the three preceding presidential elections.

CHAPTER CLIII.

LAST ANNUAL MESSAGE OF PRESIDENT JACKSON.

AT the opening of the second Session of the twenty-fourth Congress, President Jackson delivered his last Annual Message, and under circumstances to be grateful to his heart. The powerful opposition in Congress had been broken down, and he saw full majorities of ardent and tried friends in each House. We were in peace and friendship with all the world, and all exciting questions quieted at home. Industry in all its branches was prosperous. The revenue was abundant—too much so. The people were happy. His message, of course, was first a recapitulation of this auspicious state of things, at home and abroad; and then a reference to the ones. tions of domestic interest and policy which required attention, and might call for action. At the head of these measures stood the deposit act of the last session—the act which under the insidious and fabulous title of a deposit of a surplus of revenue with the States-made an actual distribution of that surplus; and was intended by its contrivers to do so. His notice of this measure went to two points-his own regrets for having signed the act, and his misgivings in relation to its future observation. He

"The consequences apprehended, when the deposit act of the last session received a reluctant approval, have been measurably realized Though an act merely for the deposit of the surplus moneys of the United States in the State Treasuries, for safe keeping, until ther may be wanted for the service of the general government, it has been extensively spoken of as an act to give the money to the several States: and they have been advised to use it as a gift. without regard to the means of refunding it when called for. Such a suggestion has doubtless been made without a due consideration of the obligation of the deposit act, and without a proper attention to the various principles and interests which are affected by it. It is manifest that the law itself cannot sanction such a suggestion, and that, as it now stands the States have no more authority to receive and use these deposits without intending to return them, than any deposit bank, or any individual temporarily charged with the safe-keeping or application of the public money, would now have for converting the same to their private use, without the consent and against the will of the government. But, independently of the violation of public faith and moral obligation which are involved in this suggestion, when examined in reference to the terms of the present deposit act, it is believed that the considerations which should govern the future legislation of Congress on this subject, will be equally conclusive against the adoption of any measure recognizing the principles on which the suggestion has been made."

This misgiving was well founded. Before the session was over there was actu release the States from their store the money—to lay whic table there were seventy-three 1 an astonishing number in itsel so as given by the same member same seats, who had voted for nosit a few months before. ominous of the fate of the m fate was not long delayed. Ak sure, and in fact the parent of v bastard progeny, was distribut its own proper name; and whic was soon to be openly attempt as its advocates were by the su the deposit act. The President acteristic frankness and firmness policy in advance; and deprecate der every aspect of public and and of every consideration of policy. He said:

"To collect revenue merely to the States, would seem to be 1 if not as dangerous as the proposi in the Treasury. The shortest satisfy every one that to require pay taxes to the government me may be paid back again, is spo substantial interests of the co system which produces such a expected to receive the public Nothing could be gained by it, e dividual who contributed a por could receive back promptly the But it is apparent that no syste can ever be enforced, which wil considerable portion of the mone buted in salaries and commission employed in the process, and osses and depreciations which as causes; and the practical effect tempt must ever be to burden t taxes, not for purposes beneficial to swell the profits of deposit be port a band of useless public office oution to the people is impractica in other respects. It would be ta property and giving it to another be the unavoidable result of a ru (and none other is spoken of, or v to be adopted), inasmuch as there which the amount of the indivi tions of our citizens to the publ be ascertained. We know that t unequally, and a rule therefore t tribute to them equally, would b the objections which apply to th an equal division of property. general government the instrume of ardent and e were in peace l, and all excit-Industry in all ne revenue was ople were hapfirst a recapituthings, at home e to the quesolicy which refor action. At od the deposit which under the a deposit of a tates-made an us; and was inso. His notice points-his own ct, and his misobservation. He nded, when the n received a resurably realized. e deposit of the d States in the ping, until they of the general sively spoken of ne several States: use it as a gift, of refunding it estion has doubtconsideration of act, and without arious principles ted by it. It is not sanction such now stands, the ty to receive and ending to return or any individual safe-keeping or oney, would now to their private against the will of pendently of the moral obligation suggestion, when terms of the preed that the conovern the future is subject, will be e adoption of any nciples on which

anded. Before the

session was over there was actually a motion to release the States from their obligation to restore the money—to lay which motion on the table there were seventy-three resisting votesan astonishing number in itself, and the more so as given by the same members, sitting in the same seats, who had voted for the act as a deposit a few months before. Such a vote was ominous of the fate of the money; and that fate was not long delayed. Akin to this measure, and in fact the parent of which it was the hastard progeny, was distribution itself, under its own proper name; and which it was evident was soon to be openly attempted, encouraged as its advocates were by the success gained in the deposit act. The President, with his characteristic frankness and firmness, impugned that policy in advance; and deprecated its effects under every aspect of public and private justice. and of every consideration of a wise or just policy. He said:

"To collect revenue merely for distribution to the States, would seem to be highly impolitic. if not as dangerous as the proposition to retain it in the Treasury. The shortest reflection must satisfy every one that to require the people to pay taxes to the government merely that they may be paid back again, is sporting with the substantial interests of the country, and no system which produces such a result can be expected to receive the public countenance. Nothing could be gained by it, even if each individual who contributed a portion of the tax could receive back promptly the same portion. But it is apparent that no system of the kind can ever be enforced, which will not absorb a considerable portion of the money, to be distributed in salaries and commissions to the agents employed in the process, and in the various losses and depreciations which arise from other causes; and the practical effect of such an attempt must ever be to burden the people with taxes not for purposes beneficial to them, but to swell the profits of deposit banks, and support a band of useless public officers. A distribution to the people is impracticable and unjust in other respects. It would be taking one man's property and giving it to another. Such would be the unavoidable result of a rule of equality (and none other is spoken of, or would be likely to be adopted), inasmuch as there is no mode by which the amount of the individual contributions of our citizens to the public revenue can be ascertained. We know that they contribute unequally, and a rule therefore that would distribute to them equally, would be liable to all the objections which apply to the principle of an equal division of property. To make the general government the instrument of carrying this odious principle into effect, would be at once to destroy the means of its usefulness, and change the character designed for it by the framers of the constitution."

There was another consideration connected with this policy of distribution which the President did not name, and could not, in the decorum and reserve of an official communication to Congress: it was the intended effect of these distributions—to debauch the people with their own money, and to gain presidential votes by lavishing upon them the spoils of their country. To the honor of the people this intended effect never occurred; no one of those contriving these distributions ever reaching the high object of their ambition. Instead of distribution-instead of raising money from the people to be returned to the people, with all the deductions which the double operation of collecting and dividing would incur, and with the losses which unfaithful agents might inflict-instead of that idle and wasteful process, which would have been childish if it had not been vicious, he recommended a reduction of taxes on the comforts and necessaries of life, and the levy of no more money than was necessary for the economical administration of the government; and said:

"In reducing the revenue to the wants of the government, your particular attention is invited to those articles which constitute the necessaries of life. The duty on salt was laid as a war tax, and was no doubt continued to assist in providing for the payment of the war debt. There is no article the release of which from taxation would be felt so generally and so beneficially. To this may be added all kinds of fuel and provisions. Justice and benevolence unite in favor of releasing the poor of our cities from burdens which are not necessary to the support of our government, and tend only to increase the wants of the destitute."

The issuance of the "Treasury Circular" naturally claimed a place in the President's message; and received it. The President gave his reason for the measure in the necessity of saving the public domain from being exchanged for bank paper money, which was not wanted, and might be of little value or use when wanted; and expressed himself thus:

"The effects of an extension of bank credits, and over-issues of bank paper, have been strikingly illustrated in the sales of the public lands. From the returns made by the various registers and receivers in the early part of last summer it was perceived that the receipts arising from the sales of the public lands, were increasing to an unprecedented amount. In effect, however, these receipts amounted to nothing more than credits in bank. The banks lent out their notes to speculators; they were paid to the receivers, and immediately returned to the banks, to be lent out again and again; being mere instruments to transfer to speculators the most valuable public land, and pay the government by a credit on the books of the banks. Those credits on the books of some of the western banks, usually called deposits, were already greatly beyond their immediate means of payment, and were rapidly increasing. Indeed each speculation furnished means for another; for no sooner had one individual or company paid in the notes, than they were immediately lent to another for a like purpose; and the banks were extending their business and their issues so largely, as to alarm considerate men, and render it doubtful whether these bank credits, if permitted to accumulate, would ultimately be of the least value to the government. The spirit of expansion and speculation was not confined to the deposit banks, but pervaded the whole multitude of banks throughout the Union, and was giving rise to new institutions to aggravate the evil. The safety of the public funds, and the interest of the people generally, required that these operations should be checked; and it became the duty of every branch of the general and State governments to adopt all legitimate and proper means to produce that salutary effect. Under this view of my duty, I directed the issuing of the order which will be laid before you by the Secretary of the Treasury, requiring payment for the public lands sold to be made in specie, with an exception until the 15th of the present month, in favor of actual settlers. This measure has produced many salutary consequences. It checked the career of the Western banks, and gave them additional strength in anticipation of the pressure which has since pervaded our Eastern as well as the European commercial cities. By preventing the extension of the credit system, it measurably cut off the means of speculation, and retarded its progress in monopolizing the most valuable of the public lands. It has tended to save the new States from a non-resident proprietorship, one of the greatest obstacles to the advancement of a new country, and the prosperity of an old one. It has tended to keep open the public lands for the entry of emigrants at government prices. instead of their being compelled to purchase of speculators at double or treble prices. And it is conveying into the interior large sums in silver and gold, there to enter permanently into the currency of the country, and place it on a firmer foundation. It is confidently believed that the country will find in the motives which induced that order, and the happy consequences which will have ensued, much to commend and nothing to condemn."

The people were satisfied with the Treasury Circular; they saw its honesty and good effects: but the politicians were not satisfied with it. They thought they saw in it a new exercise of illegal power in the President-a new tampering with the currency-a new destruction of the public prosperity; and commenced an attack upon it the moment Congress met, very much in the style of the attack upon the order for the removal of the deposits; and with fresh hones from the resentment of the "thousand banks" whose notes had been excluded, and from the liscontent of many members of Congress whose schemes of speculation had been balked. And notwithstanding the democratic majorities in the two Houses, the attack upon the "Circular" had a great success, many members being interested in the excluded banks, and partners in schemes for monopolizing the lands. A bill intended to repeal the Circular was actually passed through both Houses; but not in direct terms. That would have been too flagrant, It was a bad thing, and could not be fairly done. and therefore gave rise to indirection and ambiguity of provisions, and complication of phrases. and a multiplication of amphibologies, which brought the bill to a very ridiculous conclusion when it got to the hands of General Jackson. But of this hereafter.

The intrusive efforts made by politicians and missionaries, first, to prevent treaties from being formed with the Indians to remove from the Southern States, and then to prevent the ramoval after the treaties were made, led to serious refusals on the part of some of these tribes to emigrate; and it became necessary to dispatch officers of high rank and reputation with regular troops, to keep down outrages and induce peaceable removal. Major General Jesup was sent to the Creek nation, where he had a splendid success in a speedy and bloodless accomplishment of his object. Major General Scott was sent to the Cherokees, where a pertinacious resistance was long encountered but eventually and peaceably overcome. The Seminole hostilities in Florida were just breaking out; and the President, in his message, thus notices all these events:

"The military movements rendered necessary by the aggressions of the hostile portions of the Seminole and Creek tribes of Indians, and by other circumstances, have required the active employment of nearly our who including the marine corps, and of militia and volunteers. With 50 far as they were known at th ment before the termination of you are already acquainted; ar only needful in this place to la brief summary of what has since war with the Seminoles during t on our part, chiefly confined to of our frontier settlements from of the enemy; and, as a neces tant means for the accomplishm to the maintenance of the posts tablished. In the course of th actions took place, in which t discipline of both officers and spicuously displayed, and which it proper to notice in respect to the granting of brevet rank for in the field. But as the force was not so far weakened by th resses as to lead them to subm savage inroads were frequently measures were taken for placing of Governor Call, who, as comi of the territorial militia, had be invested with the command, an the purpose of resuming offensive the most efficient manner, so soc should permit. Major General directed, on the conclusion of his Creek country, to repair to Flor the command. Happily for the humanity, the hostilities with th brought to a close soon after you without that effusion of blood, wl was apprehended as inevitable. tional submission of the hostile lowed by their speedy removal assigned them west of the Missis quiry as to the alleged frauds in of the reservations of these In causes of their hostilities, reques solution of the House of Represe lst of July last to be made by tl now going on, through the agen sioners appointed for that purpose may be expected during your p The difficulties apprehended in country have been prevented, and safety of that region and its vicin secured, by the timely measures war department, and still continu

The Bank of the United States to receive another, and a partin General Jackson, and greatly to i credit, brought upon it by its ow dishonest course. Its charter ha it had delayed to refund the stock the United States, or to pay the I and had transferred itself with the Treasury 1 good effects: isfied with it. w exercise of new tampering ruction of the ced an attack et, very much ie order for the th fresh hopes busand banks." and from the longress whose ı balked. And : majorities in the "Circular" abers being inand partners in ads. A bill inr was actually ut not in direct oo flagrant. It be fairly done. ction and ambiation of phrases. ibologies, which lous conclusion eneral Jackson.

politicians and aties from being move from the prevent the renade, led to sesome of these ne necessary to and reputation wn outrages and Major General nation, where he dy and bloodless Major General es, where a pertiencountered, but ome. The Semire just breaking ndered necessary le portions of the Indians, and by juired the active

s message, thus

employment of nearly our whole regular force. including the marine corps, and of large bodies of militia and volunteers. With all these events, 50 far as they were known at the seat of government before the termination of your last session. you are already acquainted; and it is therefore only needful in this place to lay before you a brief summary of what has since occurred. The war with the Seminoles during the summer was. on our part, chiefly confined to the protection of our frontier settlements from the incursions of the enemy; and, as a necessary and important means for the accomplishment of that end, to the maintenance of the posts previously established. In the course of this duty several actions took place, in which the bravery and discipline of both officers and men were conspicuously displayed, and which I have deemed it proper to notice in respect to the former, by the granting of brevet rank for gallant services in the field. But as the force of the Indians was not so far weakened by these partial successes as to lead them to submit, and as their savage inroads were frequently repeated, early measures were taken for placing at the disposal of Governor Call, who, as commander-in-chief of the territorial militia, had been temporarily invested with the command, an ample force, for the purpose of resuming offensive operations in the most efficient manner, so soon as the season should permit. Major General Jesup was also directed, on the conclusion of his duties in the Creek country, to repair to Florida, and assume the command. Happily for the interests of humanity, the hostilities with the Creeks were brought to a close soon after your adjournment. without that effusion of blood, which at one time was apprehended as inevitable. The unconditional submission of the hostile party was followed by their speedy removal to the country assigned them west of the Mississippi. The inquiry as to the alleged frauds in the purchase of the reservations of these Indians, and the causes of their hostilities, requested by the resolution of the House of Representatives of the lst of July last to be made by the President, is now going on, through the agency of commissioners appointed for that purpose. Their report may be expected during your present session. The difficulties apprehended in the Cherokee country have been prevented, and the peace and safety of that region and its vicinity effectually secured, by the timely measures taken by the war department, and still continued."

The Bank of the United States was destined to receive another, and a parting notice from General Jackson, and greatly to its further discredit, brought upon it by its own lawless and dishonest course. Its charter had expired, and it had delayed to refund the stock paid for by the United States, or to pay the back dividend; and had transferred itself with all its effects.

and all its subscribers except the United States. to a new corporation, under the same name, created by a proviso to a road bill in the General Assembly of Pennsylvania, obtained by bribery, as subsequent legislative investigation proved. This transfer, or transmigration, was a new and most amazing procedure. The metempsychosis of a bank was a novelty which confounded and astounded the senses, and set the wits of Congress to work to find out how it could legally be done. The President, though a good lawyer and judge of law, did not trouble himself with legal subtleties and disquisitions. He took the broad, moral, practical, business view of the question; and pronounced it to be dishonest, unlawful, and irresponsible; and recommended to Congress to look after its stock. The message said:

"The conduct and present condition of that bank, and the great amount of capital vested in it by the United States, require your careful attention. Its charter expired on the third day of March last, and it has now no power but that given in the 21st section, 'to use the corporate name, style, and capacity, for the purpose of suits, for the final settlement and liquidation of the affairs and accounts of the corporation, and for the sale and disposition of their estate, real, personal, and mixed, and not for any other purpose, or in any other manner whatsoever, nor for a period exceeding two years after the expiration of the said term of incorporation.' Before the expiration of the charter, the stockholders of the bank obtained an act of incorporation from the legislature of Pennsylvania, excluding only the United States. Instead of proceeding to wind up their concerns, and pay over to the United States the amount due on account of the stock held by them, the president and directors of the old bank appear to have transferred the books, papers, notes, obligations, and most or all of its property, to this new corporation, which entered upon business as a continuation of the old concern. Amongst other acts of questionable validity, the notes of the expired corporation are known to have been used as its own, and again put in circulation. That the old bank had no right to issue or reissue its notes after the expiration of its charter, cannot be denied: and that it could not confer any such right on its substitute, any more than exercise it itself, is equally plain. In law and honesty, the notes of the bank in circulation, at the expiration of its charter, should have been called in by public advertisement, paid up as presented, and, together with those on hand, cancelled and destroyed. Their re-issue is sanctioned by no law, and warranted by no necessity. If the United States be responsible in their stock for the payment of these notes, their re-issue by the new corporation, for their own profit, is a fraud on the government. If the United States is not responsible, then there is no legal responsibility in any quarter, and it is a fraud on the country. They are the redeemed notes of a dissolved partnership, but, contrary to the wishes of the retiring partner, and without his consent, are again re-issued and circulated. It is the high and peculiar duty of Congress to decide whether any further legislation be necessary for the security of the large amount of public property now held and in use by the new bank, and for vindicating the rights of the government, and compelling a speedy and honest settlement with all the creditors of the old bank, public and private, or whether the subject shall be left to the power now possessed by the executive and judiciary. It remains to be seen whether the persons, who, as managers of the old bank, undertook to control the government, retained the public dividends, shut their doors upon a committee of the House of Representatives, and filled the country with panic to accomplish their own sinister objects, may now, as managers of a new Bank, continue with impunity to flood the country with a spurious currency, use the seven millions of government stock for their own profit, and refuse to the United States all information as to the present condition of their own property, and the prospect of recovering it into their own possession. The lessons taught by the bank of the United States cannot well be lost upon the American people. They will take care never again to place so tremendous a power in irresponsible hands, and it will be fortunate if they seriously consider the consequences which are likely to result on a smaller scale from the facility with which corporate powers are granted. by their State government."

This novel and amazing attempt of the bank to transmigrate into the body of another bank with all its effects, was a necessity of its position-the necessity which draws a criminal to even insane acts to prevent the detection, exposure, and ruin from which guilt recoils in not less guilty contrivances. The bank was broken, and could not wind up, and wished to postpone, or by chance avert the dreaded discovery. It was in the position of a glass vase, cracked from top to bottom, and ready to split open if touched, but looking as if whole while sitting unmoved on the shelf. The great bank was in this condition, and therefore untouchable, and saw no resource except in a metempsychosis—a difficult process for a soulless institution-and thereby endeavoring to continue its life without a change of name, form, or substance. The experiment was a catastrophe, as might have been expected beforehand; and as was soon seen afterwards.

The injury resulting to the public service from the long delay in making the appropriations at the last session—delayed while occupied with distribution bills until the season for labor had well passed away. On this point the message said:

"No time was lost, after the making of the requisite appropriations, in resuming the great national work of completing the unfinished fortifications on our seaboard, and of placing them in a proper state of defence. In consequence however, of the very late day at which those bills were passed, but little progress could be made during the season which has just closed. A very large amount of the moneys granted at vour last session accordingly remains unexpended; but as the work will be again resumed at the earliest moment in the coming spring the balance of the existing appropriations, and in several cases which will be laid before you, with the proper estimates, further sums for the like objects, may be usefully expended during the next year."

Here was one of the evils of dividing the public money, and of factious opposition to the government. The session of 1834—'5 had closed without a dollar for the military defences, leaving half finished works unfinished, and finished works unarmed; and that in the presence of a threatening collision with France; and at the subsequent session of 1835—6, the appropriations were not made until the month of July and when they could not be used or applied.

Scarcely did the railroad system begin to sproad itself along the highways of the United States than the effects of the monopoly and extortion incident to moneyed corporations, began to manifest itself in exorbitant demands for the transportation of the mails, and in capricious refusals to carry them at all except on their own terms. President Jackson was not the man to submit to an imposition, or to capitulate to a corporation. He brought the subject before Congress, and invited particular attention to it in a paragraph of his message; in which be said.

"Your particular attention is invited to the subject of mail contracts with railroad companies. The present laws providing for the maining of contracts are based upon the presumption that competition among bidders will secure the service at a fair price. But on most of the rail road lines there is no competition in that kind of transportation, and advertising is therefore useless. No contract can now be made with them, except such as shall be negotiated before the time of offering or afterwards of the Postmaster-general to prices is, practically, without would be a relief to him, and no conduce to the public interest, t law some equitable basis upon w tracts shall rest, and restrict him of allowance. Under a liberal ache would undoubtedly be able to rices of most of the railroad computerest of the Department wou ranced."

The message recommended a frision over the Indian tribes re West of the Mississippi, with a suggestion of preventing intestine tary interference, as well as improdition by all the usual means. On it said:

"The national policy, founded al and in humanity, so long and so ste by this government, for the remo dian tribes originally settled on the Mississippi, to the west of that said to have been consummated by of the late treaty with the Che measures taken in the execution o and in relation to our Indian affa will fully appear by referring to the ing papers. Without dwelling on and important topics embraced in invite your attention to the impor riding a well-digested and comprehe for the protection, supervision and of the various tribes now planted country. The suggestions subm commissioner of Indian affairs, and the secretary, on this subject, and a to the establishment of additional n in the Indian country, are entitled found consideration. Both measur sary for the double purpose of pr Indians from intestine war, and in o complying with our engagements of securing our Western frontier ag sions, which otherwise will assured on it. The best hopes of humanit to the aboriginal race, the welfare o extending settlements, and the hono ted States, are all deeply involved tions existing between this governm emigrating tribes. I trust, therefore various matters submitted in the ac documents, in respect to those relati ceive your early and mature delibe that it may issue in the adoption o measures adapted to the circumstan ties of the present crisis."

This suggestion of preventing into (as they are called) in the bosoms o is founded equally in humanity to t

Vol. I .- 44

ablic service e approprianile occupied son for labor pint the mes-aking of the ng the great ifinished forplacing them consequence, which those ess could be s just closed. vs granted at ns unexpend-1 resumed at ng spring, the tions, and, in fore you, with s for the like ed during the > iding the pubon to the gov--'5 had closed defences, leav-I. and finished presence of a ce; and at the appropriations of July and applied.

stem begin to of the United nopoly and exorations, began emands for the 1 in capricious pt on their own not the man to capitulate to a subject before attention to it e; in which he

> s invited to the 1 railroad comling for the makthe presumption 3 will secure the most of the rail ion in that kind ing is therefore be made with regotiated before the time of offering or afterwards, and the power of the Postmaster-general to pay them high prices is, practically, without limitation. It would be a relief to him, and no doubt would conduce to the public interest, to prescribe by law some equitable basis upon which such contracts shall rest, and restrict him by a fixed rule of allowance. Under a liberal act of that sort, he would undoubtedly be able to secure the services of most of the railroad companies, and the mterest of the Department would be thus advanced."

The message recommended a friendly supervision over the Indian tribes removed to the West of the Mississippi, with the important suggestion of preventing intestine war by military interference, as well as improving their condition by all the usual means. On these points, it said:

"The national policy, founded alike in interest and in humanity, so long and so steadily pursued by this government, for the removal of the Indian tribes originally settled on this side of the Mississippi, to the west of that river, may be said to have been consummated by the conclusion of the late treaty with the Cherokees. The measures taken in the execution of that treaty, and in relation to our Indian affairs generally, will fully appear by referring to the accompany-ing papers. Without dwelling on the numerous ing papers. and important topics embraced in them, I again invite your attention to the importance of proriding a well-digested and comprehensive system for the protection, supervision and improvement of the various tribes now planted in the Indian country. The suggestions submitted by the commissioner of Indian affairs, and enforced by the secretary, on this subject, and also in regard to the establishment of additional military posts in the Indian country, are entitled to your pro-found consideration. Both measures are necessary for the double purpose of protecting the Indians from intestine war, and in other respects complying with our engagements to them, and of securing our Western frontier against incursions, which otherwise will assuredly be made on it. The best hopes of humanity, in regard to the aboriginal race, the welfare of our rapidly extending settlements, and the honor of the United States, are all deeply involved in the relations existing between this government and the emigrating tribes. I trust, therefore, that the various matters submitted in the accompanying documents, in respect to those relations, will receive your early and mature deliberation; and that it may issue in the adoption of legislative measures adapted to the circumstances and duties of the present crisis."

This suggestion of preventing intestine wars s founded equally in humanity to the Indians and duty to ourselves. Such wars are nothing but massacres, assassinations and confiscations. The stronger party oppress a hated, or feared minority or chief; and slay with impunity (in some of the tribes), where the assumption of a form of government, modelled after that of the white race, for which they have no capacity, gives the justification of executions to what is nothing but revenge and assassination. Under their own ancient laws, of blood for blood, and for the slain to avenge the wrong, this liability of personal responsibility restrained the killings to cases of public justifiable necessity. Since the removal of that responsibility, revenge, ambition, plunder, take their course: and the consequence is a series of assassinations which have' been going on for a long time; and still continue. To aggravate many of these massacres, and to give their victims a stronger claim upon the protection of the United States, they are done upon those who are friends to the United States, upon accusations of having betrayed the interest of the tribe in some treaty for the sale of lands. The United States claim jurisdiction over their country, and exercise it in the punishment of some classes of criminals; and it would be good to extend it to the length recommended by President Jackson.

The message would have been incomplete without a renewal of the standing recommendation to take the presidential election out of the hands of intermediate bodies, and give it directly to the people. He earnestly urged an amendment to the constitution to that effect; but that remedy being of slow, difficult, and doubtful attainment, the more speedy process by the action of the people becomes the more necessary. Congressional caucuses were put down by the people in the election of 1824: their substitute and successor-national conventions-ruled by a minority, and managed by intrigue and corruption. are about as much worse than a Congress caucus as Congress itself would be if the members appointed, or contrived the appointment, of themselves, instead of being elected by the people. The message appropriately concluded with thanks to the people for the high honors to which they had lifted him, and their support under arduous circumstances, and said:

"Having now finished the observations deem (as they are called) in the bosoms of the tribes, ed proper on this, the last occasion I shall have of communicating with the two Houses of Congress at their meeting, I cannot omit an expression of the gratitude which is due to the great body of my fellow citizens, in whose partiality and indulgence I have found encouragement and support in the many difficult and trying scenes through which it has been my lot to pass during my public career. Though deeply sensible that my exertions have not been crowned with a success corresponding to the degree of favor bestowed upon me, I am sure that they will be considered as having been directed by an earnest desire to promote the good of my country; and I am consoled by the persuasion that whatever errors have been committed will find a corrective in the intelligence and patriotism of those who will succeed us. All that has occurred during my administration is calculated to inspire me with increased confidence in the stability of our institutions, and should I be spared to enter uppon that retirement which is so suitable to my age and infirm health, and so much desired by me in other respects, I shall not cease to invoke that beneficent Being to whose providence we are already so signally indebted for the continuance of his blessings on our beloved country."

CHAPTER CLIV.

FINAL REMOVAL OF THE INDIANS.

At the commencement of the annual session of 1836--'37, President Jackson had the gratification to make known to Congress the completion of the long-pursued policy of removing all the Indians in the States, and within the organized territories of the Union, to their new homes west of the Mississippi. It was a policy commencing with Jefferson, pursued by all succeeding Presidents, and accomplished by Jackson. The Creeks and Cherokees had withdrawn from Georgia and Alabama; the Chickasaws and Choctaws from Mississippi and Alabama; the Seminoles had stipulated to remove from Florida; Louisiana, Arkansas and Missouri had all been relieved of their Indian population; Kentucky and Tennessee, by earlier treaties with the Chickasaws, had received the same advantage. This freed the slave States from an obstacle to their growth and prosperity, and left them free to expand, and to cultivate, to the full measure of their ample boundaries. All the free Atlantic States had long been relieved from their Indian populations, and in this respect the northern and southern States were now upon an equality. The result has been proved to be, what it was then believed it would be, beneficial to both parties; and still more so to the Indians than to the whites. With them it was a question of extinction, the time only the debatable point. They were daily wasting under contact with the whites, and had before their eyes the eventual but certain fate of the hundreds of tribes found by the early colonists on the Roanoke, the James River, the Potomac. the Susquehannah, the Delaware, the Connecticut, the Merrimac, the Kennebec and the Penobscot. The removal saved the southern tribes from that fate; and in giving them new and unmolested homes beyond the verge of the white man's settlement, in a country temperate in climate, fertile in soil, adapted to agriculture and to pasturage, with an outlet for hunting abounding with salt water and salt springs-it left them to work out in peace the problem of Indian civilization. To all the relieved States the removal of the tribes within their borders was a great benefit-to the slave States transcendently and inappreciably great. The largest tribes were within their limits, and the best of their lands in the hands of the Indians, to the extent, in some of the States, as Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi, of a third or a quarter of their whole area. I have heretofore shown in the case of the Creeks and the Cherokees in Georgia, that the ratification of the treaties for the extinction of Indian claims within her limits, and which removed the tribes which encumbered her, received the cordial support of northern senators; and that, in fact, without that support these great objects could not have been accomplished. I have now to say the same of all the other slave States. They were all relieved in like manner. Chickasaws and Choctaws in Mississippi and Alabama; Chickasaw claims in Tennessee and Kentucky; Seminoles in Florida; Caddos and Quapaws in Louisiana and in Arkansas; Kickapoos, Delawares, Shawnees, Osages, Iowas, Pinkeshaws, Weas, Pe orias, in Missouri; all underwent the same process, and with the came support and result Northern votes, in the Senate, came to the ratification of every treaty, and to the passage of every necessary appropriation act in the House of Representatives. Northern men may be said to have made the treaties, and passed the acts, as without their aid it could not have been done, constituting, as they did, a large majority in the House, and being equa where a vote of two-thirds wa not go over these treaties and to show their passage, and b did that in the case of the Cre Cherokee treaty, for the remov from Georgia; and showed the manimous in one case, and a other, while in both treaties th ern opposition, and in one of t kee), both Mr. Calhoun and negative: and these instances illustration of the whole. And slave population has been almo slave States, by sending away the room for their expansion; and cruel-unjust and cruel in itsel the motive-to charge these with a design to abolish slaver If they had harbored such desi been merely unfriendly to the g perity of these Southern State easy way to have gratified their out committing a breach of the an aggression or encroachme States: they had only to sit against the ratification of the t enactment of the laws which eff removal. They did not do soand vote against their Southern the contrary, they stood up and s gave to these laws and treaties zealous support. And I, who w chairman of the committee of In this time, and know how these th and who was so thankful for no the time; I, who know the trut! tice, and cherish the harmony an American people, feel it to be m privilege to note this great act of j North to the South, to stand in h petual contradiction of all impute free States to abolish slavery in tl I speak of States, not of individua elieved it would d still more so With them the time only adaily wasting and had before tain fate of the early colonists er, the Potomac e, the Connectic and the Pensouthern tribes them new and e verge of the untry temperate ed to agriculture tlet for hunting. salt springs-it the problem of relieved States in their borders ave States transeat. The largest and the best of e Indians, to the as Georgia, Alad or a quarter of etofore shown in the Cherokees in of the treaties for s within her limbes which encumsupport of northfact, without that uld not have been o say the same of They were all recasaws and Chocbama: Chickasaw stucky; Seminoles paws in Louisians Delawares, Shawhaws, Weas, Pewent the same propport and result , came to the ratifito the passage of n act in the House nern men may b ies, and passed th could not have been id, a large majority in the House, and being equal in the Senate. where a vote of two-thirds was wanting. I do not go over these treaties and laws one by one, to show their passage, and by what votes. I did that in the case of the Creek treaty and the Cherokee treaty, for the removal of these tribes from Georgia; and showed that the North was manimous in one case, and nearly so in the other, while in both treaties there was a southern opposition, and in one of them (the Cherokee), both Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Clay in the negative: and these instances may stand for an illustration of the whole. And thus the area of slave population has been almost doubled in the slave States, by sending away the Indians to make room for their expansion; and it is unjust and cruel-unjust and cruel in itself, independent of the motive-to charge these Northern States with a design to abolish slavery in the South. If they had harbored such design-if they had been merely unfriendly to the growth and prosperity of these Southern States, there was an easy way to have gratified their feelings, without committing a breach of the constitution, or an aggression or encroachment upon these States: they had only to sit still and vote against the ratification of the treaties, and the enactment of the laws which effected this great removal. They did not do so-did not sit still and vote against their Southern brethren. On the contrary, they stood up and spoke aloud, and gave to these laws and treaties an effective and zealous support. And I, who was the Senate's chairman of the committee of Indian affairs at this time, and know how these things were done, and who was so thankful for northern help at the time; I, who know the truth and love justice, and cherish the harmony and union of the American people, feel it to be my duty and my privilege to note this great act of justice from the North to the South, to stand in history as a perpetual contradiction of all imputed design in the free States to abolish slavery in the slave States. I speak of States, not of individuals or societies. I have shown that this policy of the universal removal of the Indians from the East to the West of the Mississippi originated with Mr. Jefferson, and from the most humane motives, and after having seen the extinction of more than forty tribes in his own State of Virginia; and had been followed up under all subsequent administrations. With General Jackson it was nothing but the continuation of an established policy, but one in which he heartily concurred, and of which his local position and his experience made him one of the safest of judges; but, like every other act of his administration, it was destined to obloquy and opposition, and to misrepresentations, which have survived the object of their creation, and gone into history. He was charged with injustice to the Indians, in not protecting them against the laws and jurisdiction of the States; with cruelty, in driving them away from the bones of their fathers; with robbery, in taking their lands for paltry considerations. Parts of the tribes were excited to resist the execution of the treaties, and it even became necessary to send troops and distinguished generals—Scott to the Cherokees, Jesup to the Creeks-to effect their removal; which, by the mildness and steadiness of these generals, and according to the humane spirit of their orders, was eventually accomplished without the aid of force. The outcry raised against General Jackson, on account of these measures, reached the ears of the French traveller and writer on American democracy (De Tocqueville), then sojourning among us and collecting materials for his work, and induced him to write thus in his chapter 18:

I have shown that this policy versal removal of the Indians from the West of the Mississippi origing Jefferson, and from the most hur and after having seen the extinction forty tribes in his own State of had been followed up under all significant. With General Junistrations.

"The ejectment of the Indians very often takes place, at the present day, in a regular, and, as it were, legal manner. When the white population begins to approach the limit of a desert inhabited by a savage tribe, the government of the United States usually dispatches envoys to them, who assemble the Indians in a large plain, and having first eaten and drunk with them, accost them in the following manner: 'What have you to do in the land of your fathers? Before long you must dig up their bones in order to live. In what respect is the country you inhabit better than another? Are there no woods, marshes or prairies, except where you dwell? and can you live nowhere but under your own sun? Beyond those mountains, which you see at the horizon-beyond the lake which bounds your territory on the west-there lie vast countries where beasts of chase are found in great abundance. Sell your lands to us, and go and live happily in those solitudes.

"After holding this language, they spread before the eyes of the Indians fire-arms, woollen garments, kegs of brandy, glass necklaces, bracelets of tinsel, ear-rings, and looking-glasses. If, when they have beheld all these riches, they still hesitate, it is insinuated that they have not the means of refusing their required consent.

and that the government itself will not long have the power of protecting them in their rights. What are they to do? Half convinced, half compelled, they go to inhabit new deserts where the importunate whites will not permit them to remain ten years in tranquillity. In this manner do the Americans obtain, at a very low price, whole provinces, which the richest sovereigns in Europe could not purchase."

The Grecian Plutarch deemed it necessary to reside forty years in Rome, to qualify himself to write the lives of some Roman citizens; and then made mistakes. European writers do not deem it necessary to reside in our country at all in order to write our history. A sojourn of some months in the principal towns-a rapid flight along some great roads—the gossip of the steamboat, the steam-car, the stage-coach, and the hotel-the whispers of some earwigs-with the reading of the daily papers and the periodicals, all more or less engaged in partisan warfareand the view of some debates, or scene, in Congress, which may be an exception to its ordinary decorum and intelligence: these constitute a modern European traveller's qualifications to write American history. No wonder that they commit mistakes, even where the intent is honest. And no wonder that Mons. de Tocqueville, with admitted good intentions, but with no "forty years" residence among us, should be no exception to the rule which condemns the travelling European writer of American history to the compilation of facts manufactured for partisan effect, and to the invention of reasons supplied from his own fancy. I have already had occasion, several times, to correct the errors of Mons. de Tocqueville. It is a compliment to him, implicative of respect, and by no means extended to others, who err more largely, and of purpose, but less harmfully. His error in all that he has here written is profound! and is injurious, not merely to General Jackson, to whom his mistakes apply, but to the national character, made up as it is of the acts of individuals; and which character it is the duty of every American to cherish and exalt in all that is worthy, and to protect and defend from all unjust imputation. It was in this sense that I To the Cherokees, for eleven millions of acres, marked this passage in De Tocqueville for refutation as soon as his book appeared, and took exact price of Louisana or California. To the steps to make the contradiction (so far as the Chickasaws, the whole net amount for which alleged robbery and cheating of the Indians was this country sold under the land system of the concerned) authentic and complete, and as pub- United States, and by the United States land

lic and durable as the archives of the government itself. In this sense I had a call made for a full, numerical, chronological and official state. ment of all our Indian purchases, from the begining of the federal government in 1789 to that day, 1840-tribe by tribe, cession by cession year by year-for the fifty years which the gov. ernment had existed; with the number of acres acquired at each cession, and the amount paid

The call was made in the Senate of the United States, and answered by document No. 616 1st session, 26th Congress, in a document of thirteen printed tabular pages, and authenticated by the signatures of Mr. Van Buren, President; Mr. Poinsett, Secretary at War; and Mr. Hart. ley Crawford, Commissioner of Indian Affairs. From this document it appeared, that the United States had paid to the Indians eighty-five millions of dollars for land purchases up to the year 1840! to which five or six millions may be added for purchases since-say ninety millions. This is near six times as much as the United States gave the great Napoleon for Louisiana, the whole of it, soil and jurisdiction: and nearly three times as much as all three of the great foreign purchases-Louisiana, Florida and California-cost us! and that for soil alone. and for so much as would only be a fragment of Louisiana or California. Impressive as this statement is in the gross, it becomes more so in the detail, and when applied to the particular tribes whose imputed sufferings have drawn 80 mournful a picture from Mons. de Tocqueville, These are the four great southern tribes-Creeks, Cherokees, Chickasaws and Choctaws. Applied to them, and the table of purchases and payments stands thus: To the Creek Indians twenty-two millions of dollars for twenty-five millions of acres; which is seven millions more than was paid France for Louisiana, and seventeen millions more than was paid Spain for Florida. To the Choctaws, twenty-three millions of dollars (besides reserved tracts), for twenty millions of acres, being three millions more than was paid for Louisiana and Florida was paid about fifteen millions of dollars, the officers, three millions of three-quarter millions of the nation chose to dispo fifty-six millions to four t millions to go to the small are unknown to history, an the writer on American d heard of when sketching fancied oppressions.

I will attend to the cas mote tribes, and say that, b tion of the remaining thi dollars, they received a ki suited to their condition, an them into the comforts of these I will give one exan treaty with the Osages, in 18 only in addition to similar 1 tribe, in previous treaties, a tended to all the tribes which ing state. These benefits we two blacksmith's shops, wit with five hundred pounds pounds of steel annually; mill, with millers for the san calves; two thousand bree ploughs; 1,000 sets of horse 1,000 hoes; a house each for two hundred dollars apiece; chiefs with six good wage twenty-eight yokes of oxen log-chain; to pay all claims mitted by the tribe on the w other Indians, to the amount dollars; to purchase their res dollars per acre; three thous imburse that sum for so mu their annuity, in 1825, for pro the whites, and since return three thousand dollars more wrongful withholding of that same reason, in the annuity year 1829. In previous treatie seed grains, and seed vegetable and fruit trees; domestic for plough up their ground and to to raise crops and to save the Indians how to farm; with s and sewing implements, and their use. Now, all this was in ty, with an inconsiderable tribe largely provided for in the sam

es of the governud a call made for and official stateuses, from the beent in 1789 to that ession by cession, urs which the gove number of acres
the amount paid

enate of the Uniocument No. 616. in a document of and authenticated Buren, President: ar; and Mr. Hartof Indian Affairs. red, that the Uni-Indians eighty-five urchases up to the six millions may -say ninety miles as much as the eat Napoleon for il and jurisdiction: uch as all three of -Louisiana, Florida that for soil alone, only be a fragment Impressive as this becomes more so in d to the particular ngs have drawn so ons. de Tocqueville. ern tribes-Creeks, Choctaws. Applied ourchases and paythe Creek Indians lars for twenty-five seven millions more ouisiana, and sevenwas paid Spain for s, twenty-three mileserved tracts), for eing three millions uisiana and Florida en millions of acres, lions of dollars, the California. To the t amount for which land system of the officers, three millions of dollars for six and three-quarter millions of acres, being the way the nation chose to dispose of it. Here are fifty-six millions to four tribes, leaving thirty millions to go to the small tribes whose names are unknown to history, and which it is probable the writer on American democracy had never heard of when sketching the picture of their fancied oppressions.

United States land

I will attend to the case of these small remote tribes, and say that, besides their proportion of the remaining thirty-six millions of dollars, they received a kind of compensation suited to their condition, and intended to induct them into the comforts of civilized life. Of these I will give one example, drawn from a treaty with the Osages, in 1839; and which was only in addition to similar benefits to the same tribe, in previous treaties, and which were extended to all the tribes which were in the hunting state. These benefits were, to these Osages, two blacksmith's shops, with four blacksmiths, with five hundred pounds of iron and sixty pounds of steel annually; a grist and a saw mill, with millers for the same; 1,000 cows and calves; two thousand breeding swine; 1,000 ploughs; 1,000 sets of horse-gear; 1,000 axes; 1,000 hoes; a house each for ten chiefs, costing two hundred dollars apiece; to furnish these chiefs with six good wagons, sixteen carts, twenty-eight yokes of oxen, with yokes and log-chain; to pay all claims for injuries committed by the tribe on the white people, or on other Indians, to the amount of thirty thousand dollars; to purchase their reserved lands at two dollars per acre; three thousand dollars to reimburse that sum for so much deducted from their annuity, in 1825, for property taken from the whites, and since returned; and, finally, three thousand dollars more for an imputed wrongful withholding of that amount, for the same reason, in the annuity payment of the year 1829. In previous treaties, had been given seed grains, and seed vegetables, with fruit seeds and fruit trees; domestic fowls; laborers to plough up their ground and to make their fences, to raise crops and to save them, and teach the ladians how to farm; with spinning, weaving, and sewing implements, and persons to show their use. Now, all this was in one single treaty, with an inconsiderable tribe, which had been largely provided for in the same way in six different previous treaties! And all the rude tribes—those in the hunting state, or just emerging from it—were provided for in the same manner, the object of the United States being to train them to agriculture and pasturage—to conduct them from the hunting to the pastoral and agricultural state; and for that purpose, and in addition to all other benefits, are to be added the support of schools, the encouragement of missionaries, and a small annual contribution to religious societies who take charge of their civilization.

Besides all this, the government keeps up a large establishment for the special care of the Indians, and the management of their affairs; a special bureau, presided over by a commissioner at Washington City; superintendents in different districts; agents, sub-agents, and interpreters, resident with the tribe; and all charged with seeing to their rights and interests-seeing that the laws are observed towards them; that no injuries are done them by the whites; that none but licensed traders go among them; that nothing shall be bought from them which is necessary for their comfort, nor any thing sold to them which may be to their detriment. Among the prohibited articles are spirits of all kinds; and so severe are the penalties on this head, that forfeiture of the license, forfeiture of the whole cargo of goods, forfeiture of the penalty of the bond, and immediate suit in the nearest federal court for its recovery, expulsion from the Indian country, and disability for ever to acquire another license, immediately follow every breach of the laws for the introduction of the smallest quantity of any kind of spirits. How unfortunate, then, in M. de Tocqueville to write, that kegs of brandy are spread before the Indians to induce them to sell their lands! How unfortunate in representing these purchases to be made in exchange for woollen garments, glass necklaces, tinsel bracelets, ear-rings, and looking-glasses! What a picture this assertion of his makes by the side of the eighty-five millions of dollars at that time actually paid to those Indians for their lands, and the long and large list of agricultural articles and implements—long and large list of domestic animals and fowls—the ample supply of mills and shops, with mechanics to work them and teach their use—the provisions for schools and missionaries, for building fences and houses-which are found in the Osage treaty quoted, and which are to be found, more or less, in every treaty with every tribe emerging from the hunter state. The fact is, that the government of the United States has made it a fixed policy to cherish and protect the Indians, to improve their condition, and turn them to the habits of civilized life; and great is the wrong and injury which the mistake of this writer has done to our national character abroad, in representing the United States as cheating and robbing these children of the forest.

But Mons. de Tocqueville has quoted names and documents, and particular instances of imposition upon Indians, to justify his picture; and in doing so has committed the mistakes into which a stranger and sojourner may easily fall. He cites the report of Messrs. Clark and Cass, and makes a wrong application—an inverted application-of what they reported. They were speaking of the practices of disorderly persons in trading with the Indians for their skins and furs. They were reporting to the government an abuse, for correction and punishment. They were not speaking of United States commissioners, treating for the purchase of lands but of individual traders, violating the laws. They were themselves those commissioners and superintendents of Indian affairs, and governors of Territories, one for the northwest, in Michigan, the other for the far west, in Missouri; and both noted for their justice and humanity to the Indians, and for their long and careful administration of their affairs within their respective superintendencies. Mons. de Tocqueville has quoted their words correctly, but with the comical blunder of reversing their application, and applying to the commissioners themselves, in their land negotiations for the government, the cheateries which they were denouncing to the government, in the illicit traffic of lawless traders. This was the comic blunder of a stranger: yet this is to appear as American history in Europe, and to be translated into our own language at home, and commended in a preface and notes.

CHAPTER CLV.

RECISION OF THE TREASURY CIRCULAR

IMMEDIATELY upon the opening of the Senate and the organization of the body, Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, gave notice of his intention to more a joint resolution to rescind the treasury circular; and on hearing the notice, Mr. Benton made it known that he would oppose the resolution at the second reading—a step seldom resorted to, except when the measure to be so opposed is deemed too flagrantly wrong to be entitled to the honor of rejection in the usual forms of legislation. The debate came on promptly, and upon the lead of the mover of the resolution, in a prepared and well-considered speech, in which he said:

"This extraordinary paper was issued by the Secretary of the Treasury on the 11th of July last, in the form of a circular to the receivers of public money in the several land offices in the United States, directing them, after the 15th of August then next, to receive in payment for public lands nothing but gold and silver and certificates of deposits, signed by the Treasurer of the United States, with a saving in favor of actual settlers, and bona fide residents in the State in which the land happened to lie. This saving was for a limited time, and expires I think, to-morrow. The professed object of this order was to check the speculations in public lands; to check excessive issues of bank paper in the West, and to increase the specie currener of the country; and the necessity of the measure was supported, or pretended to be supported, by the opinions of members of this body and the other branch of Congress. But, before I proceed to examine in detail this paper, its character, and its consequences, I will briefly advert to the state of things out of which it grew. I am confident, and I believe I can make the thing manifest, that the avowed objects were not the only, nor even the leading objects for which this order was framed; they may have influenced the minds of some who advised it, but those who planned, and those who at last virtually executed it, were governed by other and different motives, which I shall proceed to explain. It was foreseen, prior to the commencement of the last session of Congress, that there would be a very large surplus of money in the public treasurv beyond the wants of the country for all their reasonable expenditures. It was also well understood that the land bill, or some other measure for the distribution of this fund, would, be again presented to Congress; and, if the true condition of the public sens and understood, that its dis form or other, would be dema try. On the other hand, it determined by the party, and act with it thoroughly, that remain where it was in the that it could be wielded at p cutive. This order grew out which I have referred. It the advice of Congress or und any law. It was delayed u fairly out of the city, and all ference by legislation was re came forth this new and last known that these funds, re lands had become a chief son it may have occurred to some of a treasury order of this k tendency to embarrass the co bill for the regulation of the nassed, the public might be I that all the mischief occasion was the effect of the distribu indeed, happened, that this s the public understand it righ not by any means certain at sure was devised. It was not the people would as generall contrivance as it has since bee do. There may have been var which led to the measure. probably to be consulted; for sumed that a step like this v consultation, and guided by the individual alone. That is not these things are done. No hoped for by some was, that ; put to the sales of the public ration of the order would nat the price of land by raising the rency in which it was to be pa this would be the effect on sm who purchased on a large sca bled to sell at an advance of t cent, over what would have 1 Inited States lands had been o in the ordinary way. Those w money of the deposit banks a lands, would thus be enabled advantage; and by means of payment to the banks who fo to call in their large loans, in provisions of the deposit bill. fore, was likely to operate to th of the deposit banks and the g while it counteracted the effect deposit bill. There may have motive actuating some of those order. There was danger that t when called upon to refund the would be unable to do it: in on this floor that the immedia distribution bill would be to br Now this treasury order would ag of the Senate body, Mr. Ewing, ention to move a reasury circular; . Benton made it the resolution at dom resorted to, to be so opposed ing to be entitled ne usual forms of on promptly, and the resolution, in I speech, in which was issued by the the 11th of July to the receivers of and offices in the , after the 15th of e in payment for ld and silver and by the Treasurer saving in favor of e residents in the ened to lie. This ne, and expires I ssed object of this culations in public ues of bank paper he specie currency essity of the meaded to be supportrs of this body and But, before I pros paper, its characwill briefly advert which it grew. I can make the thing jects were not the jects for which this have influenced the it, but those who last virtually exeother and different eed to explain. It mmencement of the t there would be a in the public treathe country for all s. It was also well bill, or some other of this fund, would, ess; and, if the true condition of the public sentiment were known and understood, that its distribution, in some form or other, would be demanded by the country. On the other hand, it seems to have been determined by the party, and some of those who act with it thoroughly, that the money should remain where it was in the deposit banks, so that it could be wielded at pleasure by the executive. This order grew out of the contest to which I have referred. It was issued not by the advice of Congress or under the sanction of any law. It was delayed until Congress was fairly out of the city, and all possibility of interference by legislation was removed; and then came forth this new and last expedient. It was known that these funds, received for public lands, had become a chief source of revenue, and it may have occurred to some that the passage of a treasury order of this kind would have a tendency to embarrass the country; and as the hill for the regulation of the deposits had just passed, the public might be brought to believe that all the mischief occasioned by the order was the effect of the distribution bill. It has, indeed, happened, that this scheme has failed: the public understand it rightly, but that was not by any means certain at the time the measure was devised. It was not then foreseen that the people would as generally see through the contrivance as it has since been found that they do. There may have been various other motives which led to the measure. Many minds were probably to be consulted; for it is not to be presumed that a step like this was taken without consultation, and guided by the will of a single individual alone. That is not the way in which these things are done. No doubt one effect hoped for by some was, that a check would be put to the sales of the public lands. The operation of the order would naturally be, to raise the price of land by raising the price of the currency in which it was to be paid for. But, while this would be the effect on small buyers, those who purchased on a large scale would be enabled to sell at an advance of ten or fifteen per cent, over what would have been given if the United States lands had been open to purchase in the ordinary way. Those who had borrowed money of the deposit banks and paid it out for lands, would thus be enabled to make sales to advantage; and by means of such sales make payment to the banks who found it necessary to call in their large loans, in order to meet the provisions of the deposit bill. The order, therefore was likely to operate to the common benefit of the deposit banks and the great land dealers, while it counteracted the effect of the obnoxious deposit bill. There may have been yet another motive actuating some of those who devised this order. There was danger that the deposit banks, when called upon to refund the public treasure, would be unable to do it: indeed, it was said on this floor that the immediate effect of the distribution bill would be to break those banks.

LV.

Y CIRCULAR

lect the specie of the country into the land offices, whence it would immediately go into the deposit banks, and would prove an acceptable aid to them while making the transfers required by law. These seem to me to have been among the real motives which led to the adoption of that order."

Mr. Ewing then argued at length against the legality of the treasury circular, quoting the joint resolution of 1816, and insisting that its provisions had been violated; also insisting on the largeness of the surplus, and that it had turned out to be much larger than was admitted by the friends of the administration; which latter assertion was in fact true, because the appropriations for the public service (the bills for which were in the hands of the opposition members) had been kept off till the middle of the summer, and could not be used; and so left some fifteen millions in the treasury of appropriated money which fell under the terms of the deposit act, and became divisible as surplus.

Mr. Benton replied to Mr. Ewing, saying:

"In the first of these objects the present movement is twin brother to the famous resolution of 1833, but without its boldness; for that resolution declared its object upon its face, while this one eschews specification, and insidiously seeks a judgment of condemnation by inference and argument. In the second of these objects every body will recognize the great design of the second branch of the same famous resolution of 1833, which, in the restoration of the deposits to the Bank of the United States, clearly went to the establishment of the paper system, and its supremacy over the federal government. The present movement, therefore, is a second edition of the old one, but a lame and impotent affair compared to that. Then, we had a magnificent panic; now, nothing but a miserable starveling! For though the letter of the president of the Bank of the United States announced, early in November, that the meeting of Congress was the time for the new distress to become intense, yet we are two weeks deep in the session, and no distress memorial, no distress deputation, no distress committees, to this hour! Nothing, in fact, in that line, but the distress speech of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Ewing]; so that the new panic of 1836 has all the signs of being a lean and slender affair-a mere church-mouse concern-a sort of dwarfish, impish imitation of the gigantic spectre which stalked through the land in 1833."

when called upon to refund the public treasure, would be unable to do it: indeed, it was said on this floor that the immediate effect of the distribution bill would be to break those banks. Now this treasury order would operate to colitically support to the same way, and by the same managers, with its gigantic brother of 1833—'34; and quoted from a published letter of Mr. Biddle in November preceding, and a public speech of Mr. Clay in the month of September preceding, in which they gave out the programme for the institution of the little panic; and the proceeding against The officer who issued it, as if conscious of its the President for violating the laws; and against the treasury order itself as the cause of the new distress. Mr. Biddle in his publication said: "Our pecuniary condition seems to be a strange anomaly. When Congress adjourned, it left the country with abundant crops, and high prices for them-with every branch of industry flourishing, and with more specie than we ever had before-with all the elements of universal prosperity. None of these have undergone the slightest change; yet, after a few months, Congress will re-assemble, and find the whole country suffering intense pecuniary distress. The occasion of this, and the remedy for it, will occupy our thoughts. In my judgment, the main cause of it is the mismanagement of the revenue-mismanagement in two respects: the mode of executing the distribution law, and the order requiring specie for the payment of the public lands-an act which seems to me a most wanton abuse of power, if not a flagrant usurpation. The remedy follows the causes of the evils. The first measure of relief, therefore, should be the instant repeal of the treasury order requiring He was bound, and is yet bound, to receive specie for lands; the second, the adoption of a proper system to execute the distribution law. These measures would restore confidence in twenty-four hours, and repose in at least as many days. If the treasury will not adopt them voluntarily, Congress should immediately command it." This was the recommendation, or mandate, of the president of the Bank of the United States, still acting as a part of the national legislative power even in its new transformation, and keeping an eye upon that distribution which Congress passed as a deposit, which he had recommended as raising the price of the State stocks held by the bank; and the delay in the delivery of which he considers as one of the causes which had brought on the new distress. Mr. Clay in his Lexington speech had taken the same grounds; and speaking of the continued tampering with the currency by the the disjunctive. No two are joined together, administration, went on to say:

"One rash, lawless, and crude experiment right of the Secretary to order the collections succeeds another. He considered the late trea- to be made in either of the four media mentionsury order, by which all payments for public lands ed. That the resolution is not mandatory in were to be in specie, with one exception, for short duration, a most ill-advised, illegal, and pernicious measure. In principle it was wrong in practice it will favor the very speculation which it professes to endeavor to suppress, obnoxious character, shelters himself behind the name of the President. But the President and Secretary had no right to promulgate any such order. The law admits of no such discrimination. If the resolution of the 30th of April 1816, continued in operation (and the administration on the occasion of the removal of the deposits, and on the present occasion, relies upon it as in full force), it gave the Secretary no such discretion as he has exercised. That resolution required and directed the Secretary of the Treasury to adopt such measures as he might deem necessary, 'to cause, as soon as may be all duties, taxes, debts, or sums of money, accruing or becoming payable to the United States to be collected and paid in the legal currency of the United States, or treasury notes, or notes of the Bank of the United States, as by law provided and declared, or in notes of banks which are payable and paid on demand, in said legal currency of the United States.' This resolution was restrictive and prohibitory upon the Secretary only as to the notes of banks not redeem. able in specie on demand. As to all such notes, he was forbidden to receive them from and after the 20th of February, 1817. As to the notes of banks which were payable and paid on demand in specie, the resolution was not merely permissive, it was compulsory and mandatory, them, until Congress interfere."

Mr. Benton replied to the arguments of Mr. Ewing, the letter of Mr. Biddle, and the speech of Mr. Clay; and considered them all as identical, and properly answered in the lump, without special reference to the co-operating assailants. On the point of the alleged illegality of the treasury order, he produced the Joint Resolution of 1816 under which it was done; and then

"This is the law, and nothing can be plainer than the right of selection which it gives to the Secretary of the Treasury. Four different media are mentioned in which the revenue may be collected, and the Secretary is made the actor, the agent, and the power, by which the collection is to be effected. He is to do it in one, or in another. He may choose several, or all, or two, or one. All are in but all are disjoined, and presented to him individually and separately. It is clearly the favor of any one of the four, manner in which the notes United States are mentioned received as then provided for bank charter had then just pa section had provided for th notes of this institution unti should direct otherwise. T stitution to deliver its notes revenue, was anterior to this ways held under that 14th s this joint resolution, and whe repealed at the last session of right was admitted to be go been claimed since. The we clear; the practice under it and uninterrupted from the to the present day. For twe der three Presidents, all the Treasury have acted alike. lections, permitting the note paying banks to be receive others. Mr. Crawford did it stances; and fierce and univ attacks upon that eminent presidential canvass of 1824 ever thought of charging him this respect. Mr. Rush twice lections, during the administrati and no one, either in the same or out of the cabinet against h ed of it. For twenty years been uniform; and every citi knows that that practice was t not universal, exclusion of th paying bank paper from the W This every man in the West k that that general exclusion co the day that the Bank of the I ed to be the depository of th It was that event which opene receivability of State bank 1 since been enjoyed."

Having vindicated the trea the charge of illegality, Mr. Be head of the new distress, and a

"The news of all this appr was given out in advance speech and the Philadelphia le ferred to; and the fact of its and actual presence was vouche from Ohio [Mr. Ewing] on the Senate was in session. I do n (said Mr. B.) to bandy contra tions and debatable assertions I choose rather to make an is assertion by the application of e way I will proceed at present. letter of the president of the Ba States as being official in this c thoritative in the distress departs bined movement against Preside announces, in November, the for exception, for a sed, illegal, and le it was wrong ery speculation or to suppress, conscious of its nself behind the e President and ulgate any such such discrimina-30th of April. nd the adminismoval of the desion, relies upon ecretary no such That resolution cretary of the res as he might soon as may be, s of money, ache United States egal currency of 7 notes, or notes es, as by law proof banks which and, in said legal

This resolution upon the Secrenks not redeemto all such notes. m from and after As to the notes and paid on dewas not merely and mandatory. ound, to receive rguments of Mr. e, and the speech nem all as identihe lump, without, rating assailants. illegality of the he Joint Resolus done; and then ng can be plainer hich it gives to Four differhich the revenue ecretary is made power, by which eted. He is to He may choose All are in one. joined together, sented to him in-It is clearly the er the collections r media mentionnot mandatory in favor of any one of the four, is obvious from the manner in which the notes of the Bank of the United States are mentioned. They were to be received as then provided for by law; for the bank charter had then just passed; and the 14th section had provided for the reception of the notes of this institution until Congress, by law, should direct otherwise. The right of the institution to deliver its notes in payment of the revenue, was anterior to this resolution, and always held under that 14th section, never under this joint resolution, and when that section was repealed at the last session of this Congress, that right was admitted to be gone, and has never been claimed since. The words of the law are clear; the practice under it has been uniform and uninterrupted from the date of its passage to the present day. For twenty years, and under three Presidents, all the Secretaries of the Treasury have acted alike. Each has made selections, permitting the notes of some speciepaying banks to be received, and forbidding others. Mr. Crawford did it in numerous instances; and fierce and universal as were the attacks upon that eminent patriot, during the presidential canvass of 1824, no human being ever thought of charging him with illegality in this respect. Mr. Rush twice made similar selections, during the administration of Mr. Adams, and no one, either in the same cabinet with him, or out of the cabinet against him, ever complained of it. For twenty years the practice has been uniform; and every citizen of the West knows that that practice was the general, though not universal, exclusion of the Western speciepaying bank paper from the Western land offices. This every man in the West knows, and knows that that general exclusion continued down to the day that the Bank of the United States ceased to be the depository of the public moneys. It was that event which opened the door to the receivability of State bank paper which has since been enjoyed."

Having vindicated the treasury order from the charge of illegality, Mr. Benton took up the head of the new distress, and said:

"The news of all this approaching calamity was given out in advance in the Kentucky speech and the Philadelphia letter, already referred to; and the fact of its positive advent and actual presence was vouched by the senator from Ohio [Mr. Ewing] on the last day that the Senate was in session. I do not permit myself (said Mr. B.) to bandy contradictory asseverations and debatable assertions across this floor. I choose rather to make an issue, and to test assertion by the application of evidence. In this way I will proceed at present. I will take the letter of the president of the Bank of the United States as being official in this case, and most authoritative in the distress department of this com-national calamity in December; and after charge ing part of this ruin and mischief on the mode of executing what he ostentatiously styles the distribution law, when there is no such law in the country, he goes on to charge the remainder, being ten-fold more than the former upon the Treasury order which excludes paper money from the land offices."

Mr. Benton then read Mr. Biddle's description of the new distress, which, in his publication was awful and appalling, but which, he said, was nowhere visible except in the localities where the bank had power to make it. It was a picture of woe and ruin, but not without hope and remedy if Congress followed his directions; in the mean time he thus instructed the country how to behave, and promised his co-operationthat of the bank-in the overthrow of President Jackson, and his successor, Mr. Van Buren (for that is what he meant in this passage):

"In the mean time, all forbearance and calmness should be maintained. There is great reason for anxiety-none whatever for alarm; and with mutual confidence and courage, the country may yet be able to defend itself against the government. In that struggle my own poor efforts shall not be wanting. I go for the country, whoever rules it. I go for the country best loved when worst governed-and it will afford me far more gratification to assist in repairing wrongs, than to triumph over those who inflict them."

This pledge of aid in a struggle with the government was a key to unlock the meaning of the movements then going on to produce the general suspension of specie payments in all the banks which saluted the administration of Mr. Van Buren in the first quarter of its existence, and was intended to produce it in its first month. Considering specie payments as the only safety of the country, and foreseeing the general bank explosions, chiefly contrived by the Bank of the United States, which was to re-appear in the ruin, and claim its re-establishment as the only remedy for the evils which itself and its confederates created, Mr. Benton said:

"There is no safety for the federal revenues but in the total exclusion of local paper, and that from every branch of the revenue—customs, lands, and post office. There is no safety for the national finances but in the constitutional medium of gold and silver. After forty years of wandering in the wilderness of paper money, we have approached the confines of the constibined movement against President Jackson. He | tutional medium. Seventy-five millions of specie announces, in November, the forthcoming of the in the country, with the prospect of annual increase of ten or twelve millions for the next four years; three branch mints to commence next spring, and the complete restoration of the gold currency; announce the success of President Jackson's great measures for the reform of the currency and vindicate the constitution from the libel of having prescribed an impracticable currency. The success is complete; and there is no way to thwart it, but to put down the treasury order, and to re-open the public lands to the inundation of paper money. Of this, it is not to be dissembled, there is great danger. Four deeply interested classes are at work to do itspeculators, local banks, United States Bank, and politicians out of power. They may succeed, but he (Mr. B.) would not despair. The darkest hour of night is just before the break of day; and, through the gloom ahead, he saw the bright vision of the constitutional currency erect, radiant, and victorious. Through regulation, or explosion, success must eventually come. If reform measures go on, gold and silver will be gradually and temperately restored; if reform measures are stopped, then the paper system runs riot, and explodes from its own expansion. Then the Bank of the United States will exult in the catastrophe, and claim its own re-establishment, as the only adequate regulator of the local banks. Then it will be said the specie experiment has failed! But no; the contrary will be known, that the specie experiment has not failed, but it was put down by the voice and power of the interested classes, and must be put up again by the voice and power of the disinterested community."

This was uttered in December 1836: in April 1837 it was history.

Mr. Crittenden, of Kentucky, replied to Mr. Benton; and said:

"The senator from Missouri had exhibited a table, the results of which he had pressed with a very triumphant air. Was it extraordinary that the deposit banks should be strengthened? The effect of the order went directly to sustain them. But it was at the expense of all the other banks of the country. Under this order. all the specie was collected and carried into their vaults: an operation which went to disturb and embarrass the general circulation of the country, and to produce that pecuniary difficulty which was felt in all quarters of the Union. Mr. C. did not profess to be competent to judge how far the whole of this distress was attributable to the operation of the treasury order, but of this at least he was very sure, through a great part of the Western country, it was universally attributed to that cause. The senator from Missouri supposed that the order had produced no part of this pressure. If not, he would ask what it had produced? Had it increased the specie in the country? Had it increased the specie in actual and general circulation? If it had done no evil, what good had it done? This, he believed was as yet undiscovered. So far as it had operated at all, it had been to derange the state of the currency, and to give it a direction inverse to the course of business. The honorable senator, however, could not see how moving money across a street could operate to affect the currency; and seemed to suppose that moving money from west to east, or from east to west, would have as little effect. Money however, if left to itself, would always move according to the ordinary course of business transactions. This course might indeed be disturbed for a time, but it would be like forcing the needle away from the pole: you might turn it round and round as often as you pleased, but, left to itself, it would still settle at the north, Our great commercial cities were the natural repositories where money centred and settled. There it was wanted, and it was more valuable if left there than if carried into the interior. Any intelligent business man in the West would rather have money paid him for a debt in New-York than at his own door. It was worth more to him. If, then, specie was forced, by treasury tactics, to take a direction contrary to the natural course of business, and to move from east to west, the operation would be beneficial to none injurious to all. It was not in the power of government to keep it in a false direction or position. Specie was in exile whenever it was forced out of that place where business called for it. Such an operation did no real good. It was a forced movement and was soon overcome by the natural course of things.

"Mr. C. was well aware that men might be deluded and mystified on this subject, and that while the delusion lasted, this treasury order might be held up before the eyes of men as a splendid arrangement in finance; but it was only like the natural rainbow, which owed its very existence to the mist in which it had its being. The moment the atmosphere was clear, its bright colors vanished from the view. Soit would be with this matter. The specie of the country must resume its natural course. Man might as well escape from the physical necessities of their nature, as from the laws which gorerned the movements of finance: and the man who professed to reverse or dispense with the one was no greater quack than he who made the same professions with regard to the other.

"But it was said to be the distribution bill which had done all the mischief; and Mr. C. was ready to admit that the manner in which the government had attempted to carry that law into effect might in part have furnished the basis for such a supposition. He had no doubt that the pecuniary evils of the country had been aggravated by the manner in which this had been done."

Mr. Webster also replied to Mr. Benton in as elaborate speech, in which, before arguing the legal question, he said:

"The honorable member Benton) objects even to givin rescind a second reading. I his right, though it be not a practice, to arrest the progra at its first stage. This, at and manly warfare. The ho his elaborate speech, founds this resolution, and his suppo order, on those general pr currency which he is know which he has maintained for opinions some of us regard and impracticable; looking t not desirable in itself, even i ble: and, if it were desirable yond the power of this gov

"The honorable member ha perseverance and abundant lal edly, in support of his opini stood, also, to have had count places; and what new hopes sent moment holds out to hin judge, but we shall probably s cisely on these general and lon that he rests his support of t A question, therefore, is at one the gentleman's principles and subject of the currency, and t opinions which have generally country, and which are, and h opposite to his. That question be put to the vote of the Sen gress and by the termination we shall learn whether the ments are or are not to preva as the Senate is concerned. rejoice, I am sure, to see some opinions of Congress on a sul so much has been said, and whi culated, by its perpetual agita and disturb the confidence of a

"We are now fast approachi one administration goes out other is to come in. The cour rest in learning, as soon as poss new administration, while it re and patronage, is to inherit, als the projects of the past; whetl up the avowal of the same obje schemes, especially in regard The order of the Secretary is on the face of it, perpetual. about it gives it the least appea porary measure. On the con imply no limitation in point of c gradual manner in which it is t ration shows plainly an intention the settled and permanent policy Indeed, it is but now beginning stence. It is only five or six da operation has commenced. Is it law of the land and the rule under the administration whic ered. So far as been to derange give it a direcbusiness. The ild not see how ould operate to to suppose that st, or from east effect. Money, always move acf business transeed be disturbed orcing the needle it turn it round ased, but, left to the north. Our ie natural reposid settled. There re valuable if left nterior. Any in-Test would rather bt in New-York as worth more to ced, by treasury trary to the natumove from east to beneficial to none, the power of govdirection or posinever it was forced ness called for it. 1 good. It was a n overcome by the at men might be s subject, and that nis treasury order eyes of men as a ance; but it was w, which owed its in which it had its iosphere was clear, m the view. So it The specie of the ural course. Man ne physical necessihe laws which govince: and the man dispense with the than he who made gard to the other. he distribution bill ischief; and Mr. C. ne manner in which ipted to carry that have furnished the He had no doubt he country had been to Mr. Benton, in an , before arguing the

in which this had

"The honorable member from Missouri (Mr. Benton) objects even to giving the resolution to rescind a second reading. He avails himself of his right, though it be not according to general practice, to arrest the progress of the measure at its first stage. This, at least, is open, bold. and manly warfare. The honorable member, in his elaborate speech, founds his opposition to this resolution, and his support of the treasury order, on those general principles respecting currency which he is known to entertain, and which he has maintained for many years. His opinions some of us regard as altogether ultra and impracticable; looking to a state of things not desirable in itself, even if it were practicable; and, if it were desirable, as being far bewond the power of this government to bring "The honorable member has manifested much rerseverance and abundant labor, most undoubtedly, in support of his opinions; he is understood, also, to have had countenance from high places; and what new hopes of success the present moment holds out to him, I am not able to judge, but we shall probably soon see. It is precisely on these general and long-known opinions that he rests his support of the treasury order. A question, therefore, is at once raised between the gentleman's principles and opinions on the subject of the currency, and the principles and opinions which have generally prevailed in the country, and which are, and have been, entirely opposite to his. That question is now about to be put to the vote of the Senate. In the progress and by the termination of this discussion, we shall learn whether the gentleman's sentiments are or are not to prevail, so far, at least, as the Senate is concerned. The country will rejoice, I am sure, to see some declaration of the opinions of Congress on a subject about which so much has been said, and which is so well calculated, by its perpetual agitation, to disquiet and disturb the confidence of society.

"We are now fast approaching the day when one administration goes out of office, and another is to come in. The country has an interest in learning, as soon as possible, whether the new administration, while it receives the power and patronage, is to inherit, also, the topics and the projects of the past; whether it is to keep up the avowal of the same objects and the same schemes, especially in regard to the currency. The order of the Secretary is prospective, an I, on the face of it, perpetual. Nothing in or about it gives it the least appearance of a temporary measure. On the contrary, its terms imply no limitation in point of duration, and the gradual manner in which it is to come into operation shows plainly an intention of making it the settled and permanent policy of government. Indeed, it is but now beginning its complete exidence. It is only five or six days since its full operation has commenced. Is it to stand as the

And are those notions of an exclusive specie currency, and opposition to all banks, on which it is defended, to be espoused and maintained by the new administration, as they have been by its predecessor? These are questions, not of mere curiosity, but of the highest interest to the whole country. In considering this order, the first thing naturally is, to look for the causes which led to it, or are assigned for its promulgation. And these, on the face of the order itself, are declared to be 'complaints which have been made of frauds, speculations, and monopolies, in the purchase of the public lands, and the aid which is said to be given to effect these objects, by excessive bank credits, and dangerous, if not partial, facilities through bank drafts and bank deposits, and the general evil influence likely to result to the public interest, and especially the safety of the great amount of money in the trea sury, and the sound condition of the currency of the country, from the further exchange of the national domain in this manner, and chiefly for bank credits and paper money.'

"This is the catalogue of evils to be cured by this order. In what these frauds consist, what are the monopolies complained of, or what is precisely intended by these injurious speculations, we are not informed. All is left on the general surmise of fraud, speculation, and monopoly. It is not avowed or intimated that the government has sustained any loss, either by the receipt of the bank notes which proved not to be equivalent to specie, or in any other way. And it is not a little remarkable that these evils, of fraud, speculation, and monopoly, should have become so enormous and so notorious, on the 11th of July, as to require this executive interference for their suppression, and yet that they should not have reached such a height as to make it proper to lay the subject before Congress, although Congress remained in session until within seven days of the date of the order. And what makes this circumstance still more remarkable, is the fact that, in his annual message, at the commencement of the same session, the President had spoken of the rapid sales of the public lands as one of the most gratifying proofs of the general prosperity of the country, without suggesting that any danger whatever was to be apprehended from fraud, speculation, or monopoly. His words were: Among the evidences of the increasing prosperity of the country, not the least gratifying, is that afforded by the receipts from the sales of the public lands, which amount, in the present year, to the unexpected sum of eleven millions.' From the time of the delivery of that message, down to the date of the treasury order, there had not been the least change, so far as I know, or so far as we are informed, in the manner of receiving payment for the public lands. Every thing stood, on the 11th of July, 1836, as it had stood at the opening of the session, in December, 1835. law of the land and the rule of the treasury, law of the land and the rule of the treasury, be taken at the two periods, we may be able to learn, perhaps, in the further progress of this debate.

"The order speaks of the 'evil influence likely to result from the further exchange of the public lands into 'paper money.' Now, this is the very language of the gentleman from Missouri. He habitually speaks of the notes of all banks, however solvent, and however promptly their notes may be redeemed in gold and silver, as 'paper money.' The Secretary has adopted the honorable member's phrases, and he speaks, too, of all the bank notes received at the land offices, although every one of them is redeemable in specie, on demand, but as so much 'paper money.' In this respect, also, sir, I hope we may know more as we grow older, and be able to learn whether, in times to come, as in times recently passed, the justly obnoxious and odious character of 'paper money' is to be applied to the issues of all the banks in all the States, with whatever punctuality they redeem their bills. This is quite new, as financial language. By paper money, in its obnoxious sense, I understand paper issues on credit alone, without capital, without funds assigned for its payment, resting only on the good faith and the future ability of those who issue it. Such was the paper monev of our revolutionary times; and such, perhaps, may have been the true character of the paper of particular institutions since. But the notes of banks of competent capitals, limited in amount to a due proportion to such capitals, made payable on demand in gold and silver, and always so paid on demand, are paper money in no sense but one; that is to say, they are made of paper, and they circulate as money. And it may be proper enough for those who maintain that nothing should so circulate but gold and silver, to denominate such bank notes 'paper money,' since they regard them but as paper intruders into channels which should flow only with gold and silver. If this language of the order is authentic, and is to be so hereafter, and all bank notes are to be regarded and stigmatized as mere 'paper money,' the sooner the country knows it the better.

"The member from Missouri charges those who wish to rescind the treasury order with two objects: first, to degrade and disgrace the President; and, next, to overthrow the constitutional currency of the country. For my own part, sir, I denounce nobody; I seek to degrade or disgrace nobody. Holding the order illegal and unwise, I shall certainly vote to rescind it; and, in the discharge of this duty, I hope I am not expected to shrink back, lest I might do something which might call in question the wisdom of the Secretary, or even of the President. And I hope that so much of independence as may be manifested by free discussion and an honest vote is not to cause denunciation from any quarter. If it should, let it come."

It became a very extended debate, in which | cy, than could be done by a mere negative rola

Mr. Niles, Mr. Rives, Mr. Hubbard, Mr. Southard, Mr. Strange of N. C., Mr. Clay, Mr. Walker of Miss., and others partook. The subject having been referred to the committee of public lands. of which Mr. Walker was chairman, reported a bill, "limiting and designating the funds receivable for the revenues of the United States;" the object of which was to rescind the treasury circular without naming it, and to continue the receipt of bank notes in payment of all dues to the government. Soon after the bill was reported, and had received its second reading a motion was made in the Senate to lay the impending subject (public lands) on the table for the purpose of considering the bill reported by Mr. Walker to limit and designate the funds receivable in public dues. Mr. Benton was taken by surprise by this motion, which was immediately agreed to, and the bill ordered to be engrossed for a third reading the next day. To that third reading Mr. Benton looked for his opportunity to speak; and availed himself of it commencing his speech with giving the reason why he did not speak the evening before when the question was on the engrossment of the bill. He said he could not have foreseen that the subject depending before the Senate, the bill for limiting the sales of the public lands to actual settlers, would be laid down for the purpose of taking up this subject out of its order; and therefore, had not brought with him some memorandums which he intended to use when this subject came up. He did not choose to ask for delay, because his habit was to speak to subjects when they were called; and in this particular cause he did not think it material when he spoke; for he was very well aware that his speaking would not affect the fate of the bill. It would pass; and that was known to all in the chamber. It was known to the senator from Ohio (Mr. Ewing) who indulged himself in saying he thought otherwise a few days ago; but that was only a good-natured way of stimulating his friends, and bringing them up to the scratch. The bill would pass, and that by a good rote, for it would have the vote of the opposition, and a division of the administration vote. Why, then, did he speak? Because it was due to his position, and the part he had acted on the currency questions, to express his sentiments more fully on this bill, so vital to the general curren-

He should, therefore, speak should direct his attention t by the Public Land Commit totally changed the character on this subject. The recision order was introduced a resolu a resolution-but it came bac to regulate, not the land office all the receipts of the federal in this new form is to becom a law to operate on all the re peal all other laws upon the s related. In this new form i portance, and acquires an ef yond a resolution, and becomas in name, a totally new 1 reminded the Senate that he speech on this subject, given that two main objects were p complished by the rescinding the implied condemnation of P for violating the laws and cons stroying the prosperity of the condly, the imposition of the p the States upon the federal go respect to the first of these obje it was fully proved by the spe opposition senators who had sp ject; and, with respect to th lieved it would find its proof in the original resolution had unc form it was now assuming of especially with the proviso whi

the end of the second section. Mr. B. then took up the bill committee, and remarked, first, ology, not in the spirit of verb in the spirit of candid objection ment. There were cases in wh things, and this was one of those was a thing, and the only words tion of that thing were, "gold & The bill of the committee was exclusive of the words which m and used words which include were not money. These word fair subject of objection and arg they went to set aside the mone tution, and to admit the public paid in something which was no title of the bill uses the word "f fesses to designate the funds rec ard, Mr. South-He should, therefore, speak against it, and lay, Mr. Walker should direct his attention to the bill reported ie subject having by the Public Land Committee, which had so totally changed the character of the proceeding of public lands. on this subject. The recision of the treasury man, reported a order was introduced a resolution-it went out he funds received States;" the a resolution-but it came back a bill, and a bill the treasury cirto regulate, not the land office receipts only, but all the receipts of the federal government; and to continue the nt of all dues to in this new form is to become statute law, and a law to operate on all the revenues, and to rethe bill was repeal all other laws upon the subject to which it second reading, a related. In this new form it assumes an ime to lay the imon the table for pertance, and acquires an effect, infinitely beyond a resolution, and becomes in fact, as well bill reported by gnate the funds as in name, a totally new measure. Mr. B. Benton was taken reminded the Senate that he had, in his first hich was immespeech on this subject, given it as his opinion, ordered to be enthat two main objects were proposed to be accomplished by the rescinding resolution; first, e next day. To the implied condemnation of President Jackson n looked for his iled himself of it, for violating the laws and constitution, and destroying the prosperity of the country; and, segiving the reason condly, the imposition of the paper currency of ning before when the States upon the federal government. With grossment of the respect to the first of these objects, he presumed ave foreseen that he Senate, the bill it was fully proved by the speeches of all the iblic lands to acopposition senators who had spoken on this subvn for the purpose ject; and, with respect to the second, he believed it would find its proof in the change which of its order; and the original resolution had undergone, and the h him some memform it was now assuming of statute law, and to use when this especially with the proviso which was added at choose to ask for o speak to subjects the end of the second section. in this particular ial when he spoke; that his speaking he bill. It would all in the chamber. r from Ohio (Mr.

Mr. B. then took up the bill reported by the committee, and remarked, first, upon its phraseology, not in the spirit of verbal criticism, but in the spirit of candid objection and fair argument. There were cases in which words were things, and this was one of those cases. Money was a thing, and the only words in the constitution of that thing were, "gold and silver coin." The bill of the committee was systematically exclusive of the words which meant this thing, and used words which included things which were not money. These words were, then, a fair subject of objection and argument, because they went to set aside the money of the constitution, and to admit the public revenues to be paid in something which was not money. The title of the bill uses the word "funds." It pro-

elf in saying he

iys ago; but that of stimulating his

p to the scratch.

it by a good rote,

the opposition, and

tion vote. Why,

e it was due to his

1 acted on the cur-

is sentiments more

the general curren-

mere negative vota

revenues of the United States. Upon this word Mr. B. had remarked before, as being one of the most indefinite in the English language; and, so far from signifying money only, even paper money only, that it comprehended every variety of paper security, public or private, individual or corporate out of which money could be raised. The retention of this word by the committee, after the objections made to it, were indicative of their intentions to lay open the federal treasury to the reception of something which was not constitutional money; and this intention, thus disclosed in the title to the bill, was fully carried out in its enactments. The words "legal currency of the United States" are twice used in the first section, when the words "gold and silver" would have been more appropriate and more definite, if hard money was intended.

Mr. B. admitted that, in the eye of a regular bred constitutional lawyer, legal currency might imply constitutional currency; but certain it was that the common and popular meaning of the phrase was not limited to constitutional money, but included every currency that the statute law made receivable for debts. Thus, the notes of the Bank of the United States were generally considered as legal currency, because receivable by law in payment of public dues; and in like manner the notes of all specie-paying banks would, under the committee's bill, rise to the dignity of legal currency. The second section of the bill twice used the word "cash;" a word which, however understood at the Bank of England, where it always means ready money, and where ready money signifies gold coin in hand, yet with the banks with which we have to deal it has no such meaning, but includes all sorts of current paper money on hand, as well as gold and silver on hand.

Having remarked upon the phraseology of the bill, and shown that a paper currency composed of the notes of a thousand local banks, not only might become the currency of the federal government, but was evidently intended to be made its currency; and that in the face of all the protestations of the friends of the administration in favor of re-establishing the national gold currency, Mr. B. would now take up the bill of the committee under two or three other aspects, and show it to be as mistaken in its design as it would be impotent in its effect. In fesses to designate the funds receivable for the the first place, it transferred the business of suppressing the small note circulation from the deposit branch to the collecting branch of the public revenue. At present, the business was in a course of progress through the deposit banks, as a condition of holding the public moneys; and, as such, had a place in the deposit act of the last session, and also had a place in the President's message of the last session, where the suppression of paper currency under twenty dollars was expressly referred to the action of the deposit banks, and as a condition of their retaining the public deposits. It was through the deposit banks, and not through the reception of local bank paper, that the suppression of small notes should be effected. In the next place, he objected to the committee's bill, because it proposed to make a bargain with each of the thousand banks now in the United States, and the hundreds more which will soon be born; and to give them a right—a right by law—to have their notes received at the federal treasury. He was against such a bargain. He had no idea of making a contract with these thousand banks for the reception of their notes. He had no idea of contracting with them, and giving them a right to plead the constitution of the United States against us, if, at any time, after having agreed to receive their notes, upon condition that they would give up their small circulation, they should choose to say we had impaired the contract by not continuing to receive them; and so either relapse into the issue of this small trash, or have recourse to the judicial process to compel the United States to abide the contract, and continue the reception of all their notes. Mr. B. had no idea of letting down this federal government to such petty and inconvenient bargains with a thousand moneyed corporations. The government of the United States ought to act as a government, and not as a contractor. It should prescribe conditions, and not make bargains. It should give the law. He was against these bargains, even if they were good ones; but they were bad bargains, wretchedly bad, and ought to be rejected as such, even if all higher and nobler considerations were out of the question. What is the consideration that the United States is to receive? A mere individual agreement with each bank by itself, that in three years it will cease to issue notes under ten dollars and in five years it will cease to issue notes under twenty dollars. What is the price legal tender in all payments from the federal which she pays for this consideration? In the first place, it receives the notes of such bank as gold and silver at all the land-offices, customhouses, and post-offices, of the United States: and, of course, pays them out again as gold and silver to all her debtors. In the next place it compels the deposit banks to credit them as cash. In the third place, it accredits the whole circulation of the banks, and makes it current all over the United States, in consequence of universal receivability for all federal dues. In other words it endorses, so far as credit is concerned the whole circulation of every bank that comes into the bargain thus proposed. This is certainly a most wretched bargain on the part of the United States-a bargain in which what she receives is ruinous to her; for the more local payment she receives in payment of her revenues, the worse for her, and the sooner will her treasury be filled with unavailable funds.

Mr. B. having gone over these objections to the committee's bill, would now ascend to a class of objections of a higher and graver character. He had already remarked that the committee had carried out a resolution, and had brought back a bill; that the committee proposed a statutory enactment, where the senator from Ohio [Mr. Ewing], and the senator from Virginia [Mr. Rives], had only proposed a joint resolution; and he had already further remarked, that in addition to this total change in the mode of action, the committee had added what neither of these senators had proposed, a clause under a proviso, to enact paper money into cash -to pass paper money to the credit of the United States, as cash—and to punish, by the loss of the deposits, any deposit bank which should refuse so to receive, so to credit, and so to pass, the notes "receivable" under the provisions of their bill. These two changes make entirely a new measure-one of wholly a different character from the resolutions of the two senators—a measure which openly and in terms, and under penalties undertakes to make local State paper a legal tender to the federal government, and to compel the reception of all its revenues in the notes "receivable" under the provisions of the committee's bill. After this gigantic stepthis colossal movement-in favor of paper money, there was but one step more for the committee to take; and that was to make these notes a government. But that st to be taken in words, for it is the other great step become contestable that what the g it must pay out; and what the currency of the count this bill passes, the paper banks will be a tender by government, and a tender b government to its creditor This is the state to which tl will bring us! and now, let template, for a moment, the and the vast ocean of paper proposed to be embarked.

We stand upon a constit nizes nothing but gold and si stand upon a legislation of which recognizes nothing by money. Now, for the first ti tutory enactment proposed paper of a wilderness of local and in so doing to repeal all 1 law, and the constitution by era in our legislation. It is s trol all other law, and is no aid other laws, and to expres Congress. It is statutory en law, and not a declaratory reso law; and the effects of this sta make a paper government—t portation of our specie-to banks without foundations to r duce a certain catastrophe in system-to revive the pretensi States Bank—and to fasten for Smith system upon the Federal the whole Union.

Mr. Benton concluded his warning against the coming a banks; and said:

The day of revulsion may con and its effects may be more or les come it must, and disastrous, t must be. The present bloat in cannot continue; the present money exemplified in the high thing dependent upon the home last. The revulsion will come, as in 1819-20. But it will come the treasury order is maintain ration? In the of such bank as -offices, custom-United States; gain as gold and he next place, it dit them as cash. the whole circut current all over nce of universal In other words. s concerned, the : that comes into his is certainly a art of the United at she receives is ocal payment she zenues, the worse

treasury be filled

iese objections to now ascend to a and graver chamarked that the solution, and had e committee prowhere the senator the senator from r proposed a joint further remarked, al change in the had added what proposed, a clause, r money into cash the credit of the to punish, by the posit bank which to credit, and so " under the provio changes make enwholly a different is of the two senay and in terms, and o make local State ederal government, f all its revenues in the provisions of his gigantic stepvor of paper money, for the committee take these notes a s from the federal government. But that step was unnecessary to be taken in words, for it is taken in fact, when the other great step becomes law. For it is incontestable that what the government receives, it must pay out; and what it pays out becomes the currency of the country. So that when this bill passes, the paper money of the local banks will be a tender by law to the federal government, and a tender by duresse from the government to its creditors and the people. This is the state to which the committee's bill will bring us! and now, let us pause and contemplate, for a moment, the position we occupy, and the vast ocean of paper on which we are proposed to be embarked.

We stand upon a constitution which recognizes nothing but gold and silver for money; we stand upon a legislation of near fifty years, which recognizes nothing but gold and silver money. Now, for the first time, we have a statutory enactment proposed to recognize the paper of a wilderness of local banks for money, and in so doing to repeal all prior legislation by law, and the constitution by fact. This is an era in our legislation. It is statute law to control all other law, and is not a resolution to aid other laws, and to express the opinions of Congress. It is statutory enactment to create law, and not a declaratory resolution to expound law; and the effects of this statute would be, to make a paper government—to insure the exportation of our specie-to leave the State banks without foundations to rest upon-to produce a certain catastrophe in the whole paper system—to revive the pretensions of the United States Bank—and to fasten for a time the Adam Smith system upon the Federal Government and the whole Union.

Mr. Benton concluded his speech with a warning against the coming explosion of the banks; and said:

The day of revulsion may come sooner or later, and its effects may be more or less disastrous; but come it must, and disastrous, to some degree, it must be. The present bloat in the paper system cannot continue; the present depreciation of money exemplified in the high price of every thing dependent upon the home market, cannot last. The revulsion will come, as surely as it did in 1819-20. But it will come with less force if the treasury order is maintained, and if paper money shall be excluded from the federal treasury. But, let these things go as they may, and let reckless or mischievous banks do what they please, there is still a refuge for the wise and good; there is still an ark of safety for every honest bank, and for every prudent man; it is in the mass of gold and silver now in the country-the seventy odd millions which the wisdom of President Jackson's administration has accumulated-and by getting their share of which, all who are so disposed can take care of themselves. Sir (said Mr. B.), I have performed a duty to myself, not pleasant, but necessary. This bill is to be an era in our legislation and in our political history. It is to be a point upon which the future age will be thrown back, and from which future consequences will be traced. I separate myself from it; I wash my hands of it; I oppose it. I am one of those who promised gold, not paper. I promised the currency of the constitution, not the currency of corporations. I did not join in putting down the Bank of the United States, to put up a wilder. ness of local banks. I did not join in putting down the paper curency of a national bank, to put up a national paper currency of a thousand local banks. I did not strike Cæsar to make Anthony master of Rome.

Mr. Walker replied to what he called the bill of indictment preferred by the senator from Missouri against the committee on public lands; and after some prefatory remarks went on to say:

"But when that senator, having exhausted the argument, or having none to offer, had indulged in violent and intemperate denunciation of the Committee on Public Lands, and of the report made by him as their organ, Mr. W. could not withhold the expression of his surprise and astonishment. Mr. W. said it was his good fortune to be upon terms of the kindest personal intercourse with every senator, and these friendly relations should not be interrupted by any aggression upon his part. And now, Mr. W. said, he called upon the whole Senate to bear witness, as he was sure they all cheerfully would, that in this controversy he was not the aggressor, and that nothing had been done or said by him to provoke the wrath of the senator from Missouri, unless, indeed, to differ from him in opinion upon any subject constituted an offence in the mind of that senator. If such were the views of that gentleman, if he was prepared to immolate every senator who would not worship the same images of gold and silver which decorated the political chapel that the senator from Missouri would do execu-ver currency; and such is not only the prayer tion upon every member of the Senate but himself, and be left here alone in his glory. Mr. W. said he recurred to the remarks of the senator from Missouri with feelings of regret, rather than of anger or excitement; and that he could not but hope, that when the senator banks of the States, and establish his exclusive from Missouri had calmly reflected upon this subject, he would himself see much to regret in the course he had pursued in relation to the Committee on Public Lands, and much to recall that he had uttered under feelings of temporary excitement. Sir (said Mr. W.), being deeply solicitous to preserve unbroken the ranks of the democratic party in this body, participating with the people in grateful recollection of the distinguished services rendered by the senator from Missouri to the democracy of the Union, he would pass by many of the remarks made by that senator on this subject.

"[Mr. Benton here rose from his chair, and demanded, with much warmth, that Mr. Walker should not pass by one of them. Mr. W. asked, what one? Mr. B. replied, in an angry tone, Not one, sir. Then Mr. W. said he would examine them all, and in a spirit of perfect freedom; that he would endeavor to return blow for blow; and that, if the senator from Missouri desired, as it appeared he did, an angry controversy with him, in all its consequences, in and out of this house, he could be gratified.]

"Sir (said Mr. W.), why has the senator from Missouri assailed the Committee on Public Lands, and himself, as its humble organ? He was not the author of this measure, so much denounced by the senator from Missouri, nor The had he said one word upon the subject. measure originated with the senator from Virginia [Mr. Rives]. He was the author of the measure, and had been, and still was, its able, zealous, and successful advocate. Why, then, had the senator from Missouri assailed him (Mr. W.), and permitted the author of the measure to escape unpunished? Sir, are the arrows which appear to be aimed by the senator from Missouri at the humble organ of the Committee on Public lands, who reported this bill, intended to inflict a wound in another quarter? Is one senator the apparent object of assault, when another is designed as the real victim? Sir, when the senator from Missouri, without any provocation, like a thunderbolt from an unclouded sky, broke upon the Senate in a perfect tempest of wrath and fury, bursting upon his poor head like a tropical tornado, did he intend to sweep before the avenging storm another individual more obnoxious to his censure?

"Sir (said Mr. W.), the senator from Missouri has thrice repeated the prayer, 'God save the country from the Committee on Public Lands; but Mr. W. fully believed if the prayer of the country could be heard within these walls, it would be, God save us from the wild, visionary, ruinous, and impracticable schemes of the constitution, by authorizing the receipt of paper of the honorable gentleman, Mr. W. was fearful senator of Missouri, for exclusive gold and silof the country, but of the Senate, with scarcely a dissenting voice. Sir, if the senator from Missouri could, by his mandate, in direct opposition to the views of the President, heretofore expressed, sweep from existence all the constitutional currency of gold and silver, he would bring upon this country scenes of ruin and distress without a parallel—an immediate bankruptcy of nearly every debtor, and of almost every creditor to whom large amounts were due, a prodigious depreciation in the price of all property and all products, and an immediate cessation by States and individuals of nearly every work of private enterprise or public improvement. The country would be involved in one universal bankruptcy, and near the grave of the nation's prosperity would perhaps repose the scattered fragments of those great and glorious institutions which give happiness to millions here, and hopes to millions more of disenthralment from despotic power. Sir, in resistance to the power of the Bank of the United States, in opposition to the re-establishment of any similar institution, the senator from Missouri would find Mr. W. with him; but he could not enlist as a recruit in this new crusade against the banks of his own and every other State in the Union. These institutions, whether for good or evil, are created by the States, cherished and sustained by them, in many cases owned in whole or in part by the States, and closely united with their prosperity; and what right have we to destroy them? What right had he, a humble servant of the people of Mississippi, to say to his own, or any other State, your State legislation is wrong-your State institution, your State banks, must be annihilated and we will legislate here to effect this object. Are we the masters or servants of the sovereign States, that we dare speak to them in language like this - that we dare attempt to prostrate here those institutions which are created and maintained by those very States which we represent on this floor? These may be the opinions entertained by some senators of their duty to the States they represent, but they were not his (Mr. W's) views or his opinions. He was sincerely desirous to co-operate with his State in limiting any dangerous powers of the banks, in enlarging the circulation of gold and silver, and in suppressing the small note currency, so as to avoid that explosion which was to be apprehended from excessive issues of bank paper. But a total annihilation of all the banks of his own State, now possessing a chartered capital of near forty millions of dollars, would Mr. W. knew, produce almost universal bankruptcy, and was not, he believed, anticipated by any one of his constituents.

"But the senator from Missouri tells us that this measure of the committee is a repeal of the money in revenue paymen constitution never has had period cannot be designated was not so receivable by ment. This species of me made receivable for the p of Congress, passed immedi tion of the constitution, and force until eighteen hundi was so received, as a matt eighteen hundred and ele hundred and sixteen, when Congress then passed, and pired, it was so authorized t all that period. Now, although expired, there is that which law still in force, express notes of the specie-paying to be received in revenue p joint resolution of eighteen teen, adopted by both house approved by President Madi "Where is the distinction gards the reception of bank count, between the two pro senator from Missouri, in th bill of the committee as a re tution, denounces directly tl United States. Congress, no legislature, can make any th ver a tender in payment of d to another; but that Congres lature, or an individual, may stitutional rights, and recei drafts, in payment of any del universal adoption in theory never doubted by any one u session by the senator from distinction of the senator in incomprehensible to him (M lieved it was to every senato discernible only by the magn solar microscope. It was which, like the logarithmic sp of the hyperbolic curve, migh proached without reaching; as ghost of an idea, not only breadth, thickness, shape, weigh but without position-a mere ing, which flitted before the of the hororable senator, wh his fitful somnambulism, that ment of gold, silver, and bu senator delighted to occupy.

from Missouri might have high his piles of metal; he m in his Quixotic flight, over t States, putting to the sword th holders, directory, and legis which they were chartered; reveries, have demolished the consumed their paper by the quence; he might have tran with a metallic currency of t lions in circulation, an actual money in revenue payments. If so, then the e gold and silnly the prayer constitution never has had an existence; for the period cannot be designated when paper money 3, with scarcely senator from was not so receivable by the federal government. This species of money was expressly e, in direct opmade receivable for the public dues by an act resident, heretoof Congress, passed immediately after the adopistence all the tion of the constitution, and which remained in sh his exclusive force until eighteen hundred and eleven. It and silver, he was so received, as a matter of practice, from r scenes of ruin eighteen hundred and eleven until eighteen -an immediate hundred and sixteen, when, again, by an act of otor, and of al-Congress then passed, and which has just exlarge amounts nired it was so authorized to be received during tion in the price all that period. Now, although these acts have s, and an immeexpired, there is that which is equivalent to a lividuals of nearlaw still in force, expressly authorizing the rprise or public notes of the specie-paying banks of the States ould be involved to be received in revenue payments. It is the id near the grave d perhaps repose ioint resolution of eighteen hundred and sixteen, adopted by both houses of Congress, and hose great and approved by President Madison.

Vol. I.—45

Where is the distinction, in principle, as regards the reception of bank paper on public account, between the two provisions? And the senator from Missouri, in thus denouncing the bill of the committee as a repeal of the constitution, denounces directly the President of the United States. Congress, no more than a State legislature, can make any thing but gold or silver a tender in payment of debts by one citizen to another; but that Congress, or a State legislature, or an individual, may waive their constitutional rights, and receive bank paper or drafts, in payment of any debt, is a principle of universal adoption in theory and practice, and never doubted by any one until at the present session by the senator from Missouri. The distinction of the senator in this respect was as incomprehensible to him (Mr. W.) as he believed it was to every senator, and, indeed, was discernible only by the magnifying powers of a solar microscope. It was a point-no-point, which, like the logarithmic spiral, or asymptote of the hyperbolic curve, might be for ever approached without reaching; an infinitesimal, the ghost of an idea, not only without length, breadth, thickness, shape, weight, or dimensions, but without position-a mere imaginary nothing, which flitted before the bewildered vision of the homorable senator, when traversing, in his fitful somnambulism, that tesselated pavement of gold, silver, and bullion, which that senator delighted to occupy. Sir, the senator, from Missouri might have heaped mountain high his piles of metal; he might have swept, in his Quixotic flight, over the banks of the States, putting to the sword their officers, stockholders, directory, and legislative bodies by which they were chartered; he might, in his reveries, have demolished their charters, and consumed their paper by the fire of his cloquence; he might have transacted, in fancy, with a metallic currency of twenty-eight mil-Vol. I.—45 of fifteen hundred millions, and Mr. W. would not have disturbed his beatific visions, nor would any other senator-for they were visions only, that could never be realized-but when, descending from his ethereal flights, he seized upon the Committee on Public Lands as criminals, arrainged them as violators of the constitution, and prayed Heaven for deliverance from them, Mr. W. could be silent no longer. Yes, even then he would have passed lightly over the ashes of the theories of the honorable Senator, for, if he desired to make assaults upon any, it would be upon the living, and not the dead; but that senator, in the opening of his (Mr. W.'s) address, had rejected the olive branch which, upon the urgent solicitation of mutual friends, against his own judgment, he had extended to the honorable senator. The senator from Missouri had thus, in substance, declared his 'voice was still for war.' Be it so; but he hoped the Senate would all recollect that he (Mr. W.) was not the aggressor; and that, whilst he trusted he never would wantonly assail the feelings or reputation of any senator, he thanked God that he was not so abject or degraded as to submit, with impunity, to unprovoked attacks or unfounded accusations from any quarter. Could he thus submit, he would be unfit to represent the noble, generous, and gallant people, whose rights and interests it was his pride and glory to endeavor to protect, whose honor and character were dearer to him than life itself, and should never be tarnished by any act of his, as one of their humble representatives upon this floor."

Mr. Rives returned thanks to Mr. Walker for his able and satisfactory defence of the bill, which in fact was his own resolution changed into a bill. He should not be able to add much to what had been said by the honorable senator, but was desirous of adding his mite in reply to so much of what had been so zealously urged by the senator from Missouri (Mr. Benton), as had not been touched upon by the chairman of the land committee; and did so in an elaborate speech a few days thereafter. Mr. Benton did not reply to either of the senators; he believed that the events of a few months would answer them, and the vote being immediately taken, the bill was passed almost unanimously—only five dissenting votes. The year and nays were:

YEAS-Messrs. Black, Brown, Buchanan, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Dana, Davis, Ewing of Illinois, Ewing of Ohio, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, Kent, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Knight, McKean, Moore, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Page, Parker, Prentiss, Preston, Rives, Robbins, Robinson, Sevier, Southard, Swift, Tallmadge, Tipton, Tomlinson, lions in circulation, an actual annual business | Walker, Wall, Webster, White.—41.

eved, anticipated by lissouri tells us that tee is a repeal of the the receipt of paper

ve happiness to nillions more of power. Sir. in

he Bank of the

the re-establish-the senator from

with him; but he

this new crusade

and every other

titutions, whether

d by the States,

em, in many cases

by the States, and sperity; and what

m? What right

the people of Mis-

r any other State.

ig-your State in-

ust be annihilated.

effect this object.

ts of the sovereign

them in language

empt to prostrate

h are created and States which we

'hese may be the

e senators of their

sent, but they were his opinions. He

o-operate with his

ous powers of the

ulation of gold and he small note cur-

xplosion which was

ssive issues of bank

tion of all the banks

sessing a chartered

s of dollars, would,

ost universal bank-

NAYS-Messrs. Benton, Linn, Morris, Ruggles, Wright-5.

The name of Mr. Calhoun is not in either list of these votes. He had a reason for not voting, which he expressed to the Senate, before the vote was taken; thus:

"He had been very anxious to express his opinions somewhat at large upon this subject. He put no faith in this measure to arrest the downward course of the country. He believed the state of the currency was almost incurably bad, so that it was very doubtful whether the highest skill and wisdom could restore it to soundness; and it was destined, at no distant time, to undergo an entire revolution. An explosion he considered inevitable, and so much the greater, the longer it should be delayed. Mr. C. would have been glad to go over the whole subject; but as he was now unprepared to assign his reasons for the vote which he might give, he was unwilling to vote at all."

The explosion of the banks, which Mr. Calhoun considered inevitable, was an event so fully announced by its "shadow coming before," that Mr. Benton was astonished that so many senators could be blind to its approach, and willing, by law, to make their notes receivable in all payments to the federal government. The bill went to the House of Representatives, where a very important amendment was reported from the Committee of Ways and Means to which the bill had been referred, intended to preserve to the Secretary of the Treasury his control over the though good and valid in itself, may have been receivability of money for the public dues, so as to enable him to protect the constitutional currency and reject the notes of banks deemed by him to be unworthy of credit. That amendment was in these words, and its rejection goes to illustrate the character of the bill that was passed:

"And be it further enacted, That no part of this act shall be construed as repealing any existing law relative to the collection of the revenue from customs or public lands in the legal currency, or as substituting bank notes of any description as a lawful currency for coin, as provided in the constitution of the United States; nor to deprive the Secretary of the Treasury of the power to direct the collectors or receivers of the public revenue, whether derived from duties, taxes, debts, or sales of the public lands, not to receive in payment, for any sum due to the United States, the notes of any bank or banks which the said Secretary may have reason to believe unworthy of credit, or which he apprehends may be compelled to suspend specie payments."

Mr. Cambreleng, chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, in support of this amendment, said it had been reported for the purpose of preventing a misconstruction of the bill as it came from the Senate, and securing the public revenue from serious frauds, and asked for the yeas and nays. The amendment was cut off by a sustained call for the previous question; and the bill passed by a strong vote-143 to 59 The navs were:

NAYS—Messrs. Ash, Barton, Bean, Beaumont, Black, Bockee Boyd, Brown, Burns, Cambreleng, Chaney, Charles Coles, Cushman, Doubleday, Dromgoole, Tager, Fairfield, Farlin, Fry, day, Dromgoole, ther, Fairfield, Farlin, Fry, Fuller, Galbraith, J. Hall, Hamer, Hardin, A. G. Harrison, Hawes, Holt, Huntington, Jarvis, C. Johnson, B. Jones, Lansing, J. Lee, Leonard Logan, Loyall, A. Mann, W. Mason, M. Mason, McKay, McKeon, McLean, Page, Parks, F. Pierce. Joseph Reynolds, Rogers, Seymour, Shinn, Sick-Smith, Taylor, Thomas, J. Thomson, Turrill, Vanderpoel, Ward, Wardwell-59.

It was near the end of the session before the bill passed the House of Representatives. It only got to the hands of the President in the afternoon of the day before the constitutional dissolution of the Congress. He might have retained it (for want of the ten days for consideration which the constitution allowed him), without assigning any reason to Congress for so doing; but he chose to assign a reason which helped on to its conclusions by the evil tendencies of the measure. That reason was the ambiguous and equivocal character of the bill, and the diversity of interpretations which might be placed upon its provisions; and was contained in the following message to the Senate:

"The bill from the Senate entitled 'An act designating and limiting the funds receivable for the revenues of the United States, came to my hands yesterday, at two o'clock P. M. On perusing it, I found its provisions so complex and uncertain, that I deemed it necessary to obtain the opinion of the Attorney General of the United States on several important questions, touching its construction and effect, before I could decide on the disposition to be made of it. The Attorney General took up the subject immedately, and his reply was reported to me this day, at five o'clock P. M. As this officer after a careful and laborious examination of the bil and a distinct expression of his opinion on the points proposed to him, still came to the comclusion that the construction of the bill, should it become a law, would be yet a subject of much perplexity and doubt (a view v coincident with my own), think it proper, in a matter of of such constant application, so liable to diversity of int more especially as I have not h duties constantly pressing on subject that deliberate consid importance demands, I am con the bill, without acting definitiv to the end that my reasons fo be fully understood, I shall c with the opinion of the Attori the bill in question, to be depo partment of State.

Thus the firmness of the saved the country from an im and in a few months covered plaudits of a preserved and grat

CHAPTER CI

DISTRIBUTION OF LANDS AND MO PROPOSITIONS.

THE spirit of distribution, havin that feast in the insidious deposit eeding session, became ungovern petite for it at this session, and o guised in its efforts to effect its ol the first week of the meeting of Mercer, a representative from V a resolution that the Committee Means be directed to bring in a the States from all obligation ever dividends they should receive unde deposit act. It was a bold movemen that the States had not yet receive that it was addressed to the sa sitting in the same chairs, who ha measure under the character of a acredly returned to the United ever desired; and under that c guned over to the support of the a of voters who could not otherwis obtained; namely, those who con policy of distribution, and those w constitutionality. Mr. Dunlap, o met Mr. Mercer's motion at the thr demned it as an open conversion of distribution—as a breach of the which the deposit was obtained—a

he Committee
f this amendr the purpose
f the bill as it ng the public asked for the was cut off by question; and
e—143 to 59.

ean, Beaumont, Burns, Cambrehman, Double-1, Farlin, Fry, ier, Hardin, A. ington, Jarvis, I. Lee, Leonard, son, M. Mason, Parks, F. Pierce, ur, Shinn, Sick-Thomson, Turll—59.

ssion before the esentatives. It 'resident in the e constitutional, e might have reys for considerawed him), withngress for so do a reason which, it may have been ne evil tendencies at the ambiguous ill, and the divermight be placed contained in the entitled 'An act nds receivable for k P. M. On pe s so complex and cessary to obtain eneral of the Uniquestions, touch ct, before I could made of it. The subject immediate orted to me this this officer, after nation of the bill is opinion on the came to the conof the bill, shoul a subject of much perplexity and doubt (a view of the bill entirely coincident with my own), and as I cannot think it proper, in a matter of such interest and of such constant application, to approve a bill so liable to diversity of interpretations, and more especially as I have not had time, amid the duties constantly pressing on me, to give the subject that deliberate consideration which its importance demands, I am constrained to retain the bill, without acting definitively thereon; and to the end that my reasons for this step may be fully understood, I shall cause this paper, with the opinion of the Attorney General, and the bill in question, to be deposited in the Department of State."

Thus the firmness of the President again saved the country from an immense calamity, and in a few months covered him with the plaudits of a preserved and grateful country.

CHAPTER CLVI.

DISTRIBUTION OF LANDS AND MONEY—VARIOUS PROPOSITIONS.

THE spirit of distribution, having got a taste of that feast in the insidious deposit bill at the preceding session, became ungovernable in its appetite for it at this session, and open and undisguised in its efforts to effect its objects. Within the first week of the meeting of Congress, Mr. Mercer, a representative from Virginia, moved a resolution that the Committee of Ways and Means be directed to bring in a bill to release the States from all obligation ever to return the dividends they should receive under the so-called deposit act. It was a bold movement, considering that the States had not yet received a dollar, and that it was addressed to the same members, sitting in the same chairs, who had enacted the measure under the character of a deposit, to be acredly returned to the United States whenever desired; and under that character had mined over to the support of the act two classes of voters who could not otherwise have been obtained; namely, those who condemned the policy of distribution, and those who denied its constitutionality. Mr. Dunlap, of Tennessee, met Mr. Mercer's motion at the threshold-condemned it as an open conversion of deposit into distribution—as a breach of the condition on which the deposit was obtained—as unfit to be discussed; and moved that it be laid upon the table-a motion that precludes discussion, and brings on an immediate vote. Mr. Mercer asked for the yeas and nays, which being taken showed the astonishing spectacle of seventy-three members recording their names against the motion. The vote was 126 to 73. Simultaneously with Mr. Mercer's movement in the House to pull the mask from the deposit bill, and reveal it in its true character, was Mr. Clay's movement in the Senate to revive his land-money distribution bill, to give it immediate effect, and continue its operation for five years. In the first days of the session he gave notice of his intention to bring in his bill; and quickly followed up his notice with its actual introduction. On presenting the bill, he said it was due to the occasion to make some explanations: and thus went on to make

"The operation of the bill which had heretofore several times passed the Senate, and once the House, commenced on the last of December, 1822, and was to continue five years. It provided for a distribution of the nett proceeds of the public lands during that period, upon wellknown principles. But the deposit act of the last session had disposed of so large a part of the divisible fund under the land bill, that he did not think it right, in the present state of the treasury, to give the bill-which he was about to apply for leave to introduce—that retrospective character. He had accordingly, in the draught which he was going to submit, made the last day of the present month its commencement, and the last day of the year 1841 its termination. If it should pass, therefore, in this shape, the period of its duration will be the same as that prescribed in the former bills. The Senate will readily comprehend the motive for fixing the end of the year 1841, as it is at that time that the biennial reductions of ten per cent. upon the existing duties cease, according to the act of the 2d March 1833, commonly called the compromise act, and a reduction of one half of the excess beyond twenty per cent. of any duty then remaining, is to take effect. By that time, a fair experiment of the land bill will have been made, and Congress can then determine whether the proceeds of the national domain shall continue to be equitably divided, or shall be applied to the current expenses of the government. The bill in his hand assigns to the new State of Arkansas her just proportion of the fund, and grants to her 500,000 acres of land as proposed to other States. A similar assignment and grant are not made to Michigan, because her admission into the Union is not yet complete. But when that event occurs, provision is made by which that State will receive its fair dividend. He had restored, in this draught, the provision contained in the original plan for the distribution of the public lands, which he had presented to the Senate, by which the States, in the application of the fund, are restricted to the great objects of education, internal improvement, and colonization. Such a restriction would, he believed, relieve the Legislatures of the several States from embarrassing controversies about the disposition of the fund, and would secure the application of what was common in its origin, to common benefits in its ultimate destination. But it was scarcely necessary for him to say that this provision, as well as the fate of the whole bill, depended upon the superior wisdom of the Senate and of the House. In all respects, other than those now particularly mentioned, the bill is exactly as it passed this body at the last session."

The bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, consisting of Mr. Walker of Mississippi, Mr. Ewing of Ohio, Mr. King of Alabama, Mr. Ruggles of Maine, Mr. Fulton of Arkansas. The committee returned the bill with an amendment, proposing to strike out the entire bill, and substitute for it a new one, to restrict the sale of the lands to actual settlers in limited quantities. In the course of the discussion of the bill, Mr. Benton offered an amendment, securing to any head of a family, any young man over the age of eighteen, and any widow, a settlement right in 160 acres at reduced prices, and inhabitation and cultivation for five years: which amendment was lost by a close vote-18 to 20. The yeas and nays were:

Yeas—Messrs. Benton, Black, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Hendricks, King of Alabama, Linn, Moore, Morris, Nicholas, Rives, Robinson, Sevier, Strange, Tipton, Walker, White—18

Nays—Messrs. Bayard, Brown, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Hubbard, Kent, King of Georgia, Niles, Page, Prentiss, Robbins, Ruggles, Swift, Tallmadge, Wright—20.

The substitute reported by the committee on public lands, after an extended debate, and various motions of amendment, was put to the vote, and adopted—twenty-four to sixteen—the yeas and nays being:

Yeas—Messrs. Benton, Black, Brown, Buchanan, Cuthbert, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, King of Alabama, Linn, Lyon, Moore. Mouton, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Page, Rives, Robinson, Strange, Walker, Wright—24.

Nays.—Messrs. Bayard, Calhoun, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Kent, King of Georgia, Knight Prentiss, Robbins, Sevier, Southard, Swift Tomlinson, Wall, Webster, White—16.

So Mr. Clay's plan of a five years' open distri bution of the land money to the States, in addition to the actual distribution, under the deposit mask, was now defeated in the Senate: but that did not put an end to kindred schemes. They multiplied in different forms; and continued to vex Congress to almost the last day of its existence. Mr. Calhoun brought a plan for the cession of all the public lands to the States in which they lay, to be sold by them on graduated prices, extending to thirty-five years, on condition that the States should take the expenses of the land system on themselves, and pay thirty. three and a third percentum, of the sales, to the federal treasury. Mr. Benton objected, on principle, to any complication of moneyed or property transactions between the States and the federal government, leading, as they inevitably would to dissension and contention; and ending in controversies between the members and the head of the federal government: and, on detail, because the graduation was extended beyond a period when the new States would be strong enough to obtain better terms, without the complication of a contract, and the condition of a purchase. Within the thirty-five years, there would be three new apportionments of representatives, under the censuses of 1840, 1850, and 1860-doubling or trebling the new States representation each time; also several new States admitted; so that they would be strong enough to take effectual measures for theertinction of the federal titles within the States, on just and equitable principles. Mr. Buchanan openly assailed Mr. Calhoun's proposition as a bid for the presidency; and said:

"He had heard a great deal said about bribing the people with their own money; arguments of that kind had been reiterated, but they had never had much effect on him. But speaking on the same principles on which this had been said, and without intending any thing personal toward the honorable senator from South Care lina, he would say this was the most splendid bribe that had ever yet been offered. It was to give the entire public domain to the people of the new States, without fee or reward, and of the single condition that they should not bring all the land into market at once. It was the first time such a proposition had been brough forward for legislation; and he solemnly me tested against the principle that Congress in any right, in equity or justice, to longed to the entire people of the inhabitants of any State or S. After warmly expressing his amendment, Mr. B. said he hope receive the sanction of any const of the Senate."

Mr. Sevier of Arkansas, said i true that presidential candidates for the favor of the West; but t son why the West should refuse when made. Deeming this a beneficial to the new States, he it. Mr. Linn, of Missouri, objectes sition of Mr. Calhoun, as an amen bill in favor of actual settlers (in was offered), because it would be of losing both measures; and said

"He might probably vote for i pendent proposition, but could r stood. He had set out with the to vote against every amendment be proposed, as the bill had once lost by the multiplication of th amendment should be received, t the session would be taken up in and nothing would be done for his He wanted them to know that he utmost, which was but little, to car their wishes, and to secure their 1 in the settlement of the new count anxious to obtain the passage of pre-emption law, which should sec their homes, and not throw the the hands of great capitalists, as ha in the case of the Holland Land Co thus retard the settlement of the V the evasions of previous pre-empti which so much had been said, he b either had no existence in Missouri, grossly exaggerated. In the course fessional duty (Mr. Linn is a physic practice), he had occasion to become acquainted with the people concer these things had been asserted (he the emigrants who had setled in under the pre-emption law of 181 ould say, nothing of the kind had f his observation. They had come the cases, poor, surrounded by all the disadvantages of emigration to a ne he had attended many of them in sic e could truly aver that they were, he best and most upright body of ad ever known.

"Mr. L. said he was a practical m is temperament might be somewhat toked to things which were attainal he near prospect of being obtained, r t those contingent and distant. H orgia, Knight thard, Swift -16.

rs' open distriites, in addition er the deposit nate: but that chemes. They and continued last day of its t a plan for the , the States in n on graduated ears, on condithe expenses of and pay thirtythe sales, to the ected, on princiyed or property and the federal evitably would, 1 ending in conrs and the head d, on detail, beended beyond a rould be strong rithout the comcondition of a ive years, there ments of repreof 1840, 1850. the new States so several new would be strong ures for the exthin the States, Mr. Buchanan proposition as a d:

aid about bribing nev; arguments ed, but they had But speaking h this had been y thing personal rom South Care e most splendid fered. It was to to the people of r reward, and on should not bring once. It was the ad been brought he solemnly pro-nat Congress bal any right, in equity or justice, to give what belonged to the entire people of the Union to the inhabitants of any State or States whatever. After warmly expressing his dissent to the amendment, Mr. B, said he hoped it would not receive the sanction of any considerable portion of the Senate."

Mr. Sevier of Arkansas, said it might be very true that presidential candidates would bid deep for the favor of the West; but that was no reason why the West should refuse a good offer, when made. Deeming this a good one, and beneficial to the new States, he was for taking it, Mr. Linn, of Missouri, objected to the proposition of Mr. Calhoun, as an amendment to the bill in favor of actual settlers (in which form it was offered), because it would be the occasion of losing both measures; and said:

"He might probably vote for it as an independent proposition, but could not as it now stood. He had set out with the determination to vote against every amendment which should be proposed, as the bill had once been nearly lost by the multiplication of them. If this amendment should be received, the residue of the session would be taken up in discussing it, and nothing would be done for his constituents. He wanted them to know that he had done his utmost, which was but little, to carry into effect their wishes, and to secure their best interests in the settlement of the new country. He was anxious to obtain the passage of an equitable pre-emption law, which should secure to them their homes, and not throw the country into the hands of great capitalists, as had been done in the case of the Holland Land Company, and thus retard the settlement of the West. As to the evasions of previous pre-emption laws, of which so much had been said, he believed they either had no existence in Missouri, or had been grossly exaggerated. In the course of his professional duty (Mr. Linn is a physician, in large practice), he had occasion to become extensively acquainted with the people concerning whom these things had been asserted (he referred to the emigrants who had setled in that State, under the pre-emption law of 1814), and he could say, nothing of the kind had fallen under his observation. They had come there, in most cases, poor, surrounded by all the evils and disadvantages of emigration to a new country; he had attended many of them in sickness; and he could truly aver that they were, as a whole, the best and most upright body of people he ad ever known.

"Mr. L. said he was a practical man, though is temperament might be somewhat warm. He coked to things which were attainable, and in he near prospect of being obtained, rather than bill, far advanced in the Senate, and, as he hoped, on the eve of passing. He believed it would secure a great good to his constituents; and he could not consent to risk that bill by accepting the amendment proposed by the senator from South Carolina. If the senator from Arkansas would let this go, he might possibly find that it was a better thing than he could ever get again. He wanted that Congress should so regulate the public lands, and so arrange the terms on which it was disposed of, as to furnish in the West an opportunity for poor men to become rich, and every worthy and industrious man prosperous and happy."

Mr. Calhoun felt himself called upon to rise in defence of his proposition, and in vindication of his own motives in offering it; and did so, in a brief speech, saving:

"When the Senate had entered upon the present discussion, he had had little thought of offering a proposition like this. He had, indeed, always seen that there was a period coming when this government must cede to the new States the possession of their own soil; but he had never thought, till now, that period was so near. What he had seen this session, however, and especially the nature and character of the bill which was now likely to pass, had fully satisfied him that the time had arrived. There were at present eighteen senators from the new States. In four years, there would be six more, which would make twenty-four. All, therefore, must see that, in a very short period, those States would have this question in their own hands. And it had been openly said that they ought not to accept of the present proposition, because they would soon be able to get better terms. He thought, therefore, that, instead of attempting to resist any longer what must eventually happen, it would be better for all concerned that Congress should yield at once to the force of circumstances, and cede the public domain. His objects in this movement were high and solemn objects. He wished to break down the vassalage of the new States. He desired that this government should cease to hold the relation of a landlord. He wished, further, to draw this great fund out of the vortex of the presidential contest, with which it had openly been announced to the Senate there was an avowed design to connect it. He thought the country had been sufficiently agitated, corrupted, and debased, by the influence of that contest; and he wished to take this great engine out of the hands of power. If he were a can-didate for the presidency, he would wish to leave it there. He wished to go further: he sought to remove the immense amount of patronage connected with the management of this domain-a patronage which had corrupted both the old and the new States to an enormous exthose contingent and distant. Here was a tent. He sought to counteract the centralism, which was the great danger of this government. and thereby to preserve the liberties of the people much longer than would otherwise be possible. As to what was to be received for these lands, he cared nothing about it. He would have consented at once to yield the whole, and withdraw altogether the landlordship of the general government over them, had he not believed that it would be most for the benefit of the new States themselves that it should continue somewhat longer. These were the views which had induced him to present the amendment. He offered no gilded pill. He threw in no apple of discord. He was no bidder for popularity. He prescribed to himself a more humble aim, which was simply to do his duty. He sought to counteract the corrupting tendency of the existing course of things. He sought to weaken this government by divesting it of at least a part of the immense patronage it wielded. He held that every great landed estate required a local administration, conducted by persons more intimately acquainted with local wants and interests than the members of a central government could possibly be. If any body asked him for a proof of the truth of his positions, he might point them to the bill now before the Senate. Such were the sentiments, shortly stated, which had governed him on this occasion. He had done his duty, and he must leave the result with God and with the new States."

Mr. Calhoun's proposition was then put to the vote, and almost unanimously rejected, only six senators besides himself voting for it; namely: Messrs. King of Georgia; Moore of Alabama; Morris of Ohio; Robinson of Illinois; Sevier of Arkansas; and White of Tennessee. And thus a third project of distribution (counting Mr. Mercer's motion as one), at this session, had miscarried. But it was not the end. Mr. Chilton Allen, representative from Kentucky, moved a direct distribution of land to the old States, equal in amount to the grants which had been made to the new States. Mr. Abijah, Mann, jr., of New York, strikingly exposed the injustice of this proposition, in a few brief remarks, saying:

"It must be apparent, by this time, that this proposition was neither more nor less than a new edition of the old and exploded idea of distributing the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, attempted to be concealed under rubbish and verbiage, and gilded over by the patriotic idea of applying it to the public education. Its paternity is suspicious, and its hope fallacious and delusive. The preamble to this resolution is illusory and deceptive, addressed to the cupidity of the old States represented on this floor. It recites the grants made by Congress to each of the new States of the public lands in the age gregate, without specifying the motive or consideration upon which they were made. Its argument is, that an equal quantity should be granted to the old States, to make them respectively equal sharers in the public lands. Now. sir (said Mr. M.), nothing could be devised more disingenuous and deceptive. Let us look at it briefly. The idea is, that the old States granted these lands to the new for an implied consideration, and resulting benefit to themselves; that it was a sort of Indian gift, to be refunded with increase. Not so, sir, at all. If Mr. M. understood the motives inducing those grants they were paternal on the part of the old States; proceeding upon that generous and noble liberality which induces a wealthy father to advance and provide for his children. This was the moving consideration, though he (Mr. M.) was aware that the grants in aid of the improvements of the new States and territories were upon consideration of advancing the sale and improvement of the remaining lands in those States held by the United States."

The proposition of Mr. Allen was disposed of by a motion to lie on the table, which prevailedone hundred and fourteen to eighty-one votes; but the end of these propositions was not yet. Another motion to divide surpluses was to be made, and was made in the expiring days of the session, and by way of amendment to the regular fortification bill. Mr. Bell, of Tennessee. moved, on the 25th of February, that a further deposit of all the public monies in the treasury on the first day of January, 1838, above the sum of five millions of dollars, should be "deposited" with the States, according to the terms of the "deposit" bill of the preceding session; and which would have the effect of making a second "deposit" after the completion of the first one. The argument for it was the same which had been used in the first case; the argument against it was the one previously used, with the addition of the objectionable proceeding of springing such a proposition at the end of the session, and as an amendment to a defence appropriation bill, on its passage; to which it was utterly incongruous, and must defeat; as, if it failed to sink the bill in one of the Houses, it must certainly be rejected by the President, who, it was now known, would not be cheated again with the word deposit. It was also opposed as an act of supererogation, as nobody could tell whether there would be any surplus a year hence; and further, it was opposed as an act of usurpation and an encroachment upon the an thority of the ensuing Congress. A new Congress was to be elected, and to a that time; the present Congres in six days: and it was argued t ther right nor decent to anticipat sors, and do what they, fresh from ight not do. Mr. Yell, of Ark principal speaker against it; and

"I voted, Mr. Speaker, agains ment proposed by the gentleme nessee (Mr. Bell), because I am o this bill, if passed, and sanctione sident-and I trust that it neve the countenance of that distinguis illustrious statesman-will at on system demoralizing and corrupt fluences, and tend to the destri sovereignty of the States, and ren pendant suppliants on the genera This measure of distribution, since a hobby-horse for gentlemen to rid sented an anomalous spectacle! belongs to the history of this Co honorable gentlemen, from the Sou were daily found arraying themse every species of unnecessary taxs arowing that they were opposed to tariff systems which would yield a yond the actual wants and demand emment. Such was their language weeks or months ago; and, in pro they struggled hard to excel each c and violence. And now, sir, what tacle we behold? A system of di another and a specious name for a bribery has been started; the hound cry; and the same honorable and pa tlemen now step forward, and, at word of 'put money in thy purse money in thy purse,' vote for the or bribery measure; the effect of wh tail on this country a system of ta oppression, which has had no paralle days of the tea and ten-penny tax-ty measures of discord, which roused colonies to rebellion, and led to the of this mighty republic. But we ar Speaker, that this proposed distribut for momentary duration; that it is n relieve the Treasury of a redundant i that it will speedily be discontinued sir! What evidence have we of the fa evidence do we require to disprove the This scheme was commenced the las it has been introduced at this; and you, Mr. Speaker, it never will be aba long as the high tariff party can wh people with a siren lullaby, and chear of their rights, by dazzling the vision and deluding the fancy by the attribu phistry. Depend upon it, sir, if th system of distribution be not nipped in k will be tray the people into submis species of taxation which no nation

gress was to be elected, and to assemble before s in the ac that time; the present Congress would expire tive or conmade. Its in six days: and it was argued that it was nei-7 should be ther right nor decent to anticipate their succeshem respecsors, and do what they, fresh from the people, nds. Now. might not do. Mr. Yell, of Arkansas, was the evised more look at it principal speaker against it; and said: ates granted "I voted, Mr. Speaker, against the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tend consideraselves; that be refunded nessee (Mr. Bell), because I am of opinion that this bill, if passed, and sanctioned by the Pre-If Mr. M. sident-and I trust that it never will receive hose grants, the countenance of that distinguished man and e old States; illustrious statesman-will at once establish a noble libersystem demoralizing and corrupting in its inr to advance fluences, and tend to the destruction of the nis was the sovereignty of the States, and render them de-Mr. M.) was pendant suppliants on the general government. he improve-This measure of distribution, since it has been ritories were a hobby-horse for gentlemen to ride on, has prethe sale and sented an anomalous spectacle! The time yet belongs to the history of this Congress, when nds in those honorable gentlemen, from the South and West. were daily found arraying themselves against every species of unnecessary taxation, boldly arowing that they were opposed to any and all tariff systems which would yield a revenue bevond the actual wants and demands of the government. Such was their language but a few weeks or months ago; and, in proclaiming it, they struggled hard to excel each other in zeal and violence. And now, sir, what is the spectacle we behold? A system of distributionanother and a specious name for a system of bribery has been started; the hounds are in full ery; and the same honorable and patriotic gentlemen now step forward, and, at the watchword of 'put money in thy purse; aye, put money in thy purse,' vote for the distribution or bribery measure; the effect of which is to entail on this country a system of taxation and oppression, which has had no parallel since the days of the tea and ten-penny tax—two frightful measures of discord, which roused enfeebled colonies to rebellion, and led to the foundation of this mighty republic. But we are told, Mr. Speaker, that this proposed distribution is only for momentary duration; that it is necessary to relieve the Treasury of a redundant income, and that it will speedily be discontinued! Indeed, sir! What evidence have we of the fact? What evidence do we require to disprove the assertion? This scheme was commenced the last session it has been introduced at this; and let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, it never will be abandoned so cheated again ong as the high tariff party can wheedle the dso opposed as people with a siren lullaby, and cheat them out of their rights, by dazzling the vision with gold, and deluding the fancy by the attributes of soody could tell surplus a year phistry. Depend upon it, sir, if this baleful sed as an act of system of distribution be not nipped in the bud, it upon the an-It will be tray the people into submission by a species of taxation which no nation on earth opponents to the "deposit" reminding its friends A new Con-

should endure. Sir, continued Mr. Y., I enter my protest against a system of bargain and corruption, which is to be executed by parties of different political complexions, for the purpose of dividing the spoils which they have plundered from the people. If the sales of the public lands are to be continued for the benefit of the speculators who go to the West in multitudes for the purpose of legally stealing the lands and improvements of the people of the new States, I hope my constituents may know who it is that thus imposes upon them a system of legalized fraud and oppression. If, sir, my constituents are to be sacrificed by the maintenance of a system of persecution, got up and carried on for the purpose of filling the pockets of others to their ruin, I wish them to know who is the author of the enormity. I had hoped, Mr. Speaker, and that hope has not yet been abandoned, that if ever this branch of the government is bent on the destruction of the rights of the people, and a violation of the Constitution, there is yet one ordeal for it to pass where it may be shorn of its baneful aspect. And, Mr. Speaker, I trust in God that, in its passage through that ordeal, it will find a quietus."

Mr. Bell's motion succeeded. The second "deposit" act, by a vote of 112 to 70, was engrafted on the appropriation bill for completing and constructing fortifications; and, thus loaded, that bill went to the Senate. Being referred to the Committee on Finance, that committee directed their chairman, Mr. Wright of New-York, to move to strike it out. The motion was resisted by Mr. Calhoun, Mr. Clay, Mr. Webster, Mr. White of Tennessee, Mr. Ewing of Ohio, Crittenden, Preston, Southard, and Clayton; and supported by Messrs. Wright, Benton, Bedford Brown, Buchanan, Grundy, Niles of Connecticut, Rives, Strange of North Cardina: and being put to the vote, the motion was carried, and the "deposit" clause struck from the bill by a vote of 26 to 19. The yeas and nays were:

"YEAS-Messrs. Benton, Black, Brown, Cuthbert, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hubbard, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Linn, Lyon, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Page, Parker, Rives, Ruggles, Sevier, Strange, Tallmadge, Walker, Wall, Wright-26.

"NAYS-Messrs. Bayard, Calhoun, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Hendricks, Kent, Knight, Moore, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Southard, Spence, Swift, Tomlinson, Webster, White—19.

Being returned to the House, a motion was made to disagree to the Senate's amendment, and argued with great warmth on each side, the s disposed of a prevailedy-one votes; was not yet. es was to be g days of the to the reguof Tennessee, hat a further the treasury 18, above the uld be "depo-, the terms of : session; and king a second the first one. ne which had ument against rith the addiig of springing of the session, appropriation vas utterly inif it failed to s, it must cersident, who, it of the less of a previous appropriation bill for fortifications; and warning them that their perseverance must now have the same effect, and operate a sacrifice of defence to the spirit of distribution: but all in vain. The motion to disagree was carried-110 to 94. The disputed clause then went through all the parliamentary forms known to the occasion. The Senate "insisted" on its amendment: a motion to "recede" was made and lost in the House: a motion to "adhere" was made, and prevailed: then the Senate "adhered": then a committee of "conference" was appointed, and they "disagreed." This being reported to the Houses, the bill fellthe fortification appropriations were lost: and in this direct issue between the plunder of the country, and the defence of the country, defence was beaten. Such was the deplorable progress which the spirit of distribution had made.

CHAPTER CLVII.

MILITARY ACADEMY: ITS RIDING-HOUSE.

The annual appropriation bill for the support of this Academy contained a clause for the purchase of forty horses, "for instruction in light artillery and cavalry exercise;" and proposed ten thousand dollars for the purpose. This purchase was opposed, and the clause stricken out. The bill also contained a clause proposing thirty thousand dollars, in addition to the amount theretofore appropriated, for the erection of a building for "recitation and military exercises," as the clause expressed itself. It was understood to be for the riding-house in bad weather. Mr. McKay, of North Carolina, moved to strike out the clause, upon the ground that military men ought to be inured to hardship, not pampered in effeminacy; and that, as war was carried on in the field, so young officers should be learned to ride in the open air, and on rough ground, and to be afraid of no weather. The clause was stricken out, but restored upon re-consideration; in opposition to which Mr. Smith, of Maine, was the principal speaker; and said:

"I beg leave to call the attention of the committee to the paragraph of this bill proposed to be stricken out. It is an appropriation of thirty thousand dollars, in addition to the amount already appropriated, for the erection of a building within which to exercise and drill the cadets at West Point. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Ingersoll] who reported this bill, and who never engages himself in any subject without making himself entire master of all its parts, will do the committee the justice, I trust, to inform them, when he shall next take the floor, what the amount heretofore appropriated for this same building, in which to exercise the cadets, actually has been; that, if we decide on the propriety of having such a building, we may also know how much we have heretofore taken from the public Treasury for its erection, and to what sum the thirty thousand dollars now proposed will be an addition.

"The honorable gentleman from New-York [Mr. Cambreleng] says this proposed building is to protect the cadets during the inclemency of the winter season, when the snow is from two to six feet deep; and has urged upon the committee the extreme hardship of requiring the cadets to perform their exercises in the open air in such an inclement and cold region as that where West Point is situated. Sir, if the gentleman would extend his inquiries somewhat further North or East, he would find that at points where the winters are still more inclement than at West Point, and where the snow lies for months in succession from two to eight feet deep, a very large and useful and respectable portion of the citizens not only incur the snows and storms of winter by day without workshops or buildings to protect them, but actually pursue the business of months amid such snows and storms, without a roof, or board, or so much as a shingle to cover and protect them by either day or night, and do not dream of murmuring. But, forsooth, the young cadet at West Point, who goes there to acquire an education for himself, who is clothed and fed, and even paid for his time, by the government while acquiring his education, cannot endure the atmosphere of West Point, without a magnificent building to shield him during the few hours in the week while in the act of being drilled, as part of his education! The government is called upon to appropriate thirty thousand dollars, in addition to what has already been appropriated for the purpose, to protect the young cadet, who is preparing to be a soldier, against this temporary and yet most salutary exposure, as I esteem it. Sir, is Congress prepared thus to pamper the effeminacy of these young gentlemen, at such an expense, too, upon the public Treasury? Is it not enough to educate them for nothing, and to pay them for their time while you are educating them, and that you provide for their comfortable subsistence, comfortable lodgings, and all the ordinary comforts, not to say numerous luxuries of life, without attempting to keep them for ever within doors, to be raised like children? I am opposed to it; and I think, whenever the people of this nation shall be made acquainted with the fact, they too will be opposed to it.

"The gentleman from New-York says the exposure of the cadets is very great and that among other duties, they are re form camp duties for three mon It is true, sir, that the law of Co three months' camp duty upon t the same tender spirit of guardian suggested the expediency of hou from the atmosphere while perfor duties and exercises has in some away one third of the law of Con subject; and, instead of three mom as the law requires, the cadets are r rules and regulations of the instit out only two months of the year purpose, sir, every species of cam camp furniture that government n chase is provided for them; and t thus pictured forth here by the ge New-York as a severe hardship, is pered to the cadets as to become a m matter of absolute preference amo The gentleman from New-York wi rules and regulations of the months of July and August, or of September, are selected for this seasons of the year, sir, when it a luxury and privilege for the car their close quarters and confined r form duty out door, and to spend their well-furnished camps. Sir, t and exposures of the cadets are n pared with those of the generality of citizens in the North, in their ordin and yet we are called upon to add to ries-two hundred and fifty dolla ride, splendid camp equipage to I from the dews and damp air of s magnificent buildings to shield th winter exercises. I think it is hi Congress, and for the people of thi reflect seriously upon these matters quire with somewhat of particular character of this institution.

"But the honorable gentleman from an a (Mr. Ingersoll), has volunted the reputation of the West Point A morality in issue at this time, and seloquent description, as pre-eminent irreproachable in this respect.

"Sir, does not the honorable gentl that the history of this institution, v years back only, bears quite different upon this subject? Does not the know the fact -a fact well substantia Register of Debates in your librarya few years since the government into the necessity of purchasing up, pense of ten thousand dollars, a r tavern stand, as the only means of institution from being overwhelmed by the gross immoralities of the cadet the gentleman aware that the whole urged to force and justify the govern this purchase was, that the moral po Academy was unequal to the counter of the neighboring tavern? And are om Pennsyl this bill, and subject withfall its parts, e, I trust, to ake the floor, ropriated for ercise the care decide on ling, we may stofore taken erection, and dollars now a New-York sed building ; inclemency w is from two pon the comequiring the the open air gion as that r, if the genes somewhat find that at more inclemre the snow two to eight d respectable ur the snows ut workshops tually pursue h snows and r so much as em by either murmuring. West Point, tion for himeven paid for acquiring his mosphere of at building to in the week, s part of his alled upon to s, in addition riated for the t, who is preis temporary s I esteem it. o pamper the emen, at such reasury? Is · nothing, and ou are educattheir comfortgings, and all say numerous g to keep them like children? whenever the de acquainted posed to it. k says the exreat and that among other duties, they are required to perform camp duties for three months in the year. It is true, sir, that the law of Congress imposes three months' camp duty upon the cadet. But the same tender spirit of guardianship which has suggested the expediency of housing the cadets from the atmosphere while performing their drill duties and exercises has in some way construed away one third of the law of Congress upon this subject; and, instead of three months' camp duty, as the law requires, the cadets are required, by the rules and regulations of the institution, to camp out only two months of the year; and for this purpose, sir, every species of camp utensils and camp furniture that government money can purchase is provided for them; and this same duty, thus pictured forth here by the gentleman from New-York as a severe hardship, is in fact so tem. pered to the cadets as to become a mere luxurymatter of absolute preference among the cadets. The gentleman from New-York will find, by the rules and regulations of the Academy, the months of July and August, or of August and September, are selected for this camp duty: seasons of the year, sir, when it is absolutely a luxury and privilege for the cadets to leave their close quarters and confined rooms, to perform duty out door, and to spend the nights in their well-furnished camps. Sir, the hardships and exposures of the cadets are nothing compared with those of the generality of our fellowcitizens in the North, in their ordinary pursuits; and yet we are called upon to add to their luxuries-two hundred and fifty dollar horses to ride, splendid camp equipage to protect them from the dews and damp air of summer, and magnificent buildings to shield them in their winter exercises. I think it is high time for Congress, and for the people of this nation, to reflect seriously upon these matters, and to inquire with somewhat of particularity into the character of this institution.

"But the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Ingersoll), has volunteered to put the reputation of the West Point Academy for morality in issue at this time, and sets it out in eloquent description, as pre-eminently pure and irreproachable in this respect. "Sir, does not the honorable gentleman know that the history of this institution, within a few years back only, bears quite different testimony upon this subject? Does not the gentleman know the fact—a fact well substantiated by the Register of Debates in your library—that only a few years since the government was forced into the necessity of purchasing up, at an expense of ten thousand dollars, a neighboring tavern stand, as the only means of saving the institution from being overwhelmed and ruined by the gross immoralities of the cadets? Is not the gentleman aware that the whole argument urged to force and justify the government into this purchase was, that the moral power of the Academy was unequal to the counter influences If the neighboring tavern? And are we to be told, sir, that this institution stands forth in its history pre-eminently pure, and above comparison with the institutions that exist upon the private enterprise and munificence, and thirst for knowledge, that characterize our countrymen? I make these suggestions, and allude to these facts, not voluntarily, and from a wish to create a discussion upon either the merits or demerits of the Academy. made the proposition to strike from this bill the ten thousand dollars proposed to be appropriated for the purchase of horses, I neither inteded nor desired to enter into a discussion of the institution. I have not now spoken, except upon the impulse given by the remarks of the gentlemen from New-York and Pensylvania; and now, instead of going into the facts that do exist in relation to the Academy, I can assure gentlemen that I have but scarcely approached them. I have been willing, and am now willing, to have these facts brought to light at another time, and upon a proper occasion that will occur hereafter, and leave the people of this nation to judge of them dispassionately. A report upon the subject of this institution will be made shortly, as the honorable gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. Hawes) has assured the house. From that report, all will be able to form an opinion as to the policy of the institution in its present shape and under its present discipline. That some grave objections exist to both its shape and discipline, I think all will agree. But I wish not to discuss either at this time. Let us know, however, and let the country know, something about the expensive buildings now in progress at West Point, before we conclude to add this further appropriation of thirty thousand dollars to the expenses of the institution; and, while I am up, I will call the attention of the honorable gentleman who reported this bill to another item in it, which embraces forage for horses among other matters, and I wish him to specify to the committee what proportion of the sum of over thirteen thousand dollars contained in this item, is based upon the supposed supply of forage. We have stricken out the appropriation for purchasing horses, and another part of the bill provides forage for the officers' horses; hence a portion of the item now adverted to should probably be stricken out."

The debate became spirited and discursive, grave and gay, and gave rise to some ridiculous suggestions, as that if it was necessary to protect these young officers from bad weather when exercising on horseback, it ought to be done in no greater degree than young women are protected in like circumstances—parasols for the sun, umbrellas for rain, and pelisses for cold: which it was insisted would be a great economy. On the other hand it was insisted that riding-houses were appurtenant to the military colleges of Europe, and that fine riders were trained in these schools. The $30,000, in addition to previous appropriations for the same purpose, was granted; but has been found to be insufficient; and a late Board of Visitors, following the lead of the Superintendent of the Academy, and powerfully backed by the War Office, at Washington City, has earnestly recommended a further additional appropriation of $20,000, still further to improve the riding-house; on the ground that, "the room now used for the purpose is extremely dangerous to the lives and limbs of the cadets." This further accommodation is deemed indispensable to the proper teaching of the art of "equitation:" that is to say, to the art of riding on the back of a horse; and the Visitors recommend this accommodation to Congress, in the following pathetic terms: "The attention of the committee has been drawn to the consideration of the expediency of erecting a new building for cavalry exercise. We are aware that the subject has been before Congress, upon the recommendation of former boards of Visitors, and we cannot add to the force of the arguments made use of by them, in favor of the measure. We would regret to be compelled to believe that there is a greater indifference to the safety of human life and limb in this country than in most others. It is enough for us to say that, in the opinion of the Superintendent, the course of equitation cannot be properly taught without it, 'and that the room now used for the purpose is extremely dangerous to the lives and limbs of the cadets.' In this opinion, we entirely concur. The appropriation required for the erection of such a building will amount to some $20,000. We can hardly excuse ourselves, if we neglect to bring this subject, so far as we are able to do so, most emphatically to the notice of those who have the power, and, we doubt not, the disposition also, to remove the evil."

CHAPTER CLVIII.

SALT TAX: MR. BENTON'S FOURTH SPEECH AGAINST IT.

The amount which this tax brings into the treasury is about 600,000 dollars, and that upon an article costing about 650,000 dollars; and one-half of the tax received goes to the fishing pounties and allowances founded upon it. So that what upon the record is a tax of about 100 per centum, is in the reality a tax of 200 per centum; and that upon an article of prime necessity and universal use, while we have articles of luxury and superfluity-wines, silks-either free of tax, or nominally taxed at some ten or twenty per centum. The bare statement of the case is revolting and mortifying; but it is only by looking into the detail of the tax-its amount upon different varieties of salt-its effect upon the trade and sale of the article-upon its importation and use-and the consequences upon the agriculture of the country, for want of adequate supplies of salt-that the weight of the tax, and the disastrous effects of its imposition, can be ascertained. To enable the Senate to judge of these effects and consequences, and to render my remarks more intelligible. I will read a table of the importation of salt for the year 1835—the last that has been made up-and which is known to be a fair index to the annual importations for many years past, With the number of bushels, and the name of the country from which the importations come, will be given the value of each parcel at the place it was obtained, and the original cost per bushel.

Statement of the quantity of Salt imported into the United States during the year 1835, with the value and cost thereof, per bushel, at the place from which it was imported:

1 · · · ·
	No. of bushels.		Cost p. bus.
Countries.	- 10000	0570
Sweden and Norway,	8,556	$572	6 34
Swedish West Indies.	, 6,850	708	10 14
Danish West Indies,	2,351	386	16
Dutch West Indies,	141,566	12,967	9
England,	2,613,077	412,507	16 1-2
Ireland,	51,954	$12,\!276$
Gibraltar,	17,832	1,385	7 3-4
Malta	1,500	118	7 34
British West Indies,	959,786	98,497	10
British Am. Colonies	, 138,593	30,374
France on Mediterra	32,648	2,155	6 2-3
nean,	360,140	16,760	4 34
Spain on Atlantic,		5,443	5 1-3
Spain on Mediterran.	780,000	55.087	7
Portugal,		751	9 1-10
Cape de Verd Island	36,742	1,580	413
Italy,	5,786	156	2 23
Sicily,	7,888	255	37-8
Trieste,	9,377		10 1-10
Turkey,			10 11
Colombia,	17,162 $250$
Brazil,		41
Argentine Republic.	402		10 24
Africa,	5,733	010	10 24
g	5,735,364	655,000

Mr. B. would remark that salt, t in ballast, the greatest quantity car land, where we had the largest tra its importation, with a tax upon it, incidental to trade, this greatest qu from the place where it cost mos far inferior kind. The salt from nearly one half of the whole quanti its cost was about sixteen cents a its quality was so inferior that ne United States, nor in Great Britain used for curing provisions, fish, bu thing that required long keeping, to southern heats. This was the sal called Liverpool. It was made by ar and never was, and never can be ma the mere agitation of the boiling p separation of the bittern, and other misonous ingredients with which all and even mineral salt, is more or less ted. The other half of the importe far less than the English salt, and superior to it; so far superior that t alt will not even serve for a substi important business of curing fish, for long keeping, or southern expos salt was made by the action of the latitudes approaching, and under th We begin to obtain it in the West 1 in large quantity on Turk's Island; from all the islands and coasts, under track, from the Gulf of Mexico to the The Cape de Verd Islands, the At Mediterranean coasts of Spain and Po-Mediterranean coast of France, the t of Italy, the islands in the Mediterra masts of the Adriatic, the Archipe to the Black Sea, all produce it and s. The table which has been read sl the original cost of this salt—the pu trongest in the world—is about nin ents a bushel in the Gulf of Mexico nd seven cents on the coasts of Fran nd Portugal; three and four cents in he Adriatic; and less than three cents et all this salt bears one uniform duty I twenty cents a bushel, and is now ents a bushel; so that while the tax nglish salt is a little upwards of fifty n the value, the same tax on all the or from one hundred to two hundred, a undred and near four hundred per cer of about 100 of 200 per of prime nehave articles silks-either some ten or ement of the out it is only the tax-its salt-its efarticle-upon consequences ry, for want it the weight cts of its imo enable the d consequen re intelligible tation of salt as been made fair index to y years past. 1 the name of rtations come, el at the place ost per bushel.

Salt imported he year 1835 per bushel, at

rted: Cost $572 634 708 10 14 386 16 12,967 16 1-2 12,507 12,276 1,385 118 10 38,497 30,374 2,155 16,760 5,443 55.087 9 1-10 751 1,580 156 255 10 1-10 984 1,227 68 41 10 24 615 55,000

Mr. B. would remark that salt, being brought in ballast, the greatest quantity came from England, where we had the largest trade; and that its importation, with a tax upon it, being merely incidental to trade, this greatest quantity came from the place where it cost most, and was of far inferior kind. The salt from England was nearly one half of the whole quantity imported; its cost was about sixteen cents a bushel; and its quality was so inferior that neither in the United States, nor in Great Britain, could it be used for curing provisions, fish, butter, or any thing that required long keeping, or exposure to southern heats. This was the salt commonly called Liverpool. It was made by artificial heat, and never was, and never can be made pure. as the mere agitation of the boiling prevents the separation of the bittern, and other foreign and poisonous ingredients with which all salt water, and even mineral salt, is more or less impregnated. The other half of the imported salt costs far less than the English salt, and is infinitely superior to it; so far superior that the English alt will not even serve for a substitute in the important business of curing fish, and flesh, for long keeping, or southern exposure. This alt was made by the action of the sun in the latitudes approaching, and under the tropics. We begin to obtain it in the West Indies, and in large quantity on Turk's Island; and get it from all the islands and coasts, under the sun's track, from the Gulf of Mexico to the Black Sea. The Cape de Verd Islands, the Atlantic and Mediterranean coasts of Spain and Portugal, the Mediterranean coast of France, the two coasts of Italy, the islands in the Mediterranean, the masts of the Adriatic, the Archipelago, up to the Black Sea, all produce it and send it to The table which has been read shows that the original cost of this salt—the purest and trongest in the world—is about nine or ten ents a bushel in the Gulf of Mexico; five, six nd seven cents on the coasts of France, Spain nd Portugal; three and four cents in Italy and he Adriatic; and less than three cents in Sicily. let all this salt bears one uniform duty; it was twenty cents a bushel, and is now near ten ents a bushel; so that while the tax on thenglish salt is a little upwards of fifty per cent. the value, the same tax on all the other salt from one hundred to two hundred, and three sun-made salt is chiefly used in the Great West, in curing provisions; the Liverpool is chiefly used on the Atlantic coasts; and thus the peo ple in different sections of the Union pay different degrees of tax upon the same articles, and that which costs least is taxed most. A tax ranging to some hundred per cent. is in itself an enormous tax; and thus the duty collected by the federal government from all the consumers of the sun-made salt, is in itself excessive; amounting, in many instances, to double, treble, or even quadruple the original cost of the article. This is an enormity of taxation which strikes the mind at the first blush; but, it is only the beginning of the enormity, the extent of which is only discoverable in tracing its effects to all their diversified and injurious consequences. In the first place, it checks and prevents the importation of the salt. Coming as ballast, and not as an article of commerce on which profit is to be made, the shipper cannot bring it except he is supplied with money to pay the duty, or surrenders it into the hands of salt dealers, on landing, to go his security for the payment of the duty. Thus, the importation of the article is itself checked; and this check operates with the greatest force in all cases where the original price of the salt was least; and, therefore, where it operates most injuriously to the country. In all such cases the tax operates as a prohibition to use salt as ballast, and checks its importation from all the places of its production nearest the sun's track, from the Gulf of Mexico to Constantinople. In the next place, the imposition of the tax throws the salt into the hands of an intermediate set of dealers in the seaports, who either advance the duty, or go security for it, and who thus become possessed of nearly all the salt which is imported. A few persons employed in this business engross the salt, and fix the price for all in the market; and fix it higher or lower, not according to the cost of the article, but according to the necessities of the country, and the quantity on hand, and the season of the year. The prices at which they fix it are known to all purchasers, and may be seen in all prices-current. It is generally, in the case of alum salt, four, five, ten, or fifteen times as much as it cost. It is generally forty, or fifty, or sixty cents a bushel, and nearly the same price for all sorts, without any reference to the midred and near four hundred per cent. The original cost, whether it cost three cents, or five cents, or ten cents, or fifteen cents a bushel. About one uniform price is put on the whole, and the purchaser has to submit to the imposition. This results from the effect of the tax, throwing the article, which is nothing but ballast, into the hands of salt dealers. The importer does not bring more money than the salt is worth, to pay the duty; he does not come prepared to pay a heavy duty on his ballast; he has to depend upon raising the money for paying the duty after he arrives in the United States; and this throws him into the hands of the salt dealer, and subjects the country purchaser to all the fair charges attending this change of hands, and this establishment of an intermediate dealer, who must have his profits; and also to all the additional exactions which he may choose to make. This should not be. There should be no costs, nor charges, nor intermediate profits, on such an article as salt. It comes as ballast; as ballast it should be handed out-should be handed from the ship to the steamboat—should escape port charges, and intermediate profits-and this would be the case, if the duty was abolished. Thus the charges, costs, profits, and exactions, in consequence of the tax, are greater than the tax itself! But this is not all—a further injury, resulting from the tax, is yet to be inflicted upon the consumer. It is well known that the measured bushel of alum salt, and all sun-made salt is alum saltit is well known that a bushel of this salt weighs about eighty-four pounds; yet the custom-house bushel goes by weight, and not by measure, and fifty-six pounds is there the bushel. Thus the consumer, in consequence of having the salt sent through the custom-house is shifted from the measured to the weighed bushel, and loses twenty-eight pounds by the operation! but this is not his whole loss; the intermediate salt dealer deducts six pounds more, and gives fifty pounds for the bushel; and thus this taxed and custom-housed article, after paying some hundred per cent. to the government and several hundred per cent. more to the regraters, is worked into a loss of thirty-four pounds on every bushel! All these losses and impositions would vanish, if salt was freed from the necessity of passing the custom-houses; and to do that, it must be freed in toto from taxation. The slightest duty would operate nearly the whole misthief, for it would throw the article into the shucks, &c. In England it is ascertained hands of regraters, and would substitute the weighed for the measured bushel.

Such are the direct injuries of the salt tax: a tax enormous in itself, disproportionate in its application to the same article in different parts of the Union, and bearing hardest upon that kind which is cheapest, best, and most indispensable. The levy to the government is enormous, $650,000 per annum upon an article only worth about $600,000; but what the government receives is a trifle, compared to what is exacted by the regrater,-what is lost in the difference between the weighed and the measured bushel,-and the loss which the farmer sustains for want of adequate supplies of salt for his stock, and their food. Assuming the government tax to be ten cents a bushel, the average cost of alum salt to be seven cents, and the regrater's price to be fifty cents, and it is clear that he receives upwards of three times as much as the government does; and that the tribute to those regraters is near two millions of dollars per annum. Assuming again that thirty-four pounds in the bushel are lost to the consumer in the substitution of the weighed for the measured bushel, and here is another loss amounting to nearly three-eighths of the value of the salt; that is to say, to about $250,000 on an importation of $650,000 worth.

These detailed views of the operation and effects of the salt duty, continued Mr. B., place the burdens of that tax in the most odious and revolting light; but the picture is not yet complete; two other features are to be introduced into it, each of which, separately, and still more both put together, go far to double its enormity and to carry the iniquity of such a tax up to the very verge of criminality and sinfulness. The first of these features is, in the loss which the farmers sustain for want of adequate supplied of salt for their stock; and the second, from the fact that the duty is a one-sided tax, being imposed only on some sections of the Union, and not at all upon another section of the Union. A few details will verify these additional features. First, as to the loss which the country sustains for want of adequate supplied of salt. Every practical man knows that ever description of stock requires salt-hogs, horse cattle, sheep; and that all the prepared fool of cattle requires it also-hay, fodder, clore experience, that sheep require, pound a week, which is twenty. or half a custom-house bushel, per require a bushel and a half per a cattle a bushel; draught horses, cattle, a bushel; colts, and young three pecks to a bushel each, per it was computed in England, befo tion of the salt-tax there, that the English farmers, for want of adeq of salt, was injured to an annual ar yand the product of the tax.

Dr. Young, before a committee ish House of Commons, and upor fied to his belief that the use of tax would benefit the agricultural the increased value of their stoc the annual amount of three millie mear fifteen millions of dollars. S injury of the salt-tax in England cultural interest in the single artic What the injury might be to th nl interest in the United States o article, on account of the stinted occasioned by the tax, might be v ceived from general observation established facts. In the first pl known to every body that stock in o was stinted for salt; that neither h cattle, or sheep, received any thing quantity found by experience to be in England; and, as for their food, th no salt was put upon it in the Unit while in England, ten or fifteen pour to the ton of hay, clover, &c. was used it. Taking a single branch of the st United States, that of sheep, and mo eridence of the deplorable deficiency of not be produced. The sheep in the Un were computed by the wool-growers, their petitions to Congress, at twenty this number, at half a bushel each, quire about ten millions of bushels; hole supply of salt in the United St ome-made and imported, barely ex millions; so that, if the sheep receive uate supply, there would not remain or any other purpose! Of course, id not receive an adequate supply, no he fourth part of what was necessary fall other stock. To give an opinic otal loss to the agricultural interes

abstitute the

the salt tax; rtionate in its lifferent parts st upon that 1 most indisment is enorn article only t the governed to what is is lost in the and the meathe farmer plies of salt for ning the govshel, the avercents, and the and it is clear times as much at the tribute lions of dollars nat thirty-four the consumer d for the mear loss amountne value of the $250,000 on an > operation and d Mr. B., place nost odious and is not yet combe introduced , and still more, le its enormity, a tax up to the infulness. The loss which the equate supplies ne second, from ided tax, being of the Union section of the rify these addie loss which the equate supplies nows that ever t-hogs, horses e prepared food , fodder, clove experience, that sheep require, each, half a pound a week, which is twenty-eight pounds, or half a custom-house bushel, per annum; cows require a bushel and a half per annum; young cattle a bushel; draught horses, and draught cattle, a bushel; colts, and young cattle, from three pecks to a bushel each, per annum; and it was computed in England, before the abolition of the salt-tax there, that the stock of the English farmers, for want of adequate supplies of salt, was injured to an annual amount far beyond the product of the tax.

ascertained, by

Dr. Young, before a committee of the British House of Commons, and upon oath, testified to his belief that the use of salt free of tax would benefit the agricultural interest, in the increased value of their stock alone, to the annual amount of three millions sterling, near fifteen millions of dollars. Such was the injury of the salt-tax in England to the agricultural interest in the single article of stock. What the injury might be to the agricultural interest in the United States on the same article, on account of the stinted use of salt occasioned by the tax, might be vaguely concived from general observation and a few established facts. In the first place, it was known to every body that stock in our country was stinted for salt; that neither hogs, horses, cattle, or sheep, received any thing near the quantity found by experience to be necessary in England; and, as for their food, that little or no salt was put upon it in the United States; while in England, ten or fifteen pounds of salt to the ton of hay, clover, &c. was used in curing it. Taking a single branch of the stock of the United States, that of sheep, and more decided widence of the deplorable deficiency of salt can-not be produced. The sheep in the United States were computed by the wool-growers, in 1832, in their petitions to Congress, at twenty millions; his number, at half a bushel each, would require about ten millions of bushels; now the hole supply of salt in the United States, both ome-made and imported, barely exceeds ten nillions; so that, if the sheep received an ademate supply, there would not remain a pound or any other purpose! Of course, the sheep id not receive an adequate supply, nor perhaps he fourth part of what was necessary; and so fall other stock. To give an opinion of the otal loss to the agricultural interest in the United States for want of the free use of this article, would require the minute, comprehensive, sagacious, and peculiar turn of mind of Dr. Young; but it may be sufficient for the argument, and for all practical purposes, to assume that our loss, in proportion to the number of our stock, is greater than that of the English farmers, and amounts to fifteen or twenty times the value of the tax itself!

CHAPTER CLIX.

EXPUNGING RESOLUTION—PREPARATION FOR DECISION.

It was now the last session of the last term of the presidency of General Jackson, and the work of the American Senate doing justice to itself by undoing the wrong which it had done to itself in its condemnation of the President, was at hand. The appeal to the people had produced its full effect; and, in less time than had been expected. Confident from the beginning in the verdict of the people, the author of the movement had not counted upon its delivery until several years-probably until after the retirement of Generel Jackson, and until the subsidence of the passions which usually pursue a public man while he remains on the stage of action. Contrary to all expectation, the public mind was made up in less than three years, and before the termination of that second administration which was half run when the sentence of condemnation was passed. At the commencement of this session, 1836-'37, the public voice had come in, and in an imperative form. A majority of the States had acted decisively on the subject-some superseding their senators at the end of their terms who had given the obnoxious vote, and replacing them by those who would expunge it; others sending legislative instructions to their senators, which carried along with them, in the democratic States, the obligation of obedience or resignation; and of which it was known there were enough to obey to accomplish the desired expurgation. Great was the number superseded, or forced to resign. The great leaders, Mr. Clay, Mr. Webster, Mr. Calhoun, easily maintained themselves in their respective States; but the mortality fell heavily upon their followers, and left them in a helpless minority. The time had come for action; and on the second day after the meeting of the Senate, Mr. Benton gave notice of his intention to bring in at an early period the unwelcome resolution, and to press it to a decision. Heretofore he had introduced it without any view to action, but merely for an occasion for a speech, to go to the people; but the opposition, exulting in their strength, would of themselves call it up, against the wishes of the mover, to receive the rejection which they were able to give it. Now these dispositions were reversed; the mover was for decision—they for staving it off. On the 26th day of December—the third anniversary of the day on which Mr. Clay had moved the condemnatory resolution-Mr. Benton laid upon the table the resolve to expunge it-followed by his third and last speech on the subject. The following is the resolution; the speech constitutes the next chapter:

Resolution to expunge from the Journal the Resolution of the Senate of March 28, 1834, in relation to President Jackson and the Removal of the Deposits.

"Whereas, on the 26th day of December, in the year 1833, the following resolve was moved in the Senate:

"'Resolved, That, by dismissing the late Secretary of the Treasury, because he would not, contrary to his own sense of duty, remove the money of the United States in deposit with the Bank of the United States and its branches, in conformity with the President's opinion, and by appointing his successor to effect such removal, which has been done, the President has assumed the exercise of a power over the Treasury of the United States, not granted him by the Constitution and laws, and dangerous to the liberties of the people.'

"Which proposed resolve was altered and
"Which proposed resolve was altered and changed by the mover thereof, on the 28th day of March, in the year 1834, so as to read as

"" Resolved, That, in taking upon himself the follows: responsibility of removing the deposit of the public money from the Bank of the United States, the President of the United States has assumed the exercise of a power over the Treasury of the United States not granted to him by the constitution and laws, and dangerous to the liberties of the people.'

"Which resolve, so changed and modified by the mover thereof, on the same day and year last mentioned, was further altered, so as to read "Resolved, That the President, in the late cused, who could not know against what in these words:

executive proceedings in relation to the revenue has assumed upon himself authority and power not conferred by the constitution and laws, but in derogation of both: "In which last mentioned form the said resolve, on the same day and year last mentioned was adopted by the Senate, and became the act and judgment of that body, and, as such, now remains upon the journal thereof: "And whereas the said resolve was not warranted by the constitution, and was irregularly and illegally adopted by the Senate, in violation of the rights of defence which belong to every citizen, and in subversion of the fundamental principles of law and justice; because President Jackson was thereby adjudged and pronounced to be guilty of an impeachable offence, and a stigma placed upon him as a violator of his oath of office, and of the laws and constitution which he was sworn to preserve, protect, and defend without going through the forms of an impeachment, and without allowing to him the benefits of a trial, or the means of defence: "And whereas the said resolve, in all its various shapes and forms, was unfounded and erroneous in point of fact, and therefore unjust and unrighteous, as well as irregular and unanthorized by the constitution; because the said President Jackson neither in the act of dismissing Mr. Duane, nor in the appointment of Mr. Taney, as specified in the first form of the resolve; nor in taking upon himself the responsi bility of removing the deposits, as specified in the second form of the same resolve; nor in any act which was then, or can now, be specified under the vague and ambiguous terms of the general denunciation contained in the third and last form of the resolve, did do or commitany act in violation or in derogation of the laws and constitution; or dangerous to the liberties of the people: "And whereas the said resolve, as adopted, was uncertain and ambiguous, containing nothing but a loose and floating charge for derogating from the laws and constitution, and assuming ungranted power and authority in the late executive proceed ings in relation to the public revenue; without specifying what part of the executive proceed ings, or what part of the public revenue was in tended to be referred to; or what parts of the laws and constitution were supposed to have been infringed; or in what part of the Union or at what period of his administration, the late proceedings were supposed to have take place; thereby putting each senator at liber to vote in favor of the resolve upon a separate and secret reason of his own, and leaving the ground of the Senate's judgment to be guess at by the public, and to be differently and versely interpreted by individual senators, as cording to the private and particular unit standing of each: contrary to all the ends justice, and to all the forms of legal or judice proceeding; to the great prejudice of the defend himself; and to the loss of responsibility, by shielding senators fr accountability for making up a judgr. grounds which the public cannot k which, if known, might prove to be in in law, or unfounded in fact :

"And whereas the specification con the first and second forms of the resol been objected to in debate, and show insufficient to sustain the charges the adduced to support, and it being well that no majority could be obtained to the said specifications, and the same hav actually withdrawn by the mover in th the whole Senate, in consequence of su tion and belief, and before any vote take upon; the said specifications could n wards be admitted by any rule of parlia practice, or by any principle of legal imi secret intendment, or mental reservation main and continue a part of the writ public resolve from which they were th drawn; and, if they could be so admitted would not be sufficient to sustain the therein contained:

"And whereas the Senate being the c tional tribunal for the trial of the Pr when charged by the House of Represen with offences against the laws and the co tion, the adoption of the said resolve, before impeachment preferred by the House, breach of the privileges of the House; ne ranted by the constitution; a subvers justice; a prejudication of a question might legally come before the Senate; disqualification of that body to perform i stitutional duty with fairness and impar if the President should thereafter be reg impeached by the House of Representativ the same offence:

"And whereas the temperate, respectful argumentative defence and protest of the dent against the aforesaid proceeding of Senate was rejected and repulsed by that and was voted to be a breach of its privi and was not permitted to be entered of journal or printed among its documents; all memorials, petitions, resolves, and re strances against the President, however vi or unfounded, and calculated to inflame people against him, were duly and honor eceived, encomiastically commented upo peeches, read at the table, ordered to be pr. with the long list of names attached, referrable Finance Committee for consideration, way among the public archives, and now titute a part of the public documents of enate, to be handed down to the latest

arity:
"And whereas the said resolve was in aced, debated, and adopted, at a time and ur reumstances which had the effect of co-ope g with the Bank of the United States in gricidal attempt which that institution en making to produce a panic and pressur revenue nd power laws, but

e said reentioned. ie the act uch, now

t warrantilarly and olation of to every idamental President conounced ice, and a of his oath ion which id defend impeachie benefits

> in all its inded and ore unjust and unaure the said of dismissent of Mr. of the re-3 responsipecified in nor in any e specified ms of the e third and ommit any e laws and rties of the > > lopted, was 10thing bu ng from the ungrante ve proceed e; withou ve proceed nue was in arts of th ed to have the Union ation, the have take · at libert a separat leaving th be guesse itly and di enators, M ular under the ends l or judici of the ist what defend himself; and to the loss of senatorial responsibility, by shielding senators from public accountability for making up a judgment upon grounds which the public cannot know, and which, if known, might prove to be insufficient in law, or unfounded in fact:

"And whereas the specification contained in the first and second forms of the resolve having been objected to in debate, and shown to be insufficient to sustain the charges they were adduced to support, and it being well believed that no majority could be obtained to vote for the said specifications, and the same having been actually withdrawn by the mover in the face of the whole Senate, in consequence of such objection and belief, and before any vote taken thereupon; the said specifications could not afterwards be admitted by any rule of parliamentary practice, or by any principle of legal implication, secret intendment, or mental reservation, to remain and continue a part of the written and public resolve from which they were thus withdrawn; and, if they could be so admitted, they would not be sufficient to sustain the charges therein contained:

"And whereas the Senate being the constitutional tribunal for the trial of the President. when charged by the House of Representatives with offences against the laws and the constitution, the adoption of the said resolve, before any impeachment preferred by the House, was a breach of the privileges of the House; not warranted by the constitution; a subversion of justice; a prejudication of a question which might legally come before the Senate; and a disqualification of that body to perform its constitutional duty with fairness and impartiality, if the President should thereafter be regularly impeached by the House of Representatives for the same offence:

"And whereas the temperate, respectful, and argumentative defence and protest of the President against the aforesaid proceeding of the Senate was rejected and repulsed by that body, and was voted to be a breach of its privileges, and was not permitted to be entered on its journal or printed among its documents; while all memorials, petitions, resolves, and remonstrances against the President, however violent or unfounded, and calculated to inflame the cople against him, were duly and honorably eccived, encomiastically commented upon in peeches, read at the table, ordered to be printed ith the long list of names attached, referred to he Finance Committee for consideration, filed way among the public archives, and now contitute a part of the public documents of the enate, to be handed down to the latest pos-

"And whereas the said resolve was introuced, debated, and adopted, at a time and under reumstances which had the effect of co-operatg with the Bank of the United States in the rricidal attempt which that institution was the country; to destroy the confidence of the people in President Jackson; to paralyze his administration; to govern the elections; to bankrupt the State banks; ruin their currency; fill the whole Union with terror and distress; and thereby to extort from the safferings and the alarms of the people, the restoration of the deposits and the renewal of its charter:

"And whereas the said resolve is of evil example and dangerous precedent, and should never have been received, debated, or adopted by the Senate, or admitted to entry upon its journal: Wherefore,

"Resolved, That the said resolve be expunged from the journal; and, for that purpose, that the Secretary of the Senate, at such time as the Senate may appoint, shall bring the manuscript journal of the session 1833 '34 into the Senate, and, in the presence of the Senate, draw black lines round the said resolve, and write across the face thereof, in strong letters, the following words: Expunged by order of the Senate, this - day -, in the year of our Lord 1837."

CHAPTER CLX.

EXPUNGING RESOLUTION.-MR. BENTON'S THIRD SPEECH.

Mr. President: It is now near three years since the resolve was adopted by the Senate, which it is my present motion to expunge from the journal. At the moment that this resolve was adopted, I gave notice of my intention to move to expunge it; and then expressed my confident belief that the motion would eventually prevail. That expression of confidence was not an ebullition of vanity, or a presumptuous calculation, intended to accelerate the event it affected to foretell. It was not a vain boast, or an idle assumption, but was the result of a deep conviction of the injustice done President Jackson, and a thorough reliance upon the justice of the American people. I felt that the President had been wronged; and my heart told me that this wrong would be redressed! The event proves that I was not mistaken. The question of expunging this resolution has been carried to the people, and their decision has been had upon it. They decide in favor of the expurgation; and their decision has been both made and manifested, and communicated to us on making to produce a panic and pressure in in a great variety of ways. A great number of States have expressly instructed their senators to vote for this expurgation. A very great majority of the States have elected senators and representatives to Congress, upon the express ground of favoring this expurgation. The Bank of the United States, which took the initiative in the accusation against the President, and furnished the material, and worked the machinery which was used against him, and which was then so powerful on this floor, has become more and more odious to the public mind, and musters now but a slender phalanx of friends in the two Houses of Congress. The late Presidential election furnishes additional evidence of public sentiment. The candidate who was the friend of President Jackson, the supporter of his administration, and the avowed advocate for the expurgation, has received a large majority of the suffrages of the whole Union, and that after an express declaration of his sentiments on this precise point. The evidence of the public will, exhibited in all these forms, is too manifest to be mistaken, too explicit to require illustration, and too imperative to be disregarded. Omitting details and specific enumeration of proofs, I refer to our own files for the instructions to expunge,—to the complexion of the two Houses for the temper of the people, -to the denationalized condition of the Bank of the United States for the fate of the imperious accuser,-and to the issue of the Presidential election for the answer of the Union. All these are pregnant proofs of the public will, and the last pre-eminently so: because, both the question of the expurgation, and the form of the process, was directly put in issue upon it. A representative of the people from the State of Kentucky formally interrogated a prominent candidate for the Presidency on these points, and required from him a public answer for the information of the public mind. The answer was given, and published, and read by all the voters before the election; and I deem it right to refer to that answer in this place, not only as evidence of the points put in issue, but also for the purpose of doing more ample justice to President Jackson by incorporating into the legislative history of this case, the high and honorable testimony in his favor of the eminent citizen, Mr. Van Buren, who has just been exalted to the lofty honors of the American Presidency:

"Your last question seeks to know 'my' opinion as to the constitutional power of the Senate or House of Representatives to expunge or obliterate from the journals the proceedings of a previous session.

"You will, I am sure, be satisfied upon further consideration, that there are but few questions of a political character less connected with the duties of the office of President of the United States, or that might not with equal propriety be put by an elector to a candidate for that station, than this. With the journals of neither house of Congress can he properly have any thing to do. But, as your question has doubt. less been induced by the pendency of Col. Benton's resolutions, to expunge from the journals of the Senate certain other resolutions touching the official conduct of President Jackson, I prefer to say, that I regarded the passage of Col. Benton's preamble and resolutions to be an act of justice to a faithful and greatly injured public servant, not only constitutional in itself, but imperiously demanded by a proper respect for the well known will of the people."

I do not propose, sir, to draw violent, unwarranted, or strained inferences. I do not assume to say that the question of this expurgation was a leading, or a controlling point in the issue of this election. I do not assume to say, or insinuate, that every individual, and every voter, delivered his suffrage with reference to this question. Doubtless there were many exceptions. Still, the triumphant election of the candidate who had expressed himself in the terms just quoted, and who was, besides, the personal and political friend of President Jackson, and the avowed approver of his administration, must be admitted to a place among the proofs in this case, and ranked among the high concurring evidences of the public sentiment in favor of the motion which I make.

Assuming, then, that we have ascertained the will of the people on this great question, the inquiry presents itself, how far the expresion of that will ought to be conclusive of our action here? I hold that it ought to be binding and obligatory upon us! and that, not only upon the principles of representative government which requires obedience to the known will of the people, but also in conformity to the principles upon which the proceeding against President Jackson was conducted when the sentent against him was adopted. Then every this was done with especial reference to the will the people! Their impulsion was assumed to the sole motive to action; and to them the ultimate verdict was express whole machinery of alarm an engine of political and moneye in motion, and worked for ma cite the people against the Pre up meetings, memorials, per committees, and distress de him; and each symptom of r was hailed as an evidence o quoted here as proof that the the condemnation of the Pres legislative assemblies, and men assemblies, were then produced of public opinion, but the petider age, the remonstrances o and the results of the most inc tions, were ostentatiously parad as the evidence of the sovereig stituents. Thus, sir, the public thing while that voice, partially political and pecuniary mach verse to the President. Then was the shrine at which all wo when that will is regularly, sol and almost universally express ballot boxes, at the various ele out to be in favor of the Presid one can disregard it, nor othe than as the solemn verdict of th ultimate tribunal upon an issue fully argued, and duly submit-As such verdict, I receive it. A verdict of the sovereign people am content. I do not mean to nor to recommence the argumen work to others, if any others ch it. For myself, I am content; with further argument, I shall ca and ask to have execution done happy journal, which the verdic freemen finds guilty of bearing o true, illegal, and unconstitution condemnation against the appr of the Republic.

But, while declining to reopen of this question, and refusing to the ground already traversed, the and a different task to perform; approaching termination of Presi administration makes peculiarly time, and which it is my privileg my duty, to execute, as being the

Vol. I.—46

to know 'my'
l power of the ives to expunge
the proceedings

isfied upon fure but few ques connected with ent of the United equal propriety ate for that starnals of neither perly have any stion has doubtncy of Col. Benom the journals lutions touching Jackson, I prepassage of Col ons to be an act tly injured public nal in itself, but roper respect for ple."

raw violent, unces. I do not asof this expurgaalling point in the ot assume to say, ridual, and every with reference to re were many exnt election of the imself in the terms sides, the personal lent Jackson, and ministration, must the proofs in this gh concurring evint in favor of the have ascertained is great question, ow far the exprese conclusive of our bught to be binding that, not only upon ative government the known will dormity to the princeding against Prol when the sentent Then every thin rence to the will on was assumed any and to them the nltimate verdict was expressly referred. The whole machinery of alarm and pressure-every engine of political and moneyed power-was put in motion, and worked for many months, to excite the people against the President; and to stir up meetings, memorials, petitions, travelling committees, and distress deputations against him; and each symptom of popular discontent was hailed as an evidence of public will, and quoted here as proof that the people demanded the condemnation of the President. Not only legislative assemblies, and memorials from large assemblies, were then produced here as evidence of public opinion, but the petitions of boys under age, the remonstrances of a few signers, and the results of the most inconsiderable elections, were ostentatiously paraded and magnified, as the evidence of the sovereign will of our constituents. Thus, sir, the public voice was every thing while that voice, partially obtained through political and pecuniary machinations, was adverse to the President. Then the popular will was the shrine at which all worshipped. Now, when that will is regularly, soberly, repeatedly, and almost universally expressed through the ballot boxes, at the various elections, and turns out to be in favor of the President, certainly no one can disregard it, nor otherwise look at it than as the solemn verdict of the competent and ultimate tribunal upon an issue fairly made up, fully argued, and duly submitted for decision. As such verdict, I receive it. As the deliberate verdict of the sovereign people, I bow to it. I am content. I do not mean to reopen the case, nor to recommence the argument. I leave that work to others, if any others choose to perform it. For myself, I am content; and, dispensing with further argument, I shall call for judgment, and ask to have execution done, upon that unhappy journal, which the verdict of millions of freemen finds guilty of bearing on its face an untrue, illegal, and unconstitutional sentence of condemnation against the approved President of the Republic.

But, while declining to reopen the argument of this question, and refusing to tread over again the ground already traversed, there is another and a different task to perform; one which the approaching termination of President Jackson's administration makes peculiarly proper at this time, and which it is my privilege, and perhaps my duty, to execute, as being the suitable conclusion to the arduous contest in which we have been so long engaged; I allude to the general tenor of his administration, and to its effect, for good or for evil, upon the condition of his country. This is the proper time for such a view to be taken. The political existence of this great man now draws to a close. In little more than forty days he ceases to be a public character. In a few brief weeks he ceases to be an object of political hope to any, and should cease to be an object of political hate, or envy, to all. Whatever of motive the servile and timeserving might have found in his exalted station for raising the altar of adulation, and burning the incense of praise before him, that motive can no longer exist. The dispenser of the patronage of an empire—the chief of this great confederacy of States—is soon to be a private individual, stripped of all power to reward, or to punish. His own thoughts, as he has shown us in the concluding paragraph of that message which is to be the last of its kind that we shall ever receive from him, are directed to that beloved retirement from which he was drawn by the voice of millions of freemen, and to which he now looks for that interval of repose which age and infirmities require. Under these circumstances, he ceases to be a subject for the ebullition of the passions, and passes into a character fathe contemplation of history. Historically, then, shall I view him; and limiting this view to his civil administration, I demand, where is there a chief magistrate of whom so much evil has been predicted, and from whom so much good has come? Never has any man entered upon the chief magistracy of a country under such appalling predictions of ruin and woe! never has any one been so pursued with direful prognostications! never has any one been so beset and impeded by a powerful combination of political and moneyed confederates! never has any one in any country where the administration of justice has risen above the knife or the bowstring, been so lawlessly and shamelessly tried and condemned by rivals and enemies, without hearing, without defence, without the forms of law or justice! History has been ransacked to find examples of tyrants sufficiently odious to illustrate him by comparison. Language has been tortured to find epithets sufficiently strong to paint him in description. Imagination has been exhausted in her efforts to deck him with revolting and inhuman attributes. Tyrant, despot, usurper; destroyer of the liberties of his country; rash, ignorant, imbecile; endangering the public peace with all foreign nations; destroying domestic prosperity at home; ruining all industry, all commerce, all manufactures; annihilating confidence between man and man; delivering up the streets of populous cities to grass and weeds, and the wharves of commercial towns to the encumbrance of decaying vessels; depriving labor of all reward; depriving industry of all employment; destroying the currency; plunging an innocent and happy people from the summit of felicity to the depths of misery, want, and despair. Such is the faint outline, followed up by actual condemnation, of the appalling denunciations daily uttered against this one MAN, from the moment he became an object of political competition, down to the concluding moment of his political existence.

Vol. I.—46

"The sacred voice of inspiration has told us that there is a time for all things. There certainly has been a time for every evil that human nature admits of to be vaticinated of President Jackson's administration; equally certain the time has now come for all rational and well-disposed people to compare the predictions with the facts, and to ask themselves if these calamitous prognostications have been verified by events? Have we peace, or war, with foreign nations? Certainly, we have peace with all the world! peace with all its benign, and felicitous, and beneficent influences! Are we respected, or despised abroad? Certainly the American name never was more honored throughout the four quarters of the globe, than in this very moment. Do we hear of indignity, or outrage in any quarter? of merchants robbed in foreign ports? of vessels searched on the high seas? of American citizens impressed into foreign service? of the national flag insulted any where? On the contrary, we see former wrongs repaired; no new ones inflicted. France pays twenty-five millions of francs for spoliations committed thirty years ago; Naples pays two millions one hundred thousand ducats for wrongs of the same date; Denmark pays six hundred and fifty thousand rix dollars for wrongs done a quarter of a century ago; Spain engages to pay twelve millions of reals vellon for injuries of fifteen years date; and Portugal, the last in the list of former aggressors, admits her nability, and only waits the adjustment of details to close her account by adequate indemnity. from war, insult, contempt, and spoliation from abroad; this denounced administration has been the season of peace and good will, and the auspicious era of universal reparation. So far from suffering injury at the hands of foreign powers. our merchants have received indemnities for all former injuries. It has been the day of accounting, of settlement, and of retribution. The total list of arrearages, extending through four successive previous administrations, has been closed and settled up. The wrongs done to commerce for thirty' years back, and under so many different Presidents, and indemnities withheld from all, have been repaired and paid over under the beneficent and glorious administration of President Jackson. But one single instance of outrage has occurred, and that at the extremities of the world, and by a piratical horde, amenable to no law but the law of force. The Malays of Sumatra committed a robbery and massacre upon an American vessel. Wretches! they did not then know that JACKSON was President of the United States! and that no distance, no time, no idle ceremonial of treating with robbers and assassins, was to hold back the arm of justice. Commodore Downes went out. His cannon and his bayonets struck the outlaws in their den. They paid in terror and in blood for the outrage which was committed: and the great lesson was taught to these distant pirates-to our antipodes themselves-that not even the entire diameter of this globe could protect them! and that the name of American citizen, like that of Roman citizen in the great days of the Republic and of the empire, was to be the inviolable passport of all that were it throughout the whole extent of the habitable

"At home, the most gratifying picture presents itself to the view: the public debt paid off; taxes reduced one half; the completion of the public defences systematically commenced; the compact with Georgia, uncomplied with since 1802, now carried into effect, and her soil ready to be freed, as her jurisdiction has been delivered, from the presence and encumbrance of an Indian population. Mississippi and Alboama, Georgia, Tennessee, and North Carolina; Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, and Arkansas; in a word, all the States encumbered with as Indian population have been relieved from that encumbrance; and the India been transferred to new and every way better adapted to their existence, the preservat and the improvement of thei

"The currency is not ruin trary, seventy-five millions of try is a spectacle never seen barrier of the people against t banks which may attempt to & and to force a dishonored pal the community. These sevent the security of the people again a depreciated and inconvertit Gold, after a disappearance o restored to our country. All with admiration the success three years, to supply oursely rency which our constitution which the example of France shows to be so easily attainable calculable value to industry, n and solid wealth. The success is styled in the best London pal a reformation, but a revolution i a revolution by which our Ame raining from Europe the gold a she has been sending to it fo past.

Domestic industry is not par dence is not destroyed; factories ped; workmen are not mendica and employment; credit is not prices have not sunk; grass is 1 the streets of populous cities; the not lumbered with decaying ves. of curses, rising from the bosoms o agonized people, are not ascending against the destroyer of a nation prosperity. On the contrary, the this is true! and true to a degree ishes and bewilders the senses. I is not gold that glitters; that ther ace between a specious and a solic I know that a part of the present apparent only--the effect of an inci millions of paper money, forced int by one thousand banks; but, after llowance for this fictitious and delu he real prosperity of the country is s entedly and transcendently great. very flow must be followed by it nity. So far poliation from ation has been I, and the aus-1. So far from oreign powers, emnities for all lay of accountibution. The r through four ons, has been congs done to and under so lemnities with-1 and paid over administration single instance at the extremipiratical horde, of force. The a robbery and el. Wretches! JACKSON was s! and that no onial of treating s to hold back e Downes went nets struck the d in terror and was committed; to these distant selves-that not globe could prone of American en in the great > ing picture prenublic debt paid e completion of illy commenced; ncomplied with ect, and her soil liction has been nd encumbrance sissippi and Ala-North Carolina; i, and Arkansas; imbered with an lieved from that of the habitable

empire, was to all that wore it

encumbrance; and the Indians themselves have been transferred to new and permanent homes, every way better adapted to the enjoyment of their existence, the preservation of their rights, and the improvement of their condition.

"The currency is not ruined! On the contrary, seventy-five millions of specie in the country is a spectacle never seen before, and is the barrier of the people against the designs of any banks which may attempt to suspend payments, and to force a dishonored paper currency upon the community. These seventy-five millions are the security of the people against the dangers of a depreciated and inconvertible paper money. Gold, after a disappearance of thirty years, is restored to our country. All Europe beholds with admiration the success of our efforts in three years, to supply ourselves with the currency which our constitution guarantees, and which the example of France and Holland shows to be so easily attainable, and of such incalculable value to industry, morals, economy, and solid wealth. The success of these efforts is styled in the best London papers, not merely a reformation, but a revolution in the currency! a revolution by which our America is now regaining from Europe the gold and silver which she has been sending to it for thirty years past.

Domestic industry is not paralyzed; confidence is not destroyed; factories are not stopped; workmen are not mendicants for bread and employment; credit is not extinguished; prices have not sunk; grass is not growing in the streets of populous cities; the wharves are not lumbered with decaying vessels; columns of curses, rising from the bosoms of a ruined and agonized people, are not ascending to heaven against the destroyer of a nation's felicity and prosperity. On the contrary, the reverse of all this is true! and true to a degree that astonishes and bewilders the senses. I know that all is not gold that glitters; that there is a differace between a specious and a solid prosperity. I know that a part of the present prosperity is apparent only--the effect of an increase of fifty millions of paper money, forced into circulation by one thousand banks; but, after making due llowance for this fictitious and delusive excess, he real prosperity of the country is still unpreceentedly and transcendently great. I know that very flow must be followed by its ebb, that every expansion must be followed by its contraction. I know that a revulsion of the paper system is inevitable; but I know, also, that these seventy-five millions of gold and silver is the bulwark of the country, and will enable every honest bank to meet its liabilities, and every prudent citizen to take care of himself.

Turning to some points in the civil administration of President Jackson, and how much do we not find to admire! The great cause of the constitution has been vindicated from an imputation of more than forty years' duration. He has demonstrated, by the fact itself, that a national bank is not 'necessary' to the fiscal operations of the federal government; and in that demonstration he has upset the argument of General Hamilton, and the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and all that ever has been said in favor of the constitutionality of a national bank. All this argument and decision rested on the single assumption of the 'necessity' of that institution to the federal government. He has shown it is not 'necessary;' that the currency of the constitution, and especially a gold currency, is all that the federal government wants, and that she can get that whenever she pleases. In this single act, he has vindicated the constitution from an unjust imputation, and knocked from under the decision of the Supreme Court the assumed fact on which it rested. He has prepared the way for the reversal of that decision; and it is a question for lawyers to answer, whether the case is not ripe for the application of that writ of most remedial nature, as Lord Coke calls it, and which was invented, lest, in any case, there should be an oppressive defect of justice! the venerable writ of audita querela defendentis, to ascertain the truth of a fact happening since the judgment; and upon the due finding of which the judgment will be vacated. Let the lawyers bring their books, and answer us, if there is not a case here presented for the application of that ancient and most remedial writ?

From President Jackson, the country has first learned the true theory and practical intent of the constitution, in giving to the Executive a qualified negative on the legislative power of Congress. Far from being an odious, dangerous, or kingly prerogative, this power, as vested in the President, is nothing but a qualified copy of the famous veto power vested in the tribunes of the people among the Romans, and intended to suspend the passage of a law until the people themselves should have time to consider it. The qualified veto of the President destroys nothing; it only delays the passage of a law, and refers it to the people for their consideration and decision. It is the reference of a law, not to a committee of the House, or of the whole House, but to the committee of the whole Union. It is a recommitment of the bill to the people, for them to examine and consider; and if, upon this examination, they are content to pass it, it will pass at the next session. The delay of a few months is the only effect of a veto, in a case where the people shall ultimately approve a law; where they do not approve it, the interposition of the veto is the barrier which saves them the adoption of a law, the repeal of which might afterwards be almost impossible. The qualified negative is, therefore, a beneficent power, intended, as General Hamilton expressly declares in the 'Federalist,' to protect, first, the executive department from the encroachments of the legislative department; and, secondly, to preserve the people from hasty, dangerous, or criminal legislation on the part of their representatives. This is the design and intention of the veto power.; and the fear expressed by General Hamilton was, that Presidents, so far from exercising it too often, would not exercise it as often as the safety of the people required; that they might lack the moral courage to stake themselves in opposition to a favorite measure of the majority of the two Houses of Congress; and thus deprive the people, in many instances, of their right to pass upon a bill before it becomes a final law. The cases in which President Jackson has exercised the veto power has shown the soundness of these observations. No ordinary President would have staked himself against the Bank of the United States, and the two Houses of Congress. in 1832. It required President Jackson to confront that power-to stem that torrent-to stay the progress of that charter, and to refer it to the people for their decision. His moral courage was equal to the crisis. He arrested the charter until it could go to the people, and they have arrested it for ever. Had he not done so, the charter would have become law, and its repeal almost impossible. The people of the whole been unavailing; the bank would have been

Union would now have been in the condition of the people of Pennsylvania, bestrode by the monster, in daily conflict with him, and maintaining a doubtful contest for supremacy between the government of a State and the directory of a moneyed corporation.

To detail specific acts which adorn the administration of President Jackson, and illustrate the intuitive sagacity of his intellect, the firmness of his mind, his disregard of personal popularity, and his entire devotion to the public good, would be inconsistent with this rapid sketch, intended merely to present general views, and not to detail single actions, howsoever worthy they may be of a splendid page in the volume of history. But how can we pass over the great measure of the removal of the public moneys from the Bank of the United States, in the autumn of 1833? that wise, heroic, and masterly measure of prevention, which has rescued an empire from the fangs of a merciless, revengeful, greedy, insatiate, implacable, moneyed power! It is a remark for which I am indebted to the philosophic observation of my most esteemed colleague and friend (pointing to Dr. Linn), that, while it requires far greater talent to foresee an evil before it happens, and to arrest it by precautionary measures. than it requires to apply an adequate remedy to the same evil after it has happened, yet the applause bestowed by the world is always greatest in the latter case. Of this, the removal of the public moneys from the Bank of the United States is an eminent instance. The veto of 1832, which arrested the charter which Congress had granted, immediately received the applause and approbation of a majority of the Union: the removal of the deposits, which prevented the bank from forcing a recharter, was disapproved by a large majority of the country, and even of his own friends; yet the veto would have been unavailing, and the bank would inevitably have been rechartered, if the deposits had not been removed. The immense sums of public money since accumulated would have enabled the bank, if she had retained the possession of it, to have coerced a recharter. Nothing but the removal could have prevented her from extorting a recharter from the sufferings and terrors of the people. If it had not been for that measure, the previous veto would have again installed in power; an government would have been age to that bank, and admin her directions, and by her great measure of prevention, deposits, though feebly and by friends at first, has expel the field, and driven her into State charter. She is not her capital and stockholders State charter, she has taken a events, and to profit by them has gone into the jungle; and belly, he awaits the favorable 1 ing from his covert, and spri of the unsuspicious traveller!

The Treasury order for excl ey from the land offices is an sure, originating in enlighter preventing great mischiefs. T saw the evils of suffering a the paper money, issuing from a t banks, to discharge themselve domain. He foresaw that if the allowed to run their course, lands would be swept away, the be filled with irredeemable pa ber of banks must be broken b the cry set up that nothing but could regulate the currency. course of these streams of paper ing, has saved the country from and excited anew the machin whose schemes of gain and mise disappointed; and who had cou edition of panic and pressure, an Congress with the old story of stroyed, currency ruined, prosper and distress produced, by the man. They began their lugubr ridicule and contempt have pro for money and insolence; and t of the ex-president of the denat after limping about for a few day from the lash of public scorn, as from the forum of public debate.

The difficulty with France: wl it presents of the superior sagacit Jackson over all the commonpl who beset and/impede his adm home! That difficulty, inflamed a by domestic faction, wore, at one condition of rode by the n, and mainipremacy beand the direc-

dorn the adand illustrate lect, the firmersonal poputo the public th this rapid esent general ctions, howsolendid page in v can we pass emoval of the of the United that wise, hevention, which angs of a merte, implacable, rk for which I observation of friend (pointit requires far before it hapmary measures, lequate remedy pened, yet the s always greatthe removal of k of the United

> The veto of er which Conreceived the apnajority of the sits, which prea recharter, was of the country, t the veto would ank would inevithe deposits had ise sums of pubwould have enined the possesnarter. Nothing vented her from ne sufferings and nad not been for reto would have vould have been

again installed in power; and this entire federal government would have been held as an appendage to that bank, and administered according to her directions, and by her nominees. That great measure of prevention, the removal of the deposits, though feebly and faintly supported by friends at first, has expelled the bank from the field, and driven her into abeyance under a State charter. She is not dead, but, holding her capital and stockholders together under a State charter, she has taken a position to watch events, and to profit by them. The royal tiger has gone into the jungle; and, crouched on his belly, he awaits the favorable moment for emerging from his covert, and springing on the body of the unsuspicious traveller!

The Treasury order for excluding paper money from the land offices is another wise measure, originating in enlightened forecast, and preventing great mischiefs. The President foresaw the evils of suffering a thousand streams of paper money, issuing from a thousand different banks, to discharge themselves on the national domain. He foresaw that if these currents were allowed to run their course, that the public lands would be swept away, the Treasury would be filled with irredeemable paper, a vast number of banks must be broken by their folly, and the cry set up that nothing but a national bank could regulate the currency. He stopped the course of these streams of paper; and, in so doing, has saved the country from a great calamity, and excited anew the machinations of those whose schemes of gain and mischief have been disappointed; and who had counted on a new edition of panic and pressure, and again saluting Congress with the old story of confidence destroyed, currency ruined, prosperity annihilated, and distress produced, by the tyranny of one man. They began their lugubrious song; but ridicule and contempt have proved too strong for money and insolence; and the panic letter of the ex-president of the denationalized bank, after limping about for a few days, has shrunk from the lash of public scorn, and disappeared from the forum of public debate.

The difficulty with France: what an instance it presents of the superior sagacity of President Jackson over all the commonplace politicians who beset and impede his administration at home! That difficulty, inflamed and aggravated by domestic faction, wore, at one time, a portentous aspect; the skill, firmness, elevation of purpose, and manly frankness of the President, avoided the danger, accomplished the object, commanded the admiration of Europe, and retained the friendship of France. He conducted the delicate affair to a successful and mutually honorable issue. All is amicably and happily terminated, leaving not a wound, nor even a scar, behind—leaving the Frenchman and American on the ground on which they have stood for fifty years, and should for ever stand; the ground of friendship, respect, good will, and mutual wishes for the honor, happiness, and prosperity, of each other.

But why this specification? So beneficent and so glorious has been the administration of this President, that where to begin, and where to end, in the enumeration of great measures, would be the embarrassment of him who has his eulogy to make. He came into office the first of generals; he goes out the first of statesmen. His civil competitors have shared the fate of his military opponents; and Washington city has been to the American politicians who have assailed him, what New Orleans was to the British generals who attacked his lines. Repulsed! driven back! discomfited! crushed! has been the fate of all assailants, foreign and domestic, civil and military. At home and abroad, the impress of his genius and of his character is felt. He has impressed upon the age in which he lives the stamp of his arms, of his diplomacy, and of his domestic policy. In a word, so transcendent have been the merits of his administration, that they have operated a miracle upon the minds of his most inveterate opponents. He has expunged their objections to military chieftains! He has shown them that they were mistaken; that military men were not the dangerous rulers they had imagined, but safe and prosperous conductors of the vessel of state. He has changed their fear into love. With visible signs they admit their error, and, instead of deprecating, they now invoke the reign of chieftains. They labored hard to procure a military successor to the present incumbent; and if their love goes on increasing at the same rate, the republic may be put to the expense of periodical wars, to breed a perpetual succession of these chieftains to rule over them and their posterity for ever.

To drop this irony, which the inconsistency

of mad opponents has provoked, and to return to the plain delineations of historical painting, the mind instinctively dwells on the vast and unprecedented popularity of this President. Great is the influence, great the power, greater than any man ever before possessed in our America, which he has acquired over the public mind. And how has he acquired it? Not by the arts of intrigue, or the juggling tricks of diplomacy; not by undermining rivals, or sacrificing public interests for the gratification of classes or individuals. But he has acquired it. first, by the exercise of an intuitive sagacity which, leaving all book learning at an immeasurable distance behind, has always enabled him to adopt the right remedy, at the right time, and to conquer soonest when the men of forms and office thought him most near to ruin and despair. Next, by a moral courage which knew no fear when the public good beckoned him to go on. Last, and chiefest, he has acquired it by an open honesty of purpose, which knew no concealments; by a straightforwardness of action, which disdained the forms of office and the arts of intrigue; by a disinterestedness of motive, which knew no selfish or sordid calculation; a devotedness of patriotism, which staked every thing personal on the issue of every measure which the public welfare required him to adopt. By these qualities, and these means, he has acquired his prodigious popularity, and his transcendent influence over the public mind; and if there are any who envy that influence and popularity, let them envy, also, and emulate, if they can, the qualities and means by which they were acquired.

Great has been the opposition to President Jackson's administration; greater, perhaps, than ever has been exhibited against any government, short of actual insurrection and forcible resistance. Revolution has been proclaimed! and every thing has been done that could be expected to produce revolution. The country has been alarmed, agitated, convulsed. From the Senate chamber to the village bar-room, from one end of the continent to the other, denunciation, agitation, excitement, has been the order of the day. For eight years the President of this republic has stood upon a volcano, vomiting fire and flames upon him, and threatening the country itself with ruin and desolation, if the people did not expel the usurper, despot, and the hands to describe them. Time must first a tyrant, as he was called, from the high place to which the suffrages of millions of freemen had elevated him.

Great is the confidence which he has always reposed in the discernment and equity of the American people. I have been accustomed to see him for many years, and under many discouraging trials; but never saw him doubt for an instant, the ultimate support of the people. It was my privilege to see him often, and during the most gloomy period of the panic conspiracy. when the whole earth seemed to be in commotion against him, and when many friends were faltering, and stout hearts were quailing, before the raging storm which bank machination, and senatorial denunciation, had conjured up to overwhelm him. I saw him in the darkest moments of this gloomy period; and never did I see his confidence in the ultimate support of his fellowcitizens forsake him for an instant. He always said the people would stand by those who stand by them; and nobly have they justified that confidence! That verdict, the voice of millions, which now demands the expurgation of that sentence, which the Senate and the bank then pronounced upon him, is the magnificent response of the people's hearts to the implicit confidence which he then reposed in them. But it was not in the people only that he had confidence; there was another, and a far higher Power, to which he constantly looked to save the country, and its defenders, from every danger; and signal events prove that he did not look to that high Power in vain.

Sir, I think it right, in approaching the termination of this great question, to present this faint and rapid sketch of the brilliant, beneficent, and glorious administration of President Jackson. It is not for me to attempt to do it justice; it is not for ordinary men to attempt its history. His military life, resplendent with dazzling events, will demand the pen of a nervous writer; his civil administration, replete with scenes which have called into action so many and such various passions of the human heart, and which has given to native sagacity so many victories over practised politicians, will require the profound, luminous, and philosophi cal conceptions of a Livy, a Plutarch, or a Sallust. This history is not to be written in our day. The cotemporaries of such events are not its office-must silence the pa actors, develope consequences, that is sacred to honor, patri In after ages the historic genit shall produce the writers which mands-men far removed from this day, who will know how great epoch, and how to acquir for their own names by paint ter's hand, the immortal even President's life.

And now, sir, I finish the t vears ago, I imposed on myse. alone and amidst the ieers an opponents, I put this ball in me ple have taken it up, and rolled I am no longer any thing but a mass which now propels it. that mass I speak. I demand t the edict of the people; I deman tion of that sentence which the senators, and the power of the the Bank of the United States, h placed on the journal of the Sens the voice of millions of freemen be expunged from it.

CHAPTER CL

EXPUNGING RESOLUTION: MR. CI HOUN, MR. WEBSTER: LAST SCH TION PASSED, AND EXECUTED.

SATURDAY, the 14th of January, t senators agreed to have a meeting their final measures for passing th resolution. They knew they had but they also knew that they had to grapple with to whom might be proud motto of Louis the Fourteen unequal match for numbers." The t members of the party were in t separating from it, and would requ ting. They met in the night at the restaurant of Boulanger, giving to the the air of a convivial entertainment. ed till midnight, and required all t tion, tact and skill of the prime mo tain and maintain the union upon the success of which the fate of high place to freemen had has always equity of the customed to er many disim doubt, for f the people. en, and during ic conspiracy, be in commofriends were nailing, before chination, and ed up to overkest moments · did I see his of his fellow-He always ose who stand justified that ce of millions, ration of that he bank then nagnificent reie implicit conthem. But it he had confia far higher ooked to save om every danat he did not > iching the terto present this ant, beneficent, resident Jackat to do it justo attempt its splendent with pen of a nervration, replete into action so of the human native sagacity politicians, will and philosophitarch, or a Salwritten in our 1 events are not ne must first do its office-must silence the passions, remove the actors, develope consequences, and canonize all that is sacred to honor, patriotism, and glory. In after ages the historic genius of our America shall produce the writers which the subject demands-men far removed from the contests of this day, who will know how to estimate this great epoch, and how to acquire an immortality for their own names by painting, with a master's hand, the immortal events of the patriot President's life.

And now, sir, I finish the task which, three years ago, I imposed on myself. Solitary and alone, and amidst the jeers and taunts of my opponents, I put this ball in motion. The people have taken it up, and rolled it forward, and I am no longer any thing but a unit in the vast mass which now propels it. In the name of that mass I speak. I demand the execution of the edict of the people; I demand the expurgation of that sentence which the voice of a few senators, and the power of their confederate, the Bank of the United States, has caused to be placed on the journal of the Senate; and which the voice of millions of freemen has ordered to be expunged from it.

CHAPTER CLXI.

EXPUNGING RESOLUTION: MR. CLAY, MR. CAL-HOUN, MR. WEBSTER: LAST SCENE: RESOLU-TION PASSED, AND EXECUTED.

SATURDAY, the 14th of January, the democratic senators agreed to have a meeting, and to take their final measures for passing the expunging resolution. They knew they had the numbers; but they also knew that they had adversaries to grapple with to whom might be applied the proud motto of Louis the Fourteenth: "Not an unequal match for numbers." They also knew t members of the party were in the process of parating from it, and would require conciliating. They met in the night at the then famous restaurant of Boulanger, giving to the assemblage the air of a convivial entertainment. It continued till midnight, and required all the moderation, tact and skill of the prime movers to ob-hin and maintain the union upon details, on ure depended. The men of conciliation were to be the efficient men of that night; and all the winning resources of Wright, Allen of Ohio and Linn of Missouri, were put into requisition. There were serious differences upon the mode of expurgation, while agreed upon the thing; and finally obliteration, the favorite of the mover, was given up; and the mode of expurgation adopted which had been proposed in the resolutions of the General Assembly of Virginia; namely, to inclose the obnoxious sentence in a square of black lines—an oblong square: a compromise of opinions to which the mover agreed upon condition of being allowed to compose the epitaph-" Expunged by the order of the Senate." The agreement which was too lead to victory was then adopted, each one severally pledging himself to it, that there should be no adjournment of the Senate after the resolution was called until it was passed; and that it should be called immediately after the morning business on the Monday ensuing. Expecting a protracted session, extending through the day and night, and knowing the difficulty of keeping men steady to their work and in good humor, when tired and hungry, the mover of the proceeding took care to provide, as far as possible, against such a state of things; and gave orders that night to have an ample supply of cold hams, turkeys, rounds of beef, pickles, wines and cups of hot coffee, ready in a certain committee room near the Senate chamber by four o'clock on the afternoon of Monday.

The motion to take up the subject was made at the appointed time, and immediately a debate of long speeches, chiefly on the other side, opened itself upon the question. It was evident that comsumption of time, delay and adjournment, was their plan. The three great leaders did not join in the opening; but their place was well supplied by many of their friends, able speakers—some effective, some eloquent: Preston of South Carolina; Richard H. Bayard and John M. Clayton of Delaware; Crittenden of Kentucky; Southard of New Jersey; White of Tennessee; Ewing of Ohio. They were only the half in number, but strong in zeal and ability, that commenced the contest three years before, reinforced by Mr. White of Tennessee. As the darkness of approaching night came on, and the great chandelier was lit up, splendidly illuminating the the success of which the fate of the meas- chamber, then crowded with the members of the House, and the lobbies and galleries filled to their utmost capacity by visitors and spectators, the scene became grand and impressive. A few spoke on the side of the resolution—chiefly Rives, Buchanan, Niles — and with an air of ease and satisfaction that bespoke a quiet determination, and a consciousness of victory. The committee room had been resorted to in parties of four and six at a time, always leaving enough on watch: and not resorted to by one side alone. The opposition were invited to a full participation—an invitation of which those who were able to maintain their good temper readily availed themselves; but the greater part were not in a humor to eat any thing-especially at such a feast. The night was wearing away: the expungers were in full force—masters of the chamber-happy-and visibly determined to remain. It became evident to the great opposition leaders that the inevitable hour had come: that the damnable deed was to be done that night: and that the dignity of silence was no longer to them a tenable position. The battle was going against them, and they must go into it, without being able to re-establish it. In the beginning, they had not considered the expunging movement a serious proceeding: as it advanced they still expected it to miscarry on some point: now the reality of the thing stood before them, confronting their presence, and refusing to "down" at any command. They broke silence and gave vent to language which bespoke the agony of their feelings, and betrayed the revulsion of stomach with which they approached the odious subject. Mr. Calhoun said:

"No one, not blinded by party zeal, can possibly be insensible that the measure proposed is a wiolation of the constitution. The constitution requires the Senate to keep a journal; this resolution goes to expunge the journal. If you may expunge a part, you may expunge the whole; and if it is expunged, how is it kept? The constitution says the journal shall be kept; this resolution says it shall be destroyed. does the very thing which the constitution declares shall not be done. That is the argument, the whole argument. There is none other. Talk of precedents? and precedents drawn from a foreign country? They don't apply. No, sir. This is to be done, not in consequence of argument, but in spite of argument. I understand the case. I know perfectly well the gentlemen have no liberty to vote otherwise. They are coerced by an exterior power. They try, indeed, to comfort their conscience by saying that it is the will of the people, and the voice of the days of Pompey or Cæsar; but an act in the people. It is no such thing. We all know how these legislative returns have been obtained. It is by dictation from the White House. The President himself, with that vast mass of patronage which he wields, and the thousand expectations he is able to hold up, has obtained these votes of the State Legislatures; and this, forsooth, is said to be the voice of the people. The voice of the people! Sir, can we forget the scene which was exhibited in this chamber when that expunging resolution was first introduced here? Have we forgotten the universal giving way of conscience, so that the senator from Missouri was left alone? I see before me seactors who could not swallow that resolution: and has its nature changed since then? Is it any more constitutional now than it was then? Not at all. But executive power has interpos-Talk to me of the voice of the people! No. It is the combination of patronage and power to coerce this body into a gross and palpable violation of the constitution. Some individuals, I perceive, think to escape through the particular form in which this act is to be perpetrated. They tell us that the resolution on your records is not to be expunged, but is only to be endorsed 'Expunged.' Really, sir, I do not know how to argue against such contemptible sophistry. The occasion is too solemn for an argument of this sort. You are going to violate the constitution, and you get rid of the infamy by a falsehood. You yourselves say that the resolution is expunged by your order. Yet you say it is not expunged. You put your act you say it is not expunged. You put your act in express words. You record it, and then turn in express words. round and deny it.

"But why do I waste my breath? I know it is all utterly vain. The day is gone; night approaches, and night is suitable to the dark deed we meditate. There is a sort of destiny in this thing. The act must be performed; and it is an act which will tell on the political history of this country for ever. Other preceding violations of the constitution (and they have been many and great) filled my bosom with indignation, but this fills it only with grid Others were done in the heat of party. Power was, as it were, compelled to support itself by seizing upon new instruments of influence and patronage; and there were ambitious and able men to direct the process. Such was the re moval of the deposits, which the President sered upon by a new and unprecedented act of ar bitrary power; an act which gave him ample means of rewarding friends and punishing ene mies. Something may, perhaps, be pardored to him in this matter, on the old apology of tyrants—the plea of necessity. But here there can be no such apology. Here no necessity all so much as be pretended. This act originals in pure, unmixed, personal idolatry. It is the melancholy evidence of a broken spirit, ready bow at the feet of power. The former act The such a one as might have been perpetrated this could never have been Roman Senate until the time Nero."

Mr. Calhoun was right in l universal giving way when t first introduced—the solitu mover was then left-and in would have been left to the er for his courage in reinstating and appealing to the people.

Mr. Clay commenced with had never believed in the reali ing until now; that he had co lution as a thing to be take and laid down when the speed and that the last laying down session, was the end of the ma

"Considering that he was t resolution of March, 1834, and relation in which he stood to the Senate by whose vote it had felt it to be his duty to on this expunging resolution always intended to do so who persuaded that there existed: of pressing it to a final decis been so taken up and put dowr sion-taken up one day, whe prepared for delivery, and put de pronounced—that he had real ther there existed any serious i putting it to the vote. At the 1 last session, it will be recollecte lution came up, and in several Senate a disposition was manife a definitive decision. On that offered to waive his right to add and silently to vote upon the rewas again laid upon the table; a ever as the country supposed, lieved. It is, however, now rev dry changes having taken place of this body, it would seem th design is to bring the resolution conclusion."

Then, after an argument agains tion, which, of necessity, was o recapitulation of the argument original condemnation of the Pre on to give vent to his feelings in e less bitter and denunciatory of and his friends than those used b saying:

"But if the matter of expunction to the truth of the case, reproach! subserviency, derogatory from the this could never have been consummated by a Roman Senate until the times of Caligula and

Mr. Calhoun was right in his taunt about the universal giving way when the resolution was first introduced-the solitude in which the mover was then left-and in which solitude he would have been left to the end, had it not been for his courage in reinstating the word expunge, and appealing to the people.

Mr. Clay commenced with showing that he had never believed in the reality of the proceeding until now; that he had considered the resolution as a thing to be taken up for a speech. and laid down when the speech was delivered; and that the last laying down, at the previous session, was the end of the matter. He said:

"Considering that he was the mover of the resolution of March, 1834, and the consequent relation in which he stood to the majority of the Senate by whose vote it was adopted, he had felt it to be his duty to say something on this expunging resolution; and he had always intended to do so when he should be persuaded that there existed a settled purpose of pressing it to a final decision. But it had been so taken up and put down at the last session—taken up one day, when a speech was prepared for delivery, and put down when it was pronounced—that he had really doubted whether there existed any serious intention of ever putting it to the vote. At the very close of the last session, it will be recollected that the resolution came up, and in several quarters of the Senate a disposition was manifested to come to a definitive decision. On that occasion he had offered to waive his right to address the Senate, and silently to vote upon the resolution; but it was again laid upon the table; and laid there for ever, as the country supposed, and as he believed. It is, however, now revived; and, sundry changes having taken place in the members of this body, it would seem that the present design is to bring the resolution to an absolute conclusion."

Then, after an argument against the expurgation, which, of necessity, was obliged to be a recapitulation of the argument in favor of the original condemnation of the President, he went on to give vent to his feelings in expressions not less bitter and denunciatory of the President and his friends than those used by Mr. Calhoun,

"But if the matter of expunction be contrary to the truth of the case, reproachful for its base subserviency, derogatory from the just and ne- | the debate which seemed to indicate its conclu-cessary powers of the Senate, and repugnant to the constitution of the United States, the manner in which it is proposed to accomplish this dark deed is also highly exceptionable. The expunging resolution, which is to blot out or enshroud the four or five lines in which the resolution of 1834 stands recorded, or rather the recitals by which it is preceded, are spun out into a thread of enormous length. It runs, whereas, and whereas, and whereas, and whereas, and whereas, &c., into a formidable array of nine several whereases. One who should have the courage to begin to read them, unaware of what was to be their termination, would think that at the end of such a tremendous display he must find the very devil."

And then coming to the conclusion, he concentrated his wrath and grief in an apostrophizing peroration, which lacked nothing but verisimilitude to have been grand and affecting.

"But why should I detain the Senate, or needlessly waste my breath in fruitless exertions. The decree has gone forth. It is one of urgency, too. The deed is to be done-that foul deed which, like the blood-stained hands of the guilty Macbeth, all dcean's waters will never wash out. Proceed, then, with the noble work which lies before you, and, like other skilful executioners, do it quickly. And when you have perpetrated it, go home to the people, and tell them what glorious honors you have achieved for our common country. Tell them that you have extinguished one of the brightest and purest lights that ever burnt at the altar of civil liberty. Tell them that you have silenced one of the noblest batteries that ever thundered in defence of the constitution, and bravely spiked the cannon. Tell them that, henceforward, no matter what daring or outrageous act any President may perform, you have for ever hermetically sealed the mouth of the Senate. Tell them that he may fearlessly assume what powers he pleases, snatch from its lawful custody the public purse, command a military detachment to enter the halls of the capitol, overawe Congress, trample down the constitution, and raze every bulwark of freedom; but that the Senate must stand mute, in silent submission, and not dare to raise its opposing voice. That it must wait until a House of Representatives, humbled and subdued like itself, and a majority of it composed of the partisans of the President, shall prefer articles of impeachment. Tell them, finally, that you have restored the glorious doctrines of passive obedience and non-resistance. And, if the people do not pour out their indignation and imprecations, I have yet to learn the character of American freemen."

Mr. Webster spoke last, and after a pause in ou put your act it, and then turn reath? I know y is gone; night ble to the dark sort of destiny e performed; and he political histo-Other preceding (and they have y bosom with inonly with grief of party. Power support itself by of influence and mbitious and able Such was the re he President seinedented act of ara gave him ample nd punishing ene naps, be pardoned ie old apology of . But here there e no necessity can 'his act originates dolatry. It is the cen spirit, ready to he former act was en perpetrated in ar; but an act is

We all know

been obtained.

e House. The mass of patron-

usand expecta-

obtained these

and this, fore people. The

we forget the chamber when first introduced iniversal giving

e senator from

before me se-

.hat resolution;

e then? Is it in it was then?

er has interpos-

he people! No.

patronage and

1 gross and pal-

on. Some indipe through the act is to be per-ne resolution on

nged, but is only

Really, sir, I do

such contempti-

s too solemn for ou are going to

ou get rid of the urselves say that your order. Yet

sion; and only rose, and that slowly, as the question was about to be put. Having no personal griefs in relation to General Jackson like Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Clay, and with a temperament less ardent, he delivered himself with comparative moderation, confining himself to a brief protest against the act; and concluding, in measured and considered language, with expressing his grief and mortification at what he was to behold: thus:

"We have seen, with deep and sincere pain, the legislatures of respectable States instructing the senators of those States to vote for and support this violation of the journal of the Senate; and this pain is infinitely increased by our full belief, and entire conviction, that most, if not all these proceedings of States had their origin in promptings from Washington; that they have been urgently requested and insisted on, as being necessary to the accomplishment of the intended purpose; and that it is nothing else but the influence and power of the executive branch of this government which has brought the legislatures of so many of the free States of this Union to guit the sphere of their ordinary duties, for the purpose of co-operating to accomplish a measure, in our judgment, so unconstitional, so derogatory to the character of the Senate, and marked with so broad an impression of compliance with power. But this resolution is to pass. We expect it. That cause, which has been powerful enough to influence so many State legislatures, will show itself powerful enough, especially with such aids, to secure the passage of the resolution here. We make up our minds to behold the spectacle which is to ensue. We collect ourselves to look on, in silence, while a scene is exhibited which, if we did not regard it as a ruthless violation of a sacred instrument, would appear to us to be little elevated above the character of a contemptible farce. This scene we shall behold; and hundreds of American citizens, as many as may crowd into these lobbies and galleries, will behold it also: with what feelings I do not undertake to say.'

Midnight was now approaching. The dense masses which filled every inch of room in the lobbies and the galleries, remained immovable. No one went out: no one could get in. The floor of the Senate was crammed with privileged persons, and it seemed that all Congress was there. Expectation, and determination to see the conclusion, was depicted upon every countenance. It was evident there was to be no adjournment until the vote should be taken—until the deed was done; and this aspect of invincible determination, had its effect upon the ranks of the opposition. They began to falter under a useless persistence, for they alone now did the speaking; and while Mr. Webster was yet reciting his protest, two senators from the opposite side, who had been best able to maintain their equanimity, came round to the author of this View, and said "This question has degenerated into a trial of nerves and muscles. It has become a question of physical endurance; and we see no use in wearing ourselves out to keep off for a few hours longer what has to come before we separate. We see that you are able and determined to carry your measure: so call the vote as soon as you please. We shall say no more." Mr. Webster concluded. No one rose. There was a pause, a dead silence, and an intense feeling. Presently the silence was invaded by the single word "question"-the parliamentary call for a vote-rising from the seats of different senators. One blank in the resolve remained to be filled—the date of its adoption. It was done. The acting president of the Senate, Mr. King, of Alabama, then directed the roll to be called. The yeas and nays had been previously ordered, and proceeded to be called by the secretary of the Senate, Mr. Asbury Dickens. *Forty-three senators were present answering: five absent. The yeas were:

"Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Dana, Ewing of Illinois, Fulton, Grundy, Hubbard, King of Alabama, Linn, Morris, Nicholas, Niles, Page, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Sevier, Strange, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, Wall, Wright.

"Navs.—Messrs. Bayard, Black, Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing of Ohio, Hendricks, Kent, Knight, Moore, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, Webster, White."

The passage of the resolution was announced from the chair. Mr. Benton rose, and said that nothing now remained but to execute the order of the Senate; which he moved be done forthwith. It was ordered accordingly. The Secretary thereupon produced the original manuscript journal of the Senate, and opening at the page which contained the condemnatory sentence of March 28th, 1834, proceeded in open Senate to draw a square of broad black lines around the sentence, and to write across its face in strong letters these words: "Expunged by order of the Senate, this 16th day of March, 1837." Up to this moment the crewd in the great circular gallery, loc the Senate, though sullen and looks, had made no manifesta and it was doubtless not the i Webster to excite that manifed referred to their numbers, and norance of the feeling with wl see the deed done which he so n Doubtless no one intended to ex mainly composed, as of usual question began, of friends of t but its appearance became suc Linn, colleague of Senator Benton Jones, since senator from Iowa, out and brought in arms; other f about him; among them Mrs. Be membering what had happene Jackson, and knowing that, after band was most obnoxious to th had her anxiety sufficiently exci be near him in this concluding sc years' contest with that great m Things were in this state when of the Senate began to perform t process on the manuscript journs storm of bisses, groans, and arose from the left wing of the cir over the head of Senator Benton. ing officer promptly gave the orde rules prescribe in such cases, to clear Mr. Benton opposed the order, say

"I hope the galleries will not t many innocent persons will be ex have been guilty of no violation of the ruffians who have made the alone be punished: let them be a I hope the sergeant-at-arms will be enter the gallery, and seize the ruf taining who they are in the best v let him apprehend them and bring bar of the Senate. Let him seize th fans. I hope that they will not now to insult the Senate, as they did w under the power of the Bank of States, when ruffians, with arms isulted us with impunity. Let taken and brought to the bar of Here is one just above me, that may dentified—the bank ruffians!

Mr. Benton knew that he was the his outrage, and that the way to to abaltern wretches was to defy hem, and have them dragged as cr he har of the Senate. They were co falter under now did the r was yet rem the opponaintain their uthor of this s degenerated . It has beance; and we ut to keep off o come before are able and : so call the shall say no No one rose. and an intense as invaded by ne parliamenthe seats of n the resolve f its adoption. nt of the Sedirected the navs had been d to be called , Mr. Asbury were present, s were:

> chanan, Dana, ady, Hubbard, licholas, Niles, evier, Strange, Wright.

ack, Calhoun, of Ohio, Henentiss, Preston, nson, Webster, was announced

, and said that ) execute the noved be done ordingly. The
the original te, and opening
, condemnatory
, proceeded in of broad black o write across
, words: "Exthis 16th day
ment the crewl

in the great circular gallery, looking down upon the Senate, though sullen and menacing in their looks, had made no manifestation of feeling; and it was doubtless not the intention of Mr. Webster to excite that manifestation when he referred to their numbers, and expressed his ignorance of the feeling with which they would see the deed done which he so much deprecated. Doubtless no one intended to excite that crowd. mainly composed, as of usual since the bank question began, of friends of that institution: but its appearance became such that Senator Linn, colleague of Senator Benton, Mr. George W. Jones, since senator from Iowa, and others sent out and brought in arms; other friends gathered about him; among them Mrs. Benton, who, remembering what had happened to General Jackson, and knowing that, after him, her husband was most obnoxious to the bank party, had her anxiety sufficiently excited to wish to be near him in this concluding scene of a seven rears' contest with that great moneyed power. Things were in this state when the Secretary of the Senate began to perform the expunging process on the manuscript journal. Instantly a storm of bisses, groans, and vociferations grose from the left wing of the circular gallery, over the head of Senator Benton. The presiding officer promptly gave the order, which the rules prescribe in such cases, to clear the gallery Mr. Benton opposed the order, saying:

"I hope the galleries will not be cleared, as many innocent persons will be excluded, who have been guilty of no violation of order. the ruffians who have made the disturbance one be punished: let them be apprehended. I hope the sergeant-at-arms will be directed to enter the gallery, and seize the ruffians, ascertaining who they are in the best way he can. let him apprehend them and bring them to the bur of the Senate. Let him seize the bank ruffans. I hope that they will not now be suffered to insult the Senate, as they did when it was under the power of the Bank of the United States, when ruffians, with arms upon them, isulted us with impunity. Let them be taken and brought to the bar of the Senate. Here is one just, above me, that may easily be dentified—the bank ruffians!"

Mr. Benton knew that he was the object of his outrage, and that the way to treat these ubaltern wretches was to defy and seize hem, and have them dragged as criminals to he har of the Senate. They were congregated immediately over his head, and had evidently collected into that place. His motion was agreed to. The order to clear the galleries was revoked; the order to seize the disturbers was given, and immediately executed by the energetic sergeantat-arms, Mr. John Shackford, and his assistants. The ringleader was seized, and brought to the bar. This sudden example intimidated the rest; and the expunging process was performed in quiet. The whole scene was impressive; but no part of it so much so as to see the great leaders who, for seven long years had warred upon General Jackson, and a thousand times pronounced him ruined, each rising in his place, with pain and reluctance, to confess themselves vanquished-to admit his power, and their weakness-and to exhale their griefs in unavailing reproaches, and impotent deprecations. It was a tribute to his invincibility which cast into the shade all the eulogiums of his friends. The gratification of General Jackson was extreme. He gave a grand dinner to the expungers (as they were called) and their wives; and being too weak to sit at the table, he only met the company, placed the "head-expunger" in his chair, and withdrew to his sick chamber. That expurgation! it was the "crowning mercy" of his civil, as New Orleans had been of his mili-

CHAPTER CLXII.

THE SUPREME COURT-JUDGES AND OFFICERS.

The death of Chief Justice Marshall had vacated that high office, and Roger B. Taney, Esq., was nominated to fill it. He still encountered opposition in the Senate; but only enough to show how much that opposition had declined since the time when he was rejected as Secretary of the Treasury. The vote against his confirmation was reduced to fifteen; namely: Messrs. Black of Mississippi; Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden; Ewing of Ohio; Leigh of Virginia; Mangum; Naudain of Delaware; Porter of Louisiana; Preston; Robbins of Rhode Island; Southard, Tomlinson, Webster, White of Tennessee.

kem, and have them dragged as criminals to Among the Justices of the Supreme Court, these changes took place from the commencement of this View to the end of General Jackson's administration: Smith Thompson, Esq., of New York, in 1823, in place of Brockholst Livingston, Esq., deceased; Robert Trimble, Esq., of Kentucky, in 1826, in place of Thomas Todd, deceased; John McLean, Esq., of Ohio, in 1829, in place of Robert Trimble, deceased; Henry Baldwin, Esq., of Pennsylvania, in 1830, in place of Bushrod Washington, deceased; James M. Wayne, Esq., of Georgia, in 1835, in place of William Johnson, deceased; Philip P. Barbour, Esq., of Virginia, in 1836, in place of Gabriel Duval, resigned.

In the same time, William Griffith, Esq. of New Jersey, was appointed Clerk, in 1826, in place of Elias B. Caldwell, deceased; and William Thomas Carroll, Esq., of the District of Columbia, was appointed, in 1827, in place of William Griffith, deceased. Of the reporters of the decisions of the Supreme Court, Richard Peters, jr., Esq., of Pennsylvania, was appointed, in 1828, in place of Henry Wheaton; and Benjamin C. Howard, Esq., of Maryland, was appointed, in 1843, to succeed Mr. Peters, deceased.

The Marshals of the District, during the same period, were: Henry Ashton, of the District of Columbia, appointed, in 1831, in place of Tench Ringgold; Alexander Hunter, of the same District, in place of Henry Ashton; Robert Wallace, in 1848 in place of Alexander Hunter, deceased; Richard Wallach, in 1849, in place of Robert Wallace; and Jonah D. Hoover, in 1853, in place of Richard Wallach.

CHAPTER CLXIII.

FAREWELL ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT JACKSON-EXTRACT.

Following the example of Washington, General Jackson issued a Farewell Address to the people of the United States, at his retiring from the presidency; and, like that of Washington, it was principally devoted to the danger of disunion, and to the preservation of harmony and good feeling between the different sections of the country. General Washington only had to contemplate the danger of disunion, as a possibility, and as an event of future contingency; bear as citizens of this great republic-

General Jackson had to confront it as a present actual, subsisting danger; and said:

"We behold systematic efforts publicly made to sow the seeds of discord between different parts of the United States, and to place party divisions directly upon geographical distinctions; to excite the South against the North, and the North against the South, and to force into the controversy the most delicate and exciting topics-topics upon which it is impossible that a large portion of the Union can ever speak with out strong emotion. Appeals, too, are constantly made to sectional interests, in order to influence the election of the Chief Magistrate, as if it were desired that he should favor a particular quarter of the country, instead of fulfilling the duties of his station with impartial justice to all; and the possible dissolution of the Union has at length become an ordinary and familiar subjet of discussion. Has the warning voice of Washington been forgotten? or have designs already been formed to sever the Union? Let it not be supposed that I impute to all of those who have taken an active part in these unwise and unprofitable discussions, a want of patriotism or of public virtue. The honorable feelings of State pride, and local attachments, find a place in the bosoms of the most enlightened and pure. But while such men are conscious of their own in tegrity and honesty of purpose, they ought never to forget that the citizens of other States are their political brethren; and that, however mistaken they may be in their views, the great body of them are equally honest and upright with themselves. Mutual suspicions and reproaches may in time create mutual hostility; and artful and designing men will always be found, who are ready to foment these fatal divisions, and to inflame the natural jealousies of different sections of the country! The history of the world is full of such examples, and especially the history of republics.

"What have you to gain by division and dissension? Delude not yourselves with the be lief, that a breach, once made, may be afterward repaired. If the Union is once severed, the in of separation will grow wider and wider; and the controversies which are now debated and settled in the halls of legislation, will then be tried in fields of battle, and determined by the sword. Neither should you deceive yourselve with the hope, that the first line of separation would be the permanent one, and that nothing but harmony and concord would be found the new associations formed upon the dissol tion of this Union. Local interests would st be found there, and unchastened ambition. All if the recollection of common dangers, in which the people of these United States stood side side against the common foe-the memory victories won by their united valor; the property and happiness they have enjoyed united valor. the present constitution; the proud name to these recollections and proofs of est are not strong enough to b as one people, what tie will hold divisions of empire, when these l broken and this Union dissever line of separation would not la generation; new fragments wou new leaders would spring up; and glorious republic would soon a multitude of petty States, wit without credit; jealous of one a for mutual aggressions; loaded w armies and leaders; seeking ai other from foreign powers; insu pled upon by the nations of Euro ussed with conflicts, and humble in spirit, they would be ready to absolute dominion of any milita and to surrender their liberty i repose. It is impossible to loo quences that would inevitably foll tion of this government, and not when we hear cold calculations a of the Union, and have so consta a line of conduct so well calcula

Nothing but the deepest convic tual danger could have induced Ge in this solemn manner, and with reference and obvious application, this warning to his countrymen moment, when he was quitting turning to his home to die. H firmly impressed with a sense of as much so as Mr. Madison wassame "pain" of feeling, and pr great calamities to our country since taken place has shown the hensions were not groundless—th was deep-seated, and wide-spread the enemies of popular represent. nent may suppose that they find his work to justify the reproach o iolence which they lavish upon s overnment; but it will be by con histake of overlooking the broad

CHAPTER CLX

ONCLUSION OF GENERAL JACKSO TRATION.

t it as a present, aid:

s publicly made tween different to place party cal distinctions; North, and the o force into the and exciting topossible that a ver speak witho, are constantly der to influence ate, as if it were articular quarter lling the duties stice to all; and e Union has at familiar subject 5 voice of Washdesigns already Let it not be those who have wise and unpropatriotism or of feelings of State ad a place in the l and pure. But of their own inose, they ought of other States d that, however views, the great est and upright spicions and re nutual hostility; will always be these fatal diviral jealousies d y! The history > division and disves with the be av be afterward severed, the line and wider; and 10w debated and ion, will then be termined by the eceive yourselve ine of separation and that nothing uld be found it pon the dissolurests would still d ambition. And dangers, in which ites stood side —the memory valor; the provee enjoyed under proud name the t republic-if

imples, and espe-

these recollections and proofs of common interest are not strong enough to bind us together as one people, what tie will hold united the new divisions of empire, when these bonds have been broken and this Union dissevered? The first line of separation would not last for a single generation; new fragments would be torn off; new leaders would spring up; and this great and glorious republic would soon be broken into a multitude of petty States, without commerce, without credit; jealous of one another; armed for mutual aggressions; loaded with taxes to pay armies and leaders; seeking aid against each other from foreign powers; insulted and tram-pled upon by the nations of Europe; until, harassed with conflicts, and humbled and debased in spirit, they would be ready to submit to the absolute dominion of any military adventurer, and to surrender their liberty for the sake of repose. It is impossible to look on the consemences that would inevitably follow the destruction of this government, and not feel indignant when we hear cold calculations about the value of the Union, and have so constantly before us line of conduct so well calculated to weaken its ties."

Nothing but the deepest conviction of an actual danger could have induced General Jackson, in this solemn manner, and with such pointed reference and obvious application, to have given this warning to his countrymen, at that last moment, when he was quitting office, and returning to his home to die. He was, indeed, firmly impressed with a sense of that danger—as much so as Mr. Madison was—and with the same "pain" of feeling, and presentiment of great calamities to our country. What has since taken place has shown that their apprehensions were not groundless—that the danger was deep-seated, and wide-spread; and the end not yet.

CHAPTER CLXIV.

ONCLUSION OF GENERAL JACKSON'S ADMINIS-TRATION.

a motive in two of the assailants. Mr. Adams, in his work to justify the reproach of faction and iolence which they lavish upon such forms of overnment; but it will be by committing the listake of overlooking the broad features of a picture to find a blemish in the detail-disregarding a statesman's life to find a misstep; and shutting their eyes upon the action of the people. The mistakes and errors of public men are fairly shown in this work; and that might seem to justify the reproach: but the action of the people is immediately seen to come in, to correct every error, and to show the capacity of the people for wise and virtuous government. It would be tedious to enumerate the instances of this conservative supervision, so continually exemplified in the course of this history; but some eminent cases stand out too prominently to be overlooked. The recharter of the Bank of the United States was a favorite measure with politicians; the people rejected it; and the wisdom of their conduct is now universally admitted. The distribution of land and money was a favorite measure with politicians; the people condemned it and no one of those engaged in these distributions ever attained the presidency. President Jackson, in his last annual message to Congress, and in direct reference to this conservative action of the people, declared "that all that had occurred during his administration was calculated to inspire him with increased confidence in the stability of our institutions." I make the same declaration, founded upon the same view of the conduct of the people—upon the observation of their conduct in trying circumstances; and their uniform discernment to see, and virtue and patriotism to do, whatever the honor and interest of the country required. The work is full of consolation and encouragement to popular government; and in that point of view it may be safely referred to by the friends of that form of government. I have written veraciously and of acts, not of motives. I have shown a persevering attack upon President Jackson on the part of three eminent public men during his whole administration; but have made no attribution of motives. But another historian has not been so forbearing—one to whose testimony there can be no objection, either on account of bias, judgment, or information; and who, writing under the responsibility of history, has indicated a motive in two of the assailants. Mr. Adams, in his history of the administration of Mr. Monroe, gives an account of the attempt in the two Houses of Congress in 1818, to censure General Jackson for his conduct in the Semigress to procure a vote censuring the conduct of General Jackson, whose fast increasing popularity had, in all probability, already excited the envy of politicians. Mr. Clay and Mr. Calhoun in particular favored this movement; but the President himself, and Mr. Adams, the Secretary of State, who had charge of the Spanish negotiation, warmly espoused the cause of the American commander." This fear of a rising popularity was not without reason. There were proposals to bring General Jackson forward for the presidency in 1816, and in 1820; to which he would not listen, on account of his friendship to Mr. Monroe. A refusal to enter the canvass at those periods, and forthat reason, naturally threw him into it in 1824, when he would come into competition with those two gentlemen. Their opposition to him, therefore, dates back to the first term of Mr. Monroe's administration; that of Mr. Clay openly and responsibly; that of Mr. Calhoun secretly and deceptiously, as shown in the "Exposition." They were both of the same political party school with General

Jackson; and it was probably his rising to the head of that party which threw them both out of it. Mr. Webster's opposition arose from his political relations, as belonging to the opposite school; and was always more moderate, and better guarded by decorum. He even appeared, sometimes, as the justifier and supporter of President Jackson's measures; as in the well-known instance of South Carolina nullification. Mr. Clay's efforts were limited to the overthrow of President Jackson; Mr. Calhoun's extended to the overthrow of the Union, and to the establishment of a southern confederacy of the slave States. The subsequent volume will have to pursue this subject.

This chapter ends the view of the administration of President Jackson, promised to him in his lifetime, constituting an entire work in itself, and covering one of the most eventful periods of American history—as trying to the virtue and intelligence of the American people as was the war of the revolution to their courage and patriotism. RETIRING AND DEATH OF

The second and last term o son's presidency expired on the 1837. The next day, at twel with his successor, Mr. Van Bu rated and spacious eastern porti as one of the citizens who came inaguration of the new Preside distinguished from them, except the left hand of the President was beautiful—clear sky, baln tranquil atmosphere; -and the mense. On foot, in the large a the steps, orderly without troo wedged together, their faces tur tico-presenting to the beholder eastern windows the appearance with human faces. This vast cr nveted to their places, and prof until the ceremony of inaugurat It was the stillness and silence of affection; and there was no room to whom this mute and impressiv rendered. For once, the rising w the setting sun. Though disrol and retiring to the shades of priva evident that the great ex-Presiden wrbing object of this intense reg moment he began to descend the b the portico to take his seat in the which was to bear him away, the de beling of the dense mass brook for ions and cheers bursting from th lling the air—such as power never or man in power received. It was on gratitude, and admiration of th luting for the last time a great m he acclaim of posterity, breakin osoms of contemporaries. It was tion of futurity-unpurchasable tis rising to the them both out arose from his to the opposite moderate, and even appeared, as in the well-na nullification d to the overt. Calhoun's exe Union, and to confederacy of ent volume will the administramised to him in tire work in itost eventful petrying to the American people in to their cour-

CHAPTER CLXV.

RETIRING AND DEATH OF GENERAL JACKSON-ADMINISTRATION OF MARTIN VAN BUREN.

THE second and last term of General Jackson's presidency expired on the 3d of March, 1837. The next day, at twelve, he appeared with his successor, Mr. Van Buren, on the elerated and spacious eastern portico of the capitol, as one of the citizens who came to witness the inaguration of the new President, and no way distinguished from them, except by his place on the left hand of the President elect. The day was beautiful-clear sky, balmy vernal sun, tranquil atmosphere; -and the assemblage immense. On foot, in the large area in front of the steps, orderly without troops, and closely wedged together, their faces turned to the portico-presenting to the beholders from all the eastern windows the appearance of a field paved with human faces. This vast crowd remained riveted to their places, and profoundly silent, until the ceremony of inauguration was over. It was the stillness and silence of reverence and affection; and there was no room for mistake as to whom this mute and impressive homage was rendered. For once, the rising was eclipsed by the setting sun. Though disrobed of power. and retiring to the shades of private life, it was evident that the great ex-President was the abporbing object of this intense regard. At the moment he began to descend the broad steps of the portico to take his seat in the open carriage which was to bear him away, the deep repressed beling of the dense mass brook forth, acclamaons and cheers bursting from the heart and lling the air—such as power never commanded, or man in power received. It was the affecon, gratitude, and admiration of the living age, aluting for the last time a great man. It was acclaim of posterity, breaking from the osoms of contemporaries. It was the anticition of futurity—unpurchasable homage to the hero-patriot who, all his life, and in all circumstances of his life, in peace and in war, and glorious in each, had been the friend of his country, devoted to her, regardless of self. Uncovered, and bowing, with a look of unaffected humility and thankfulness, he acknowledged in mute signs his deep sensibility to this affecting overflow of popular feeling. I was looking down from a side window, and felt an emotion which had never passed through me before. I had seen the inauguration of many presidents, and their going away, and their days of state, vested with power, and surrounded by the splendors of the first magistracy of a great republic. But they all appeared to be as pageants, empty and soulless, brief to the view, unreal to the touch, and soon to vanish. But here there seemed to be a reality—a real scene—a man and the people he, laying down power and withdrawing through the portals of everlasting fame; -they, sounding in his ears the everlasting plaudits of unborn generations. Two days after, I saw the patriot ex-President in the car which bore him off to his desired seclusion. I saw him depart with that look of quiet enjoyment which bespoke the inward satisfaction of the soul at exchanging the cares of office for the repose of home. History, poetry, oratory, marble and brass, will hand down the military exploits of Jackson: this work will commemorate the events of his civil administration, not less glorious than his military achievements, great as they were; and this brief notice of his last appearance at the American capital is intended to preserve some faint memory of a scene, the grandeur of which was so impressive to the beholder, and the solace of which must have been so grateful to the heart of the departing patriot.

Eight years afterwards he died at the Hermitage, in the full possession of all his faculties, and strong to the last in the ruling passion of his soul—love of country. Public history will do justice to his public life; but a further notice is wanted of him—a notice of the domestic man—of the man at home, with his wife, his friends, his neighbors, his slaves; and this I feel some qualification for giving, from my long and varied acquaintance with him. First, his intimate and early friend—then a rude rupture—afterwards friendship and intimacy for twenty years, and until his death: in all forty years of personal observation, in the double relation of friend and foe, and in all the walks of life, public and private, civil and military.

The first time that I saw General Jackson was at Nashville, Tennessee, in 1799-he on the bench, a judge of the then Superior Court, and I a youth of seventeen, back in the crowd. He was then a remarkable man, and had his ascendant over all who approached him, not the effect of his high judicial station, nor of the senatorial rank which he had held and resigned; nor of military exploits, for he had not then been to war; but the effect of personal qualities; cordial and graceful manners, hospitable temper, elevation of mind, undaunted spirit, generosity, and perfect integrity. In charging the jury in the impending case, he committed a slight solecism in language which grated on my ear, and lodged on my memory, without derogating in the least from the respect which he inspired; and without awakening the slightest suspicion that I was ever to be engaged in smoothing his diction. The first time I spoke with him was some years after, at a (then) frontier town in Tennessee, when he was returning from a Southern visit, which brought him through the towns and camps of some of the Indian tribes, In pulling off his overcoat, I perceived on the white lining of the turning down sleeve, a dark speck, which had life and motion. I brushed it off, and put the heel of my shoe upon it-little thinking that I was ever to brush away from him game of a very different kind. He smiled; and we began a conversation in which he very quickly revealed a leading trait of his character,-that of encouraging young men in their laudable pursuits. Getting my name and parentage, and learning my intended profession, he manifested a regard for me, said he had received hospitality at my father's house in North Carolina, gave me kind invitations to visit him; and expressed a belief that I would do well at the bar—generous words which had the effect of promoting what they undertook to foretell. Soon after, he had further opportunity to show his generous feelings. I was employed in a criminal case of great magnitude, where the oldest and ablest counsel appeared—Haywood, Grundy, Whiteside,—and the trial of which General Jackson attended through concern for the fate of a friend. As junior counsel I had to precede my elders, and did my best; and, it being on the side of his feelings, he found my effort to be better than it was. He complimented me greatly, and from that time our intimacy began

I soon after became his aid, he being a Major General in the Tennessee militia-made so by a majority of one vote. How much often depends upon one vote !- New Orleans, the Creek campaign, and all their consequences, date from that one vote !--and after that, I was habitually at his house; and, as an inmate, had opportunities to know his domestic life, and at the period when it was least understood and most misrepresented. He had resigned his place on the bench of the Superior Court, as he had previously resigned his place in the Senate of the United States, and lived on a superb estate of some thousand acres, twelve miles from Nashville, then hardly known by its subsequent famous name of the Hermitage-name chosen for its perfect accord with his feelings; for he had then actually withdrawn from the stage of public life, and from a state of feeling well known to belong to great talent when finding no theatre for its congenial employment. He was a careful farmer, overlooking every thing himself, seeing that the fields and fences were in good order, the stock well attended, and the slaves comfortably provided for. His house was the seat of hospitality, the resort of friends an acquaintances, and of all strangers visiting th State-and the more agreeable to all from the perfect conformity of Mrs. Jackson's character to his own. But he needed some excitemen beyond that which a farming life can afford an found it, for some years, in the animating sport of the turf. He loved fine horses-racers speed and bottom-owned several, and contest ed the four mile heats with the best that coul be bred, or brought to the State, and for large sums. That is the nearest to gaming that ever knew him to come. C pit have been imputed to hi ously. I never saw him Duels were usual in that til share of them, with their u tants; but they passed away mosities, and he has often pressing the advancement of he had but lately been arratility.

His temper was placable a and his reconciliations were Of that, my own case was After a deadly feud, I becan adviser; was offered the hig favor, and received from his sage of friendship, dictated parting, and when he would breath. There was a deep-se in him, unaffectedly showing ence for divine worship, respec of the gospel, their hospitabl house, and constant encourage pious tendencies of Mrs. Jack they both afterwards becam church, it was the natural and their early and cherished feelin tle in his house, and alive to th tions; and of this, I can give an in contrast with his suppose worth more than a long disco what that character really wa his house one wet chilly even and came upon him in the twili before the fire, a lamb and a ch nees. He started a little, call remove the two innocents to an explained to me how it was, cried because the lamb was out begged him to bring it in-wh to please the child, his adopte two years old. The ferocious m that! and though Jackson had I his violence, they were for men those who stood up against hin women and children, or the weal for all whom his feelings were tl tion and support. His hospital as well as cordial, embracing t every walk of life, and seeking objects to receive it, no matter Of this, I learned a characterist ever knew him to come. Cards and the cockpit have been imputed to him, but most erroneously. I never saw him engaged in either. Duels were usual in that time, and he had his share of them, with their unpleasant concomitants; but they passed away with all their animosities, and he has often been seen zealously pressing the advancement of those against whom he had but lately been arrayed in deadly hostility.

Vol. I.-47

visit him; and do well at the

the effect of

o foretell. Soon

y to show his

yed in a crimi-

here the oldest ywood, Grundy.

which General

ern for the fate

I had to pre-

t; and, it being and my effort to mplimented me

intimacy began.

e being a Major ia-made so by much often de-

·leans, the Creek

ences, date from

I.was habitually

, had opportuni-

and at the period

and most misrep-

ais place on the

as he had previ-

ne Senate of the superb estate of niles from Nash-

r its subsequent ge-name chosen

feelings; for he

from the stage of

e of feeling well

ent when finding employment. He

king every thing

and fences were attended, and the

r. His house was sort of friends and

ngers visiting th

le to all from the

ickson's character

some excitemen

life can afford, an e animating sport

horses-racers

veral, and contes

he best that coul

tate, and for larg

to gaming that

His temper was placable as well as irascible, and his reconciliations were cordial and sincere. Of that, my own case was a signal instance. After a deadly feud, I became his confidential adviser; was offered the highest marks of his favor, and received from his dying bed a message of friendship, dictated when life was departing, and when he would have to pause for breath. There was a deep-seated vein of piety in him, unaffectedly showing itself in his reverence for divine worship, respect for the ministers of the gospel, their hospitable reception in his house, and constant encouragement of all the pious tendencies of Mrs. Jackson. And when they both afterwards became members of a church, it was the natural and regular result of their early and cherished feelings. He was gentle in his house, and alive to the tenderest emotions; and of this, I can give an instance, greatly in contrast with his supposed character, and worth more than a long discourse in showing what that character really was. I arrived at his house one wet chilly evening, in February, and came upon him in the twilight, sitting alone before the fire, a lamb and a child between his mees. He started a little, called a servant to remove the two innocents to another room, and explained to me how it was. The child had cried because the lamb was out in the cold, and begged him to bring it in-which he had done to please the child, his adopted son, then not two years old. The ferocious man does not do that! and though Jackson had his passions and his violence, they were for men and enemiesthose who stood up against him-and not for women and children, or the weak and helpless: for all whom his feelings were those of protection and support. His hospitality was active as well as cordial, embracing the worthy in every walk of life, and seeking out deserving objects to receive it, no matter how obscure.

relation to the son of the famous Daniel Boone. The young man had come to Nashville on his father's business, to be detained som weeks and had his lodgings at a small taver towards the lower part of the town. General Jackson heard of it; sought him out; found him; took him home to remain as long as his business detained him in the country, saying, "Your father's dog should not stay in a tavern, where I have a house." This was heart! and I had it from the young man himself, long after, when he was a State Senator of the General Assembly of Missouri, and, as such, nominated me for the United States Senate, at my first election, in 1820: an act of hereditary friendship, as our fathers had been early friends.

Abhorrence of debt, public and private, dislike of banks, and love of hard money-love of justice and love of country, were ruling passions with Jackson; and of these he gave constant evidence in all the situations of his life. Of private debts he contracted none of his own, and made any sacrifices to get out of those incurred for others. Of this he gave a signal instance, not long before the war of 1812-selling the improved part of his estate, with the best buildings of the country upon it, to pay a debt incurred in a mercantile adventure to assist a young relative; and going into log-houses in the forest to begin a new home and farm. He was living in these rude tenements when he vanquished the British at New Orleans; and, probably, a view of their conqueror's domicile would have astonished the British officers as much as their defeat had done. He was attached to his friends, and to his country, and never believed any report to the discredit of either, until compelled by proof. He would not believe in the first reports of the surrender of General Hull, and became sad and oppressed when forced to believe it. He never gave up a friend in a doubtful case, or from policy, or calculation. He was a firm believer in the goodness of a superintending Providence, and in the eventua, right judgment and justice of the people. I have seen him at the most desperate part of his fortunes, and never saw him waver in the belief that all would come right in the end. In the time of Cromwell he would have been a puritan.

werey walk of life, and seeking out deserving objects to receive it, no matter how obscure.

Of this, I learned a characteristic instance in tion, followed by an instant and decisive action.

presented a more quiet, ch

management of her house education, but she had a he and that was always lead

things in the kindest man

General's own warm heart.

hospitable temper; and no

have been better suited t

more happily together, or 1 attractive to visitors. She rare one-of retaining nan throng of visitors, addressing priately, and dispensing hos

a cordiality which enhance bashful youth, or plain old n

sat them down at the lowe

could escape her cordial as

than the titled gentlemen on Young persons were her deli

had her house filled with th

women and clever young men

fectionately, "Aunt Rachel."

and was one of that number.

It was that which made him a General, and a President for the time in which he served. He had vigorous thoughts, but not the faculty of arranging them in a regular composition, either written or spoken; and in formal papers he usually gave his draft to an aid, a friend, or a secretary, to be written over-often to the loss of vigor. But the thoughts were his own vigorously expressed; and without effort, writing with a rapid pen, and never blotting or altering; but, as Carlyle says of Cromwell, hitting the nail upon the head as he went. I have a great deal of his writing now, some on public affairs and covering several sheets of paper; and no erasures or interlineations anywhere. His conversation was like his writing, a vigorous flowing current, apparently without the trouble of thinking, and always impressive. His conclusions were rapid, and immovable, when he was under strong convictions; though often yielding, on minor points, to his friends. And no man yielded quicker when he was convinced; perfectly illustrating the difference between firmness and obstinacy. Of all the Presidents who have done me the honor to listen to my opinions, there was no one to whom I spoke with more confidence when I felt myself strongly to be in the right.

He had a load to carry all his life; resulting from a temper which refused compromises and bargaining, and went for a clean victory or a clean defeat, in every case. Hence, every step he took was a contest: and, it may be added, every contest was a victory. I have already said that he was elected a Major General in Tennessee—an election on which so much afterwards depended -by one vote. His appointment in the United States regular army was a conquest from the administration, which had twice refused to appoint him a Brigadier, and once disbanded him as a volunteer general, and only yielded to his militia victories. His election as President was a victory over politicians—as was every leading event of his administration.

I have said that his appointment in the regular army was a victory over the administration, and it belongs to the inside view of history, and to the illustration of government mistakes, and the elucidation of individual merit surmounting obstacles, to tell how it was. Twice passed by togive preference to two others in the West (General Harrison and General Winchester), once disbanded, and omitted in all the lists of military nominations, how did he get at last to be appointed Major General? It was thus Congress had passed an act authorizing the President to accept organized corps of volunteers. I proposed to General Jackson to raise a corns under that act, and hold it ready for service. He did so; and with this corps and some militia. he defeated the Creek Indians, and gained the reputation which forced his appointment in the regular army. I drew up the address which he made to his division at the time, and when I carried it to him in the evening, I found the child and the lamb between his knees. He had not thought of this resource, but caught at it instantly, adopted the address, with two slight alterations, and published it to his division. I raised a regiment myself, and made the speeches at the general musters, which helped to raise two others, assisted by a small hand of friends-all feeling confident that if we could conquer the difficulty-master the first step-and get him upon the theatre of action, he would do the rest. himself. This is the way he got into the regular army, not only unselected by the wisdom of government, but rejected by it-a stone rejected by the master builders-and worked in by an unseen hand, to become the corner stone of the temple. The aged men of Tennessee will remember all this, and it is time that history should learn it. But to return to the private life and personal characteristics of this extraordinary man.

There was an innate, unvarying, self-acting delicacy in his intercourse with the female sex, including all womankind; and on that point my personal observation (and my opportunities for observation were both large and various), enables me to join in the declaration of the belief expressed by his earliest friend and most intimate associate, the late Judge Overton, of Tennessee. The Roman general won an immortality of honor by one act of continence; what praise is due to Jackson, whose whole life was continent? I repeat: if he had been born in the time of Cromwell, he would have been a puritan. Nothing could exceed his kindness and affection to Mrs. Jackson, always increasing in proportion as his elevation, and culminating fortunes, drew cruel attacks upon her. I knew her well, and that a more exemplary woman in all the relations of life, wife, friend, neighbor, relative, mistress of slaves-never lived, and never get at last to presented a more quiet, cheerful and admirable management of her household. She had not It was thus. education, but she had a heart, and a good one; horizing the and that was always leading her to do kind of volunteers. things in the kindest manner. She had the raise a corps General's own warm heart, frank manners and 7 for service. hospitable temper; and no two persons could some militia, have been better suited to each other, lived id gained the more happily together, or made a house more tment in the attractive to visitors. She had the faculty-a ress which he , and when I rare one-of retaining names and titles in a throng of visitors, addressing each one appro-. I found the priately, and dispensing hospitality to all with ees. He had a cordiality which enhanced its value. caught at it bashful youth, or plain old man, whose modesty th two slight sat them down at the lower end of the table, is division. I could escape her cordial attention, any more e the speeches than the titled gentlemen on her right and left. ed to raise two Young persons were her delight, and she always of friends-all had her house filled with them-clever young d conquer the women and clever young men-all calling her af--and get him fectionately, "Aunt Rachel." I was young then, ald do the rest and was one of that number. I owe it to early brance of one he had held so dear. into the reguthe wisdom of stone rejected ked in by an r stone of the recollections, and to cherished convictions-in this last notice of the Hermitage-to bear this faithful testimony to the memory of its long mistress—the loved and honored wife of a great man. Her greatest eulogy is in the affection which he bore her living, and in the sorrow with which he mourned her dead. She died at the moment of the General's first election to the Presidency; and every one that had a just petition to present, or charitable request to make, lost in her death, the surest channel to the ear and to the heart of the President. His regard for her survived, and lived in the persons of her nearest relatives. A nephew of hers was his adopted son and heir, taking his own name, and now the respectable master of the Hermitage. Another nephew, Andrew Jackson Donelson, Esq., was his private secretary when President. The Presidential mansion was presided over during his term by her niece, the most amiable Mrs. Donelson; and all his conduct bespoke affectionate and lasting rememng, self-acting the female sex, on that point 7 opportunities and various), tion of the beiend and most ze Overton, of won an immorntinence; what whole life was 1 been born in 1 have been a 1 his kindness ways increasing nd culminating n her. I knew olary woman in , neighbor, relaived, and never nessee will rethat history to the private f this extraor-

END OF VOLUME I.

A. B. Plot, The.—Charges against \(^1\) the A. B. papers, a series of artithe newspapers, 25; expectation matter would lie over until after the tion, 35; immediate action, 35; 35; answer of Crawford, 35; in written by, 35; proceeding in the fedwards, 36; his proceeding mittee, 86.

ADAMS, JOHN, decease of, 87; sketch ADAMS, JOHN QUINCY, Secretary of S tive to the unanimity of the cal question, 8; connection with th on internal improvements, 22; ca dency in 1824, 44; commencemen 54; his inaugural address, 54; grou the majority of the Senate opposed of the House opposed, 55; positio with regard to the President, 91; 92; organization of the committee President's message, 92; its notice gress, 92; the finances, 93; usele balance in the treasury, 93; member 93; array of business talent, 94; t men of speech and judgment, men speech, men of speech and no ju Committee of Bank Investigation, the slavery question, 636.

Afairs, how changed by the War of 18 quent aspect.-War of 1812, 1; n tance, 1; changes it produced in state of the finances and currency u gled, 1; its termination with respe gold ceased to be a currency, 1; silv banks, 1; suspension of specie pay notes resorted to, 1; depreciation, 1 Government, paralyzed by the sta forced to seek peace, 1; impressme declaration of the war, 1; first time that a war terminated by a treaty w as to its cause, 1; treaty of 1807, w President, 1; its importance, 1; th British Government that the people of would fight on the point of impressm ment since, 2; causes of the success of

INDEX TO VOL. I.

A

A. B. Plot, The.—Charges against Wm. H. Crawford, 35; the A. B. papers, a series of articles which appeared in the newspapers, 35; expectation of the accuser that the matter would lie over until after the Presidential election, 35; immediate action, 35; committee appointed, 35; answer of Crawford, 35; its character, 35; who written by, 35; proceeding in the case, 35; testimony of Edwards, 36; his proceedings, 36; report of committee, 36.

ADAMS, JOHN, decease of, 87; sketch of his character, 87. ADAMS, JOHN QUINCY, Secretary of State, 7; his diary relative to the unanimity of the cabinet on the Missouri question, 8; connection with the treaty of 1818, 15; on internal improvements, 22; candidate for the Presidency in 1824, 44; commencement of his administration, 54; his inaugural address, 54; grounds of opposition, 54; the majority of the Senate opposed, 55; strong minority of the House opposed, 55; position of the two Houses with regard to the President, 91; contest for Speaker, 92; organization of the committees, 92; contents of the President's message, 92; its notice of the Panama Congress, 92; the finances, 93; uselessness of retaining a balance in the treasury, 93; members of the two Houses, 98; array of business talent, 94; three classes of men: men of speech and judgment, men of judgment and no speech, men of speech and no judgment, 94; on the Committee of Bank Investigation, 241; his position on the slavery question, 636.

Afairs, how changed by the War of 1812, and their subsequent aspect.-War of 1812, 1; necessity and importance, 1; changes it produced in American policy, 1; state of the finances and currency under which it struggled, 1; its termination with respect to its causes, 1 gold ceased to be a currency, 1; silver banished, 1; local banks, 1; suspension of specie payments, 1; Treasury notes resorted to, 1; depreciation, 1; their use, 1; the Government, paralyzed by the state of the finances, forced to seek peace, 1; impressment the cause of the declaration of the war, 1; first time in modern history that a war terminated by a treaty without a stipulation as to its cause, 1; treaty of 1807, why rejected by the President, 1; its importance, 1; the war showed the British Government that the people of the United States would fight on the point of impressment, 2; no impressment since, 2; causes of the success of the war, in spite of the empty treasury, 2; exemption held by right and by might, 2; the financial lesson taught by the war, 2; the lesson when availed of, 2; its effects, 2.

The second Bank grew out of the war, 2; currency of the constitution not thought of, 2; national bank re garded as the only remedy, 2; its constitutionality, 2; the word "necessary," 2; Hamilton's grounds for a bank, 2; difficulties of the finances during the second war ascribed to the want of a bank, 3; concessions of its old opponents, 3; many subsequently convinced the constitutional currency had not had a fair trial, 3; national bank shown to be unnecessary by the Mexican war, 3; constitutional question decided, 3.

Protection of American industry as a substantive object grew out of the war, 3; incidental protection always acknowledged and granted, 3; domestic manufactures wanted, during the non-importation period of the embargo and hostilities, 3; want of articles of defence felt during the war; 3; protection for the sake of protection carried in 1816, 3; course of legislation reversed, 3.

Question of internal improvements developed by the war, 3; want of facilities for transportation felt in military operations, 8; the power claimed as an incident to the greatest powers, 3; found in the word "necessary," 8; complicated the national legislation from 1820 to 1850, 3; the question does not extend to territories, 4; no political rights under the constitution, 4; rivers and harbors—internal improvement of based on the commercial and revenue clause, 4; the restriction contended for, 4.

Boundaries between the treaty-making power and the legislative departments a subject of examination, 4; the broad proposition, 4; the qualification, 4; a vital one, 4; which department to judge of encroachments by the other? 4; discussions in Congress, between 1815 and 1820, on this point, 4.

The doctrine of secession was born of the war of 1812, 4; the design imputed to the Hartford Convention, 4; its existence raised the question, 4; the right then repudiated by the democracy, 4; language "especting it then south of the Potomac, 4; the question thus far compromised, not settled, 5.

Slavery agitation took its rise about 1819, 5; manner in which it was then quieted, 5; the compromise a clear gain to the anti-slavery side, 5; a southern measure, 5 its features, 5.

Debt created by the war, 5; amount of the public debt at its close, 5; the problem to be solved was whether a public debt could be paid in time of peace, 5.

Public distress becomes a prominent feature of subsequent years, 5; expansion and collapse of the bank, 5; gloom of 1619 and 1820, 5; commercial proceedings, 5; legislative proceedings, 5; distress the cry—relief the demand, 6: good results of the war, 6, Amendment of the Constitution .- Mistakes of European writers on our system of Government, 87; Thiers and De Tocqueville, 87: the electors but an instrument to obey the will of the people, 87; electors useless, 87; amendment proposed, 87: views of the convention which framed the constitution, 87: Benton's remarks on a direct vote of the people for President, 87: "evil of the want of uniformity in the choice of Presidential electors endangers the rights of the people, 87; the district system, 88; origin of the general ticket system in 10 States, 88; objection to a direct vote of the people considered, 88: whence it is taken, 89: admit its truth. what then? 89; better officers elected, 89; ancient history, 89: triumph of popular elections, 89: other objections to intermediate electors, 40; time and experience condemn the continuance of the electoral system, 40: even if the plan of the constitution had not failed, it is better to get rid of the electors, 40; historical examples, 41."

An attempt to give the election of President and Vice-President to the direct vote of the people, 78; various propositions offered, 78; committee appointed to report, 78; plan reported by the committee. 78; its prominent features, 79; abolition of the electors and direct vote of the people—a second election between the two highes—uniformity in the mode of election, 79; advantages of the plan, 79.

Exclusion of Members of Congress from Civil Office appointments. - Inquiry into the expediency of amending the Constitution so as to exclude members from anpointment to civil office moved, 82; motion only applied to the term for which they were elected, 82; committee report that the exclusion should extend to the Presidential term during which the member was elected, 83; proceedings of the convention that framed the constitution, 83; other conventions, 83; extracts from the proceedings of Federal Convention, 88; early jealousy on this point, 88; provisions for the independence of the two Houses, 83; instance of the observance of these provisions, 84; instance of the contrary, 84; the Constitutional limitation a small restraint, 84: views of the "Federalist," 84; what has been the working of the Government? 85; the effects of legislation, 85; other evils resulting from the appointment of members to office, 85; the independence of the departments ceases between the Executive and Legislative, 86; examples of early Presidents, 86.

ANDERSON, RICHARD C., Jun., Representative from Kentucky, 7; nominated minister to Panama, 66.

appropriation for Defences and Fortification Bill.—Preparation recommended in the message, 554; referred and reported on, 554; resolved unanimously that the treaty with France be maintained and its execution insisted on, 554; and that preparations ought to be made to meet any emergency, 554; appropriation of three millions inserted in the Fortification bill, 554; rejected in the Senate, 564; House insist, 554; Senate adhere, 554; remarks of Mr. King, of Alabama, 554; this motion never resorted to until more gentle means have failed, $$94; are gentlemen prepared to take upon themselves such a fearful responsibility as the rejection of this bill? 554; in what does it violate the constitution 555; appropriations under Washington's administration, 555; adherence carried, 555; conference asked by the House, 555; committees disagree, 555; question as to the hour of the termination of the session, 555; remark of Mr. Cambreleng, 556; responsibility put on the Senate, 556.

Archer, William S., Representative from Virginia, 7; on reference of the bank memorial to a select committee, 284.

Arkansas Territory, cession of a part of to the Cherokees—Reasons for making her a first-class State, 107; t treaty negotiated altering the western boundary, 107; can a law of Congress be abolished by an Indian treaty? 107; is it expedient to weaken the future State? 107; supremacy of the treaty-making power considered, 107; power in Congress to dispose of territory, 108; the treaty ratified, 108; a southern measure, 108; twelve thousand square miles taken off of slave territory, 108; object to assist in inducing the removal of the Cherokees, 108; what became of the white inhabitants, 109; bought by the government, 109.

Arkansas and Michigan, admission of.—Application for an enabling act, 627; Congress refuse to passit, 627; people hold conventions on their own authority and form constitutions, 627; message communicating the constitution of Michigan, 627; referred, also a memorial entitled from the "Legislature of Michigan," 627; objection to its title, 628; bill reported, 628; objections, 628; remarks of Mr. Buchanan, 628; bill passed and sent to the House, 628; the practice of admitting a free and a slave State together, 629.

Application of Arkansas taken up, 629; remarks of Mr. Swift against the admission, on the ground of slavery, 629; do. of Mr. Buchanan in favor of her admission, 629; Prentiss opposes the admission on the ground of the revolutionary manner in which the State had held her convention, 630; remarks of Mr. Morris, 630; bill passed and sent to the House, 631.

Moved in the House to postuone the Michigan to take up the Arkansas bill, 631; remarks of Mr. Thomas, 631; the point of jealousy between some Southern and Northern members revealed, 681; remarks on the motion to refer both bills and combine them in one, 631; Lewis's remarks on giving the Arkansas bill the priority of decision, 632; Turther debate, 633; bills referred to the Committee of the Whole, 684; points of the debate-Firsts the formation of constitutions without the previous assent of Congress; Second, the right of aliens to vote before naturalization; Third, the right of Arkansas to be admitted with slavery by virtue of the rights of a State -of the treaty of Louisiana and of the Missouri Compromise, 684, 685, 686; an account of the session of twenty-four hours, 686; bill put to vote, 637; struggle to bring the bills to a vote not to pass them, 687; causes 637; one special one, 637.

ASTOR, JOHN JACOB.—His colony at Astoria, 18, 109. AUSTIN, MOSES, founder of the Texas Colony, 674.

F

Baldwin, Henry, Representative from Pennsylvania, 7; coadjutor with Clay on the Missouri question, 10; appointed Justice of the Supreme Court, 120.

Bank of the United States.—When charter of first expired, 1; origin of the second, 2; its course in 1819, 5.

Constitutionality and expediency called in question it General Jackson's first message, 158; suggestion of our founded on the credit and revenues of the Government 188; a gold currency and an in gested to General Jackson, an cause of a resort to the deposit.
government fiscal agent stigmat mittees, 188; war of the bank cance with the opposition, 188; i of its president, 150; its power banks, 150.

Ceaseless activity in behalf President's message in 1829, 187 side, 187; current all setting of attempts to counteract it, 187; p duce a resolution against the re the occasion, showing that the i power over the people and the g ness and politics; and dispose freedom and equality, 187; pro rency of the constitution, 187 currency of the government l intended by the constitution," paper left to the State government France and England, 187; a hard paper party, 187; justification for question of renewal, 188; the re lutions offered at the close of favor of renewal, 188; then fol President Jackson, 188; its refe 188; the conduct of the bank ground for justification, 188; the example drawn from the Britis marks of Sir Henry Parnell, 189; of Mr. Edward Ellice, 189; do. o 190; it is said the debate will in depreciate the value of their pr wrong to sport with vested rights know the facts and such assertio stitution has forfeited its charter; hour, 190; the case of the Bank mentary rule requiring members an interest in the subject of discn

The bank is an institution too of be tolerated in a government of 191; on renewal, its direct power boundless and uncontrollable, 19 and issue ninety millions, 191; its whom is all this power granted? If exercised? 191; it will become the of American money, 191; what ha ain in 1736, 192; letter of the bit 192; condition of Great Britain at dued the minister to the purposes twenty years the bank was the doi land, 192; cannot the Bank of the the same way 1 192

Its tendencies are dangerous as government and the people, 192 mischief, 192, 193

The exclusive privileges and ant ely which it gives the stockholder legal privileges it gives, 193; tweltheir effect and bearing, 194; compleank of England for undrawn bala undrawn balances, 194; injury suffer on account of tife uncompensate money in the hands of the bank, indisparage the notes of all other bank from the collection of the revenue, bold real estate, receive rents, &c. vast capacity to acquire and legal 1

e constitution administration, asked by the question as to n, 555; remark put on the Sen-

Virginia, 7; on lect committee, the Cherokees s State, 107; a boundary, 107; a Indian treaty? "uve State? 107; considered, 107; itory, 108; the ire, 108; twelve re territory, 108; al of the Cheroinhabitants, 109;

-Application for to pass it, 627; n authority and nmunicating the , also a memorial ;higan," 627; ob-628; objections, bill passed and admitting a free

629; remarks of the ground of favor of her adidmission on the which the State ks of Mr. Morris, 631.

Michigan to take Mr. Thomas, 681; e Southern and narks on the mo hem in one, 681; as bill the priority bills referred to ts of the debaterithout the previright of aliens to right of Arkansas of the rights of a d of the Missouri t of the session of rote, 637; struggle them, 687; causes, ia, 13, 109. ny, 674.

Pennsylvania, 7; question, 10; ap-1, 120. er of first expired, in 1819, 5. alled in question is suggestion of one f the Government 158; a gold currency and an independent treasury suggested to General Jackson, and approved at once, 158; cause of a resort to the deposit system, 158; the idea of a government fiscal agent stigmatized, 158; reports of committees, 158; war of the bank commenced, 158; its alliance with the opposition, 158; its power, 158; statement of its president, 159; its power to ruin and destroy local banks, 159.

Ceaseless activity in behalf of the bank, since the President's message in 1829, 187; little done on the other side, 187; current all setting one way, 187; failure of attempts to counteract it, 187; permission asked to introduce a resolution against the re-charter, 187; speech on the occasion, showing that the institution had too much power over the people and the government-over business and politics; and disposed to exercise it against freedom and equality, 187; proposal to revive the currency of the constitution, 187; "willing to see the currency of the government left to the hard money intended by the constitution," 187; every species of paper left to the State governments, 187; experience of France and England, 187; a hard money party against a paper party, 187; justification for bringing forward the question of renewal, 188; the reports on previous resolutions offered at the close of each session and all in favor of renewal, 188; then followed the message of President Jackson, 188; its reference, 188; report, etc., 188; the conduct of the bank and its friends second ground for justification, 188; these proceedings, 189; an example drawn from the British Parliament, 189; remarks of Sir Henry Parnell, 189; do. of Mr. Hume, 189; do. of Mr. Edward Ellice, 189; do. of Sir William Pulteney, 190; it is said the debate will injure the stockholders, depreciate the value of their property, and that it is wrong to sport with vested rights, 190; the stockholders know the facts and such assertions absurd, 190; the institution has forfeited its charter and may be shut up any hour, 190; the case of the Bank vs. Owens, 190; parliamentary rule requiring members to withdraw who have an interest in the subject of discussion, 191.

The bank is an institution too great and powerful to be tolerated in a government of free and equal laws, 191; on renewal, its direct power must speedily become boundless and uncontrollable, 191; authorized to own and issue ninety millions, 191; its indirect power, 191; to whom is all this power granted? 191; by whom is it to be exercised? 191; it will become the absolute monopalist of American money, 191; what happened in Great Britain in 1795, 192; letter of the bank directors to Pitt, 199; condition of Great Britain at that time, 192; it subdued the minister to the purposes of the bank, 192; for twenty years the bank was the dominant power in England, 192; cannot the Bank of the United States act in the same way? 192

Its tendencies are dangerous and pernicious to the government and the people, 192; the heads of each mischief, 192, 193.

The exclusive privileges and anti-republican monopoly which it gives the stockholders, 193; the exclusive legal privileges it gives, 193; twelve enumerated, 194; their effect and bearing, 194; compensation made by the Bank of England for undrawn balances, 194; amount of undrawn balances, 194; injury suffered by the people on account of the uncompensated masses of public money in the hands of the bank, 195; to discredit and disparage the notes of all other banks by excluding them from the collection of the revenue, 196; the power to hold real estate, receive rents, &c., 197; effect of this vast capacity to acquire and legal power to retain real estate, 197; the power to deal in pawns, merchandise, and bills of exchange, 198; to establish branches in the different States without their consent and in defiance of their resistance, 199; exemption of the stockholders from individual liability, 199; to have the United States for a partner, 200; extract from the speech of Pulteney, 200; amount of stock owned by foreigners, 201; exemptions from due course of law for violations of its charter, 201; these privileges secured by a pledge of the public faith to charter no other bank, 202; the government from which we have made this copy has condemned the original, 202; correspondence between the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Bank directors, 203; how was this Babylon prostrated? 204; effect of the speech, 204; how it was received, 204; leave refused, 205.

Statement that the bank has failed in furnishing a uniform currency, 220; it vicious and illegal currency, 220; origin of the practice, 220; leave to bring in a resolution declaring it illegal asked for, 220; reasons, 220; "the resolution expresses its own object, 221; the currency arraigned, 221; the points of incompatibility between this currency and the requisites of the charter, 221; fourteen points stated, 221; the currency fails at every test, 221; these orders cannot serve as currency because they are subject to the law of endorsed paper, 222; being once paid they are done with, 222; operations of the bank in 1817, 222; origin of the branch bank orders, 223; this currency ought to be suppressed, 228; the fact of illegality sufficient to require it, 223; pernicious consequences result from it. 223; the branch bank orders are not payable in the States in which they are issued, 223; practice of the Bank of Ireland, 224; leave refused, 224.

Message of the President in 1829-30, 224; its remarks relative to the bank, 224; the position of the constitutional question, 224; the democracy opposed not only the bank but the latitudinarian construction which would authorize it, 225; it was the turning point between a strong and splendid government on one side and a plain economical government on the other, limited by a written constitution, 225; the construction was the main point, 225; effect of the message on the democracy of the country, 225; the contest at hand, 225; violent attacks upon the President, 226; remark of M. Tocqueville on President Jackson and the bank, 226; every word an error, 226; examined, 226; application for a renewal of the charter when and why made, 226; action of friends of Jackson and the bank, 227; memorial for fenewal presented, 227; course of events, 227; error of De Tocqueville exposed, 228; another extract, 228; its errors exposed, 229; consequences of refusing the re-charter, 229.

Re-charter.—Convention of the National Republicans to nominate a President, 232; the nominations, 232; addresses of the convention, 232; remarks relative the bank, 232; "its beneficial character, 232; no pretext of any adequate motive is assigned for the President's denunciation, 233; are the people ready to destroy one of their most valuable institutions to gratify the caprice of the President's 233."

The Bank question presented as an issue of the enection by its friends, 238; two classes of friends, 238; one friends of the President, the other against him, 233; how the consent of the former was obtained, 238; memorial for re-charter presented, 238; referred to a select committee in the Senate, 238; referred to the Committee of Ways and Means in the House, 238; reason of the difference, 238; motion to refer to a select committee, 234 remarks, 234; this measure entirely disconnected from the Baltimore convention, 234; "a select committee the proper one, 234; the course in such cases, 234; the question should not be taken up at this session, 234; the stockholders left the application discretionary with the directors, 255; it will divide the whole country, 235; the bank has been charged with using its funds and those of the people in operating upon and controlling public opinion, 235; this of sufficient consequence to demand an accurate inquiry, 235; charged with violating its charter, 235; other charges, 235; memorial referred to Committee of Ways and Means, 235.

Investigation ordered,-Course necessary to be pursued by the opposition, 285; to prepare the people to sustain the veto, 235; policy of the bank leaders, 286; reasons for taking up the investigation in the House 236; motion for inquiry made, 286; manner in which the motion was treated, 236; resistance to investigation, 286: "a re-charter is asked, vet the friends of the bank shrink from inquiry, 286; the inference which might be drawn from this resistance, 287; what is the ground of opposition? 287; how the memorial was treated in the other House, 287; result of the examination in 1819, 287; three years after it went into existence, it was on the verge of bankruptey, 287;" right of either House to make the inquiry, 287; the misconduct of the bank in numerous instances, 237; list of accusations against the bank, 238; the friends of the bank obliged to leclare in favor of examination, 238; modes of inves-Agation proposed, 289; restrictions proposed to the injuiry, 289; remarks upon the manner in which the probosed inquiry has been treated by the House, 289; remarks on modes adopted by the bank for extorting usury, 240; another mode makes the loan take the form of a domestic bill from the beginning, 240; effect of the debate on the bank with the country, 240; speakers against the bank, 240; advocates of the bank, 241; the Committee of Investigation, 241; its composition, 241; three reports, 241; their character, 241,

The three per cent. debt.—This a portion of the revolutionary debt standing at sixty-four, 242; money in the bank to pay it, 242; the money retained to sustain the bank and the debt not paid until it rose to par, 242; remarks on the course of the bank, 242; the loss to the people, 243.

Bill for re-charter reported .- Remarks relative to previous charters, 243; former course of Webster, 248; his defence of his present position, 243; "the years that have passed, 248; the effects of experience, 248; action of Calhoun in procuring the present charter, 244; the vote of Webster against it, 244; his views, 244; evils of a disordered currency, 244; the small note currency cause of the small amount of specie in the country, 244; the grant of exclusive privileges and the bonus required opposed, 245; remarks upon them, 245; the present application of the bank opposed, 245; "some years before the charter expires, 245; now late in the session, 245; not time to do justice to the subject, 245; other subjects of more immediate and pressing interest must be thrown aside, 245; an unfinished investigation presents another reason for delaying the final action of Congress on this subject, 245; the people have no opportunity to make up their minds on the information now printed, 246 this question belongs to the Congress elected within the next census, 246; looks like usurpation on the part of this Congress, 246; different representation in the next Congress, 246; a charter should be granted with as little invasion of the rights of posterity as possible, 246; this question must effect the presidential election if not decide it, 246; take a lesson from the monarchial parlla ment of England, 247."

A motion declaratory of the right of the States to ad mit or deny the establishment of branches of the mother bank within their limits, offered, 247; remarks, 247; "if this amendment is struck out it is tantamount to a legislative declaration that no such rights existed, 247; decision of the Supreme Court on the right of the States to tax the branches, 247; this is the supremacy of the bank and the degradation of the States, 247; the argument that these branches are necessary to enable the Federal Government to carry on its fiscal operations and therefore ought to be independent of State legislation, is answered by the determination of Congress it. self, 247; every thing is left to the bank itself except the branch at this place, 247; the establishment of branches is a mere question of profit and loss to the bank, 247; point of the question, 247; motion rejected.

Motion to strike out the exclusive privileges and to make the stockholders liable, 248; "example of the Scottish banks, 248; the excellence of their plan, 248, clauses granting exclusive privileges, 248; the establishment of any other bank by the United States prohibited during the existence of the charter, 248; this is contray to the genius of our Government, 249; the restriction upon future Congresses is at war with every principle of constitutional right and legislative equality 249; is this Congress to impose restrictions upon the power of their successors? 249; in nine months this Congress is defunct, 249; the renewed charter will not take effect till three years after the full representation of the Lexi Congress in power, 249."

All amendments proposed by the opponents of the bank voted down, 250; the interest of members of the Senate as stockholders, 250; bill passed in the Senate and House, 250.

The Veto .- " If this government sells exclusive privileges, it should at least exact for them as much as they are worth in the market, 251; the present value of the mone oly is seventeen millions, and the act proposes to sell it for three, 251; how can the present stockholders have any claim to the special favor of the Government? 251; this act does not permit competition in the purchase of this monopoly, 251; not just to set others aside and grant this privilege to the few who have been fortunate enough to secure the stock, 251; " the force of precedents for constitutionality argued against, 252; decision of the Supreme Court, 252; examined 252; remarks, 252; "precedence is a dangerous source of authority, and should not be regarded as deciding questions of constitutional power except where the acquiescence of the people and the States is well settled, 258; precedents are really against the bank, 258; if the opinion of the Supreme Court covered the whole ground of this act, it ought not to control the coordinate authorities of this Government, 253; in the case relied on, the Supreme Court have not decided that all the features of this corporation are compatible with the constitution, 258; the misconduct of the institution, both in conducting its business and in resisting investigation, 258; suspicions are entertained and charges made of gross violations of the charter, 253; the recommend tion of a majority of the committee, 258; additional reason for less haste and more caution, 253."

The great speeches from the advocates of the bash now made to repel the effects of the veto, 254; a masfer of the question to the political arena, 254; to the presidential election, 254; frightful distress predicted and a change of the chief magistrate the only means d

averting the calamity, 254; r point, 254; remarks of Whit lead of a political party, 254; Clayton, 254; the winding up to time, 255; case of the prev distress from the bank if den tuitous, 255; vehement dech 255; remarks of Clay on the Benton, 255; objects of the v 256; "the fable of the cat and bate the bank question, now it it before? 257; the bank is now? 257; the bank is in th mendous combatant in the p the Great West is selected as tions, 257; ruin is to be the if she votes for Jackson, 257; created for electioneering pur amined, 258; the establishmen and the promise of more, 259; the prompt and vigorous colle charter is not renewed, 259; th from Kentucky, about the lea once in every ten years the cap interest, 259; the ruinous drain from the West, 259; the old ba and Tennessee, defended from them, 260; manner in which t through, pending an investiga stockholders of the bank, 260; 261; English authority for calling a monopoly, and the British ban from it, 261; the President's ide independence in construing the drain upon the resources of the V 262; address to the Jackson ban the West, 262; the dangerous pe the present audacity of her condu

"Dissatisfaction expressed that Senators fill the galleries, and them, 263; charged with a want c ident, 263; charges of the Senat against the President, 263.

"No adjourned question of versator from Missouri and the Preside charged upon the Senator from M debate, 264; direful picture of dist

Delay in paying the three per commended that the United Street, and that a committee be gate its condition, 287; referred mittee of friends of the bank, 28 committee should not proceed un agent of the Secretary of the Trea its depreciation of the stock, 287; clous, 287; the loss of the bank, by at half a pullion, 288; nothing befor an inquiry into the condition of the eventual ability to discharge all it of itself sufficient to entitle the bar of the Government, 288; what was plaint against the bank? 288; that i the payment of the public debt, charges upon the feelings of the co report of the agent, 288; the exhibit actual state, 288; a large surplus stockholders, 289; the report a me the bank returns, 289; proceedings regard to the three per cents, 289

onarchial parlis

the States to ad es of the mother emarks 947 · " mount to a legisexisted, 247; deit of the States to apremacy of the s, 247; the argury to enable the fiscal operations of State legislan of Congress itank itself except establishment of and loss to the 47 : motion re-

privileges and to

example of the

their plan, 248,
488; the establishStates prohibited
3; this is contrary
9; the restriction
th every principle equality 249; is pon the power of is this Congress is ll not take effect
tation of the lext

opponents of the of members of the sed in the Senate

ls exclusive privia much as they are alue of the monop proposes to sell it k holders have any nment? 251; this e purchase of this side and grant this rtunate enough to ecedents for constion of the Supreme 52; " precedence is culd not be regardional power except and the States is y against the bank, Court covered the t to control the cont, 253; in the case ot decided that all ompatible with the at the institution, a resisting investid and charges made the recommends e, 258; additional n, 253."

ocates of the bank veto, 254; a transarena, 254; to the distress predicted the only means of averting the calamity, 254; remarks of Webster on this point, 254; remarks of White upon the bank taking the lead of a political party, 254; the distress pictured by Clayton, 254; the winding up of the bank, with regard to time, 255; case of the previous bank, 255; menace of distress from the bank if denied a renewal, entirely gratuitous, 255; vehement declamation against the veto, 255; remarks of Clay on the veto power, 255; reply of Benton, 255; objects of the vetoes of the French king, 256; "the fable of the cat and the eagle, 256; why debate the bank question, now it is vetoed, and not debate it before? 257; the bank is finished, why debate it now? 257; the bank is in the field, a fearful and tremendous combatant in the presidential election, 257; the Great West is selected as the theatre of her operations, 257; ruin is to be the punishment of the West, if she votes for Jackson, 257; the bank debt has been created for electioneering purposes, 258; this point examined, 258; the establishment of several new branches and the promise of more, 259; the alleged necessity for the prompt and vigorous collection of this debt, if the charter is not renewed, 259; the opinion of the Senator from Kentucky, about the legality of this trust, 259; once in every ten years the capital of this debt is paid in interest, 259; the ruinous drain of capital in hard money from the West, 259; the old banks of Ohio, Kentucky, and Tennessee, defended from the aspersions cast on them, 260; manner in which the charter was pushed through, pending an investigation, 260; the foreign stockholders of the bank, 260; the bank a monopoly, 261; English authority for calling the Bank of England a monopoly, and the British bank in America is copied from it, 261; the President's idea of his oath, 261; his independence in construing the constitution, 262; the drain upon the resources of the West, made by the bank, 262; address to the Jackson bank men, 262; address to the West, 262; the dangerous power of the bank and the present audacity of her conduct, 263."

"Dissatisfaction expressed that the speeches of some Senators fill the galleries, and those of others empty them, 263; charged with a want of courtesy to the President, 263; charges of the Senator from Missouri, once against the President, 263.

"No adjourned question of veracity between the Senator from Missouri and the President, 264; the prediction charged upon the Senator from Missouri, 264;" further debate, 264; direful picture of distress drawn, 265

Delay in paying the three per cents.-Message recommended that the United States stock should be sold, and that a committee be appointed to investigate its condition, 287; referred to a special committee of friends of the bank, 287; objected that the committee should not proceed until the report of the agent of the Secretary of the Treasury was made, 287; its depreciation of the stock, 287; this objection fallaclous, 287; the loss of the bank, by depreciation, stated at half a pullion, 288; nothing before the House to make an inquiry into the condition of the bank desirable, 288; eyentual ability to discharge all its obligations, is not of itself sufficient to entitle the bank to the confidence of the Government, 288; what was the Executive complaint against the bank? 288; that it had interfered with the payment of the public debt, 288; effect of the charges upon the feelings of the corporators, 288; the report of the agent, 288; the exhibit contrasted with its actual state, 288; a large surplus presented for the steckholders, 289; the report a mere compendium of the bank returns, 289; proceedings of the bank with regard to the three per cents, 289; investigation referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, 289 report, 289; public deposits reported entirely safe, 289 resolution to continue the deposits in the bank offered, 289; debate, 289; the bank exceeded its legitimate authority in relation to the three per cents, 290; had the bank promptly paid the public money deposited in its vaults when called for, 290; proceedings of the bank, 290; resolution carried, 291; loss by the manner the three per cents were paid, 291.

Sale of Stock in the.—Sale of United States stock in all corporate companies recommended by the President, 294; partnership of government with corporations condemned, 294; bill introduced, 294; moved to reject it, 294; debate, 294; indignation at this persecution of a national institution, 294; indignities to which members were subjected who presumed to take any step concerning the bank which militated against that corporation, 295; a plain business proceeding, 295; an isolated proposition, 295; the bill summarily rejected, 295; fifty members borrowers of the bank, 296; the same thing had happened once before, 296; proposed in 1827 to sell the stock solely on the ground of public advantage, 296; remarks on this proposition at the time, 296; reflections, 296.

Removal of the Deposits.—Order for removal issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, 878; the President's own message, 874; reports of directors to the President, 874; extracts from them, 874, 875; resolutions adopted by the board, 876; further outrages of the bank, 876; the exchange committee of the banks, 876; paper read by President Jackson to his Cabinet, 876; extracts, 877, 878; impression produced by the removal, 379.

Proceedings of the Bank on the removal of the Deposits.—The reference of the President's paper to a committee, 879; report, 879; extracts, 879; its temper, 879; gives the lead to proceedings in Congress, 880; the violations of law and the constitution referred to, 880; amount of the charges against the President by the bank, 881.

Report of the Secretary of the Treasury relative to removal of the Deposits.—Ressons for the cessation of deposits in the bank, 881; the duty of the Secretary, 881; no prospects of a renewal of the charter, 882; other reasons, 888; the board of directors, 883; authority of the Secretary to remove the deposits, 884; the deposit banks, 885; difficulty of obtaining the deposit banks, 885; power of the Bank of the United States, 835.

In the Senate.—Report considered, 393; proposed, that the Senate act upon it at once without the intervention of a committee, 393; the House the proper place to investigate the charges made in that report, 393; resolution offered, 393; referred, 394; report, 394; remarks on the despotism of the committee, 394; reply, 394; report drawn by the counsel for the bank, 394; inefficiency of the resolution, 395; no action proposed, 395; resolution adopted, 393.

Resolution subsequently proposed again with another requiring the return of the deposits to the bank, 896; remarks, 896; impropriety of the resolutions so near the close of the essaion, 896; other considerations, 897; resolutions adopted, 897; sent to the House and not taken up, 397.

In the House.—Report of the Secretary, memorial of the bank, and of the government directors referred, 398; report, 398; adopted, 398.

Government Directors, their Nomination and Rejection.—Opposition manifested to four of the five nominated, 885; resolution of inquiry into their fitness, &c. offered and rejected, 885; four rejected, 886; no complaint against them except from the bank, 886; rejected for the report made to the President, 886; re-nominated, 886; message, 886; extracts, 887, 888; question raised as to which was the nominating power for bank directors, the President and Senate or the Bank and Senate, 888; determination to try this question, 889; message referred to a committee 389; report against the re-nominations, 889; the absolute right of the Senate to reject, 389; their privilege to give no reasons, 389; the general policy of making re-nominations, 889; extracts, 889: memorial of the rejected directors, 889; extracts, 890; their rights and duties as government directors, 890; opinion of Alexander Hamilton relative to government directors, 891; opinion of Alexander J. Dallas, 891; reasons why the motion to strike out government directors was resisted when the charter was under consideration, 891; they are the guardians of the public interest, and to secure a just and honorable administration of the affairs of the bank, 891; the nominations again rejected, 892; reasons kept secret, 892; motion made to publish the proceedings, 892; lost, 892; remarks on the Report of the Committee of Investigation relative to the Exchange Committee, 892.

Call on the President for a copy of the paper read to his Cabinet.—Request to be informed if it was genuine, 399; and if so to furnish a copy, 399; Senate not the branch of the Legislature to call for this document, 399; uses to which the paper might be put, 399; it cannot be rightfully called for, 399; resolution passed, 400; answer of the President, 400; denied the right to call,

&c., 400.

Attempted Investigation.—Select Committee appointed in the House to investigate the affairs of the United States Bank, 458; objects to be ascertained, 459; authority given to the committee, 459; right of the Houses to make the investigation, 459; proceedings of the bank to defeat investigation, 459; report of committee, 459; extracts, 460; treatment of their call for certain books, 461; action under subpensa, 461; a warrant recommended for the apprehension of the president and directors, 461; the committee of 1819, 462.

Investigation by the Senate.—Since much ground lost in public opinion by resisting the investigation of the House to retrieve the bank, an investigation commences in the Senate, 470; committee moved, 470; view of this act of the Senate, 471; the members of the committee defenders of the bank, 471; the only semblance of precedent, 471; called the "Whitewashing Committee," 471.

Downfull of the Bank.—Copy of resolutions of its stockholders, 471; extracts from Philadelphia papers, 472; report of the Finance Committee, 481; its friendly reception, 481; its contents, 481; its declarations contradicted by Senator Benton, 482; extracts, 432; imputations upon the President, Vice-President, and Senator Benton, 482; committee departed from the business with which they were charged, 488; the charge of hostility to the bank on the part of the President, 488; defends the Secretary of the Treasury against the imputations of the report, 484; misconduct of the bank shown from recent facts, 484; the abduction of a million and a half from New Orleans, 485; the report exparts, 486; reply in defence of the report, 486; extracts, 486. See Jackson's Administration.

Banks in the District, recharter of.—Speech of Senator Benton, 658; "the charters wrong, 658; no bank of circulation ought to be authorized in this district, 659; none to furnish other currency than large notes should be chartered anywhere, 659; ameliorations in charters proposed to be granted in order to render them less dangerous to the community, 659; liability of the stockholders, 659; bank stock to be subject to taxation like other property, 659; to issue no notes less than twenty dollars, 659; the charters to be repealable at the will of Congress, 659; evil of small notes classed under three heads, 660; the banishment of gold and silver counterfeiting and throwing other burdens of losses upon the poorer classes, 660; the basis of circulation throughout the country should be hard money, 662; the true idea of banks seemed to be lost in the country, 663; the faculty of issuing paper money renders banks.dangerous, 663; progress of banking business is alarming and deplorable in the United States, 663; the burdens which the banks impose on the people, 664; "recharter carried, 665.

BARBOUR, JAMES, Senator from Virginia, 7; governor, 7; votes for the Missouri Compromise, 8; on the Virginia resolutions, 85; Secretary at War, 55; negotiates treaty with the Cherokees, 107.

BARBOUR, PHILIP P., Representative from Virginia, 7; on selling the stock of the United States in the bank, 296; his character, 296.

Barry, William T., Postmaster General, 120; appointed Minister to Spain, 181.

BAYARD, JAMES, Commissioner at Ghent. 91. '

BENTON, THOMAS H., instigator of the clause prohibiting legislative interference with slavery in the constitution of Missouri, 8; his first experience in standing "solitary and alone," 16; views relative to the settlement of Oregon, 18: first suggests sending ministers to Oriental nations, 14; denounces the treaty of 1818, 15, 17; moves amendment to the constitution, 87; visit to Jefferson, 48; offers a bill to occupy Columbia river, 50; remarks on the treaty with the Creeks, 61; on the duty on indigo, 97; on the sale of the public lands, 108, 180; on slavery, 186; on the peroration of Webster, 142; on the regulation of commerce, 151; the repeal of the slum salt tax, 155; on the Bank of the United States, 187; his silence relative to the nomination of Van Buren as Minister to England, 218; letter to Van Buren, 218; on the illegal currency of the Bank of the United States, 220; on government expenses, 231; against the exclusive privileges of the bank, 245; reply to Clay on the veto power, 255, 256; on the compromise tariff bill, 819; on home valuation, 824; on Missouri resolutions, 860; on report of the Secretary of the Treasury, 898; on the removal of the deposits, 406; gives notice of the expunging resolution, 428; on a gold currency, 486; on public distress, 462; on the Report of the Senate Committee to investigate the affairs of the bank, 482; relative to the expunging resolutions of Alabama, 524; on the Branch Mints, 551; on distribution of the proceeds of the public lands, 560; on the memorial to abolish slavery in the District of Columbia, 577; on French affairs, 591; on abolition petitions, 617; on the Expunging resolution, 645; on distribution of the land proceeds, 649, 652; on rechartering the district banks, 658; on Texas Independence, 670; on the specie circular, 677; on revision of the specie circular, 695, 701; on the salt tax, 714; on the Expunging resolution, 719.

Berrien, John M., remarks on the treaty with the Creck, 62; attorney-general, 120; resigns his seat in the cabinet, 181.

BIBB, GEORGE M., on home valuation, 324; on the French spoliation bill, 487.

Birthday of Jefferson and the doctrine of nullification, 18 BLAIR, FRANCIS P., how led to establish the Globe men paper, 130. BLOOMFIELD, JOSEPH, Representati for the admission of Missouri, i BOULDIN, JAMES W., on the admis BEANCH, JOHN, Secretary of the seat in the cabinet 151 seat in the cabinet, 181. Branch Mints at New Orleans an regions.—Bill reported, 550; o unwise and injudicious to estab indefinite postponement*moved lification of mints, 550; the pr the measure would be auxiliary metallic currency, 551; remar "constitutional right to establ act of justice to the South and five or six branches and nobod paper, 552; the idea of expe scouted, 552; for the greater p is in the vaults of the bank, Western people now sustained f favor of measures that will put put up gold and silver, 552;" other motions made and lost, 538

British West India Trade, recove trade, 124; six negotiations ca United States and Great Britain limited concessions only obtain ject with Washington, 125; his le Gouverneur Morris, 125; a prom negotiation in 1794, 125; attempt remarks on the negotiation of 1 word "elsewhere," 126; attempts istration to negotiate, 126; effe Gallatin's interview with Mr. Hu 126; facts communicated to C Adams, 127; the case presented 1 of this trade an injury to the coul of General Jackson, 127; minister reasons given for a renewed app right waived, 128; the trade rece under the act of Parliament, 128 cess, 128.

Brown, Bedford, for Van Buren as 216; on the branch mints, 551; c 612.

Brown, James, Senator from Louisians souri Compromise, 8.

Buchanan, James, presents memorin Friends, 576; on French affairs, 596 mission of Arkansas, 630; on dist proceeds, 708.

BURR, EDMUND, on the sale of the cro
BURR, COL. AARON, decease of — Brillin
(i) in shame, 681; in the expedition w opinion of Washington, 681; positic
presidential election of 1800, 681;
gauded by his compeers, 682; his t of Hamilton, 682.

BURTON, HUTCHINS G., Representative 1 7; governor, 7.

BUSH, HENRY, Representative from Ohi-BUTLER, BENJAMIN F., nominated Secret 470.

BUTLER, THOMAS, Representative from I

C

CALBOUN, JOHN C., Secretary at War, provement, 22; candidate for the 1824, 45; rupture with Jackson, 167 nder them less ability of the ject to taxation notes less than epealable at the e classed under old and silver rdens of losses s of circulation noney, 662; the ne country, 663; lers banks.danass is alarming 8: the burdens 364; " recharter

7: governor.7: on the Virginia regotiates treaty Virginia, 7; on

1 the bank, 296;

120: appointed

1. .

prohibiting lethe constitution anding "solitary ttlement of Ores to Oriental na-8, 15, 17; moves isit to Jefferson, ver, 50; remarks the duty on innds, 108, 180: on ster, 142; on the real of the slum dited States, 187; of Van Buren as n Buren, 218: on he United States, gainst the excluly to Clay on the omise tariff bill, souri resolutions, e Treasury, 898; ives notice of the currency, 486; on the Senate Com-, bank, 482; rela-Alabama, 524; on on of the proceeds morial to abolish 77; on French af-; on the Expungthe land proceeds, ct banks, 658; 01 ecie circular, 677; , 701; on the salt

1, 719. r with the Creeks seat in the cabi-

4; on the French

f nullification, 149 the Globe news

BLOOMFIELD, JOSEPH, Representative from New Jersey, votes for the admission of Missouri, 9.

Bouldin, James W., on the admission of Arkansas, 631.

Branch, John, Secretary of the Navy, 120; resigns his seat in the cabinet, 181.

Branch Mints at New Orleans and in the Southern gold regions.—Bill reported, 550; opposed by Mr. Clay, 550; unwise and injudicious to establish these branches, 550; indefinite postponement moved, 550; no evil in the nullification of mints, 550; the present one sufficient, 551; the measure would be auxiliary to the restoration of the metallic currency, 551; remarks of Mr. Benton, 551; "constitutional right to establish these mints, 551; an act of justice to the South and West, 551; give the mint five or six branches and nobody would want the bank paper, 552; the idea of expense on such an object scouted, 552; for the greater part of the gold currency is in the vaults of the bank, 552; what loss has the Western people now sustained for want of gold? 552; in favor of measures that will put down small paper and put up gold and silver, 552;" postponement lost, 553; other motions made and lost, 558; bill passed, 558.

British West India Trade, recovery of .- Account of this trade, 124; six negotiations carried on between the United States and Great Britain on this subject, 124; limited concessions only obtained, 125; a primary object with Washington, 125; his letter of instructions to Gouverneur Morris, 125; a prominent point in our first negotiation in 1794, 125; attempts of 1822 and 1823, 125; remarks on the negotiation of 1822, 125; effect of the word "elsewhere," 126; attempts of Mr. Adams' administration to negotiate, 126; effects of his failure, 126; Gallatin's interview with Mr. Huskisson, 126; despatch, 126; facts communicated to Congress by President Adams, 127; the case presented hopeless, 127; the loss of this trade an injury to the country, 127; the position of General Jackson, 127; minister sent to London, 127; reasons given for a renewed application, 128; point of right waived, 128; the trade recovered, 128; the trade under the act of Parliament, 128; the grounds of success, 128.

Brown, Bedford, for Van Buren as Minister to England, 216; on the branch mints, 551; on abolition petitions, Brown, James, Senator from Louisiana, 7; votes for the Missouri Compromise, 8.

BUCHANAN, JAMES, presents memorial of the Society of Friends, 576; on French affairs, 590; in favor of the admission of Arkansas, 630; on distribution of the land proceeds, 708.

BURKE, EDMUND, on the sale of the crown lands, 102.

BURR, COL. AARON, decease of.—Brilliant prospects ending (in shame, 681; in the expedition with Arnold, 681; the opinion of Washington, 681; position at the close of the presidential election of 1800, 681; his character as regarded by his compeers, 682; his talents, 682; the fate of Hamilton, 682.

Burron, Hutchins G., Representative from North Carolina, 7; governor, 7.

Bush, Henry, Representative from Ohio, 7.

BUTLER, BENJAMIN F., nominated Secretary of the Treasury, 470.

BUTLER, THOMAS, Representative from Louisiana, 7,

CALBOUN, JOHN C., Secretary at War, 7; on internal improvement, 22; candidate for the Vice-Presidency in 1824, 45; rupture with Jackson, 167; his friendship for

Jackson, 218; on the compromise tariff bill, 815; on home valuation, 324; offers nullification resolutions, 884; on the principles of nullification, 885; on distribution or proceeds of land sales, 864, 651, 709; on the removal of the deposits, 411; on the plan of relief, 484; on the ex punging resolutions of Alabama, 526, 527; on the branch mints, 558; on the combination of the slave States, 585; on French affairs, 591; on abolition petitions, 611, 614, 619; on the independence of Texas, 667; on the Expung ing resolution, 728.

CAMBRELENG, C. C., on the Committee of Bank Investigation, 241; on the fortification bill, 556.

CAMPBELL, JOHN W., Representative from Ohio, 7.

Cannon, Newton, Representative from Tennessee, 7; governor, 7.

CARROLL, CHARLES, decease of; last of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, 476; fate of other signers felicitous, 477; his career, 477; not present on the day of signing, 477; signed afterwards, 477; incident, 477.

Carson, Kir, application for a commission in the army, 183. Cass, Lewis, Secretary at War, 181.

CHAMBERS, E. F., against Van Buren as Minister to England, 215.

CHANDLER, JOHN, Senator from Maine, 9; votes for the admission of Missouri, 9. Chesapeake Canal discussed, 22.

CLARKE, GEN., treaties with the Indians, 29.

CLAY, HENRY, Representative from Kentucky, 7; efforts for the declaration of war in 1812, 6; moves a joint committee of both Houses on the admission of Missouri, 9; often complimented as the author of the Compromise of 1820, 10; selects the members of the joint committee in the House, 10; his coadjutors, 10; movement against the treaty of 1818, 17; on internal improvement, 22; address to Lafayette, 30; on public distress, 32; lays before the House the note of Vivian Edwards, 84; appoints committee on charges against Crawford, 85; candidate for the Presidency in 1824, 44; letter to Benton relative to declaring his intention previously to vote for Adams, 48; Secretary of State, 55; Commissioner at Ghent, 91; against Van Buren as Minister to England, 215; nominated for the Presidency, 232; remarks on the veto power, 255, 256; on the origin of the protective policy, 267; report relative to the public lands, 275; candidate for the Presidency, 282; on the Compromise Tariff bill, 813; on Kendall cotton, 819; on distribution of proceeds of land sales 863; on report of the Secretary of the Treasury, 898; on the removal of the deposits, 402; on the expunging resolutions of Alabama, 525, 527; on the bill to suppress incendiary publications, 586; on distribution of land proceeds, 707; on the Expunging resolution, 729.

CLAY, MRS., her appearance on the evening previous to the duel between Clay and Randolph, 74.

CLAYTON, J. M., against Van Buren as Minister to England, 215; on the coming distress of the people, 254; on home valuation, 824-326; on French affairs, 594; moves a committee of investigation on the Bank affairs, 236; on the committee to investigate the affairs of the U.S. Bank, 241.

COBB, THOMAS W., Representative from Georgia, 7. COOKE, JOHN, Representative from Tennessee, 7.

COLES, EDWARD, publishes correction of errors relative to the passage of the ordinance of 1787. Columbia River, occupation of, bill to authorize the President to take possession and occupy the country offered, 50; object of the British, 50; the British pretensions examined under their own exhibition of title, 50, 51, 52, 58; title as claimed by the United States, 54.

Combination against General Jackson.—See Bank of the United States.

Commerce, regulation of .- The power which is given to Congress by the constitution, 149; not yet been executed in the sense intended by the constitution, 149; views of Mr. Jefferson, of Madison, Hamilton, &c., 149; remarks, 149; the principle of the regulation was to be that of reciprocity, 150; mode of acting, 150; object to carry out these views on the extinction of the public debt, 150; bill to revive the policy of the Madison resolutions, 150; Madison's remarks, 150; " the commerce of the United States not on that respectable footing to which its nature and importance entitled it, 150; situation of things previous to the adoption of the constitution, 150; effects to be produced by the resolutions proposed, 150; advantageous position this country is entitled to stand in, 150; our country may make her enemies feel the extent of her power, 150;" "bill proposed, 151; to provide for the sbolition of duties, 151; the title of the bill, 151; the bill, 152; the first section, 152; contains the principle of abolishing duties by the joint act of the Legislative and Executive departments, 152; the idea of equivalents, 152; in what way may the restriction on our commerce be best removed, regulated, or counteracted? 152; two methods, 152; friendly arrangements, 152; the plan proposed, 152; benefits resulting from an abolition of duties, 158; do not our agriculture and manufactures require better markets abroad than they possess at this time? 158; the merits of the plan, 158; its success, 158; advantages arising from a payment of the public debt, 158; the treaties should be for limited terms, 154;" remarks, 154.

Committee on the charges against W. H. Crawford, 85; on amendments to the constitution, 78; on the reduction of Executive patronage, 80; on the application of the bank for a renewal of its charter, 238; House, to whom was referred the memorial of the bank, 235; of investigation into the affairs of the U.S. Bank, 241; to investigate the affairs of the bank, 458, 470; on incendiary publications, 580; on abolition petitions, 621.

Congress, 22d, its members, 208; their talent, 208; commencement of 24th, 568; when does the term of its session expire? 598, 599.

COOK, DANIEL P., Representative from Illinois, 7.

CRAWFORD, WILLIAM H., Secretary of the Treasury, 7; devises a measure of relief for the public land debtors, 12; on internal improvement, 22; charges against, 35; candidate for the Presidency in 1824, 44; declines the Secretaryship of the Treasury tendered by Adams, 55; letter to Mr. Forsyth, 182.

CRITTENDEN, JOHN J., on the recision of the specie circular,

CROOKS, RAMSEY, founder of the colony at Astoria, 13. CROWELL, JOHN, Representative from Alabama, 7.

Cumberland Road discussed, 22.

CUSHING, CALEB, on the admission of Arkansas, 632.

Dallas, George M., presents memorial for a renewal of the bank charter, 227; remarks, 227; on the operation of the Tariff, 270; on home valuation, 824.

DANE, NATHAN, claimed as the author of the ordinance of 1787, 188.

DANIEL, on the Virginia resolutions, 351. DAVIS, JOHN, on the compromise tariff bill, 810.

Debt, public, amount of at the close of the second war, 5.

Deposit Bank bill, to regulate the custody of the public money, 558; bill once defeated in the Senate, 558; sent up again and passed, 558.

DICKENS ASBURY, writes the answer of Crawford to charges against him, 85.

Distribution of the Revenue.—These propositions first opposed and afterwards favored by Mr. Calhoun with the salvo of an amendment to the constitution, 556; committee of inquiry appointed, 556; basis upon which the committee was proposed, 557; first meeting and a subcommittee appointed, 557; the report an ingenious and plausible attack upon the administration, &c., 557; debate on the report, 557; expenses doubled from extraordinary objects, not belonging to the Government, temporary in their nature and transient, 557; the distribution of the surplus and the amendment of the constitution, 557; distribution the only practical depletion of the Treasury and remedy for the corruptions which an exuberant Treasury engendered, 557; no minority report made, 557; custody of the public moneys not illegal, 7.57; opponents of the Administration defeated the Deposit Regulation bill, 557; the report, 557; "what is to be done with the surplus? 557; existence of our institutions and the liberty of the country may depend on the success of this investigation, 558; danger from excess of patronage arising from excess of revenue must be temporary, 558; the Government in a state of passage from an excess of revenue to a limited revenue, 558; objects of investment, 558; objections to distribution, 558; effects of distribution, 559; reasons for suggesting this proposal, 559."

Reply of Senator Benton, 559; "proposition in the report to amend the constitution for eight years to enable Congress to make the distribution, 560; eclipses all other propositions, 560; predictions from the same source of a deficiency of the revenue, 560; anecdote 560; the Treasury was to be bankrupt and the currency ruined, 560; the amendment of the constitution, 561 this scheme an old acquaintance on this floor, 561; the statement of a surplus examined, 561; report of the Secretary of the Treasury, 562; it is said there is no way to reduce the revenue before the end of 1842 without violating the compromise, 563; sources from which a large reduction could be made, 568; it is said there is no possibility of finding an article of general utility on which the surpluses could be expended, 564; several useful, necessary, and exigeant measures, 564; defenceless state of the country, 564; fortifying the coasts, 564; message of President Monroe in 1822, 565; extracts, 566; remarks upon the extracts, 566, 567;" no vote ever taken on the amendment to the constitution, 567; deficiency in the Treasury, 567; distribution afterward took place without the amendment, 567. Extract from the National Gazette attributed to Nicholas Biddle, 649; distribution nearly become a party measure, 649; the plans proposed, 649; remarks of Seaator Benton, 649; introduces an antagonistic bill, devoling the surplus money to the public defences, 649; making an issue between the plunder of the country and the defence of the country, 649; every surplus dollar required for the defences, 650; bill passed Senate, 651; sent to the House, 651; course adopted to secure votes in the House, 651.

Scheme of deposit with the States, 651; objections, 651; vote on the passage of the bill, 652; objections urged against the bill, 652; attempt to debauch the perple, 658; consequences must be deplorable and destrutive to the Federal Government, 654; the progress of the distribution spirit, 654; the measure goes to sap the foundations of the Foderal Government, 655; is it wis to throw away this money? 6 this fatal scheme, 657; bill pass ings of the President on approv

Moved that a bill be brought from all obligations ever to re der the deposit act, 707; motion set, 707; laid on the table, 707; vive the land distribution bill a substitute reported, 708; kind houn's proposition, 708; debate, 709; proposition rejected, 710; laid on the table, 710; deposit clau priation bill, 711; struck out in th Delaware. - Her position in relation

DE Tocqueville, errors of, 159; erro of Representatives, 205; errors United States, 226, 228,

Duel between Clay and Randolp Randolph and Benton, 70; Rand not fire at Clay, 70; circumstan the challenge, 70; reasons for re 70; meaning of "two pledges" re dolph, 71; conduct of Randolp 71; Randolph's letter of accept Randolph, an explanation, 71; fu 72; remarks on Randolph's spee attempt of the seconds to delay report of Randolph's remarks mad between the seconds as to the car further views on the speech, 78; " 78; place of the duel, 78; interv and Clay, 74; subsequent interv and Randolph, 74; Randolph arra fairs, 74; Randolph at the bank, 7 75; manner in which the word the preparations on the ground, 7 charge of a pistol, 75; Randolph's first fire Benton interposes, 76; Cla dolph's feelings and remarks, 76; th 77; Randolph fires in the air, 77 gratification of the parties, 77; the ton, Tatnall, and Benton, 77. DUNCANSON, J. M., interview with Ger DUVAL, Judge of Supreme Court, 8.

E

Earle, Elias, Representative from Sou ernor, 7.

Eaton, John H., Secretary at War, 120 the Cabinet, 181; appointed Gover Minister to Spain, 181.

EDWARDS, WELDON N., Representative lina, 7; votes for the Missouri Comp EDWARDS, NINIAN, note of, 84; brought sion to Mexico, by the Sergeant-at-A Section of 1882.—The candidates, 292 tems and measures tried in the pe stood out boldly in their represent feat of Clay, 282; the success of Jack and lesson of the Vice-Presidential vote, 282; Anti-masonic excitement, ELLIOTT, JOHN, votes for the Missouri ( marks on the removal of the Indians, ELLMAKER, Amos, candidate for the Pres. Eceris, William, Representative from of revolutionary memory, 7.

Ewing, Thomas, against Van Buren as land, 215; on the specie circular, 694. enate, 558; sent ositions first opalhoun with the ution, 556; comupon which the eting and a subn ingenious and on, &c., 557; delad from extraorovernment, tem-: the distribution the constitution. depletion of the ns which an exuminority report neys not illegal, defeated the De-557; " what is to nce of our instituay depend on the rer from excess of me must be temte of passage from enue, 558; objects tribution, 558; efor suggesting this > proposition in the ight years to enan, 560; eclipses all s from the same ne, 560; anecdote, t and the currency constitution, 561 this floor, 561; the 61; report of the said there is no way of 1842 without viofrom which a large aid there is no posal utility on which 64; several useful, 4; defenceless state pasts, 564: message racts, 566; remarks e ever taken on the ; deficiency in the d took place without > > ette attributed to arly become a party 49; remarks of Seagonistic bill, devoldefences, 649; makthe country and the 7 surplus dollar repassed Senate, 60; ted to secure rotes

tes, 651; objections, bill, 652; objections to debauch the perplorable and destro-654; the progress of asure goes to sap the ment, 655; is it was to throw away this money? 656; nothing but evil in this fatal scheme, 657; bill passes the House, 657; feelings of the President on approving of the act, 657.

Moved that a bill be brought in to release the States from all obligations ever to return the dividends under the deposit act, 707; motion condemned at the outset, 707; laid on the table, 707; Clay's movement to revive the land distribution bill, 707; his remarks, 707; a substitute reported, 708; kindred schemes, 708; Calhoun's proposition, 708; debate, 708; Calhoun's proposition, 708; debate, 708; Calhoun's proposition rejected, 710; Allen's proposition, 710; laid on the table, 710; deposit clause attached to the appropriation bill, 711; struck out in the Senate, 711; lost, 712. Delawars.—Her position in relation to slavery, 10.

DE TOCQUEVILLE, errors of, 159; errors respecting the House of Representatives, 205; errors respecting Bank of the United States, 226, 228.

Duel between Clay and Randolph .- Interview between Randolph and Benton, 70; Randolph declares he shall not fire at Clay, 70; circumstances of the delivery of the challenge, 70; reasons for refusing to fire at Clay, 70; meaning of "two pledges" referred to by Mr. Randelph, 71; conduct of Randolph, 71; characteristics, 71; Randolph's letter of acceptance, 71; protest of Randolph, an explanation, 71; further communications, 72; remarks on Randolph's speech in the Senate, 72; attempt of the seconds to delay the meeting, 72; the report of Randolph's remarks made to Clay, 78; inquiry between the seconds as to the cause of the quarrel, 78: further views on the speech, 78; "Puritan and blackleg," 78; place of the duel, 78; interview between Benton and Clay, 74; subsequent interview between Benton and Randolph, 74; Randolph arranging his worldly affairs, 74; Randolph at the bank, 74; the pieces of gold, 75; manner in which the word was to be given, 75; the preparations on the ground, 75; an accidental discharge of a pistol, 75; Randolph's remark, 75; after the first fire Benton interposes, 76; Clay's answer, 76; Randolph's feelings and remarks, 76; the second fire of Clay, 77; Randolph fires in the air, 77; reconciliation and gratification of the parties, 77; the gold seals of Hamilton, Tatnall, and Benton, 77.

DUNCANSON, J. M., interview with Gen. Duff Green, 128. #DUVAL, Judge of Supreme Court, 8.

E

EARLE, ELIAS, Representative from South Carolina, 7; Governor, 7.

EATON, JOHN H., Secretary at War, 120; resigns his seat in the Cabinet, 181; appointed Governor of Florida, 181; Minister to Spain, 181.

EDWARDS, WELDON N., Representative from North Carolina, 7; votes for the Missouri Compromise, 8.

EDWARDS, NINIAN, note of, 84; brought back from his mission to Mexico, by the Sergeant-at-Arms, 35.

Eaction of 1882.—The candidates, 298; a question of systems and measures tried in the persons of those who stood out boldly in their representation, 282; the defeat of Clay, 282; the success of Jackson, 282; the point and lesson of the Vice-Presidential election, 282; the vote, 282; Anti-masonic excitement, 282; its result, 283.

ELLIOTT, JOHN, votes for the Missouri Compromise, 8; remarks on the removal of the Indians, 27.

ELIMAKER, AMOS, candidate for the Presidency, 282.

Evens, William, Representative from Massachusetts, 7; of revolutionary memory, 7.

EWING, THOMAS, against Van Buren as Minister to England, 215; on the specie circular, 694.

Expenses of Government.—Expenses from 1820 to 1831, 280; comparison with the present day, 280; remarks, 280; "it is said that since 1830 the expenses have nearly doubled, 280; excepting four years the expenses have not increased, 280; cause of reduced expenditures in certain years," 280; error in the basis of calculation, 281; "two great and broad facts in view, 281; expenditures for different years, 281; object to show a great increase in a short time," 282; important to know the correct expenses, 282.

Expunging resolution, notice of by Senator Benton, 428.

Do. of Alabama.—Resolutions of the General Assembly of Alabama, entreating their Senators to use their best endeavors to cause to be expunged from the Journ® of the Senato the resolve condemnatory of President Jackson for the removal of the deposits, 524; several States had already given instructions, 524; inquiry of Mr. Clay relative to the intention of the Senator from Alabama relative to the resolutions, 524; reply of Mr. Benton, 524; the notice given by him at the time of passing the condemnatory resolution, 524; reasons for giving the notice, 524; answer to the inquiry of Mr. Clay, 525.

Remarks of Mr. King, 525; "surprised at the question," 525; bound to obey instructions, 525; if the gentleman from Missouri declined, he should at the proper time bring forward an expunging resolution, 525; further remarks, 525; Mr. Clay's remarks, 525; "no motion accompanies these resolutions, 525; the inquiry a natural one, 525; a hope that the resolutions would be withdrawn, 526; if, after consulting precedents, the Schator from Alabama should deem proper to offer them, they would be entitled to consideration, 526; until then, his duty to resist such an unconstitutional procedure as the reception of these resolutions," 526.

"Decline to accede to this proposition, 526; object to carry out his instructions, 526; at a proper time a distinct proposition would be presented on this subject," 526.

Moved to lay the resolutions on the table, by Mr. Calhoun 526: object to give the Senator an opportunity to prepare a rescinding resolution, 526; curious to see how such a proceeding would be reconciled with the independent existence of the Senate, 526; how is it proposed to repeal a journal? 526; the only course left is to declare that the principle upon which the Senate acted is not correct, 526; what is the principle to be overthrown but that "we have a right to express our opinions," 526; then it comes to this, that the Senate had no right to express its opinion in relation to the executive, 526; "the king can do no wrong," 526; this is the very question in which the expunging our legislative freedom and independence is to be agitated, 527; a question of the utmost magnitude, 527; none of deeper or more radical importance, 527.

The question on receiving the resolutions, 527; the case of Georgia legislative proceedings, 527; the case of Wilkes, in the British House of Commons, 527; no doubt of the power of the Senate to repeal, 527; have we not it in our power to retrace our steps when we have done wrong, or to correct our journal, which asserts what is not true? 527; the democratic party of the country had declared the facts of the journal to be false, 527; the party to which Mr. Calhoun belong, 527; resolution laid on the table, 528; reception and printing refused to a resolution of a sovereign State, 528.

Expunging Resolution of Senator Benton, 528; extremely distasteful to a majority of the Senate, 528; characterized as an indictment which the Senate itself was required to try, and to degrade itself in its own condemnation, 528; remarks, 528; this bitterness aggravated by the course which the public mind was taking, 528; resolutions of several States had arrived, instructing their Senators to vote for the expurgation, 529; speech of Senator Benton on the motion, 529; time of presenting the criminal resolution, 529; length of its discussion, 529; date of its passage, 529; an announcement of a series of motions for its expurgation, 529; this step considered for four months, 529; was expurgation the proper mode, 529; the criminating resolution combined all the characteristics of a case which required erasure and obliteration, 529; a case of the exercise of power without authority and without jurisdiction, 529; other modes of annulling the resolution not proper in this case, 529; they would imply rightful jurisdiction, a lawful authority, a legal action, though an erroneous judgment, 529; it is objected that the Senate have no right to expunge any thing from its journal, 529; it is said we have no right to destroy a part of the journal, 529; to expunge, it is said, is to destroy, 529; not so, 529; it is incorporated in the expunging resolution, and lives as long as that lives, 529; the case of the Middlesex election, 529; the resolution to expel John Wilkes expunged from the journals of the House of Commons 529: words of the resolution, 580; annually introduced from 1769 to 1782, and passed, 580; the history of the case not lost, 580; the resolution adopted in the Senate of Massachusetts during the late war, adverse to the celebration of our national victories, 580; expunged ten years afterward, 580; the Senate tried President Jackson a year ago, now it is itself nominally on trial before itself, but in reality before America, Europe and posterity, 580; the proceedings of this day will not be limited to the present age; they will go down to posterity, 580; the first President who has received the condemnation of the Senate for the violation of the laws and constitution which he is sworn to observe 580; the argument of public opinion in the case of the Middlesex election, 580; extract from Wilkes' speech, 580; do. from Fox's speech, 581; an English Whig of the old school acknowledges the right of the people to instruct their representatives, 531; acknowledges the duty of Parliament to obey the voice of the people, 581; the voice of the people of the United States has been heard on this subject, 581; the resolution should be expunged because it is illegal and unjust, 581; illegal because it contains a criminal charge, 581; the first step taken in the House on an impeachment, 581; the British Parliament practise an impeachment to which our constitution is conformable, 582; the injustice of the resolution shown, 582; this point examined, 522; the resolution vague and indefinite, 582; the law should be specified and the clause of the constitution violated, 532; Giles' accusation against General Hamilton, 582; different forms in which the resolution was presented, 583; reasons of such extraordinary metamorphoses, 583; opportunity for any Senator to speak who would undertake to specify any act in which the President had violated the constitution, 588; the resolution was unwarranted by the constitution and laws, 533; subversion of the rights of defence which belong to an accused and impeachable officer, 588; of evil example, 584; speech of Mr. Macon on the vote of approbation, 584; the resolulution passed at a time and under circumstances to involve the political rights and pecuniary interests of the people of the United States in serious injury and peculiar danger, 584; this condemnation of the President indissolubly connected with the cause of the bank, 584; instructions sent to the branch banks contemporaneously with the progress of the debate on the criminating resolutions, 585; extracts, 585; six positions taken, 586 no new measures to destroy the Bank, 587; the Presi dent harbored no hostile and revengeful designs against the bank, 588; not true that there was any necessity for the curtailment ordered in January, 589; no excuse or apology for doubting the rates of exchange, breaking up the exchange business in the West, and concentrating the collection of exchange on the four great commercial cities, 540; the curtailments of these exchange regulations were political and revolutionary, and connect themselves with the contemporaneous proceedings of the Senate for the condemnation of the President, 540; the case of the Western branches, 542; evidence drawn from the bank itself, 548; extracts from Mr. Biddle's letters, 543, 544; article in the National Gazette, 545; the distress of the country occasioned by the bank of the United States and the Senate of the United States, 546; history of the reduction of the deposits, 546; in 1819 the bank was unconnected with politics, 546; further proof that the Senate and the bank, and the Senate more than the bank, produced the distress during last winter, 547; two instances of the bank creating wanton pressure, 547; the resolution which it is proposed to expunge." 549

The expunging resolution laid on the table, 549; called up on the last, 549; motion to strike out the word "c:punge" and insert "rescind, reverse, and make null and void," 549; the friends of the expunging resolution atonished, 549; an expurgation of the journal would be its obliteration, 549; inconsistent with the constitutional injunction "to keep a journal," 549; the mover of the expunging resolution yields, 550; carried, 550; crulation of Mr. Webster that the word "expunge" was expunged, 550; remarks, 550; the original expunging resolution renewed, 550;

Remarks of Senator Benton, 645; "the condemnation of the President co-operative with the conspiracy of the bank to effect the most wicked scheme of mischid exhibited in modern times, 646; President Jackson has done more for the human race than the whole tribe of politicians put together, 646; his services to the county, 647; no parallel to Jackson crushing the bank except in the Roman Consul crushing Catiline, 647; further marks, 648."

Less than three years were sufficient to express palce sentiment in favor of reversal, 717; notice of the inention to bring up the resolution, 718; the resolution, 718; remarks of Senator Benton, 719; "the change in public sentiment, 720; ascertained, 720; how far should the expression of this will be conclusive of our scion, 720; the terror of Jackson's administration and its effect for good or evil on the country," 731, 732, 738, 784, 784

Meeting of democratic Senators, 727; final measure taken, 727; debate on the motion to take up the spicet, 727; the speakers, 727, 728; feelings of the opposition, 728; expressions of Calhoun, 728; feeling all expressions of Clay, 729; Webster's protest against the act, 730; resolution passed, 730; the expunging dose is open Senate, 730; excitement in the galleries, 731; dener given by President Jackson, 731.

F

FARNHAM, RUSSELL, founder of Colony at Astoria, 13.

Pinances.—Distress of the Government in 1820, 11; common forced upon it, 11; army reduced from 10,000 m 6,000 men, 11; naval appropriation reduced one inf.

11; twenty-one millions more than double the amount required for the actual expenses of the government. If how expended, 11; mistake to suppose an amount cessary to be left in the Treasury as a reserve, 11.

Florida, Treaty and Cession giving up Texas and acqu nunciation, 15; action of Mo approved by the country, 15 letter of Monroe to General J the Northeast to see the aggra the South and West, 16; exter of Jefferson and Jackson on Spain fails to ratify, 16; negot ratified, 17; movement again in the relations of Spain and Mexico, 17; three times ratifie the territory was got back, 17 ritory nearly, 17; Indian trea abolition of slavery ever effect the South, 18; the inside view.

FLOYD, JOHN, Representative fro proposition for the settlemen his character, 18.

Foor, Samuel A., resolution of in lands, 180; against Van Buren 215.

FORSYTH, JOHN, on the donation to Buren as Minister to England, ! tariff bill, 815; Seccretary of 8t FRELINGHUYSEN, THEODORE, agains to England, 215.

to England, 935.

French and Spanish Land Claims

titles in Louisiana on its transi

$19; the treaty protected ever

erty, 279; the question was to a

$279; boards of commissions

operation, 279; defects, 279; th

first section, 280; its successful c

French Indemnity.—Special commulent, 588; French fleet approace plying a design to overswe the ready for expected hostilities, 581 sage on the subject of an apole tempt to obtain a dictated apology of the government, 588; stateme the inderdiction of our ports to the inderdiction of our ports expected and French products recoord the treaty that had been form a reduction of duties on wines by the payment of indemnity by Fi to France, 590; extract relative to the France, 590; extract relative to the ready of the payment of the p

Calhoun charges upon the Pres war with France, 591; Benton duct of the Senate at its last sess French question its present hostile 591; conduct of France insulting t from French history, 591; a party bers working to separate the Presi of the United States, and to make the hostile attitude of the two cour on the approach of the French fl state of affairs charged upon the co 593; defence of Senators, 594; the the loss of the defence bills at the fence of the Senate by Webster, 59 on the time when the second ses jires, 598, 599; American arming de our side, 600; denied, 600.

British Mediation.—Message in that Great Britain had offered her tions taken, 586 k. 587; the Presi 'nl designs against any necessity for 589; no excuse or ange, breaking up and concentrating great commercial exchange regulaary, and connect proceedings of the President, 540; the idence drawn from r. Biddle's letters, te, 545; the distress ank of the United States, 546; history 3: in 1819 the bank further proof that nate more than the st winter, 547; two ton pressure, 547; expunge," 549. ae table, 549; called out the word "exand make null and aging resolution asjournal would be h the constitutional ; the mover of the arried, 550; exulta-'expunge" was exrinal expunging re-

"the condemnation
the conspiracy of scheme of mischid exident Jackson has the whole tribe of vices to the country the bank except in ne, 647; further re-

ent to express pal-7; notice of the la-718; the resolution. 19; "the change in 720; how far should usive of our action, stration and its effect 1, 722, 733, 734, 75. , 727; final measures to take up the subbeelings of the oppen, 728; feeling and a protest against the e expunging done in o galleries, 731; dr. 1.

Florida, Treaty and Cossion of Texas.-Treaty of 1818, giving up Texas and acquiring Florida, 15; its denunciation, 15; action of Monroe's Cabinet, 15; treaty approved by the country, 15; points of the treaty, 15; letter of Monroe to General Jackson, 15: repugnance of the Northeast to see the aggrandizement of the Union on the South and West, 16; extent of this feeling, 16; views of Jefferson and Jackson on the cession of Texas, 16; Spain fails to ratify, 16; negotiations revived, 16; treaty ratified, 17; movement against the treaty, 17; change in the relations of Spain and Mexico, 17; treaty with Mexico, 17; three times ratified by the Senate, 17; how the territory was got back, 17; extinguished slave territory nearly, 17; Indian treaties, 18; largest territorial abolition of slavery ever effected, 18; how received at the South, 18: the inside view, 18.

FLOYD, JOHN, Representative from Virginia, 7; moves a proposition for the settlement of Columbia river, 13; his character, 13.

FOOT, SAMUEL A., resolution of inquiry relative to public lands, 130; against Van Buren as Minister to England, 215.

Forsyth, John, on the donation to the Greeks, 63; for Van Buren as Minister to England, 216; on the Compromise tariff bill, 815; Seccretary of State, 477.

FRELINGHUYSEN, THEODORE, against Van Buren as Minister to England, 215.

French and Spanish Land Claims, settlement of.—State of titles in Louisiana on its transfer to the United States, $19; the treaty protected every thing that was property, $79; the question was to apply it to the land titles, $279; boards of commissions established, $279; their operation, $279; defects, $279; the act of 1882, $80; its first section, $280; its successful operation, $290.

French Indemnity.—Special communication from the President, 588; French fleet approaching the coast, 588; implying a design to overawe the government or to be ready for expected hostilities, 588; remarks of the mesage on the subject of an apology, 588; a private attempt to obtain a dictated apology, 588; an attempt made to get this refused apology placed on the archives of the government, 588; statement of the message, 589; the inderdiction of our ports to the entry of French vessels and French products recommended, 589; nature of the treaty that had been formed, 589; sipulated for a reduction of duties on wines by our government and the payment of indemnity by France, 589; advantages to France, 590; reasons of such delay on the part of France, 590; extract relative to the French armament, 580

Calhoun charges upon the President a design to have war with France, 591; Benton asserts that the conduct of the Senate at its last session had given to the French question its present hostile aspect, 591; remarks, 591; conduct of France insulting to us, 591; an example from French history, 591; a party in the French Chambers working to separate the President from the people of the United States, and to make him responsible for the hostile attitude of the two countries, 592; comments on the approach of the French fleet, 598; the present state of affairs charged upon the conduct of the Senate, 593; defence of Senators, 594; the Senate charged with the loss of the defence bills at the last session, 595; defence of the Senate by Webster, 596; further discussion on the time when the second session of Congress exlires, 598, 599; American arming declared to be war on our side, 600; denied, 600.

British Mediation.—Message informing the Senate that Great Britain had offered her friendly mediation between the United States and France, 600; suspension of retaliatory measures recommended, 600; all points in the controversy involving the honor of the United States excepted, 600; motives of the offer, 600, 601; reflections upon this subject, 601.

French Spoliation Claim .- Ground of examined, 91; assumptions on which their payment by the United States rested, 487; liability of the United States to become paymasters themselves, in cases where failing, by war or negotiation, to obtain redress they make a treaty settlement surrendering or abandoning the claims, 487; this point examined, 487; governments not bound to push such interests to the extremity of a war. 487; ought not to go back thirty-four years and call in question the judgment of Washington's administration, 488; another instance of abandenment, 488; speech of Mr. Webster, 488; grounds of the claims, 489; speech of Mr. Wright, 489; relations between France and the United States prior to the disturbances, 489; stipulations of treaties, 490, 491; origin of the claims which formed the subject of the bill, 491; reference to acts of Congress to prove that war existed between the United States and France, 493; the treaty of 1800, 495; what object in the negotiation of 1800, 496; liability of the United States, 496; further remarks, 497, 498; propositions established, 500; the advocates of the bill concede that two positions must be established on their part to sustain it, 500, 501, 502, 508.

Speech of Mr. Webster, 505; "essentially a judicial question, 505; oldness of the claims, 505; said most of them have been bought up, 505; report of the Secretary of State presenting a general view of the history and character of these claims, 506; before the interference of our government with them they constituted just demands against France, 507; grounds upon which the claims are vested by the claimants, 507; points admitted, 508; propositions to be established, 508; were these subsisting claims against France at the time of the treaty? 508; these claims released and relinquished by the amendment of the treaty and its ratifications, 511; these claims surrendered or released by the government on national considerations, 511; further remarks," 512, 518, 514.

Speech of Mr. Benton, 514; "the whole stress of the question lies in a few simple facts, 514; assumed grounds on which the claims rest, 515; on what grounds is it maintained that the United States received a valuable consideration for these claims? 515: the case as between France and us relative to these claims, 515: our obligation under the guarantee of France, 515; the justice and validity of the claims themselves, 516; how can the American people be pressed to pay these claims when it would be unreasonable to press France herself to pay them? 516; it is said the United States have received full consideration from France for these claims, 517; exertions made by the United States on behalf of these claims, 518; what were the losses which led to these claims? 519: one of the most revolting features of this bill is its relation to the insurers, 519; what sum of money will this bill abstract from the treasury?" 520; bill passed the Senate, 521; lost in the House, 521; claim agencies and assignments should be broken up, 521; assignees and agents constitute a profession, 521.

G

GAILLARD, JOHN, Senator from South Carolina, 7; President of the Senate, 7; votes for the Missouri Compromise, 8; decease of, 77; nearly thirty years in the Senate, 77; nine times elected president of the Senate, 77; his character as presiding officer 77.

GALLATIN, ALBERT, candidate for the Vice Presidency in 1824, 45; commissioner at Ghent, 71; negotiates for joint occupation of Oregon, 109; interview with Hus-

GILES, WM. B., decease of, his peculiar talent, 688; the Charles Fox of the House, 688; his character, 688.

GILMER, GEORGE, Representative from Georgia, 7; Governor, 7; action relative to the Cherokees, 165.

Globe Newspaper, the establishment of .- An interview, 129; scheme to set aside Gen. Jackson and run Mr. Calhoun for the next President, 129; propositions, 129; communicated to General Jackson, 129; the Telegraph newspaper, 129; Francis P. Blair, 129; how brought to the notice of General Jackson, 129; establishes the Globe newspaper, 180; stand taken by, 182.

Gold currency, remarks of Mr. Benton upon a, 436; bills to equalize the value of gold and silver and legalizing the tender of foreign coins in either, brought forward, 469; the relative value of the two metals, 469; experience of Mexico and South America, 469; 16 to 1, 469; bill passed, 469; its good effects, 469, 470.

Government, the, its personal aspect in 1820, 7. GRANNY WHITE, the case of, 105. GRUNDY, FELIX, offers anti-nullification-resolutions, 84.

HALL, THOMAS H., Representative from North Carolina, 7. HAMAR, THOMAS L., on the admission of Arkansas, 634. Hanilton, General, argument for a national bank drawn from the Indian War, 2. Hamilton, James A., acts as Secretary of State, 119. Hardin, Benjamin, Representative from Kentucky, 7. Hartford convention.—Design of secession imputed to, 4.

HAYNE, ROBERT Y., on revision of the tariff, 99; on the duty on indigo, 99; on sales of the public lands, 182; debate with Webster, 188, 140; in reply to Webster, 140; against Van Buren as Minister to England, 215; on southern resistance to the tariff, 274.

HENDRICKS, WILLIAM, Representative from Indiana, 7.

HILL, ISAAC, on abolition petitions, 614.

HOLMES, JOHN, Senator from Maine, 7; votes for the admission of Missouri, 9; against Van Buren as Minister to

Horsey, OuterBridge, votes for the Missouri Compro-

House of Representatives.—Errors of De Tocqueville, 205; reputation of the work in Europe, 205; immense superiority attributed to the Senate arising from the different manner of election, 205; statement of De Tocqueville, 205; its tenor to disparage democracy—to attack the principle of popular elections, 205; advantage of extending instead of restricting the privilege of the direct vote, 206; further remarks on his statement, 206; every man of eminence has owed his first elevation to popular elections, 206; experience of England, Scotland, Ireland and Rome, of the success of a direct vote, 206; popular election the safest and wisest mode of election, 206; the difference then between the two Houses has vanished, 206; causes to account for an occasional difference, 206; statesmen not improvised, 207; time often required to carry measures, 207; instance parliamentary reform. 207; other great British measures, 207; short service the evil of the House, 207; instances of Adams and Randolph retaken up by the people when dropped from the Benate, 207; this error disparages the controlling branch of our Government, 207; the British House of Commons, 208; the Senate now occupies prominent public

HUNTER, WILLIAM, Senator from Rhode Island, 7.

Imprisonment for debt, abolition of.-Act of Congress passed to abolish all imprisonment on process issuing from the courts of the United States, 292; effect of the example, 292; report, 292; extracts, 292; "power of the creditor over the debtor in ancient Greece and Rome, 292; the history of English jurisprudence furnishes the remarkable fact that for many centuries personal liberty could not be violated for debt, 292; progress of imprisonment in England, 298; further remarks," 298; act passed, 298; effect upon the States, 298; imprisonment condemned by morality, by humanity, and by the science of pelitical economy, 294.

Incendiary publications circulated by mail.-Moved, that so much of the President's message as related to this subject be referred to a select committee, 580; opposed, should go to the committee on post-offices and post-roads, 580; object to secure a committee that would calmly investigate the whole subject, 590; discussion relative to the committee, 580; special committee appointed, 580; bill and report, 580; dissent of various members of the committee from the sentiments of the report, 581; two parts exceptionable, 581; the nature of the Federal Government founded in "compact" and on interference of non-slave States with slavery in other States, 581; extracts from the report, 581, 582, 588; insidiousness of the report consisted in the assumption of impending danger of the abolition of slavery in all the slave States, and the necessity for extraordinary means to prevent these dire calamities, when the fact was that there was not one particle of any such danger, 584; the report foreshadows disunion, 584; in vain to expect security or protection for the slaveholding States except from them selves, and concert only wanted among them to obtain this end, 584; Calhoun recurs to secession for a new grievance, 585; remark of Clay relative to the compromise of 1883, 585; remarks of Mr. Webster, 586; examination of the features of the bill, 586; remarks of Mr. Clay on the bill, 586; the bill not only unnecessary, but as a law of dangerous, if not a doubtful authority, 586; whence did Congress derive the power to pass this law? 587.

Votes on the bill, 587; three successive tie votes, 587 yeas and nays called, 587; the Vice-President called for 557; gives the casting vote for engrossment, 587; re marks on the vote of various Senators, 587.

Indian Factory System.—Its origin, 21; objects, 21; how carried on, 21; its inside working, 21; bill to repeat passed, 21; shows how long the Indians and the Govern ment may be cheated without knowing it, 21.

Indians, removal of .- Large tracts held by the Indians in South and Western States in 1821, 27; early polley of the Government, 27; applications to the Federal Gov ernment incessant for their removal, 27; what has become of the tribes in the older States? 27; speech on Elliot, 27; views of Jefferson, 28; action of Monroet administration, 28; process for effecting the removal 28; bill passed, 28; treaties ratified, 29; the system of removal begun, 29.

Creeks, removal from Georgia.—Agreement between the United States and Georgia, 58; treaty of removal concluded in 1824, 58; resisted by the nation, 59; st tempts to enforce it by the State of Georgia, 59; inter ference of the administration, 59; new treaty negotists, 59; objections to it in the Senate, 59; further negotiar tion, 59; treaty ratified, 59; an incident, 59; remarks of Wan Buren, 60; remai 62, 68,

Cherokees, removal from 624; combination of obstacle to, 624; treaty with the Che stipulation, 624; treaty oppo test from the Cherokee nati ject the treaty, 625; close vo votes, 626; involved an exte and fraternal spirit of the fre brethren, 626.

Final removal of .- This 690; completed, 690; effects movals, 690; increase of area conduct of the northern Sta General Jackson, 691; staten 691: remarks, 692; amount of 692 the smaller remote tribes

Indian sovereignties within State up in some of the States, 163 Jackson's message in 1829-30, ulterior destiny of the Indian object of much interest, 164; ment a right to sustain them in government within the limits o to the constitution, 164; their e 164; passsage of an act to enab mended, 164; an old policy t spirit, 164; proceedings in Geor the Cherokees, 164; action of G to the suit of the Cherokees, 165 ton to the Grand Jury of the In dress of Milner to the Foreign London, 165; remarks, 166; the 166; answer of Governor Gilmer a case before the United States S tlement, 166.

INGHAM, SAMUEL D., Secretary of the his seat in the cabinet, 181.

Internal Improvements within the question, 8; New York canal fi canals all the vogue, 22; candida spread their sails, 22; advocate two prominent subjects discussed sign. 22: Monroe's veto, 22; the tion, 22; constitutional point how sage, 28; the post-office and post 28; the war power, 28; the por merce, 24; to pay debts and pr welfare, 24; to make laws necess make needful rules and regulation which Mr. Monroe yielded, 26; th ed, 26; places recommended for in message of Jackson, 26; fate of the process issuing 92; effect of the process issuing 92; effect of the process of the eece and Rome, toe furnishes the spersonal liberty gress of imprison, 293; act passaprisonment cond by the science / mail.-Moved, age as related to amittee, 580; oppost-offices and mittee that would , 580; discussion al committee aplissent of various sentiments of the 81; the nature of compact" and on slavery in other 581, 582, 588; inthe assumption of slavery in all the wordinary means to fact was that there er, 584; the report expect security or except from them them to obtain this 1 for a new griev. o the compromise , 586; examination rks of Mr. Clay on essary, but as a law ority, 586; whence this law ? 587. ssive tie votes, 587 resident called for rossment, 587; re s, 587.

JACKSON, ANDREW, views on the ces internal improvement, 22; candidat in 1824, 44; message relative to a dians, 164; veto of Maysville road Van Buren, relative to his agency is cabinet, 217; veto of the recharte elected President, 282; proclama Carolina, 299; retains the bill to dis of the sales of the public lands, 864: His administration .- His inaugu cabinet, 119; members of Congress, ominent public and, 7.

; objects, 21; how, 21; bill to repeans and the Govern ng it, 21.

I by the Indians in

27; early policy of the Federal Gov 1, 27; what has beites? 27; speech or action of Monroe's cting the removal, 29; the system of Agreement between ; treaty of removal the nation, 59; al-Georgia, 59; interw treaty negotists, 59; further negotists cident, 59; remarks of Wan Buren, 60; remarks of Benton, 61; others, 62, 68.

Cherokees, removal from Georgia.—Facts of the case, 624; combination of obstacles, 624; proceedings relative to, 624; treaty with the Cherokees, 624; amount of the stipulation, 624; treaty opposed in the Senate, 624; protest from the Cherokee nation, 625; proposition to reject the treaty, 625; close vote, 625; saved by free State votes, 626; involved an extension of slavery, 626; just and fraternal spirit of the free States to their southern brethren, 626.

Final removal of.—This policy when commenced, 690; completed, 690; effects, 690; extent of the removals, 690; increase of area of slave population, 691; conduct of the northern States, 691; outery against General Jackson, 691; statements of De Tocqueville, 691; remarks, 692; amount of payments to the Indians, 692; the smaller remote tribes, 693; the Indian bureau,

Indian sovereignties within States .- Indian oligarchies set up in some of the States, 163; remarks of President Jackson's message in 1829-30, 164; "the condition and ulterior destiny of the Indian tribes within States, an object of much interest, 164; has the General Government a right to sustain them in erecting an independent government within the limits of a State? 164; reference to the constitution, 164; their efforts discountenanced." 164; passsage of an act to enable their removal recommended, 164; an old policy taken hold of by party spirit, 164; proceedings in Georgia, 164; proceedings of the Cherokees, 164; action of Governor Gilmer relative to the suit of the Cherokees, 165; charge of Judge Clayton to the Grand Jury of the Indian countries, 165; address of Milner to the Foreign Missionary Society of London, 165; remarks, 166; the case of George Tassels, 166; answer of Governor Gilmer to a request to make up a case before the United States Supreme Court, 166; settlement, 166.

INCHAM, SAMUEL D., Secretary of the Treasury, 119; resigns his seat in the cabinet, 181.

his seat in the cabinet, 181.

Internal Improvements within the States, source of the question, 3; New York canal finished, 22; roads and canals all the vogue, 22; candidates for the Presidency spread their sails, 22; advocates of the measure, 22; two prominent subjects discussed, 22; extent of the design, 22; Monroe's veto, 22; the statement of the question, 22; constitutional point how viewed in the message, 23; the post-office and post-road grant of power, 28; the war power, 23; the power to regulate commerce, 24; to pay debts and provide for the general welfare, 24; to make laws necessary and proper, 25; to make needful rules and regulations, 26; the point on which Mr. Monroe yielded, 26; the act for surveys passed, 26; places recommended for improvement, 26; veto message of Jackson, 26; fate of the system, 27.

J

JACKSON, ANDREW, views on the cession of Texas, 16; on internal improvement, 22; candidate for the Presidency in 1824, 44; message relative to a removal of the Indians, 16;; veto of Maysville road bill, 167; letter to Van Buren, relative to his agency in the rupture of the cabinet, 217; veto of the recharter of the bank, 251; elected President, 282; proclamation against South Carolina, 299; retains the bill to distribute the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, 364; veto, 365.

His administration.—His inaugural address, 119; his cabinet, 119; members of Congress, 120; Speaker, 121;

recommendations of his first annual message, 121 amendment of the constitution relative to elections of President and Vice President," 121; remarks, 122; amendment to the constitution too far removed from the people, 122; events impressively urge it, 122; not another example on earth of a free people surrendering the choice of their President, 122; exclusion of members of Congress from office recommended, 122; remarks of the message on this point, 122; the policy recommended respecting the navy, 122; instructions to Virginia Senators in 1800, 122; the army and navy as found by President Jackson, 128; recommendations relative to ship building, 123; the inutility of the Bank of the United States asserted, 123; remarks of the message, 123; manner in which they were perverted, 128; the finances, 124; other recommendations, 124.

Breaking up of the Cabinet.—Resignation of the members, 181; countesy of the proceeding, 181; ground upon which the President placed the required resignations, 181; the new cabinet, 181; excitement in party politics, 181; attack on Mr. Crawford, 181; his answer, 181; exposure of errors of the pamphlet of Calhoun, 181; the words of Mr. Crawford, 182; change in the course of the Telegraph newspaper, 182; the stand taken by the Globe.—See Globe newspaper.

Twenty-second Congress, 208; the Speaker, 209; message, 210; boundary between Maine and New Brunswick referred to the King of Netherlands, 210; his opinion on the case, 210; our claims with France, 210; a treaty made, 210; differences with Spain, 210 claims against Naples, 211; our demands on the Sicilies, 211; relations with Russia, 211; effect of our treaty with Austria, 211; China and the East Indies, 212; Mexico, 212; Central America, 212; South American powers, 212; state of the finances, 213; insolvent debtors to the Government, 213; election of President and Vice President by a direct vote of the people, 213; the bank of the United States, 213.

Message after a second election, 283; wholly confined to business topics, 283; the finances, 288; extinguishment of the national debt, 288; reduction of burthens on the people, 288; protection should be limited to a few articles of indispensable necessity, 284; views on the public lands, 284; should cease to be a source of revenue soon as practicable, 284; the federal title should be extinguished in the States, 284; donations or sales at barely reimbursing prices is the wise policy of the government, 284; after a fixed day the surrender of that unsold should take place, 284; advantages of this course, 284; removal of the Indians nearly consummated, 285; obstacles to the removal of the Indian tribes, 285; the removals seized upon by party spirit, 285; Congress appealed to and refused to intervene, 285; the Supreme Court appealed to and refused the application, 285; the case of the missionaries, 285; the case of Tassells, 285; interference in the affairs of Georgia, 286; an intimation given of the insolvency of the bank and the insecurity of the public deposits, 286; this intimation received with scorn by the friends of the bank 286; conduct of the bank in relation to the payment five millions of the three per cent. stock, 286; the attitude of South Carolina, 286; opposition to the revenue laws,

Message to 23d Congress, 371; the state of t e finances, 371; remarks relative to an economical administration, 371; reasons for the removal of the public deposits, 571; amendments to the constitution recommended, 372; remarks on conventions, 372.

Combination against General Jackson.-Incident in the career of Mr. Fox. leader in the House of Commons. 400; union against Gen. Jackson, 400; their movements take a personal and vindictive character 400: nower of the bank to produce distress, 401; speakers, 401; the business of the combination divided—distress and panic the object, 401; the friends of General Jackson, 401; speech of Mr. Clay on the removal of the deposits, 402.

"In the midst of a revolution, hitherto bloodless, 402: the Judiciary has not been exempted from the prevailing rage for innovation, 402; a large proportion of the good and enlightened men of the Union are yielding to sentiments of despondency, 402; at the close of last session the power of Congress over the purse was left untouched, 408; after all the testimonies of the safety of the public money, who would have supposed that the place would have been changed? 408; by virtue of whose will, power, dictation, were the deposits removed? 404; the President has no power over the Public Treasury, 404; some of the tremendous consequences which may ensue from this high-handed measure, 405; what security have the people against the lawless conduct of the President? 405; the instance of Casar, 405: what is it our duty to do &" 406: remarks in reply, 406.

"The first of the resolutions a direct impeachment of the President, 406; we are trying an impeachment, 406; the Senate should consider well before they proceed further, 407; the right of the President to dismiss his secretaries, 407: two other impeachments going on at the same time, 407: the President on trial for a high crime, 407; for a misdemeanor, 408; the Secretary of the Treasury on trial, 408; the charge of being the instrument of the President, 408; people called upon to rise and drive the Goths from the capitol, 409; the bank was not the Treasury of the United States 409 : fourteenth article of the bank charter, 409; the legal existence of the Treasury brought out by the debates," 410.

Union of Clay and Calhoun against Jackson, 411; speech of Calhoun, 411; gives Clay assurance of aid, 411; the robbery of the Treasury, 411; the revolution not to go backwards, 412; entirely owing to the military and nullifying attitude of South Carolina that the compromise was passed, 412; a political coalition to act against Gen. Jackson, 412; opposition to the "usurpations" of the President, 413; contempt and scorn at the Secretary's reasons for removing the deposits 418: the removal of Secretary Duane an abuse of power, 418: Calhoun's independence of the bank, 414; Clay disclaims all connection with the bank, 414; the list of Congressional borrowers or retainers large, 415.

Message to Congress in 1884, 477; relations with France, 477; the indemnity stipulated in the treaty has not been paid, 477; extracts, 477; question of waiting on the action of France, or of action on our part, referred to Congress, 478; United States should insist on a prompt execution, 478; consequences considered, 478; collision with France to be regretted on account of her position with regard to libera, institutions, 478; condition of the finances, 479; freedom from public debt, 479; seizure of the dividends due the United States on stock, by the bank, 479; other proceedings of the bank, 480; criminality of the bank in making the distress, 480; bank losses commenced at this period, 480; selling the stock in the bank, 480; law relative to public deposits, 480; increase of the gold currency, 481; reform in the Presidential election, 481.

Meeting of twenty-fourth Congress, 568; choice of Speaker, 569; message of the President, 569; "relations with France, 569; origin of our claims against France, 569: extent of the injuries we received, 569: antiffic uninterrupted negotiation for twenty years, except a short time when France was overwhelmed by the mile tary power of United Europe, 569; subject brought up in the message of 1829, 570; exceptions taken to the message by the French Government, 570; the justice of the claims recognized and the amount stipulated in the treaty of 1881, 570; its ratification, 570; delays of the French Government in their action upon the subject of its fulfilment heretofore stated, 570; expectations found. ed on the promises of the French Government not real ized 571: consultation with Congress relative to messures for reprisal, 571; regarded as an insult by the French Government, 571; recall of their Minister and suspension of all diplomatic intercourse, 571: having vindicated the dignity of France, they next proceeded to illustrate her justice, 571; bill passed in the Chamber of Deputies to make the appropriations accessary to carry into effect the treaty, 571; a stipulation that the money should not be paid until it was ascertained that no steps had been authorized by Congress of a hostile character towards France, 571: this point ascertained 572; subsequently the bill amended to require a satisfactory explanation of the President's message." 579. the apology repulsed by the President as a stain on the national character, 572; injurious effects of the loss of the fortification bill in the previous Congress, 572; the humane policy which governed the United States in the removal of the Indians, 578; the revival of the gold currency and its influence on the industry of the country, 578: increase of specie in the country 578: the transportation of the mails by railroad and the extertion of the companies, 574; the transmission by mail into the slave States of incendiary publications tending to excite servile insurrection, 574; reform in the mode of electing the two first officers of the Republic, 575.

Foreign Diplomacy - Most alarm felt from this part of his administration by the opponents of his election 601; no part more successful, beneficial, and honorable.

The British West India trade recovered, 602.

The French Indemnity treaty, 602; efforts previously for redress, 602: the message, 602: Rives sent as Minister, 602; the treaty, 602; further proceedings, 608.

The Danish treaty of indemnity for spoliations on American commerce, 608; consisted of illegal seizure and confiscations of American vessels in Danish ports during the time of the British orders in Council and the French decrees, 608; negotiations of J. O. Adams' administration, 608; subsequent success of the negotia-

Neapolitan indemnity treaty for spoliations on American commerce, 608; previous efforts to obtain indemnity, 608; cause of delay, 604; embarrassments, 604; 500 cess, 604.

Spanish indemnity treaty for causes of complaint since 1819, 604; Spanish blockades of ports of South America colonies, 604; state of negotiations, 604; success, 605.

Russian commercial treaty, none before negotisted 605; many previous efforts, 605; every thing else grantel but a commercial treaty, 605; final success of negotiations, 606.

Portuguese indemnity for seizures during the blocks of Terceira, 606; treaty made, 606; inability of Portugi to pay, 606; time extended and payment made, 606.

Treaty with the Ottoman Empire made in 1881, # first treaty with that power, 606; still further tresty relation to our commerce needed, 607; stipulations # success, 607.

Renewal of the treaty w Treaty with Siam, 608. Treaty with Sultan of Ma Last message, 684; reca state of things at home and 684; the distribution schem of the Treasury circular, 68 Congress, 686; Seminole ho stock in the Bank of the I of appropriations, 688; mi 688; supervision over the 1 of the Presidential election, Farewell address of Pres union, 782; his apprehension Conclusion of his administ etions, 788, 784; appeara Van Buren, 785; his recei 785; his decease, 786; his fir 786; first interview, 786; in son, 787, 789; his character General in Tennessee, 788; r Jackson and Calhoun, rupture Calhoun relative to, 167; its the case as it was made out in on the part of Van Buren to case confronted by Jackson, of Calhoun, 168; the reply of heretofore, 168; how it came ton, 168; letter of Kendall, 1 exposition, 168; justification nations and the treaty with possession of Florida, 168; do. roe and Calhoun as Secretary of Mr. Calhoun's conduct towa of the Seminole War, &c., 169 tracts from orders, 169; lette son's letter to Monroe, 169; m the letter, 170; reply by John under which Jackson entered the Spanish authorities, 171; which Jackson acted, 171; his or War, 172; acted within the I ders, and in accordance with th the Government, in taking post Pensacola, 172; letters to the 8 replies of disapprobation, 172; journal, 178; no reason to doubt 178; further evidence, 178; lett 178; his impressions derived f informed that Calhoun was the upon him, 174; and that Crawfo 174; statement of Mr. Cobb, 174 ilton of Mr. Calhoun, 174; privat to Mr. Calhoun, 174; Calhoun's tion, 175; how the suspicions awakened against Mr. Calhoun, 1 Ringold, 175; the statement of ] 175; inquiry relative to its correct his reply, 175; note, 175; united inet, 176; toast of Calhoun by report on the resolutions of cens its bitterness due to Mr. Calho Mr. Leacock, 177; Calhoun's sec him, 178; report of Mr. Leacocl added, 178; success of Calhoun's 179; the mask worn by Mr. Calhe ments," 180; calamitous events 180; Crawford's words relative to private letter of Jackson to M

meeting, 180.

Renewal of the treaty with Morocco, 608 Treaty with Siam, 608.

Treaty with Sultan of Muscat, 608.

Last message, 684; recapitulation of the auspicious state of things at home and abroad, 684; the deposit act, 684; the distribution scheme, 685; effects, 685; issuance of the Treasury circular, 685; attack upon the circular in Congress, 686; Seminole hostilities in Florida, 686; the stock in the Bank of the United States, 687; the delay of appropriations, 688; mail contracts with railroads. 688 : supervision over the Indian tribes, 689: the mode of the Presidential election, 689.

Farewell address of President Jackson, 782; on disunion, 782; his apprehensions, 788.

Conclusion of his administration, 783; remarks and reexections, 788, 784; appearance at the inauguration of Van Buren, 785; his reception, 785; his retirement, 785; his decease, 786; his first appearance to the writer, 786; first interview, 786; intercourse, 786; Mrs. Jackson, 737, 789; his character, 787, 788; elected Major-General in Tennessee, 788; nephews, 789.

Jackson and Calhoun, rupture between .- Pamphlet of Mr. Calhoun relative to, 167; its title, 167; its contents, 167; the case as it was made out in the pamphlet an intrigue on the part of Van Buren to supplant a rival, 168; this case confronted by Jackson, 168; his previous opinion of Calhoun, 168; the reply of Jackson never published heretofore, 168; how it came into the possession of Benton, 168; letter of Kendall, 168; contents of Jackson's exposition, 168; justification of himself under the law of nations and the treaty with Spain for taking military possession of Florida, 168; do. under the orders of Monroe and Calhoun as Secretary of War, 168; a statement of Mr. Calhoun's conduct towards him in all that affair of the Seminole War, &c., 169; "introduction, 169; extracts from orders, 169; letter of Calhoun, 169; Jackson's letter to Monroe, 169: manner of the reception of the letter, 170; reply by John Rhea, 170; circumstances under which Jackson entered Florida, 170; conduct of the Spanish authorities, 171; the impresssions under which Jackson acted, 171; his dispatch to the Secretary of War, 172; acted within the letter and spirit of his orders, and in accordance with the secret understanding of the Government, in taking possession of St. Marks and Pensacola, 172; letters to the Secretary of War, 172; no replies of disapprobation, 172; statements of a Georgia journal, 173; no reason to doubt Mr. Calhoun's approval, 178; further evidence, 178; letter of Col. A. P. Hayne, 178; his impressions derived from Mr. Calhoun, 174; informed that Calhoun was the instigator of the attacks upon him, 174; and that Crawford was unjustly blamed, 174; statement of Mr. Cobb, 174; inquiries of Col. Hamilton of Mr. Calhoun, 174; private letter of Gen. Jackson to Mr. Calhoun, 174; Calhoun's reply, 175; recapitulation, 175; how the suspicions of Gen. Jackson were awakened against Mr. Calhoun, 175; statement of Mr. T. Ringold, 175; the statement of Mr. Crawford obtained, 175; inquiry relative to its correctness, of Calhoun, 175; his reply, 175; note, 175; united testimony of the Cabinet, 176; toast of Calhoun by Gen. Jackson, 177; the report on the resolutions of censure in the House, 177; its bitterness due to Mr. Calhoun, 177; proceedings of Mr. Leacock, 177: Calhoun's secret communications to him, 178; report of Mr. Leacock, 178; a darker shade added, 178; success of Calhoun's management thus far. 179; the mask worn by Mr. Calhoun, 179; further statements," 180: calamitous events followed this rupture, 180; Crawford's words relative to the production of the private letter of Jackson to Monroe in the Cabinet

Jackson, attempted assassination of.-The President and Cabinet attend the funeral of William R. Davis, 521; circumstances of the attempt to shoot the President 521; the assailant knocked down and secured, 521; the prisoner, 521; the pistols, 521; prisoner examined by physicians relative to the soundness of his mind, 522; report of physicians, 522; a diseased mind acted upon by a general outcry against a public man, 528; not tried, but treated as insane, 524.

Jackson, President, Senatorial Condemnation of.-Clay and Calhoun the leading spirits in this measure, 423; the resolution passed, 428; irrelevance of the resolution to any right or duty of the Senate, 428; its effect, 423; composure of President Jackson, 424; course of his friends, 424; mischief of the distress, 424; the Protest of the President, 425; its contents, 425; extracts, 425; "it wants both the form and substance of a legislative measure, 425; the whole phraseology judicial, 425; its charges, 425; in substance an impeachment of the President, 425; this impeachment originated in the Senate without the aid or concurrence of the House, 426; Senators from three States voted contrary to the sense of their legislatures, 426; words of the Protest, 427; an appeal to his private history for the patriotism and integrity of his life," 427; the excitement which ensued upon its reading in the Senate, 427.

Notice of the Expunging resolution given, 428; remarks, 428; "instance of the House of Commons, 428; the question brought before the American people, 428; motion to reject the President's message, is the question, 429; the charges of the resolution, 429; speeches in support of the resolution, 430; three characters in which the Senate can act, 480; one of the most difficult and delicate tasks in the convention was to select a court for the trial of impeachments, 430; it is an object not more to be desired, than difficult to be obtained. 481; further remarks, 481; the Star Chamber Court, 432; what occasion has the Senate, sitting as a court of impeachment, for the power of execution," 432; motion carried, 432; reasons for the Senate's refusal, 488.

JEFFERSON, THOMAS, rejects the treaty of 1807, 1; his idea of a commercial communication with Asia, 14; his interview with the traveller Ledyard, 14; seeks discovery of the Columbia river, 14; projects the expedition of Lewis and Clarke, 14; views on the cession of Texas, 16: letter to Dr. Breckenridge, 16: as a statesman, 28: remarks on future French affairs, 81; remarks on the road from Georgia to New Orleans, 43; decease of, 87; character, 87, 88; his connection with the doctrine of nullification, 148.

JESSUP, Gen., second to Mr. Clay in the duel with Randolph, 70; his statement, 70.

JOHNNY, the servant of Randolph, anxiety for his master at the duel between Randolph and Clay, 75.

JOHNSON, CHARLES, on reference of the Bank memorial to a select committee, 285.

JOHNSON, HENRY, Senator from Louisiana, 7; governor, 7. JOHNSON, RICHARD M., Senator from Kentucky, 7; votes for the Missouri Compromise, 8; Judge of Supreme Court, &

On committee of bank investigation, 241; reports on imprisonment for debt, 292.

Joint Committee of both Houses on the admission of Missouri, 9.

Jones, Francis, Representative from Tennessee, 7.

KENDALL, Amos, letter to Calhoun, 168; Postmaster General, 181.

King, Rufus, Senator from New York, 7; appointed Minister

vered, 602. 1; efforts previously Rives sent as Minisoceedings, 608. y for spoliations on d of illegal seizures sels in Danish ports 's in Council and the of J. Q. Adams' adcess of the negotia-

569; an fair o

years, except a

ned by the mili

bject brought up

ons taken to the 70; the justice of stipulated in the 10; delays of the

on the subject of

pectations found-

ernment not real-relative to meas-

an insult by the neir Minister and irse, 571; having

v next proceeded

d in the Chamber

ions mecessary to ipulation that the

s ascertained that

agress of a hostile point ascertained,

o require a satis-

t's message," 579:

t as a stain on the

ects of the loss of Congress, 572; the inited States in the

val of the gold curry of the country,

ry, 578; the trans-

d the extortion of n by mail into the

as tending to excite

he mode of electing felt from this part

ents of his election,

cial, and honorable,

spoliations on Amerits to obtain indemnirrassments, 604; suc-

ses of complaint size rts of South America 604; success, 605. ne before negotistel ery thing else grantel al success of negotia-

es during the blocks ; inability of Portugal yment made, 606. re made in 1881, 68; still further tresty is 607; stipulations, W.

meeting, 180.

manners, 57; dress, 57; courtesy between him and Van Buren, 57; his suggestions to Senator Benton, 58; his statement of the sentiment of the revolutionary period, 58.

KING, WILLIAM R., Senator from Alabama, 7; votes for the Missouri Compromise, 8; on the Expunging resolutions of Alabama, 525, 526, 527. King, John P., on abolition petitions, 618, 617; on the independence of Texas, 666.

KREMER, GEORGE, avowed author of an anonymous publication against Clay; 71.

LAFAYETTE, his visit.—An absence of forty years, 29; manner of his reception, 29; address of Speaker Clay, 80; Lafayette in the presence of posterity, 80; appropriation of money and land to Lafayette, 80; the grants opposed 80; reasons, 80; advocated, 81; his sacrifices, 81; views of Jefferson, 81; return of Lafayette to France, 81.

LANMAN, JAMES, the case of.—On the expiration of the Senatorial term of Lanman, the Legislature of Connecticut failing to elect, the governor appointed him, 56; debate on the validity of the appointment, 56; not a case in which a governor can fill a vacancy, the vacancy foreseen, not happened, 56; precedents reported to the Senate, 56; unsatisfactory, 56; motion to admit, rejected, 56.

LAWBENCE, RICHARD, attempts to assassinate President

Leake, Walter, votes for the Missouri Compromise, 8. Ledyard, John, attempts the discovery of the Columbia

LEBOHEE, ROBERT P., moves the compromise tariff bill, 809. Lewis, of North Carolina, on the admission of Arkansas, 682. LIVINGSTON, EDWARD, Secretary of State, 181.

LLOYD, EDWARD, Senator from Maryland, 7; governor, 7; votes for the Missouri Compromise, 8.

LOGAN, WILLIAM, votes for the Missouri Compromise, 8. LOWNDES, WILLIAM, Representative from South Carolina, 7; weight of his opinions, 8; on the committee to whom was referred the application of Missouri, 9; decease, 18;

LOWRIE, WALTER, votes for the Missouri, Compromise, 8.

TVE

MACAULAY, his description of removals from office, 162.

Macon, Nathaniel, Senator from North Carolina, 7; votes for the Missouri Compromise, 8; opposes the grants to Lafayette, 80; his vote for Vice-President in 1824, 45; answer relative to the authorship of the report on the Panama mission, 68.

Retirement of, 114; his temperament, 114; fixed the time for his retirement long before, 114; his resignation, 114; his death, 114; his character, 114; sketch of his life, 115; enters the army, 115; refuses to leave the camp for the legislative assembly of his native State, 115; the battle of Guilford, 115; Macon's civil life, 116; his political principles, 116; disregard of wealth, 117; his friendships, 117; his executor, 117; codicil to his will, 117; his charity, 118; his dress, 118; his disinterestedness, 118; his simplicity, 118; letter on the Military Academy, 182; his character, 584.

Madison, James, yields in favor of the second bank, 8; on the regulation of commerce, 156; his veto of an internal improvement bill, 167; his letter on slavery agitation, 609; remarks, 623; decease of—time of his death, 678; remarks of Dr. Witherspoon, 678; his talent, 677; his writings, 679; characteristics, 679.

to England, 57; long service in the Government, 57; his | McGuire, J. C., publishes a quarto volume of Madison

MANGUM, WILLIE P., on the branch Mints, 550.

MARCY, WILLIAM L., for Van Buren as Amulster to Eng

MARSHALL, JOHN, Chief Justice, 7; administers the oath of office to Jackson, 119; decease of Chief Justice, 681 his character, 681; his speech in the case of Jonathan

MoDuffie, George, moves amendment to the constitution, 87; expresses the views of the South on the revised tariff, 100; on revision of the tariff, 100; on the Committee of Bank Investigation, 241.

McIntosh, William, Chief of Creek Indians, 58; negotiates

McLane, Louis, Representative from Delaware, 7; sent Minister to England, 127; Secretary of the Treasury, MoLean, John, Postmaster General, 7; Postmaster-General, 68; appointed Justice of the Supreme Court, 120. McKinney, Thomas L., superintendent of the Indian fac-

MEIGS, R. J., coadjutor with Clay on the Missouri ques-

Memorial of the Bank Directors to Congress relative to the removal of the public deposits, 879; of the rejected Government Directors of the Bank to Congress, 889.

Mercer, Charles Fenton, Representative from Virginia, 7. Message on the South Carolina proceedings, 808; relative to the distribution of the proceeds of the sale of public lands, 865; to twenty-third Congress, 869; on the renomination of the Bank Directors, 886.

METCALFE, THOMAS, Representative from Kentucky, 7; gov.

Michigan, admission of. See Arkansas. Military Academy.—Numerous desertions in the army, 182; difficulty to find a remedy for the evil, 182; letter from Mr. Macon, 182; not a government in the world so unfriendly to the rights of the people as ours since the estalishment of the West Point Institution, 182; officers rise from the ranks in all countries of Europe, 188; returns to Parliament, 188; how is it in our service? 183; difficulty of obtaining a commission for a citizen in the regular regiments, 188; case of Hermann Thorn, 188; admitted to service in Austria, 188; case of Kit Carson, 188; rejected because he did not come through the West Point gate, 188; this rule of appointment become the law of the land, 188; popular opposition to the institution, 184; it is said Washington was the founder of the institution, 184; the institution of his day a very different affair, 184; explained, 184; all was right until 1812, 184; extract from the act of 1812, 184; the decep tion of the clause, 184; other deaptions which follow 185; this establishment is mainly a school for the gratnitous education of those who have unfluence to get there, 184; gratuitous instruction to the children of the living is a vicious principle, 185; vital objections to the institution, 185; a monopoly of the appointments how effected, 185; the President and the academy real appointing power, and the Senate an office of the registration of appointments, 186; act of 1812 reli constitutionality on fictions, 186; the title of the act fictitious, 186; its title, 186; our academy an imitation of European military schools, 186; the remedy for these evils is to repeal the act of 1812, 186.

Attempted Inquiry into.-Organized under the set of 1812 688; movements against early commenced, 689 committee appointed, 688; report 638; no attention given to it, 688; other motions, 688; debate, 689; 1 monopoly for the gratuitous education of the sons of the rich and influencial, 689; s army as applies to memb efforts to obtain an investig propriation resorted to, 641 641; "grounds of opposition gation been resisted? 641 comes the most efficient su exclusiveness of the institu emy not calculated to ma the institution in the times institution as it is now, 6 Great Britain examined, 64

A clause in the appropria forty horses, &c., erection o in bad weather, 712; struck restoration, 712, 718; furthe

Missouri, admission of.-Exc Congress of 1820-'21, 8; the striction, 8; the compromis unanimity of the Presiden the Senate on the compron called in question, 8; Senat the House, 8; the increase a question of political powe of the Union, 8; provision i forbidding Legislative interfe the prohibition of the emigra 9: its treatment by Congress tion, 9 : Application for admis 9; report of committee, 9; re in the Senate, 9; House rejec ate, 9; joint committee orde Houses, 9; report, 9; adopte Senate, 10: compliance of Missouri, 10: defeat of the from having slaves if she c object of, 10; the objections garded, 10; excitement of ti movement, 10; sentiments of 10: a movement for the balar

Missouri resolutions .- Not now confederation was a league wi sovereignties, 361; the Feder old system, 361; on the certai when the sword is once draw 861; advantage of working citizens and not on States, 86

Missouri Question, extension of boundary on the Missouri ri threefold, 626; a bill for the alt line and the extension of the passed both Houses, 627; this northern members gave to the ishing slavery, 627.

MITCHELL GEORGE E., on reference to a select committee, 234,

MONBOE, JAMES, negotiates the tre the declaration of war in 181: showing the unanimity of his question, 8; his letters to Jacks as, 15; ditto to Jefferson, 16; c veto on internal improvement land road bill, 167; decease of, his character, 679; genius, 679; tion of his political career, 68 680; his career, 680.

MONBOE doctrine, 67.

MOOEE, GABRIEL, anecdote respecti

e of Madison

nister to Eng

ers the oath or f Justice, 681 ase of Jonathan

the constituonth on the reiff, 100; on the

, 58; negotiates

laware, 7; sent of the Treasury,

ostmaster-Geneme Court, 120. the Indian fac-

Missouri ques-

as relative to the of the rejected Congress, 389. from Virginia, 7. gs, 808; relative he sale of public 869; on the re-

Centucky, 7; gov-

in the army, 182; 182; letter from the world so unours since the estion, 182; officers Europe, 188; reour service? 183; or a citizen in the nann Thorn, 188; se of Kit Carson, through the West ment become the on to the instituthe founder of the is day a very difll was right until 2, 184; the decepions which follow school for the grae influence to get he children of the d objections to the appointments how te an office by the ct of 1812 rem its , title of the act ficny an imitation of s remedy for these

> ized under the set y commenced, 688; 688; no attention 38; debate, 689; 1 on of the sons of the rich and influencial, 639; some rule should apply to the army as applies to members of Congress, 640; further efforts to obtain an investigation, 640; attack on the appropriation resorted to, 641; remarks of Franklin Pierce, 641; "grounds of opposition, 641; why has this investigation been resisted? 641; from the middling interest comes the most efficient support in trying periods, 642; exclusiveness of the institution, 642; the military academy not calculated to make the army effective, 642; the institution in the times of Washington, &c., and the institution as it is now, 648; gratuitous education in Great Britain examined, 644; further remarks," 645.

A clause in the appropriation bill for the purchase of forty horses, &c., erection of a building, a riding house in bad weather, 712; struck out, 712; opposition to its restoration, 712, 718; further debate, 714.

Missouri, admission of .- Exciting question of session of Congress of 1820-'21, 8; the state admitted without restriction, 8; the compromise, 8; work of the South, 8; unanimity of the President's cabinet, 8; unanimity of the Senate on the compromise, 8; its constitutionality called in question, 8; Senators voting for it, 8; vote in the House, 8; the increase of slave States avowed to be a question of political power between the two sections of the Union, 8; provision in the Missouri Constitution forbidding Legislative interference, 8; clause authorizing the prohibition of the emigration of free people of color, 9; its treatment by Congress, 9; the real point of objection, 9; application for admission presented and referred. 9; report of committee, 9; resolution rejected, 9; its fate in the Senate, 9; House reject the resolution of the Senate, 9; joint committee ordered and appointed in both Houses, 9; report, 9; adopted in the House, 9; in the Senate, 10; compliance of the General Assembly of Missouri, 10: defeat of the attempt to restrict a State from having slaves if she chose, 10; the real struggle, object of, 10; the objectionable clause, how since regarded, 10; excitement of the occasion, 10; a federal movement, 10; sentiments of the northern democracy. 10; a movement for the balance of power, 10.

Missouri resolutions .- Not now discussed, 860; the old confederation was a league with a legislature acting on sovereignties, 861; the Federalist on the defects of the old system, 361; on the certain destruction of the Union when the sword is once drawn between the members 361; advantage of working if the laws operate on citizens and not on States, 861.

Missouri Question, extension of .- Object to extend the boundary on the Missouri river, 626; difficulties, 626; threefold, 626; a bill for the alteration of the compromise line and the extension of the boundary reported, 627; passed both Houses, 627; this was the answer which northern members gave to the imputed design of abolishing slavery, 627.

MITCHELL, GEORGE E., on reference of the bank memorial, to a select committee, 234.

MONBOE, JAMES, negotiates the treaty of 1807, 1; efforts for the declaration of war in 1812, 6; President, 7; letter showing the unanimity of his cabinet on the Missouri question, 8; his letters to Jackson on the cession of Texas, 15; ditto to Jefferson, 16; cause of these letters, 17; voto on internal improvement bill, 22; veto of Cumberland road bill, 167; "decease of, his place in history, 679; his character, 679; genius, 679; discretion, 679; foundation of his political career, 680; remark of Jefferson, 680; his career, 680.

MONBOE doctrine, 67.

MOORE, GABRIEL, anecdote respecting the rejection of Van Buren as Minister to England, 215; against Van Buren as Minister to England, 215.

MORRIS, THOMAS, on abolition petitions, 612.

New Mexico, internal trade with .- All foreign ingress cut off until 1821, 41; intercourse between Missouri and the "Western Internal Provinces," 41; a branch of interior commerce, 41; a bill brought into the Senate to open a road and to afford protection against the savages, 41; statement of facts relative to the trade, 41: precedents for the construction of a road, 42; remarks of Mr. Jefferson on the road from Georgia to New Orleans, 48; the foreign part of the road the point of difficulty, 43; moved to strike out the extra territorial part of the national highway, 43; views of Senators, 43, 44; bill passed, 44; road to New Mexico built under Adams' administration, 44.

NILES, JOHN M., on the independence of Texas, 668.

Noble, James, votes for the Missouri Compromise, 8. Nullification - Event of its origin, 95; the assumed right of a State to annul an act of Congress, 188; new turn in the debate, 188; allusions to the conduct of New England in 1812, 138; meetings in South Carolina on the Tariff. 138; resolves passed, 138; their defence, 188; the doctrine summed up, 138; counter explanation, 139; the Virginia resolution, 139; how the South Carolina doctrine would have operated in New England, 139; the doctrine has no foundation in the constitution or in Virginia resolutions, 189; "the character of the government, 189; supremacy of the constitution and laws. 14;" interpretation of the Virginia resolutions disputed, 140 remarks, 140; Hartford Convention, 140; pledge of farcible resistance to any attempt to enforce unconstitutional laws, 140; remarks, 141; Webster's peroration, 14; remarks of Benton, 142; his slowness to believe in my design to subvert the Union, 142.

Anniversary of Jefferson's birth-day, 148; a subscription dinner 148; the guests, 148; the regular toasts, 148; conversation excited by them, 148; toast of the President, 148; toast of Calhoun, 148; remarks relative to Mr. Jefferson, 148; his vindication, 148; resolves of Virginia, 149.

Ordinance in South Carolina .- The fate of the American system was sealed by the elections of 1882, 297; the course of South Carolina, 297; words of the ordinance, 297, 298; it placed the State in the attitude of open and forcible resistance to the laws of the United States to take effect in the February following, 298; officially communicated to the President, 298; his oath of office, 298.

Proclamation against nullification .- Proceedings of the South Carolina convention stated, 299; the ordinance founded not on the indefeasible right of resisting acts which are plainly unconstitutional and too oppressive to be endured, 299; but on the position that a State may declare the acts of Congress void and prohibit their execution, 800; two appeals from an unconstitutional act, 800; words of the social compact, 800; if this doctrine had been established at an early day the Union would have been dissolved in its infancy, 300; our constitutional history shows it would have been repudiated if proposed for a feature of our Government, 800; the constitution declares, &c., 801; a law repealed by a small majority of the voters of a single State, 801; the constitution forms a government, not a league, 801; address to the members of the convention, 302.

Message on the South Carolina proceedings .- No-

nomination of ministers. American States to send de the question with open doo dent, 65; his answer, 65; i. nominations confirmed, 66; vocates of the measure, 66 for the Congress, the exist the new States and the moth relations of the United Stat dent relative to objects of the doctrine, 67; extract from it 67; entirely confined to objects-advancement of reour good will, 67; reference report, 67; expressive of the day, 67; its general principle ship, but no entangling allian tee on religious freedom, 68 doctrine, 68; our present une tion regarded as most benefi-

69; excitement produced by Paper read to the cabinet by G the removal of the public der Patronage, Executive, reduction to report on the expediency mittee, 80; report, 80; the six from the report, 80; "gre opinion, 80: multiply the gus power, 81; the extent of pa increase of patronage, 81; ren advantages of friendly relation

ances, 69; right of the Presid

69; relations with Hayti, on

81, 82, PARE/TT, JOHN F., votes for the 1 PIBRCE, FRANKLIN, on abolition p PINCKNEY, CHARLES, Representati PINKNEY, WILLIAM, Senator from the treaty of 1807. 1: votes for 8: decease, 19: rank as an orato Missouri controversy, 19; abili Randolph announces his deat PLEASANTS, JAMES, Senator from votes for the Missouri Compro-Poindexter, George, against Vi England, 215; on the protest o Polk, James K., on the non-payme 289; on continuing the deposit.

Speaker of the House, 569. Presidential election of 1824.-T brought forward, 44: number vote for each, 44; candidates 45: vote 45

In the House .- The theory a the constitution in the election President, 46: first election in t son and Burr, 46; ballotings, 47 tion, 47; second election in the proceedings, 47; the democratic rious, 47; conduct of certain i presses to Benton his intention fore the election, 48; letter of (

tice in the annual message, 808; continuation and aggravation of the proceedings, 808; special message, 808; "ordinance transmitted by the Governor of South Carolina, 808; hope indulged that by explaining the recommendations proposed to Congress, the authorities of South Carolina might recede, 308; hence proclamation issued, 308; the reasonable expectations not realized, 803; neither the recommendations of the Executive nor the disposition manifested by Congress, nor the une quivocal expression of public opinion, have produced any relaxation in the measures of opposition, 308; the State authorities actively organizing their military resources, 804; proclamation of the Governor has openly defled the authority of the Executive of the Union, 804; determination of the authorities of South Carolina, 304; acts on the part of South Carolina, 304, 305; no sufficient cause for such proceedings on the part of South Carolina, 306; she still claims to be a component part of the Union, 806; the duty of the Executive, 807; recommendations of the President, 307; importance of Deep feeling of discontent in South Carolina ope the crisis," 807. rated upon by politicians, 808; this feeling just and reasonable, and operated upon by politicians for personal and ambitious objects, 808; twofold aspect of his proclamation and message, 808; one of relief and justice in reducing the revenue; and the other, firm and mild in enforcing the laws against offenders, 808; two classes of discontented—the honest and the politicians,

308; bills proposed in Congress, 308.

Revenue Collection or Force Bill.-Bill to secure the execution of certain laws in South Carolina, 830; remarks, 830; "contains no novel principle, 880; provision or removal of the Custom House, 830; legislation necestry, 880; secession on one hand, and nullification on the other, 831; state of affairs in South Carolina, 831; the bill confers on the President the power of closing old ports of entry and opening new ones, 831; a prominent cause which led to the revolution, 881; empowered to employ the land and naval forces to put down all abettors, 882; no ambiguity about this measure, 882 the President is charged by the constitution with the execution of the laws, 832; the President's measure, 832; the resemblance between this bill and the Boston Port bill, 833; the war is waged against the measures of the administration," 838; the support of Mr. Webster,

Nullification resolutions.—Resolutions on the powers of the government introduced into the Senate, 884; counter-resolutions offered, 384; source whence Mr. Calhoun obtained the seminal idea of nullification as a remedy in a government, 885; Virginia resolution of, 98, 99; the essential idea derived from the Roman tribunitian veto, 835; considered a cure for all the disorders of a Roman State, 335; remarks, 335; "the Roman system, 385; operation of the Roman veto, 385; the right of a State to interfere, 886; governments of several States might be cited as an argument against this view, 836; the tendency to conflict in this action," 836; Calhoun's opinion of the defects of our form of government, and the remedy for these defects, 887; the defect of an unchecked authority of the majority, 837; the remedy an authority in the minority to check that majority and to secede, 837; example of Jewish history, 387; its equint to the Virginia resolutions, 887; circumstances ander which this remedy contended for, 887; object to ereate or find this remedy in our system, 837; nullification, resistance, secession, found by Calhoun in the Virginia resolutions, 837; all that was intended by the Virginia resolutions, being merely an appeal to public opinion, 887; debate, 887; "what was the conduct o Virginia in the memorable era of 98 and 99, 888; her real intentions and policy were proved not by declarations and speeches merely, but by facts, 838; the constitution does not provide for events which must be preceded by its own distraction, 838; secession and nullification revolutionary, 388; its tendency is to break up the constitution as to all the other States, 889; it strikes a deadly blow at the vital principle of the whole Union, 339; it arrests the power of the law, absolves the citizen from duty, and elevates another authority to supreme command, 889; the laws must be repealed throughout the whole Union, or executed in Carolina as well as elsewhere, 339.

"Nature of our federal government, 889; a union in contradistinction to a league, 889; it is not a compact or confederacy between the people of the several States in their sovereign capacities, 339; no State authority has power to dissolve these relations, 840; the constitution, acts of Congress, &c., the supreme law, 840; an attempt of a State at nullification a direct usurpation of the just powers of the federal government," 840; some other cause than the alleged one at the bottom of this desire of secession, 840; ambitious and personal proceedings intimated as involved in the proceedings of South Carolina, 840; expression of Calhoun, 840; a contest between power and liberty, 841; the freedom and the slave property of the South involved, 841; exclusion of patriotic men of the South from the Presidency, 841; contradicted by all history of our national elections, 841; protective tariff not the sole or main cause of the South Carolina discontent, 841; remarks on this point, 841; "another subject connected with this which will prevent the return of peace and quiet, 841; the force bill a practical assertion of one theory of the government against another, 341; the bill cannot be acquiesced in, unless the South is dead to the sense of liberty," 341; these positions not sustained by Southern sentiment, 842 -See Tariff, Reduction of duties.

O

Ordinance of 1787.—Authorship claimed for Nathan Dane, 138; claimed for Jefferson, 183; history of the case, 183; its ultimate passage the work of the South, 198; extracts from the Journal of Congress, 184; remarks on the claim for Dane of authorship, 184; "origin of the measure, 184; an attempt to transfer the honor to the South 135; proposed a second time," 135; statements compaed with facts, 185, 186.

Oregon Territory .- Proposition for the settlement of, first made at the session of 1820-21, 18; causes that led to it, 18; committee moved, 18; carried, 18; the committee 18; report, 18; proceedings in the House, 18; consequences of neglect by the Government, 18; advantages from its settlement, 18; historical facts, 14.

Joint occupation of .- Astoria captured during the war of 1812, 109; not restored under the treaty of Ghest, 109; convention for joint occupation concluded at London, 109; words of the convention, 109; article written by Benton on the subject, 109; our traders driven out of the country, 110; other effects of the joint occupation, 116; resolutions against the ratification of the subsequent treaty relative to continuance of the joint occupation OTIS, HARRISON GRAY, Senator from Massachuset.s, 7.

appeal to public the conduct of nd 99, 388; her not by declarais, 388; the conwhich must be cession and nulyy is to break ups, 389; it strikes he whole Union, absolves the citiauthority to sunet be repealed ed in Carolina as > 889; a union in not a compact or several States in te authority has the constitution, 840; an attempt ation of the just 840; some other tom of this desire onal proceedings gs of South Carocontest between n and the slave exclusion of paidency, 841; conal elections, 841; ause of the South this point, 841; shich will prevent , force bill a pracvernment against uiesced in, unless erty," 841; these sentiment, 842 -

> > for Nathan Dane, y of the case, 133; outh, 138; extracts; remarks on the origin of the measnoner to the South, tatements compar-

settlement of first auses that led to it, 8; the committee. House, 18; consent, 18; advantages is, 14.

ptured during the ne treaty of Ghest, concluded at Lost; article written by rs driven out of the int occupation, 1%; of the subsequent e joint occupation ssachuset:s, 7.

PALMER, WILIAM A., votes for the Missouri Compromise, 8. Panama Mission .- A master subject in its day, 65; gave rise to grave questions, 65; designed as a popular movement to turn the tide running against Adams, 65; the Congress at Panama, 65; debate in the Senate on the nomination of ministers, 65; invited by the South American States to send deputies, 65; motion to debate the question with open doors, 65; reference to the President, 65; his answer, 65; indignation of the Senate, 66; nominations confirmed, 66; patronage distributed to advocates of the measure, 66; the basis of the agreement for the Congress, the existing state of war between all the new States and the mother country, 66; its object, 66; relations of the United States, 66; message of the President relative to objects of the Congress, 67; the Monroe doctrine, 67; extract from Adams' message respecting it, 67; entirely confined to our own borders, 67; other objects-advancement of religious liberty, 67; proofs of our good will, 67; reference of the message, 67; adverse report, 67; expressive of the democratic doctrines of the day, 67; its general principle that of good-will and friendship, but no entangling alliances, 68; remarks of committee on religious freedom, 68; their views on the Monroe doctrine, 68; our present unconnected and friendly position regarded as most beneficial to the republics, 68; the advantages of friendly relations without entangling alliances, 69; right of the President to institute the mission, 69; relations with Hayti, on what principle established, 69; excitement produced by the proposed mission, 69. Paper read to the cabinet by General Jackson relative to the removal of the public deposits, 876.

Patronage, Executive, reduction of.—Committee appointed to report on the expediency of reducing, 80; the committee, 80; report, 80; the six bills reported, 80; extract from the report, 80; "grounds of the committee's opinion, 80; multiply the guards against the abuse of power, 81; the extent of patronage," 81; subsequent increase of patronage, 81; remarks on the bills reported, 81, 82.

PARE/TT, JOHN F., votes for the Missouri Compromise, 8.
PIBRCE, FRANKLIN, on abolition petitions, 615.

PINCKNEY, CHARLES, Representative from South Carolina, 7.
PINKNEY, WILLIAM, Senator from Maryland, 7; negotiates
the treaty of 1807, 1; votes for the Missouri Compromise, 8; decease, 19; rank as an orator, 19; speeches, 19; on the Missouri controversy, 19; abilities, 20; manner in which Randolph announces his death, 20; character, 20.

PLEASANTS, JAMES, Senator from Virginia, 7; governor 7; votes for the Missouri Compromise, 8.

POINDEXTER, GEORGE, against Van Buren as Minister to England, 215; on the protest of General Jackson, 427.

Polk, James K., on the non-payment of the three per cents., 289; on continuing the deposits in the bank, 289; chosen Speaker of the House, 569.

Presidential election of 1824.—The candidates, 44; how brought forward, 44; number of electoral votes, 44; vote for each, 44; candidates for the Vice Presidency, 45; vote, 45.

In the House.—The theory and practical working of the constitution in the election of President and Vice-President, 46; first election in the House that of Jefferson and Burr, 46; ballotings, 47; effect on the constitution, 47; second election in the House that of 1824, 47; proceedings, 47; the democratic principle finally victorious, 47; conduct of certain individuals, 48; Clay expresses to Benton his intention to vote for Adams before the election, 48; letter of Clay to Benton, 48; evidences of Clay's declaration, 48; this election put an end to caucus nominations by members of Congress, 49; a different mode of concentrating public opinion adopted 49; its degeneration, 49; an anomalous body where the election is now virtually made, 49; this destructive to the rights and sovereignty of the people, 49; the remedy, 49.

Presidential election of 1828.—The candidates, 111; result 111; vote of the free States for the slave-holding candidates, 111; election of Jackson a triumph of democratic principle, 111; kerrors of Mons. de Toequeville, 112; charge of violent temper against Jackson, 112; "mediocre talent and no capacity to govern," 112; "opposed by a majority of enlightened classes," 118; "raised to the Presidency solely by the recollection of the victory of New Orleans," 113. See page 282.

Presidential election of 1836.—The candidates, 683; Vice-President elected by the Senate, 683; details, 683, 684.

Preston, William C., on French affairs, 594.

Protection to American Industry, origin of the question of Protective System.—The periodical season for its discussion

265; the session most prolific of party topics and party contests of any ever known, 266; the reason, 266; the subjects, 266; the bank and tariff two leading measures, 266; proposal of the President's message, 266; the proposition of Mr. Clay, 266; the seven years before the Tariff and the seven years after, 266; the one, calamity; the other, prosperity, 266; remarks, 266; the seven years of calamity immediately followed the establishment of the bank, 266; protection an incident before 1816, afterwards an object, 267; origin and progress of the protective policy, 267.

"It began on the 4th of July, 1789. The second act on the statute book, 267; prosperity consequent on the French revolution, 267; state of things after the peace in 1815, 267; subject again brought up in 1820, 267; summary of the policy," 267.

Other speakers in favor of the policy, 268; those against it, 268; bearing of the question on the harmony and the stability of the Union, 268.

A crisis arrived, 268; dissatisfaction of all the South, 268; objects of the Revolution, 268; manufacturers should be supported incidentally, 268.

"This system an overruling necessity, 269; the danger to its existence lies in the abandonment, and not in the continuance of the American system, 269; great excitement in South Carolina, 269; the Union necessary to the whole and to all its parts, 269; the majority must govern, 269; can it be believed that two-thirds of the people would consent to the destruction of a policy believed to be indispensably necessary to their prosperity?" 269.

An appalling picture dissolution of the Union presented on either hand, 270; former designs of bringing Jackson forward for the Presidency, 270; views entertained in South Carolina, 270; views of the Democratic party 270; "cannot feel indifferent to the sufferings of any portion of the American people, 270; what is the cause of Southern distress? 271; other causes which exist," 271; the levy and expenditure of the federal government the cause of Southern decadence, 271; exportation of American manufactures, 272; this fact urged to show the excellence of American fabrics, and that they are worthy of protection, $72; also urged to show their independence of protection, 272; "American cottons now traverse the one-half of the circumference of the globe, 272; effect of these duties to create monopolies at home, 272; the Custom House returns," 272; the prosperity attributed to the Tariffs of 1824 and 1828, 273; real cause of the revived prosperity, 278; remarks, 273; Clay's remarks on his own failing powers and advanced age, 278; compliments on his remarks, 273; sparring between Gen. Smith and Mr. Clay on the age of the latter, 278, 274; the seriousness of Southern resistance to the Tariff, 274; an appeal to all to meet the South in a spirit of conciliation, 274.

Protest of Gen. Jackson on the vote of censure in the Senate, 425.

Public distress.-From the moment of the removal of the deposits, the plan of the bank was to force their return, and with it a renewal of its charter, by operating on the business of the country and the alarms of the people, 415; course to be pursued, 415; first step to get up distress meetings, 415; memorial sent to Congress, 415; speeches on their presentation, 415; remarks of Mr. Tyler on presenting a memorial from Virginia, 416; do. of Mr. Robbins on presenting a memorial, 416; do. of Mr. Webster on presenting a memorial, 417, 418, 419; do. of Mr. Southard on presenting a memorial, 417; do. of Mr. Clay on presenting a memorial, 418; do. of Mr. Kent on presenting a memorial, 418; Clay's apostrophe to the Vice President, charging him with a message of prayer and supplication to the President, 420; the Vice President takes a pinch of Mr. Clay's snuff, 420; resolution of a public meeting relative to the message to be conveved by the Vice President, 420.

All this is a repetition of what was heard in 1811, 421; extracts from Debates of Congress, 421; the two distresses proved the same thing, 421; agitation and commotion in the large cities, 421; gaining a municipal election in New York, 421; extracts relative to every-day occurrences, 421; amounts of money expended, 422.

Report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the Finances, 462; call made at the height of the panic, 462; showed an increase in every branch of the revenue, instead of a decline, 462; test of the prosperity of the United States, 462; the distress confined to the victims of the Bank, or fictitious and artificial, 462; attempt to quietly put the report aside, 462; preparation made to defeat this move, 462; the entire reading demanded, 462: speech of Mr. Benton on its conclusion, 462: the speech, 462; "assertions and predictions under which the call had been made, 462; a report to make the patriot's heart rejoice, 463; it had been called for to be given to the people, and the people should have it, 463; the statements of the report examined, 463; evidence of commercial prosperity, 464; increased imports, increased shipping, increased sales of public lands, 464; it has been said that trade is paralyzed, 465; the odium of all the distress falls on the bank, 465; the prosperity of the country, 466: recapitulation of the cyldences, 467: the alarm is over, the people are tired of it, 467; the spectre of distress could never be made to cross the Mississippi, 467; the bank is now a nuisance," 468; report laid on the table and printed, 469. See Turiff.

*wblic Land Debtors.—The credit system then prevailed, 11; debt for lands sold to the Government, 12; situation of the public land debtors, 12; system on which the lands were sold, 12; subject referred to in the President's message, 12; the measure of relief devised, 12; the cash system and reduced price adopted, 12; the pre-emption right introduced, 12; opposed, 12; carried, 12; the graduation principle pressed, 12.

Cublic Lands.—Burke's bill for the sale of the Crown lands presented in the British House of Commons, 102; its application to this country, 102; his remarks, 102; sales of land by a government twits citizens a false policy 102; movements to obtain a graduation of price, 108 recommendation of Jackso s message, 103; the revenue a trifle compared with the derived from the sale of land revenue derivable from the me lands through settlement and cultivation, 103; sale of land brings no population, cultivation produces population, 103; remarks in favor of donation of lands, 108; example of the Atlantic States in favor of donations, 104; remarks against the reservation of saline and mineral lands, 104; these lands sold in Missouri, 105; system of renting mines abolished. 105; case of "Granny White," 105; the example of all nations in favor of giving land, 106; proclamation of the King of Persia in 1828, 106; Western States sufferers by this land policy, 106; change in public sentiment, 107.

A proposition to inquire into the expediency of limit. ing the sales of land to those in market-to suspend the surveys, &c., 180; "a proposition that would check emigration to the new States of the West, 180; limit settlements, 130; deliver up large portions to the dominion of wild beasts, 181; remove the land records, 191; never right to inquire into the expediency of doing wrong, 181; inquiry is to do wrong," 181; charge upon the East of intending to check the growth of the West, 182; history of the first ordinance for the sale and survey, 132; to make clean work is like requiring your guest to eat all the bones before he should have more meat, 182; the propriety of selling at auction prices and at an arbitrary minimum for all qualities, 182; system adopted by all nations, 133; the British and Spanish colonies fostered under a very different system, 183; indefinite postpone. ment moved, 188.

Distribution to the States.—Bill to reduce the price ordered to a third reading, 275; pre-emption established, 275; plan to distribute the proceeds reported, 275; "inexpedient to reduce the price, or to cede the lands to the States, 275; sound policy enjoins the preservation of the existing system, 275; governments no more than individuals, should be intoxicated by preperity, 275; should husband their resources, 276; the proposal to divide the proceeds among the States, 276; a bill for this purpose reported," 276.

Impropriety of originating such a bill in a Committee of Manufactures, 276: referred to the Committee on Public Lands, 276; a counter report, 276; "this view fundamentally erroneous, 276; the Committee on Manufactures regard the Federal domain merely as an object of revenue, 276; quotation from the speech of Burke, 276; these sentiments the inspiration of political wisdom, 277; expectations from the public lands, 277; result of an experiment of near fifty years, 277; the bill to divide the proceeds is wholly inadmissible in principle and erroneous in its details, 277; it proposes to change injuriously and fatally for the new States the character of their relation to the Federal Government on this subject, 277; its effects, 277; the details of the bill are pregnant with injustice and unsound policy, 278; it makes no distinction between those States which did or did not make cessions of their vacant land to the Federal Government, 278; it proposes benefits to some States which they cannot receive without dishonor nor refuse without pecuniary prejudice, 278; these lands were granted to pay the debts of the Revolutionary War, 278; other objections, 278; postponed in the House, 279.

Distribution of proceeds.—Bill renewed, 862; x guments in its favor, 862; provisions of the bill, 862; advantages of settling the question and disposing of the public lands, 863; revenue from sales considered, 863.

A measure dangerous in itself and unconstitutional

864; bill passed the Sens with amendments, 864; S of the session, 864; retain sons, 864; denunciations bill returned with objecti the whole subject, 365; the 865; an entire subversion which the United States b ern domain, 866; these and monuments of an age of other principles inserted i create a surplus for distribu to consolidation cannot be ceive what advantages wil the true policy is that the soon as practicable to be a ment of revenues derived f remarks on this veto messa

RANDOLPH, JOHN, Representative Clay on the Missouri question of his death (70 m)

R

of his death, 473; his care judged, 478; never enjoyed insanity at periods, 473; o 474; his parliamentary life, 4 474; disposition, 474; feeling list, 475; religious sentiment

Relief, Mr. Webster's plan ofthe bank for six years, 438; t monopoly feature, 438; furt asked to bring in the bill, 438 Calhoun, 433; reasons for Ci object to "unbank the banks mate object to arrive at a met object of the administration, Senators, 435; motion for leathe table, 435; excuse for this

No previous opportunity to of currency they were entitled ernment intended to be a h 436; evidences on this point, specie derivable from foreign quantity of gold derivable fro sufficient to furnish the peop culation of gold and silver, 48: upon gold is unjust and errone expelled it from circulation, this false valuation, 441, 442, 44 of the constitution that foreig rently as money, and at the United States, 444; the plan p of public credit in 1791, 445; fo facts, 445; injuries resulting fro eign coins, 446; what reason ca preventing it? 447; a review of the statute currency of the U distinct objections to the Bank regulator of the currency, 449; the Government, 449; it cannot ought not to be delegated to any Mr. Calhoun in the capacity of general currency, 451, 452; circ .883, 458; objections to prolong present bank, 454; the conduc 454; that of the first bank, 455; to have broken out against the 5

as a false policy ion of price, 108 103: the revenue ompared with the is through settle-I brings no popp-103: remarks in ale of the Atlantic narks against the , 104; these lands g mines abolished, he example of all oclamation of the itates sufferers by sentiment 107 pediency of limitt-to suspend the would check emi-180 : limit settleto the dominion of cords, 191; never doing wrong, 181; upon the East of West, 182; history id survey, 132; to ir guest to eat all ore meat, 182; the nd at an arbitrary

o reduce the price aption established, reported, 275; re-, price, or to cede policy enjoins the 275; governments atoxicated by prosesources, 276; the the States, 276; a m adopted by all

a colonies fostered

definite postpone-

ill in a Committee he Committee on , 276; "this view mmittee on Manunerely as an object speech of Burke, n of political wisolic lands, 277; rears, 277; the bill to ssible in principle roposes to change ates the character nment on this subof the bill are preglicy, 278; it makes high did or did not the Federal Govsome States which or nor refuse with ands were granted ry War, 278; other use, 279. renewed, 362; ar ns of the bill, 862 ad disposing of the considered, 863.

d unconstitutional

864; bill passed the Senate, 864; passed in the House with amendments, 864; Senate concur on the last night of the session, 864; retained by the President, 864: reasons, 364; denunciations of the Press, 365; next session bill returned with objections, 865; "first principles of the whole subject, 365; the practice of the Government, 365; an entire subversion of one of the compacts by which the United States became possessed of the Western domain, 866; these ancient compacts are invaluable monuments of an age of patriotism and virtue, 866: other principles inserted in the bill, 866; the object to create a surplus for distribution, 867; a more direct road to consolidation cannot be devised, 867; difficult to perceive what advantages will accrue to the States, 868: the true policy is that the public lands shall cease as soon as practicable to be a source of revenue, 868; statement of revenues derived from the public lands," 868: remarks on this veto message, 369.

R

Randolph, John, Representative from Virginia, 7; opposes Clay on the Missouri question, 10; decease of, 478; place of his death, 473; his career, 478; how he should be judged, 478; never enjoyed a day of perfect health, 478; insanity at periods, 473; conversation on that point, 474; his parliamentary life, 474; friendship with Macon, 474; disposition, 474; feelings on slavery, 474; as a ducllist, 475; religious sentiment, 475.

Relief, Mr. Webster's plan of.—Renewal of the charter of the bank for six years, 438; to give up the exclusive or monopoly feature, 438; further particulars, 438; leave asked to bring in the bill, 438; opposition from Clay and Calhoun, 438; reasons for Calhoun's position, 434; his object to "unbank the banks," 434; remarks, 434; ultimate object to arrive at a metallic currency, 435; this an object of the administration, 435; conversations among Senators, 435; motion for leave to bring in a bill laid on the table, 435; excuse for this movement, 436.

No previous opportunity to show the people the kind of currency they were entitled to possess, 436; the Government intended to be a hard money Government, 436; evidences on this point, 437, 438; the quantity of specie derivable from foreign commerce, added to the quantity of gold derivable from our mines, were fully sufficient to furnish the people with an abundant circulation of gold and silver, 438, 439; the value now set upon gold is unjust and erroneous, 440; these laws have expelled it from circulation, 440; nature and effects of this false valuation, 441, 442, 443; intention and meaning of the constitution that foreign coins should pass currently as money, and at their full value, within the United States, 444; the plan presented for the support of public credit in 1791, 445; four points presented, 445; facts, 445; injuries resulting from the exclusion of foreign coins, 446; what reason can now be given for not preventing it? 447; a review of the present condition of the statute currency of the United States, 448; three distinct objections to the Bank of the United States as a regulator of the currency, 449; a power that belongs to the Government, 449; it cannot be delegated, 449; it ought not to be delegated to any bank, 450; differs from Mr. Calhoun in the capacity of the bank to supply a general currency, 451, 452; circulation of the bank in .888, 458; objections to prolonging the existence of the present bank, 454; the conduct of the present bank, 454; that of the first bank, 455; the spirit which seems to have broken out against the State banks deprecated, 456; a small paper circulation one of the greatest grievances that can afflict a community, 457; restoration of the gold currency has great influence in putting down a small note circulation, 458. See Public Distress.

Removals from Office.-Error of De Tocqueville, 159; his statement, 159; case of Adams' administration, 159; no distinct party lines, 159; no case presented to him for political removal, 160; so in the main with Jackson, 160; extent of removals by him, 160; his election a change of parties, 160; he followed the example of Jef ferson, 160; the circumstances of Jefferson, 160; the four years' limitation law not then in force, 161; fundamental principle, 161; his letter to Monroe, 161; do. to Governor Giles on removals, 161; do. to Elbridge Gerry, 161; do. to Mr. Lincoln, 161; Jefferson's law of removals, 161; said he had never done justice to his own party in this respect, 162; clamor against Jackson, 162; the practice of removals for opinion' sake becoming too common, 162: description of Macaulay, 162; the evil become worse since the time of De Tocqueville, 162; an evil in our country, 162; Jefferson's rule affords the remedy, 162; remarks upon it, 163.

Report of Government Bank Directors, 874.

Resolutions of Webster relative to the Compromise, 317; relative to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the removal of the public deposits, &c., 394, 398.

RHEA, JOHN, Representative from Tennessee, 7.

Rivers and Harbors.—Internal improvement of, how based, 4; how restricted, 4.

RIVES, WILLIAM C., on the meaning of the Virginia resolutions, 887; on the independence of Texas, 668.

ROBERTS, JONATHAN, votes for the Missouri Compromise, 8,

ROBERTSON, GEORGE, Representative from Kentucky, 7. ROWAN, JOHN, on revision of the tariff, 95.

RUSH, RICHARD, Secretary of the Treasury, 55; negotiates for joint occupancy of Oregon, 109.

S

Salt Tax, repeal of .- This tax an odious measure, 143: fluctuations in the tax, 143; efforts to repeal it, 143; "the English salt tax and manner of its repeal, 144; the enormous amount of the tax, 144; contrary to every principle of taxation, 144; the distribution of this tax on different sections of the Union, 144; the Northwest, 144; the South, 145; the West, 145; provision curers and exporters were entitled to the same bounty and al- # lowance with exporters of fish, 145; the provision trade of the West, 145; the repeal of the salt duty the greatest favor to this trade, 145: the domestic manufacture has enjoyed all possible protection, 146; time enough been had for the trial, 146; the American system without a gross departure from its principles could not cover this duty any longer, 146; every argument that could be used here had been used in England in vain, 147; the petition of the British manufacturers, 147; effect of an era of free trade in salt," 147.

This tax a curse, 154; a mystery in salt, 154; bill to abolish offered, 155; the fisheries, 155; "the tax on alum salt, the foundation of all these bounties, 155; different acts of Congress recited, 155, 156; reasons for abolishing the duty on alum salt, 156; an article of indispensable necessity to the provision trade of the United States, 156; to salt of the kind made in the United States, 156; the duty enormous and quadruples the price, 156; it is unequal in its operation, 156; means of drawing an undue amount of money from the public treasury, 157; a practical violation of one of the most equitable clauses in the Constitution of the United States, 157; it now rests on a false basis, 157; its repeal will not materially diminish the revenue nor delay the extinguishment of the public debt, 157; it belongs to an unhappy period in the history of the government," 157.

Amount paid by it into the treasury, 714; quantity imported, 714; its import from England, 715; effect of the tax, 716; its direct injuries, 716; the burdens appear in the most odious-light, 716; testimony of Dr. Young, 717.

Sanford, Nathan, Senator from New York, 7; candidate for Vice Presidency in 1824, 45.

Scott, John, Delegate from Missouri, 8; presents the application of Missouri for admission into the Union, 9.

Seal of Colonel Benton, origin of it, 77.

Secession of a State—origin of the doctrine, 4; Senate in favor, 34; do. against, 34.

SEEGEANT, JOHN, Representative from Pennsylvania, 7; on the committee to whom was referred the application of Missouri, 9; nominated minister to Panama, 68; renominated for the Vice Presidency, 232; candidate for the Vice Presidency, 282.

SEVIER, AMBROSE H., on the cession of the public lands, 709.
SHAW, H., Representative from Massachusetts, 9; votes for the admission of Missouri, 9; coadjutor with Clay on the Missouri question, 10.

Sierra Leone, origin of the colony of, 88.

SILSBEE, NATHANIEL, Representative from Massachusetts,

Staves deported, British Indemnity for.—Controversy respecting slaves carried off in the war of 1812 concluded in 1827, 88; similar controversy under the treaty of 1783, 88; origin of the colony of Sierra Leone, 88; subject referred to the Emperor Alexander, 88; arbitrament disputed, 88; payment made, 88; statement of the case, 88; the reference, 89; views, 89; the third treaty, 89; the payment, 90; the example, 90; question of restitution arising under the Revolutionary war, 90; number carried off, 90; the commissioners at Ghent, 91; French spoliation claim, 91; contrast with the claim for deported slaves, 91; proof that Northern men will do justice to the South, 91.

States.—"The ghost of the Missouri question, 186; the line drawn between the free State of Ohio and the slave State of Kentucky, 136; views of leading men North and South indisputably the same in the earlier periods of our government, 136; the sublime morality of those who cannot bear the abstract contemplation of slavery a thousand miles off, 136; the morality of the primitive Christians," 136; conduct of the Free States at the first introduction of the slavery topic into Congress, 187; further remarks, 188.

Slavery in the District of Columbia, Abolition of .- Memorial of Society of Friends in Pennsylvania, 576; source whence the memorial emanated, 576; previous proceedings on these memorials, 576; motion to reject when presented for reception, 576; this point the origin of a long and acrimonious war in the two Houses of Congress, 576; reception and condemnation would quiet the question, 576; moved to postpone, 577; remarks of Benator Benton, 577; "character of the petitioners, 577; the abolitionists, 577; publications and prints, 577; intended to inflame the passions of slaves, 577; cause of the massacre of San Domingo, 577; course of the French society, 578; the conspiracy in Louisiana, 578; these societies had already perpetrated more mischief than the joint remainder of all their lives spent in prayers of contrition and works of retribution, could ever atone for, 578; the conduct of the great body of the people in the free States, 579; object is to give that vote which will have the greatest effect in putting down these rociet es, 579; past action of the Senate," 579.

Slavery agitation .- Time of its rise, 5; unceasing efforts to alarm the South by imputations against the North of unconstitutional designs on the subject of slavery, 609: letter of Mr. Madison to Mr. Clay, 609; letter to Edward Coles, 609; nullification in a new disguise, 609; publications to alarm the South, 610; the "Crisis," 610: the subject of a Southern Convention, 610; the conduct of Mr. Calhoun, 610; petitions for the abolition of slavery in the district of Columbia, 611; Calhoun's re marks, 611; extreme ground taken, 611; his doctrine, 611; reply of Mr. Morris, 612; Bedford Brown in reply to Mr. Calhoun, 612; King charges upon the remarks of Calhoun the effect of increasing the slavery agitation, 613: Calhoun, in reply, charges that any other course will divide and distract the South, 614; remarks of Mr. Hill relative to the views of Northern States, 614; petitions in the House, 615; remarks of Mr. Franklin Pierce, 615; course of the Telegraph newspaper, 615; the Herald of Freedom newspaper, 616; Calhoun sends a paper to the Clerk's desk to be read, containing an attack upon a member of the other House, 616; apology by the presiding officer for permitting it to be read, 616; remarks of Mr. Benton at the request, and in defence of Mr. Pierce, 617; the statement of Mr. Calhoun involved him in the solecism of sending forth incendiary publications through the action of the Senate, 617: remarks of Mr. Benton on this point, 617: remarks of Mr. King on the strange scene of Southern Senators attacking their Northern friends because they defended the South, 617; increase of abolitionism denied, 618; treatment of George Thompson, 618; further statements, 619; remarks of Mr. Webster, 619; refusal of Mr. Calhoun to vote on the motion to reject the prayer of petitioners, 619; his remarks, 619; an unjustifiable assumption, 620; memorial of the Society of Friends, 620; further remarks, 620.

Action of the House on abolition petitions, 621; resolution presented by Mr. Pinkney, 621; votes, 621; committee ordered and report, 621; report adopted, 621; remarks of Mr. J. Q. Adams on the reception of these petitions, 622; action of early Congresses on this subject, 628; Madison on abolition petitions, 628; his consistent course, 628; South, the point of danger from slavery agitation, 623.

SLOAN, JOHN, Representative from Ohio, 7.

Smith, Bernard, Representative from New Jersey, 9; votes for the admission of Missouri, 9.

SMITH, SAMUEL. Representative from Maryland, 7; on the committee to whom was referred the application of Missouri, 9; for Van Buren as Minister to England, 216; of the British West India Trade, 125; on the expenses of government, 230; on the protective policy, 268; on the compromise tariff bill, 315, 327.

SMITH, WILLIAM, Senator from South Carolina, 7; Judge, 7; votes for the Missouri Compromise, 8; moves to be excused from voting on the measure for the relife of public land debtors, as he was one, 12; excess refused, 12.

SMYTHE, ALEXANDER, Representative from Virginia, 7.
SOUTHARD, SAMUEL L., Senator from New Jersey, 7; Secretary of the Navy, 56; on the Expunging resolution, 58; on the independence of Texas, 669.

Speakers in the House in favor of protection, 82; ditta against, 88.

Specie Circular .- Its issue marked the firmness, foresight, and decision of General J extent of the land sales, 6; required the specie circul ing it, 677; a view of the currency, 678; bill which rejected, 678; President de-

Resolution to rescind th 694; remarks of Senator E 695; its legality, 695; rem a little panic 695; letter of at Lexington, 696; illega examined, 696; the new description of it, 697; mo suspension of specie payme Benton, 697; reply of Sens Senator Webster, 699; oth ferred, 700; report, 700; cause of Mr. Benton's speproceedings, 701, 702; expl-708; reply of Senator Walk Calhoun's reason for not v 706; bill passed in the Sens House, 706; lost, 706; veto, STEVENSON, ANDREW, chosen Sp. 209; chosen Speaker of the

STORES, HENRY R., Representati STOKES, MONTFORT, Senator from ernor, 7; votes for the Misso STORY, JOSEPH, Justice of Supres Supreme Court, its Judges and a SWIFT, BENJAMIN, opposes the a

TANEY, ROGER B., Attorney Ge Secretary of the Treasury session, 470; immediately re appointed Chief Justice, 731;

T

Turiff and American System.—]

82; protection looked for ame
82; the design was to make p revenue the incident, 82; re posed, 82; public distress the new tariff, 82; remarks of Mr.

"Public distress of the whol nent object of attention, 32; i tent, 32; a truthful picture, 32; tent, 32; a truthful picture, 33; of Other speakers, 32, the dicause the paper system, 33; of 33; Webster's remarks, 33; of tion, 33; passage of the bill in of the vote, 34; moved to refer in the Senate, 34; lost, 34; remanufactures, 34; passed the revenue a motive with some views of the candidates for the

of various States on the bill, 34.

Revision of.—Date of a seriot
North and South, 95; the work
facturers, 95; productions of dif additional duties on their rival in
"in vain that it is called the Am tax for the support of Governme:
if for any other purpose, it is to surrender of individual opinion State," 95; the bill contained i tate ariff an issue in the Preside unfacturers warned not to mingle tics, 96; change of policy in the b

of the people in that vote which down these soeasing efforts to st the North, of of slavery, 609; 9; letter to Edw disguise, 609; he "Crisis," 610; 510; the conduct the abolition of ; Calhoun's re 11; his doctrine, Brown in reply n the remarks of slavery agitation, any other course ; remarks of Mr. States, 614; petiof Mr. Franklin newspaper, 615; ; Calhoun sends containing an atuse, 616; apology g it to be read, equest, and in dement of Mr. Calsending forth inion of the Senate, oint, 617; remarks Southern Senators use they defended nism denied, 618; 8; further stateer, 619; refusal of o reject the prayer ; an unjustifiable

atitions, 621; reso; votes, 621; comport adopted, 621; reception of these resses on this subions, 623; his count of danger from society of Friends,

ew Jersey, 9; votes

laryland, 7; on the application of Misto England, 216; on on the expenses of policy, 268; on the nise, 8; moves to neasure for the recas one, 12; excuse om Virginia, 7. ew Jersey, 7; Secreging resolution, 526;

rotection, 82; ditte

e firmness, foresight,

and decision of General Jackson, 676; its purport, 676; extent of the land sales, 677; remarks on the evil which required the specie circular, 677; benefits of suppressing it, 677; a view of the actual condition of the paper currency, 678; bill which was the basis of the remarks rejected, 678; President decides to issue the order, 678.

Resolution to rescind the Treasury Circular offered, 694; remarks of Senator Ewing, 694; origin of the order, 695; its legality, 695; remarks of Senator Benton, 695; a little panic 695: letter of Mr. Biddle, 696: Clay's speech at Lexington, 696; illegality of the treasury order examined, 696; the new distress, 697; Mr. Biddle's description of it, 697; movement to produce a general suspension of specie payments, 697; remarks of Senator Benton, 697: reply of Senator Crittenden, 698: ditto of Senator Webster, 699; other speakers, 700; subject referred, 700; report, 700; action of the Senate, 700; cause of Mr. Benton's speech, 700; his speech on the proceedings, 701, 702; explosion of the banks foretoid, 708; reply of Senator Walker to Benton, 708, 704; Mr. Calhoun's reason for not voting on the recision bill, 706; bill passed in the Senate, 706; amendment of the House, 706; lost, 706; veto, 706.

Stevenson, Andrew, chosen Speaker, 121; elected Speaker, 209; chosen Speaker of the House, §71.

STORES, HENRY R., Representative from New York, 7.

STOKES, MONTFORT, Senator from North Carolina, 7; Governor, 7; votes for the Missouri Compromise, 8.

Story, Joseph, Justice of Supreme Court, 7. Supreme Court, its Judges and officers, 781.

SWIFT, BENJAMIN, opposes the admission of Arkansas, 627.

T

TANEY, ROGER B., Attorney General, 181; nomination as Secretary of the Treasury sent in near close of the session, 470; immediately rejected, 470; resigns, 470; appointed Chief Justice, 781; vote in the Senate, 781.

Turiff and American System.—Beginning of the question, 82; protection looked for among the incidental powers, 82; the design was to make protection the object, and revenue the incident, 82; revision of the tariff proposed, 82; public distress the leading argument for the new tariff, 82; remarks of Mr. Clay, 82.

"Public distress of the whole country the most prominent object of attention, 82; its evidences, 32; its extent, 32; a truthful picture," 82.

Other speakers, 32, the distress disputed, 33; its cause the paper system, 33; no necessity for protection, 33; Webster's remarks, 33; other speakers in opposition, 33; passage of the bill in the House, 34; closeness of the vote, 34; moved to refer to finance committees in the Senate, 34; jost, 34; referred to committee on manufactures, 34; passed the Senate, 34; increase of revenue a motive with some friends of the bill, 34; views of the candidates for the Presidency, 34; position of various States on the bill, 34.

Revision of.—Date of a serious division between the North and South, 95; the work of politicians and manufacturers, 95; productions of different States favored by additional duties on their rival imports, 95; remarks, 95; "in vain that it is called the American system, 95; as a tax for the support of Government, it is to be supported; if for any other purpose, it is to be reprobated, 95; the surrender of individual opinion to the interest of the State," 95; the bill contained a vicious principle, 95; the tariff an issue in the Presidential contest, 96; manufacturers warned not to mingle their interests in politics, 96; change of policy in the New England States, 96;

"she held back, 96; denounced, 96; the present measure called a New England one, 96; tone of those who administered the Government," 96; the question now both political and sectional, 97; the duty on indigo, 97; remarks on the motion, 97; "history of its production, 97; reasons for encouraging its home production, 98; reasons for a unanimous vote, 98; burdens imposed by every tariff on Virginia and the Carolinas," 99; "object to make the bill consistent, though opposed to the principle, 99; no boon asked for the South, 99; capacity of the country to produce it, 100;" motion lost, 100; a nominal duty imposed, 100; this regarded as an insult by the South, 100; Southern views of the bill, 100; scheme of this Tariff, where conceived, 101; the bill a regular appendage of presidential elections, 101; change between the prosperity of the North and the South, 101; cause to which attributed, 101; its justice, 101; feeling of the mass of democratic members, 102.

Reduction of Duties .- A certain amount reduced at the previous session, 808; a step in the right direction, 808; further reduction expected, 808; Verplanck's bill, 808; the financial history of the country since the late war, 809; a satisfactory statement, 809; carrying back the protective system to the year of its commencement, 809; abundant protection to real manufacturers, 309; bound to be satisfactory to the South Carolina school, 309; bill lingered in the House under interminable debates on systems and theories, 809; suddenly knocked over by a new bill, 809; moved to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert a new bill, called the compromise, 809; delay asked for by Northern members, 810; remarks, 810; "one short hour ago collecting our papers to go home, 810; a new bill, proposed, and the cry of 'question' raised, 810; hasty legislation deprecated in matters of great importance, 810; this matter assumes an imposing attitude, 810; a bill to tranquillize feelings, 810; it is said the next Congress will be hostile to the tariff, 811; the discontent has a deeper seat than the tariff," 811; the seductive and treacherous nature of compromise legislation, 311; bill passed at once, 811; a bill without precedent in the annals of legislation, 812; the manner of proceeding, 812; the degree to which it was a compromise, 312; list of the voters, 812.

Clay asks leave to introduce a bill called a "compromise measure," 818; remarks, 818; "two great objects in view, 314; the first object looks at the tariff, 313; it stands in imminent danger, 818; it must fall at the next session, 813; be productive of calamitous consequences, 818; can be placed on a better foundation, now, than at the next session, 813; the majority of the dominant party is adverse to the tariff, 813; the father of the system charged with its unnatural abandonment, 818; a wish to separate it, from politics," 814; the principle of the bill a series of annual reductions of one-tenth per cent., &c., 314; other features of the bill, 814; remarks on the number of years the protective policy has to run, and the guaranties for its abandonment, 814; a stipulation to continue nine years, and no guarantee for its abandonment, 814; moral guarantees, 814; "this project has not the elements of success, 815; a violation of the constitution, as the Senate have no power to originate a revenue bill, 815; after they are defeated, and can no longer maintain a conflict, they come to make the best bargain they can, 815; the tariff is in its last gasp, 815; what has the tariff led us to already? 815; what evidence that the manufacturers will not come at the end of the time, and ask more protection than ever," 815; "a measure for harmony, 815; the unhappy divisions of North and South attributable to this bill, 815; further remarks," 815; fallibility of political opinions, 816; Clay's views, 316; Calhoun's views, 316; Clay's determination relative to a reaction, 816; manner in which the bill was received by the public, 816; Niles's Register, 516; conclusions of the manufacturers, 816; position of Webster, 316; not consulted on the subject, 316; "the bill a well-understood surrender of the power of discrimination, or a stipulation not to use that power for a certain period, 817; if the tariff is in danger, it is because the people will not sanction it, 317; resolutions relative to the bill," 817.

Probable reasons for Webster's exclusion from all knowledge of the compromise bill, 318; coincidence of his views with those of General Jackson, 818; a reduction of the tariff to a stable condition frustrated by the compromise bill, 318; objections urged against the bill, 818; attitude of South Carolina surmounted the objections, 818; would remove all cause of discontent from her, 318; House bill introduced during the discussion on the question of leave, 819; ditto passed, 819; share of the manufacturing states in this compromise, 819; an incident showing that measures may be passed on other reasons than their merits, 319; remarks, 819; "an extraordinary augmentation of duties in a bill which was to reduce duties, 319; two or three little factories in Connecticut must be protected, 819; contrary to the whole tenor and policy of the bill, 320; a view of the circumstances which had attended the duties on these woollens," 820,

Another incident—the character of protection openly claimed for this bill, 320; remarks of various Senators on this point, 821; silence of Calhoun on this point, 821.

The constitutionality of originating this bill in the Senate, 821; purely a question of privilege, and the decision of it belonged alone to the other House, 821; no Committee of Ways and Means in the Senate, 821; it is not the less a money bill from its object being protection, 821; amendment proposed relative to the drawback on manufactured imports, 321; instance refined sugar, 822; lost, 322; carried, so far as relates to sugar, in after years, 822.

Motion to substitute home valuations for foreign or imported goods, 822; strenuously opposed by Calhoun 322; insisted upon by friends of the bill, 822; moved to lay the bill on the table, 822; adjournment moved and carried, 822; Calhoun recedes, 822; the conditions, 822; their fallacy, 823; debate on this point, 823; "a home valuation deemed necessary by the friends of the protective system, 323; believed that after nine years most of the manufacturers will be sufficiently grown to protect themselves under a twenty-five per cent. duty, 823; it would be an increase of duties, 823; essentially necessary in order to prevent and detect frauds, 823; it will be an entering wedge for future measures, 823; for the sake of conciliation, the bill is brought forward, 824; the objections to the motion insurmountable, 824; the bill will save South Carolina from herself, 824; you cannot have the fair twenty per cent. without adopting the principle of home valuation, 325; the unequal operation of the home valuation, 325; not possible to maintain our institutions and our liberties under the continuance of this controversy, 826; proposed to lay the bill on the table, 826; further debate, 827; motion withdrawn, 827; amendment moved, 327; adjournment moved, 327; carried, 827; amendment that no valuation be adopted which will operate unequally in different parts of the Union considered, 327; requirement of the constitution, 827; merchant put to great inconvenience, 827; the bill is declared to be permanent, 327; home valuation impracticable and unprecedented, and unknown in any legis lation, 828; without the assurance that the principle wil not be disturbed, bill should be opposed, 329; home valuation tending to a violation of the constitution, 829: injurious and almost fatal to the Southern ports, 829; create great additional expense, 329; an increase of duties in a new form, 829; the fate of the bill depends on the fate of the amendment, 329; two conditions of the vote of Mr. Calhoun, 829; amendment fixing a home valuation adopted," 880; a new principle thus adopted at the expense of the constitution, 330.

Compromise, secret history of .- Calhoun and Clay rival candidates for the Presidency, 842; leaders in opposite political systems, 842; cause of their friendship, 842; rupture, 842; a question between them, which had the upper hand of the other, 342; Letcher conceives the idea of a compromise to release South Carolina from her position, 842; determination of Jackson to arrest Calhoun for high treason, 843; conferences, 843; agreement with the manufacturers, 348; action of Mr. Clayton, 843; amendments which were agreed to, 843; manner of the passage of the home valuation amendment 844; Calhoun's remarks, 844; his vote, 844; John M. Clayton master of both, 844.

Act of 1833.—Compromises, 844; act of 1833 a breach of all the rules and principles of legislation, 845; a conception of rival politicians who had failed in the game of agitation, and threw it up for the game of pacification 845; how could this measure be effected in a country to vast and intelligent, 845; Benton's view of the compromise, 346; vices of the act, 346; mischiefs done to the frame of the government, 347. See Protective System. TAINALL, Col., on the treaty with the Creeks, 64; second to Randolph in the duel with Clay, 72. TAYLOR, JOHN W., Representative from New York, 7; Speaker, 7; votes for the Missouri compromise, 8.

TAYLOR, JOHN, decease of, a perfect and complete republican statesman, 45; demeaner, 45; dress, 45; his character, 45: writings, 45; presented the Virginia Resolutions of 1798, 46; on the Virginia resolutions, 851.

TAYLOR, G. K., on the Virginia Resolutions, 850.

Territories .- Their rights under the constitution, 4. Tewas, Independence of .- Memorials on the subject, 66; effects of the victory of San Jacinto, 665; remarks, 665; reference to Committee on Foreign Affairs moved, 666; if Texas has a government de facto, it is the duty of the government to acknowledge it, 666; moderation and deliberation counselled, 666; acknowledgment and admission advocated, 667; new theatre for the slavery agitation revealed, 667; a design to make Texas an element in the Presidential election, 667; the former cosion of Texas, 667; the course of Calhoun, 667; remarks of Bedford Brown, 668; remarks of Mr. Rives, 668; national faith should be preserved inviolate, 668; report in favor, 669; "the balance of power and the perpetus tion of our institutions," as a reason for admission, 66; resolutions of recognition passed both Houses, 670; remarks of Senator Benton, 670; the separation of the two countries among the fixed order of events, 672; the Alamo, 678; humanity of Mexican ladies, 674; calumny on the cause of the revolt, 674; the revolt has illustrated the Anglo Saxon character, 675.

THOMAS, JESSE B., votes for the Missouri Compromise, 8 THOMAS, FRANCIS, on Committee of Bank Investigation, 34

on the admission of Arkansas, 631. THOMPSON, SMITH, Secretary of the Navy, 7.

TOMPKINS, D. D., Vice President, 7.

THORN, Lieut., his fate, 109.

THORN, HERMANN, application for a commission in the army, 183.

Treasury notes, resorted to, 1 second year of the war of 181 Treaty of 1807. - Cause of its re the Senate, 1.

Treaty-making power.-Its ext Treaty of Indian Springs, 58. TRIMBLE, DANIEL, Representativ THEKER, GEORGE, Representative TYLER, JOHN, Representative from bill, 881; defends the Senate report, 486.

VAN BUREN, MARTIN, remarks on 60; Secretary of State, 119; land, 181: resigns his seat in tion as Minister to Englan succession to General Jack Buren's appointment as Secre ping-stone to the Presidency and left for London, 214; cha cabinet for the purpose of oust 214; his nomination sent to certain, soon as a case could be 214; causes of objection, 215; -a killing off in the public speeches, 215; anecdote, 215; trophe of Madame Roland, 21! bamboozling is practised in the speakers for the nomination. the objections were based, 216 216; report of Mr. Gallatin co the objections relative to the original of Van Buren's letter published speech of Van Bur ground, 217; Jackson, author letter of General Jackson to V became President, 217; comp honorable imputation, 217; Jackson, 218; the New York sv. silence of Benton, reason for, Buren, 218; the rejection in upon Mr. Van Buren, 219; rem tie votes, 219; the injunction o relative to removals under Jac President, 282.

VAN DYKE, NICHOLAS, votes for the Veto of Maysville Road Bill. - Thir internal improvements/167; hist they embrace all the constitut question, 167.

Veto of the bank, effects of .- This a opposition newspapers throughou ruin of the country made to app journals, 281; the programme branches, 281; wicked attempt of corporation to govern the electic

VERPLANCE'S, GULIAN C., bill for the Virginia resolutions, suggestive of houn, 385; debate of 1880, the da fication, 847; the Virginia resolu lifleation doctrines avowed, 847; pealed to, 847; the resolutions, 848; from their text, 848; the 1 interposition claimed, 848; forcil position not meant, 848; the const modes of interposition, 848; to in to nullify and set at nought, 849.

own in any legis t the principle wil. posed, 829; home constitution, 829; uthern ports, 829; : an increase of the bill depends two conditions of endment fixing a w principle thus ition, 880. alhoun and Clay 842; leaders in opf their friendship n them, which had tcher conceives the uth Carolina from Jackson to arrest rences, 843; agreeaction of Mr. Clavreed to, 843; mannation amendment, ote, 844; John M et of 1833 a breach alation, 845; a confailed in the game ame of pacification, cted in a country so iew of the comproschiefs done to the Protective System. Creeks, 64; second

m New York, 7; ompromise, 8. complete republilress, 45; his charhe Virginia Resolusolutions, 851. ns. 850.

nstitution, 4. on the subject, 665; 665; remarks, 665; Affairs moved, 666; it is the duty of the 36: moderation and wledgment and adatre for the slavery make Texas an ele-67; the former ceslhoun, 667; remarks of Mr. Rives, 668; nviolate, 668; report er and the perpetusn for admission, 669; oth Houses, 670; re separation of the two of events, 672; the ladies, 674; calumny revolt has illustrated

> ri Compromise, 8. nk Investigation, 24

vy, 7.

commission in the Treasury notes, resorted to, 1; degree of depreciation in second year of the war of 1812, 1.

Treaty of 1807. - Cause of its rejection without reference to the Senate, 1.

Treaty-making power.-Its extent, 4.

Treaty of Indian Springs, 58.

TRIMBLE, DANIEL, Representative from Kentucky, 7. TUCKER, GEORGE, Representative from Virginia, 7.

TYLER, JOHN, Representative from Virginia, 7; on the force bill, 881; defends the Senate investigating committee's report, 486.

VAN BUREN, MARTIN, remarks on the treaty with the Creeks 60; Secretary of State, 119; appointed Minister to Eng. land, 181; resigns his seat in the cabinet, 181; his rejection as Minister to England, 214; candidates for the succession to General Jackson, 214; effect of Van Buren's appointment as Secretary of State, 214; a stepping-stone to the Presidency, 214; appointed minister. and left for London, 214; charged with breaking up the cabinet for the purpose of ousting the friends of Colhoun 214; his nomination sent to the Senate, and rejection certain, soon as a case could be made out for justification, 214; causes of objection, 215; rejection was not enough -a killing off in the public mind intended, 215; the speeches, 215; anecdote, 215; the speakers, 215; apostrophe of Madame Roland, 215; oh politics! how much bamboozling is practised in thy name, 215; tie votes, 215 speakers for the nomination, 216; grounds upon which the objections were based, 216; quotation from McLane, 216; report of Mr. Gallatin containing a refutation of the objections relative to the British trade, 216: the original of Van Buren's letter of instructions, 216; unpublished speech of Van Buren, 217; the Washington ground, 217; Jackson, author of the instructions, 217 letter of General Jackson to Van Buren after the latter became President, 217; completely disproving a dishonorable imputation, 217; Calhoun's friendship for Jackson, 218; the New York system of proscription, 218: silence of Benton, reason for, 218; his letter to Van Buren, 218; the rejection in England, 219; its effects upon Mr. Van Buren, 219; remark of Calhoun, 219; the tie votes, 219; the injunction of secrecy removed, 219; relative to removals under Jackson, 218; elected Vice President, 282.

VAN DYKE, NICHOLAS, votes for the Missouri Compromise, 8 Veto of Mayeville Road Bill .- Third veto on the subject of internal improvements/167; history of these vetoes, 167; they embrace all the constitutional reasoning on the question, 167, Veto of the bank, effects of .- This a general caption for the opposition newspapers throughout the country, 280; the ruin of the country made to appear, 280; extracts from journals, 281; the programme of the bank and its branches, 281; wicked attempt on the part of a moneyed corporation to govern the election, 281.

VERPLANCE'S, GULIAN C., bill for the reduction of duties, 808. Virginia resolutions, suggestive of nullification to Mr. Calhoun, 385; debate of 1830, the dawn of the ideas of nulli fication, 347; the Virginia resolutions quoted, 847; nullifleation doctrines avowed, 847; resolutions of '98 appealed to, 847; the resolutions, 848; their vindication, 848; from their text, 848; the right and duty of State interposition claimed, 848; forcible or nullifying interposition not meant, 848; the constitution suggests several modes of interposition, 848; to interpose, does not mean to nullify and set at nought, 849.

The cotemporaneous interpretation, 349; where found, 849; speakers in the Virginia Legislature, 849; opinions advanced by the speakers, 850, 851; the opposers of the resolutions did not charge upon them, nor their supporters in any manner contend for any principle like that of nullification, 852; responses of State Legislatures, report on the, 852; extracts, 852; enumeration of the powers which in the premises are claimed for the States, 858; views of the republicans who adopted the resolutions, 858; remark of Madison, 858; of Monroe in 1800, 854; the passage of the sedition law, 854; conduct of the people of Virginia, 854.

The resolutions disabused of nullification by their author, 854; the letters of Madison, 855; extracts from his letter to Mr. Everett, 855; reasons for rejecting in the constitution fanciful and impracticable theories, 855; what the constitution adopts as a security of the rights and powers of the States, 856; completeness of these provisions for the security of the States, 856; on the doctrine of nullification, 856; letter to Joseph C. Cabell, 856, 357, 859; to Daniel Webster, 856; to James Robert son, 856; to N. P. Trist, 857, 859; to C. E. Haynes, 857; to Andrew Stevenson, 857; from a memorandum on nullification, 858, 859; note, 858; to Mr. Townsend, 859; further extracts, 360; remarks, 360.

Vote against the ratification of the treaty of 1818, 17; on repairs of Cumberland road, 22; on the bill to make a road to New Mexico, 44; on the bill to occupy the Columbia river, 50; on the nomination of Clay as Secretary of State, 55; on the nominations to the Panama mission, 66; on treaty with the Cherokees, 108; on leave to offer a resolution of inquiry relative to recharter of the bank, 205; on the recharter of the bank, 250; do, in the House, 250; on selling the stock of the United States in bank, 295; on the compromise tariff bill, 812; on the compromise bill, 880; on the bill to distribute the sales from public lands, 864; on the resolution of inquiry into the fitness of the persons nominated for bank directors, 885; on the resolution relative to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, 895; on the resolution condemning President Jackson, 423; on Webster's plan of relief. 485; on laying the expunging resolutions of Λiabama on the table, 528; on the branch mints, 558; on the deposit bank bill, 558; on the fortification bill, 555; on the incendiary publication bill, 588; on the reception of abolition petitions, 619; on abolition petition of Society of Friends, 621; on abolition petitions in the House, 621; on the Cherokee treaty, 625; on the admission of Arkansas, 631; on the distribution bill, 651; on recognizing the independence of Texas, 670; on the recision of the specie circular, 705; on the substitute to land distribution, 708; on striking out the deposit clause from the appropriation bill, 711.

W

WALKER, JOHN W., Senator from Alabama, 7; judge, 7; votes for the Missouri Compromise, 8; on the independence of Texas, 665; on the specie circular, 708.

War of 1812.-By whose exertions the declaration was obtained, 6; its great results, 6.

WASHINGTON, Judge, of Supreme Court, 8.

WATMOUGH, JOHN G., on the Committee of Bank investigation, 241.

WAYNE, JAMES M., moves a reference of the bank memorial to a select committee, 234; on the bank investigation 288; appointed Judge of the Supreme Court, 569.

WEBSTER, DANIEL, denies the public distress, 88; on the protective system, 96; on revision of the tariff, 96 on the ordinance of 1787, 184; on the conduct of the free | WILLIAMS, LEWIS, Representative from North Carolina, 7; States on slavery, 187; in reply to Hayne, 188; debate with Hayne, 188, 140; opposes Van Buren as Minister to England, 215; on the recharter of the bank, 243, 244; on the prospect of public distress, 254; on the force bill. 832; on nullification, 888; on the French spoliation bill, 488, 505; on the Expunging resolution 550; on the bill to suppress incendiary publications, 586; on French affairs. 594, 596; on abolition petitions, 619; on the specie circular, 699.

WHITE, HUGH L., on the entrance of the bank directors into the political field, 254.

WICKLIFFE, CHARLES H., on the Committee of I aquiry, 287. WILKINS, WILLIAM, on the force bill, 880.

WILLIAMS, JOHN, Senator from Tennesses, 7.

Father of the House, 7.

WILLIAMS, T. H., votes for the Missouri Compromise, 8.

WIRT, WILLIAM, Attorney General, 7, 55; counsel for the Cherokee Indians, 165; candidate for the Presidency, 282; decease of, 475; rank as a lawyer, 475; lessons of his life, 475; early condition, 475; authorship, 476; time of his death, 476; remarks of Mr. Webster at bar meet ing, 476.

WOODBURY, LEVI, Secretary of the Navy, 181.

WRIGHT, SILAS, on the French Spoliation bill, 489.

YELL, ARCHIBALD, on the cession of the public lands, 711.