"If these measures cannot be defeated and overcome, by the power conferred by the constitution on the federal government, the constitution must be considered as incompetent to its own defence, the supremacy of the laws is at an end, and the rights and liberties of the citizens can no longer receive protection from the government of the Union. They not only abragate the acts of Congress, commonly called the tariff acts of 1828 and 1832, but they prostrate and sweep away, at once, and without exception, every act, and every part of every act, imposing any amount whatever of duty on any foreign merchandise; and, virtually, every existing act which has ever been passed authorizing the collection of the revenue, including the act of 1816, and, also, the collection law of 1799, the constitutionality of which has never been questioned. It is not only those duties which are charged to have been imposed for the protection of manufactures that are thereby repealed, but all others, though laid for the purpose of revenue merely, and upon articles in no degree suspected of being objects of protection. The whole revenue system of the United States, in South Carolina, is obstructed and overthrown; and the government is absolutely prohibited from collecting any part of the public revenue within the limits of that State. Henceforth, not only the citizens of South Carolina and of the Unite? States, but the subjects of foreign states, may import any description or quantity of merchandise into the ports of South Carolina, without the payment of any duty whatsoever. That State is thus relieved from the payment of any part of the public burdens, and duties and imposts are not only rendered not uniform throughout the United States, but a direct and ruinous preference is given to the ports of that State over those of all the other States of the Union, in manifest violation of the positive provisions of the constitution.

"In point of duration, also, those aggressions upon the authority of Congress, which, by the ordinance, are made part of the fundamental law of South Carolina, are absolute, indefinite, and without limitation. They neither prescribe the period when they shall cease, nor indicate any conditions upon which those who have thus undertaken to arrest the operation of the laws are to retrace their steps, and rescind their measures. They offer to the United States no alternative but unconditional submission. If the scope of the ordinance is to be received as the scale of concession, their demands can be satisfied only by a repeal of the whole system of revenue laws. and by abstaining from the collection of any duties or imposts whatsoever.

"By these various proceedings, therefore, the State of South Carolina has forced the general government, unavoidably, to decide the new and dangerous alternative of permitting a State ranged in regiments and brigades;' the offi- to obstruct the execution of the laws within its eers to be selected by the commander-in-chief; limits, or seeing it attempt to execute a threat of withdrawing from the Union. That portion of the people at present exercising the authority of the State, solemnly assert their right to do either, and as solemnly announce their determination to do one or the other.

"In my opinion, both purposes are to be regarded as revolutionary in their character and tendency, and subversive of the supremacy of the laws and of the integrity of the Union. The result of each is the same; since a State in which, by a usurpation of power, the constitutional authority of the federal government is openly defied and set aside, wants only the form to be independent of the Union.

"The right of the people of a single State to absolve themselves at will, and without the consent of the other States, from their most solemn obligations, and hazard the liberties and happiness of the millions composing this Union, cannot be acknowledged. Such authority is believed to be utterly repugnant both to the principles upon which the general government is constituted, and to the objects which it is expressly formed to attain.

"Against all acts which may be alleged to * transcend the constitutional power of the government, or which may be inconvenient or oppressive in their operation, the constitution itself has prescribed the modes of redress. It is the acknowledged attribute of free institutions, that, under them, the empire of reason and law is substituted for the power of the sword. To no other source can appeals for supposed wrongs be made, consistently with the obligations of South Carolina; to no other can such appeals be made with safety at any time; and to their decisions, when constitutionally pronounced, it becomes the duty, no less of the public authorities than of the people, in every case to yield a patriotic submission.

arrotic submission.

"In deciding upon the course which a high sense of duty to all the people of the United States imposes upon the authorities of the Union, in this emergency, it cannot be overlooked that there is no sufficient cause for the acts of South Carolina, or for her thus placing in jeopardy the happiness of so many millions of people. Misrule and oppression, to warrant the disruption of the free institutions of the Union of these States, should be great and lasting, defying all other remedy. For causes of minor character, the government could not submit to such a catastrophe without a violation of its most sacred obligations to the other States of the Union who have submitted their destiny to its hands.

"There is, in the present instance, no such cause, either in the degree of misrule or oppression complained of, or in the hopelessness of redress by constitutional means. The long sanction they have received from the proper authorities, and from the people, not less than the unexampled growth and increasing prosperity of so many millions of freemen, attest that no such oppression as would justify or even palliate such a resort, can be justly imputed either to the present policy or past measures of the federal government. The same mode of collecting duties, and for the same general objects, which began with the foundation of the government. and which has conducted the country, through its subsequent steps, to its present enviable con dition of happiness and renown, has not been changed. Taxation and representation, the great principle of the American Revolution, have continually gone hand in hand; and at all times and in every instance, no tax, of any kind has been imposed without their participation; and in some instances, which have been complained of with the express assent of a part of the representatives of South Carolina in the councils of the government. Up to the present period. no revenue has been raised beyond the necessary wants of the country, and the authorized expenditures of the government. And as soon as the burden of the public debt is removed, those charged with the administration have promptly recommended a corresponding reduction of rev-

"That this system, thus pursued, has resulted in no such oppression upon South Carolina needs no other proof than the solemn and official declaration of the late Chief Magistrate of that State, in his address to the legislature. In that he says, that 'the occurrences of the past year, in connection with our domestic concerns, are to be reviewed with a sentiment of fervent gratitude to the Great Disposer of human events: that tributes of grateful acknowledgment are due for the various and multiplied blessings he has been pleased to bestow on our people; that abundant harvests, in every quarter of the State have crowned the exertions of agricultural labor; that health, almost beyond former precedent, has blessed our homes; and that there is not less reason for thankfulness in surveying our social condition.' It would, indeed, be difficult to imagine oppression where, in the social condition of a people, there was equal cause of thankfulness as for abundant harvests, and varied and multiplied blessings with which a kind Providence had favored them.

"Independently of these considerations, it will not escape observation that South Carolina still claims to be a component part of the Union, to participate in the national councils, and to share in the public benefits, without contributing to the public burdens; thus asserting the dangerous anomaly of continuing in an association without acknowledging any other obligation to its laws than what depends upon her own will.

"In this posture of affairs, the duty of the government seems to be plain. It inculcates a recognition of that State as a member of the Union, and subject to its authority; a vindication of the just power of the constitution; the preservation of the integrity of the Union; and the execution of the laws by all constitutional means.

"The constitution, which has oath of office obliges him to support, tive 'shall take care the executed;' and, in providing to time to time, give to (the state of the Union, consideration such mean excessary and expedient obligation of recommen more efficient provision as may, from time to time

"It being thus shown Executive to execute the tional means, it remains of those already at his dibe proper further to pro-

"In the instructions of Treasury to the collector provisions and regulation 1799, and also the fines, p for their enforcement, at and explained. It may nowever, that these provisions as is to be conday of February next.

Under these circums sons of the acts of South of the laws is rendered through the ordinary jut United States. There wo difficulties, and less opposion between the officers and of the State, and the cowould be more effectually can be done in any other custom-house beyond the

the county.

"For this purpose, it mi vide that whenever, by any or obstruction in any Sta should become impracticab the duties, the President should be authorized to al of the districts and ports of necessary, and to establish some secure place within of such State; and, in suc the duty of the collector to and to detain all vessels ar duties imposed by law sho cured or paid in cash, deduin such cases it should be a vessel and cargo from the ci officer of the customs, unl the ordinary judicial tribu States; and that, in case of a to take the property by a fo overcome by the officers of th be lawful to protect the poss by the employment of the la and militia, under provisio authorized by the 11th secti minth of January, 1809.

"It may, therefore, be of with some modifications bet

imputed either to asures of the feder mode of collecting eral objects, which of the government. e country, through esent enviable con own, has not been representation, the an Revolution, have d: and at all times x, of any kind, has participation; and ve been complained a part of the repina in the councils the present period, beyond the necessathe authorized exnt. And as soon as ot is removed, those tion have promptly ig reduction of rev-ursued, has resulted n South Carolina, e solemn and official f Magistrate of that egislature. In that es of the past year, nestic concerns, are nent of fervent grar of human events; cknowledgment are ltiplied blessings he on our people; that quarter of the State, agricultural labor: I former precedent, d that there is not s in surveying our , indeed, be difficult e, in the social conwas equal cause of harvests, and varied h which a kind Pro-

considerations, it will South Carolina still art of the Union, to ouncils, and to share nout contributing to sserting the dangerg in an association other obligation to s upon her own will. irs, the duty of the ain. It inculcates a is a member of the authority; a vindicahe constitution; the y of the Union; and by all constitutional

th has oath of office

chliges him to support, declares that the Executive 'shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed;' and, in providing that he shall, from time to time, give to Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient, imposes the additional obligation of recommending to Congress such more efficient provision for executing the laws as may, from time to time, be found requisite.

"It being thus shown to be the duty of the Executive to execute the laws by all constitutional means, it remains to consider the extent of those already at his disposal, and what it may be proper further to provide.

"In the instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury to the collectors in South Carolina, the provisions and regulations made by the act of 1799, and also the fines, penalties, and forfeitures, for their enforcement, are particularly detailed and explained. It may be well apprehended, nowever, that these provisions may prove inadequate to meet such an open, powerful, organized opposition as is to be commenced after the first day of February next.

"Under these circumstances, and the provisions of the acts of South Carolina, the execution of the laws is rendered impracticable even through the ordinary judicial tribunals of the United States. There would certainly be fewer difficulties, and less opportunity of actual collision between the officers of the United States and of the State, and the collection of the revenue would be more effectually secured—if indeed it can be done in any other way—by placing the eastem-house beyond the immediate power of

"For this purpose, it might be proper to provide that whenever, by any unlawful combination or obstruction in any State, or in any port, it should become impracticable faithfully to collect the duties, the President of the United States should be authorized to alter and abolish such of the districts and ports of entry as should be necessary, and to establish the custom-house at some secure place within some port or harbor of such State; and, in such cases, it should be the duty of the collector to reside at such place. and to detain all vessels and cargoes until the duties imposed by law should be properly secured or paid in cash, deducting interest; that, in such cases it should be unlawful to take the wessel and cargo from the custody of the proper officer of the customs, unless by process from the ordinary judicial tribunals of the United States; and that, in case of an attempt otherwise to take the property by a force too great to be overcome by the officers of the customs, it should be lawful to protect the possession of the officers by the employment of the land and naval forces, and militia, under provisions similar to those authorized by the 11th section of the act of the minth of January, 1809.

"It may, therefore, be desirable to revive, with some modifications better adapted to the occasion, the 6th section of the act of the 3d of March, 1815, which expired on the 4th of March, 1817, by the limitation of that of the 27th of April, 1816; and to provide that, in any case where suit shall be brought against any individual in the courts of the State, for any act done under the laws of the United States, he should be authorized to remove the said cause, by peti tion, into the Circuit Court of the United States, without any copy of the record, and that the courts should proceed to hear and determine the same as if it had been wriginally instituted therein. And that in all cases of injuries to the persons or property of individuals for disobedience to the ordinance, and laws of South Carolina in pursuance thereof, redress may be sought in the courts of the United States. It may be expedient, also, by modifying the resolution of the 3d of March, 1791, to authorize the marshals to make the necessary provision for the safe keeping of prisoners committed under the au thority of the United States.

"Provisions less than these, consisting, as they do, for the most part, rather of a revival of the policy of former acts called for by the existing emergency, than of the introduction of any unusual or rigorous enactments, would not cause the laws of the Union to be properly respected or enforced. It is believed these would prove adequate, unless the military forces of the State of South Carolina, authorized by the late act of the legislature, should be actually embodied and called out in aid of their proceedings, and of the provisions of the ordinance generally. Even in that case, however, it is believed that no more will be necessary than a few modifications of its terms, to adapt the act of 1795 to the present emergency, as, by the act, the provisions of the law of 1792 were accommodated to the crisis then existing; and by conferring authority upon the President to give it operation during the session of Congress, and without the ceremony of a proclamation, whenever it shall be officially made known to him by the authority of any State, or by the courts of the United States, that, within the limits of such State, the laws of the United States will be openly opposed, and their execution obstructed, by the actual employment of military force, or by any unlawful means whatsoever, too great to be otherwise overcome.

"In closing this communication, I should do injustice to my own feelings not to express my confident reliance upon the disposition of each department of the government to perform its duty, and to co-eperate in all measures necessary in the present emergency.

"The crisis undoubtedly invokes the fidelity of the patriot and the sagacity of the statesman, not more in removing such portion of the public burden as may be necessary, than in preserving the good order of society, and in the maintenance of well-regulated liberty.

"While a forbearing spirit may, and I trust will be exercised towards the errors of our brethren in a particular quarter, duty to the rest of the Union demands that open and organized resistance to the laws should not be executed with impunity."

Such was the message which President Jackson sent to the two Houses, in relation to the South Carolina proceedings, and his own to counteract them; and it was worthy to follow the proclamation, and conceived in the same spirit of justice and patriotism, and therefore, wise and moderate. He knew that there was a deep feeling of discontent in the South, founded in a conviction that the federal government was working disadvantageously to that part of the Union in the vital points of the levy, and the expenditure of the federal revenue; and that it was upon this feeling that politicians operated to produce disaffection to the Union. That feeling of the masses he knew to be just and reasonable, and removable by the action of Congress in removing its cause; and when removed the politicians who stirred up discontent for "personal and ambitious objects," would become harmless for want of followers, or manageable by the ordinary process of law. His proclamation, his message, and all his proceedings therefore bore a two-fold aspect-one of relief and justice in reducing the revenue to the wants of the government in the economical administration of its affairs; the other of firm and mild authority in enforcing the laws against offenders. He drew no line between the honest discontented masses, wanting only relief and justice, and the ambitious politicians inflaming this discontent for ulterior and personal objects. He merely affirmed the existence of these two classes of discontent, leaving to every one to classify himself by his conduct; and, certain that the honest discontents were the mass, and only wanted relief from a real grievance, he therefore pursued the measures necessary to extend that relief while preparing to execute the laws upon those who should violate them. Bills for the reduction of the tariff-one commenced in the Finance Committee of the Senate, and one reported from the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives—and both moved in the first days of the session, and by committees politically and personally favorable to the President, went hand in hand with the exhortations in the proclamation and the steady preparations for enforcing the laws, if the extension of justice and the appeals of reason and patriotism should prous insufficient. Many thought that he ought to relax in his civil measures for allaying discontent while South Carolina held the military attitude of armed defiance to the United States-and among them Mr. Quincy Adams. But he ad. hered steadily to his purpose of going on with what justice required for the relief of the South and promoted, by all the means in his power the success of the bills to reduce the revenue especially the bill in the House; and which being framed upon that of 1816 (which had the support of Mr. Calhoun), and which was (now that the public debt was paid), sufficient both for revenue and the incidental protection which manufactures required, and for the relief of the South, must have the effect of satisfying every honest discontent, and of exposing and estopping that which was not.

CHAPTER LXXXI.

REDUCTION OF DUTIES .- MR. VERPLANK'S BILL

REDUCTION of duties to the estimated amount of three or four millions of dollars, had been provided for in the bill of the preceding session. passed in July, 1832, to take effect on the 4th of March, ensuing. The amount of reduction was not such as the state of the finances admitted, or the voice of the country demanded but was a step in the right direction, and a good one, considering that the protective policy was still dominant in Congress, and on trial, as it were, for its life, before the people, as one of the issues of the presidential election. That election was over; the issue had been tried; had been found against the "American system," and with this finding, a further and larger reduction of duties was expected. The President had recommended it, in his annual message; and the recommendation, being referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, quickly produced a bill, known as Mr. Verplank's, because reported by the member of that name. It was taken up promptly by the House, and received a very perspicuous explanation from the reporter, who gave a brief view of the financial history of the country, since the late war and stated that-

"During the last six y income of 27,000,000 o neived; the far greater I That this sum had beer half towards the necessa remment, and the other the public debt. In revi apon the treasury, durin for the civil, naval, and n the government, includir rencies, about 13,000,000 been expended. The am dollars would seem, even the standing necessary ex A long delayed debt of would not call it bounty, Revolution, had added, fo could be but for a few ye annual million. Fourte then covered the necessar government. But, howev cal we ought to be in a providing the sources of might be called upon for cies, it was wise to arrang This would be done by a million, which would cove penses in time of peace. Indian warfare, if such sh those of increased naval e porary collisions with for permanent warfare. We s tifiable in raising more th as a permanent revenue. least 13,000,000 dollars would have been collected tem of 1828, may now be in years of great imports sum. The act of last sun portion of this excess; ye tion of the last year as a s derived from that source, i to the act of 1832, would and, with the other source come of 22,000,000 dollar seven millions above the w

This was a very satisfact public debt paid off; thirte half) of our revenue render reduction provided for in the of duties by that reduction standard subtantially of 18 back the protective system commencement, a little increase, as in the article of compensated for, in this in abolition of the minimums, tions—first introduced into wards greatly extended—by below a certain sum were to otism should prom t that he ought to r allaying discontent he military attitude United States-and Adams. But he adse of going on with e relief of the South means in his power. reduce the revenue, House; and which f 1816 (which had in), and which was was paid), sufficient incidental protection ed, and for the relief e effect of satisfying and of exposing and

LXXXI.

R. VERPLANK'S BILL

he estimated amount of dollars, had been the preceding session. ske effect on the 4th amount of reduction e of the finances ade country demanded direction, and a good protective policy was is, and on trial, as it people, as one of the election. That elechad been tried; had merican system," and and larger reduction The President had reial message; and the erred to the Commitnickly produced a bill, because reported by e. It was taken up id received a very pern the reporter, who nancial history of the

r and stated that-

"During the last six years, an annual average income of 27,000,000 of dollars had been rerejved; the far greater part from the customs. That this sum had been appropriated, the one half towards the necessary expenses of the goternment, and the other half in the payment of the public debt. In reviewing the regular calls apon the treasury, during the last seven years, for the civil, naval, and military departments of the government, including all ordinary contingencies, about 13,000,000 of dollars a year had been expended. The amount of 13,000,000 of dollars would seem, even now, sufficient to cover the standing necessary expenses of government. A long delayed debt of public justice, for he would not call it bounty, to the soldiers of the Revolution, had added, for the present, since it could be but for a few years only, an additional annual million. Fourteen millions of dollars then covered the necessary expenditures of our government. But, however rigid and economical we ought to be in actual expenditures, in providing the sources of the revenue, which might be called upon for unforeseen contingencies, it was wise to arrange it on a liberal scale. This would be done by allowing an additional million which would cover, not only extra expenses in time of peace, but meet those of lidian warfare, if such should arise, as well as those of increased naval expenditure, from temporary collisions with foreign powers, short of permanent warfare. We are not, therefore, justifiable in raising more than 15,000,000 dollars as a permanent revenue. In other words, at least 13,000,000 dollars of the revenue that would have been collected, under the tariff system of 1828, may now be dispensed with; and. in years of great importation, a much larger The act of last summer removed a large portion of this excess; yet, taking the importation of the last year as a standard, the revenues derived from that source, if calculated according to the act of 1832, would produce 19,500,000. and, with the other sources of revenue, an income of 22,000,000 dollars. This is, at least. seven millions above the wants of the treasury."

This was a very satisfactory statement. The public debt paid off; thirteen millions (the one half) of our revenue rendered unnecessary; its reduction provided for in the bill; and the tariff of duties by that reduction brought down to the standard subtantially of 1816. It was carrying back the protective system to the year of its commencement, a little increased in some particulars, as in the article of iron, but more than compensated for, in this increase, in the total abolition of the minimums, or abritrary valuations—first introduced into that act, and afterwards greatly extended—by which goods costing below a certain sum were to be assumed to have cost that sum, and rated for duty accordingly. Such a bill, in the judgment of the practical and experienced legislator (General Smith, of Maryland, himself a friend to the manufacturing interest), was entirely sufficient for the manufacturer—the man engaged in the business, and understanding it-though not sufficient for the capitalists who turned their money into that channel, under the stimulus of legislative protection, and lacked skill and care to conduct their enterprise with the economy which gives legitimate profit, and to such real manufacturers, it was bound to be satisfactory. To the great opponents of the tariff (the South Carolina school). it was also bound to be satisfactory, as it carried back the whole system of duties to the standard at which that school had fixed them, with the great amelioration of the total abolition of the arbritrary and injurious minimums. The bill, then, seemed bound to conciliate every fair interest: the government, because it gave all the revenue it needed; the real manufacturers, because it gave them an adequate incidental pro tection; the South, because it gave them their own bill, and that ameliorated. A prompt passage of the bill might have been expected; on the contrary, it lingered in the House, under interminable debates on systems and theories in which ominous signs of conjunction were seen between the two extremes which had been lately pitted against each other, for and against the protective system. The immediate friends of the administration seemed to be the only ones hearty in the support of the bill; but they were no match, in numbers, for those who acted in concert against it-spinning out the time in sterile and vagrant debate. The 25th of February had arrived, and found the bill still afloat upon the wordy sea of stormy debate, when, all of a sudden, it was arrested, knocked over, run under, and merged and lost in a new one which expunged the old one and took its place. It was late in the afternoon of that day (Monday, the 25th of February), and within a week of the end of the Congress, when Mr. Letcher, of Kentucky, the fast friend of Mr. Clay, rose in his place, and moved to strike out the whole Verplank bill-every word, except the enacting clause—and insert, in lieu of it, a bill offered in the Senate by Mr. Cay, since called the "compromise," and which lingered at the door of the Senate, upon a question of leave for its admittance, and opposition to its entrance there, on account of its revenue character. This was offered in the House, without notice, without signal, without premonitory symptom, and just as the members were preparing to adjourn. Some were taken by surprise, and looked about in amazement; but the majority showed consciousness, and, what was more, readiness for action. The Northern members, from the great manufacturing States, were astounded, and asked for delay, which, not being granted, Mr. John Davis, of Massachusetts, one of their number, thus gave vent to his amazed feelings:

"He was greatly surprised at the sudden movement made in this House. One short hour ago, said he, we were collecting our papers, and putting on our outside garments to go home, when the gentleman from Kentucky rose, and they ought to be equally anxious to acquire the proposed to send this bill to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, with instructions to strike it all out, and insert, by way of amendment, an entire new bill, formed upon entirely different principles; yes, to insert, I believe, the bill which the Senate now have under consideration. This motion was carried; the business has passed through the hands of the committee, is now in the House, and there is a cry of question, question, around me, upon the engrossment of the bill. Who that was not a party to this arrangement, could one hour ago have credited this? We have, I believe, been laboriously engaged for eight weeks upon this topic, discussing and amending the bill which has been before the House. Such obstacles and difficulties have been met at every move, that, I believe, very little hope has of late been entertained of the passage of any bill. But a gleam of light has suddenly burst upon us; those that groped in the dark seemed suddenly to see their course; those that halted, doubted, hesitated, are in a moment made firm; and even some of those that have made an immediate abandonment of the protective system a sine qua non of their approbation of any legislation, seem almost to favor this measure. I am obliged to acknowledge that gentleman have sprung the proposition upon us at a moment when I did not expect it. And as the measure is one of great interest to the people of the United States. I must, even at this late hour, when I know the House is both hungry and impatient, and when I perceive distinctly it is their pleasure to vote rather than debate, beg their indulgence for a few minutes while I state some of the reasons which impose on me the duty of opposing the passage of this act. [Cries from different parts of the House, 'go on, go on, we will the Union; but did they not flout at it? Did hear.']

"Mr. Speaker, I do not approve of hasty legislation under any circumstances, but it is nullify the law? This is a practical illustration especially to be deprecated in matters of great im- of the exercise of a philanthropic spirit of con

portance. That this is a measure of great import ance, affecting, more or less, the entire population of the United States, will not be denied and ought, therefore, to be matured with care and well understood by every gentleman who votes upon it. And yet, sir, a copy has, for the first time, been laid upon our tables, since I rose to address you; and this is the first opportunity we have had even to read it. I hope others feel well prepared to act in this precipi tate matter; but I am obliged to acknowledge I do not; for I hold even the best of intentions will not, in legislation, excuse the errors of

"I am aware that this measure assumes an imposing attitude. It is called a bill of compromise; a measure of harmony, of conciliation; a measure to heal disaffection, and to save the Union. Sir, I am aware of the imposing effect of these bland titles; men love to be thought generous, noble, magnanimous; but reputation of being just. While they are anxious to compose difficulties in one direction, I entreat them not to oppress and wrong the people in another. In their efforts to save the Union, I hope their zeal will not go so far as to create stronger and better-founded discontents than those they compose. Peacemakers, mediators, men who allay excitements, and tranquillize public feeling, should, above all consider rations, study to do it by means not offensive to the contending parties, by means which will not inflict a deeper wound than the one which is healed. Sir, what is demanded by those that threaten the integrity of the Union? An abandonment of the American system; a formal renunciation of the right to protect American industry. This is the language of the nullification convention; they declare they regard the abandonment of the principle as vastly more important than any other matter; they look to that, and not to an abatement of duties without it; and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Davis], with his usual frankness, told us this morning it was not a question of dollars and cents; the money they regarded not but they required a change of policy.

"This is a bill to tranquillize feeling, to harmonize jarring opinions; it is oil poured into inflamed wounds; it is to definitively settle the matters of complaint. What assurance have we of that? Have those who threatened the Union accepted it? Has any one here risen in his place, and announced his satisfaction and his determination to abide by it? Not a word has been uttered, nor any sign or assurance of satisfaction given. Suppose they should vote for the bill, what then? They voted for the bill of July they not spurn it with contempt? And did not South Carolina, in derision of that compromise, descension to save the your imbecility was tr already been said that t binding than any other, modified at pleasure by ture. In what sense th Does not a compromise terms of agreement? S Carolina should abide b she supposes it beneficia injurious to her; and close, the friends of pre pose to re-establish the able man, who votes for such a measure? Wou say, you have no right to founded on compromise fit of your side of the mand mine? Who coul tion? If, under such of to proceed to abolish th Carolina have much more and disaffection than sho "It has been said, we

because the next Congre tariff. I am aware that been industriously circul exhorted to escape from as from a lion. But, sir ments of that body on the or does any one, possess justifies him in asserting y than this House ? Th little known about this the members shall prove the tariff as those who opinions represent, will t stop their action? Can Give what pledges you p gains you may, and that sure without respecting t of their wishes in warring will not stay their hand limit their power by abi be considered by them as on the subject, that they approbation. It seems to the next Congress is to suing the right course to and excite them to action

"Mr. Speaker, I rose to this very important que without the slightest prep before us at a very unex as some things in this bi the principles of public po formly maintained, I coul into a law without statis have hastily occurred to 1

"Let me, however, befo derstood on one point. I sonable adjustment of th exist. I have said repeate would go for a gradual rticles; but it must be ve sure of great import the entire populawill not be denied matured with care ery gentleman who a copy has, for the our tables, since I is is the first opporto read it. I hope act in this precipi zed to acknowledge e best of intentions cuse the errors of acasure assumes an illed a bill of comony, of conciliation; ection, and to save re of the imposing s; men love to be magnanimous; but

xious to acquire the While they are ies in one direction, ress and wrong the r efforts to save the 1 not go so far as to founded discontents Peacemakers, mediatements, and trand, above all considemeans not offensive v means which will than the one which anded by those that Union? An abansystem; a formal to protect American rage of the nullificatre they regard the iple as vastly more natter; they look to nt of duties without om South Carolina 1 frankness, told us question of dollars y regarded not, but olicy.

illize feeling, to hart is oil poured into efinitively settle the it assurance have we hreatened the Union e here risen in his isfaction and his de-? Not a word has or assurance of satisy should vote for the d for the bill of July ed expressly to save ot flout at it? Did empt? And did not of that compromise, practical illustration ropic spirit of cor descension to save the Union. Your folly and your imbecility was treated as a jest. It has already been said that this law will be no more binding than any other, and may be altered and modified at pleasure by any subsequent legislahire. In what sense then is it a compromise? Does not a compromise imply an adjustment on terms of agreement? Suppose, then, that South Carolina should abide by the compromise while she supposes it beneficial to the tariff States, and injurious to her; and when that period shall close, the friends of protection shall then propose to re-establish the system. What honorable man, who votes for this bill, could sustain such a measure? Would not South Carolina say, you have no right to change this law, it was founded on compromise; you have had the benefit of your side of the bargains, and now I demand mine? Who could answer such a declaration? If, under such circumstances, you were to proceed to abolish the law, would not South Carolina have much more just cause of complaint and disaffection than she now has?

"It has been said, we ought to legislate now, because the next Congress will be hostile to the tariff. I am aware that such a sentiment has been industriously circulated, and we have been exhorted to escape from the hands of that body as from a lion. But, sir, who knows the sentiments of that body on this question? Do you, or does any one, possess any information which justifies him in asserting that it is more unfriendthan this House? There is, in my opinion, little known about this matter. But suppose the members shall prove as ferocious towards the tariff as those who profess to know their opinions represent, will the passage of this bill stop their action? Can you tie their hands? Give what pledges you please, make what bargains you may, and that body will act its pleasure without respecting them. If you fall short of their wishes in warring upon the tariff, they will not stay their hand; but all attempts to limit their power by abiding compromises, will be considered by them as a stimulus to act upon the subject, that they may manifest their disapprobation. It seems to me, therefore, that if the next Congress is to be feared, we are pursuing the right course to rouse their jealousy, and excite them to action.

"Mr. Speaker, I rose to express my views on this very important question, I regret to say, without the slightest preparation, as it is drawn before us at a very unexpected moment. But, as some things in this bill are at variance with the principles of public policy which I have uniformly maintained, I could not suffer it to pass mto a law without stating such objections as have hastily occurred to me.

"Let me, however, before sitting down, be understood on one point. I do not object to a reasonable adjustment of the controversies which exist. I have said repeatedly on this floor, that I would go for a gradual reduction on protected violence shall be done to business; for all reduction is necessarily full of hazard. My objections to this bill are not so much against the first seven years, for I would take the consequences of that experiment, if the provisions beyond that were not of that fatal character which will at once stop all enterprise. But I do object to a compromise which destines the East for the altar. No victim, in my judgement, is required, none is necessary; and yet you propose to bind us, hand and foot, to pour out our blood upon the altar, and sacrifice us as a burnt offering, to appease the unnatural and unfounded discontent of the South; a discontent, I fear, having deeper root than the tariff, and will continue when that is forgotten. I am far from meaning to use the language of menace, when I say such a compromise cannot endure, nor can any adjustment endure, which disregards the interests, and sports with the rights of a large portion of the people of the United States. It has been said that we shall never reach the lowest point of reduction, before the country will become satisfied of the folly of the experiment. and will restore the protective policy; and it seems to me a large number in this body act under the influence of that opinion. But I cannot vote down my principles, on the ground that some one may come after me who will vote them

This is one of the most sensible speeches ever delivered in Congress; and, for the side on which it was delivered, perfect; containing also much that was valuable to the other side. The dangers of hasty legislation are well adverted to The seductive and treacherous nature of compromise legislation, and the probable fate of the act of legislation then so called, so pointedly foretold, was only writing history a few years in advance. The folly of attempting to bind future Congresses by extending ordinary laws years ahead, with a prohibition to touch them, was also a judicious reflection, soon to become history; while the fear expressed that South Carolina would not be satisfied with the overthrow of the protective policy-"that the root of her discontent lay deeper than the tariff, and would continue when that was forgotten "-was an apprehension felt in common with many others, and to which subsequent events gave a sad realization. But all in vain. The bill which made its first appearance in the House late in the evening, when members were gathering up their overcoats for a walk home to their dinners, was passed before those coats had got on the back; and the dinner which was waiting had but little time to cool before the astonished members, their wticles; but it must be very gradual, so that no work done, were at the table to eat it. A bill without precedent in the annals of our legislation, and pretending to the sanctity of a compromise, and to settle great questions for ever, went through to its consummation in the fragment of an evening session, without the compliance with any form which experience and parliamentary law have devised for the safety of legislation. This evasion of all salutary forms was effected under the idea of an amendment to a bill, though the substitute introduced was an entire bill in itself, no way amending the other, or even connecting with it, but rubbing it all out from the enacting clause, and substituting a new bill entirely foreign, inconsistent, and incongruous to it. The proceeding was a gross perversion of the idea of an amendment, which always implies an improvement and not a destruction of the bill to be amended. But there was a majority in waiting, ready to consummate what had been agreed upon, and the vote was immediately taken, and the substitute passed-105 to 71:—the mass of the manufacturing interest voting against it. And this was called a "compromise," a species of arrangement heretofore always considered as founded in the mutual consent of adversaries—an agreement by which contending parties voluntarily settle disputes or questions. But here one of the parties dissented, or rather was never asked for assent, nor had any knowledge of the compromise by which they were to be bound, until it was revealed to their vision, and executed upon their consciences, in the style of a surprise from a vigilant foe upon a sleeping adversary. To call this a "compromise" was to make sport of language—to burlesque misfortune-to turn force into stipulation - and to confound fraud and violence with concession and contract. It was like calling the rape of the Romans upon the Sabine women, a marriage. The suddenness of the movement, and the want of all time for reflection or concert-even one night for private communion-led to the most incongruous association of voters-to such a mixture of persons and parties as had never been seen confounded together before, or since: and the reading of which must be a puzzle to any man acquainted with the political actors of that day, the unravelling of which would set at defiance both his knowledge and his ingenuity. The following is the listthe voters with Mr. Clay, headed by Mr. Mark Alexander of Virginia, one of his stiffest opponents: the voters against him, headed by Mr. Johr Quincy Adams, for eight years past his indissoluble colleague in every system of policy, in every measure of public concern, and in-every enterprise of political victory or defeat. Here is the list!

YEAS.-Messrs. Mark Alexander, Chilton Al. lan, Robert Allen, John Anderson, William G. Angel. William S. Archer, John S. Barbour Daniel L. Barringer, James Bates, John Bell John T. Bergen, Laughlin Bethune, James Blair. John Blair, Ratliff Boon, Joseph Bouck, Thomas T. Bouldin, John Branch, Henry A. Bullard, Churchill C. Cambreleng, John Carr, Joseph W. Chinn, Nathaniel H. Claiborne, Clement C. Clay, Augustin S. Clayton, Richard Coke, ir. Henry W. Connor, Thomas Corwin, Richard Coulter, Robert Craig, William Creighton, jr., Henry Daniel, Thomas Davenport, Warren R. Davis, Ulysses F. Doubleday, Joseph Draper, John M. Felder, James Findlay, William Fitzgerald, Nathan Gaither, John Gilmore, William F. Gordon, Thomas H. Hall, William Hall, Joseph M. Harper, Albert G. Hawes, Micajah T. Hawkins, Michael Hoffman, Cornelius Holland, Henry Horn, Benjamin C. Howard, Henry Hubbard, William W. Irvin, Jacob C. Isaacs, Leonard Jarvis, Daniel Jenifer, Richard M. Johnson, Cave Johnson, Joseph Johnson, Edward Kavanagh, John Leeds Kerr, Henry G. Lamar, Garret Y. Lansing, Joseph Lecompte, Robert P. Letcher, Dixon H. Lewis, Chittenden Lyon, Samuel W. Mardis, John Y. Mason, Thomas A. Marshall, Lewis Maxwell, Rufus McIntire, James McKay, Thomas Newton, William T. Nuckolls, John M. Patton, Franklin E. Plummer, James K. Polk, Abraham Rencher, John J. Roane, Erastus Root, Charles S. Sewall, William B. Shepard, Augustine H. Shepperd, Samuel A. Smith, Isaac Southard, Jesse Speight, John S. Spence, William Stanberry, James Standefer, Francis Thomas, Wiley Thompson, John Thomson, Christopher Tompkins, Phineas L. Tracy, Joseph Vance, Gulian C. Verplanck, Aaron Ward, George C. Washington, James M. Wayne, John W. Weeks, Elisha Whittlesev. Campbell P. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, John T. H. Worthington.

NAYS.—Messrs. John Q. Adams, Heman Allen, Robert Allison, Nathan Appleton, Thomas D. Arnold, William Babcock, John Banks, Noyes Barber, Gamaliel H. Barstow, Thomas Chandler, Bates Cooke, Richard M. Coopel Joseph H. Crane, Thomas H. Crawford, John Davis, Charles Dayan, Henry A. S. Dearborn, Harmar Denny, Lewis Dewart, John Dickson, William W. Ellsworth, George Evans, Joshua Evans, Edward Everett, Horace Everett, George Grennell, jr., Hiland Hall, William Heister, Michael Hoffman, Thomas H. Hughes, Jabez W Huntington, Peter Ihrie, jr., Ralph I. Ingersoll Joseph G. Kendall, Henry King, Humphrey II

Leavitt, Robert McCoy, nan, John J. Milligan, Jeremiah Nelson, Dutee Pendleton, Job Pierson, F. Randolph, John Reed liam Slade, Nathan Sou Joel B. Sutherland, Jo F. Vinton, Daniel War mough, Grattan H. Wh desey, Ebenezer Young.

CHAPTER

REDUCTION OF DUTIE

Ox the 12th of February to introduce a bill for the styled by him a "comparefaced the question with the following are parts:

"In presenting the mo laws which I am now al two great objects in vie looks to the tariff. I am the opinion, formed after reflection, and on a full country, that, whether rig the tariff stands in imn should even be preserved it must fall at the next s cumstances, and through w the necessity for this chan ountry. I will not preter Others there are who mu pressions which my mind 1 point. Owing, however, t rent causes, the tariff, as it minent danger; and if the served beyond the next s some means not now withi sagacity. The fall of that productive of consequence When I look to the varie are involved, to the numb terested, the amount of value of the buildings ere grangement of the busines of the various branches o art which have sprung up care of this government, I my evil equal to the sudd those interests. History ca lel to the extent of the n be produced by such a disas the Edict of Nantes itself v parison with it. That cond brought to ruin a great The most respectable portic neaded by Mr. Johr ars past his indis-7stem of policy, in cern, and in-every or defeat. Here is

ander, Chilton Al-

lerson, William G.

John S. Barbour, Bates, John Bell, hune, James Blair, ph Bouck, Thomas Ienry A. Bullard, ohn Carr, Joseph borne, Clement C. Richard Coke, jr., Corwin, Richard am Creighton, jr., enport, Warren R. y, Joseph Draper, lay, William Fitz-Gilmore, William William Hall, Jo-Hawes, Micajah T. Cornelius Holland. Howard, Henry Jacob C. Isaacs, nifer, Richard M. eph Johnson, Eds Kerr, Henry G. Joseph Lecompte, I. Lewis, Chittens, John Y. Mason, Maxwell, Rufus mas Newton, Wilatton, Franklin E. braham Rencher, Charles S. Sewall, ine H. Shepperd, ard, Jesse Speight, Stanberry, James Wiley Thompson, ompkins, Phineas an C. Verplanck, lington, James M. lisha Whittlesey, lams, Heman AlAppleton, Thomas k, John Banks, Barstow, Thomas

hard M. Cooper
. Crawford, John
y A. S. Dearborn,
t, John Dickson,
re Evans, Joshua
re Everett, George
lliam Heister, Mi
lughes, Jabez W
Ralph I. Ingersoll
ng, Humphrey II

A. Wickliffe, John

Leavitt, Robert McCoy, Thomas M. T. McKennan, John J. Milligan, Henry A. Muhlenberg, Jeremiah Nelson, Dutee J. Pearce, Edmund H. Pendleton, Job Pierson, David Potts, jr., James F. Randolph, John Reed, Edward C. Reed, William Slade, Nathan Soule, William L. Storrs, Joel B. Sutherland, John W. Taylor, Samuel F. Vinton, Daniel Wardwell, John G. Watmough, Grattan H. Wheeler, Frederick Whitdesey, Ebenezer Young.

CHAPTER LXXXII.

REDUCTION OF DUTIES.-MR. CLAY'S BILL.

0s the 12th of February Mr. Clay asked leave to introduce a bill for the reduction of duties, styled by him a "compromise" measure; and prefaced the question with a speech, of which the following are parts:

"In presenting the modification of the tariff laws which I am now about to submit, I have two great objects in view. My first object looks to the tariff. I am compelled to express the opinion, formed after the most deliberate reflection, and on a full survey of the whole country, that, whether rightfully or wrongfully, the tariff stands in imminent danger. If it should even be preserved during this session, it must fall at the next session. By what circumstances, and through what causes, has arisen the necessity for this change in the policy of our country, I will not pretend now to elucidate. Others there are who may differ from the impressions which my mind has received upon this point. Owing, however, to a variety of concurrent causes, the tariff, as it now exists, is in imminent danger; and if the system can be preserved beyond the next session, it must be by some means not now within the reach of human sagacity. The fall of that policy, sir, would be productive of consequences calamitous indeed. When I look to the variety of interests which are involved, to the number of individuals interested, the amount of capital invested, the value of the buildings erected, and the whole arrangement of the business for the prosecution of the various branches of the manufacturing art which have sprung up under the fostering are of this government, I cannot contemplate my evil equal to the sudden overthrow of all those interests. History can produce no parallel to the extent of the mischief which would be produced by such a disaster. The repeal of the Edict of Nantes itself was nothing in comparison with it. That condemned to exile and brought to ruin a great number of persons.

of France were condemned to exile and ruin by that measure. But in my opinion, sir, the sudden repeal of the tariff policy would bring ruin and destruction on the whole people of this country. There is no evil, in my opinion, equal to the consequences which would result from such a catastrophe.

"I believe the American system to be in the greatest danger; and I believe it can be placed on a better and safer foundation at this session than at the next. I heard, with surprise, my friend from Massachusetts say that nothing had occurred within the last six months to increase its hazard. I entreat him to review that opinion. Is it correct? Is the issue of numerous elections, including that of the highest officer of the government, nothing? Is the explicit recommendation of that officer, in his message at the opening of the session, sustained, as he is, by a recent triumphant election, nothing? Is his declaration in his proclamation, that the burdens of the South ought to be relieved, nothing? Is the introduction of the bill in the House of Representatives during this session, sanctioned by the head of the treasury and the administration, prostrating the greater part of the manufactures of the country, nothing? Are the increasing discontents, nothing? Is the tendency of recent events to unite the whole South, nothing? What have we not witnessed in this chamber? Friends of the administration bursting all the ties which seemed indissolubly to unite them to its chief, and, with few exceptions south of the Potomac, opposing, and vehemently opposing, a favorite measure of that administration. which three short months ago they contributed to establish? Let us not deceive ourselves. Now is the time to adjust the question in a manner satisfactory to both parties. Put it off until the next session, and the alternative may, and probably then would be, a speedy and ruinous reduction of the tariff, or a civil war with the entire South.

"It is well known that the majority of the dominant party is adverse to the tariff. There are many honorable exceptions, the senator from New Jersey [Mr. Dickerson], among them. But for the exertions of the other party, the tariff would have been long since sacrificed. Now let us look at the composition of the two branches of Congress at the next session. In this body we lose three friends of the protective policy, without being sure of gaining one. Here, judging from the present appearances, we shall, at the next session, be in the minority. In the House it is notorious that there is a considerable accession to the number of the dominant party. How, then, I ask, is the system to be sustained against numbers, against the whole weight of the administration, against the united South, and against the increased impending danger of civil war?

parison with it. That condemned to exile and brought to ruin a great number of persons. System, and I am charged with an unnatural abandonment of my own offspring. I have never arrogated to myself any such intimate relation to it. I have, indeed, cherished it with parental fondness, and my affection is undiminished. But in what condition do I find this child? It is in the hands of the Philistines, who would strangle it. I fly to its rescue, to snatch it from their custody, and to place it on a bed of security and repose for nine years, where it may grow and strengthen, and become acceptable to the whole people. I behold a torch about being applied to a favorite edifice, and I would save it, if possible, before it was wrapt in flames, or at least preserve the precious furniture which it contains.

Mr. Clay further advanced another reason for his bill, and which was a wish to separate the tariff from politics and elections—a wish which admitted their connection-and which, being afterwards interpreted by events, was supposed to be the basis of the coalition with Mr. Calhoun; both of them having tried the virtue of the tariff question in elections, and found it unavailing either to friends or foes. Mr. Clay, its champion, could not become President upon its support. Mr. Calhoun, its antagonist, could not become President upon its opposition. To both it was equally desirable, as an unavailable element in elections, and as a stumbling-block to both in future, that it should be withdrawn for some years from the political arena; and Mr. Clay thus expressed himself in relation to that withdrawal:

"I wish to see the tariff separated from the politics of the country, that business men may go to work in security, with some prospect of stability in our laws, and without every thing being staked on the issue of elections, as it were on the hazards of the die."

Mr. Clay then explained the principle of his bili, which was a series of annual reductions of one tenth per cent. on the value of all duties above twenty per cent. for eight successive years; and after that, the reduction of all the remainder above twenty per centum to that rate by two annual reductions of the excess: so as to complete the reduction to twenty per centum on the value of all imported goods on the 30th day of September, 1842; with a total abolition of duties on about one hundred articles after that time; and with a proviso in favor of the right of Congress, in the event of war with any foreign power to impose such duties as might be necessary to prosecute the war. And this was called lation for the permanency of the reduced and of the abolished duties; and no such stipulation could be made to bind future Congresses; and the only equivalent which the South received from the party of protection, was the stipulated surrender of their principle in the clause which provided that after the said 30th of September, 1842, "duties should only be laid for raising such revenue as might be necessary for an economical administration of the government;" an attempt to bind future Congresses, the value of which was seen before the time was out. Mr. Clay proceeded to touch the tender parts of his plan-the number of years the protective policy had to run, and the guaranties for its abandonment at the end of the stipulated protection. On these points he said:

"Viewing it in this light, it appeared that there were eight years and a half, and nine years and a half, taking the ultimate time. which would be an efficient protection; the remaining duties would be withdrawn by a biennial reduction. The protective principle must be said to be, in some measure, relinquished at the end of eight years and a half. This period could not appear unreasonable, and he thought that no member of the Senate, or any portion of the country, ought to make the slightest objection. It now remained for him to consider the other objection—the want of a guaranty to there being an ulterior continuance of the duties imposed by the bill, on the expiration of the term which it prescribes. The best guaranties would be found in the circumstances under which the measure would be passed. If it were passed by common consent; if it were passed with the assent of a portion, a considerable portion, of those who had hitherto directly supported this system, and by a considerable portion of those who opposed it; if they declared their satisfaction with the measure, he had no doubt the rate of duties guarantied would be continued after the expiration of the term, if the country continued at peace."

Here was a stipulation to continue the protective principle for nine years and a half, and the bill contained no stipulation to abandon it at that time, and consequently no guaranty that it would be abandoned; and certainly the guaranty would have been void if stipulated as it is not in the power of one Congress to abridge by law the constitutional power of its successors. Mr. Clay, therefore, had recourse to moral guaranties; and found them good, and best in the circumstances in which the bill would be a "compromise," although there was no stipu- passed, and the common consent with which it was expected to be found its value, as before the bill was force before the tin begin.

Mr. Forsyth, of G and said:

"The avowed obje with universal appro harmonize the peopl from no better sourc from Kentucky: for indebted than to hi content which agitat ago it was in the pe those with whom he at once and for ever. seized, but he hoped project now offered, h of success. The tim fourteen days remain had better wait the a bill before them, the measure here, produc Was there not dans would be exhausted twenty men, with a words they would n the bill, though a ma in favor of it. He o was a violation of th Senate had no powe years ago, the same s which was rejected offer, however, would be attended with all follow its discussion take it into conside manufacturers. The called, will view it a not as their ultimatu But the bargain was: are defeated, and can they come to make The senator from K in danger; aye, sir, it received the immedic can cure it. He cons gentleman to be of i sir, the whole feeling to the high protective that crept into our the spear of Ithuriel. to prevent the ruin w the system will pro inflict ruin upon the n the Southern people, the subject, should to the system; what ri complain who had South? What has t From one end of the produced evils which

f the reduced, and no such stipulation e Congresses; and the South received was the stipulated n the clause which 30th of September, e laid for raising necessary for an i of the governfuture Congresses, n before the time d to touch the tenumber of years the and the guaranties nd of the stipulated

he said: , it appeared that I a half, and nine he ultimate time, protection; the rehdrawn by a bienive principle must ure, relinquished at half. This period le, and he thought ate, or any portion ke the slightest obor him to consider nt of a guaranty to ontinuance of the n the expiration of The best guathe circumstances uld be passed. If consent; if it were portion, a considehad hitherto dim, and by a consiho opposed it; if ion with the meae of duties guaranr the expiration of inued at peace."

continue the proars and a half and tion to abandon it y no guaranty that I certainly the guaif stipulated, as it ongress to abridge wer of its succesad recourse to moiem good, and best. h the bill would be sent with which it found its value, as to the "common consent," before the bill was passed, as to its binding force before the time fixed for its efficacy to

Mr. Forsyth, of Georgia, replied to Mr. Clay, and said:

"The avowed object of the bill would meet with universal approbation. It was a project to harmonize the people, and it could have come from no better source than from the gentleman from Kentucky: for to no one were we more indebted than to him for the discord and discontent which agitate us. But a few months ago it was in the power of the gentleman, and those with whom he acted, to settle this question at once and for ever. The opportunity was not seized, but he hoped it was not passed. In the project now offered, he could not see the elements of success. The time was not auspicious. But fourteen days remained to the session; and we had better wait the action of the House on the bill before them, than by taking up this new measure here, produce a cessation of their action. Was there not danger that the fourteen days would be exhausted in useless debate? Why, twenty men, with a sufficiency of breath (for words they would not want), could annihilate the bill, though a majority in both Houses were in favor of it. He objected, too, that the bill was a violation of the constitution, because the Senate had no power to raise revenue. Two years ago, the same senator made a proposition, which was rejected on this very ground. The offer, however, would not be useless; it would be attended with all the advantages which could follow its discussion here. We shall see it, and take it into consideration as the offer of the manufacturers. The other party, as we are called, will view it as a scheme of diplomacy; not as their ultimatum, but as their first offer. But the bargain was all on one side. After they are defeated, and can no longer sustain a conflict, they come to make the best bargain they can. The senator from Kentucky says, the "tariff is in danger; aye, sir, it is at its last gasp. It has received the immedicable wound; no hellebore can cure it. He considered the confession of the gentleman to be of immense importance. Yes, sir, the whole feeling of the country is opposed to the high protective system. The wilv serpent that crept into our Eden has been touched by the spear of Ithuriel. The senator is anxious to prevent the ruin which a sudden abolition of the system will produce. No one desires to inflict ruin upon the manufacturers; but suppose the Southern people, having the power to control the subject, should totally and suddenly abolish the system; what right would those have to complain who had combined to oppress the South? What has the tariff led us to already? From one end of the country to the other, it has

was expected to be done—a calculation which tariffs. The necessity of appealing now to frasleeping, but nearly extinguished. He opposed the introduction of the bill as a revenue measure, and upon it demanded the yeas and nays: which were ordered."

> The practical, clear-headed, straightforward Gen. Smith, of Maryland, put his finger at once upon the fallacy and insecurity of the whole scheme, and used a word, the point and application of which was more visible afterwards than at the time it was uttered. He said:

> "That the bill was no cure at all for the evils complained of by the South. They wished to try the constitutionality of protecting duties. In this bill there was nothing but protection, from beginning to end. We had been told that if the bill passed with common consent, the system established by it would not be touched. But he had once been cheated in that way, and would not be cheated again. In 1816 it was said the manufacturers would be satisfied with the protection afforded by the bill of that year; but in a few years after they came and insisted for more, and got more. After the first four years, an attempt would be made to repeal all the balance of this bill. He would go no further than four years in prospective reduction. The reduction was on some articles too great."

> He spoke history, except in the time. The manufacturers retained the benefits of the bill to the end of the protection which it gave them, and then re-established the protective system in more amplitude than ever.

"Mr. Calhoun rose and said, he would make but one or two observations. Entirely approving of the object for which this bill was introduced, he should give his vote in favor of the motion for leave to introduce it. He who loved the Union must desire to see this agitating question brought to a termination. Until it should be terminated, we could not expect the restoration of peace or harmony, or a sound condition of things, throughout the country. He believed that to the unhappy divisions which had kept the Northern and Southern States apart from each other, the present entirely degraded condition of the country (for entirely degraded he believed it to be) was solely attributable. The general principles of this bill received his approbation. He believed that if the present difficul ties were to be adjusted, they must be adjusted on the principles embraced in the bill, of fixing ad valorem duties, except in the few cases in the bill to which specific duties were assigned. He said that it had been his fate to occupy a position as hostile as any one could, in reference to the protecting policy; but, if it depended produced evils which are worse than a thousand on his will, he would not give his vote for the prostration of the manufacturing interest. A very large capital had been invested in manufactures, which/had been of great service to the country; and he would never give his vote to suddenly withdraw all those duties by which that capital was sustained in the channel into which it had been directed. But he would only vote for the ad valorem system of duties, which he deemed the most beneficial and the most equitable. At this time, he did not rise to go into a consideration of any of the details of this bill, as such a course would be premature, and contrary to the practice of the Senate. There were some of the provisions which had his entire approbation, and there were some to which he objected. But he looked upon these minor points of difference as points in the settlement of which no difficulty would occur, when gentlemen meet together in that spirit of mutual compromise which, he doubted not, would be brought into their deliberations, without at all yielding the constitutional question as to the right of protection."

This union of Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Clay in the belief of the harmony and brotherly affection which this bill would produce, professing as it did, and bearing on its face the termination of the American system, afforded a strong instance of the fallibility of political opinions. It was only six months before that the dissolution of the Union would be the effect, in the opinion of one of them, of the continuance of the American system-and of its abandonment in the opinion of the other. Now, both agreed that the bill which professed to destroy it would restore peace and harmony to a distracted country. How far Mr. Clay then saw the preservation, and not the destruction, of the American system in the compromise he was making, may be judged by what he said two weeks later, when he declared that he looked forward to a re-action which would restore the protective system at the end of the time.

The first news of Mr. Clay's bill was heard with dismay by the manufacturers. Niles' Register, the most authentic organ and devoted advocate of that class, heralded it thus: "Mr. Clay's new tariff project will be received like a crash of thunder in the winter season, and some will hardly trust the evidence of their senses on a first examination of it—so radical and sudden is the change of policy proposed because of a combination of circumstances which, in the judgment of Mr. Clay, has rendered such a change necessary. It may be that our favorite systems are all to be destroyed. If so the majority determine-so be it " The manufacturers flocked in crowds to Washing. ton City-leaving home to stop the bill-arriving at Washington to promote it. Those practical men soon saw that they had gained a reprieve of nine years and a half in the benefits of protection, with a certainty of the re-establishment of the system at the end of that time, from the revulsion which would be made in the revenue -in the abrupt plunge at the end of that time in the scale of duties from a high rate to an ad valorem of twenty per centum; and that leaving one hundred articles free. This nine years and a half reprieve, with the certain chance for the revulsion, they found to be a good escape from the possible passage of Mr. Verplank's bill or its equivalent, at that session; and its certain passage, if it failed then, at the ensuing session of the new Congress. They found the protective system dead without this reprieve, and now reccived as a deliverance what had been viewed as a sentence of execution; and having helped the bill through, they went home rejoicing, and more devoted to Mr. Clay than ever.

Mr. Webster had not been consulted, in the formation of this bill, and was strongly opposed to it, as well as naturally dissatisfied at the neglect with which he had been treated. As the ablest champion of the tariff, and the representative of the chief seat of manufactures, he would naturally have been consulted, and made a party, and a leading one, in any scheme of tariff adjustment; on the contrary, the whole concoction of the bill between Mr. Clay and Mr. Calhoun had been entirely concealed from him. Symptoms of discontent appeared, at times in their speeches; and, on the night of the 23d, some sharp words passed-composed the next day by their friends: but it was a strange idea of a "compromise," from which the main party was to be excluded in its formation, and bound in its conclusion. And Mr. Webster took an immediate opportunity to show that he had not been consulted, and would not be bound by the arrangement that had been made. He said:

"It is impossible that this proposition of the honorable member from Kentucky should not excite in the country a very strong sensation; and in the relation in which I stand to the subject, I am anxious, at an early moment, to say, that, as far as I understand the bill, from the gentleman's statement of it, there are principles in it to which I do not at present see how I can ever

If I under concur. of it will be a well the power of discri not to use that pow imports, after the ei pired. This appears moment. I hesitate stipulation. The h that though there w der of the power, the to exercise it; a tre he says, which no Am after, stand up to vi not ready to enter in so far as depends on sors in Congress as f

"The honorable me the tariff is in immi destroyed this session the next. This may so. But, if it be so, people will not sancti will not, why, then, s at all. I am not quite orable member seem which has happened, v months, changing so r the tariff. I do not d appeal to the America care of their own inte those vast interests w the laws of Congress

There was a signific remarks, that Mr. W sulted in the preparat that he had no knowl Clay's statement of it it had not then been nade by Mr. Clay wa standing it. This is t which he gave of that all knowledge of wh houn were doing; bu sharp words between was fully communica friend, and as an inju-Webster naturally an next day, he delivered in an unusually forms solutions, instead of a

"Resolved, That the country ought not to just estimate of the v and that, as soon as it reasonable certainty, to imports, as established will yield an excess of ought to be made for mine-so be it " owds to Washing the bill-arriving Those practical gained a reprieve enefits of protecestablishment of t time, from the e in the revenue end of that time igh rate to an ad and that leaving s nine years and n chance for the good escape from erplank's bill, or ; and its certain e ensuing session and the protective eve, and now red been viewed as aving helped the ejoicing, and more consulted, in the strongly opposed tisfied at the netreated. As the .nd the represenmanufactures, he sulted, and made i any scheme of trary, the whole Mr. Clay and Mr. cealed from him. ared, at times, in right of the 23d, mposed the next as a strange idea 1 the main party ation, and bound Vebster took an r that he had not be bound by the de. He said:

roposition of the ky should not exsensation; and, in the subject, I am ) say, that, as far the gentleman's inciples in it to how I can ever

If I understand the plan, the result of it will be a well-understood surrender of the power of discrimination, or a stipulation not to use that power, in the laying duties on imports, after the eight or nine years have expired. This appears to me to be matter of great moment. I hesitate to be a party to any such stipulation. The honorable member admits, that though there will be no positive surrender of the power, there will be a stipulation not to exercise it; a treaty of peace and amity, as he says, which no American statesman can, hereafter, stand up to violate. For one, sir, I am not ready to enter into the treaty. I propose, so far as depends on me, to leave all our successors in Congress as free to act as we are our-

"The honorable member from Kentucky says the tariff is in imminent danger; that, if not destroyed this session, it cannot hope to survive the next. This may be so, sir. This may be so. But, if it be so, it is because the American people will not sanction the tariff; and, if they will not, why, then, sir, it cannot be sustained at all. I am not quite so despairing as the honorable member seems to be. I know nothing which has happened, within the last six or eight months, changing so materially the prospects of the tariff. I do not despair of the success of an appeal to the American people, to take a just care of their own interest, and not to sacrifice those vast interests which have grown up under the laws of Congress."

There was a significant intimation in these few remarks, that Mr. Webster had not been consulted in the preparation of this bill. He shows that he had no knowledge of it, except from Mr. Clay's statement of its contents, on the floor, for it had not then been read; and the statement made by Mr. Clay was his only means of understanding it. This is the only public intimation which he gave of that exclusion of himself from all knowledge of what Mr. Clay and Mr. Calhoun were doing; but, on the Sunday after the sharp words between him and Mr. Clay, the fact was fully communicated to me, by a mutual friend, and as an injurious exclusion which Mr. Webster naturally and sensibly felt. On the next day, he delivered his opinions of the bill, in an unusually formal manner-in a set of resolutions, instead of a speech—thus:

"Resolved, That the annual revenues of the country ought not to be allowed to exceed a just estimate of the wants of the government; and that, as soon as it shall be ascertained, with reasonable certainty, that the rates of duties on imports, as established by the act of July, 1832, will yield an excess over those wants, provision ought to be made for their reduction; and that, in making this reduction, just regard should be had to the various interests and opinions of different parts of the country, so as most effectually to preserve the integrity and harmony of the Union, and to provide for the common defence, and promote the general welfare of the whole.

"But, whereas it is certain that the diminution of the rates of duties on some articles would increase, instead of reducing, the aggregate amount of revenue on such articles; and whereas, in regard to such articles as it has been the policy of the country to protect, a slight reduction on one might produce essential injury, and even distress, to large classes of the community, while another might bear a larger reduction without any such consequences; and whereas, also, there are many articles, the duties on which might be reduced, or altogether abolished, without producing any other effect than the reduction of revenue: Therefore,

"Resolved, That, in reducing the rates of duties imposed on imports, by the act of the 14th of July aforesaid, it is not wise or judicious to proceed by way of an equal reduction per centum on all articles; but that, as well the amount as the time of reduction ought to be fixed, in respect to the several articles, distinctly, having due regard, in each case, to the questions whether the proposed reduction will affect revenue alone, or how far it will operate injuriously on those domestic manufactures hitherto protected; especially such as are essential in time of war, and such, also, as have been established on the faith of existing laws; and, above all, how far such proposed reduction will affect the rates of wages and the earnings of American manual labor.

"Resolved, That it is unwise and injudicious, in regulating imposts, to adopt a plan, hitherto equally unknown in the history of this government, and in the practice of all enlightened nations, which shall, either immediately or prospectively, reject all discrimination on articles to be taxed, whether they be articles of necessity or of luxury, of general consumption or of limited consumption; and whether they be or be not such as are manufactured and produced at home, and which shall confine all duties to one equal rate per centum on all articles.

"Resolved, That, since the people of the United States have deprived the State governments of all power of fostering manufactures, however indispensable in peace or in war, or however important to national independence, by commercial regulations, or by laying duties on imports, and have transferred the whole authority to make such regulations, and to lay such duties, to the Congress of the United States, Congress cannot surrender or abandon such power, compatibly with its constitutional duty; and, therefore,

"Resolved, That no law ought to be passed on the subject of imposts, containing any stipulation, express or implied, or giving any pledge or assurance, direct or indirect, which shall tend to restrain Congress from the full exercise, at all times hereafter, of all its constitutional powers, in giving reasonable protection to American industry, countervailing the policy of foreign nations, and maintaining the substantial independence of the United States<sup>97</sup>

These resolutions brought the sentiments of Mr. Webster, on the tariff and federal revenue, very nearly to the standard recommended by General Jackson, in his annual message; which was a limitation of the revenue to the wants of the government, with incidental protection to essential articles; and this approximation of policy, with that which had already taken place on the doctrine of nullification and its measures. and his present support of the "Force Bill." may have occasioned the exclusion of Mr. Webster from all knowledge of this "compromise." Certain it is, that, with these sentiments on the subject of the tariff and the revenue, and with the decision of the people, in their late elections against the American system, that Mr. Webster and his friends would have acted with the friends of General Jackson and the democratic party. in the ensuing Congress, in reducing the duties" in a way to be satisfactory to every reasonable interest; and, above all, to be stable; and to free the country from the agitation of the tariff question, the manufacturers from uncertainty. and the revenue from fluctuations which alternately gave overflowing and empty treasuries. It was a consummation devoutly to be wished: and frustrated by the intervention of the delusive "compromise," concocted out of doors, and in conclave by two senators; and to be carried through Congress by their joint adherents, and by the fears of some and the interests of others.

Mr. Wright, of New-York, saw objections to the bill, which would be insurmountable in other circumstances. He proceeded to state these objections, and the reason which would outweigh them in his mind:

"He thought the reduction too slow for the first eight years, and vastly too rapid afterwards. Again, he objected to the inequality of the rule of reduction which had been adopted. It will be seen, at once, that on articles paying one hundred per cent. duty, the reduction is dangerously rapid. There was uniformity in the rule adopted by the bill, as regards its operation on existing laws. The first object of the bill was to effect a compromise between the conflicting views of the friends and the opponents of protection. It purports to extend relief to Southern interest; and yet it enhances the duty on one of the most material articles of Southern consumption—negro cloths. Again, while it increased this duty, it imposes no corresponding duty on the raw material from which the fabric is made.

"Another objection arose from his mature conviction that the principle of home valuation was absurd, impracticable, and of very unequal operation. The reduction on some articles of prime necessity—iron, for example—was so great and so rapid, that he was perfectly satisfied that it would stop all further production before the expiration of eight years. The principle of discrimination was one of the points introduced into the discussion; and, as to this, he would say that the bill did not recognize, after a limited period, the power of Congress to afford protection by discriminating duties. It provides protection for a certain length of time, but does not ultimately recognize the principle of protection The bill proposes ultimately to reduce all articles which pay duty to the same rate of duty This principle of revenue was entirely unknown to our laws, and, in his opinion, was an unwarrantable innovation. Gentlemen advocating the principle and policy of free trade admit the power of Congress to lay and collect such duties as are necessary for the purpose of revenue; and to that extent they will incidentally afford protection to manufactures. He would, upon all occasions, contend that no more money should be raised from duties on imports than the government needs; and this principle he wished now to state in plain terms. He adverted to the proceedings of the Free Trade Convention to show that, by a large majority, (120 to 7,) they recognized the constitutional power of Congress to afford incidental protection to domestic manufactures. They expressly agreed that the principle of discrimination was in consonance with the constitution.

"Still another objection he had to the bill. It proposed on its face, and, as he thought, directly, to restrict the action of our successors. We had no power, he contended, to bind our successors. We might legislate prospectively, and a future Congress could stop the course of this prospective legislation. He had, however, no alternative but to vote for the bill, with all its defects, because it contained some provisions which the state of the country rendered indispensably necessary."

He then stated the reason which would induce him to vote for the bill notwithstanding these objections. It was found in the attitude of South Carolina, and in the extreme desire which he had to remove all cause of discontent in that State, and to enable her to return to the state of feeling which belonged to an affectionate member of the Union. For that reason he would do what was satisfactory to her, though not agreeable to himself.

While the bill was still depending before the Senate, the bill itself for which the leave

was being asked, madoor of the chamber, in the shape of an a and sent to the Senat was a new feature in the Senate bill to be the House bill put in inquickly put to the vot

"Yeas.—Messrs. Be Chambers, Clay, Clayt Frelinghuysen, Grund King, Mangum, Miller dexter, Rives, Robins Tyler, Waggaman, Wh "NAYS.—Messrs. F Dickerson, Dudley, He Robbins, Ruggles, Seyi ton, Webster, Wilkins

And the bill was the which the dictionaries d without the interventio called, it was immedisacred and inviolable, a sent, although the only facturing States (Pen Maryland, Massachuser mont) had in making to see it sprung upon the ceuted upon them as a them by anti-tariff vote resistance of their sena in both Houses of Cong

An incident which at this bill shows the man ures-especially a bill a the tariff, which affords fying small interests-r a legislative body, even States, by other reasons its merits. The case few small manufactories other New England Sta ed, not Kendall green. quite antithetically, as wholly of wool-of which ed. As it was an articl boring population, the session made it virtual duty of five per centum and the same on the wo Now this article was mise" bill which was to per centum, aggravated b while it increases sponding duty on he fabric is made. from his mature of home valuation of very unequal some articles of ple-was so great ectly satisfied that uction before the e principle of dispoints introduced this, he would say e, after a limited to afford protec-

It provides proime, but does not ple of protection. o reduce all artiame rate of duty. entirely unknown i, was an unwaren advocating the e admit the power such duties as are revenue; and to itally afford prowould, upon all re money should rts than the govnciple he wished He adverted to 'rade Convention jority, (120 to 7.) nal power of Conection to domestic ad to the bill. It thought, directly, cessors. We had id our successors. ely, and a future e of this prospecver, no alternative all its defects, be isions which the indispensably ne-

y agreed that the

as in consonance

hich would induce vithstanding these attitude of South desire which he discontent in that urn to the state of fectionate member he would do what 1 not agreeable to depending before which the leave was being asked, made its appearance at the door of the chamber, with a right to enter it, in the shape of an act passed by the House, and sent to the Senate for concurrence. This the Senate bill to be immediately dropped, and the House bill put in its place; and which, being quickly put to the vote, was passed, 29 to 16.

"YEAS.--Messrs. Bell, Bibb, Black, Calhoun, Chambers, Clay, Clayton, Ewing, Foot, Forsyth, Frelinghuysen, Grundy, Hill, Holmes, Johnston King, Mangum, Miller, Moore, Maudain, Poindexter, Rives, Robinson, Sprague, Tomlinson, Tyler, Waggaman, White, Wright.
"Navs.—Messrs. Benton, Buckner, Dallas,

Dickerson, Dudley, Hendricks, Knight, Prentiss, Robbins, Ruggles, Seymour, Silsbee, Smith, Tipton, Webster, Wilkins."

And the bill was then called a "compromise," which the dictionaries define to be an "agreement without the intervention of arbitrators;" and so called, it was immediately proclaimed to be sacred and inviolable, as founded on mutual consent, although the only share which the manufacturing States (Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Vermont) had in making this "compromise," was to see it sprung upon them without notice, executed upon them as a surprise, and forced upon them by anti-tariff votes, against the strenuous resistance of their senators and representatives in both Houses of Congress.

An incident which attended the discussion of this bill shows the manner in which great measures-especially a bill of many particulars, like the tariff, which affords an opportunity of gratifying small interests-may be worked through a legislative body, even the Senate of the United States, by other reasons than those derived from its merits. The case was this: There were a few small manufactories in Connecticut and some other New England States, of a coarse cloth called, not Kendall green, but Kendall cottonquite antithetically, as the article was made wholly of wool-of which much was also imported. As it was an article exclusively for the laboring population, the tariff of the preceding session made it virtually free, imposing only a duty of five per centum on the value of the cloth and the same on the wool of which it was made. Now this article was put up in this "compromise" bill which was to reduce duties, to fifty valuation, and by the legerdemain of retaining the five per centum duty on the foreign wool which they used, and which was equivalent to making it free, and reduced to that low rate to was a new feature in the game, and occasioned harmonize the duty on the raw material and the cloth. General Smith, of Maryland, moved to strike out this duty, so flagrantly in contrast to the professed objects of the bill, and in fraud of the wool duty; and that motion brought out the reason why it was put there -which was, that it was necessary to secure the passage of the bill. Mr. Foot, of Connecticut, said: "This was an important feature of the bill, in which his constituents had a great interest. Gentlemen from the South had agreed to it; and they were competent to guard their own interest." Mr. Clay said: "The provision proposed to be stricken out was an essential part of the compromise. which, if struck out, would destroy the whole." Mr. Bell of New Hampshire, said: "The passage of the bill depended upon it. If struck out, he should feel himself compelled to vote against the bill." So it was admitted by those who knew what they said, that this item had been put into the bill while in a state of concoction out of doors, and as a douceur to conciliate the votes which were to pass it. Thereupon Mr. Benton stood up, and

"Animadverted on the reason which was alleged for this extraordinary augmentation of duties in a bill which was to reduce duties. The reason was candidly expressed on this floor. There were a few small manufactories of these woollens in Connecticut; and unless these manufactories be protected by an increase of duties, certain members avow their determination to vote against the whole bill! This is the secret —no! not a secret, for it is proclaimed. It was a secret, but is not now. Two or three little factories in Connecticut must be protected; and that by imposing an annual tax upon the wearers of these coarse woollens of four or five times the value of the fee-simple estate of the factories. Better far, as a point of economy and justice, to purchase them and burn them. The whole American system is to be given up in the year 1842; and why impose an annual tax of near five hundred thousand dollars, upon the laboring community, to prolong, for a few years, a few small branches of that system, when the whole bill has the axe to the root, and nods to its fall? But, said Mr. B., these manufactories of coarse woollens, to be protected by this bill, are not even American; they are rather Asiatic establishments in America; for they get their wooi per centum, aggravated by an arbitrary minimum | from Asia, and not from America. The importation of this wool is one million two hundred and fifty thousand pounds weight; it comes chiefly from Smyrna, and costs less than eight cents a pound. It was made free of duty at the last session of Congress, as an equivalent to these very manufactories for the reduction of the duty on coarse woollens to five per cent. The two measures went together, and were, each, a consideration for the other. Before that time, and by the act of 1828, this coarse wool was heavily dutied for the benefit of the home wool growers. It was subjected to a double duty, one of four cents on the pound, and the other of fifty per cent. on the value. As a measure of compromise, this double duty was abolished at the last session. The wool for these factories was admitted duty free, and, as an equivalent to the community the woollens made out of the corresponding kind of wool were admitted at a nominal duty. It was a bargain, entered into in open Congress, and sealed with all the forms of law. Now, in six months after the bargain was made, it is to be broken. The manufacturers are to have the duty on woollens run up to fifty per cent. for protection, and are still to receive the foreign wool free of duty. In plain English, they are to retain the pay which was given them for reducing the duties on these coarse woollens, and they are to have the duties restored.

"He said it was contrary to the whole tenor and policy of the bill, and presented the strange contradiction of multiplying duties tenfold, upon an article of prime necessity, used exclusively by the laboring part of the community, while reducing duties, or abolishing them in toto, upon every article used by the rich and luxurious. Silks were to be free; cambrics and fine linens were to be free; muslins, and casimeres, and broad cloths were to be reduced; but the coarse woollens, worn by the laborers of every color and every occupation, of every sex and of every age, bond or free—these coarse woollens, necessary to shelter the exposed laborer from cold and damp, are to be put up tenfold in point of tax, and the cost of procuring them doubled to the wearer.

"The American value, and not the foreign cost, will be the basis of computation for the twenty per cent. The difference, when all is fair, is about thirty-five per cent. in the value; so that an importation of coarse woollens, costing one million in Europe, and now to pay five per cent. on that cost, will be valued, if all is fair, at one million three hundred and fifty thousand dollars; and the twenty per cent. will be calculated on that sum, and will give two hundred and seventy thousand dollars, instead of two hundred thousand dollars, for the quantum of the tax. It will be near sixfold, instead of fourfold, and that if all is fair; but if there are gross errors or gross frauds in the valuation, as every human being knows there must be, the real tax may be far above sixfold. On this very floor, and in this very debate, we hear it computed, by way of recommending this bill to the manufacturers, that the twenty per cent. on the statute book will exceed thirty in the custom-house,

"Mr. B. took a view of the circumstances which had attended the duties on these coarse woollens since he had been in Congress. Every act had discriminated in favor of these goods because they were used by the poor and the laborer. The act of 1824 fixed the duties upon them at a rate one third less than on other woollens; the act of 1828 fixed it at upwards of one half less; the act of 1832 fixed it nine tenths less. All these discriminations in favor of coarse woollens were made upon the avowed principle of favoring the laborers, bond and free,-the slave which works the field for his master, the mariner, the miner, the steamboat hand, the worker in stone and wood, and every out-door occupation. It was intended by the framers of all these acts, and especially by the supporters of the act of 1832, that this class of our population, so meritorious from their daily labor, so much overlooked in the operations of the government, because of their little weight in the political scale, should at least receive one boon from Congress—they should receive their working clothes free of tax. This was the intention of successive Congresses; it was the performance of this Congress in its act of the last session: and now, in six short months since this boon was granted, before the act had gone into effect. the very week before the act was to go into effect, the boon so lately granted, is to be snatched away, and the day laborer taxed higher than ever: taxed fifty per cent. upon his working clothes while gentlemen and ladies are to have silks and cambrics, and fine linen, free of any tax at all!

In allusion to the alleged competency of the South to guard its own interest, as averred by Mr. Foot, Mr. Benton said that was a species of ability not confined to the South, but existent also in the North-whether indigenous or exotic he could not say-but certainly existent there. at least in some of the small States; and active when duties were to be raised on Kendal cotton cloth, and the wool of which it was made to remain free.'

The motion of General Smith was rejected, of course, and by the same vote which passed the bill, no one of those giving way an inch of ground in the House who had promised out of doors to stand by the bill. Another incident to which the discussion of this bill gave rise, and the memory of which is necessary to the understanding of the times, was the character of "protection" which Mr. Clay openly claimed for it; and the peremptory manner in which he and his friends vindicated that claim in open Senate, and to the face of Mr. Calhoun. The circumstances were these: Mr. Forsyth objected to the leave asked by Mr. Clay to introduce his bill, because it was a revenue bill, the original nation of which under sively belonged to the tives, the immediate re ple. And this gave rise in which Mr. Clay said the bill is not revenue, i swer to several senators an abandonment of the Clay said : " The langu ized no such construct would be justified in i to be an abandonment tion."-And Mr. Clayte porter of the bill, said: not be kept together if tection were to be disc and declared that he surrendered that prin Union."-Mr. Webster brought forward by th from Kentucky, who nounced none of his fo constitutionality and tion."-And Mr. Clay s assumes, as a basis, a nine years, and less ( term. The friends of opponents, we are willi nine years, with the los beyond that period, in war, the restoration of with it a conviction con ity of protection; and if, in 1842 none of th have been realized, we as long as Congress me maximum of twenty 1 arowed his object in f secure that protection every one foresaw must away." So that the bil of protection (and upo a lease of nine years chances for converting t ple at the end of its r done; but with such e: produce a revulsion, and phe in 1846. The con was claimed in argume: friends throughout the was made a point on wh depended, and on which

Vol. I.—21

ent. on the statute e custom-house. the circumstances es on these coarse Congress. Every or of these goods, the poor and the ed the duties upon han on other woolat upwards of one xed it nine tenths ns in favor of coarse e avowed principle nd and free,-the for his master, the eamboat hand, the ind every out-door by the framers of by the supporters lass of our populaeir daily labor, so rations of the govttle weight in the t receive one boon receive their workwas the intention as the performance f the last session; as since this boom ad gone into effect ict was to go into ed, is to be snatched ed higher than ever: s working clothes! re to have silks and of any tax at all! red competency of interest, as averred I that was a species South, but existent ndigenous or exotic inly existent there, States; and active 1 on Kendal cotton mith was rejected, vote which passed ng way an inch of ad promised out of Another incident to bill gave rise, and ssary to the underthe character of ay openly claimed nanner in which he that claim in open Mr. Calhoun. The dr. Forsyth object. Clay to introduce mue bill, the original right of the character of the

it was made to re-

nation of which under the constitution exclusively belonged to the House of Representatives, the immediate representative of the people. And this gave rise to an episodical debate, in which Mr. Clay said : " The main object of the bill is not revenue, but protection."-In answer to several senators who said the bill was an abandonment of the protective principle, Mr. Clay said: " The language of the bill authorized no such construction, and that no one would be justified in inferring that there was to be an abandonment of the system of protection,"-And Mr. Clayton, of Delaware, a supporter of the bill, said: "The government cannot be kept together if the principle of protectection were to be discarded in our policy; and declared that he would pause before he surrendered that principle, even to save the Union."-Mr. Webster said: "The bill is brought forward by the distinguished senator from Kentucky, who professes to have renounced none of his former opinions as to the constitutionality and expediency of protection."-And Mr. Clay said further: "The bill assumes, as a basis, adequate protection for nine years, and less (protection) beyond that term. The friends of protection say to their opponents, we are willing to take a lease of nine years, with the long chapter of accidents beyond that period, including the chance of war, the restoration of concord, and along with it a conviction common to all, of the utility of protection; and in consideration of it. if, in 1842 none of these contingencies shall have been realized, we are willing to submit, as long as Congress may think proper, with a maximum of twenty per centum," &c .- "He arowed his object in framing the bill was to secure that protection to manufactures which every one foresaw must otherwise soon be swept away." So that the bill was declared to be one of protection (and upon sufficient data), upon a lease of nine years and a half, with many chances for converting the lease into a fee simple at the end of its run; which, in fact, was done; but with such excess of protection as to produce a revulsion, and another tariff catastrophe in 1846. The continuance of protection was claimed in argument by Mr. Clay and his friends throughout the discussion, but here it was made a point on which the fate of the bill defeat it declared they would not support it except as a protective measure. Mr. Calhoun in other parts of the debate had declared the bill to be an abandonment of protection; but at this critical point, when such a denial from him would have been the instant death warrant of the bill, he said nothing. His desire for its passage must have been overpowering when he could hear such declarations without repeating his denial.

On the main point, that of the constitutionality of originating the bill in the Senate, Mr. Webster spoke the law of Parliament when he said:

"It was purely a question of privilege, and the decision of it belonged alone to the other House. The Senate, by the constitution, could not originate bills for raising revenue. It was of no consequence whether the rate of duty were increased or decreased; if it was a money bill it belonged to the House to originate it. In the House there was a Committee of Ways and Means organized expressly for such objects. There was no such committee in the Senate. The constitutional provision was taken from the practice of the British Parliament, whose usages were well known to the framers of the constitution, with the modification that the Senate might alter and amend money bills, which was denied by the House of Commons to the Lords. This subject belongs exclusively to the House of Representatives. The attempt to evade the question, by contending that the present bill was intended for protection and not for revenue, afforded no relief, for it was protection by means of revenue. It was not the less a money bill from its object being protection. After 1842 this bill would raise the revenue, or it would not be raised by existing laws. He was altogether opposed to the provisions of this bill; but this objection was one which belonged to the House of Representatives."

Another incident which illustrates the vice and tyranny of this outside concoction of measures between chiefs, to be supported in the House by their adherents as they fix it, occurred in the progress of this bill. Mr. Benton, perceiving that there was no corresponding reduction of drawback provided for on the exportation of the manufactured article made out of an imported material on which duty was to be reduced, and supposing it to have been an oversight in the framing of the bill, moved an amendment to that effect; and meeting resistance, stood up, and said:

was made a point on which the fate of the bill depended, and on which enough of its friends to system of drawbacks, but only to those special cases in which the exporter was authorized to draw from the treasury the amount of money which he had paid into it on the importation of the materials which he had manufactured. The amount of drawback to be allowed in every case had been adjusted to the amount of duty paid, and as all these duties were to be periodically reduced by the bill, it would follow, as a regular consequence, that the drawback should undergo equal reductions at the same time. Mr. B. would illustrate his motion by stating a single case—the case of refined sugar. The drawback payable on this sugar was five cents a pound. These five cents rested upon a duty of three cents, now payable on the importation of foreign brown sugar. It was ascertained that it required nearly two pounds of brown sugar to make a pound of refined sugar, and five cents was held to be the amount of duty paid on the quantity of brown sugar which made the pound of refined sugar. It was simply a reimburse-ment of what he had paid. By this bill the duty of foreign brown sugar will be reduced immediately to two and a half cents a pound, and afterwards will be periodically reduced until the year 1842, when it will be but six-tenths of a cent, very little more than one-sixth of the duty when five cents the pound were allowed for a drawback. Now, if the drawback is not reduced in proportion to the reduction of the duty on the raw sugar, two very injurious consequences will result to the public: first, that a large sum of money will be annually taken out of the treasury in gratuitous bounties to sugar refiners; and next, that the consumers of refined sugar will have to pay more for American refined sugar than foreigners will; for the refiners getting a bounty of five cents a pound on all that is exported, will export all, unless the American consumer will pay the bounty also. Mr. B. could not undertake to say how much money would be drawn from the treasury, as a mere bounty, if this amendment did not prevail. It must, however, be great. The drawback was now frequently a hundred thousand dollars a year, and great frauds were committed to obtain Frauds to the amount of forty thousand dollars a year had been detected, and this while the inducement was small and inconsiderable; but, as fast as that inducement swells from year to year, the temptation to commit frauds must increase; and the amount drawn by fraud, added to that drawn by the letter of the law, must be enormous. Mr. B. did not think it necessary to illustrate his motion by further examples, but said there were other cases which would be as strong as that of refined sugar; and justice to the public required all to be checked at once, by adopting the amendment he had offered."

Vol. I.-21

This amendment was lost, although its necessity was self-evident, and supported by Mr. Calboun's vote; but Mr. Clay was inexorable, and would allow of no amendment which was not conditions: first, that no valuation should be offered by friends of the bill: a qualification which usually attends all this class of outside legislation. In the end, I saw the amendment adopted, as it regarded refined sugars, after it began to take hundreds of thousands per annum from the treasury, and was hastening on to millions per annum. The vote on its rejection in the compromise bill, was:

"Yeas.—Messrs. Benton, Buckner, Calhoun, Dallas, Dickerson, Dudley, Forsyth, Johnson, Kane, King, Rives, Robinson, Seymour, Tomlinson, Webster, White, Wilkins, Wright.—18.

"Navs.—Messrs. Bell, Bibb, Black, Clay, Clay, ton, Ewing, Foot, Grundy, Hendricks, Holmes, Knight, Mangum, Miller, Moore, Naudain, Poindexter, Prentiss, Robbins, Silsbee, Smith, Sprague, Tipton, Troup, Tyler.—24."

But the protective feature of the bill, which sat hardest upon the Southern members, and at one time, seemed to put an end to the "compromise," was a proposition, by Mr. Clay, to substitute home valuations for foreign on imported goods; and on which home valuation, the duty was to be computed. This was no part of the bill concocted by Mr. Clay and Mr. Calhoun; and, when offered, evidently took the latter gentleman by surprise, who pronounced it unconstitutional, unequal, and unjust; averred the objections to the proposition to be insurmount. able; and declared that, if adopted, would compel him to vote against the whole bill. On the other hand, Mr. Clayton and others, declared the adoption of the amendment to be indispensable; and boldly made known their determination to sacrifice the bill, if it was not adopted. A brief and sharp debate took place, in the course of which Mr. Calhoun declared his opinions to remain unaltered, and Mr. Clayton moved to lay the bill upon the table. Its fate seemed, at that time, to be sealed; and certainly would have been, if the vote on its passage had then been taken; but an adjournment was moved, and carried; and, on the next day, and after further debate, and the question on Mr. Clay's proposition about to be taken, Mr. Calhoun declared that it had become necessary for him to determine whether he would vote for or against it; said he would vote for it, otherwise the bill would be lost. He then called upon the reporters in the gallery to notice well what he said, as he intended his declaration to be part of the proceedings: and that he voted upon the adopted, which would in different parts; and, themselves should not valuation. The practice immediately exposed th ditions, which were lool a mere salvo for an inev him by the exigencies of ral senators reminded and motives could have which would be execute words. The following point, very curious in it view it gives of the m national legislation; and side view of the manner measure, so lauded in its which, the outside view appears thus, in the pre

"Mr. Clay now rose ment, of which he had The object was, that, aft by the bill, all duties s sessed on a valuation ma the goods are first imp regulations as may be p C said it would be see that, in place of having was intended to have a lieved by the friends of that such a regulation believed by many of th that, after the period of the most of our manufac grown to be able to supp duty of twenty per cen that, under a system of would not be the case. be more detrimental to t lowest scale of duties tha you propose to fix a star are willing to take you you regulate this in a wa

"Mr. Smith opposed of ground that it would be that it had been tried be impracticable, unequal, of confusion, inasmuch a constantly varying in value to be, at all times, cheap the commercial cities so have the effect of drawin United States to New-Y-

"Mr. Clay said he did in deciding this question *x years, and make that sage of a great national to go into operation unti honorable senator from measure would be impr ill: a qualification his class of outside saw the amendment ned sugars, after it nousands per annum nastening on to milon its rejection in e of the bill, which ern members, and at end to the "comproy Mr. Clay, to subforeign on imported valuation, the duty was no part of the and Mr. Calhoun: took the latter genconounced it unconust; averred the obto be insurmountlopted, would compel vhole bill. On the and others, declared ent to be indispensawn their determinait was not adopted. took place, in the in declared his opinl, and Mr. Clayton n the table. Its fate sealed; and certainly e on its passage had n adjournment was n the next day, and he question on Mr. o be taken, Mr. Calbecome necessary for he would vote for or rote for it, otherwise Ie then called upon · to notice well what declaration to be part at he voted upon the valuation should be adopted, which would make the duties unequal in different parts; and secondly, that the duties themselves should not become an element in the valuation. The practical sense of General Smith immediately exposed the futility of these conditions, which were looked upon, on all sides, as a mere salvo for an inevitable vote, extorted from him by the exigencies of his position; and several senators reminded him that his intentions and motives could have no effect upon the law, which would be executed according to its own words. The following is the debate on this point, very curious in itself, even in the outside view it gives of the manner of affecting great national legislation; and much more so in the inside view of the manner of passing this particular measure, so lauded in its day; and to understand which, the outside view must first be seen. It appears thus, in the prepared debates:

Buckner, Cahoun, Forsyth, Johnson, I, Seymour, Tomlinns, Wright.—18. b, Black, Clay, Clay-Hendricks, Holmes, oore, Naudain, Poins, Silsbee, Smith, I cler.—24."

"Mr. Clay now rose to propose the amendment of which he had previously given notice. The object was, that, after the period prescribed by the bill, all duties should thereafter be assessed on a valuation made at the port in which the goods are first imported, and under 'such regulations as may be prescribed by law.' Mr. ( said it would be seen, by this amendment, that, in place of having a foreign valuation, it was intended to have a home one. It was believed by the friends of the protective system. that such a regulation was necessary. It was believed by many of the friends of the system, that after the period of nine and a half years, the most of our manufactures will be sufficiently grown to be able to support themselves under a duty of twenty per cent., if properly laid; but that under a system of foreign valuation, such would not be the case. They say that it would be more detrimental to their interests than the lowest scale of duties that could be imposed; and you propose to fix a standard of duties. They are willing to take you at your word, provided you regulate this in a way to do them justice.

"Mr. Smith opposed the amendment, on the ground that it would be an increase of duties; that it had been tried before; that it would be impracticable, unequal, unjust, and productive of confusion, inasmuch as imported goods were constantly varying in value, and were well known to be, at all times, cheaper in New-York than in the commercial cities south of it. This would have the effect of drawing all the trade of the United States to New-York.

"Mr. Clay said he did not think it expedient, in deciding this question, to go forward five or $x$ years, and make that an obstacle to the passage of a great national measure, which is not to go into operation until after that period. The honorable senator from Maryland said that the measure would be impressible. Well six if so, it will not be adopted. We do not adopt it now, said Mr. C.; we only adopt the principle, leaving it to future legislation to adjust the details. Besides, it would be the restoration of an ancient principle, known since the foundation of the government. It was but at the last session that the discriminating duty on goods coming from this side, and beyond the Cape of Good Hope, ten per cent. on one, and twenty per cent. on the other, was repealed. On what principle was it, said he, that this discrimination ever prevailed? On the principle of the home value. Were it not for the fraudulent invoices which every gentleman in this country was familiar with, he would not urge the amendment; but it was to detect and prevent these frauds that he looked upon the insertion of the clause as essentially necessary.

"Mr. Smith replied that he had not said that the measure was impracticable. He only intended to say that it would be inconvenient and unjust. Neither did he say that it would be adopted by a future Congress; but he said, if the principle was adopted now, it would be an entering wedge that might lead to the adoption of the measure. We all recollect, said Mr. S., that appropriations were made for surveys for internal improvements; and that these operated as entering wedges, and led to appropriations for roads and canals. The adoption of the prinple contended for, by the senator from Kentucky, would not, in his (Mr. S.'s) opinion, prevent frauds in the invoices. That very principle was the foundation of all the frauds on the revenue of France and Spain, where the duties were assessed according to the value of the goods in the ports where entered. He again said that the effect of the amendment would be to draw the principal commerce of the country to the great city of New-York, where goods were cheaper.

"Mr. Forsyth understood, from what had fallen from the senator from Kentucky, that this was a vital question, and on it depended the success of this measure of conciliation and compromise, which was said to settle the distracted condition of the country. In one respect, it was said to be a vital question; and the next was, it was useful; and a strange contradiction followed: that the fate of this measure, to unite the jarrings of brother with brother, depended on the adoption of a principle which might or might not be adopted. He considered the amendment wrong in principle, because it would be both unequal and unjust in its operation, and because it would raise the revenue: as the duties would be assessed, not only on the value of the goods at the place whence imported, but on their value at the place of importation. He would, however, vote for the bill, even if the amendment were incorporated in it, provided he had the assurances, from the proper quarter, that it would effect the conciliation and compromise it was intended for.

to go into operation until after that period. The honorable senator from Maryland said that the with the hope that, in the course of its discusmeasure would be impracticable. Well, sir, if sion, it would ultimately assume such a shape as to reconcile all parties to its adoption, and tend to end the agitation of this unsettled question. If there be any member of this Congress (Mr. C. said), who says that he will take this bill now for as much as it is worth, and that he will, at the next Congress, again open the question, for the purpose of getting a better bill, of bringing down the tariff to a lower standard, without considering it as a final measure of compromise and conciliation, calculated also to give stability to a man of business, the bill, in his eyes, would lose all its value, and he should be constrained to vote against it.

"It was for the sake of conciliation, of nine years of peace, to give tranquility to a disturbed and agitated country, that he had, even at this late period of the session, introduced this measure, which, his respect for the other branch of the legislature, now sitting in that building, and who had a measure, looking to the same end, before them, had prevented him from bringing forward at an earlier period. But, when he had seen the session wearing away, without the prospect of any action in that other body, he felt himself compelled to come forward, though contrary to his wishes, and the advice of some of his best friends, with whom he had acted in the most perilous times.

"Mr. Calhoun said, he regretted, exceedingly that the senator from Kentucky had felt it his duty to move the amendment. According to his present impressions, the objections to it were insurmountable; and, unless these were removed, he should be compelled to vote against the whole bill, should the amendment be adopted. The measure proposed was, in his opinion, unconstitutional. The constitution expressly provided that no preference should be given, by any regulation of commerce, to the ports of one State over those of another; and this would be the effect of adopting the amendment. Thus, great injustice and inequality must necessarily result from it; for the price of goods being cheaper in the Northern than in the Southern cities, a home valuation would give to the former a preference in the payment of duties. Again, the price of goods being higher at New Orleans and Charleston than at New-York, the freight and insurance also being higher, together with the increased expenses of a sickly climate, would give such advantages in the amount of duties to the Northern city, as to draw to it much of the trade of the Southern ones. In his view of the subject, this was not all. He was not merchant enough to say what would be the extent of duties under this system of home valuation; but, as he understood it, they must, of consequence, be progressive. For instance, an article is brought into New-York, value there 100 dollars. Twenty per cent. on that would raise the value of the not admit. Sir, I tell gentlemen that they may article to one hundred and twenty dollars, on never get such another offer as the present; for, which value a duty of twenty per cent. would be assessed at the next importation, and so on. It would, therefore, be impossible to say to what brought to consent to the abandonment of the extent the duties would run up. He regretted the protective system.

more that the senator from Kentucky had felt it his duty to offer this amendment, as he was willing to leave the matter to the decision of a future Congress, though he did not see how they could get over the insuperable constitutional objections he had glanced at. Mr. C. appealed to the senator from Kentucky, whether, with these views, he would press his amendment, when he had eight or nine years in advance before it could take effect. He understood the argument of the senator from Kentucky to be an admission that the amendment was not now absolutely necessary, With respect to the apprehension of frauds on the revenue, Mr. C. said that every future Congress would have the strongest disposition to guard against them. The very reduction of duties, he said, would have that effect; it would strike at the root of the evil. Mr. C. said he agreed with the senator from Kentucky, that this bill will be the final effort at conciliation and compromise; and he, for one, was not disposed, if it passed, to violate it by future legislation.

"Mr. Clayton said that he could not vote for this bill without this amendment, nor would be admit any idea of an abandonment of the protective system; while he was willing to pass this measure, as one of concession from the stronger to the weaker party, he never could agree that twenty per cent. was adequate protection to our domestic manufactures. He had been anxious to do something to relieve South Carolina from her present perilous position; though he had never been driven by the taunts of Southern gentlemen to do that, which he now did, for the sake of conciliation. I vote for this bill, said Mr. C., only on the ground that it may save

South Carolina from herself.

"Here Mr. C. yielded the floor to Mr. Calhoun, who said. He hoped the gentleman would not touch that question. He entreated him to be lieve that South Carolina had no fears for herself. The noble and disinterested attitude she had assumed was intended for the whole nation, while it was also calculated to relieve herself as well as them, from oppressive legislation. It was not for them to consider the condition of South Carolina only, in passing on a measure of this importance.

"Mr. Clayton resumed. Sir, said he, I must be permitted to explain, in my own way, the reasons which will govern me in the vote I am about to give. As I said before, I never have permitted the fears of losing the protective system, as expressed by the senator from Georgia, when he taunted us with the majority that they would have in the next Congress, when they would get a better bill, to influence my opinion upon this occasion. That we have been driven by our fears into this act of concession, I will though they may think otherwise, I do not believe that the people of this country will ever be

"Does any man believ an adequate protection the protection is brough cent.; and when gentlen that this is a compromi friend from Maine, that I less you will give me th and this cannot be dor principle of a home valua this bill because I thu tariff of 1832, nor because secession; but from a mo ing my own opinions. 1 men will not accept thi for which it was tendere vote for it. I voted, said of '32, for the very reason men declared that it wa may vote against this for thought it bad policy to thought it a bad bargai I have no fear of nullifica not to be intimidated b gentlemen, that they will next session. "Rebellio Percy's spurs grow cold. measure as one of concilia but if the clause of the se is not inserted, I shall against it. The protective abandoned; and I, for or any time, admit the idea.

Mr. Dallas was opposed the committee, and agreed would state briefly his object of the committee. Although strongly disposed to main licy, he labored under an thing could be done to co States, it was his duty to that purpose; but he she He could do nothing in thi his particular district of for the general good. He corporate in the bill an thought erroneous or impro tion nothing in the bill as the principle of protection. few remarks on home and show the ground of his obj ment of Mr. Clay, though strong desire to compromis

"Mr. Clay thought it w tate now the details of a le take place nine years hence South Carolina had objecte on constitutional grounds. satisfy him, and every sen no objection from the consti "He asked if it was prob in Liverpool could escape a tion, if a home valuation we There was a distinction in t in the thing valued. An in if articles at one price in a entucky had felt it nt, as he was willing ion of a future Connow they could get tional objections he aled to the senator th these views, he when he had eight re it could take efment of the senator dmission that the solutely necessary, nsion of frauds on every future Congest disposition to ry reduction of duit effect; it would ril. Mr. C. said he om Kentucky, that t at conciliation and , was not disposed. iture legislation. e could not vote for nent, nor would be ment of the protecwilling to pass this from the stronger er could agree that te protection to our oor to Mr. Calhoun, ntleman would not ntreated him to be id no fears for herrested attitude she or the whole nation, to relieve herself, as sive legislation. It der the condition of ing on a measure of

had been anxious outh Carolina from

n; though he had taunts of Southern

he now did, for the e for this bill, said that it may save

Sir, said he, I must my own way, the ne in the vote I am before, I never have the protective sysnator from Georgia, e majority that they ongress, when they nfluence my opinion ve have been driven of concession, I will emen that they may as the present; for, erwise, I do not becountry will ever be abandonment of the

"Does any man believe that fifty per cent. is an adequate protection on woullens? No, sir; the protection is brought down to twenty per cent; and when gentlemen come to me and say that this is a compromise, I answer, with my friend from Maine, that I will not vote for it. unless you will give me the fair twenty per cent.; and this cannot be done without adopting the principle of a home valuation. I do not vote for this bill because I think it better than the tariff of 1832, nor because I fear nullification or secession; but from a motive of concession, yielding my own opinions. But if Southern gentlemen will not accept this measure in the spirit for which it was tendered, I have no reason to vote for it. I voted, said Mr. C., against the bill of 32 for the very reason that Southern gentlemen declared that it was no concession; and I may vote against this for the same reasons. thought it bad policy to pass the bill of '32. I thought it a bad bargain, and I think so now. I have no fear of nullification or secession; I am not to be intimidated by threats of Southern gentlemen, that they will get a better bill at the extrement, that they will get a octer off at the next session. "Rebellion made young Harry Percy's spurs grow cold." I will vote for this measure as one of conciliation and compromise; but if the clause of the senator from Kentucky is not inserted, I shall be compelled to vote against it. The protective system never can be abandoned; and I, for one, will not now, or at any time, admit the idea.

Mr. Dallas was opposed to the proposition from the committee, and agreed with Mr. Calhoun. He would state briefly his objection to the proposition of the committee. Although he was from a State strongly disposed to maintain the protective poliev, he labored under an impression, that if any thing could be done to conciliate the Southern States, it was his duty to go for a measure for that purpose; but he should not go beyond it. He could do nothing in this way, as representing his particular district of the country, but only for the general good. He could not agree to in-corporate in the bill any principle which he thought erroneous or improper. He would sanction nothing in the bill as an abandonment of the principle of protection. Mr. D. then made a few remarks on home and foreign valuation, to show the ground of his objections to the amendment of Mr. Clay, though it did not prevent his strong desire to compromise and conciliation.

"Mr. Clay thought it was premature to agitate now the details of a legislation which might take place nine years hence. The senator from South Carolina had objected to the amendment on constitutional grounds. He thought he could missfy him, and every senator, that there was no objection from the constitution.

"He asked if it was probable that a valuation in Liverpool could escape a constitutional objection, if a home valuation were unconstitutional? There was a distinction in the foreign value, and in the thing valued. An invoice might be made in the thing valued. An invoice might be made and in another port at another price. The price, too, must vary with the time. But all this could not affect the rule. There was a distinction which gentlemen did not observe, between the value and the rule of valuation; one of these might vary, while the other continued always the same. The rule was uniform with regard to direct taxation; yet the value of houses and lands of the same quality are very different in different places. One mode of home valuation was, to give the government, or its officers, the right to make the valuation after the one which the importer had given. It would prevent fraud, and the rule would not violate the constitution. It was an error that it was unconstitutional; the constitution said nothing about it. It was absurd that all values must be established in foreign countries; no other country on earth should assume the right of judging. Objections had been made to leaving the business of valuation in the hands of a few executive officers; but the objections were at least equally great to leaving it in the hands of foreigners. He thought there was nothing in the constitutional objection, and hoped the measure would not be embarrassed by such objections. "Mr. Calhoun said that he listened with great care to the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky, and other gentlemen, who had advocated the same side, in hopes of having his objection to the mode of valuation proposed in the amendment removed; but he must say, that the difficulties he first expressed still remained. Pasing over what seemed to him to be a constitutional objection, he would direct his observation to what appeared to him to be its unequal operation. If by the home valuation be meant the foreign price, with the addition of freight, insurance, and other expenses at the port of destination, it is manifest that as these are unequal between the several ports in the Union-for instance, between the ports New-York and New Orleans—the duty must also be unequal in the same degree, if laid on value thus estimated. But if, by the home valuation be meant the prices current at the place of importation, then, in addition to the inequality already stated, there would have to be added the additional inequality resulting from the different rates of profits, and other circumstances, which must necessarily render prices very unequal in the several ports of this widely-extended country. There would, in the same view, be another and a stronger objection, which he alluded to in his former remarks, which remained unanswered-that the duties themselves constitute part of the élements of the current prices of the imported articles; and that, to impose a duty on a valuation ascertained by the current prices, would be to impose, in reality, a duty upon a duty, and must necessarily produce that increased progression in duties, which he had already attempted to illus-

in the thing valued. An invoice might be made "He knew it had been stated, in reply, that of articles at one price in one port of England, a system which would produce such absurd results could not be contemplated; that Congress, under the power of regulating, reserved in the amendment, would adopt some mode that would obviate these objections; and, if none such could be devised, that the provisions of the amendment would be simply useless. His difficulty was not removed by the answer to the objection. He was at a loss to understand what mode could be devised free from objection; and, as he wished to be candid and explicit, he felt the difficulty. as an honest man, to assent to a general measure, which, in all the modifications under which he had viewed it, was objectionable. He again repeated, that he regretted the amendment had been offered, as he felt a solicitude that the present controversy should be honorably and fairly terminated. It was not his wish that there should be a feeling of victory on either side. But, in thus expressing his solicitude for an adjustment, he was not governed by motives derived from the attitude which South Carolina occupied, and which the senator from Delaware stated to influence him. He wished that senator, as well as all others, to understand that that gallant and patriotic State was far from considering her situation as one requiring sympathy, and was equally far from desiring that any adjustment of this question should take place with the view of relieving her, or with any other motive than a regard to the general interests of the country. So far from requiring commiseration, she regarded her position with very opposite light, as one of high responsibility, and exposing her to no inconsiderable danger; but a position voluntarily and firmly assumed, with a full view of consequences, and which she was determined to maintain till the oppression under which she and the other Southern States were suffering was removed.

"In wishing, then, to see a termination to the present state of things, he turned not his eyes to South Carolina, but to the general interests of the country. He did not believe it was possible to maintain our institutions and our liberty, under the continuance of the controversy which had for so long a time distracted us, and brought into conflict the two great sections of the country. He was in the last stage of madness who did not see, if not terminated, that this admirable system of ours, reared by the wisdom and virtue of our ancestors-virtue, he feared, which had fled forever-would fall under its shocks. It was to arrest this catastrophe, if possible, by restoring peace and harmony to the Union, that governed him in desiring to see an adjustment of the question.

"Mr. Clayton said, this point had been discussed in the committee; and it was because this amendment was not adopted that he had withheld his assent from the bill. They had ncw but seven business days of this session remaining; and it would require the greatest unanimity, both in that body and in the other House, to pass any bill on this subject. Were gentlemen coming from the opposite extremes of the Union, and representing opposite interests to agree to combine together, there would hardly be time to pass this bill into a law; yet if he saw that it could be done, he would gladly go on with the consideration of the bill, and with the determination to do all that could be done. The honorable member from South Carolina had found insuperable obstacles where he (Mr. C.) had found none. On their part, if they agreed to this bill it would only be for the sake of conciliation; if South Carolina would not accept the measure in that light, then their motive for arrangement was at an end. He (Mr. C.) apprehended, however, that good might result from bringing the proposition forward at that time. It would be placed before the view of the people who would have time to reflect and make up their minds upon it against the meeting of the next Congress. He did not hold any man as pledged by their action at this time. If the arrangement was found to be a proper one, the next Congress might adopt it. But, for the reasons he had already stated, he had little hope that any bill would be passed at this session: and, to go on debating it, day after day, would only have the effect of defeating the many private bills and other business which were waiting the action of Congress. He would therefore propose to lay the bill for the present on the table; if it were found, at a future period before the expiration of the session, that there was a prospect of overcoming the difficulties which now presented themselves, and of acting upon it, the bill might be again taken up. If no other gentleman wished to make any observations on the amendment, he would move to lay the bill on the

"Mr. Bibb requested the senator from Delaware to withdraw his motion, whilst he (Mr. B.) offered an amendment to the amendment, having for its object to get rid of that interminable series of duties of which gentlemen had spoken.

"Mr. Clayton withdrew his motion. "Mr. Bibb proceeded to say, that his design was to obviate the objection of the great increase that would arise from a system of home valua-He hoped that something satisfactory would be done this session yet. He should vote for every respectable proposition calculated to settle the difficulty. He hoped there would be corresponding concessions on both sides; he wished much for the harmony of the country. It was well known that he (Mr. B.) was opposed to any tariff system other than one for revenue. and such incidental protection as that might afford. His hope was to strike out a middle course; otherwise, he would concur in the motion that had been made by the senator from Delaware [Mr. Clayton]. Mr. B. then submitted his amendment, to insert the words 'before mayment of,' &c.

"Mr. Clay was opposed to the amendment, and he hoped his worthy colleague would with draw it. If one amendment were offered and debated, another, and another world follow; and thus the remaining tim fr any precise system cult at present. He on to be adopted.

"Mr. Bibb acceded to from Kentucky, and w accordingly.

"Mr. Tyler was oppo this home valuation. into consideration in ma thus, after going down years, we would as su prohibition. He compla merchants enough on th and in this respect, the advantage. But satisfy the views of the senate Mr. Calhoun] are not for the proposition.

"Mr. Moore said he ment which he hoped of the gentlemen on the this effect :

Provided. That no will operate unequally i United States.

"Mr. Calhoun also v ment would prevail, tho meffectual to counterac system. But he would ections; he wished to hith: and he only wis

he done "Mr. Moore said he l offering the amendment the senator. The first constitutional objections the senator from Kent was to do justice to tho moresent. The honorab Mobile and New Orleans duties because the goods he of more value ; and th Mr. M. contended, why higher. Did not every article was valued in Nev dollars, and in Mobile at o five dollars, the duty of behigher at the latter pl but the spirit of compron gentlemen would meet He would now propose, the senator from Maine, t offer a substitute in exac language of the constitut being admitted by gener modified his amendment should be uniform, &c). 'Mr. Forsyth supported genator from Alabama, an the approbation of the Se of all difficulty about wo sumed, wished to violate if the measure of the sena!

an affirmation of the cons

osite interests, to here would hardly o a law; yet if he would gladly go on e bill, and with the ould be done. The outh Carolina had where he (Mr. C.) part, if they agreed for the sake of conrould not accept the heir motive for ar-He (Mr. C.) appremight result from rward at that time. view of the people, eflect and make up the meeting of the ot hold any man as his time. If the are a proper one, the l it. But, for the d, he had little hope sed at this session; ly after day, would ating the many priwhich were waiting Ie would therefore the present on the future period, before n, that there was a ifficulties which now f acting upon it, the senator from Delan. whilst he (Mr. B.) · amendment, having of that interminable ntlemen had spoken. his motion.

p. If no other gen-

observations on the

to lay the bill on the

say, that his design of the great increase tem of home valuanething satisfactory vet. He should vote osition calculated to ped there would be on both sides; he ony of the country. Mr. B.) was opposed nan one for revenue, tion as that might strike out a middle 1 concur in the moby the senator from Ir. B. then submitted e words 'before pay-to the amendment, Aleague would withnt were offered and er werld follow; and thus, the remaining time would be wasted. To consistent with the constitution, it would prevail; fix any precise system would be extremely difficult at present. He only wished the principle to be adopted.

"Mr. Bibb acceded to the wish of the senator from Kentucky, and withdrew his amendment accordingly.

"Mr. Tyler was opposed to the principle of this home valuation. The duties would be taken into consideration in making the valuations; and thus after going down hill for nine and a half rears we would as suddenly rise up again to prohibition. He complained that there were not merchants enough on this floor from the South; and, in this respect, the Northern States had the advantage. But satisfy me, said Mr. T., that the views of the senator from South Carolina Mr. Calhoun] are not correct, and I shall vote for the proposition.

Mr. Moore said he would move an amendment which he hoped would meet the views of the gentlemen on the other side; it was to this effect: "Provided, That no valuation be adopted that will operate unequally in different ports of the United States.

"Mr. Calhoun also wished that the amendment would prevail, though he felt it would be ineffectual to counteract the inequality of the system. But he would raise no cavilling obections; he wished to act in perfect good hith; and he only wished to see what could be done.

"Mr. Moore said he had but two motives in offering the amendment to the amendment of the senator. The first was, to get rid of the monstitutional objections to the amendment of the senator from Kentucky; and the second was, to do justice to those he had the honor to The honorable gentleman said that represent. The honorable gentleman said that Mobile and New Orleans would not pay higher duties, because the goods imported there would be of more value; and this was the very reason, Mr. M. contended, why the duties would be higher. Did not every one see that if the same article was valued in New-York at one hundred dollars and in Mobile at one hundred and thirtyfire dollars, the duty of twenty per cent. would be higher at the latter place? He had nothing but the spirit of compromise in view, and hoped gentlemen would meet him in the same spirit. He would now propose, with the permission of the senator from Maine, to vary his motion, and offer a substitute in exact conformity with the language of the constitution. This proposition being admitted by general consent, Mr. Moore modified his amendment accordingly. (It was an affirmation of the constitution, that all duties should be uniform, &c).

'Mr. Forsyth supported the amendment of the menator from Alabama, and hoped it would meet the approbation of the Senate. It would get rid of all difficulty about words. No one, he presumed, wished to violate the constitution; and If the measure of the senator from Kentucky was

if not, it would not be adopted.

"Mr. Holmes moved an adjournment. "Mr. Moore asked for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn, and they were accordingly ordered, when the question was taken and decided in the affirmative-Yeas 22, nays 19, as follows:

"YEAS.—Messrs. Bell, Clayton, Dallas, Dickerson, Ewing, Foot, Frelinghuysen, Holmes, Johnston, Kane. Knight, Naudain, Prentiss, Robbins, Robinson, Silsbee, Smith, Tipton, Tomlinson, Waggaman, Webster, Wilkins.—22.

"NAYS .- Messrs. Bibb, Black, Buckner, Calhoun, Clay, Dudley, Grundy, Hendricks, Hill, King, Miller, Moore, Poindexter, Sprague, Rives, Troup, Tyler, White, Wright.-19.

"The Senate then, at half-past four o'clock, adjourned.

" Friday, February 22.

"Mr. Smith (of Md.) said, the motion to amend by the word 'uniform' was unnecessary. That was provided for by the constitution. duties must be uniform. An addition to the cost of goods of forty, fifty, or sixty per cent. would be uniform, but would not prevent fraud. nor the certainty of great inequality in the valuation in the several ports. The value of goods at New Orleans particularly, and at almost every other port, will be higher than at New-York. I have not said that such mode was unconstitutional, nor have I said that it was impracticable; few things are so. But I have said, and do now say, that the mode is open to fraud, and more so than the present. At present the merchant enters his goods, and swears to the truth of his invoice. One package in every five or ten is sent to the public warehouse, and there carefully examined by two appraisers on oath. If they find fraud, or suspect fraud, then all the goods belonging to such merchants are sent to the appraisers; and if frauds be discovered, the goods are forfeited. No American merchant has ever been convicted of such fraud. Foreigners have even been severely punished by loss of their property. The laws are good and sufficiently safe as they now stand on our statutes. I wish no stronger; we know the one, we are ignorant how the other will work. Such a mode of valuation is unknown to any nation except Spain, where the valuation is arbitrary; and the goods are valued agreeably to the amount of the bribe given. This is perfectly understood and practised. It is in the nature of such mode of valuation to be arbitrary. No rule can be established that will make such mode uniform throughout the Union, and some of the small ports will value low to bring business to their towns. A scene of connivance and injustice will take place that no law can prevent.

"The merchant will be put to great inconvenience by the mode proposed. All his goods must be sent to the public warehouses, and there opened piece by piece; by which process they will sustain essential injury. The goods will be detained from the owners for a week or a month, or still more, unless you have one or two hundred appraisers in New-York, and proportionately in other ports; thus increasing patronage; and with such a host, can we expect either uniformity or equality in the valuation? All will not be honest, and the Spanish mode will be adopted. One set of appraisers, who value low, will have a priority. In fact, if this mode should ever be adopted, it will cause great discontent, and must soon be changed. As all understand the cause to be to flatter the manufacturers with a plan which they think will be beneficial to them, but which, we all know, can never be realized, it is deception on its face, as is almost the whole of the bill now under our consideration.

"Remember, Mr. President, that the senators from Kentucky and South Carolina [Mr. Clay and Mr. Calhoun], have declared this bill (if it should become a law), to be permanent, and that no honorable man who shall vote for it can ever attempt a change; yet, str, the pressure against it will be such at the next session that Congress will be compelled to revise it; and as the storm may then have passed over Congress, a new Congress, with better feelings, will be able to act with more deliberation, and may pass a law that will be generally approved. Nearly all agree that this bill is a bad bill. A similar opinion prevailed on the passage of the tariff of 1828, and yet it passed, and caused all our present danger and difficulties. All admit that the act of 1828, as it stands on our statutes, is constitutional. But the senator [Mr. Calhoun] has said that it is unconstitutional, because of the motive under which it passed; and he said that that motive was protection to the manufacturers. How, sir, I ask, are we to know the motives of men? I thought then, and think now/that the approaching election for President tended greatly to the enactments of the acts of 1824 and 1828; many of my friends thought so at the time. I have somewhere read of the minister of a king or emperor in Asia, who was anxious to be considered a man of truth, and always boasted of his veracity. He hypocritically prayed to God that he might always speak the truth. A genii appeared and told him that his prayer had been heard, touched him with his spear, and said, hereafter you will speak truth on all occasions. The next day he waited on his majesty and said, Sire, I intended to have assassinated you yesterday, but was prevented by the nod of the officer behind you, who is to kill you to-morrow. The result I will not mention. Now, Mr. President, if the same genii was to touch with his spear each of the senators who voted for the act of 1828, and an interrogator was appointed, he would ask, what induced you to give that vote? Why, sir, I acted on sound principles. I believe it is the duty of every good government to promote the manufactures of the nation; all historians eulo-

gize the kings who have done so, and censure those kings who have neglected them. I refer vou to the history of Alfred. It is known that the staple of England was wool, which was sent to Flanders to be exchanged for cloths. The civil wars, by the invasions of that nation, kept them long dependent on the Flemings for the cloths they wore. At length a good king gov. erned; and he invited Flemish manufacturers to England, and gave them great privileges. They taught the youth of England, the manufacture succeeded, and now England supplies all the world with woollen cloth. The interfogator asked another the same question. His answer might have been, that he thought the passing of the law would secure the votes of the manufacturers in favor of his friend who wanted to be the President. Another answer might have been, a large duty was imposed on an article which my constituents raised; and I voted for it, although I disliked all the residue of the bill. Sir, the motives, no doubt, were different that induced the voting for that bill, and were, as we all know, not confined to the protective system. Many voted on political grounds, as many will on this bill, and as they did on the enforcing bill. We cannot declare a bill unconstitutional, because of the motives that may gov. ern the voters. It is idle to assign such a cause for the part that is now acting in South Carolina. I know, Mr. President, that no argument will have any effect on the passage of this bill. The high contracting parties have agreed. But I owed it to myself to make these remarks.

"Mr. Webster said, that he held the home valuation to be, to any extent, impracticable: and that it was unprecedented, and unknown in any legislation. Both the home and foreign valuation ought to be excluded as far as possible, and specific duties should be resorted to This keeping out of view specific duties, and turning us back to the principle of a valuation was, in his view, the great vice of this bill. In England five out of six, or nine out of ten articles, pay specific duties, and the valuation is on the remnant. Among the articles which pay ad valorem duties in England are silk goods, which are imported either from India, whence they are brought to one port only; or from Europe, in which case there is a specific and an ad valorem duty; and the officer has the option to take either the one or the other. He suggested that the Senate, before they adopted the ad ralorem principle, should look to the effects on the importation of the country.

"He took a view of the iron trade, to show that evil would result to that branch from a substitution of the ad valorem for the specific system of duties. He admitted himself to be unable to comprehend the elements of a home valuation, and mentioned cases where it would be impossible to find an accurate standard of valuation of this character. The plan was impracticable and illusory.

"Mr. Clayton said, I would go for this bill only for the sake of co from South Carolina ca ly to be received as such ject proposed; if not, l pursue; I am opposed to obtain for the manufactu the principle of the bill and that it will be receive cession, I shall oppose it

"Mr. Benton objected as tending to a violation the United States, an clause: 'Congress shall collect taxes, duties, im all duties, imposts, and e throughout the United S of duties and imposts, h destroyed by this amend ment could fix the valu the same rate, in all th United States. If the the goods in every por every port, he would co mrs and mistakes in the ing to the diversity of takes, would be the dive duties and imposts laid a ferent ports.

"Mr. B. objected to th cause it would be injurio the southern ports. He to New Orleans. The would be fifteen or twen New Orleans than in 1 northern ports. All imp northeastern cities, to eva Orleans; and that great e will be doomed to sink city, while all the money ports must be carried off a for imports. Without an can flourish, or even furni exports. It will be drain and deprived of its legiti languish far in the rear of enriched with the profits As an exporter, it will bu will sell. All buying, and poverish cities as well as i leans is now a great expor more domestic production Union; her imports have some years; and, with fair come next to New-York, a talley of the Mississippi w plies of foreign goods; bu of a home valuation, it mu of the import trade which that loss, its wealth must to purchase produce for e dine; and as the western p at all events, every wester decline in the value of his only for the sake of concession. The senator from South Carolina can tell whether it is likely to be received as such, and to attain the object proposed; if not, I have a plain course to pursue; I am opposed to the bill. Unless I can obtain for the manufacturers the assurance that the principle of the bill will not be disturbed, and that it will be received in the light of a concession, I shall oppose it.

proportion to the decline o

Orleans to purchase it.

"Mr. Benton objected to the home valuation, as tending to a violation of the constitution of the United States, and cited the following clause: 'Congress shall have power to lay and ollect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.' All uniformity of duties and imposts, he contended, would be destroyed by this amendment. No human judgment could fix the value of the same goods at the same rate, in all the various ports of the Inited States. If the same individual valued the goods in every port, and every cargo in every port, he would commit innumerable errors and mistakes in the valuation; and, according to the diversity of these errors and mistakes, would be the diversity in the amount of duties and imposts laid and collected in the different ports.

"Mr. B. objected to the home valuation, bemuse it would be injurious and almost fatal to the southern ports. He confined his remarks would be fifteen or twenty per cent. higher in New Orleans than in New-York, and other northern ports. All importers will go to the northeastern cities, to evade high duties at New Orleans; and that great emporium of the West will be doomed to sink into a mere exporting city, while all the money which it pays for exports must be carried off and expended elsewhere for imports. Without an import trade, no city an flourish, or even furnish a good market for exports. It will be drained of its effective cash, and deprived of its legitimate gains, and must languish far in the rear of what it would be, if enriched with the profits of an import trade. As an exporter, it will buy; as an importer, it will sell. All buying, and no selling, must impoverish cities as well as individuals. New Orleans is now a great exporting city; she exports more domestic productions than any city in the Union; her imports have been increasing, for some years; and, with fair play, would soon become next to New-York, and furnish the whole talley of the Mississippi with its immense supplies of foreign goods; but, under the influence of a home valuation, it must lose a greater part of the import trade which it now possesses. In that loss, its wealth must decline; its capacity w purchase produce for exportation must deat all events, every western farmer will suffer a citizen that he pleaded the cause of New Orleans, and objected to this measure of home valuation, which was to have the most baneful effect upon her prosperity.

"Mr. B. further objected to the home valuation, on account of the great additional expense it would create; the amount of patronage it would . confer; the rivalry it would beget between importing cities; and the injury it would occasion to merchants, from the detention and handling of their goods; and concluded with saying, that the home valuation was the most obnoxious feature ever introduced into the tariff acts; that it was itself equivalent to a separate tariff of ten per cent.; that it had always been resisted, and successfully resisted, by the anti-tariff interest, in the highest and most palmy days of the American system, and ought not now to be introduced when that system is admitted to be nodding to its fall; when its death is actually fixed to the 30th day of June, 1842, and when the restoration of harmonious feelings is proclaimed to be the whole object of this bill.

"Mr. B. said this was a strange principle to bring into a bill to reduce duties. It was an increase, in a new form-an indefinable formand would be tax upon tax, as the whole cost of getting the goods ready for a market valuation here, would have to be included: original cost, freight, insurance, commissions, duties here. It was new protection, in a new form, and in an lo New Orleans. The standard of valuation extraordinary form, and such as never could be carried before. It had often been attempted, as as a part of the American system, but never received countenance before.

"Mr. Calhoun rose and said: "As the question is now about to be put on the amendment offered by the senator from Kentucky, it became necessary for him to determine whether he should vote for or against it. He must be permitted again to express his regret that the senator had thought proper to move it. His objection still remained strong against it; but, as it seemed to be admitted, on all hands, that the fate of the bill depended on the fate of the amendment, feeling, as he did, a solicitude to see the question terminated, he had made up his mind, not, however, without much hesitation, not to interpose his vote against the adoption of the amendment; but, in voting for it, he wished to be distinctly understood, he did it upon two conditions: first, that no valuation would be adopted that should come in conflict with the provision in the constitution which declares that duties, excises, and imposts shall be uniform; and, in the next place, that none would be adopted which would make the duties themselves a part of the element of a home valuation. He felt himself justified in concluding that none such would be adopted; as it had been declared line; and as the western produce must go there, by the supporters of the amendment, that no such regulation was contemplated; and, in fact, becine in the value of his own productions, in he could not imagine that any such could be proportion to the decline of the ability of New contemplated, whatever interpretation might be Vrleans to purchase it. It was as a western attempted hereafter to be given to the expression that branch from a em for the specific itted himself to be elements of a home

one so, and censure cted them. I refer

ool, which was sent

d for cloths. The

of that nation, kept

e Flemings for the

h a good king gov.

nish manufacturers

n great privileges.

England, the manu-

England supplies all

th. The interrogaquestion. His an-ie thought the pass-

e the votes of the

s friend who want-

other answer might

imposed on an ar-raised; and I voted the residue of the

oubt, were different

that bill, and were,

1 to the protective olitical grounds, as

as they did on the

leclare a bill uncon-

otives that may gov.

assign such a cause

ng in South Caroli-

, that no argument

passage of this bill.

have agreed. But he held the home

tent, impracticable;

ed, and unknown in home and foreign ided as far as possi-uld be resorted to.

specific duties, and

ciple of a valuation

ice of this bill. In ine out of ten arti-

the valuation is on articles which pay

and are silk goods.

from India, whence only; or from Eu-

a specific and an ad

er has the option to her. He suggested adopted the ad ra-

k to the effects on iron trade, to show

these remarks

It is known that

ses where it would curate standard of The plan was im-

ald go for this bill

of the home market. The first could scarcely be contemplated, as it would be in violation of the constitution itself; nor the latter, as it would, by necessary consequence, restore the very duties, which it was the object of this bill to reduce, and would involve the glaring absurdity of imposing duties on duties, taxes on taxes. He wished the reporters for the public press to notice particularly what he said, as he intended his declaration to be part of the proceedings.

"Believing, then, for the reasons which he had stated, that it was not contemplated that any regulation of the home valuation should come in conflict with the provisions of the constitution which he had cited, nor involve the absurdity of laying taxes upon taxes, he had made up his mind to vote in favor of the amendment.

"Mr. Smith said, any declaration of the views and motives, under which any individual senator might now vote, could have no influence, in 1842; they would be forgotten long before that time had arrived. The law must rest upon the interpretation of its words alone.

"Mr. Calhoun said he could not help that; he should endeavor to do his duty.

"Mr. Clayton said there was certainly no ambiguity whatever in the phraseology of the amendment. In advocating it, he had desired to deceive no man; he sincerely hoped no one would suffer himself to be deceived by it.

"Mr. Wilkins said, if it had been his intention to have voted against the amendment, he should have remained silent; but, after the explicit declaration of the honorable gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Calhoun] of the reason of his vote, and believing, himself, that the amendment would have a different construction from that given it by the gentleman, he [Mr. W.] would as expressly state, that he would vote on the question, with the impression that it would not hereafter be expounded by the declaration of any senator on this floor, but by the plain meaning of the words in the text.

"The amendment of Mr. Clay, fixing the principle of home valuation as a part of the bill, was then adopted, by the following vote:

"Yeas.—Messrs. Bell, Black, Bibb, Calhoun, Chambers, Clay, Clayton, Ewing, Foot, Frelinghuysen, Hill, Holmes, Johnson, King, Knight, Miller, Moore, Naudain, Poindexter, Prentiss, Rives, Robbins, Sprague, Tomlinson, Tyler, Wilkins.—26.

"Nays.—Messrs. Benton, Buckner, Dallas, Dickerson, Dudley, Forsyth, Grundy, Kane, Robinson, Seymour, Silsbee, Smith, Waggaman, Webster, White, Wright.—16."

And thus a new principle of protection, never before engrafted on the American system, and to get at which the constitution had to be violated in the article of the uniformity of duties, was established! and established by the aid of those who declared all protection to be unconstitutional, and just cause for the secession of a State from the Union! and were then acting on that assumption.

CHAPTER LXXXIII.

REVENUE COLLECTION, OR FORCE BILL

The President in his message on the South Carolina proceedings had recommended to Congress the revival of some acts, heretofore in force to enable him to execute the laws in that State: and the Senate's committee on the Judiciary had reported a bill accordingly early in the session. It was immediately assailed by several members as violent and unconstitutional, tending to civil war, and denounced as "the bloody bill" -"the force bill," &c. Mr Wilkins of Pennsylvania, the reporter of the vill, vindicated it from this injurious character, showed that it was made out of previous laws, and contained nothing novel but the harmless contingent authority to remove the office of the customs from one building to another in the case of need. He

"The Judiciary Committee, in framing it, had been particularly anxious not to introduce any novel principle—any which could not be found on the statute book. The only novel one which the bill presented was one of a very simple nature. It was that which authorized the President, under the particular circumstances which were specified in the bill, to remove the enstonhouse. This was the only novel principle, and care was taken that in providing for such removal no authority was given to use force.

"The committee were apprehensive that some collision might take place after the 1st of February, either between the conflicting parties of the citizens of South Carolina, or between the officers of the federal government and the citizens. And to remove, as far as possible, all chance of such collision, provision was made that the collector might, at the moment of imminent danger, remove the custom-house to & place of security; or, to use a plain phrase, put it out of harm's way. He admitted the importance of this bill; but he viewed its importance as arising not out of the provisions of the bill itself, but out of the state of affairs in South Carolina, to which the bill had reference. In this view, it was of paramount importance.

was established! and established by the aid of those who declared all protection to be uncon-bill or not, he would not say; but legislation, in reference to South Caro of February, had become must be done; and it be to adopt every measure rent those awful conseq foresee as necessarily res which South Carolina assume.

"Here nullification is unless we abolish our consenting to do this, the if we go a hair's breadth system, they present seco sion on one hand, and nu The senator from South other day that no such secession could exist. T and anarchy must accor one denies the right of i natural, indefeasible, inh which we have exercised example, to the civilized it? Then we have revolu stitutional secession. The by secession is certain. the legislature of South bill to provide for the sa South Carolina. It advise armor. It puts them in for what purpose but for t provisions of these laws ar those of the feudal system to the citizens of Carolina. tions on their own citize do. Resistance was just arrival of the day on the c to these documents, what mor, which often falsifies, truth. If we judge by reports, more men were r arms in Carolina, than ther rolutionary struggle. The this moment in arms, and it be embattled the moment a to enforce the revenue laws. ton wore the appearance of

The Bill was opposed wit winessed, and every effor oficial to the people, and ofice the President, an strumental in bringing it through. Mr. Tyler of Vin warmest opposers, and in the nate speech, said:

"In the course of the made into this subject, I have certain doctrines which has world over the signature of how that my language m those who are disposed to and to misrepresent me. place on this floor, I have no

the secession of a ere then acting on

XXIII.

R FORCE BILL

ige on the South mmended to Conheretofore in force, laws in that State; on the Judiciary y early in the sesssailed by several stitutional, tending " the bloody bill" Wilkins of Pennwill, vindicated it showed that it ws, and contained ess contingent auf the customs from e case of need. He hensive that some er the 1st of Febafficting parties of a, or between the ernment and the far as possible, all ovision was made he moment of imustom-house to & plain phrase, put mitted the imported its importance visions of the bill f affairs in South and reference. In t importance. o legislate on this ssary to pass the but legislation, in of February, had become necessary. Something must be done; and it behooves the government to adopt every measure of precaution, to prerent those awful consequences which all must foresee as necessarily resulting from the position which South Carolina has thought proper to assume.

, in framing it, had to introduce any ould not be found ly novel one which of a very simple thorized the Prescumstances which emove the customovel principle, and iding for such reto use force.

"Here nullification is declaimed, on one hand, unless we abolish our revenue system. We consenting to do this, they remain quiet. But if we go a hair's breadth towards enforcing that ststem, they present secession. We have secesson on one hand, and nullification on the other. The senator from South Carolina admitted the other day that no such thing as constitutional secession could exist. Then civil war, disunion, and anarchy must accompany secession. No one denies the right of revolution. That is a natural, indefeasible, inherent right—a right which we have exercised and held out, by our example, to the civilized world. Who denies Then we have revolution by force, not constitutional secession. That violence must come by secession is certain. Another law passed by the legislature of South Carolina, is entitled a hill to provide for the safety of the people of South Carolina. It advises them to put on their armor. It puts them in military array; and forwhat purpose but for the use of force? The provisions of these laws are infinitely worse than those of the feudal system, so far as they apply to the citizens of Carolina. But with its operations on their own citizens he had nothing to do. Resistance was just as inevitable as the arrival of the day on the calendar. In addition to these documents, what did rumor say-rumor, which often falsifies, but sometimes utters arms in Carolina, than there were during the rerolutionary struggle. The whole State was at this moment in arms, and its citizens are ready to be embattled the moment any attempt was made to enforce the revenue laws. The city of Charleston wore the appearance of a military depot."

The Bill was opposed with a vehemence rarely witnessed, and every effort made to render it odious to the people, and even to extend the odium to the President, and to all persons instrumental in bringing it forward, or urging it warmest opposers, and in the course of an elabomte speech, said:

"In the course of the examination I have made into this subject, I have been led to analyze know that my language may be seized on by reference to South Carolina, previous to the 1st of the Executive; but whenever he had done any act in violation of the constitutional rights of the citizen, or trenching on the rights of the Senate, I have been found in opposition to him. When he appointed corps of editors to office, I thought it was my duty to oppose his course. When he appointed a minister to a foreign court without the sanction of the law, I also went against him, because, on my conscience, I believed that the act was wrong. Such was my course, acting, as I did, under a sense of the duty I owed to my constituents; and I will now say, I care not how loudly the trumpet may be sounded, nor how low the priests may bend their knees before the object of their idolatry, I will be at the side of the President, crying in his ear, 'Remember, Philip, thou art mortal!'

'I object to the first section, because it confers on the President the power of closing old ports of entry and establishing new ones. It has been rightly said by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Bibb] that this was a prominent cause which led to the Revolution. The Boston port hill, which removed the custom-house from Boston to Salem, first roused the people to resistance. To guard against this very abuse, the constitution had confided to Congress the power to regulate commerce; the establishment of ports of entry formed a material part of this power, and one which required legislative enactment. Now I deny that Congress can deputize its legislative powers. If it may one, it may all; and thus, a majority here can, at their pleasure, change the very character of the government. The President might come to be invested with authority to make all laws which his discretion might dictate. It is vain to tell me (said Mr. T.) that I imagine a case which will never exist. truth. If we judge by newspaper and other I tell you, sir, that power is cumulative, and that reports, more men were now ready to take up patronage begets power. The reasoning is unanswerable. If you can part with your power in one instance, you may in another and another. You may confer upon the President the right to declare war; and this very provision may fairly be considered as investing him with authority to make war at his mere will and pleasure on cities, towns, and villages. The prosperity of a city depends on the position of its custom-house and port of entry. Take the case of Norfolk, Richmond, and Fredericksburg, in my own State; who doubts but that to remove the custom-house from Norfolk to Old Point Comfort, of Richmond to the mouth of Chickahominy, through. Mr. Tyler of Virginia, was one of its or of Fredericksburg to Tappahannock or Urbanna, would utterly annihilate those towns? I have no tongue to express my sense of the probableinjustice of the measure. Sir, it involves the innocent with the guilty. Take the case of Charleston; what if ninety-nine merchants were ertain doctrines which have gone out to the ready and willing to comply with your revenue world over the signature of the President. I laws, and that but one man could be found to resist them; would you run the hazard of those who are disposed to carp at my course destroying the ninety-nine in order to punish mi to misrepresent me. Since I have held a one? Trade is a delicate subject to touch; place on this floor, I have not courted the smiles once divert it out of its regular channels, and nothing is more difficult than to restore it. This measure may involve the actua property of every man, woman, and child in that city; and this, too, when you have a redundancy of millions in your treasury, and when no interest can sustain injury by awaiting the actual occurrence of a case of resistance to your laws, before you would have an opportunity to legislate.

"He is further empowered to employ the land and naval forces, to put down all 'aiders and abettors.' How far will this authority extend? Suppose the legislature of South Carolina should happen to be in session: I will not blink the question, suppose the legislature to be in session at the time of any disturbance, passing laws in furtherance of the ordinance which has been adopted by the convention of that State; might they not be considered by the President as aiders and abettors? The President might not, perhaps, march at the head of his troops, with a flourish of drums and trumpets, and with bayonets fixed, into the state-house yard, at Columbia; but, if he did so, he would find a precedent for it in English history.

"There was no ambiguity about this measure. The prophecy had already gone forth; the President has said that the laws will be obstructed. The President had not only foretold the coming difficulties, but he has also assembled an army. The city of Charleston, if report spoke true, was now a beleagured city; the cannon of Fort Pinckney are pointing at it; and although they are now quietly sleeping, they are ready to open their thunders whenever the voice of authority shall give the command. And shall these terrors be let loose because some one man may refuse to pay some small modicum of revenue, which Congress, the day after it came into the treasury, might vote in satisfaction of some unfounded claim? Shall we set so small a value upon the lives of the people? Let us at least wait to see the course of measures. We can never be too tardy in commencing the work of blood.

"If the majority shall pass this bill, they must do it on their own responsibility; I will have no part in it. When gentlemen recount the blessings of union; when they dwell upon the past, and sketch out, in bright perspective, the future, they awaken in my breast all the pride of an American; my pulse beats responsive to theirs, and I regard union, next to freedom, as the greatest of blessings. Yes, sir, 'the federal Union must be preserved.' But how? Will you seek to preserve it by force? Will you appease the angry spirit of discord by an oblation of blood? Suppose that the proud and haughty spirit of South Carolina shall not bend to your high edicts in token of fealty; that you make war upon her, hang her Governor, her legislators, and judges, as traitors, and reduce her to the condition of a conquered provincehave you preserved the Union? This Union consists of twenty-four States; would you have preserved the Union by striking out one of the States—one of the old thirteen? Gentlemen had boasted of the flag of our country, with its thirteen stars. When the light of one of these stars shall have been extinguished, will the flag wave over us, under which our fathers fought? If we are to go on striking out star after star, what will finally remain but a central and a burning sun, blighting and destroying every germ of liberty? The flag which I wish to wave over me, is that which floated in triumph at Saratoga and Yorktown. It bore upon it thirteen States, of which South Carolina was one. Sir, there is a great difference between preserving Union and preserving government; the Union may be annihilated, yet government preserved; but, under such a government, no man ought to desire to live."

Mr. Webster, one of the committee which reported the bill, justly rebuked all this vituperation, and justified the bill, both for the equity of its provisions, and the necessity for enacting them. He said:

"The President, charged by the constitution with the duty of executing the laws, has sent us a message, alleging that powerful combinations are forming to resist their execution; that the existing laws are not sufficient to meet the crisis; and recommending sundry enactments as necessary for the occasion. The message being referred to the Judiciary Committee, that committee has reported a bill in compliance with the President's recommendation. It has not gone beyond the message. Every thing in the bill, every single provision, which is now complained of, is in the message. Yet the whole war is raised against the bill, and against the committee, as if the committee had originated the whole matter. Gentlemen get up and address us, as if they were arguing against some measure of a factious opposition. They look the same way, sir, and speak with the same vehemence, as they used to do when they raised their patriotic voices against what they called a coalition.

"Now, sir, let it be known, once for all, that this is an administration measure; that it is the President's own measure; and I pray gentlemen to have the goodness, if they call it hard names, and talk loudly against its friends, not to overlook its source. Let them attack it, if they choose to attack it, in its origin.

"Let it be known, also, that a majority of the committee reporting the bill are friends and supporters of the administration; and that it is maintained in this house by those who are among his steadfast friends, of long standing.

"It is, sir, as I have already said, the President's own measure. Let those who oppose it oppose it as such. Let them fairly acknowledge its origin, and meet it accordingly.

"The honorable member from Kentucky, who spoke first against the bill, said he found in it another Jersey prison-ship; let him state, then, that the President has gress, recommending a re and horrors of the Je says, too, that the bill s sedition law. But the flower except the same message. Let him, then that General Jackson ac principles of the alien and The honorable meml Tyler, finds out a rese bill and the Boston por these be imitated from the sthe President's. The dent, he says, sole judg Does he mean to say th recommended a measure sole judge of the constitut dares, sacrifices every thi -he will lend no aid to nther 'be a dog, and bay Roman.' He did not Yet the gentleman well kr is sacrificed to arbitrary has been demanded by th and others have called hi whom he has supported. for the chief magistracy MYS, too, that one of the Botany Bay law, except 1 This section, sir, whateve that the President's me Smilar observations are marks of both the honor: North Carolina. It is not arize those remarks. Th strain.

"Therefore, sir, let it be known, that the war wh doose to wage, is waged a of the administration, again there was choice. The content of the week him and them, a they will probably come at the content of the way of the content of the con

stading.

*Mr. President, I am not whitting that these charge just, or that they would be the message. On the con wholly unjust. No one of a minimal measure, had become that the President could not recommend it to the copies. He was not at libe is slent, while dangers the which existing laws were n judgment, to avert.

"Mr. President, I take that I support this measure member of the Senate, in the detates of my own conscient lader; and, on the other has but that of public duty, and sitution. I believe the cou

r country, with its ght of one of these iished, will the flag ur fathers fought? out star after star, it a central and a destroying every; which I wish to floated in triumph I touth Carolina was rence between preg government; the et government reovernment, no man ommittee which red all this vituperaoth for the equity cessity for enacting by the constitution the laws, has sent powerful combinaeir execution; that ifficient to meet the sundry enactments The message bev Committee, that I in compliance with ation. It has not Every thing in the which is now comre. Yet the whole ill, and against the ttee had originated en get up and adguing against some sition. They look with the same vewhen they raised what they called a 1, once for all, that neasure; that it is re; and I pray gen-, if they call it hard nst its friends, not t them attack it, if ts origin.

at a majority of the ill are friends and tion; and that it is by those who are of long standing. idy said, the l'resitose who oppose it, fairly acknowledge ingly.

om Kentucky, who said he found in it
let him state, then,

that the President has sent a message to Congress, recommending a renewal of the sufferings and horrors of the Jersey prison-ship. He stys, too, that the bill snuffs of the alien and seltion law. But the bill is fragrant of no fower except the same which perfumes the message. Let him, then, say, if he thinks so, that General Jackson advises a revival of the principles of the alien and sedition laws.

The honorable member from Virginia [Mr. Tyler, finds out a resemblance between this and the Boston port bill. Sir, if one of these be imitated from the other, the imitation is the President's. The bill makes the Presibent he says, sole judge of the constitution. loes he mean to say that the President has recommended a measure which is to make him sole judge of the constitution? The bill, he deplares, sacrifices every thing to arbitrary power he will lend no aid to its passage—he would nther 'be a dog, and bay the moon, than such Roman.' He did not say 'the old Roman.' Tet the gentleman well knows, that if any thing is sacrificed to arbitrary power, the sacrifice has been demanded by the 'old Roman,' as he and others have called him; by the President whom he has supported, so often and so ably, for the chief magistracy of the country. He ars too, that one of the sections is an English Rotany Bay law, except that it is much worse. This section, sir, whatever it may be, is just that the President's message recommended. Similar observations are applicable to the remarks of both the honorable gentlemen from North Carolina. It is not necessary to particubrize those remarks. They were in the same strain.

"Therefore, sir, let it be understood, let it be hown, that the war which these gentlemen doose to wage, is waged against the measures of the administration, against the President of the own choice. The controversy has arisen between him and them, and, in its progress, they will probably come to a distinct under-

"Mr. President, I am not to be understood as simiting that these charges against the bill are just, or that they would be just if made against the message. On the contrary, I think them wholly unjust. No one of them, in my opinion, an be made good. I think the bill, or some similar measure, had become indispensable, and that the President could not do otherwise than to recommend it to the consideration of Congess. He was not at liberty to look on and to silent, while dangers threatened the Union, which existing laws were not competent, in his judgment, to avert.

"Mr. President, I take this occasion to say, that support this measure, as an independent member of the Senate, in the discharge of the detates of my own conscience. I am no man-slader; and, on the other hand. I follow no lead, but that of public duty, and the star of the consistence. I believe the country is in considerable danger; I believe an unlawful combination threatens the integrity of the Union. I believe the crisis calls for a mild, temperate, forbearing, but inflexibly firm execution of the laws. And, under this conviction, I give a hearty support to the administration, in all measures which I deem to be fair, just, and necessary. And in supporting these measures, I mean to take my fair share of responsibility, to support them frankly and fairly, without reflections on the past, and without mixing other topics in their discussion.

"Mr. President, I think I understand the sentiment of the country on this subject. think public opinion sets with an irresistible force in favor of the Union, in favor of the measures recommended by the President, and against the new doctrines which threaten the dissolution of the Union. I think the people of the United States demand of us, who are intrusted with the government, to maintain that government; to be just, and fear not; to make all and suitable provisions for the execution of the laws, and to sustain the Union and the constitution against whatsoever may endanger them. For one, I obey this public voice; I comply with this demand of the people. I support the administration in measures which I believe to be necessary; and, while pursuing this course, I look unhesitatingly, and with the utmost confidence, for the approbation of the

The support which Mr. Webster gave to all the President's measures in relation to South Carolina, and his exposure of the doctrine of nullification, being the first to detect and denounce that heresy, made him extremely obnoxious to Mr. Calhoun, and his friends; and must have been the main cause of his exclusion from the confidence of Mr. Clay and Mr. Calhoun in the concoction of their bill, called a compromise. His motives as well as his actions were attacked, and he was accused of subserviency to the President for the sake of future favor. At the same time all the support which he gave to these measures was the regular result of the principles which he laid down in his first speeches against nullification in the debate with Mr. Hayne, and he could not have done less without being derelict to his own principles then avowed. It was a proud era in his life, supporting with transcendent ability the cause of the constitution and of the country, in the person of a chief magistrate to whom he was politically opposed bursting the bonds of party at the call of duty, and displaying a patriotism worthy of admiration and imitation. General Jackson felt the debt of gratitude and admiration which he owed him; the country, without distinction of party, felt the same; and the universality of the feeling was one of the grateful instances of popular applause and justice when great talents are seen exerting themselves for the good of the country. He was the colossal figure on the political stage during that eventful time; and his labors, splendid in their day, survive for the benefit of distant posterity.

CHAPTER LXXXIV.

MR. CALHOUN'S NULLIFICATION RESOLUTIONS.

SIMULTANEOUSLY with the commencement of the discussions on the South Carolina proceedings, was the introduction in the Senate of a set of resolutions by Mr. Calhoun, entitled by him, "Resolutions on the powers of the government;" but all involving the doctrine of nullification; and the debate upon them deriving its point and character from the discussion of that doctrine. The following were the resolutions:

"Resolved, That the people of the several States composing these United States are united as parties to a constitutional compact, to which the people of each State acceded as a separate severeign community, each binding itself by its own particular ratification; and that the Union, of which the said compact is the bond, is a union between the States ratifying the same.

"Resolved, That the people of the several States, thus united by the constitutional compact, in forming that instrument, and in creating a general government to carry into effect the objects for which they were formed, delegated to that government, for that purpose, certain definite powers, to be exercised jointly, reserving at the same time, each State to itself, the residuary mass of powers, to be exercised by its own separate government; and that whenever the general government assumes the exercise of powers not delegated by the compact, its acts are unauthorized, and are of no effect; and that the same government is not made the final judge of the powers delegated to it, since that would make its discretion, and not the constitution, the measure of its powers; but that, as in all other cases of compact among sovereign parties, without any common judge, each has an equal right to judge for itself, as well as of the infraction as of the mode and measure of redress.

"Resolved, That the assertions that the people of these United States, taken collectively as individuals, are now, or ever have been, united on the principle of the social compact, and as such are now formed into one nation or people, or that they have ever been so united in any one stage of their political existence; that the people of the several States composing the Union have not, as members thereof, retained their sovereignty; that the allegiance of their citizens has been transferred to the general government; that they have parted with the right of punishing treason through their respective State governments; and that they have not the right of judging in the last resort as to the extent of the powers reserved, and, of consequence, of those delegated; are not only without foundation in truth, but are contrary to the most certain and plain historical facts, and the clearest deductions of reason; and that all exercise of power on the part of the general government, or any of its departments, claiming authority from so erroneous assumptions, must of necessity be unconstitutional, must tend directly and inevitably to subvert the sovereignty of the States, to destroy the federal character of the Union, and to rear on its ruins a consolidated government, without constitutional check or limitation, and which must necessarily terminate in the loss of liberty

To which Mr. Grundy offered a counter set as follows:

"1. Resolved, That by the constitution of the United States, certain powers are delegated to the general government, and those not deleg ted, or prohibited to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

"2. Resolved, That one of the powers express ly granted by the constitution to the general government, and prohibited to the States, is that of laying duties on imports.

"3. Resolved, That the power to lay imposts in by the constitution wholly transferred from the State authorities to the general government without any reservation of power or right or the part of the State.

"4. Resolved, That the tariff laws of 1828 and 1832 are exercises of the constitutional power possessed by the Congress of the United States, whatever various opinions may exist a to their policy and justice.

"5. Resolved, That an attempt on the part of a State to annul an act of Congress passed up on any subject exclusively confided by the constitution to Congress, is an encroachment on the rights of the general government.

"6. Resolved, That attempts to obstruct of prevent the execution of the several acts of Con gress imposing duties on imports, whether by ordinances of conventions or legislative enact ments, are not warranted by the constitution and are dangerous to the political institutions of the country."

It was in the discussion of these resolutions and the kindred subjects the "revenue collection first publicly revealed he obtained the seminal aremedy in a governmen lations of '98-'99, were t the power itself as applic State governments; but t Ification as a peaceful and ing a measure of the gene action of one of the States mto power of the tribune Roman government. I ha of that tribunitian power, perfection of good governs benefit of the weaker par tively to prevent oppression doinjustice-but I never sa into a public speech but of the discussion of his resolu for though actually delive was before the Senat gument on that bill was his nullification resolution he traced the Roman tribu sidered it a cure for all th the Roman state had been to which all her subsequen attributed. This remarkal ed February 15th, 1833, a government of the majority ed by a right in the mino measures—to be unmitigat proceeded to argue in favor o mto and the secession pow ed himself:

"He might appeal to hist these remarks, of which th the most familiar and strik known fact, that, from the quins, to the time of the triounitian power, the gov state of the greatest disor and, he might add, corrupt happen? The explanation w light on the subject under community was divided into tricians and the plebeians, the state principally in the h without adequate check to p the latter. The result was a The patricians converted the remment into the means of mrch themselves and their o na word, had their America out of the peculiar character ave been, united on mpact, and as such ation or people, or o united in any one nce; that the people ing the Union have ined their sovereigneir citizens has been government; that right of punishing ective State governnot the right of judgthe extent of the onsequence, of those thout foundation in he most certain and e clearest deductions cise of power on the ment, or any of its ority from so erronecessity be unconly and inevitably to he States, to destroy e Union, and to rear covernment, without nitation, and which in the loss of liberty

Tered a counter set

ne constitution of the rs are delegated to d those not delera-States, are reserved r to the people.

the powers express ition to the genera d to the States, is wer to lay imposts transferred from th general government f power or right or tariff laws of 1828 f the constitutiona ngress of the United pinions may exist a tempt on the part of Congress passed up confided by the cor encroachment on th nment.

mpts to obstruct of several acts of Con imports, whether by or legislative enact by the constitution olitical institutions of

of these resolutions

and the kindred subjects of the "force bill" and the "revenue collection bill," that Mr. Calhoun first publicly revealed the source from which he obtained the seminal idea of nullification as aremedy in a government. The Virginia reso-Intions of '98-'99, were the assumed source of the power itself as applicable to our federal and State governments; but the essential idea of nullification as a peaceful and lawful mode of arresting a measure of the general government by the action of one of the States, was derived from the wto power of the tribunes of the people in the Roman government. I had often heard him talk of that tribunitian power, and celebrate it as the reflection of good government—as being for the benefit of the weaker part, and operating negatively to prevent oppression, and not positively to winjustice-but I never saw him carry that idea into a public speech but once, and that was on the discussion of his resolutions of this session: for though actually delivered while the "force was before the Senate, yet all his doctrinal grument on that bill was the amplification of his nullification resolutions. On that occasion he traced the Roman tribunitian power, and considered it a cure for all the disorders to which the Roman state had been subject, and the cause which all her subsequent greatness was to be attributed. This remarkable speech was deliverof February 15th, 1833, and after depicting a powernment of the majority—a majority uncheckolby a right in the minority of staying their measures—to be unmitigated despotism, he then proceeded to argue in favor of the excellence of the mo and the secession power; and thus deliver-

"He might appeal to history for the truth of these remarks, of which the Roman furnished the most familiar and striking. It was a wellknown fact, that, from the expulsion of the Tarquins, to the time of the establishment of the triounitian power, the government fell into a state of the greatest disorder and distraction, and he might add, corruption. How did this lappen? The explanation will throw important light on the subject under consideration. The community was divided into two parts, the patricians and the plebeians, with the powers of the state principally in the hands of the former, without adequate check to protect the rights of the latter. The result was as might be expected. The patricians converted the powers of the gomuch themselves and their dependants. They, ha word, had their American system. growing at of the peculiar character of the government ration, and firmness, which in so remarkable a and condition of the country. This requires explanation. At that period, according to the laws of nations, when one nation conquered another, the lands of the vanguished belonged to the victors; and, according to the Roman law the lands thus acquired were divided into parts. one allotted to the poorer class of the people, and the other assigned to the use of the treasury, of which the patricians had the distribution and administration. The patricians abused their power, by withholding from the people that which ought to have been allotted to them, and by converting to their own use that which ought to have gone to the treasury. In a word, they took to themselves the entire spoils of victory, and they had thus the most powerful motive to keep the state perpetually involved in war, to the utter impoverishment and oppression of the people. After resisting the abuse of power, by all peaceable means, and the oppression becoming intolerable, the people at last withdrew from the city; they, in a word, seceded; and, to induce them to reunite, the patricians conceded to the plebeians, as the means of protecting their separate interests, the very power which he contended is necessary to protect the rights of the States, but which is now represented as necessarily leading to disunion. They granted to the people the right of choosing three tribunes from among themselves, whose persons should be sacred, and who should have the right of interposing their veto, not only against the passage of laws, but even against their execution; a power which those who take a shallow insight into human nature would pronounce inconsistent with the strength and unity of the state, if not utterly impracticable. Yet, so far from that being the effect, from that day the genius of Rome became ascendant, and victory followed her steps till she had established an almost universal dominion.

"How can a result so contrary to all anticipation be explained? The explanation appeared to him to be simple. No measure or movement could be adopted without the concurring consent of both the patricians and plebeians, and each thus became dependent on the other. and, of consequence, the desire and objects of neither could be effected without the concurrence of the other. To obtain this concurrence, each was compelled to consult the good will of the other, and to elevate to office not simply those who might have the confidence of the order to which he belonged, but also that of the other. The result was, that men possessing those qualities which would naturally command confidence, moderation, wisdom, justice, and patriotism, were elevated to office; and these, by the weight of their authority and the prudence of their counsel, together with that spirit of unanimity necessarily resulting from the conremment into the means of making money, to curring assent of the two orders, furnishes the real explanation of the power of the Roman state, and of that extraordinary wisdom, mode-

degree characterized her public men. He might illustrate the truth of the position which he had laid down, by a reference to the history of all free states, ancient and modern, distinguished for their power and patriotism; and conclusively show not only that there was not one which had not some contrivance, under some form, by which the concurring assent of the different portions of the community was made necessary in the action of government, but also that the virtue, patriotism, and strength of the state were in direct proportion to the strength of the means of securing such assent. In estimating the operation of this principle in our system, which depends, as he had stated, on the right of interposition on the part of the State, we must not omit to take into consideration the amending power, by which new powers may be granted, or any derangement of the system be corrected, by the concurring assent of threefourths of the States; and thus, in the same degree, strengthening the power of repairing any derangement occasioned by the executive action of a State. In fact, the power of interposition, fairly understood, may be considered in the light of an appeal against the usurpations of the general government, the joint agent of all the States, to the States themselves, to be decided, under the amending power, affirmatively, in favor of the government, by the voice of three-fourths of the States, as the highest power known under the system.

"Mr. C. said that he knew the difficulty, in our country, of establishing the truth of the principle for which he contended, though resting upon the clearest reason, and tested by the universal experience of free nations. He knew that the governments of the several States would be cited as an argument against the conclusion to which he had arrived, and which, for the most part, were constructed on the principle of the absolute majority; but, in his opinion, a satisfactory answer could be given; that the objects of expenditure which fell within the sphere of a State government were few and inconsiderable; so that, be their action ever so irregular, it could occasion but little derangement. If, instead of being members of this great confederacy, they formed distinct communities, and were compelled to raise armies, and incur other expenses necessary for their defence, the laws which he had laid down as necessarily controlling the action of a State, where the will of an absolute and unchecked majority prevailed, would speedily disclose themselves in faction, anarchy, and corruption. Even as the case is the operation of the causes to which he had referred were perceptible in some of the larger and more populous members of the Union, whose governments had a powerful central action, and which already showed a strong tendency to that moneyed action which is the invariable forerunner of corruption and convulsions.

"But to return to the general government; we have now sufficient experience to ascertain that the tendency to conflict in this action is between Southern and other sections. The latter, having a decided majority, must habitually be possessed of the powers of the government, both in this and in the other House; and being governed by that instinctive love of power 80 natural to the human breast, they must become the advocates of the power of government and in the same degree opposed to the limitations; while the other and weaker section is as necessarily thrown on the side of the limitations. In one word, the one section is the natural guardian of the delegated powers, and the other of the reserved; and the struggle on the side of the former will be to enlarge the powers, while that on the opposite side will be to restrain them within their constitutional limits. The contest will, in fact, be a contest between power and liberty, and such he considered the present; a contest in which the weaker section, with its peculiar labor, productions, and situation, has at stake all that can be dear to freemen. Should they be able to maintain in their full vigor their reserved rights, liberty and prosperity will be their portion; but if they yield, and permit the stronger interest to consolidate within itself all the powers of the government, then will its fate be more wretched than that of the aborigines whom they have expelled, or of their slaves. In this great struggle between the delegated and reserved powers, so far from repining that his lot and that of those whom he represented is cast on the side of the latter, he rejoiced that such is the fact; for though we participate in but few of the advantages of the government, we are compensated, and more than compensated, in not being so much exposed to its corruption. Not did he repine that the duty, so difficult to be discharged, as the defence of the reserved powers against, apparently, such fearful odds, had been assigned to them. To discharge successfully this high duty requires the highest qualities. moral and intellectual; and, should you perform it with a zeal and ability in proportion to its magnitude, instead of being mere planters, our section will become distinguished for its patriots and statesmen. But, on the other hand if we prove unworthy of this high destiny, if we yield to the steady encroachment of power, the severest and most debasing calamity and corruption will overspread the land. Every Southern man, true to the interests of his section, and faithful to the duties which Providence has allotted him, will be for ever excluded from the honors and emoluments of this government. which will be reserved for those only who have qualified themselves, by political prostitution, for admission into the Magdalen Asylum."

In this extract from that remarkable speech, the first one in which Mr. Calhoun defended nullification and secession in the Senate, and in which every word bears the impress of intense thought, there is distinctly to be seen his opinion of the defects of c vernment (State and fe for those defects. I sa ment; for his speech h to ourselves, and was : of the actual measures of And this defect was. of a majority; and thority in the minorit and to secede. This condemnation of the fu which the administrat tution and of the St But he did not limit h the reto and of secess history; he had recou same purpose-and fo each of the twelve tri secession; and found i the majority, in the 1 ten tribes seceded. Th duced: "Among the few e nations, the governmen Israel, in its early peri Their government, at fi tion, without any cent chieftain, with the titl its head, without, how organization of the two was the commencemen among that peculiar generations, terminated of their tribes. It is i less reader to peruse t without being forcibly in the causes which le those which now thi calamity. With the es power in the king con ation, which, under ki increased, to defray th temple, of enlarging an the seat of the central: profuse expenditures Increased taxation was consequences—discont before his death began the succession of his tribes, headed by Je. duction of the taxes; and the embellishment and the money which purpose being no long words, the debt being reduction of the dutie The demand was taken after consulting the ol-'98), who advised a re-Vol. I.—22

t in this action is sections. The lat-, must habitually of the government, House; and, being love of power so they must become f government, and to the limitations; section is as necesthe limitations. In s the natural guarand the other of zle on the side of e the powers, while will be to restrain tional limits. The test between power sidered the present; er section, with its and situation, has at freemen. Should heir full vigor their prosperity will be ield, and permit the ate within itself all at, then will its fate t of the aborigines or of their slaves. en the delegated and repining that his lot epresented is cast on iced that such is the ipate in but few of a nment, we are comcompensated, in not ts corruption. Nor y, so difficult to be the reserved powers rful odds, had been scharge successfully ne highest qualities, should you perform in proportion to its mere planters, our nished for its patriots ie other hand, if we h destiny, if we yield at of power, the sealamity and corrupid. Every Southern of his section, and ich Providence has r excluded from the of this government, those only who have t remarkable speech, r. Calhoun defended n the Senate, and in the impress of intense to be seen his opinolitical prostitution,

dalen Asylum."

ion of the defects of our duplicate form of government (State and federal), and of the remedy for those defects. I say, in our form of government; for his speech had a practical application to ourselves, and was a defence, or justification of the actual measures of the State he represented. And this defect was, the unchecked authority of a majority; and the remedy was, an authority in the minority to check that majority, and to secede. This clearly was an absolute condemnation of the fundamenta, principle upon which the administration of the federal constitution and of the State constitutions rested. But he did not limit himself to the benefits of the reto and of secession, as shown in Roman history; he had recourse to the Jewish for the same purpose-and found it-not in a veto in each of the twelve tribes, but in the right of secession; and found it, not in the minority, but the majority, in the reign of Jeroboam, when ten tribes seceded. That example is thus introduced:

Among the few exceptions in the Asiatic nations, the government of the twelve tribes of Israel, in its early period, was the most striking. Their government, at first, was a mere confederation, without any central power, till a military chieftain, with the title of king, was placed at its head, without, however, merging the original organization of the twelve distinct tribes. This was the commencement of that central action among that peculiar people, which, in three generations, terminated in a permanent division of their tribes. It is impossible even for a careless reader to peruse the history of that event without being forcibly, struck with the analogy in the causes which led to their separation, and those which now threaten us with a similar calamity. With the establishment of the central power in the king commenced a system of taxation, which, under king Solomon, was greatly increased, to defray the expense of rearing the temple, of enlarging and embellishing Jerusalem, the seat of the central government, and the other profuse expenditures of his magnificent reign. Increased taxation was followed by its natural consequences—discontent and complaint, which before his death began to excite resistance. On the succession of his son, Rehoboam, the ten tribes, headed by Jeroboam, demanded a reduction of the taxes; the temple being finished. and the embellishment of Jerusalem completed, and the money which had been raised for that purpose being no longer required, or, in other words, the debt being paid, they demanded a reduction of the duties—a repeal of the tariff. The demand was taken under consideration, and after consulting the old men (the counsellors of '98), who advised a reduction, he then took the opinion of the younger politicians, who had since grown up, and knew not the doctrines of their fathers. He hearkened unto their counsel, and refused to make the reduction; and the secession of the ten tribes, under Jeroboam, followed. The tribes of Judah and Benjamin, which had received the disbursements, alone remained to the house of David."

Vol. I.—22

This example also had a practical application, and a squint at the Virginia resolutions of '98-'99, and at the military chieftain then at the head of our government, with a broad intimation of what was to happen if the taxes were not reduced; and that happened to be secession. And all this, and the elaborate speech from which it is taken, and many others of the same character at the same time, was delivered at a time when the elections had decided for a reduction of the taxes-when a bill in the House was under consideration for that purpose—and when his own "compromise" bill was in a state of concoction, and advanced to a stage to assure its final passing. Strong must have been Mr. Calhoun's desire for his favorite remedy, when he could contend for it under such circumstances-under circumstances which showed that it could not be wanted for the purpose which he then avowed. Satisfied of the excellence, and even necessity in our system, of this remedy, the next question was to create it, or to find it; create it, by an amendment to the constitution; or find it already existing there; and this latter was done by a new reading of the famous Virginia resolutions of '98-'99. The right in any State to arrest an act of Congress, and to stay it until three fourths of the States ordered it to proceed, and with a right forcibly to resist if any attempt was made in the mean time to enforce it, with the correlative right of secession and permanent separation, were all found by him in these resolutions-the third especially, which was read, and commented upon for the purpose. Mr. Rives, of Virginia, repulsed that interpretation of the act of his State, and showed that an appeal to public opinion was all that was intended; and quoted the message of Governor Monroe to show that the judgment of the federal court, under one of the acts declared to be unconstitutional, was carried into effect in the capital of Virginia with the order and tranquillity of any other judgment.

"But, sir, the proceedings of my State, on another occasion of far higher importance, have been so frequently referred to, in the course of this debate, as an example to justify the present proceedings of South Carolina, that I may be excused for saying something of them. What, then, was the conduct of Virginia, in the memorable era of '98 and '99? She solemnly protested against the alien and sedition acts, as 'palpable and alarming infractions of the constitution;' she communicated that protest to the other States of the Union, and earnestly appealed to them to unite with her in a like declaration, that this deliberate and solemn expression of the opinion of the States, as parties to the constitutional compact, should have its proper effect on the councils of the nation, in procuring a revision and repeal of the obnoxious acts. This was 'the head and front of her offending'-no more. The whole object of the proceedings was, by the peaceful force of public opinion, embodied through the organ of the State legislatures, to obtain a repeal of the laws in question, not to oppose or arrest their execution, while they remained unrepealed. That this was the true spirit and real purpose of the proceeding, is abundantly manifested by the whole of the able debate which took place in the legislature of the State, on the occasion. All the speakers, who advocated the resolutions which were finally adopted, distinctly placed them on that legitimate, constitutional ground. I need only refer to the emphatic declaration of John Taylor, of Caroline, the distinguished mover and able champion of the resolutions. He said 'the appeal was to public opinion; if that is against us, we must yield.' The same sentiment was avowed and maintained by every friend of the resolutions, throughout the debate.

"But, sir, the real intentions and policy of Virginia were proved, not by declarations and speeches merely, but by facts. If there ever was a law odious to a whole people, by its daring violation of the fundamental guaranties of public liberty, the freedom of speech and freedom of the press, it was the sedition law to the people of Virginia. Yet, amid all this indignant dissatisfaction, after the solemn protest of the legislature, in '98, and the renewal of that protest, in '99, this most odious and arbitrary law was peaceably carried into execution, in the capital of the State, by the prosecution and punishment of Callender, who was fined and imprisoned for daring to canvass the conduct of our public men (as Lyon and Cooper had been elsewhere), and was still actually imprisoned, when the legislature assembled, in December, 1800. Notwithstanding the excited sensibility of the public mind, no popular tumult, no legislative interference, disturbed, in any manner, the full and peaceable execution of the law. The Senate will excuse me, I trust, for calling their attention to a most forcible commentary on the true character of the Virginia proceedings of '98 and '99 (as illustrated in this transaction), which was contained in the official communication of Mr. Monroe, then Governor of the State to the government, If Carolina now shall effectually legislature, at its assembling, in December, 1800. After referring to the distribution which had been ordered to be made among the people, of Mr. Madison's celebrated report, of '99, he says. 'In connection with this subject, it is proper to add, that, since your last session, the sedition law, one of the acts complained of, has been carried into effect, in this commonwealth, by the decision of a federal court. I notice this event not with a view of censuring or criticising it. The transaction has gone to the world, and the impartial will judge of it as it deserves. I notice it for the purpose of remarking that the decision was executed with the same order and tranquil submission, on the part of the people, as could have been shown by them, on a similar occasion, to any the most necessary, constitutional, and popular acts of the government.

Mr. Webster, in denying the derivation of nullification and secession from the constitution said:

"The constitution does not provide for events which must be preceded by its own destruction. Secession, therefore, since it must bring these consequences with it, is revolutionary. And nullification is equally revolutionary. What is revolution? Why, sir, that is revolution which overturns, or controls, or successfully resists the existing public authority; that which arrests the exercise of the supreme power; that which introduces a new paramount authority into the rule of the state. Now, sir, this is the precise object of nullification. It attempts to supersede the supreme legislative authority. It arrests the arm of the Executive Magistrate. It interrupts the exercise of the accustomed judicial power. Under the name of an ordinance, it declares null and void, within the State, all the revenue laws of the United States. Is not this revolutionary? Sir, so soon as this ordinance shall be carried into effect, a revolution will have commenced in South Carolina. She will have thrown off the authority to which her citizens have, heretofore, been subject. She will have declared her own opinions and her own will to be above the laws, and above the power of those who are intrusted with their administration, If she makes good these declarations, she is revolutionized. As to her, it is as distinctly a change of the supreme power as the American Revolution, of 1776. That revolution did not subvert government, in all its forms. It did not subvert local laws and municipal administrations. It only threw off the dominion of a power claiming to be superior, and to have a right in many important respects, to exercise legislative authority. Thinking this authority to have been usurped or abused, the American colonies, now the United States, bade it defiance, and freed themselves from it, by means of a revolution. But that revolution left them with their own municipal laws still, and the forms of local resist the laws of Con own judge, take her r obey the laws of the and disobey them w relieve herself from a tinctly as did the A In other words, she w revolution."

The speaker then nullification was, as r ordinance, and other lina; and said:

"But, sir, while South Carolina woul and distinct revolution must also be to sprea up the constitution, a It strikes a deadly blo the whole Union. T the laws of Congress to admit nullification not expect to see a d tire government, appe sion and the most ext tleman seems not co the rapidity of his ow his opinions sweeps whither. To begin w avowed intent, never secession, dismember tion, is as if one we Niagara, and cry out way down. In the the rash adventurer 1 the dark abyss belo abyss has no discover "Nullification, if su of the law, absolves subverts the foundat obedience, dispenses of allegiance, and elev supreme command. And it raises to sur twenty distinct power under a general gover ting its laws at def this anarchy, as wel constitution of the U as a whole, and for cannot stand altogo parts; and, if the every where, they can where. The gentlen all duties and impost: out the country. I have one rule or on and another for oth therefore, and does s the only alternative throughout the whole in Carolina as well as peal is demanded, bec poses her veto, and t in December, 1800 ribution which had mong the people, of ort, of '99, he says. oject, it is proper to session, the sedition ned of, has been carmonwealth, by the I notice this event, ng or criticising it. the world, and the it deserves. I noremarking that the the same order and part of the people, y them, on a similar necessary, constituhe government."

he derivation of nulm the constitution, ot provide for events its own destruction. it must bring these evolutionary. And utionary. What is t is revolution which iccessfully resists the that which arrests power; that which t authority into the r, this is the precise ttempts to supersede thority. It arrests lagistrate. It interaccustomed judicial an ordinance, it den the State, all the States. Is not this on as this ordinance revolution will have lina. She will have o which her citizens ject. She will have and her own will to e the power of those heir administration. clarations, she is reit is as distinctly a wer as the American t revolution did not its forms. It did not nunicipal administradominion of a power d to have a right, in to exercise legislative authority to have ne American colonies, ade it defiance, and v means of a revoluleft them with their and the forms of local now shall effectually resist the laws of Congress-if she shall be her own judge, take her remedy into her own hands. obey the laws of the Union when she pleases. and disobey them when she pleases-she will relieve herself from a paramount power, as disfinctly as did the American colonies, in 1776. In other words, she will achieve, as to herself, a

The speaker then proceeded to show what nullification was, as reduced to practice in the ordinance, and other proceedings of South Carolina; and said:

"But sir, while practical nullification in South Carolina would be, as to herself, actual and distinct revolution, its necessary tendency must also be to spread revolution, and to break up the constitution, as to all the other States. It strikes a deadly blow at the vital principle of the whole Union. To allow State resistance to the laws of Congress to be rightful and proper, to admit nullification in some States, and yet not expect to see a dismemberment of the entire government, appears to me the wildest illusion and the most extravagant folly. The gentleman seems not conscious of the direction or the rapidity of his own course. The current of his opinions sweeps him along, he knows not whither. To begin with nullification, with the avowed intent, nevertheless, not to proceed to secession, dismemberment, and general revolution, is as if one were to take the plunge of Niagara, and cry out that he would stop halfway down. In the one case, as in the other, the rash adventurer must go to the bottom of the dark abyss below, were it not that that abyss has no discovered bottom.

"Nullification, if successful, arrests the power of the law, absolves citizens from their duty. subverts the foundation both of protection and obedience, dispenses with oaths and obligations of allegiance, and elevates another authority to supreme command. Is not this revolution? And it raises to supreme command four-andtwenty distinct powers, each professing to be under a general government, and yet each setting its laws at defiance at pleasure. Is not this anarchy, as well as revolution? Sir. the constitution of the United States was received as a whole, and for the whole country. If it cannot stand altogether, it cannot stand in parts; and, if the laws cannot be executed every where, they cannot long be executed any where. The gentleman very well knows that all duties and imposts must be uniform throughout the country. He knows that we cannot have one rule or one law for South Carolina, and another for other States. He must see, therefore, and does see-every man sees-that the only alternative is a repeal of the laws throughout the whole Union, or their execution in Carolina as well as elsewhere. And this repeal is demanded, because a single State interresult of the gentleman's opinions, or rather the very text of his doctrine, is, that no act of Congress can bind all the States, the constitutionality of which is not admitted by all; or, in other words, that no single State is bound, against its own dissent, by a law of imposts. This was precisely the evil experienced under the old confederation, and for remedy of which this constitution was adopted. The leading object in establishing this government, an object forced on the country by the condition of the times, and the absolute necessity of the law, was to give to Congress power to lay and collect imposts without the consent of particular States. The revolutionary debt remained unpaid; the national treasury was bankrupt; the country was destitute of credit; Congress issued its requisitions on the States, and the States neglected them; there was no power of coercion but war; Congress could not lay imposts, or other taxes, by its own authority; the whole general government, therefore, was little more than a name. The articles of confederation, as to purposes of revenue and finance, were nearly a dead letter. The country sought to escape from this condition, at once feeble and disgraceful, by constituting a government which should have power of itself to lay duties and taxes, and to pay the public debt, and provide for the general welfare; and to lay these duties and taxes in all the States, without asking the consent of the State governments. This was the very power on which the new constitution was to depend for all its ability to do good; and, without it, it can be no government, now or at any time. Yet, sir, it is precisely against this power, so absolutely indispensable to the very being of the government, that South Carolina directs her ordinance. She attacks the government in its authority to raise revenue, the very mainspring of the whole system; and, if she succeed, every movement of that system must inevitably cease. It is of no avail that she declares that she does not resist the law as a revenue law, but as a law for protecting manufactures. It is a revenue law; it is the very law by force of which the revenue is collected; if it be arrested in any State, the revenue ceases in that State: it is, in a word, the sole reliance of the government for the means of maintaining itself and performing its duties."

Mr. Webster condensed into four brief and pointed propositions his opinion of the nature of our federal government, as being a Union in contradistinction to a LEAGUE, and as acting upon individuals in contradistinction to States, and as being, in these features discriminated from the old confederation.

"1. That the constitution of the United States is not a league, confederacy, or compact, between the people of the several States in their soveposes her veto, and threatens resistance! The reign capacities; but a government proper, founded on the adoption of the people, and creating direct relations between itself and individuals.

"2. That no State authority has power to dissolve these relations; that nothing can dissolve them but revolution; and that, consequently, there can be no such thing as secession without revolution.

"3. That there is a supreme law, consisting of the constitution of the United States, acts of Congress passed in pursuance of it, and treaties; and that, in cases not capable of assuming the character of a suit in law or equity, Congress must judge of, and finally interpret, this supreme law, so often as it has occasion to pass acts of legislation; and, in cases capable of assuming, and actually assuming, the character of a suit, the Supreme Court of the United States is the final interpreter.

"4. That an attempt by a State to abrogate, annul, or nullify an act of Congress, or to arrest its operation within her limits, on the ground that, in her opinion, such law is unconstitutional, is a direct usurpation on the just powers of the general government, and on the equal rights of other States; a plain violation of the constitution, and a proceeding essentially revolutionary in its character and tendency.'

Mr. Webster concluded his speech, an elaborate and able one, in which he appeared in the high character of patriot still more than that of orator, in which he intimated that some other cause, besides the alleged one, must be at the bottom of this desire for secession. He was explicit that the world could hardly believe in such a reason, and that we ourselves who hear and see all that is said and done, could not believe it. He concluded thus:

"Sir, the world will scarcely believe that this whole controversy, and all the desperate measures which its support requires, have no other foundation than a difference of opinion, upon a provision of the constitution, between a majority of the people of South Carolina, on one side, and a vast majority of the whole people of the United States on the other. It will not credit the fact, it will not admit the possibility, that, in an enlightened age, in a free, popular republic, under a government where the people govern, as they must always govern, under such systems, by majorities, at a time of unprecedented happiness, without practical oppression, without evils, such as may not only be pretended, but felt and experienced; evils not slight or temporary, but deep, permanent, and intolerable; a single State should rush into conflict with all the rest, attempt to put down the power of the Union by her own laws, and to support those laws by her military power, and thus break up and destroy the world's last hope. And well the world may be incredulous. South) will in fact, be a contest between power

We, who hear and see it, can ourselves hardly yet believe it. Even after all that had preceded it, this ordinance struck the country with amazement. It was incredible and inconceivable, that South Carolina should thus plunge headlong into resistance to the laws, on a matter of opinion, and on a question in which the preponderance of opinion, both of the present day and of all past time, was so overwhelming-ly against her. The ordinance declares that Congress has exceeded its just power, by laying duties on imports, intended for the protection of manufactures. This is the opinion of South Carolina; and on the strength of that opinion she nullifies the laws. Yet has the rest of the country no right to its opinions also? Is one State to sit sole arbitress? She maintains that those laws are plain, deliberate, and palpable violations of the constitution; that she has a sovereign right to decide this matter; and, that, having so decided, she is authorized to resist their execution, by her own sovereign power; and she declares that she will resist it, though such resistance should shatter the Union into

Mr. Davis, of Massachusetts, had been still more explicit, in the expression of the belief already given (in the extract from his speech contained in this work), that the discontent in South Carolina had a root deeper than that of the tariff; and General Jackson intimated the same thing in his message to the two Houses on the South Carolina proceedings, and in which he alluded to the ambitious and personal feelings which might be involved in them. Certainly it was absolutely incomprehensible that this doctrine of nullification and secession, prefigured in the Roman secession to the sacred mount, and the Jewish disruption of the twelve tribes, should be thus enforced, and impressed, for that cause of the tariff alone; when, to say nothing of the intention of the President, the Congress and the country to reduce it, Mr. Calhoun himself had provided for its reduction, satisfactorily to himself, in the act called a "compromise;" to which he was a full contracting party. It was impossible to believe in the soleness of that reason in the presence of circumstances which annulled it; and Mr. Calhoun himself, in a part of his speech which had been quoted, seemed to reveal a glimpse of two others-slavery, about which there was at that time no agitation-and the presidency, to which patriotic Southern men could not be elected. The glimpse exhibited of the first of these causes, was in this sentence: " The contest (between the North and the and liberty, and suc sent; a contest in u with its peculiar lal ation, has at stake a Here is a distinct of then a contest betwe Union, and that that and liberty, in which property of the South claration at the time tion, there being tl agitation; but to c ominous revelation of apparent laying an : new agitation on a ne was done with. The he gave out, and which of the patriotic men o dency was in this ser man, true to the int faithful to the duti allotted him, will be honors and emolum which will be reserve qualified themselves, for admission into This was bitter; and feelings at the prosp the presidency (whic the noon-day sun obscurity of dark nig unjust, and contradic and subsequent, of or by his own history The North had sup President-a long suc twice concurred in di dent at the end of a Southern in his pla signal proofs of good two elections to the he had been better su in the South, getting the former while losin It was evident then, was not the sole, or t Carolina discontent; sion were to continu cause ceased; that re a new ground, upon t new and impossible

was declared by Mr.

ourselves hardly that had precedthe country with le and inconceivaould thus plunge ne laws, on a matstion in which the th of the present so overwhelmingince declares that t power, by laying for the protection e opinion of South th of that opinion has the rest of the ions also? Is one She maintains that rate, and palpable 1; that she has a matter; and, that, thorized to resist sovereign power; ill resist it, though er the Union into tts, had been still ssion of the belief ct from his speech t the discontent in leeper than that of sson intimated the the two Houses on ings, and in which nd personal feelings them. Certainly it sible that this docssion, prefigured in sacred mount, and welve tribes, should ssed, for that cause say nothing of the ie Congress and the alhoun himself had atisfactorily to himpromise;" to which rty. It was imposss of that reason, in s which annulled it; a part of his speech seemed to reveal a every, about which agitation -- and the otic Southern men glimpse exhibited of as in this sentence: ne North and the ntest between power and liberty, and such he considered the present; a contest in which the weaker section. with its peculiar labor, productions and situation, has at stake all that is dear to freemen." Here is a distinct declaration that there was then a contest between the two sections of the Union, and that that contest was between power and liberty, in which the freedom and the slave property of the South were at stake. This declaration at the time attracted but little attention, there being then no sign of a slavery agitátion; but to close observers it was an ominous revelation of something to come, and an apparent laying an anchor to windward for a new agitation on a new subject, after the tariff was done with. The second intimation which he gave out, and which referred to the exclusion of the patriotic men of the South from the presidency was in this sentence: " Every Southern man, true to the interests of his section, and faithful to the duties which Providence has allotted him, will be forever excluded from the honors and emoluments of this government, which will be reserved for those only who have qualified themselves, by political prostitution. for admission into the Magdalen asylum." This was bitter; and while revealing his own feelings at the prospect of his own failure for the presidency (which from the brightness of the noon-day sun was dimning down to the obscurity of dark night), was, at the same time. unjust, and contradicted by all history, previous and subsequent, of our national elections; and by his own history in connection with them. The North had supported Southern men for President—a long succession of them—and even twice concurred in dropping a Northern President at the end of a single term, and taking a Southern in his place He himself had had signal proofs of good will from the North in his two elections to the vice-presidency; in which he had been better supported in the North than in the South, getting the whole party vote in the former while losing part of it in the latter. It was evident then, that the protective tariff was not the sole, or the main cause of the South Carolina discontent; that nullification and secession were to continue, though their ostensible cause ceased; that resistance was to continue on a new ground, upon the same principle, until a new and impossible point was attained. This day of the passage of the "compromise" bill, and on hearing that the "force bill" had finally passed the House of Representatives. He then stood up, and spoke thus:

"He had said, that as far as this subject was concerned, he believed that peace and harmony would follow. But there is another connected with it, which had passed this House, and which had just been reported as having passed the other, which would prevent the return of quiet. He considered the measure to which he referred as a virtual repeal of the constitution; and, in fact, worse than a positive and direct repeal; as it would leave the majority without any shackles on its power, while the minority, hoping to shelter itself under its protection, and having still some respect left for the instrument, would be trammelled without being protected by its provisions. It would be idle to attempt to disguise that the bill will be a practical assertion of one theory of the constitution against another-the theory advocated by the supporters of the bill, that ours is a consolidated government, in which the States have no rights, and in which, in fact, they bear the same relation to the whole community as the counties do to the States; and against that view of the constitution which considers it as a compact formed by the States as separate communities, and binding between the States, and not between the individual citizens. No man of candor, who admitted that our constitution is a compact, and was formed and is binding in the manner he had just stated, but must acknowledge that this bill utterly overthrows and prostrates the constitution; and that it leaves the government under the control of the will of an absolute majority.

"If the measure be acquiesced in, it will be the termination of that long controversy which began in the convention, and which has been continued under various fortunes until the present day. But it ought not-it will not-it cannot be acquiesced in-unless the South is dead to the sense of her liberty, and blind to those dangers which surround and menace them; she never will cease resistance until the act is erased from the statute book. To suppose that the entire power of the Union may be placed in the hands of this government, and that all the various interests in this widely extended country may be safely placed under the will of an unchecked majority, is the extreme of folly and madness. The result would be inevitable, that power would be exclusively centered in the dominant interest north of this river, and that all the south of it would be held as subjected provinces, to be controlled for the exclusive benefit of the stronger section. Such a state of things could not endure; and the constitution and liberty of the country would fall in the contest, if permitted to continue.

was declared by Mr. Calhoun in his place, on the but that the advocates of liberty every where, as well in the North as in the South; that those who maintained the doctrines of '98, and the sovereignties of the States; that the republican party throughout the country would rally against this attempt to establish, by law, doctrines which must subvert the principles on which free institutions could be maintained."

Here was a new departure, upon a new point, as violent as the former complaint, looking to the same remedy, and unfounded and impossible. This force bill, which was a repeal of the constitution, in the eyes of Mr. Calhoun, was a mere revival of formerly existing statutes, and could have no operation, if resistance to the tariff laws ceased. Yet, nullification and secession were to proceed until it was erased from the statute book; and all the morbid views of the constitution, and of the Virginia resolutions of '98 and '99, were to hold their places in Mr. Calhoun's imagination, and dominate his conduct in all his political action, until this statute was erased. But it is due to many of his friends and followers, to say that, while concurring in his complaints against the federal government, and in his remedies, they dissented from his source of derivation of these remedies. He fourd them in the constitution, shown to be there by the '98-'99 Virginia resolutions; the manly sense of McDuffie, and some others, rejected that sophistry, and found their justification wholly in the revolutionary right of selfdefence from intolerable oppression.

CHAPTER LXXXV.

SECRET HISTORY OF THE "COMPROMISE" OF 1883.

Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Clay were early, and long, rival aspirants for the Presidency, and antagonistic leaders in opposite political systems; and the coalition between them in 1833 was only a hollow truce (embittered by the humiliations to which Mr. Calhoun was subjected in the protective features of the "compromise") and only kept alive for a few years by their mutual interest with respect to General Jackson and Mr. Van Buren. A rupture was foreseen by every observer; and in a few years it took place, and in open Senate, and in a way to give the key to the secret motives which led to that compromise.

It became a question between them which had the upper hand of the other-in their own language-which was master of the other-on that occasion. Mr. Calhoun declared that he had Mr. Clay down-had him on his back-was his master. Mr. Clay retorted: He my master! I would not own him for the meanest of my slaves, Of course, there were calls to order about that time; but the question of mastery, and the causes which produced the passage of the act. were still points of contestation between them. and came up for altercation in other forms. Mr. Calhoun claimed a controling influence for the military attitude of South Carolina, and its intimidating effect upon the federal government. Mr. Clay ridiculed this idea of intimidation, and said the little boys that muster in the streets with their tiny wooden swords, had as well pretend to terrify the grand army of Bonaparte: and afterwards said he would tell how it happened. which was thus: His friend from Delaware (Mr. John M. Clayton), said to him one day-these South Carolinians act very badly, but they are good fellows, and it is a pity to let Jackson hang them. This was after Mr. Clay had brought in his bill, and while it lingered without the least apparent chance of passing-paralyzed by the vehement opposition of the manufacturers: and he urged Mr. Clay to take a new move with his bill-to get it referred to a committee-and by them got into a shape in which it could pass, Mr. Clay did so-had the reference made-and a committee appointed suitable for the measure -some of strong will, and earnest for the bill, and some of gentle temperament, inclined to easy measures on hard occasions. They were: Messrs. Clay, Calhoun, Clayton, Dallas, Grundy,

This was the movement, and the inducing cause on one side: now for the cause on the other. Mr. Letcher, a representative from Kentucky, was the first to conceive an idea of some compromise to release South Carolina from her position; and communicated it to Mr. Clay; who received it at first coolly and doubtfully. Afterwards, beginning to entertain the idea be mentioned it to Mr. Webster, who repulsed it entirely, saying—"It would be yielding great principles to faction; and that the time had come to test the strength of the constitution and the government." After that he was no more consulted. Mr. Clay drew up his bill, and sent it to Mr. Calhour he and Mr. Calhoun not He objected decidedly said, if Mr. Clay knew would yield the objection er undertook to arrang was effected-to take ] The meeting was cold Clay rose, bowed to hi to take a seat. Mr. Le barrassment, immediate the interview: which Mr. Clay remained inf gave up the parts of th not be passed; and the give it up at once. Ir cher had seen the Pre on the subject of a co answered, he would h would execute the law Letcher to Mr. McDuf Soon after, Mr. Letche to make a direct comm Mr. Josiah S. Johnson came to his room in the bed-and informed him -which was, that Ge mit of no further dela take at once a decided (an arrest and trial understood). Mr. Je utmost moment that instantly warned of h Letcher to go and appr Mr. Calhoun in bedformed him. "He v Mr. Letcher and Mr. munication with Mr.

Munication with Mr.

After the committee Clayton assembled the out their consent no in the meeting with pass the bill, provide including the nullifier amendments which sith the passage of the bill, ing the same afterwiby Mr. Clay, and especture. When these upon by the friends of the committee, they being able to agree u them which had in their own lanhe other-onthat red that he had nis back—was his He my master! I nest of my slaves. order about that nastery, and the bassage of the act, on between them, other forms. Mr. g influence for the rolina, and its inleral government. intimidation, and in the streets with d as well pretend f Bonaparte: and l how it happened, om Delaware (Mr. m one day—these adly, but they are o let Jackson hang ay had brought in without the least -paralyzed by the anufacturers: and new move with his ommittee-and by hich it could pass. ference made—and le for the measure arnest for the bill. ent, inclined to easy ns. They were:

and the inducing the cause on the entative from Kenive an idea of some Carolina from her d it to Mr. Clay; ly and doubtfully. tertain the idea, Le r, who repulsed it be yielding great hat the time had of the constitution er that he was no rew up his bill, and sent it to Mr. Calhoun through Mr. Letcher he and Mr. Calhoun not being on speaking terms. He objected decidedly to parts of the bill; and said, if Mr. Clay knew his reasons, he certainly would yield the objectionable parts. Mr. Letcher undertook to arrange an interview; -which was effected-to take place in Mr. Clay's room. The meeting was cold, distant and civil. Mr. Clay rose, bowed to his visitor, and asked him to take a seat. Mr. Letcher, to relieve the embarrassment, immediately opened the business of the interview: which ended without results. Mr. Clay remained inflexible, saying that if he gave up the parts of the bill objected to, it could not be passed; and that it would be better to give it up at once. In the mean time Mr. Letcher had seen the President, and sounded him on the subject of a compromise: the President answered, he would have no negotiation, and would execute the laws. This was told by Mr. Letcher to Mr. McDuffie, to go to Mr. Calhoun. Soon after, Mr. Letcher found himself required to make a direct communication to Mr. Calhoun. Mr. Josiah S. Johnson, senator from Louisiana, came to his room in the night, after he had gone to bed-and informed him of what he had just learnt: -which was, that General Jackson would admit of no further delay, and was determined to take at once a decided course with Mr. Calhoun (an arrest and trial for high treason being understood). Mr. Johnson deemed it of the utmost moment that Mr. Calhoun should be instantly warned of his danger; and urged Mr. Letcher to go and apprise him. He went-found Mr. Calhoun in bed-was admitted to him-informed him. "He was evidently disturbed." Mr. Letcher and Mr. Clay were in constant communication with Mr. Clayton.

on, Dallas, Grundy,

After the committee had been appointed, Mr. Clayton assembled the manufacturers, for without their consent nothing could be done; and in the meeting with them it was resolved to pass the bill, provided the Southern senators, including the nullifiers, should vote both for the amendments which should be proposed, and for the passage of the bill itself—the amendments being the same afterwards offered in the Senate by Mr. Clay, and especially the home valuation feature. When these amendments, thus agreed upon by the friends of the tariff, were proposed in the committee, they were voted down; and not being able to agree upon any thing, the bill was in the predicament which required the execu-

carried back to the senate without alteration. But Mr. Clayton did not give up. Moved by a feeling of concern for those who were in peril, and for the state of the country, and for the safety of the protective system of which he was the decided advocate, he determined to have the same amendments, so agreed upon by the friends of the tariff and rejected by the committee, offered in the Senate; and, to help Mr. Clay with the manufacturers, he put them into his hands to be so offered-notifying Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Clay that unless the amendments were adopted, and that by the Southern vote, every nullifier inclusively, that the bill should not pass—that he himself would move to lay it on the table. His reasons for making the nullification vote a sine qua non both on the amendments and on the bill, and for them all, separately and collectively, was to cut them off from pleading their unconstitutionality after they were passed; and to make the authors of disturbance and armed resistance, after resistance, parties upon the record to the measures, and every part of the measures, which were to pacify them. Unless these leaders were thus bound, he looked upon any pacification as a hollow truce, to be succeeded by some new disturbance in a short time; and therefore he was peremptory with both Mr. Clay and Mr. Calhoun, denouncing the sacrifice of the bill if his terms were not complied with; and letting them know that he had friends enough bound to his support. They wished to know the names of the senators who were to stand by him in this extreme coursewhich he refused to give; no doubt restrained by an injunction of secrecy, there being many men of gentle temperaments who are unwilling to commit themselves to a measure until they see its issue, that the eclat of success may consecrate what the gloom of defeat would damn. Being inexorable in his claims, Mr. Clay and Mr. Calhoun agreed to the amendments, and all voted for them, one by one, as Mr. Clay offered them, until it came to the last-that revolting measure of the home valuation. As soon as it was proposed, Mr. Calhoun and his friends met it with violent opposition, declaring it to be unconstitutional, and an insurmountable obstacle to their votes for the bill if put into it. It was then late in the day, and the last day but one of the session, and Mr. Clayton found himself

tion of his threat. He executed it, and moved to lay it on the table, with the declaration that it was to lie there. Mr. Clay went to him and besought him to withdraw the motion; but in vain. He remained inflexible; and the bill then appeared to be dead. In this extremity, the Calhoun wing retired to the colonnade behind the Vice-President's chair, and held a brief consultation among themselves: and presently Mr. Bibb, of Kentucky, came out, and went to Mr. Clayton and asked him to withdraw his motion to give him time to consider the amendment. Seeing this sign of yielding, Mr. Clayton withdrew his motion-to be renewed if the amendment was not voted for. A friend of the parties immediately moved an adjournment, which was carried; and that night's reflections brought them to the conclusion that the amendment must be passed; but still with the belief, that, there being enough to pass it without him, Mr. Calhoun should be spared the humiliation of appearing on the record in its favor. This was told to Mr. Clayton, who declared it to be impossible—that Mr. Calhoun's vote was indispensable, as nothing would be considered secured by the passage of the bill unless his vote appeared for every amendment separately, and for the whole bill collectively. When the Senate met, and the bill was taken up, it was still unknown what he would do; but his friends fell in, one after the other, yielding their objections upon different grounds, and giving their assent to this most flagrant instance (and that a new one), of that protective legislation, against which they were then raising troops in South Carolina! and limiting a day, and that a short one, on which she was to be, ipso facto, a seceder from the Union. Mr. Calhoun remained to the last, and only rose when the vote was ready to be taken. and prefaced a few remarks with the very notable declaration that he had then to "determine" which way he would vote. He then declared in favor of the amendment, but upon conditions which he desired the reporters to note; and which being futile in themselves, only showed the desperation of his condition, and the state of impossibility to which he was reduced. Several senators let him know immediately the futility of his conditions; and without saying more, he voted on ayes and noes for the amendment; and afterwards for the whole bill. And this concluding scene appears quite correctly originate, and which address themselves to the reported in the authentic debates. And thus the question of mastery in this famous "compromise," mooted in the Senate by Mr. Clay and Mr. Calhoun as a problem between themselves is shown by the inside view of this bit of history. to belong to neither of them, but to Mr. John M. Clayton, under the instrumentality of Gen. Jackson, who, in the presidential election, had unhorsed Mr. Clay and all his systems; and in his determination to execute the laws upon  $M_{\Gamma}$ Calhoun, had left him without remedy, excent in the resource of this "compromise." Upon the outside history of this measure which I have compiled, like a chronicler, from the documentary materials, Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Clay appear as master spirits, appeasing the storm which they had raised; on the inside view they appear as subaltern agents dominated by the necessities of their condition, and providing for themselves instead of their country-Mr. Clay, in saving the protective policy, and preserving the support of the manufacturers; and Mr. Calhoun, in saying himself from the perils of his condition; and both, in leaving themselves at liberty to act together in future against General Jackson and Mr. Van Buren.

CHAPTER LXXXVI

COMPROMISE LEGISLATION; AND THE ACT 80 CALLED, OF 1833.

This is a species of legislation which wears a misnomer-which has no foundation in the constitution-and which generally begets more mischief than it assumes to prevent; and which nevertheless, is very popular—the name, though fictitious, being generally accepted for the reality. There are compromises in the constitution. founded upon what gives them validity, namely, mutual consent; and they are sacred. All compromises are agreements, made voluntarily by independent parties - not imposed by one upon another. They may be made by compact-not by votes. The majority cannot subject the minority to its will, except in the present decision -cannot bind future Congresses-cannot claim any sanctity for their acts beyond that which grows out of the circumstances in which they moral sense of their of justice or policy w from the inherent fa act of 1820, called the one of the most resp this species of legisla tional controversy, as It divided a great pr ly, between slavehold States. It admitted and that State accepte condition of fidelity to being founded in the n drawn upon the eart law, subject to no char vation, visible and tar susceptible of certainty in its observance. Th spect, especially from it upon the other; and it has remained invice neither side attempting each having the advar all the while, like the fi confirmations from su from State legislatures.

The act of 1833, call a breach of all the rule of legislation-concocte by politicians dominate -kept a secret-passed to its support, and pled ment except from its from the conjunction had lately, and long, be state of legislative as v nism. It comprised ( stamp a vicious and re the matter-foul in the and carried through up the interests of others, 1 of many, and the duper a plea which was an or tive government-upon -and upon the people o was, that the elections gressional), had decided tive system-had conde to death-and charge the execution of the se that it should be taken o new Congress, withdraw ebates. And thus his famous "comte by Mr. Clay and etween themselves. f this bit of history, , but to Mr. John amentality of Gen. ential election, had s systems; and, in the laws upon Mr out remedy, except mpromise." Upon easure which I have m the documentary Mr. Clay appear as storm which they iew they appear as by the necessities ding for themselves Ir. Clay, in saving serving the support Ir. Calhoun, in sayhis condition; and at liberty to act toeneral Jackson and

XXXVI.

; AND THE ACT, 80

tion which wears a andation in the conlly begets more misrevent; and which, -the name, though cepted for the realiin the constitution, em validity, namely, re sacred. All comnade voluntarily by aposed by one upon de by compact-not mot subject the mithe present decision esses-cannot claim beyond that which nces in which they ss themselves to the moral sense of their successors, and to reasons of justice or policy which should exempt an act from the inherent fate of all legislation. The act of 1820, called the Missouri Compromise, is one of the most respectable and intelligible of this species of legislation. It composed a national controversy, and upon a consideration. It divided a great province, and about equally, between slaveholding and non-slaveholding States. It admitted a State into the Union; and that State accepted that admission upon the condition of fidelity to that compromise. And being founded in the material operation of a line drawn upon the earth under an astronomical law, subject to no change and open to all observation, visible and tangible, it became an object susceptible of certainty, both in its breach and in its observance. That act is entitled to respect, especially from the party which imposed it upon the other; and has been respected; for it has remained inviolate for thirty yearsneither side attempting to break or abolish iteach having the advantage of it-and receiving all the while, like the first magna charta, many confirmations from successive Congresses, and from State legislatures.

The act of 1833, called a "compromise," was a breach of all the rules, and all the principles of legislation—concocted out of doors, managed by politicians dominated by an outside incerest -kept a secret-passed by a majority pledged to its support, and pledged against any amendment except from its managers; -and issuing from the conjunction of rival politicians who had lately, and long, been in the most violent state of legislative as well as political antagonism. It comprised every title necessary to stamp a vicious and reprehensible act—bad in the matter-foul in the manner-full of abuseand carried through upon the terrors of some. the interests of others, the political calculations of many, and the dupery of more; and all upon a plea which was an outrage upor representative government—upon the actual government -and upon the people of the States. That plea was, that the elections (presidential and congressional), had decided the fate of the protective system—had condemned it—had sentenced it to death—and charged a new Congress with the execution of the sentence; and, therefore, that it should be taken out of the hands of that new Congress, withdrawn from it before it met nith. That new adversary was Mr. Van Buren,

-and laid away for nine years and a half under the sanction of a, so called, compromise-intangible to the people-safe in its existence during all that time; and trusting to the chapter of accidents, and the skill of management, for its complete restoration at the end of the term. This was an outrage upon popular representation—an estoppel upon the popular will—the arrest of a judgment which the people had given -the usurpation of the rights of ensuing Congresses. It was the conception of some rival politicians who had lately distracted the country by their contention, and now undertook to compose 't by their conjunction; and having failed in the game of agitation, threw it up for the game of pacification; and, in this new character, undertook to settle and regulate the affairs of their country for a term only half a year less than the duration of the siege of Troy; and long enough to cover two presidential elections. This was a bold pretension. Rome had existed above five hundied years, and citizens had become masters of armies, and the people humbled to the cry of panem et circenses-bread and the circus-before two or three rivals could go together in a corner, and arrange the affairs of the republic for five years: now this was done among us for double that time, and in the fortyfourth year of our age, and by citizens neither of whom had headed, though one had raised, an army. And now how could this be effected. and in a country so vast and intelligent? I answer: The inside view which I have given of the transaction explains it. It was an operation upon the best, as well as upon the worst feelings of our nature-upon the patriotic alarms of many, the political calculations of others, the interested schemes of more, and the proclivity of multitudes to be deceived. Some political rivals finding tariff no longer available for political elevation, either in its attack or defence; and, from a ladder to climb on, become a stumbling-block to fall over, and a pit to fall into, agree to lay it aside for the term of two presidential elections; upon the pretext of quieting the country which they had been disturbing; but in reality to get the crippled hobby out of the way, and act in concert against an old foe in power, and a new adversary, lately supposed to have been killed off, but now appearing high in the political firmament, and verging to its zejust elected Vice-President, and in the line of old precedents for the presidency; and the main object to be able to work against him, and for themselves, with preservation to the tariff, and extrication of Mr. Calhoun. The masses were alarmed at the cry of civil war, concerted and spread for the purpose of alarm; and therefore ready to hail any scheme of deliverance from that calamity. The manufacturers saw their advantage in saving their high protecting duties from immediate reduction. The friends of Mr. Clay believed that the title of pacificator, which he was to earn, would win for him a return of the glory of the Missouri compromise, Mr. Calhoun's friends saw, for him, in any arrangement, a release from his untenable and perilous position. Members of gentle temperaments in both Houses, saw relief in middle courses, and felt safety in the very word "compromise," no matter how fictitious and fallacious. The friends of Mr. Van Buren saw his advantage at getting the tariff out of his way also; and General Jackson felt a positive relief in being spared the dire necessity of enforcing the laws by the sword and by criminal prosecutions. All these parties united to pass the act; and after it was passed, to praise it; and so it passed easily, and was ushered into life in the midst of thundering applause. Only a few of the well-known senators voted against it-Mr. Webster, Mr. Dickerson, General Samuel Smith, Mr. Benton.

My objections to this bill, and its mode of being passed, were deep and abiding, and went far beyond its own obnoxious provisions, and all the transient and temporary considerations connected with it. As a friend to popular representative government, I could not see, without insurmountable repugnance, two citizens set themselves up for a power in the State, and undertake to regulate, by their private agreement (to be invested with the forms of law), the public affairs for years to come. I admit no man to stand for a power in our country, and to assume to be able to save the Union. Its safety does not depend upon the bargains of any two men. Its safety is in its own constitution-in its laws-and in the affections of the people; and all that is wanted in public men is to administer the constitution in its integrity, and to enforce the laws without fear or affection. A compromise made with a State in arms, is a State cannot commit treason, but a citizen can capitulation to that State; and in this light, Mr. | and that against the laws of the United States;

Calhoun constantly presented the act of 1833 and if it had emanated from the government, he would have been right in his fact, and in his inductions; and all discontented States would have been justified, so far as successful precedent was concerned, in all future interpositions of its fiat to arrest the action of the federal government. But it did not emanate from the government. It (the government) was proceeding wisely, justly, constitutionally in settling with South Carolina, by removing the cause of her real grievance, and by enforcing the laws against their violators. It (the constituted government) was proceeding regularly in this way, with a prospect of a successful issue at the actual session, and a certainty of it at the next one, when the whole subject was taken out of its hands by an arrangement between a few members. The injury was great then, and of permanent evil example. It remitted the government to the condition of the old confederation, acting upon sovereignties instead of individuals. It violated the feature of our Union which discriminated it from all confederacies which ever existed and which was wisely and patriotically put into the constitution to save it from the fate which had attended all confederacies, ancient and modern. All these previous confederacies in their general. or collective capacity, acted upon communities, and met organized resistance as often as they decreed any thing disagreeable to one of its strong members. This opposition could only be subdued by force; and the application of force has always brought on civil war; which has ended in the destruction of the confederacy. The framers of our constitutional Union knew all this, and had seen the danger of it in history. and felt the danger of it in our confederation; and therefore established a Union instead of a LEAGUE-to be sovereign and independent within its sphere, acting upon persons through its own laws and courts, instead of acting on communities through persuasion or force. It was the crowning wisdom of the new constitution; and the effect of this compromise legislation, was to destroy that great feature of our Union-to bring the general and State governments into conflict -and to substitute a sovereign State for an offending individual as often as a State chose to make the cause of that individual her own. A and so, if a citizen com United States he may admitted), be shielded frame of government federal government sh and goes to acting upo viduals; and, therefore it was called, with Sou in violation of the grea government-remitting the old confederation, g Nashville convention of and which has only to l States of this Union, like republic, issuing their every discontent; and government to a fight often as they please. I omit all consideration the act-great and flag subordinate in comparis to the frame of our gove time these vices of mat have been crushing to a atithe of the vices, crow ever have got through overthrow of the old duties were to be levied necessaries—substitution rems to the exclusion of substitution of the home -the abolition of all disc in the imposition of du stipulation against protec tection, and even in new all these were flagrant v of which could ever have in a bill before; and which before they arrived at the The year 1842 was to ha all these inventions, and s career of usefulness; but fine anticipations fail! sa policy re-established, me ever: but of this hereaft the passage of the bill, I legislative action-domina terest of manufacturersthe Senate by a douceur Kendal Green," but K was received by the cour and the ostensible authors and 80, if a citizen commits treason against the United States he may (if this interposition be admitted), be shielded by a State. Our whole frame of government is unhinged when the federal government shifts from its foundation. and goes to acting upon States instead of individuals; and, therefore, the "compromise," as it was called, with South Carolina in 1833 was in violation of the great Union principle of our government-remitting it to the imbecility of the old confederation, giving inducement of the Nashville convention of the present year (1850); and which has only to be followed up to see the States of this Union, like those of the Mexican republic, issuing their pronunciamientos at every discontent; and bringing the general government to a fight, or a capitulation, as often as they please.

ed the act of 1833

the government, he

nis fact, and in his ented States would

successful precedent

interpositions of its

the federal govern-

ite from the govern-

t) was proceeding

lly in settling with g the cause of her

ing the laws against tituted government)

n this way, with a

ie at the actual ses-

the next one, when

1 out of its hands by few members. The

1 of permanent evil

government to the

eration, acting upon

viduals. It violated

hich discriminated it

ch ever existed and

otically put into the

the fate which had ncient and modern.

acies in their general.

I upon communities,

ce as often as they

le to one of its strong

could only be sub-

lication of force has

ar; which has ended confederacy. The

nal Union knew all

ger of it in history,

1 our confederation;

L Union instead of a d independent within

sons through its own

acting on communi-

r force. It was the ew constitution; and

se legislation, was to

Cour Union-to bring

ernments into contlet reign State for an of-

as a State chose to ividual her own. A

on, but a citizen can,

of the United States;

I omit all consideration of the minor vices of the act-great and flagrant in themselves, but subordinate in comparison to the mischiefs done to the frame of our government. At any other time these vices of matter, and manner, would have been crushing to a bill. No bill containing atithe of the vices, crowded into this one, could ever have got through Congress before. The overthrow of the old revenue principle, that duties were to be levied on luxuries, and not on necessaries-substitution of universal ad valorems to the exclusion of all specific duties—the substitution of the home for the foreign valuation -the abolition of all discrimination upon articles in the imposition of duties—the preposterous stipulation against protection, while giving protection, and even in new and unheard of forms; all these were flagrant vices of the bill, no one of which could ever have been carried through in a bill before; and which perished in this one before they arrived at their period of operation. The year 1842 was to have been the jubilee of all these inventions, and set them all off in their career of usefulness; but that year saw all these fine anticipations fail! saw the high protective policy re-established, more burthensome than ever: but of this hereafter. Then the vices in the passage of the bill, being a political, not a legislative action-dominated by an outside interest of manufacturers—and openly carried in the Senate by a douceur to some men, not in "Kendal Green," but Kendal cotton. Yet it was received by the country as a deliverance, benefactors; and their work declared by legislatures to be sacred and inviolable, and every citizen doomed to political outlawry that did not give in his adhesion, and bind himself to the perpetuity of the act. I was one of those who refused this adhesion-who continued to speak of the act as I thought-and who, in a few years, saw it sink into neglect and oblivion-die without the solace of pity or sorrow-and go into the grave without mourners or witnesses, or a stone to mark the place of its interment.

CHAPTER LXXXVII.

VIRGINIA RESOLUTIONS OF '98-'99-DISABUSED OF THEIR SOUTH CAROLINA INTERPRETATION-1. UPON THEIR OWN WORDS-2. UPON CONTEM PORANEOUS INTERPRETATION.

THE debate in the Senate, in 1830, on Mr. Foot's resolutions, has been regarded as the dawn of those ideas which, three years later, under the name of "nullification," but with the character and bearing the seeds of disorganization and civil war, agitated and endangered the Union. In that debate, Mr. Hayne, as heretofore stated, quoted the third clause of the Virginia resolutions of 1798, as the extent of the doctrines he intended to avow. Though Mr. Webster, at the time, gave a different and more portentous interpretation to Mr. Hayne's course of argument, I did not believe that Mr. Hayne purposed to use those resolutious to any other effect than that intended by their authors and adopters; and they, I well knew, never supposed any right in a State of the Union, of its own motion, to annul an act of Congress, or resist its operation. Soon after the discussion of 1830, however, nullification assumed its name, with a clear annunciation of its purpose, namely, to maintain an inherent right in a State to annul the acts of the federal government, and resist their operation, in any case in which the State might judge an act of Congress to exceed the limits of the constitution. And to support this disorganizing doctrine, the resolutions of 1798, were boldly and perseveringly appealed to, and attempted to be wrested from their real intent. Nor is this effort yet abandoned; nor can we expect it to be whilst and the ostensible authors of it greeted as public | nullification still exists, either avowed or covert.

The illustrious authorship of the Resolutions of 1798; the character and reputation of the legislators who adopted them; their general acceptance by the republican party; the influence they exercised, not only on questions of the day. but on the fate of parties, and in shaping the government itself, all combine to give them importance, and a high place in public esteem; and would go far to persuade the country that nullification was right, if they were nullification. In connection, therefore, with the period and events in which nullification had its rise, the necessity is imposed of an examination into the scope and objects of those resolutions; and the same reasons that have made, and make, the partisans of nullification so urgent to identify their fallacies with the resolutions, must make every patriot solicitous for the vindication of them and their author and adopters from any such affinity.

Fortunately, the material is at hand, and abundant. The resolutions are vindicated on their text alone; and contemporaneous authentic interpretation, and the reiterated, earnest—even indignant—disclaimers of the illustrious author himself, utterly repudiate the intent that nullification attempts to impute to them. I propose, therefore, to treat them in these three aspects:

I. Vindicated on their text.

The clause of the resolutions, chiefly relied on as countenancing nullification, is the third resolution of the series, and is as follows:

"That this assembly doth explicitly and peremptorily declare that it views the powers of the federal government, as resulting from the compact, to which the States are parties, as limited by the plain sense and intention of the instrument constituting that compact; and that, in case of a deliberate, palpable, and dangerous exercise of other powers not granted by the said compact, the States, who are the parties thereto, have the right, and are in duty bound, to interpose for arresting the progress of the evil, and for maintaining, within their respective limits, the authorities, rights, and liberties appertaining to them."

The right and duty of interposition is certainly here claimed for the States, in case of a "deliberate, palpable, and dangerous assumption of powers, by the federal government;" but, looking alone to the words of the text, it is an unreasonable inference, that forcible or nullifyting interposition is meant. The word does not import resistance, but rather the contrary; and can only be understood in a hostile sense, when the connection in which it is used necessarily implies force. Such is not the case in this resolution; and no one has a right to suppose that, if its authors had intended to assert a principle of such transcendent importance, as that the States were severally possessed of the right to annul an act of Congress, and resist its execution, they would not have used words to declare that meaning explicitly, or, that they would intimate covertly a doctrine they dared not avow.

The constitution itself suggests several modes of interposition, competent for either the States or the people. It provides for the election (by a mixed system, popular and State), at brief intervals, of all the functionaries of the federal government; and hence, the interposition of the will of the States and people to effect a change of rulers; hence, of policy. It provides that freedom of speech and the press, shall not be abridged, which is equivalent to a provision that those powerful means be perpetually interposed to affect the public conscience and sentimentto counsel and alarm the public servants: to influence public policy-to restrain and remedy government abuses. It recognizes the right and provides that it shall not be abridged, of the people "to assemble and petition the government for the redress of grievances;" hence, contemplating that there may be grievances on the part of the government, and suggesting a means of meeting and overcoming them. Finally it provides that, on the application of a designated proportion of the States, Congress shall cause a convention to be called, to provide, in the constitution itself, should it be judged necessary, additional securities to the States and the people, and additional restraints on the govern-

To act on the sentiments of the country then; to bring to their aid the potent engines of the press and public harangues; to more the people to petition and remonstrance against the obnoxious measures; to draw the attention of other States to the abuses complained of and to the latitudinous construction the federal atthorities were giving to their powers; and thus bring those States, in like manner, to act on their senators and representatives, and on the public voice, so as to produce an immediate remedy, or to co-operate in calling a convention to provide further secualone are the modes of gina resolutions of 179 professed; all they att solutions, or their his puted to them. Thes are all consistent with obedience to the laws, ful authorities; the vargued by the support to prevent civil strife, lution; in all respects fication.

To enlarge somewhat words of the resolution of "the States" to inter mean the right of "a Sta nought. The States-1 ber-have a right to i ready shown, in the con only persuasively, but I the action they may de strable, that it was this that the Virginia legisl last resort. The resolu where of the right of a S number, States. Virgin that pertains to a Stat the premises, she preter resolutions, declaring her like action of her co-Stat of the resolutions being cation, the two doctrines but exactly opposites; t doctrine being, that it take, as Virginia does in tive in impeaching any o the federal government, a to co-operate in procurin a change of policy, or a constitution-according all, may be required to plained of; whereas, null single State may, of its o act of the federal governs stay its operation, until t States come to the aid of and re-enact the nullified to the law, till a majority tion provides a constitutio other undertakes to annul its operation, so long as er the contrary; and hostile sense, when is used necessarily the case in this resoight to suppose that I to assert a principle ortance, as that the essed of the right to and resist its execuused words to declare , that they would inthey dared not avow. aggests several modes ; for either the States s for the election (by nd State), at brief innaries of the federal ne interposition of the ple to effect a change y. It provides that ie press, shall not be ent to a provision that perpetually interposed nce and sentimente public servants; to restrain and remedy recognizes the right not be abridged, of the petition the governievances;" hence, con-7 be grievances on the nd suggesting a means ng them. Finally, it ication of a designated Congress shall cause a provide, in the con-

nents of the country aid the potent engines harangues; to more I remonstrance against to draw the attention uses complained of and ruction the federal ameir powers; and thus ke manner, to act on sentatives, and on the produce an immediate in calling a convention be judged necessary,

e States and the peo-

aints on the govern-

to provide further securities—one or both; these alone are the modes of "interposition" the Virginia resolutions of 1798 contemplated; all they professed; all they attempted; all that the resolutions, or their history, warrant to be imputed to them. These modes of interposition are all consistent with peace and order; with obedience to the laws, and respect to the lawful authorities; the very means, as was well argued by the supporters of the resolutions, to prevent civil strife, insubordination, or revolution; in all respects, the antipodes of nullification.

To enlarge somewhat on the force of the words of the resolutions: The right and duty of "the States" to interpose, certainly does not mean the right of "a State" to nullify and set at nought. The States-less than the whole number-have a right to interpose, secured, as already shown, in the constitution; and this, not only persuasively, but peremptorily; to compel the action they may desire; and it is demonstrable, that it was this constitutional provision that the Virginia legislature had in mind, as a last resort. The resolutions do not speak any where of the right of a State; but use the plural number, States. Virginia exercises the right that pertains to a State-all the right that, in the premises, she pretends to-in passing the resolutions, declaring her views, and inviting the like action of her co-States. Instead, therefore, of the resolutions being identical with nullification, the two doctrines are not merely hostile, but exactly opposites; the sum of the Virginia doctrine being, that it belongs to a State to take as Virginia does in this instance, the initiative in impeaching any objectionable action of the federal government, and to ask her co-States to co-operate in procuring the repeal of a law. a change of policy, or an amendment of the constitution-according as one or the other, or all, may be required to remedy the evil complained of; whereas, nullification claims, that a single State may, of its own motion, nullify any act of the federal government it objects to, and stay its operation, until three fourths of all the States come to the aid of the national authority, and re-enact the nullified measure. One submits to the law, till a majority repeal it, or a convention provides a constitutional remedy for it; the other undertakes to annul the law, and suspend ts operation, so long as three fourths of the States are not brought into active co-operation to declare it valid. The resolutions maintain the government in all its functions, only seeking to call into use the particular function of repeal or amendment: nullification would stop the functions of government, and arrest laws indefinitely; and is incapable of being brought to actual experiment, in a single instance, without a subversion of authority, or civil war. To this essential, radical, antagonistic degree do the Virginia resolutions and the doctrine of nullification differ, one from the other; and thus unjustly are the Virginia republicans, of 1798, accused of planting the seeds of dissolution—a "deadly poison," as Mr. Madison, himself, emphatically calls the doctrine of nullification-in the institutions they had so labored to construct.

II. Upon their contemporaneous interpretation.

The contemporaneous construction of the resolutions is found in the debates on their adoption; in the responses to them of other State legislatures; and in the confirmatory report prepared by the same author, and adopted by the Virginia general assembly, in January, 1800; and by the conduct of the State, in the case of Callender. And it is remarkable (when we consider the uses to which the resolutions have subsequently been turned), that, while the friends of the resolutions nowhere claim more than a declaratory right for the legislature, and deny all idea of force or resistance, their adversaries, in the heat of debate, nor the States which manifested the utmost bitterness in their responses, have not attributed to the resolutions any doctrine like that of nullification. Both in the debates and in the State responses, the opponents of the resolutions denounce them as inflamatory, and "tending" to produce insubordination, and whatever other evil could then be thought of, concerning them; but no one attributes to them the absurdity of claiming for the State a right to arrest, of its own motion, the operation of the acts of Congress.

The principal speakers, in the Virginia legislature, in opposition to the resolutions, were: Mr. George Keith Taylor, Mr. Magill, Mr. Brooke, Mr. Cowan, Gen. Henry Lee, and Mr. Cureton. Nearly the whole debate turned, not on the abstract propriety or expediency of such resolutions, on the question whether the acts of Congress, which were specially complained of, were, in fact, unconstitutional. It was admitted, indeed, by Gen. Lee, who spoke elaborately and argumentatively against the resolutions, that, if the acts were unconstitutional, it was "proper to interfere;" but the extreme notions of the powers of the federal government that then prevailed in the federal party, led them to contend that those powers extended to the acts in question, though, at this day, they are universally acknowledged to be out of the pale of federal legislation. Beyond the discussion of this point, and one or two others not pertinent to the present matter, the speakers dwelt only on the supposed "tendency" of such declarations to excite the people to insubordination and nonsubmission to the law.

Mr. George K. Taylor complained at the commencement of his speech, that the resolutions "contained a declaration, not of opinion, but of fact;" and he apprehended that "the consequences of pursuing the advice of the resolutions would be insurrection, confusion, and anarchy;" but the legal effect and character that he attributed to the resolutions, is shown in his concluding sentence, as follows:

"The members of that Congress which had passed those laws, had been, so far as he could understand, since generally re-elected; therefore he thought the people of the United States had decided in favor of their constitutionality, and that such an attempt as they were then making to induce Congress to repeal the laws would be nugatory."

Mr. Brooke thought resolutions "declaring laws which had been made by the government of the United States to be unconstitutional, null and void," were "dangerous and improper;" that they had a "tendency to inflame the public mind;" to lessen the confidence that ought to subsist between the representatives of the people in the general government and their constituents; and to "sap the very foundations of the government, by producing resistance to its laws." But that he did not apprehend the resolutions to be, or to intend, any thing beyond an expression of sentiment, is evident from his further declaration, that he was opposed to the resolutions, and equally opposed to any modification of them, that should be "intended as an expression of the general sentiment on the subject, because he conceived t to be an improper mode by which to express the wishes of the people of the State on the subject."

General Lee thought the alien and sedition laws "not unconstitutional;" but if they were unconstitutional he "admitted the right of interposition on the part of the general assembly." But he thought these resolutions showed "indecorum and hostility," and were "not the likeliest way to obtain a repeal of the laws." He "suspected," in fact, that " the repeal of the laws was not the leading point in view," but that they "covered" the objects of "promotion of disunion and separation of the States." The resolutions "struck him as recommending resistance. They declared the laws null and void. Our citizens thus thinking would disobey the laws." His plan would be, if he thought the laws unconstitutional, to let the people petition or that the legislature come forward at once. "with a proposition for amending the doubtful parts of the constitution; " or with a "respectful or friendly memorial, urging Congress to repeal the laws." But he "admitted" the only right which the resolutions assert for the State namely, the right "to interpose." The remarks of the other opponents to the resolutions were to the same effect.

On behalf of the resolutions, the principal speakers were, Mr. John Taylor, of Caroline, who had introduced them, Mr. Ruffin, Mr. Mercer, Mr. Pope, Mr. Foushee, Mr. Daniel, Mr. Peter Johnston, Mr. Giles, Mr. James Barbour.

They obviated the objection of the speakers on the other side, that the resolutions "contained a declaration, not of opinion, but of fact," by striking out the words which, in the original draft, declared the acts in question to be "null, void, and of no force or effect;" so as to make it manifest, as the advocates of the resolutions maintained, that they intended nothing beyond an expression of sentiment. They obviated another objection which appeared in the original draft, which asserted the States alone to be the parties to the constitution, by striking out the word "alone." They thoroughly and successfully combated both the "suspicion" that they hid any ulterior object of dissension or disunion, and the "apprehension" that the resolutions would encourage insubordination among the people They acceded to and affirmed, that their object was to obtain a repeal of the offensive measures; that the resolutions might ultimately lead to a convention for amend that they were intend affect public opinion; Says Mr. Taylor, of

"If Congress should legislate unconstitutio in theory they have remained to consider is so defective as to ha and reservations, without them, in a mode by w practically useful. Su ion should exist bet States, respecting the t tutional territories, it the right of decision h party, that party, decid would inevitably have The constitution mus the possibility of such consequence of a prefe to its construction. A must have arisen the fi thirds of Congress may an explanation of any present; and thus corre tion of its own acts by whilst two thirds of the to compel Congress to case so many should this sary for the purpose of tut onal acts of that bod is the creature of the St. peither the States nor the of Congress. It would that the creature shou the instrument of its ow fore this construction w nately to one or the oth which Congress was th to the people whenever sorted to, or to the States should be carried on by which was pursuing the dinary mode of ascertain thirds of the States, by asking theirs?"

Mr. Taylor then probervations to the thapprehension of civil commerce the resolutions were sailed the republicans, said and armies? If not, to for defence and support public opinion. If that they must yield; if for mean to say, that public by force?

"He observed that the i jected to, as couched in li offensive; whilst it had als side, that if the laws wer people ought to fly to arm s the wishes of the ubject."

alien and sedition ;" but if they were tted the right of inie general assembly " utions showed "inind were "not the repeal of the laws." at " the repeal of the point in view," but bjects of "promotion of the States." The recommending resistlaws null and void. g would disobey the e, if he thought the t the people petition, me forward at once, nending the doubtful or with a "respectful ng Congress to repeal tted" the only right ssert for the State, pose." The remarks the resolutions were > utions, the principal Taylor, of Caroline, Mr. Ruffin, Mr. Merhee, Mr. Daniel, Mr. , Mr. James Barbour. ction of the speakers esolutions "contained nion, but of fact," by which, in the original question to be "null, effect;" so as to make tes of the resolutions ended nothing beyond ent. They obviated ppeared in the original States alone to be the a, by striking out the oughly and successfulspicion" that they hid ension or disunion, and the resolutions would on among the people med, that their object he offensive measures; it ultimately lead to a convention for amending the constitution, and that they were intended both to express and to affect public opinion; but nothing more.

Says Mr. Taylor, of Caroline:

"If Congress should, as was certainly possible, legislate unconstitutionally, it was evident that in theory they have done wrong, and it only remained to consider whether the constitution is so defective as to have established limitations and reservations, without the means of enforcing them, in a mode by which they could be made practically useful. Suppose a clashing of opinon should exist between Congress and the States, respecting the true limits of their constitutional territories, it was easy to see, that if the right of decision had been vested in either party, that party, deciding in the spirit of party, would inevitably have swallowed up the other. The constitution must not only have foreseen the possibility of such a clashing, but also the consequence of a preference on either side as to its construction. And out of this foresight must have arisen the fifth article, by which two thirds of Congress may call upon the States for an explanation of any such controversy as the present; and thus correct an erroneous construction of its own acts by a minority of the States, whilst two thirds of the States are also allowed to compel Congress to call a convention, in case so many should think an amendment necessary for the purpose of checking the unconstitut onal acts of that body. . . . Congress is the creature of the States and the people; but neither the States nor the people are the creatures of Congress. It would be eminently absurd, that the creature should exclusively construe the instrument of its own existence; and therefore this construction was reserved indiscriminately to one or the other of those powers, of which Congress was the joint work; namely, to the people whenever a convention was resorted to, or to the States whenever the operation should be carried on by three fourths.

"Mr. Taylor then proceeded to apply these observations to the threats of war, and the apprehension of civil commotion, 'towards which the resolutions were said to have a tendency. Are the republicans, said he, possessed of fleets and armies? If not, to what could they appeal for defence and support? To nothing, except public opinion. If that should be against them, they must yield; if for them, did gentlemen mean to say, that public will should be assailed . . . And against a State by force? by force? And against a State which was pursuing the only possible and ordinary mode of ascertaining the opinion of two thirds of the States, by declaring its own and asking theirs?"

"He observed that the resolutions had been objected to, as couched in language too strong and offensive; whilst it had also been said on the same side that if the laws were unconstitutional, the

this he replied that he was not surprised to hear the enemies of the resolutions recommending measures which were either feeble or rash. Timidity only served to invite a repetition of injury whilst an unconstitutional resort to arms would not only justly exasperate all good men, but invite those who differed from the friends of the resolutions to the same appeal, and produce a civil war. Hence, those who wished to preserve the peace, as well as the constitution, had rejected both alternatives, and chosen the middle way. They had uttered what they conceived to be truth, and they had pursued a system which was only an appeal to public opinion; because that appeal was warranted by the constitution and by principle."

Mr. Mercer, in reply to Mr. G. K. Taylor,

"The gentleman from Prince George had told the committee that the resolutions were calculated to rouse the people to resistance, to excite the people of Virginia against the federal government. Mr. Mercer did not see how such consequences could result from their adoption. They contained nothing more than the sentiment which the people in many parts of the State had expressed, and which had been conveyed to the legislature in their memorials and resolutions then lying on the table. He would venture to say that an attention to the resolutions from the committee would prove that the qualities attempted to be attached to them by the gentleman could not be found."

"The right of the State government to interfere in the manner proposed by the resolutions, Mr. Mercer contended was clear to his mind. The State believed some of its rights had been invaded by the late acts of the general government, and proposed a remedy whereby to obtain a repeal of them. The plan contained in the resolutions appeared to Mr. Mercer the most advisable. Force was not thought of by any one. . . . The States were equally concerned, as their rights had been equally invaded; and nothing seemed more likely to produce a temper in Congress for a repeal."

"The object (of the friends of the resolutions), in addressing the States, is to obtain a similar declaration of opinion, with respect to several late acts of the general government, . . . . and thereby to obtain a repeal."

Mr. Barbour, likewise, in reply to Mr. G. K. Taylor, said:

"The gentleman from Prince George had remarked that those resolutions invited the people to insurrection and to arms; but, if he could conceive that the consequences foretold would grow out of the measure, he would become its bitterest enemy." . . . . The resolutions people ought to fly to arms and resist them. To were "addressed, not to the people but to the sister States; praying, in a pacific way, their co-operation, in arresting the tendency and effect of unconstitutional laws.

"For his part, he was for using no violence. It was the peculiar blessing of the American people to have redress within their reach, by constitutional and peaceful means."

On the same point, Mr. Daniel spoke as follows:

"If the other States think, with this, that the laws are unconstitutional, the laws will be repealed, and the constitutional question will be settled by this declaration of a majority of the "If, on the contrary, a sufficient majority of the States should declare their opinion, that the constitution gave Congress authority to pass these laws, the constitutional question would still be settled; but an attempt might be made so to amend the constitution as to take from Congress this authority."

And, finally, Mr. Taylor of Caroline, in closing the debate, and in explanation of his former remarks in respect to calling a convention, said:

"He would explain, in a few words, what he had before said. That the plan proposed by the resolutions would not eventuate in war, but might in a convention. He did not admit, or contemplate, that a convention would be called. He only said, that if Congress, upon being addressed to have these laws repealed, should persist, they might, by a concurrence of three fourths of the States, be compelled to call a con-

It is seen, then, by these extracts, that the opposers of the resolutions did not charge upon them, nor their supporters in any manner contend for, any principle like that of nullification; that, on the contrary, the supporters of the resolutions, so far from the absurd proposition that each State could, for itself, annul the acts of Congress, and to that extent stop the operation of the federal government, they did not recognize that power in a majority of the States, nor even in all the States together, by any extraconstitutional combination or process, or to annul a law otherwise than through the prescribed forms of legislative repeal, or constitutional amendment.

The resolutions were, however, vigorously assailed by the federal party throughout the Union, especially in the responses of several of the States; and at the ensuing session of the Virginia legislature, those State responses were sent to a committee, who made an elaborate examination of the resolutions, and of the objec- plated such a doctrine as Nullification; but tions that had been made to them, concluding by a justification of them in all particulars. and reiterating their declarations. This report was adopted by the general assembly and is a part of the contemporaneous and authentic interpretation of the resolutions. The report says:

"A declaration that proceedings of the federa government are not warranted by the constitu tion, is a novelty neither among the citizens. nor among the legislatures of the States.

"Nor can the declarations of either, whether affirming or denying the constitutionality of measures of the federal government, or whether made before or after judicial decisions thereon. be deemed, in any point of view, an assumption of the office of judge. The declarations. in such cases, are expressions of opinion, unaccompanied by any other effect than what they may produce on opinion, by exciting reflection. The expositions of the judiciary, on the other hand, are carried into immediate effect by force.

Again: "In the example given by the State, of declaring the alien and sedition acts to be unconstitutional, and of communicating the declaration to other States, no trace of improper means has appeared. And if the other States had concurred in making a like declaration, supported too, by the numerous applications flowing immediately from the people, it can scarcely be doubted, that these simple means would have been as sufficient, as they are unexcentionable.

"It is no less certain that other means might have been employed, which are strictly within the limits of the constitution. The legislatures of the States might have made a direct representation to Congress, with a view to obtain a rescinding of the two offensive acts; or they might have represented to their respective senators in Congress their wish, that two-thirds thereof would propose an explanatory amendment to the constitution; or two-thirds of themselves, if such had been their option, might, by an application to Congress, have obtained a convention for the same object.

"These several means, though not equally eligible in themselves, nor probably to the States, were all constitutionally open for consideration. And if the general assembly, after declaring the two acts to be unconstitutional. the first and most obvious proceeding on the subject, did not undertake to point out to the other States a choice among the farther measures that might become necessary and proper, the resource will not be misconstrued by liberal minds into any culpable imputation.

These extracts are valuable, not only for their positive testimony that the Resolutions of 1798, nor their authors, had ever contem-also for their precise tion of the powers were really claimed for Rights Republicans distinctly laid down: 1. By a solemn dee lated to operate on th induce the co-operati declarations.

2. To make a dire gress, with a view to complained of.

3. To represent to their wish that twopose an explanatory a tution.

4. By the concurre States to cause Cong for the same object.

These are the ent powers suspected, by and their author and States with reference Their variant charact arrest of acts of Congi tion, is well illustrated in the report betwee like those of the res sory operation of a juc says the report, "tha ry of the United State latures, to declare the constitution," yet the State, or the people, ' nying the constitutio federal government, o after judicial decision deemed in any point the office of the judge tions in such cases a unaccompanied with what they may prod ing reflection; "-whe the judiciary are carr by force."

The Republicans v tions of 1798, never co expositions into effect b ed imparting to them or decrees, or the lega tion; or of arresting b ration of the acts the

Vol. I.—23

to them, concluding in all particulars, rations. This regeneral assembly. poraneous and aue resolutions. The edings of the federa ted by the constitu among the citizens, of the States.

s of either, whether constitutionality of ernment, or whether al decisions thereon, of view, an assump-The declarations, ons of opinion, unacfect than what they y exciting reflection. liciary, on the other diate effect by force." e given by the State. I sedition acts to be nmunicating the dec-10 trace of improper d if the other States like declaration, supous applications flowpeople, it can scarcely simple means would is they are unexcepat other means might ch are strictly within ion. The legislatures nade a direct represenview to obtain a reensive acts; or they their respective senavish, that two-thirds n explanatory amendn; or two-thirds of en their option, might, gress, have obtained a object.

s, though not equally nor probably to the tionally open for congeneral assembly, after to be unconstitutional. ous proceeding on the se to point out to the nong the farther meanecessary and proper, misconstrued by liberal imputation."

raluable, not only for that the Resolutions nors, had ever contemas Nullification; but also for their precise definition and enumeration of the powers which, in the premises, were really claimed for the States, by the State-Rights Republicans of that day. They are all distinctly laid down:

1. By a solemn declaration of opinion, calculated to operate on the public sentiment, and to induce the co-operation of other States in like declarations.

2 To make a direct representation to Congress, with a view to obtain a repeal of the acts complained of.

3. To represent to their respective senators their wish that two-thirds thereof would propose an explanatory amendment to the consti-

4. By the concurrence of two-thirds of the States to cause Congress to call a convention for the same object.

These are the entire list of the remedial powers suspected, by the Resolutions of 1798. and their author and adopters, to exist in the States with reference to federal enactments. Their variant character from the peremptory arrest of acts of Congress proposed by nullification, is well illustrated in the comparison made in the report between expressions of opinion like those of the resolutions, and the compulsory operation of a judicial process. Supposing, says the report, "that it belongs to the judiciary of the United States, and not the State legislatures, to declare the meaning of the federal constitution," yet the declarations either of a by force."

Vol. I.—23

the enemies of the resolutions undertook to say of them, was that they were intemperate, and might mislead the people into disobedience of the laws. This was successfully combated; but had it been true-had the authors of the resolutions even intended any thing so base, it would still have been nothing comparable to the crime of State nullification; of placing the State itself in hostile array to the federal government. Insubordination of individuals may usually be overcome by ordinary judicial process, or by the posse of the county where it occurs; or even if so extensive as to require the peace-officers to be aided by the military, it is still but a matter of police, and in our country cannot endanger the existence of the government. But the array of a State of the Union against the federal authority, is war-a war between powers-both sovereign in their respective spheres—and that could only terminate in the destruction of the one, or the subjugation and abasement of the other.

But neither the one or the other of these crimes was contemplated by the authors of the Resolutions of 1798. The remedies they claimed a right to exercise are all pointed out in the constitution itself; capable of application without disturbing the processes of the law, or suggesting an idea of insubordination; remedies capable of saving the liberties of the people and the rights of the States, and bringing back the federal government to its constitutional track, without a jar or a check to its machinery; remedies felt State or the people, "whether affirming or de- to be sufficient, and by crowning experience nying the constitutionality of measures of the soon proven to be so. It is due to the memory federal government, or whether made before or of those men and those times that their acts after judicial decisions thereon," cannot "be should no longer be micconstrued to cover a deemed in any point of view an assumption of doctrine synonymous with disorganization and the office of the judge;" because, "the declara- civil war. The conduct both of the government, tions in such cases are expressions of opinions and the people, on the occasion of these resoluunaccompanied with any other effect than tions, show how far they were from any nullifywhat they may produce on opinion, by excit-ling or insubordinate intention; and this furing reflection;"—whereas, "the expositions of inishes us with another convincing proof of the the judiciary are carried into immediate effect contemporaneous interpretation of the resolutions. So far (as Mr. Madison justly says)* The Republicans who adopted the Resolu- was the State of Virginia from countenancing the tions of 1798, never contemplated carrying their inullifying doctrine, that the occasion was viewed expositions into effect by force; never contemplat- as a proper one for exemplifying its devotion to ed imparting to them the character of decisions, public order, and acquiescence in laws which it or decrees, or the legal determination of a ques- | deemed unconstitutional, while those laws were tion; or of arresting by means of them the ope- not repealed. The language of the Governor of ration of the acts they condemned. The worst | • Selections from the correspondence of Madison, p. 399.

Madison; in May and June of 1800, will attest the principles and feelings which dictated the course pursued on the occasion, and whether the people understood the resolutions in any inflammatory or vicious sense.

On the 15th May, 1800, Governor Monroe writes to Mr. Madison as follows:

"Besides, I think there is cause to suspect the sedition law will be carried into effect in this State at the approaching federal court, and I ought to be there (Richmond) to aid in preventing trouble. . . . . . I think it possible an idea may be entertained of opposition, and by means whereof the fair prospect of the republican party may be overcast. But in this they are deceived, as certain characters in Richmond and some neighboring counties are already warned of their danger, so that an attempt to excite a hotwater insurrection will fail."

And on the 4th of June, 1800, he wrote again, as follows:

"The conduct of the people on this occasion was exemplary, and does them the highest honor. They seemed aware that the crisis demanded of them a proof of their respect for law and order, and resolved to show they were equal to it. I am satisfied a different conduct was expected from them, for every thing that could was done to provoke it. It only remains that this business be closed on the part of the people, as it has been so far acted; that the judge, after finishing his career, go off in peace, without experiencing the slightest insult from any one; and that this will be the case I have no doubt."

Governor Monroe was correct in the supposition that the sedition law would be carried into effect, at the approaching session of the federal court, and he was also right in the anticipation that the people would know how to distinguish between the exercise of means to procure the repeal of an act, and the exercise of violence to stop its operation. The act was enforced; was "carried into effect" in their midst, and a fellow-citizen incarcerated under its odious provisions, without a suggestion of official or other interference. Thus we have the contemporaneous interpretation of the resolutions exemplified and set at rest, by the most powerful of arguments: by the impressive fact, that when the public indignation was at its height, subsequent to the resolutions of 1798, and subsequent to the report of '99, and when both had been universally disseminated and read, and they had had, with the debates upon them, their entire influ- these resolutions, derived from the words of the State (Mr. James Monroe), in a letter to Mr. ence on the public mind; that at that moment the act of Congress against which the resolutions were chiefly aimed, and the indignation of the community chiefly kindled, was then and there carried into execution, and that in a form-the unjust deprivation of a citizen of his libertythe most obnoxious to a free people, and the most likely to rouse their opposition; yet quietly and peaceably done, by the simple, ordinary process of the federal court. This fact, so creditable to the people of Virginia, is thus noted in the annual message of Governor Monroe, to the general assembly, at their next meeting, December.

"In connection with this subject [of the resolutions] it is proper to add, that, since your last session, the sedition law, one of the acts complained of, has been carried into effect in this commonwealth by the decision of a federal court, I notice this event, not with a view of censuring or criticising it. The transaction has gone to the world, and the impartial will judge of it as it deserves. I notice it for the purpose of remarking that the decision was executed with the same order and tranquil submission on the part of the people, as could have been shown by them on a similar occasion, to any the most necessary, constitutional and popoular acts of the government.

Governor Monroe then adds his official and personal testimony to the proper intent and character of the proceedings of '98, '9, as follows:

"The general assembly and the good people of this commonwealth have acquitted themselves to their own consciences, and to their brethren in America, in support of a cause which they deem a national one, by the stand which they made, and the sentiments they expressed of these acts of the general government; but they have looked for a change in that respect to a change in the public opinion, which ought to be free; not to measures of violence, discord and disunion, which they abhor."

CHAPTER LXXXVIII.

VIRGINIA RESOLUTIONS OF 1798:-DISABUSED OF NULLIFICATION, BY THEIR AUTHOR.

VINDICATED upon their words, and upon contemporaneous interpretation, another vindication, superfluous in point of proof, but due to those whose work has been perverted, awaits their author (after see to absolve himself an criminal absurdity att The contemporary tions of 1798 said all presented them in ev severing, keen and en discover or imagine. fully repelled the ch them; but could not v ing the modern doctri that doctrine had not the ingenuity of their a of that ground of att thor, however-the il still alive, when this r lutions had been inves quoted to sustain do disorganization and dis in retirement on his sense of propriety hir the prestige and influe politics of the day; b watched with anxious current of public affa stinctive horror both tempted practice of Nu econnection of his na gination of it. He h contest; but his sentir private correspondence distinguished men of and of all parties, was the commencement of ment down to the tim at length, and argumer a brief indignant disc and unequivocally. though private, were Madison's lifetime, esp Mr. Edward Everett; der have recently bee the liberality of a pati (Mr. J. Maguire), but tion, and hence not * Mr. Madison did not in Virginia legislature. He wa 1738. The resolutions were line. Mr. Madison, however author, and in a letter to ? March, 1831, he distinctly av and reporter of the Report a.

They are a complete s

hat at that moment, which the resolutions indignation of the was then and there that in a form—the izen of his liberty—people, and the most cion; yet quietly and ple, ordinary process fact, so creditable to us noted in the an-Monroe, to the genemeeting, December subject [of the resothat, since your last one of the acts comed into effect in this sion of a federal court. h a view of censuring neaction has gone to all will judge of it as r the purpose of revas executed with the lbmission on the part been shown by them y the most necessary, r acts of the govern-adds his official and e proper intent and s of '98, '9, as follows:

and the good people acquitted themselves and to their brethren f a cause which they he stand which they s they expressed of overnment; but they in that respect to a n, which ought to be violence, discord and r."

XXXVIII.

THEIR AUTHOR

vords, and upon conion, another vindicaof proof, but due to een perverted, awaits 1 from the words of their author (after seeing their perversion); and to absolve himself and his associates from the criminal absurdity attributed to them.

The contemporary opponents of the Resolutions of 1798 said all the evil of them, and represented them in every odious light, that persevering, keen and enlightend opposition could discover or imagine. Their defenders successfully repelled the charges then made against them: but could not vindicate them from intending the modern doctrine of Nullification, because that doctrine had not then been invented, and the ingenuity of their adversaries did not conceive of that ground of attack. Their venerable author, however—the illustrious Madison*—was still alive, when this new perversion of his resolutions had been invented, and when they were quoted to sustain doctrines synonymous with disorganization and disunion. He was still alive. in retirement on his farm. His modesty and sense of propriety hindered him from carrying the prestige and influence of his name into the politics of the day; but his vigorous mind still watched with anxious and patriotic interest the current of public affairs, and recoiled with instinctive horror both from the doctrine and attempted practice of Nullification, and the attempteleconnection of his name and acts with the origination of it. He held aloof from the public contest: but his sentiments were no secret. His private correspondence, embracing in its range distinguished men of all sections of the Union and of all parties, was full of the subject, from the commencement of the Nullification excitement down to the time of his death: sometimes at length, and argumentatively; sometimes with a brief indignant disclaimer; always earnestly and unequivocally. Some of these letters, although private, were published during Mr. Madison's lifetime, especially an elaborate one to Mr. Edward Everett; and many of the remainder have recently been put into print, through the liberality of a patrotic citizen of Washington (Mr. J. Maguire), but only for private distribution, and hence not accessible to the public. They are a complete storehouse of material, not only for the vindication of Madison and his compeers, from the doctrine of Nullification, but of argument and reasons against Nullification and every kindred suggestion.

* Mr. Madison did not introduce the Resolutions into the Viccinia legislature. He was not a member of that body in 1798. The resolutions were reported by John Taylor, of Caroline. Mr. Madison, howeyers was always reputed to be their author, and in a letter to Mr. James Robertson, written in March, 1831, he distinctly avows it. He was both the author and reporter of the Report and Resolution of 1799-1800.

From the letter to Mr. Everett, published in the North American Review, shortly after it was written (August, 1830), the following extracts are taken:

"It (the constitution of the United States) was formed by the States, that is, by the people in each of the States, acting in their highest sovereign capacity; and formed consequently by the same authority which formed the State constitutions.

"Being thus derived from the same source as the constitutions of the States, it has, within each State, the same authority as the constitution of the State, and is as much a constitution in the strict sense of the term within its prescribed sphere, as the constitutions of the States are within their respective spheres; but with this obvious and essential difference, that being a compact among the States in their highest sovereign capacity, and constituting the people thereof one people for certain purposes, it cannot be altered or annulled at the will of the States individually, as the constitution of a State may be at its individual will."

"Nor is the government of the United States, created by the constitution, less a government in the strict sense of the term, within the sphere of its powers, than the governments created by the constitutions of the States are, within their several spheres. It is like them organized into legislative, executive and judiciary departments. It operates, like them, directly on persons and things. And, like them, it has at command a physical force for executing the powers committed to it.

"Between these different constitutional governments, the one operating in all the States, the others operating separately in each, with the aggregate powers of government divided between them, it could not escape attention, that controversies would arise concerning the boundaries of jurisdiction."

"That to have left a final decision, in such cases, to each of the States, could not fail to make the constitution and laws of the United States different in different States, was obvious, and not less obvious that this diversity of independent decisions, must altogether distract the government of the Union, and speedily put an end to the Union itself."

"To have made the decision under the authority of the individual States, co-ordinate in all cases, with decisions under the authority of the United States, would unavoidably produce collisions incompatible with the peace of society."

"To have referred every clashing decision, under the two authorities, for a final decision, to the States as parties to the constitution, would be attended with delays, with inconveniences and expenses, amounting to a prohibition of the expedient."

After thus stating, with other powerful reasons, why all those fanciful and impracticable theories were rejected in the constitution, the letter proceeds to show what the constitution does adopt and rely on, "as a security of the rights and powers of the States," namely:

"1. The responsibility of the senators and representatives in the legislature of the United States to the legislatures and people of the States: 2. The responsibility of the President to the people of the United States; and, 3. The liability of the executive and judicial functionaries of the United States to impeachment by the representatives of the people of the States in one branch of the legislature of the United States, and trial by the representatives of the States, in the other branch."

And then, in order to mark how complete these provisions are for the security of the States, shows that while the States thus hold the functionaries of the United States to these several responsibilities, the State functionaries, on the other hand, in their appointment and responsibility, are "altogether independent of the agency or authority of the United States."

Of the doctrine of nullification, "the expedient lately advanced," the letter says:

"The distinguished names and high authorities which appear to have asserted and given a practical scope to this doctrine, entitle it to a respect which it might be difficult otherwise to feel for it."

"The resolutions of Vicinia, as vindicated in the report on them, will be found entitled to an exposition, showing a consistency in their parts, and an inconsistency of the whole with the doctrine under consideration."

bly, violated the constitution of the United States, and not that the addition of them could be annual the acts or sanction a resistance of them annual the acts or sanction a resistance of them doctrine under consideration."

The resolution was expressly declaratory, and proceeding from the legislature only, which was

"That the legislature could not have intendod to sanction any such doctrine is to be inferdeclaratory of opinion only."

red from the debates in the House of Delegates The tenor of the debates, which were ably conducted, discloses no reference whatever to a constitutional right in an individual State to arrest by force a law of the United States."

"If any further light on the subject could be needed, a very strong one is reflected in the answers to the resolutions, by the States which protested against them. . . . . Had the resolutions been regarded as avowing and maintaining a right, in an individual State, to arrest by force the execution of a law of the United States, it must be presumed that it would have been a conspicuous object of their denunciation."

In a letter to Mr. Joseph C. Cabell, May 31, 1830, Mr. Madison says:

"I received yesterday yours of the 26th. Having never concealed my opinions of the nullifying doctrines of South Carolina, I did not regard the allusion to it in the Whig, especially as the manner of the allusion showed that I did not obtrude it. . . . . I have latterly been drawn into a correspondence with an advocate of the doctrine, which led me to a review of it to some extent, and particularly to a vindication of the proceedings of Virginia in 1798, '99, against the misuse made of them. That you may see the views I have taken of the aberrations of South Carolina, I enclose you an extract."

And in a letter to Mr. Daniel Webster, written a few days previously, he uses nearly the same language; as also in a letter in February, 1830, to Mr. Trist.

To Mr. James Robertson, March 27, 1831, Mr. Madison writes as follows:

"The veil which was originally over the draft of the resolutions offered in 1798 to the Virginia Assembly having been long since removed, I may say, in answer to your inquiries, that it was penned by me."

"With respect to the terms following the term 'unconstitutional,' viz., 'not law, but null, void, and of no force or effect,' which were stricken out of the seventh resolution, my memory cannot say positively whether they were or were not in the original draft, and no copy of it appears to have been retained. On the presumption that they were in the draft as it went from me, I am confident that they must have been regarded only as giving accumulated emphasis to the declaration, that the alien and sedition acts had, in the opinion of the assembly, violated the constitution of the United States, and not that the addition of them could annul the acts or sanction a resistance of them. The resolution was expressly declaratory, and, proceeding from the legislature only, which was not even a party to the constitution, could be declaratory of onlying only."

To Joseph C. Cabell, Sept

"I congratulate you on stores you to the public eservices will be valuable, paing the constitution and Un doctrines which assail them tion seems to be generally ginia, by those who had moit. But it still flourishes in it sprung up."

"I know not whence the that I concurred in the doc a State could not nullify a had a right to secede from spring from the same poison

To Mr. N. P. Trist, Decei

"I cannot see the advanterance of South Carolina thority of the Virginia procast asserting a right in a sin an act of the United States the fairness of attempting an intention which is contrariety of contradictory proposition of contradictory proposition of the contradictory proposition of the procure of the procure of the proposition of the procure of the procure

"To view the doctrine in it must be recollected that it single State to stop the ends, until a convention of a brought about by a process tain time; and, finally, in the formed, a vote of seven State veto, to give it a prevalence jority of seventeen States, terous and anarchical pretishadow of countenance in the well that there is not, for it such a deadly poison in it, rube sure of lasting a year."

To Mr. C. E. Haynes, Au

"In the very crippled an health, I cannot undertake a your inquiries, nor should I if you have seen my lette: August, 1830, in which the ginia, in 1798–29, were exp dectrine of nullification adv "The distinction is obv interpositions on the part ( unjustifiable acts of the fed are within the provisions a stitution. These provisions do not embrace the null claimed in South Carolina, claimed in South Carolina, single State, and ends with minority of States over a over seventeen; a federal 1 cess, being arrested within and, if a revenue law, frustr States." se of Delegates were ably conwhatever to a lual State to ar-States."

subject could be ected in the ane States which . . Had the wing and main-State, to arrest v of the United at it would have their denuncia-

Cabell, May 31,

rs of the 26th. nions of the nulrolina, I did not Whig, especially nowed that I did I have latterly nce with an add me to a review icularly to a vin-Virginia in 1798. of them. That aken of the abericlose you an exel Webster, writuses nearly the ter in February,

March 27, 1831,

lly over the draft 08 to the Virginia since removed, I inquiries, that it

ns following the not law but null. ect,' which were resolution, my ly whether they inal draft, and no en retained. On ere in the draft as nt that they must ving accumulated nat the alien and ion of the assemn of the United ion of them could esistance of them declaratory, and, e only, which was stitution, could be To Joseph C. Cabell, Sept. 16, 1831:

"I congratulate you on the event which restores you to the public councils, where your services will be valuable, particularly in defending the constitution and Union against the false doctrines which assail them. That of nullification seems to be generally abandoned in Virginia, by those who had most leaning towards t. But it still flourishes in the hot-bed where it sprung up."

"I know not whence the idea could proceed that I concurred in the doctrine, that although a State could not nullify a law of the Union, it had a right to secede from the Union. Both spring from the same poisonous root.

To Mr. N. P. Trist, December, 1831:

"I cannot see the advantage of this perseverance of South Carolina in claiming the authority of the Virginia proceedings in 1798, '99, as asserting a right in a single State to nullify an act of the United States. Where, indeed, is the fairness of attempting to palm on Virginia an intention which is contradicted by such a variety of contradictory proofs; which has at no intervening period, received the slightest countenance from her, and which with one voice she now disclaims?"

"To view the doctrine in its true character, it must be recollected that it asserts a right in a single State to stop the execution of a federal law, until a convention of the States could be brought about by a process requiring an uncertain time; and, finally, in the convention, when formed, a vote of seven States, if in favor of the veto, to give it a prevalence over the vast majority of seventeen States. For this preposterous and anarchical pretension there is not a shadow of countenance in the constitution; and well that there is not, for it is certain that, with such a deadly poison in it, no constitution could be sure of lasting a year."

To Mr. C. E. Haynes, August 26, 1832:

"In the very crippled and feeble state of my health, I cannot undertake an extended answer to your inquiries, nor should I suppose it necessary if you have seen my letter to Mr. Everett, in August, 1830, in which the proceedings of Virginia, in 1798-'99, were explained, and the novel doctrine of nullification adverted to.

"The distinction is obvious between such interpositions on the part of the States against unjustifiable acts of the federal government as are within the provisions and forms of the constitution. These provisions and forms certainly do not embrace the nullifying process prosingle State, and ends with the ascendency of a minority of States over a majority; of seven over seventeen; a federal law, during the process, being arrested within the nullifying State; and, if a revenue law, frustrated through all the

To Mr. Trist, December 23, 1832:

"If one State can, at will, withdraw from the others, the others can, at will, withdraw from her, and turn her nolentem volentem out of the Union. Until of late, there is not a State that would have abhorred such a doctrine more than South Carolina, or more dreaded an application of it to herself. The same may be said of the doctrine of nullification which she now preaches as the only faith by which the Union can be saved."

In a letter to Mr. Joseph C. Cabell, December 28, 1832:

"It is not probable that (in the adoption of the resolutions of 1798), such an idea as the South Carolina nullification had ever entered the thoughts of a single member, or even that of a citizen of South Carolina herself."

To Andrew Stevenson, February 4, 1833:

"I have received your communication of the 29th tltimo, and have read it with much pleasure. It presents the doctrine of nullification and secession in lights that must confound, if failing to convince their patrons. You have done well in rescuing the proceedings of Virginia in 1798-'99, from the many misconstructions and misapplications of them.

"Of late, attempts are observed to shelter the heresy of secession under the case of expatriation, from which it essentially differs. The expatriating party removes only his person and his movable property, and does not incommode those whom he leaves. A seceding State mutilates the domain, and disturbs the whole system from which it separates itself. Pushed to the extent in which the right is sometimes asserted, it might break into fragments every single community."

To Mr. Stevenson, February 10, 1833, in reference to the South Carolina nullifying ordinance:

"I consider a successful resistance to the laws as now attempted, if not immediately mortal to the Union, as at least a mortal wound to it."

To "a Friend of the Union and State rights,"

"It is not usual to answer communications without proper names to them. But the ability and motives disclosed in the essays induce me to say, in compliance with the wish expressed, that I do not consider the proceedings of Virginia, in 1798-'99, as countenancing the doctrine claimed in South Carolina, which begins with a that a State may, at will, secede from its constitutional compact with the other States."

To Mr. Joseph C. Cabell, April 1, 1833:

"The attempt to prove me a nullifier, by a misconstruction of the resolutions of 1798-199, though so often and so lately corrected, was, I observe, renewed some days ago in the 'Richmond Whig,' by an inference from an erasure. in the House of Delegates from one of those resolutions, of the words 'are null, void and of no effect,' which followed the word 'unconsti-tutional.' These words, though synonymous with 'unconstitutional,' were alleged by the critic to mean nullification; and being, of course, ascribed to me, I was, of course, a nullifier. It seems not to have occurred, that if the insertion of the words could convict me of being a nullifier, the erasure of them (unanimous, I believe), by the legislature, was the strongest of protests against the doctrine. . . . The vote, in that case seems not to have engaged the attention due to it. It not merely deprives South Carolina of the authority of Virginia, on which she has relied and exulted so much in support of her cause, but turns that authority pointedly against her."

From a memorandum "On Nullification," written in 1835-'36:

"Although the legislature of Virginia declared, at a late session, almost unanimously, that South Carolina was not supported in her doctrine of nullification by the resolutions of 1798, it appears that those resolutions are still appealed to as expressly or constructively favoring the doctrine."

"And what is the text in the proceedings of Virginia which this spurious doctrine of nullification claims for its patronage? It is found in the third of the resolutions of 1798."

"Now is there any thing here from which a 'single' State can infer a right to arrest or annul an act of the general government, which it may deem unconstitutional? So far from it, that the obvious and proper inference precludes such a right."

"In a word, the nullifying claims, if reduced to practice, instead of being the conservative principle of the constitution, would necessarily, and it may be said, obviously, be a deadly poison."

"The true question, therefore, is, whether there be a 'constitutional' right in a single State to nullify a law of the United States? We have seen the absurdity of such a claim, in its naked and suicidal form. Let us turn to it, as modified by South Carolina, into a right in every State to resist within itself the execution of a federal aw, deemed by it to be unconstitutional, and to demand a convention of the States to decide the question of constitutionality, the annulment of the law to continue in the mean time, and to be permanent unless three fourths of the States concur in overruling the annulment.

"Thus, during the temporary nullification of the law, the results would be the same as those proceeding from an unqualified nullification, and the result of a convention might be that seven out of twenty-four States might make the temporary results permanent. It follows, that any State which could obtain the concurrence of six others, might abrogate any law of the United States whatever, and give to the constitution, constructively, any shape they pleased, in opposition to the construction and will of the other seventeen.* Every feature of the constitution might thus be successively changed; and after a scene of unexampled confusion and distraction, what had been unanimously agreed to as a whole, would not, as a whole, be agreed to by a single party."

To this graphic picture of the disorders which even the first stages of nullification would necessarily produce, drawn when the graphic limner was in the eighty-sixth and last year of his life, the following warning pages, written only a few months earlier, may be properly appended:

"What more dangerous than nullification or more evident than the progress it continues to make, either in its original shape or in the disguises it assumes? Nullification has the effect of putting powder under the constitution and Union, and a match in the hand of every party to blow them up at pleasure. And for its progress, hearken to the tone in which it is now preached; cast your eyes on its increasing minorities in most of the Southern States, without a decrease in any one of them. Look at Virginia herself, and read in the gazettes, and in the proceedings of popular meetings, the figure which the anarchical principle now makes, in contrast with the scouting reception given to it but a short time ago.

"It is not probable that this offspring of the discontents of South Carolina will ever approach success in a majority of the States. But a susceptibility of the contagion in the Southern States is visible; and the danger not to be concealed, that the sympathy arising from known causes, and the inculcated impression of a permanent incompatibility of interests between the South and the North, may put it in the power of popular leaders, aspiring to the highest stations, to unite the South, on some critical occasion, in a course that will end in creating a new theatre of great though inferior extent. In pursuing this course, the first and most obvious step is nullification, the next, secession, and the last, a farewell separation. How near has this course been lately exemplified! and the danger of its recurrence, in the same or some other quarter, may be increased by an increase of restless aspirants, and by the increasing impracti-

* The above was written when the number of the States was twenty-four. Now, when there are thirty-one States, the preportion would be eight to twenty-three. I that is, that a single State nullifying, the nullification would hold good till a covention were called, and then if the nullifying State could procure seven others to join, the nullification would become absolute—the eight States overruling the twenty-three.

cability of retaining in the cemented section against deed, happen, that a reti abroad, or a revived apprel home, may aid in binding t tical system, or that the ge mercial ligatures may hav the present discord of in North and the South may diversity in the application mutual advantage of a safe change of the different pro ferent sections. All this m the exception of foreign But, in the mean time, loca bitious leaders may be bu finding or creating occasion experiment of breaking a n vase* than the British en parts which a miracle only

Incidentally, Mr. Madisc vindicates also his compeer Mr. Monroe. In- the letter May 31, 1830, he says:

"You will see, in vol. ii Jefferson's Correspondence, Nicholas, proving that he ha the Kentucky resolutions, o word 'nullification' is foun of that State, in 1798, whi him, and have been republicedings of Virginia, do not equivalent word."

In the letter to Mr. Trist, after developing at some lencies and fatuity of the "nutive," Mr. Madison says:

"Yet this has boldly soug the name of Mr. Jefferson, h to Mr. Cartwright, he held of the States as, with us, a p cases to be decided in Europ Who can believe that Mr. Jo a convention summoned at single State, with an interreg liberations; and, above all, v sion subjecting nearly thr fourth? No man's creed w such an inversion of the re things."

In a letter to Mr. Townse lina, December 18, 1831:

"You ask 'whether Mr. J the author of the Kentuc 1799;' [in which the word though not in the sense of S lification.] The inference t

* See Franklin's letter to Lor

ws, that any rrence of six the United constitution, sed, in oppoof the other constitution d; and after d distraction, eed to as a rreed to by a orders which would necesaphic limner ar of his life, en only a few pended:

illification, or continues to r in the dishas the effect has the effect stitution and f every party d for its proich it is now nereasing milates, without Look at Virzettes, and in ggs, the figure ow makes, in on given to it spring of the ever approach But a susthe Southern not to be confrom known ion of a pers between the in the power highest stacritical occareating a new extent. In most obvious ssion, and the near has this nd the danger or some other icrease of restsing impracti-

or of the States was one States, the pronat is, that a single old good till a conifying State could ion would become wenty-three. cability of retaining in the Union a large and cemented section against its will. It may indeed happen, that a return of danger from ahroad, or a revived apprehension of danger at home, may aid in binding the States in one political system, or that the geographical and com-mercial ligatures may have that effect, or that the present discord of interests between the North and the South may give way to a less diversity in the application of labor, or to the mutual advantage of a safe and constant interchange of the different products of labor in different sections. All this may happen, and with the exception of foreign hostility, hoped for. But, in the mean time, local prejudices and ambitious leaders may be but too successful in finding or creating occasions for the nullifying experiment of breaking a more beautiful China vase* than the British empire ever was, into parts which a miracle only could reunite."

Incidentally, Mr. Madison, in these letters, vindicates also his compeers, Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Monroe. In-the letter to Mr. Cabell, of May 31, 1830, he says:

"You will see, in vol. iii., page 429, of Mr. Jefferson's Correspondence, a letter to W. C. Nicholas, proving that he had nothing to do with the Kentucky resolutions, of 1799, in which the word 'nullification' is found. The resolutions of that State, in 1798, which were drawn by him, and have been republished with the proceedings of Virginia, do not contain this or any equivalent word."

In the letter to Mr. Trist, of December, 1831, after developing at some length the inconsistencies and fatuity of the "nullification prerogative," Mr. Madison says:

"Yet this has boldly sought a sanction, under the name of Mr. Jefferson, because, in his letter to Mr. Cartwright, he held out a convention of the States as, with us, a peaceful remedy, in cases to be decided in Europe by intestine wars. Who can believe that Mr. Jefferson referred to a convention summoned at the pleasure of a single State, with an interregnum during its deliberations; and, above all, with a rule of decision subjecting nearly three fourths to one fourth? No man's creed was more opposed to such an inversion of the republican order of things."

In a letter to Mr. Townsend of South Carolina, December 18, 1831:

"You ask 'whether Mr. Jefferson was really the author of the Kentucky resolutions, of 1799;' [in which the word 'nullify' is used, though not in the sense of South Carolina nullification.] The inference that he was not is as conclusive as it is obvious, from his letter to Col. Wilson Cary Nicholas, of September 5, 1799, in which he expressly declines, for reasons stated, preparing any thing for the legislature of that year.

"That he (Mr. Jefferson) ever asserted a right in a single State to arrest the execution of an act of Congress—the arrest to be valid and permanent, unless reversed by three fourths of the States—is countenanced by nothing known to have been said or done by him. In his letter to Major Cartwright, he refers to a convention as a peaceable remedy for conflicting claims of power in our compound government; but, whether he alluded to a convention as prescribed by the constitution, or brought about by any other mode, his respect for the will of majorities, as the vital principle of republican government, makes it certain that he could not have meant a convention in which a minority of seven States was to prevail over seventeen, either in amending or expounding the constitution."

In the letter (before quoted) to Mr. Trist, December 23, 1832:

"It is remarkable how closely the nullifiers, who make the name of Mr. Jefferson the pedestal for their colossal heresy, shut their eyes and lips whenever his authority is ever so clearly and emphatically against them. You have noticed what he says in his letters to Monroe and Carrington, pages 43 and 302, vol. ii., with respect to the powers of the old Congress to coerce delinquent States, and his reasons for preferring for the purpose a naval to a military force; and, moreover, that it was not necessary to find a right to coerce in the federal articles, that being inherent in the nature of a compact."

In another letter to Mr. Trist, dated August 25, 1834:

"The letter from Mr. Monroe to Mr. Jefferson, of which you inclose an extract, is important. I have one from Mr. Monroe, on the same occasion, more in detail, and not less emphatic in its anti-nullifying language."

In the notes "On Nullification," written in 1835-'6:

"The amount of this modified right of nullification is, that a single State may arrest the operation of a law of the United States, and institute a process which is to terminate in the ascendency of a minority over a large majority. And this new-fangled theory is attempted to be fathered on Mr. Jefferson, the apostle of republicanism, and whose own words declare, that 'acquiescence in the decision of the majority is the vital principle of it.' Well may the friends of Mr. Jefferson disclaim any sanction to it, or to any constitutional right of nullification from his opinions."

* See Franklin's letter to Lord Howe, in 1776.

In a paper drawn by Mr. Madison, in September, 1829, when his anxieties began first to be disturbed by the portentous approach of the nullification doctrine, he concludes with this earnest admonition, appropriate to the time when it was written, and not less so to the preent time, and to posterity:

"In all the views that may be taken of questions between the State governments and the general government, the awful consequences of a final rupture and dissolution of the Union should never for a moment be lost sight of. Such a prospect must be deprecated—must be shuddered at by every friend of his country, to liberty, to the happiness of man. For, in the event of a dissolution of the Union, an impossibility of ever renewing it is brought home to every mind by the difficulties encountered in establishing it. The propensity of all communities to divide, when not pressed into a unity by external dangers, is a truth well understood. There is no instance of a people inhabiting even a small island, if remote from foreign danger, and sometimes in spite of that pressure, who are not divided into alien, rival, hostile tribes. The happy union of these States is a wonder; their constitution a miracle; their example the hope of liberty throughout the world. Wo to the ambition that would meditate the destruction of either."

These extracts, voluminous as they are, are far from exhausting the abundant material which these admirable writings of Mr. Madison contain, on the topic of nullification. They come to us, for our admonition and guidance, with the solemnity of a voice from the grave; and I leave them, without comment, to be pondered in the hearts of his countrymen. Notwithstanding the advanced age and growing bodily infirmities of Mr. Madison, at the time when these letters were written, his mind was never more vigorous nor more luminous. Every generous mind must sympathize with him, in this necessity, in which he felt himself in his extreme age, and when done, not only with the public affairs of the country, but nearly done with all the affairs of the world, to defend himself and associates from the attempt to fasten upon him and them, in spite of his denials, a criminal and anarchical design-wicked in itself, and subversive of the government which he had labored so hard to found, and utterly destructive to that particular feature considered the crowning merit of the constitution; and which wise men and patriotic had specially devised to save our Union from the fate of all leagues. We sympathize with view of their duty, and believe it to be the only

him in such a necessity. We should feel fo. any man, in the most ordinary case, to whose words a criminal intention should be imputed in defiance of his disclaimers; but, in the case of Mr. Madison—a man so modest, so pure, sa just-of such dignity and gravity, both for his age, his personal qualities, and the exalted offices which he had held; and in a case which went to civil war, and to the destruction of a government of which he was one of the most faithful and zealous founders-in such a case, an attempt to force upon such a man a meaning which he disavows, becomes not only outrageous and odious, but criminal and impious. And if, after the authentic disclaimers which he has made in his advanced age, and which are now published any one continues to attribute this heresy to him, such a person must be viewed by the public as having a mind that has lost its balance! or, as having a heart void of social duty, and fatally bent on a crime, the guilt of which must be thrown upon the tenants of the tombspeechless, but not helpless! for, every just man must feel their cause his own! and rush to a defence which public duty, private honor, patriotism, filial affection, and gratitude to benefactors impose on every man (born wheresoever he may have been) that enjoys the blessings of the government which their labors gave us.

CHAPTER LXXXIX.

THE AUTHOR'S OWN VIEW OF THE NATURE OF OUR GOVERNMENT, AS BEING A UNION IN CON-TRADISTINCTION TO A LEAGUE: PRESENTED IN A SUBSEQUENT SPEECH ON MISSOURI RESO-

I po not discuss these resolutions at this time. That discussion is no part of my present object. I speak of the pledge which they contain and call it a mistake; and say, that whatever may be the wishes or the opinions of the people of Missouri on the subject of the extension or nonextention of slavery to the Territories, they have no idea of resisting any act of Congress on the subject. They abide the law, when it comes, be it what it may, subject to the decision of the ballot-box and the judiciary.

I concur with the people of Missouri in this course consistent with the te of our constitution, and the c save this Union from the fate eracies which have successive disappeared in the history of among the members, and no head, has been the rock on v federacies have split. The aut form of government knew t rock, and they endeavored to They formed a Union-not a legislature to act upon person and they provided peaceful re questions which could arise 1 and the government. They judiciary to execute the federa to be constitutional; and pop peal them when found to be ba government in which the law a and not the sword, was to dec they looked upon the first re for the decision of such ques of the Union.

The old confederation wa legislature acting upon sove power to enforce its decrees, except at the will of the part less for government, and a union. It was to escape from tottering government that th tion was formed; and no less t the federalist-from the tent -were devoted to this defect and the necessity of the new some extracts from these n product of Hamilton and Mac difference between the league ed and the Union which we for of the former and the benefits it may be seen that the resol ral assembly of Missouri, if c conclusions, carry back this I of the confederation-make and the sword the arbiter be head and its members.

Mr. B. then read as follows "The great and radical vic of the existing confederation, of legislation for States or go corporate or collective capaci distinguished from the individ consist. Though this princ ould feel fo. se, to whose be imputed in the case , so pure, so both for his xalted offices which went of a governmost faithful e, an attempt ing which he rageous and And if, after has made in w published. is heresy to by the pubits balance! ial duty, and which must the tombvery just man nd rush to a honor, patri-

E NATURE OF

XIX.

e to benefac-

wheresoever blessings of

gave us.

NION IN CON-: PRESENTED ISSOURI RESOat this time.

resent object. contain, and vhatever may the people of ension or nonritories, they f Congress on when it comes, lecision of the issouri in this to be the only

course consistent with the terms and intention of our constitution, and the only one which can save this Union from the fate of all the confeddisappeared in the history of nations. Anarchy among the members, and not tyranny in the head, has been the rock on which all such conrock, and they endeavored to provide against it. and they provided peaceful remedies for all the indiciary to execute the federal laws when found to be constitutional; and popular elections to repeal them when found to be bad. They formed a government in which the law and the popular will, and not the sword, was to decide questions; and they looked upon the first resort to the sword for the decision of such questions as the death of the Union.

The old confederation was a league, with a legislature acting upon sovereignties, without power to enforce its decrees, and without union except at the will of the parties. It was powerless for government, and a rope of sand for union. It was to escape from that helpless and tottering government that the present constitution was formed; and no less than ten numbers of the federalist—from the tenth to the twentieth -were devoted to this defect of the old system, and the necessity of the new one. I will read product of Hamilton and Madison-to show the difference between the league which we abandonhead and its members.

Mr. B. then read as follows:

corporate or collective capacities, and as contra- States—they speak in these terms: distinguished from the individuals of which they

through all the powers delegated to the Union. yet it prevades and governs those on which the efficacy of the rest depends. The consequence eracies which have successively appeared and of this is, that, though in theory constitutionally binding on the members of the Union, yet in practice they are mere recommendations, which the States observe or disregard at their option. federacies have split. The authors of our present | Tovernment implies the power of making laws. form of government knew the danger of this It is essential to the idea of a law that it be attended with a sanction, or, in other words, a They formed a Union-not a league-a federal penalty or punishment for disobedience. This legislature to act upon persons, not upon States; penalty, whatever it may be, can only be inflicted in two ways-by the agency of the courts questions which could arise between the people and ministers of justice, or by military force; by and the government. They provided a federal the coercion of the magistracy, or by the coercion of arms. The first kind can evidently apply only to men; the last kind must of necessity be employed against bodies politic, or communities, or States. It is evident there is no process of a court by which their observance of the laws can, in the last resort, be enforced. Sentences may be denounced against them for violations of their duty; but these sentences can only be carried into execution by the sword. In an association where the general authority is confined to the collective bodies of the communities that compose it, every breach of the laws must involve a state of war; and military execution must become the only instrument of civil obedience. Such a state of things can certainly not deserve the name of government, nor would any prudent man choose to commit his happiness to it."

Of the certain destruction of the Union when some extracts from these numbers—the joint the sword is once drawn between the members of a Union and their head, they speak thus:

"When the sword is once drawn, the passions ed and the Union which we formed—the dangers of men observe no bounds of moderation. The of the former and the benefits of the latter—that suggestions of wounded pride, the instigations it may be seen that the resolutions of the gene- of irritated resentment, would be apt to carry ral assembly of Missouri, if carried out to their the States, against which the arms of the Union conclusions, carry back this Union to the league were exerted, to any extremes necessary to of the confederation-make it a rope of sand, avenge the affront, or to avoid the disgrace of suband the sword the arbiter between the federal mission. The first war of this kind would probably terminate in a dissolution of the Union."

Of the advantage and facility of the working "The great and radical vice, in the structure of the federal system, and its peaceful, efficient, of the existing confederation, is in the principle and harmonious operation—if the federal laws of legislation for States or governments, in their are made to operate upon citizens, and not upon

"But if the execution of the laws of the naconsist. Though this principle does not run tional government should not require the intervention of the State legislatures; if they were to pass into immediate operation upon the citizens themselves, the particular governments could not interrupt their progress without an open and violent exertion of unconstitutional power. They would be obliged to act, and in such manner as would leave no doubt that they had encroached on the national rights. An experiment of this nature would always be hazardous in the face of a constitution in any degree competent to its own defence, and of a people enlightened enough to distinguish between a legal exercise and an illegal usurpation of authority. The success of it would require not merely a factious majority in the legislature, but the concurrence of the courts of justice, and of the body of the people. If the judges were not embarked in a conspiracy with the legislature, they would pronounce the resolutions of such a majority to be contrary to the supreme law of the land, unconstitutional and void. If the people were not tainted with the spirit of their State representatives, they, as the natural guardians of the constitution, would throw their weight into the national scale, and give it a decided preponderance in the contest,"

Of the ruinous effects of these civil wars among the members of a republican confederacy, and their disastrous influence upon the cause of civil liberty itself throughout the world, they thus speak:

"It is impossible to read the history of the petty republics of Greece and Italy, without feeling sensations of disgust and horror at the distractions with which they were continually agitated, and at the rapid succession of revolutions by which they were kept continually vibrating between the extremes of tyranny and anarchy. From the disorders which disfigure the annals of those republics, the advocates of despotism have drawn arguments, not only against the forms of republican government, but against the very principles of civil liberty. They have decried all free government as inconsistent with the order of society, and have indulged themselves in malicious exultation over its friends and partisans."

And again they say:

"It must carry its agency to the persons of the citizens. It must stand in need of no intermediate legislation; but must itself be empowered to employ the arm of the ordinary magis- pact, before any division took place among the

trate to execute its own resolutions. The majesty of the national authority must be manifested through the medium of the courts of jus-

After reading these extracts, Mr. B. said . It was to get rid of the evils of the old confederation that the present Union was formed: and, having formed it, they who formed it undertook to make it perpetual, and for that purpose had recourse to all the sanctions held sacred among men-commands, prohibitions oaths. The States were forbid to form compacts or agreements with each other; the constitution and the laws made in pursuance of it. were declared to be the supreme law of the land; and all authorities, State and federal 'egislative, executive, and judicial, were to be sworn to support it. The resolutions which have been read contradict all this; and the General Assembly mistook their own powers as much as they mistook the sentiments of the people of Missouri when they adopted them.

CHAPTER XC.

PUBLIC LANDS: -DISTRIBUTION OF PROCEEDS

MR. CLAY renewed, at this session, 1832-'33, the bill which he had brought in the session before. and which had passed the Senate, to divide the net proceeds of the sales of public lands among the States, to be applied to such purposes as the legislatures of the respective States should think proper. His principal arguments, in favor of the bill, were: first, the aid which the distribution would give to the States, in developing their resources and promoting their prosperity; secondly, the advantage to the federal government, in settling the question of the mode of disposing of the public lands. He explained his bill, which, at first, contained a specification of the objects to which the States should apply the dividends they received, which was struck out, in the progress of the bill, and stated its provisions to be:

"To set apart, for the benefit of the new States, twelve and a half per cent., out of the aggregate proceeds, in addition to the five per cent., which was now allowed to them by comStates generally. It was thus sign, in the first place, sevente cent. to the new States, and th whole of the residue among States. And, in order to do aw among the new States, grant made by the bill to those who heretofore, as much lands as t States, from the general gove put all the new States on an eq twelve and a half per cent., to to be at their disposal, for ei internal improvement, and the the disposition of the States, s limitation than this: that it option to apply the amount the purposes of education, or t free people of color, or for ments, or in debts which ma tracted for internal improven respect to the duration of this bution proposed by the bill, i vears, unless hostilities shall o United States and any foreign event, the proceeds are to be a rying on such war, with vigor any common enemy with w brought in contact. After t peace, and after the discharge of by any such war, the aggregat to that peaceful destination to intention of the bill that the directed, that is, to the improve and physical condition of the promotion of the public hal

He then spoke of the adv: the question of the manner of public lands, and said:

"The first remark which se called for, in reference to this the expediency, he would say its immediate settlement. On happy to believe that there concurrence of opinion in that they might differ as to the to distribution of these lands she all agreed that it was a questi be promptly and finally, he he justed. No time more favora sent moment could be selected of this question. The last less favorable for the accom object; and the reasons were ous, without any waste of tin cation. If the question were but if it were to be made the nual discussion, mixing itsel measures of legislation, it wo influence upon all, would pro sions both in and out of the extensively all the great and which might be before that

s. The ma ist be maniourts of jus-

Ir. B. said: old confedas formed; rmed it unor that purictions held prohibitions form comer; the conrsuance of it, law of the and federal. were to be itions which ind the Gen-1 powers as nents of the ted them.

F PROCEEDS.

1832-'33, the ession before. to divide the lands among rposes as the should think in favor of the distribun developing prosperity; leral governthe mode of explained his ecification of uld apply the s struck out. ed its provi-

of the new ... out of the the five per hem by come among the States generally. It was thus proposed to assign, in the first place, seventeen and a half per cent. to the new States, and then to divide the whole of the residue among the twenty-four States. And, in order to do away any inequality among the new States, grants are specifically made by the bill to those who had not received, heretofore, as much lands as the rest of the new States, from the general government, so as to put all the new States on an equal footing. This twelve and a half per cent., to the new States. to be at their disposal, for either education or internal improvement, and the residue to be at the disposition of the States, subject to no other limitation than this: that it shall be at their option to apply the amount received either to the purposes of education, or the colonization of free people of color, or for internal improvements, or in debts which may have been contracted for internal improvements. And, with respect to the duration of this scheme of distribution proposed by the bill, it is limited to five vears, unless hostilities shall occur between the United States and any foreign power; in which event, the proceeds are to be applied to the carrying on such war, with vigor and effect, against any common enemy with whom we may be brought in contact. After the conclusion of peace, and after the discharge of the debt created by any such war, the aggregate funds to return to that peaceful destination to which it was the intention of the bill that they should now be directed, that is, to the improvement of the moral and physical condition of the country, and the promotion of the public happiness and pros-

He then spoke of the advantages of settling the question of the manner of disposing of the public lands, and said:

"The first remark which seemed to him to be called for, in reference to this subject, was as to the expediency, he would say the necessity, of its immediate settlement. On this point, he was happy to believe that there was a unanimous concurrence of opinion in that body. However they might differ as to the terms on which the distribution of these lands should be made, they all agreed that it was a question which ought to be promptly and finally, he hoped amicably, adjusted. No time more favorable than the present moment could be selected for the settlement of this question. The last session was much less favorable for the accomplishment of this object; and the reasons were sufficiently obvious, without any waste of time in their specification. If the question were not now settled, but if it were to be made the subject of an annual discussion, mixing itself up-with all the measures of legislation, it would be felt in its influence upon all, would produce great dissen-

had, in the several States, some experience on that subject; and, without going into any details on the subject, he would merely state that it was known, that, for a long period, the small amount of the public domain possessed by some of the States, in comparison with the quantity possessed by the general government, had been a cause of great agitation in the public mind, and had greatly influenced the course of legislation. Persons coming from the quarter of the State in which the public land was situated, united in sympathy and interest, constituted always a body who acted together, to promote their common object, either by donations to settlers, or reduction in the price of the public lands, or the relief of those who are debtors for the public domain; and were always ready, as men always will be, to second all those measures which look towards the accomplishment of the main object which they have in view. So, if this question were not now settled, it would be a source of inexpressible difficulty hereafter, influencing all the great interests of the country, in Congress, affecting great events without, and perhaps adding another to those unhappy causes of division, which unfortunately exist at this

In his arguments in support of his bill, Mr. Clay looked to the lands as a source of revenue to the States or the federa' government. from their sale, and not from heir settlement and cultivation, and the revenue to be derived from the wealth and population to which their settlement would give rise; and, concluding with an encomium on his bill under the aspect of revenue from sales, he said:

"He could not conceive a more happy disposition of the proceeds of the public lands, than that which was provided by this bill. It was supposed that five years would be neither too long nor too short a period for a fair experiment. In case a war should break out, we may withdraw from its peaceful destination a sum of from two and a half to three and a half millions of dollars per annum, and apply it to a vigorous prosecution of the war-a sum which would pay the interest on sixty millions of dollars, which might be required to sustain the war, and a sum which is constantly and progressively increasing. It proposes, now that the general government has no use for the money, now that the surplus treasure is really a source of vexatious embarrassment to us, and gives rise to a succession of projects, to supply for a short time a fund to the States which want our assistance, to advance to them that which we do not want, and which they will apply to great beneficial national purposes; and, should war take place, to divert it sions both in and out of the House, and affect to the vigorous support of the war; and, when extensively all the great and important objects it ceases, to apply it again to its peaceful purwhich might be before that body. They had poses. And thus we may grow, from time to time, with a fund which will endure for centuries, and which will augment with the growth of the nation, aiding the States in seasons of peace, and sustaining the general government in periods of war."

Mr. Calhoun deprecated this distribution of the land money as being dangerous in itself and unconstitutional, and as leading to the distribution of other revenue—in which he was prophetic. He said:

"He could not yield his assent to the mode which this bill proposed to settle the agitated question of the public lands. In addition to several objections of a minor character, he had an insuperable objection to the leading principle of the bill, which proposed to distribute the proceeds of the lands among the States. He believed it to be both dangerous and unconstitutional. He could not assent to the principle, that Congress had a right to denationalize the public funds. He agreed that the objection was not so decided in case of the proceeds of lands, as in that of revenue collected from taxes or duties. The senator from Ohio had adduced evidence from the deed of cession, which certainly countenanced the idea that the proceeds of the lands might be subject to the distribution proposed in the bill; but he was far from being satisfied that the argument was solid or conclusive. If the principle of distribution could be confined to the proceeds of the lands, he would acknowledge that his objection to the principle would be weakened.

"He dreaded the force of precedent, and he foresaw that the time would come when the example of the distribution of the proceeds of the public lands would be urged as a reason for distributing the revenue derived from other sources. Nor would the argument be devoid of plausibility. If we, of the Atlantic States, insist that the revenue of the West, derived from lands, should be equally distributed among all the States, we must not be surprised if the interior States should, in like manner, insist to distribute the proceeds of the customs, the great source of revenue in the Atlantic States. Should such a movement be successful, it must be obvious to every one, who is the least acquainted with the workings of the human heart, and the nature of government, that nothing would more certainly endanger the existence of the Union. The revenue is the power of the State, and to distribute its revenue is to dissolve its power into its original elements."

Attempts were made to postpone the bill to the next session, which failed; and it passed the Senate by a vote of 24 to 20.

YEAS.—Messrs. Bell, Chambers, Clay, Clayton, Dallas, Dickersoff, Dudley, Ewing, Foot, Frelinghuysen, Hendricks, Holmes, Johnston, Knight, Poindexter, Prentiss, Robbins, Ruggles, Seymour, Silsbee, Sprague, Tomlinson, Waggaman, Wilkins—24.

Nays.—Messrs. Benton, Black, Brown, Buckner, Calhoun, Forsyth, Grundy, Hill, Kane, King, Mangum, Miller, Moore, Rives, Robinson, Smith, Tipton, Tyler, White, Wright—20.

The bill went to the House and received amendments, which did not obtain the concurrence of the Senate until midnight of the first of March, which, being the short session, was within twenty-four hours of the constitutional termination of the Congress, which was limited to the 3d-which falling this year on Sunday. the Congress would adjourn at midnight of the 2nd. Further efforts were made to postpone it, and upon the ground that, in a bill of that magnitude and novelty, the President was entitled to the full ten days for the consideration of it which the constitution allowed him, and he would have but half a day; for if passed that night it could only reach him in the forenoon of the next day-leaving him but half a day for his consideration of the measure, where the constitution allowed him ten; and that half day engrossed with all crowded business of an expiring session. The next evening, the President attended, as usual, in a room adjoining the Senate chamber, to be at hand to sign bills and make nominations. It was some hours in the night when the President sent for me, and withdrawing into the recess of a window told me that he had a veto message ready on the land bill, but doubted about sending it in, lest there should not be a full Senate; and intimated his apprehension that Mr. Calhoun and some of his friends might be absent, and endanger the bill: and wished to consult me upon that point, I told him I would go and reconnoitre the chamber, and adjacent rooms; did so-found that Mr. Calhoun and his immediate friends were absent -returned and informed him, when he said he would keep the bill until the next session, and then return it with a fully considered message -his present one being brief, and not such as to show his views fully. I told him I thought he ought to do so-that such a measure ought not to be passed in the last hours of a session, in a thin Senate, and upon an imperfect view of his objections; and that the public good required it to be held up. It was so; and during the long vacation of nine months which intervened before the next session, the opposition presses and orators kept the countrest ciations of the enormity of his eling" the bill—as if it had burglary," instead of being constitutional right, render proper under the extraordis which had attended the pareturn of the bill. At the the ensuing session he return well-considered objections, it which, after going over a derivation of the lands, cam conclusions:

"1. That one of the func on which the confederation c was originally based, was, th of the West, within their lin common property of the Uni "2. That those lands were

"2. That those lands were States by the States which the cessions were accepted, c dition that they should be common benefit of the State respective proportions in the expenditure, and for no otl

"3. That, in execution of pacts, the Congress of the under the confederation, pro lands, and put the avails into sury; and, under the new e peatedly pledge them for the public debt of the United pledge each State was expect portion to the general charge it for that object.

"These are the first princisubject, which, I'think, cannany one who examines the revolutionary Congress, the several States, and the actsthe new constitution. Keepin pressed upon the mind, let us ine-how far the objects of the completed, and see whether 1 not still obligatory upon the "The debt, for which these by Congress, may be consid they are consequently releas But that pledge formed no pa with the States, or of the conc the cessions were made. It tween new parties—between and their creditors. Upon pa the compacts remain in full for gation of the United States lands for the common bene troyed nor impaired. As th executed in that mode, the on tion which can arise is, in wl these lands to be hereafter d

ns, Ruggles, son, Wagga-

rown, Buck-Kane, King, nson, Smith,

ind received the concurof the first session, was onstitutional was limited on Sunday. lnight of the to postpone bill of that lent was enconsideration red him, and for if passed in the foren but half a easure, where and that half usiness of an ig, the Presiadjoining the sign bills and hours in the me, and withdow, told me v on the land in, lest there intimated his 1d some of his nger the bill: that point. I e the chamber, und that Mr. ls were absent ien he said he ct session, and lered message d not such as him I thought neasure ought 's of a session, perfect view of good required

nd during the

ich intervened

osition presses

and orators kept the country filled with denunciations of the enormity of his conduct in "pockeling" the bill—as if it had been a case of "flat burglary," instead of being the exercise of a constitutional right, rendered most just and proper under the extraordinary circumstances which had attended the passage, and intended return of the bill. At the commencement of the ensuing session he returned the bill, with his well-considered-objections, in an ample message, which, after going over a full history of the derivation of the lands, came to the following conclusions:

"1. That one of the fundamental principles, on which the confederation of the United States was originally based, was, that the waste lands of the West, within their limits, should be the common property of the United States.

"2. That those lands were ceded to the United States by the States which claimed them, and the cessions were accepted, on the express condition that they should be disposed of for the common benefit of the States, according to their respective proportions in the general charge and expenditure, and for no other purpose what-

"3. That, in execution of these solemn compacts, the Congress of the United States did. under the confederation, proceed to sell these lands, and put the avails into the common treasury; and, under the new constitution, did repeatedly pledge them for the payment of the public debt of the United States, by which pledge each State was expected to profit in proportion to the general charge to be made upon it for that object.

"These are the first principles of this whole subject, which, I'think, cannot be contested by any one who examines the proceedings of the revolutionary Congress, the sessions of the several States, and the acts of Congress, under the new constitution. Keeping them deeply impressed upon the mind, let us proceed to examine how far the objects of the cessions have been completed, and see whether those compacts are not still obligatory upon the United States.

"The debt, for which these lands were pledged by Congress, may be considered as paid, and they are consequently released from that lien. But that pledge formed no part of the compacts with the States, or of the conditions upon which the cessions were made. It was a contract between new parties—between the United States and their creditors. Upon payment of the debt, the compacts remain in full force, and the obligation of the United States to dispose of the lands for the common benefit, is neither destroyed nor impaired. As they cannot now be executed in that mode, the only legitimate questhese lands to be hereafter disposed of for the their requirements.

common benefit of the several States, 'according to their respective and usual proportion in the general charge and expenditure? The cessions of Virginia, North Carolina, and Georgia, in express terms, and all the rest impliedly, not only provide thus specifically the proportion, according to which each State shall profit by the proceeds of the land sales, but they proceed to declare that they shall be 'faithfully and bona fide disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use or purpose whatsoever.' This is the fundamental law of the land, at this moment, growing out of compacts which are older than the constitution, and formed the corner stone on which the Union itself was erected.

"In the practice of the government, the proceeds of the public lands have not been set apart as a separate fund for the payment of the public debt, but have been, and are now, paid into the treasury, where they constitute a part of the aggregate of revenue, upon which the government draws, as well for its current expenditures as for payment of the public debt. In this manner, they have heretofore, and do now, lessen the general charge upon the people of the several States, in the exact proportions stipulated in the compacts.

These general charges have been composed, not only of the public debt and the usual expenditures attending the civil and military administrations of the government, but of the amounts paid to the States, with which these compacts were formed; the amounts paid the Indians for their right of possession; the amounts paid for the purchase of Louisiana and Florida; and the amounts paid surveyors, registers, receivers, clerks, &c., employed in preparing for market, and selling, the western domain. From the origin of the land system, down to the 30th September, 1832, the amount expended for all these purpose has been about $49,701,280 and the amount received from the sales, deducting payments on account of roads, &c., about $38,386,624. The revenue arising from the public lands, therefore, has not been sufficient to meet the general charges on the treasury, which have grown out of them, by about $11,314,656. Yet, in having been applied to lessen those charges, the conditions of the compacts have been thus far fulfilled, and each State has profited according to its usual proportion in the general charge and expenditure. The annual proceeds of land sales have increased, and the charges have diminished; so that, at a reduced price, those lands would now defray all current charges growing out of them, and save the treasury from further advances on their account. Their original intent and object, therefore, would be accomplished, as fully as it has hitherto been, by reducing the price, and hereafter, as heretofore, bringing the proceeds into the treasury. Indeed, as this is the only mode in which the objects of the original compact can be attained, it may be consition which can arise is, in what other way are dered, for all practical purposes, that it is one of "The bill before me begins with an entire subversion of every one of the compacts by which the United States became possessed of their western domain, and treats the subject as if they never had existence, and as if the United States were the original and unconditional owners of all the public lands. The first section directs—

"'That from and after the 31st day of December, 1832, there shall be allowed and paid to each of the States of Ohio, Indiana. Illinois. Alabama, Missouri, Mississippi, and Louisiana, over and above what each of the said States is entitled to by the terms of the compacts entered into between them, respectively, upon their admission into the Union and the United States. the sum of twelve and a half per centum upon the net amount of the sales of the public lands. which, subsequent to the day afosesaid, shall be made within the several limits of the said States; which said sum of twelve and a half per centum shall be applied to some object or objects of internal improvement or education, within the said States, under the direction of their several legislatures.

"This twelve and a half per centum is to be taken out of the net proceeds of the land sales, before any apportionment is made; and the same seven States, which are first to receive this proportion, are also to receive their due proportion of the residue, according to the ratio of general distribution.

"Now, waiving all considerations of equity or policy, in regard to this provision, what more need be said to demonstrate its objectionable character, than that it is in direct and undisquised violation of the pledge given by Congress to the States, before a single cession was made; that it abrogates the condition upon which some of the States came into the Union; and that it sets at nought the terms of cession spread upon the face of every grant under which the title to that portion of the public land is held by the federal government?

In the apportionment of the remaining seven eighths of the proceeds, this bill, in a manner equally undisguised, violates the conditions upon which the United States acquired title to the ceded lands. Abandoning altogether the ratio of distribution, according to the general charge and expenditure provided by the compacts, it adopts that of the federal representative population. Virginia, and other States, which ceded their lands upon the express condition that they should receive a benefit from their sales in proportion to their part of the general charge, are, by the bill, allowed only a portion of seven eighths of their proceeds, and that not in the proportion of general charge and expenditure, but in the ratio of their federal representative population.

"The constitution of the United States did on its observance. The public lands are the not delegate to Congress the power to abrogate these compacts. On the contrary, by declaring that nothing in it 'shall be so construed as to public revenue. This bill proposes to raise from, prejudice any claims of the United States, or of any particular State,' it virtually provides that these compacts, and the rights they secure, shall remain untouched by the legislative power, which shall only make all 'needful rules and regulations' for carrying them into effect. All beyond this, would seem to be an assumption of undelegated power.

"These ancient compacts are invaluable monuments of an age of virtue, patriotism, and disin-They exhibit the price that great terestedness. States, which had won liberty, were willing to pay for that Union, without which, they plainly saw, it could not be preserved. It was not for territory or State power that our revolutionary fathers took up arms; it was for individual liberty, and the right of self-government. The expulsion, from the continent, of British armies and British power was to them a barren conquest, if, through the collisions of the redeemed States, the individual rights for which they fought should become the prey of petty military tyrannies established at home. To avert such consequences, and throw around liberty the shield of union, States, whose relative strength at the time, gave them a preponderating power. magnanimously sacrificed domains which would have made them the rivals of empires, only stipulating that they should be disposed of for the common benefit of themselves and the other confederated States. This enlightened policy produced union, and has secured liberty. It has made our waste lands to swarm with a busy people; and added many powerful States to our confederation. As well for the fruits which these noble works of our ancestors have produced, as for the devotedness in which they originated, we should hesitate before we demol-

"But there are other principles asserted in the bill, which would have impelled me to withhold my signature, had I not seen in it a villa tion of the compacts by which the United States acquired title to a large portion of the public lands. It reasserts the principle contained in the bill authorizing a subscription to the stock of the Maysville, Washington, Paris, and Lexington Turnpike Road Company, from which I was compelled to withhold my consent, for reasons contained in my message of the 27th May 1830, to the House of Representatives. The leading principle, then asserted, was, that Congress possesses no constitutional power to appropriate any part of the moneys of the United States for objects of a local character within the States. That principle, I cannot be mistaken in supposing, has received the unequivocal sanction of the American people, and all subsequent reflection has but satisfied me more thoroughly that the interests of our people, and the purity of our government, if not its existence, depend on its observance. The public lands are the common property of the United States, and the moneys arising from their sales are a part of the and appropriate a portion of th to certain States, providing shall 'be applied to objects of ment or education within those proceeds to appropriate the ba States, with the declaration the mied to such purposes as th the said respective States sha The former appropriation is ex nal improvements or education cation as to the kind of im therefore, in express violation maintained in my objections road bill, above referred to. priation is more broad, and giv he applied to any local purpose will not be denied, that, under the bill, a portion of the money applied to making the very ro bill of 1830 had reference, and come within the scope of the If the money of the United Sta nlied to local purposes throug as little can it be permitted to

through the agency of the Stat

ANNO

"It has been supposed that, w tions in our revenue which c effected by Congress, without i stantial interests of the country for some years to come, a surp the treasury; and that there no objection to returning them whom they were paid. As t plishment of such an object is o ticable, it was thought admissil approximation to it, to hand t State governments, the more sentatives of the people, to be to the benefit of those to who belonged. The principle and t return to the people an unavo revenue which might have bee under a system which could no doned; but even this resource. seemed to be almost the only a the general government from g power over internal improveme ed with doubts of its constituti

"But this bill assumes a ne object is not to return to the peop surplus of revenue paid in by th a surplus for distribution amon seizes the entire proceeds of one ue, and sets them apart as a su necessary to raise the money for government, and meeting the from other sources. It even the land system upon the customs and makes the public lands a upon the treasury. It does n people moneys accidentally or by them to the government by not wanted; but compels th moneys into the treasury for t of creating a surplus for dist States, or of rovides that secure, shall power, which and regulact. All besumption of luable monum. and disince that great re willing to they plainly was not for wolutionary r individual nment. The Fitish armies ı barren conthe redeemed which they setty military o avert such liberty the tive strength, rating power. which would empires, only sposed of for and the other atened policy berty. It has with a busy States to our

fruits which

ors have pro-

1 which they

ore we demol-

s asserted in d me to within it a viola-United States of the public contained in i to the stock aris, and Lexfrom which I nsent, for reathe 27th May ntatives. The was, that Conpower to apof the United ter within the be mistaken in ivocal sanction subsequent reore thoroughly and the purity istence, depend lands are the States, and the re a part of the s to raise from,

and appropriate a portion of, this public revenue to certain States, providing expressly that it shall 'be applied to objects of internal improvement or education within those States,' and then proceeds to appropriate the balance to all the States, with the declaration that it shall be apmiled to such purposes as the legislatures of the said respective States shall deem proper.' The former appropriation is expressly for internal improvements or education, without qualification as to the kind of improvements, and, therefore, in express violation of the principle maintained in my objections to the turnpike road bill, above referred to. The latter appropriation is more broad, and gives the money to be applied to any local purpose whatsoever. It will not be denied, that, under the provisions of the bill, a portion of the money might have been applied to making the very road to which the hill of 1830 had reference, and must, of course, come within the scope of the same principle. If the money of the United States cannot be applied to local purposes through its own agents, as little can it be permitted to be thus expended through the agency of the State governments.

"It has been supposed that, with all the reductions in our revenue which could be speedily effected by Congress, without injury to the substantial interests of the country, there might be, for some years to come, a surplus of moneys in the treasury; and that there was, in principle, mobjection to returning them to the people by whom they were paid. As the literal accomplishment of such an object is obviously impracticable, it was thought admissible, as the nearest approximation to it, to hand them over to the State governments, the more immediate representatives of the people, to be by them applied to the benefit of those to whom they properly belonged. The principle and the object was, to return to the people an unavoidable surplus of revenue which might have been paid by them under a system which could not at once be abandoned; but even this resource, which at one time seemed to be almost the only alternative to save the general government from grasping unlimited power over internal improvements, was suggested with doubts of its constitutionality.

"But this bill assumes a new principle. Its object is not to return to the people an unavoidable surplus of revenue paid in by them, but to create a surplus for distribution among the States. It seizes the entire proceeds of one source of revenue, and sets them apart as a surplus, making it necessary to raise the money for supporting the government, and meeting the general charges, from other sources. It even throws the entire land system upon the customs for its support, and makes the public lands a perpetual charge upon the treasury. It does not return to the people moneys accidentally or unavoidably paid by them to the government by which they are not wanted; but compels the people to pay moneys into the treasury for the mere purpose

State governments. If this principle be once admitted, it is not difficult to perceive to what consequences it may lead. Already this bill, by throwing the land system on the revenues from imports for support, virtually distributes among the States a part of those revenues. The proportion may be increased from time to time, without any departure from the principle now asserted, until the State governments shall derive all the funds necessary for their support from the treasury of the United States; or, if a sufficient supply should be obtained by some States and not by others, the deficient States might complain, and, to put an end to all further difficulty, Congress, without assuming any new principle, need go but one step further, and put the salaries of all the State governors, judges, and other officers, with a sufficient sum for other expenses, in their general appropriation bill.

"It appears to me that a more direct road to consolidation cannot be devised. Money is power, and in that government which pays all the public officers of the States, will all political power be substantially concentrated. The State governments, if governments they might be called, would lose all their independence and dignity. The economy which now distinguishes them would be converted into a profusion, limited only by the extent of the supply. Being the dependants of the general government, and looking to its treasury as the source of all their emoluments, the State officers, under whatever names they might pass, and by whatever forms their duties might be prescribed, would, in effect, be the mere stipendaries and instruments of the central power.

"I am quite sure that the intelligent people of our several States will be satisfied, on a little reflection, that it is neither wise nor safe to release the members of their local legislatures from the responsibility of levying the taxes necessary to support their State governments, and vest it in Congress, over most of whose members they have no control. They will not think it expedient that Congress shall be the tax-gatherer and paymaster of all their State governments, thus amalgamating all their officers into one mass of common interest and common feeling. It is too obvious that such a course would subvert our well-balanced system of government, and ultimately deprive us of the blessings now derived from our happy union.

"However willing I might be that any unavoidable surplus in the treasury should be returned to the people through their State governments, I cannot assext to the principle that a surplus may be created for the purpose of distribution. Viewing this bill as, in effect, assuming the right not only to create a surplus for that purpose, but to divide the contents of the treasury among the States without limitation. from whatever source they may be derived, and asserting the power to raise and appropriate money for the support of every State governof creating a surplus for distribution to their | ment and institution, as well as for making every local improvement, however trivial, I cannot give

it my assent.

"It is difficult to perceive what advantages would accrue to the old States or the new from the system of distribution which this bill proposes, if it were otherwise unobjectionable. It requires no argument to prove, that if three millions of dollars a year, or any other sum, shall be taken out of the treasury by this bill for distribution, it must be replaced by the same sum collected from the people through some other means. The old States will receive annually a sum of money from the treasury, but they will pay in a larger sum, together with the expenses of collection and distribution. It is only their pro-portion of seven eights of the proceeds of land sales which they are to receive but they must pay their due proportion of the whole. Disguise it as we may, the bill proposes to them a dead loss in the ratio of eight to seven, in addition to expenses and other incidental losses. This assertion is not the less true because it may not at first be palpable. Their receipts will be in large sums, but their payments in small ones. The governments of the States will receive seven dollars, for which the people of the States will pay eight. The large sums received will be palpable to the senses; the small sums paid, it requires thought to identify. But a little consideration will satisfy the people that the effect is the same as if seven hundred dollars were given them from the public treasury, for which they were at the same time required to pay in taxes, direct or indirect, eight hundred.

"I deceive myself greatly if the new States would find their interests promoted by such a system as this bill proposes. Their true policy consists in the rapid settling and improvement of the waste lands within their limits. As a means of hastening those events, they have long been looking to a reduction in the price of public lands upon the final payment of the national debt. The effect of the proposed system would be to prevent that reduction. It is true the bill reserves to Congress the power to reduce the price, but the effect of its details, as now arranged, would probably be forever to prevent its exercise.

"With the just men who inhabit the new States, it is a sufficient reason to reject this system, that it is in violation of the fundamental laws of the republic and its constitution. But if it were a mere question of interest or expediency, they would still reject it. They would not sell their bright prospect of increasing wealth and growing power at such a price. They would not place a sum of money to be paid into their treasuries, in competition with the settlement of their waste lands, and the increase of their population. They would not consider a small or large annual sum to be paid to their governments, and immediately expended, as an equivalent for that enduring wealth which is composed of flocks and herds, and cultivated farms. No temptation will allure them from officers, employed by the United States for the

that object of abiding interest, the settlement of their waste lands, and the increase of a hardy race of free citizens, their glory in peace and their defence in war

"On the whole, I adhere to the opinion expressed by me in my annual message of 1839 that it is our true policy that the public lands shall cease, as soon as practicable, to be a source of revenue, except for the payment of those general charges which grow out of the acquisition of the lands, their survey, and sale. Although these expenses have not been met by the proceeds of sales heretofore, it is quite certain they will be hereafter, even after a considerable reduction in the price. By meeting in the treasury so much of the general charge as arises from that source, they will be hereafter, as they have been heretofore, disposed of for the common benefit of the United States, according to the compacts of cession. I do not doubt that it is the real interest of each and all the States in the Union, and particularly of the new States, that the price of these lands shall be reduced and graduated; and that, after they have been offered for a certain number of years, the refuse remaining unsold, shall be abandoned to the States and the machinery of our land system entirely withdrawn. It cannot be supposed the compacts intended that the United States should retain forever a title to lands within the States which are of no value; and no doubt is entertained that the general interest would be best promoted by surrendering such lands to. the States

"This plan for disposing of the public lands impairs no principle, violates no compact, and deranges no system. Already has the price of those lands been reduced from two dollars per acre to one dollar and a quarter; and upon the will of Congress, it depends whether there shall be a further reduction. While the burdens of the East are diminishing by the reduction of the duties upon imports, it seems but equal justice that the chief burden of the West should be lightened in an equal degree at least. It would be just to the old States and the new, conciliate every interest, disarm the subject of all its dangers, and add another guaranty to the perpeta-ity of our happy Union."

Statement respecting the revenue derived from the public lands, accompanying the President's Message to the Senate, December 4th, 1833, stating his reasons for not approxing the Land Bill :

Statement of the amount of money which has been paid by the United States for the title to the public lands, including the payments made under the Louisiana and Florida treaties; the compact with Georgia; the settlement with the Yazoo claimants; the contracts with the Indian tribes; and the expenditures for compensation to commissioners, clerks, surveyors, and other

management and sale of th the gross amount of mone treasury, as the proceeds of 30th of September, 1832; a after deducting five per cer count of roads within and l ern States, &c., and sums r of errors in the entries of pu

Payment on account of the Principal, -$11,250,000

Payment on account of the

Interest to 30th September, 1832, 1,4

Payment of compact with Georgia Payment of the settlement with t claimants, Payment of contracts with the seve rayment of contracts with the seve tribes (all expenses on account of Payment of commissioners, clerks, officers, employed by the United the management and sale of the domain. - - - - -

Amount of money received into the as the proceeds of public lands to tember, 1832, Deduct payments from the treasu count of roads, &c.,

TREASURY DEPARTMEN Register's Office, March 1.

Such was this ample message, one of the wisest ever delivered by any President General Jackson under the elevation over the ordinary a popular career, and bec popular votes. Such arts : popular interests, the concili ed passions, the gratificati favoring of the masses in money or property as well a classes in undue advantages exhibits himself as equally these arts-as far above with agrarian laws as abov with the plundering legisl tariffs; and the people fel did honor to themselves in they appreciated it. Far fro ity, he increased it, by e which he exhibited for the ciliating popular favor. E this occasion was an exen

Vol. I.-24

ne settlement of ase of a hardy y in peace and the opinion exessage of 1832 he public lands e, to be a source nt of those genthe acquisition sale. Although net by the pronite certain they isiderable reduc-1 the treasury so arises from that s they have been common beneing to the combt that it is the he States in the new States, that be reduced and have been offers, the refuse, rened to the States system entirely prosed the comed States should vithin the States.

the public lands no compact, and r has the price of a two dollars per r; and upon the hether there shall e the burdens of he reduction of the but equal justice. West should be t least. It would hen new, concilate ject of all its danty to the perpeta-

no doubt is en-

iterest would be

g such lands to.

enue derived from mying the Presiite, December 4th, for not approxing money which has tes for the title to be payments made orida treaties; the ettlement with the sts with the Indian if for compensation rregors, and other nited States for the management and sale of the Western domain; the gross amount of money received into the treasury, as the proceeds of public lands, to the 30th of September, 1832; also, the net amount, after deducting five per cent., expended on account of roads within, and leading to the Western States, &c., and sums refunded on account of errors in the entries of public lands.

Payment on account of the purchase of Louis-

Principal, $11,250,000 $14,984,872 28 8,529,353 43 828,514,225 71

Payment on account of the purchase of Florida:

Principal. $4,95,599 82 Interest to 30th September, 1832, 1,489,768 66 Payment of compact with Georgia. 1,665,484 06 Payment of contracts with the Yazoo elaimants, Payment of contracts with the several Indian tribes (all expenses on account of Indians). Payment of commissioners, clerks, and other officers, employed by the United States for the management and sale of the Western domain, 3,750,716 43 $49,701,280 17

Amennt of money received into the treasury as the proceeds of public lands to 30th September, 1832, beduct payments from the treasury on account of roads, &c.,

$89,614,000 07 1,227,875 94

$88,886,624 18

T. L. SMITH, Reg.
TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Register's Office, March 1, 1833.

Such was this ample and well-considered message, one of the wisest and most patriotic ever delivered by any President, and presenting General Jackson under the aspect of an immense elevation over the ordinary arts of men who run a popular career, and become candidates for popular votes. Such arts require addresses to popular interests, the conciliation of the interested passions, the gratification of cupidity, the favoring of the masses in the distribution of money or property as well as the enrichment of classes in undue advantages. General Jackson exhibits himself as equally elevated above all these arts-as far above seducing the masses with agrarian laws as above enriching the few with the plundering legislation of banks and tariffs; and the people felt this elevation, and did honor to themselves in the manner in which they appreciated it. Far from losing his popularity, he increased it, by every act of disdain which he exhibited for the ordinary arts of conciliating popular favor. His veto message, on this occasion was an exemplification of all the dain.

high qualities of the public man. He sat out with showing that these lands, so far as they were divided from the States, were granted as a common fund, to be disposed of for the benefit of all the States, according to their usual respective proportions in the general charge and expenditure, and for no other use or purpose whatsoever; and that by the principles of our government and sound policy, those acquired from foreign governments could only be disposed of in the same manner. In addition to these great reasons of principle and policy, the message clearly points out the mischief which any scheme of distribution will inflict upon the new States in preventing reductions in the price of the public lands—in preventing donations to settlers -and in preventing the cession of the unsalable lands to the States in which they lie; and recurs to his early messages in support of the policy, now that the public debt was paid, of looking to settlement and population as the chief objects to be derived from these lands, and for that purpose that they be sold to settlers at cost.

CHAPTER XCI.

COMMENCEMENT OF THE TWENTY-THIRD CON-GRESS.—THE MEMBERS, AND PRESIDENTS MES-SAGE.

On the second day of December, 1833, commenced the first session of the Twenty-third Congress, commonly called the Panic session—one of the most eventful and exciting which the country had ever seen, and abounding with high talent. The following is the list of members:

SENATE.

MAINE—Peleg Sprague, Ether Shepley.

New Hampshire—Samuel Bell, Isaac Hill. Massachusetts—Daniel Webster, Nathaniel Silsbee.

RHODE ISLAND—Nehemiah R. Knight, Asher Robbins.

CONNECTICUT—Gideon Tomlinson, Nathan Smith.

Vermont—Samuel Prentiss, Benjamin Swift. New York—Silas Wright, N. P. Tallmadge. New Jersey—Theodore Frelinghuysen, S. L. Southard

PENNSYLVANIA—William Wilkins, Samuel

Delaware-John M. Clayton, Arnold Nau-

Vol. I.—24

ANN

Maryland—Ezekiel F. Chambers, Joseph Kent.

VIRGINIA-Wm. C. Rives, John Tyler. NORTH CAROLINA-Bedford Brown, W. P. Mangum.

South Carolina—J. C. Calhoun, William C. Preston.

Georgia—John Forsyth, John P. King. Kentucky—George M. Bibb, Henry Clay. Tennessee—Felix Grundy, Hugh L. White. Ohio—Thomas Ewing, Thomas Morris.

Louisiana—G. A. Waggaman, Alexander Porter.

Indiana—Wm. Hendricks, John Tipton.
Mississippi—George Poindexter, John Black.
ILLINOIS—Elias K. Kane, John M. Robinsoft.
ALABAMA—William R. King, Gabriel Moore.
Missouri—Thomas H. Benton, Lewis F. Linn.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MAINE—George Evans, Joseph Hall, Leonard Jarvis, Edward Kavanagh, Moses Mason, Rufus McIntyre, Gorham Parks, Francis O. J. Smith.

New Hampshire—Benning M. Bean, Robert Burns, Joseph M. Harper, Henry Hubbard, Franklin Pierce.

Massachusetts—John Quincy Adams, Isaac C. Bates, William Baylies, George N. Briggs, Rufus Choate, John Davis, Edward Everett, Benjamin Gorham, George Grennell, jr., Gayton P. Osgood, John Reed.

RHODE ISLAND—Tristam Burges, Dutea J.

CONNECTICUT—Noyes Barber, William W. Ellsworth, Samuel A. Foot, Jabez W. Huntington, Samuel Tweedy, Ebenezer Young.

Vermont—Heman Allen, Benjamin F. Deming, Horace Everett, Hiland Hall, William Slade, New York—John Adams, Samuel Beardsley, Abraham Bockee, Charles Bodle, John W. Brown, Churchill C. Cambreleng, Samuel Clark, John Cramer, Rowland Day, John Dickson, Millard Fillmore, Philo C. Fuller, William K. Fuller, Ransom H. Gillet, Nicoll Halsey, Gideon Hard, Samuel C. Hathaway, Abner Hazeltine, Edward Howell, Abel Huntington, Noadiah Johnson, Gerrit Y. Lansing, Cornelius W. Lawrence, George W. Lay, Abijah Mann, jr., Henry C. Martindale, Charles McVean, Henry Mitchell, Sherman Page, Job Pierson, Dudløy Selden, William Taylor, Joel Turrill, Aaron Vanderpoel, Isaac B. Van Houten, Aaron Ward, Daniel Wardwell, Reuben Whallon, Campbell P. White, Frederick Whittlesev.

New Jersey—Philemon Dickerson, Samuel Fowler, Thomas Lee, James Parker, Ferdinand

S. Schenck, William N. Shinn.

Pennsylvania—Joseph B. Anthony, John Banks, Charles A. Barnitz, Andrew Beaumont, Horace Binney, George Burd, George Chambers, William Clark, Richard Coulter, Edward Darlington, Harmar Denny, John Galbraith, James Harper, Samuel S. Harrison, William Hiester, Joseph Henderson, Henry King, John

Laporte, Joel K. Mann, Thomas M. T. McKennan Jesse Miller, Henry A. Muhlenberg, David Potts, jr., Robert Ramsay, Andrew Stewart, Joel B. Sutherland, David E. Wagener, John G. Watmough.

DELAWARE-John J. Milligan.

MARYLAND—Richard B. Carmichael, Littleton P. Dennis, James P. Heath, William Cost Johnson, Isnac McKim, John T. Stoddert, Francis Thomas, James Turner.

Virginia—John J. Allen, William S. Archer, James M. H. Beale, Thomas T. Bouldin, Joseph W. Chinn, Nathaniel H. Claiborne, Thomas Davenport, John H. Fulton, James H. Gholson, William F. Gordon, George Loyall, Edward Lucas, John Y. Mason, William McComas, Charles F. Mercer, Samuel McDowell Moore, John M. Patton, Andrew Stevenson, William P. Taylor, Edgar C. Wilson, Henry A. Wise.

NORTH CAROLINA—Daniel L. Barringer, Jesse A. Bynum, Henry W. Connor, Edmund Deberry, James Graham, Thomas H. Hall, Micajah T. Hawkins, James J. McKay, Abraham Rencher, William B. Shepard, Augustine H. Shepperd, Jesse Speight, Lewis Williams.

SOUTH CAROLINA—James Blair, William K. Clowney, Warren R. Davis, John M. Felder, William J. Grayson, John K. Griffin, George McDuffie, Henry L. Pinckney.

GEORGIA—Augustine S. Clayton, John Coffee, Thomas F. Foster, Roger L. Gamble, George R. Gilmer, Seaborn Jones, William Schley, James M. Wayne, Richard H. Wilde.

Kentucky—Chilton Allan, Martin Beaty, Thomas Chilton, Amos Davis, Benjamin Hardin, Albert G. Hawes, Richard M. Johnson, James Love, Chittenden Lyon, Thomas A. Marshall, Patrick H. Pope, Christopher Tompkins.

TENNESSEE—John Bell, John Blair, Samuel Bunch, David Crockett, David W. Dickinson, William C. Dunlap, John B. Forester, William M. Inge, Cave Johnson, Luke Lea, Balie Peyton, James K. Polk, James Standifer.

Ohio-William Allen, James M. Bell, John Chaney, Thomas Corwin, Joseph H. Crane, Thomas L. Hamer, Benjamin Jones, Henry H. Leavitt, Robert T. Lytle, Jeremiah Melean, Robert Mitchell, William Patterson, Jonathan Sloane, David Spangler, John Thomson, Joseph Vance, Samuel F. Vinton, Taylor Webster, Elisha Whittlesey.

Louisiana—Philemon Thomas, Edward D. White.

INDIANA—Ratliff Boon, John Carr, John Ewing, Edward A. Hannegan, George L. Kinnard, Amos Lane, Jonathan McCarty.

MISSISSIPPI—Harry Cage, Franklin E. Plumer.
ILLINOIS—Zadok Casey, Joseph Duncan, Charles Slade.

ALABAMA—Clement C. Clay, Dixon H. Lewis, Samuel W. Mardis, John McKinley, John Murphy.

Missouri—William H. Ashley, John Bull.
Lucius Lyon also appeared as the delegate from the territory of Michigan.

Ambrose H. Sevier also appare from the territory of M. White from Florida.

Mr. Andrew Stevenson, who speaker of the House for the Congresses, was re-elected be indicating the administration between the confliction of the second conflictions in peace and amity with us fresh proofs of friendship, either the state of the finances was and shown to be in the most for the message said:

"It gives me great pleasu you upon the prosperous con es of the country, as will app which the Secretary of the Tr time, lay before you. The Treasury during the present to more than thirty-two n The revenue derived from cus lieved, be more than twentythe public lands will yield ab The expenditures within the y including two millions five hu two thousand two hundred and ninety-nine cents on acc debt, will not amount to tw and a large balance will rems after satisfying all the approp on the revenue for the presen

The act of the last session promise," the President rec servance, "unless it should be more revenue than the necess ment required." The extince debt presented, in the opinion the proper occasion for orgat expenditure on the principal economy consistent with the passage of the mess that point was particularly a friends of an economical and government. It said:

But, while I forbear to rether reduction of the duties, I provided for by the existing nestly and respectfully press importance of abstaining from which are not absolutely requinterests, and authorized by delegated to the United State

I. T. McKennan lenberg, David ndrew Stewart, agener, John G.

nichael, Littleton liam Cost Johncoddert, Francis

illiam S. Archer, Bouldin, Joseph,
borne, Thomas,
mes H. Gholson, Loyall, Edward
liam McComas, cDowell Moore, venson, William
nry A. Wise.
Barringer, Jesse
dmund Deberry,
lall, Micajah T.
oraham Rencher.

air, William K. ohn M. Felder, Griffin, George

e H. Shepperd,

ton, John Coffee, mble, George R. n Schley, James

Martin Beaty, denjamin Hardin, Johnson, James as A. Marshall, compkins. n Blair, Samuel

n Blair, Samuel W. Dickinson, orester, William ca, Balie Peyton, r.

s M. Bell, John seph H. Crane, Jones, Henry H. remiah McLean, erson, Jonathan Thomson, Joseph Taylor Webster,

nas, Edward D.

hn Carr, John George L. Kin-Carty. nklin E. Plumer. oseph Duncan,

Dixon H. Lewis, nley, John Mur-

ey, John Bull. the delegate from Ambrose H. Sevier also appeared as the delerate from the territory of Arkansas,—Joseph M. White from Florida.

Mr. Andrew Stevenson, who had been chosen Speaker of the House for the three succeeding Congresses, was re-elected by a great majority—indicating the administration strength, and his own popularity. The annual message was immediately sent in, and presented a gratifying riew of our foreign relations—all nations being in peace and amity with us, and many giving fresh proofs of friendship, either in new treaties formed, or indemnities made for previous injuries. The state of the finances was then adverted to, and shown to be in the most favorable condition. The message said:

"It gives me great pleasure to congratulate you upon the prosperous condition of the finanes of the country, as will appear from the report which the Secretary of the Treasury will, in due time, lay before you. The receipts into the freasury during the present year will amount to more than thirty-two millions of dollars. The revenue derived from customs will, it is believed be more than twenty-eight millions, and the public lands will yield about three millions. The expenditures within the year, for all objects, including two millions five hundred and seventytwo thousand two hundred and forty dollars and ninety-nine cents on account of the public debt, will not amount to twenty-five millions, and a large balance will remain in the Treasury after satisfying all the appropriations chargeable on the revenue for the present year."

The act of the last session, called the "compromise," the President recommended to observance, "unless it should be found to produce more revenue than the necessities of the government required." The extinction of the public debt presented, in the opinion of the President, the proper occasion for organizing a system of expenditure on the principles of the strictest economy consistent with the public interest; and the passage of the message in relation to that point was particularly grateful to the old friends of an economical administration of the government. It said:

"But, while I forbear to recommend any further reduction of the duties, beyond that already provided for by the existing laws, I must earnestly and respectfully press upon Congress the importance of abstaining from all appropriations which are not absolutely required for the public interests, and authorized by the powers clearly delegated to the United States. We are beginning a new era in our government. The national debt, which has so long been a burden on the Treasury, will be finally discharged in the course of the ensuing year. No more money will afterwards be needed than what may be necessary to meet the ordinary expenses of the government. Now then is the proper moment to fix our system of expenditure on firm and durable principles; and I cannot too strongly urge the necessity of a rigid economy, and an inflexible determination not to enlarge the income beyond the real necessities of the government, and not to increase the wants of the government by unnecessary and profuse expenditures. If a contrary course should be pursued, it may happen that the revenue of 1834 will fall short of the demands upon it; and after reducing the tariff in order to lighten the burdens of the people, and providing for a still further reduction to take effect hereafter, it would be much to be deplored if, at the end of another year, we should find ourselves obliged to retrace our steps, and impose additional taxes to meet unnecessary expenditures."

The part of the message, however, which gave the paper uncommon emphasis, and caused it to be received with opposite, and violent emotions by different parts of the community, was that which related to the Bank of the United Statesits believed condition-and the consequent removal of the public deposits from its keeping. The deposits had been removed-done in vacation by the order of the President-on the ground of insecurity, as well as of misconduct in the corporation: and as Congress, at the previous session had declared its belief of their safety, this act of the President had already become a point of vehement newspaper attack upon him -destined to be continued in the halls of Congress. His conduct in this removal, and the reasons for it, were thus communicated:

"Since the last adjournment of Congress, the Secretary of the Treasury has directed the money of the United States to be deposited in certain State banks designated by him, and he will immediately lay before you his reasons for this direction. I concur with him entirely in the view he has taken of the subject; and, some months before the removal, I urged upon the department the propriety of taking that step. The near approach of the day on which the charter will expire, as well as the conduct of the bank, appeared to me to call for this measure upon the high considerations of public interest and public duty. The extent of its misconduct, however, although known to be great, was not at that time fully developed by proof. It was not until late in the month of August, that I received from the government directors an official report, establishing beyond question that this great and powerful institution had been actively engaged in attemping to influence the elections of the public officers by means of its money; and that, in violation of the express provisions of its charter, it had, by a formal resolution, placed its funds at the disposition of its President, to be employed in sustaining the political power of the bank. A copy of this resolution is contained in the report of the government directors, before referred to; and however the object may be disguised by cautious language, no one can doubt that this money was in truth intended for electioneering purposes, and the particular uses to which it was proved to have been applied, abundantly show that it was so understood. Not only was the evidence complete as to the past application of the money and power of the bank to electioneering purposes, but that the resolution of the board of directors authorized the same course to be pursued in future.

"It being thus established, by unquestionable proof, that the Bank of the United States was converted into a permanent electioneering engine, it appeared to me that the path of duty which the Executive department of the government ought to pursue, was not doubtful. As by the terms of the bank charter, no officer but the Secretary of the Treasury could remove the deposits, it seemed to me that this authority ought to be at once exerted to deprive that great corporation of the support and countenance of the government in such a use of its funds, and such an exertion of its power. In this point of the case, the question is distinctly presented, whether the people of the United States are to govern through representatives chosen by their unbiassed suffrages, or whether the money and power of a great corporation are to be secretly exerted to influence their judgment, and control their decisions. It must now be determined whether the bank is to have its candidates for all offices in the country, from the highest to the lowest, or whether candidates on both sides of political questions shall be brought forward as heretofore, and supported by the usual means.

"At this time, the efforts of the bank to control public opinion, through the distresses of some and the fears of others, are equally apparent, and, if possible, more objectionable. By a curtailment of its accommodations, more rapid than any emergency requires, and even while it retains specie to an almost unprecedented amount in its vaults, it is attempting to produce great embarrassment in one portion of the community, while, through presses known to have been sustained by its money, it attempts, by unfounded alarms, to create a panic in all.

"These are the means by which it seems to expect that it can force a restoration of the deposits, and, as a necessary consequence, extort from Congress a renewal of its charter. I am happy to know that, through the good sense of our people, the effort to get up a panic has hitherto failed, and that, through the increased accommodations which the State banks have been enabled to afford, no public distress has followed the exertions of the bank; and it cannot be doubted that the exercise of its power, and the expenditure of its money, as well as its efforts to spread groundless alarm, will be met and rebuked as they deserve. In my own sphere of duty, I should feel myself called on, by the facts disclosed, to order a scire facias against the bank, with a view to put an end to the chartered rights it has so palpably violated, were it not that the charter itself will expire as soon as a decision would probably be obtained from the court of last resort.

"I called the attention of Congress to this." subject in my last annual message, and informed them that such measures as were within the reach of the Secretary of the Treasury, had been taken to enable him to judge whether the public deposits in the Bank of the United States were entirely safe; but that as his single powers might be inadequate to the object, I recommended the subject to Congress, as worthy of their serious investigation: declaring it as my opinion that an inquiry into the transactions of that institution, embracing the branches as well as the principal bank, was called for by the credit which was given throughout the country to many serious charges impeaching their character. and which, if true, might justly excite the apprehension that they were no longer a safe depository for the public money. The extent to which the examination, thus recommended, was gone into, is spread upon your journals, and is too well known to require to be stated. Such as was made resulted in a report from a majority of the Committee of Ways and Means, touching certain specified points only, concluding with a resolution that the government deposits might safely be continued in the Bank of the United States. This resolution was adopted at the close of the session, by the vote of a majority of the House of Representatives."

The message concluded with renewing the recommendation, which the President had annually made since his first election, in favor of so amending the constitution in the article of the presidential and vice-presidential elections, as to give the choice of the two first officers of the government to a direct vote of the people, and that "every intermediate agency in the election of those officers should be removed." This recommendation, like all which preceded it, remained without practical results. For ten years committees had reported amendments, and members had supported them, but without obtaining in Congress the requisite two thirds to refer the proposition of amendment to the vote of the people. Three causes co vent the concurrence of t conservative spirit of ma under any circumstances institution. 2. The enem who deem it unsafe to lo the presidential election, the people. 3. The int manage these elections and have no means of do the agency of intermedia potent of these agencies, which controls all the latest and most spontar "conventions"-originally the caucus system of no retains all the evils of the peculiar to itself. They members of Congress, an bility to their constituents a Congress caucus. A lar delegates are either self-ar guingly appointed, and by as to constitute a burlesque sentation. Delegates even tions, and make proxies-a lowed to peers of the realm parliamentary voting, becau tors in their own right, and himself, as his own constitu responsibility to no one. T the delegates of some of t tended by one or two tho plied with money, and making pliances of feasting and sp or control votes, which ampl mined zeal can supply, in a c sonal benefit is expected. that is to say, baffles the maj and consents to a "comprothat purpose the person who held in reserve for that pur nority of one third, which g is itself usually governed b And to complete the exclusion all efficient control, in the se dential candidate, an interlo is generally appointed out act from one convention to an whole interval of four years be ical assemblages-to guide and n the increased the banks have lic distress has nk; and it canse of its power, y, as well as its rm, will be met my own sphere alled on, by the facias against end to the chardolated, were it knows as ptained from the

ongress to this ze, and informed vere within the easury, had been hether the pub-3 United States nis single powers bject, I recomss, as worthy of . laring it as my transactions of branches as well for by the credit the country to g their character, v excite the aponger a safe de

The extent to commended, was journals, and is e stated. Such t from a majorad Means, touch-concluding with it deposits might k of the United opted at the close majority of the renewing the reent had annually in favor of so he article of the ial elections, as st officers of the 'the people, and y in the election wed." This receded it, remain—For ten years ments, and memrithout obtaining hirds to refer the the vote of the people. Three causes combined always to prevent the concurrence of that majority: 1. The conservative spirit of many, who are unwilling, under any circumstances, to touch an existing institution. 2. The enemies of popular elections. who deem it unsafe to lodge the high power of the presidential election, directly in the hands of the people. 3. The intriguers, who wish to manage these elections for their own benefit, and have no means of doing it except through the agency of intermediate bodies. The most potent of these agencies, and the one in fact which controls all the others, is the one of latest and most spontaneous growth, called "conventions"-originally adopted to supersede the caucus system of nominations, but which retains all the evils of that system, and others peculiar to itself. They are still attended by members of Congress, and with less responsibility to their constituents than when acting in a Congress caucus. A large proportion of the delegates are either self-appointed or so intriguingly appointed, and by such small numbers. as to constitute a burlesque upon popular representation. Delegates even transfer their functions, and make proxies-a prerogative only allowed to peers of the realm, in England, in their parliamentary voting, because they are legislators in their own right, and represent, each one, himself, as his own constituent body, and owing responsibility to no one. They meet in taverns, the delegates of some of the large States, attended by one or two thousand backers, supslied with money, and making all the public appliances of feasting and speaking, to conciliate or control votes, which ample means and determined zeal can supply, in a case in which a personal benefit is expected. The minority rules, that is to say, baffles the majority until it yields, and consents to a "compromise," accepting for that purpose the person whom the minority has held in reserve for that purpose; and this minority of one third, which governs two thirds. is itself usually governed by a few managers. And to complete the exclusion of the people from all efficient control, in the selection of a presidential candidate, an interlocutory committee is generally appointed out of its members to act from one convention to another-during the whole interval of four years between their period-

lic mind, in the different States, to the support of the person on whom they have secretly agreed. After the nomination is over, and the election effected, the managers in these nominations openly repair to the new President, if they have been successful, and demand rewards for their labor, in the shape of offices for themselves and connections. This is the way that presidential elections are now made in the United States: for, a party nomination is an election, if the party is strong enough to make it; and, if one is not, the other is; for, both parties act alike, and thus the mass of the people have no more part in selecting the person who is to be their President than the subjects of hereditary monarchs have in begetting the child who is to rule over them. To such a point is the greatest of our elections now sunk by the arts of "intermediate agencies;" and it may be safely assumed, that the history of free elective governments affords no instance of such an abandonment, on the part of legal voters, of their great constitutional privileges, and quiet sinking down of the millions to the automaton performance of delivering their votes as the few have directed.

CHAPTER XCII.

REMOVAL OF THE DEPOSITS FROM THE BANK OF THE UNITED STATES.

THE fact of this removal was communicated to Congress, in the annual message of the President; the reasons for it, and the mode of doing it, were reserved for a separate communication; and especially a report from the Secretary of the Treasury, to whom belonged the absolute right of the removal, without assignment of any reasons except to Congress, after the act was done. The order for the removal, as it was called-for it was only an order to the collectors of revenue to cease making their deposits in that bank, leaving the amount actually in it, to be drawn out of intervals, and in different sums. according to the course at the government disbursements-was issued the 22d of September. and signed by Roger B. Taney, Esq., the new Secretary of the Treasury, appointed in place of ical assemblages—to guide and conduct the pub- Mr. Wm. J. Duane, who, refusing to make the removal, upon the request of the President, was himself removed. This measure (the ceasing to deposit the public moneys with the Bank of the United States) was the President's own measure, conceived by him, carried out by him, defended by him, and its fate dependent upon him. He had coadjutors in every part of the business, but the measure was his own; for this heroic civil measure, like a heroic military resolve, had to be the offspring of one great mind-self-acting and poised-seeing its way through all difficulties and dangers; and discerning ultimate triumph over all obstacles in the determination to conquer them, or to perish. Councils are good for safety, not for heroism-good for escapes from perils, and for retreats, but for action, and especially high and daring action, but one mind is wanted. The removal of the deposits was an act of that kind-high and daring, and requiring as much nerve as any enterprise of arms, in which the President had ever been engaged. His military exploits had been of his own conception; his great civil acts were to be the same: more impeded than promoted by councils. And thus it was in this case. The majority of his cabinet was against him. His Secretary of the Treasury refused to execute his will. A few only-a fraction of the cabinet and some friends-concurred heartily in the act: Mr. Taney, attorney general, Mr. Kendall, Mr. Francis P. Blair, editor of the Globe; and some few others.

He took his measures carefully and deliberately, and with due regard to keeping himself demonstrably, as well as actually right. Observation had only confirmed his opinion, communicated to the previous Congress, of the misconduct of the institution, and the insecurity of the public moneys in it: and the almost unanimous vote of the House of Representatives to the contrary, made no impression upon his strong conviction. Denied a legislative examination into its affairs, he determined upon an executive one, through inquiries put to the government directors, and the researches into the state of the books, which the Secretary of the Treasury had a right to make. Four of those directors, namely, Messrs. Henry D. Gilpin, John T. Sullivan, Peter Wager, and Hugh McEldery, made two reports to the President, according to the duty assigned them, in which they showed | ted to us, contained very little information rela-

great misconduct in its management, and a great perversion of its funds to undue and political purposes. Some extracts from these reports will show the nature of this report, the names of persons to whom money was paid being omitted, as the only object, in making the extracts. is to show the conduct of the bank, and not to disturb or affect any individuals.

"On the 30th November, 1830, it is stated on the minutes, that 'the president submitted to the board a copy of an article on banks and currency, just published in the American Quarterly Review of this city, containing a favorable notice of this institution, and suggested the expediency of making the views of the author more extensively known to the public than they can be by means of the subscription list.' Whereupon, it was, on motion, 'Resolved, That the president be authorized to take such measures. in regard to the circulation of the contents of the said article, either in whole or in part, as he may deem most for the interests of the bank. On the 11th March, 1831, it again appears by the minutes that 'the president stated to the board, that, in consequence of the general desire expressed by the directors, at one of their meetings of the last year, subsequent to the adjournment of Congress, and a verbal understanding with the board, measures had been taken by him, in the course of that year, for furnishing numerous copies of the reports of General Smith and Mr. McDuffie on the subject of this bank. and for widely disseminating their contents through the United States; and that he has since, by virtue of the authority given him by a resolution of this board, on the 30th day of November last, caused a large edition of Mr. Gallatin's essay on banks and currency to be published and circulated, in like manner, at the expense of the bank. He suggested, at the same time, the propriety and expediency of extending still more widely a knowledge of the concerns of this institution, by means of the republication of other valuable articles, which had issued from the daily and periodical press.' Whereupon, it was, on motion, 'Resolved, That the president is hereby authorized to cause to be prepared and circulated, such documents and papers as may communicate to the people information, in regard to the nature and operations of the bank.

"In pursuance, it is presumed, of these resolutions, the item of stationary and printing was increased, during the first half year of 1831, to the enormous sum of $29,979 92, exceeding that of the previous half year by $23,000, and exceeding the semi-annual expenditure of 1829, upwards of $26,000. The expense account itself, as made up in the book which was submittive to the particulars of t we are obliged, in order to sort to an inspection of th other sums, was one of $ been paid on orders of the resolution of 11th March, themselves were the only ve diture which we found on fi ders, to the amount of abou the expenditure was for Smith's and Mr. McDuffie Gallatin's pamphlet; but rally that it was made und 11th of March, 1831. The ous bills and receipts for e viduals: $1,300 for distrib pamphlet; $1,675 75 for 5, Smith's and Mr. McDuffie' for 11,000 extra papers; of tinel, $125 74 for printing, postage on 3,000 extras; $ of 50,000 copies of the Na supplements containing adof State legislatures, revie speech, abstracts of Mr. Ga the American Quarterly article on the project of $1,447 75 for 25,000 copie Mr. McDuffie and General S copies of the address to n legislatures, agreeably to 01,000 copies of 'Gallatin 2,000 copies of Professor T

"During the second half item of stationery and print of which $5,010 were pai president, and stated gener resolution of 11th March, 1 were paid to individuals, as count, for printing and distr

"During the first half ve of stationery and printing which $2,150 was stated to orders of the president, und 11th March, 1831. There dividual payments, of which for one thousand copies of Benton's speech; $200 for of the Saturday Courier; thousand copies of a pamp bank, and six thousand co report relative to the banl hundred copies of Clarke & During the last half year stationery and printing ros which $6,350 are stated to orders of the president, unc 11th March, 1831. Among we observe $821 78 for pui veto; $1,371 04 for four th Ewing's speech, bank docur the veto; $4,106 13 for s copies of Mr. Webster's s and Mr. McDuffie's report

t, and a great and political these reports rt, the names id being omitthe extracts. k, and not to it is stated on submitted to anks and curan Quarterly favorable noted the expee author more than they can list.' Wherered. That the such measures. ie contents of r in part, as he of the bank. in appears by stated to the he general det one of their uent to the adal understandbeen taken by for furnishing General Smith of this bank their contents d that he has given him by ne 30th day of edition of Mr. currency to be manner, at the ted, at the same cy of extending of the concerns the republicahich had issued ress.' Wheredred, That the to cause to be documents and

I. of these resond printing was year of 1831, to , exceeding that 23,000, and exditure of 1829, ense account itich was submitaformation relative to the particulars of this expenditure, and we are obliged, in order to obtain them, to resort to an inspection of the vouchers. Among other sums, was one of $7,801, stated to have been paid on orders of the president, under the resolution of 11th March, 1831, and the orders themselves were the only vouchers of the expenditure which we found on file. Some of the orders to the amount of about $1,800, stated that the expenditure was for distributing General Smith's and Mr. McDuffie's reports, and Mr. Gallatin's pamphlet; but the rest stated generally that it was made under the resolution of 11th of March, 1831. There were also numerous bills and receipts for expenditures to individuals: $1,300 for distributing Mr. Gallatin's pamphlet; $1,675 75 for 5,000 copies of General Smith's and Mr. McDuffie's reports, &c.; $440 for 11,000 extra papers; of the American Sentinel, $125 74 for printing, folding, packing, and postage on 3,000 extras; $1,830 27 for upwards of 50,000 copies of the National Gazette, and supplements containing addresses to members of State legislatures, reviews of Mr. Benton's speech, abstracts of Mr. Gallatin's article from the American Quarterly Review, and editorial article on the project of a Treasury Bank; $1,447 75 for 25,000 copies of the reports of Mr. McDuffie and General Smith, and for 25,000 copies of the address to members of the State legislatures, agreeably to order; $2,850 for 01.000 copies of 'Gallatin on Banking,' and 2000 copies of Professor Tucker's article.

he people infor-

and operations

"During the second half year of 1831, the item of stationery and printing was $13,224 87, of which $5,010 were paid on orders of the president, and stated generally to be under the resolution of 11th March, 1831, and other sums were paid to individuals, as in the previous account, for printing and distributing documents.

"During the first half year of 1832, the item of stationery and printing was $12,134 16, of which $2,150 was stated to have been paid on orders of the president, under the resolution of 11th March, 1831. There are also various individual payments, of which we noticed $106 38 for one thousand copies of the review of Mr. Benton's speech; $200 for one thousand copies of the Saturday Courier; $1,176 for twenty thousand copies of a pamphlet concerning the bank, and six thousand copies of the minority report relative to the bank; $1,800 for three hundred copies of Clarke & Hall's bank book. During the last half year of 1832, the item of stationery and printing rose to $26,543 72, of which $6,350 are stated to have been paid on orders of the president, under the resolution of 11th March, 1831. Among the specified charges we observe $821 78 for punting a review of the veto; $1,371 04 for four thousand copies of Mr. Ewing's speech, bank documents, and review of the veto; $4,106 13 for sixty-three thousand copies of Mr. Webster's speech, Mr. Adams's and minority reports: $295 for fourteen thou sand extras of The Protector, containing bank documents; $2,583 50 for printing and distributing reports, Mr. Webster's speech, &c. $150 12 for printing the speeches of Messrs. Clay, Ewing, and Smith, and Mr. Adams's report; $1,512 75 to Mr. Clark, for printing Mr. Webster's speech and articles on the veto, and $2,422 65 for fifty-two thousand five hundred copies of Mr. Webster's speech. There is also a charge of $4,040 paid on orders of the president, stating that it is for expenses in measures for protecting the bank against a run on the Western branches.

"During the first half year of 1833, the item of stationery and printing was $9,093 59, of which $2,600 are stated to have been paid on orders of the president, under the resolution of 11th March, 1831. There is also a charge of $800 for printing the report of the exchange committee.

These various items, amounting to about $80,000, all explain themselves by their names and dates-every name of an item referring to a political purpose, and every date corresponding with the impending questions of the recharter and the presidential election; and all charged to the expense account of the bank-a head of account limited, by the nature of the institution, so far as printing was concerned, to the printing necessary for the conducting of its own business; yet in the whole sum, making the total of $80,000, there is not an item of that kind included. To expose, or correct these abuses, the government directors submitted the following resolution to the board:

"Whereas, it appears by the expense account of the bank for the years 1831 and 1832, that upwards of $80,000 were expended and charged under the head of stationery and printing during that period; that a large proportion of this sum was paid to the proprietors of newspapers and periodical journals, and for the printing, distribution, and postage of immense numbers of pamphlets and newspapers; and that about $20,000 were expended under the resolutions of 30th November, 1830, and 11th March, 1831. without any account of the manner in which. or the persons to whom, they were disbursed: and whereas it is expedient and proper that the particulars of this expenditure, so large and unusual, which can now be ascertained only by the examinaton of numerous bills and receipts. should be so stated as to be readily submitted to, and examined by, the board of directors and the stockholders: Therefore, Resolved, That the cashier furnish to the board, at as early a day as possible, a full and particular statement of and Mr. McDuffle's reports, and the majority all these expenditures, designating the sums of money paid to each person, the quantity and names of the documents furnished by him, and his charges for the distribution and postage of the same; together with as full a statement as may be of the expenditure under the resolutions of 30th November, 1830, and 11th March, 1831. That he ascertain whether expenditures of the same character have been made at any of the offices, and if so, procure similar statements thereof, with the authority on which they were made. That the said resolutions be rescinded, and no further expenditures made under the

AN

This resolution was rejected by the board, and in place of it another was adopted, declaring perfect confidence in the president of the bank, and directing him to continue his expenditures under the two resolves of November and March according to his discretion; -thus continuing to him the power of irresponsible expenditure, both in amount and object, to any extent that he pleased. The reports also showed that the government directors were treated with the indignity of being virtually excluded, both from the transactions of the bank, and the knowledge of them; and that the charter was violated to effect these outrages. As an instance, this is given: the exchange committee was in itself, and even confined to its proper duties, that of buying and selling exchange, was a very important one, having the application of an immense amount of the funds of the bank. While confined to its proper duties, it was changed monthly, and the directors served upon it by turns; so that by the process of rotation and speedy renewal, every member of the directory was kept well informed of the transactions of this committee, and had their due share in all its great operations. But at this time-(time of the renewed charter and the presidential election)—both the duties of the committee, and its mode of appointment were altered; discounting of notes was permitted to it, and the appointment of its members was invested in Mr. Biddle; and no government director was henceforth put upon it. Thus, a few directors made the loans in the committee's room, which by the charter could only be made by seven directors at the board; and the government directors, far from having any voice in these exchange loans, were ignorant of them until afterwards found on the books. It was in this exchange committee that most of the loans to members of Congress were made, and under whose operations the greatest losses were eventually incurred. The report of the four directors also showed other great misconduct on the part of the bank, one of which was to nearly double its discounts at the approaching termination of the charter, running them up in less than a year and a half from about forty-two and a half to about seventy and a half millions of dollars. General Jackson was not the man to tolerate these illegalities, corruptions and indignities. He, therefore, determined on ceasing to use the institution any longer as a place of deposit for the public moneys; and accordingly communicated his intention to the cabinet, all of whom had been requested to assist him in his deliberations on the subject. The major part of them dissented from his design; whereupon he assembled them on the 22nd of September, and read to them a paper, of which the following are the more essential parts:

"Having carefully and anxiously considered all the facts and arguments which have been submitted to him, relative to a removal of the public deposits from the Bank of the United States, the President deems it his duty to communicate in this manner to his cabinet the final conclusions of his own mind, and the reasons on which they are founded, in order to put them in durable form, and to prevent misconceptions.

The President's convictions of the dangerous tendencies of the Bank of the United States. since signally illustrated by its own acts, were so overpowering when he entered on the duties of chief magistrate, that he felt it his duty, notwithstanding the objections of the friends by whom he was surrounded, to avail himself of the first occasion to call the attention of Congress and the people to the question of its recharter. The opinions expressed in his annual message of December, 1829, were reiterated in those of December, 1830 and 1831, and in that of 1830, he threw out for consideration some suggestions in relation to a substitute. At the session of 1831-'32 an act was passed by a majority of both Houses of Congress rechartering the present bank, upon which the President felt it his duty to put his constitutional veto. In his message, returning that act, he repeated and enlarged upon the principles and views briefly asserted in his annual messages, declaring the bank to be, in his opinion, both inexpedient and unconstitutional, and announcing to his countrymen, very unequivocally, his firm determination never to sanction, by his approval, the continuany other upon similar pri "There are strong reaso the motive of the bank in a at that session of Congreleading question in the electhe United States the enall steps deemed necessarcure from the people a reverdecision.

"Although the charter termination, and the bank the intention of the government deposit as fast as it has ment of the public debt, loans from January, 1831 $42,402,304 24 to $70,428 crease of $28,025,766 48, It is confidently believed t of this immense extension bring as large a portion of under its power and influe disclosed that some of th granted on very unusual ter of the public press. In so motive was made manifes insufficient security taken arge amounts discounted, time allowed for payment, subsequent conduct of the

"Having taken these obtain control over publi came into Congress and a The object avowed by man the bank, was to put the that the country might kno tion relative to the bank election. Many documen printed and circulated at th to bring the people to a far its pretensions. Those wh to have made its debtors for were warned of the ruin should the President be su were made to alarm the w. ing the depression in the produce, and the general lo distress, which it was repr diately follow the re-electiopposition to the bank.

commodations.

"Can it now be said the recharter of the bank was election which ensued? equivocal, or had it not ground—if it had merely the details of the bill, or to—if it had not met the with the details of the bill, or to—if it had not met have been some plausibil that the question was not It was to compel the President that the question was been some plausibility and the properticular time. He met took the position into we ance of that institution or the establishment of any other upon similar principles. There are strong reasons for believing that the motive of the bank in asking for a recharter at that session of Congress, was to make it a leading question in the election of a President of the United States the ensuing November, and all steps deemed necessary were taken to procure from the people a reversal of the President's ongress were

the greatest

The report of

er great mis-

one of which

ts at the ap-

rter, running

a half from

t seventy and

Jackson was

legalities, cor-

erefore, deter-

stitution any

or the public

nicated his in-

om had been

liberations on

nem dissented

sembled them

ad to them a

the more es-

ly considered

ich have been

emoval of the

of the United

duty to com-

binet the final

d the reasons

order to put

event miscon-

the dangerous

United States.

wn acts, were on the duties

his duty, not-

he friends by ail himself of

ntion of Con-

tion of its re-

in his annual reiterated in

1, and in that deration some itute. At the

ssed by a ma-

s rechartering

President felt

onal veto. In

e repeated and l views briefly

, declaring the

nexpedient and to his country-

determination

d, the continu-

"Although the charter was approaching its termination, and the bank was aware that it was the intention of the government to use the public deposit as fast as it has accrued, in the payment of the public debt, yet did it extend its loans from January, 1831, to May, 1832, from $42,402,304 24 to $70,428,070 72, being an increase of $28,025,766 48, in sixteen months. It is confidently believed that the leading object of this immense extension of its loans was to bring as large a portion of the people as possible under its power and influence; and it has been disclosed that some of the largest sums were granted on very unusual terms to the conductors of the public press. In some of these cases, the motive was made manifest by the nominal or insufficient security taken for the loans, by the arge amounts discounted, by the extraordinary time allowed for payment, and especially by the subsequent conduct of those receiving the accommodations.

"Having taken these preliminary steps to obtain control over public opinion, the bank came into Congress and asked a new charter. The object avowed by many of the advocates of the bank, was to put the President to the test, that the country might know his final determination relative to the bank prior to the ensuing election. Many documents and articles were printed and circulated at the expense of the bank, to bring the people to a favorable decision upon its pretensions. Those whom the bank appears to have made its debtors for the special occasion, were warned of the ruin which awaited them, should the President be sustained, and attempts were made to alarm the whole people by painting the depression in the price of property and produce, and the general loss, inconvenience, and distress, which it was represented would immediately follow the re-election of the President in opposition to the bank.

Can it now be said that the question of a recharter of the bank was not decided at the election which ensued? Had the veto been equivocal, or had it not covered the whole ground—if it had merely taken exceptions to the details of the bill, or to the time of its passage -if it had not met the whole ground of constitutionality and expediency, then there might have been some plausibility for the allegation that the question was not decided by the people. It was to compel the President to take his stand, that the question was brought forward at that particular time. He met the challenge, willingly sought to force him, and frankly declared his unalterable opposition to the bank as being both unconstitutional and inexpedient. On that ground the case was argued to the people, and now that the people have sustained the President, notwithstanding the array of influence and power which was brought to bear upon him, it is too late, he confidently thinks, to say that the question has not been decided. Whatever may be the opinions of others, the President considers his re-election as a decision of the people against the bank. In the concluding paragraph of his veto message he said:

"'I have now done my duty to my country. If sustained by my fellow-citizens, I shall be grateful and happy; if not, I shall find in the motives which impel me, ample grounds for contentment and peace.

"He was sustained by a just people, and he desires to evince his gratitude by carrying into effect their decision, so far as it depends upon him.

"Of all the substitutes for the present bank, which have been suggested, none seems to have united any considerable portion of the public in its favor. Most of them are liable to the same constitutional objections for which the present bank has been condemned, and perhaps to all there are strong objections on the score of expediency. In ridding the country of an irresponsible power which has attempted to control the government, care must be taken not to unite the same power with the executive branch. To give a President the control over the currency and the power over individuals now possessed by the Bank of the United States, even with the material difference that he is responsible to the people, would be as objectionable and as dangerous as to leave it as it is. Neither the one nor the other is necessary, and therefore ought not to be resorted to.

"But in the conduct of the bank may be found other reasons, very imperative in their character, and which require prompt action. Developments have been made from time to time of its faithlessness as a public agent, its misapplication of public funds, its interference in elections, its efforts, by the machinery of committees, to deprive the government directors of a full knowledge of its concerns, and above all, its flagrant misconduct as recently and unexpectedly disclosed, in placing all the funds of the bank, including the money of the government, at the disposition of the president of the bank, as means of operating upon public opinion and procuring a new charter without requiring him to render a voucher for their disbursement. A brief recapitulation of the facts which justify these charges and which have come to the knowledge of the public and the President, will, he thinks, remove every reasonable doubt as to the course which it is now the duty of the President to pursue.

"We have seen that in sixteen months, ending in May, 1832, the bank had extended its loans more than $28,000,000, although it knew the took the position into which his adversaries government intended to appropriate most of its large deposit during that year in payment of the public debt. It was in May, 1832, that its loans arrived at the maximum, and in the preceding March, so sensible was the bank that it would not be able to pay over the public deposit when it would be required by the government, that it commenced a secret negotiation without the approbation or knowledge of the government, with the agents, for about $2,700,000 of the three per cent. stocks held in Holland, with a view of inducing them not to come forward for payment for one or more years after notice should be given by the Treasury Department. This arrangement would have enabled the bank to keep and use during that time the public money set apart for the payment of these stocks.

"Although the charter and the rules of the bank, both, declare that 'not less than seven directors' shall be necessary to the transaction of business, yet, the most important business, even that of granting discounts to any extent, is intrusted to a committee of five members who do not report to the board.

"To cut off all means of communication with the government, in relation to its most important acts, at the commencement of the present year, not one of the government directors was placed on any one committee. And although since, by an unusual remodelling of those bodies, some of those directors have been placed on some of the committees, they are yet entirely excluded from the committee of exchange, through which the greatest and most objectionable loans have been made.

"When the government directors made an effort to bring back the business of the bank to the board, in obedience to the charter and the existing regulations, the board not only overruled their attempt, but altered the rule so as to make it conform to the practice, in direct violation of one of the most important provisions of the charter which gave them existence.

"It has long been known that the president of the bank, by his single will, originates and executes many of the most important measures connected with the management and credit of the bank, and that the committee, as well as the board of directors, are left in entire ignorance of many acts done, and correspondence carried on, in their names, and apparently under their authority. The fact has been recently disclosed, that an unlimited discretion has been, and is now, vested in the president of the bank to expend its funds in payment for preparing and circulating articles, and purchasing pamphlets and newspapers, calculated by their contents to operate on elections and secure a renewal of its charter.

"With these facts before him, in an official report from the government directors, the President would feel that he was not only responsible for all the abuses and corruptions the bank has committed, or may commit, but almost an accomplice in a conspiracy against that government which he has sworn honestly to administer, if he did not take every step, within his consti- | tion, as necessary to preserve the morals of the tutional and legal power, likely to be efficient in putting an end to these enormities. If it be possible, within the scope of human affairs, to find a reason for removing the government deposits, and leaving the bank to its own resource for the means of effecting its criminal designs, we have it here. Was it expected, when the moneys of the United States were directed to be placed in that bank, that they would be put under the control of one man, empowered to spend millions without rendering a voucher or specifying the object? Can they be considered safe, with the evidence before us that tens of thousands have been spent for highly improper, if not corrupt, purposes, and that the same motive may lead to the expenditure of hundreds of thousands and even millions more? And can we justify ourselves to the people by longer lending to it the money and power of the government, to be employed for such purposes'

"In conclusion, the President must be permitted to remark that he looks upon the pending question as of higher consideration than the mere transfer of a sum of money from one bank to another. Its decision may affect the character of our government for ages to come. Should the bank be suffered longer to use the public moneys, in the accomplishment of its purposes. with the proof of its faithlessness and corruption before our eyes, the patriotic among our citizens will despair of success in struggling against its power; and we shall be responsible for entailing it upon our country for ever. Viewing it as a question of transcendent importance. both in the principles and consequences it involves, the President could not, in justice to the responsibility which he owes to the country, refrain from pressing upon the Secretary of the Treasury his view of the considerations which impel to immediate action. Upon him has been devolved, by the constitution and the suffrages of the American people, the duty of superintending the operation of the Executive departments of the governments, and seeing that the laws are faithfully executed. In the performance of this high trust, it is his undoubted right to express to those whom the laws and his own choice have made his associates in the administration of the government, his opinion of their duties, under circumstances, as they arise. It is this right which he now exercises. Far be it from him to expect or require that any member of the cabinet should, at his request, order, or dictation, do any act which he believes unlawful, or in his conscience condemns. From them, and from his fellow-citizens in general, he desires only that aid and support which their reason approves and their conscience sanctions.

"The President again repeats that he begs his cabinet to consider the proposed measure as his own, in the support of which he shall require no one of them to make a sacrifice of opinion or principle. Its responsibility has been assumed, after the most mature deliberation and reflecpeople, the freedom of the p of the elective franchise, wit unite in saying that the bloc pended by our forefathers, is of our happy system of gov been vain and fruitless. Und he feels that a measure so ho rican people cannot be con and he, therefore, names the next as a period proper for deposits, or sooner, provide rangements with the State b

I was in the State of Virgi newspaper arrived, towards ber, bringing this "paper," had read to his cabinet, and tion that he had carried h into effect. I felt an emotio lime at beholding such an in ism. Here was a President pelitical profession, taking a own responsibility from wh visers shrunk; and magnan itself, releasing all from the countered, and boldly taking himself. I say peril; for conquer, there was an end to pects of every public man c moval. He believed the ac and believing that, he did t consequences to God and t that a great blow had been great contest must come or be crowned with success b spirit with which it had c repaired to Washington at t session with a full determi the President, which I belie by the country; and to do ing his conduct, and in exp the powerful combination w would be formed against hin

CHAPTER

BANK PROCEEDINGS, ON SEE OF THE PRESIDENT, IN RE MOVAL OF THE DEPOSITS.

IMMEDIATELY on the public of the "Paper read to the took it into consideration in people, the freedom of the press, and the purity of the elective franchise, without which, all will unite in saying that the blood and treasure expended by our forefathers, in the establishment of our happy system of government, will have been vain and fruitless. Under these convictions, he feels that a measure so important to the American people cannot be commenced too soon; and he, therefore, names the first day of October next as a period proper for the change of the deposits, or sooner, provided the necessary arrangements with the State banks can be made."

be efficient

s. If it be affairs, to rnment de-

vn resource nal designs,

, when the

rected to be powered to voucher or considered

nat tens of

y improper,

e same mo-

of hundreds ore? And e by longer

the govern-

ist be per-

the pend-

on than the m one bank

the charac-

ne. Should

e the public

s purposes.

and corrup-

among our struggling responsible

ever. View-

importance

iences it in-

istice to the he country,

etary of the

tions which

m has been

ne suffrages

of superin-

tive depart-

ig that the

ne perform-

ubted right

and his own

he adminis-

ion of their

y arise. It Far be it ny member

st, order, or eves unlaw-

From them.

ieral, he de-

h their rea-

he begs his asure as his hall require

f opinion or en assumed.

and reflec-

orals of the

nctions.

ses?

uld be put

I was in the State of Virginia, when the Globe newspaper arrived, towards the end of September, bringing this "paper," which the President had read to his cabinet, and the further information that he had carried his announced design into effect. I felt an emotion of the moral sublime at beholding such an instance of civic heroism. Here was a President, not bred up in the pelitical profession, taking a great step upon his own responsibility from which many of his advisers shrunk; and magnanimously, in the act itself, releasing all from the peril that he encountered, and boldly taking the whole upon himself. I say peril; for if the bank should conquer, there was an end to the political prospects of every public man concurring in the removal. He believed the act to be necessary; and believing that, he did the act-leaving the consequences to God and the country. I felt that a great blow had been struck, and that a great contest must come on, which could only be crowned with success by acting up to the spirit with which it had commenced. And I repaired to Washington at the approach of the session with a full determination to stand by the President, which I believed to be standing by the country; and to do my part in justifying his conduct, and in exposing and resisting the powerful combination which it was certain would be formed against him.

CHAPTER XCIII.

BANK PROCEEDINGS, ON SEEING THE DECISION OF THE PRESIDENT, IN RELATION TO THE RE-MOVAL OF THE DEPOSITS.

IMMEDIATELY on the publication in the Globe of the "Paper read to the Cabinet," the bank

co-ordinate body. It summoned a meeting of the directors-appointed a committee-referred the President's "Paper" to it-ordered it to report-held another meeting to receive the report-adopted it (the government directors, Gilpin, Wager, and Sullivan voting against it)and ordered five thousand copies of the report to be printed. A few extracts from the report, entitled a Memorial to Congress, are here given, for the purpose of showing, First, The temper and style in which this moneyed corporation, deriving its existence from the national Congress, indulged itself, and that in its corporate capacity, in speaking of the President of the United States and his cabinet; and, next, to show the lead which it gave to the proceedings which were to be had in Congress. Under the first head, the following passages are given:

"The committee to whom was referred on the 24th of September, a paper signed 'Andrew Jackson,' purporting to have been read to a cabinet on the 18th, and also another paper signed 'H. D. Gilpin, John T. Sullivan, Peter Wager, and Hugh McEldery,' bearing date August 19th, 1833with instructions to consider the same, and report to the board 'whether any, and what steps may be deemed necessary on the part of the board in consequence of the publication of said letter and report,' beg leave to state-

"To justify this measure is the purpose of the paper signed 'Andrew Jackson.' Of the paper itself, and of the individual who has signed it, the committee find it difficult to speak with the plainness by which alone such a document, from such a source, should be described, without wounding their own self-respect, and violating the consideration which all American citizens must feel for the chief magistracy of their country. Subduing, however, their feelings and their language down to that respectful tone which is due to the office, they will proceed to examine the history of this measure, its character and the pretexts offered in palliation of it.

1st. It would appear from its contents and from other sources of information, that the President had a meeting of what is called the cabinet, on Wednesday, the 18th September, and there read this paper. Finding that it made no impression on the majority of persons assembled, the subject was postponed, and in the mean time this document was put into the newspapers. It was obviously published for two reasons. The first was to influence the members of the cabinet by bringing to bear upon their immediate decision the first public impression excited by misrepresentations, which the objects of them could not refute in time—the second was, by the same excitement, to affect the approaching elections in took it into consideration in all the forms of a Pennsylvania Maryland and New Jersey. Its assailants are what are called politicians (i. e., the assailants of the bank)."

Such is the temper and style in which the President of the United States is spoken of by this great moneyed corporation, in a memorial addressed to Congress. Erecting itself into a coordinate body, and assuming in its corporate capacity an authority over the President's act, it does not even condescend to call him President. It is "Andrew Jackson," and the name always placed between inverted commas to mark the higher degree of contempt. Then the corporation shrinks from remarking on the "paper" itself, and the "individual" who signed it, as a thing injurious to their own self-respect, and only to be done in consideration of the "office" which he fills, and that after "subduing" their feelingsand this was the insolence of the moneyed power in defeat, when its champion had received but forty-nine votes for the Presidency out of two hundred and eighty-eight given in! What would it have been in victory? The lead which it gave to the intended proceedings in Congress, is well indicated in these two paragraphs, and the specifications under them:

"The indelicacy of the form of those proceedings corresponds well with the substance of them, which is equally in violation of the rights of the bank and the laws of the country.

"The committee willingly leave to the Congress of the United States, the assertion of their own constitutional power, and the vindication of the principles of our government, against the most violent assault they have ever yet encountered; and will now confine themselves to the more limited purpose of showing that the reasons assigned for this measure are as unfounded as the object itself is illegal."

The illegality of the proceeding, and the vindication of the constitution, and the principles of the government, from a most violent assault, are the main objects left by the bank to the Congress; the invalidity of the reasons assigned for the removal, are more limited, and lest the Congress might not discover these violations of law and constitution, the corporation proceeds to enumerate and establish them. It says:

"Certainly since the foundation of this government, nothing has ever been done which more deeply wounds the spirit of our free institutions. It, in fact, resolves itself into this-that whenever the laws prescribe certain duties to an officer, if that officer, acting under the sanctions gress and the bank have a right to the free and of his official oath and his private character, re- honest and impartial judgment of that officer, fuses to violate that law, the President of the United States may dismiss him and appoint another; and if he too should prove to be a "refractory subordinate,' to continue his removals until he at last discovers in the descending scale of degradation some irresponsible individual fit to be the tool of his designs. Unhappily, there are never wanting men who will think as their superiors wish them to think-men who regard more the compensation than the duties of their office-men to whom daily bread is sufficient consolation for daily shame.

"The present state of this question is a fearful illustration of the danger of it. At this moment the whole revenue of this country is at the disposal—the absolute, uncontrolled disposal—of the President of the United States. The laws declare that the public funds shall be placed in the Bank of the United States, unless the Secretary of the Treasury forbids it. The Secretary of the Treasury will not forbid it. The President dismisses him, and appoints somebody who will. So the laws declare that no money shall be drawn from the Treasury, except on warrants for appropriations made by law. If the Treasurer refuses to draw his warrant for any disbursement, the President may dismiss him and appoint some more flexible agent, who will not hesitate to gratify his patron. The text is in the official gazette, announcing the fate of the dismissed Secretary to all who follow him. 'The agent cannot conscientiously perform the service. and refuses to co-operate, and desires to remain to thwart the President's measures. To put an end to this difficulty between the head and the hands of the executive department, the constitution arms the chief magistrate with authority to remove the refractory subordinate.' The theory thus avowed, and the recent practice under it, convert the whole free institutions of this country into the mere absolute will of a single individual. They break down all the restraints which the frame of the government hoped they had imposed on arbitrary power, and place the whole revenue of the United States in the hands of the President.

"For it is manifest that this removal of the deposits is not made by the order of the Secretary of the Treasury. It is a perversion of language so to describe it. On the contrary, the reverse is openly avowed. The Secretary of the Treasury refused to remove them, believing, as his published letter declares, that the removal was unnecessary, unwise, vindictive, arbitrary and unjust. He was then dismissed because he would not remove them, and another was appointed because he would remove them. Now this is a palpable violation of the charter. The bank and Congress agre upon certain terms, which no one can change but a particular officer; who, although necessarily nominated to the Senate by the President, was designated by the bank and by Congress as the umpire between them. Both Con-

moval may injure its in because the removal na and distress their consti they are deprived of it by ence of the President, who sibility,' which, being inte the power of the Secretar "The whole structure of

that the design of Congr

Secretary as independent sident. The other Secretary tive officers; but the Secr the guardian of the publi more immediate sympathy tives of the people who p although, according to the pointment, he is nominate the Senate, yet he is in fa gress, not the officer of the "This independence of Treasury—if it be true especially true in regard in fact the leading princi bank, that the President from all control of it. The divided the House of Repre there should be any govern and although this was fir tendency to create execut pointed from any one Sta the president of the bank originally designed by t Treasury, chosen from an directors. Accordingly, Secretary of the Treasury President comparatively no has the exclusive supervisi of the bank with the gover

bank was qualified by to that no more than three d

These extracts are suffic corporation charged the I and unconstitutional cond principles of our governme our liberties in causing t moved—that they looked constitutional, and danger principal wrong-and left sertion of its own constitut vindication of the principl from the assault which the this in a memorial address which five thousand copie were printed, and the m liberally supplied with cop when we come to the pro how far the intimations showing what ought to h sident of the and appoint to be a "rehis removals cending scale individual fit. appily, there hink as their who regard uties of their is sufficient

on is a fearful this moment is at the disdisposal -of The laws be placed in ess the Secrehe Secretary

The Presimebody who money shall On Warrante If the Treasfor any disniss him and who will not e text is in the te of the dishim. 'The m the service, res to remain To put an head and the the constituith authority inate.' The practice unutions of this Il of a single the restraints at hoped they r, and place

moval of the the Secretary of language so the reverse is Treasury rehis published vas unnecesand unjust. would not rented because is a palpable and Congress no one can ho, although e by the Preand by Con-Both Con-

the free and that officer,

States in the

whoever he may be-the bank, because the removal may injure its interests—the Congress. hecause the removal may greatly incommode and distress their constituents. In this case. they are deprived of it by the unlawful interference of the President, who 'assumes the responsibility,' which, being interpreted, means, usurps the power of the Secretary.

"The whole structure of the Treasury shows that the design of Congress was to make the Secretary as independent as possible of the Pre-The other Secretaries are merely executive officers; but the Secretary of the Treasury. the guardian of the public revenue, comes into more immediate sympathy with the representatives of the people who pay that revenue; and although, according to the general scheme of appointment, he is nominated by the President to the Senate, yet he is in fact the officer of Congress, not the officer of the President.

"This independence of the Secretary of the Treasury—if it be true in general—is more especially true in regard to the bank. It was in fact the leading principle in organizing the bank, that the President should be excluded from all control of it. The question which most divided the House of Representives was, whether there should be any government directors at all; and although this was finally adopted, yet its tendency to create executive influence over the bank was qualified by two restrictions: first, that no more than three directors should be appointed from any one State; and, second, that the president of the bank should not be, as was originally designed by the Secretary of the Treasury, chosen from among the government directors. Accordingly, by the charter, the Secretary of the Treasury is every thing-the President comparatively nothing. The Secretary has the exclusive supervision of all the relations of the bank with the government.".

These extracts are sufficient to show that the corporation charged the President with illegal and unconstitutional conduct, subversive of the principles of our government, and dangerous to our liberties in causing the deposits to be removed-that they looked upon this illegal unconstitutional, and dangerous conduct as the principal wrong-and left to Congress the assertion of its own constitutional power, and the vindication of the principles of the government from the assault which they had received. And this in a memorial addressed to Congress, of which five thousand copies, in pamphlet form, were printed, and the members of Congress liberally supplied with copies. It will be seen, when we come to the proceedings of Congress, how far the intimations of the memorial in Congress to do it, was complied with by that

CHAPTER XCIV.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY TO CONGRESS ON THE REMOVAL OF THE DE-POSITE

By the clause in the charter authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to remove the deposits, that officer was required to communicate the fact immediately to Congress, if in session. if not, at the first meeting; together with his reasons for so doing. The act which had been done was not a "removal." in the sense of that word; for not a dollar was taken from the Bank of the United States to be deposited elsewhere; and the order given was not for a "removal," but for a cessation of deposits in that institution, leaving the public moneys which were in it to be drawn out in the regular course of expenditure. An immediate and total removal might have been well justified by the misconduct of the bank; a cessation to deposit might have been equally well justified on the ground of the approaching expiration of the charter, and the propriety of providing in time for the new places of deposit which that expiration would render necessary. The two reasons put together made a clear case, both of justification and of propriety, for the order which had been given; and the secretary, Mr. Taney, well set them forth in the report which he made, and which was laid before Congress on the day after its meeting. The following are extracts

"The Treasury department being intrusted with the administration of the finances of the country, it was always the duty of the Secretary, in the absence of any legislative provision on the subject, to take care that the public money was deposited in safe keeping, in the hands of faithful agents, and in convenient places, ready to be applied according to the wants of the government. The law incorporating the bank has reserved to him, in its full extent, the power he before possessed. It does not confer on him a new power, but reserves to him his former authority, without any new limitation. The obligation to assign the reasons for his direction to deposit the money of the United States elseshowing what ought to be done, and leaving where, cannot be considered as a restriction of the power, because the right of the Secretary to designate the place of deposit was always necessarily subject to the control of Congress. And as the Secretary of the Treasury presides over one of the executive departments of the government, and his power over this subject forms a part of the executive duties of his office, the manner in which it is exercised must be subject to the supervision of the officer to whom the constitution has confided the whole executive power, and has required to take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

"The faith of the United States is, however, pledged, according to the terms of the section above stated, that the public money shall be deposited in this bank, unless 'the Secretary of the Treasury shall otherwise order and direct.' And as this agreement has been entered into by Congress, in behalf of the United States, the place of deposit could not be changed by a legislative act, without disregarding a pledge, which the legislature has given; and the money of the United States must therefore continue to be deposited in the bank, until the last hour of its existence, unless it shall be otherwise ordered by the authority mentioned in the charter. The power over the place of deposit for the public money would seem properly to belong to the legislative department of the government, and it is difficult to imagine why the authority to withdraw it from this bank was confided exclusively to the Executive. But the terms of the charter appear to be too plain to admit of question; and although Congress should be satisfied that the public money was not safe in the care of the bank, or should be convinced that the interests of the people of the United States imperiously demanded the removal, yet the passage of a law directing it to be done, would be a breach of the agreement into which they have entered.

"In deciding upon the course which it was my duty to pursue in relation to the deposits, I did not feel myself justified in anticipating the renewal of the charter on either of the above-mentioned grounds. It is very evident that the bank has no claim to renewal, founded on the justice of Congress. For, independently of the many serious and insurmountable objections, which its own conduct has furnished, it cannot be supposed that the grant to this corporation of exclusive privileges, at the expense of the rest of the community, for twenty years, can give it a right to demand the still further enjoyment of its profitable monopoly. Neither could I act upon the assumption that the public interest required the recharter of the bank, because I am firmly persuaded that the law which created this corporation, in many of its provisions, is not warranted by the constitution, and that the existence of such a powerful moneyed monopoly, is dangerous to the liberties of the people, and to the purity of our political institutions.

"The manifestations of public opinion, instead | further to postpone the removal. About the of being favorable to a renewal, have been decidedly to the contrary. And I have always regard- | the present Chief Magistrate was re-elected.

ed the result of the last election of the President of the United States, as the declaration of a majority of the people that the charter ought not to be renewed. It is not necessary to state here. what is now a matter of history. The question of the renewal of the charter was introduced into the election by the corporation itself. Its voluntary application to Congress for the renewal of its charter four years before it expired, and upon the eve of the election of President, was understood on all sides as bringing forward that question for incidental decision, at the then approaching election. It was accordingly argued on both sides, before the tribunal of the people. and their verdict pronounced against the bank by the election of the candidate who was known to have been always inflexibly opposed to it.

"The monthly statement of the bank, of the 2d September last, before referred to, shows that the notes of the bank and its branches, then in circulation, amounted to $18,413,287 07, and that its discounts amounted to the sum of $62.653.359 59. The immense circulation above stated, pervading every part of the United States. and most commonly used in the business of commerce between distant places, must all be withdrawn from circulation when the charter expires. If any of the notes then remain in the hands of individuals, remote from the branches at which they are payable, their immediate depreciation will subject the holders to certain loss, Those payable in the principal commercial cities would, perhaps, retain nearly their nominal value; but this would not be the case with the notes of the interior branches, remote from the great marts of trade. And the statements of the bank will show that a great part of its circulation is composed of notes of this description. The bank would seem to have taken pains to introduce into common use such a description of paper as it could depreciate, or raise to its par value, as best suited its own views; and it is of the first importance to the interests of the public that these notes should all be taken out of circulation before they depreciate in the hands of the individuals who hold them; and they ought to be withdrawn gradually, and their places supplied, as they retire, by the currency which will become the substitute for them. How long will it re quire, for the ordinary operations of commerce, and the reduction of discounts by the bank, to withdraw the amount of circulation before mentioned, without giving a shock to the currency, or producing a distressing pressure on the community? I am convinced that the time which remained for the charter to run, after the 1st of October (the day on which the first order for removal took effect), was not more than was proper to accomplish the object with safety to the community.

"There is, however, another view of the subject, which in my opinion, made it impossible further to postpone the removal. About the lst of December, 1832, it had been ascertained that the present Chief Magistrate was re-elected.

that his decision against th sanctioned by the people. counts of the bank amounte Although the issue which t pains to frame had now be cision pronounced against taken to prepare for its ar the contrary, it proceeded to and, on the 2d of August, 1 to $64,160,349 14, being a than two and a half million immediately following the d And so far from preparing t with a view to wind up its from this course of conduc of the bank to put itself in that, at the close of its cl would be compelled to subn to bear all the consequences denly deranged, and also a se immense outstanding claims be due to the corporation. thus proceeding to enlarge its was appointed by the Secret to inquire upon what tern would undertake to perform government which have here ed by the Bank of the United ascertain their condition in f commercial cities, for the pur department to judge whether and convenient depositories fo It was deemed necessary t agents should be prepared in was proper that time should make arrangements with one; the country, in order that t their duties in concert, and would be convenient and acc lic. It was essential that a c in its character, and so extens upon the financial concerns should not be introduced with

"The United States, by the the right of appointing five dir It was intended by this mear ride guardians for the interes the general administration of to have faithful officers, whos enable them to become intir with all the transactions of t whose duty it would be to a authorities of any misconduct corporation likely to affect th The fourth fundamental articl tion of the corporation decla than seven directors shall conthe transaction of business. of the board, the directors on United States had of course a sent; and, consequently, if the corporation had been transact which the law requires, there curity that nothing could be

e President on of a maught not to state here he question introduced itself. Its the renewexpired, and nt, was unrward that he then apigly argued the people, t the bank. was known sed to it. bank, of the shows that hes, then in 287 07, and ie sum of lation above nited States. ness of comall be withcharter exmain in the he branches mediate decertain loss. nercial cities nominal valith the notes m the great of the bank irculation is The bank ntroduce inf paper as it alue, as best first imporc that these culation, be the individt to be withsupplied, as will become g will it re f commerce, the bank, to before menne currency, on the comtime which er the 1st of st order for e than was th safety to

of the subt impossible bout the 1st ertained that -elected, that his decision against the bank had thus been sanctioned by the people. At that time the discounts of the bank amounted to $61,571,625 66. Although the issue which the bank took so much pains to frame had now been tried, and the decision pronounced against it, yet no steps were taken to prepare for its approaching end. On the contrary, it proceeded to enlarge its discounts, and, on the 2d of August, 1833, they amounted to $64,160,349 14, being an increase of more than two and a half millions in the eight months immediately following the decision against them. And so far from preparing to arrange its affairs with a view to wind up its business, it seemed from this course of conduct, to be the design of the bank to put itself in such an attitude. that, at the close of its charter, the country would be compelled to submit to its renewal, or to bear all the consequences of a currency suddenly deranged, and also a severe pressure for the immense outstanding claims which would then he due to the corporation. While the bank was thus proceeding to enlarge its discounts, an agent was appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury to inquire upon what terms the State banks would undertake to perform the services to the government which have heretofore been rendered by the Bank of the United States; and also to ascertain their condition in four of the principal commercial cities, for the purpose of enabling the department to judge whether they would be safe and convenient depositories for the public money. It was deemed necessary that suitable fiscal agents should be prepared in due season, and it was proper that time should be allowed them to make arrangements with one another throughout the country, in order that they might perform their duties in concert, and in a manner that would be convenient and acceptable to the public. It was essential that a change so important in its character, and so extensive in its operation upon the financial concerns of the country, should not be introduced without timely prepara-

"The United States, by the charter, reserved the right of appointing five directors of the bank. It was intended by this means not only to proride guardians for the interests of the public in the general administration of its affairs, but also to have faithful officers, whose situation would enable them to become intimately acquainted with all the transactions of the institution, and whose duty it would be to apprize the proper authorities of any misconduct on the part of the corporation likely to affect the public interest. The fourth fundamental article of the constitution of the corporation declares that not less than seven directors shall constitute a board for the transaction of business. At these meetings of the board, the directors on the part of the United States had of course a right to be present; and, consequently, if the business of the corporation had been transacted in the manner which the law requires, there was abundant security that nothing could be done, injuriously

affecting the interests of the people, without being immediately communicated to the public servants, who were authorized to apply the remedy. And if the corporation has so arranged its concerns as to conceal from the public directors some of its most important operations, and has thereby destroyed the safeguards which were designed to secure the interests of the United States, it would seem to be very clear that it has forfeited its claim to confidence, and is no longer worthy of trust.

"Instead of a board constituted of at least seven directors, according to the charter, at which those appointed by the United States have a right to be present, many of the most important money transactions of the bank have been, and still are, placed under the control of a committee, denominated the exchange committee, of which no one of the public directors has been allowed to be a member since the commencement of the present year. This committee is not even elected by the board, and the public directors have no voice in their appointment. They are chosen by the president of the bank, and the business of the institution, which ought to be decided on by the board of directors, is, in many instances, transacted by this committee; and no one had a right to be present at their proceedings but the president, and those whom he shall please to name as members of this committee. Thus, loans are made, unknown at the time to a majority of the board, and paper discounted which might probably be rejected at a regular meeting of the directors. The most important operations of the bank are sometimes resolved on and executed by this committee; and its measures are, it appears, designedly, and by regular system, so arranged, as to conceal from the officers of the government transactions in which the public interests are deeply involved. And this fact alone furnishes evidence too strong to be resisted, that the concealment of certain important operations of the corporation from the officers of the government is one of the objects which is intended to be accomplished by means of this committee. The plain words of the charter are violated, in order to deprive the people of the United States of one of the principal securities which the law had provided to guard their interests, and to render more safe the public money intrusted to the care of the bank. Would any individual of ordinary discretion continue his money in the hands of an agent who violated his instructions for the purpose of hiding from him the manner in which he was conducting the business confided to his charge? Would be continue his property in his hands, when he had not only ascertained that concealment had been practised towards him, but when the agent avowed his determination to continue in the same course, and to withhold from him, as far as he could, all knowledge of the manner in which he was employing his funds? If an individual would not be expected to continue his confidence under such circumstances, upon what principle could a different line of conduct be required from the officers of the United States, charged with the care of the public interests? The public money is surely entitled to the same care and protection as that of an individual; and if the latter would be bound, in justice to himself, to withdraw his money from the hands of an agent thus regardless of his duty, the same principle requires that the money of the United States should, under the like circumstances, be withdrawn from the hands of their fiscal agent.

Having shown ample reasons for ceasing to make the public deposits in the Bank of the United States, and that it was done, the Secretary proceeds to the next division of his subject, naturally resulting from his authority to remove, though not expressed in the charter; and that was, to show where he had ordered them to be placed.

"The propriety of removing the deposits being thus evident, and it being consequently my duty to select the places to which they were to be removed, it became necessary that arrangements should be immediately made with the new depositories of the public money, which would not only render it safe, but would at the same time secure to the government, and to the community at large, the conveniencies and facilities that were intended to be obtained by incorporating the Bank of the United States. Measures were accordingly taken for that purpose, and copies of the contracts which have been made with the selected banks, and of the letters of instructions to them from this department, are herewith submitted. The contracts with the banks in the interior are not precisely the same with those in the Atlantic cities. The difference between them arises from the nature of the business transacted by the banks in these different places. The State banks selected are all institutions of high character and undoubted strength, and are under the management and control of persons of unquestioned probity and intelligence. And, in order to insure the safety of the public money, each of them is required, and has agreed, to give security whenever the amount of the deposit shall exceed the half of the amount of the capital actually paid in; and this department has reserved to itself the right to demand security whenever it may think it advisable, although the amount on deposit may not be equal to the sum above stated. The banks selected have also severally engaged to transmit money to any point at which it may be required by the direction of this department for the public service, and to perform all the services to the government which were heretofore rendered by the Bank of the United States. And, by agreements among themselves to honor each other's notes and drafts, they are providing a general currency at least as sound as that of the Bank of the United | per to withdraw a portion of the money it held

States, and will afford facilities to commerce and in the business of domestic exchange, quite equal to any which the community heretofore enjoyed. There has not been yet sufficient time to perfect these arrangements, but enough has already been done to show that, even on the score of expediency, a Bank of the United States is not necessary, either for the fiscal operations of the government, or the public convenience; and that every object which the charter to the present bank was designed to attain, may be as effectually accomplished by the State banks. And, if this can be done, nothing that is useful will be lost can be done, nothing that is useful will be lost or endangered by the change, while much that is desirable will be gained by it. For no one of these corporations will pessess that absolute and almost unlimited dominion over the property of the citizens of the United States which the present bank holds, and which enables it at any moment, at its own pleasure, to bring distress upon any portion of the community whenever it may deem it useful to its interest to make its power felt. The influence of each of the State banks is necessarily limited to its own immediate neighborhood, and they will be kept in check by the other local banks. They will not therefore, be tempted by the consciousness of power to aspire to political influence, nor likely to interfere in the elections of the public servants. They will, moreover, be managed by persons who reside in the midst of the people who are to be immediately affected by their measures; and they cannot be insensible or indifferent to the opinions and peculiar interests of those by whom they are daily surrounded, and with whom they are constantly associated. These circumstances always furnish strong safeguards against an oppressive exercise of power, and forcibly recommend the employment of State banks in preference to a Bank of the United States, with its numerous and distant branches.

"In the selection, therefore, of the State banks as the fiscal agents of the government, no disadvantages appear to have been incurred on the score of safety or convenience, or the general interests of the country, while much that is valuable will be gained by the change. I am, however, well aware of the vast power of the Bank of the United States, and of its ability to bring distress and suffering on the country. This is one of the evils of chartering a bank with such an amount of capital, with the right of shooting its branches into every part of the Union, so as to extend its influence to every neighborhood. The immense loan of more than twenty-eight millions of dollars suddenly poured out, chiefly in the Western States, in 1831, and the first four months in 1832, sufficiently attests that the bank is sensible of the power which its money gives it, and has placed itself in an attitude to make the people of the United States feel the weight of its resentment, if they presume to disappoint the wishes of the corporation. By a severe curtailment it has already made it pro-

on deposit, and transfer it to new fiscal agents, in order to munity from the injustice of United States. But I have ! the course of the government lated by the fear of the power such a motive could be allow legislation of Congress, or the ecutive departments of the go an end to the sovereignty of tl liberties of the country are at at the feet of a moneyed corpor now demand the possession of or the renewal of the charter jects are yielded to them fi of their power, or from the su curtailments on their part ar community, what may they I Will submission render such : forbearing in its course? W1 hereafter demand, that it will be able to enforce by the sam

Thus the keeping of the p to the local banks, the system treasury being not then est notes of these banks necessar notes to be temporarily use payments, the gold currency time revived. Upon these loc ral government was thrownkeeping of its public moneys ply the place of the nineteen notes which the national ha thirdly, to relieve the com pressure which the Bank of had already commenced upor was known, was to be pushe point of oppression. But a perienced in obtaining these 1 would be incredible without cause. Instead of a competiti obtain the deposits, there wa an absolute refusal on the par banks were shy of receiving ceiving the greatest possible & themselves-shy of receiving which they lived and grew! great apparent contradiction? of the Bank of the United S capacity to destroy them to had testified in his answers Finance Committee; and wl now known to be joined to bank placed in the same categ be concerned in the removalment that ordered it, and the

Vol. I.-25

on deposit, and transfer it to the custody of the new fiscal agents, in order to shield the community from the injustice of the Bank of the United States. But I have not supposed that the course of the government ought to be regulated by the fear of the power of the bank. If such a motive could be allowed to influence the legislation of Congress, or the action of the executive departments of the government, there is an end to the sovereignty of the people; and the liberties of the country are at once surrendered at the feet of a moneyed corporation. They may now demand the possession of the public money, or the renewal of the charter; and if these objects are yielded to them from apprehensions of their power, or from the suffering which rapid curtailments on their part are inflicting on the community, what may they not next require? Will submission render such a corporation more forbearing in its course? What law may it not hereafter demand, that it will not, if it pleases, be able to enforce by the same means?

merce and

uite equal

e enjoyed.

to perfect

s already

core of ex-

tes is not

ons of the

ence; and

he present

effectually

nd, if this

rill be lost

nuch that

or no one

at absolute

ie property

which the

s it at any

ng distress

whenever it

o make its

f the State

wn imme-

be kept in

y will not

ousness of

nor likely

ic servants

by persons

le who are measures;

erent to the se by whom

whom they

cumstances

against an

forcibly re-

inks in pre-

es, with its

State banks

t. no disad-

red on the

the general

uch that is

age. I am,

wer of the

s ability to ie country.

ring a bank

th the right

part of the e to every

f more than

enly poured

n 1831, and ently attests

er which its

in an atti-

nited States

oration. By nade it pro-

oney it held

Thus the keeping of the public moneys went to the local banks, the system of an independent treasury being not then established; and the notes of these banks necessarily required their notes to be temporarily used in the federal payments, the gold currency not being at that time revived. Upon these local banks the federal government was thrown-first, for the safe keeping of its public moneys; secondly, to supply the place of the nineteen millions of bank notes which the national had in circulation thirdly, to relieve the community from the pressure which the Bank of the United States had already commenced upon it, and which, it was known, was to be pushed to the ultimate point of oppression. But a difficulty was experienced in obtaining these local banks, which would be incredible without understanding the cause. Instead of a competition among them to obtain the deposits, there was holding off, and an absolute refusal on the part of many. Local banks were shy of receiving them-shy of receiving the greatest possible apparent benefit to themselves-shy of receiving the aliment upon which they lived and grew! and why this so great apparent contradiction? It was the fear of the Bank of the United States! and of that capacity to destroy them to which Mr. Biddle had testified in his answers to the Senate's Finance Committee; and which capacity was now known to be joined to the will; for the bank placed in the same category all who should be concerned in the removal—both the government that ordered it, and the local banks which received what it lost. But a competent number were found; and this first attempt to prevent a removal, by preventing a reception of the deposits elsewhere, entirely failed.

CHAPTER XCV.

NOMINATION OF GOVERNMENT DIRECTORS, AND THEIR REJECTION.

By the charter of the bank, the government was entitled to five directors, to be nominated annually by the President, and confirmed by the Senate. At the commencement of the session of 1833-'34, the President nominated the five, four of them being the same who had served during the current year, and who had made the report on which the order for the removal of the deposits was chiefly founded. This drew upon them the resentment of the bank, and caused them to receive a large share of reproach and condemnation in the report which the committee of the bank drew up, and which the board of directors adopted and published. When these nominations came into the Senate it was soon perceived that there was to be opposition to these four; and for the purpose of testing the truth of the objections, Mr. Kane, of Illinois, submitted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the nominations of H. D. Gilpin, John T. Sullivan, Peter Wager, and Hugh McEldery, be recommitted to the Committe on Finance, with instructions to inquire into their several qualifications and fitness for the stations to which they have been nominated; also into the truth of all charges preferred by them against the board of directors of the Bank of the United States, and into the conduct of each of the said nominees during the time he may have acted as director of the said bank; and that the said nominees have notice of the times and places of meetings of said committee, and haveleave to attend the same."

Which was immediately rejected by the following vote:

"Yeas.—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Forsyth, Grundy, Hendricks, Hill, Kane, King of Alabama, Linn, McKean, Moor, Morris, Rives, Robinson, Shepley, Tallmadge, Tipton, White, Wilkins, Wright.—20.

"Nays.—Messrs. Bell, Bibb, Black, Calhoun, Chambers, Clay, Clayton, Ewing, Frelinghuysen,

Kent, King of Georgia, Knight, Mangum, Naudain, Poindexter, Porter, Prentiss, Robbins, Silsbee, Smith, Southard, Sprague, Swift, Tomlinson, Tyler, Waggaman, Webster.—27.

And this resolution being rejected, requiring a two-fold examination—one into the character and qualifications of the nominees, the other into the truth of their representations against the bank, it was deemed proper to submit another. limited to an inquiry into the character and fitness of the nominees; which was rejected by the same vote. The nominations were then voted upon separately, and each of the four was rejected by the same vote which applied to the first one, to wit, Mr. Gilpin: and which was as fol-

"YEAS.-Messrs. Benton, Black, Brown, Forsyth, Grundy, Hendricks, Hill, Kane, King of Alabama, Linn, McKean, Moore, Morris, Robinson, Shepley, Tallmadge, Tipton, White, Wilkins, Wright.—20.

"NAVS.—Messrs, Bell, Bibb, Calhoun, Chambers, Clay. Ewing, Frelinghuysen, Kent, Knight, Mangum, Naudain, Poindexter, Porter, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Silsbee, Smith, Sprague, Swift, Tomlinson, Tyler, Waggaman, Webster.—24.

These rejections being communicated to the President, he immediately felt that it presented a new case for his energy and decision of conduct. The whole of the rejected gentlemen had been confirmed the year before-had all acted as directors for the current year-and there was no complaint against them except from the Bank of the United States; and that limited to their conduct in giving information of transactions in the bank to President Jackson at his written request. Their characters and fitness were above question. That was admitted by the Senate, both by its previous confirmation for the same places, and its present refusal to inquire into those points. The information which they had given to the President had been copied from the books of the bank, and the transactions which they communicated had been objected to by them at the time as illegal and improper; and its truth, unimpeachable in itself, was unimpeached by the Senate in their refusal to inquire into their conduct while directors. It was evident then that they had been rejected for the report which they anade to the President; and this brought up the question, whether it was right to punish them for that act? and whether the bank should have the virtual nomination of the government directors by causing those to be rejected which the government nominated? and permitting none to serve but those whose conduct should be subordinate to the views and policy of the bank? These were questions, first, for the Senate, and then for the country; and the President determined to bring it before both in a formal mes sage of re-nomination. He accordingly sent back the names of the four rejected nominations in a message which contained, among others these passages:

"I disclaim all pretension of right on the part of the President officially to inquire into, or call in question, the reasons of the Senate for rejecting any nomination whatsoever. As the President is not responsible to them for the reasons which induce him to make a nomination, so they are not responsible to him for the reasons which induce them to reject it. In these respects, each is independent of the other and both responsible to their respective constituents. Nevertheless. the attitude in which certain vital interests of the country are placed by the rejection of the gentlemen now re-nominated require of me, frankly to communicate my views of the consequences which must necessarily follow this act of the Senate, if it be not reconsidered.

"The characters and standing of these gentlemen are well known to the community, and eminently qualify them for the offices to which I propose to appoint them. Their confirmation by the Senate at its last session to the same offices is proof that such was the opinion of them entertained by the Senate at that time; and unless some thing has occurred since to change it. this act may now be referred to as evidence that their talents and pursuits justified their selec-

"The refusal, however, to confirm their nominations to the same offices, shows that there is something in the conduct of these gentlemen during the last year which, in the opinion of the Senate, disqualifies them; and as no charge has been made against them as men or citizens, nothing which impeaches the fair private character they possessed when the Senate gave them their sanction at its last session, and as it moreover appears from the journal of the Senate recently transmitted for my inspection, that it was deemed unnecessary to inquire into their qualifications or character, it is to be inferred that the change in the opinion of the Senate has arisen from official conduct of these gentlemen. The only circumstances in their official conduct which have been deemed of sufficient importance to attract public attention are the two reports made by them to the executive department of the government, the one bearing date the 22d day of April, and the other the 19th day of August last; both of which reports were communicated to the Senate by the Secretary of the Treasury with his reasons for removing the deposits.

"The truth of the facts stated in is not. I presume, questioned by high character and standing of whom they were made prevent s the subject. Indeed the statem been denied by the president of the other directors. On the cont insisted that they were authori money of the bank in the mann two reports, and have not denied there made against the corporation tially true.

"It must be taken, therefore, a the statements of the public dire ports above mentioned, are corn disclose the most alarming abus of the corporation, and the most ertions on their part to put a They prove that enormous sum lavished in a manner, and for cannot be justified; and that the immense capital of the bank has placed at the disposal of a single used, if he thinks proper, to con and to control the proceedings of by exercising an undue influence

"The reports were made in official directions; and I her copies of my letter calling for the proceedings of the bank. W to disregard the call? Was it t main silent while abuses of the and dangerous character were Were they bound to conceal from ed authorities a course of meas to the best interests of the coun ed gradually and secretly, to su dations of our government, and powers from the hands of the 1 moneyed corporation? Was i sit in silence at the board, and abuses without an attempt to co in case of failure there, not to a authority? The eighth funda thorizes any one of the director ed or appointed, who may ha when an excess of debt was may have dissented from the himself from personal respons notice of the fact to the Preside States: thus recognizing the r municating to that officer the p board in such cases. But, inde argument to be derived from cognized in the rule referred to for a moment that it is the rig of every director at the boar correct all illegal proceedings, failure, to disclose them; and them, whether elected by the appointed by the government, ledge of the facts, and concealed justly amenable to the severes

"But, in the case of the p was their peculiar and official

which the ig none to be suborhe bank? enate, and ent deterrmal mes sent back tions in a iers, these

n the part ito, or call for rejectthe Presihe reasons on, so they ons which pects, each responsible vertheless, rests of the of the genne, frankly. nsequences act of the

ese gentleunity, and s to which onfirmation e same offion of them e; and unchange it. idence that their selec their nomiat there is gentlemen inion of the charge has citizens, noe character them their t moreover ite recentiv was deemalifications the change en from the The only duct which tance to atports made of the gov-

22d day of August last;

cated to the

easury with

"The truth of the facts stated in these reports, is not, I presume, questioned by any one. The high character and standing of the citizens by whom they were made prevent any doubt upon the subject. Indeed the statements have not been denied by the president of the bank, and the other directors. On the contrary, they have insisted that they were authorized to use the money of the bank in the manner stated in the two reports, and have not denied that the charges there made against the corporation are substantially true. "It must be taken, therefore, as admitted that the statements of the public directors, in the reports above mentioned, are correct: and they disclose the most alarming abuses on the part of the corporation, and the most strenuous exertions on their part to put an end to them. They prove that enormous sums were secretly lavished in a manner, and for purposes that cannot be justified; and that the whole of the immense capital of the bank has been virtually placed at the disposal of a single individual to be used, if he thinks proper, to corrupt the press, and to control the proceedings of the government by exercising an undue influence over elections.

"The reports were made in obedience to my official directions; and I herewith transmit copies of my letter calling for information of the proceedings of the bank. Were they bound to disregard the call? Was it their duty to remain silent while abuses of the most injurious and dangerous character were daily practised? Were they bound to conceal from the constituted authorities a course of measures destructive to the best interests of the country, and intended gradually and secretly, to subvert the foundations of our government, and to transfer its powers from the hands of the people to a great moneyed corporation? Was it their duty to sit in silence at the board, and witness all these abuses without an attempt to correct them; or, in case of failure there, not to appeal to higher authority? The eighth fundamental rule authorizes any one of the directors, whether elected or appointed, who may have been absent when an excess of debt was created, or who may have dissented from the act, to exonerate himself from personal responsibility by giving notice of the fact to the President of the United States; thus recognizing the propriety of communicating to that officer the proceedings of the board in such cases. But, independently of any argument to be derived from the principle recognized in the rule referred to, I cannot doubt for a moment that it is the right and the duty of every director at the board to attempt to correct all illegal proceedings, and in case of failure, to disclose them; and that every one of them, whether elected by the stockholders or appointed by the government, who had knowledge of the facts, and concealed them, would be justly amenable to the severest censure.

"But, in the case of the public directors, it was their peculiar and official duty to make the disclosures; and the call upon them for information could not have been disregarded without a flagrant breach of their trust. The directors appointed by the United States cannot be regarded in the light of the ordinary directors of a bank appointed by the stockholders, and charged with the care of their pecuniary interests in the corporation. They have higher and more important duties. They are public officers. They are placed at the board not merely to represent the stock held by the United States, but to observe the conduct of the corporation, and to watch over the public interests. It was foreseen that this great moneyed monopoly might be so managed as to endanger the interests of the country; and it was therefore deemed necessary, as a measure of precaution, to place at the board watchful sentinels, who should observe its conduct, and stand ready to report to the proper officers of the government every act of the board which might affect injuriously the interests of the people.

"It was, perhaps, scarcely necessary to present to the Senate these views of the powers of the Executive, and of the duties of the five directors appointed by the United States. But the bank is believed to be now striving to obtain for itself the government of the country, and is seeking, by new and strained constructions, to wrest from the hands of the constituted authorities the salutary control reserved by the charter. And as misrepresentation is one of its most usual weapons of attack, I have deemed it my duty to put before the Senate, in a manner not to be misunderstood, the principles on which have acted.

"Entertaining, as I do, a solemn conviction of the truth of these principles, I must adhere to them, and act upon them, with constancy and

"Aware, as I now am, of the dangerous machinations of the bank, it is more than ever my duty to be vigilant in guarding the rights of the people from the impending danger. And I should feel that I ought to forfeit the confidence with which my countrymen have honored me, if I did not require regular and full reports of every thing in the proceedings of the bank calculated to affect injuriously the public interests, from the public directors, and if the directors should fail to give the information called for, it would be my imperious duty to exercise the power conferred on me by the law of removing them from office, and of appointing others' who would discharge their duties with more fidelity to the public. I can never suffer any one to hold office under me, who would connive at corruption, or who should fail to give the alarm when he saw the enemies of liberty endeavoring to sap the foundations of our free institutions, and to subject the free people of the United States to the dominion of a great moneyed corporation.

"Any directors of the bank, therefore, who might be appointed by the government, would be required to report to the Executive as fully as the late directors have done, and more frequently, because the danger is more imminent; and it would be my duty to require of them a full detail of every part of the proceedings of the corporation, or any of its officers, in order that I might be enabled to decide whether I should exercise the power of ordering a scire facias, which is reserved to the President by the charter, or adopt such other lawful measures as the interests of the country might require. It is too obvious to be doubted, that the misconduct of the corporation would never have been brought to light by the aid of a public proceedings at the board of directors.

ing at the board of directors.

"The board, when called on by the government directors, refused to institute an inquiry or require an account, and the mode adopted by the latter was the only one by which the object could be attained. It would be absurd to admit the right of the government directors to give information, and at the same time deny the means of obtaining it. It would be but another mode of enabling the bank to conceal its proceedings, and practice with impunity its corruptions. In the mode of obtaining the information, therefore, and in their efforts to put an end to the abuses disclosed, as well as in reporting them, the conduct of the late directors was judicious and praiseworthy, and the honesty, firmness, and intelligence, which they have displayed, entitle them, in my opinion, to the gratitude of the country.

"If the views of the Senate be such as I have supposed, the difficulty of sending to the Senate any other names than those of the late directors will be at once apparent. I cannot consent to place before the Senate the name of any-one who is not prepared, with firmness and honesty, to discharge the duties of a public director in the manner they were fulfilled by those whom the Senate have refused to confirm. If, for performing a duty lawfully required of them by the Executive, they are to be punished by the subsequent rejection of the Senate, it would not only be useless but cruel to place men of character and honor in that situation, if even such men could be found to accept it. 'If they failed to give the required information, or to take proper measures to obtain it, they would be removed by the Executive. If they gave the information, and took proper measures to obtain it, they would, upon the next nomination, be rejected by the Senate. It would be unjust in me to place any other citizens in the predicament in which this unlooked for decision of the Senate has placed the estimable and honorable men who were directors during the last year.

"If I am not in error in relation to the principles upon which these gentlemen have been rejected, the necessary consequence will be that the bank will hereafter be without government directors and the people of the United States must be deprived of their chief means of protection against its abuses; for, whatever conflicting opinions may exist as to the right of the directors appointed in January, 1833, to hold over until new appointments shall be made, it is very obvious that, whilst their rejection by the Senate remains in force, they cannot, with propriety, attempt to exercise such a power. In the present state of things, therefore, the corporation will be enabled effectually to accomplish the object it has been so long endeavoring to attain. Its exchange committees, and its delegated powers to its president, may hereafter be dispensed with, without incurring the danger of exposing its proceedings to the public view. The sentinels which the law had placed at its board can no longer appear

"Justice to myself, and to the faithful officers by whom the public has been so well and so honorably served, without compensation or reward, during the last year, has required of me this full and frank exposition of my motives for nominating them again after their rejection by the Senate. I repeat, that I do not question the right of the Senate to confirm or reject at their pleasure; and if there had been any reason to suppose that the rejection, in this case. had not been produced by the causes to which I have attributed it, or of my views of their duties, and the present importance of their rigid performance, were other than they are, I should have cheerfully acquiesced, and attempted to find others who would accept the unenviable trust. But I cannot consent to appoint directors of the bank to be the subservient instruments, or silent spectators, of its abuses and corruptions; nor can I ask honorable men to undertake the thankless duty, with the certain prospect of being rebuked by the Senate for its faithful performance, in pursuance of the lawful directions of the Executive."

This message brought up the question, virtually, Which was the nominating power, in the case of the government directors of the bank? was it the President and Senate? or the bank and the Senate? for it was evident that the four now nominated were rejected to gratify the bank, and for reasons that would apply to every director that would discharge his duties in the way these four had done-namely, as government directors, representing its stock, guarding its interest, and acting for the government in all cases which concerned the welfare of an institution whose notes were a national currency, whose coffers were the depository of the public moneys, and in which it had a direct interest of seven millions of dollars in its stock. It brought up this question: and if negatived, virtually decided that the nominating power should be in the bank; a ment directors should no r mation to the President as And this question it was de that definitively, in the p nominated directors, with mination to nominate no rejected; and so leave the representation in the ban re-nomination was referred mittee of Finance, of which man, and who made a repo nominations, and in favor of nominees. The points mad first, the absolute right of nominations; secondly, the no reasons for their rejecti sident had not asked); and general impolicy of mak while admitting both the r in extrordinary occasions. show its character: thus:

"The President disclaim all right to inquire into the sate for rejecting any nomin message immediately unde facts and circumstances, which influenced the Senathave been; and goes on to against the validity of suc The committee are of opi President admits, he canneasons of the Senate for renominations, it is still moreasons cannot, with projuded made subjects of committee of committees and made subjects of committees."

"In cases in which nom for reasons affecting the cl sons nominated, the comm inference is to be drawn e shows, that is to say, the holds its advice and consen tions. And the Senate, r give reasons for its votes not bound, nor would it be committee think, to give an founded on the presumption sons must have been in the feel themselves, therefore, any response whatever to President, in this particular sons before assigned, as ou high officer.

"The President acts upo public policy, in making Senate; and the Senate do confirms or rejects such no

For either of these co-o to enter into the considera should be in the bank; and that the government directors should no more give such information to the President as these four had given. And this question it was determined to try, and that definitively, in the persons of these four nominated directors, with the declared determination to nominate no others if they were rejected; and so leave the government without representation in the bank. This message of re-nomination was referred to the Senate's Committee of Finance, of which Mr. Tyler was chairman, and who made a report adverse to the renominations, and in favor of again rejecting the nominees. The points made in the report were, first, the absolute right of the Senate to reject nominations; secondly, their privilege to give no reasons for their rejections (which the President had not asked); and, thirdly, against the general impolicy of making re-nominations, while admitting both the right and the practice. in extrordinary occasions. Some extracts will show its character: thus:

ns of pro-

tever cone right of

Il be made,

rejection

y cannot,

se such a

ngs, there-

effectually

en so long

e commitpresident.

rithout in-

roceedings

which the

iger appear

rithful offi-

o well and usation or equired of

ny motives

r rejection

ot question

or reject at

en any rea-

this case.

s to which

s of their

their rigid

e, I should tempted to unenviable

point direc-

ent instru-

abuses and

ble men to the certain

nate for its

the lawful

estion, vir-

ower, in the

the bank?

r the bank

it that the

to gratify

ld apply to his duties

namely, as its stock

the govern-

the welfare

a national

pository of

nad a direct

n its stock.

negatived,

ting power

1833, to

"The President disclaims, indeed, in terms, all right to inquire into the reasons of the Senate for rejecting any nomination; and yet the message immediately undertakes to infer, from facts and circumstances, what those reasons, which influenced the Senate in this case, must have been; and goes on to argue, much at large. against the validity of such supposed reasons. The committee are of opinion that, if, as the President admits, he cannot inquire into the reasons of the Senate for refusing its assent to nominations, it is still more clear that these reasons cannot, with propriety, be assumed, and made subjects of comment. "In cases in which nominations are rejected for reasons affecting the character of the persons nominated, the committee think that no inference is to be drawn except what the vote shows, that is to say, that the Senate withholds its advice and consent from the nominations. And the Senate, not being bound to give reasons for its votes in these cases, it is not bound, nor would it be proper for it, as the committee think, to give any answer to remarks founded on the presumption of what such reasons must have been in the present case. They feel themselves, therefore, compelled to forego any response whatever to the message of the President, in this particular, as well by the reasons before assigned, as out of respect to that high officer.

"The President acts upon his own views of public policy, in making nominations to the Senate; and the Senate does no more, when it confirms or rejects such nominations.

For either of these co-ordinate departments of the other, would not, and could not, fail, in the end, to break up all harmonious intercourse between them. This your committee would deplore as highly injurious to the best interests of the country. The President, doubtless, asks himself, in the case of every nomination for office, whether the person be fit for the office; whether he be actuated by correct views and motives; and whether he be likely to be influenced by those considerations which should alone govern him in the discharge of his duties is he honest, capable, and faithful? Being satisfied in these particulars, the President submits his name to the Senate, where the same inquiries arise, and its decision should be presumed to be dictated by the same high considerations as those which govern the President in originating the nomination.

"For these reasons, the committee have altogether refrained from entering into any discussion of the legal duties and obligations of directors of the bank, appointed by the President and Senate, which forms the main topic of the

"The committee would not feel that it had fully acquitted itself of its obligations, if it did not avail itself of this occasion to call the attention of the Senate to the general subject of renomination.

"The committee do not deny that a right of renomination exists; but they are of opinion that, in very clear and strong cases only should the Senate reverse decisions which it has deliberately formed, and officially communicated to the President.

"The committee perceive, with regret, an intimation in the message that the President may not see fit to send to the Senate the names of any other persons to be directors of the bank, except those whose nominations have been already rejected. While the Senate will exercise its own rights according to its own views of its duty, it will leave to other officers of the government to decide for themselves on the manner they will perform their duties. The committee know no reasons why these offices should not be filled; or why, in this case, no further nomination should be made, after the Senate has exercised its unquestionable right of rejecting particular persons who have been nominated, any more than in other cases. The Senate will be ready at all times to receive and consider any such nominations as the President may present to it.

"The committee recommend that the Senate do not advise and consent to the appointment of the persons thus renominated."

While these proceedings were going on in the Senate, the four rejected gentlemen were paying some attention to their own case; and, in a "memorial" addressed to the Senate and to the House of Representatives, answered the to enter into the consideration of the motives | charges against them in the Directors' Report, and vindicated their own conduct in giving the information which the President requested—reasserted the truth of that information; and gave further details upon the manner in which they had been systematically excluded from a participation in conducting the main business of the bank, and even from a knowledge of what was done. They said:

"Selected by the President and Senate as government directors of the Bank of the United States, we have endeavored, during the present year, faithfully to discharge the duties of that responsible trust. Appointed without solicitation, deriving from the office no emolument, we have been guided in our conduct by no views but a determination to uphold, so far as was in our power, those principles which we believe actuated the people of the United States in establishing a national bank, and in providing by its charter that they should be represented at the board of directors. We have regarded that institution, not merely as a source of profit to individuals, but as an organ of the government, established by the nation for its own benefit. We have regarded ourselves, not as mere agents of those whose funds have been subscribed towards the capital of the bank, but as officers appointed on behalf of the American people. We have endeavored to govern all our conduct as faithful representatives of them. We have been deterred from this by no preconcerted system to deprive us of our rights, by no impeachment of our motives, by no false views of policy, by no course of management which might be supposed to promote the interests of those concerned in the institution, at the danger or sacrifice of the general good. We have left the other directors to govern themselves as they may think best for the interests of those by whom they were chosen. For ourselves, we have been determined, that where any differences have arisen, involving on the one hand that open and correct course which is beneficial to the whole community, and, on the other, what are supposed to be the interests of the bank, our efforts should be steadily directed to uphold the former, our remonstrances against the latter should be resolute and constant; and, when they proved unavailing, our appeal should be made to those who were more immediately intrusted with the protection of the public welfare.

"In pursuing this course we have been met by an organized system of opposition, on the part of the majority. Our efforts have been thwarted, our motives and actions have been misrepresented, our rights have been denied, and the limits of our duties have been gratuitously pointed out to us, by those who have sought to curtail them to meet their own policy, not that which we believe led to the creation of the offices we hold. Asserting that injury has been done to them by the late measure of the Secretary of the Treasury, in removing the public deposits, an elaborate statement has been prepared and widely circulated; and taking that as their basis, it has been resolved by the majority to present a memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives. We have not, and do not interfere in the controversy which exists between the majority of the board and the executive department of the government; but unjustly assailed as we have been in the statement to which we have referred, we respectfully claim the same right of submitting our conduct to the same tribunal, and asking of the assembled representatives of the American people that impartial hearing, and that fair protection, which all their officers and all citizens have a right to demand. We shall endeavor to present the view we have taken of the relation in which we are placed, as well towards the institution in question as towards the government and people of the United States, to prove that from the moment we took our seats among the directors of the bank, we have been the objects of a systematic opposition; our rights trampled upon, our just interference prevented, and our offices rendered utterly useless, for all the purposes required by the charter; and to show that the statements by the majority of the board, in the document to which we refer, convey an account of their proceedings and conduct altogether illusory and incorrect."

The four gentlemen then state their opinions of their rights, and their duties, as government directors—that they were devised as instruments for the attainment of public objectsthat they were public directors, not elected by stockholders, but appointed by the President and Senate-that their duties were not merely to represent a moneyed interest and promote the largest dividend for stockholders, but also to guard all the public and political interest of the government in an institution so largely sharing its support and so deeply interested in its safe and honorable management. And in support of this opinion of their duties they quoted the authority of Gen. Hamilton, founder of the first bank of the United States; and that of Mr. Alexander Dallas, founder of the second and present bank; showing that each of them, and at the time of establishing the two banks respectively, considered the government directors as public officers, bound to watch over the operations of the bank, to oppose all malpractices, and to report them to the government whenever they occurred. And they thus quoted the opinions of those two gentlemen:

"In the celebrated report of milton, in 1790, that eminen financier, although then impre sussion that the government might well leave the managen bank to 'the keen, steady, and netic sense of their own in among the private stockholde following remarkable and pr If the paper of a bank is per ate itself into all the revenues country; if it is even to be substitute for gold and silver actions of business; it become a national concern of the firs such, the ordinary rules of that the government should ] of ascertaining, whenever it delicate a trust is executed care. A right of this nature able, as it respects the govern to be equally so to all those institution, as an additional private confidence, and as a only be formidable to pra-mismanagement.' "In the letter addressed by Dallas, the author of the exi chairman of the committee rency, in 1815, the sentime distinguished and patriotic plicitly conveyed upon this can it be doubted, he remains partment of the government with the power of appointm portant offices of the State, i ment to exercise the power relation to a national trust o nitude. The national bank garded simply as a commer not operate on the funds o alone, but much more on the tion. Its conduct, good or the corporate credit and r much more the credit and re vernment. In fine, it is not ated for the purposes of co alone, but much more for t tional policy, as an auxiliar some of the highest powers Under such circumstances, cannot be too cautiously gua proposed can never be injur cial interests of the institu inspect the general account be employed to detect the e istration, but an interior a tion of its affairs will bes them.' This last sentence. able document of Secretar at a glance what had been t American government and which elapsed between the Hamilton and that immed formation of the present ba asure of ving the has been d taking d by the ie Senate have not sy which oard and ernment: en in the d, we re-1bmitting id asking ne Ameri-I that fair and all We shall taken of d, as well s towards ed States. took our we have position; interfered utterly

r opinions vernment as instruobjectselected by President ot merely 1 promote , but also nterest of so largely erested in And in ities they n, founder ; and that the second 1 of them. wo banks ent direch over the malprac-

overnment

ius quoted

d by the

ments by

rument to their pro-

asory and

"In the celebrated report of Alexander Hamilton, in 1790, that eminent statesman and financier, although then impressed with a persussion that the government of the country might well leave the management of a national bank to 'the keen, steady, and, as it were, magnetic sense of their own interest,' existing among the private stockholders, yet holds the following remarkable and pregnant language: 'If the paper of a bank is permitted to insinuate itself into all the revenues and receipts of a country; if it is even to be tolerated as the substitute for gold and silver, in all the transactions of business; it becomes, in either view, a national concern of the first magnitude. As such, the ordinary rules of prudence require that the government should possess the means of ascertaining, whenever it thinks fit, that so delicate a trust is executed with fidelity and care. A right of this nature is not only desirable, as it respects the government, but it ought to be equally so to all those concerned in the institution, as an additional title to public and private confidence, and as a thing which can only be formidable to practices that imply mismanagement.' "In the letter addressed by Alexander James Dallas, the author of the existing bank, to the chairman of the committee on a national currency, in 1815, the sentiments of that truly distinguished and patriotic statesman are explicitly conveyed upon this very point. 'Nor can it be doubted, he remarks, that the department of the government which is invested with the power of appointment to all the important offices of the State, is a proper department to exercise the power of appointment in relation to a national trust of incalculable magnitude. The national bank ought not to be regarded simply as a commercial bank. It will not operate on the funds of the stockholders alone, but much more on the funds of the nation. Its conduct, good or bad, will not affect the corporate credit and resources alone, but much more the credit and resources of the government. In fine, it is not an institution created for the purposes of commerce and profit alone, but much more for the purposes of national policy, as an auxiliary in the exercise of some of the highest powers of the government. Under such circumstances, the public interests cannot be too cautiously guarded, and the guards proposed can never be injurious to the commercial interests of the institution. The right to inspect the general accounts of the bank, may be employed to detect the evils of a mal-administration, but an interior agency in the direction of its affairs will best serve to prevent them.' This last sentence, extracted from the able document of Secretary Dallas, developes at a glance what had been the experience of the American government and people, in the period which elapsed between the time of Alexander Hamilton and that immediately preceding the ceived that 'a right to inspect the general accounts of the bank,' would enable government 'to detect the evils of a mal-administration,' and their detection he thought sufficient. He was mistaken: at least so thought Congress and their constituents, in 1815. Hence the inflexible spirit which prevailed at the organization of a new bank, in establishing 'an interior agency in the direction of its affairs,' by the appointment of public officers, through whom the evils of a mal-administration might be carefully watched and prevented."

The four gentlemen also showed, in their memorial, that when the bill for the charter of the present bank was under consideration in the Senate, a motion was made to strike out the clause authorizing the appointment of the government directors; and that that motion was resisted, and successfully, upon the ground that they were to be the guardians of the public interests, and to secure a just and honorable administration of the affairs of the bank; that they were not mere bank directors, but government officers, bound to watch over the rights and interests of the government, and to secure a safe and honest management of an institution which bore the name of the United States-was created by it-and in which the United States had so much at stake in its stock, in its deposits, in its circulation, and in the safety of the community which put their faith in it. Having vindicated the official quality of their characters, and shown their duty as well as their right to inform the government of all mal-practices, they entered upon an examination of the information actually given, showing the truth of all that was communicated, and declaring it to be susceptible of proof, by the inspection of the books of the institution, and by an examination of its directors and clerks.

"We confidently assert that there is in it no statement or charge that can be invalidated; that every one is substantiated by the books and records of the bank; that no real error has been pointed out in this elaborate attack upon us by the majority. It is by suppressing facts well known to them, by misrepresenting what we say, by drawing unjust and unfair influences from particular sentences, by selecting insulated phrases, and by exhibiting partial statements; by making unfounded insinuations, and by unworthily impeaching our motives, that they endeavor to controvert that which they are unable to refute. When the expense account shall be truly and fully exhibited to any tribunal, if it shall be found that the charges we have formation of the present bank. Hamilton con- stated do not exist; when the minutes of the board shall be laid open, if it shall be found the resolutions we have quoted are not recorded; we shall acknowledge that we have been guilty of injustice and of error, but not till then.

"We have thus endeavored to present to the assembled representatives of the American people, a view of the course which, for nearly a year, the majority in a large moneyed institution, established by them for their benefit, have thought proper to pursue towards those who have been placed there, to guard their interests and to watch and control their conduct. We have briefly stated the systematic series of actions by which they have endeavored to deprive them of every right that was conferred on them by the charter, and to assume to themselves a secret, irresponsible, and unlimited power. We have shown that, in endeavoring to vindicate or to save themselves, they have resorted to accusations against us, which they are unable to sustain, and left unanswered charges which, were they not true, it would be easy to repel. We have been urged to this from no desire to enter into the lists with an adversary sustained by all the resources which boundless wealth affords. We have been driven to it by the nature and manner of the attack made upon us, in the document on which the intended memorial to Congress is founded."

But all their representations were in vain. Their nominations were immediately rejected, a second time, and the seal of secrecy preserved inviolate upon the reasons of the rejection. The "proceedings" of the Senate were allowed to be published; that is to say, the acts of the Senate, as a body, such as its motions, votes, reports, &c., but nothing of what was said pending the nominations. A motion was made by Mr. Wright to authorize the publication of the debates, which was voted down; and so differently from what was done in the case of Mr. Van Buren. In that case, the debates on the nomination were published; the reasons for the rejection were shown; and the public were enabled to judge of their validity. In this case no publication of debates was allowed; the report presented by Mr. Tyler gave no hint of the reasons for the rejection; and the act remained where that report put it-on the abso-Tute right to reject, without the exhibition of any reason.

And thus the nomination of the government directors was rejected by the United States Senate, not for the declared, but for the known reason of reporting the misconduct of the bank to the President, and especially as it related to the appointment and the conduct of the exchange committee. A few years afterwards a committee of the stockholders, called the "Committee of Investigation," made a report upon the conduct and condition of the bank, in which this exchange committee is thus spoken of: The mode in which the committee of exchange transacted their business, shows that there really existed no check whatever upon the officers, and that the funds of the bank were almost entirely at their disposition. That committee met daily, and were attended by the cashier, and at times, by the president. They exercised the power of making the loans and settlements, to full as great an extent as the board itself. They kept no minutes of their proceedings-no book in which the loans made. and business done, were entered; but their decisions and directions were given verbally to the officers, to be by them carried into execution. The established course of business seems to have been, for the first teller to pay on presentation at the counter, all checks, notes, or due bills having indorsed the order. or the initials, of one of the cashiers, and to place these as vouchers in his drawer, for 80 much cash, where they remained, until just before the regular periodical counting of the cash by the standing committee of the board on the state of the bank. These vouchers were then taken out, and entered as 'bills receivable,' in a small memorandum-book, under the charge of one of the clerks. These bills were not discounted, but bore interest semi-annually, and were secured by a pledge of stock, or some other kind of property. It is evidently impossible under such circumstances, to ascertain or be assured, in regard to any particular loan or settlement, that it was authorized by a majority of the exchange committee. It can be said, however, with entire certainty, that the very large business transacted in this way does not appear upon the face of the discount books-was never submitted to the examination of the members of the board at its regular meetings, nor is any where entered on the minutes as having been reported to that body for their information or approbation."

CHAPTER XC

SECRETARY'S REPORT ON THE THE DEPOSITS.

In the first days of the session In the attention of the Senate to the Secretary of the Treasury, commact that he had ordered the pulcase to be made in the Bank States, and giving his reasons and said:

"When Congress, at the time of the charter of the bank, mad that these reasons should be s must have had some purpose in t must have been intended that Co look into these reasons, determ validity; and approve or disapp might be thought proper. Th now been submitted, and it was Congress to decide whether or sufficient to justify the act. I subject which, more than any ot require the prompt action of C tainly was that which had refere tody and care of the public t Senate, therefore, could not, at nod, enter on the question-wha mal condition of the treasury?

"It was not his purpose to go sion, but he had risen to state t to him to be his duty as a se hoped that other senators took of their duty, to look into this see what was to be done. As th Secretary of the Treasury had de sons which had led to the remov lic deposits, and as the Senate whether, on investigation of the act was a wise one or not, he c it would not be right to refer any committee, but that the Se once act on it, not taking it up is report of a committee, but going ination of the reasons as they

mitted."

Mr. Benton saw two objection ing as Mr. Chay proposed—one, of his proposition—the other, a in which it was made. The repretary, charging acts of miscons of removal, would require an inviteir truth. The House of I being the grand inquest of the properly chargeable with all of the ex-

CHAPTER XCVI.

it related

ifterwards

called the

3 a report

e bank, in

ius spoken

ttee of ex-

hows that ever upon

the bank

ion. That ded by the

ent. They loans and

ent as the

es of their

oans made

but their verbally to

l into ex-

f business

ller to pay

all checks,

the order.

ers, and to wer, for so until just

ing of the

the board

vouchers

s 'bills re-

ook, under

These bills

st semi-ane of stock,

is evident-

aces, to as-ny particu-

authorized

mittee. It

certainty,

nsacted in he face of bmitted to the board

where en-

n reported

or appro-

SECRETARY'S REPORT ON THE REMOVAL OF THE DEPOSITS.

In the first days of the session Mr. Clay called the attention of the Senate to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating the fact that he had ordered the public deposits to cease to be made in the Bank of the United States, and giving his reasons for that act, and said:

"When Congress, at the time of the passage of the charter of the bank, made it necessary that these reasons should be submitted, they must have had some purpose in their mind. It must have been intended that Congress should look into these reasons, determine as to their validity; and approve or disapprove them, as might be thought proper. The reasons had now been submitted, and it was the duty of Congress to decide whether or not they were sufficient to justify the act. If there was a subject which, more than any other. seemed to require the prompt action of Congress, it certainly was that which had reference to the custody and carr of the public treasury. The Senate, therefore, could not, at too early a penod enter on the question-what was the acmal condition of the treasury?

"It was not his purpose to go into a discussion, but he had risen to state that it appeared to him to be his duty as a senator, and he hoped that other senators took similar views of their duty, to look into this subject, and to see what was to be done. As the report of the Secretary of the Treasury had declared the reasons which had led to the removal of the public deposits, and as the Senate had to judge whether, on investigation of these reasons, the act was a wise one or not, he considered that it would not be right to refer the subject to any committee, but that the Senate should at once act on it, not taking it up in the form of a report of a committee, but going into an examination of the reasons as they had been sub-

Mr. Benton saw two objections to proceeding as Mr. Clay-proposed one, as to the form of his proposition—the other, as to the place in which it was made. The report of the Secretary, charging acts of misconduct as a cause of removal, would require an investigation into their truth. The House of Representatives being the grand inquest of the nation, and properly chargeable with all inquiries into | They were in these words:

abuses, would be the proper place for the consideration of the Secretary's report-though he admitted that the Senate could also make the inquiry if it pleased; but should do it in the proper way, namely, by inquiring into the truth of the allegations against the bank. He said:

"He requested the Senate to bear in mind that the Secretary had announced, among other reasons which he had assigned for the removal of the deposits, that it had been caused by the misconduct of the bank, and he had gone into a variety of specifications, charging the bank with interfering with the liberties of the people in their most vital elements—the liberty of the press, and the purity of elections. The Secretary had also charged the bank with dishonoring its own paper on several occasions, and that it became necessary to compel it to receive paper of its own branches. Here, then, were grave charges of misconduct, and he wished to know whether, in the face of such charges, this Congress was to go at once, without the previous examination of a committee, into action upon the subject?

"He desired to know whether the Senate were now about to proceed to the consideration of this report as it stood, and, without receiving any evidence of the charges, or taking any course to establish their truth, to give back the money to this institution? He thought it would be only becoming in the bank itself to ask for a committee of scrutiny into its conduct, and that the subject ought to be taken up by the House of Representatives, which, on account of its numbers, its character as the popular branch, and the fact that all money bills originated there, was the most proper tribunal for the hearing of this case. He did not mean to deny that the Senate had the power to go into the examination. But to fix a day now for the decision of so important a case, he considered as premature. Were the whole of the charges to be blown out of the paper by the breath of the Senate? Were they to decide on the question, each senator sitting there as witness and juror in the case? He did not wish to stand there in the character of a witness, unless he was to be examined on oath either at the bar of the Senate, or before a committee of that body, where the evidence would be taken down. He wished to know the manner in which the examination was to be conducted; for he regarded this motion as an admission of the truth of every charge which had been made in the report, and as a flight from investigation."

Mr. Clay then submitted two resolutions in relation to the subject, the second of which after debate, was referred to the committee on finance.

"1st. That, by dismissing the late Secretary of the Treasury, because he would not, contrary to his sense of his own duty, remove the money of the United States in deposit with the Bank of the United States and its branches, in conformity with the President's opinion, and by appointing his successor to effect such removal, which has been done, the President has assumed the exercise of a power over the Treasury of the United States, not granted to him by the constitution and laws, and dangerous to the liberties of the people.

"2d. That the reasons assigned by the Secretary of the Treasury for the removal of the money of the United States deposited in the Bank of the United States and its branches, communicated to Congress on the 3d day of December, 1833, are unsatisfactory and insufficient."

The order for the reference to the finance committee was made in the Senate at four o'clock in the afternoon of one day; and the report upon it was made at noon the next day; a very elaborate argumentative paper, the reading of which by its reporter (Mr. Webster) consumed one hour and a quarter of time. It recommended the adoption of the resolution; and 6000 copies of the report were ordered to be printed. Mr. Forsyth, of Georgia, complimented the committee on their activity in getting out a report of such length and labor, in so short a time, and in the time usually given to the refreshment of dinner and sleep. He said:

" Certainly great credit was due to the committee on finance for the zeal, ability, and industry with which the report had been brought out. He thought the reference was made yesterday at four o'clock; and the committee could hardly have had time to agree on and write out so long a report in the short space of time intervening since then. It was possible that the subject might have been discussed and well understood in the committee before, and that the chairman had time to embody the sentiments of the various members of the committee previous to the reference. If such was the case, it reminded him of what had once happened in one of the courts of justice of the State of Georgia. A grave question of constitutional law was presented before that court, was argued for days with great ability, and when the argument was concluded, the judge drew from his coat pocket a written opinion, which he read, and ordered to be recorded as the opinion of the court. It appeared, therefore, that unless the senator from Massachusetts carried the opinion of the committee in his coat pocket, he could not have presented his report with the unexampled dispatch that had been witnessed."

Mr. Webster, evidently nettled at the sar castic compliment of Mr. Forsyth, replied to him in a way to show his irritated feelings, but without showing how he came to do so much work in so short a time. He said:

"Had the gentleman come to the Senate this morning in his usual good humor, he would have been easily satisfied on that point. He will recollect that the subject now under discussion was deemed, by every body, to be peculiarly fitted for the consideration of the committee on finance; and that, three weeks ago. I had intimated my intention of moving for such a reference. I had, however, delayed the motion, from considerations of courtesy to other gentlemen, on all sides. But the general subject of the removal of the deposits, had been referred to the committee on finance, by reference of that part of the President's message and various memorials, in relation to it had also been referred. The subject has undergone an ample discussion in committee. I had been more than once instructed by the committee to move for the reference of the Secretary's letter. but the motion was postponed, from time to time, for the reasons I have before given. Had the gentleman from Georgia been in the Senate vesterday, he would have known that this particular mode of proceeding was adopted, as was then well understood for the sole purpose of facilitating the business of the Senate, and of giving the committee an opportunity to express an opinion, the result of their consideration If the gentleman had heard what had passed yesterday, when the reference was made, he would not have expressed surprise."

The fact was the report had been drawn by the counsel for the bank, and differed in no way in substance, and but little in form, from the report which the bank committee had made on the paper, "purporting to have been signed by Andrew Jackson, and read to what was called a cabinet." But the substance of the resolution (No. 2, of Mr. Clay's), gave rise to more serious objections than the marvellous activity of the committee in reporting upon it with the elaboration and rapidity with which they had done. It was an empty and inoperative expression of opinion, that the Secretary's reasons were "unsatisfactory and insufficient;" without any proposition to do any thing in consequence of that dissatisfaction and insufficiency; and, consequently, of no legislative avail, and of no import except to bring the opinion of senators, thus imposingly pronounced, against the act of the Secretary. The resolve was not practical -was not legislative was not in conformity to any mode of doing busin action ;-neither to a restor nor to a condemnation of t State banks. Certainly the the Secretary to report, a first practicable moment, b moval, and the reasons fo Congress to act-to do som upon the subject-to judge reasons-and to order a rest found to be untrue or inst demn the new place of depo insecure or improper. All to escape the attention of t bers who inveighed again irrelevance of the resolve. 1 body, and only suitable fo and answering no purpose as but that of political effect On this point Mr. Forsyth

"The subject had then be hands of the Senate, and sen on finance; and for what pu thither? Did any one dou the opinion of the comm Would such a movement h it not been intended there to the course of the opposit in the Senate when the refer made, but he had supposed for the purpose of some rel form, but it has come back and a recommendation of t resolution of the senator fr when the resolutions were a not still be sent back to tha amination? Why had not t seemed to know so well w opinion of the Senate, imbod a legislative form ?"

To the same effect spoke 1 among others, Mr. Silas Wri who said:

"He took occasion to say to the reference made yester unfortunate as his friend fr absent at the time, and he t' tion was pending, expressed reference at four o'clock in t returned with a report at tw would materially change the before the Senate. He was s the natural effect of sending the committee on finance w returned with a recommenda lative action. In this, how disappointed, the proposition

at the sar replied to feelings, but do so much

Senate this or, he would point. He w under disoody, to be ation of the three weeks n of moving ever, delayed courtesy to t the general sits, had been ace, by refert's message: n to it, had as undergone

I had been committee to tary's letter. from time to given. Had in the Senate that this paropted, as was e purpose of enate, and of ity to express consideration. t had passed ras made, he en drawn by red in no way rm, from the had made on en signed by at was called of the resolurise to more ellous activity on it with the nich they had operative extary's reasons nt;" without a consequence ficiency; and, rail, and of no n of senators, nst the act of not practical in conformity to any mode of doing business-and led to no action ;-neither to a restoration of the deposits nor to a condemnation of their keeping by the State banks. Certainly the charter, in ordering the Secretary to report, and to report at the first practicable moment, both the fact of a removal, and the reasons for it, was to enable Congress to act-to do something-to legislate upon the subject-to judge the validity of the reasons—and to order a restoration if they were found to be untrue or insufficient; or to condemn the new place of deposit, if it was deemed insecure or improper. All this was too obvious to escape the attention of the democratic members who inveighed against the futility and irrelevance of the resolve, unfit for a legislative body, and only suitable for a town meeting; and answering no purpose as a senatorial resolve but that of political effect against public men. On this point Mr. Forsyth said:

"The subject had then been taken out of the hands of the Senate, and sent to the committee on finance; and for what purpose was it sent thither? Did any one doubt what would be the opinion of the committee on finance? Would such a movement have been made, had it not been intended thereby to give strength to the course of the opposition? He was not in the Senate when the reference was yesterday made, but he had supposed that it was made for the purpose of some report in a legislative form, but it has come back with an argument, and a recommendation of the adoption of the resolution of the senator from Kentucky; and when the resolutions were adopted, would they not still be sent back to that committee for examination? Why had not the committee, who seemed to know so well what would be the opinion of the Senate, imbodied that opinion in a legislative form ?"

To the same effect spoke many members, and among others, Mr. Silas Wright, of New-York, who said:

"He took occasion to say, that with regard to the reference made vesterday, he was not so unfortunate as his friend from Georgia, to be absent at the time, and he then, while the motion was pending, expressed his opinion that a reference at four o'clock in the afternoon, to be returned with a report at twelve the next day, would materially change the aspect of the case before the Senate. He was also of opinion, that the natural effect of sending this proposition to the committee on finance would be, to have it returned with a recommendation for some legislative action. In this, however, he had been disappointed, the proposition had been brought | Grundy, Hill, Kane, King of Alabama, Linn, back to the Senate in the same form as sent to the committee, with the exception of the very able argument read that morning.'

Mr. Webster felt himself called upon to answer these objections, and did so in a way to intimate that the committee were not "green" enough,—that is to say, were too wise—to propose any legislative action on the part of Congress in relation to this removal. He said:

"There is another thing, sir, to which the gentleman has objected. He would have preferred that some legislative recommendation should have accompanied the report—that some law, or joint resolution, should have been recommended. Sir, do we not see what the gentleman probably desires? If not, we must be green politicians. It was not my intention, at this stage of the business, to propose any law, or joint resolution. I do not, at present, know the opinions of the committee on this subject. On this question, at least, to use the gentleman's expression, I do not carry their opinions in my coat pocket. The question, when it arrives, will be a very grave one-one of deep and solemn import—and when the proper time for its discussion arrives, the gentleman from Georgia will have an opportunity to examine it. The first thing is, to ascertain the judgment of the Senate, on the Secretary's reasons for his act."

The meaning of Mr. Webster in this replythis intimation that the finance committee had got out of the sap, and were no longer "green" -was a declaration that any legislative measure they might have recommended, would have been rejected in the House of Representatives, and so lost its efficacy as a senatorial opinion; and to avoid that rejection, and save the effect of the Senate's opinion, it must be a single and not a joint resolution; and so confined to the Senate alone. The reply of Mr. Webster was certainly candid, but unparliamentary, and at war with all ideas of legislation, thus to refuse to propose a legislative enactment because it would be negatived in the other branch of the national legislature. Finally, the resolution was adopted, and by a vote of 28 to 18; thus:

"YEAS .- Messrs. Bibb, Black, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Ewing, Frelinghuysen, Hendricks, Kent, King of Georgia, Knight, Leigh, Mangum, Naudain, Poindexter, Porter, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Silsbee, Smith, Southard, Sprague, Swift, Tomlinson, Tyler, Waggaman, Webster. "NAYS .- Messrs. Benton, Brown, Forsyth, McKean, Moore, Robinson, Shepley, Tallmadge, Tipton, White, Wilkins, Wright."

The futility of this resolve was made manifest soon after its passage. It was nugatory, and remained naked. It required nothing to be done, and nothing was done under it. It became ridiculous. And eventually, and near the end of the session, Mr. Clay proposed it over again, with another resolve attached, directing the return of the deposits to the Bank of the United States; and making it joint, so as to require the consent of both houses, and thus lead to legislative action. In submitting his resolution in this new form he took occasion to allude to their fate in the other branch of the legislature, where rejection was certain, and to intimate censure upon the President for not conforming to the opinion of the Senate in its resolves; as if the adverse opinion of the House (from its recent election, its superior numbers, and its particular charge of the revenue), was not more than a counterpoise to the opinion of the Senate. In this sense, he stood up, and said:

"Whatever might be the fate of these resolutions at the other end of the capitol, or in another building, that consideration ought to have no influence on the course of this body. The Senate owed it to its own character, and to the country, to proceed in the discharge of its duties, and to leave it to others, whether at the other end of the capitol or in another building, to perform their own obligations to the country, according to their own sense of their duty, and their own convictions of responsibility. them it ought to be left to determine what was their duty, and to discharge that duty as they might think best. For himself, he should be ashamed to return to his constituents without having made every lawful effort in his power to cause the restoration of the public deposits to the United States Bank. While a chance yet remained of effecting the restoration of the reign of the constitution and the laws, he felt that he should not have discharged this duty if he failed to make every effort to accomplish that desirable object.

"The Senate, after passing the resolution which they had already passed, and waiting two months to see whether the Executive would conform his course to the views expressed by this branch of the legislature; after waiting all this time, and perceiving that the error, as the Senate had declared it to be, was still persevered in, and seeing the wide and rapid sweep of ruin over every section of the country, there was still one measure left which might arrest the evil, and that was in the offering of these resolutions—to present them to this body; and, if they passed here, to send them to the other House; and, should they pass them, to present to the President the plain question, if he will return to the constitutional track; or, in opposition to the expressed will of the legislature, retain the control over the millions of public money which are already deposited in the local banks, and which are still coming in there."

Mr. Benton replied to Mr. Clay, showing the propriety of these resolutions if offered at the commencement of the session—their inutility now, so near its end; and the indelicacy in the Senate, in throwing itself between the bank and the House of Representatives, at a moment when the bank directors were standing out in contempt against the House, refusing to be examined by its committee, and a motion actually depending to punish them for this contempt, For this was then the actual condition of the corporation; and, for the Senate to pass a resolution to restore the deposits in these circumstances, was to take the part of the bank against the House-to justify its contumacy-and to express an opinion in favor of its re-charter: as all admitted that restoration of the deposits was wrong unless a re-charter was granted Mr. B. said:

"He deemed the present moment to be the most objectionable time that could have been selected for proposing to restore the public deposits to the United States Bank. Such a proposition might have been a proper proceeding at the commencement of the session. A joint resolution, at that time, would have been the proper mode; it could have been followed by action; and, if constitutionally passed, would have compelled the restoration of these deposits. But the course was different. A separate resolution was brought in, and passed the Senate; and there it stopped. It was a nugatory resolution, leading to no action. It was such a one as a State legislature, or a public meeting, might adopt, because they had no power to legislate on the subject. But the Senate had the power of legislation; and, six months ago, when the separate resolution was brought in the Senate, if it intended to act legislatively on the subject at all, ought to have proceeded by joint resolution, or by bill, at that time. But it thought otherwise. The separate resolution was adopted; after adoption, no instruction was given to a committee to bring in a bill; nothing was done to give legislative effect to the decision of the Senate; and now, at the end of six months, the first attempt is made to move in our legislative capacity, and to pass a joint resolution-equivalent to a statute-to compel the restoration of these deposits. This is the state of the proceeding; and, Mr. B. must be permit ted to say, and to give that the time selected legislative capacity, in is most inappropriate B. would not dwell upo to this proceeding, w mind. The advanced a propositions to adjournon hand—the little pro and the President wou ate, or that two thirds be brought to pass the dent declined to give it palpable objections mus make it appear to be a time for the Senate to

"Virtually, it include charter the bank; for friends of that instituti improper to restore the charter was to be conti to restore them, virtua sition to re-charter; and which, after having bee floor, and leave asked to effect, had been abandon viction that the measure ing from these palpable ceeded to state another kind, and which he held course which the Senate alluded to the state of moment depending bets United States and the tives, and the nature of Senate the observance of an absolute non-interfe two bodies. The House ordered an inquiry into t of the bank. The point misconduct of the graves ordered by the largest 1 three or four to one. Th finished; it was still depe appointed to conduct it 1 has only reported in par fore the Senate and the p the directors of the Banl have resisted the authori made an issue of power 1 House-for the trial of w is now depending in the 1 order of the day for Tues

"Here, then, are two between the House and an inquiry into the misc the second, a proposition submit to the authority oright for the Senate to int bodies, while these questions was it right to interfer bank? Was it right for into the arena, throw its tending parties, take side virtually declare to the 1 em to the other them, to present stion, if he will ick; or, in oppothe legislature. illions of public sited in the local ing in there."

lay, showing the if offered at the -their inutility indelicacy in the tween the bank ves, at a moment standing out in efusing to be exmotion actually is contempt. For lition of the corto pass a resoluin these circumthe bank against ntumacy-and to of its re-charter: n of the deposits er was granted.

noment to be the could have been ore the public deank. Such a proproper proceeding session. A joint ld have been the been followed by lly passed, would on of these deposrent. A separate d passed the Sent was a nugatory ion. It was such · a public meeting, d no power to lehe Senate had the months ago, when brought in, the egislatively on the proceeded by joint at time. But it parate resolution no instruction was in a bill; nothing effect to the deci-, at the end of six made to move in to pass a joint reute-to compel the This is the state

B. must be permit

ted to say, and to give his reasons for saying. that the time selected for this first step, in our legislative capacity, in a case so long depending. is most inappropriate and objectionable. Mr. B, would not dwell upon the palpable objections to this proceeding, which must strike every mind. The advanced stage of the session—the propositions to adjourn—the quantity of business on hand—the little probability that the House and the President would concur with the Senate, or that two thirds of the two Houses could be brought to pass the resolution, if the President declined to give it his approbation. These palpable objections must strike every mind and make it appear to be a useless consumption of time for the Senate to pass the resolution.

"Virtually, it included a proposition to recharter the bank; for the most confidential friends of that institution admitted that it was improper to restore the deposits, unless the bank charter was to be continued. The proposition to restore them, virtually included the proposition to re-charter; and that was a proposition which after having been openly made on this floor, and leave asked to bring in a bill to that effect, had been abandoned, under the clear conviction that the measure could not pass. Passing from these palpable objections, Mr. B. proceeded to state another reason, of a different kind, and which he held to be imperative of the course which the Senate should now pursue: he alluded to the state of the questions at this moment depending between the Bank of the United States and the House of Representatives, and the nature of which exacted from the Senate the observance of a strict neutrality, and an absolute non-interference between those two bodies. The House of Representatives had ordered an inquiry into the affairs and conduct of the bank. The points of inquiry indicated misconduct of the gravest import, and had been ordered by the largest majority, not less than three or four to one. That inquiry was not yet finished; it was still depending; the committee appointed to conduct it remains organized, and has only reported in part. That report is before the Senate and the public; and shows that the directors of the Bank of the United States have resisted the authority of the House-have made an issue of power between itself and the House—for the trial of which issue a resolution is now depending in the House, and is made the order of the day for Tuesday next.

"Here, then, are two questions depending between the House and the bank; the first, an inquiry into the misconduct of the bank; the second, a proposition to compel the bank to submit to the authority of the House. Was it right for the Senate to interpose between those bodies, while these questions were depending? Was it right to interfere on the part of the bank? Was it right for the Senate to leap into the arena, throw itself between the contending parties, take sides with the bank, and there was no cause for inquiry into the conduct of the bank, and no ground of censure for resisting the authority of the House? Such would, doubtless, be the effect of the conduct of the Senate, if it should entertain the proposition which is now submitted to it. proposition is one of honor and confidence to the bank. It proceeds upon the assumption that the bank is right, and the House is wrong. in the questions now depending between them; that the bank has done nothing to merit inquiry, or to deserve censure; and that the public moneys ought to be restored to her keeping, without waiting the end of the investigation which the House has ordered, or the decision of the resolution which affirms that the bank has resisted the authority of the House, and committed a contempt against it. This is the full and fair interpretation—the clear and speaking effect—of the measure now proposed to the Senate. Is it right to treat the House thus? Will the Senate, virtually, intelligibly, and practically, acquit the bank, when the bank will not acquit itself?—will not suffer its innocence to be tested by the recorded voice of its own books, and the living voice of its own directors? These directors have refused to testify; they have refused to be sworn; they have refused to touch the book; because, being directors and corporators, and therefore parties, they cannot be required to give evidence against themselves. And this refusal, the public is gravely told, is made upon the advice of eminent counsel. What counsel? The counsel of the law, or of fear? Certainly, no lawyer-not even a junior apprentice to the law-could give such advice. The right to stand mute, does not extend to the privilege of refusing to be sworn. The right does not attach until after the oath is taken, and is then limited to the specific question, the answer to which might inculpate the witness, and which he may refuse to answer, because he will say, upon his oath, that the answer will criminate himself. But these bank directors refuse to be sworn at all. They refuse to touch the book; and, in that refusal, commit a flagrant contempt against the House of Representatives, and do an act for which any citizen would be sent to jail by any justice of the peace, in America. And is the Senate to justify the directors for this contempt? to get between them and the House? to adopt a resolution beforehandbefore the day fixed for the decision of the contempt, which shall throw the weight of the Senate into the scale of the directors against the House, and virtually declare that they are right in refusing to be sworn?'

The resolutions were, nevertheless, adopted, and by the fixed majority of twenty-eight to eighteen, and sent to the House of Representatives for concurrence, where they met the fate which all knew they were to receive. The virtually declare to the American people that House did not even take them up for consideration, but continued the course which it had began at the commencement of the session; and which was in exact conformity to the legislative course, and exactly contrary to the course of the Senate. The report of the Secretary of the Treasury, the memorial of the bank, and that of the government directors, were all referred to the Committee of Ways and Means; and by that committee a report was made, by their chairman, Mr. Polk, sustaining the action of the Secretary, and concluding with the four following resolutions:

"1. Resolved. That the Bank of the United States ought not to be re-chartered.

"2. Resolved, That the public deposits ought not to be restored to the Bank of the United States.

"3. Resolved, That the State banks ought to be continued as the places of deposit of the public money, and that it is expedient for Congress to make further provision by law, prescribing the mode of selection, the securities to be taken, and the manner and terms on which they are to be employed.

"4. Resolved, That, for the purpose of ascertaining, as far as practicable, the cause of the commercial embarrassment and distress complained of by numerous citizens of the United States, in sundry memorials which have been presented to Congress at the present session, and of inquiring whether the charter of the Bank of the United States has been violated; and, also, what corruptions and abuses have existed in its management; whether it has used its corporate power or money to control the press, to interfere in politics, or influence elections; and whether it has had any agency, through its management or money, in producing the existing pressure; a select committee be appointed to inspect the books and examine into the proceedings of the said bank, who shall report whether the provisions of the charter have been violated or not; and, also, what abuses, corruptions, or malpractices have existed in the management of said bank; and that the said committee be authorized to send for persons and papers, and to summon and examine witnesses, on oath, and to examine into the affairs of the said bank and branches; and they are further authorized to visit the principal bank, or any of its branches, for the purpose of inspecting the books, correspondence, accounts, and other papers connected with its management or business; and that the said committee be required to report the result of such investigation, together with the evidence they may take, at as early a day as practicable."

These resolutions were long and vehemently debated, and eventually, each and every one, adopted by decided, and some by a great majority. The first one, being that upon the question of the recharter, was carried by a majority of more than fifty votes-134 to 82: showing an immense difference to the prejudice of the bank since the veto session of 1832. The names of the voters on this great question, so long debated in every form in the halls of Congress, the chambers of the State legislatures. and in the forum of the people, deserve to be commemorated-and are as follows:

"YEAS.—Messrs. John Adams, William Allen Anthony, Archer, Beale, Bean, Beardsley, Beaumont, John Bell, John Blair, Bockee, Boon, Bouldin, Brown, Bunch, Bynum, Cambreleng, Campbell, Carmichael, Carr, Casey, Chaney, Chinn, Claiborne, Samuel Clark, Clay, Clayton, Clowney, Coffee, Connor, Cramer, W. R. Davis, Davenport, Day, Dickerson, Dickinson, Dunlap, Galbraith, Gholson, Gillet, Gilmer, Gordon, Grayson, Griffin, Jos. Hall, T. H. Hall, Halsey, Hamer, Hannegan, Jos. M. Harper, Harrison. Hathaway, Hawkins, Hawes, Heath, Henderson Howell, Hubbard, Abel Huntington, Inge, Jarvis, Richard M. Johnson, Noadiah Johnson, Cave Johnson, Seaborn Jones, Benjamin Jones, Kavanagh, Kinnard, Lane, Lansing, Lapore, Lawrence, Lay, Luke Lea, Thomas Lee, Leavitt, Loyall, Lucas, Lyon, Lytle, Abijah Mann, Joel K. Mann, Mardis, John Y. Mason, Moses Mason, McIntire, McKay, McKinley, McLene, McVean, Miller, Henry Mitchell, Robert Mitchell, Muhlenberg, Murphy, Osgood, Page, Parks, Parker, Patterson, D. J. Pearce, Pey-ton, Franklin Pierce, Pierson, Pinckney, Plummer, Polk, Rencher, Schenck, Schley, Shinn, Smith, Speight, Standifer, Stoddert, Suther-land, William Taylor, Wm. P. Taylor, Francis Thomas, Thomson, Turner, Turrill, Vanderpoel, Wagener, Ward, Wardwell, Wayne, Webster, Whallon.—134.

" NAYS .- Messrs. John Quincy Adams, John J. Allen, Heman Allen, Chilton Allan, Ashley, Banks, Barber, Barnitz, Barringer, Baylies, Beaty, James M. Bell, Binney, Briggs, Bull, Burges, Cage, Chambers, Chilton, Choate, William Clark, Corwin, Coulter, Crane, Crockett, Darlington, Amos Davis, Deberry, Deming, Denny, Dennis, Dickson, Duncan, Ellsworth, Evans, Edward Everett, Horace Everett, Fillmore, Foot, Philo C. Fuller, Graham, Grennel, Hiland Hall, Hard, Hardin, James Harper, Hazeltine, Jabez W. Huntington, Jackson, William C. Johnson, Lincoln, Martindale, Marshall, McCarty, McComas, McDuffie, McKennan, Mercer, Milligan, Moore, Pope, Potts, Reed, William B. Shepherd, Aug. H. Shepperd, William Slade, Charles Slade, Sloane, Spangler Philemon Thomas, Tompkins, Tweedy, Vance Vinton, Watmough, Edward D. White, Frederick Whittlesey, Elisha Whittlesey, Wilde Williams, Wilson, Young.—82."

The second and third res by good majorities, and th ingly-175 to 42. Mr. Pol the appointment of the co consist of seven members accordingly, and consisted Thomas of Maryland, ch Massachusetts; Muhlenbe John Y. Mason of Virginia necticut; Mann of New-Ohio. The proceedings of the reception it met with be the subject of a future : Under the third resolution Ways and Means soon bro formity to its provisions, v a majority of 22, that is t against 90. And thus all President in relation to th full sanction of the popular presented the singular spec in one House, and that o with the subject, while me in the other.

CHAPTER

CALL ON THE PRESIDENT "PAPER READ TO T

In the first days of the se mitted a resolution, calling inform the Senate whethe lished as alleged by his auth to have been read to the ca the removal of the depos not;" and if it be "genui to cause a copy of it to be la Mr. Forsyth considered this wished to know for what p He presumed no one had a thenticity of the published had not. Mr. Clay justifi ground that the "paper" h had become public-and wa notoriety. If otherwise, as confidential communication certainly should not ask, swering as to the use he p it, Mr. Forsyth returned to that upon the carried by a es-134 to 82; to the prejudice n of 1832. The at question, so n the halls of ate legislatures. deserve to be ows:

William Allen, Beardsley, Beau-Bockee, Boon, m, Cambreleng, Casey, Chaney, Clay, Clayton, er, W. R. Davis, kinson, Dunlap, Fuller, Fulton, lilmer, Gordon, H. Hall, Halsey, arper, Harrison, eath, Henderson, ngton, Inge, Jaradiah Johnson, Benjamin Jones, ansing, Laporte, mas Lee, Leavitt, oijah Mann, Joel ason, Moses Ma-Kinley, McLene, iell, Robert Mit-Osgood, Page, J. Pearce, Pey-Pinckney, Plum-Schley, Shinn, toddert, Suther-P. Taylor, Fran-

ncy Adams, John on Allan, Ashley, rringer, Baylies, ey, Briggs, Bull, ton, Choate, Wil-Crane, Crockett, beberry, Deming, incan, Ellsworth, ace Everett, Fill-Graham, Grennel, James Harper, ington, Jackson, Martindale, Mar-Duffie, McKennan, pe, Potts, Reed, H. Shepperd, Wil-Sloane, Spangler s, Tweedy, Vance D. White, Fred-hittlesey, Wilde

er, Turrill, Van-

ardwell, Wayne,

The second and third resolutions were carried by good majorities, and the fourth overwhelmingly-175 to 42. Mr. Polk immediately moved the appointment of the committee, and that it consist of seven members. It was appointed accordingly, and consisted of Messrs. Francis Thomas of Maryland, chairman; Everett of Massachusetts; Muhlenberg of Pennsylvania; John Y. Mason of Virginia; Ellsworth of Connecticut; Mann of New-York; and Lytle of Ohio. The proceedings of this committee, and the reception it met with from the bank, will he the subject of a future and separate chapter. Under the third resolution the Committee of Ways and Means soon brought in a bill in conformity to its provisions, which was passed by a majority of 22, that is to say, by 112 votes against 90. And thus all the conduct of the President in relation to the bank, received the full sanction of the popular representation; and presented the singular spectacle of full support in one House, and that one specially charged with the subject, while meeting condemnation in the other.

CHAPTER XCVII.

CALL ON THE PRESIDENT FOR A COPY OF THE "PAPER READ TO THE CABINET."

In the first days of the session Mr. Clay submitted a resolution, calling on the President to inform the Senate whether the "paper," published as alleged by his authority, and purporting to have been read to the cabinet in relation to the removal of the deposits, "be genuine or not;" and if it be "genuine," requesting him to cause a copy of it to be laid before the Senate. Mr. Forsyth considered this an unusual call, and wished to know for what purpose it was made. He presumed no one had any doubt of the authenticity of the published copy. He certainly had not. Mr. Clay justified his call on the ground that the "paper" had been publishedhad become public-and was a thing of general notoriety. If otherwise, and it had remained a confidential communication to his cabinet, he certainly should not ask for it; but not answering as to the use he proposed to make of it, Mr. Forsyth returned to that point, and said and any one can say what they please of it. If he could imagine that one branch of the legislature under certain circumstances might have a right to call for it; but the Senate was not that branch. If the paper was to be the ground of a criminal charge against the President, and upon which he is to be brought to trial, it should come from the House of Representatives. with the charges on which he was to be tried. Mr. Clay rejoined, that as to the uses which were to be made of this "paper" nothing seemed to run in the head of the Senator from Georgia but an impeachment. This seemed to be the only idea he could connect with the call. But there were many other purposes for which it might be used, and he had never intended to make it the ground of impeachment. It might show who was the real author of the removal of the deposits-whether the President, or the Secretary of the Treasury? and whether this latter might not have been a mere automaton. Mr. Benton said there was no parliamentary use that could be made of it, and no such use had been, or could be specified. Only two uses can be made of a paper that may be rightfully called for-one for legislation; the other for impeachment; and not even in the latter case when self-crimination was intended. No legislative use is intimated for this one; and the criminal use is disavowed, and is obliged to be, as the Senate is the tribunal to try, not the inquest to originate impeachments. But this paper cannot be rightfully called for. It is a communication to a cabinet; and communications to the cabinet are the same whether in writing, or in a speech. It is all parol. Could the copy of a speech made to the cabinet be called for? Could an account of the President's conversation with his cabinet be called for? Certainly not! and there is no difference between the written and the spoken communication—between the set speech and a conversation—between a thing made public, or kept secret. The President may refuse to give the copy; and certainly will consult his rights and his self-respect by so refusing. As for the contents of the paper, he has given them to the country, and courts the judgment of the country upon it. He avows his act-gives his reasons-and leaves it to all to judge. He is not a man of concealments, or of irresponsibility. He gave the paper to the public instantly, and authentically, with his name fully signed to it; it is wanted for an invective, or philippic, there it is! ready for use, and seeking no shelter for want of authenticity. It is given to the world. and is expected to stand the test of all examination. Mr. Forsyth asked the yeas and nays on Mr. Clay's call; they were ordered; and the resolution passed by 23 to 18. The next day the President replied to it, and to the effect that was generally foreseen. He declared the Executive to be a co-ordinate branch of the government, and denied the right of the Senate to call upon him for any copies of his communications to his cabinet-either written or spoken. Feeling his responsibility to the American people, he said he should be always ready to explain to them his conduct; knowing the constitutional rights of the Senate, he should never withhold from it any information in his power to give, and necessary to the discharge of its duties. This was the end of the call; and such an end was the full proof that it ought not to have been made. No act could be predicated upon it-no action taken on its communication-none upon the refusal, either of censure or coercion. The President stood upon his rights; and the Senate could not, and did not, say that he was wrong. The call was a wrong step, and gave the President an easy and a graceful victory.

CHAPTER XCVIII.

MISTAKES OF PUBLIC MEN:—GREAT COMBINATION AGAINST GENERAL JACKSON:—COMMENCEMENT OF THE PANIC.

In the year 1783, Mr. Fox, the great parliamentary debater, was in the zenith of his power and popularity, and the victorious leader in the House of Commons. He gave offence to the King, and was dismised from the ministry, and immediately formed a coalition with Lord North; and commenced a violent opposition to the acts of the government. Patriotism, love of liberty, hatred of misrule and oppression, were the avowed objects of his attacks; "but every one saw (to adopt the language of history), that the real difficulty was his own exclusion from office; and that his coalition with his old enemy and all these violent assaults, were only to force himself back into power: and this being seen. his efforts became unavailing, and distasteful to the public; and he lost his power and influence with the people, and sunk his friends with him. More than one hundred and sixty of his supporters in the House of Commons, lost their places at the ensuing election, and were sportively called "Fox's Martyrs;" and when they had a procession in London, wearing the tails of foxes in their hats, and some one wondered where so many tails of that animal had come from, Mr. Pitt slyly said a great many foxes had been lately taken: one, upon an average, in every borough. Mr. Fox, young at that time, lived to recover from this prostration; but his mistake was one of those of which history is full, and the lesson of which is in vain read to succeeding generations. Public men continue to attack their adversaries in power, and oppose their measures, while having private griefs of their own to redress, and personal ends of their own to accomplish; and the instinctive sagacity of the people always sees the sinister motive, and condemns the conduct founded upon it.

Mr. Clay, Mr. Calhoun, and Mr. Webster were now all united against General Jackson with all their friends, and the Bank of the United States. The two former had their private griefs. Mr. Clay in the results of the election, and Mr. Calhoun in the quarrel growing out of the discovery of his conduct in Mr. Monroe's cabinet: and it would have been difficult so to have conducted their opposition, and attack, as to have avoided the imputation of a personal motive. But they so conducted it as to authorize and suggest that imputation. Their movements all took a personal and vindictive, instead of a legislative and remedial, nature. Mr. Taney's reasons for removing the deposits were declared to be "unsatisfactory and insufficient"-being words of reproach, and no remedy; nor was the remedy of restoration proposed until driven into it. The resolution, in relation to Gen. Jackson, was still more objectionable. The Senate had nothing to do with him personally, yet a resolve was proposed against him entirely personal, charging him with violating the laws and the constitution; and proposing no remedy for this imputed violation, nor for the act of which it was the subject. It was purely and simply a personal censure-a personal condemnation that was proposed; and, to aggravate the proposition, it came from the suggestion of t morial to Congress.

The combination was itself was a great power, distress into all the busin country; the political arr was unprecedented in poi in point of ability. Bes chiefs, there were, in the of Kentucky; Ezekiel C Clayton of Delaware; linghuysen of New Jers Virginia; Mangum of No ter of Mississippi; Alexa ana; William C. Presto Southard of New Jerse In the House of Repre ex-President, Mr. Adams, from Pennsylvania, Mr. was a long catalogue of ; Archer of Virginia: Bell of Rhode Island; Rufus setts; Corwin of Ohio; South Carolina; John D Edward Everett of Massa more of New-York, after bert P. Letcher of Kentuc of Kentucky: McDuffie of ton of Tennessee; Vanc Georgia; Wise of Virgin able speakers, many of wh besides many others of out extensive national re ness of the combination and panic the object-and and separately cast to pro bank was to make the dis it to do, from its own m power over other mone money dealers; also to ge and memorials, and to lea politicians were to make tl which they created for the the constitution, the publ lic money: and most zeal of the combination perfor long period of three full 1 is being seen, distasteful to and influence nds with him. of his supportt their places sportively callney had a proils of foxes in where so many rom, Mr. Pitt ad been lately every borough. ved to recover stake was one and the lesson eeding generattack their ad-

Vol. I.-26

their measures.

eir own to re-

own to accom-

y of the people

and condemns

r. Webster were Jackson, with of the United r private griefs: lection, and Mr. out of the disonroe's cabinet; so to have contack, as to have personal motive. o authorize and movements all nstead of a legis-Taney's reasons declared to be "-being words or was the reme-1 driven into it. en. Jackson, was nate had nothing t a resolve was ersonal, charging the constitution; his imputed vioit was the subv a personal cenn that was prooposition, it came from the suggestion of the bank directors' memorial to Congress.

The combination was formidable. The bank itself was a great power, and was able to carry distress into all the business departments of the country; the political array against the President was unprecedented in point of number, and great in point of ability. Besides the three eminent chiefs, there were, in the Senate: Messrs. Bibb of Kentucky; Ezekiel Chambers of Maryland; Clayton of Delaware; Ewing of Ohio; Freelinghuysen of New Jersey; Watkins Leigh of Virginia; Mangum of North Carolina; Poindexter of Mississippi; Alexander Porter of Louisiana: William C. Preston of South Carolina; Southard of New Jersey; Tyler of Virginia. In the House of Representatives, besides the ex-President, Mr. Adams, and the eminent jurist from Pennsylvania, Mr. Horace Binney, there was a long catalogue of able speakers: Messrs. Archer of Virginia; Bell of Tennessee; Burgess of Rhode Island; Rufus Choate of Massachusetts; Corwin of Ohio; Warren R. Davis of South Carolina; John Davis of Massachusetts; Edward Everett of Massachusetts; Millard Fillmore of New-York, afterwards President; Robert P. Letcher of Kentucky; Benjamin Hardin of Kentucky; McDuffie of South Carolina; Peyton of Tennessee; Vance of Ohio; Wilde of Georgia; Wise of Virginia: in all, above thirty able speakers, many of whom spoke many times : besides many others of good ability, but without extensive national reputations. The business of the combination was divided-distress and panic the object-and the parts distributed, and separately cast to produce the effect. The bank was to make the distress -a thing easy for it to do, from its own moneyed power, and its power over other moneyed institutions and money dealers; also to get up distress meetings and memorials, and to lead the public press: the politicians were to make the panic, by the alarms which they created for the safety of the laws, of the constitution, the public liberty, and the public money: and most zealously did each division of the combination perform its part, and for the long period of three full months. The decision of the resolution condemning General Jackson, on which all this machinery of distress and panic was hung, required no part of that time. There was the same majority to vote it the first day as the last; but the time was wanted to get up the alarm and the distress; and the vote, when taken, was not from any exhaustion of the means of terrifying and agonizing the country, but for the purpose of having the sentence of condemnation ready for the Virginia elections-ready for spreading over Virginia at the approach of the April elections. The end proposed to themselves by the combined parties, was, for the bank, a recharter and the restoration of the deposits; for the politicians, an ascent to power upon the overthrow of Jackson.

Vol. I.—26

The friends of General Jackson saw the advantages which were presented to them in the unhallowed combination between the moneyed and a political power—in the personal and vindictive character which they gave to the proceedings-the private griefs of the leading assailants-the unworthy objects to be attained -and the cruel means to be used for their attainment. These friends were also numerous, zealous, able, determined; and animated by the consciousness that they were on the side of their country. They were, in the Senate:-Messrs. Forsyth of Georgia; Grundy of Tennessee; Hill of New Hampshire; Kane of Illinois; King of Alabama; Rives of Virginia; Nathaniel Tallmadge of New York; Hugh L. White of Tennessee; Wilkins of Pennsylvania; Silas Wright of New-York; and the author of this THIRTY YEARS' VIEW. In the House, were :- Messrs. Beardsley of New-York; Cambreleng of New-York; Clay of Alabama; Gillett of New-York; Hubbard of New Hampshire; McKay of North Carolina; Polk of Tennessee; Francis Thomas of Maryland; Vanderpoel of New-York; and Wayne of Georgia.

Mr. Clay opened the debate in a prepared speech, commencing in the style which the rhetoricians call ex abruptu—being the style of opening which the occasion required—that of rousing and alarming the passions. It will be found (its essential parts) in the next chapter.

THIRTY YEARS' VIEW.

CHAPTER XCIX.

MR. CLAY'S SPEECH AGAINST PRESIDENT JACK-SON ON THE DEMOVAL OF THE DEPOSITS—EX-TRACTS.

"MR. CLAY addressed the Senate as follows: We are, said he, in the midst of a revolution, hitherto bloodless, but rapidly tending towards a total change of the pure republican character of the government, and to the concentration of all power in the hands of one man. The powers of Congress are paralyzed, except when exerted in conformity with his will, by frequent and an extraordinary exercise of the executive veto, not anticipated by the founders of the constitution, and not practised by any of the predecessors of the present Chief Magistrate. And, to cramp them still more, a new expedient is springing into use, of withholding altogether bills which have received the sanction of both Houses of Congress, thereby cutting off all opportunity of passing them, even if, after their return, the members should be unanimous in their favor. The constitutional participation of the Senate in the appointing power is virtually abolished, by the constant use of the power of removal from office without any known cause, and by the appointment of the same individual to the same office, after his rejection by the Senate. How often have we, senators, felt that the check of the Senate, instead of being, as the constitution intended, a salutary control, was an idle ceremony? How often, when acting on the case of the nominated successor, have we felt the injustice of the removal? How often have we said to each other, well, what can we do? the office cannot remain vacant without prejudice to the public interests; and, if we reject the proposed substitute, we cannot restore the displaced, and perhaps some more unworthy man may be nominated.

"The judiciary has not been exempted from the prevailing rage for innovation. Decisions of the tribunals, deliberately pronounced, have been contemptuously disregarded, and the sanctity of numerous treaties openly violated. Our Indian relations, coeval with the existence of the government, and recognized and established by numerous laws and treaties, have been subverted; the rights of the helpless and unfortunate aborigines trampled in the dust, and they brought under subjection to unknown laws, in which they have no voice, promulgated in an unknown language. The most extensive and most valuable public domain that ever fell to the lot of one nation is threatened with a total sacrifice. The general currency of the country, the life-blood of all its business, is in the most imminent danger of universal disorder and confusion. The power of internal improvement lies trushed beneath the veto. The system of protection of American industry was snatched from impending destruction at the last session; but we are now coolly told by the Secretary of the Treasury, without a blush, 'that it is understood to be conceded on all hands that a tariff for protection merely is to be finally abandoned.' By the 3d of March, 1837, if the progress of innovation continue, there will be scarcely a vestige remaining of the government and its policy, as they existed prior to the 3d of March, 1829. In a term of years, a little more than equal to that which was required to establish our liberties, the government will have been transformed into an elective monarchy—the worst of all forms of government.

"Such is a melancholy but faithful picture of the present condition of our public affairs. It is not sketched or exhibited to excite, here or elsewhere, "irritated feeling; I have no such purpose. I would, on the contrary, implore the Senate and the people to discard all passion and prejudice, and to look calmly but resolutely upon the actual state of the constitution and the country. Although I bring into the Senate the same unabated spirit, and the same firm determination, which have ever guided me in the support of civil liberty, and the defence of our constitution, I contemplate the prospect before us with feelings of deep humiliation and profound mortification.

"It is not among the least unfortunate symptoms of the times, that a large proportion of the good and enlightened men of the Union, of all parties, are yielding to sentiments of despondency. There is, unhappily, a feeling of distrust and insecurity pervading the community. Many of our best citizens entertain serious apprehensions that our Union and our institutions are destined to a speedy overthrow. Sir, I trust that the hopes and confidence of the country will revive. There is much occasion for manly independence and patriotic vigor, but none for despair. Thank God, we are yet free; and, if we put on the chains which are forging for us, it will be because we deserve to wear We should never despair of the republic. If our ancestors had been capable of surrendering themselves to such ignoble sentiments, our independence and our liberties would never have been achieved. The winter of 1776-77, was one of the gloomiest periods of our revolution; but on this day, fifty-seven years ago, the father of his country achieved a glorious victory, which diffused joy, and gladness, and animation throughout the States. Let us cherish the hope that, since he has gone from among us, Providence, in the dispensation of his mercies, has near at hand, in reserve for us, though yet unseen by us, some sure and happy deliverance from all impending dangers.

When we assembled here last year, we were full of dreadful forebodings. On the one hand, we were menaced with a civil war, which, lighting up in a single State, might spread its flames throughout one of the largest sections of the Union. On the other, a oplicy, essential to the sur of the industry of our count to imminent danger of destr happily applied by Congres lamities, the country was Union once more became a brothers. And I shall be gifwe do not find those who being unfriendly to the confederacy, among the forem servation, and to resist all ments.

"Mr. President, when Co one remnant of its powers--left untouched. The t powers of civil governmer sword and purse; the first tions, is confided by the Executive, and the last to tl ment. If they are separat different responsible departissafe; but if they are unithe same individual, it is sighted and revolutionary Patrick Henry, justly said, vention, in reply to one of him candidly tell me where dom exist, when the swo given up from the people n human affairs interpose tained its liberty after the and the purse. Can you mentative deduction, that safe without one of them? up, you are gone.'

"Up to the period of the last session of Congress, t tutional power of Congres of the United States had n Among its earliest acts w the treasury department. the appointment of a trea quired to give bond and large amount, 'to receive a of the United States, and upon warrants drawn by Treasury, countersigned 1 recorded by the Register, Prior to the establishment of the United States, no t been provided or designate keeping of the public mone was left to his own discret ty. When the existing be it was provided that the p be deposited with it, and bank became the treasury for, whatever place is desig keeping of the public m States, under the care of United States, is, for the 1 sury. Its safety was draw Chief Magistrate, and an a s snatched from st session; but ecretary of the it is understood hat a tariff for lly abandoned. progress of inscarcely a vest and its policy, of March, 1829. than equal to blish our libereen transformed e worst of all ithful picture of blic affairs. It excite, here or have no such ary, implore the all passion and but resolutely constitution and into the Senate he same firm deguided me in the e defence of our prospect before liation and pro-nfortunate sympe proportion of of the Union, of ments of despona feeling of disthe community. ertain serious apd our institutions erthrow. Sir, I ence of the counach occasion for riotic vigor, but we are yet free; hich are forging deserve to wear air of the repubn capable of surh ignoble sentind our liberties ved. The winter cloomiest periods s day, fifty-seven ountry achieved a ed joy, and gladnout the States. since he has gone the dispensation nd, in reserve for , some sure and ending dangers. ast year, we were On the one hand, war, which, light-

spread its flames

t sections of the Union. On the other, a cherished system of policy, essential to the successful prosecution of the industry of our countrymen, was exposed to imminent danger of destruction. Means were happily applied by Congress to avert both calamities, the country was reconciled, and our Union once more became a band of friends and brothers. And I shall be greatly disappointed, if we do not find those who were denounced as being unfriendly to the continuance of our confederacy, among the foremost to fly to its preservation, and to resist all executive encroachments.

"Mr. President, when Congress adjourned at the termination of the last session, there was one remnant of its powers—that over the purse -left untouched. The two most important powers of civil government are those of the sword and purse; the first, with some restrictions, is confided by the constitution to the Executive, and the last to the legislative department. If they are separate, and exercised by different responsible departments, civil liberty is safe; but if they are united in the hands of the same individual, it is gone. That clearsighted and revolutionary orator and patriot, Patrick Henry, justly said, in the Virginia conrention, in reply to one of his opponents, 'Let him candidly tell me where and when did freedom exist, when the sword and purse were given up from the people? Unless a miracle n human affairs interposed, no nation ever retained its liberty after the loss of the sword and the purse. Can you prove, by any argumentative deduction, that it is possible to be safe without one of them? If you give them up, you are gone.'

Up to the period of the termination of the last session of Congress, the exclusive constitational power of Congress over the treasury of the United States had never been contested. Among its earliest acts was one to establish the treasury department, which provided for the appointment of a treasurer, who was required to give bond and security, in a very large amount, 'to receive and keep the moneys of the United States, and disburse the same upon warrants drawn by the Secretary of the Treasury, countersigned by the Comptroller, recorded by the Register, and not otherwise. Prior to the establishment of the present Bank of the United States, no treasury or place had been provided or designated by law for the safe keeping of the public moneys, but the treasurer was left to his own discretion and responsibility. When the existing bank was established, it was provided that the public moneys should be deposited with it, and, consequently, that bank became the treasury of the United States; for, whatever place is designated by law for the keeping of the public money of the United States, under the care of the treasurer of the United States, is, for the time being, the treasury. Its safety was drawn in question by the

a little more than a year ago to investigate its ability. He reported to the Executive that it was perfectly safe. His apprehensions of its solidity were communicated by the President to Congress, and a committee was appointed to examine the subject; they, also, reported in favor of its security. And, finally, among the last acts of the House of Representatives, prior to the close of the last session, was the adoption of a resolution, manifesting its entire confidence in the ability and solidity of the bank.

"After all these testimonies to the perfect safety of the public moneys in the place appointed by Congress, who could have supposed that the place would have been changed? Who could have imagined that, within sixty days of the peeting of Congress, and, as it were, in utter contempt of its authority, the change should have been ordered? Who change should have been ordered? would have dreamed that the treasurer should have thrown away the single key to the treasury, over which Congress held ample control, and accepted, in lieu of it, some dozens of keys, over which neither Congress nor he has any adequate control? Yet, sir, all this has been done; and it is now our solemn duty to inquire, 1st. By whose authority it has been ordered; and, 2d. Whether the order has been given in conformity with the constitution and laws of the United States.

"I agree, sir, and I am very happy whenever I can agree with the President, as to the immense importance of these questions. He says, in the paper which I hold in my hand, that he looks upon the pending question as involving higher considerations than the 'mere transfer of a sum of money from one bank to another. Its decision may affect the character of our government for ages to come.' And, with him, I view it as 'of transcendent importance, both in the principles and the consequences it involves. It is a question of all time, for posterity as well as for us-of constitutional government or monarchy-of liberty or slavery. As I regard it, I hold the bank as nothing, as perfectly insignificant, faithful as it has been in the performance of all its duties. I hold a sound currency as nothing, essential as it is to the prosperity of every branch of business, and to all conditions of society, and efficient as the agency of the bank has been in providing the country with a currency as sound as ever existed, and unsurpassed by any in Christendom. I consider even the public faith, sacred and inviolable as it ever should be, as comparatively nothing. All these questions are merged in the greater and mightier question of the constitutional distribution of the powers of the government, as affected by the recent executive innovation. The real inquiry is, shall all the barriers which have been erected by the caution and wisdom of our ancestors, for the preservation of civil liberty, be prostrated and trodden under foot, and the sword and the purse be Chief Magistrate, and an agent was appointed at once united in the hands of one man? Shall

for the act which he has the

the power of Congress over the treasury of the United States, hitherto never contested, be wrested from its possession, and be henceforward wielded by the Chief Magistrate? Entertaining these views of the magnitude of the question before us, I shall not, at least to-day, examine the reasons which the President has assigned for his act. If he has no power to perform it, no reasons, however cogent, can justify the deed. None can sanctify an illegal or unconstitutional act.

"The question is, by virtue of whose will, power, dictation, was the removal of the de-posits effected? By whose authority and determination were they transferred from the Bank of the United States, where they were required by the law to be placed, and put in banks which the law had never designated? And I tell gentlemen opposed to me, that I am not to be answered by the exhibition of a formal order bearing the signature of R. B. Taney, or any one else. I want to know, not the amanuensis or clerk who prepared or signed the official form, but the authority or the individual who dictated or commanded it: not the hangman who executes the culprit, but the tribunal which pronounced the sentence. want to know that power in the government, that original and controlling authority, which required and commanded the removal of the deposits. And, I repeat the question, is there a senator, or intelligent man in the whole country, who entertains a solitary doubt?

"Hear what the President himself says in his manifesto read to his cabinet: 'The President deems it his duty to communicate in this manner to his cabinet the final conclusions of his own mind, and the reasons on which they are founded.' And, at the conclusion of this paper, what does he say? 'The President again repeats that he begs his cabinet to consider the proposed measure as his own, in the support of which he shall require no one of them to make a sacrifice of opinion or principle. Its responsibility has been assumed, after the most mature deliberation and reflection, as necessary to preserve the morals of the people, the freedom of the press, and the purity of the elective franchise, without which all will unite in saying that the blood and treasure expended by our forefathers, in the establishment of our happy system of government, will have been vain and fruitless. Under these convictions, he feels that a measure so important to the American people cannot be commenced too soon; and he therefore names the 1st day of October next as a period proper for the change of the deposits, or sooner, provided the necessary arrangements with the State banks can be made.' Sir, is there a senator here who will now tell me that the removal was not the measure and the act of the President?

"Thus is it evident that the President, neither by the act creating the treasury department, not violate his conscientious obligations, and by nor by the bank charter, has any power over the appointment of another, who stood ready

the public treasury. Has he any by the con-None, none. We have already stitution? seen that the constitution positively forbids any money from being drawn from the treasury but in virtue of a previous act of appropria-But the President himself says that upon him has been devolved, by the constitution, and the suffrages of the American people, the duty of superintending the operation of the executive departments of the government, and seeing that the laws are faithfully executed. If there existed any such double source of executive power, it has been seen that the treasury department is not an executive department; but that, in all that concerns the public treasury, the Secretary is the agent or representative of Congress, acting in obedience to their will, and maintaining a direct intercourse with them. By what authority does the President derive power from the mere result of an election? In another part of this same cabinet paper he refers to the suffrages of the people as a source of power independent of a system in which power has been most carefully separated, and distributed between three separate and independent de-We have been told a thousand partments. times, and all experience assures us, that such a division is indispensable to the existence and preservation of freedom. We have established and designated offices, and appointed officers in each of those departments, to execute the duties respectively allotted to them. The President, it is true, presides over the whole; specific duties are often assigned by particular laws to him alone, or to other officers under his superintendence. His parental eye is presumed to survey the whole extent of the system in all its movements; but has he power to come into Congress, and to say such laws only shall you pass; to go into the courts, and prescribe the decisions which they may pronounce; or even to enter the offices of administration, and where duties are specifically confided to those officers. to substitute his will to their duty? Or, has he a right, when those functionaries, deliberating upon their own solemn obligations to the people, have moved forward in their assigned spheres, to arrest their lawful progress, because they have dared to act contrary to his pleasure? No, sir; no, sir. His is a high and glorious station, but it is one of observation and superintendence. It is to see that obstructions in the forward movement of government, unlawfully interposed, shall be abated by legitimate and competent means.

"Such are the powers on which the President relies to justify his seizure of the treasury of the United States. I have examined them, one by one, and they all fail, utterly fail, to bear out the act. We are brought irresistibly to the conclusions, 1st, That the invasion of the public treasury has been perpetrated by the removal of one Secretary of the Treasury, who would not violate his conscientious obligations, and by the appointment of another, who stood ready

"And now let us glance mendous consequences whi this high-handed measure. may, in a case in which the specific duty exclusively to command it to be executed. judgment, under the penal from office, and, upon his some obsequious tool to p act where is the limit to h he not the same right to in case, and remove from office move, who hesitate or refu contrary to their own so their duty? There is no able conclusion. Well, th matter of the public treasur that the issue of warrants guarded by four independe ponsible checks, each con and all bound by the law, offices, according to the exis government, at the pleasu The Secretary signs, the ( signs, the Register records pays the warrant. We President has gone to the f in the chain, and coerced will. What is to prevent, to draw money from the applying the same penalty which Mr. Duane suffered. chain, from the Secretary o and thus to obtain wha What is to prevent a more plishment of his object, by drafts, drawn on the sole a retary, and placing the mor or in whatsoever hands, the "What security have th lawless conduct of any Pi the boundary to the tremhe has assumed? Sir. eve public treasury is broken d From the moment that the the words, 'This measure upon myself the responsibi guard around the treasury henceforward it might as w age. The measure adopted without precedent. I beg but we must go down for ment of the Christian era. by those who are converse tory, that, after Pompey w to Brundusium, Cæsar, wh to give him battle, return reduced Italy,' says the v in sixty days-[the exac

lay of the removal of the

to subscribe his name to the orders of the President; and, 2dly, That the President has no color of authority in the constitution or laws for the act which he has thus caused to be performed.

my by the con-

sitively forbids

rom the treasu-

t of appropria-

self says that

y the constitu-

merican people

peration of the

overnment, and fully executed.

e source of exe-

nat the treasury

epartment; but

public treasury,

epresentative of their will, and with them. By nt derive power

on? In another

he refers to the

ource of power

hich power has independent de-

old a thousand

res us, that such

ne existence and have established

ointed officers in

xecute the duties

ole ; specific durticular laws to

ander his super-

is presumed to ne system in all

wer to come into

s only shall you nd prescribe the nounce; or even ation, and, where to those officers duty? Or, has

naries, deliberat-

bligations to the n their assigned progress, because

to his pleasure?

igh and glorious

ation and super-

t obstructions in rernment, unlaw-

ed by legitimate

ich the President

the treasury of amined them, one

y fail, to bear out

resistibly to the

sion of the public

I by the removal

sury, who would bligations, and by

who stood ready

The President.

and distributed

have already

formed. "And now let us glance at some of the tremendous consequences which may ensue from this high-handed measure. If the President may, in a case in which the law has assigned a specific duty exclusively to a designated officer, mmand it to be executed, contrary to his own judgment, under the penalty of an expulsion from office, and, upon his refusal, may appoint some obsequious tool to perform the required act where is the limit to his authority? Has he not the same right to interfere in every other case, and remove from office all that he can remove, who hesitate or refuse to do his bidding contrary to their own solemn convictions of their duty? There is no resisting this inevitshle conclusion. Well, then, how stands the matter of the public treasury? It has been seen that the issue of warrants upon the treasury is guarded by four independent and hitherto responsible checks, each controlling every other. and all bound by the law, but all holding their offices, according to the existing practice of the government, at the pleasure of the President. The Secretary signs, the Comptroller countersigns, the Register records, and the Treasurer pays the warrant. We have seen that the President has gone to the first and highest link in the chain, and coerced a conformity to his will. What is to prevent, whenever he desires to draw money from the public treasury, his applying the same penalty of expulsion, under which Mr. Duane suffered, to every link of the chain, from the Secretary of the Treasury down, and thus to obtain whatever he demands? What is to prevent a more compendious accomplishment of his object, by the agency of transfer drafts, drawn on the sole authority of the Secretary, and placing the money at once wherever. or in whatsoever hands, the President pleases?

"What security have the people against the lawless conduct of any President? Where is the boundary to the tremendous power which he has assumed? Sir, every barrier around the public treasury is broken down and annihilated. From the moment that the President pronounced the words, 'This measure is my own; I take upon myself the responsibility of it,' every safeguard around the treasury was prostrated, and henceforward it might as well be at the Hermitage. The measure adopted by the President is without precedent. I beg pardon—there is one; but we must go down for it to the commencement of the Christian era. It will be recollected by those who are conversant with Roman history, that, after Pompey was compelled to retire to Brundusium, Cæsar, who had been anxious to give him battle, returned to Rome, 'having reduced Italy,' says the venerable biographer, in sixty days—[the exact period between the

the commencement of the present session of Congress, without the usual allowance of any days of grace —in sixty days, without blood-shed. The biographer proceeds:

"'Finding the city in a more settled condition than he expected, and many senators there, he addressed them in a mild and gracious manner [as the President addressed his late Secretary of the Treasury], and desired them to send deputies to Pompey with an offer of honorable terms of peace,' &c. As Metellus, the tribune, opposed his taking money out of the public treasury, and cited some laws against it-[such, Sir, I suppose, as I have endeavored to cite on this occasion]-Cæsar said 'Arms and laws do not flourish together. If you are not pleased at what I am about, you have only to withdraw. [Leave the office, Mr. Duane!] War, indeed, will not tolerate much liberty of speech. When I say this, I am renouncing my own right; for you, and all those whom I have found exciting a spirit of faction against me, are at my disposal.' Having said this, he approached the doors of the treasury, and, as the keys were not produced, he sent for workmen to break them open. Metellus again opposed him, and gained credit with some for his firmness; but Cæsar, with an elevated voice, threatened to put him to death if he gave him any further trouble. 'And you know very well, young man,' said he, 'that this is harder for me to say than to do.' Metellus, terrified by the menace, retired; and Cæsar was afterwards easily and readily supplied with every thing necessary for that war.

"Mr. President (said Mr. C.) the people of the United States are indebted to the President for the boldness of this movement; and as one, among the humblest of them, I profess my obligations to him. He has told the Senate, in his message refusing an official copy of his cabinet paper, that it has been published for the information of the people. As a part of the people, the Senate, if not in their official character, have a right to its use. In that extraordinary paper he has proclaimed that the measure is his own and that he has taken upon himself the responsibility of it. In plain English, he has proclaimed an open, palpable and daring usurpation!

"For more than fifteen years, Mr. President, I have been struggling to avoid the present state of things. I thought I perceived, in some proceedings, during the conduct of the Seminole war, a spirit of defiance to the constitution and to all law. With what sincerity and truth—with what earnestness and devotion to civil liberty, I have struggled, the Searcher of all human hearts best knows. With what fortune, the bleeding constitution of my country now fatally attests.

tory, that, after Pompey was compelled to retire to Brundusium, Cæsar, who had been anxious to give him battle, returned to Rome, 'having reduced Italy,' says the venerable biographer, is mixty days—[the exact period between the lay of the removal of the deposits and that of the throne of grace, I would beseech Him, as the greatest favor He could grant to me here below, to spare me until I live to behold the people, rising in their majesty, with a peaceful and constitutional exercise of their power, to expel the Goths from Rome; to rescue the public treasury from pillage, to preserve the constitution of the United States; to uphold the Union against the danger of the concentration and consolidation of all power in the hands of the Executive; and to sustain the liberties of the people of this country against the imminent perils to which they now stand exposed.

"And now, Mr. President, what, under all these circumstances, is it our duty to do? Is there a senator who can hesitate to affirm, in the language of the resolutions, that the President has assumed a dangerous power over the treasury of the United States, not granted to him by the constitution and the laws; and that the reasons assigned for the act by the Secretary of the Treasury are insufficient and unsatisfactory?

"The eyes and the hopes of the American people are anxiously turned to Congress. They feel that they have been deceived and insulted; their confidence abused; their interests betrayed; and their liberties in danger. They see a rapid and alarming concentration of all power in one man's hands. They see that, by the exercise of the positive authority of the Executive, and his negative power exerted over Congress, the will of one man alone prevails, and governs the republic. The question is no longer what laws will Congress pass, but what will the Executive not veto? The President, and not Congress, is addressed for legislative action. We have seen a corporation, charged with the execution of a great national work, dismiss an experienced, faithful, and zealous president, afterwards testify to his ability by a voluntary resolution, and reward his extraordinary services by a large gratuity, and appoint in his place an executive favorite, totally inexperienced and incompetent, to propitiate the President. We behold the usual incidents of approaching tyran-The land is filled with spies and informers, and detraction and denunciation are the orders of the day. People, especially official incumbents in this place, no longer dare speak in the fearless tones of manly freemen, but in the cautious whispers of trembling slaves. The premonitory symptoms of despotism are upon us; and if Congress do not apply an instantaneous and effective remedy, the fatal collapse will soon come on, and we shall die-ignobly die-base, mean, and abject slaves; the scorn and contempt of mankind; unpitied, unwept, unmourn-

CHAPTER C.

MR. BENTON'S SPEECH IN REPLY TO MR. CLAY-EXTRACTS.

MR. CLAY had spoken on three successive days, being the last days of the year 1833. Mr. Benton followed him,-and seeing the advantage which was presented in the character of the resolve, and that of the speech in support of it, all bearing the impress of a criminal proceeding, without other result than to procure a sentence of condemnation against the President for violating the laws and the constitution, endangering the public liberty and establishing a tyranny,-he took up the proceeding in that sense; and immediately turned all the charges against the resolution itself and its mover, as a usurpation of the rights of the House of Representatives in originating an impeachment, and a violation of law and constitution in trying it ex parte; and "The first of these resolutions contained impeachable matter, and was in fact, though not in form, a direct impeachment of the President of the United States. He recited the constitutional provision, that the President might be impeached—1st, for treason; 2d, for bribery; 3d, for high crimes; 4th, for misdemeanors; and said that the first resolution charged both a high crime and a misdemeanor upon the Presi dent: a high crime, in violating the laws and constitution, to obtain a power over the public treasure, to the danger of the liberties of the people; and a misdemeanor, in dismissing the late Secretary of the Treasury from office. Mr. B. said that the terms of the resolution were sufficiently explicit to define a high crime, within the meaning of the constitution, without having recourse to the arguments and declarations used by the mover in illustration of his meaning; but, if any doubt remained on that head, it would be removed by the whole tenor of the argument, and especially that part of it which compared the President's conduct to that of Cesar, in seizing the public treasure, to aid him in putting an end to the liberties of his country; and every senator, in voting upon it, would vote as directly upon the guilt or innocence of the President, as if he was responding to the question of guilty or not guilty, in the concluding sentence of a formal impeachment.

"We are, then, said Mr. B., trying an impeachment! But how? The constitution gives to the House of Representatives the sole power to originate impeachments; yet we originate this impeachment ourselves. The constitution gives the accused a right to be present; but he is not here. It requires the significant by a judges; but we are not quires the Chief Justice of the preside when the President Chief Justice is not preside House of Representatives a rand to manage the prosecutification of criminal justice served; yet all these forms richard. It is a proceeding Magistrate of the republic is being heard, and in which act as his judges!

"Mr. B. called upon the well what they did before ther in the consideration of t called upon them to consid the House of Representati was invaded, and who had message to the Senate, con ceeding, and demanding its conjured them to consider President, who was thus to sence for a most enormou due to the Senate itself, in incompatible characters of and which would itself be and America. He dwelt figure which the Senate v on with the consideration o accused the President of v tion; and itself committed the same constitution in tion! It accused him of v and itself violated all the tice in prosecuting him for with designs dangerous to citizens, and immediately rights of all citizens, in Chief Magistrate.

"Mr. B. descanted upo organization of the Senate ment from it in favor of t rum of their proceedings lawgivers, and ought to res made; they were the cons the President, and should possible, the civil relatior adviser presumes; they m should be the last in the v cusation against him, to p attack his character with Decorum, the becoming of ionary, should be the dis American senator, who office, the united dignitie legislative, and the judic judicial capacity especial to decorum and proprie would the contagious to lence, the slightest appro! prosecutor. He referred tary law to show that the in an accusation, because TO MR. CLAYaccessive days, 33. Mr. Benthe advantage aracter of the upport of it, all oceeding, withentence of conor violating the ering the pubinny,-he took ; and immedinst the resoluirpation of the esentatives in a violation of ex parte; and contained imict, though not the President ed the constitudent might be I, for bribery; misdemeanors 1 charged both apon the Presi the laws and ver the public iberties of the dismissing the om office. Mr. esolution were gh crime, with-1, without havnd declarations n of his mean-I on that head. le tenor of the irt of it which ict to that of ure, to aid him of his country; 1 it, would vote nocence of the ng to the questhe concluding

t.
trying an imnstitution gives the sole power
t we originate
he constitution resent; but he is not here. It requires the Senate to be sworn as judges; but we are not so sworn. It requires the Chief Justice of the United States to preside when the President is tried; but the Chief Justice is not presiding. It gives the House of Representatives a right to be present, and to manage the prosecution; but neither the House nor its managers are here. It requires the forms of criminal justice to be strictly observed; yet all these forms are neglected and riolated. It is a proceeding in which the First Magistrate of the republic is to be tried without being heard, and in which his accusers are to at as his judges!

"Mr. B. called upon the Senate to consider well what they did before they proceeded further in the consideration of this resolution. He called upon them to consider what was due to the House of Representatives, whose privilege was invaded, and who had a right to send a message to the Senate, complaining of the proceeding, and demanding its abandonment. He oniured them to consider what was due to the President, who was thus to be tried in his absence for a most enormous crime; what was due to the Senate itself, in thus combining the incompatible characters of accusers and judges, and which would itself be judged by Europe and America. He dwelt particularly on the figure which the Senate would make in going on with the consideration of this resolution. It accused the President of violating the constitution; and itself committed twenty violations of the same constitution in making the accusation! It accused him of violating a single law, and itself violated all the laws of criminal justice in prosecuting him for it. It charged him with designs dangerous to the liberties of the citizens, and immediately trampled upon the rights of all citizens, in the person of their Chief Magistrate.

Mr. B. descanted upon the extraordinary organization of the Senate, and drew an argument from it in favor of the reserve and decorum of their proceedings. The Senate were lawgivers, and ought to respect the laws already made; they were the constitutional advisers of the President, and should observe, as nearly as possible, the civil relations which the office of adviser presumes; they might be his judges, and should be the last in the world to stir up an accusation against him, to prejudge his guilt, or to attack his character with defamatory language. Decorum, the becoming ornament of every functionary, should be the distinguishing trait of an American senator, who combines, in his own office, the united dignities of the executive, the legislative, and the judicial character. In his judicial capacity especially, he should sacrifice to decorum and propriety; and shun, as he would the contagious touch of sin and pestilence, the slightest approach to the character of prosecutor. He referred to British parliamentary law to show that the Lords could not join but here the Senate was sole accuser, and had nothing from the House of Representatives to join; but made the accusation out and out, and tried it themselves. He said the accusation was a double one—for a high crime and a misdemeanor—and the latter a more flagrant proceeding than the former; for it assumed to know for what cause the President had dismissed his late Secretary, and undertook to try the President for a thing which was not triable or impeachable.

"From the foundation of the government, it had been settled that the President's right to dismiss his secretaries resulted from his constitutional obligation to see that the laws were faithfully executed. Many Presidents had dismissed secretaries, and this was the first time that the Senate had ever undertaken to found an impeachment upon it, or had assumed to know the reasons for which it was done.

"Mr. B. said that two other impeachments seemed to be going on, at the same time, against two other officers, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Treasurer; so that the Senate was brimful of criminal business. The Treasurer and the Secretary of the Treasury were both civil officers, and were both liable to impeachment for misdemeanors in office; and great misdemeanors were charged upon them. They were, in fact, upon trial, without the formality of a resolution; and, if hereafter impeached by the House of Representatives, the Senate, if they believed what they heard, would be ready to pronounce judgment and remove them from office, without delay or further examination.

"Mr. B. then addressed himself to the Vice-President (Mr. Van Buren), upon the novelty of the scene which was going on before him, and the great change which had taken place since he had served in the Senate. He commended the peculiar delicacy and decorum of the Vice-President himself, who, in six years' service, in high party times, and in a decided opposition, never uttered a word, either in open or secret session, which could have wounded the feelings of a political adversary, if he had been present and heard it. He extolled the decorum of the opposition to President Adams' administration. If there was one brilliant exception, the error was redeemed by classic wit, and the heroic readiness with which a noble heart bared its bosom to the bullets of those who felt aggrieved. Still addressing himself to the Vice-President, Mr. B. said that if he should receive some hits in the place where he sat, without the right to reply, he must find consolation in the case of his most illustrious predecessor, the great apostle of American liberty (Mr. Jefferson), who often told his friends of the manner in which he had been cut at when presiding over the Senate, and personally annoved by the inferior-no, young and ally annoyed by the interior and inconsiderate—members of the federal party prosecutor. He referred to British parliamentary law to show that the Lords could not join in an accusation, because they were to try it;

of the laws and the constitution. Was the charge true? Does the act which he has done deserve the definition which has been put upon it? He had made up his own mind that the public deposits ought to be removed from the Bank of the United States. He communicated that opinion to the Secretary of the Treasury; the Secretary refused to remove them; the President removed him, and appointed a Secretary who gave the order which he thought the occasion required. All this he did in virtue of his constitutional obligation to see the laws faithfully executed; and in obedience to the same sense of duty which would lead him to dismiss a Secretary of War, or of the Navy, who would refuse to give an order for troops to march, or a fleet to sail. True, it is made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to direct the removal of the deposits; but the constitution makes it the duty of the President to see that the Secretary performs his duty; and the constitution is as much above law as the President is above the Secretary.

"The President is on trial for a misdemeanor—for dismissing his Secretary without sufficient cause. To this accusation there are ready answers: first, that the President may dismiss his Secretaries without cause; secondly, that the Senate has no cognizance of the case; thirdly, that the Senate cannot assume to know for what cause the Secretary in question was dismissed.

"The Secretary of the Treasury is on trial. In order to get at the President, it was found necessary to get at a gentleman who had no voice on this floor. It had been found necessary to assail the Secretary of the Treasury in a manner heretofore unexampled in the history of the Senate. His religion, his politics, his veracity, his understanding, his Missouri restriction vote, had all been arraigned. Mr. B. said he would leave his religion to the constitution of the United States, Catholic as he was, and although 'the Presbyterian might cut off his head the first time he went to mass;' for he could see no other point to the anecdote of Cromwell and the capitulating Catholics, to whom he granted the free exercise of their religion, only he would cut off their heads if they went to mass. His understanding he would leave to himself. The head which could throw the paper which was taken for a stone on this floor, but which was, in fact, a double-headed chain-shot fired from forty-eight pounder, carrying sails, masts, rigging, all before it, was a head that could take care of itself. His veracity would be adjourned to the trial which was to take place for misquoting a letter of Secretary Crawford, and he had no doubt would end as the charge did for suppressing a letter which was printed in extenso among our documents, and withholding the name and compensation of an agent; when that name and the fact of no compensation was lying on the table. The Secretary of the Treasury was arraigned for some incidental vote on the Missouri restriction, when he was a member of the Maryland legislature. Mr. B. did not know what that vote was; but he did know that a certain gentleman, who lately stood in the relation of sergeant to another gentleman, in a certain high election, was the leader of the forces which deforced Missouri of her place in the Union for the entire session which he first attended (not served) in the Congress of the United States. His politics could not be severely tried in the time of the alien and sedition law, when he was scarce of age; but were well tried during the late war, when he sided with his country, and received the constant denunciations of that great organ of federalism, the Federal Republican newspaper. For the rest, Mr. B. admitted that the Secretary had voted for the elder Adams to be President of the United States, but denied the right of certain persons to make that an objection to him. Mr. B. dismissed these personal charges, for the present and would adjourn their consideration until his (Mr. Taney's) trial came on, for which the senator from Kentucky (Mr. Clay), stood pledged: and after the trial was over, he had no doubt but that the Secretary of the Treasury, although a Catholic and a federalist, would be found to maintain his station in the first rank of American gentlemen and American patriots.

"Mr. B. took up the serious charges against the Secretary: that of being the mere instrument of the President in removing the deposits, and violating the constitution and laws of the land. How far he was this mere instrument. making up his mind, in three days, to do what others would not do at all, might be judged by every person who would refer to the opposition papers for the division in the cabinet about the removal of the deposits; and which constantly classed Mr. Taney, then the Attorney General, on the side of removal. This classification was correct, and notorious, and ought to exempt an honorable man, if any thing could exempt him, from the imputation of being a mere instrument in a great transaction of which he was a prime counsellor. The fact is, he had long since in his character of legal adviser to the President, advised the removal of these deposits; and when suddenly and unexpectedly called upon to take the office which would make it his duty to act upon his own advice, he accepted it from the single sense of honor and duty; and that he might not seem to desert the President in flinching from the performance of what he had re-commended. His personal honor was clean; his personal conduct magnanimous; his official deeds would abide the test of law and truth.

"Mr. B. said he would make short work of long accusations, and demolish, in three minutes, what had been concocting for three months, and delivering for three days in the Senate. He would call the attention of the Senate to certain clauses of law, and certain treasury instructions which had been left out of view, but which were decisive of the accusation against the Senate control of the security of the accusation against the Senate control of the s cretary. The first we charter, which invests power of transferring to place. It was the ter: he would read it ever required by the state bank should give transferring the public within the United State and for distributing the public creditors, &c.

"Here is authority fer the public moneys ed only by the bounds its territories; and the law puts to flight all United States Bank be Treasurer being the ke with which some polit ters have been worrying three months. In vir cretary of the Treasu drafts to the amount of ter; and his legal rig just as clear, under thi ter, as his right to rem der another clause of i by draft; a payment of upon a warrant; and transfer draft and a trea necessary to be known l to the office of illuming ducting a criminal prose standing what he is tal no relation to each ot the money out of the tr fers it from point to p making payment: and Secretary of the Treas blunder of mistaking th

"The senator from I people to rise, and dri capitol. Who are the General Jackson and the just elected Presides self, and the party just in the House—all by the is their act that has put sion of the capitol to senator and his friend quite sure that he felt me so disastrous to his hope himself with so much those whom the country

"The senator from and the hopes of the cuptor Congress. Yes, and I hold him to it.
They see one House of which the constitution purse, and the origination which is fresh from the see that body with a magnetic factor of the President Treasury, and approving was a member charter, which invested the Secretary with the Ir. B. did not power of transferring the public funds from place did know that to place. It was the 15th section of the charstood in the reter: he would read it. It enacted that whenentleman, in a ever required by the Secretary of the Treasury. ler of the forces the bank should give the necessary facilities for r place in the transferring the public funds from place to place, ch he first atwithin the United States, or territories thereof; ongress of the I not be severeand for distributing the same in payment of the public creditors, &c. en and sedition but were well he sided with

stant denuncia-

alism, the Fede-

the rest. Mr.

had voted for t of the United

certain persons

n. Mr. B. dis-

for the present

ration until his

which the sen-

stood pledged;

had no doubt

asury, although

ld be found to rank of Ameri-

charges against

ie mere instru-

ng the deposits.

nd laws of the ere instrument,

ivs, to do what

t be judged by the opposition

pinet about the

hich constantly

torney General,

assification was

t to exempt an d exempt him.

nere instrument

ne was a prime ong since, in his

e President, ad-sits; and when

ed upon to take his duty to act

ed it from the

; and that he

sident in flinch-

hat he had re-

r was clean; his

his official deeds

short work of a three minutes,

ree months, and

ie Senate. He

enate to certain

iry instructions

ew, but which

against the Setruth.

triots.

"Here is authority to the Secretary to transfer the public moneys from place to place, limited only by the bounds of the United States and its territories; and this clause of three lines of law puts to flight all the nonsense about the United States Bank being the treasury, and the Treasurer being the keeper of the public moneys, with which some politicians and newspaper writers have been worrying their brains for the last three months. In virtue of this clause, the Secretary of the Treasury gave certain transfer drafts to the amount of two millions and a quarter; and his legal right to give the draft was just as clear, under this clause of the bank charter, as his right to remove the deposits was under another clause of it. The transfer is made by draft; a payment out of the treasury is made upon a warrant; and the difference between a transfer draft and a treasury warrant was a thing necessary to be known by every man who aspired to the office of illuminating a nation, or of conducting a criminal prosecution, or even of understanding what he is talking about. They have no relation to each other. The warrant takes the money out of the treasury: the draft transfers it from point to point, for the purpose of making payment: and all this attack upon the Secretary of the Treasury is simply upon the blunder of mistaking the draft for the warrant.

"The senator from Kentucky calls upon the people to rise, and drive the Goths from the capitol. Who are those Goths? They are General Jackson and the democratic party,he just elected President over the senator himself, and the party just been made the majority in the House-all by the vote of the people. It is their act that has put these Goths in possession of the capitol to the discomfiture of the senator and his friends; and he ought to be quite sure that he felt no resentment at an event so disastrous to his hopes, when he has indulged himself with so much license in vituperating those whom the country has put over him.

"The senator from Kentucky says the eyes and the hopes of the country are now turned upon Congress. Yes, Congress is his word, and I hold him to it. And what do they see? They see one House of Congress—the one to which the constitution gives the care of the purse, and the origination of impeachments, and which is fresh from the popular elections: they see that body with a majority of above fifty in favor of the President and the Secretary of the Treasury, and approving the act which the sen-

cretary. The first was the clause in the bank ator condemns. They see that popular approbation in looking at one branch of Congress, and the one charged by the constitution with the inquisition into federal grievances. In the other branch they see a body far removed from the people, neglecting its proper duties, seizing upon those of another branch, converting itself into a grand inquest, and trying offences which itself prefers; and in a spirit which bespeaks a zeal quickened by the sting of personal mortification. He says the country feels itself deceived and betrayed-insulted and wronged-its liberties endangered—and the treasury robbed: the representatives of the people in the other House, say the reverse of all this-that the President has saved the country from the corrupt dominion of a great corrupting bank, by taking away from her the public money which she was using in bribing the press, subsidizing members, purchasing the venal, and installing herself in supreme political power.

"The senator wishes to know what we are to do? What is our duty to do? I answer, to keep ourselves within our constitutional duties -to leave this impeachment to the House of Representatives-leave it to the House to which it belongs, and to those who have no private griefs to avenge—and to judges, each of whom should retire from the bench, if he happened to feel in his heart the spirit of a prosecutor instead of a judge. The Senate now tries General Jackson; it is subject to trial itself-to be tried by the people, and to have its sentence

The corner-stone of Mr. Clay's whole argument was, that the Bank of the United States was the treasury of the United States. This was his fundamental position, and utterly unfounded, and shown to be so by the fourteenth article of what was called the constitution of the bank. It was the article which provided for the establishment of branches of the mother institution, and all of which except the branch at Washington city, were to be employed, or not employed, as the directors pleased, as depositories of the public money; and consequently were not made so by any law of Congress. The article said:

"The directors of said corporation shall establish a competent office of discount and deposit in the District of Columbia, whenever any law of the United States shall require such an establishment; also one such office of discount and deposit in any State in which two thousand shares shall have been subscribed, or may be held, whenever, upon application of the legislature of such State, Congress may, by law, require the same : Provided, The directors aforesaid shall not be bound to establish such office before the whole of the capital of the bank shall have been paid up. And it shall be lawful for the directors of the said corporation to establish offices of discount and deposit wheresoever they shall think fit, within the United States or the territories thereof, to such persons, and under such regulations, as they shall deem proper, not being contrary to law, or the constitution of the bank. Or, instead of establishing such offices, it shall be lawful for the directors of the said corporation, from time to time, to employ any other bank or banks, to be first approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, at any place or places that they may deem safe and proper, to manage and transact the business proposed as aforesaid, other than for the purposes of discount, to be managed and transacted by such officers, under such agreements, and subject to such regulations, as they shall deem just and proper.

"Mr. B. went on to remark upon this article, that it placed the establishment of but one branch in the reach or power of Congress, and that one was in the District of Columbia-in a district of ten miles square-leaving the vast extent of twenty-four States, and three Territories, to obtain branches for themselves upon contingencies not dependent upon the will or power of Congress; or requiring her necessities, or even her convenience, to be taken into the account. law of Congress could obtain a branch in this district; but with respect to every State, the establishment of the branch depended, first, upon the mere will and pleasure of the bank; and, secondly, upon the double contingency of a subscription, and a legislative act, within the State. If then, the mother bank does not think fit, for its own advantage, to establish a branch; or, if the people of a State do not acquire 2,000 shares of the stock of the bank, and the legislature, therefore, demand it, no branch will be established in any State, or any Territory of the Union. Congress can only require a branch, in any State, after two contingencies have happened in the State; neither of them having the slightest reference to the necessities, or even convenience, of the federal government.

"Here, then, said Mr. B., is the Treasury established for the United States! A Treasury which is to have an existence but at the will of the bank, or the will of a State legislature, and a few of its citizens, enough to own 2,000 shares of stock worth $100 a share! A Treasury which Congress has no hand in establishing, and cannot preserve after it is established; for the mother bank, after establishing her branches, may shut them up, or withdraw them. Such a thing has already happened. Branches in the West have been, some shut up, some withdrawn; and, in these cases, the Treasury was broken up, according to the new-fangled conception of a national Treasury. No! said Mr. B., the Federal bank is no more the Treasury of the United States than the State banks are. One is just as much the Treasury as the other; and made so by this very 14th fundamental article of the constitution of the bank. Look at it! Look at discussions came the train of ideas which led to the alternative! Where branches are not es tablished, the State banks are to be employed!

"The Bank of the United States is to select the State bank; the Secretary of the Treasury is to approve the selection; and if he does 80, the State bank so selected, and so approved becomes the keeper of the public moneys; it becomes the depository of the public moneys; it transfers them; it pays them out; it does every thing except make discounts for the mother bank and issue notes; it does everything which the federal government wants done; and that is nothing but what a bank of deposit can do. The government makes no choice between State banks and branch banks. They are all one to her. They stand equal in her eyes; they stand equal in the charter of the bank itself; and the horror that has now broken out against the State banks is a thing of recent conception-a very modern impulsion; which is rebuked and condemned by the very authority to which it traces its source. Mr. B. said, the State banks were just as much made the federal treasury by the bank charter, as the United States Bank itself was: and that was sufficient to annihilate the argument which now sets up the federal bank for the federal treasury. But the fact was, that neither was made the Treasury; and it would be absurd to entertain such an idea for an instant; for the federal bank may surrender her charter, and cease to exist-it can do so at any moment it pleases-the State banks may expire upon their limitation; they may surrender; they may be dissolved in many ways, and so cease to exist; and then there would be no Treasury! What an idea, that the existence of the Treasury of this great republic is to depend, not upon itself, but upon corporations, which may cease to exist, on any day, by their own will, or their own crimes.'

The debates on this subject brought out the conclusion that the treasury of the United States had a legal, not a material existence—that the Treasurer having no buildings, and keepers to hold the public moneys, resorted (when the treasury department was first established), to the collectors of the revenue, leaving the money in their hands until drawn out for the public service—which was never long, as the revenues were then barely adequate to meet the daily expenses of the government; afterwards to the first Bank of the United States-then to local banks; again to the second bank; and now again to local banks. In all these cases the keepers of the public moneys were nothing but keepers, being the mere agents of the Secretary of the treasury in holding the moneys which he had no means of holding himself. From these the establishment of -that is to say, to th the erection of build moneys.

CHAP

CONDEMNATION OF P CALHOUN'S SPI

Ir was foreseen at the tween Mr. Calhoun and came together-a conju poles-on the subject away for a term to elections-that the eff was not the design), to all other subjects agains expectation was not dis debate on Mr. Clay's c Mr. Calhoun took the did Mr. Clay the hone ideas of a revolution, treasury. He not only the middle of a revoluti way of consolation to t revolutions never go b destined, in this case, to In the pleasing anticipat Calhoun and his friend placently intimated the in his opening speech; there was no mistake. to it thus:

"The Senator from K ticipates with confidence who were denounced at tors and disunionists. trying occasion, standing manfully resisting the ad I (said Mr. C.) heard the sure, not on account of t implied, but the evidence the cloud which has been over the character and m patriotic party begins to nator hazarded nothing i party is the determined, enemy to usurpation, cor and under what form it m executive upon the othe government, or from the sovereignty and rights of ution and fortitude with the establishment of the independent treasury hes are not en o be employed! -that is to say, to the creation of officers, and ates is to select the erection of buildings, to hold the public of the Treasury id if he does so, id so approved blic moneys; it public moneys; m out; it does unts for the mo-

does everything ants done; and k of deposit can choice between bank itself: and out against the

t conception-a

is rebuked and

rity to which it

the State banks

eral treasury by

ed States Bank

ent to annihilate

But the fact was.

reasury; and it

such an idea for may surrender

-it can do so at

tate banks may

they may sur-

in many ways,

there would be

nat the existence

epublic is to de-

on corporations.

ny day, by their rought out the

he United States

tence-that the

and keepers, to rted (when the established), to wing the money

for the public

as the revenues

meet the daily

fterwards to the

-then to local

ank; and low

these cases the ere nothing but

of the Secretary

noneys which he

lf. From these eas which led to

up the federal

They are all 1 her eyes; they

CHAPTER CI.

CONDEMNATION OF PRESIDENT JACKSON-MR. CALHOUN'S SPEECH-EXTRACTS.

Ir was foreseen at the time of the coalition between Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Clay, in which they came together-a conjunction of the two political poles-on the subject of the tariff, and laid it away for a term to include two presidential elections—that the effect would be (even if it was not the design), to bring them together upon all other subjects against General Jackson. This expectation was not disappointed. Early in the debate on Mr. Clay's condemnatory resolution, Mr. Calhoun took the floor in its support; and did Mr. Clay the honor to adopt his leading ideas of a revolution, and of a robbert of the treasury. He not only agreed that we were in the middle of a revolution, but also asserted, by way of consolation to those who loved it, that revolutions never go backwards-an aphorism destined, in this case, to be deceived by the event. In the pleasing anticipation of this aid from Mr. Calhoun and his friends, Mr. Clay had complacently intimated the expectation of this aid in his opening speech; and in that intimation there was no mistake. Mr. Calhoun responded

"The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Clay] anticipates with confidence that the small party, who were denounced at the last session as traitors and disunionists, will be found, on this trying occasion, standing in the front rank, and manfully resisting the advance of despotic power. I (said Mr. C.) heard the anticipation with pleasure, not on account of the compliment which it implied, but the evidence which it affords that the cloud which has been so industriously thrown over the character and motive of that small but patriotic party begins to be dissipated. The Senator hazarded nothing in the prediction. That party is the determined, the fixed, and sworn enemy to usurpation, come from what quarter and under what form it may-whether from the executive upon the other departments of this government, or from this government on the sovereignty and rights of the States. The resoposition at the last session, under so many difficulties and dangers, in defence of the States against the encroachments of the general government, furnished evidence not to be mistaken, that that party, in the present momentous struggle, would be found arrayed in defence of the rights of Congress against the encroachments of the President. And let me tell the Senator from Kentucky (said Mr. C.) that, if the present struggle against executive usurpation be successful, it will be owing to the success with which we, the nullifiers-I am not afraid of the word-maintained the rights of the States against the encroachment of the general government at the last session."

This assurance of aid was no sooner given than complied with. Mr. Calhoun, and all his friends came immediately to the support of the resolution, and even exceeded their author in their zeal against the President and his Secretary. Notwithstanding the private grief which Mr. Calhoun had against General Jackson in the affair of the "correspondence" and the "exposition"—the contents of which latter were well known though not published-and notwithstanding every person was obliged to remember that grief while Mr. Calhoun was assailing the General, and alleging patriotism for the motive, and therefore expected that it should have imposed a reserve upon him; yet, on the contrary he was most personally bitter, and used language which would be incredible, if not found, as it is, in his revised reports of his speeches. Thus, in enforcing Mr. Clay's idea of a robbery of the treasury after the manner of Julius Cæsar, he said:

"The senator from Kentucky, in connection with this part of his argument, read a striking passage from one of the most pleasing and instructive writers in any language [Plutarch]. the description of Cæsar forcing himself, sword in hand, into the treasury of the Roman commonwealth. We are at the same stage of our political revolution, and the analogy between the two cases is complete, varied only by the character of the actors and the circumstances of the times. That was a case of an intrepid and bold warrior, as an open plunderer, seizing forcibly the treasury of the country, which, in that republic, as well as ours, was confined to the custody of the legislative department of the government. The actors in our case are of a different character-artful, cunning, and corrupt politicians, and not fearless warriors. They have entered the treasury, not sword in hand, as public plunderers, but, with the false keys of sophistry, as pilferers, under the silence of midnight. ution and fortitude with which it maintained its | The motive and the object are the same, varied in like manner by circumstances and character. With money I will get men, and with men money,' was the maxim of the Roman plunderer. With money we will get partisans, with partisans votes, and with votes money, is the maxim of our public pilferers. With men and money Cæsar struck down Roman liberty, at the fatal battle of Pharsalia, never to rise again; from which disastrous hour all the powers of the Roman republic were consolidated in the person of Cæsar, and perpetuated in his line. With money and corrupt partisans a great effort is now making to choke and stifle the voice of American liberty, through all its natural organs; by corrupting the press; by overawing the other departments; and, finally, by setting up a new and polluted organ, composed of office-holders and corrupt partisans, under the name of a national convention, which, counterfeiting the voice of the people, will, if not resisted, in their name dictate the succession; when the deed will be done, the revolution be completed, and all the powers of our republic, in like manner, be consolidated in the President, and perpetuated by his dictation."

On the subject of the revolution, "bloodless as yet," in the middle of which we were engaged, and which was not to go backwards, Mr. Calhoun said:

"Viewing the question in its true light, as a struggle on the part of the Executive to seize on the power of Congress, and to unite in the President the power of the sword and the purse, the senator from Kentucky [Mr. Clay] said truly, and, let me add, philosophically, that we are in the midst of a revolution. Yes, the very existence of free governments rests on the proper distribution and organization of power; and, to destroy this distribution, and thereby concentrate power in any one of the departments, is to effect a revolution. But while I agree with the senator that we are in the midst of a revolution, I cannot agree with him as to the time at which it commenced, or the point to which it has progressed. Looking to the distribution of the powers of the general government, into the legislative, executive, and judicial departments, and confining his views to the encroachment of the executive upon the legislative, he dates the commencement of the revolution but sixty days previous to the meeting of the present Congress. I (said Mr. C.) take a wider range, and date it from an earlier period. Besides the distribution among the departments of the general government, there belongs to our system another, and a far more important division or distribution of power—that between the States and the general government, the reserved and delegated rights, the maintenance of which is still more essential to the preservation of our institutions. Taking this wide view of our political system, the revolution, in the midst of which we are, began, not as supposed by the senator from Kentucky, shortly before the commencement of the present session but many years ago, with the commencement of the restrictive system, and terminated its first stage with the passage of the force bill of the last session, which absorbed all the rights and sovereignty of the States, and consoldated them in this government. Whilst this process was going on, of absorbing the reserved powers of the States, on the part of the general government, another commenced, of concentrating in the executive the powers of the other two—the legislative and judicial departments of the government; which constitutes the second stage of the revolution, in which we have advanced almost to the termination."

Mr. Calhoun brought out in this debate the assertion, in which he persevered afterwards until it produced the quarrel in the Senate between himself and Mr. Clay, that it was entirely owing to the military and nullifying attitude of South Carolina that the "compromise" act was passed, and that Mr. Clay himself would have been prostrated in the attempt to compromise. He thus, boldly put forward that pretension:

"To the interposition of the State of South Carolina we are indebted for the adjustment of the tariff question; without it, all the influence of the senator from Kentucky over the manufacturing interest, great as it deservedly is, would have been wholly incompetent, if he had even thought proper to exert it, to adjust the question. The attempt would have prostrated him, and those who acted with him, and not the system. It was the separate action of the State that gave him the place to stand upon, created the necessity for the adjustment, and disposed the minds of all to compromise."

The necessity of his own position, and the indispensability of Mr. Calhoun's support, restrained Mr. Clay, and kept him quiet under this cutting taunt; but he took ample satisfaction for it some years later, when the triumph of General Jackson in the "expunging resolution," and the decline of their own prospects for the Presidency, dissolved their coalition, and remitted them to their long previous antagonistic feelings. But there was another point in which Mr. Calhoun intelligibly indicated what was fully believed at the time, namely, that the basis of the coalition which ostensibly had for its object the reduction of the tariff, was in reality a political coalition to act against General Jackson, and to the success of which it was essential that their own great bone of contention was to be laid aside, and kept out of the way, while the coalition was in force. It was to enable them to unite their forces aga and corruptions of the was then laid away; an the deposits was not t occasion for this conj have been no failure of for the same purpose strong-as subsequent General Jackson could remainder of his Pre found to be "unconst usurping, and dangero people;" and as such, attack of Mr. Clay and respective friends. A told, and with an air foresight of it, in these houn's speech:

"Now, I put the sol hear me: if the tariff h ed-if it was now an ol of successful resistance of the Executive, on t other branch of the gov tained? Let it not be sult of accident-of an It was clearly perceived no successful resistance corruption and encroach while the tariff question separated the North fro the energy of the hone of the community again effort of which is indisp pel those from author the entire powers of go electioneering machine; rate State interposition possible. The truth of upon the accidental st profound principle grow government, and party History and reflection t interests come into conf the prejudices of men a gles can never be compe any individuals, howeve not somewhere in the s tutional power to arrest pel the parties to adjust on till the State falls by

"I will (said Mr. C.) remarks another, in cor under consideration, not only indebted to the cau for our present strength the present usurpation the adjustment of the tit ought to have done, which accompanied it—i esent session. nencement of ated its first ce bill of the e rights and oldated them process was ed powers of l government, ing in the exvo-the legisf the governd stage of the anced almost is debate the fterwards unenate between entirely owing tude of South ict was passed, ild have been promise. He tension:

State of South adjustment of, I the influence ver the manuredly is, would he had even just the quesrostrated him, d not the sysof the State upon, created , and disposed on, and the inport, restrainet under this ole satisfaction ie triumph of ng resolution," spects for the tion, and reus antagonistic point in which ed what was , that the basis had for its obvas in reality a eneral Jackson, s essential that 1 was to be laid rhile the coalienable them to unite their forces against the "encroachments and corruptions of the Executive" that the tariff was then laid away; and although the removal of the deposits was not then foreseen, as the first occasion for this conjunction, yet there could have been no failure of finding occasions enough for the same purpose when the will was so strong—as subsequent events so fully proved. General Jackson could do but little during the remainder of his Presidency which was not found to be "unconstitutional, illegal, corrupt, usurping, and dangerous to the liberties of the people;" and as such, subject to the combined attack of Mr. Clay and Mr. Calhoun and their respective friends. All this was as good as told, and with an air of self-satisfaction at the foresight of it, in these paragraphs of Mr. Calhoun's speech:

"Now. I put the solemn question to all who hear me: if the tariff had not then been adjusted-if it was now an open question-what hope of successful resistance against the usurpations of the Executive, on the part of this or any other branch of the government, could be entertained? Let it not be said that this is the result of accident—of an unforeseen contingency. It was clearly perceived, and openly stated, that no successful resistance could be made to the corruption and encroachments of the Executive, while the tariff question remained open, while it separated the North from the South, and wasted the energy of the honest and patriotic portions of the community against each other, the joint effort of which is indispensably necessary to expel those from authority who are converting the entire powers of government into a corrupt electioneering machine; and that, without separate State interposition, the adjustment was impossible. The truth of this position rests not upon the accidental state of things, but on a profound principle growing out of the nature of government, and party struggles in a free State. History and reflection teach us, that when great interests come into conflict, and the passions and the prejudices of men are aroused, such struggles can never be composed by the influence of any individuals, however great; and if there be not somewhere in the system some high constitutional power to arrest their progress, and compel the parties to adjust the difference, they go on till the State falls by corruption or violence.

"I will (said Mr. C.) venture to add to these remarks another, in connection with the point under consideration, not less true. We are not only indebted to the cause which I have stated for our present strength in this body against the present usurpation of the Executive, but if the adjustment of the tariff had stood alone, as it ought to have done, without the odious bill compromise had joined the State-rights party in their resistance to that unconstitutional measure, and thrown the responsibility on its real authors, the administration, their party would have been so prostrated throughout the entire South, and their power, in consequence, so reduced, that they would not have dared to attempt the present measure; or, if they had, they would have been broken and defeated."

Mr. Calhoun took high ground of contempt and scorn against the Secretary's reasons for removing the deposits, so far as founded in the misconduct of the bank directors-declaring that he would not condescend to notice themrepulsing them as intrusive—and shutting his eyes upon these accusations, although heinous in their nature, then fully proved; and since discovered to be far more criminal than then suspected, and such as to subject their authors, a few years afterwards, to indictments in the Court of General Sessions, for the county of Philadelphia, for a "conspiracy to cheat and defraud the stockholders;"-indictments on which they were saved from jury trials by being "habeas corpus'd" out of the custody of the sheriff of the county, who had arrested them on bench warrants. Mr. Calhoun thus repulsed all notice of these accusations:

"The Secretary has brought forward many and grievous charges against the bank. I will not condescend to notice them. It is the conduct of the Secretary, and not that of the bank, which is immediately under examination; and he has no right to drag the conduct of the bank into the issue, beyond its operations in regard to the deposits. To that extent I am prepared to examine his allegations against it; but beyond that he has no right-no, not the leastto arraign the conduct of the bank; and I, for one, will not, by noticing his charges beyond that point, sanction his authority to call its conduct in question. But let the point in issue be determined, and I, as far as my voice extends, will give to those who desire it the means of the freest and most unlimited inquiry into its

But, while supporting Mr. Clay generally in his movement against the President, Mr. Calhoun disagreed with him in the essential averment in his resolve, that his removal of Mr. Duane because he would not, and the appointment of Mr. Taney because he would, remove them was a usurpation of power. Mr. Calhoun held it to be only an "abuse;" and upon that point he procured a modification of his resolve which accompanied it—if those who led in the from Mr. Clay, nothwithstanding the earnestness of his speech on the charge of usurpation.

And he thus stated his objection:

"But, while I thus severely condemn the conduct of the President in removing the former Secretary and appointing the present, I must say, that in my opinion it is a case of the abuse, and not of the usurpation of power. I cannot doubt that the President has, under the constitution, the right of removal from office; nor can I doubt that the power of removal, wherever it exists, does, from necessity, involve the power of general supervision; nor can I doubt that it might be constitutionally exercised in reference to the deposits. Reverse the present case; suppose the late Secretary, instead of being against, had been in favor of the removal; and that the President, instead of being for, had been against it, deeming the removal not only inexpedient, but, under circumstances illegal; would any man doubt that, under such circumstances, he had a right to remove his Secretary, if it were the only means of preventing the removal of the deposits? Nay, would it not be his indispensable duty to have removed him? and, had he not, would not he have been universally and justly held responsible?"

In all the vituperation of the Secretary, as being the servile instrument of the President's will, the members who indulged in that species of attack were acting against public and recorded testimony. Mr. Taney was complying with his own sense of public duty when he ordered the removal. He had been attorney-general of the United States when the deposit-removal question arose, and in all the stages of that question had been in favor of the removal; so that his conduct was the result of his own judgment and conscience; and the only interference of the President was to place him in a situation where he would carry out his convictions of duty. Mr. Calhoun, in this speech, absolved himself from all connection with the bank, or dependence upon it, or favors from it. Though its chief author, he would have none of its accommodations: and said:

"I am no partisan of the bank; I am connected with it in no way, by moneyed or political ties. I might say, with truth, that the bank owes as much to me as to any other individual in the country; and I might even add that, had it not been for my efforts, it would not have been chartered. Standing in this relation to the institution, a high sense of delicacy, a regard to independence and character, has restrained me from any connection with the institution whatever, except some trifling accommodations, in the way of ordinary business, which were not of the slightest importance either to the bank or myself."

Certainly there was no necessity for Mr. Calhoun to make this disclaimer. His character for pecuniary integrity placed him above the suspicion of a venal motive. His errors came from a different source—from the one that Casar thought excusable when empire was to be attained. Mr. Clay also took the opportunity to disclaim any present connection with, or past favors from the bank; and,

"Begged permission to trespass a few moments longer on the Senate, to make a statement concerning himself personally. He had heard that one high in office had allowed himself to assert that a dishonorable connection had subsisted between him (Mr. C.), and the Bank of the United States. When the present charter was granted, he voted for it; and, having done so, he did not feel himself at liberty to subscribe, and he did not subscribe, for a single share in the stock of the bank, although he confidently anticipated a great rise in the value of the stock. A few years afterwards, during the presidency of Mr. Jones, is was thought, by some of his friends at Philadelphia, expedient to make him (Mr. C.), a director of the Bank of the United States; and he was made a director without any consultation with him. For that purpose five shares were purchased for him, by a friend, for which he (Mr. C.), afterwards paid. When he ceased to be a director, a short time subsequently, he disposed of those shares. He does not now own, and has not for many years been the proprietor of, a single share.

"When Mr. Cheves was appointed president of the bank, its affairs in the States of Kentucky and Ohio were in great disorder; and his (Mr. C.'s), professional services were engaged during several years for the bank in those States. He brought a vast number of suits, and transacted a great amount of professional business for the bank. Among other suits was that for the recovery of the one hundred thousand dollars, seized under the authority of a law of Ohio, which he carried through the inferior and supreme courts. He was paid by the bank the usual compensation for these services, and no more. And he ventured to assert that no professional fees were ever more honestly and fairly earned. He had not, however, been the counsel for the bank for upwards of eight years past. He does not owe the bank, or any one of its branches, a solitary cent. About twelve or fifteen years ago, owing to the failure of a highly estimable (now deceased), friend, a large amount of debt had been, as his indorser, thrown upon him (Mr. C.), and it was principally due to the Bank of the United States. He (Mr C.) established for himself a rigid economy, a sinklong since, without rec slightest favor. Wh were discharging the high valuations, he r note, paying the disco extinguished."

But it was not every absolve himself from h dependence. The list rowers, or retainers, w tifty of the former at a latter; and even after and the assignment of possible liquidations ha ing property at "hig largely for "professions resorts to the "profit ar remained many to be s whom their notes were such early date as to b statute of limitations in mand. Mr. Calhoun co. the panic" in a reference in which we were involv to the liberties of the cou institutions-and a hint a dy-his panacea for all th politic-dissolution of th

"We have (said Mr. C. crisis; things cannot lon It behooves all who lov have affection for their cany stake in our institut flect. Confidence is dail the general government. going on. These will nee of things inimical to the tutions, and, if not speed sions must follow, and the or despotism; when a thrown over the cause of prospects of our country."

CHAPTEI

PUBLIC DIST

From the moment of the reits, it was seen that the plan United States was to force with it a renewal of its char ther to the

for Mr. Cals character above the errors came ne that Cæ-3 was to be opportunity rith, or past a few moke a state-He had lowed himconnection .). and the the present ; and, havf at liberty e. for a sinalthough he in the value ards, during thought, by expedient to ne Bank of e a director For that for him, by wards paid. short time shares. He many years ed president of Kentucky and his (Mr.

aged during States. He transacted ness for the t for the reand dollars, w of Ohio, rior and sue bank the ces, and no that no proly and fairr, been the eight years or any one out twelve failure of a end, a large rser, thrown ncipally due He (Mr C.)

my, a sinkoff the debt long since, without receiving from the bank the slightest favor. Whilst others around him were discharging their debts in property, at high valuations, he periodically renewed his note, paying the discount, until it was wholly extinguished."

But it was not every member who could thus absolve himself from bank connection, favor, or dependence. The list of congressional borrowers, or retainers, was large—not less than tifty of the former at a time, and a score of the latter; and even after the failure of the bank and the assignment of its effects, and after all possible liquidations had been effected by taking property at "high valuation," allowing largely for "professional services," and liberal resorts to the "profit and loss" account, there remained many to be sued by the assignees to whom their notes were passed; and some of such early date as to be met by a plea of the statute of limitations in bar of the stale demand. Mr. Calhoun concluded with a "lift to the panic" in a reference to the "fearful crisis" in which we were involved—the dangers ahead to the liberties of the country—the perils of our institutions-and a hint at his permanent remedy-his panacea for all the diseases of the body politic-dissolution of the Union. He ended

"We have (said Mr. C.), arrived at a fearful crisis; things cannot long remain as they are. It behooves all who love their country, who have affection for their offspring, or who have any stake in our institutions, to pause and reflect. Confidence is daily withdrawing from the general government. Alienation is hourly going on. These will necessarily create a state of things inimical to the existence of our institutions, and, if not speedily arrested, convulsions must follow, and then comes dissolution or despotism; when a thick cloud will be thrown over the cause of liberty and the future prospects of our country."

CHAPTER CII.

PUBLIC DISTRESS.

From the moment of the removal of the deposits, it was seen that the plan of the Bank of the United States was to force their return, and with it a renewal of its charter, by operating on spoke upon in violation of the rule, and printed

the business of the country and the alarms of the people. For this purpose, loans and accom modations were to cease at the mother bank and all its branches, and in all the local banks over which the national bank had control; and at the same time that discounts were stopped, curtailments were made; and all business men called on for the payment of all they owed, at the same time that all the usual sources of supply were stopped. This pressure was made to fall upon the business community, especially upon large establishments employing a great many operatives; so as to throw as many laboring people as possible out of employment. At the same time, politicians engaged in making panic, had what amounts they pleased, an instance of a loan of $100,000 to a single one of these agitators, being detected; and a loan of $1,100,000 to a broker, employed in making distress, and in relieving it in favored cases at a usury of two and a half per centum per month. In this manner, the business community was oppressed, and in all parts of the Union at the same time: the organization of the national bank, with branches in every State, and its control over local banks, being sufficient to enable it to have its policy carried into effect in all places, and at the same moment. The first step in this policy was to get up distress meetingsa thing easily done-and then to have these meetings properly officered and conducted. Men who had voted for Jackson, but now renounced him, were procured for president, vice-presidents, secretaries, and orators; distress orations were delivered; and, after sufficient exercise in that way, a memorial and a set of resolves, prepared for the occasion, were presented and adopted. After adoption, the old way of sending by the mail was discarded, and a deputation selected to proceed to Washington and make delivery of their lugubrious document. These memorials generally came in duplicate, to be presented, in both Houses at once, by a senator from the State and the representative from the district. These, on presenting the petition, delivered a distress harangue on its contents, often supported by two or three adjunct speakers, although there was a rule to forbid any thing being said on such occasions, except to make a brief statement of the contents. Now they were read in violation of the rule, and never to be read again, and referred to a committee, never more to be seen by it; and bound up in volumes to encumber the shelves of the public documents. Every morning, for three months, the presentation of these memorials, with speeches to enforce them, was the occupation of each House: all the memorials bearing the impress of the same mint, and the orations generally cast after the same pattern. These harangues generally gave, in the first place, some topographical or historical notice of the county or town from which it came-sometimes with a hint of its revolutionary services—then a description of the felicity which it enjoyed while the bank had the deposits; then the ruin which came upon it, at their loss; winding up usually with a great quantity of indignation against the man whose illegal and cruel conduct had occasioned such destruction upon their business. The meetings were sometimes held by young men; sometimes by old men; sometimes by the laboring, sometimes by the mercantile class; sometimes miscellaneous, and irrespective of party; and usually sprinkled over with a smart number of former Jackson-men, who had abjured him on account of this conduct to the bank. Some passages will be given from a few of these speeches, as specimens of the whole; the quantity of which contributed to swell the publication of the debates of that Congress to four large volumes of more than one thousand pages each. Thus, Mr. Tyler of Virginia, in presenting a memorial from Culpeper county, and hinting at the military character of the county, said:

"The county of Culpeper, as he had before observed, had been distinguished for its whiggism from the commencement of the Revolution; and, if it had not been the first to hoist the revolutionary banner, at the tap of the drum, they were second to but one county, and that was the good county of Hanover, which had expressed the same opinion with them on this all-important subject. He presented the memorial of these sons of the whigs of the Revolution, and asked that it might be read, referred to the appropriate committee, and printed."

Mr. Robbins of Rhode Island, in presenting memorials from the towns of Smithfield and Cumberland in that State:

"A small river runs through these towns, called Blackstone River; a narrow stream, of no great volume of water, but perennial and unfailing, and possessing great power from the free-like busy hum of industry in their hours of respectively.

quency and greatness of its falls. Prior to 1791, this power had always run to waste, except here and there a saw mill or a grist mill, to supply the exigencies of a sparse neighborhood. and one inconsiderable forge. Since that period. from time to time, and from place to place, that power, instead of running to waste, has been applied to the use of propelling machinery, till the valley of that small river has become the Manchester of America. That power is so unlimited, that scarcely any limitation can be fixed to its capability of progressive increase in its application. That valley, in these towns, already has in it over thirty different establishments; it has in it two millions of fixed capital in those establishments; it has expended in it annually, in the wages of manual labor, five hundred thousand dollars; it has in it one hundred thousand spindles in operation. I should say it had-for one half of these spindles are already suspended, and the other half soon must be suspended, if the present state of things continues. On the bank of that river, the first cotton spindle was established in America. The invention of Arkwright, in 1791, escaped from the jealous prohibitions of England, and planted itself there. It was brought over by a Mr. Slater, who had been a laboring manufacturer in England, but who was not a machinist. He brought it over, not in models, but in his own mind, and fortunately he was blessed with a mind capacious of such things, and which by its fair fruits, has made him a man of immense fortune, and one of the greatest benefactors to his adopted country. There he made the first essays that laid the foundation of that system which has spread so far and wide in this country, and risen to such a height that it makes a demand annually for two hundred and fifty thousand bales of cotton -about one fourth of all the cotton crop of all our cotton-growing States; makes for those States, for their staple, the best market in the world, except that of England: it was rapidly becoming to them the best market in the world. not excepting that of England; still better, it was rapidly becoming for them a market to weigh down and preponderate in the scale against all the other markets of the world taken together. Now, all those prospects are blasted by one breath of the Executive administration of this country. Now every thing in that valley, every thing in possession, every thing in prospect, is tottering to its fall. One half of those one hundred thousand spindles are, as I before stated, already stopped; the other half are still continued, but at a loss to the owners, and purely from charity to the laborers; but this charity has its limit; and regard to their own safety will soon constrain them to stop the other half Five months ago, had one travelled through that valley and witnessed the scenes then displayed there-their numerous and dense population, all industrious, and thriving, and contented-had heard the busy hum of industry in their hours

laxation-had seen the the comforts of their fi seen in every countenance heart; and if that sam through the same valley find it then deserted, an the valley of death, and solitary and mouldering ous establishments, he hand of the ruthless des Now, if the present stat tinued, as surely as bloo has been plunged to the so surely that change the he who ought to have be will have been that ruth

And thus Mr. Webste morial from Franklin e Pennsylvania:

"The county of Frank respectable and wealthy Pennsylvania. It was a stone valley, and, in its agricultural. He had the pass through it, and see when its rich fields of v pening, and, certainly, 1 that he should, at this ti the Senate such undeniabl severe and pressing distr the inhabitants of Frank pally agriculturists, and, were the tillers of their ow terested, also, in manufact they had ten or twelve for four thousand persons er ture of iron, dependent for the product of their ov employed in this busines -miners, colliers, &c .- an was to be afforded them, selves unsuited for it. T been depressed, from cau and so well understood, t doubt them. They were tion of the cotton factoric some days ago. There w products. The consignee -he did not hope to dispe not give his paper for ther that, when a manufacture the cities, the manufactur an advance on them, whic whole operation having st of the derangement of the of business was dried u manufactories in that con pressure—paper factories straw paper, which increa culture. These, too, have sity of dismissing many of them, which necessity bro Executive interference h the comforts of their firesides—had, in a word, seen in every countenance the content of every heart; and if that same person should travel through the same valley hereafter, and should find it then deserted, and desolate, and silent as the valley of death, and covered over with the solitary and mouldering ruins of those numerous establishments, he would say, 'Surely the hand of the ruthless destroyer has been here!' Now, if the present state of things is to be continued, as surely as blood follows the knife that has been plunged to the heart, and death ensues. so surely that change there is to take place; and he who ought to have been their guardian angel. will have been that ruthless destrover."

Vol. I.—27

Prior to

to waste, ex-

grist mill to neighborhood

e that period,

to place, that ste, has been

nachinery, till

s become the

wer is so un-

n can be fixed

acrease in its towns, already

olishments: it in those

n it annually,

hundred thou-

dred thousand

ay it had-for dy suspended, suspended, if

nues. On the n spindle was ention of Ark-

jealous prohi-

self there. It

who had been land, but who

ht it over, not nd fortunately

icious of such

its, has made

nd one of the

pted country that laid the

has spread so

I risen to such

d annually for pales of cotton

on crop of all

kes for those

market in the

it was rapidly

t in the world.

still better, it

a market to ne scale against

are blasted by ninistration of

in that valley,

thing in pros-

half of those are, as I before

r half are still

ners, and pure-

ut this charity

eir own safety

the other half

d through that then displayed

population, all

ontented-had in their hours

eir hours of re

orld taken to-

And thus Mr. Webster, in presenting a memorial from Franklin county, in the State of Pennsylvania:

"The county of Franklin was one of the most respectable and wealthy in the great State of Pennsylvania. It was situated in a rich limestone valley, and, in its main character, was agricultural. He had the pleasure, last year, to pass through it, and see it for the first time, when its rich fields of wheat and rye were ripening, and, certainly, he little thought then, that he should, at this time have to present to the Senate such undeniable proofs of their actual, severe and pressing distress. As he had said, the inhabitants of Franklin county were principally agriculturists, and, of these, the majority were the tillers of their own land. They were interested, also, in manufactures to a great extent; they had ten or twelve forges, and upwards of four thousand persons engaged in the manufacture of iron, dependent for their daily bread on the product of their own labor. The hands employed in this business were a peculiar race -miners, colliers, &c. -and, if other employment was to be afforded them, they would find themselves unsuited for it. These manufactories had been depressed, from causes so well explained. and so well understood, that nobody could now doubt them. They were precisely in the situation of the cotton factories he had adverted to some days ago. There was no demand for their products. The consignee did not receive them -he did not hope to dispose of them, and would that, when a manufactured article was sent to an advance on them, which he got cashed. This whole operation having stopped, in consequence of the derangement of the currency, the source of business was dried up. There were other manufactories in that county that also felt the pressure—paper factories and manufactories of straw paper, which increased the gains of agriculture. These, too, have been under the necessity of dismissing many of those employed by them, which necessity brought this matter of Executive interference home to every man's boyhood in the enjoyments of present comfort, laxation-had seen the plenty of their tables, labor and property: He had ascertained the prices of produce as now, and in November last. in the State of Pennysylvania, and from these, it would be seen that, in the interior region, on the threshing floors, they had not escaped the evils which had affected the prices of corn and rve at Chambersburg. They were hardly to be got rid of at any price. The loss on wheat, the great product of the county, was thirty cents. Clover seed, another great product, had fallen from six dollars per bushel to four dollars. This downfall of agricultural produce described the effect of the measure of the Executive better than all the evidences that had been hitherto. offered. These memorialists, for themselves. were sick, sick enough of the Executive experiment."

> And thus Mr. Southard in presenting the memorial of four thousand "young men" of the city of Philadelphia:

"With but very few of them am I personally acquainted—and must rely, in what I say of them, upon what I know of those few, and upon the information received from others, which I regard as sure and safe. And on these, I venture to assure the Senate, that no meeting of young men can be collected, in any portion of our wide country, on any occasion, containing more intelligence-more virtuous purposemore manly and honorable feeling—more decided and energetic character What they say, they think. What they resolve they will accomplish. Their proceedings were ardent and animated-their resolutions are drawn with spirit; but are such as, I think, may be properly received and respected by the Senate. They relate to the conduct of the Executiveto the present condition of the country—to the councils which now direct its destinies. They admit that older and more mature judgments may better understand the science of government and its practical operations, but they act upon a feeling jest in itself, and valuable in its effects, that they are fit to form and express opinions on public measures and public principles, which shall be their own guide in their present and future conduct; and they express a confident reliance on the moral and physical vigor and untamable love of freedom of the young not give his paper for them. It was well known men of the United States to save us from despotism, open and avowed, or silent, insidious, the cities, the manufacturer expected to obtain and descritful. They were attracted or rather urged, sir, to this meeting, and to the expression of their feelings and opinions, by what they saw around, and knew of the action of the Executive upon the currency and prosperity of the country. They have just entered, or are about entering, on the busy occupations of manhood, and are suddenly surprised by a state of things around them, new to their observation and experience. Calamity had been a stranger in their pathway. They have grown up through their

Vol. I.—27

and the anticipations of future prosperity—their seniors actively and successfully engaged in the various occupations of the community, and the whole circle of employments open before their own industry and hopes-the institutions of their country beloved, and their protecting influence covering the exertions of all for their benefit and happiness. In this state they saw the public prosperity, with which alone they were familiar, blasted, and for the time destroyed. The whole scene, their whole country, was changed; they witnessed fortunes falling, homesteads ruined, merchants failing, artisans broken, mechanics impoverished, all the employments on which they were about to enter, paralyzed; labor denied to the needy, and reward to the industrious; losses of millions of property and gloom settling where joy and happiness before existed. They felt the sirocco pass by, and desolate the plains where peace, and animation, and happiness exulted."

And thus Mr. Clay in presenting a memorial from Lexington, Kentucky:

"If there was any spot in the Union, likely to be exempt from the calamities that had afflicted the others, it would be the region about Lexington and its immediate neighborhood. Nowhere, to no other country, has Providence been more bountiful in its gifts. A country so rich and fertile that it yielded in fair and good seasons from sixty to seventy bushels of corn to the acre. It was a most beautiful countryall the land in it, not in a state of cultivation, was in parks (natural meadows), filled with flocks and herds, fattening on its luxuriant grass. But in what country, in what climate, the most favored by Heaven, can happiness and prosperity exist against bad government, against misrule, and against rash and ill-advised experiments? On the mountain's top, in the mountain's cavern, in the remotest borders of the country, every where, every interest has been affected by the mistaken policy of the Executive. While he admitted that the solicitude of his neighbors and friends was excited in some degree by the embarrassments of the country, yet they felt a deeper solicitude for the restoration of the rightful authority of the constitution and the laws. It is this which excites their apprehensions, and creates all their alarm. He would not, at this time, enlarge further on the subject of this memorial. He would only remark, that hemp, the great staple of the part of the country from whence the memorial came, had fallen twenty per cent. since he left home, and that Indian corn, another of its greatest staples, the most valuable of the fruits of the earth for the use of man, which the farmer converted into most of the articles of his consumption, furnishing him with food and raiment, had fallen to an equal extent. There were in that county six thousand fat bullocks now remaining unsold, when, long before this time last year, there was scarcely one to be purchased. They were not sold, because the butchers could not obtain from the banks the usual facilities in the way of discounts; they could not obtain funds in anticipation of their sales wherewith to purchase; and now $100,000 worth of this species of property remains on hand, which, if sold, would have been scattered through the country by the graziers, producing all the advantages to be derived from so large a circulation. Every farmer was too well aware of these facts one moment to doubt them. We are, said Mr. C., not a complaining people. We think not so much of distress. Give us our laws—guarantee to us our constitution—and we will be content with almost any form of government."

And Mr. Webster thus, in presenting a memorial from Lynn, Massachusetts:

"Those members of the Senate, said Mr. W. who have travelled from Boston to Salem, or to Nahant, will remember the town of Lynn. It is a beautiful town, situated upon the sea is highly industrious, and has been hitherto prosperous and flourishing. With a population of eight thousand souls, its great business is the manufacture of shoes. Three thousand persons men, women, and children, are engaged in this manufacture. They make and sell, ordinarily, two millions of pairs of shoes a year, for which at 75 cents a pair, they receive one million five hundred thousand dollars. They consume half a million of dollars worth of leather, of which they buy a large portion in Philadelphia and Baltimore, and the rest in their own neighborhood. The articles manufactured by them are sent to all parts of the country, finding their way into every principal port, from Eastport round to St. Louis. Now, sir, when I was last among the people of this handsome town all was prosperity and happiness. Their business was not extravagantly profitable; they were not growing rich over fast, but they were comfortable, all employed, and all satisfied and contented. But, sir, with them, as with others, a most serious change has taken place. They find their usual employments suddenly arrested, from the same cause which has smitten other parts of the country with like effects; and they have sent forward a memorial, which I have now the honor of laying before the Senate. This memoral, sir, is signed by nine hundred of the legal voters of the town; and I understand the largest number of votes known to have been given is one thousand. Their memorial is short; it complains of the illegal removal of the deposits, of the attack on the bank, and of the effect of these measures on their business.

And thus Mr. Kent, of Maryland, in presenting petitions from Washington county in that State:

"They depict in strong colors the daily increasing distress with which they are surround

ed. They deeply de to relieve it, and the the derangement of want of confidence, r man, but between be same neighborhood believe, from the rem from the Bank of t months since, and th these memorials pro tion as contended an found in any section in that short period. Their rich and produc were sought after wi they inform us, have f purchasers are to be fo price. Wheat, the sta country, was never mu is quoted in Alexandri portion of their crops honest, industrious p the cruel and ruinous perate and unnecessary try cannot bear it, and afforded, the result of i those who projected i large, who are afflicted

And thus Mr. Webs from the master builde on by a large deputation

"I rise, sir, to perforn to lay before the Senat meeting of the building and county of Philadel purpose of expressing th sent state of the country ary. This meeting cons persons and was compose brickmakers, bricklayers lime burners, plasterers, others, whose occupation the building of houses. respectable, so important class of mechanics, have presentment of their opin specting the present dist the Senate. I am happy the course pursued by me able to the protection of t prosperity of their famili and sensible men, these 1 have witnessed the effect of government upon their the resolutions which I h fully express their convic They propose not to reason speak what they do know.

"Sir, listen to the state The committee state, sir, persons are ordinarily er houses, in the city and cou a number which, with their

'hey were not d not obtain ies in the way otain funds in ewith to purof this species i, if sold, would sountry by the intages to be ation. Every hese facts one e, said Mr. C., think not so vs-guarantee vill be content ent."

senting a me-

e, said Mr. W., to Salem, or to a of Lynn. It on the sea, is hitherto prospopulation of ousiness is the usand persons. ngaged in this sell, ordinarily, ear, for which, ne million five y consume half ther, of which iladelphia and own neighbored by them are , finding their from Eastport hen I was last some town all Their business ole; they were hev were comtisfied and conwith others, a ice. They find y arrested, from en other parts ets; and they which I have re the Senate. ine hundred of d I understand n to have been morial is short; al of the depos-

> and, in presentcounty in that

nd of the effect

288."

s the daily inv are surround

ed. They deeply deplore it, without the ability to relieve it, and they ascribe their condition to the derangement of the currency, and a total want of confidence, not only between man and man, but between banks situated even in the same neighborhood — all proceeding, as they believe, from the removal of the public deposits from the Bank of the United States. Four months since, and the counties from whence these memorials proceed, presented a population as contended and prosperous as could be found in any section of the country. But, sir, in that short period, the picture is reversed. Their rich and productive lands, which last fall were sought after with avidity at high prices. they inform us, have fallen 25 per cent., and no purchasers are to be found even at that reduced price. Wheat, the staple of that region of the country, was never much lower, if as low. Flour is quoted in Alexandria at $3 75, where a large portion of their crops seek a market. These honest, industrious people cannot withstand the cruel and ruinous consequences of this desperate and unnecessary experiment. The country cannot bear it, and unless speedy relief is afforded, the result of it will be as disastrous to those who projected it, as to the country at large, who are afflicted with it."

And thus Mr. Webster, presenting a petition from the master builders of Philadelphia, sent on by a large deputation:

"I rise, sir, to perform a pleasing duty. It is to lay before the Senate the proceedings of a meeting of the building mechanics of the city and county of Philadelphia, convened for the purpose of expressing their opinions on the present state of the country, on the 24th of February. This meeting consisted of three thousand persons and was composed of carpenters, masons, brickmakers, bricklayers, painters and glaziers lime burners, plasterers, lumber merchants and others, whose occupations are connected with the building of houses. I am proud, sir, that so respectable, so important, and so substantial a class of mechanics, have intrusted me with the presentment of their opinions and feelings respecting the present distress of the country, to the Senate. I am happy if they have seen, in the course pursued by me here, a policy favorable to the protection of their interest, and the prosperity of their families. These intelligent and sensible men, these highly useful citizens, have witnessed the effect of the late measures of government upon their own concerns; and the resolutions which I have now to present, fully express their convictions on the subject. They propose not to reason, but to testify; they speak what they do know.

"Sir, listen to the statement; hear the facts.

quite a considerable town. They further state, that the average number of houses, which this body of mechanics has built, for the last five years, is twelve hundred houses a year. The average cost of these houses is computed at two thousand dollars each. Here is a business, then, sir, of two millions four hundred thousand dollars a year. Such has been the average of the last five years. And what is it now? Sir. the committee state that the business has fallen off seventy-five per cent. at least; that is to say, that, at most, only one-quarter part of their usual employment now remains. This is the season of the year in which building contracts are made. It is now known what is to be the business of the year. Many of these persons, who have heretofore had, every year, contracts for several houses on hand, have this year no contract at all. They have been obliged to dismiss their hands, to turn them over to any scraps of employment they could find, or to leave them in idleness, for want of any employment.

"Sir, the agitations of the country are not to be hushed by authority. Opinions, from however high quarters, will not quiet them. The condition of the nation calls for action, for measures, for the prompt interposition of Congress; and until Congress shall act, be it sooner or be it later, there will be no content, no repose, no restoration of former prosperity. Whoever supposes, sir, that he, or that any man, can quiet the discontents, or hush the complaints of the people by merely saying, "peace, be still!" mistakes, shockingly mistakes, the real condition of things. It is an agitation of interests, not of opinions; a severe pressure on men's property and their means of living, not a barren contest about abstract sentiments. Even, sir, the voice of party, often so sovereign, is not of power to subdue discontents and stifle complaints. The people, sir, feel great interests to be at stake, and they are rousing themselves to protect those interests. They consider the question to be, whether the government is made for the people, or the people for the government. They hold the former of these two propositions, and they mean to prove it.

"Mr. President, this measure of the Secretary has produced a degree of evil that cannot be borne. Talk about it as we will, it cannot be A tottering state of credit, cramped means, loss of property and loss of employment, doubts of the condition of others, doubts of their own condition, constant fear of failures and new explosions, an awful dread of the future-sir when a consciousness of all these things accompanies a man, at his breakfast, his dinner and his supper: when it attends him through his hours, both of labor and rest; when it even disturbs and haunts his dreams, and when he feels, too, that that which is thus gnawing upon him The committee state, sir, that eight thousand is the pure result of foolish and rash measersons are ordinarily employed in building ures of government, depend upon it he will not houses, in the city and county of Philadelphia; bear it. A deranged and disordered currency a number which, with their families, would make the ruin of occupation, distress for present means, the prostration of credit and confidence, and all this without hope of improvement or change, is a state of things which no intelligent people can long endure."

Mr. Clay rose to second the motion of Mr. Webster to refer and print this memorial; and, after giving it as his opinion that the property of the country had been reduced four hundred millions of dollars in value, by the measures of the government, thus apostrophized the Vice-President (Mr. Van Buren), charging him with a message of prayer and supplication to President Jackson:

"But there is another quarter which possesses sufficient power and influence to relieve the public distresses. In twenty-four hours, the executive branch could adopt a measure which would afford an efficacious and substantial remedy, and re-establish confidence. And those who, in this chamber, support the administration, could not render a better service than to repair to the executive mansion, and, placing before the Chief Magistrate the naked and undisguised truth, prevail upon him to retrace his steps and abandon his fatal experiment. No one, sir, can perform that duty with more propriety than yourself. [The Vice-President.] You can, if you will, induce him to change his course. To you, then, sir, in no unfriendly spirit, but with feelings softened and subdued by the deep distress which pervades every class of our countrymen, I make the appeal. By your official and personal relations with the President, you maintain with him an intercourse which I neither enjoy nor covet. Go to him and tell him, without exaggeration, but in the language of truth and sincerity, the actual condition of his bleeding country. Tell him it is nearly ruined and uncountry. done by the measures which he has been induced to put in operation. Tell him that his experiment is operating on the nation like the philosopher's experiment upon a convulsed animal, in an exhausted receiver, and that it must expire, in agony, if he does not pause, give it free and sound circulation, and suffer the energies of the people to be revived and restored. Tell him that, in a single city, more than sixty bankruptcies, involving a loss of upwards of fifteen millions of dollars, have occurred. Tell him of the alarming decline in the value of all property, of the depreciation of all the products of industry, of the stagnation in every branch of business, and of the close of numerous manufacturing establishments, which, a few short months ago, were in active and flourishing operation. Depict to him, if you can find language to portray, the heart rending wretchedness of thousands of the working classes cast out of employment. Tell him of the tears of helpless widows, no onger able to earn their bread, and of unclad and unfed orphans who have been driven, by his policy, out of the busy pursuits in which but and will receive the execrations of all good men, yesterday they were gaining an honest livelihood. Say to him that if firmness be honorable, when guided by truth and justice, it is intimately allied to another quality, of the most pernicious tendency, in the prosecution of an erroneous system. Tell him how much more true glory is to be won by retracing false steps, than by blindly rushing on until his country is overwhelmed in bankruptcy and ruin. Tell him of the ardent attachment, the unbounded devotion, the enthusiastic gratitude, towards him, so often signally manifested by the American people, and that they deserve, at his hands, better treatment. Tell him to guard himself against the possibility of an odious comparison with that worst of the Roman emperors, who, contemplating with indifference the conflagration of the mistress of the world, regaled himself during the terrific scene in the throng of his dancing courtiers. If you desire to secure for yourself the reputation of a public benefactor, describe to him truly the universal distress already produced, and the certain ruin which must ensue from perseverance in his measures. Tell him that he has been abused, deceived, betrayed, by the wicked counsels of unprincipled men around him. Inform him that all efforts in Congress to alleviate or terminate the public distress are paralyzed and likely to prove totally unavailing, from his influence upon a large portion of the members, who are unwilling to withdraw their support, or to take a course repugnant to his wishes and feelings. Tell him that, in his bosom alone, under actual circumstances, does the power abide to relieve the country; and that, unless he opens it to conviction, and corrects the errors of his administration, no human imagination can conceive, and no human tongue can express the awful consequences which may follow. Entreat him to pause, and to reflect that there is a point beyond which human endurance cannot go; and let him not drive this brave, generous, and patriotic people to madness and despair."

During the delivery of this apostrophe, the Vice-President maintained the utmost decorum of countenance, looking respectfully, and even innocently at the speaker, all the while, as if treasuring up every word he said to be faithfully repeated to the President. After it was over, and the Vice-President had called some senator to the chair, he went up to Mr. Clay, and asked him for a pinch of his fine maccoboy snuff (as he often did); and, having received it, walked away. But a public meeting in Philadelphia took the performance seriously to heart, and adopted this resolution, which the indefatigable Hezekiah Niles "registered" for the information of posterity:

"Resolved, That Martin Van Buren deserves, should he shrink fro veying to Andrew by the honorable H ers' memorial was 1 charge you, said he him-tell him if he he would save himse and ponder well his his steps, before the infuriated by his ex ness, rises in the m the usurper down fro Lucifer, never to rise

Mr. Benton replied and distress harangu were nothing but a r of names and dates, o and petitions which w when the charter of t expiring, and when President-when Mr. of the Treasury-wh removed, and when tween the bank and read copiously from the day to justify what h two scenes, so far as t to be identical. After tions and speeches, he

"All the machinery in as full activity at th with the same identical -memorials-resolution gress-alarming speed price of all property wa Hemp sunk in Philade per ton; flour sunk fro all real estate fell thirt houses were suspended rent of money rose to o on the best paper. manufactories stoppedand the ruin of the c dicted. This was the s object? Purely and sim of the bank-purely ar charter from the alar country; for there was then to be complained of scape-goat of a studied ar to operate upon Congre of the people and the de perty. There was not discounts then. The who but it was a case in which chief of truth. A false market produces all the and thus, as much distr Congress in 1811—as mu to exist, and really did n honest liveliness be honor. justice, it is inty, of the most osecution of an now much more cing false steps. I his country is ruin. Tell\him inbounded devotowards him, so e American peonis hands, better himself against omparison with erors, who conhe conflagration regaled himself ie throng of his re to secure for ublic benefactor, rsal distress alruin which must measures. Tell leceived, betrayinprincipled men Il efforts in Conie public distress rove totally una large portion ing to withdraw se repugnant to him that, in his cumstances, does e country; and viction, and coration, no human o human tongue es which may folad to reflect that uman endurance this brave, generiess and despair."

apostrophe, the utmost decorum tfully, and even the while, as if d to be faithfully fter it was over, led some senator Clay, and asked ccoboy snuff (as ceived it, walked in Philadelphia ly to heart, and the indefatigable r the information

Buren deserves, of all good men, should he shrink from the responsibility of conveying to Andrew Jackson the message sent by the honorable Henry Clay, when the builders' memorial was presented to the Scnate. I charge you, said he, go the President and tell him—tell him if he would save his country—if he would save himself—tell him to stop short, and ponder well his course—tell him to retrace his steps, before the injured and insulted people, infuriated by his experiment upon their happiness, rises in the majesty of power, and hurls the usurper down from the seat he occupies, like Lucifer, never to rise again."

Mr. Benton replied to these distress petitions, and distress harangues, by showing that they were nothing but a reproduction, with a change of names and dates, of the same kind of speeches and petitions which were heard in the year 1811. when the charter of the first national bank was expiring, and when General Jackson was not President-when Mr. Taney was not Secretary of the Treasury-when no deposits had been removed, and when there was no quarrel between the bank and the government; and he read copiously from the Congress debates of that day to justify what he said; and declared the two scenes, so far as the distress was concerned, to be identical. After reading from these petitions and speeches, he proceeded to say:

"All the machinery of alarm and distress was in as full activity at that time as at present, and with the same identical effects. Town meetings -memorials-resolutions-deputations to Congress-alarming speeches in Congress. The price of all property was shown to be depressed. Hemp sunk in Philadelphia from $350 to $250 per ton; flour sunk from $11 a barrel to $7.75; all real estate fell thirty per cent.; five hundred houses were suspended in their erection; the rent of money rose to one and a half per month on the best paper. Confidence destroyedmanufactories stopped-workmen dismissedand the ruin of the country confidently predicted. This was the scene then; and for what object? Purely and simply to obtain a recharter of the bank-purely and simply to force a recharter from the alarm and distress of the country; for there was no removal of deposits then to be complained of, and to be made the scape-goat of a studied and premeditated attempt to operate upon Congress through the alarms of the people and the destruction of their property. There was not even a curtailment of discounts then. The whole scene was fictitious; but it was a case in which fiction does the mischief of truth. A false alarm in the money market produces all the effects of real danger; and thus, as much distress was proclaimed in Congress in 1811—as much distress was proved to exist, and really did exist-then as now; without a single cause to be alleged then, which is alleged now. But the power and organization of the bank made the alarm then; its power and organization make it now; and fictitious on both occasions; and men were ruined then, as now, by the power of imaginary danger, which in the moneyed world, has all the ruinous effects of real danger. No deposits were removed then. and the reason was, as assigned by Mr. Gallatin to Congress, that the government had borrowed more than the amount of the deposits from the bank; and this loan would enable her to protect her interest in every contingency. open object of the bank then was a recharter. The knights entered the lists with their visors off-no war in disguise then for the renewal of a charter under the tilting and jousting of a masquerade scuffle for recovery of deposits."

This was a complete reply, to which no one could make any answer; and the two distresses all proved the same thing, that a powerful national bank could make distress when it pleased; and would always please to do it when it had an object to gain by it—either in forcing a recharter or in reaping a harvest of profit by making a contraction of debts after having made an expansion of credits.

It will be difficult for people in after times to realize the degree of excitement, of agitation and of commotion which was produced by this organized attempt to make panic and distress. The great cities especially were the scene of commotions but little short of frenzy-public meetings of thousands, the most inflammatory harangues, cannon firing, great feasts-and the members of Congress who spoke against the President received when they travelled with public honors, like conquering generals returning from victorious battle fields-met by masses, saluted with acclamations, escorted by processions, and their lodgings surrounded by thousands calling for a view of their persons. The gaining of a municipal election in the city of New-York put the climax upon this enthusiasm; and some instances taken from the every day occurrences of the time may give some faint idea of this extravagant exaltation. Thus:

"Mr. Webster, on his late journey to Boston, was received and parted with at Philadelphia, New-York, Providence, &c., by thousands of the people."

"Messrs. Poindexter, Preston and McDuffle visited Philadelphia the beginning of this week, and received the most flattering attention of the citizens—thousands having waited upon to honor them; and they were dined, &c., with great enthusiasm."

"A very large public meeting was held at the mass, and speeches exacted. A reverend minis-Musical Fund Hall, Philadelphia, on Monday afternoon last, to compliment the 'whigs' of New-York on the late victory gained by them. Though thousands were in the huge room, other thousands could not get in! It was a complete 'jam.' John Sergeant was called to the chair, and delivered an address of 'great power and ability'—'one of the happiest efforts' of that distinguished man. Mr. Preston of the Senate, and Mr. McDuffie of the House of Representa-tives, were present. The first was loudly called for, when Mr. Sergeant had concluded, and he addressed the meeting at considerable length. Mr. McDuffie was then as loudly named, and he also spoke with his usual ardency and power, in which he paid a handsome compliment to Mr. Sergeant, who, though he had differed in opinion with him, he regarded as a 'sterling patriot,' &c. Each of these speeches were received with hearty and continued marks of approbation, and often interrupted with shouts of applause. The like, it is said, had never before been witnessed in Philadelphia. The people were in the highest possible state of enthusiasm." 'An immense multitude of people partook of a collation in Castle Garden, New-York, on Tuesday afternoon, to celebrate the victory gained in the 'three days.' The garden was dressed with flags, and every thing prepared on a grand scale. Pipes of wine and barrels of beer were present in abundance, with a full supply of eatables. After partaking of refreshments (in which a great deal of business was done in a short time, by the thousands employed -for many mouths, like many hands, make quick work!) the meeting was organized, by appointing Benjamin Wells, carpenter, president, twelve vice-presidents, and four secretaries, of whom there was one cartman, one sail maker, one grocer, one watchmaker, one ship carpenter, one potter, one mariner, one physician, one president briefly, but strongly, addressed the multitude, as did several other gentlemen. A committee of congratulation from Philadelphia was presented to the people and received with shouts. When the time for adjournment arrived, the vast multitude, in a solid column, taking a considerable circuit, proceeded to Greenwich-street, where Mr. Webster was dining with a friend. Loudly called for, he came forward, and was instantly surrounded by a dense mass of merchants and cartmen, sailors and mechanics, professional men and laborers, &c., seizing him by his hands. He was asked to say a few words to the people, and did so. He exhorted them to perseverance in support of the constitution, and, as a dead silence prevailed, he was heard by thousands. He thanked them, and ended by hoping that God would bless them all."

Saturday Messrs. Webster, Preston and Binney were expected at Baltimore; and, though raining hard, thousands assembled to meet them.

ter of the Gospel, in excuse of such a gathering on the Sabbath, said that in revolutionary times there were no Sabbaths. They were conducted to the hotel, where 5,000 well-dressed citizens received them with enthusiasm."

"Mr. McDuffie reached Baltimore in the afternoon of Saturday last, on his return to Washington, and was received by from 1,500 to 2,000 people, who were waiting on the wharf for the purpose. He was escorted to the City Hotel. and, from the steps, addressed the crowd (now increased to about 3,000 persons), in as earnest a speech, perhaps, as he ever pronounced—and the manner of his delivery was not less forcible than the matter of his remarks. Mr. McD. spoke for about half an hour; and, while at one moment he produced a roar of laughter, in the next he commanded the entire attention of the audience, or elicited loud shouts of applause.

"The brief addresses of Messrs. Webster, Binney, McDuffie, and Preston, to assembled multitudes in Baltimore, and the manner in which they were received, show a new state of feelings and of things in this city. When Mr. McDuffie said that ten days after the entrance of soldiers into the Senate chamber, to send the senators home, that 200,000 volunteers would be in Washington, there was such a shout as we have seldom before heard."

"There was a mighty meeting of the people and such a feast as was never before prepared in the United States, held near Philadelphia, on Tuesday last, as a rallying 'to support the constitution,' and 'in honor of the late whig victory at New-York,' a very large delegation from that city being in attendance, bringing with them their frigate-rigged and highly-finished boat, called the 'Constitution,' which had been passed through the streets during the 'three days.' The arrival of the steamboat with this delegation on board, and the procession that was then formed, are described in glowing terms. The whole number congregated was supposed not to be less than fifty thousand, multitudes attending from adjacent parts of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, &c. Many cattle and other animals had been roasted whole, and there were 200 great rounds of beef, 400 hams, as many beeves' tongues, &c., and 15,000 loaves of bread, with crackers and cheese, &c., and equal supplies of wine, beer, and cider. This may give some idea of the magnitude of the feast. John Sergeant presided, assisted by a large number of vicepresidents, &c. Strong bands of music played at intervals, and several salutes were fired from the miniature frigate, which were returned by heavy artillery provided for the purpose.'

Notices, such as these, might be cited in any number; but those given are enough to show to what a degree people can be excited, when a great moneyed power, and a great political party, com-Sunday they arrived, and were met by a dense | bine for the purpose of exciting the passions

through the public alarms. Immense a pended in these oper that it chiefly came f poration in Philadelp

CHAP!

SENATORIAL CONDE JACKSON: HIS PRO PUNGING RESOLUTI

MR. CLAY and Mr. C ing spirits in the c Jackson. Mr. Webs of their resolution, bu the delivery of his dis lution was theirs, mod themselves, without a by virtue of the privi mover of any motion until the Senate, by s it its own. It was alt the last moment; and mutation, at the mon nays were about to be the same majority tha on the first day of its were: Messrs. Bibb Mississippi; Calhoun; ware; Ewing of Ohio Jersey; Kent of Mar Island; Leigh of Virg Carolina; Naudain of Mississippi; Porter of Vermont; Preston of of Rhode Island; Silsb than Smith of Connec Jersey; Sprague of Ma Tomlinson of Connecti Waggaman of Louisian nays were: Messrs. B Carolina; Forsyth of C nessee; Hendricks of Hampshire; Kane of 1 ma; King of Georgia; Kean of Pennsylvania Morris, of Ohio; Robin ley of Maine; Tallmadg of Indiana; Hugh L. W reverend minisuch a gathering plutionary times were conducted dressed citizens iore in the aftereturn to Washn 1,500 to 2,000 is wharf for the the City Hotel, the crowd (now s), in as earnest ronounced—and not less forcible ks. Mr. McD. nd, while at one laughter, in the attention of the of applause.

essrs. Webster, a, to assembled the manner in a new state of ity. When Mr. er the entrance ber, to send the plunteers would the a shout as we of the people and prepared in the elphia, on Tuesort the constituwhig victory at ation from that ging with them v-finished boat, had been passed e 'three days.' vith this delegaon that was then ng terms. The supposed not to iltitudes attendmsylvania, New attle and other and there were hams, as many loaves of bread, d equal supplies y give some idea John Sergeant number of viceof music played were fired from re returned by purpose."

> be cited in any ough to show to ted, when a great tical party, comng the passions through the public sufferings and the public alarms. Immense amounts of money were expended in these operations; and it was notorious that it chiefly came from the great moneyed corporation in Philadelphia.

CHAPTER CIII.

BENATORIAL CONDEMNATION OF PRESIDENT JACKSON: HIS PROTEST: NOTICE OF THE EXPUNGING RESOLUTION.

MR. CLAY and Mr. Calhoun were the two leading spirits in the condemnation of President Jackson. Mr. Webster did not speak in favor of their resolution, but aided it incidentally in the delivery of his distress speeches. The resolution was theirs, modified from time to time by themselves, without any vote of the Senate, and by virtue of the privilege which belongs to the mover of any motion to change it as he pleases, until the Senate, by some action upon it, makes it its own. It was altered repeatedly, and up to the last moment; and after undergoing its final mutation, at the moment when the yeas and nays were about to be called, it was passed by the same majority that would have voted for it on the first day of its introduction. The yeas were: Messrs. Bibb of Kentucky; Black of Mississippi; Calhoun; Clay; Clayton of Delaware; Ewing of Ohio,; Frelinghuysen of New Jersey; Kent of Maryland; Knight of Rhode Island; Leigh of Virginia; Mangum of North Carolina; Naudain of Delaware; Poindexter of Mississippi; Porter of Louisiana; Prentiss of Vermont; Preston of South Carolina; Robbins of Rhode Island; Silsbee of Massachusetts; Nathan Smith of Connecticut; Southard of New Jersey; Sprague of Maine; Swift of Vermont; Tomlinson of Connecticut; Tyler of Virginia; Waggaman of Louisiana; Webster.-26. The nays were: Messrs. Benton; Brown of North Carolina; Forsyth of Georgia; Grundy of Tennessee; Hendricks of Indiana; Hill of New Hampshire; Kane of Illinois; King of Alabama; King of Georgia; Linn of Missouri; Mc-Kean of Pennsylvania; Moore of Alabama; Morris, of Ohio; Robinson of Illinois; Shepley of Maine; Tallmadge of New York; Tipton of Indiana; Hugh L. White of Tennessee; Wilkins of Pennsylvania; Silas Wright of New York. -20. And thus the resolution was passed, and was nothing but an empty fulmination -a mere personal censure—having no relation to any business or proceeding in the Senate: and evidently intended for effect on the people. To increase this effect, Mr. Clay proposed a resolve that the Secretary should count the names of the signers to the memorials for and against the act of the removal, and strike the balance between them, which he computed at an hundred thousand: evidently intending to add the effect of this popular voice to the weight of the senatorial condemnation. The number turned out to be unexpectedly small, considering the means by which they were collected.

When passed, the total irrelevance of the resolution to any right or duty of the Senate was made manifest by the insignificance that attended its decision. There was nothing to be done with it, or upon it, or under it, or in relation to it. It went to no committee, laid the foundation for no action, was not communicable to the other House, or to the President; and remained an intrusive fulmination on the Senate Journal: put there not for any legislative purpose, but purely and simply for popular effect. Great reliance was placed upon that effect. It was fully believed-notwithstanding the experience of the Senate, in Mr. Van Buren's case—that a senatorial condemnation would destroy whomsoever it struck-even General Jackson. Vain calculation! and equally condemned by the lessons of history, and by the impulsions of the human heart. Fair play is the first feeling of the masses; a fair and impartial trial is the law of the heart, as well as of the land; and no condemnation is tolerated of any man by his enemies. All such are required to retire from the box and the bench, on a real trial: much more to refrain from a simulated one; and above all from instigating one. Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Clay were both known to have their private griefs against General Jackson and also to have been in vehement opposition to each other, and that they had "compromised" their own bone of contention to be able to act in conjunction against him. The instinctive sagacity of the people saw all this; and their innate sense of justice and decorum revolted at it; and at the end of these proceedings, the results were in exact contradiction to the calculation of their effect. General Jackson was more popular than ever; the leaders in the movement against him were nationally crippled; their friends, in many instances, were politically destroyed in their States. It was a second edition of "Fox's martyrs."

During all the progress of this proceedingwhile a phalanx of orators and speakers were daily fulminating against him-while many hundred newspapers incessantly assailed himwhile public meetings were held in all parts, and men of all sorts, even beardless youths, harangued against him as if he had been a Nero -while a stream of committees was pouring upon him (as they were called), and whom he soon refused to receive in that character; during the hundred days that all this was going on, and to judge from the imposing appearance which the crowds made that came to Washington to bring up the "distress," and to give countenance to the Senate, and emphasis to its proceedings, and to fill the daily gallery, applauding the speakers against the President-saluting with noise and confusion those who spoke on his side: during all this time, and when a nation seemed to be in arms, and the earth in commotion against him, he was tranquil and quiet, confident of eventual victory, and firmly relying upon God and the people to set all right. I was accustomed to see him often during that time, always in the night (for I had no time to quit my seat during the day); and never saw him appear more truly heroic and grand than at this time. He was perfectly mild in his language, cheerful in his temper, firm in his conviction; and confident in his reliance on the power in which he put his trust. I have seen him in a great many situations of peril, and even of desperation, both civil and military, and always saw him firmly relying upon the success of the right through God and the people; and never saw that confidence more firm and steady than now. After giving him an account of the day's proceedings, talking over the state of the contest, and ready to return to sleep a little, and prepare much, for the combats of the next day, he would usually say: "We shall whip them yet. The people will take it up after a while." But he also had good defenders present, and in both Houses, and men who did not confine themselves to the defensive -did not limit themselves to returning blow for blow—but assailed the assailants—boldly tharging upon them their own illegal conduct-exposing the rottenness of their ally, the bank -showing its corruption in conciliating politicians, and its criminality in distressing the people-and the unholiness of the combination which, to attain political power and secure a bank charter, were seducing the venal, terrifying the timid, disturbing the country, destroying business and property, and falsely accusing the President of great crimes and misdemeanors; because, faithful and fearless, he stood sole obstacle to the success of the combined powers. Our labors were great and incessant, for we had superior numbers, and great ability to contend against. I spoke myself above thirty times; others as often; all many times; and all strained to the utmost; for we felt, that the cause of Jackson was that of the country-his defeat that of the people-and the success of the combination, the delivering up of the government to the domination of a moneyed power which knew no mode of government but that of corruption and oppression. We contended prenuously in both Houses; and as courageously in the Senate against a fixed majority as if we had some chance for success; but our exertions were not for the Senate, but for the people-not to change senatorial votes, but to rouse the masses throughout the land; and while borne down by a majority of ten in the Senate, we looked with pride to the other end of the building; and derived confidence from the contemplation of a majority of fifty, fresh from the elections of the people, and strong in their good cause. It was a scene for Mons. De Tocqueville to have looked on to have learnt which way the difference lay between the men of the direct vote of the people, and those of the indirect vote of the General Assembly, "filtrated" through the "refining" process of an intermediate body.

But although fictitious and forged, yet the distress was real, and did an immensity of mischief. Vast numbers of individuals were ruined, or crippled in their affairs; a great many banks were broken—a run being made upon all that would not come into the system of the national bank. The deposit banks above all were selected for pressure. Several of them were driven to suspension—some to give up the deposits—and the bank in Washington, in which the treasury did its business, was only saved from closing its doors by ruaning wagons with specie through mud Philadelphia to the supply the place of we bank in Washington Philadelphia—the tw ing and one coming, on the road. But, upon others, the gree phia was doing well. try was its harvest; showed constant incre

When all was ove tence had been sent the people, General Ja had come for him to "Protest," addressed markable for the tem of its language. He ceeding against him, illegal and void-as h or object-as being in sare; and, therefore, power or duty of the extra-judicial and unp more than the act of a vested with the forms and intended to act upo the force of a sentence peachment, while in re against him in his pe official character. Thi put forth in his "Prote passages are here given

&quot;The resolution in questions, and passed, no separate resolution. It power, proposes no le neither possesses the for butes of a legislative measure of the power of the power of the pear to have been entered any view or expectation or joint resolution, or in action, or interesting the pear to the pear to have been entered any view or expectation or joint resolution, or in action.

&quot;Whilst wanting both of a legislative measure, that the resolution was reference the executive powers con These powers relate exclusion of treaties and nom they are exercised in seclosed doors. This resolution any treaty or nominative a public session.

&quot;Nor does this proceed to that class of incidental

specie through mud and mire from the mint in Philadelphia to the bank in Washington, to supply the place of what was hauled from the bank in Washington to the national bank in Philadelphia—the two sets of wagons, one going and one coming, often passing each other on the road. But, while ruin was going on upon others, the great corporation in Philadelphia was doing well. The distress of the country was its harvest; and its monthly returns showed constant increases of specie.

When all was over, and the Senate's sen-

ally, the bank

ciliating politi-

essing the peo-

e combination

r and secure a venal, terrify-

untry, destroy-

falsely accus-

nes and misdearless, he stood

the combined

and incessant.

id great ability

myself above

Il many times;

t; for we felt,

hat of the coun-

eople-and the e delivering up

ation of a mon-

ode of govern-

nd oppression.

both Houses;

enate against a ome chance for re not for the

to change sena-

lasses through-

down by a mare looked with ilding; and deemplation of a

elections of the cause. It was

e to have look-

y the difference

ect vote of the

ect vote of the

" through the forged, yet the

mensity of mis-

uals were ruin-

; a great many

; made upon all

stem of the na-

s above all were

of them were

give up the de-ngton, in which

vas only saved

ig wagons with

ediate body.

When all was over, and the Senate's sentence had been sent out to do its office among the people, General Jackson felt that the time had come for him to speak; and did so in as "Protest," addressed to the Senate, and remarkable for the temperance and moderation of its language. He had considered the proceeding against him, from the beginning, as illegal and void-as having no legislative aim or object-as being intended merely for censare; and, therefore, not coming within any power or duty of the Senate. He deemed it extra-judicial and unparliamentary, legally no more than the act of a town meeting, while invested with the forms of a legal proceeding; and intended to act upon the public mind with the force of a sentence of conviction on an impeachment, while in reality but a personal act against him in his personal, and not in his official character. This idea he prominently put forth in his "Protest;" from which some passages are here given:

"The resolution in question was introduced, discussed, and passed, not as a joint, but as a separate resolution. It asserts no legislative power, proposes no legislative action; and neither possesses the form nor any of the attributes of a legislative measure. It does not appear to have been entertained or passed, with any view or expectation of its issuing in a law or joint resolution, or in the repeal of any law or joint resolution, or in any other legislative action.

"Whilst wanting both the form and substance of a legislative measure, it is equally manifest, that the resolution was not justified by any of the executive powers conferred on the Senate. These powers relate exclusively to the consideration of treaties and nominations to office; and they are exercised in secret session, and with closed doors. This resolution does not apply to any treaty or nomination, and was passed in a public session.

"Nor does this proceeding in any way belong to that class of incidental resolutions which re-

specie through mud and mire from the mint in Philadelphia to the bank in Washington, to supply the place of what was hauled from the bank in Washington to the national bank in Philadelphia—the two sets of wagons, one gowith the President.

"On the contrary the whole phraseology and sense of the resolution seem to be judicial. Its essence, true character, and only practical effect, are to be found in the conduct which it charges upon the President, and in the judgment which it pronounces on that conduct. The resolution, therefore, though discussed and adopted by the Senate in its legislative capacity, is, in its office, and in all its characteristics, essentially judicial.

"That the Senate possesses a high judicial power, and that instances may occur in which the President of the United States will be amenable to it, is undeniable. But under the provisions of the constitution, it would seem to be equally plain that neither the President nor any other officer can be rightfully subjected to the operation of the judicial power of the Senate except in the cases and under the forms prescribed by the constitution.

"The constitution declares that 'the President, Vice-President, and all civil officers of the United States, shall be removed from office on impeachment for, and conviction of treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors' -that the House of Representatives 'shall have the sole power of impeachment'-that the Senate shall have the sole power to try all impeachments'-that 'when sitting for that purpose, they shall be on oath or affirmation'-that when the President of the United States is tried, the Chief Justice shall preside'—that no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the members present, -and that 'judgment shall not extend further than to remove from office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust or profit, under the United States.

"The resolution above quoted, charges in substance that in certain proceedings relating to the public revenue, the President has usurped authority and power not conferred upon him by the constitution and laws, and that in doing so he violated both. Any such act constitutes a high crime—one of the highest, indeed, which the President can commit—a crime which justly exposes him to impeachment by the House of Representatives, and upon due conviction, to removal from office, and to the complete and immutable disfranchisement prescribed by the constitution.

"The resolution, then, was in substance an impeachment of the President; and in its passage amounts to a declaration by a majority of the Senate, that he is guilty of an impeachable offence. As such it is spread upon the journals of the Senate—published to the nation and to the world—made part of our enduring archives—and incorporated in the history of the age. The punishment of removal from office and future disqualification, does not, it is true, follow this decision; nor would it have followed the like decision, if the regular forms of proceeding had been pursued, because the requisite number did not concur in the result. But the moral influence of a solemn declaration, by a majority of the Senate, that the accused is guilty of the offence charged upon him, has been as effectually secured, as if the like declaration had been made upon an impeachment expressed in the same terms. Indeed, a greater practical effect has been gained, because the votes given for the resolution, though not sufficient to authorize a judgment of guilty on an impeachment, were numerous enough to carry that resolution.

"That the resolution does not expressly allege that the assumption of power and authority, which it condemns, was intentional and corrupt, is no answer to the preceding view of its character and effect. The act thus condemned, necessarily implies volition and design in the individual to whom it is imputed, and being unlawful in its character, the legal conclusion is, that it was prompted by improper motives, and committed with an unlawful intent. The charge is not of a mistake in the exercise of supposed powers, but of the assumption of powers not conferred by the constitution and laws, but in derogation of both, and nothing is suggested to excuse or palliate the turpitude of the act. In the absence of any such excuse, or palliation, there is room only for one inference; and that is, that the intent was unlawful and corrupt. Besides, the resolution not only contains no mitigating suggestion, but on the contrary, it holds up the act complained of as justly obnoxious to censure and reprobation; and thus as distinctly stamps it with impurity of motive, as if the strongest epithets had been used.

"The President of the United States, therefore, has been by a majority of his constitutional triers, accused and found guilty of an impeachable offence; but in no part of this proceeding have the directions of the constitution been observed.

"The impeachment, instead of being preferred and prosecuted by the House of Representatives, originated in the Senate, and was prosecuted without the aid or concurrence of the other House. The oath or affirmation prescribed by the constitution, was not taken by the senators; the Chief Justice did not preside; no notice of the charge was given to the accused; and no opportunity afforded him to respond to the accusation, to meet his accusers face to face, to cross-examine the witnesses, to procure counteracting testimony, or to be heard in his defence. The safeguards and formalities which the constitution has connected with the power of impeachment, were doubtless supposed by the framers of that instrument, to be essential to the protection of the public servant, to the attainment of justice, and to the order, impartiality, and dignity of the procedure. These safeguards and formalities were not only practically disregarded, in the commencement and conduct of these proceedings, but in their result. I find myself convicted by less than two-thirds of the members present, of an impeachable offence."

Having thus shown the proceedings of the Senate to have been extra-judicial and the mere fulmination of a censure, such as might come from a "mass meeting," and finding no warrant in any right or duty of the body, and intended for nothing but to operate upon him personally, he then showed that senators from three States had voted contrary to the sense of their respective State legislatures. On this point he said:

"There are also some other circumstances connected with the discussion and passage of the resolution, to which I feel it to be, not only my right, but my duty to refer. It appears by the journal of the Senate, that among the twentysix senators who voted for the resolution on its final passage, and who had supported it in debate, in its original form, were one of the senators from the State of Maine, the two sexators from New Jersey, and one of the senators from Ohio. It also appears by the same journal, and by the files of the Senate, that the legislatures of these States had severally expressed their opinions in respect to the Executive proceedings drawn in question before the Senate.

"It is thus seen that four senators have declared by their votes that the President, in the late Executive proceedings in relation to the revenue, had been guilty of the impeachable offence of 'assuming upon himself authority and power not conferred by the constitution and laws, but in derogation of both,' whilst the legislatures of their respective States had deliberately approved those very proceedings, as consistent with the constitution, and demanded by the public good. If these four votes had been given in accordance with the sentiments of the legislatures, as above expressed, there would have been but twenty-four votes out of forty-six for censuring the President, and the unprecedented record of his conviction could not have been placed upon the journals of the Senate. "In thus referring to the resolutions and instructions of State legislatures, I disclaim and repudiate all authority or design to interfere with the responsibility due from members of the Senate to their own consciences, their constituents and their country. The facts now stated belong to the history of these proceedings, and are important to the just development of the principles and interests involved in them, as well as to the proper vindication of the Executive department and with that view, and that view only, are they

here made the topic of remark."

The President then entered his solemn protest against the Senate's proceedings in these

"With this view, have been stated, I against the aforemen Senate, as unauthoriz trary to its spirit and provisions; subversive powers of governmen established; destruct guards by which the on the one hand, to other, to be protected immediate and collate ter and tendency, to of a body not direct a degree of influence their liberties, and fa their choice."

And it concluded w his private history for rity of his life, and tl duct in relation to the liance on God and the and looked with confi justice would assign h This moving peroration

"The resolution of t putation upon my pri public character; and on their journals, I can for that defence which to present in the ordina ing, that I have lived in to enter into a formal v ter and purposes from vain do I bear upon my rials of that contest in was purchased; in vai property, fame, and life. and privileges so dearl now, without a persona. of individual advantage bilities and dangers, fr activity in relation to have been exempt—if be entertained as to the and motives. If I had I have sought an alliance stitution, which even no empire. If I had been sold myself to its des personal comfort and offi ance of my arduous duty to molest it. In the his usurpers, never, in the fi vigor of manhood, could lure me from the path of scarcely find an inducen career of ambition, whe caying frame, instead of tle, call me to the co worlds, where conqueror cement and conin their result, I an two-thirds of achable offence."

ceedings of the ial and the mere as might come ng no warrant in and intended for m personally, he three States had their respective nt he said:

rcumstances cond passage of the be, not only my t appears by the long the twentyresolution on its pported it in deone of the senahe two sexators the senators from ame journal, and he legislatures of essed their opintive proceedings enate.

senators have de-President, in the relation to the e impeachable ofelf authority and constitution and 1,' whilst the legates had deliberedings, as consistdemanded by the es had been given nts of the legislawould have been forty-six for ceninprecedented rehave been placed solutions and ins, I disclaim and 1 to interfere with mbers of the Setheir constituents 10w stated belong lings, and are imt of the principles as well as to the ative department iew only, are they

l his solemn proceedings in these

Senate, as unauthorized by the constitution; contrary to its spirit and to several of its express provisions; subversive of that distribution of the powers of government which it has ordained and established; destructive of the checks and safeguards by which those powers were intended, on the one hand, to be controlled, and, on the other, to be protected; and calculated, by their immediate and collateral effects, by their character and tendency, to concentrate in the hands of a body not directly amenable to the people. a degree of influence and power dangerous to their liberties, and fatal to the constitution of their choice."

And it concluded with an affecting appeal to his private history for the patriotism and integrity of his life, and the illustration of his conduct in relation to the bank, and showed his reliance on God and the People to sustain him; and looked with confidence to the place which justice would assign him on the page of history. This moving peroration was in these words:

"The resolution of the Senate contains an imputation upon my private as well as upon my public character; and as it must stand for ever on their journals, I cannot close this substitute for that defence which I have not been allowed to present in the ordinary form, without remarking, that I have lived in vain, if it be necessary to enter into a formal vindication of my character and purposes from such an imputation. In vain do I bear upon my person, enduring memorials of that contest in which American liberty was purchased; in vain have I since perilled property, fame, and life, in defence of the rights and privileges so dearly bought: in vain am I now, without a personal aspiration, or the hope of individual advantage, encountering responsibilities and dangers, from which, by mere inactivity in relation to a single point, I might have been exempt-if any serious doubts can be entertained as to the purity of my purposes and motives. If I had been ambitious, I should have sought an alliance with that powerful institution, which even now aspires to no divided empire. If I had been venal, I should have sold myself to its designs. Had I preferred personal comfort and official ease to the performance of my arduous duty, I should have ceased to molest it. In the history of conquerors and usurpers, never, in the fire of youth, nor in the vigor of manhood, could I find an attraction to lure me from the path of duty; and now, I shall scarcely find an inducement to commence the career of ambition, when gray hairs and a decaying frame, instead of inviting to toil and battle, call me to the contemplation of other worlds, where conquerors cease to be honored,

"With this view, and for the reasons which and usurpers explate their crimes. The only have been stated, I do hereby solemnly protest ambition I can feel, is to acquit myself to Him against the aforementioned proceedings of the to whom I must soon render an account of my stewardship, to serve my fellow-men, and live respected and honored in the history of my country. No; the ambition which leads me on, is an anxious desire and a fixed determination, to return to the people, unimpaired, the sacred trust they have confided to my chargeto heal the wounds of the constitution and preserve it from further violation; to persuade my countrymen, so far as I may, that it is not in a splendid government, supported by powerful monopolies and aristocratical establishments. that they will find happiness, or their liberties protected, but in a plain system, void of pomp -protecting all, and granting favors to nonedispensing its blessings like the dews of heaven, unseen and unfelt, save in the freshness and beauty they contribute to produce. It is such a government that the genius of our people requires-such a one only under which our States may remain for ages to come, united, prosperous, and free. If the Almighty Being who has hitherto sustained and protected me, will but vouchsafe to make my feeble powers instrumental to such a result, I shall anticipate with pleasure the place to be assigned me in the history of my country, and die contented with the belief, that I have contributed in some small degree, to increase the value and prolong the duration of American liberty.

"To the end that the resolution of the Senate may not be hereafter drawn into precedent, with the authority of silent acquiescence on the part of the Executive department; and to the end, also, that my motives and views in the Executive proceeding denounced in that resolution may be known to my fellow-citizens, to the world, and to all posterity, I respectfully request that this message and protest may be entered at length on the journals of the Senate."

No sooner was this Protest read in the Senate than it gave rise to a scene of the greatest excitement. Mr. Poindexter, of Mississippi, immediately assailed it as a breach of the privileges of the Senate, and unfit to be received by the body. He said: "I will not dignify this paper by considering it in the light of an Executive message: it is no such thing. I regard it simply as a paper, with the signature of Andrew Jackson; and, should the Senate refuse to receive it, it will not be the first paper with the same signature which has been refused a hearing in this body, on the ground of the abusive and vituperative language which it contained. This effort to denounce and overawe the deliberations of the Senate may properly be regarded as capping the climax of that systematic plan of operations which had for several years been in progress, designed to bring this body into disrepute among the people, and thereby remove the only existing barrier to the arbitrary encroachments and usurpations of Executive power:"-and he moved that the paper, as he called it, should not be received. Mr. Benton deemed this a proper occasion to give notice of his intention to move a strong measure which he contemplated—an expunging resolution against the sentence of the Senate: -- a determination to which he had come from his own convictions of right, and which he now announced without consultation with any of his friends. He deemed this movement too bold to be submitted to a council of friends-too daring to expect their concurrence; -and believed it was better to proceed without their knowledge, than against their decision. He, therefore, delivered his notice ex abruptu, accompanied by an earnest invective against the conduct of the Senate; and committed himself irrevocably to the prosecution of the "expunging resolution" until he should succeed in the effort, or terminate his political life: He said:

"The public mind was now to be occupied with a question of the very first moment and importance, and identical in all its features with the great question growing out of the famous resolutions of the English House of Commons in the case of the Middlesex election in the year 1768; and which engrossed the attention of the British empire for fourteen years before it was settled. That question was one in which the House of Commons was judged, and condemned, for adopting a resolution which was held by the subjects of the British crown to be a violation of their constitution, and a subversion of the rights of Englishmen: the question now before the Senate, and which will go before the American people, grows out of a resolution in which he (Mr. B.) believed that the constitution had been violated-the privileges of the House of Representatives invaded—and the rights of an American citizen, in the person of the President, subverted. The resolution of the House of Commons, after fourteen years of annual motions, was expunged from the Journal of the standings of such a people-declamation pas-House; and he pledged himself to the American sion, epithets, opprobrious language, would people to commence a similar series of motions with respect to this resolution of the Senate. He had made up his mind to do so without consultation with any human being, and without deigning to calculate the chances or the time of success. He rested under the firm conviction that the resolution of the Senate, which had drawn from the President the calm, temperate, and dignified protest, which had been read at the table was a resolution which ought to be expunged from the Journal of the Senate; and respect of an address to their understandings; if any thing was necessary to stimulate his and he that wishes to be heard in this great sense of duty in making a motion to that effect. and in encouraging others after he was gone, in following up that motion to success, it would be found in the history and termination of the similar motion which was made in the English House of Commons to which he had referred. That motion was renewed for fourteen years-from 1768 to 1782—before it was successful. For the first seven years, the lofty and indignant majority did not condescend to reply to the motion. They sunk it under a dead vote as often as presented. The second seven years they replied; and at the end of the term, and on the assembling of a new Parliament, the veteran motion was carried by more than two to one; and the gratifying spectacle was beheld of a public expurgation, in the face of the assembled Commons of England, of the obnoxious resolution from the Journal of the House. The elections in England were septennial, and it took two terms of seven years, or two general elections, to bring the sense of the kingdom to bear upon their representatives. The elections of the Senate were sexennial, with intercalary exits and entrances, and it might take a less, or a longer period, he would not presume to say which, to bring the sense of the American people to bear upon an act of the American Senate. Of that, he would make no calculation; but the final success of the motion in the English House of Commons, after fourteen years' perseverance, was a sufficient encouragement for him to begin, and doubtless would encourage others to continue, until the good work should be crowned with success; and the only atonement made which it was in the Schate's power to make to the violated majesty of the constitution, the invaded privileges of the House of Representatives and the subverted rights of an American citizen

'In bringing this great question before the American people, Mr. B. should consider himself as addressing the calm intelligence of an enlightened community. He believed the body of the American people to be the most enlightened community upon earth; and, without the least disparagement to the present Senate, he must be permitted to believe that many such Senates might be drawn from the ranks of the people. and still leave no dearth of intelligence behind. To such a community—in an appeal, on a great question of constitutional law, to the understand for nothing. They would float harmless and unheeded, through the empty air, and strike in vain upon the ear of a sober and dispassionate tribunal. Indignation, real or affected; wrath, however hot; fury, however enraged; asseverations, however violent; denunciation, however furious; will avail nothing. Facts-inexorable facts-are all that will be attended to; reason, calm and self-possessed, is all that will be listened to. An intelligent tribunal will exact the question, or being he heeded, will have occa rect in his facts; close application of law ; fa clusions and inference rous in his language: from every taint of ver lemnly impressed with convictions, it was the B.), whatever the exar might be-never to for his audience, and his that he was speaking i on a question of violate raged individual right, hending the whole body and for the purpose o decision from the calm a high-minded, intellig munity.

"The question immed was one of minor cor called a question of sr the effect which the dec the Senate itself. In might be a question of se out reference to individu the cause of free govern partment of the governm sive, should so act as to respect and the confidence immediate question was the President's messag reject it-to reject it, not but before it was considthe American people tha not be heard-should no his defence—in the pres condemned him-neither tion, nor after it! Thi certainly no enemy to th to miscarry. The Presic of his message, has respe his defence might be ente of the Senate-upon that contains the record of hi the request of the Preside deny it? Will they refu justice and common dec further, and not only refu Journal, but refuse even in the Senate? Will the to remain on file, but send out of doors, without conc it? For that is the exact now made! Will senator and their bodies also, in le munication with epithets, shall not be received? W morials, resolutions, essays to abuse the President, an of defence from him? spectacle which had beer three months-a daily pro upon the President from a n to that effect, he was gone, in ess, it would be ion of the simi-English House referred. That n years-from uccessful. For and indignant reply to the a dead vote as id seven years the term, and Parliament, the more than two icle was beheld face of the asof the obnoxious he House. The tennial, and it or two general

he kingdom to The elections ith intercalary t take a less, or resume to sav American people nerican Senate. lation: but the English House s' perseverance, or him to begin. others to conild be crowned onement made ver to make to titution, the in-Representatives merican citizen tion before the consider himelligence of an dieved the body most enlightenrithout the least Senate, he must ny such Senates s of the people, lligence behind. peal, on a great to the underclamation, pasinguage, would I float, harmless v air, and strike ad dispassionate iffected; wrath, aged; asseveraciation, however cts-inexorable ded to; reason, at will be listenwill exact the inderstandings;

d in this great

question, or being heard, would wish to be heeded, will have occasion to be clear and correct in his facts; close and perspicuous in his application of law; fair and candid in his conclusions and inferences; temperate and decorous in his language; and scrupulously free from every taint of vengeance and malice. Solemnly impressed with the truth of all these convictions, it was the intention of himself (Mr. B.), whatever the example or the provocation might be-never to forget his place, his subject, his audience, and his object-never to forget that he was speaking in the American Senate, on a question of violated constitution and outraged individual right, to an audience comprehending the whole body of the American people, and for the purpose of obtaining a righteous decision from the calm and sober judgment of a high-minded, intelligent, and patriotic community.

"The question immediately before the Senate was one of minor consequence; it might be called a question of small import, except for the effect which the decision might have upon the Senate itself. In that point of view, it might be a question of some moment; for, without reference to individuals, it was essential to the cause of free governments, that every department of the government, the Senate inclusive, should so act as to preserve to itself the respect and the confidence of the country. The immediate question was, upon the rejection of the President's message. It was moved to reject it-to reject it, not after it was considered, but before it was considered! and thus to tell the American people that their President shall not be heard-should not be allowed to plead his defence-in the presence of the body that condemned him-neither before the condemnation, nor after it! This is the motion: and certainly no enemy to the Senate could wish it to miscarry. The President, in the conclusion of his message, has respectfully requested that his defence might be entered upon the Journal of the Senate-upon that same Journal which contains the record of his conviction. This is the request of the President. Will the Senate deny it? Will they refuse this act of sheer justice and common decency? Will they go further, and not only refuse to place it on the Journal, but refuse even to suffer it to remain in the Senate? Will they refuse to permit it to remain on file, but send it back, or throw it out of doors, without condescending to reply to it? For that is the exact import of the motion now made! Will senators exhaust their minds, and their bodies also, in loading this very communication with epithets, and then say that it shall not be received? Will they receive memorials, resolutions, essays, from all that choose to abuse the President, and not receive a word of defence from him? Will they continue the spectacle which had been presented here for three months—a daily presentation of attacks upon the President from all that choose to attack him, young and old, boys and men-attacks echoing the very sound of this resolution, and which are not only received and filed here, but printed, which, possibly, the twenty-six could not unite here, nor go to trial upon any where! He remarked, in the third place, upon the effect produced in the character of the resolution, and affirmed that it was nothing. He said that the same charge ran through all three. They all three imputed to the President a violation of the constitution and laws of the country-of that constitution which he was sworn to support, and of those laws which he was not only bound to observe himself, but to cause to be faithfully observed by all others.

"A violation of the constitution and of the laws, Mr. B. said, were not abstractions and metaphysical subtleties. They must relate to persons or things. The violations cannot rest in the air; they must affix themselves to men or to property; they must connect themselves with the transactions of real life. They cannot be ideal and contemplative. In omitting the specifications relative to the dismission of one Secretary of the Treasury, and the appointment of another, what other specifications were adopted or substituted? Certainly none! What others were mentally intended? Surely none! What others were suggested? Certainly none! The general charge then rests upon the same specification; and so completely is this the fact, that no supporter of the resolutions has thought it necessary to make the least alteration in his speeches which supported the original resolution, or to say a single additional word in favor of the altered resolution as finally passed. The omission of the specification is then an omission of form and not of substance; it is a change of words and not of things; and the substitution of a derogation of the laws and constitution, for dangerous to the liberties of the people, is a still more flagrant instance of change of words without change of things. It is tautologous and nonsensical. It adds nothing to the general charge, and takes nothing from it. It neither explains it nor qualifies it. In the technical sense it is absurd; for k is not the case of a statute in derogation of the common law, to wit, repealing a part of it; in the common parlance understanding, it is ridiculous, for the President is not even charged with defaming the constitution and the laws; and, if he was so charged, it would present a curious trial of scandalum magnatum for the American Senate to engage in. No! said Mr. B., this derogation clause is an expletion! It is put in to fill up! The regular impeaching clause of dangerous to the liberties of the people, had to be taken out. There was danger, not in the people certainly. but to the character of the resolution, if it staid in. It identified that resolution as an impeachment, and, therefore, constituted a piece of internal evidence which it was necessary to withdraw; but in withdrawing which, the character of the resolution was not altered. The charge for violating the laws and the constitution still stood; and the substituted clause was nothing but a stopper to a vacuum-additional sound without additional sense, to fill up a blank and round off a sentence.

"After showing the impeaching character of the Senate's resolution, from its own internal evidence, Mr. B. had recourse to another description of evidence, scarcely inferior to the resolutions themselves, in the authentic interpretations of their meaning. He alluded to the speeches made in support of them, and which had resounded in this chamber for three months, and were now circulating all over the country in every variety of newspaper and pamphlet form. These speeches were made by the friends of the resolution to procure its adoption here, and to justify its adoption before the country. Let the country then read, let the people read, what has been sent to them for the purpose of justifying these resolutions which they are now to try! They will find them to be in the character of prosecution pleadings against an accused man, on his trial for the commission of great crimes! Let them look over these speeches, and mark the passages; they will find language ransacked, history rummaged, to find words sufficiently strong, and examples sufficiently odious, to paint and exemplify the enormity of the crime of which the President was alleged to be guilty. After reading these passages, let any one doubt, if he can, as to the character of the resolution which was adopted. Let him doubt, if he can, of the impeachable nature of the offence which was charged upon the President. Let him doubt, if he can, that every Senator who voted for that resolution. voted the President to be guilty of an impeachable offence-an offence, for the trial of which this Senate is the appointed tribunal—an offence which it will be the immediate duty of the House of Representatives to bring before the Senate, in a formal impeachment, unless they disbelieve in the truth and justice of the resolution which has been adopted.

"Mr. B. said there were three characters in which the Senate could act; and every time it acted it necessarily did so in one or the other of these characters. It possessed executive, legislative, and judicial characters. As a part of the executive, it acted on treaties and nominations to office; as a part of the legislative, it assisted in making laws; as a judicial tribunal, it decided impeachments. Now, in which of these characters did the Senate act when it adopted the resolution in question? Not in its executive character, it will be admitted; not in its legislative character, it will be proved: for the resolution was, in its nature, wholly foreign to legislation. It was directed not to the formation of a law, but to the condemnation of the President. It was to condemn him for dismissing one Secretary, because he would not do a thing, and appointing another that he might do it; and certainly this was not matter for legislation; for | ment of charges by the House of Representa-

Mr. Duane could not be restored by law, nor Mr. Taney be put out by law. It was to convict the President of violating the constitution and the laws; and surely these infractions are not to be amended by laws, but avenged by trial and punishment. The very nature of the resolution proves it to be foreign to all legislation; its form proves the same thing; for it is not joint, to require the action of the House of Representatives, and thus ripen into law; nor is it followed by an instruction to a committee to report a bill in conformity to it. No such instruction could even now be added without committing an absurdity of the most ridiculous character. There was another resolution, with which this must not be confounded, and upon which an instruction to a committee might have been bottomed; it was the resolution which declared the Secretary's reasons for removing the deposits to be insufficient and unsatisfactory; but no such instruction has been bottomed even upon that resolution; so that it is evident that no legislation of any kind was intended to follow either resolution, even that to which legislation might have been appropriate much less that to which it would have been an absurdity. Four months have elapsed since the resolutions were brought in. In all that time there has been no attempt to found a legislative act upon either of them; and it is too late now to assume that the one which, in its nature and in its form, is wholly foreign to legislation, is a legislative act, and adopted by the Senate in its legislative character. No! This resolution is judicial; it is a judgment pronounced upon an imputed offence; it is the declared sense of a majority of the Senate, of the guilt of the President of a high crime and misdemeanor. It is, in substance, an impeachment—an impeachment in violation of all the forms prescribed by the constitution-in violation of the privileges of the House of Representatives—in subversion of the rights of the accused, and the record of which ought to be expunged from the Journal of the Senate.

"Mr. B. said the selection of a tribunal for the trial of impeachments was felt, by the convention which framed the constitution, as one of the most delicate and difficult tasks which they had to perform. Those great men were well read in history, both ancient and modern, and knew that the impeaching power-the usual mode for trying political men for political offences-was often an engine for the gratification of factious and ambitious feelings. An impeachment was well known to be the beaten road for running down a hated or successful political rival. After great deliberation-after weighing all the tribunals, even that of the Supreme Court—the Senate of the United States was fixed upon as the body which, from its constitution, would be the most impartial, neutral, and equitable, that could be selected, and, with the check of a previous inquisition, and present-

tives, would be the could be confided a p so susceptible of bein selected; and to sh stated the difficulties the selection, he wou sage from a work w subject, and from an was written by the go would have most weigh spoke of the Federalis ten by General Han power:

"A well-constitute peachments is an obje than difficult to be o wholly elective. The are those offences which conduct of public men the abuse or violatio They are of a nature propriety, be denomina late chiefly to injuries ciety itself. The prose reason, will seldom fai of the whole communi parties more or less fr accused. In many cas with the pre-existing fa their animosities, partis terest, on one side or on cases, there will always that the decision will be comparative strength c real demonstrations of i delicacy and magnitude deeply concerns the poli istence of every man er tration of public affairs. The difficulty of placing ment resting entirely on elections, will as readily is considered that the me ters in it will, from tha often the leaders or the t ning or the most numero account, can hardly be ex requisite neutrality tow: duct may be the subject of "The division of the p between the two branches signing to one the right of the right of trying, avoid: making the same person judges; and guards again secution from the prevaler

in either of those branches Mr. B. said there was cidation of the present o the extract which he had of an impeachable offence charge which was contain adopted by the Senate as The offence charged upon feature of the impeachmen ed by law, nor It was to conthe constitution infractions are avenged by trial are of the resoall legislation; g; for it is not e House of Replaw; nor is it a committee to No such ined without commost ridiculous resolution, with nded, and upon ittee might have esolution which is for removing and unsatisfacas been bottomo that it is eviind was intended a that to which propriate, much been an absurdsince the resothat time, there a legislative act too late now to ts nature and in legislation, is a he Senate in its is resolution is ounced upon an ared sense of a iilt of the Presiemeanor. It is, an impeachment rescribed by the ie privileges of in subversion of record of which e Journal of the

> f a tribunal for felt, by the constitution, as one ult tasks which great men were nt and modern, ower-the usual for political ofthe gratification s. An impeachbeaten road for cessful political -after weighing of the Supreme ited States was com its constitutial, neutral, and d, and, with the n, and presentof Representa tives, would be the safest tribunal to which could be confided a power so great in itself, and so susceptible of being abused. The Senate was selected; and to show that he had not overstated the difficulties of the convention in making the selection, he would take leave to read a passage from a work which was canonical on this subject, and from an article in that work which was written by the gentleman whose authority would have most weight on this occasion. He spoke of the Federalist, and of the article written by General Hamilton on the impeaching

"A well-constituted court for the trial of impeachments is an object not more to be desired than difficult to be obtained, in a government wholly elective. The subjects of its jurisdiction are those offences which proceed from the misconduct of public men; or, in other words, from the abuse or violation of some public trust. They are of a nature which may, with peculiar propriety, be denominated political, as they relate chiefly to injuries done immediately to society itself. The prosecution of them, for this reason, will seldom fail to agitate the passions of the whole community, and to divide it into parties more or less friendly or inimical to the accused. In many cases, it will connect itself with the pre-existing factions, and will enlist all their animosities, partialities influence, and interest, on one side or on the other; and, in such cases, there will always be the greatest danger that the decision will be regulated more by the comparative strength of parties, than by the real demonstrations of innocence or guilt. The delicacy and magnitude of a trust which so deeply concerns the political reputation and existence of every man engaged in the administration of public affairs, speak for themselves. The difficulty of placing it rightly in a government resting entirely on the basis of periodical elections, will as readily be perceived, when it is considered that the most conspicuous characters in it will, from that circumstance, be too often the leaders or the tools of the most cunning or the most numerous faction; and, on this account, can hardly be expected to possess the requisite neutrality towards those whose conduct may be the subject of scrutiny.

"The division of the powers of impeachment between the two branches of the legislature, assigning to one the right of accusing, to the other the right of trying, avoids the inconvenience of making the same persons both accusers and judges; and guards against the danger of persecution from the prevalency of a factious spirit in either of those branches."

"Mr. B. said there was much matter for elucidation of the present object of discussion in the extract which he had read. Its definition of an impeachable offence covered the indentical charge which was contained in the resolution adopted by the Senate against the President. The offence charged upon him possessed every feature of the impeachment defined by General

Hamilton. It imputes misconduct to a public man, for the abuse and violation of a public trust. The discussion of the charge has agitated the passions of the whole community; it has divided the people into parties, some friendly, some inimical, to the accused; it has connected itself with the pre-existing parties, enlisting the whole of the opposition parties under one banner, and calling forth all their animosities-all their partialities-all their influence-all their interest; and, what was not foreseen by General Hamilton, it has called forth the tremendous moneyed power, and the pervading organization of a great moneyed power, wielding a mass of forty millions of money, and sixty millions of debt; wielding the whole in aid and support of this charge upon the President, and working the double battery of seduction, on one hand, and oppression on the other, to put down the man against whom it is directed! This is what General Hamilton did not foresee; but the next feature in the picture he did foresee, and most accurately describe, as it is now seen by us all. He said that the decision of these impeachments would ofter be regulated more by the comparative strength of parties than by the guilt or innocence of the accused. How prophetic! Look to the memorials, resolutions, and petitions, sent in here to criminate the President, so clearly marked by a party line, that when an exception occurs, it is made the special subject of public remark. Look at the vote in the Senate, upon the adoption of the resolution, also as clearly defined by a party line as any party question can ever be expected to be.

"To guard the most conspicuous characters from being persecuted-Mr. B. said he was using the language of General Hamilton-to guard the most conspicuous characters from being persecuted by the leaders or the tools of the most cunning or the most numerous faction -the convention had placed the power of trying impeachments, not in the Supreme Court, not even in a body of select judges chosen for the occasion, but in the Senate of the United States, and not even in them without an intervening check to the abuse of that power, by associating the House of Representatives, and forbidding the Senate to proceed against any officer until that grand inquest of the nation should demand his trial. How far fortunate, or otherwise, the convention may have been in the selection of its tribunal for the trial of impeachments, it was not for him, Mr. B., to say. It was not for him to say how far the requisite neutrality towards those whose conduct may be under scrutiny, may be found, or has been found, in this body. But he must take leave to say, that if a public man may be virtually impeached-actually condemned by the Senate of an impeachable offence, without the intervention of the House of Representatives, then has the constitution failed at one of its most vital points and a ready means found for doing a thing which had filled other countries with persecu tion, faction, and violence, and which it was intended should never be done here.

"Mr. B. called upon the Senate to recollect what was the feature in the famous court of the Star Chamber, which rendered that court the most odious that ever sat in England. It was not the mass of its enormities—great as they were-for the regular tribunals which yet existed, exceeded that court, both in the mass and in the atrocity of their crimes and oppressions. The regular courts in the compass of a single reign—that of James the Second; a single judge in a single riding—Jeffries, on the Western Circuit—surpassed all the enormities of the Star Chamber, in the whole course of its existence. What then rendered that court so intolerably odious to the English people? Sir, said Mr. B., it was because that court had no grand jury-because it proceeded without presentment, without indictment-upon information alone-and thus got at its victims without the intervention, without the restraint, of an accusing body. This is the feature which sunk the Star Chamber in England. It is the feature which no criminal tribunal in this America is allowed to possess. The most inconsiderable offender, in any State of the Union, must be charged by a grand jury before he can be tried by the court. In this Senate, sitting as a high court of impeachment, a charge must first be presented by the House of Representatives, sitting as the grand inquest of the nation. But if the Senate can proceed, without the intervention of this grand inquest, wherein is it to differ from the Star Chamber, except in the mere execution of its decrees? And what other execution is now required for delinquent public men, than the force of public opinion? No! said Mr. B., we live in an age when public opinion over public men, is omnipotent and irreversible !-- when public sentiment annihilates a public man more effectually than the scaffold. To this new and omnipotent tribunal, all the public men of Europe and America are now happily subject. The fiat of public opinion has superseded the axe of the executioner. Struck by that opinion, kings and emperors in Europe, and the highest functionaries among ourselves, fall powerless from the political stage, and wander, while their bodies live, as shadows and phantoms over the land. Should he give examples? It might be invidious; yet all would recollect an eminent example of a citizen, once sitting at the head of this Senate, afterwards falling under a judicial prosecution, from which he escaped untouched by the sword of the law, yet that eminent citizen was more utterly annihilated by public opinion, than any execution of a capital sentence could ever have accomplished upon his name.

"What occasion then has the Senate, sitting as a court of impeachment, for the power of execution? The only effect of a regular impeachment now, is to remove from office, and disqualification for office. An irregular impeachment will be tantamount to removal and disqualification, if the justice of the sentence is confided in by the people. If this condemnation of the President had been pronounced in the first term of his administration, and the people had believed in the truth and justice of the sentence, certainly President Jackson would not have been elected a second time; and every object that a political rival, or a political party, could have wished from his removal from office, and disqualification for office, would have been accomplished. Disqualification for office-loss of public favor-political death-is now the object of political rivalship; and all this can be accomplished by an informal, as well as by a formal impeachment, if the sentence is only confided in by the people. If the people believed that the President has violated the constitution and the laws, he ceases to be the object of their respect and their confidence; he loses their favor; he dies a political death; and that this might be the object of the resolution, Mr. B. would leave to the determination of those who should read the speeches which were delivered in support of the measure, and which would constitute a public and lasting monument of the temper in which the resolution was presented, and the object intended to be accomplished by it.

"It was in vain to say there could be no object, at this time, in annihilating the political influence of President Jackson, and killing him off as a public man, with a senatorial conviction for violating the laws and constitution of the country. Such an assertion, if ventured upon by any one, would stand contradicted by facts. of which Europe and America are witnesses. Does he not stand between the country and the bank? Is he not proclaimed the sole obstacle to the recharter of the bank; and in its recharter is there not wrapped up the destinies of a political party, now panting for power? Remove this sole obstacle—annihilate its influence—kill off President Jackson with a sentence of condemnation for a high crime and misdemeaner. and the charter of the bank will be renewed, and in its renewal, a political party, now thundering at the gates of the capitol, will leap into power. Here then is an object for desiring the extinction of the political influence of President Jackson! An object large enough to be seen by all America! and attractive enough to enlist the combined interest of a great moneyed power, and of a great political party."

Thus spoke Mr. Benton; but the debate on the protest went on; and the motion of Mr. Poindexter, digested into four different propositions, after undergoing repeated modifications upon consultations among its friends, and after much acrimony on both sides, was adopted by the fixed majority of twenty-seven. In voting

that the protest was a breach of the privileges of the Senate, that impeachment char resolutions, and in ment of voting an observing a single peachments. The p It averred the Sena authority-without tution-any right is To receive that pr journal, was to reco themselves; to reje vilege was to clain immunity of a regu and as the proceeding amounting to a high on which matter the its judicial capacity; the immunity that 1 capacity; and assun Certainly if the Sen ment in due form, the justice, might have 1 but the Senate had 1 peachable matter wi ment; and therefore i to impugn the act w to commit.

CHAPT

MR. WEBSTER'S

It has already been se no direct part in prom resolutions against Go no private grief to inci dent; and, as first di been impossible for hin of "expounder and de tion," to have support plainly on its face imp several modifications, h the beginning, he had which was entirely diff the President; and sole tage of the bank, and the in a practical and parlia lation. He looked to charter for a short term removal and disf the sentence is his condemnation ronounced in the n, and the people justice of the senckson would not time; and every a political party, moval from office. would have been on for office-loss ath-is now the nd all this can be as well as by a itence is only conie people believed d the constitution the object of their e; he loses their th; and that this resolution, Mr. B. tion of those who ch were delivered and which would ng monument of solution was preded to be accom-

Vol. I.—28

> here could be no ating the political n, and killing him natorial conviction onstitution of the if ventured upon radicted by facts, ica are witnesses. ie country and the the sole obstacle and in its recharter lestinies of a polipower? Remove its influence-kill 1 sentence of conand misdemeaner. ill be renewed, and y, now thundering Il leap into power. iring the extinction resident Jackson! seen by all Amerinlist the combined wer, and of a great > > but the debate on he motion of Mr. ir different propoated modifications s friends, and after s, was adopted by seven. In voting h of the privileges of the Senate, that body virtually affirmed the impeachment character of the condemnatory resolutions, and involved itself in the predicament of voting an impeachable matter without observing a single rule for the conduct of impeachments. The protest placed it in a dilemma. It averred the Senate's judgment to be without authority-without any warrant in the constitution-any right in the body to pronounce it. To receive that protest, and enter it on the journal, was to record a strong evidence against themselves; to reject it as a breach of privilege was to claim for their proceeding the immunity of a regular and constitutional act; and as the proceeding was on criminal matter. amounting to a high crime and misdemeanor, on which matter the Senate could only act in its judicial capacity; therefore it had to claim the immunity that would belong to it in that capacity; and assume a violation of privilege. Certainly if the Senate had tried an impeachment in due form, the protest, impeaching its justice, might have been a breach of privilege; but the Senate had no privilege to vote an impeachable matter without a regular impeachment; and therefore it was no breach of privilege to impugn the act which they had no privilege to commit.

CHAPTER CIV.

MR. WEBSTER'S PLAN OF RELIEF.

It has already been seen that Mr. Webster took no direct part in promoting the adoption of the resolutions against General Jackson. He had no private grief to incite him against the President; and, as first drawn up, it would have been impossible for him, honored with the titles of "expounder and defender of the constitution," to have supported the resolve: bearing plainly on its face impeachable matter. After several modifications, he voted for it; but, from the beginning, he had his own plan in view, which was entirely different from an attack on the President; and solely looked to the advantage of the bank, and the relief of the distress, in a practical and parliamentary mode of legislation. He looked to a renewal of the bank charter for a short term, and with such modifi- bank stood firm. In favoring this charter for cations as would tend to disarm opposition, and to conciliate favor for it. The term of the renewal was only to be for six years: a length of time well chosen; because, from the shortness of the period, it would have an attraction for all that class of members-always more or less numerous in every assembly-who, in every difficulty, are disposed to temporize and compromise; while, to the bank, in carrying its existence beyond the presidential term of General Jackson, it felt secure in the future acquisition of a full term. Besides the attraction in the short period, Mr. Webster proposed another amelioration, calculated to have serious effect; it was to give up the exclusive or monopoly feature in the charter-leaving to Congress to grant any other charter, in the mean time, to a new company, if it pleased. The objectionable branch bank currency of petty drafts was also given up. Besides this, and as an understanding that the corporation would not attempt to obtain a further existence beyond the six years, the directors were to be at liberty to begin to return the capital to the stockholders at any time within the period of three years, before the expiration of the six renewed years The deposits were not to be restored until after the first day of July; and, as an agreeable concession to the enemies of small paper currency the bank was to issue, or use, no note under the amount of twenty dollars. He had drawn up a bill with these provisions, and asked leave to bring it in; and, asking the leave, made a very plausible business speech in its favor: the best perhaps that could have been devised. In addition to his own weight, and the recommendations in the bill, it was understood to be the preference of Mr. Biddle himself-his own choice of remedies in the difficulties which surrounded his institution. But he met opposition from quarters not to be expected: from Mr. Clay, who went for the full term of twenty years; and Mr. Calhoun, who went for twelve. It was difficult to comprehend why these two gentlemen should wish to procure for the bank more than it asked, and which it was manifestly impossible for it to gain. Mr. Webster's bill was the only one that stood the least chance of getting through the two Houses; and on that point he had private assurances of support from friends of the administration, if all the friends of the twelve years, Mr. Calhoun felt that an explanation of his conduct was due to the public, as he was well known to have been opposed to the renewed charter, when so vehemently attempted, in 1832; and also against banks generally. His explanation was, that he considered it a currency question, and a question between the national and local banks; and that the renewed charter was to operate against them; and, in winding itself up, was to cease for ever, having first established a safe currency. His frequent expression was, that his plan was to "unbank the banks:" a process not very intelligibly explained at the time, and on which he should be allowed to speak for himself. Some passages are, therefore, given from his speech:

Vol. I.-28

"After a full survey of the whole subject, I can see no means of extricating the country from its present danger, and to arrest its further increase, but a bank, the agency of which, in some form, or under some authority, is indispensable. The country has been brought into the present diseased state of the currency by banks, and must be extricated by their agency. We must, in a word, use a bank to unbank the banks, to the extent that may be necessary to restore a safe and stable currency—just as we apply snow to a frozen limb, in order to restore vitality and circulation, or hold up a burn to the flame to extract the inflammation. All must see that it is impossible to suppress the banking system at once. It must continue for a time. Its greatest enemies, and the advocates of an exclusive specie circulation, must make it a part of their system to tolerate the banks for a longer or a shorter period. To suppress them at once, would, if it were possible, work a greater revolution: a greater change in the relative condition of the various classes of the community than would the conquest of the country by a savage enemy. What, then, must be done? I answer, a new and safe system must gradually grow up under, and replace, the old; imitating, in this respect, the beautiful process which we sometimes see, of a wounded or diseased part in a living organic body, gradually superseded by the nealing process of nature.

"How is this to be effected? How is a bank to be used as the means of correcting the excess of the banking system? And what bank is to be selected as the agent to effect this salutary change? I know, said Mr. C., that a diversity of opinion will be found to exist, as to the agent to be selected, among those who agree on every other point, and who, in particular, agree on the necessity of using some bank as the means of effecting the object intended; one preferring a simple recharter of the existing bank—another, the charter of a new bank of the United States—a third, a new bank ingrafted upon the old—and a fourth, the use of the State banks, as the agent. I wish, said Mr. C., to leave all these as open questions, to be carefully surveyed and compared with each other, calmly and dispassionately, without prejudice or party feeling; and that to be selected which, on the whole, shall appear to be best-the most safe; the most efficient; the most prompt in application, and the least liable to constitutional objection. It would, however, be wanting in candor on my part, not to declare that my impression is, that a new Bank of the United States, ingrafted upon the old, will be found, under all the circumstances of the case, to combine the greatest advantages, and to be liable to the fewest objections; but this impression is not so firmly fixed as to be inconsistent with a calm review of the whole ground, or to prevent my yielding to the conviction of reason, should the result of such review prove that any other is preferable. Among its peculiar recommendations, may be ranked the consideration, that, while it would afford the means of a prompt and effectual application for mitigating and finally removing the existing distress, it would, at the same time, open to the whole community a fair opportunity of participation in the advantages of the institution, be they what they may.

"Let us then suppose (in order to illustrate and not to indicate a perference) that the present bank be selected as the agent to effect the intended object. What provisions will be necessary? I will suggest those that have occurred to me, mainly, however, with a view of exciting the reflection of those much more familiar with banking operations than myself, and who, of course, are more competent to form a correct judgment on their practical effect.

"Let, then, the bank charter be renewed for twelve years after the expiration of the present term, with such modifications and limitations as may be judged proper, and that after that period, it shall issue no notes under ten dollars; that government shall not receive in its dues any sum less than ten dollars, except in the legal coins of the United States; that it shall not receive in its dues the notes of any bank that issues notes of a denomination less than five dollars; and that the United States Bank shall not receive in payment, or on deposit, the notes of any bank whose notes are not receivable in dues of the government; nor the notes of any bank which may receive the notes of any bank whose notes are not receivable by the government. At the expiration of six years from the commencement of the renewed charter, let the bank be prohibited from issuing any note under twenty dollars, and let no sum under that amount be received in the dues of the government, except in specie; and let the value of gold be raised at least equal to that of silver, to take effect immediately, so that the country may be replenished with the coin, the lightest and the most portable in proportion to its value, to take the place of the receding bank notes

It is unnecessary sent, the standard cent. less than tha fect of which has from our circulation a coin so well calc a country so great an intercourse, con between all its par al recommendation gold has, of late, be of three considerab ginia, North Caroli dustry of which, th give a strong impul greatly increase the "Such are the me

me. There are men competent to judge than myself, and as gest them for their others who are more the subject, I will no inquiry as to their determining whethe to effect the object i doubtless others of perhaps more efficaci experienced, which I my object is to adop cient. And it may rience it should be fo visions nor any other are fully adequate to form which I have p of the States may be extent of suppressing under five dollars, wh be issued under their

The ultimate object plished by Mr. Calhou banking the banks," w and by slow degrees, a the revival of gold. T and so declared in the the first opposition to He had talked his plan o we had talked over our point at which we all agr metallic currency; but -he expecting to attai ally, through the proces and we immediately, thi gold currency, the extinc United States, the establ dent treasury, and the money from the federal Laying hold of the poin (and which was also the State banks, as the o leave all these as illy surveyed and almly and dispas-· party feeling; and n the whole, shall st safe; the most in application, and onal objection. It in candor on my impression is, that tes, ingrafted upon er all the circumne the greatest ado the fewest objecnot so firmly fixed calm review of the my yielding to the the result of such her is preferable. endations, may be at, while it would t and effectual apnally removing the at the same time, ity a fair opportuadvantages of the > order to illustrate nce) that the preagent to effect the rovisions will be hose that have orrer, with a view of see much more fans than myself, and npetent to form a actical effect. ter be renewed for

tion of the present s and limitations as at after that period, r ten dollars; that re in its dues any xcept in the legal that it shall not s of any bank that ion less than five ited States Bank , or on deposit, the tes are not receivent; nor the notes ve the notes of any eivable by the govsix years from the ed charter, let the uing any note un-10 sum under that ues of the govern-I let the value of to that of silver, o that the country e coin, the lightest portion to its value, eding bank notes

It is unnecessary for me to state, that at present, the standard value of gold is several per cent. less than that of silver, the necessary effect of which has been to expel gold entirely from our circulation, and thus to deprive us of a coin so well calculated for the circulation of a country so great in extent, and having so vast an intercourse, commercial, social, and political. between all its parts, as ours. As an additional recommendation to raise its relative value, gold has, of late, become an important product of three considerable States of the Union, Virginia, North Carolina, and Georgia-to the industry of which, the measure proposed would give a strong impulse, and which in turn would greatly increase the quantity produced.

Such are the means which have occurred to me. There are members of this body far more competent to judge of their practical operation than myself, and as my object is simply to suggest them for their reflection, and for that of others who are more familiar with this part of the subject, I will not at present enter into an inquiry as to their efficiency, with a view of determining whether they are fully adequate to effect the object in view or not. There are doubtless others of a similar description, and perhaps more efficacious, that may occur to the experienced, which I would freely embrace, as my object is to adopt the best and most efficient. And it may be hoped that, if on experience it should be found that neither these provisions nor any other in the power of Congress, are fully adequate to effect the important reform which I have proposed, the co-operation of the States may be afforded, at least to the extent of suppressing the circulation of notes under five dollars, where such are permitted to be issued under their authority."

The ultimate object proposed to be accomplished by Mr. Calhoun in this process of "unbanking the banks," was to arrive eventually. and by slow degrees, at a metallic currency, and the revival of gold. This had been my object, and so declared in the Senate, from the time of the first opposition to the United States Bank. He had talked his plan over to myself and others: we had talked over ours to him. There was a point at which we all agreed—the restoration of a metallic currency; but differed about the means -he expecting to attain it slowly and eventually, through the process which he mentioned; and we immediately, through the revival of the gold currency, the extinction of the Bank of the United States, the establishment of an independent treasury, and the exclusion of all paper money from the federal receipts and payments.

President), Mr. Calhoun appealed to Mr. Silas Wright and myself and other friends of the administration, to support his plan. He said:

"If I understand their views, as expressed by the senator from Missouri, behind me (Mr. Benton)—the senator from New-York (Mr. Wright); and other distinguished members of the party, and the views of the President, as expressed in reported conversations, I see not how they can reject the measure (to wit: his plan). They profess to be the advocates of a metallic currency. I propose to restore it by the most effectual measures that can be devised; gradually and slowly, and to the extent that experience may show that it can be done consistently with due regard to the public interest. Further, no one can desire to go."

The reference here made by Mr. Calhoun to the views of the senator from Missouri was to conversations held between them: in which each freely communicated his own plan. Mr. Benton had not then brought forward his proposition for the revival of the gold currency; but did so, (in a speech which he had studied), the moment Mr. Calhoun concluded. That was a thing understood between them. Mr. Calhoun had signified his wish to speak first; to which Mr. Benton readily assented: and both took the opportunity presented by Mr. Webster's motion, and the presentation of his plan. to present their own respectively. Mr. Benton presented his the moment Mr. Calhoun sat down, in a much considered speech, which will be given in the next chapter; and which was the first of his formal speeches in favor of reviving the gold currency. In the mean time, Mr. Webster's plan lingered on the motion for leave to bring in his bill. That leave was not granted. Things took a strange turn. The friends of the bank refused in a body to give Mr. Webster the leave asked: the enemies of the bank were in favor of giving him the leavechiefly, perhaps, because his friends refused it. In this state of contrariety among his friends, Mr. Webster moved to lay his own motion on the table; and Mr. Forsyth, to show that this balk came from his own side of the chamber. asked the yeas and nays; which were granted and were as follows:

money from the federal receipts and payments. Laying hold of the point on which we agreed, (and which was also the known policy of the bee, Smith, Southard, Sprague, Swift, Tomlinson, Waggaman, Webster.

"NAYS.—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Forsyth, Grundy, Hill, Kane, King of Alabama, Morris, Robinson, Shepley, Tallmadge, Tipton, White, Wilkins, Wright."

The excuse for the movement-for this unexpected termination to Mr. Webster's motion -was that the Senate might proceed with Mr. Clay's resolution against General Jackson, and come to a conclusion upon it. It was now time for that conclusion. It was near the last of March, and the Virginia elections came on in April: but the real cause for Mr. Webster's motion was the settled opposition of his political friends to his plan; and that was proved by its subsequent fate. In his motion to lay his application on the table, he treated it as a temporary disposition of it—the application to be renewed at some future time: which it never was.

CHAPTER CV.

REVIVAL OF THE GOLD CURRENCY-MR. BEN-TON'S SPEECH.

Mr. Benton said it was now six years since he had begun to oppose the renewal of the charter of this bank, but he had not, until the present moment, found a suitable occasion for showing the people the kind of currency which they were entitled to possess, and probably would possess, on the dissolution of the Bank of the United States. This was a view of the subject which many wished to see, and which he felt bound to give; and which he should proceed to present, with all the brevity and perspicuity of which he was master.

1. In the first place, he was one of those who believed that the government of the United States was intended to be a hard money government: that it was the intention, and the declaration of the constitution of the United States, that the federal currency should consist of gold and silver; and that there is no power in Congress to issue, or to authorize any company of individuals to issue, any species of federal paper currency whatsoever.

Every clause in the constitution, said Mr. B.,

early statute of Congress which interprets the meaning of these clauses-and every historic recollection which refers to them, go hand in hand, in giving to that instrument the meaning which this proposition ascribes to it. The power granted to Congress to coin money is an authority to stamp metallic money, and is not an authority for emitting slips of paper containing promises to pay money. The authority granted to Congress to regulate the value of coin, is an authority to regulate the value of the metallic money, not of paper. The prohibition upon the States against making any thing but gold and silver a legal tender, is a moral prohibition, founded in virtue and honesty, and is just as binding upon the federal government as upon the State governments; and that without a written prohibition; for the difference in the nature of the two governments is such, that the States may do all things which they are not forbid to do; and the federal government can do nothing which it is not authorized by the constitution to do. The power to punish the crime of counterfeiting is limited to the current coin of the United States, and to the securities of the United States; and cannot be extended to the offence of forging paper money, but by that unjustifiable power of construction which founds an implication upon an implication, and hangs one implied power upon another. The word currency is not in the constitution, nor any word which can be made to cover a circulation of bank notes. Gold and silver is the only thing recognized for money. It is the money, and the only money, of the constitution; and every historic recollection, as well as every phrase in the constitution, and every early statute on the subject of money, confirms that idea. People were sick of paper money about the time that this constitution was formed. The Congress of the confederation, in the time of the Revolution, had issued a currency of paper money. It had run the full career of that currency. The wreck of two hundred millions of paper dollars lay upon the land. The framers of that constitution worked in the midst of that wreck. They saw the havor which paper money had made upon the fortunes of individuals, and the morals of the public. They deter mined to have no more federal paper money. They created a hard money government; they which bears upon the subject of money-every | intended the new government to recognize no thing for money but word admitted into subject of money, de

sacred intention. Legislative enactn quickly to the aid and historic recolle passed at the first se that ever sat under was full and explicit the kind of money w should receive. The are remarkable for t hension, as well as fo of the constitution; and remembered. Th duties payable to the be received in gold a gold coins of France, land, and all other go at eighty-nine cents the Mexican dollar at crown of France at cents; and all other s ness, at one hundred as This statute was pass 1789-just one month menced the work of le sense of the Congress great part, who had fran who, by using the word their intention that go to constitute the curre ment.

In support of this cor tion, Mr. B. referred to by our most aged and this was intended to be ment. Yes, said Mr. 1 constitution were hard chief expounder and ex tion was not a hard m system man! a man deve of England, with all the and all the fervor of ent said Mr. B., that I shoul Hamilton that I should to derogate from the ju man! He has many title admiration of his count could not be American w disparage his memory. ] ich interprets the nd every historic them, go hand in ment the meaning ibes to it. The o coin money is an money, and is not s of paper containy. The authority ulate the value of the the value of ate the value of the The prohibition ing any thing but er, is a moral prond honesty, and is eral government as ; and that without e difference in the its is such, that the hich they are not al government can authorized by the wer to punish the ited to the current d to the securities annot be extended per money, but by construction which an implication, and pon another. The e constitution, nor e to cover a circuand silver is the money. It is the of the constitution; on, as well as every nd every early staney, confirms that paper money about ation was formed. ration, in the time a currency of paper career of that curundred millions of and. The framers I in the midst of havoc which paper ortunes of individuiblic. They deter leral paper money. government; they it to recognize no thing for money but gold and silver; and every word admitted into the constitution, upon the subject of money, defines and establishes that sacred intention.

Legislative enactment, continued Mr. B., came quickly to the aid of constitutional intention and historic recollection. The fifth statute nassed at the first session of the first Congress that ever sat under the present constitution. was full and explicit on this head. It defined the kind of money which the federal treasury should receive. The enactments of the statute are remarkable for their brevity and comprehension, as well as for their clear interpretation of the constitution; and deserve to be repeated and remembered. They are: That the fees and duties payable to the federal government shall be received in gold and silver coin only; the gold coins of France, Spain, Portugal, and England, and all other gold coins of equal fineness. at eighty-nine cents for every pennyweight; the Mexican dollar at one hundred cents; the crown of France at one hundred and eleven cents; and all other silver coins of equal fineness, at one hundred and eleven cents per ounce. This statute was passed the 30th day of July, 1789-just one month after Congress had commenced the work of legislation. It shows the sense of the Congress composed of the men, in great part, who had framed the constitution, and who, by using the word only, clearly expressed their intention that gold and silver alone was to constitute the currency of the new govern-

In support of this construction of the constition, Mr. B. referred to the phrase so often used by our most aged and eminent statesmen, that this was intended to be a hard money government. Yes, said Mr. B., the framers of the constitution were hard money men; but the chief expounder and executor of that constitution was not a hard money man, but a paper system man! a man devoted to the paper system of England, with all the firmness of conviction, and all the fervor of enthusiasm. God forbid, said Mr. B., that I should do injustice to Gen. Hamilton that I should say, or insinuate, aught to derogate from the just fame of that great man! He has many titles to the gratitude and admiration of his countrymen, and the heart could not be American which could dishonor or disparage his memory. But his ideas of government did not receive the sanction of general approbation; and of all his political tenets, his attachment to the paper system was most strongly opposed at the time, and has produced the most lasting and deplorable results upon the country. In the year 1791, this great man. then Secretary of the Treasury, brought forward his celebrated plan for the support of public credit-that plan which unfolded the entire scheme of the paper system, and immediately developed the great political line between the federalists and the republicans. The establishment of a national bank was the leading and predominant feature of that plan; and the original report of the Secretary, in favor of establishing the bank, contained this fatal and deplorable recommendation:

"The bills and notes of the bank, originally made payable, or which shall have become payable, on demand, in gold and silver coin, shall be receivable in all payments to the United States."

This fatal recommendation became a clause in the charter of the bank. It was transferred from the report of the Secretary to the pages of the statute book; and from that moment the moneyed character of the federal government stood changed and reversed. Federal bank notes took the place of hard money; and the whole edifice of the new government slid, at once, from the solid rock of gold and silver money, on which its framers had placed it, into the troubled and tempestuous ocean of a paper currency.

Mr. B. said it was no answer to this most serious charge of having changed the moneyed character of the federal government, and of the whole Union, to say that the notes of the Bank of the United States are not made a legal tender between man and man. There was no necessity, he said, for a statute law to that effect; it was sufficient that they were made a legal tender to the federal government; the law of necessity, far superior to that of the statute book, would do the rest. A law of tender was not necessary; a forced, incidental tender, resulted as an inevitable consequence from the credit and circulation which the federal government gave them. Whatever was received at the custom-houses, at the land-offices, at the post-offices, at the marshals' and district attorneys' offices, and in all the various dues to the federal government, must be received and will be received by the people. It becomes the actual and practical currency of the land. People must take it, or get nothing; and thus the federal government, establishing a paper currency for itself, establishes it also for the States and for the people; and every body must use it from necessity, whether compelled by law or not.

Mr. B. said it was not to be supposed that the objection which he now took to the unconstitutionality of the clause which made the notes of the federal bank a legal tender to the federal government, was an objection which could be overlooked, or disregarded, by the adversaries of the bank in 1791. It was not overlooked, or disregarded; on the contrary, it was denounced, and combated, as in itself a separate and distinct breach of the constitution, going the whole length of emitting paper money; and the more odious and reprehensible because a privileged company was to have the monopoly of the emission. The genius of Hamilton was put in requisition to answer this objection; and the best answer which that great man could give it, was a confession of the omnipotence of the objection, and the total impossibility of doing it away. His answer surrendered the whole question of a currency. It sunk the notes of the bank, which were then to be tendered to the federal government, to the condition of supplies furnished to the government, and to be consumed by it. The answer took refuge under the natural power, independent of all constitutions, for the tax receiver to receive his taxes in what articles he pleased. To do justice to General Hamilton, and to detect and expose the true character of this bank paper, Mr. B. read a clause from Gen. Hamilton's reply to the cabinet opinions of Mr. Jefferson, and the Attorney General Randolph, when President Washington had the charter of the first bank under advisement with his Secretaries. It was the clause in which General Hamilton replied to the objection to the constitutionality of making the notes of the bank receivable in payment of public dues. "To designate or appoint the money or thing in which taxes are to be paid, is not only a proper, but a necessary exercise of the power of collecting them. Accordingly, Congress, in the law concerning the collection of the duties, imposts, and tonnage, has provided that they shall be payable in gold and silver. But, while it was an indispensable part of the work to say in what of gold and silver coin, for their common cur-

they should be paid, the choice of the specific thing was a mere matter of discretion. The payment might have been required in the commodities themselves. Taxes in kind however ill judged, are not without precedents, even in the United States; or it might have been in the paper money of the several States; or in the bills of the Bank of North America, New-York, and Massachusetts, all, or either of them; it might have been in bills issued under the authority of the United States. No part of this, it is presumed, can be disputed. The appointment of the money or thing in which the taxes are to be paid, is an incident of the power of collection. And among the expedients which may be adopted, is that of bills issued under the authority of the United States." Mr. B. would read no further, although the argument of General Hamilton extended through several pages. The nature of the argument is fully disclosed in what is read. It surrenders the whole question of a paper currency. Neither the power to furnish a currency, or to regulate currency, is pretended to be claimed. The notes of the new bank are put upon the footing, not of money, but of commodities-things-articles in kind-which the tax receiver may accept from the tax payer; and which are to be used and consumed by the tax receiver, and not to be returned to the people. much less to be diffused over the country in place of money. This is the original idea and conception of these notes. It is the idea under which they obtained the legal capacity of receivability in payment of public dues; and from this humble conception, this degraded assimilation to corn and grain, to clothes and provisions. they have, by virtue of that clause in the charter, crept up to the character of money-become the real, practical currency of the land-driven the currency of the constitution from the land -and so depraved the public intellect as now to be called for as money, and proclaimed to be indispensable to the country, when the author of the bank could not rank it higher than an expedient for paying a tax.

2. In the next place, Mr. B. believed that the quantity of specie derivable from foreign commerce, added to the quantity of gold derivable from our own mines, were fully sufficiend if not expelled from the country by unwise law to furnish the people with an abundant circulation rency, without havin of small bank notes.

The truth of these to be susceptible of o He spoke first of the gold, and said that no more rapidly than the more abundantly tha year 1824 they were North Carolina; they ing into six States. I duct was $5,000; in in coined gold, was $ much more; and the year computed at two pect of continued and p probability was that th lapse of a few years, we supply of gold to estab of that metal, if not ex by unwise laws. But t both for gold and silver foreign commerce. It merce which filled the immediately after the cl War, when the domestiand it is the same foreig now, when federal laws tation of foreign coins a: tion, is bringing in an or eight millions. With laws which now discour foreign coins, and com there could be no delay tion of a sufficient stock to supply the largest common business of the

Mr. B. believed the pr and the quantity of gold istence, to be much great supposed; and, as a sta would establish his proj adequate supply of these currency of the country amount, as he found it of works of political econom three great sources of su South America; 2. Europ 3. The coast of Africa. of the New World as th which the calculation wou product was:

rency, without having recourse to a circulation of small bank notes.

The truth of these propositions, Mr. B. held to be susceptible of complete and ready proof.

of the specific liscretion. The

ed in the com-

kind however redents, even in nave been in the

s; or in the bills

New-York, and

them; it might

the authority of f this, it is pre-appointment of

e taxes are to be er of collection.

h may be adopt-

er the authority

would read no

of General Ham-

d pages. The isclosed in what le question of a

wer to furnish a

, is pretended to

ew bank are put

but of commo-

-which the tax

tax payer; and

med by the tax

1 to the people,

the country in iginal idea and the idea under

pacity of receiv-

lues; and from

graded-assimila-

s and provisions,

use in the char-

money-become

he land-driven from the land

ntellect as now

roclaimed to be

hen the author

ther than an ex-

elieved that the

m foreign com-

gold derivable

sufficient if not inwise law to

dant circulation

ir common cur-

The truth of these propositions, Mr. B. held to be susceptible of complete and ready proof. He spoke first of the domestic supply of native gold, and said that no mines had ever developed more rapidly than these had done, or promised more abundantly than they now do. In the year 1824 they were a spot in the State of North Carolina; they are now a region spreading into six States. In the year 1824 the product was $5,000; in the last year the product, in coined gold, was $868,000; in uncoined, as much more; and the product of the present year computed at two millions; with every prospect of continued and permanent increase. The probability was that these mines alone, in the lapse of a few years, would furnish an abundant supply of gold to establish a plentiful circulation of that metal, if not expelled from the country by unwise laws. But the great source of supply, both for gold and silver, Mr. B. said, was in our foreign commerce. It was this foreign commerce which filled the States with hard money immediately after the close of the Revolutionary War, when the domestic mines were unknown; and it is the same foreign commerce which, even now, when federal laws discourage the importation of foreign coins and compel their exportation, is bringing in an annual supply of seven or eight millions. With an amendment of the laws which now discourage the importation of foreign coins, and compel their exportation, there could be no delay in the rapid accumulation of a sufficient stock of the precious metals to supply the largest circulation which the common business of the country could require.

Mr. B. believed the product of foreign mines, and the quantity of gold and silver now in existence, to be much greater than was commonly supposed; and, as a statement of its amount would establish his proposition in favor of an adequate supply of these metals for the common currency of the country, he would state that amount, as he found it calculated in approved works of political economy. He looked to the three great sources of supply: 1. Mexico and South America; 2. Europe and Northern Asia; 3. The coast of Africa. Taking the discovery of the New World as the starting point from which the calculation would commence, and the product was:

 1. Mexico and South America,
 $6,458,000,006

 2. Europe and Northern Asla, 628,000,000

 8. The const of Africa,
 150,000,000

—making a total product of seven thousand two hundred and thirty-six millions, in the short space of three centuries and a half. To this is to be added the quantity existing at the time the New World was discovered, and which was computed at $2,300,000,000. Upon all these data, the political economists, Mr. B. said, after deducting $2,000,000,000 for waste and consumption, still computed the actual stock of gold and silver in Europe, Asia, and America, in 1832, at about seven thousand millions of dollars; and that quantity constantly and rapidly increasing.

Mr. B. had no doubt but that the quantity of gold and silver in Europe, Asia, and America, was sufficient to carry on the whole business of the world. He said that states and empires -far greater in wealth and population than any now existing-far superior in public and private magnificence-had carried on all the business of private life, and all the affairs of national government, upon gold and silver alone; and that before the mines of Mexico and Peru were known. or dreamed of. He alluded to the great nations of antiquity-to the Assyrian and Persian empires; to Egypt, Carthage, Rome; to the Grecian republics; the kingdoms of Asia Minor; and to the empire, transcending all these put together -the Saracenic empire of the Caliphs, which, taking for its centre the eastern limit of the Roman world, extended its dominion as far west as Rome had conquered, and further east than Alexander had marched. These great nations, whose armies crushed empires at a blow, whose monumental edifices still attest their grandeur, had no idea of bank credits and paper money. They used gold and silver alone. Such degenerate phrases as sound currency, paper medium, circulating media, never once sounded in their heroic ears. But why go back, exclaimed Mr. B., to the nations of antiquity? Why quit our own day? Why look beyond the boundaries of Europe? We have seen an empire in our own day, of almost fabulous grandeur and magnificence, carrying on all its vast undertakings upon a currency of gold and silver, without deigning to recognize paper for money. I speak, said Mr. B., of France-great and imperial France-and have my eye upon that first year of the consulate, when a young and victorious general, just transferred from the camp to a council, announced to his astonished ministers that specie payments should commence in France by a given day !-- in that France which, for so many years, had seen snothing but a miserable currency of depreciated mandats and assignats! The annunciation was heard with the inward contempt, and open distrust, which the whole tribe of hack politicians every where feel for the statesmanship of military men. It was followed by the success which it belongs to genius to inspire and to command. Specie payments commenced in France on the day named; and a hard money currency has been the sole currency of France from that day to this.

Such, said Mr. B., is the currency of France; a country whose taxes exceed a thousand millions of francs-whose public and private expenditures require a circulation of three hundred and fifty millions of dollars-and which possesses that circulation, every dollar of it, in gold and silver. After this example, can any one doubt the capacity of the United States to supply itself with specie? Reason and history forbid the doubt. Reason informs us that hard money flows into the vacuum the instant that small bank notes are driven out. France recovered a specie circulation within a year after the consular government refused to recognize paper for money. England recovered a gold circulation of about one hundred millions of dollars within four years after the one and two pound notes were suppressed. Our own country filled up with Spanish milled dollars, French crowns, doubloons, half joes, and guineas, as by magic, at the conclusion of the Revolutionary War, and the suppression of the continental bills. The business of the United States would not require above sixty or seventy millions of gold and silver for the common currency of the people, and the basis of large bank notes and bills of exchange. Of that sum, more than one third is now in the country, but not in circulation. The Bank of the United States hoards above ten millions. At the expiration of her charter, in 1836, that sum will be paid out in redemption of its notes-will go into the hands of the peopleand, of itself, will nearly double the quantity of silver now in circulation. Our native mines will be yielding, annually, some millions of gold; foreign commerce will be pouring in her accus- rency within just and proper limits. It will tomed copious supply; the correction of the erroneous value of gold, the liberal admission or foreign coins, and the suppression of small notes, will invite and retain an adequate metallic currency. The present moment is peculiarly favorable for these measures. Foreign exchanges are now in our favor; silver is coming here, although not current by our laws; both gold and silver would flow in, and that immediately, to an immense amount, if raised to their proper value, and put on a proper footing, by our laws. Three days' legislation on these subjects would turn copious supplies of gold and silver into the country, diffuse them through every neighborhood, and astonish gentlemen when they get home at midsummer, at finding hard money where they had left paper.

3. In the third place, Mr. B. undertook to affirm, as a proposition free from dispute or contestation, that the value now set upon gold, by the laws of the United States, was unjust and erroneous; that these laws had expelled gold from circulation; and that it was the bounden duty of Congress to restore that coin to circulation, by restoring it to its just value.

That gold was undervalued by the laws of the United States, and expelled from circulation, was a fact, Mr. B. said, which every body knew; but there was something else which every body did not know; which few, in reality, had an opportunity of knowing, but which was necessary to be known, to enable the friends of gold to go to work at the right place to effect the recovery of that precious metal which their fathers once possessed-which the subjects of European kings now possess-which the citizens of the young republics to the South all possess-which even the free negroes of San Domingo possess-but which the yeomanry of this America have been deprived of for more than twenty years, and will be deprived of for ever, unless they discover the cause of the evil, and apply the remedy to

I have already shown, said Mr. B., that the plan for the support of public credit which General Hamilton brought forward, in 1791, was a plan for the establishment of the paper system in our America. We had at that time a gold currency which was circulating freely and fully all over the country. Gold is the antagonist of paper, and, with fair play, will keep a paper cur-

w keep down the small carry a five, a ten, or a pocket, when he can eagles, doubloons, and place. The notes of th States, which bank fo in the plan for the sup already derived one un in being put on a leve tender to the federal go receivability in all payr they were now to der greater undue advantag the establishment of th stitution which also for for the support of pul plan that we trace the valuation of gold, which from the country. M1 his proposition for the recommended that the silver should be fixed that recommendation bec and has remained so e time, the relative value of and Portugal, and throu ions in the new world. supplies of gold were der sixteen for one; thus m per cent. below the star which chiefly produced g the English standard, an and below the standard v States, before the adoptic and which was actually I at the time that this nev to one was established.

Mr. B. was ready to adn nicety requisite in adjust of two different kinds of n for example—so as to pr poise between them, and t expelling the other. Th but no insuperable or ev culty, in making the adj of the question was aggr: by the difficulty of obtain of the relative value of time, in France and Engla has since shown that the in then relied upon was clearly requence of any mistake in ion of the eradmission or of small notes. metallic curpeculiarly faign exchanges ming here, alboth gold and amediately, to their proper t, by our laws. subjects would silver into the ery neighborhen they get hard money undertook to lispute or conupon gold, by as unjust and expelled gold s the bounden coin to circulalue.

the laws of the circulation, was dy knew; but every body did had an opporis necessary to f gold to go to at the recovery ir fathers once European kings of the young ss-which even o possess-but erica have been nty years, and s they discover

r. B., that the dit which Genein 1791, was a e paper system nat time a gold reedy and fully the antagonist of ep a paper cursilimits. It will

the remedy to

e keep down the small notes; for, no man will carry a five, a ten, or a twenty dollar note in his pocket, when he can get guineas, eagles, half eagles, doubloons, and half joes to carry in their place. The notes of the new Bank of the United States, which bank formed the leading feature in the plan for the support of public credit, had already derived one undue advantage over gold, in being put on a level with it in point of legal tender to the federal government, and universal receivability in all payments to that government: they were now to derive another, and a still greater undue advantage over gold, in the law for the establishment of the national mint; an institution which also formed a feature of the plan for the support of public credit. It is to that plan that we trace the origin of the erroneous valuation of gold, which has banished that metal from the country. Mr. Secretary Hamilton, in his proposition for the establishment of a mint, recommended that the relative value of gold to silver should be fixed at fifteen for one; and that recommendation became the law of the land; and has remained so ever since. At the same time, the relative value of these metals in Spain and Portugal, and throughout their vast dominions in the new world, whence our principal supplies of gold were derived, was at the rate of sixteen for one; thus making our standard six per cent. below the standard of the countries which chiefly produced gold. It was also below the English standard, and the French standard, and below the standard which prevailed in these States, before the adoption of the constitution, and which was actually prevailing in the States, at the time that this new proportion of fifteen to one was established.

Mr. B. was ready to admit that there was some nicety requisite in adjusting the relative value of two different kinds of money—gold and silver for example—so as to preserve an exact equipoise between them, and to prevent either from expelling the other. There was some nicety, but no insuperable or even extraordinary difficulty, in making the adjustment. The nicety of the question was aggravated in the year '92, by the difficulty of obtaining exact knowledge of the relative value of these metals, at that time, in France and England; and Mr. Gallatin has since shown that the information which was then relied upon was clearly erroneous. The consequence of any mistake in fixing our standard, was also well known in the year '92. Mr. Secretary Hamilton, in his proposition for the establishment of a mint, expressly declared that the consequence of a mistake in the relative value of the two metals, would be the expulsion of the one that was undervalued. Mr. Jefferson, then Secretary of State, in his cotemporaneous report upon foreign coins, declared the same thing. Mr. Robert Morris, financier to the revolutionary government, in his proposal to establish a mint, in 1782, was equally explicit to the same effect. The delicacy of the question and the consequence of a mistake, were then fully understood forty years ago, when the relative value of gold and silver was fixed at fifteen to one. But, at that time, it unfortunately happened that the paper system, then omnipotent in England, was making its transit to our America; and every thing that would go to establish that system-every thing that would go to sustain the new-born Bank of the United Statesthat eldest daughter and spem gregis of the paper system in America-fell in with the prevailing current, and became incorporated in the federal legislation of the day. Gold, it was well known, was the antagonist of paper; from its intrinsic value, the natural predilection of all mankind for it, its small bulk, and the facility of carrying it about, it would be preferred to paper, either for travelling or keeping in the house; and thus would limit and circumscribe the general circulation of bank notes, and prevent all plea of necessity for issuing smaller notes. Silver, on the contrary, from its inconvenience of transportation, would favor the circulation of bank notes. Hence the birth of the doctrine, that if a mistake was to be committed. it should be on the side of silver! Mr. Secretary Hamilton declares the existence of this feeling when, in his report upon the establishment of a mint, he says: "It is sometimes observed, that silver ought to be encouraged, rather than gold, as being more conducive to the extension of bank circulation, from the greater difficulty and inconvenience which its greater bulk, compared with its value, occasions in the transportation of it." This passage in the Secretary's report, proves the existence of the feeling in favor of silver against gold, and the cause of that feeling. Quotations might be made from the speeches of others to show that they acted upon that feeling; but it is due to General Hamilton to say that he disclaimed such a motive for himself, and expressed a desire to retain both metals in circulation, and even to have a gold dollar.

The proportion of fifteen to one was established. The 11th section of the act of April, 1792, enacted that every fifteen pounds weight of pure silver, should be equal in value, in all payments, with one pound of pure gold; and so in proportion for less quantities of the respective metals. This act was the death warrant to the gold currency. The diminished circulation of that coin soon began to be observable; but it was not immediately extinguished. Several circumstances delayed, but could not prevent that catastrophe. 1. The Bank of the United States then issued no note of less denomination than ten dollars, and but few of them. 2. There were but three other banks in the United States, and they issued but few small notes; so that a small note currency did not come directly into conflict with gold. 3. The trade to the lower Mississipi continued to bring up from Natchez and New Orleans, for many years, a large supply of doubloons; and long supplied a gold currency to the new States in the West. Thus, the absence of a small note currency, and the constant arrivals of doubloons from the lower Mississippi, deferred the fate of the gold currency; and it was not until the lapse of near twenty years after the adoption of the erroneous standard of 1792, that the circulation of that metal, both foreign and domestic, became completely and totally extinguished in the United States. The extinction is now complete, and must remain so until the laws are altered.

In making this annunciation, and in thus standing forward to expose the error, and to demand the reform of the gold currency, he (Mr. B.) was not setting up for the honors of a first discoverer, or first inventor. Far from it. He was treading in the steps of other, and abler men, who had gone before him. Four Secretaries of the Treasury, Gallatin, Dallas, Crawford, Ingham, had, each in their day, pointed out the error in the gold standard, and recommended its correction. Repeated reports of committees, in both Houses of Congress, had done the same thing. Of these reports he would name those of the late Mr. Lowndes of South Carolina; of Mr. Sanford, late a senator from New-York; of Mr. Campbell P. White, now a representative from the city of New-York.

Mr. B. took pleasure in recalling and presenting to public notice, the names of the eminent men who had gone before him in the exploration of this path. It was due to them, now that the good cause seemed to be in the road to success, to yield to them all the honors of first explorers; it was due to the cause also, in this hour of final trial, to give it the high sanction of their names and labors.

Mr. B. would arrest for an instant the current of his remarks, to fix the attention of the Senate upon a reflection which must suggest itself to the minds of all considerate persons, He would ask how it could happen that so many men, and such men as he had named, laboring for so many years, in a cause so just, for an object so beneficial, upon a state of facts so undeniable, could so long and so uniformly fail of success? How could this happen? Sir, exclaimed Mr. B., it happened because the policy of the Bank of the United States required it to happen! The same policy which required gold to be undervalued in 1792, when the first bank was chartered, has required it to be undervalued ever since, now that a second bank has been established; and the same strength which enabled these banks to keep themselves up, also enabled them to keep gold down. This is the answer to the question; and this the secret of the failure of all these eminent men in their laudable efforts to raise gold again to the dignity of money. This is the secret of their failure; and this secret being now known, the road which leads to the reformation of the gold currency lies uncovered and revealed before us: it is the road which leads to the overthrow of the Bank of the United States—to the sepulchre of that institution: for, while that bank lives, or has the hope of life, gold cannot be restored to life. Here then lies the question of the reform of the gold currency. If the bank is defeated, that currency is reformed; if the bank is victorious, gold remains degraded; to continue an article of merchandise in the hands of the bank, and to be expelled from circulation to make room for its five, its ten, and its twenty dollar notes. Let the people then, who are in favor of restoring gold to circulation, go to work in the right place, and put down the power that first put down gold, and which will never suffer that coin to rise while it has power to prevent it.

Mr. B. did not think it necessary to descrit and expatiate upon t ot a gold currency. too well known, from world, to be a subject teenth century; but, paper system to disp that system, in its fo American people, had ledge of that currency. rate its leading and pi It had an intrinsic val cy all over the world, value, without regard 2. It had a uniformity the safest standard o which the wisdom of n ered. 3. Its portabilit the traveller to carry it indestructibility; whic ney that people could I Its inherent purity; wl money to be counterfeit detected, and, therefore the people to handle. all other money; which the choice and comma 7. Its power over exch currency which contribu zation of exchange, and of exchange to the low point. 8. Its power of gold being the natural and, with fair play, able 9. It is a constitutional ple have a right to der rency, as long as the pres mitted to exist. Mr. B. said, that the fa gold had rendered the min so far as the gold coinage i diculous and absurd instit and that at a large expens 2,262,717 pieces of gold, and where are these piec them to be seen! all sol so regular is this operati of the mint, in his latest says that the new coined mains in the mint, uncalled delivery, until the day ar sail to Europe. He calcula of native gold will be coine and presenting e eminent men exploration of now that the oad to success. of first exploro, in this hour inction of their

ant the current ion of the Se-1st suggest itlerate persons. en that so many amed, laboring just, for an obfacts so undeniformly fail of pen? Sir, exuse the policy required it to a required gold the first bank be undervalubank has been gth which enves up, also enis is the answer et of the failure audable efforts nity of money. and this secret ch leads to the lies uncovered e road which k of the United at institution: s the hope of fe. Here then f the gold curthat currency prious, gold rearticle of merank, and to be se room for its ar notes. Let or of restoring in the right that first put er suffer that o prevent it. ary to descrat and expatiate upon the merits and advantages of a gold currency. These advantages had been too well known, from the earliest ages of the world, to be a subject of discussion in the nineteenth century; but, as it was the policy of the paper system to disparage that metal, and as that system, in its forty years' reign over the American people, had nearly destroyed a knowledge of that currency, he would briefly enumerate its leading and prominent advantages. 1. It had an intrinsic value, which gave it currency all over the world, to the full amount of that value, without regard to laws or circumstances. 2. It had a uniformity of value, which made it the safest standard of the value of property which the wisdom of man had ever yet discovered. 3. Its portability; which made it easy for the traveller to carry it about with him. 4. Its indestructibility; which made it the safest monev that people could keep in their houses. 5. Its inherent purity; which made it the hardest money to be counterfeited, and the easiest to be detected, and, therefore, the safest money for the people to handle. 6. Its superiority over all other money; which gave to its possessor the choice and command of all other money. 7. Its power over exchanges; gold being the currency which contributes most to the equalization of exchange, and keeping down the rate of exchange to the lowest and most uniform point. 8. Its power over the paper money; gold being the natural enemy of that system. and with fair play, able to hold it in check. 9. It is a constitutional currency and the people have a right to demand it, for their currency, as long as the present constitution is permitted to exist.

Mr. B. said, that the false valuation put upon gold had rendered the mint of the United States, so far as the gold coinage is concerned, a most ridiculous and absurd institution. It has coined, and that at a large expense to the United States, 2,262,717 pieces of gold, worth $11,852,890; and where are these pieces now? Not one of them to be seen! all sold, and exported! and so regular is this operation that the director of the mint, in his latest report to Congress, says that the new coined gold frequently remains in the mint, uncalled for, though ready for delivery, until the day arrives for a packet to sail to Europe. He calculates that two millions the whole of which, without a reform of the gold standard, will be conducted, like exiles, from the national mint to the sea-shore, and transported to foreign regions, to be sold for the benefit of the Bank of the United States.

Mr. B. said this was not the time to discuss the relative value of gold and silver, nor to urge the particular proportion which ought to be established between them. That would be the proper work of a committee. At present it might be sufficient, and not irrelevant, to say that this question was one of commerce-that it was purely and simply a mercantile problem -as much so as an acquisition of any ordinary merchandise from foreign countries could be. Gold goes where it finds its value, and that value is what the laws of great nations give it. In Mexico and South America—the countries which produce gold, and from which the United States must derive their chief supply—the value of gold is 16 to 1 over silver; in the island of Cuba it is 17 to 1; in Spain and Portugal it is 16 to 1; in the West Indies, generally, it is the same. It is not to be supposed that gold will come from these countries to the United States. if the importer is to lose one dollar in every sixteen that he brings; or that our own gold will remain with us, when an exporter can gain a dollar upon every fifteen that he carries out. Such results would be contrary to the laws of trade; and therefore we must place the same value upon gold that other nations do, if we wish to gain any part of theirs, or to regain any part of our own. Mr. B. said that the case of England and France was no exception to this rule. They rated gold at something less than 16 for 1, and still retained gold in circulation; but it was retained by force of peculiar laws and advantages which do not prevail in the United States. In England the circulation of gold was aided and protected by four subsidiary laws, neither of which exist here: one which prevented silver from being a tender for more than forty shillings; another which required the Bank of England to pay all its notes in gold; a third which suppressed the small note circulation; a fourth which alloyed their silver nine per cent. below the relative value of gold. In France the relative proportion of the two metals was also below what it was in Spain, Portugal, Mexico, and South America, and still a plentiful supply of native gold will be coined annually hereafter; of gold remained in circulation; but this result was aided by two peculiar causes; first, the total absence of a paper currency; secondly, the proximity of Spain, and the inferiority of Spanish manufactures, which gave to France a ready and a near market for the sale of her fine fabrics, which were paid for in the gold of the New World. In the United States, gold would have none of these subsidiary helps; on the contrary it would have to contend with a paper currency, and would have to be obtained, the product of our own mines excepted, from Mexico and South America, where it is rated as sixteen to one for silver. All these circumstances, and many others, would have to be taken into consideration in fixing a standard for the United States. Mr. B. repeated that there was nicety, but no difficulty, in adjusting the relative value of gold and silver so as to retain both in circulation. Several nations of antiquity had done it; some modern nations also. The English have both in circulation at this time. The French have both, and have had for thirty years. The States of this Union also had both in the time of the confederation; and retained them until this federal government was established, and the paper system adopted. Congress should not admit that it cannot do for the citizens of the United States, what so many monarchies have done for their subjects. Gentlemen, especially, who decry military chieftains, should not confess that they themselves cannot do for America, what a military chieftain did for France.

Mr. B. made his acknowledgments to the great apostle of American liberty (Mr. Jefferson), for the wise, practical idea, that the value of gold was a commercial question, to be settled by its value in other countries. He had seen that remark in the works of that great man, and treasured it up as teaching the plain and ready way to accomplish an apparently difficult object; and he fully concurred with the senator from South Carolina [Mr. Calhoun], that gold, in the United States, ought to be the preferred metal; not that silver should be expelled, but both retained; the mistake, of any, to be in favor of gold, instead of being against it.

IV. Mr. B. believed that it was the intention and declared meaning of the constitution, that foreign coins should pass currently as money, and at their full value, within the United States; that it was the duty of Congress to promote the circulation of these coins by giving them their full value; that this was the design of the States in conferring upon Congress the exclusive power of regulating the value of these coins; that all the laws of Congress for preventing the circulation of foreign coins, and underrating their value, were so many breaches of the constitution, and so many mischiefs inflicted upon the States; and that it was the bounden duty of Congress to repeal all such laws; and to restore foreign coins to the same free and favored circulation which they possessed when the federal constitution was adopted.

In support of the first branch of his first position Mr. B. quoted the words of the constitution which authorized Congress to regulate the value of foreign coins; secondly, the clause in the constitution which authorized Congress to provide for punishing the counterfeiting of current coin, in which term, foreign coin was included; thirdly, the clause which prohibited the States from making any thing but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts; a clause which did not limit the prohibition to domestic coins, and therefore included foreign ones, These three clauses, he said, were concurrent, and put foreign coin and domestic coin upon the same precise footing of equality, in every particular which concerned their current circulation, their value, and their protection from counterfeiters. Historical recollections were the next evidence to which Mr. B. referred to sustain his position. He said that foreign coins were the only coins known to the United States at the adoption of the constitution. No mint had been established up to that time. The coins of other nations furnished the currency, the exclusive metallic currency, which the States had used from the close of the Revolutionary War up to the formation of this federal government. It was these foreign coins then which the framers of the constitution had in view when they inserted all the clauses' in the constitution which bear upon the value and current circulation of coin; its protection from counterfeiters, and the prohibitory restriction upon the States with respect to the illegality of tenders of any thing except of gold and silver. To make this point still plainer, if plainer it could be made, Mr. B. adverted to the early statutes of Congress which related to foreign coins. He had seen no less than nine statutes, passed in the first four years of the action of this federal government, all enacted for the purpo protecting the purit lation of these coins coins of the principa in these statutes, bu with whom we trade be the coin, or how might be the nation of the act of 1789, th which equalled those and Portugal, in finer 89 cents the pennywei all nations, which eq in fineness, were to h ounce. Under these influx of the precious loons, guineas, half jo familiar currency of well as of merchants stantial citizen then of small scales to w used by his posterity great many years -: grown up-since these original purpose; nor again for that use unti of '89 and '90, for th foreign coins, shall again early statutes, added to could leave no doubt of constitution, and that for ed to be for ever curr States.

With this obvious n tion, and the undeniab dounded to the United tion of the precious me tions, the inquiry natu know for what reason outlawed by the Congre and driven from circul mind wishes to know ! brought, in a few short tion of the constitution. strument in a vital par nine statutes which the of foreign coin-and to tion of that coin whose regulate, and whose puri

Sir, said Mr. B., I an always in the same tra evils of our currency to n of the States xclusive power coins; that all ng the circulaing their value. nstitution, and he States; and Jongress to rere foreign coins culation which onstitution was

of his first po-

f the constituto regulate the , the clause in ed Congress to rfeiting of curoin was includprohibited the at gold and sillebts; a clause ion to domestic foreign ones. ere concurrent, e coin upon the in every partient circulation, from counterwere the next I to sustain his coins were the 1 States at the mint had been coins of other the exclusive ates had used ary War up to overnment. It ch the framers when they institution which circulation of feiters, and the States with ref any thing exthis point still ide, Mr. B. ad-Congress which ad seen no less first four years mment, all enacted for the purpose of regulating the value, protecting the purity, and promoting the circulation of these coins. Not only the well-known coins of the principal nations were provided for in these statutes, but the coins of all the nations with whom we traded, how rare or small might be the coin, or how remote or inconsiderable might be the nation. By a general provision of the act of 1789, the gold coins of all nations. which equalled those of England, France, Spain and Portugal, in fineness, were to be current at 89 cents the pennyweight; and the silver coins of all nations, which equalled the Spanish dollar in fineness, were to be current at 111 cents the ounce. Under these general provisions, a great influx of the precious metals took place; doubloons, guineas, half joes, were the common and familiar currency of farmers and laborers, as well as of merchants and traders. Every substantial citizen then kept in his house a pair of small scales to weigh gold, which are now used by his posterity to weigh physic. It is a great many years - a whole generation has grown up-since these scales were used for their original purpose; nor will they ever be needed again for that use until the just and wise laws of '89 and '90, for the general circulation of foreign coins, shall again be put in force. These early statutes, added to historical recollections, could leave no doubt of the true meaning of the constitution, and that foreign coins were intended to be for ever current within the United

With this obvious meaning of the constitution, and the undeniable advantage which redounded to the United States from the acquisition of the precious metals from all foreign nations, the inquiry naturally presents itself, to know for what reason these coins have been outlawed by the Congress of the United States, and driven from circulation? The inquiring mind wishes to know how Congress could be brought, in a few short years after the adoption of the constitution, to contradict that instrument in a vital particular-to repeal the nine statutes which they had passed in favor of foreign coin-and to illegalize the circulation of that coin whose value they were to regulate, and whose purity to protect?

Sir, said Mr. B., I am unwilling to appear always in the same train, tracing up all the mischiefs—the introduction of the paper sys tem, and the first establishment of a federal bank among us. But justice must have its sway; historical truth must take its course; facts must be told; and authentic proof shall supply the place of narrative and assertion. We ascend, then, to the year '91-to the exhibition of the plan for the support of public credit-and see in that plan, as one of its features, a proposition for the establishment of a national mint; and in that establishment a subsidiary engine for the support of the federal bank. We have already seen that in the proposition for the establishment of the mint, gold was largely undervalued; and that this undervaluation has driven gold from the country and left a vacuum for the circulation of federal bank notes; we are now to see that the same mint establishment was to give further aid to the circulation of these notes, by excluding foreign coins, both gold and silver, from circulation, and thus enlarging the vacuum which was to be filled by bank paper. This is what we are now to see; and to see it, we will look at the plan for the support of public credit, and that feature of the plan which proposes the establishment of a national mint.

Mr. B. would remark, that four points were presented in this plan: 1. The eventual abolition of the currency of foreign coins; 2. The reduction of their value while allowed to circulate; 3. The substitution of domestic coins; and, 4. The substitution of bank notes in place of the uncurrent and undervalued foreign coins. Such were the recommendations of Secretary Hamilton; and legislative enactments quickly followed to convert his recommendations into law. The only power the constitution had given to Congress over foreign coins, was a power to regulate their value, and to protect them from debasement by counterfeiters. It was certainly a most strange construction of that authority, first, to underrate the value of these coins, and next, to prohibit their circulation! Yet both things were done. The mint went into operation in 1794; foreign coins were to cease to be a legal tender in 1797; but, at the end of that time, the contingencies on which the Secretary calculated, to enable the country to do without foreign coins, had not occurred; the substitutes had not appeared; the mint had not evils of our currency to the same fountain of supplied the adequate quantity of domestic coin, nor had the circulation of bank notes become sufficiently familiar to the people to supersede gold. The law for the exclusion of foreign coins was found to be impracticable; and a suspension of it for three years was enacted. At the end of this time the evil was found to be as great as ever; and a further suspension of three years was made. This third term of three years also rolled over, the supply of domestic coins was still found to be inadequate, and the people continued to be as averse as ever to the bank note substitute. A fourth suspension of the law became necessary, and in 1806 a further suspension for three years was made; after that a fifth, and finally a sixth suspension, each for the period of three years; which brought the period for the actual and final cessation of the circulation of foreign coins, to the month of November, 1819. From that time there was no further suspension of the prohibitory act. An exception was continued, and still remains, in favor of Spanish milled dollars and parts of dollars; but all other foreign coins, even those of Mexico and all the South American States, have ceased to be a legal tender, and have lost their character of current money within the United States. Their value is degraded to the mint price of bullion; and thus the constitutional currency becomes an article of merchandise and exportation. Even the Spanish milled dollar, though continued as a legal tender, is valued, not as money, but for the pure silver in it, and is therefore undervalued three or four per cent. and becomes an article of merchandise. The Bank of the United States has collected and sold 4,450,000 of them. Every money dealer is employed in buying, selling, and exporting them. The South and West, which receives them, is stripped of them.

Having gone through this narrative of facts, and shown the exclusion of foreign coins from circulation to be a part of the paper system, and intended to facilitate the substitution of a bank note currency, Mr B. went on to state the injuries resulting from the measure. At the head of these injuries he was bound to place the violation of the constitution of the United States, which clearly intended that foreign coins should circulate among us, and which, in giving Congress authority to regulate their value, and to protect them from counterfeiters, could never have intended to stop their circulation, and to abandon them to debasement. 2. He denounced this exclusion of foreign coins as a fraud, and a fraud of the most injurious nature, upon the people of the States. The States had surrendered their power over the coinage to Congress: they made the surrender in language which clearly implied that their currency of foreign coins was to be continued to thera; yet that currency is suppressed; a currency of intrinsic value, for which they paid interest to nobody, is suppressed; and a currency without intrinsic value, a currency of paper subject to every fluctuation, and for the supply of which corporate bodies receive interest, is substituted in its place. 3. He objected to this suppression as depriving the whole Union, and especially the Western States, of their due and necessary supply of hard money. Since that law took effect, the United States had only been a thoroughfare for foreign coins to pass through. All that was brought into the country, had to go out of the country. It was exported as fast as imported. The custom-house books proved this fact. They proved, that from 1821 to 1833, the imports of specie were $89,428,462; the exports, for the same time, were $88,821,433; lacking but three quarters of a million of being precisely equal to the imports! Some of this coin was recoined before it was exported, a foolish and expensive operation on the part of the United States; but the greater part was exported in the same form that it was received. Mr. B. had only been able to get the exports and imports from 1821; if he could have obtained those of 1820, and the concluding part of 1819, when the prohibitory law took effect, the amount would have been about ninety-six millions of dollars; the whole of which was lost to the country by the prohibitory law, while much of it would have been saved, and retained for home circulation if it had not been for this law. The loss of this great sum in specie was an injury to the whole Union, but especially to the Western States, whose sole resource for coin was from foreign countries; for the coinage of the mint could never flow into that region; there was nothing in the course of trade and exchanges, to carry money from the Atlantic States to the West; and the mint, if it coined thousands of millions, could not supply them. The taking effect of the law in the year 1819, was an aggravation of the injury. It was the most unfortunate and ruinous of all times for driving specie from the country. The Wes ertions to aid the co stretched their issue their notes had gone federal government. Bank of the United Smanded specie. Thu was increased at the ply was diminished; of the Western bank natural result of thes.

natural result of thes Having shown the country from the ope called upon its friends now be given for not r that, of the two cause its origin, one had fail had succeeded to a der and the nuisance of t was to induce an ade coins to be brought t ed; the other to facilit bank note currency. go to the mint, those e ported in its own neigh were exported nearly a authority of the direct ready been quoted to s ed gold was transferre tional mint to the pac .rope. The custom-hou large exportation of d would be found under t Manufactures Exported figure in the list of t year 1832, it amounted the year 1833, to $1,41 it was more or less; so had degenerated into a of gold and silver, for countries. But the coin leans, at Charleston, and mote from Philadelphia, recoined. They were, in from the place of import the people as current m the prohibitory law of 18 part was exported—for coin could incur the troub of sending it some hundre to Philadelphia, to have i incurring the same exper

s a fraud, and a sture, upon the tes had surrenge to Congress: language which ency of foreign thera; vet that ency of intrinsic est to nobody, is ithout intrinsic ct to every flucwhich corporate uted in its place. ion as depriving ly the Western v supply of hard ffect, the United hfare for foreign at was brought of the country. orted. The cust. They proved, aports of specie ts, for the same z but three quarselv equal to the as recoined beh and expensive ited States; but in the same form d only been able from 1821; if he 320, and the conprohibitory law have been about ; the whole of by the prohibiould have been circulation, if it 'he loss of this iry to the whole Western States, was from foreign the mint could ere was nothing changes, to carry es to the West; ands of millions, taking effect of an aggravation unfortunate and ; specie from the country. The Western banks, from their exertions to aid the country during the war, had stretched their issues to the utmost limit; their notes had gone into the land offices; the federal government turned them over to the Bank of the United States; and that bank demanded specie. Thus, the necessity for specie was increased at the very moment that the supply was diminished; and the general stoppage of the Western banks, was the inevitable and natural result of these combined circumstances.

Having shown the great evils resulting to the country from the operation of this law, Mr. B. called upon its friends to tell what reason could now be given for not repealing it? He affirmed that, of the two causes to which the law owed its origin, one had failed in toto, and-the other had succeeded to a degree to make it the curse and the nuisance of the country. One reason was to induce an adequate supply of foreign coins to be brought to the mint, to be recoined; the other to facilitate the substitution of a bank note currency. The foreign coins did not go to the mint, those excepted which were imported in its own neighborhood; and even these were exported nearly as fast as recoined. The authority of the director of the mint had already been quoted to show that the new coined gold was transferred direct from the national mint to the packet ships, bound to Eu-.rope. The custom-house returns showed the large exportation of domestic coins. They would be found under the head of "Domestic Manufactures Exported;" and made a large figure in the list of these exports. In the year 1832, it amounted to $2,058,474, and in the year 1833, to $1,410,941; and every year it was more or less; so that the national mint had degenerated into a domestic manufactory of gold and silver, for exportation to foreign countries. But the coins imported at New Orleans, at Charleston, and at other points remote from Philadelphia, did not go there to be recoined. They were, in part, exported direct from the place of import, and in part used by the people as current money, in disregard of the prohibitory law of 1819. But the greater part was exported-for no owner of foreign coin could incur the trouble, risk, and expense, of sending it some hundred or a thousand miles to Philadelphia, to have it recoined; and then incurring the same expense, risk, and trouble (lying out of the use of the money, and receiving no interest all the while), of bringing it back to be put into circulation; with the further risk of a deduction for want of standard fineness at the mint, when he could sell and export it upon the spot. Foreign coins could not be recoined, so as to supply the Union, by a solitary mint on the Atlantic coast. The great West could only be supplied from New Orleans. A branch of the mint, placed there, could supply the West with domestic coins. Mexico, since she became a free country, has established seven mints in different places, because it was troublesome and expensive to carry bullion from all parts of the country to be coined in the capital; and when coined there, there was nothing in the course of trade to carry them back into the country; and the owners of it would not be at the expense and trouble of carrying it back, and getting it into circulation, being the exact state of things at present in the gold mines of the Southern States. The United States, upon the same principles and for the same reasons, should establish branches of the mint in the South, convenient to the gold mine region, and at New Orleans, for the benefit of that city and the West. Without a branch of the mint at New Orleans, the admission of foreign coins is indispensable to the West; and thus the interest of that region joins itself to the voice of the constitution in demanding the immediate repeal of all laws for illegalizing the circulation of these coins, and for sinking them from their current value as money, to their mint value as bullion. The design of supplying the mint with foreign coins. for recoinage, had then failed; and in that respect the exclusion of foreign coins has failed in one of its objects-in the other, that of making room for a substitute of bank notes, the success of the scheme has been complete, excessive, and deplorable.

Foreign coins were again made a legal tender, their value regulated and their importation encouraged, at the expiration of the charter of the first Bank of the United States. This continued to be the case until after the present Bank of the United States was chartered; as soon as that event happened, and bank policy again became predominant in the halls of Congress, the circulation of foreign coins was again struck at and, in the second year of the existence of the bank, the old act of 1793, for rendering these coins uncurrent, was carried into final and complete effect. Since that time, the bank has enjoyed all her advantages from this exclusion. The expulsion of these coins has created a vacuum, to be filled up by her small note circulation; the traffic and trade in them has been as large a source of profit to her as of loss to the country. Gold coin she has sold at an advance of five or six per cent.; silver coin at about two or three per cent.; and, her hand being in, she made no difference between selling domestic coin and foreign coin. Although forbid by her charter to deal in coin, she has employed her branches to gather $40,040,000 of coin from the States; a large part of which she admits that she has sold and transported to Europe. For the sale of the foreign coin, she sets up the lawyer-like plea, that it is not coin, but bullion! resting the validity of the plea upon English statute law! while, by the constitution of the United States, all foreign coins are coin; while, by her own charter, the coins, both gold and silver, of Great Britain, France, Spain, and Portugal, and their dominions, are declared to be coin; and, as such, made receivable in payment of the specie proportion of the bank stock—and. worse yet! while Spanish dollars, by statute, remain the current coin of the United States. the bank admits the sale of 4,450,142 of these identical Spanish milled dollars!

Mr. B. then took a rapid view of the present condition of the statute currency of the United States-of that currency which was a legal tender-that currency with which a debtor had a right by law to protect his property from execution, and his body from jail, by offering it as a matter of right, to his creditor in payment of his debt. He stated this statute currency to be: 1st. Coins from the mint of the United States: 2dly. Spanish milled dollars, and the parts of such dollars. This was the sum total of the statute currency of the United States; for happily no paper of any bank, State or federal, could be made a legal tender. This is the sum totalout of which any man in debt can legally pay has debt: and what is his chance for making payment out of this brief list? Let us see. Coinage from the mint: not a particle of gold, nor a single whole dollar to be found; very few half dollars, except in the neighborhood of the States and its branches; the twenty, ten, and five cent pieces scarcely seen, except as a curiosity, in the interior parts of the country So much for the domestic coinage. Now for the Spanish milled dollars-how do they stand in the United States? Nearly as scarce as our own dollars; for, there has been none coined since Spain lost her dominion over her colonies in the New World; and the coinage of these colonies, now independent States, neither is in law, nor in fact, Spanish milled. That term belongs to the coinage of the Spanish crown, with a Spanish king's head upon the face of it: although the coin of the new States, the silver dollars of Mexico, Central America, Peru, and Chili, are superior to Spanish dollars, in value. because they contain more pure silver, still they are not a tender; and all the francs from France, in a word, all foreign coin except Spanish milled dollars, the coinage of which has ceased, and the country stripped of all that were in it, by the Bank of the United States, are uncurrent, and illegal as tenders: so that the people of the United States are reduced to so small a list, and so small a supply of statute currency, out of which debts can legally be paid, that it may be fairly assumed that the whole debtor part of the community lie at the mercy of their creditors, to have their bodies sent to jail, or their property sold for sothing, at any time that their creditors please. To such a condition are the free and high-minded inhabitants of this country reduced! and reduced by the power and policy of the first and second Banks of the United States, and the controlling influence which they have exercised over the moneyed system of the Union, from the year 1791 down to the present day.

Mr. B. would conclude what he had to say. on this head, with one remark; it was this: that while the gold and silver coin of all the monarchs of Europe were excluded from circulation in the United States, the paper notes of their subjects were received as current money. The Bank of the United States was, in a great degree, a foreign institution. Foreigners held a great part of its stock, and may hold it all The paper notes issued by this institution, thus composed in great part of the subjects of European kings, are made legal tenders to the federal government, and thus forced into circulamint, and in the hands of the Bank of the United | tion among the people; while the gold and sil ver coin of the kings rejected and exclude country! He deman display the vice and de tem in a more revolti of view than this sing

V. Mr. B. expressed ing so many points of sentiments on currenc tor from South Carol form of the gold curre -evils of excessive ba suppression of small n which they agreed, and should be found actin measures should be pu tive action. He regret concur with that senato which all the others mig dinate and accessorial. longed existence of the States! and especially which that senator had operation of that institu lator of the local curren supplier of a general cu On both these points, he bly differed-from that ! all other views of that to the point which the se rolina marked out as th question of debate; and question simply under its rency; he would view the regulator of local currenof a national currency, an sons for differing - irrec from the senator from Sou points.

Mr. B. took three distin Bank of the United State currency: 1, that this was longed to the government c 2, that it could not be do ought not be delegated to a

1. The regulation of the Mr B. said, was one of the delicate acts of sovereign 1 cisely equivalent to the po rency; for, a power to make in effect, a power to make was the coining power; a p twenty, ten, and . except as a cuof the country inage. Now for ow do they stand v as scarce as our een none coined n over her coloe coinage of these tes neither is in led. That term e Spanish crown. on the face of it: States, the silver merica. Peru, and dollars, in value. pure silver, still 1 the francs from coin except Spange of which has ipped of all that he United States, nders: so that the are reduced to so supply of statute ts can legally be assumed that the munity lie at the have their bodies sold for sothing. itors please. To and high-minded reduced! and reey of the first and 1 States, and the ney have exercised of the Union, from esent day.

Vol. I.—29

at he had to sav. ark; it was this: ver coin of all the cluded from circuhe paper notes of as current money. es was, in a great

Foreigners held d may hold it all. is institution, thus subjects of Eurotenders to the fedorced into circulae the gold and sil ver coin of the kings to which they belong, is rejected and excluded, and expelled from the country! He demanded if any thing could display the vice and deformity of the paper system in a more revolting and humiliating point of view than this single fact?

V. Mr. B, expressed his satisfaction at finding so many points of concurrence between his sentiments on currency, and those of the senator from South Carolina (Mr. Calhoun). Reform of the gold currency-recovery of specie -evils of excessive banking-and the eventual suppression of small notes—were all points in which they agreed, and on which he hoped they should be found acting together when these measures should be put to the test of legislative action. He regretted that he could not concur with that senator on the great points to which all the others might be found to be subordinate and accessorial. He alluded to the prolonged existence of the Bank of the United States! and especially to the practical views which that senator had taken of the beneficial operation of that institution, first, as the regulator of the local currencies, and next, as the supplier of a general currency to the Union. On both these points, he differed—immeasurably differed—from that senator; and dropping all other views of that bank, he came at once to the point which the senator from South Carolina marked out as the true and practical question of debate; and would discuss that question simply under its relation to the currency; he would view the bank simply as the regulator of local currencies and the supplier of a national currency, and would give his reasons for differing - irreconcilably differing from the senator from South Carolina on these

Mr. B. took three distinct objections to the Bank of the United States, as a regulator of currency: 1, that this was a power which belonged to the government of the United States: 2, that it could not be delegated; 3, that it ought not be delegated to any bank.

1. The regulation of the currency of a nation. MI B. said, was one of the highest and most delicate acts of sovereign power. It was presisely equivalent to the power to create currency; for, a power to make more or less, was, in effect, a power to make much or none. It to the sovereign; and, where a paper currency was tolerated, the coining power was swallowed up and superseded by the manufactory which emitted paper. In the present state of the currency of the United States, the federal bank was the mint for issuing money; the federal mint was a manufactory for preparing gold and silver for exportation. The States, in the formation of the constitution, gave the coining power to Congress; with that power, they gave authority to regulate the currency of the Union. by regulating the value of gold and silver, and preventing any thing but metallic money from being made a tender in payment of debts. It. is by the exercise of these powers that the federal government is to regulate the currency of the Union; and all the departments of the government are required to act their parts in effecting the regulation: the Congress, as the department that passes the law; the President, as the authority that recommends it, approves it, and sees that it is faithfully executed; the judiciary, as standing between the debtor and creditor, and preventing the execution from being discharged by any thing but gold and silver: and that at the rate which the legislative department has fixed. This is the power, and sole power, of regulating currency which the federal constitution contains; this power is vested in the federal government, not in one department of it, but in the joint action of the three departments; and while this power is exercised by the government, the currency of the whole Union will be regulated, and the regulation effected according to the intention of the constitution, by keeping all the local banks up to the point of specie payment; and thereby making the value of their notes equivalent to specie.

2. This great and delicate power, thus involving the sacred relations of debtor and creditor. and the actual rise or fall in the value of every man's property, Mr. B. undertook to affirm could not be delegated. It was a trust from the State governments to the federal government. The State governments divested themselves of this power, and invested the federal government with it, and made its exercise depend upon the three branches of the new gov ernment; and this new government could no more delegate it, than they could delegate any other great power which they were bound to was the coining power; a power that belonged execute themselves. Not a word of this regu lating power, Mr. B. said, was heard of when the first bank was chartered, in the year 1791. No person whispered such a reason for the establishment of a bank at that time; the whole conception is newfangled—an afterthought—growing out of the very evils which the bank itself has brought upon the country, and which are to be cured by putting down that great bank; after which, the Congress and the judiciary will easily manage the small banks, by holding them up to specie payments, and excluding every misolid note from revenue pay-

Vol. I.—29

3. Mr. B. said that the government ought not to delegate this power, if it could. It was too great a power to be trusted to any banking company whatever, or to any authority but the highest and most responsible which was known to our form of government. The government itself ceased to be independent-it ceases to be safe-when the national currency is at the will of a company. The government can undertake no great enterprise, peither of war nor peace, without the consent and co-operation of that company; it cannot count its revenues for six months ahead without referring to the action of that company—its friendship or its enmityits concurrence or opposition—to see how far that company will permit money to be plenty, or make it scarce; how far it will let the moneved system go on regularly, or throw it into disorder; how far it will suit the interests, or policy, of that company to create a tempest, or to suffer a calm, in the moneyed ocean. The people are not safe when a company has such a power. The temptation is too great—the opportunity too easy-to put up and put down prices; to make and break fortunes; to bring the whole community upon its knees to the Neptunes who preside over the flux and reflux of paper. All property is at their mercy. The price of real estate—of every growing crop of every staple article in market-is at their command. Stocks are their playthings-their gambling theatre-on which they gamble daily, with as little secrecy, and as little morality. and far more mischief to fortunes, than common gamblers carry on their operations. The philosophic Voltaire, a century ago, from his retreat in Ferney, gave a lively description of this operation, by which he was made a winner, without the crouble of playing. I have a friend, said he, who is a director in the Bank of France who writes to me when they are going to make money plenty, and make stocks rise, and then I give orders to my broker to sell; and he writes to me when they are going to make money scarce, and make stocks fall, and then I write to my broker to buy; and thus, at a hundred leagues from Paris, and without moving from my chair, I make money. This, said Mr. B., is the operation on stocks to the present day; and it cannot be safe to the holders of stock that there should be a moneyed power great enough in this country to raise and depress the prices of their property at pleasure. The great cities of the Union are not safe, while a company, in any other city, have power over their moneyed system, and are able, by making money scarce or plenty-by exciting panics and alarms-to put up, or put down, the price of the staple articles in which they deal. Every commercial city, for its own safety, should have an independent moneved system-should be free from the control and regulation of a distant, possibly a rival city, in the means of carrying on its own trade. Thus, the safety of the government, the safety of the people, the interest of all owners of property -of all growing crops-the holders of all stocks -the exporters of all staple articles-require that the regulation of the currency should be kept out of the hands of a great banking company; that it should remain where the constitu tion placed it-in the hands of the federal government-in the hands of their representatives who are elected by them, responsible to them, may be exchanged by them, who can pass no law for regulating currency which will not bear upon themselves as well as upon their constituents. This is what the safety of the community requires; and, for one, he (Mr. B.) would not, if he could, delegate the power of regulating the currency of this great country to any banking company whatsoever. It was a power too tremendous to be trusted to a company. The States thought it too great a power to be trusted to the State governments; he (Mr. B.) thought so too. The States confided it to the federal government; he, for one, would confine it to the federal government, and would make that government exercise it. Above all, he would not confer it upon a bank which was itself above regulation; and on this point he called upon the Senate to recollect the question, apparently trite, but replete with profosagacity which it belongs to sess, and to express—which a gress of 1816, when this bank discussion, and the regulation was one of the attributes with be invested; he alluded to friend (Mr. Randolph), and to thouse to tell him who was That single question contains in its allusion, the exact history the United States, and of the F. States, at this day. It was a into the dark vista of futurity, what we all see in 1834.

Mr. B. took up the second p disagreed with the Senator from [Mr. Calhoun], namely, the caps of the United States to suppl rency to the Union. In handli he would drop all other inqu every other objection—overlool ation of the constitutionality ar the bank, and confine himself to tion of its ability to diffuse and lation a paper currency over this He would come to the questic would come to it at his table, o his counting-room, looking to the of a money system. It was a qu men to think of, and for abler me to discuss. It involved the thec ence of banking-Mr. B. would s phy of banking, if such a term or to a moneyed system. It was a studied as the philosopher studies govern the material world—as h the laws of gravitation and att govern the movements of the pla the waters of the mountains to th ocean. The moneyed system, said laws of attraction and gravitationand adhesion; and no man may be indulge the hope of establishing a tem contrary to its own laws. I man has not yet devised a bankpage is yet to be written which to -which has diffused over an exter and retained in circulation, a gener rency. England is too small a t complete example; but even there tility is confessed, and has been co ne Bank of France trite but replete with profound sagacity—that | century. The Bank of England, in her greatest r are going to make sagacity which it belongs to great men to poscks rise, and then I sess, and to express-which was put to the Consell; and he writes gress of 1816, when this bank charter was under ng to make money discussion, and the regulation of the currency and then I write to was one of the attributes with which it was to thus, at a hundred be invested; he alluded to his late esteemed out moving from my friend (Mr. Randolph), and to his call upon the , said Mr. B., is the House to tell him who was to bell the cat? present day; and it That single question contains in its answer, and s of stock that there in its allusion, the exact history of the people of great enough in this the United States, and of the Bank of the United s the prices of their States, at this day. It was a flash of lightning great cities of the into the dark vista of futurity, showing in 1816 a company, in any what we all see in 1834. · their moneyed sysng money scarce or and alarms-to put of the staple articles

commercial city, for an independent mo-

ree from the control possibly a rival city,

on its own trade.

rnment, the safety of

ll owners of property holders of all stocks

ple articles-require currency should be a great banking com-

n where the constitu

ds of the federal go-

their representatives

responsible to them,

m, who can pass no

which will not bear

s upon their constitu-

ety of the community

(Mr. B.) would not,

wer of regulating the

intry to any banking

was a power too treto a company. The

a power to be trusted

he (Mr. B.) thought

ed it to the federal gould confine it to the vould make that go-

ove all, he would not

hich was itself above

point he called upon

e question, apparently

Mr. B. took up the second point on which he disagreed with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Calhoun], namely, the capacity of the Bank of the United States to supply a general currency to the Union. In handling this question he would drop all other inquiries-lay aside every other objection-overlook every consideration of the constitutionality and expediency of the bank, and confine himself to the strict question of its ability to diffuse and retain in circulation a paper currency over this extended Union. He would come to the question as a banker would come to it at his table, or a merchant in his counting-room, looking to the mere operation of a money system. It was a question for wise men to think of, and for abler men than himself to discuss. It involved the theory and the science of banking-Mr. B. would say the philosophy of banking, if such a term could be applied to a moneyed system. It was a question to be studied as the philosopher studies the laws which govern the material world—as he would study the laws of gravitation and attraction which govern the movements of the planets, or draw the waters of the mountains to the level of the ocean. The moneyed system, said Mr. B., has its laws of attraction and gravitation-of repulsion and adhesion; and no man may be permitted to indulge the hope of establishing a moneyed system contrary to its own laws. The genius of man has not yet devised a bank—the historic page is yet to be written which tells of a bank -which has diffused over an extensive country, and retained in circulation, a general paper currency. England is too small a theatre for a complete example; but even there the impossibility is confessed, and has been confessed for a issuing their own notes, they had so far forgot day of pre-eminence, could not furnish a general currency for England alone-a territory not larger than Virginia. The country banks furnished the local paper currency, and still furnish it as far as it is used. They carried on their banking upon Bank of England notes, until the gold currency was restored; and local paper formed the mass of local circulation. The notes of the Bank of England flowed to the great commercial capitals, and made but brief sojourn in the counties. But England is not a fair example for the United States; it is too small; a fairer example is to be found nearer home, in our own country, and in this very Bank of the United States which is now existing, and in favor of which the function of supplying a general currency to this extended confederacy is claimed. We have the experiment of this bank, not once, but twice made; and each experiment proves the truth of the laws which govern the system. The theory of bank circulation, over an extended territory, is this, that you may put out as many notes as you may in any one place, they will immediately fall into the track of commerceinto the current of trade-into the course of exchange-and follow that current wherever it leads. In these United States the current sets from every part of the interior, and especially from the South and West into the Northeastinto the four commercial cities north of the Potomac; Baltimore, Philadelphia, New-York, and Boston: and all the bank notes which will pass for money in those places, fall into the current which sets in that direction. When there, there is nothing in the course of trade to bring them back. There is no reflux in that current! It is a trade-wind which blows twelve months in the year in the same direction. This is the theory of bank circulation over extended territory; and the history of the present bank is an exemplification of the truth of that theory. Listen to Mr. Cheves. Read his report made to the stockholders at their triennial meeting in 1822. He stated this law of circulation, and explained the inevitable tendency of the branch bank notes to flow to the Northeast; the impossibility of preventing it; and the resolution which he had taken and executed, to close all the Southern and Western branches, and prevent them from issuing any more notes. Even while their charter as to carry on operations, in part, upon the notes of the local banks-having collected those notes in great quantity, and loaned them out. This was reported by the investigating committee of 1819, and made one of the charges of misconduct against the bank at that time. To counteract this tendency, the bank applied to Congress for leave to issue their bank notes on terms which would have made them a mere local currency. Congress refused it; but the bank is now attempting to do it herself, by refusing to take the notes received in payment of the federal revenue, and sending it back to be paid where issued. Such was the history of the branch bank notes, and which caused that currency to disappear from all the interior, and from the whole South and West, so soon after the bank got into operation. The attempt to keep out branch notes, or to send the notes of the mother bank to any distance, being found impracticable, there was no branch currency of any kind in circulation for a period of eight or nine years, until the year 1827, when the branch checks were invented, to perform the miracle which notes could not. Mr. B. would say nothing about the legality of that invention; he would now treat them as a legal issue under the charter; and in that most favorable point of view for them, he would show that these branch checks were nothing but a quack remedy-an empirical contrivance—which made things worse. By their nature they were as strongly attracted to the Northeast as the branch notes had been; by their terms they were still more strongly attracted, for they bore Philadelphia on their face! they were payable at the mother bank! and, of course, would naturally flow to that place for use or payment. This was their destiny, and most punctually did they fulfil it. Never did the trade-winds blow more truly-never did the gulf stream flow more regularly—than those checks flowed to the Northeast! The average of four years next ensuing the invention of these checks, which went to the mother bank, or to the Atlantic branches north of the Potomac, including the branch notes which flowed with them, was about nineteen millions of dollars per annum! Mr. B. then exhibited a table to prove what he alleged, and from which it appeared that the flow of the branch paper to the Northeast was as regular and uniform as an operation of nature; that each city according to its commercial importance, received a greater or less proportion of this inland paper gulf stream; and that the annual variation was so slight as only to prove the regularity of the laws by which it was governed. The following is the table which he exhibited. It was one of the tabular statements obtained by the investigating committee in 1832:

Amount of Branch Bank Paper received at-

		18,888,330	18,666,475	16,919,160	21,092,230
4.	Baltimore, .	1,487,100	1,420,860	1,876,820	1,588,680
8.	Boston,	1,010,730	1,844,170	1,794,750	1,816,480
2.	Philadelphia,	4,458,150	4,106,985	4,579,725	5,898,900
	New-York, .	11,988,850	11,294,960	9,168,870	12,284,820
		1828.	1829.	1880.	1831.
		0 25. 0	same a upo		u v

After exhibiting this table, and taking it for complete proof of the truth of the theory which he had laid down, and that it demonstrated the impossibility of keeping up a circulation of the United States Bank paper in the remote and interior parts of the Union, Mr. B. went on to say that the story was yet but half told-the mischief of this systematic flow of national currency to the Northeast, was but half disclosed; another curtain was vet to be lifted-another vista was yet to be opened-and the effect of the system upon the metallic currency of the States was to be shown to the people and the States. This view would show, that as fast as the checks or notes of any branch were taken up at the mother bank, or at the branches north of the Potomac, an account was opened against the branch from which they came. The branch was charged with the amount of the notes or checks taken up; and periodically served with a copy of the account, and commanded to send on specie or bills of exchange to redeem them. When redeemed, they were remitted to the branch from which they came; while on the road they were called notes in transitu; and when arrived they were put into circulation again at that placefell into the current immediately, which carried them back to the Northeast-there taken up again, charged to the branch—the branch required to redeem them again with specie or bills of exchange; and then returned to her, to be again put into circulation, and to undergo again and again, and until the branch could no longer redeem them, the endless process of flowing to the Northeast. The result of the whole was, is, and for ever will be, that the branch will have to redeem its circulation till redemption is impossible; until it has exhaust its specie; and then the cou branch is situated is worse o had a branch; for she had neith left. Mr. B. said that this wa view of the case to be rested assertion alone; it required evi incredulity, and to prove it 1 dence was at hand. He ther tables to show the amount of I the mother bank, under the system, had drawn from the St branches were situated. All t to the year 1831, the period t investigating committee had I inquiries. One of these statem amount abstracted from the was $40,040,622 20; another sh taken from the Southern and it was $22,523,387 94; anotl amount taken from the branch it was $12,815,798 10. Such, a been the result of the experime national paper currency over Union. Twice in eighteen year failed, leaving the country exhau cie, and destitute of paper. enough, but there was still an proving the same thing; it w the present amount of United Sta in circulation. Mr. B. had heard assertion made in so many memo to the Senate, that there was a g currency; that the Bank of the had been obliged to contract her consequence of the removal of the that her notes had become so sc could be found; and strongly co present dearth which now prev abundant plenty of these notes v over a happy land before that fatal to blast a state of unparalleled pro fact was, Mr. B. said, that the actu of the bank is greater now than the removal of the deposits; great been in any month but one for I year past. The discounts were d said, but the circulation was increa

Mr. B. then exhibited a table a tirculation of the Bank of the Unit the whole year 1833, and for the two of the present year; and stated it

reater or less progulf stream; and s so slight as only e laws by which it z is the table which the tabular statetigating committee per received at-

1880. 60 9,168,870 12,284,820 85 4,579,725 5,898,900 70 1,794,750 1,816,430 1,588,680 60 1.876.820

75 16,919,160 21,092,280 e, and taking it for of the theory which t demonstrated the a circulation of the in the remote and Mr. B. went on to but half told-the low of national curbut half disclosed; be lifted-another -and the effect of llic currency of the the people and the show, that as fast as ranch were taken up ie branches north of as opened against the ne. The branch was the notes or checks served with a copy ded to send on specie deem them. When ed to the branch from a the road they were d when arrived they gain at that placeiately, which carried ast-there taken up nch-the branch rein with specie or bills turned to her, to be and to undergo again anch could no longer process of flowing to of the whole was, is, the branch will have till redemption is imnossible; until it has exhausted the country of its specie; and then the country in which the branch is situated is worse off than before she had a branch; for she had neither notes nor specie left. Mr. B. said that this was too important a view of the case to be rested on argument and assertion alone; it required evidence to vanquish incredulity, and to prove it up; and that evidence was at hand. He then referred to two tables to show the amount of hard money which the mother bank, under the operation of this system, had drawn from the States in which her branches were situated. All the tables were up to the year 1831, the period to which the last investigating committee had brought up their inquiries. One of these statements showed the amount abstracted from the whole Union; it was $40,040,622 20; another showed the amount taken from the Southern and Western States; it was $22,523,387 94; another showed the amount taken from the branch at New Orleans; it was $12,815,798 10. Such, said Mr. B., has been the result of the experiment to diffuse a national paper currency over this extended Union. Twice in eighteen years it has totally failed, leaving the country exhausted of its specie and destitute of paper. This was proof enough, but there was still another mode of proving the same thing; it was the fact of the present amount of United States Bank notes in circulation. Mr. B. had heard with pain the assertion made in so many memorials presented to the Senate, that there was a great scarcity of currency; that the Bank of the United States had been obliged to contract her circulation in consequence of the removal of the deposits, and that her notes had become so scarce that none could be found; and strongly contrasting the present dearth which now prevails with the abundant plenty of these notes which reigned over a happy land before that fatal measure came to blast a state of unparalleled prosperity. The fact was, Mr. B. said, that the actual circulation of the bank is greater now than it was before the removal of the deposits; greater than it has been in any month but one for upwards of a year past. The discounts were diminished he said, but the circulation was increased.

Mr. B. then exhibited a table of the actual tirculation of the Bank of the United States for the whole year 1833, and for the two past months from the monthly statements of the bank, as printed and laid upon the tables of members. It was the net circulation—the quantity of notes and checks actually out-excluding all that were on the road returning to the branch banks. called notes in transitu, and which would not be counted till again issued by the branch to which they were returned.

The following is the table:

January, 1833, . . $17,666,444 February, " . . . 18,384.050 " . . . 18,083,205 March, " . . . 18,384,075 April, " . . . 18,991,200 May, " . . . 19,366,555 June, "...18,890,505 July, " . . . 18,413,287 August, September, " . . . 19,128,189 " . . . 18,518,000 October, November, " . . . 18,650,912 December, " . . not found. January, 1834, . . 19,208,375 February, " . . . 19,260,472

By comparing the circulation of each month, as exhibited on this table, Mr. B. said, it would be seen that the quantity of United States Bank notes now in circulation is three quarters of a million greater than it was in October last, and a million and a half greater than it was in January, 1833. How, then, are we to account for this cry of no money, in which so many respectable men join? It is in the single fact of their flow to the Northeast. The pigeons, which lately obscured the air with their numbers, have all taken their flight to the North! But pigeons will return of themselves, whereas these bank notes will never return till they are purchased with gold and silver, and brought back. Mr. B. then alluded to a petition from a meeting in his native State, North Carolina, and in which one of his esteemed friends (Mr. Carson) late a member of the House of Representatives, was a principal actor, and which stated the absolute disappearance of United States Bank notes from all that region of country. Certainly the petition was true in that statement; but it is equally true that it was mistaken in supposing that the circulation of the bank was diminished. The table which he had read had of the present year; and stated it to be taken shown the contrary; it showed an increase, instead of a diminution, of the circulation. The only difference was that it had all left that part of the country, and that it would do for ever! If a hundred millions of United States Bank notes were carried to the upper parts of North Carolina, and put into circulation, it would be but a short time before the whole would have fallen into the current which sweeps the paper of that bank to the Northeast. Mr. B. said there were four other classes of proof which he could bring in, but it would be a consumption of time, and a work of supererogation. He would not detail them, but state their heads: 1. One was the innumerable orders which the mother bank had forwarded to her branches to send on specie and bills of exchange to redeem their circulation—to pour in reinforcements to the points to which their circulation tends; 2. Another was in the examination of Mr. Biddle, president of the bank, by the investigating committee, in 1832, in which this absorbing tendency of the branch paper to flow to the Northeast was fully charged and admitted; 3. A third was in the monthly statement of the notes in transitu, which amount to an average of four millions and a half for the last twelve months, making fifty millions for the year; and which consist, by far the greater part, of branch notes and checks redeemed in the Northeast, purchased back by the branches, and on their way back to the place from which they issued; and, 4. The last class of proof was in the fact, that the branches north of the Potomac, being unable or unwilling to redeem these notes any longer, actually ceased to redeem them last fall, even when taken in revenue payment to the United States, until coerced by the Secretary of the Treasury; and that they will not be redeemed for individuals now, and are actually degenerating into a mere local currency. Upon these proofs and arguments, Mr. B. rested his case, and held it to be fully established, first, by argument, founded in the nature of bank circulation over an extended territory; and secondly, by proof, derived from the operation of the present bank of the United States, that neither the present bank, nor any one that the wisdom of man can devise, can ever succeed in diffusing a general paper circulation over the States of this Union.

VI. Dropping every other objection to the bank-looking at it purely and simply as a supplier of national currency-he, Mr. B., could not consent to prolong the existence of the present bank. Certainly a profuse issue of paper at all points-an additional circulation of even a few millions poured out at the destitute pointswould make currency plenty for a little while. but for a little while only. Nothing permanent would result from such a measure. On the contrary, in one or two years, the destitution and distress would be greater than it now is. At the same time, it is completely in the power of the bank, at this moment, to grant relief, full adequate, instantaneous relief! In making this assertion, Mr B. meant to prove it; and to prove it, he meant to do it in a way that it should reach the understanding of every candid and impartial friend that the bank possessed; for he meant to discard and drop from the inquiry, all his own views upon the subject; to leave out of view every statement made, and every opinion entertained by himself, and his friends, and proceeed to the inquiry upon the evidence of the bank alone-upon that evidence which flowed from the bank directory itself, and from the most zealous, and best informed of its friends on this floor. Mr. B. assumed that a mere cessation to curtail discounts, at this time, would be a relief-that it would be the salvation of those who were pressed-and put an end to the cry of distress; he averred that this curtailment must now cease, or the bank must find a new reason for carrying it on; for the old reason is exhausted, and cannot apply. Mr. B. then took two distinct views to sustain his position; one founded in the actual conduct and present condition of the bank itself, and the other in a comparative view of the conduct and condition of the former Bank of the United States, at the approaching period of its dissolution.

I. As to the conduct and condition of the present bank.

Mr. B. appealed to the knowledge of all present for the accuracy of his assertion, when he said that the bank had now reduced her discounts, dollar for dollar, to the amount of public deposits withdrawn. The adversaries of the bank said the reduction was much larger than the abstraction; but he dropped that, and confined himself strictly to the admissions and declarations of the bank itself. Taking then the fact to be, as the bank alleged it to be, that she had merely brought down her business in proportion to the capital taken fro of course that there was no re her business any lower. Her -her actual strength-was th it was before the removal; ar could not be available for the ther dolla .. Next, as to her o undertook to affirm, and woul that the general condition of t ter now than it had been for that the bank was better able to increase her circulation, that of those past periods in which ishly accommodating the pu proof of this, Mr. B. had recou fund, always the true test of ; and showed it to be greater 1 been for two years past, when I culation were so much greater now. He took the month of 1 the whole amount of specie on h 347 59; when the net amount culation was $21,044,415; and discounts were $70,428,070 72 trasted it with the condition of this time, that is to say, in the 1 ary last, when the last return items stands thus: specie, $ net amount of notes in circulatio total discounts, $54,842,973 64 view of figures, taken from the turns, from which it appeared th the bank was nearly three millio it was in May, 1832, her net circ two millions less, and her loans upwards of fifteen millions less; submit it to all candid men to sa bank is not more able to accomm munity now than she was then? he would demand if she was no cease pressing them?

II. As to the comparative cone duct of the first Bank of the Un the period of its approaching diss Mr. B. took the condition of t Mr. Gallatin's statement of its a gress, made in January, 1811, just before the charter expired; and with discounts and loans of the bar 578,294 25, her capital being $10 that the amount of her loans, three fore her dissolution, was nearly in ne, Mr. B., could not ence of the present ssue of paper at all tion of even a few destitute pointsy for a little while, Nothing permanent asure. On the conthe destitution and nan it now is. At ely in the power of to grant relief, full, of! In making this ove it; and to prove way that it should ' every candid and ik possessed; for he rom the inquiry, all ject : to leave out of , and every opinion his friends, and prothe evidence of the dence which flowed tself, and from the med of its friends on that a mere cessaat this time, would d be the salvation -and put an end to red that this curtailhe bank must find a n; for the old reason pply. Mr. B. then sustain his position; conduct and present f, and the other in a induct and condition United States, at the issolution.

nd condition of the

nowledge of all press assertion, when he ow reduced her disting the amount of public adversaries of the as much larger than pped that, and conce admissions and defined for the desired for th

portion to the capital taken from her, it followed of course that there was no reason for reducing her business any lower. Her relative position -her actual strength-was the same now that it was before the removal; and the old reason could not be available for the reduction of another dolla.. Next, as to her condition. Mr. B. undertook to affirm, and would quickly prove, that the general condition of the bank was better now than it had been for years past; and that the bank was better able to make loans, or to increase her circulation, than she was in any of those past periods in which she was so lavishly accommodating the public. For the proof of this, Mr. B. had recourse to her specie fund, always the true test of a bank's ability, and showed it to be greater now than it had been for two years past, when her loans and circulation were so much greater than they are now. He took the month of May, 1832, when the whole amount of specie on hand was $7.890. 347 59; when the net amount of notes in circulation was $21,044,415; and when the total discounts were $70,428,070 72: and then contrasted it with the condition of the bank at this time, that is to say, in the month of February last, when the last return was made; the items stands thus: specie, $10,523,385 69; net amount of notes in circulation, $19,260,472; total discounts, $54,842,973 64. From this view of figures, taken from the official bank returns, from which it appeared that the specie in the bank was nearly three millions greater than it was in May, 1832, her net circulation nearly two millions less, and her loans and discounts upwards of fifteen millions less; Mr. B. would submit it to all candid men to say whether the bank is not more able to accommodate the community now than she was then? At all events, he would demand if she was not now able to cease pressing them ?

II. As to the comparative condition and conduct of the first Bank of the United States at the period of its approaching dissolution.

Mr. B. took the condition of the bank from Mr. Gallatin's statement of its affairs to Congress, made in January, 1811, just three months before the charter expired; and which showed the discounts and loans of the bank to be $14,578,294 25, her capital being $10,000,000; so that the amount of her loans, three months before her dissolution, was nearly in proportion—near enough for all practical views-to the proportion which the present loans of the Bank of the United States bear to its capital of thirtyfive millions. Fifty per cent. upon the former would give fifteen millions; fifty per cent. upon the latter would give fifty-two millions and a half. To make the relative condition of the two banks precisely equal, it will be sufficient that the loans and discounts of the present bank shall be reduced to fifty-two millions by the month of January, 1836; that is to say, it need not make any further sensible reduction of its loans for nearly two years to come. Thus, the mere imitation of the conduct of the old bank wil be a relief to the community. A mere cessation to curtail, will put an end to the distress, and let the country go on, quietly and regularly. in its moneyed operations. If the bank will not do this-if it will go on to curtail-it is bound to give some new reason to the country. The old reason, of the removal of the deposits, will no longer answer. Mr. B. had no faith in that reason from the beginning, but he was now taking the bank upon her own evidence, and trying her upon her own reasons, and he held it to be impossible for her to go on without the production of a reason. The hostility of the government-rather an incomprehensible, and altogether a gratuitous reason, from the beginning-will no longer answer. The government in 1811 was as hostile to the old bank, as the government now is to this one; and rather more so. Both Houses of Congress were then hostile to it, and hostile unto death! For they let it die! die on the day appointed by law for its death, without pity, without remorse, without the reprieve of one day. The government can do no worse now. The Secretary of the Treasury has removed the deposits; and that account is settled by the reduction of an equal amount of loans and discounts. The rest depends upon the government; and the hostility of the government cannot go further than to kill the bank, and cannot kill it more dead than the old bank was killed in 1811. Mr. B. had a further comparison to draw between the conduct of the old bank, and the present one. The old bank permitted her discounts to remain at their maximum to the very end of her charter; she discounted sixty days' paper up to the last day of her existence; while this bank has commenced a furious curtailment two years and a half before the expiration of her charter. Again: the old bank had not an hour, as a corporation, to wind up her business after the end of her charter; this bank has the use of all her corporate faculties, for that purpose, for two years after the end of her charter. Again: the present bank pretends that she will have to collect the whole of her debts within the period limited for winding up her affairs; the old bank took upwards of twelve years after the expiration of her charter, to collect hers! She created a trust; she appointed trustees; all the debts and credits were put into their hands, the trustees proceeded like any other collectors, giving time to all debtors who would secure the debt, pay interest punctually, and discharge the principal by instalments. This is what the old bank did; and she did not close her affairs until the 16th of June, in the year 1823. The whole operation was conducted so gently, that the public knew nothing about it. The cotemporaries of the dissolution of the bank, knew nothing about its dissolution. And this is what the present bank may do, if it pleases. That it has not done so-that it is now grinding the community, and threatening to grind them still harder, is a proof of the dangerous nature of a great moneyed power; and should be a warning to the people who now behold its conductwho feel its gripe, and hear its threat-never to suffer the existence of such another power in our free and happy land.

VII. Mr. B. deprecated the spirit which seemed to have broken out against State banks; it was a spirit which augured badly for the rights of the States. Those banks were created by the States; and the works of the States ought to be respected; the stock in those banks was held by American citizens, and ought not to be injuriously assailed to give value to stock held in the federal bank by foreigners and aliens. The very mode of carrying on the warfare against State banks, has itself been an injury. and a just cause of complaint. Some of the most inconsiderable have been picked outtheir affairs presented in the most unfavorable light; and then held forth as a fair sample of the whole. How much more easy would it have been to have acted a more grateful, and a more equitable part! a part more just to the State governments which created those banks, and

Instead of hunting out for remote and incomsiderable banks, and instituting a most disparaging scrutiny into their small affairs, and making this high Senate the conspicuous theatre for the exhibition of their insignificance, why not take the higher order of the State banks ?_ those whose names and characters are well known? whose stock upon the exchange of London and New-York, is superior to that of the United States Bank? whose individual deposits are greater than those of the rival branches of the Bank of the United States, seated in their neighborhood? whose bills of exchange are as eagerly sought for as those of the federal bank? which have reduced exchange below the rates of the federal bank? and which, in every particular that tries the credit, is superior to the one which is receiving so much homage and admiration? Mr. B. said there were plenty of such State banks as he had described; they were to be found in every principal city, from New Orleans to Boston. Some of them had been selected for deposit banks, others not; but there was no difficulty in making a selection of an ample number.

This spirit of hostility to the State banks Mr. B. said, was of recent origin, and seemed to keep pace with the spirit of attack upon the political rights of the States. When the first federal bank was created, in the year 1791, it was not even made, by its charter, a place of deposit for the public moneys. Mr. Jefferson preferred the State Banks at that time; and so declared himself in his cabinet opinion to President Washington. Mr. Gallatin deposited a part of the public moneys in the State banks during the whole of the long period that he was at the head of the treasury. At the dissolution of the first Bank of the United States, he turned over all the public moneys which he held in deposit to these banks, taking their obligation to pay out all the treasury warrants drawn upon them in gold and silver, if desired by the holder. When the present bank was chartered, the State banks stood upon an equal footing with the federal bank, and were placed upon an equality with it as banks of deposit, in the very charter which created the federal bank. Mr. B. was alluding to the 14th fundamental article of the constitution of the bank—the article which provided for the establishment of branches-and the American citizens who held stock in them! which presented an argument in justification of the removal of the deposits ries of that measure most pe to answer. The governmen deposit, not of circulation; the State banks are made i of deposit for the United Sta the United States is. They equality, so far as the federa cerned; for she stipulates branch of the United States be placed at Washington city branches, their establishmer pend-not on the will, or po government-not on any su cessity on her part to have branches-but upon conting she had no control; contin one upon the mere calculation by the bank itself, the other tions of stock within a State tion of its legislature. In th namely, if the Bank of the Uni it to her interest to estal the States, she might do it; of stock was subscribed for in upon an application was made gislature for the institution of establishment within the Sta tory upon the bank. In nei had the will, the power, or the federal government, the 1 cern, or consideration, in the the branch. If not establish the government is concerned, then the State banks, selecte States Bank, and approved by the Treasury, were to be the for the federal moneys. This Mr. B. said, in justification of t deposits, and in favor of the banks which gentlemen on the the question-gentlemen who pains to decry State banks-h not to answer.

The evils of a small paper cir sidered among the greatest griev afflict a community. The evils able, and fell almost exclusively were least able to bear them, or them. If a bank stops paymen the small notes, who are usua part of the community, are the remote and inconting a most disparall affairs, and makspicuous theatre for gnificance, why not he State banks?characters are well n the exchange of superior to that of vhose individual deof the rival branched States, seated in e bills of exchange those of the federal exchange below the and which, in every redit, is superior to g so much homage id there were plenty had described; they principal city, from ome of them had been s, others not; but naking a selection of

to the State banks, origin, and seemed to of attack upon the es. When the first in the year 1791, it s charter, a place of neys. Mr. Jefferson at that time; and so pinet opinion to Pre-Gallatin deposited a in the State banks ig period that he was At the dissolution ited States, he turned which he held in detheir obligation to arrants drawn upon desired by the holdk was chartered, the equal footing with placed upon an equalosit, in the very charal bank. Mr. B. was mental article of the the article which pront of branches-and ent in justification of the removal of the deposits which the adversaries of that measure most pertinaciously decline to answer. The government wanted banks of deposit, not of circulation; and by that article, the State banks are made just as much banks of deposit for the United States as the Bank of the United States is. They are put upon exact equality, so far as the federal government is concerned; for she stipulates but for one single branch of the United States Bank, and that to be placed at Washington city. As for all other branches, their establishment was made to depend-not on the will, or power, of the federal government—not on any supposed or real necessity on her part to have the use of such branches-but upon contingencies over which she had no control; contingencies depending, one upon the mere calculation of profit and loss by the bank itself, the other upon the subscriptions of stock within a State, and the application of its legislature. In these contingencies, namely, if the Bank of the United States thought it to her interest to establish branches in the States, she might do it; or, if 2,000 shares of stock was subscribed for in a State, and thereupon an application was made by the State legislature for the institution of a branch, then its establishment within the State became obligatory upon the bank. In neither contingency had the will, the power, or the necessities of the federal government, the least weight, concern, or consideration, in the establishment of the branch. If not established, and so far as the government is concerned, it might not be, then the State banks, selected by the United States Bank, and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, were to be the banks of deposit for the federal moneys. This was an argument, Mr. B. said, in justification of the removal of the deposits, and in favor of the use of the State banks which gentlemen on the opposite side of the question-gentlemen who take so much pains to decry State banks-have been careful not to answer.

The evils of a small paper circulation, he considered among the greatest grievances that could afflict a community. The evils were innumerable, and fell almost exclusively upon those who were least able to bear them, or to guard against them. If a bank stops payment, the holders of the small notes, who are usually the working part of the community, are the last to find it out, and the first to suffer. If counterfeiting is perpetrated, it is chiefly the small notes which are selected for imitation, because they are most current among those who know the least about notes, and who are most easily made the dupes of imposition, and the victims of fraud. As the expeller of hard money, small notes were the bane and curse of a country. A nation is scarce, or abundant, in hard money, precisely in the degree in which it tolerates the lower denominations of bank notes. France tolerates no note less than $100; and has a gold and silver circulation of 350 millions of dollars. England tolerates no note of less than $25; and has a gold and silver circulation of 130 millions of dollars: in the United States, where $5 is the minimum size of the federal bank notes, the whole specie circulation, including what is in the banks, does not amount to thirty millions of dollars. To increase the quantity of hard money in the United States, and to supply the body of the people with an adequate specie cur rency to serve for their daily wants, and ordi nary transactions, the bank note circulation below twenty dollars, ought to be suppressed. If Congress could pass a law to that effect, it ought to bed one; but it cannot pass such a law: it has no constitutional power to pass it. Congress can, however, do something else, which will, in time, effectually put down such a currency. It can discard it, and disparage it. It can reject it from all federal payments. It can reject the whole circulation of any bank that will continue to issue small notes. Their rejection from all federal payments, would check their currency, and confine the orbit of their circulation to the immediate neighborhood of the is suing bank. The bank itself would find but little profit from issuing them—public sentiment would come to the aid of federal policy. The people of the States, when countenanced and sustained by the federal government, would indulge their natural antipathy and honest detestation of a small paper currency. They would make war upon all small notes. The State legislatures would be under the control of the people; and the States that should first have the wisdom to limit their paper circulation to a minimum of twenty dollar bills, would immediately fill up with gold and silver. The common currency would be entirely metallic; and there would be a broad and solid

the States which continued to tolerate the small notes, would be afflicted with all the evils of a most pestilential part of the paper system,-small notes, part counterfeit, part uncurrent, half worn out; and all incapable of being used with any regard to a beneficial economy. Mr. B. went on to depict the evils of a small note currency, which he looked upon as the bane and curse of the laboring part of the community, and the reproach and opprobrium of any government that tolerated it. He said that the government which suffered its currency to fall into such a state that the farmer, the artisan, the market man, the day laborer, and the hired servant, could only be paid in small bank notes, was a government which abdicated one of its most sacred duties; and became an accomplice on the part of the strong in the oppression of the weak.

Mr. B. placed great reliance upon the restoration of the gold currency for putting down a small note circulation. No man would choose to carry a bundle of small bank notes in his pocket, even new and clean ones, much less old, ragged, and filthy ones, when he could get gold in their place. A limitation upon the receivability of these notes, in payment of federal dues, would complete their suppression. Mr. B. did not aspire to the felicity of seeing as fine a currency in the United States as there is in France, where there was no bank note under five hundred francs, and where there was a gold and silver circulation at the rate of eleven dollars a head for each man, woman, and child, in the kingdom, namely, three hundred and fifty millions of dollars for a population of thirty-two millions of souls; but he did aspire to the comparative happiness of seeing as good currency established for ourselves, by ourselves, as our old fellowsubjects—the people of old England—now possess from their king, lords, and commons. They -he spoke of England proper-had no bank note less than five pounds sterling, and they possessed a specie circulation (of which threefourths was gold) at the rate of about nine dollars a head, men, women, children (even paupers) included; namely, about one hundred and thirty millions for a population of fourteen millions. He, Mr. B., must be allowed to aspire to the happiness of possessing, and in his sphere to labor to acquire, as good a circulation as these English have; and that would be an immea- Massachusetts; Mr. Henry A. Muhlenberg, of surable improvement upon our present condition. We have local bank notes of one, two, three, four dollars; we have federal bank notes of five and ten dollars—the notes of those Eng. lish who are using gold at home while we are using their paper here: -we have not a particle of gold, and not more silver than at the rate of about two dollars a head, men, women, children (even slaves) included; namely, about thirty millions of silver for a population of thirteen millions. Mr. B. believed there was not upon the face of the earth, a country whose actual currency was in a more deplorable condition than that of the United States was at present; the bitter fruit of that fatal paper system which was brought upon us, with the establishment of the first Bank of the United States in 1791, and which will be continued upon us until the citadel of that system—the Bastile of paper money. the present Bank of the United States,-shall cease to exist.

Mr. B. said, that he was not the organ of the President on this floor-he had no authority from the President to speak his sentiments to the Senate. Even if he knew them, it would be unparliamentary, and irregular, to state them. There was a way for the Senate to communicate with the President, which was too weil known to every gentleman to require any indication from him. But he might be permitted to suggest-in the absence of all regular information -that if any Senator wished to understand, and to comment upon, the President's opinions on currency, he might, perhaps, come something nearer to the mark, by commenting on what he (Mr. B.) had been saying, than by having recourse to the town meeting reports of inimical bank committees.

CHAPTER CVI.

ATTEMPTED INVESTIGATION OF THE BANK OF THE UNITED STATES

THE House of Representatives had appointed a select committee of its members to investigate the affairs of the Bank of the United Statesseven in number, and consisting of Mr. Francis Thomas, of Maryland; Mr. Edward Everett, of Pennsylvania; Mr. John Y. M Mr. W. W. Ellsworth, of ( Abijah Mann, Jr. of New-Yorl Lytle, of Ohio. The authority committee acted, required then The causes of the commercial and the public distress complai merous distress memorials pres Houses during the session; bank had been any way instr its management or money, in p tress and embarrassment, of wh plaint was made. 2. To inqu charter of the bank had been vic corruptions and abuses, if any, I management. 3. To inquire w had used its corporate power, o trol the press, to interpose in 1 fluence elections. The authority the committee was ample for t these inquiries. It was author persons and papers; to summe witnesses on oath; to visit, it principal bank, and its branches books, correspondence and accou and other papers connected w ment. The right of the House investigation was two-fold: fi twenty-third article of the cha as the founder of the corpora belongs, in law language, the ri the institution it has founded; ing" is for examination—as a its" his diocese—a superintende works and persons under his o them, but to examine into the and condition. There was also, examination, resulting from the poration; it was again soliciting and was bound to show that t had used their actual charter fai -before it asked for another. And, was a further right of investigati mg from its conduct. It denied tions brought against it by the rectors, and brought before Co Secretary of the Treasury; and jo those accusations in a memorial the two Houses of Congress. To r tion under these circumstances wo ing from the issue which itself ha

committee proceeded to Philadelp

ur present condinotes of one, two, ederal bank notes tes of those Engome while we are ave not a particle han at the rate of , women, children ely, about thirty lation of thirteen ere was not upon try whose actual olorable condition s was at present: per system which e establishment of States in 1791, and us until the citale of paper money, ted States,-shall

t the organ of the had no authority his sentiments to w them, it would ılar, to state them. te to communicate s too weil known re any indication permitted to suggular information to understand, and ent's opinions on come something enting on what he an by having reeports of inimical

CVI.

OF THE BANK OF

es had appointed pers to investigate United States ng of Mr. Francis dward Everett, of Muhlenberg, of pennsylvania; Mr. John Y. Mason, of Virginia; Mr. W. W. Ellsworth, of Connecticut; Mr. Abijah Mann, Jr. of New-York; Mr. Robert T. Lytle, of Ohio. The authority under which the committee acted, required them to ascertain: 1. The causes of the commercial embarrassment, and the public distress complained of in the numerous distress memorials presented to the two Houses during the session; and whether the bank had been any way instrumental, through its management or money, in producing the distress and embarrassment, of which so much complaint was made. 2. To inquire whether the charter of the bank had been violated; and what corruptions and abuses, if any, had existed in its management. 3. To inquire whether the bank had used its corporate power, or money, to control the press, to interpose in politics, or to influence elections. The authority conferred upon the committee was ample for the execution of these inquiries. It was authorized to send for persons and papers; to summon and examine witnesses on oath; to visit, if necessary, the principal bank, and its branches; to inspect the books, correspondence and accounts of the bank, and other papers connected with its management. The right of the House to make this investigation was two-fold: first, under the twenty-third article of the charter: secondly, as the founder of the corporation; to whom belongs, in law language, the right to "visit" the institution it has founded; which "visiting" is for examination—as a bishop "visits" his diocese—a superintendent "visits" the works and persons under his care; not to see them, but to examine into their management and condition. There was also, a third right of examination, resulting from the act of the corporation; it was again soliciting a re-charter, and was bound to show that the corporators had used their actual charter fairly and legally -before it asked for another. And, fourthly, there was a further right of investigation still resultmg from its conduct. It denied all the accusations brought against it by the government directors, and brought before Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury; and joined issue upon those accusations in a memorial addressed to the two Houses of Congress. To refuse examination under these circumstances would be shrinking from the issue which itself had joined. The committee proceeded to Philadelphia, and soon

found that the bank did not mean to submit to an examination. Captious and special pleading objections were made at every step, until attempts on one side and objections on the other ended in a total refusal to submit their books for inspection, or themselves for an examination. The directors had appointed a company of seven to meet the committee of the House-a procedure unwarranted by any right or usage, and offensive in its pretentious equality; but to which the committee consented, at first, from a desire to do nothing to balk the examination. That corporation committee was to sit with them, in the room in the bank assigned for the examination; and took care always to preoccupy it before the House committee arrived; and to act as if at home, receiving guests. The committee then took a room in a hotel, and asked to have the bank books sent to them: which was refused. They then desired to have the books subjected to their inspection in the bank itself; in which request they were baffled, and defeated. The bank committee required written specification of their points of inquiry, either in examining a book, or asking a question-that it might judge its legality; which they confined to mere breaches of the charter. And when the directors were summoned to answer questions, they refused to be sworn, and excused themselves on the ground of being parties to the proceeding. Some passages from the committee's report will show to what extent this higgling and contumacy was carried by this corporation-deriving its existence from Congress, and endeavoring to force a renewed charter from it while refusing to show how it had used the first one. Thus:

"On the 23d of April, their chairman addressed to the President of the bank, a communication, inclosing a copy of the resolution of the House of Representatives, and notifying him of the readiness of the committee to visit the bank on the ensuing day, at any hour agreeable to him. In reply, the President informed the committee that the papers thus received should be submitted to the board of directors, at a special meeting to be called for that purpose. It appears, in the journal of the proceedings of the committee, herewith presented to the House, that this was done, and that the directors appointed a committee of seven of their board, to receive the committee of the House of Representatives, and to offer for their inspection such books and papers of the bank, as may be necessary to exhibit the proceedings of the corporation, according to the requirement of the charter. In the letter of John Sergeant, Esq., as chairman of the committee of directors communicating the proceedings of the board, he says that he was directed to inform the chairman of this committee that the committee of the directors 'will immediately direct the necessary arrangements to be made for the accommodation of the committee of the House of Representatives,' and would attend at the bank to receive them the next day, at eleven o'clock. Your committee attended, and were received by the committee of directors.

"Up to this period, nothing had occurred to justify the belief that a disposition was felt, on the part of the managers of the bank, to embarrass the proceedings of the committee, or have them conducted differently from those of the two preceding committees of investigation. On assembling, however, the next morning, at the bank, they found the room which had been offered for their accommodation, preoccupied by the committee of the board, with the president of the bank, as an ex officio member, claiming the right to be present at the investigations and examinations of this committee. This proceeding the committee were not prepared to expect. When the appointment of the committee of seven was first made, it was supposed that that measure, however designed, was not well calculated to facilitate the examination.

"With a previous determination to be present when their books were to be inspected, they sould have waited to avow it until these books were called for, and the attempt made to inspect them in their absence. These circumstances are now reviewed, because they then excited an apprehension, which the sequel formed into conviction, that this committee of directors had been appointed to supervise the acts and doings of your committee, and to limit and restrain their proceedings, not according to the directions contained in the resolution of the House, but the will and judgment of the board of directors. Your committee have chosen to ascribe this claim of the committee of directors to sit conjointly with them, to the desire to prevent them from making use of the books and papers, for some of the purposes pointed out by the resolution of the House. They are sensible that this claim to be present at all examinations, avowed prematurely, and subsequently persisted in with pe-culiar pertinacity, could be attributed to very different motives; but respect for themselves, and respect for the gentlemen who compose the committee of directors, utterly forbids the ascription to them of a feeling which would merit compassion and contempt much more than re-

"This novel position, voluntarily and deliberately taken by the committee of the directors, predicated on an idea of equality of rights with your committee, under your resolution, rendered t probable, and in some measure necessary, that your committee should express its opinions of the relative rights of the corporation and the House of Representatives. To avoid all misunderstanding and future misrepresentations, it was desirable that each question should be decided separately. Contemplating an extended investigation, but unwilling that an apprehension should exist of improper disclosures being made of the transactions of the bank and its customers, your committee, following the example of the committee of 1832, adopted a resolution declaring that their proceedings should be confidential until otherwise ordered by the committee, and also a resolution that the committee would conduct its investigations 'without the presence of any person not required or invited to attend? A copy of these resolutions was furnished to the committee of directors, in the hope that the exclusive control of a room at the bank, during its hours of business, would thereafter be conceded to your committee, while the claim of the committee of directors to be present when the books were submitted for inspection, should be postponed for decision, when the books were called for and produced by them.

"On the 28th ult. this committee assembled at the banking house, and again found the room they expected to find set apart for their use preoccupied by the committee of directors, and others, officers of the bank. And instead of such assurances as they had a right to expect. they received copies of two resolutions adopted by the board of directors, in which they were given to understand that their continued occupation of the room must be considered a favor. and not a matter of right; and in which the board indulge in unjust commentaries on the resolution of the House of Representatives; and intimate an apprehension that your committee design to make their examinations secret, partial, unjust, oppressive and contrary to common right."

On receiving this offensive communication, manifestly intended to bring on a quarrel, the committee adopted a resolution to sit in a room of their hotel, and advised the bank accordingly; and required the president and directors to submit the books to their inspection in the room so chosen, at a day and hour named. To this the directors answered that they could not comply; and the committee, desirous to do all they could to accomplish the investigation committed to them, then gave notice that they would attend at the bank on a named day and hour to inspect the books in the bank itself-either at the counter, or in a room. Arriving at the appointed time, and asking to see the books, they were positively refused, reasons in writing being assigned for the refusal. They then made a written request to see certain books specifically and for a specified purpose, namely, to ascertain the truth of the report of the rectors in using the money bank in politics, in election the distress. The manner was treated must be given in apport itself; thus:

"Without giving a specificalls for books and papers, directors presented a writte which was said to be 'indicat proceeding deemed right by the "The committee of the lose."

"The committee of the boa nication, express the opinion can only be rightfully extendtions of the charter, and deny of the House of Representathe inquiries required in the r "They also required of the vestigation, 'when they aske papers, to state specifically in poses for which they are proped; and if it be to establish charter, then to state specifi what are the alleged or suppcharter, to which the evidence applicable.'

"To this extraordinary re on the supposition that your charged with the duty of crim cution for criminal offence, and on the part of the directors what purposes the inspection and what books or papers sho to inspection, your committee were not charged with the du the bank, its directors, or oth to inquire, amongst other thin prosecution in legal form show and from the nature of their d structions of the House of Repr were not bound to state speci any charges against the bank purpose for which they require of the books and papers for ins

The committee then asked accounts and entries which the and were answered that it we labor of two clerks for ten montout; and so declined to give the comittee finding that they could not books and papers, determined examination of things into that for that purpose had recourse a furnished by the House; and by the United States marshal countries and directors. This subpoena, a clause of duces tecum, with books, was so far obeyed as to corporation and the To avoid all misisrepresentations, it stion should be deblating an extended that an apprehension closures being made ik and its customers, the example of the resolution declaring uld be confidential, the committee, and mmittee would contout the presence of invited presence of invit invited to attend; was furnished to the he hope that the exthe bank, during its ereafter be conceded he claim of the comment when the books ion, should be postate books were called ommittee assembled gain found the room apart for their use, tee of directors, and k. And instead of d a right to expect, resolutions adopted n which they were heir continued occue considered a favor, ; and in which the ommentaries on the Representatives; and that your committee inations secret, parcontrary to common sive communication, ig on a quarrel, the, tion to sit in a room he bank accordingly; and directors to subpection in the room our named. To this they could not comsirous to do all they estigation committed at they would attend y and hour to inspect tself-either at the Arriving at the apsee the books, they sons in writing being They then made a in books specifically namely, to ascertain the truth of the report of the government directors in using the money and power of the bank in politics, in elections, or in producing the distress. The manner in which this call was treated must be given in the words of the peport itself; thus:

"Without giving a specific answer to these calls for books and papers, the committee of directors presented a written communication, which was said to be 'indicative of the mode of proceeding deemed right by the bank.'

"The committee of the board in that communication, express the opinion, that the inquiry can only be rightfully extended to alleged violations of the charter, and deny virtually the right of the House of Representatives to authorize the inquiries required in the resolution.

"They also required of the committee of investigation, 'when they asked for books and papers, to state specifically in writing, the purposes for which they are proposed to be inspected; and if it be to establish a violation of the charter, then to state specifically in writing, what are the alleged or supposed violations of charter, to which the evidence is alleged to be applicable.' To this extraordinary requirement, made on the supposition that your committee were charged with the duty of crimination, or prosecution for criminal offence, and implying a right on the part of the directors to determine for what purposes the inspection should be made, and what books or papers should be submitted to inspection, your committee replied, that they were not charged with the duty of criminating the bank, its directors, or others; but simply to inquire, amongst other things, whether any prosecution in legal form should be instituted, and from the nature of their duties, and the instructions of the House of Representatives, they were not bound to state specifically in writing any charges against the bank, or any special purpose for which they required the production of the books and papers for inspection."

The committee then asked for copies of the accounts and entries which they wished to see, and were answered that it would require the labor of two clerks for ten months to make them out; and so declined to give the copies. The committee finding that they could make nothing out of books and papers, determined to change their examination of things into that of persons; and for that purpose had recourse to the subpœnas, furnished by the House; and had them served by the United States marshal on the president and directors. This subpœna, which contained a clause of duces tecum, with respect to the books, was so far obeyed as to bring the directors.

tors in person before the committee; and so far disobeyed as to bring them without the books, and so far exceeded as to bring them with a written refusal to be sworn—for reasons which they stated. But this part deserves to be told in the language of the report; which says:

"Believing they had now exhausted, in their efforts to execute the duty devolved upon them, all reasonable means depending solely upon the provisions of the bank charter, to obtain the inspection of the books of this corporation, your committee were at last reluctantly compelled to resort to the subpœnas which had been furnished to them under the seal of this House, and attested by its clerk. They, thereby, on the 9th inst. directed the marshal of the eastern district of Pennsylvania to summon Nicholas Biddle, president, and thirteen other persons, directors of the bank, to attend at their committee room, on the next day, at twelve o'clock, at noon, to testify concerning the matters of which your committee were authorized to inquire, and to bring with them certain books therein named for inspection. The marshal served the summons in due form of law, and at the time appointed, the persons therein named appeared before the committee and presented a written communication signed by each of them, as the answer of each to the requirements of the subpoena, which is in the appendix to this report. In this paper they declare 'that they do not produce the books required, because they are not in the custody of either of us, but as has been heretofore stated, of the board,' and add, considering that as corporators and directors, we are parties to the proceeding-we do not consider ourselves bound to testify, and therefore respectfully decline to do so.'

This put an end to the attempted investigation. The committee returned to Washington -made report of their proceedings, and moved: "That the speaker of this House do issue his warrant to the sergeant-at-arms, to arrest Nicholas Biddle, president-Manuel Eyre, Lawrence Lewis, Ambrose White, Daniel W. Cox, John Holmes, Charles Chauncey, John Goddard, John R. Neff, William Platt, Matthew Newkirk, James C. Fisher, John S. Henry, and John Sergeant, directors-of the Bank of the United States, and bring them to the bar of this House to answer for the contempt of its lawful authority." This resolve was not acted upon by the House; and the directors had the satisfaction to enjoy a negative triumph in their contempt of the House, flagrant as that contempt was upon its own showing, and still more so upon its contrast with the conduct of the same bank (though under a different set of directors), in the year 1819. A committee of investigation was then appointed, armed with the same powers which were granted to this committee of the year 1834, and the directors of that time readily submitted to every species of examination which the committee chose to make. They visited the principal bank at Philadelphia, and several of its branches. They had free and unrestrained access to the books and papers of the bank. They were furnished by the officers with all the copies and extracts they asked for. They summoned before them the directors and officers of the bank, examined them on oath, took their testimony in writing-and obtained full answers to all their questions, whether they implied illegalities violative of the charter, or abuses, or mismanagement, or mistakes and errors.

CHAPTER CVII.

MR. TANEY'S REPORT ON THE FINANCES. EXPO-SURE OF THE DISTRESS ALARMS-END OF THE PANIC

ABOUT the time when the panic was at its height, and Congress most heavily assailed with distress memorials, the Secretary of the Treasury was called upon by a resolve of the Senate for a report upon the finances-with the full belief that the finances were going to ruin, and that the government would soon be left without adequate revenue, and driven to the mortifying resource of loans. The call on the Secretary was made early in May, and was answered the middle of June; and was an utter disappointment to those who called for it. Far from showing the financial decline which had been expected, it showed an increase in every branch of the revenue! and from that authentic test of the national condition, it was authentically shown that the Union was prosperous! and that the distress, of which so much was heard, was confined to the victims of the United States Bank, so far as it was real; and that all beyond that was fictitious and artificial—the result of the machinery for organizing panic, oppressing debtors, breaking up labor, and alarming the timid. When the report came into the Senate, the reading of it was commenced at the table of the Secretary, and had not proceeded far when Mr. | alleled prosperity to a scene of unparalleled

Webster moved to cease the reading, and send it to the Committee on Finance—that committee in which a report of that kind could not expect to find either an early or favorable notice. We had expected a motion to get rid of it in some quiet way, and had prepared for whatever might happen. Mr. Taney had sent for me, the day before it came in; read it over with me: showed me all the tables on which it was founded; and prepared me to sustain and emblazon it: for it was our intention that such a report should go to the country, not in the equiet, subdued tone of a State paper, but with all the emphasis, and all the challenges to public attention, which the amplifications, the animation, and the fire and freedom which the speaking style admitted. The instant, then that Mr. Webster made his motion to stop the reading, and refer the report to the Finance Committee, Mr. Benton rose, and demanded that the reading be continued: a demand which he had a right to make, as the rules gave it to every member. He had no occasion to hear it read, and probably heard nothing of it; but the form was necessary, as the report was to be the text of his speech. The instant it was done he rose and delivered his speech, seizing the circumstance of the interrupted reading to furnish the brief exordium, and to give a fresh and impromptu air to what he was going to say. The following is the speech:

Mr. Benton rose, and said that this report was of a nature to deserve some attention, before it left the chamber of the Senate, and went to a committee, from which it might not return in time for consideration at this session. It had been called for under circumstances which attracted attention, and disclosed information which deserved to be known. It was called for early in May, in the crisis of the alarm operations, and with confident assertions that the answer to the call would prove the distress and the suffering of the country. It was confidently asserted that the Secretary of the Treasury had over-estimated the revenues of the year; that there would be a great falling off-a decline-a bankruptcy; that confidence was destroyed-enterprise checked-industry paralyzed—commerce suspended! that the direful act of one man, in one dire order, had changed the face of the country, from a scene of unpar-desolation! that the canal lake a desert waste of water out ships, the commercial to and sad; orders for goods c eign purchases stopped! an of the Secretary would prov ing the falsity of his own great decline in the revenu of the country. Such were predictions under which the to which the public attention every device of theatrical dec floor. Well, the answer com sends in his report, with ever for. It is a report to make rejoice! full of high and gr plete with rich information; evidences of national prosper. ceived-how received by thos With downcast looks, and wor motion is even made to stop th the reading of such a report such circumstances; while wh up to reading the monotonou endless repetitions of distres echo of our own speeches, ar edition of the same work, wi or correction! All these of printed, too, and lauded with and their contents sent ou freighted upon every wind; report of the Secretary of th the state of their own rever own commerce, called for by Senate, is to be treated like as worthless intruder; received v not even read—slipped out disposed of as the Abbé Siey death of Louis the Sixteenth: n death, without talk! But he mean to suffer this report to this unceremonious and compe had been called for to be given and the people should hear of what was expected, but it is v what will rejoice the heart of America. A pit was dug for diggers of the pit have fallen in is not his; and the sooner they better for themselves. The pec to know the contents of this re them they shall; and if there is great decline in the revenue and importations of the country. Such were the assertions and predictions under which the call was made, and to which the public attention was attracted by every device of theatrical declamation from this floor. Well, the answer comes. The Secretary sends in his report, with every statement called for. It is a report to make the patriot's heart rejoice! full of high and gratifying facts; replete with rich information; and pregnant with evidences of national prosperity. How is it received-how received by those who called for it?

With downcast looks, and wordless tongues! A motion is even made to stop the reading! to stop the reading of such a report! called for under such circumstances; while whole days are given up to reading the monotonous, tautologous, and endless repetitions of distress memorials, the echo of our own speeches, and the thousandth

edition of the same work, without emendation or correction! All these can be read, and printed, too, and lauded with studied eulogium, and their contents sent out to the people,

freighted upon every wind; but this official report of the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the state of their own revenues, and of their own commerce, called for by an order of the Senate, is to be treated like an unwelcome and worthless intruder; received without a word-

not even read-slipped out upon a motion-disposed of as the Abbé Sieves voted for the death of Louis the Sixteenth: mort sans phrase!

death, without talk! But he, Mr. B., did not mean to suffer this report to be dispatched in this unceremonious and compendious style. It had been called for to be given to the people, and the people should hear of it. It was not what was expected, but it is what is true, and what will rejoice the heart of every patriot in America. A pit was dug for Mr. Taney; the diggers of the pit have fallen into it; the fault

is not his; and the sooner they clamber out, the

he reading, and send inance—that commitat kind could not exy or favorable notice. n to get rid of it in prepared for whatever y had sent for me, the ead it over with me; es on which it was ne to sustain and emintention that such a country, not in the State paper, but with he challenges to pubmplifications, the ani-I freedom which the

The instant, then, is motion to stop the eport to the Finance rose, and demanded nued: a demand which s the rules gave it to no occasion to hear it nothing of it; but the e report was to be the nstant it was done, he ch, seizing the circumreading to furnish the give a fresh and imras going to say. The

said that this report re some attention, bef the Senate, and went hich it might not reation at this session. under circumstances n, and disclosed inforo be known. It was , in the crisis of the th confident assertions call would prove the g of the country. It that the Secretary of stimated the revenues vould be a great falling uptcy; that confidence ise checked-industry spended! that the diredire order, had changed rom a scene of unparscene of unparalleled desolation! that the canal was a solitude, the America, whose heart is so constructed as to lake a desert waste of waters, the ocean withgrieve over the prosperity of his country, let out ships, the commercial towns deserted, silent, him prepare himself for sorrow; for the proof and sad; orders for goods countermanded; foris forthcoming, that never, since America had a eign purchases stopped! and that the answer place among nations, was the prosperity of the of the Secretary would prove all this, in showcountry equal to what it is at this day! ing the falsity of his own estimates, and the

Mr. B. then requested the Secretary of the Senate to send him the report, and comparative statements; which being done, Mr. B. opened the report, and went over the heads of it to show that the Secretary of the Treasury had not over-estimated the revenue of the year, as he had been charged, and as the report was expected to prove : that the revenue was, in fact, superior to the estimate; and that the importations would equal, if not exceed, the highest amount that they had ever attained.

To appreciate the statements which he should make, Mr. B. said it was necessary for the Senate to recollect that the list of dutiable articles was now greatly reduced. Many articles were now free of duty, which formerly paid heavy duties; many others were reduced in duty; and the fair effect of these abolitions and reductions would be a diminution of revenue even without a diminution of imports; yet the Secretary's estimate, made at the commencement of the session, was more than realized, and showed the gratifying spectacle of a full and overflowing treasury, instead of the empty one which had been predicted; and left to Congress the grateful occupation of further reducing taxes, instead of the odious task of borrowing money, as had been so loudly anticipated for six months past. The revenue accruing from imports in the first quarter of the present year, was 5,344,540 dollars; the payments actually made into the treasury from the custom-houses for the same quarter. were 4,435,386 dollars; and the payments from lands for the same time, were 1,398,206 dollars. The two first months of the second quarter were producing in a full ratio to the first quarter; and the actual amount of available funds in the treasury on the 9th day of this month, was eleven millions, two hundred aud forty-nine thousand, four hundred and twelve dollars. The two last quarters of the year were always the most productive. It vas the time of the largest importations of foreign goods which pay most better for themselves. The people have a right duty-the woollens-and the season, also, for to know the contents of this report, and know the largest sale of public lands. It is well bethem they shall; and if there is any man in this lieved that the estimate will be more largely ex ceeded in those two quarters than in the two first; and that the excess for the whole year, over the estimate, will be full two millions of dollars. This, Mr. B. said, was one of the evidences of public prosperity which the report contained, and which utterly contradicted the idea of distress and commercial embarrassment which had been propagated, from this chamber, for the last six months.

Mr. B. proceeded to the next evidence of commercial prosperity; it was the increased importations of foreign goods. These imports, judging from the five first months, would be seven millions more than they were two years ago, when the Bank of the United States had seventy millions loaned out; and they were twenty millions more than in the time of Mr. Adams's administration. At the rate they had commenced, they would amount to one hundred and ten millions for the year. This will exceed whatever was known in our country. The imports, for the time that President Jackson has served, have regularly advanced from about $74.000,000 to $108,000,000. The following is the statement of these imports, from which Mr. B. read:

1829			$ 74,492,527
1830			70,876,920
1831			103,191,124
1832			101,029,266
1833			108 118 311

Mr. B. said that the imports of the last year were greater in proportion than in any previous year; a temporary decline might reasonably have been expected; such declines always take place after excessive importations. If it had occurred now, though naturally to have been expected, the fact would have been trumpeted forth as the infallible sign—the proof positive—of commercial distress, occasioned by the fatal removal of the deposits. But, as there was no decline, but on the contrary, an actual increase, he must claim the evidence for the other side of the account, and set it down as proof positive that commerce is not destroyed; and, consequently, that the removal of the deposits did not destroy commerce.

The next evidence of commercial prosperity which Mr. B. would exhibit to the Senate, was in the increased, and increasing number of ship arrivals from foreign ports. The number of arrivals for the month of May, in New-York, was two hundred and twenty-three, exceeding by thirty-six those of the month of April, and showing not only a great, but an increasing activity in the commerce of that great emporium—he would not say of the United States, or even of North America—but he would call it that great emporium of the two Americas, and of the New World; for the goods imported to that place, were thence distributed to every part of the two Americas, from the Capadian lakes to Cape Horn.

A third evidence of national prosperity was in the sales of the public lands. Mr. B. had. on a former occasion, adverted to these sales. so far as the first quarter was concerned; and had shown, that instead of falling off, as had been predicted on this floor, the revenue from the sales of these lands had actually doubled and more than doubled, what they were in the first quarter of 1833. The receipts for lands for that quarter, were $668,526; for the first quarter of the present year they were $1,398,206; being two to one, and $60,000 over! The receipts for the two first months of the second quarter, were also known and would carry the revenue from lands, for the first five months of this year, to two millions of dollars; indicating five millions for the whole year; an enormous amount, from which the people of the new States ought to be in some degree, relieved, by a reduction in the price of lands. Mr. B. begged in the most emphatic terms, to remind the Senate, that at the commencement of the session, the sales of the public lands were selected as one of the criterions by which the ruin and desolation of the country were to be judged. It was then predicted, and the prediction put forth with all the boldness of infallible prophecy, that the removal of the deposits would stop the sales of the public lands; that money would disappear, and the people have nothing to buy with; that the produce of the earth would rot upon the hands of the farmer. These were the predictions; and if the sales had really declined, what a proof would immediately be found in the fact to prove the truth of the prophecy, and the dire effects of changing the public moneys from one set of banking-houses to another! But there is no decline; but a doubling of the former product; and a fair conclusion thence deduced that the new States, in the interior are as prosperous as the old ones, on the sea-coast

Having proved the genera country from these infallible revenue-flourishing commer vals of ships-and increase lands, Mr. B. said that he wa that actual distress had eximitted the fact of that distre to the extent to which it was sufficient extent to excite sufferers; and he had distin whole distress that did exis the United States, and the S ted States-to the screw-an tions of the bank, and the a the Senate. He had made made it under a full sense of sibility which he owed to the ing any thing so disadvanta from this elevated theatre. I given his proofs to accompany he had now to say to the Ser the Senate to the people, tha proofs for that charge in the ments of the accruing revenue called for by the Senate, and Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. B. said he must be pare ing his request to the Senate, often they had been told that lyzed; that orders for foreign g termanded; that the importing pictures of desolation; their s wharves deserted; their mari up and down. Now, said Mr. over the detailed statement of t venue, it was found that there of commerce, except at places w and power of the United States dominant! Where that power predominant, revenue declined; not predominant, or the policy of exerted the revenue increased; fast enough to make up the de other places. Mr. B. proceeded statement by a reference to sp Thus, at Philadelphia, where the seat of empire, the revenue fell third; it was $797,316 for the f 1833, and only $542,498 for the f 1834. At New-York, where the been able to get the upper hand, increase of more than $120,00 month of April, at, but an increaserce of that great say of the United America—but he porium of the two 'orld; for the goods there distributed Americas, from the

Vol. I.—30

nal prosperity was lands. Mr. B. had, ted to these sales, as concerned; and falling off, as had, the revenue from d actually doubled, that they were in

The receipts for $668,526; for the it year they were one, and $60,000 two first months e also known, and rom lands, for the ear, to two millions millions for the mount, from which tes ought to be, in a reduction in the red in the most em-Senate, that at the on, the sales of the as one of the crite-

d desolation of the It was then preput forth with all ophecy, that the re-I stop the sales of y would disappear, to buy with; that ould rot upon the e were the predicad really declined, liately be found in of the prophecy, and the public moneys louses to another! t a doubling of the onclusion thence dein the interior, are s, on the sea-coast.

Having proved the general prosperity of the country from these infallible data-flourishing revenue-flourishing commerce-increased arrivals of ships-and increased sales of public lands. Mr. B. said that he was far from denying that actual distress had existed. He had admitted the fact of that distress heretofore, not to the extent to which it was charged, but to a sufficient extent to excite sympathy for the sufferers; and he had distinctly charged the whole distress that did exist to the Bank of the United States, and the Senate of the United States-to the screw-and-pressure operations of the bank, and the alarm speeches in the Senate. He had made this charge; and made it under a full sense of the moral responsibility which he owed to the people, in affirming any thing so disadvantageous to others, from this elevated theatre. He had, therefore, given his proofs to accompany the charge; and he had now to say to the Senate, and through the Senate to the people, that he found new proofs for that charge in the detailed statements of the accruing revenue, which had been called for by the Senate, and furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. B. said he must be pardoned for repeating his request to the Senate, to recollect how often they had been told that trade was paralyzed; that orders for foreign goods were countermanded; that the importing cities were the pictures of desolation; their ships idle; their wharves deserted; their mariners wandering up and down. Now, said Mr. B., in looking over the detailed statement of the accruing revenue, it was found that there was no decline of commerce, except at places where the policy and power of the United States Bank was predominant! Where that power or policy was predominant, revenue declined; where it was not predominant, or the policy of the bank not exerted the revenue increased; and increased fast enough to make up the deficiency at the other places. Mr. B. proceeded to verify this statement by a reference to specified places. Thus, at Philadelphia, where the bank holds its seat of empire, the revenue fell off about one third; it was $797,316 for the first quarter of 1833, and only $542,498 for the first quarter of 1834. At New-York, where the bank has not been able to get the upper hand, there was an increase of more than $120,000; the revenue there, for the first quarter of 1833, was $3,122,166; for the first of 1834, it was $3,249,786. At Boston, where the bank is again predominant, the revenue fell off about one third; at Salem, Mass., it fell off four fifths. At Baltimore, where the bank has been defeated, there was an increase in the revenue of more than $70,000. At Richmond, the revenue was doubled, from $12,034 to $25,810. At Charleston, it was increased from $69,503 to $102,810. At Petersburg, it was slightly increased; and throughout all the region south of the Potomac, there was either an increase, or the slight falling off which might result from diminished duties without diminished importations. Mr. B. said he knew that bank power was predominant in some of the cities of the South; but he knew, also, that the bank policy of distress and oppression had not been practised there. That was not the region to be governed by the scourge. The high mettle of that region required a different policy: gentleness, conciliation, coaxing! If the South was to be gained over by the bank, it was to be done by favor, not by fear. The scourge, though so much the most congenial to the haughty spirit of the moneyed power, was only to be applied where it would be submitted to; and, therefore, the whole region south of the Potomac, was exempted from the lash.

Mr. B. here paused to fix the attention of the Senate upon these facts. Where the power of the bank enabled her to depress commerce and sink the revenue, and her policy permitted her to do it, commerce was depressed; and the revenue was sunk, and the prophecies of the distress orators were fulfilled; but where her power did not predominate, or where her policy required a different course, commerce increased, and the revenue increased; and the result of the whole is, that New-York and some other anti-bank cities have gained what Philadelphia and other bank cities have lost; and the federal treasury is just as well off, as if it had got its accustomed supply from every place.

This view of facts, Mr. B. said, must fasten upon the bank the odium of having produced all the real commercial distress which has been felt. But at one point, at New Orleans, there was further evidence to convict her of wanton and wicked oppression. It was not in the Secretary's reports, but it was in the weekly returns of the bank; and showed that, in the beginning of March, that institution had carried off from her branch in New Orleans, the sum of about $800,000 in specie, which it had been collecting all the winter, by a wanton curtailment, under the pretext of supplying the amount of the deposits taken from her at that place. These $800,000 dollars were collected from the New Orleans merchants in the very crisis of the arrival of Western produce. The merchants were pressed to pay debts, when they ought to have been accommodated with loans. The price of produce was thereby depressed; the whole West suffered from the depression; and now it is proved that the money was not wanted to supply the place of the deposits, but was sent to Philadelphia, where there was no use for it, the bank having more than she can use; and that the whole operation was a wanton and wicked measure to coerce the West to cry out for a return of the deposits, and a renewal of the charter, by attacking their commerce in the market of New Orleans. This fact, said Mr. B., would have been proved from the books of the bank, if they had been inspected. Failing in that, the proof was intelligibly found in the weekly returns.

Vol. I.—30

Mr. B. took up another table to prove the prosperity of the country: it was in the increase of specie since the programme for the distress had been published. That programme dated from the first day of October last, and the clear increase since that time is the one half of the whole quantity then in the United States. The imports had been $11,128,291; the exports only $998,761.

Mr. B. remarked, upon this statement, that it presented a clear gain of more than ten millions of dollars. He was of opinion that two millions ought to be added for sums not entered at the custom-house, which would make twelve millions; and added to the six millions of 1833, would give eighteen millions of specie of clear gain to the country, in the last twenty months. This, he said was prosperity. It was wealth itself; and besides, it showed that the country was not in debt for its large importations, and that a larger proportion of foreign imports now consisted of specie than was ever known before. Mr. B. particularized the imports and exports of gold; how the former had increased, and the

and said that a great amount of gold, both foreign and domestic, was now waiting in the country to see if Congress would raise gold to its fair value. If so raised, this gold would remain and enter into circulation; if not, it would immediately go off to foreign countries; for gold was not a thing to stay where it was undervalued. He also spoke of silver, and said that it had arrived without law, but could not remain without law. Unless Congress passed an act to make it current, and that at full value as money, and not at the mint value, as bullion it would go off.

Mr. B. had a further view to give of the prosperity of the country, and further evidence to show that all the distress really suffered was factitious and unnatural. It was in the great increase of money in the United States, during the last year and a half. He spoke of money: not paper promises to pay money, but the thing itself-real gold and silger-and affirmed that there was a clear gain of from eighteen to twenty millions of specie, within the time that he had mentioned. He then took up the custom-house returns to verify this important statement and to let the people see that the country was never so well off for money as at the very time that it was proclaimed to be in the lewest state of porerty and misery. He first showed the imports and exports of specie and bullion for the year ending the 30th of September, 1833. It was a follows:

Year ending September 30, 1833.

	Imports,	Exports.
Gold bullion,	$48,267	$26,775
Silver do.	297,840
Gold coin,	563,585	495,890
Silver do.	6,160,676	1,722,196
	$ 7.070.368	$2,244.861

Mr. B. having read over this statement, remarked upon it, that it presented a clear balance of near five millions of specie in favor of the United States on the first day of October las without counting at least another million which was brought by passengers, and not put upon the custom-house books. It might be assumed he said, that there was a clear accession of si millions of specie to the money of the United States, on the morning of that very day which intter diminished, during the last few months; had been pitched upon by all the distress of tors in the country, to date tion of the country.

Mr. B. then showed a st ports and exports of spec the first of October, 1833. instant.

Mr. B. recapitulated the prosperity-increased imp customs exceeding the estivenue from public lands-i specie-above eleven millio now in the treasury-do commerce active—the price perty fair and good-labor employment and reward-1 country than ever was in before-the numerous adve purchase of slaves, in the pa the Southern market, which price of Southern products conscientious belief, that the prosperous at this time than its existence; and inveighed indignation against the arts : for the last six months had tated the country, and done many individuals. He regret of the attempt to examine United States, which he bel completed the proof against t its share in getting up an u tious scene of distress, in t prosperity. But he did not 1 to the bank, but came direc and charged a full share up distress speeches, delivered u the Senate, in imitation of V over the ruins of Palmyra. 1 passages from the most affect mentations over the desolatio such as the Senate had been ac about the time of the New-Y elections. "The canal a solitu desert waste of waters! Th lately resounding with the hu tudes, now silent and sad! A the midst of unparalleled pre cadian felicity, suddenly struck plunged into unutterable woe! a direful act of one wilful man !" were the lamentations over the Tadmor in the desert, but of this

ount of gold, both forow waiting in the counrould raise gold to its this gold would remain, n; if not, it would imign countries; for gold by where it was underof silver, and said that law, but could not reess Congress passed an and that at full value as nint value, as bullion, it

view to give of the prosand further evidence to ress really suffered was d. It was in the great e United States, during . He spoke of money; av money, but the thing ilger-and affirmed that f from eighteen to twenhin the time that he had ook up the custom-house mportant statement, and at the country was never s at the very time that it the lewest state of porirst showed the imports nd bullion for the year tember, 1833. It was as ptember 30, 1833.

Imports.	Exports $26,775
$48,267 297,840	$20,110
563,585	495,890
3,160,676	1,722,196
7,070,368	$2,244,861

over this statement, represented a clear balance of specie in favor of the irst day of October last another million which ngers, and not put upaks. It might be assumed as a clear accession of state money of the United gof that very day which is by all the distress of tors in the country, to date the ruin and desola-

Mr. B. then showed a statement of the imports and exports of specie and bullion, from the first of October, 1833, to the 11th of June, instant.

Mr. B. recapitulated the evidences of national prosperity-increased imports-revenue from customs exceeding the estimate-increased revenue from public lands-increased amount of specie—above eleven millions of available funds now in the treasury—domestic and foreign commerce active—the price of produce and property fair and good-labor every where finding employment and reward-more money in the country than ever was in it at any one time before-the numerous advertisements for the purchase of slaves, in the papers of this city, for the Southern market, which indicated the high price of Southern products-and affirmed his conscientious belief, that the country was more prosperous at this time than at any period of its existence; and inveighed in terms of strong indignation against the arts and artifices, which for the last six months had disturbed and agitated the country, and done serious mischief to many individuals. He regretted the miscarriage of the attempt to examine the Bank of the United States, which he believed would have completed the proof against that institution for its share in getting up an unnatural and factitious scene of distress, in the midst of real prosperity. But he did not limit his invective to the bank, but came directly to the Senate, and charged a full share upon the theatrical distress speeches, delivered upon the floor of the Senate, in imitation of Volney's soliloquy over the ruins of Palmyra. He repeated some passages from the most affecting of these lamentations over the desolation of the country, such as the Senate had been accustomed to hear about the time of the New-York and Virginia elections. "The canal a solitude! The lake a desert waste of waters! That populous city lately resounding with the hum of busy multitudes, now silent and sad! A whole nation, in the midst of unparalleled prosperity, and Arcadian felicity, suddenly struck into poverty, and plunged into unutterable woe! and all this by the direful act of one wilful man!" Such, said Mr. B., were the lamentations over the ruins, not of the Tadinor in the desert, but of this America, whose true condition you have just seen exhibited in the faithful report of the Secretary of the Treasury. Not even the "baseless fabric of a vision" was ever more destitute of foundation, than those lamentable accounts of desolation. The lamentation has ceased; the panic has gone off; would to God he could follow out the noble line of the poet, and say, "leaving not a wreck behind." But he could not say that. There were wrecks! wrecks of merchants in every city in which the bank tried its cruel policy, and wrecks of banks in this district, where the panic speeches fell thickest and loudest upon the ears of an astonished and terrified community!

But, continued Mr. B., the game is up; the alarm is over; the people are tired of it; the agitators have ceased to work the engine of alarm. A month ago he had said it was "the last of pea-time" with these distress memorials: he would now use a bolder figure, and sav. that the Secretary's report, just read, had expelled forever the ghost of alarm from the chamber of the Senate. All ghosts, said Mr. B., are afraid of the light. The crowing of the cock-the break of day-remits them all, the whole shadowy tribe, to their dark and dreary abodes. How then can this poor ghost of alarm, which has done such hard service for six months past, how can it stand the full light, the broad glare, the clear sunshine of the Secretary's report? "Alas, poor ghost!" The shade of the "noble Dane" never quit the stage under a more inexorable law than the one which now drives thee away! This report, replete with plain facts, and luminous truths, puts to flight the apparition of distress, breaks down the whole machinery of alarm, and proves that the American people are, at this day, the most prosperous people on which the beneficent sun of heaven did ever

Mr. B. congratulated himself that the spectre of distress could never be made to cross the Mississippi. It made but slow progress any where in the Great Valley, but was balked at the King of Floods. A letter from St. Louis informed him that an attempt had just been made to get up a distress meeting in the town of St. Louis; but without effect. The officers were obtained, and according to the approved rule of such meetings, they were converts from Jacksonism; but there the distress proceedings stopped, and took another turn. The farce could not be played in that town. The actors would not mount the stage.

Mr. B. spoke of the circulation of the Bank of the United States, and said that its notes might be withdrawn without being felt or known by the community. It contributed but four millions and a quarter to the circulation at this time. He verified this statement by showing that the bank had twelve millions and a quarter of specie in its vaults, and but sixteen millions and a half of notes in circulation. The difference was four millions and a quarter; and that was the precise amount which that gigantic institution now contributed to the circulation of the country! Only four millions and a quarter. If the gold bill passed, and raised gold sixteen to one, there would be more than that amount of gold in circulation in three months. The foreign coin bill, and the gold bill, would give the country many dollars in specie, without interest, for each paper dollar which the bank issues, and for which the country pays so dearly. The dissolution of the bank would turn out twelve millions and a quarter of specie, to circulate among the people; and the sooner that is done the better it will be for the country.

The Bank is now a nuisance, said Mr. B. With upwards of twelve millions in specie, and less than seventeen millions in circulation, and only fifty-two millions of loans, it pretends that it cannot lend a dollar, not even to business men, to be returned in sixty days; when, two years ago, with only six millions of specie and twentytwo millions of circulation, it ran up its loans to seventy millions. The president of the bank then swore, that all above six millions of specie was a surplus! How is it now, with near double as much specie, and five millions less of notes out, and twelve millions less of debt? The bank needs less specie than any other banking institution, because its notes are receivable, by law, in all federal payments; and from that circumstance alone would be current, at par, although the bank itself might be wholly unable to redeem them. Such a bank is a nuisance. It is the dog in the manger. It might lend money to business men, at short dates, to the last day of its existence; yet the signs are for a new pressure; a new game of distress for the fall elections in Pennsylvania, New-York, and Ohio. If that game should be attempted, Mr. B. said, the bank was full of money; without pretext for the deposit farce is over; without the aid of panic speeches, for the Senate will not be in session.

Mr. B. said, that among the strange events which took place in this world, nothing could be more strange than to find, in our own country, and in the nineteenth century, any practical illustration of the ancient doctrine of the metempsychosis. Stranger still, if that doctrine should be so far improved, as to take effect in soulless bodies; for, according to the founders of the doctrine, the soul alone could transmigrate. Now, corporations had no souls; that was law, laid down by all the books: that all corporations, moneyed ones especially, and above all, the Bank of the United States, was most soulless. Yet the rumor was, that this bank intended to attempt the operation of effecting a transfer of her soul; and after submitting to death in her present form, to rise up in a new one. Mr. B. said he, for one, should be ready for the old sinner, come in the body of what beast it might. No form should deceive him. not even if it condescended, in its new shape to issue from Wall-street instead of Chestnut!

A word more, and Mr. B. was done. It was a word to those gentlemen whose declarations. many ten thousand times issued from this floor. had deluded a hundred thousand people to send memorials here, certifying what those gentlemen so incontinently repeated, that the removal of the deposits had made the distress, and nothing but the restoration of the deposits, or the renewal of the charter, could remove the distress! Well! the deposits are not restored, and the charter is not renewed; and yet the distress is gone! What is the inference? Why that gentlemen are convicted, and condemned, upon their own argument! They leave this chamber to go home, self-convicted upon the very test which they themselves have established; and after hav ing declared, for six months, upon this floor, that the removal of the deposits made the dis tress, and nothing but their restoration, or the renewal of the bank charter, could relieve it and that they would sit here until the dog-days, and the winter solstice, to effect this restoration or renewal: they now go home in good time for harvest, without effecting the restoration or the renewal; and find every where, as they go the It would have to be done withou excuse, for evidences of the highest prosperity which ever blessed the land. Yes! rei Mr. B. with great emphas not restored—the charter i distress is gone—and the di ceased! No more lamentat tion of the land now; and should undertake to enterta in that vein, in the face of t prosperity-in the face of from the Secretary of the 7 stared at, as the Trojans v stare at the frantic exhibit tracted daughter, while vati fall of Troy in the midst of of Hector.

At the conclusion of this s spoke a few words, signify might have made the impor up the revenue; and Mr. ( land, spoke more fully, to sl not time yet for the distress nationally. Mr. Webster the and, instead of sending the S the Finance Committee, move table: which was done: and passed into the newspapers. emblazon it, had a great effi panic to a close.

CHAPTER (

REVIVAL OF THE GOLI

A MEASURE of relief was no which the machinery of dist and cease its long and cruel passage of the bill for equal gold and silver, and legalizing foreign coins of both metals brought forward in the House P. White of New-York, and p mated contest, in which the c as to the true relative value ( varied by some into a prefer bank paper. Fifteen and fivethe ratio of nearly all who se ted, from their pursuits, to un ject. The thick array of spea side; and the eighteen bank New-York, with Mr. Gallatin

ey; without pretext, ver; without the aid Senate will not be in the strange events world, nothing could ind, in our own councentury, any practicient doctrine of the er still, if that doctrine as to take effect in ding to the founders alone could transmis had no souls; that I the books: that all es especially, and above ted States, was most was, that this bank peration of effecting a d after submitting to to rise up in a new one, should be ready in the body of what n should deceive him, ed, in its new shape, to stead of Chestnut!

B. was done. It was en whose declarations. s issued from this floor. nousand people to send ng what those gentleeated, that the removal le the distress, and noof the deposits, or the uld remove the distress! not restored, and the and vet the distress is rence? Why that gencondemned, upon their eave this chamber to go on the very test which ablished; and after hav onths, upon this floor, deposits made the dis heir restoration, or the arter, could relieve it here until the dog-days to effect this restoration o home in good time for g the restoration or the where, as they go the it prosperity which ever blessed the land. Yes! repeated and exclaimed Mr. B. with great emphasis, the deposits are not restored—the charter is not renewed—the distress is gone—and the distress speeches have ceased! No more lamentation over the desolation of the land now; and a gentleman who should undertake to entertain the Senate again in that vein, in the face of the present national prosperity—in the face of the present report from the Secretary of the Treasury—would be stared at, as the Trojans were accustomed to stare at the frantic exhibitions of Priam's distracted daughter, while vaticinating the downfall of Troy in the midst of the heroic exploits of Hector.

At the conclusion of this speech Mr. Webster spoke a few words, signifying that foreigners might have made the importations which kept up the revenue; and Mr. Chambers, of Maryland, spoke more fully, to show that there was not time yet for the distress to work its effect nationally. Mr. Webster then varied his motion, and, instead of sending the Secretary's report to the Finance Committee, moved to lay it upon the table: which was done: and being printed, and passed into the newspapers, with the speech to emblazon it, had a great effect in bringing the panic to a close.

CHAPTER CVIII.

REVIVAL OF THE GOLD CURRENCY.

A MEASURE of relief was now at hand, before which the machinery of distress was to balk, and cease its long and cruel labors: it was the passage of the bill for equalizing the value of gold and silver, and legalizing the tender of foreign coins of both metals. The bills were brought forward in the House by Mr. Campbell P. White of New-York, and passed after an animated contest, in which the chief question was as to the true relative value of the two metals, varied by some into a preference for national bank paper. Fifteen and five-eighths to one was the ratio of nearly all who seemed best calculated, from their pursuits, to understand the subject. The thick array of speakers was on that side; and the eighteen banks of the city of New-York, with Mr. Gallatin at their head, favored that proportion. The difficulty of adjust ing this value, so that neither metal should expel the other, had been the stumbling block for a great many years; and now this difficulty seemed to be as formidable as ever. Refined calculations were gone into: scientific light was sought: history was rummaged back to the times of the Roman empire: and there seemed to be no way of getting to a concord of opinion either from the lights of science, the voice of history, or the result of calculations. The author of this View had (in his speeches on the subject), taken up the question in a practical point of view, regardless of history, and calculations, and the opinions of bank officers; and looking to the actual, and equal, circulation of the two metals in different countries, he saw that this equality and actuality of circulation had existed for above three hundred years in the Spanish dominions of Mexico and South America, where the proportion was 16 to one. Taking his stand upon this single fact, as the practical test which solved the question, all the real friends of the gold currency soon rallied to it. Mr. White gave up the bill which he had first introduced, and adopted the Spanish ratio. Mr. Clowney of South Carolina, Mr. Gillet and Mr. Cambreleng of New-York, Mr. Ewing of Indiana, Mr. McKim of Maryland, and other speakers, gave it a warm support. Mr. John Quincy Adams would vote for it, though he thought the gold was over-valued; but if found to be so, the difference could be corrected hereafter. The principal speakers against it and in favor of a lower rate, were Messrs. Gorham of Massachusetts; Selden of New-York; Binney of Pennsylvania; and Wilde of Georgia. And, eventually the bill was passed by a large majority-145 to 36. In the Senate it had an easy passage. Mr. Calhoun and Webster supported it: Mr. Clay opposed it: and on the final vote there were but seven negatives: Messrs. Chambers of Maryland; Clay; Knight of Rhode Island; Alexander Porter of Louisiana; Silsbee of Massachusetts; Southard of New Jersey; Sprague of Maine.

The good effects of the bill were immediately seen. Gold began to flow into the country through all the channels of commerce: old chests gave up their hordes: the mint was busy: and in a few months, and as if by magic, a currency banished from the country for thirty years, overspread the land, and gave joy and confidence to all the pursuits of industry. But this joy was not universal. A large interest connected with the Bank of the United States, and its subsidiary and subaltern institutions, and the whole paper system, vehemently opposed it; and spared neither pains nor expense to check its circulation, and to bring odium upon its supporters People were alarmed with counterfeits. Gilt counters were exhibited in the market's, to alarm the ignorant. The coin itself was burlesqued, in mock imitations of brass or copper, with grotesque figures, and ludicrous inscriptions -the "whole hog" and the "better currency," being the favorite devices. Many newspapers expended their daily wit in its stale depreciation. The most exalted of the paper money party, would recoil a step when it was offered to them, and beg for paper. The name of "Gold humbug" was fastened upon the person supposed to have been chiefly instrumental in bringing the derided coin into existence; and he, not to be abashed, made its eulogy a standing theme-vaunting its excellence, boasting its coming abundance, to spread over the land, flow up the Mississippi, shine through the interstices of the long silken purse, and to be locked up safely in the farmer's trusty oaken chest. For a year there was a real war of the paper against gold. But there was something that was an overmatch for the arts, or power, of the paper system in this particular, and which needed no persuasions to guide it when it had its choice: it was the instinctive feeling of the masses! which told them that money which would jingle in the pocket was the right money for them-that hard money was the right money for hard hands-that gold was the true currency for every man that had any thing true to give for it, either in labor or property: and upon these instinctive feelings gold became the avidious demand of the vast operative and producing classes.

CHAPTER CIX.

REJECTION OF MR. TANEY, NOMINATED FOR SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

A PRESENTIMENT of what was to happen induced the President to delay, until near the end of the session, the nomination to the Senate of

Mr. Taney for Secretary of the Treasury. He had offended the Bank of the United States too much to expect his confirmation in the present temper of the Senate. He had a right to hold back the nomination to the last day of the session, as the recess appointment was valid to its end; and he retained it to the last week, not being willing to lose the able and faithful services of that gentleman during the actual session of Congress. At last, on the 23d of June. the nomination was sent in, and immediately rejected by the usual majority in all cases in which the bank was concerned. Mr. Tanev. the same day resigned his place; and Mr. McClintock Young, first clerk of the treasury, remained by law acting Secretary. Mr. Benjamin Franklin Butler, of New-York, nominated for the place of attorney-general, was confirmed -he having done nothing since he came into the cabinet to subject him to the fate of his predecessor, though fully concurring with the President in all his measures in relation to the

CHAPTER CX.

SENATORIAL INVESTIGATION OF THE BANK OF THE UNITED STATES.

This corporation had lost so much ground in the public estimation, by repulsing the investigation attempted by the House of Representatives, that it became necessary to retrieve the loss by some report in its favor. The friends of the institution determined, therefore, to have an investigation made by the Senate-by, the Finance Committee of that body. In conformity to this determination Mr. Southard, on the last day of the session moved that that committee should have leave to sit during the recess of the Senate to inquire whether the Bank of the United States had violated its charter-whether it was a safe depository of the public moneysand what had been its conduct since 1832 in regard to extension and curtailment of loans, and its general management since that time. The committee to whom this investigation was committed, consisted of Messrs. Webster, Tyler Ewing, Mangum, and Wilkins. Of this committee all, except the last named, were the opponents of the administration, friends of the bank, its zealous advocates in between it and the government dently in its favor, and vot questions during the session very properly refused to serv tee; and Mr. King of Alabar in his place, also, and with e fused to serve. This act of t undertaking to examine the pulse of the committee of the sentatives and still standing that House, and by a commi and so restricted, completed mortification to all the friend Senate. It was deemed a cru itself by the Senate. It was done in a wrong way, and con but to lessen the dignity and the Senate. The members were the advocates of the bar defenders on all the points This was a violation of parl well as of the first principle propriety-the whole of which tory investigations to be made make the accusations. It was cation; for which purpose tl to sit in the recess-a proceed cedent, without warrant from constitution-and susceptible of ful and factious use. The o precedent for it was the comm in 1824, on the memorial of wards against Mr. Crawford in that was no warrant for thi was a mere authority to an tee which had gone through and made its report to the H its session after the House ; the deposition of the principal by sickness, but on his way to This deposition the committ publish, and be dissolved; an accordingly. And even this sl of a committee was obtained with difficulty, and under the cumstances. Mr. Crawford wa the presidency; the election before Congress met again; 1 made criminal charges against timony had been taken, excep wards himself; and he had n This was a violation of parliamentary law, as well as of the first principles of decency and propriety-the whole of which require criminatory investigations to be made, by those who make the accusations. It was to be done in vacation; for which purpose the committee was to sit in the recess—a proceeding without precedent, without warrant from any word in the constitution-and susceptible of the most abuse-ful and factious use. The only semblance of precedent for it was the committee of the House in 1824, on the memorial of Mr. Ninian Edwards against Mr. Crawford in that year; but that was no warrant for this proceeding. It was a mere authority to an existing committee which had gone through its examination, and made its report to the House, to continue the deposition of the principal witness, detained

by sickness, but on his way to the examination.

This deposition the committee were to take,

publish, and be dissolved; and so it was done

accordingly. And even this slight continuation of a committee was obtained from the House with difficulty, and under the most urgent circumstances. Mr. Crawford was a candidate for the presidency; the election was to come on before Congress met again; Mr. Edwards had made criminal charges against him; all the testimony had been taken, except that of Mr. Edwards himself; and he had notified the com-the Treasury. He United States ton ion in the present ad a right to hold ast day of the sesent was valid to its the last week, not e and faithful sering the actual sesn the 23d of June. .nd immediately reity in all cases in rned. Mr. Tanev. ; place; and Mr. k of the treasury. etary. Mr. Benjaw-York, nominated eral, was confirmed since he came into to the fate of his oncurring with the es in relation to the

CX.

N OF THE BANK OF TATES.

so much ground in pulsing the investiouse of Representasary to retrieve the favor. The friends 1. therefore, to have Senate-by the Fidy. In conformity outhard, on the last hat that committee ng the recess of the e Bank of the Unicharter-whether it e public moneysict since 1832 in relment of loans, and ice that time. The estigation was coms. Webster, Tyler ins. Of this comnamed, were the option, friends of the bank, its zealous advocates in all the questions mittee that he was on his way to appear before between it and the government, speaking arthem in obedience to their summons. And it was under these circumstances that the existing dently in its favor, and voting with it on all questions during the session. Mr. Wilkins committee was authorized to remain in sesvery properly refused to serve on the commitsion for his arrival-to receive his testimonytce; and Mr. King of Alabama, being proposed publish it-and dissolve. No perambulation in his place, also, and with equal propriety, rethrough the country-no indefinite session-no fused to serve. This act of the Senate in thus putting members upon Congress per diems and undertaking to examine the bank after a remileage from one session to another. Wrongpulse of the committee of the House of Repreful and abuseful in its creation, this peripasentatives and still standing out in contempt of tetic committee of the Senate was equally so that House, and by a committee so composed. in its composition and object. It was composed and so restricted, completed the measure of of the advocates of the bank, and its object evimortification to all the friends of the American dently was to retrieve for that institution a Senate. It was deemed a cruel wound given to part of the ground which it had lost; and was itself by the Senate. It was a wrong thing, so viewed by the community. The clear-sightdone in a wrong way, and could have no result ed masses saw nothing in it but a contrivance but to lessen the dignity and respectability of to varnish the bank, and the odious appellathe Senate. The members of the committee tion of "whitewashing committee" was fastenwere the advocates of the bank, and its public ed upon it. defenders on all the points to be examined.

CHAPTER CXI.

DOWNFALL OF THE BANK OF THE UNITED

WHEN the author of the Æneid had shown the opening gradeur of Rome, he deemed himself justified in departing from the chronological order of events to look ahead, and give a glimpse of the dead Marcellus, hope and heir of the Augustan empire; in the like manner the writer of this View, after having shown the greatness of the United States Bank-exemplified in her capacity to have Jackson condemned -the government directors and a secretary of its session after the House adjourned to take the treasury rejected—a committee of the House of Representatives repulsed—the country convulsed and agonized—and to obtain from the Senate of the United States a committee to proceed to the city of Philadelphia to "wash out its foul linen;"-after seeing all this and beholding the greatness of the moneyed power at the culminating point of its domination, I feel justified in looking ahead a few years to see it in its altered phase-in its ruined and fallen estate. And this shall be done in the simplest form of exhibition; namely: by copying some announcements from the Philadelphia papers of the day. Thus: 1. "Resolved (by the stockholders), that it is expedient for the Bank of the United States to make a general assignment of the real and personal estate, goods and chattels, rights and credits, whatsoever, and wheresover, of the said corporation, to five persons, for the payment or securing of the debts of the same—agreeably to the provisions of the acts of Assembly of this commonwealth (Pennsylvania)." 2. "It is known that measures have been taken to rescue the property of this shattered institution from impending peril, and to recover as much as possible of those enormous bounties which it was conceded had been paid by its late managers to trading politicians and mercenary publishers for corrupt services, rendered to it during its charter-seeking and electioneering campaigns." 3. "The amount of the suit instituted by the Bank of the United States against Mr. N. Biddle is $1,018,000, paid out during his administration, for which no vouchers can be found." 4. "The United States Bank is a perfect wreck, and is seemingly the prey of the officers and their friends, which are making away with its choicest assets by selling them to each other, and taking pay in the depreciated paper of the South." 5. "Besides its own stock of 35,000,000, which is sunk, the bank carries down with it a great many other institutions and companies, involving a loss of about 21,000,000 more—making a loss of 56,000,000—besides injuries to individuals." 6. "There is no price for the United States Bank stock. Some shares are sold, but as lottery tickets would be. The mass of the stockholders stand, and look on, as passengers on a ship that is going down, and from which there is no escape." 7. "By virtue of a writ of venditioni exponas, directed to the sheriff of the city and county of Philadelphia, will be exposed to public sale to the highest bidder, on Friday, the 4th day of November next, the marble house and the grounds known as the Bank of the United States, &c." 8. "By virtue of a writ of levari facias, to me directed, will be exposed to public sale the estate known as 'Andalusia,' ninety-nine and a half acres, one of the most highly improved places in Philadelphia; the mansion-house, and out-houses and offices, all on the most splendid scale; the green-houses, hothouses, and conservatories, extensive and useful; taken as the property of Nicholas Biddle." 9.

To the honorable Court of General Sessions. The grand jury for the county of Philadelphia.

respectfully submit to the court, on their oaths and affirmations, that certain officers connected with the United States Bank, have been guilty of a gross violation of the law-colluding together to defraud those stockholders who had trusted their property to be preserved by them. And that there is good ground to warrant a prosecution of such persons for criminal offences. which the grand jury do now present to the court, and ask that the attorney-general be directed to send up for the action of the grand iury, bills of indictment against Nicholas Biddle, Samuel Jaudon, John Andrews, and others, to the grand jury unknown, for a conspiracy to defraud the stockholders in the Bank of the United States of the sums of, &c." 10. Bills of indictment have been found against Nicholas Biddle, Samuel Jaudon and John Andrews, according to the presentment of the grand jury; and bench warrants issued, which have been executed upon them." 11. "Examination of Nicholas Biddle, and others, before Recorder Vaux. Yesterday afternoon the crowd and excitement in and about the court-room where the examination was to take place was even greater than the day before. The court-room doors were kept closed up to within a few minutes of four o'clock, the crowd outside blocking up every avenue leading to the room. When the doors were thrown open it was immediately filled to overflowing. At four the Recorder took his seat, and announcing that he was ready to proceed, the defendants were called, and severally answered to their names, &c." 12. "On Tuesday, the 18th, the examination of Nicholas Biddle and others, was continued, and concluded; and the Recorder ordered, that Nicholas Biddle, Thomas Dunlap, John Andrews, Samuel Jaudon, and Joseph Cowperthwaite, each enter into a separate recognizance, with two or more sufficient sureties, in the sum of $10,000 for their appearance at the present session of the court of general sessions for the city and county of Philadelphia, to answer the crime of which they thus stand charged." 13. "Nicholas Biddle and those indicted with him have been carried upon writs of habeas corpus before the Judges Barton, Conrad, and Doran, and discharged from the custody of the sheriff." 14. "The criminal proceedings against these former officers of the Bank of the United States have been brought to a close. To get rid of the charges against them without trial of the facts aga jury, they had themselves so bail, and sued out writs of the release of their parsons. the judges, the proceedings cluded, were delivered restere of Judges Barton and Conrac charge; that of Judge Doran They were accordingly discharation of the community is in escape from the indictments with

CHAPTER (

DEATH OF JOHN RANDOLPH,

HE died at Philadelphia in the -the scene of his early and be on the stage of public life, ha his parliamentary career in the first Mr. Adams, when Congre when he was barely of an age into the body. For more than was the political meteor of ( with undiminished splendor d time, and often appearing as plague" which shed, not war a nations, but agony and fear on sarcasm was keen, refined, wi great tendency to indulge in it lieved, as a lawful parliamentary some desirable purpose. Prete vice, demagogism, were the frequency the exercise of his talent; and, v them, he was the benefactor of t and genius all allowed him; quality of his mind visible to all which gave him an intuitive i effect of measures. During the of Mr. Jefferson's administrati "Murat" of his party, brilliant and always ready for it; and council, as well as in the field. the chairman of the Committee Means—a place always of labor bility, and of more then than elements of revenue were less no man could have been placed in during Mr. Jefferson's time whos

ourt, on their oaths in officers connected nk, have been guilty law-colluding toockholders who had preserved by them. round to warrant a for criminal offences. now present to the ornev-general be diaction of the grand inst Nicholas Biddle, rews, and others, to for a conspiracy to in the Bank of the f, &c." 10. Bills of CHAPTER CXII. nd against Nicholas John Andrews, acof the grand jury; d. which have been . "Examination of ers, before Recorder on the crowd and e court-room where ake place was even e. The court-room to within a few minwd outside blocking the room. When n it was immediately four the Recorder ng that he was ready were called, and sevmes. &c." 12. "On nination of Nicholas

s before the Judges and discharged from 14. "The criminal ormer officers of the have been brought to :harges against them

tinued, and conclud-

ered, that Nicholas

nn Andrews, Samuel

rthwaite, each enter

e, with two or more

sum of $10,000, for esent session of the

thre city and county

the crime of which

13. " Nicholas Bid-

im have been carried without trial of the facts against them, before a jury, they had themselves surrendered by their hail and sued out writs of habeas corpus for the release of their parsons. The opinions of the judges, the proceedings having been concluded, were delivered vesterday. The opinions of Judges Barton and Conrad was for their discharge; that of Judge Doran was unfavorable. They were accordingly discharged. The indignation of the community is intense against this escape from the indictments without jury trials."

DEATH OF JOHN RANDOLPH, OF ROANOAKE.

HE died at Philadelphia in the summer of 1833 -the scene of his early and brilliant apparition on the stage of public life, having commenced his parliamentary career in that city, under the first Mr. Adams, when Congress sat there, and when he was barely of an age to be admitted into the body. For more than thirty years he was the political meteor of Congress, blazing with undiminished splendor during the whole time, and often appearing as the "planetary plague" which shed, not war and pestilence on nations, but agony and fear on members. His sarcasm was keen, refined, withering-with a great tendency to indulge in it; but, as he believed, as a lawful parliamentary weapon to effect some desirable purpose. Pretension, meanness, vice, demagogism, were the frequent subjects of the exercise of his talent; and, when confined to them, he was the benefactor of the House. Wit and genius all allowed him; sagacity was a quality of his mind visible to all observers-and which gave him an intuitive insight into the effect of measures. During the first six years of Mr. Jefferson's administration, he was the "Murat" of his party, brilliant in the charge, and always ready for it; and valued in the council, as well as in the field. He was long the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means—a place always of labor and responsibility, and of more then than now, when the elements of revenue were less abundant; and no man could have been placed in that situation during Mr. Jefferson's time whose known sagacity was not a pledge for the safety of his lead in the most sudden and critical circumstances. He was one of those whom that eminent statesman habitually consulted during the period of their friendship, and to whom he carefully communicated his plans before they were given to the public. On his arrival at Washington at the opening of each session of Congress during this period, he regularly found waiting for him at his established lodgings-then Crawford's, Georgetown-the card of Mr. Jefferson, with an invitation for dinner the next day; a dinner at which the leading measures of the ensuing session were the principal topic. Mr. Jefferson did not treat in that way a member in whose sagacity he had not confidence.

It is not just to judge such a man by ordinary rules, nor by detached and separate incidents in his life. To comprehend him, he must be judged as a whole-physically and mentally-and under many aspects, and for his entire life. He was never well-a chronic victim of ill health from the cradle to the grave. A letter from his most intimate and valued friend, Mr. Macon, written to me after his death, expressed the belief that he had never enjoyed during his life one day of perfect health—such as well people enjoy. Such life-long suffering must have its effect on the temper and on the mind; and it had on his-bringing the temper often to the querulous mood, and the state of his mind sometimes to the question of insanity; a question which became judicial after his death, when the validity of his will came to be contested. I had my opinion on the point, and gave it responsibly, in a deposition duly taken, to be read on the trial of the will; and in which a belief in his insanity, at several specified periods, was fully expressed-with the reasons for the opinion. I had good opportunities of forming an opinion, living in the same house with him several years, having his confidence, and seeing him at all hours of the day and night. It also on several occasions became my duty to study the question, with a view to govern my own conduct under critical circumstances. Twice he applied to me to carry challenges for him. It would have been inhuman to have gone out with a man not in his right mind, and critical to one's self, as any accident on the ground might seriously compromise the second. My opinion was fixed, of occasional temporary aberrations of mind; and during such periods he would do and say strange things-but always in his own way-not only method, but genius in his fantasies: nothing to bespeak a bad heart, but only exaltation and excitement. The most brilliant talk that I ever heard from him came forth on such occasionsa flow for hours (at one time seven hours), of copious wit and classic allusion—a perfect scattering of the diamonds of the mind. I heard a friend remark on one of these occasions, "he has wasted intellectual jewelry enough here this evening to equip many speakers for great orations." I once sounded him on the delicate point of his own opinion of himself:—of course when he was in a perfectly natural state, and when he had said something to permit an approach to such a subject. It was during his last visit to Washington, two winters before he died. It was in my room, in the gloom of the evening light, as the day was going out and the lamps not lit-no one present but ourselves-he reclining on a sofa, silent and thoughtful, speaking but seldom, and I only in reply, I heard him repeat, as if to himself, those lines from Johnson, (which in fact I had often heard from him before), on "Senility and Imbecility," which show us life under its most melancholy form.

"In life's last scenes what prodigies surprise, Fears of the brave, and folies of the wise! From Marlborough's eyes the streams of dotage flow, And Switt expires, a driveller and a show."

When he had thus repeated these lines, which he did with deep feeling, and in slow and measured cadence, I deemed it excusable to make a remark of a kind which I had never ventured on before; and said: Mr. Randolph I have several times heard you repeat these lines, as if they could have an application to yourself, while no person can have less reason to fear the fate of Swift. I said this to sound him, and to see what he thought of himself. His answer was: "I have lived in dread of insanity." That answer was the opening of a sealed book-revealed to me the source of much mental agony that I had seen him undergo. I did deem him in danger of the fate of Swift, and from the same cause as judged by his latest and greatest biographer, Sir Walter Scott.

His parliamentary life was resplendent in talent—clevated in moral tone—always moving on the lofty line of honor and patriotism, and be employed to advantage in the cultivation of scorning every thing mean and selfish. He was the indignant enemy of personal and plunder legislation, and the very scourge of intrigue and corruption. He reverenced an honest man in the humblest garb, and scorned the dishonest though plated with gold. An opinion was propagated that he was fickle in his friendships Certainly there were some capricious changes: but far more instances of steadfast adherence. His friendship with Mr. Macon was historic Their names went together in life - live together in death-and are honored together most by those who knew them best. With Mr. Taze. well. his friendship was still longer than that with Mr. Macon, commencing in boyhood, and only ending with life. So of many others: and pre-eminently so of his neighbors and constituents-the people of his congressional districtaffectionate as well as faithful to him : electing him as they did, from boyhood to the grave. No one felt more for friends, or was more solicitous and anxious at the side of the sick and dying bed. Love of wine was attributed to him; and what was mental excitement, was referred to deep potations. It was a great error. I never saw him affected by wine-not even to the slightest departure from the habitual and scrupulous decorum of his manners. His temper was naturally gay and social, and so indulged when suffering of mind and body permitted. He was the charm of the dinner-table. where his cheerful and sparkling wit delighted every ear, lit up every countenance, and detained every guest. He was charitable; but chose to conceal the hand that ministered relief. I have often seen him send little children out to give to the poor.

He was one of the large slaveholders of Virginia, but disliked the institution, and, when let alone, opposed its extension. Thus, in 1803, when as chairman of the committee which reported upon the Indiana memorial for a temporary dispensation from the anti-slavery part of the ordinance of 1787, he puts the question upon a statesman's ground; and reports against it, in a brief and comprehensive argument:

"That the rapid population of the State of Ohio sufficiently evinces, in the opinion of your committee, that the labor of the slave is not necessary to promote the growth and settlement of colonies in that region. That this labor, demonstrably the dearest of any, can only be employed to advantage in the cultivation of products more valuable than any quarter of the United States: at tee deem it highly dangerous a to impair a provision wisely cale mote the happiness and prosperii western country, and to give straity to that extensive frontier. Joperation of this sagacious and straint, it is believed that the Indiana will, at no very distant a remuneration for a temporary prand emigration."

He was against slavery; and b manumitted and provided for which he held. But he was aga terference with his rights, his duties; and never failed to reser such interference. Thus, he was most zealous of the opposers of Missouri restriction; and even vot divisional line of "thirty-six th House, when the term "slavehole reproachfully used, he would assu fer to a member, not in the parlian of colleague, but in the complime "my fellow-slaveholder." And, in the consignees of his tobacco, and tors of his father, urged him t slaves, he quieted their intrusive on the spot, by saying, "Yes: yo free to the amount of the money vo ed from my father and his estate fo and I will set free an equal number

In his youth and later age, he in his middle life, he was agains for a while, would neither give challenge. He was under religion to the contrary, but finally yielde lieved) to an argument of his ow was private war, and rested up basis as public war; and that bot able, when there was no other results and injuries. That was h but I thought his relapse came me ing than reason; and especially fr of Decatur, to whem he was grea and whose duel with Barron long excited him. He had religious imp a vein of piety which showed itsel vate than in external observances. bitual in his reverential regard for of our religion; and one of his bean sions was, that, "If woman had ] dise, she had gained us heaven."

d selfish. He was sonal and plunder urge of intrigue and an honest man in ned the dishonest, n opinion was proin his friendships, appricious changes; teadfast adherence, Iacon was historic, n life—live together together, most by With Mr. Tazell longer than that ag in boyhood, and f many others; and rhbors and constitugressional districtful to him; electing hood to the grave. s, or was more soliside of the sick and was attributed to excitement, was ret was a great error. wine-not even to m the habitual and manners. His temd social, and so inmind and body per-1 of the dinner-table, arkling wit delighted tenance, and detained paritable; but chose ministered relief. I little children out to slaveholders of Virnstitution, and, when nsion. Thus, in 1803, committee which reaemorial for a tempoanti-slavery part of e puts the question 1; and reports against ensive argument:

ntion of the State of in the opinion of your or of the slave is not e growth and settleregion. That this is arest of any, can only in the cultivation of products more valuable than any known to that quarter of the United States: and the committee deem it highly dangerous and inexpedient to impair a provision wisely calculated to promote the happiness and prosperity of the northwestern country, and to give strength and security to that extensive frontier. In the salutary operation of this sagacious and benevolent restraint, it is believed that the inhabitants of Indiana will, at no very distant day, find ample remuneration for a temporary privation of labor and emigration."

He was against slavery; and by his will, both manumitted and provided for the hundreds which he held. But he was against foreign interference with his rights, his feelings, or his duties; and never failed to resent and rebuke such interference. Thus, he was one of the most zealous of the opposers of the proposed Missouri restriction; and even voted against the divisional line of "thirty-six thirty." In the House, when the term "slaveholder" would be reproachfully used, he would assume it, and refer to a member, not in the parliamentary phrase of colleague, but in the complimentary title of "my fellow-slaveholder." And, in London, when the consignees of his tobacco, and the slave factors of his father, urged him to liberate his slaves, he quieted their intrusive philanthropy, on the spot, by saying, "Yes: you buy and set free to the amount of the money you have received from my father and his estate for these slaves, and I will set free an equal number."

In his youth and later age, he fought duels: in his middle life, he was against them; and, for a while, would neither give nor receive a challenge. He was under religious convictions to the contrary, but finally yielded (as he believed) to an argument of his own, that duel was private war, and rested upon the same basis as public war; and that both were allowable, when there was no other redress for insults and injuries. That was his argument; but I thought his relapse came more from feeling than reason; and especially from the death of Decatur, to when, he was greatly attached, and whose duel with Barron long and greatly excited him. He had religious impressions, and a vein of piety which showed itself more in private than in external observances. He was habitual in his reverential regard for the divinity of our religion; and one of his beautiful expressions was, that, "If woman had lost us paradise, she had gained us heaven." The Bible and Shakespeare were, in his latter years, his constant companions-travelling with him on the road-remaining with him in the chamber The last time I saw him (in that last visit to Washington, after his return from the Russian mission, and when he was in full view of death) I heard him read the chapter in the Revelations (of the opening of the seals), with such power and beauty of voice and delivery, and such depth of pathos, that I felt as if I had never heard the chapter read before. When he had got to the end of the opening of the sixth seal, he stopped the reading, laid the book (open at the place) on his breast, as he lay on his bed. and began a discourse upon the beauty and sublimity of the Scriptural writings, compared to which he considered all human compositions vain and empty. Going over the images presented by the opening of the seals, he averred that their divinity was in their sublimity-that no human power could take the same images, and inspire the same awe and terror, and sink ourselves into such nothingness in the presence of the "wrath of the Lamb"—that he wanted no proof of their divine origin but the sublime feelings which they inspired.

CHAPTER CXIII.

DEATH OF MR. WIRT.

HE died at the age of sixty-two, after having reached a place in the first line at the Virginia bar, where there were such lawyers as Wickham, Tazewell, Watkins Leigh; and a place in the front rank of the bar of the Supreme Court, where there were such jurists as Webster and Pinkney; and after having attained the high honor of professional preferment in the appointment of Attorney General of the United States under the administration of Mr. Monroe. His life contains instructive lessons. Born to no advantages of wealth or position, he raised himself to what he became by his own exertions. In danger of falling into a fatal habit in early life, he retrieved himself (touched by the noble generosity of her who afterwards became his admired and beloved wife), from the brink of the abyss, and became the model of every domestic virtue; with genius to shine without labor, he yet considered genius nothing without tunate, indeed, will be the few, who shall imitate labor, and gave through life a laborious application to the study of the law as a science, and to each particular case in which he was ever employed. The elegant pursuits of literature occupied the moments taken from professional studies and labors, and gave to the reading public several admired productions, of which the long-desired and beautiful "Life of Patrick Henry," was the most considerable: a grateful commemoration of Virginia's greatest orator, which has been justly repaid to one of her first class orators, by Mr. Kennedy of Maryland, in his classic "Life of William Wirt." How grateful to see citizens, thus engaged in laborious professions, snatching moments from their daily labors to do justice to the illustrious dead-to enlighten posterity by their history, and encourage it by their example. Worthy of his political and literary eminence, and its most shining and crowning ornament, was the state of his domestic relations—exemplary in every thing that gives joy and decorum to the private family, and rewarded with every blessing which could result from such relations. _ But, why use this feeble pen, when the voice Webster is at hand? Mr. Wirt died during the term of the Supreme Court, his revered friend, the Chief Justice Marshall, still living to preside, and-to give, in touching language, the order to spread the proceedings of the bar (in relation to his death) upon the records of the court. At the bar meeting, which adopted these proceedings, Mr. Webster thus paid the tribute of justice and affection to one with whom professional rivalry had been the source and cement of personal friendship:

"It is announced to us that one of the oldest, one of the ablest, one of the most distinguished members of this bar, has departed this mortal life. William Wirt is no more! He has this day closed a professional career, among the longest and the most brilliant, which the distinguished members of the profession in the United States have at any time accomplished. Unsullied in every thing which regards professional honor and integrity, patient of labor, and rich in those stores of learning, which are the reward of patient labor and patient labor only; and if equalled, yet certainly allowed not to be excelled, in fervent, animated and persuasive eloquence, he has left an example which those who seek to raise themselves to great heights of professional emisence, will, hereafter emulously study. For-it successfully!

"As a public man, it is not our peculiar duty to speak of Mr. Wirt here. His character in that respect belongs to his country, and to the history of his country. And, sir, if we were to speak of him in his private life, and in his social relations, all we could possibly say of his urbanity, his kindness, the faithfulness of his friendships, and the warmth of his affections, would hardly seem sufficiently strong and glowing to do him justice, in the feeling and judgment of those who, separated, now forever from his embraces can only enshrine his memory in their bleeding hearts. Nor may we, sir, more than allude to that other relation, which belonged to him, and belongs to us all; that high and paramount relation, which connects man with his Maker! It may be permitted us, however, to have the pleasure of recording his name, as one who felt a deep sense of religious duty. and who placed all his hopes of the future, in the truth and in the doctrines of Christianity,

"But our particular ties to him were the ties of our profession. He was our brother, and he was our friend. With talents powerful enough to excite the strength of the strongest, with a kindness both of heart and of manner capable of warming and winning the coldest of his brethren, he has now completed the term of his professional life. and of his earthly existence, in the enjoyment of the high respect and cordial affections of us all. Let us, then, sir, hasten to pay to his memory the well-deserved tribute of our regard. Let us lose no time in testifying our sense of our loss, and in expressing our grief, that one great light of our profession is extinguished for-

CHAPTER CXIV.

DEATH OF THE LAST OF THE SIGNERS OF THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

On the morning of July 4th, 1826-just fifty years after the event-but three of the fifty-siz members of the continental Congress of 1776 who had signed the Declaration of Independence, remained alive; on the evening of that day there remained but one-Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, Maryland; then a full score beyond the Psalmist's limit of manly life, and destined to a further lease of six good years. It has been remarked of the "signers of the Declaration" that a felicitous existence seems to have been reserved for them; blessed with long life and good health, honored with the public esteem, raised to the highest dignities of of the federal government, hap terity, and happy in the view prosperous country which th brought into existence. Amor citous and so illustrious, he was happy, and among the most dis enjoyed the honors of his pure in all their forms; age, and h for sixteen years beyond that brings labor and sorrow and we ample fortune; public honors in est offices of his State, and a se of the United States, private c honorable and brilliant posterit tune, and to the care of wise an he had all the advantages of e the colleges of France and the " of London could give. With eve in unsuccessful rebellion, he risl first opening of the contest w country: and when he walked tary's table to sign the pape become a death-warrant to its mark was made, "there go some his signing was a privilege, claim He was not present at the decla not even a member of Congress ble Fourth of July. He was in that day, a member of the Mary and zealously engaged in urging the instructions which limited delegates in the continental ( taining a redress of grievances w the connection with the mothe succeeded-was appointed a de his post-and added his name to

All history tells of the throwi the tea in Boston harbor: it has attentive to the burning of th polis harbor. It was the summ the brigantine "Peggy Stewar Annapolis with a cargo of the forl board. The people were in col news. It was an insult, and a destruction was in preparation instant chastisement was in searc Terror seized them. They sent roll as the only man that could fury of the people, and save th property from a sudden destructio there was but one way to save

few, who shall imitate

not our peculiar duty His character in his country, and to And, sir, if we his private life, and we could possibly say ness, the faithfulness warmth of his affecm sufficiently strong tice, in the feeling and eparated, now forever g enshrine his memory Nor may we, sir, more r relation, which bes to us all; that high which connects man be permitted us, howof recording his name. ense of religious duty. hopes of the future in trines of Christianity. s to him were the ties of our brother, and he was powerful enough to exrongest, with a kindness ner capable of warming of his brethren, he has of his professional life, ence, in the enjoyment cordial affections of us hasten to pay to his ed tribute of our regard. testifying our sense of ing our grief, that one sion is extinguished for-

R CXIV.

F THE SIGNERS OF THE INDEPENDENCE.

ly 4th, 1826-just fift; but three of the fifty-six ental Congress of 1776 laration of Independence, ie evening of that day ne-Charles Carroll, of then a full score beyond manly life, and destined good years. It has been iers of the Declaration" nce seems to have been essed with long life and with the public esteem, raised to the highest dignities of the States and of the federal government, happy in their posterity, and happy in the view of the great and prosperous country which their labors had brought into existence. Among these, so felicitous and so illustrious, he was one of the most happy, and among the most distinguished. He enjoyed the honors of his pure and patriot life in all their forms; age, and health, and mind, for sixteen years beyond that fourscore which brings labor and sorrow and weakness to man; ample fortune; public honors in filling the highest offices of his State, and a seat in the Senate of the United States; private enjoyment in an honorable and brilliant posterity. Born to fortune, and to the care of wise and good parents. he had all the advantages of education which the colleges of France and the "Inns of Court" of London could give. With every thing to lose in unsuccessful rebellion, he risked all from the first opening of the contest with the mother country: and when he walked up to the secretary's table to sign the paper, which might become a death-warrant to its authors, the remark was made, "there go some millions." And his signing was a privilege, claimed and granted. He was not present at the declaration. He was not even a member of Congress on the memorable Fourth of July. He was in Annapolis on that day, a member of the Maryland Assembly, and zealously engaged in urging a revocation of the instructions which limited the Maryland delegates in the continental Congress to obtaining a redress of grievances without breaking the connection with the mother country. He succeeded-was appointed a delegate-flew to his post-and added his name to the patriot list.

All history tells of the throwing overboard of the tea in Boston harbor: it has not been equally attentive to the burning of the tea in Annapolis harbor. It was the summer of 1774 that the brigantine "Peggy Stewart" approached Annapolis with a cargo of the forbidden leaves on board. The people were in commotion at the news. It was an insult, and a defiance. Swift destruction was in preparation for the vessel: instant chastisement was in search of the owners. Terror seized them. They sent to Charles Carroll as the only man that could moderate the fury of the people, and save their persons and property from a sudden destruction. He told them and that was to burn their vessel and cargo, instantly and in the sight of the people. It was done: and thus the flames consumed at Annapolis, what the waves had buried at Boston: and in both cases the spirit and the sacrifice was the same—opposition to taxation without representation, and destruction to its symbol.

CHAPTER CXV.

COMMENCEMENT OF THE SESSION 1834-35: PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Towards the close of the previous session, Mr. Stevenson had resigned the place of speaker of the House of Representatives in consequence of his nomination to be minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary to the court of St. James -a nomination then rejected by the Senate, but subsequently confirmed. Mr. John Bell of Tennessee, was elected speaker in his place, his principal competitor being Mr. James K. Polk of the same State: and, with this difference in its organization, the House met at the usual time - the first Monday of December. Cabinet then stood: John Forsyth, Secretary of State, in place of Louis McLane, resigned; Levi Woodbury, Segretary of the Treasury; Lewis Cass, Secretary at War; Mahlon Dickerson, Secretary of the Navy; William T. Barry, Post Master General; Benjamin Franklin Butler. Attorney General. The condition of our affairs with France, was the prominent feature of the message, and presented the relations of the United States with that power under a serious aspect. The indemnity stipulated in the treaty of 1831 had not been paid—no one of the instalments; -and the President laid the subject before Congress for its consideration, and action, if deemed necessary.

"I regret to say that the pledges made through the minister of France have not been redeemed. The new Chambers met on the 31st July last, and although the subject of fulfilling treaties was alluded to in the speech from the throne, no attempt was made by the King or his Cabinet to procure an appropriation to carry it into execution. The reasons given for this omission, although they might be considered sufficient in an ordinary case, are not consistent with the expectations founded upon the assurances given there was but one way to save their persons, here, for there is no constitutional obstacle to entering into legislative business at the first meeting of the Chambers. This point, however, might have been overlooked, had not the Chambers, instead of being called to meet at so early a day that the result of their deliberations might be communicated to me before the meeting of Congress, been prorogued to the 29th of the present month-a period so late that their decision can scarcely be made known to the present Congress prior to its dissolution. To avoid this delay, our minister in Paris, in virtue of the assurance given by the French minister in the United States, strongly urged the convocation of the Chambers at an earlier day, but without success. It is proper to remark, however, that this refusal has been accompanied with the most positive assurances, on the part of the Executive government of France, of their intention to press the appropriation at the ensuing session of the Chambers.

ANNO

"If it shall be the pleasure of Congress to await the further action of the French Chambers, no further consideration of the subject will, at this session, probably be required at your hands. But if, from the original delay in asking for an appropriation; from the refusal of the Chambers to grant it when asked; from the omission to bring the subject before the Chambers at their last session; from the fact that, including that session, there have been five different occasions when the appropriation might have been made; and from the delay in convoking the Chambers until some weeks after the meeting of Congress, when it was well known that a communication of the whole subject to Congress at the last session was prevented by assurances that it should be disposed of before its present meeting, you should feel yourselves constrained to doubt whether it be the intention of the French government in all its branches to carry the treaty into effect, and think that such measures as the occasion may be deemed to call for should be now adopted, the important question arises, what those measures shall be.

The question then, of further delay, waiting on the action of France, or of action on our own part, was thus referred to Congress; but under the constitutional injunction, to recommend to that body the measures he should deem necessary, and in compliance with his own sense of duty, and according to the frankness of his temper, he fully and categorically gave his own opinion of what ought to be done; thus:

"It is my conviction that the United States ought to insist on a prompt execution of the treaty; and, in case it be refused, or longer delayed, take redress into their own hands. After the delay, on the part of France, of a quarter of a century, in acknowledging these claims by treaty, it is not to be tolerated that another quarter of a century is to be wasted in negotiating about the payment. The laws of nations provide a remedy for such occasions. It is a well-settled principle of the international code that where one nation owes another a liquidated debt, which it refuses or neglects to pay the aggrieved party may seize on the property belonging to the other, its citizens or subjects sufficient to pay the debt, without giving just cause of war. This remedy has been repeatedly resorted to, and recently by France herself to wards Portugal, under circumstances less unquestionable.

"Since France, in violation of the pledges given through her minister here, has delayed her final action so long that her decision will not probably be known in time to be communcated to this Congress, I recommend that a law be passed authorizing reprisals upon French property, in case provision shall not be made for the payment of the debt at the approaching session of the French Chambers. Such a measure ought not to be considered by France as a menace. Her pride and power are too well known to expect any thing from her fears, and preclude the necessity of the declaration that nothing partaking of the character of intimidation is intended by us. She ought to look upon it as the evidence only of an inflexible determination on the part of the United States to insist on their rights. That Government by doing only what it has itself acknowledged to be just, will be able to spare the United States the necessity of taking redress into their own hands and save the property of French citizens from that seizure and sequestration which American citizens so long endured without retaliation or redress. If she should continue to refuse that act of acknowledged justice, and, in violation of the law of nations, make reprisals on our part the occasion of hostilities against the United States, she would but add violence to injustice. and could not fail to expose herself to the just censure of civilized nations, and to the retributive judgments of Heaven."

In making this recommendation, and in looking to its possible result as producing war between the two countries, the President showed himself fully sensible to all the considerations which should make such an event deplorable between powers of ancient friendship, and their harmony and friendship desirable for the sake of the progress and maintenance of liberal political systems in Europe. And on this point be

"Collision with France is the more to be regretted, on account of the position she occupies in Europe in relation to liberal institutions But in maintaining our national rights and hon or, all governments are alike to us. If, by a collision with France, in a case where she is clearly in the wrong, the mai ciples shall be impeded, the that result, as well as every her own head."

This state of our relations rise to some animated procee gress, which will be noticed in The condition of the finances good-not only adequate for a the government and the cor ment of the remainder of the still leaving a balance in the one fourth of the annual inco the year. Thus:

"According to the estimate Department, the revenue : sources, during the present ve twenty millions six hundred thousand seven hundred and which, with the balance rema surv on the first of January 1 lions seven hundred and two tl dred and five dollars, produce thirty-two millions three hur seven thousand six hundred dollars. The total expenditur for all objects, including the p mated at twenty-five millions ninety-one thousand three hu dollars, which will leave a bal sury on the first, of January, lions seven hundred and thi two hundred and thirty-two balance, however, will be inc million one hundred and fifty of what was heretofore report ment as not effective."

This unavailable item of al dollars consisted of local ban in payment of public lands du general distress and bank suspe to 1822; and the banks which ing failed they became wort finally dropt from any enumer tents of the treasury. The public debt, constituting a mar financial history, and an era in treasury, was looked to by the epoch most proper for the se doubtful points of future pol auguration of a system of rigore which effect the message said:

"Free from public debt, at p world, and with no complicated suit in our intercourse with for present may be hailed as the

t. The laws of nations ich occasions. It is a the international code. es another a liquidated r neglects to pay the e on the property bes citizens or subjects. ot, without giving just das been repeatedly France herself toircumstances less unplation of the pledges ister here, has delayed that her decision will in time to be communirecommend that a law reprisals upon French on shall not be made for bt at the approaching hambers. Such a meaisidered by France as a id power are too well ing from her fears, and of the declaration that e character of intimida-She ought to look upon of an inflexible deterthe United States to innat Government, by doelf acknowledged to be e the United States the ess into their own hands of French citizens from cration which American I without retaliation or continue to refuse that stice, and, in violation of e reprisals on our part ties against the United add violence to injustice, pose herself to the just ions, and to the retribumendation, and in lookt as producing war bees, the President showed o all the considerations ch an event deplorable ent friendship, and their desirable for the sake aintenance of liberal pooe. And on this point he ice is the more to be rethe position she occupies to liberal institutions. national rights and hon e alike to us. If, by in a case where she is ciples shall be impeded, the responsibility for that result, as well as every other, will rest on her own head."

This state of our relations with France gave rise to some animated proceedings in our Congress, which will be noticed in their proper place. The condition of the finances was shown to be good—not only adequate for all the purposes of the government and the complete extinguishment of the remainder of the public debt, but still leaving a balance in the treasury equal to one fourth of the annual income at the end of the year. Thus:

"According to the estimate of the Treasury Demartment, the revenue accruing from all sources, during the present year, will amount to twenty millions six hundred and twenty-four thousand seven hundred and seventeen dollars, which, with the balance remaining in the Treasury on the first of January last, of eleven millions seven hundred and two thousand nine hundred and five dollars, produces an aggregate of thirty-two millions three hundred and twentyseven thousand six hundred and twenty-three dollars. The total expenditure during the year for all objects, including the public debt, is estimated at twenty-five millions five hundred and ninety-one thousand three hundred and ninety dollars, which will leave a balance in the Treasury on the first, of January, 1835, of six millions seven hundred and thirty-six thousand two hundred and thirty-two dollars. In this balance, however, will be included about one million one hundred and fifty thousand dollars of what was heretofore reported by the department as not effective."

This unavailable item of above a million of dollars consisted of local bank notes, received in payment of public lands during the years of general distress and bank suspensions from 1819 to 1822; and the banks which issued them having failed they became worthless; and were finally dropt from any enumeration of the contents of the treasury. The extinction of the public debt, constituting a marked event in our financial history, and an era in the state of the treasury, was looked to by the President as the epoch most proper for the settlement of our doubtful points of future policy, and the inauguration of a system of rigorous economy: to which effect the message said:

"Free from public debt, at peace with all the world, and with no complicated interests to consult in our intercourse with foreign powers, the clearly in the wrong, the march of liberal prin- tory the most favorable for the settlement of those principles in our domestic policy, which shall be best calculated to give stability to our republic, and secure the blessings of freedom to our citizens. While we are felicitating ourselves, therefore, upon the extinguishment of the national debt, and the prosperous state of our finances, let us not be tempted to depart from those sounds maxims of public policy, which enjoin a just adaptation of the revenue to the expenditures that are consistent with a rigid economy, and an entire abstinence from all topics of legislation that are not clearly within the constitutional powers of the Government, and suggested by the wants of the country. Properly regarded, under such a policy, every diminution of the public burdens arising from taxation, gives to individual enterprise increased power. and furnishes to all the members of our happy confederacy, new motives for patriotic affection and support. But, above all, its most important effect will be found in its influence upon the character of the Government, by confining its action to those objects which will be sure to secure to it the attachment and support of our fellowcitizens."

> The President had a new cause of complaint to communicate against the Bank of the United States, which was the seizure of the dividends due the United States on the public stock in the institution. The occasion was, the claim for damages which the bank set up on a protested bill of exchange, sold to it on the faith of the French treaty; and which was protested for non-payment. The case is thus told by the President:

"To the needless distresses brought on the country during the last session of Congress. has since been added the open seizure of the dividends on the public stock, to the amount of $170,041, under pretence of paying damages, cost, and interest, upon the protested French bill. This sum constituted a portion of the estimated revenues for the year 1834, upon which the appropriations made by Congress were based. It would as soon have been expected that our collectors would seize on the customs. or the receivers of our land offices on the moneys arising from the sale of public lands, under pretences of claims against the United States, as that the bank would have retained the dividends. Indeed, if the principle be established that any one who chooses to set up a claim against the United States may, without authority of law, seize on the public property or money wherever he can find it, to pay such claim, there will remain no assurance that our revenue will reach the treasury, or that it will be applied after the appropriation to the purposes designated in the law. The paymasters present may be hailed as the epoch in our his- of our army, and the pursers of our navy, may, under like pretences, apply to their own use moneys appropriated to set in motion the public force, and in time of war leave the country without defence. This measure, resorted to by the Bank, is disorganizing and revolutionary, and, if generally resorted to by private citizens in like cases, would fill the land with anarchy and violence."

The money thus seized by the bank was retained until recovered from it by due course of law. The corporation was sued, judgment recovered against it, and the money made upon a writ of execution; so that the illegality of its conduct in making this seizure was judicially established. The President also communicated new proofs of the wantonness of the pressure and distress made by the bank during the preceding session-the fact coming to light that it had shipped about three millions and a half of the specie to Europe which it had squeezed out of the hands of the people during the panic;and also that, immediately after the adjournment of Congress, the action of the bank was reversed-the curtailment changed into extension; and a discount line of seventeen millions rapidly ran out.

"Immediately after the close of the last session, the bank, through its president, announced its ability and readiness to abandon the system of unparalleled curtailment, and the interruption of domestic exchanges, which it had practised upon from the 1st of August, 1833, to the 30th of June, 1834, and to extend its accommodations to the community. The grounds as sumed in this annunciation amounted to an acknowledgment that the curtailment, in the extent to which it had been carried, was not necessary to the safety of the bank, and had been persisted in merely to induce Congress to grant the prayer of the bank in its memorial relative to the removal of the deposits, and to give it a new charter. They were substantially a confession that all the real distresses which individuals and the country had endured for the preceding six or eight months, had been needlessly produced by it, with the view of effecting, through the sufferings of the people, the legislative action of Congress. It is a subject of congratulation that Congress and the country had the virtue and firmness to bear the infliction; that the energies of our people soon found relief from this wanton tyranny, in vast importations of the precious metals from almost every part of the world; and that, at the close of this tremendous effort to control our government, the bank found itself powerless, and no longer able to loan out its surplus means. The community had learned to manage its affairs without its assistance, and trade had already found new auxiliaries; so that, on the 1st of October last, the extraordinary spectacle was presented of a national bank, more than one half of whose capital was either lying unproductive in its vaults, or in the hands of foreign bankers."

Certainly this was a confession of the whole criminality of the bank in making the distress: but even this confession did not prevent the Senate's Finance Committee from making an honorable report in its favor. But there is something in the laws of moral right above the powers of man, or the designs and plans o. banks and politicians. The greatest calamity of the bank—the loss of thirty-five millions of stock to its subscribers—chiefly dates from this period and this conduct. Up to this time its waste and losses, though great, might still have been remediable; but now the incurable course was taken. Half its capital lying idle! Good borrowers were scarce; good indorsers still more so; and a general acceptance of stocks in lieu of the usual security was the fatal resort. First its own stock, then a great variety of stocks were taken; and when the bank went into liquidation, its own stock was gone! and the others in every imaginable degree of depreciation, from under par to nothing. The government had directors in the bank at that time, Messrs. Charles McAllister, Edward D. Ingraham, and - Ellmaker; and the President was under no mistake in any thing he said. The message recurs to the fixed policy of the President in selling the public stock in the bank, and says:

"I feel it my duty to recommend to you that a law be passed authorizing the sale of the public stock; that the provision of the charter requiring the receipt of notes of the bank in payment of public dues, shall, in accordance with the power reserved to Congress in the 14th section of the charter, be suspended until the bank pays to the treasury the dividends withheld; and that all laws connecting the government or its officers with the bank, directly or indirectly, be repealed; and that the institution be left hereafter to its own resources and means."

The wisdom of this persevering recommendation was, fortunately, appreciated in time to save the United States from the fate of other stockholders. The attention of Congress was again called to the regulation of the deposits in State banks. As yet there was no law upon the subject. The bill for that purpose passed in the House of Representatives at the previous session, had been laid upon Senate; and thus was kept ope plaint against the President fi tody of the public moneys. I
It was the custody, more or under every administration of ernment, and never called ille, President Jackson; but it was to require regulation by law;
earnestly recommended it. The

"The attention of Congress vited to the regulation of the State banks, by law. Althoug exercised by the Executive de behalf is only such as was ur through every administration fr the government up to the estal present bank, yet it is one whi of regulation by law, and, there be regulated. The power of Co in what places the Treasurer moneys in the Treasury, and to tions upon the Executive authorities to their custody and removal, its exercise will rather be court aged by those public officers and rests the responsibility for the desirable that as little power as be left to the President or S Treasury over those institutio thus freed from Executive influe a common head to direct their o have neither the temptation no interfere in the political conflict Not deriving their charters from authorities, they would never ha ments to meddle in general e have led the Bank of the Unite tate and convulse the country two years."

The increase of the gold currer of congratulation, and the purif by the suppression of small no earnest recommendation with the latter addressed to the people of every way worthy of their adop

"The progress of our gold coble to the officers of the mint, arshort period to furnish the csound and portable currency, wdiminish the inconvenience to twant of a general paper curren-State banks be incapable of furnisinstitutions have already shown tpetent to purchase and furnish donfor the convenience of trade, at reand not a doubt is entertained atperiod, all the wants of the coaccommodations and exchange, vas promptly and as cheaply as a st of October last was presented of a one half of whose inproductive in its reign bankers."

Vol. I.—31

ession of the whole naking the distress: id not prevent the e from making an vor. But there is oral right above the esigns and plans o. he greatest calamity hirty-five millions of niefly dates from this Up to this time its reat, might still have the incurable course al lying idle! Good od indorsers still more ce of stocks in lieu of fatal resort. First, its ariety of stocks were ak went into liquidane! and the others in of depreciation, from he government had dit time, Messrs. Charles graham, and - Ellwas under no mistake he message recurs to resident in selling the and says:

recommend to you that ing the sale of the pubsion of the charter retes of the bank in payall, in accordance with Congress in the 14th e suspended until the ry the dividends withconnecting the governthe bank, directly or ; and that the instituits own resources and ersevering recommendaappreciated in time to ; from the fate of other ention of Congress was lation of the deposits in there was no law upon for that purpose passed sentatives at the previous session, had been laid upon the table in the Senate; and thus was kept open a head of complaint against the President for the illegal custody of the public moneys. It was not illegal. It was the custody, more or less resorted to, under every administration of the federal government, and never called illegal except under President Jackson; but it was a trust of a kind to require regulation by law; and he, therefore, earnestly recommended it. The message said:

"The attention of Congress is earnestly invited to the regulation of the deposits in the State banks, by law. Although the power now exercised by the Executive department in this behalf is only such as was uniformly exerted through every administration from the origin of the government up to the establishment of the present bank, yet it is one which is susceptible of regulation by law, and, therefore, ought so to be regulated. The power of Congress to direct in what places the Treasurer shall keep the moneys in the Treasury, and to impose restrictions upon the Executive authority, in relation to their custody and removal, is unlimited, and its exercise will rather be courted than discouraged by those public officers and agents on whom rests the responsibility for their safety. It is desirable that as little power as possible should be left to the President or Secretary of the Treasury over those institutions, which, being thus freed from Executive influence, and without a common head to direct their operations, would have neither the temptation nor the ability to interfere in the political conflicts of the country. Not deriving their charters from the national authorities, they would never have those inducements to meddle in general elections, which have led the Bank of the United States to agitate and convulse the country for upwards of

The increase of the gold currency was a subject of congratulation, and the purification of paper by the suppression of small notes a matter of earnest recommendation with the President-the latter addressed to the people of the States, and every way worthy of their adoption. He said:

"The progress of our gold coinage is creditable to the officers of the mint, and promises in & short period to furnish the country with a sound and portable currency, which will much diminish the inconvenience to travellers of the want of a general paper currency, should the State banks be incapable of furnishing it. Those institutions have already shown themselves competent to purchase and furnish domestic exchange for the convenience of trade, at reasonable rates; and not a doubt is entertained that, in a short period, all the wants of the country, in bank accommodations and exchange, will be supplied Vol. I.—31

tofore been by the Bank of the United States. If the several States shall be induced gradually to reform their banking systems, and prohibit the issue of all small notes, we shall, in a few years, have a currency as sound, and as little liable to fluctuations, as any other commercial country."

The message contained the standing recommendation for reform in the presidential election. The direct vote of the people, the President considered the only safeguard for the purity of that election, on which depended so much of the safe working of the government. The message

"I trust that I may be also pardoned for renewing the recommendation I have so often submitted to your attention in regard to the mode of electing the President and Vice-President of the United States. All the reflection I have been able to bestow upon the subject, increases my conviction that the best interests of the country will be promoted by the adoption of some plan which will secure, in all contingencies, that important right of sovereignty to the direct control of the people. Could this be attained, and the terms of those officers be limited to a single period of either four or six years. I think our liberties would possess an additional safeguard."

CHAPTER CXVI.

REPORT OF THE BANK COMMITTEE.

Early in the session the Finance Committee of the Senate, which had been directed to make an examination into the affairs of the Bank of the United States, made their report—an elaborate paper, the reading of which occupied two hours and a half,-for this report was honored with a reading at the Secretary's table, while but few of the reports made by heads of departments. and relating to the affairs of the whole Union. received that honor. It was not only read through, but by its author-Mr. Tyler, the second named of the committee; the first named, or official chairman, Mr. Webster, not having acted on the committee. The report was a most elaborate vindication of the conduct of the bank at all points; but it did not stop at the defence of the institution, but went forward to the crimination of others. It dragged in the names of General Jackson, Mr. Van Buren, and Mr. Benton, laying hold of the circumstance of their as promptly and as cheaply as they have here- having done ordinary acts of duty to their friends for branch banks, to raise false implications against them as having been in favor of the institution. If such had been the fact, it did not come within the scope of the committee's appointment, nor of the resolution under which they acted, to have reported upon such a circumstance: Lut the implications were untrue; and Mr. Benton being the only one present that had the right of speech, assailed the report the instant it was read-declaring that such things were not to pass uncontradicted for an instant -that the Senate was not to adjourn, or the galleries to disperse without hearing the contradiction. And being thus suddenly called up by a sense of duty to himself and his friends, he would do justice upon the report at once, exposing its numerous fallacies from the moment they appeared in the chamber. He commenced with the imputations upon himself, General Jackson and Mr. Van Buren, and scornfully repulsed the base and gratuitous assumptions which had been made. He said:

"His own name was made to figure in that report-in very good company to be sure, that of President Jackson, Vice-President Van Buren and Mr. senator Grundy. It seems that we have all been detected in something that deserves exposure-in the offence of aiding our respective constituents, or fellow-citizens in obtaining branch banks to be located in our respective States; and upon this detection, the assertion is made that these branches were not extended to these States for political effect, when the charter was nearly run out, but in good faith, and upon our application, to aid the business of the country. Mr. B. said, it was true that he had forwarded a petition from the merchants of St. Louis, about 1826 or '27, soliciting a branch at that place: and he had accompanied it by a letter, as he had been requested to do, sustaining and supporting their request; and bearing the testimony to their characters as men of business and property which the occasion and the truth required. He did this for merchants who were his political enemies, and he did it readily and cordially, as a representative ought to act for his constituents, whether they are for him, or against him, in the elections. So far so good; but the allegation of the report is, that the branch at St. Louis was established upon this petition and this letter, and therefore was not established with political views, but purely and simply for business purposes. Now, said Mr. B., I have a question to put to the senator from Virginia (Mr. Tyler), who has made the report for the committee: It is this: whether the president or directors of the bank had informed him in the field against him every where, and in that General Cadwallader had been sent as an every form; its directors traversing the State and constituents in promoting their application agent to St. Louis, to examine the place, and to report upon its ability to sustain a branch?

"Mr. Tyler rose, and said, that he had heard nothing at the bank upon the subject of Gen. Cadwallader having been sent to St. Louis, or any report upon the place being made."

Then, said Mr. Benton, resuming his speech the committee has been treated unworthilyscurvily,—basely,—by the bank! It has been made the instrument to report an untruth to the Senate, and to the American people; and neither the Senate, nor that part of the American people who chance to be in this chamber shall be permitted to leave their places until that falsehood is exposed.

"Sir. said Mr B., addressing the Vice-President, the president, and directors of the Bank of the United States, upon receiving the merchants' petition, and my letter, did not send a branch to St. Louis! They sent an agent there, in the person of General Cadwallader, to examine the place, and to report upon its mercantile capabilities and wants; and upon that report, the decision was made, and made against the request of the merchants, and that upon the ground that the business of the place would not justify the establishment of a branch. The petition from the merchants came to Mr. B. while he was here, in his seat; it was forwarded from this place to Philadelphia; the agent made his visit to St. Louis before he (Mr. B.) returned: and when he got home, in the spring, or summer, the merchants informed him of what had occurred; and that they had received a letter from the directory of the bank, informing them that a branch could not be granted; and there the whole affair, so far as the petition and the letter were concerned, died away. But, said Mr. B. it happened just in that time, that I made my first demonstration-struck my first blowagainst the bank; and the next news that I had from the merchants was, that another letter had been received from the bank, without any new petition having been sent, and without any new report upon the business of the place, informing them that the branch was to come! And come it did, and immediately went to work to gain men and presses, to govern the politics of the State, to exclude him (Mr. B.) from re-election to the Senate; and to oppose every candidate, from governor to constable, who was not for the bank. The branch had even furnished a list to the mother bank, through some of its officers, of the names and residences of the active citizens in every part of the State; and to these, and to their great astonishment at the familiarity and condescension of the high directory in Philadelphia, myriads of bank doorments were sent, with a minute description of name and place, postage free. At the presdential election of 1832, the State was deluged with these favors. At his own re-elections w the Senate, the two last, the branch bank was going to the houses of the General Assembly after the almost every county, over thousand square miles; and legislature as lobby member Of these things Mr. B. had public before, nor should he l had it not been for the false be palmed upon the Senate tl mentality of its committee. driven into it, he would mer cumstance, which also, he ha public before, but which w upon the establishment of t Louis, and the kind of busine perform. An immense editic his speech on the veto messas through his State on the eve of It bore the impress of the bar ladelphia, and was intended of Missouri see that he (Mr. I fit person to represent them: was seen from the report of directors to the President of that seventy-five thousand cor were paid for by the Bank of th

The committee had gone ou departed from the business were charged by the Senate bring up a stale imputation up for becoming inimical to Mr. I could not make him subservier The imputation was unfounded and disproved by the journa which bore Gen. Jackson's no Biddle for government director of those directors, thereby in president of the bank-three se many successive years, after ththis hostility and vindictivene tifiable imputation became the next point of Mr. Benton's ani was thus disposed of:

"Mr. B. said there was anot must be noticed now, because t found it was written in our ow alluded to the 'hostility' of t the United States to the bank, large a figure in that report. ness' of the President,-the '1 President, was often pressed in that report-which he must 1 qualify as an elaborate defen Whether used originally, or 1 was the same thing. The quo Duane was made to help out t the committee-to sustain their thereby became their own. Jess' of the President towar ine the place, and to istain a branch? I that he had heard the subject of Gen. sent to St. Louis, or being made." resuming his speech, eated unworthily.bank! It has been eport an untruth to merican people; and it part of the Ameribe in this chamber.

ve their places until

ssing the Vice-Presi-

ectors of the Bank of ceiving the merchants' d not send a branch to agent there, in the perader, to examine the its mercantile capabiln that report, the dele against the request hat upon the ground place would not justify branch. The petition e to Mr. B. while he was forwarded from ; the agent made his ne (Mr. B.) returned; n the spring, or summed him of what had r had received a letter e bank, informing them e granted; and there the e petition and the letter ay. But, said Mr. B. time, that I made my ruck my first blowne next news that I had that another letter had bank, without any new it, and without any new s of the place, informing as to come! And come went to work to gain vern the politics of the Mr. B.) from re-election oppose every candidate, stable, who was not for h had even furnished a ik, through some of its nd residences of the acart of the State; and to eat astonishment at the scension of the high di-, myriads of bank docua minute description of age free. At the presi-2, the State was deluged t his own re-elections w st, the branch bank was nim every where, and in tors traversing the State, going to the houses of the members of the General Assembly after they were elected, in almost every county, over a State of sixty thousand square miles; and then attending the legislature as lobby members, to oppose him. of these things Mr. B. had never spoken in public before, nor should he have done it now, had it not been for the falsehood attempted to be palmed upon the Senate through the instrumentality of its committee. But having been driven into it, he would mention another circumstance, which also, he had never named in public before, but which would 'hrow light upon the establishment of the branch in St. Louis, and the kind of business which it had to perform. An immense edition of a review of his speech on the veto message, was circulated through his State on the eve of his last election. It bore the impress of the bank foundry in Philadelphia, and was intended to let the people of Missouri see that he (Mr. B.) was a very unfit person to represent them: and afterwards it was seen from the report of the government directors to the President of the United States, that seventy-five thousand copies of that review were paid for by the Bank of the United States!"

The committee had gone out of their waydeparted from the business with which they were charged by the Senate's resolution-to bring up a stale imputation upon Gen. Jackson, for becoming inimical to Mr. Biddle, because he could not make him subservient to his purposes. The imputation was unfounded and gratuitous, and disproved by the journals of the Senate, which bore Gen. Jackson's nomination of Mr. Biddle for government director—and at the head of those directors, thereby indicating him for president of the bank—three several times, in as many successive years, after the time alleged for this hostility and vindictiveness. This unjustifiable imputation became the immediate, the next point of Mr. Benton's animadversion; and was thus disposed of:

"Mr. B. said there was another thing which must be noticed now, because the proof to confound it was written in our own journals. He alluded to the 'hostility' of the President of the United States to the bank, which made so large a figure in that report. The 'vindictiveness' of the President,—the 'hostility' of the President, was often pressed into the service of that report-which he must be permitted to qualify as an elaborate defence of the bank. Whether used originally, or by quotation, it was the same thing. The quotation from Mr. Duane was made to help out the argument of the committee-to sustain their position-and thereby became their own. The 'vindictive-Jess' of the President towards the bank, is committee of the House of Representatives had brought forward with imposing gravity by the committee; and no one is at a loss to understand what is meant! The charge has been made too often not to suggest the whole story as often as it is hinted. The President became hostile to Mr. Biddle, according to this fine story, because he could not manage him! because he could not make him use the institution for political purposes! and hence his revenge, his vindictiveness, his hatred of Mr. Biddle, and his change of sentiment towards the institution. This is the charge which has run through the bank presses for three years, and is alleged to take date from 1829, when an application was made to change the president of the Portsmouth branch. But how stands the truth, recorded upon our own journals? It stands thus: that for three consecutive years after the harboring of this deadly malice against Mr. Biddle, for not managing the institution to suit the President's political wishes-for three years, one after another, with this 'vindictive' hate in his bosom, and this diabolical determination to ruin the institution, he nominates this same Mr. Biddle to the Senate, as one of the government directors, and at the head of those directors! Mr. Biddle and some of his friends with him came in, upon every nomination for three successive years, after vengeance had been sworn against him! For three years afterwards he is not only named a director, but indicated for the presidency of the bank, by being put at the head of those who came recommended by the nomination of the President, and the sanction of the Senate! Thus was he nominated for the years 1830, 1831, and 1832; and it was only after the report of Mr. Clayton's committee of 1832 that the President ceased to nominate Mr. Biddle for government director! Such was the frank, confiding and friendly conduct of the President; while Mr. Biddle, conscious that he did not deserve a nomination at his hands, had himself also elected during each of these years, at the head of the stockholders' ticket. He knew what he was meditating and hatching against the President, though the President did not! What then becomes of the charge faintly shadowed forth by the committee, and publicly and directly made by the bank and its friends? False! False as hell! and no senator can say it without finding the proof of the falsehood recorded in our own journal!'

Mr. Benton next defended Mr. Taney from an unjustifiable and gratuitous assault made upon him by the committee-the more unwarrantable because that gentleman was in retirement-no more in public life-having resigned his place of Secretary of the Treasury the day he was rejected by the Senate. Mr. Taney, in his report upon the removal of the deposits, had repeated, what the government directors and a first reported, of the illegal conduct of the bank committee of exchange, in making loans. The fact was true, and as since shown, to a far higher degree than then detected; and the Senate's committee were unjustifiable in defending it. But not satisfied with this defence of a criminal institution against a just accusation, they took the opportunity of casting censure upon Mr. Taney, and gaining a victory over him by making a false issue. Mr. Benton immediately corrected this injustice. He said:

"That he was not now going into a general answer to the report, but he must do justice to an abse; * gentleman-one of the purest men upon earth, both in public and private life, and who, after the manner he had been treated in this chamber, ought to be secure, in his retirement, from senatorial attack and injustice. The committee have joined a conspicuous issue with Mr. Taney; and they have carried a glorious bank victory over him, by turning off the trial upon a false point. Mr. Taney arraigned the legality of the conduct of the exchange committee, which, overleaping the business of such a committee, which is to buy and sell real bills of exchange, had become invested with the power of the whole board; transacting that business which, by the charter, could only be done by the board of directors, and by a board of not less than seven, and which they could not delegate. Yet this committee, of three, selected by the President himself, was shown by the report of the government directors to transact the most important business; such as making immense loans, upon long credits, and upon questionable security; sometimes covering its operations under the simulated garb, and falsified pretext, of buying a bill of exchange; sometimes using no disguise at all. It was shown, by the same report, to have the exclusive charge of conducting the curtailment last winter; a business of the most important character to the country, having no manner of affinity to the proper functions of an exchange committee; and which they conducted in the most partial and iniquitous manner; and without even reporting to the board. All this the government directors communicated. All this was commented upon on this floor; yet Mr. Taney is selected! He is the one pitched upon; as if nobody but him had arraigned the illegal acts of this committee; and then he is made to arraign the existence of the committee, and not its misconduct! Is this right? Is it fair? Is it just thus to pursue that gentleman, and to pursue him unjustly? Can the vengeance of the bank never be appeased while he lives and moves on earth?"

After having vindicated the President, the Vice-President, Mr. Grundy, Mr. Taney, and himself, from the unfounded imputations of the committee, so gratuitously presented, so unwarranted in fact, and so foreign to the purpose for which they were appointed, Mr. Benton laid hold of some facts which had come to light for the purpose of showing the misconduct of the bank, and to invalidate the committee's report. The first was the transportation of specie to London while pressing it out of the community here. He said:

"He had performed a duty, which ought not to be delayed an hour, in defending himself, the President, and Mr. Taney, from the sad injustice of that report; the report itself, with all its elaborate pleadings for the bank,-its errors of omission and commission,-would come up for argument after it was printed; and when with God's blessing, and the help of better hands he would hope to show that it was the duty of the Senate to recommit it, with instructions to examine witnesses upon oath, and to bring out that secret history of the institution, which seems to have been a sealed book to the committee. For the present, he would bring to light two facts, detected in the intricate mazes of the monthly statements, which would fix at once, both the character of the bank and the character of the report; the bank, for its audacity, wickedness and falsehood; the report, for its blindness, fatuity, and partiality.

"The bank, as all America knows (said Mr. B.), filled the whole country with the endless cry which had been echoed and re-echoed from this chamber, that the removal of the deposits had laid her under the necessity of curtailing her debts; had compelled her to call in her loans to fill the vacuum in her coffers produced by this removal; and thus to enable herself to stand the pressure which the 'hostility' of the government was bringing upon her. This was the assertion for six long months; and now let facts confront this assertion, and reveal the truth to an outraged and insulted community.

"The first fact (said Mr. B.), is the transfer of the moneys to London, to lie there idle, while squeezed out of the people here during the panic and pressure.

"The cry of distress was raised in December, at the meeting of Congress; and during that month the sum of $129,764 was transferred by the bank to its agents, the Barings. This cry waxed stronger till July, and until that time the monthly transfers were:

Decem	bei	۲,			$129,764
Februa	ry	΄.			355,253
March,					261,543
May, .	3				34,749
June,					2,142,054
July,					501,950

$3,425,313

Making the sum of near thre half transferred to London, hands of an agent, while that squeezed out of a few cities he country, and the halls of Con with the deafening din of the was forced to curtail, to supp own coffers from the removal And, worse yet! The bank ! of the same agents, a large sur fers of these panic collections the whole, the sum of $4,261 day of July last, which was agents' hands in London, dra interest there, while squeezed of those who were paying ba near seven per cent.; and had into brokers' hands to borrow cent. a month. Even now, at on the first day of this month lions and a half of this money still lying idle in the hands waiting till foreign exchange ca to eight or ten per cent. The conduct, Mr. B. said, was as notorious fact, that the transfe were made by sinking the pric low as five per cent. below pa and planters had bills to sel eight per cent. above par wher importers had to buy; thus de commerce of the country—de producer and consumer—and 1 tion of thirteen per cent. in for in the brief space of six month to make money scarce at hom that scarcity upon the Preside bining calumny and stock-jo diabolical attempt to ruin the rule it."

The next glaring fact which a mous culpability of the bank pressure and distress, was th about a million and a quarter from New Orleans, while distr ness community there by refu and the curtailment of loans, u making up what she lost there of the deposits. The fact of the detected in the monthly repor the Secretary of the Treasury, as of the wantonness and wickeds sure, as the amount thus sque community was immediately tra ladelphia or New-York; to be t London. Mr. Benton thus expos

"The next fact, Mr. B. said, wo of an immense amount of special leans, at the moment the West

imputations of the presented, so unreign to the purpose binted, Mr. Benton which had come to wing the misconduct late the committee's insportation of special it out of the com-

tv, which ought not efending himself, the from the sad injustice t itself, with all its bank,-its errors of -would come up for ted; and when, with lp of better hands, he t was the duty of the h instructions to exth, and to bring out he institution, which aled book to the com-, he would bring to in the intricate mazes s, which would fix at of the bank and the the bank, for its aualsehood; the report, and partiality. erica knows (said Mr. ntry with the endless ed and re-echoed from moval of the deposits necessity of curtailing her to call in her loans, er coffers produced by to enable herself to the 'hostility' of the ; upon her. This was months; and now let ertion, and reveal the d insulted community. Mr. B.), is the transfer 1, to lie there idle, while le here during the panic vas raised in December, cress; and during that 764 was transferred by the Barings. This cry ly, and until that time ere:

> $129,764 355,253 261,543 34,749 2,142,054 501,950

"The next fact, Mr. B. said, was the abduction of an immense amount of specie from New Orleans, at the moment the Western produce was

Making the sum of near three millions and a half transferred to London, to lie idle in the hands of an agent, while that very money was squeezed out of a few cities here; and the whole country, and the halls of Congress, were filled with the deafening din of the cry, that the bank was forced to curtail, to supply the loss in her own coffers from the removal of the deposits! And, worse yet! The bank had, in the hands of the same agents, a large sum when the transfers of these panic collections began; making in the whole, the sum of $4,261,201, on the first day of July last, which was lying idle in her agents' hands in London, drawing little or no interest there, while squeezed out of the hands of those who were paying bank interest here. near seven per cent.; and had afterwards to go into brokers' hands to borrow at one or two per cent. a month. Even now, at the last returns on the first day of this month, about two millions and a half of this money ($2,678,006) was still lying idle in the hands of the Barings! waiting till foreign exchange can be put up again to eight or ten per cent. The enormity of this conduct, Mr. B. said, was aggravated by the notorious fact, that the transfers of this money were made by sinking the price of exchange as low as five per cent. below par, when shippers and planters had bills to sell; and raising it eight per cent. above par when merchants and importers had to buy; thus double taxing the commerce of the country-double taxing the producer and consumer—and making a fluctuation of thirteen per cent. in foreign exchange, in the brief space of six months. And all this to make money scarce at home while charging that scarcity upon the President! Thus combining calumny and stock-jobbing with the diabolical attempt to ruin the country, or to

The next glaring fact which showed the enormous culpability of the bank in making the pressure and distress, was the abduction of about a million and a quarter of hard dollars from New Orleans, while distressing the business community there by refusal of discounts and the curtailment of loans, under pretence of making up what she lost there by the removal of the deposits. The fact of the abduction was detected in the monthly reports still made to the Secretary of the Treasury, and was full proof of the wantonness and wickedness of the pressure, as the amount thus squeezed out of the community was immediately transferred to Philadelphia or New-York; to be thence shipped to London. Mr. Benton thus exposed this iniquity:

arriving there; and thus disabling the merchants from buying that produce, and thereby sinking its price nearly one half; and all under the false pretext of supplying the loss in its coffers, occasioned by the removal of the deposits.

"The falsehood and wickedness of this conduct will appear from the fact, that, at the time of the removal of the deposits, in October, the public deposits, in the New Orleans branch, were far less than the amount afterwards curtailed, and sent off; and that these deposits were not entirely drawn out, for many months after the curtailment and abduction of the money. Thus, the public deposits, in October, were:

"In the name of the Treasurer of the United States, of the United States, $294,228 62 "In the name of public officers, 173,764 64

$467,993 26

"In all, less than half a million of dollars.
"In March, there was still on hand:

"In the name of the Treasurer, $40,266 28 "In the name of public officers, 63,671 80

$103,938 08

"In all, upwards of one hundred thousand dollars; and making the actual withdrawal of deposits, at that branch, but $360,000, and that paid out gradually, in the discharge of government demands.

"Now, what was the actual curtailment, during the same period? It is shown from the monthly statements, that these curtailments, on local loans, were $788,904; being upwards of double the amount of deposits, miscalled removed; for they were not removed; but only paid out in the regular progress of government disbursement, and actually remaining in the mass of circulation, and much of it in the bank itself. But the specie removed during the same time! that was the fact, the damning fact, upon which he relied. This abduction was:

"In the month of November, $334,647 at the least of the month of March, $380,084

$1,142,731

Making near a million and a quarter of dollars, at the least. Mr. B. repeated, at the least; for a monthly statement does not show the accumulation of the month which might also be sent off; and the statement could only be relied on for so much as appeared a month before the abduction was made. Probably the sum was upwards of a million and a quarter of hard dollars, thus taken away from New Orleans last winter, by stopping accommodations, calling in loans, breaking up domestic exchange, creating panic and pressure, and sinking the price of all produce; that the mother bank might transfer funds to London, gamble in foreign exchange, spread desolation and terror through the land; amount of $10,000,000, and claims on the State and then charge the whole upon the President of the United States; and end with the grand consummation of bringing a new political party into power, and perpetuating its own charter."

Mr. Benton commented on the barefacedness of running out an immense line of discounts, so soon done after the rise of the last session of Congress, and so suddenly, that the friends of the bank, in remote places, not having had time to be informed of the "reversal of the bank screws," were still in full chorus, justifying the curtailment; and concluded with denouncing the report as e.v parte, and remarking upon the success of the committee in finding what they were not sent to look for, and not finding what they ought to have found. He said:

"These are some of the astounding iniquities which have escaped the eyes of the committee, while they have been so successful in their antiquarian researches into Andrew Jackson's and Felix Grundy's letters, ten or twenty years ago, and into Martin Van Buren's and Thomas II. Benton's, six or eight years ago; letters which every public man is called upon to give to his neighbors, or constituents; which no public man ought to refuse, or, in all probability ever did refuse; and which are so ostentatiously paraded in the report, and so emphatically read in this chamber, with pause and gesture; and with such a sympathetic look for the expected smile from the friends of the bank; letters which, so far as he was concerned, had been used to make the committee the organ of a falsehood. And now, Mr. B. would be glad to know, who put the committee on the scent of those old musty letters; for there was nothing in the resolution, under which they acted, to conduct their footsteps to the silent covert of that small game.'

Mr. Tyler made a brief reply, in defence of the report of the committee, in which he said:

"The senator from Missouri had denominated the report 'an elaborate defence of the bank.' He had said that it justified the bank in its course of curtailment, during the last winter and the early part of the summer. Sir, if the honorable senator had paid more attention to the reading, or had waited to have it in print, he would not have hazarded such a declaration. He would have perceived that that whole question was submitted to the decision of the Senate. The committee had presented both sides of the question—the view most favorable, and that most unfavorable, to the institution. It exhibited the measures of the Executive and those of the bank consequent upon them, on the one side, and the available resources of the bank on the other. The fact that its circulation of to the committee of exchange. He had said $19,000,000 was protected by specie to the that a false issue had been presented—that the banks exceeding $2,000,000, which were equal to specie-that its purchase of domestic exchange had so declined, from May to October, as to place at its disposal more than $5,000,000; something more than a doubt is expressed whether, under ordinary circumstances, the bank would have been justified in curtailing its discounts. So, too, in regard to a perseverance in its measures of precaution as long as it did, a summary of facts is given to enable the Senate to decide upon the propriety of the course pursued by the bank. The effort of the committee has been to present these subjects fairly to the Senate and the country. They have sought 'nothing to extenuate,' nor have they 'set down ought in malice.' The statements are presented to the senator, for his calm and deliberate consideration—to each senator, to be weighed as becomes his high station. And what is the course of the honorable senator? The moment he (Mr. T.) could return to his seat from the Clerk's table, the gentleman pounces upon the report, and makes assertions which a careful perusal of it would cause him to know it does not contain. On one subject, the controversy relative to the bill of exchange, and the damages consequent on its protest, the committee had expressed the opinion, that the government was in error, and he, as a member of that committee, would declare his own conviction that that opinion was sound and maintainable before any fair and impartial tribunal in the world. Certain persons started back with alarm, at the mere mention of a court of justice. The trial by jury had become hateful in their eyes. The great principles of magna charte are to be overlooked, and the declarations contained in the bill of rights are become too oilfashioned to be valuable. Popular prejudices are to be addressed, and instead of an appeal to the calm judgment of mankind, every lurking prejudice is to be awakened, because a corporation, or a set of individuals, have believed themselves wronged by the accounting officers of the treasury, and have had the temerity and impudence to take a course calculated to bring their rights before the forum of the courts. Let those who see cause to pursue this course rejoice as they may please, and exult in the success which attends it. For one, I renounce it as unwerth-American statesmen. The committee had addressed a sober and temperate but firm argument, upon this subject, to the Senate; and standing in the presence of that august body. and before the whole American people, he rested upon that argument for the truth of the opinion advanced. An opinion, for the honesty of which, on his own part, he would avouch, after the most solemn manner, under the unutterable obligations he was under to his Creator.

"The senator had also spoken in strong language as to that part of the report which related late Secretary of the Treasury never contended that the banl appoint a committee of excha committee was appointed by a last declaration the gentlems banks have a committee to p But Mr. T. would admonish beware. He would find hir him whom he wished to defe very language is quoted in the the violation of the charter ground that the business of tl ed to three members on the ex when the charter requires t seven shall constitute a boar His very words are given in t he cannot be misunderstood: tary of the committee consist tive of facts. Little more is facts, and the honorable senate and, in his effort to rescue from their influence, plunges into difficulty.

"The senator had loudly ta mittee having been made an the bank. For himself, he i cription. He would tell the l that he could not be made an the bank, or by a still greater ar power, the administration. H floor to accomplish the purps was sent there. In the cor own honesty, he stood firm and worship alone at the shrine of t It was a precious thing, in men, to bask in the sunshir rested only upon the support failed him, of the high and lo constituents. He would not even in their hands, if it were to require it of him, to grati motive."

CHAPTER C

FRENCH SPOLIATIONS 1

These claims had acquired a by this time. They were call year 1800; but how much priand they might reach back to of our independence. Their United States rested upon a constituted the basis of the which the bill was framed. 1 That illegal seizures, detentio demnations, and confiscations ressels and property of citize late Secretary of the Treasury (Mr. Taney) had never contended that the bank had no right to claims on the State which were equal to appoint a committee of exchange—that such a domestic exchange y to October, as to than $5,000,000; committee was appointed by all banks. In this last declaration the gentleman is correct. All doubt is expressed banks have a committee to purchase exchange. circumstances, the But Mr. T. would admonish the gentleman to ified in curtailing its beware. He would find himself condemning him whom he wished to defend. Mr. Taney's rd to a perseverance very language is quoted in the report. He places on as long as it did, n to enable the Senthe violation of the charter distinctly on the ground that the business of the bank is intrustpriety of the course e effort of the comed to three members on the exchange committee, these subjects fairly when the charter requires that not less than ountry. They have seven shall constitute a board to do business. nate,' nor have they ce.' The statements His very words are given in the report, so that he cannot be misunderstood; and the commentor, for his calm and tary of the committee consists in a mere narrao each senator, to be tive of facts. Little more is done than to give gh station. And what facts, and the honorable senator takes the alarm; rable senator? The and, in his effort to rescue the late Secretary d return to his seat from their influence, plunges him still deeper e gentleman pounces into difficulty. es assertions which a d cause him to know one subject, the conbill of exchange, and n its protest, the com-

"The senator had loudly talked of the committee having been made an instrument of, by the bank. For himself, he renounced the ascription. He would tell the honorable senator that he could not be made an instrument of by the bank, or by a still greater and more formidable power, the administration. He stood upon that floor to accomplish the purposes for which he was sent there. In the consciousness of his own honesty, he stood firm and erect. He would worship alone at the shrine of truth and of honor. It was a precious thing, in the eyes of some men, to bask in the sunshine of power. He rested only upon the support, which had never failed him, of the high and lofty feelings of his constituents. He would not be an instrument even in their hands, if it were possible for them to require it of him, to gratify an unrighteous opinion, that the gov-

d he, as a member of

clare his own convic-

s sound and maintainimpartial tribunal in ons started back with

n of a court of justice.

come hateful in their

les of magna charle

the declarations cons are become too old-

Popular prejudices

nstead of an appeal to ankind, every lurking ed, because a corporals, have believed themcounting officers of the he temerity and impalculated to bring them f the courts. Let those

e this course rejoice as alt in the success which enounce it as unworth he committee had ad-

nperate but firm argu

t, to the Senate; and

e of that august body.

nerican people, he rest-

or the truth of the opinion, for the honesty of

he would avouch, after

; under the unutterable

o spoken in strong lan-

the report which related xchange. He had said

en presented-that the r to his Creator.

CHAPTER CXVII

FRENCH SPOLIATIONS BEFORE 1800.

These claims had acquired an imposing aspect by this time. They were called "prior" to the year 1800; but how much prior was not shown, and they might reach back to the establishment of our independence. Their payment by the United States rested upon assumptions which constituted the basis of the demand, and on which the bill was framed. It assumed, first— That illegal seizures, detentions, captures, condemnations, and confiscations were made of the States before the period mentioned. Secondly -That these acts were committed by such orders and under such circumstances, as gave the sufferers a right to indemnity from the French government. Thirdly-That these claims had been annulled by the United States for public considerations. Fourthly-That this annulment gave these sufferers a just claim upon the United States for the amount of their losses. Upon these four assumptions the bill restedsome of them disputable in point of fact, and others in point of law. Of these latter was the assumption of the liability of the United States to become paymasters themselves in cases where failing, by war or negotiation, to obtain redress they make a treaty settlement, surrendering or abandoning claims. This is an assumption contrary to reason and law. Every nation is bound to give protection to the persons and property of their citizens; but the government is the judge of the measure and degree of that protection; and is not bound to treat for ever, or to fight for ever, to obtain such redress. After having done its best for the indemnity of some individuals, it is bound to consider what is due to the whole community—and to act accordingly; and the unredressed citizens have to put up with their losses if abandoned at the general settlement which, sooner or later, must terminate all national controversies. All this was well stated by Mr. Bibb, of Kentucky, in a speech on these French claims upon the bill of the present year. He said:

"He was well aware that the interests of individuals ought to be supported by their governments to a certain degree, but he did not think that governments were bound to push such interest to the extremity of war-he did not admit that the rights of the whole were to be jeoparded by the claims of individuals—the safety of the community was paramount to the claims of private citizens. He would proceed to see if the interests of our citizens had been neglected by this government. These claims have been urged from year to year, with all the earnestness and zeal due from the nation. But they went on from bad to worse, till negotiations were in vain. We then assumed a hostile position. During the year '98, more than twenty laws were passed by Congress upon this very subject—some for raising troops—some for providing arms and munitions of war-some for fitting out a naval force, aud so on. Was this neglecting the claims of our citizens? We went as far as the interests of the nation would ressels and property of citizens of the United | permit. We prosecuted these claims to the very verge of plunging into that dreadful war then desolating Europe. The government then issued its proclamation of neutrality and nonintercourse. Mr. B. next proceeded to show that France had no just claims upon us, arising from the guaranty. This guaranty against France was not considered binding, even by France herself, any further than was consistent with our relations with other nations; that it was so declared by her minister; and, moreover, that she acknowledged the justice of our neutrality. These treaties had been violated by France, and the United States could not surely be bound by treaties which she had herself violated; and consequently, we were under no obligation on account of the guaranty. Mr. B. went on to show that, by the terms of the treaty of 1800, the debts due to our citizens had not been relinquished: - that as the guaranty did not exist, and as the claims had not been abandoned, Mr. B. concluded that these claims ought not to be paid by this government. He was opposed to going back thirty-four years to sit in judgment on the constituted authorities of that time. There should be a stability in the government, and he was not disposed to question the judgment of the man (Washington) who has justly been called the first in war and the first in peace. We are sitting here to rejudge the decisions of the government thirtyfour years since,"

This is well stated, and the conclusion just and logical, that we ought not to go back thirty-four years to call in question the judgment of Washington's administration. He was looking to the latest date of the claims when he said thirty-four years, which surely was enough; but Washington's decision in his proclamation of neutrality was seven years before that time; and the claims themselves have the year 1800 for their period of limitation—not of commencement, which was many years before. This doctrine of governmental liability when abandoning the claims of citizens for which indemnity could not be obtained, is unknown in other countries, and was unknown in ours in the earlier ages of the government. There was a case of this abandonment in our early history which rested upon no "assumption" of fact, but on the fact itself; and in which no attempt was made to enforce the novel doctrine. It was the case of the slaves carried off by the British troops at the close of the Revolutionary War, and for which indemnity was stipulated in the treaty of peace. Great Britain refused that indemnity; and after vain efforts to obtain it by the Congress of the confederation, and afterwards under Washington's administration, this claim of indemnity, no longer resting upon a claim of the sufferers, but upon a treaty stipulation—upon an article in a treaty for their benefit—was abandoned to obtain a general advantage for the whole community in the commercial treaty with Great Britain. As these claims for French spoliations are still continued (1850), I give some of the speeches for and against them fifteen years ago, believing that they present the strength of the argument on both sides. The opening speech of Mr. Webster presented the case:

"He should content himself with stating very briefly an outline of the grounds on which these claims are supposed to rest, and then leave the subject to the consideration of the Senate. He, however, should be happy, in the course of the debate, to make such explanations as might be called for. It would be seen that the bill proposed to make satisfaction, to an amount not exceeding five millions of dollars, to such citizens of the United States, or their legal representatives, as had valid claims for indemnity on the French government, riging out of illegal captures, detentions, and condemnations, made or committed on their property prior to the 30th day of September, 1800. This bill supposed two or three leading propositions to be true.

"It supposed, in the first place, that illegal' seizures, detentions, captures, condemnations and confiscations, were made, of the vessels and property of the citizens of the United States, before the 30th September, 1800.

"It supposed, in the second place, that these acts of wrong were committed by such orders and under such circumstances, as that the soft ferers had a just right and claim for indemnity from the hands of the government of France

"Going on these two propositions, the bill assumed one other, and that was, that all such claims on France as came within a prescribed period, or down to a prescribed period, had been annulled by the United States, and that this gave them a right to claim indemnity from this government. It supposed a liability in justice, in fairness and equity, on the part of this government, to make the indemnity. These were the grounds on which the bill was framed. That there were many such confiscations no one doubted, and many such acts of wrong as were mentioned in the first section of the bill. That they were committed by Frenchmen, and under such circumstances as gave those who suffered wrong an unquestionable right to claim indemnity from the French government, nobody he supposed, at this day, would question. There were two questions which might be made the subject of discussion, and two only occurred to him at that moment. The o ground was the government of answerable to any extent for t these claimants? The other, was the government in justic first—of the first. 'Why wernment of the United States sponsible in law or equity to i claims—for any indemnity for mitted on their commerce by France before 1800?'

"To this question there was whether satisfactory or not. merit of being a very short of by a treaty between France States, bearing date the 30t 1800, in a political capacity, tl the United States discharged government of France from th went upon the ground, which all the correspondence which treaty of 1800, that the dis tween the two countries shoul negotiation. And claims and ing been asserted on either sic on the part of the United Sta to assert and maintain the cla which they demanded; while o pointed on the part of France to the full extent of the stipula which they said the United Sta to fulfil, and in order to carr treaty of alliance of the same ruary, 1778.

"The negotiation ultimately treaty was finally ratified upo conditions of an offset of the against each other, and for e United States government, b and discharge of these claims c made this surrender to the Fr to obtain for itself a discharge liabilities imposed upon them 1778, and in order to escape frostipulations proclaimed in the merce of that year, and which might have brought about a This was the ground on wherested.

"Heretofore, when the subje Congress, gentlemen had taker case; and he believed there v sented to the Senate at the tin that the claims of our citizenthe United States had done the injury, and that it did not exc ment of France from liability."

Mr. Wright, of New-York, s<sub>I</sub> the bill, and upon a close view of the case and all the law of lng out of treaties or found in t His speech was not only a ma administration, this ger resting upon a upon a treaty stipu. a treaty for their obtain a general admunity in the com-Britain. As these is are still continued ie speeches for and s ago, believing that of the argument on speech of Mr. Web-self with stating very ounds on which these , and then leave the i of the Senate. He, , in the course of the anations as might be en that the bill pron, to an amount not dollars, to such citi-, or their legal repreims for indemnity on rising out of illegal condemnations, made roperty prior to the 800. This bill supg propositions to be rst place, that illegal' ures, condemnations ide, of the vessels and of the United States, ; 1800.

ond place, that these nitted by such orders ances, as that the su* I claim for indemnity ernment of France propositions, the bill hat, was, that all such ie within a prescribed ribed period, had been States, and that this a indemnity from this d a liability in justice, the part of this govdemnity. These were the bill was framed. ch confiscations no one acts of wrong as were tion of the bill. That Frenchmen, and under ve those who suffered right to claim indemovernment, nobody, he ould question. There

ch might be made the

two only occurred to him at that moment. The one was, 'On what ground was the government of the United States answerable to any extent for the injury done to these claimants?' The other, 'To what extent was the government in justice bound?' And first-of the first. 'Why was it that the government of the United States had become responsible in law or equity to its citizens, for the claims-for any indemnity for the wrongs committed on their commerce by the subjects of France before 1800?

"To this question there was an answer, which, whether satisfactory or not, had at least the merit of being a very short one. It was, that by a treaty between France and the United States, bearing date the 30th of September, 1800, in a political capacity, the government of the United States discharged and released the government of France from this indemnity. It went upon the ground, which was sustained by all the correspondence which had preceded the treaty of 1800, that the disputes arising between the two countries should be settled by a negotiation. And claims and pretensions having been asserted on either side, commissioners on the part of the United States were sent out to assert and maintain the claims of indemnity which they demanded; while commissioners appointed on the part of France asserted a claim to the full extent of the stipulations made in '78, which they said the United States had promised to fulfil, and in order to carry into effect the treaty of alliance of the same date, viz.: February, 1778.

"The negotiation ultimately terminated, and a treaty was finally ratified upon the terms and conditions of an offset of the respective claims against each other, and for ever; so that the United States government, by the surrender and discharge of these claims of its citizens, had made this surrender to the French government to obtain for itself a discharge from the onerous liabilities imposed upon them by the treaty of 1778, and in order to escape from fulfilling other stipulations proclaimed in the treaty of commerce of that year, and which, if not fulfilled, might have brought about a war with France. This was the ground on which these claims rested.

"Heretofore, when the subject had been before Congress, gentlemen had taken this view of the case; and he believed there was a report presented to the Senate at the time, which set forth that the claims of our citizens, being left open, the United States had done these claimants no injury, and that it did not exempt the government of France from liability."

Mr. Wright, of New-York, spoke fully against the bill, and upon a close view of all the facts of the case and all the law of the case as growing out or treaties or found in the law of nations. His speech was not only a masterly argument, but an historical monument, going back to the first treaty with France in 1778, and coming down through our legislation and diplomacy on French questions to the time of its delivery. A separate chapter is due to this great speech; and it will be given entire in the next one.

CHAPTER CXVIII.

FRENCH SPOLIATIONS: SPEECH OF MR. WRIGHT, OF NEW-YORK.

"Mr. Wright underste. A the friends of this bill to put its merits upon the single and distinct ground that the government of the United States had released France from the payment of the claims for a consideration, passing directly to the benefit of our government, and fully equal in value to the claims themselves. Mr. W. said he should argue the several questions presented, upon the supposition that this was the extent to which the friends of the bill had gone, or were disposed to go, in claiming a liability on the part of the United States to pay the claimants; and, thus understood, he was ready to proceed to an examination of the strength of this

"His first duty, then, was to examine the relations existing between France and the United States prior to the commencement of the disturbances out of which these claims have arisen; and the discharge of this duty would compel a dry and uninteresting reference to the several treaties which, at that period, governed those relations.

"The seventeenth article of the treaty of amity and commerce of the 6th February, 1778, was the first of these references, and that article was in the following words:

" 'Art. 17. It shall be lawful for the ships of war of either party, and privateers, freely to carry whithersoever they please the ships and goods taken from their enemies, without being obliged to pay any duty to the officers of the admiralty or any other judges; nor shall such prizes be arrested or seized when they come to or enter the ports of either party; nor shall the searchers or other officers of those places search the same, or make examination concerning the lawfulness of such prizes; but they may hoist sail at any time and depart and carry their prizes to the places expressed in their commissions, which the commanders of such ships of war shall be obliged to show; on the contrary, no shelter or refuge shall be given in their ports to such as shall have made prize of the subjects, people, or property of either of the parties; but if such shall come in, being forced by stress of weather, or the danger of the sea, all proper directly from the places of the enemy aforemenmeans shall be vigorously used, that they go out and retire from thence as soon as possible.'

"This article, Mr. W. said, would be found to be one of the most material of all the stipulations between the two nations, in an examination of the diplomatic correspondence during the whole period of the disturbances, from the breaking out of the war between France and England, in 1793, until the treaty of the 30th September, 1800. The privileges claimed by France, and the exclusions she insisted on as applicable to the other belligerent Powers, were fruitful sources of complaint on both sides, and constituted many material points of disagreement between the two nations through this entire interval. What these claims were on the part of France, and how far they were admitted by the United States, and how far controverted, will, Mr. W. said, be more properly considered in another part of the argument. As connected, however, with this branch of the relations, he thought it necessary to refer to the twentysecond article of the same treaty, which was in the following words:

"'Art. 22. It shall not be lawful for any foreign privateers, not belonging to subjects of the Most Christian King, nor citizens of the said United States, who have commissions from any other prince or State in enmity with either nation, to fit their ships in the ports of either the one or the other of the aforesaid parties, to sell what they have taken, or in any other manner whatsoever to exchange their ships, merchandises, or any other lading; neither shall they be allowed even to purchase victuals, except such as shall be necessary for their going to the next port of that prince or State from which they have commissions.

"Mr. W. said he now passed to a different branch of the relations between the two countries, as established by this treaty of amity and commerce, which was the reciprocal right of either to carry on a free trade with the enemies of the other, restricted only by the stipulations of the same treaty in relation to articles to be considered contraband of war. This reciprocal right is defined in the twenty-third article of the treaty, which is in the words following: "'Art. 23. It shall be lawful for all and singular the subjects of the Most Christian King, and the citizens, people, and inhabitants of the said United States, to sail with their ships with all manner of liberty and security, no distinction being made who are the proprietors of the merchandises laden thereon, from any port to the places of those who now are or hereafter shall be at enmity with the Most Christian King, or the United States. It shall likewise be lawful for the subjects and inhabitants aforesaid to sail with the ships and merchandises aforementioned, and to trade with the same liberty and security from the places, ports, and havens of those who are enemies of both or either party, without any tioned to neutral places, but also from one place belonging to an enemy to another place belong. ing to an enemy, whether they be under the jurisdiction of the same prince, or under several. And it is hereby stipulated that free ships shall also give a freedom to goods, and that every thing shall be deemed to be free and exempt which shall be found on board the ships belong. ing to the subjects of either of the confederates, although the whole lading, or any part thereof. should appertain to the enemies of either, contraband goods being always excepted. It is also agreed, in like manner, that the same liberty be extended to persons who are on board a free ship, with this effect, that although they be ene mies to both or either party, they are not to be taken out of that free ship, unless they are soldiers and in actual service of the enemies.

"The restrictions as to articles to be held between the two nations as contraband of war. Mr. W. said, were to be found in the twentyfourth article of this same treaty of amity and commerce, and were as follows:

"Art. 24. This liberty of navigation and commerce shall extend to all kinds of merchandises, excepting those only which are distinguished by the name of contraband, and under this name of contraband, or prohibited goods, shall be comprehended arms, great guns, bombs, with fuses and other things belonging to them, cannon ball, gunpowder, match, pikes, swords, lances, spears, halberds, mortars, petards, grenades, saltpetre, muskets, musket ball, helmets, breastplates, coats of mail, and the like kinds of arms proper for arming soldiers, musket rests, belts. horses with their furniture, and all other warlike instruments whatever. These merchandises which follow shall not be reckoned among contraband or prohibited goods; that is to say, all sorts of cloths, and all other manufactures woven of any wool, flax, silk, cotton, or any other material whatever; all kinds of wearing apparel, together with the species whereof they are used to be made; gold and silver, as well coined as uncoined: tin, iron, latten, copper, brass, coals; as also wheat and barley and any other kind of corn and pulse: tobacco, and likewise all manner of spices; salted and smoked flesh, salted fish, cheese, and butter, beer, oils, wines, sugars. and all sorts of salts; and, in general, all provisions which serve for the nourishment of mankind, and the sustenance of life; furthermore, all kinds of cotton, hemp, flax, tar, pitch, ropes, cables, sails, sail cloths, anchors, and any part of anchors, also ships' masts, planks, boards, and beams, of what trees soever; and all other things proper either for building or repairing ships, and all other goods whatever which have not been worked into the form of any instrument or thing prepared for war by land or by sea, shall not be reputed contraband, much less such as have been already wrought and made up for any other use all which shall be wholly reckoned among free opposition or disturbance whatsoever, not only goods; as likewise all other merchandises and things which are not comprehende larly mentioned in the foregoing contraband goods, so that they ported and carried in the freest subjects of both confederates, ever belonging to an enemy, such town ing only excepted as are at that blocked up, or invested.'

"Mr. W. said this closed his re treaty, with the remark, which h fully borne in mind, that the accerwas greatly departed from in th Provisions, in their broadest sense ships, rigging for ships, and indeed articles of trade mentioned in the in the article of the treaty, were a band of war by the law of nations. therefore, placed our commerce wit a footing widely different, in case of France and any third power, from t would regulate that commerce w belligerent, with whom we migh similar commercial treaty. Such w compared with our relations with which power we had no commercia ever, but depended upon the law our commercial rule and standard

"Mr. W. said he now passed to alliance between France and the of the same date with the treaty commerce before referred to, and ference was to the 11th article treaty. It was in the following w

"'Art. 11. The two parties guar ly from the present time, and for all other powers, to wit: The Un His Most Christian Majesty the pr sions of the Crown of France in An as those which it may acquire by th ty of peace: And His Most Chris guarantees on his part to the Unite liberty, sovereignty, and independ and unlimited, as well in matters of as commerce, and also their possess additions or conquests that their may obtain during the war, from a minions now or heretofore posses Britain in North America, confor fifth and sixth articles above writte as their possessions shall be fixed a the said States at the moment of

of their present war with England. "This article, Mr. W. said, was portant reference he had made, or so far as the claims provided for were concerned, because he und friends of the bill to derive the prin eration to the United States, which liability to pay the claims, from on the part of the United States co The Senate would see that the a mutual and reciprocal guaranty, 1st. of the United States to France, of rions in America; and 2d. On the pa to the United States, of their '1 enemy aforemen lso from one place ther place belong. nev be under the e, or under several at free ships shall s, and that every free and exempt I the ships belong. he confederates alany part thereof. nies of either, conscepted. It is also he same liberty be re on board a free hough they be ene they are not to be ess they are soldiers

nemies.'
icles to be held beontraband of war, nd in the twentyreaty of amity and of navigation and kinds of merchannich are distinguishnd, and under this hibited goods, shall t guns, bombs, with aging to them, canpikes, swords, lans, petards, grenades, all, helmets, breastlike kinds of arms musket rests, belts, and all other war-

These merchandibe reckoned among ods; that is to say, other manufactures cotton, or any other s of wearing apparel, nereof they are used r, as well coined as copper, brass, coals; id any other kind of 1 likewise all mansmoked flesh, salted , oils, wines, sugars. n general, all provisourishment of manof life; furthermore, lax, tar, pitch, ropes, chors, and any part s, planks, boards, and ; and all other things r repairing ships, and which have not been y instrument or thing r by sea, shall not be ess such as have been up for any other use. reckoned among free er merchandises and things which are not comprehended and particularly mentioned in the foregoing enumeration of contraband goods, so that they may be transported and carried in the freest manner by the subjects of both confederates, even to the places belonging to an enemy, such towns or places being only excepted as are at that time besieged, blocked up, or invested.'

"Mr. W. said this closed his references to this treaty, with the remark, which he wished carefully borne in mind, that the accepted public law was greatly departed from in this last article. Provisions, in their broadest sense, materials for ships, rigging for ships, and indeed almost all the articles of trade mentioned in the long exception in the article of the treaty, were articles contraband of war by the law of nations. This article, therefore, placed our commerce with France upon a footing widely different, in case of a war between France and any third power, from the rules which would regulate that commerce with the other belligerent, with whom we might not have a similar commercial treaty. Such was its effect as compared with our relations with England, with which power we had no commercial treaty whatever, but depended upon the law of nations as our commercial rule and standard of intercourse.

"Mr. W. said he now passed to the treaty of alliance between France and the United States, of the same date with the treaty of amity and commerce before referred to, and his first reference was to the 11th article of this latter treaty. It was in the following words:

"'Art. 11. The two parties guarantee mutually from the present time, and for ever, against all other powers, to wit: The United States to His Most Christian Majesty the present possessions of the Crown of France in America, as well as those which it may acquire by the future treaty of peace: And His Most Christian Majesty guarantees on his part to the United States, their liberty, sovereignty, and independence, absolute and unlimited, as well in matters of government as commerce, and also their possessions, and the additions or conquests that their confederation may obtain during the war, from any of the dominions now or heretofore possessed by Great Britain in North America, conformable to the fifth and sixth articles above written, the whole as their possessions shall be fixed and assured to the said States at the moment of the cessation of their present war with England.'

"This article, Mr. W. said, was the most important reference he had made, or could make, so far as the claims provided for by this bill were concerned, because he understood the friends of the bill to derive the principal consideration to the United States, which created their liability to pay the claims, from the guaranty on the part of the United States contained in it. The Senate would see that the article was a mutual and reciprocal guaranty, 1st. On the part of the United States to France, of her possessions in America; and 2d. On the part of France to the United States, of their 'liberty, sovereignty, and independence, absolute and unlimited, as well in matters of government as commerce, and also their possessions,' &c.; and that the respective guarantees were 'for ever.' It would by-and-by appear in what manner this guaranty on the part of our government was claimed to be the foundation for this pecuniary responsibility for millions, but at present he must complete his references to the treaties which formed the law between the two nations, and the rule of their relations to and with each other. He had but one more article to read, and that was important only as it went to define the one last cited. This was the 12th article of the treaty of alliance, and was as follows:

"'Art. 12. In order to fix more precisely the sense and application of the preceding article, the contracting parties declare that, in case of a rupture between France and England, the reciprocal guaranty declared in the said article shall have its full force and effect the moment such war shall break out; and if such rupture shall not take place, the mutual obligations of the said guaranty shall not commence until the moment of the cessation of the present war between the United States and England shall have ascertained their possessions."

"These, said Mr. W., are the treaty stipulations between France and the United States, existing at the time of the commencement of the disturbances between the two countries, which gave rise to the claims now the subject of consideration, and which seem to bear most materially upon the points in issue. There were other provisions in the treaties between the two governments more or less applicable to the present discussion, but, in the course he had marked out for himself, a reference to them was not indispensable, and he was not disposed to occupy the time or weary the patience of the Senate with more of these dry documentary quotations than he found absolutely essential to a full and clear understanding of the points he proposed to ex-

"Mr. W. said he was now ready to present the origin of the claims which formed the subject of the bill. The war between France and England broke out, according to his recollection, late in the year 1792, or early in the year 1793, and the United States resolved upon preserving the same neutral position between those belligerents, which they had assumed at the commencement of the war between France and certain other European powers. This neutrality on the part of the United States seemed to be acceptable to the then French Republic, and her minister in the United States and her diplomatic agents at home were free and distinct in their expressions to this effect.

"Still that Republic made broad claims under the 17th article of the treaty of amity and commerce before quoted, and her minister Here assumed the right to purchase ships, arm them as privateers in our ports, commission officers for them, enlist our own citizens to man them. and, thus prepared, to send them from our ports to cruise against English vessels upon our coast. Many prizes were made, which were brought into our ports, submitted to the admiralty jurisdiction conferred by the French Republic upon her consuls in the United States, condemned, and the captured vessels and cargoes exposed for sale in our markets. These practices were immediately and earnestly complained of by the British government as violations of the neutrality which our government had declared, and which we assumed to maintain in regard to all the belligerents, as favors granted to one of the belligerents, not demandable of right under our treaties with France, and as wholly inconsistent, according to the rules of international law, with our continuance as a neutral power. Our government so far yielded to these complaints as to prohibit the French from fitting out, arming, equipping, or commissioning privateers in our ports, and from enlisting our citizens to bear arms under the French flag.

"This decision of the rights of France, under the treaty of amity and commerce, produced warm remonstrances from her minister in the United States, but was finally ostensibly acquiesced in by the Republic, although constant complaints of evasions and violations of the rule continued to harass our government, and to occupy the attention of the respective diplomatists.

"The exclusive privilege of our ports for her armed vessels, privateers, and their prizes, granted to France by the treaty of amity and commerce, as has before been seen, excited the jealousy of England, and she was not slow in sending a portion of her vast navy to line our coast and block up our ports and harbors. The insolence of power induced some of her armed vessels to enter our ports, and to remain, in violation of our treaty with France, though not by the consent of our government, or when we had the power to enforce the treaty by their ejection. These incidents, however, did not fail to form the subject of new charges from the French ministers, of bad faith on our part, of partiality to England to the prejudice of our old and faithful ally, of permitted violations of the treaties, and of an inefficiency and want of zeal in the performance of our duties as neutrals. To give point to these complaints, some few instances occurred in which British vessels brought their prizes into our ports, whether in all cases under those casualties of stress of weather, or the dangers of the sea, which rendered the act in conformity with the treaties and the law of nations or not, is not perhaps very certain or very material, inasmuch as the spirit of complaint seems to have taken possession of the French negotiators, and these acts gave colorable ground to their remonstrances.

"Contemporaneously with these grounds of misunderstanding and these collisions of interest between the belligerents, and between the interests of either of them and the preservation of our neutrality, the French began to discover the disadvantages to them, and the great advantages to the British, of the different rules which governed the commerce between the two nations and the United States. The rule between us and France was the commercial treaty of which the articles above quoted form a part, and the rule between us and Great Britain, was that laid down by the law of nations. Mr. W. said he would detain the Senate to point out but two of the differences between these rules of commerce and intercourse, because upon these two principally depended the difficulties which followed. The first was, that, by the treaty between us and France, 'free ships shall also give a freedom to the goods; and every thing shall be deemed to be free and exempt which shall be found on board the ships belonging to the subjects of either of the confederates, although the whole lading, or any part thereof, should appertain to the enemy of either, contraband goods being always excepted; while the law of nations, which was the rule between us and England, made the goods of an enemy a lawful prize, though found in the vessel of a friend. Hence it followed that French property on board of an American vessel was subject to capture by British cruisers without indignity to our flag, or a violation to international law, while British property on board of an American vessel could not be captured by a French vessel without an insult to the flag of the United States, and a direct violation of the twenty-third article of the treaty of amity and commerce between us and France, before refer-

"Mr. W. said the second instance of disadvantage to France which he proposed to mention, was the great difference between the articles made contraband of war by the twenty-fourth article of the treaty of amity and commerce before read to the Senate, and by the law of nations. By the treaty, provisions of all kinds, ship timber, ship tackle (guns only excepted), and a large list of other articles of trade and commerce, were declared not to be contraband of war, while the same articles are expressly made contraband by the law of nations. Hence an American vessel, clearing for a French port with a cargo of provisions or ship stores, was lawful prize to a British cruiser, as, by the law of nations, carrying articles contraband of war to an enemy, while the same vessel, clearing for a British port, with the same cargo, could not be captured by a French vessel, because the train declared that the articles composing the cargo should not be contraband as between the United States and France. Mr. W. said the Senate would see, at a single glance, how eminently these two advantages on the part of Great Britain were calculated to turn our commerce to her ports, where, if the treaty between us and France was observed, our vessels could go in perfect safety, while, laden with provisions, our only considerable export, and destined for a French port, they were liable to capture, as

on their return, too, they were edanger from French cruisers, as, free ships made free the goods on if they cleared from a port in French cargo, they were lawful British, upon the principle of the that the goods of an enemy are even when found in the vessel of Both nations were in consta want of provisions from the Unit this double advantage to England ports open and free to our vesse sessing the right to capture th French ports, exasperated the F beyond endurance. Her minister with our government, controverted tion of British rights, again rene sations of partiality, and finally obligations of the treaty; and, b cree of their authorities at home. rule which governed the practice cruisers. France, assuming to be United States permitted the neu flag to be violated by the Britis sistance, declared that she would of all neutral vessels as that flag itself to be treated by the other This opened our commerce to the criminate plunder and depredat powers at war, and but for the w visions of the United States, v strongly felt both in England and govern, in a great degree, the pol nations, it would seem probable, mentary history of the period, the been swept from the ocean. In want, however, the British adopt at early day, that the provision though in a strict legal sense forf by the law of nations contrabat be confiscated, but carried into and paid for, at the market price provisions, at the port of their de same want compelled the French came to the conclusion to lay asi tions of the treaty, and to gove not by solemn compacts with fu but by the standards of wrong ac enemies, thadopt also the same ri of confiscating the cargo as contra provisions, to decree a comper ated by the market value at the 1

"Such, said Mr. W., is a succindisturbances between France and States, and between France and out of which grew what are refrench claims for spoliations under the model of the subjects of difference migremote influence; but, Mr. W., so it would be admitted by all, that named were the principal, and sumed as having given rise to integularities in which the claim

d the great advanferent rules which en the two nations e rule between us mercial treaty of ed form a part, and t Britain, was that ions. Mr. W. said point out but two these rules of comse upon these two ulties which followthe treaty between all also give a freeery thing shall be which shall be found r to the subjects of although the whole f, should appertain raband goods being law of nations, which I England, made the rize, though found in nce it followed that f an American vessel British cruisers witha violation to interproperty on board of not be captured by a insult to the flag of rect violation of the treaty of amity and France, before refer-instance of disadvanproposed to mention, between the articles by the twenty-fourth ty and commerce, bend by the law of naovisions of all kinds guns only excepted), icles of trade and comto be contraband of es are expressly made f nations. Hence an for a French port with hip stores, was lawful as, by the law of nastraband of war to an vessel, clearing for a ne cargo, could not be sel, because the treaty composing the cargo as between the United . W. said the Senate rlance, how eminently he part of Great Britain our commerce to her eaty between us and ir vessels could go in en with provisions, our t, and destined for a liable to capture, as ntraband articles. Up on their return, too, they were equally out of danger from French cruisers, as, by the treaty, free ships made free the goods on board; while, if they cleared from a port in France with a French cargo, they were lawful prize to the British, upon the principle of the law of nations, that the goods of an enemy are lawful prize, even when found in the vessel of a friend.

Both nations were in constant and urgent want of provisions from the United States; and this double advantage to England of having her ports open and free to our vessels, and of possessing the right to capture those bound to French ports, exasperated the French Republic beyond endurance. Her ministers remonstrated with our government, controverted our construction of British rights, again renewed the accusations of partiality, and finally threw off the obligations of the treaty; and, by a solemn decree of their authorities at home, established the rule which governed the practice of the British cruisers. France, assuming to believe that the United States permitted the neutrality of her flag to be violated by the British, without resistance, declared that she would treat the flag of all neutral vessels as that flag should permit itself to be treated by the other beiligerents. This opened our commerce to the almost indiscriminate plunder and depredation of all the powers at war, and but for the want of the provisions of the United States, which was too strongly felt both in England and France not to govern, in a great degree, the policy of the two nations, it would seem probable, from the documentary history of the period, that it must have been swept from the ocean. Impelled by this want, however, the British adopted the rule, at at early day, that the provisions captured, although in a strict legal sense forfeited, as being by the law of nations contraband, should not be confiscated, but carried into English ports, and paid for, at the market price of the same provisions, at the port of their destination. The same want compelled the French, when they came to the conclusion to lay aside the obligations of the treaty, and to govern themselves, not by solemn compacts with friendly powers, but by the standards of wrong adopted by their enemies, adopt also the same rule, and instead of confiscating the cargo as contraband of war, if provisions, to decree a compensation graduated by the market value at the port of destina-

"Such, said Mr. W., is a succinct view of the disturbances between France and the United States, and between France and Great Britain, out of which grew what are now called the French claims for spoliations upon our commerce, prior to the 30th of September, 1800. Other subjects of difference might have had a remote influence; but, Mr. W., said, he believed it would be admitted by all, that those he had named were the principal, and might be assumed as having given rise to the commercial irregularities in which the claims commenced. tion. He was well aware that this point would

This state of things, without material change, continued until the year 1798, when our government adopted a course of measures intended to suspend our intercourse with France, until she should be brought to respect our rights. These measures were persevered in by the United States, up to September, 1800, and were terminated by the treaty between the two nations of the 30th of that month. Here, too, terminated claims which now occupy the attention of the Senate.

"As it was the object of the claimants to show a liability, on the part of our government. to pay their claims, and the bill under discussion assumed that liability, and provided, in part at least, for the payment, Mr. W. said it became his duty to inquire what the government had done to obtain indemnity for these claimants from France, and to see whether negligence on its part had furnished equitable or legal ground for the institution of this large claim upon the national treasury. The period of time covered by the claims, as he understood the subject, was from the breaking out of the war between France and England, in 1793, to the signing of the treaty between France and the United States, in September, 1800; and he would consider the efforts the government had made to obtain indemnity:

"1st. From 1793 to 1798.

"2d. From 1798 to the treaty of the 30th

September, 1800.

During the first period, Mr. W. said, these efforts were confined to negotiation, and he felt safe in the assertion that, during no equal period in the history of our government, could there be found such untiring and unremitted exertions to obtain justice for citizens who had been injured in their properties by the unlawful acts of a foreign power. Any one who would read the mass of diplomatic correspondence between this government and France, from 1793 to 1798 and who would mark the frequent and extraordinary missions, bearing constantly in mind that the recovery of these claims was the only ground upon our part for the whole negotiation, would find it difficult to say where negligence towards the rights and interests of its citizens is imputa-ble to the government of the inited States, during this period. He was not aware that such an imputation had been or would be made; but sure he was that it could not be made with justice, or sustained by the facts upon the record. No liability, therefore, equitable or legal, had been incurred, up to the year 1798.

"And if, said Mr. W., negligence is not imputable, prior to 1798, and no liability had then been incurred, how is it for the second period, from 1798 to 1800? The efforts of the former period were negotiation-constant, earnest, extraordinary negotiation. What were they for the latter period? His answer was, war; actual. open war; and he believed the statute book of the United States would justify him in the posi-

be strenuously controverted, because the friends of the bill would admit that, if a state of war between the two countries did exist, it put an end to claims existing prior to the war, and not provided for in the treaty of peace, as well as to all pretence for claims to indemnity for injuries to our commerce, committed by our enemy in time of war. Mr. W. said he had found the evidences so numerous, to establish his position that a state of actual war did exist, that he had been quite at a loss from what portion of the testimony of record to make his selections, so as to establish the fact beyond reasonable dispute and at the same time not to weary the Senate by tedious references to laws and documents. He had finally concluded to confine himself exclusively to the statute book, as the highest possible evidence, as in his judgment entirely conclusive, and as being susceptible of an arrangement and condensation which would convey to the Senate the whole material evidence, in a satisfactory manner, and in less compass than the proofs to be drawn from any other source. He had, therefore, made a very brief abstract of a few statutes, which he would read in his place:

"By an act of the 28th May, 1798, Congress authorized the capture of all armed vessels of France which had committed depredations upon our commerce, or which should be found hovermg upon our coast for the purpose of commit-

ing such depredations.

"By an act of the 13th June, 1798, only sixteen days after the passage of the former act, Congress prohibited all vessels of the United States from visiting any of the ports of France or her dypendencies, under the penalty of forfeiture of vessel and cargo; required every vessel clearing for a foreign port to give bonds (the owner, or factor and master) in the amount of the vessel and cargo, and good sureties in half that amount, conditioned that the vessel to which the clearance was to be granted, would not voluntarily, visit any port of France or her dependencies; and prohibited all vessels of France, armed or unarmed, or owned, fitted, hired, or employed, by any person resident within the territory of the French Republic, or its dependencies, or sailing or coming therefrom, from entering or remaining in any port of the United States, unless permitted by the President by special passport, to be granted by him in each

"By an act of the 25th June, 1798, only twelve days after the passage of the last-mentioned act, Congress authorized the merchant vessels of the United States to arm, and to defend themselves against any search, restraint, or seizure, by vessels sailing under French colors, to repel force by force to capture any French vessel attempting a search, restraint, or seizure, and to recapture any American merchant vessel which had been captured by the French.

"Here, Mr. W. said, he felt constrained to make a remark upon the character of these seve- gress continued the non-intercourse between the ral acts of Congress, and to call the attention of the Senate to their peculiar adaptation to the measures which speedily followed in future acts of the national legislature. The first, authorizing the capture of French armed vessels, was peculiarly calculated to put in martial preparation all the navy which the United States then possessed, and to spread it upon our coast. The second, establishing a perfect non-intercourse with France, was sure to call home our merchant vessels from that country and her dependencies, to confine within our own ports those vessels intended for commerce with France, and thus to withdraw from the reach of the French cruisers a large portion of the ships and property of our citizens. The third, authorizing our merchantmen to arm, was the greatest inducement the government could give to its citizens to arm our whole commercial marine, and was sure to put in warlike preparation as great a portion of our merchant vessels as a desire of self-defence, patriotism, or cupidity, would arm Could measures more eminently calculated to prepare the country for a state of war have been devised or adopted? Was this the intention of those measures, on the part of the government and was that intention carried out into action? Mr. W. said he would let the subsequent acts of the Congress of the United States answer; and for that purpose, he would proceed to read from his abstract of those acts:

"By an act of the 28th June, 1798, three days after the passage of the act last referred to Congress authorized the forfeiture and condemnation of all French vessels captured in pursuance of the acts before mentioned, and provided for the distribution of the prize money, and for the confinement and support, at the expense of the United States, of prisoners taken in the captured vessels.

"By an act of the 7th July, 1798, nine days after the passage of the last-recited act, Congress declared 'that the United States are of right freed and exonerated from the stipulations of the treaties and of the consular convention heretofore concluded between the United States and France; and that the same shall not hence forth be regarded as legally obligatory on the government or citizens of the United States.'

"By an act of the 9th July, 1798, two days after the passage of the act declaring void the treaties, Congress authorized the capture by the public armed vessels of the United States. of all armed French vessels, whether within the jurisdictional limits of the United States or upon the high seas, their condemnation as prizes their sale, and the distribution of the prize money; empowered the President to grant commissions to private armed vessels to make the same captures, and with the same rights and powers, st public armed vessels; and provided for the sale keeping and support of the prisoners taken, at the expense of the United States.

"By an act of the 9th February, 1799, Con-

United States and France for one 3d of March, 1799.

"By an act of the 28th Febru gress provided for an exchange o France, or authorized the Preside cretion, to send to the domini without an exchange, such prisic remain in the power of the Unite

By an act of the 3d March, directed the President, in case the United States, taken on box longing to any of the powers at w by French vessels, should be pu porally punished, or unreasonal to retaliate promptly and fully up prisoners in the power of the Un

"By an act of the 27th Februa gress again continued the nontween us and France, for one year of March, 1800.

"Mr. W. said he had now cle ences he proposed to make to the gress, to prove that war-actua between the United States and July, 1798, until that war was the treaty of the 30th of Septem had, he hoped, before shown that of Congress, up to the passage of gress of the 25th of June, 1798, that act, were appropriate measur to a state of war; and he had no tal suspension of the peaceable rela the two governments, by the decla gress that the treaties should no sidered binding and obligatory up ment or its citizens. What, then be inferred from an indiscriminal our public armed vessels, put in a paration, by preparatory acts. t armed French vessels upon the from granting commissions to or mercial marine, also armed by th previous acts of Congress, author make the same captures, with reg cable to both, for the condemnatio. the distribution of the prize mone tention, support, and exchange of taken in the captured vessels? said Mr. W., call this a state of p

"[Here Mr. Webster, chairman committee which reported the b

'Certainly.']
"Mr. W. proceeded. He said deeply read in the treatises upon na he should never dispute with that tleman upon the technical definit and war, as given in the books; was to the plain sense of every every citizen of the country. Wo that state of things which he h and which he had shown to e: highest of all evidence, the laws alone, peace? It was a state of disguised hostility, of force oppose war upon the ocean, as far as ou

all the attention of adaptation to the owed in future acts The first, authorarmed vessels, was in martial prepara-United States then pon our coast. The ect non-intercourse all home our mertry and her depenir own ports those ce with France, and each of the French ne ships and properird, authorizing our he greatest inducegive to its citizens ial marine, and was paration as great a essels as a desire of upidity, would arm. nently calculated to ate of war have been this the intention of of the government ied out into action? e subsequent acts of States answer; and proceed to read from une, 1798, three days act last referred to. rfeiture and condemis captured in pursustioned, and provided prize money, and for rt, at the expense of iers taken in the cap-

fulv. 1798, nine days -recited act, Congress States are of right the stipulations of consular convention en the United States same shall not hencelly obligatory on the the United States.' July, 1798, two days act declaring void the ized the capture, by of the United States, s, whether within the United States or upon anation as prizes, their of the prize money; to grant commissions o make the same cap-rights and powers, s provided for the sale he prisoners taken, at 1 States.

February, 1799, Conitercourse between the United States and France for one year, from the 3d of March, 1799.

"By an act of the 28th February, 1799. Congress provided for an exchange of prisoners with France, or authorized the President, at his discretion, to send to the dominions of France. without an exchange, such prisioners as might remain in the power of the United States.

"By an act of the 3d March, 1799, Congress directed the President, in case any citizens of the United States, taken on board vessels belonging to any of the powers at war with France. by French vessels, should be put to death, corporally punished, or unreasonably imprisoned. to retaliate promptly and fully upon any French prisoners in the power of the United States.

"By an act of the 27th February, 1800, Congress again continued the non-intercourse between us and France, for one year, from the 3d of March, 1800.

"Mr. W. said he had now closed the references he proposed to make to the laws of Congress, to prove that war-actual war-existed between the United States and France, from July, 1798, until that war was terminated by the treaty of the 30th of September, 1800. He had he hoped, before shown that the measures of Congress, up to the passage of the act of Congress of the 25th of June, 1798, and including that act, were appropriate measures preparatory to a state of war; and he had now shown a total suspension of the peaceable relations between the two governments, by the declaration of Congress that the treaties should no longer be considered binding and obligatory upon our government or its citizens. What, then, but war could be inferred from an indiscriminate direction to our public armed vessels, put in a state of preparation, by preparatory acts, to capture all armed French vessels upon the high seas, and from granting commissions to our whole commercial marine, also armed by the operation of previous acts of Congress, authorizing them to make the same captures, with regulations applicable to both, for the condemnation of the prizes, the distribution of the prize money, and the detention, support, and exchange of the prisoners taken in the captured vessels? Will any man, said Mr. W., call this a state of peace?

"[Here Mr. Webster, chairman of the select committee which reported the bill, answered,

"Mr. W. proceeded. He said he was not deeply read in the treatises upon national law, and he should never dispute with that learned gentleman upon the technical definitions of peace and war, as given in the books; but his appeal was to the plain sense of every senator and every citizen of the country. Would either call that state of things which he had described, and which he had shown to exist from the highest of all evidence, the laws of Congress alone, peace? It was a state of open and undisguised hostility, of force opposed to force, of war upon the ocean, as far as our government failed to recover for them. What, then, Mr.

were in command of the means to carry on a maritime war. If it was peace, he should like to be informed, by the friends of the bill, what would be war. This was violence and bloodshed, the power of the one nation against the power of the other, reciprocally exhibited by physical force.

"Couple with this the withdrawal by France of her minister from this government, and her refusal to receive the American commission, consisting of Messrs. Marshall, Pinckney, and Gerry, and the consequent suspension of negotiations between the two governments, during the period referred to; and Mr. W. said, if the facts and the national records did not show a state of war, he was at a loss to know what state of things between nations should be called war.

"If, however, the Senate should think him wrong in this conclusion, and that the claims were not utterly barred by war, he trusted the facts disclosed in this part of his argument would be considered sufficient at least to protect the faith of the government in the discharge of its whole duty to its citizens; and that after it had carried on these two years of war, or, if not war, of actual force and actual fighting, in which the blood of its citizens had been shed, and their lives sacrificed to an unknown extent, for the single and sole purpose of enforcing these claims of individuals, the imputation of negligence, and hence of liability to pay the claims, would not be urged as growing out of this portion of the conduct of the government.

"Mr. W. said he now came to consider the treaty of the 30th September, 1800, and the reasons which appeared plainly to his mind to have induced the American negotiators to place that negotiation upon the basis, not of an existing war, but of a continued peace. That such was assumed to be the basis of the negotiation, he believed to be true, and this fact, and this fact only, so far as he had heard the arguments of the friends of the bill, was depended upon to prove that there had been no war. He had attempted to show that war in fact had existed, and been carried on for two years; and if he could now show that the inducement, on the part of the American ministers, to place the negotiation which was to put an end to the existing hostilities upon a peace basis, arose from no considerations of a national or political character, and from no ideas of consistency with the existing state of facts, but solely from a desire still to save, as far as might be in their power, the interests of these claimants, he should submit with great confidence that it did not lay in the mouths of the same claimants to turn round and claim this implied admission of an absence of war, thus made by the agents of the government out of kindness to them, and an excess of regard for their interests, as the basis of a liability to pay the damages which they had sustained, and which this diplomatic untruth, like all the previous steps of the government,

President, said Mr. W., was the subject on our part, of the donstant and laborious negotiations carried on between the two governments from 1793 to 1798? The claims. What, on our part, was the object of the disturbances from 1798 to 1800-of the non-intercourse-of the sending into service our navy, and arming our merchant vessels-of our raising troops and providing armies on the land-of the expenditure of the millions taken from the treasury and added to our public debt, to equip and sustain these fleets and armies? The claims. Why were our citizens sent to capture the French, to spill their blood, and lay down their lives upon the high seas? To recover the claims. These were the whole matter. We had no other demand upon France, and, upon our part, no other cause of difference with her.

"What public, or national, or political object had we in the negotiation of 1800, which led to the treaty of the 30th September of that year? None, but to put an end to the existing hostilities, and to restore relations of peace and friendship. These could have been as well secured by negotiating upon a war as a peace basis. Indeed, as there were in our former treaties stipulations which we did not want to revive, a negotiation upon the basis of existing war was preferable, so far as the interests of the government were concerned, because that would put all questions, growing out of former treaties between the parties, for ever at rest. Still our negotiators consented to put the negotiation upon the basis of continued peace, and why? Because the adoption of a basis of existing war would have barred effectually and for ever all classes of the claims. This, Mr. W. said, was the only possible assignable reason for the course pursued by the American negotiators; it was the only reason growing out of the existing facts, or out of the interests, public or private, involved in the difficulties between the two nations. He therefore felt himself fully warranted in the conclusion, that the American ministers preferred and adopted a peace basis for the negotiation which resulted in the treaty of the 30th of September, 1800, solely from a wish, as far as they might be able, to save the interests of our citizens holding claims against France

"Did they, Mr. President, said Mr. W., succeed by this artifice in benefiting the citizens who had sustained injuries? He would let the treaty speak for itself. The following are extracts from the 4th and 5th articles:

"'Art. 4. Property captured, and not yet definitively condemned, or which may be captured before the exchange of ratifications (contraband goods destined to an enemy's port excepted), shall be mutually restored on the following preceded of expression."

proof of ownership.'
"[Here follows the form of proof, when the article proceeds:]

"'This article shall take effect from the date of the signature of the present convention. And if from the date of the said signature, any property shall be condemned contrary to the intent of the said convention, before the knowledge of this stipulation shall be obtained, the property so condemned shall, without delay, be restored or paid for.'

"Art. 5. The debts contracted for by one of the two nations with individuals of the other or by individuals of the one with individuals of the other, shall be paid, or the payment may be prosecuted in the same manner as if there had been no misunderstanding between the two States. But this clause shall not extend to indemnities claimed on account of captures or confiscations."

"Here, Mr. W. said, was evidence from the treaty itself, that, by assuming a peace basis for the negotiation, the property of our merchants captured and not condemned was saved to them. and that certain classes of claimants against the French government were provided for, and their rights expressly reserved. So much, therefore, was gained by our negotiators by a departure from the facts, and negotiating to put an end to existing hostilities upon the basis of a continued peace. Was it, then, generous or just to permit these merchants, because our ministers did not succeed in saving all they claimed, to set up this implied admission of continued peace as the foundation of a liability against their own government to pay what was not recovered from France? He could not so consider it, and he felt sure the country never would consent to so responsible an implication from an act of excessive kindness. Mr. W. said he must not be understood as admitting that all was not, by the effect of this treaty, recovered from France, which she ever recognized to be due, or ever intended to pay. On the contrary, his best impression was, from what he had been able to learn of the claims, that the treaty of Louisiana provided for the payment of all the claims which France ever admitted, ever intended to pay, or which there was the most remote hope of recovering in any way whatever. He should in a subsequent part of his remarks, have occasion to examine that treaty, the claims which were paid under it, and to compare the claims paid with those urged before the treaty of September,

"Mr. W. said he now came to the consideration of the liability of the United States to these claimants, in case it shall be determined by the Senate that a war between France and the United States had not existed to bar all ground of claim either against France or the United States. He understood the claimants to put this liability upon the assertion that the government of the United States had released their claims against France by the treaty of the 30th of September. 1800, and that the release was made for a fall and valuable consideration passing to the United States, which in law and equity made it their duty to pay the claims. The consideration passing to the United States is alleged to be their release from the onerous obligations imposed upon them by the treaties of amity and alliance of 1778, and the consu of 1778, and especially and princ seventeenth article of the treaty commerce, in relation to armed vateers, and prizes, and by the el of the treaty of alliance containing guarantees.

"The release, Mr. W. said, we have been made in the striking conate of the United States, of the of the treaty of 30th September, article was originally inserted and by the respective negotiators of the as it stood at the time the treat. To cause this point to be clearly would be necessary for him to trouwith a history of the ratification. The second article as inserted by tors, and as standing at the time of the treaty, was in the following of the treaty, was in the following "Art. 2. The ministers pleni the two powers not being able to sent, respecting the treaty of all February, 1778, the treaty of am merce of the same date, and the clith of November, 1788, nor uponities mutually due or claimed, the megotiate further upon these semenient time; and, until the agreed upon these points, the said convenient of the two countries shall as follows:

"The residue of the treaty, Mr. a substantial copy of the former tre and commerce, and alliance between ations, with such modifications able to both, and as experience une treaties had shown to be for the mu of both.

"This second article was subresente by the President as a part as by the constitution of the Unit President was bound to do, to the treaty might be properly ratified of the United States, the French gover previously adopted and ratified it as by the respective negotiators, the resident in the form given above refused to advise and consent to the expunged it from the treaty, insplace the following:

"It is agreed that the presen shall be in force for the term of from the time of the exchange of tions."

"In this shape, and with this the treaty was duly ratified by the the United States, and returned to government for its dissent or concuraparte, then First Consul, concumodification made by the Senate, it ing language, and upon the conditional control of the conditional conditional control of the conditional control of the conditional co

Vol. I.-32

trary to the intent the knowledge of ned, the property delay, be restored

acted for by one of als of the other, or individuals of the payment may be ner as if there had between the two hall not extend to that of captures or evidence from the ng a peace basis for of our merchants was saved to them. aimants against the vided for, and their So much, therefore, ors by a departure ng to put an end to basis of a continued us or just to permit ir ministers did not aimed, to set up this inued peace as the ainst their own gonot recovered from consider it, and he would consent to so rom an act of exces-I he must not be unall was not, by the overed from France, to be due, or ever inintrary, his best imhe had been able to e treaty of Louisiana f all the claims which r intended to pay, or t remote hope of retever. He should in marks, have occasion ie claims which were pare the claims paid e treaty of September, ame to the considera-United States to these be determined by the France and the United bar all ground of claim he United States. He s to put this liability the government of the ed their claims against the 30th of September, se was made for a full n passing to the United d equity made it their The consideration pass is alleged to be their 18 obligations imposed upon them by the treaties of amity and commerce and alliance of 1778, and the consular convention of 1778, and especially and principally by the seventeenth article of the treaty of amity and commerce, in relation to armed vessels, privateers, and prizes, and by the eleventh article of the treaty of alliance containing the mutual guarantees.

"The release, Mr. W. said, was claimed to have been made in the striking out, by the Senate of the United States, of the second article of the treaty of 30th September, 1800, as that article was originally inserted and agreed upon by the respective negotiators of the two powers, as it stood at the time the treaty was signed. To cause this point to be clearly understood, it would be necessary for him to trouble the Senate with a history of the ratification of this treaty. The second article, as inserted by the negotiators, and as standing at the time of the signing of the treaty, was in the following words:

"Art. 2. The ministers plenipotentiary of the two powers not being able to agree, at present, respecting the treaty of alliance of 6th February, 1778, the treaty of amity and commerce of the same date, and the convention of 14th of November, 1788, nor upon the indemnities mutually due or claimed, the parties will negotiate further upon these subjects at a convenient time; and, until they may have agreed upon these points, the said treaties and convenion shall have no, operation, and the relations of the two countries shall be regulated as follows:

"The residue of the treaty, Mr. W. said, was a substantial copy of the former treaties of amity and commerce, and alliance between the two nations, with such modifications as were desirable to both, and as experience under the former treaties had shown to be for the mutual interests of both.

"This second article was submitted to the Senate by the President as a part of the treaty, as by the constitution of the United States the President was bound to do, to the end that the treaty might be properly ratified on the part of the United States, the French government having previously adopted and ratified it as it was signed by the respective negotiators, the second article being then in the form given above. The Senate refused to advise and consent to this article, and expunged it from the treaty, inserting in its place the following:

shall be in force for the term of eight years from the time of the exchange of the ratifications'

"In this shape, and with this modification, the treaty was duly ratified by the President of the United States, and returned to the French government for its dissent or concurrence. Benaparte, then First Consul, concurred in the modification made by the Senate, in the following language, and upon the condition therein appressed:

Vol. I.-32

"'The government of the United States having added to its ratification that the convention should be in force for the space of eight years, and having omitted the second article, the government of the French Republic consents to accept, ratify, and confirm the above convention, with the addition, purporting that the convention shall be in force for the space of eight years, and with the retrenchment of the second article: Provided, That, by this retrenchment, the two States renounce the respective pretensions which are the object of the said article."

"This ratification by the French Republic, thus qualified, was returned to the United States, and the treaty, with the respective conditional ratifications, was again submitted by the President of the United States to the Senate. That body 'resolved that they considered the said convention as fully ratified, and returned the same to the President for the usual promulgation;' whereupon he completed the ratification in the usual forms and by the usual publication.

"This, Mr. W. said, was the documentary history of this treaty and of its ratification, and here was the release of their claims relied upon by the claimants under the bill before the Senate. They contend that this second article of the treaty, as originally inserted by the negotiators, reserved their claims for future negotiation, and also reserved the subjects of disagreement under the treaties of amity and commerce, and of alliance, of 1778, and the consular convention of 1788; that the seventeenth article of the treaty of amity and commerce, and the eleventh article of the treaty of alliance, were particularly onerous upon the United States; that, to discharge the government from the onerous obligations imposed upon it in these two articles of the respective treaties, the Senate was induced to expunge the second article of the treaty of the 30th September above referred to, and, by consequence. to expunge the reservation of their claims as subjects of future negotiation between the two nations; that in thus obtaining a discharge from the onerous obligations of these treaties, and especially of the two articles above designated, the United States was benefited to an amount beyond the whole value of the claims discharged, and that this benefit was the inducement to the expunging of the second article of the treaty. with a full knowledge that the act did discharge the claims, and create a legal and equitable obligation on the part of the government to pay

"These, Mr. W. said, he understood to be the assumptions of the claimants, and this their course of reasoning to arrive at the conclusion that the United States were liable to them for the amount of their claims. He must here raise a preliminary question, which he had satisfied himself would show these assumptions of the claimants to be wholly without foundation, so far as the idea of benefit to the United States was supposed to be derived from expunging this second article of the treaty of 1800. What, he must be permitted to ask, would have been the liability of the United States under the 'onerous obligations' referred to, in case the Senate had ratified the treaty, retaining this second article? The binding force of the treaties of amity and commerce, and of alliance, and of the consular convention, was released, and the treaties and convention were themselves suspended by the very article in question; and the subjects of disagreement growing out of them were merely made matters of future negotiation 'at a convenient time.' What was the value or the burden of such an obligation upon the United States? for this was the only obligation from which our government was released by striking out the article. The value, Mr. W. said, was the value of the privilege, being at perfect liberty, in the premises, of assenting to or dissenting from a bad bargain, in a matter of negotiation between ourselves and a foreign power. This was the consideration passing to the United States, and, so far as he was able to view the subject, this was all the consideration the government had received, if it be granted (which he must by no means be understood to admit). that the striking out of the article was a release of the claims, and that such release was intended as a consideration for the benefits to accrue to the government from the act.

"Mr. W. said he felt bound to dwell, for a moment, upon this point. What was the value of an obligation to negotiate 'at a convenient time?' Was it any thing to be valued? The 'convenient time, might never arrive, or if it did arrive, and negotiations were opened, were not the government as much at liberty as in any other case of negotiation, to refuse propositions which were deemed disadvantageous to itself? The treaties were suspended, and could not be revived without the consent of the United States; and, of consequence, the 'onerous obligations comprised in certain articles of these treaties were also suspended until the same consent should revive them. Could he, then, be mistaken in the conclusion that, if the treaty of 1800 had been ratified with the second article forming a part of it, as originally agreed by the negotiators, the United States would have been as effectually released from the onerous obligations of the former treaties, until those obligations should again be put in force by their consent, as they were released when that article was stricken out, and the treaty ratified without it? In short, could be mistaken in the position that all the inducement, of a national character, to expunge that article from the treaty, was to get rid of an obligation to negotiate 'at a convenient time?' And could it be possible that such an inducement would have led the Senate of the United States, understanding this consequence, to impose upon the government a liability to the amount of $5,000,000? He could not adopt so absurd a supposition; and he felt himself compelled to say that this view of the action of the government in the ratification of only, 1st, to captures of which the council of the treaty of 1800, in his mind, put an end to the pretence that the striking out of this article relieved the United States from obligations so onerous as to form a valuable consideration for the payments provided for in this bill. He could not view the obligation released—a mere obligation to negotiate as onerous at all, or as forming any consideration whatever for a pecuniary liability, much less for a liability for millions "Mr. W. said he now proposed to consider whether the effect of expunging the second article of the treaty of 1800 was to release any claim of value-any claim which France had ever acknowledged, or ever intended to pay, He had before shown, by extracts from the fourth and fifth articles of the treaty of 1800 that certain classes of claims were saved by that treaty, as it was ratified. The claims so reserved and provided for were paid in pursuance of provisions contained in the treaty between France and the United States, of the 30th of April, 1803; and to determine what claims were thus paid, a reference to some of the articles of that treaty was necessary. The purchase of Louisiana was made by the United States for the sum of 80,000,000 of francs, 60,000,000 of which were to be paid into the French treasury. and the remaining 20,000,000 were to be applied to the payment of these claims. Three separate treaties were made between the parties, bearing all the same date, the first providing for the cession of the territory, the second for the payment of the 60,000,000 of francs to the French treasury, and the third for the adjustment and payment of the claims.

Mr. W. said the references proposed were to the last-named treaty, and were the following:

"'Art. 1. The debts due by France to citizens of the United States, contracted before the 8th of Vendemiaire, ninth year of the French Republic (30th September, 1800), shall be paid according to the following regulations, with interest at six per cent., to commence from the period when the accounts and vouchers were presented to the French government.'

"'Art. 2. The debts provided for by the preceding article are those whose result is comprised in the conjectural note annexed to the present convention, and which, with the interest, cannot exceed the sum of twenty millions of france The claims comprised in the said note, which fall within the exceptions of the following articles, shall not be admitted to the benefit of this provision.'

"' Art. 4. It is expressly agreed that the preceding articles shall comprehend no debts but such as are due to citizens of the United States, who have been and are yet creditors of France, for supplies, for embargoes, and prizes made at sea, in which the appeal has been properly lodged within the time mentioned in the said convention of the 8th Vendemiaire, ninth year (30th September, 1800).

' Art. 5. The preceding articles shall apply prizes shall have ordered resti well understood that the claims recourse to the United States he might have had to the gove French Republic, and only in caciency of the captors; 2d, the d in the said fifth article of the tracted before the 8th Vendemi September, 1800), the paymen been heretofore claimed of the ment of France, and for which have a right to the protection States; the said fifth article do hend prizes whose condemnation shall be confirmed; it is the ex of the contracting parties not benefit of the present conventi tions of American citizens, who tablished houses of commerce i land, or other countries than the in partnership with foreigners, at reason and the nature of their co to be regarded as domiciliated where such houses exist. All bargains concerning merchandis not be the property of America equally excepted from the bene convention, saving, however, to their claims in like manner as if not been made.

"From these provisions of the said, it would appear that the cl. were of three descriptions, to wit

"1. Claims for supplies. "2. Claims for embargoes.

"3. Claims for captures made scription defined in the last cla and the first clause of the 5th art "How far these claims embr France ever acknowledged, or ev pay, Mr. W. said he was unable time allowed him to examine the permitted him to look sufficiently ments to make up his mind with this point. He had found, in a r the Senate on the 14th of Janua vor of this bill, by the honorable I then a Senator from the State of following classification of the Fn insisted on at a period before the treaty of 1800, to wit:

"'l. From the capture and dete fifty vessels.

2. The detention, for a year, vessels, under the Bordeaux embe "'3. The non-payment of suppl India islands, and to continental I "4. For depredations committee merce in the West Indies.'

"Mr. W. said the compariso classifications of claims would she view, that Nos. 2 and 3 in Mr. Liv were provided for by the treaty which he had read. Whether ar what portions of Nos. 1 and 4 i nd, put an end to g out of this article rom obligations so le consideration for in this bill. He n released-a mere onerous at all, or as natever for a pecuniliability for millions. coposed to consider iging the second arwas to release any which France had er intended to pay. extracts from the the treaty of 1800. s were saved by that The claims so rere paid in pursuance the treaty between tes, of the 30th of tine what claims were me of the articles of y. The purchase of ne United States for francs, 60,000,000 of the French treasury, 100 were to be applied aims. Three separate n the parties, bearing est providing for the ne second for the payfrancs to the French nces proposed were to I were the following: by France to citizens tracted before the 8th ar of the French Re-1800), shall be paid g regulations, with incommence from the ts and vouchers were zovernment.'

or the adjustment and rovided for by the pre-10se result is comprised innexed to the present ith the interest, cannot aty millions of france. n the said note, which s of the following artied to the benefit of this sly agreed that the preaprehend no debts but as of the United States, yet creditors of France, es, and prizes made at nas been properly lodged ned in the said conveniaire, ninth year (30th

ing articles shall apply f which the council of well understood that the claimant cannot have recourse to the United States otherwise than he might have had to the government of the French Republic, and only in case of the insufficiency of the captors; 2d, the debts mentioned in the said fifth article of the convention, contracted before the 8th Vendemaire, and 9 (30th September, 1800), the payment of which has been heretofore claimed of the actual government of France, and for which the creditors have a right to the protection of the United States; the said fifth article does not comprehend prizes whose condemnation has been or shall be confirmed; it is the express intention of the contracting parties not to extend the benefit of the present convention to reclamations of American citizens, who shall have established houses of commerce in France, England, or other countries than the United States in partnership with foreigners, and who by that reason and the nature of their commerce, ought to be regarded as domiciliated in the places where such houses exist. All agreements and bargains concerning merchandise, which shall not be the property of American citizens, are equally excepted from the benefit of the said convention, saving, however, to such persons their claims in like manner as if this treaty had not been made.

"From these provisions of the treaty, Mr. W said it would appear that the claims to be paid were of three descriptions, to wit:

"1. Claims for supplies. "2. Claims for embargoes.

"3. Claims for captures made at sea, of a description defined in the last clause of the 4th and the first clause of the 5th article.

"How far these claims embraced all which France ever acknowledged, or ever intended to pay, Mr. W. said he was unable to say, as the time allowed him to examine the case had not permitted him to look sufficiently into the documents to make up his mind with precision upon this point. He had found, in a report made to the Senate on the 14th of January, 1831, in favor of this bill, by the honorable Mr. Livingston, then a Senator from the State of Louisiana, the following classification of the French claims, as insisted on at a period before the making of the treaty of 1800, to wit:

"'l. From the capture and detention of about fifty vessels.

"2. The detention, for a year, of eighty other vessels, under the Bordeaux embargo.

"'3. The non-payment of supplies to the West India islands, and to continental France.

"'4. For depredations committed on our commerce in the West Indies.'

"Mr. W. said the comparison of the two classifications of claims would show, at a single view, that Nos. 2 and 3 in Mr. Livingston's list were provided for by the treaty of 1803, from which he had read. Whether any, and if any, prizes shall have ordered restitution, it being ston's list were embraced in No 3 of the provisions of the treaty, as he had numbered them, he was unable to say; but this much he could say, that he had found nothing to satisfy his mind that parts of both those classes of claims were not so included, and therefore provided for and paid under the treaty; nor had he been able to find any thing to show that this treaty of 1803 did not provide for and pay all the claims which France ever acknowledged or ever intended to pay. He was, therefore, unprepared to admit, and did not admit, that any thing of value to any class of individual claimants was released by expunging the second original article from the treaty of the 30th September, 1800. On the contrary, he was strongly impressed with the belief that the adjustment of claims provided for in the treaty of 1803 had gone to the whole extent to which the French government had, at any period of the negotiations, intended to go.

"Mr. W. said this impression was greatly strengthened by the circumstance that the claims under the Bordeaux embargo were expressly provided for in this treaty, while he could see nothing in the treaty of 1800 which seemed to him to authorize the supposition that this class of claims was more clearly embraced within the reservations in that treaty than any class which had been admitted by the French government. "Another fact, Mr. W. said, was material to this subject, and should be borne carefully in mind by every senator. It was, that not a cent was paid by France, even upon the claims re served and admitted by the treaty of 1800, un til the sale of Louisiana to the United States, for a sum greater by thirty millions of francs than that for which the French minister was instructed to sell it. Yes, Mr. President, said Mr. W., the only payment yet made upon any portion of these claims has been virtually made by the United States; for it has been made out of the consideration money paid for Louisiana, after paying into the French treasury ten millions of francs beyond the price France herself placed upon the territory. It is a singular fact. that the French negotiator was instructed to make the sale for fifty millions, if he could get no more; and when he found that, by yielding twenty millions to pay the claims, he could get eighty millions for the territory, and thus put ten millions more into the treasury of his nation than she had instructed him to ask for the whole, he yielded to the claims and closed the treaty. It was safe to say that, but for this speculation in the sale of Louisiana, not one dollar would have been paid upon the claims to this day. All our subsequent negotiations with France of a similar character, and our present relations with that country, growing out of private claims, justify this position. What, then, would have been the value of claims, if such fairly existed, which were not acknowledged and provided for by the treaty of 1800, but were what portions of Nos. 1 and 4 in Mr. Living- left for future negotiation 'at a convenient

Would they have been worth the five time? millions of dollars you propose to appropriate by this bill? Would they have been worth further negotiation? He thought they would

"Mr. W. said he would avail himself of this occasion, when speaking of the treaty of Louisiana and of its connection with these claims, to explain a mistake into which he had fallen, and which he found from conversation with several gentlemen, who had been for some years members of Congress, had been common to them and to himself. The mistake to which he alluded was, the supposition that the claimants under this bill put their case upon the assumption that their claims had constituted part of the consideration for which Louisiana had been ceded to the United States; and that the consideration they contended the government had received, and upon which its liability rested, was the cession of that territory for a less sum, in money, than was considered to be its value, on account of the release of the French government from those private claims. He had rested under this misapprehension until the opening of the present debate, and until he commenced an examination of the case. He then found that it was an entire misapprehension; that the United States had paid, in money, for Louisiana, thirty millions of francs beyond the price which France had set upon it; that the claimants under this bill did not rest their claims at all upon this basis, and that the friends of the bill in the Senate did not pretend to derive the liability of the government from this source. Mr. W. said he was induced to make this explanation in justice to himself, and because there might be some person within the hearing of his voice who might still be under the same misappre-

"He had now, Mr. W. said, attempted to establish the following propositions, viz.

"1. That a state of actual war, by which he meant a state of actual hostilities and of force, and an interruption of all diplomatic or friendly intercourse between the United States and France, had existed from the time of the passage of the acts of the 7th and 9th of July. 1798, before referred to, until the sending of the negotiators, Ellsworth, Davie, and Murray, in 1800, to make a treaty which put an end to the hostilities existing, upon the best terms that could be obtained; and that the treaty of the 30th of September, 1800, concluded by these negotiators, was, in fact, and so far as private claims were concerned, to be considered as a treaty of peace, and to conclude all such claims. not reserved by it, as finally ratified by the two

"2. That the treaty of amity and commerce. and the treaty of alliance of 1778, as well as the consular convention of 1788, were suspended by the 2d article of the treaty of 1800, and from that time became mere matters for negotia-

that, therefore, the desire to get rid of these treaties, and of any 'onerous obligations'  $_{\rm con}$ tained in them, was only the desire to get rio of an obligation to negotiate 'at a convenient time; ' and that such a consideration could not have induced the Senate of the United States to expunge that article from the treaty, if thereby that body had supposed it was imposing upon the country a liability to pay to its citizens the sum of five millions of dollars-a sum much larger than France had asked, in money, for a full discharge from the 'onerous obligations relied upon.

"3. That the treaty of 1800 reserved and provided for certain portions of the claims: that payment, according to such reservations, was made under the treaty of 1803; and that it is at least doubtful whether the payment thus made did not cover all the claims ever admitted or ever intended to be paid by France; for which reason the expunging of the second article of the treaty of 1800, by the Senate of the United States, in all probability, released nothing which ever had, or which was ever likely to have value.

"Mr. W. said, if he had been successful in establishing either of these positions, there was an end of the claims, and, by consequence a defeat of the bill.

"The advocates of the bill conceded that two positions must be established, on their part, to sustain it, to wit:

"1. That the claims were valid claims against France, and had never been paid. And

"2. That they were released by the government of the United States for a full and valuable consideration passing to its benefit by means of the release.

"If, then, a state of war had existed, it would not be contended that any claims of this character, not reserved or provided for in the treaty of peace, were valid claims after the ratification of such a treaty. His first proposition, therefore, if sustained, would defeat the bill, by establishing the fact that the claims, if not reserved in the treaty of 1800, were not valid claims.

"The second proposition, if sustained, would establish the fact that, inasmuch as the valuable consideration passing to the United States was alleged to grow out of the 'onerous obligations' in the treaty of amity and commerce. the treaty of alliance, and the consular convention; and inasmuch as these treaties, and all obligations, past, present, or future, 'onerous' or otherwise, growing out of them, were suspended and made inoperative by the second article of the treaty of the 30th of September, 1800, until further negotiation, by the common consent of both powers, should revive them, the Senate of the United States could not have expected, when they expunged this article from the treaty, that, by thus discharging the government from an obligation to negotiate 'at a contion between the parties at a convenient time; venient time, they were incurring against it a liability of millions; in other charge of the government from pegotiate upon any subject time,' could not have been co Senate of the United States as able consideration for the pay claims to the amount of five mi

"The third proposition, if s prove that all the claims ever ack intended to be paid by France, the treaty of 1803, and that, the never admitted or recognized 1 scarcely be urged as valid cla no valid claims remained; an the expunging of the second art of the 30th of September, 1800. which was valid, and nothing paid by the United States as a by that modification of that tre W. said he would rest his reaso three propositions.

"But if the Senate should de had been wrong in them all, a sustain either, he had still ano which he considered conclusive able, as to any valuable consider lease of these claims having pass States in consequence of their the 'onerous obligations' said contained in the former treatie rous obligations,' and the only he had heard any thing in the c bate, or of which he had found documents, arose under the 17t treaty of amity and commerce article of the treaty of alliance; to both, he laid down this bre which would be fully sustained themselves, and by every act ar sion on the part of the Ameriand the government of the Unit "The obligations, liabilities

bilities, imposed upon the gove United States and upon France article of the treaty of amity ar 1778, and by the 11th article o alliance of 1778, where mutual, equal: each formed the consider only consideration, for the other any release which discharged from those liabilities, responsib gations, must have been mutual equal; and the release of eitl formed a full and valuable consi release of the other,

"Mr. W. said he would not tro by again reading the articles from treaties. They would be recolled would controvert the fact that, ties were made, these articles w contain mutual, reciprocal, and ec By the first we gave to France our ports for her armed vessels, prizes, and prohibited all other I enjoyment of the same privileg

o get rid of these is obligations' con he desire to get ria te 'at a convenient sideration could not the United States to e treaty, if thereby was imposing upon y to its citizens the ilars-a sum much ed, in money, for a onerous obligations'

1800 reserved and s of the claims; that h reservations, was 1803; and that it is the payment thus claims ever admitted, aid by France; for g of the second artiby the Senate of the ability, released nohich was ever likely

d been successful in positions, there was l. by consequence, a oill conceded that two ned, on their part, to e valid claims against n paid. And leased by the governfor a full and valuao its benefit by means

· had existed, it would y claims of this chaprovided for in the d claims after the ra-His first proposied, would defeat the act that the claims, if ty of 1800, were not on, if sustained, would nasmuch as the valug to the United States t of the 'onerous obliamity and commerce. d the consular conventhese treaties, and all , or future, 'onerous' ut of them, were suserative by the second he 30th of September, tiation, by the common should revive them, the ites could not have exinged this article from discharging the governto negotiate 'at a conre incurring against it a liability of millions; in other words, the discharge of the government from an obligation to negotiate upon any subject 'at a convenient time,' could not have been considered by the Senate of the United States as a good and valuable consideration for the payment of private claims to the amount of five millions of dollars.

"The third proposition, if sustained, would prove that all the claims ever acknowledged, or ever intended to be paid by France, were paid under the treaty of 1803, and that, therefore, as claims never admitted or recognized by France would scarcely be urged as valid claims against her, no valid claims remained; and, consequently, the expunging of the second article of the treaty of the 30th of September, 1800, released nothing which was valid, and nothing remained to be paid by the United States as a liability incurred by that modification of that treaty. Here Mr. W. said he would rest his reasoning as to these three propositions.

"But if the Senate should determine that he had been wrong in them all, and had failed to sustain either, he had still another proposition, which he considered conclusive and unanswerable, as to any valuable consideration for the release of these claims having passed to the United States in consequence of their discharge from the 'onerous obligations' said to have been contained in the former treaties. These 'onerous obligations,' and the only ones of which he had heard any thing in the course of the debate, or of which he had found any thing in the documents, arose under the 17th article of the treaty of amity and commerce, and the 11th article of the treaty of alliance; and, in relation to both, he laid down this broad proposition, which would be fully sustained by the treaties themselves, and by every act and every expression on the part of the American negotiators, and the government of the United States, viz.:

"The obligations, liabilities, and responsibilities, imposed upon the government of the United States and upon France by the 17th article of the treaty of amity and commerce of 1778, and by the 11th article of the treaty of alliance of 1778, where mutual, reciprocal, and equal: each formed the consideration, and the only consideration, for the other; and, therefore, any release which discharged both powers from those liabilities, responsibilities, and obligations, must have been mutual, reciprocal, and equal; and the release of either must have formed a full and valuable consideration for the release of the other.'

"Mr. W. said he would not trouble the Senate by again reading the articles from the respective treaties. They would be recollected, and no one would controvert the fact that, when the treaties were made, these articles were intended to contain mutual, reciprocal, and equal obligations. By the first we gave to France the liberty of our ports for her armed vessels, privateers, and prizes, and prohibited all other powers from the

gave to us the liberty of her ports for our armed vessels, privateers, and prizes, and guarded the privilege by the same prohibition to other powers; and by the second we guaranteed to France, for ever, her possessions in America, and France guaranteed to us, for ever, 'our liberty, sovereignty, and independence, absolute and unlimited, as well in matters of government as commerce.' Such were the obligations in their original inception. Will it be contended that they were not mutual, reciprocal, and equal, and that, in each instance, the one did not form the consideration for the other? Surely no one will take this ground.

"If, then, said Mr. W., the obligations imposed upon each government by these articles of the respective treaties were mutual, reciprocal, and equal, when undertaken, they must have remained equal until abrogated by war, or changed by treaty stipulation. No treaty, subsequent to those which contain the obligations, had affected them in any manner whatever. If, as he had attempted to show, war had existed from July, 1778, to 1800, that would not have rendered the obligations unequal, but would have abrogated them altogether. If, as the friends of the bill contend, there had been no war, and the treaties were in full force up to the signing of the convention of the 30th of September, 1800, what was the effect of that treaty, as originally signed by the negotiators, upon these mutual, reciprocal, and equal obligations? The second original article of that treaty will answer. It did not attempt to disturb their mutuality, reciprocity, or equality, but suspended them as they were, past, present, or future, and made all the subject of future negotiation at a convenient time.

"But, Mr. W. said, the Senate of the United States expunged this article of the treaty of 1800, and refused to advise and consent to ratify it as a part of the treaty; and hence it was contended the United States had discharged themselves from the 'onerous obligations' of these articles in the respective treaties, and had, by that act, incurred, to the claimants under this bill, the heavy liability which it recognizes. If the expunging of that article discharged the United States from obligations thus operous. did it not discharge France from the fellow obligations? Was not the discharge, made in that manner, as mutual, reciprocal, and equal, as the obligations in their inception, and in all their subsequent stages up to that act? How, then, could it be contended that the discharge of the one was not a full and adequate consideration for the discharge of the other? Nothing upon the face of the treaties authorized the introduction of this inequality at this step in the official proceedings. Nothing in the record of the proceedings of the Senate, when acting upon the article, indicates that they intended to pay five millions of dollars to render this mutual release equal between the two powers. The obligations enjoyment of the same privilege; and France and responsibilities were reserved as subjects of future negotiation, upon terms of equality, and the striking out of that reservation was but a mutual and reciprocal and equal release from the obligation further to negotiate. This much for the reciprocity of these obligations as derived from the action of the sovereign powers themselves.

"What was to be learned from the action of their respective negotiators? He did not doubt but that attempts had been made on the part of France to exhibit an inequality in the obligations under the treaty, and to set up that inequality against the claims of our citizens; but had our negotiators ever admitted the inequality to exist, or ever attempted to compromise the rights of the claimants under this bill for such a consideration?. He could not find that they had. He did not hear it contended that they had: and, from the evidence of their acts, remaining upon record, as a part of the diplomatic correspondence of the period, he could not suppose they had ever entertained the idea. He had said that the American negotiators had always treated these obligations as mutual, reciprocal, and equal; and he now proposed to read to the Senate a part of a letter from Messrs. Ellsworth, Davie, and Murray, addressed to the French negotiators, and containing the project of a treaty, to justify his assertion. The letter was dated 20th August, 1800, and it would be recollected that its authors were the negotiators, on the part of the United States, of the treaty of the 30th of September, 1800. The extract is as follows:

"'1. Let it be declared that the former treaties are renewed and confirmed, and shall have the same effect as if no misunderstanding between the two powers had intervened, except so far as they are derogated from by the present treaty.

"'2. It shall be optional with either party to pay to the other, within seven years, three millions of francs, in money or securities which may be issued for indemnities, and thereby to reduce the rights of the other as to privateers and prizes, to those of the most favored nation. And during the said term allowed for option, the right of both parties shall be limited by the line of the most favored nation.

"'3. The mutual guaranty in the treaty of alliance shall be so specified and limited, that its future obligation shall be, on the part of France, when the United States shall be attacked, to furnish and deliver at her own ports military stores to the amount of one million of francs; and, on the part of the United States, when the French possessions in America, in any future war, shall be attacked, to furnish and deliver at their own ports a like amount in provisions. It shall, moreover, be optional for either party to exonerate itself wholly of its obligation, by paying to the other, within seven years, a gross sum of five millions of francs, in money or such securities as may be issued for indemnities.

that not only the American government, but the American negotiators, treated these obligations under the treaty as, in all respects, mutual, re ciprocal, and equal; and if the fallacy of the argument that the United States had obtained to itself a valuable consideration for the release of these private claims in the release of itself from these obligations, was not utterly and entirely disproved by these facts? Was not the release of the obligations on the one side the release of them on the other? And was not the one release the necessary consideration for the other? How, then, could it be said, with any justice, that we sought our release at the expense of the claimants? There was no reasonable ground for such an allegation, either from the acts of our government or of our negotiators. When the latter fixed a value upon our obligations as to the privateers and prizes, and as to the guaranty, in the same article they fixed the same price, to a franc, upon the reciprocal obligations of France; and when the former discharged our liability, by expunging the second article of the treaty of 1800, the same act discharged the corresponding liability of the French government.

Here, then, Mr. W. said, must end all pretence of a valuable consideration for these claims passing to the United States from this source. The onerous obligations were mutual, reciprocal and equal, and the respective releases were mutual, reciprocal, and equal, and simultaneous, and nothing could be fairly drawn from the act which operated these mutual releases to benefit these claimants.

"Mr. W. said he was, then, necessarily brought back to the proposition with which he started in the commencement of his argument, that, if the United States were liable to pay these claimants, that liability must rest upon the broad ground of a failure by the government, after ordinary, and, in this instance, extraordinary efforts to collect the money. The idea of a release of the claims for a valuable consideration passing to the government had been exploded, and, if a liability was to be claimed on account of a failure to collect the money, upon what ground did it rest? What had the government done to protect the rights of these claimants? It had negotiated from 1793 to 1798, with a vigilance and zeal and talent almost unprecedented in the history of diplomacy. It had sent to France minister after minister, and, upon several occasions, extraordinary missions composed of several individuals. Between 1798 and 1800, it had equipped fleets and armies, expended millions in warlike preparation, and finally sent forth its citizens to battle and death, to force the payment of the claims. Were we now to be told, that our failure in these efforts had created a liability against us to pay the money? That the same citizens who had been taxed to pay the expenses of these long negotiations, and of this war for the claims, were to be further taxed to "Mr. W. asked if he needed further proofs pay such of the claims as we had failed to col ect? He could never consen tion from such premises.

"But, Mr. President, said another view of this subject, basis, which renders this bill tance in the comparison. collect these claims has create pay them, that liability goes the claims proved, and the in not to a partial, and perhaps Who, then, would underta amount of claims might not the state of things he had de breaking out of the war bet England, in 1793, to the execu in 1800? For a great portion the municipal regulations of the captured cargoes to be not paid for at the market value which the vessel was destined ture would be proved, the va ascertained, before the comm bill proposes to establish; adduce the proof that the sam for by the French government

"This principle, however, A much further than the whole s French claims. It extended spoliations upon our commerce ence of the government, which collect. Who could say wh would end? In how many cas this character been settled by been collected in each case, a remained unpaid, after the rele: government? He had made effort to answer these inquir files of the state department w information, as he had found th be collected by an examination dual claim; and this would im the department of an unrease and would occupy more time t furnish the information for his sent occasion. He had, howev by the Secretary of State with lowed by the commissioners, tl and the rate of pay upon the recent cases, the Florida treat with Denmark. In the form payment was ninety-one and centum upon the principal, whi was but thirty-one and one eig Assume that these two cases all and minimum of all the cases have been given for partial he begged the Senate to re amounts unpaid which might be national treasury, if the princil mitted that a failure to collect of

That in his assumption the this sort must go to the whol claims, he only took the groun by the friends of this bill, he w government, but the ed these obligations respects, mutual, ro the fallacy of the arates had obtained to ion for the release of release of itself from utterly and entirely

Was not the release ne side the release of was not the one reration for the other? id, with any justice, at the expense of the to reasonable ground her from the acts of negotiators. When pon our obligations as s, and as to the guarthey fixed the same reciprocal obligations former discharged our e second article of the act discharged the cor-French government. sid, must end all preeration for these claims ates from this source. ere mutual, reciprocal, tive releases were mu-en, necessarily brought with which he started his argument, that, if a liable to pay these must rest upon the by the government, its instance, extraordismoney. The idea of a valuable considerarmment had been exwast of be claimed on ollect the money, upon ial, and simultaneous.

ly drawn from the act

tual releases to benefit

What had the govet the rights of these gotiated from 1793 to .nd zeal and talent alie history of diplomacy. ninister after minister, ons, extraordinary miseral individuals. Beit had equipped fleets nillions in warlike preit forth its citizens to ce the payment of the to be told, that our had created a liability oney? That the same taxed to pay the exegotiations, and of this to be further taxed to as we had failed to col ect? He could never consent to such a deduction from such premises.

"But, Mr. President, said Mr. W., there is another view of this subject, placed upon this basis, which renders this bill of trifling importance in the comparison. If the failure to collect these claims has created the liability to pay them, that liability goes to the extent of the claims proved, and the interest upon them, not to a partial, and perhaps trifling, dividend. Who, then, would undertake to say what amount of claims might not be proved during the state of things he had described, from the breaking out of the war between France and England, in 1793, to the execution of the treaty, in 1800? For a great portion of the period, the municipal regulations of France required the captured cargoes to be not confiscated, but paid for at the market value at the port to which the vessel was destined. Still the capture would be proved, the value of the cargo ascertained, before the commission which the bill proposes to establish; and who would adduce the proof that the same cargo was paid for by the French government ?

"This principle, however, Mr. W. said, went much further than the whole subject of the old French claims. It extended to all claims for spoliations upon our commerce, since the existence of the government, which we had failed to collect. Who could say where the liability would end? In how many cases had claims of this character been settled by treaty, what had been collected in each case, and what amount remained unpaid, after the release of the foreign government? He had made an unsuccessful effort to answer these inquiries, so far as the files of the state department would furnish the information, as he had found that it could only be collected by an examination of each individual claim; and this would impose a labor upon the department of an unreasonable character. and would occupy more time than remained to furnish the information for his use upon the present occasion. He had, however, been favored by the Secretary of State with the amounts allowed by the commissioners, the amounts paid, and the rate of pay upon the principal, in two recent cases, the Florida treaty, and the treaty with Denmark. In the former instance, the payment was ninety-one and two thirds per centum upon the principal, while in the latter it was but thirty-one and one eighth per centum. Assume that these two cases are the maximum and minimum of all the cases where releases have been given for partial payments; and he begged the Senate to reflect upon the amounts unpaid which might be called from the national treasury, if the principle were once admitted that a failure to collect creates a liability

"That in his assumption that a liability of this sort must go to the whole amount of the claims, he only took the ground contended for by the friends of this bill, he would trouble the Senate with another extract from the report of Mr. Livingston, from which he had before read In speaking of the amount which should be appropriated, Mr. Livingston says:

and on this point the committee have had some difficulty. Two modes of measuring the compensation suggested themselves:

"'1. The actual loss sustained by the petitioners.

"'2. The value of the advantages received, as the consideration, by the United States.

"The first is the one demanded by strict justice; and is the only one that satisfies the word used by the constitution, which requires just compensation, which cannot be said to have been made when any thing less than the full value is given. But there were difficulties which appeared insurmountable, to the adoption of this rule at the present day, arising from the multiplicity of the claims, the nature of the depredations which occasioned them, the loss of documents, either by the lapse of time, or the wilful destruction of them by the depredators The committee, therefore, could not undertake to provide a specific relief for each of the petitioners. But they have recommended the institution of a board, to enter into the investigation, and apportion a sum which the committee have recommended to be appropriated, pro rata, among the several claimants.

" 'The committee could not believe that the amount of compensation to the sufferers should be calculated by the advantages secured to the United States, because it was not, according to their ideas, the true measure. If the property of an individual be taken for public use, and the government misoalculate, and find that the object to which they have applied it has been injurious rather than beneficial, the value of the property is still due to the owner, who ought not to suffer for the false speculations which have been made. A turnpike or canal may be very unproductive; but the owner of the land which has been taken for its construction is not the less entitled to its value. On the other hand, he can have no manner of right to more than the value of his property, be the object to which it has been applied ever so beneficial." "Here, Mr. W. said, were two proposed grounds of estimating the extent of the liability of the government to the claimants; and that which graduated it by the value received by the government was distinctly rejected, while that making the amount of the claims the measure of liability, was as distinctly asserted to be the true and just standard. He hoped he had shown, to the satisfaction of the Senate, that the former rule of value received by the government would allow the claimants nothing at all, while he was compelled to say that, upon the broad principle that a failure to collect creates a liability to pay, he could not controvert the correctness of the conclusion that the liability must be commensurate with the claim. He could controvert, he thought, successfully, the principle, but he could not the measure of damages when the principle was conceded. He would here conclude his remarks upon the points he had noticed, by the earnest declaration that he believed the passage of this bill would open more widely the doors of the public treasury than any legislation of which he had any knowledge, or to which Congress had ever yielded its assent.

ANNO

"Mr. W. said he had a few observations to offer relative to the mode of legislation proposed, and to the details of the bill, and he would trouble the Senate no further.

"His first objection, under this head, was to the mode of legislation. If the government be liable to pay these claims, the claimants are citizens of the country, and Congress is as accessible to them as to other claimants who have demands against the treasury. Why were they not permitted, individually, to apply to Congress to establish their respective claims, as other claimants were bound to do, and to receive such relief, in each case, as Congress, in its wisdom, should see fit to grant? Why were these claims, more than others, grouped together, and attempted to be made a matter of national importance? Why was a commission to be established to ascertain their validity, a duty in ordinary cases discharged by Congress itself? Were the Senate sure that much of the importance given to these claims had not proceeded from this association, and from the formidable amount thus presented at one view? Would any gentleman be able to convince himself that, acting upon a single claim in this immense mass, he should have given it his favorable consideration? For his part, he considered the mode of legislation unusual and objectionable. His principal objections to the details were, that the second section of the bill prescribed the rules which should govern the commission in deciding upon the claims, among which 'the former treaties between the United States and France' were enumerated; and that the bill contained no declaration that the payments made under it were in full of the claims, or that the respective claimants should execute a release, as a condition of receiving their dividends.

"The first objection was predicated upon the fact that the bill covered the whole period from the making of the treaties of 1778, to that of the 30th September, 1800, and made the former treaties the rule of adjudication, when Congress on the 7th July, 1798, by a deliberate legislative act, declared those treaties void, and no longer binding upon the United States or their citizens. It is a fact abundantly proved by the documents, that a large portion of the claims now to be paid, arose within the period last alluded to; and that law in determining what were and what were not illegal captures, during the time that they were held to have no force, and when our citizens were authorized by law to go upon the high seas, regardless of their provisions, Mr. W. said, would seem to him to be an absurdity which the Senata would not legalize. He was fully aware that the first section of the bill purported to provide for 'valid claims to indemnity upon the French government, arising out of illegal captures, detentions, forcible seizures, illegal condemnations, and confiscations;' but it could not be overlooked that illegal captures, condemnations, and confiscations, must relate entirely to the law which was to govern the adjudication; and if that law was a void treaty which the claimants were not bound to observe, and did not observe, was it not more than possible that a capture, condemnation, or confiscation, might, by compulsion, be adjudged illegal under the rule fixed by the bill, while that same capture, condemnation, or confiscation, was strictly legal under the laws which governed the commerce of the claimant when the capture was made? He must say that it appeared clear to his mind that the rule of adjudication upon the validity of claims of this description, should, in all cases, be the same rule which governed the commerce out of which the claims have arisen.

"His second objection, Mr. W. said, was made more as a wish that a record of the intentions of the present Congress should be preserved upon the face of the bill, than from any idea that the provision suggested would afford the least protection to the public treasury. Every day's legislation showed the futility of the insertion in an act of Congress of a declaration that the appropriation made should be in full of a claim; and in this, as in other like cases, should this bill pass, he did not expect that it would be in practice, any thing more than an instalment upon the claims which would be sustained before the commission. The files of the state department would contain the record evidence of the balance, with the admission of the government, in the passage of this bill, that an equal liability remained to pay that balance, whatever it might be. Even a release from the respective claimants he should consider as likely to have no other effect than to change their future applications from a demand of legal right, which they now assume to have, to one of equity and favor; and he was yet to see that the latter would not be as successful as the former. He must give his vote against the bill, whether modified in that particular or not, and he should do so under the most full and clear conviction, that it was a prposition fraught with greater dangers to the public treasury, than any law which had ever treaties declared to be void should be made the vet received the assent of Congress."

CHAPTER (

FRENCH SPOLIATIONS-MR. W

"THE question, sir, involved sentially a judicial question. of public policy, but a questic a question between the gover titioners: and, as the governi in its own case, it would see of its members to examine th most scrupulous good faith, a citous desire to do justice.

"There is a propriety in co amination of these claims in t it was the Senate which, by the treaty of 1800, and its s tion of that treaty, and its declaration of the French gove released the claims as agains ever cut off the petitioners fro dress from that quarter. Th against our own government, tion in these acts of the Se may certainly be expected th consider the effects of its ov private rights and private in candor and justice which below

"It ought not to be objec tioners, that their claim is ol now reviving any thing whi been abandoned. There has b is not reasonably accounted for which the claimants say their for these captures and confisca was concluded in 1800. The plied to Congress for indemni by the report made in 1802 Representatives, by a commit tinguished member from Virg

[Mr. Giles], was chairman. "In 1807, on the petition of and others, citizens of Charle rolina, a committee of the Ho tives, of which Mr. Marion, chairman, made a report, e committee was of opinion the of the United States was be the claimants. But at this ti the European powers at war l ingly embarrassed; our go itself compelled to withdraw the ocean; and it was not u clusion of the war of 1812, an pacification of Europe, that a s occurred of presenting the su serious consideration of Con time the petitioners have beer us, and the period has at len for a final decision of their ca were and what were g the time that they and when our citizens go upon the high seas ns, Mr. W. said, would rdity which the Senata was fully aware that I purported to provide nnity upon the French f illegal captures, deillegal condemnations. t could not be overes, condemnations, and e entirely to the law adjudication; and if y which the claimants e, and did not observe. ossible that a capture. ation, might, by comal under the rule fixed ne capture, condemnastrictly legal under the commerce of the claimmade? He must say his mind that the rule alidity of claims of this cases, be the same rule nerce out of which the

Mr. W. said, was made ecord of the intentions s should be preserved than from any idea that would afford the least treasury. Every day's utility of the insertion a declaration that the ld be in full of a claim: like cases, should this pect that it would be, ore than an instalment ould be sustained before les of the state departrecord evidence of the ion of the government, I, that an equal liability lance, whatever it might the respective claimants ikely to have no other heir future applications right, which they now of equity and favor; and he latter would not be ner. He must give his hether modified in that should do so under the iction, that it was a prigreater dangers to the ny law which had ever of Congress."

CHAPTER CXIX.

FRENCH SPOLIATIONS-MR. WEBSTER'S SPEECH.

"The question, sir, involved in this case, is essentially a judicial question. It is not a question of public policy, but a question of private right; a question between the government and the petitioners: and, as the government is to be judge in its own case, it would seem to be the duty of its members to examine the subject with the most scrupulous good faith, and the most solicitous desire to do justice.

"There is a propriety in commencing the examination of these claims in the Senate, because it was the Senate which, by its amendment of the treaty of 1800, and its subsequent ratification of that treaty, and its recognition of the declaration of the French government, effectually released the claims as against France, and for ever cut off the petitioners from all hopes of revers from that quarter. The claims, as claims against our own government, have their foundation in these acts of the Senate itself; and it may certainly be expected that the Senate' will consider the effects of its own proceedings, on private rights and private interests, with that candor and justice which belong to its high char-

"It ought not to be objected to these petitioners, that their claim is old, or that they are now reviving any thing which has heretofore been abandoned. There has been no delay which is not reasonably accounted for. The treaty by which the claimants say their claims on France for these captures and confiscations were released was concluded in 1800. They immediately applied to Congress for indemnity, as will be seen by the report made in 1802, in the House of Representatives, by a committee of which a distinguished member from Virginia, not now living

[Mr. Giles], was chairman. "In 1807, on the petition of sundry merchants and others, citizens of Charleston, in South Carolina, a committee of the House of Representatives, of which Mr. Marion, of that State, was chairman, made a report, declaring that the committee was of opinion that the government of the United States was bound to indemnify the claimants. But at this time our affairs with the European powers at war had become exceedingly embarrassed; our government had felt itself compelled to withdraw our commerce from the ocean; and it was not until after the conclusion of the war of 1812, and after the general pacification of Europe, that a suitable opportunity occurred of presenting the subject again to the serious consideration of Congress. From that time the petitioners have been constantly before us, and the period has at length arrived proper for a final decision of their case.

"Another objection, sir, has been urged against these claims, well calculated to diminish the favor with which they might otherwise be received, and which is without any substantial foundation in fact. It is, that a great portion of them has been bought up, as a matter of speculation, and it is now holden by these purchasers. It has even been said, I think, on the floor of the Senate, that nine tenths, or ninety hundredths, of all the claims are owned by speculators.

"Such unfounded statements are not only wholly unjust towards these petitioners themselves, but they do great mischief to other interests. I have observed that a French gentleman of distinction, formerly a resident in this country, is represented in the public newspapers as having declined the offer of a seat in the French administration, on the ground that he could not support the American treaty; and he could not support the treaty because he had learned, or heard, while in America, that the claims were no longer the property of the original sufferers, but had passed into unworthy hands. If any such thing has been learned in the United States, it has been learned from sources entirely incorrect. The general fact is not so; and this prejudice, thus operating on a great national interest -an interest in regard to which we are in danger of being seriously embroiled with a foreign statewas created, doubtless, by the same incorrect and unfounded assertions which have been made relative to this other class of claims.

"In regard to both classes, and to all classes of claims of American citizens on foreign governments, the statement is at variance with the facts. Those who make it have no proof of it. On the contrary, incontrovertible evidence exists of the truth of the very reverse of this statement. The claims against France, since 1800, are now in the course of adjudication. They are 1, or very nearly all, presented to the proper t, bunal. Proofs accompany them, and the rules of the tribunal require that, in each case, the true ownership should be fully and exactly set out, on oath; and be proved by the papers, vouchers, and other evidence. Now, sir, if any man is acquainted, or will make himself acquainted, with the proceedings of this tribunal, so far as to see who are the parties claiming the indemnity, he will see the absolute and enormous error of those who represent these claims to be owned, in great part, by speculators.

"The truth is, sir, that these claims, as well those since 1800 as before, are owned and possessed by the original sufferers, with such changes only as happen in regard to all other property. The original owner of ship and cargo; his representative, where such owner is dead; underwriters who have paid losses on account of captures and confiscations; and creditors of insolvents and bankrupts who were interested in the claims—these are the descriptions of persons who, in all these cases, own vastly the larger portion of the claims. This is true of the claims on Spain, as is most manifest from the proceedings of the commissioners under the Spanish treaty. It is true of the claims on France arising since 1800, as is equally manifest by the proceedings of the commissioners now sitting; and it is equally true of the claims which are the subject of this discussion, and provided for in this bill. In some instances claims have been assigned from one to another, in the settlement of family affairs. They have been transferred, in other instances, to secure or to pay debts; they have been transferred, sometimes, in the settlement of insurance accounts; and it is probable there are a few cases in which the necessities of the holders have compelled them to sell them. But nothing can be further from the truth than that they have been the general subjects of purchase and sale, and that they are now holden mainly by purchasers from the original owners. They have been compared to the unfunded debt. But that consisted in scrip, of fixed amount, and which passed from hand to hand by delivery. These claims cannot so pass from hand to hand. In each case, not only the value but the amount is uncertain. Whether there be any claim, is in each case a matter for investigation and proof; and so is the amount, when the justice of the claim itself is established. These circumstances are of themselves quite sufficient to prevent the easy and frequent transfer of the claims from hand to hand. They would lead us to expect that to happen which actually has happened; and that is, that the claims remain with their original owners, and their legal heirs and representatives, with such exceptions as I have already mentioned. As to the portion of the claims now owned by underwriters, it can hardly be necessary to say that they stand on the same equity and justice as if possessed and presented by the owners of ships and goods. There i no more universal maxim of law and justice. throughout the civilized and commercial world, than that an underwriter, who has paid a loss on ships or merchandise to the owner, is entitled to whatever may be received from the property. His right accrues by the very act of payment; and if the property, or its proceeds, be afterwards recovered, in whole or in part, whether the recovery be from the sea, from captors, or from the justice of foreign states, such recovery is for the benefit of the underwriter. Any attempt, therefore, to prejudice these claims, on the ground that many of them belong to insurance companies, or other underwriters, is at war with the first principles of justice.

"A short, but accurate, general view of the history and character of these claims is presented in the report of the Secretary of State, on the 20th of May, 1826, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate. Allow me, sir, to read the paragraphs:

The Secretary can hardly suppose it to have been the intention of the resolution to re-

as to the degree of responsibility to the Ameri can sufferers from French spoliations, which the convention of 1800 extinguished, on the part of France, or devolved on the United States, the Senate itself being most competent to decide that question. Under this impression, he hopes that he will have sufficiently conformed to the purposes of the Senate, by a brief statement, prepared in a hurried moment, of what he understands to be the question.

"The second article of the convention of 1800 was in the following words: "The ministers plenipotentiary of the two parties, not being able to agree, at present, respecting the treaty of alliance of the 6th of February, 1778 the treaty of amity and commerce of the same date, and the convention of the 14th of November, 1788, nor upon the indemnities mutually due or claimed, the parties will negotiate further on these subjects, at a convenient time; and until they may have agreed upon these points, the said treaties and convention shall have no operation, and the relations of the two countries shall be regulated as follows."

". When that convention was laid before the Senate, it gave its consent and advice that it should be ratified, provided that the second article be expunged, and that the following article be added or inserted: "It is agreed that the present convention shall be in force for the term of eight years from the time of the exchange of the ratifications;" and it was accordingly so ratified by the President of the United States, on the 18th day of February, 1801. On the 31st of July of the same year, it was ratified by Bonaparte, First Consul of the French Republic, who incorporated in the instrument of his ratification the following clause as part of it: "The government of the United States, having added to its ratification that the convention should be in force for the space of eight years. and having omitted the second article, the government of the French Republic consents to accept, ratify, and confirm the above convenient with the addition, importing that the convenient tion shall be in force for the space of eight years, and with the retrenchment of the second arti-

which are the object of the said article. ". The French ratification being thus conditional, was, nevertheless, exchanged against that of the United States, at Paris, on the same 31st of July. The President of the United States considering it necessary again to submit the convention, in this state, to the Senate, on the 19th day of December, 1801, it was resolved by the Senate that they considered the said convention as fully ratified, and returned it to the President for the usual promulgation. It was accordingly promulgated, and thereafter regarded as a valid and binding compact. The two contracting parties thus agreed, by the retrenchment of the second article, mutually to renounce quire the expression of an argumentative opinion | the respective pretensions which were the ob-

cle: Provided, That, by this retrenchment, the two states renounce the respective pretensions

ject of that article. The p United States, to which allus arose out of the spoliations und authority, in contravention of treaties. Those of France spru of alliance of the 6th of Fel treaty of amity and commerce and the convention of the 14 1788. Whatever obligations or these sources, either party ha mand, were respectively waived and the consideration which in to renounce his pretensions, w ciation by the other party of What was the value of the ol demnities, so reciprocally renbe matter of speculation. Th indemnities due to the citizen States was very large; and, or the obligation was great (to French pretensions), under v States were placed, in the eleve treaty of alliance of the 6th of by which they were bound for from that time the then po Crown of France in America, which it might acquire by the peace with Great Britain; all having been, it is believed, con long after, the exchange of th the convention of September, 1 of Great Britain, from France.

"The fifth article of the am constitution provides: "Nor s perty be taken for public use, v pensation." If the indemnitie zens of the United States w French spoliations prior to the ber, 1800, have been appropriat United States from the fulfilm tion which they had contract payment of indemnities which to make to France, the Senate tent to determine how far such is a public use of private pro spirit of the constitution, and w considerations do not require tion to be made to the claima is also best able to estimate which existed of an ultimate France of the amount due for t if they had not been renoun which estimate, it will, no doubt to the painful consideration t urgent appeals have been, in v justice of France for satisfac wrongs committed upon prope zens of the United States, su period of the 30th of September of the convention of words: "The minise two parties, not beresent, respecting the 5th of February, 1778, commerce of the same of the 14th of Novemindemnities mutually s will negotiate further convenient time; and, ed upon these points, nvention shall have no ons of the two counfollows."

"Before the interference of with these claims, they constitu against the government of Fra not vague expectations of pos demnity for injuries received, be regarded as valuable, or be sibility to the Ameri spoliations, which the ruished, on the part of he United States, the competent to decide s impression, he hopes ntly conformed to the by a brief statement. ment, of what he union.

on was laid before the ent and advice that it ed that the second artit the following article It is agreed that the be in force for the term ime of the exchange of it was accordingly so of the United States, oruary, 1801. On the ie year, it was ratified sul of the French Rein the instrument of wing clause as part of the United States, havon that the convention space of eight years, second article, the gov-Republic consents to n the above convention, rting that the conventhe space of eight years, ent of the second artithis retrenchment, the respective pretensions tion being thus condiexchanged against that Paris, on the same 31st t of the United States r again to submit the to the Senate, on the 801, it was resolved by sidered the said convenreturned it to the l'remulgation. It was acand thereafter regarded ompact. The two concreed, by the retrenchle, mutually to renounce ns which were the object of that article. The pretensions of the United States, to which allusion is thus made, arose out of the spoliations under color of French authority, in contravention of law and existing treaties. Those of France sprung from the treaty of alliance of the 6th of February, 1778, the treaty of amity and commerce of the same date, and the convention of the 14th of November. 1788. Whatever obligations or indemnities, from these sources, either party had a right to demand, were respectively waived and abandoned; and the consideration which induced one party to renounce his pretensions, was that of renunciation by the other party of his pretensions. What was the value of the obligations and indemnities, so reciprocally renounced, can only be matter of speculation. The amount of the indemnities due to the citizens of the United States was very large; and, on the other hand, the obligation was great (to specify no other French pretensions), under which the United States were placed, in the eleventh article of the treaty of alliance of the 6th of February, 1778. by which they were bound for ever to guarantee from that time the then possessions of the Crown of France in America, as well as those which it might acquire by the future treaty of peace with Great Britain; all these possessions having been, it is believed, conquered at, or not long after, the exchange of the ratifications of the convention of September, 1800, by the arms of Great Britain, from France.

the said article.'

"The fifth article of the amendments to the constitution provides: "Nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation." If the indemnities to which citizens of the United States were entitled for French spoliations prior to the 30th of September, 1800, have been appropriated to absolve the United States from the fulfilment of an obligation which they had contracted, or from the payment of indemnities which they were bound to make to France, the Senate is most competent to determine how far such an appropriation is a public use of private property within the spirit of the constitution, and whether equitable considerations do not require some compensation to be made to the claimants. The Senate is also best able to estimate the probability which existed of an ultimate recovery from France of the amount due for those indemnities, if they had not been renounced; in making which estimate, it will, no doubt, give just weight to the painful consideration that repeated and urgent appeals have been, in vain, made to the justice of France for satisfaction of flagrant wrongs committed upon property of other citizens of the United States, subsequent to the period of the 30th of September, 1800.

Before the interference of our government with these claims, they constituted just demands against the government of France. They were not vague expectations of possible future indemnity for injuries received, too uncertain to perty. They were just demands, and, as such, they were property. The courts of law took notice of them as property. They were capable of being devised, of being distributed among heirs and next of kin, and of being transferred and assigned, like other legal and just debts. A claim or demand for a ship unjustly seized and confiscated is property, as clearly as the ship itself. It may not be so valuable, or so certain; but it is as clear a right, and has been uniformly so regarded by the courts of law. The papers show that American citizens had claims against the French government for six hundred and fifteen vessels unlawfully seized and confiscated. If this were so, it is difficult to see how the government of the United States can release these claims for its own benefit, with any more propriety than it could have applied the money to its own use, if the French government had been ready to make compensation, in money, for the property thus illegally seized and confiscated; or how the government could appropriate to itself the just claims which the owners of these six hundred and fifteen vessels held against the wrong-doers, without making compensation, any more than it could appropriate to itself, without making compensation, six hundred and fifteen ships which had not been seized. I do not mean to say that the rate of compensation should be the same in both cases; I do not mean to say that a claim for a ship is of as much value as a ship; but I mean to say that both the one and the other are property, and that government cannot, with justice, deprive a man of either, for its own benefit, without making a fair compensation.

"It will be perceived at once, sir, that these claims do not rest on the ground of any neglect or omission, on the part of the government of the United States, in demanding satisfaction from France. That is not the ground. The government of the United States, in that respect, performed its full duty. It remonstrated against these illegal seizures; it insisted on redress; it sent two special missions to France, charged expressly, among other duties, with the duty of demanding indemnity. But France had her subjects of complaint, also, against the government of the United States, which she pressed with equal earnestness and confidence, and which she would neither postpone nor relinquish, except on the condition that the United States would postpone or relinquish these claims. And to meet this condition, and to restore harmony between the two nations, the United States did agree, first to postpone, and afterwards to relinquish, these claims of its own citizens. In other words, the government of the United States bought off the claims of France against itself, by discharging claims of our own citizens against

"This, sir, is the ground on which these citizens think they have a claim for reasonable indemnity against their own government. And be regarded as valuable, or be esteemed pro- now, sir, before proceeding to the disputed part of the case, permit me to state what is ad-

"In the first place, then, it is universally admitted that these petitioners once had just claims against the government of France, on account of these illegal captures and condemna-

"In the next place, it is admitted that these claims no longer exist against France; that they have, in some way, been extinguished or released, as to her; and that she is for ever discharged from all duty of paying or satisfying them, in whole or in part.

"These two points being admitted, it is then necessary, in order to support the present bill, to maintain four propositions:

up to the time of the treaty of September, 1800, between France and the United States.

"2. That they were released, surrendered, or extinguished by that treaty, its amendment in gotiation ought to be the determination of the the Senate, and the manner of its final ratifica-

"3. That they were thus released, surrendered, or extinguished, for political and national considerations, for objects and purposes deemed important to the United States, but in which these claimants had no more interest than any other citizens.

"4. That the amount or measure of indemnity proposed by this bill is no more than a fair and reasonable compensation, so far as we can judge by what has been done in similar cases.

"1. Were these subsisting claims against France up to the time of the treaty? It is a conclusive answer to this question, to say that gotiation, neither party suggested that these the government of the United States insisted that they did exist, up to the time of the treaty. and demanded indemnity for them, and that the French government fully admitted their existence, and acknowledged its obligation to make such indemnity.

"The negotiation, which terminated in the treaty, was opened by a direct proposition for indemnity, made by our ministers, the justice and propriety of which was immediately acceded to by the ministers of France.

"On the 7th of April, 1800, in their first letter to the ministers of France, Messrs. Ellsworth, Davie, and Murray, say: "Citizen ministers:—The undersigned, appreciating the value of time, and wishing by frankness to evince their sincerity, enter directly upon the great object of their mission-an object which they believe may be best obtained by avoiding to retrace minutely the too wellknown and too painful incidents which have rendered a negotiation necessary.

"'To satisfy the demands of justice, and render a reconciliation cordial and permanent, they propose an arrangement, such as shall be compatible with national honor and existing circumstances, to ascertain and discharge the equitable claims of the citizens of either nation upon the other, whether founded on contract, treaty, or that war had existed, yet we find that, on the

the law of nations. The way being thus prepared, the undersigned will be at liberty to stipp. late for that reciprocity and freedom of commercial intercourse between the two countries which must essentially contribute to their mutual advantage.

"'Should this general view of the subject be approved by the ministers plenipotentiary to whom it is addressed, the details, it is presumed may be easily adjusted, and that confidence restored which ought never to have been shaken.

"To this letter the French ministers immediately returned the following answer:

"'The ministers plenipotentiary of the French Republic have read attentively the proposition for a plan of negotiation which was communi-"1. That these claims subsisted against France cated to them by the envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary of the United States of America.

"'They think that the first object of the neregulations, and the steps to be followed for the estimation and indemnification of injuries for which either nation may make claim for itself, or for any of its citizens. And that the second object is to assure the execution of treaties of friendship and commerce made between the two nations, and the accomplishment of the views of reciprocal advantages which suggested

"It is certain, therefore, that the negotiation commenced in the recognition, by both parties, of the existence of individual claims, and of the justice of making satisfaction for them; and it is equally clear that, throughout the whole neclaims had already been either satisfied or extinguished; and it is indisputable that the treaty itself, in the second article, expressly admitted their existence, and solemly recognized the duty of providing for them at some future period.

It will be observed, sir, that the French negotiators, in their first letter, while they admit the justice of providing indemnity for individual claims, bring forward, also, claims arising under treaties; taking care, thus early, to advance the pretensions of France on account of alleged vielations by the United States of the treaties of 1778. On that part of the case, I shall say something hereafter; but I use this first letter of the French ministers at present only to show that, from the first, the French governmentalmitted its obligation to indemnify individuals who had suffered wrongs and injuries.

"The honorable member from New-York Mr. Wright ] contends, sir, that, at the time of concluding the treaty, these claims had ceased to exist. He says that a war had taken place be tween the United States and France, and by the war the claims had become extinguished. Idifer from the honorable member, both as to the fact of war, and as to the consequences to be deduced from it, in this case, even if public war had existed. If we admit, for argument sake, restoration of amity, both par tice of these claims and their ence, and the party against w ferred acknowledges her oblig es her willingness to pay the of war can never extinguish deed, claims for indemnity ground of a war, and peace 1 cluded without obtaining any of the right, such a peace I to be a relinquishment of the ri that the question has been pu of the sword, and decided. waged to enforce a disputed cl ried on till the adverse party and agree to provide for its I be strange, indeed, to hold the was extinguished by the ver compelled its express recognit ever we call that state of this between the United States and to 1800, it is evident that neit! ed or supposed that it had bethings as had extinguished inc indemnity for illegal seizures a "The honorable member, s point, must prove that the U to war to vindicate these claims that war unsuccessfully; and therefore glad to make peace, payment of the claims, or any justice. I am happy, sir, to opinion, facts do not authoriz to be made up against the Unite it is clear, sir, that whatever existed between the United S it did not amount, at any time lic war. It is certain that the of the two countries were muc certain that the United States resistance to French captures, of French vessels of war found coast; but it is certain, also, no was no declaration of war, o that the United States, under a tions, did never authorize ger French commerce. At the ve the gentleman says war raged ted States and France, French our courts, in their own names tion for property seized by A and obtained decrees of restitut as citizens of France and obt. in our courts, as citizens of have been a singular war, sir, i ceedings could take place. UI the whole matter, Mr. Presider I think, that every thing don States was defensive. No pa retaliatory. The United States tice into their own hands.

The strongest measure, per Congress, was the act of Ma honorable member from Newto this act, and chiefly relies

e way being thus preill be at liberty to stipu. y and freedom of comween the two countries contribute to their mu-view of the subject be ters plenipotentiary to e details, it is presumed and that confidence reer to have been shaken. French ministers immeowing answer potentiary of the French entively the proposition on which was communivoys extraordinary and y of the United States

ne first object of the nehe determination of the eps to be followed for emnification of injuries may make claim for itcitizens. And that the re the execution of treaommerce made between e accomplishment of the antages which suggested ore, that the negotiation gnition, by both parties. idual claims, and of the faction for them; and it roughout the whole ney suggested that these n either satisfied or exdisputable that the treaty ticle, expressly admitted emly recognized the duty t some future period.

sir, that the French neletter, while they admit indemnity for individual ilso, claims arising under hus early, to advance the n account of alleged vio-States of the treaties of of the case, I shall say ut I use this first letter at present only to show French government alto indemnify individuals es and injuries.

iber from New-York Mr. that, at the time of conese claims had ceased to war had taken place bes and France, and by the ome extinguished. Idifmember, both as to the he consequences to be decase, even if public war dmit, for argument sake, yet we find that, on the restoration of amity, both parties admit the justice of these claims and their continued existence, and the party against which they are preferred acknowledges her obligation, and expresses her willingness to pay them. The mere fact of war can never extinguish any claim. If, indeed, claims for indemnity be the professed ground of a war, and peace be afterwards concluded without obtaining any acknowledgment of the right, such a peace may be construed to be a relinquishment of the right, on the ground that the question has been put to the arbitration of the sword, and decided. But, if a war be waged to enforce a disputed claim, and it be carried on till the adverse party admit the claim, and agree to provide for its payment, it would be strange, indeed, to hold that the claim itself was extinguished by the very war which had compelled its express recognition. Now, whatever we call that state of things which existed between the United States and France from 1798 to 1800, it is evident that neither party contended or supposed that it had been such a state of things as had extinguished individual claims for indemnity for illegal seizures and confiscations. "The honorable member, sir, to sustain his point, must prove that the United States went to war to vindicate these claims; that they waged that war unsuccessfully; and that they were therefore glad to make peace, without obtaining payment of the claims, or any admission of their justice. I am happy, sir, to say that, in my opinion, facts do not authorize any such record to be made up against the United States. I think it is clear, sir, that whatever misunderstanding existed between the United States and France, it did not amount, at any time, to open and public war. It is certain that the amicable relations of the two countries were much disturbed; it is certain that the United States authorized armed resistance to French captures, and the captures of French vessels of war found hovering on our coast; but it is certain, also, not only that there was no declaration of war, on either side, but that the United States, under all their provocations, did never authorize general reprisals on French commerce. At the very moment when the gentleman says war raged between the United States and France, French citizens came into our courts, in their own names, claimed restitution for property seized by American cruisers, and obtained decrees of restitution. They claimed as citizens of France and obtained restoration, in our courts, as citizens of France. It must have been a singular war, sir, in which such proceedings could take place. Upon a fair view of the whole matter, Mr. President, it will be found. I think, that every thing done by the United States was defensive. No part of it was ever retaliatory. The United States do not take justice into their own hands.

"The strongest measure, perhaps, adopted by Congress, was the act of May 28, 1798. The honorable member from New-York has referred the existence, or the commencement, of actual war. But does it prove either the one or the other?

"It is not an act declaring war; it is not an act authorizing reprisals; it is not an act which, in any way, acknowledges the actual existence of war. Its whole implication and import is the other way. Its title is, 'An act more effectually to protect the commerce and coasts of the United States.'

"This is its preamble:

"Whereas armed vessels, sailing under authority, or pretence of authority, from the Republic of France, have committed depredations on the commerce of the United States, and have recently captured the vessels and property of citizens thereof, on and near the coasts, in violation of the law of nations, and treaties between the United States and the French nation: there-

"And then follows its only section, in these words:

"'Sec. 1. Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, and he is hereby authorized, to instruct and direct the commanders of the armed vessels belonging to the United States, to seize, take, and bring into any port of the United States, to be proceeded against according to the laws of nations, any such armed vessel which shall have committed, or which shall be found hovering on the coasts of the United States for the purpose of committing, depredations on the vessels belonging to citizens thereof; and also retake any ship or vessel, of any citizen or citizens of the United States, which may have been captured by any such armed vessel.'

"This act, it is true, authorized the use of force, under certain circumstances, and for certain objects, against French vessels. But there may be acts of authorized force, there may be assults, there may be battles, there may be captures of ships and imprisonment of persons, and yet no general war. Cases of this kind may occur under that practice of retortion which is justified, when adopted for just cause, by the laws and usages of nations, and which all the writers distinguish from general war.

"The first provision in this law is purely preventive and defensive; and the other hardly goes beyond it. Armed vessels hovering on our coast, and capturing our vessels, under authority, or pretence of authority, from a foreign state, might be captured and brought in, and vessels already seized by them retaken. limited to armed vessels; but why was this, if general war existed? Why was not the naval power of the country let loose at once, if there were war, against the commerce of the enemy? The cruisers of France were preying on our commerce; if there was war, why were we restrained from general reprisals on her commerce? This restaining of the operation of our naval marine to armed vessels of France, and to such to this act, and chiefly relies upon it, to prove of them only as should be found howering on our coast, for the purpose of committing depredations on our commerce, instead of proving a state of war, proves, I think, irresistibly, that a state of general war did not exist. But even if this act of Congress left the matter doubtful, other acts passed at and near the same time demonstrate the understanding of Congress to have been, that although the relations between the two countries were greatly disturbed, yet that war did not exist. On the same day (May 28, 1798) in which this act passed, on which the member from New-York lays so much stress, as proving the actual existence of war with France, Congress passed another act, entitled 'An act authorizing the President of the United States to raise a provisional army; and the first section declared that the President should be authorized, 'in the event of a declaration of war against the United States, or of actual invasion of their territory by a foreign power, or of imminent danger of such invasion, to cause to be enlisted,' &c., ten thousand men.

ANN

"On the 16th of July following, Congress passed the law for augmenting the army, the second section of which authorized the President to raise twelve additional regiments of infantry, and six troops of light dragoons, 'to be enlisted for and during the continuance of the existing differences between the United States and the French Republic, unless sooner discharged,' &c.

"The following spring, by the act of the 2d of March, 1799, entitled 'An act giving eventual authority to the President of the United States to augment the army,' Congress provided that it should be lawful for the President of the United States, in case war should break out between the United States and a foreign European power, &c., to raise twenty-four regiments of infantry, &c. And in the act for better organizing the army, passed the next day, Congress repeats the declaration, contained in a former act, that certain provisions shall not take effect unless war shall break out between the United States and some European prince, potentate, or state.

"On the 20th of February, 1800, an act was passed to suspend the act for augmenting the army; and this last act declared that further enlistments should be suspended until the further order of Congress, unless in the recess of Congress, and during the continuance of the existing differences between the United States and the French Republic, war should break out between the United States and the French Republic, or imminent danger of an invasion of their territory by the said Republic should be discovered.

"On the 14th of May, 1800, four months before the conclusion of the treaty, Congress passed an act authorizing the suspension of military appointments, and the discharge of troops under the provisions of the previous laws. No commentary is necessary, sir, on the texts of these statutes, to show that Congress never recognized the existence of war between the United States and France. They apprehended war might break out; and they made suitable provision for that exigency, should it occur; but it is quite impossible to reconcile the express and so often repeated declarations of these statutes commencing in 1798, running through 1799, and ending in 1800, with the actual existence of war between the two countries at any period within those years.

"The honorable member's second principal source of argument, to make out the fact of a state of war, is the several non-intercourse acts, And here again it seems to me an exactly opposite inference is the true one. In 1798, 1799 and 1800, acts of Congress were passed suspending the commercial intercourse between the United States, each for one year. Did any gov. ernment ever pass a law of temporary non-intercourse with a public enemy? Such a law would be little less than an absurdity. Waritself effectually creates non-intercourse. It repders all trade with the enemy illegal, and, of course, subjects all vessels found so engaged, with their cargoes, to capture and condemnation as enemy's property. The first of these laws was passed June 13, 1798, the last, February 27, 1800. Will the honorable member from New-York tell us when the war commenced? When did it break out? When did those 'differences' of which the acts of Congress speak, assume a character of general hostility? Was there a state of war on the 13th of June, 1798, when Congress passed the first non-intercourse act; and did Congress, in a state of public war, limit non-intercourse with the enemy to one year? Or was there a state of peace in June, 1798? and, if so, I ask again, at what time after that period, and before September, 1800, did the war break out? Difficulties of no small magnitude surround the gentleman. I think, whatever course he takes through these statutes, while he attempts to prove from them a state of war. The truth is, they prove, incontestably, a state of peace; a state of endandgered, disturbed, agitated peace; but still a state of peace. Finding themselves in a state of great misunderstanding and contention with France, and seeing our commerce a daily prey to the rapacity of her cruisers, the United States preferred non-intercourse to war. This is the ground of the non-intercourse acts. Apprehending, nevertheless, that war might break out, Congress made prudent provision for it by augmenting the military force of the coun-This is the ground of the laws for raising a provisional army. The entire provisions of all these laws necessarily suppose an existing state of peace; but they imply also an apprehension that war might commence. For a state of actual war they were all unsuited; and some of them would have been, in such a state, preposterous and absurd. To a state of present peace, but disturbed, interrupted, and likely to terminate in open hostilities, they were all perfectly well adapted. And as many of these acts in express terms, speak of war as not actually exgress never, at any time, reg things existing between the France as being a state of w. "As little did the execu regard it, as must be apparer tions given to our ministers regard it, as must be apparer tions given to our ministers was sent to France. Those recurred to the numerous acted on the commerce of the the refusal of indemnity by France, proceed to say: 'T French Republic would wel immediate declaration of wan United States; but, desiro peace, and still willing to le of reconciliation with France contented themselves with p fence, and measures calculat commerce.'

"It is equally clear, on th neither the French governme ministers acted on the support existed between the two nat for this reason that they held still binding. Within a mor signature of the treaty, the tentiary of the French Repui Messrs. Ellsworth, Davie, and first place, they will insist already laid down in their that the treaties which unit United States are not broke could not have broken them; of misunderstanding which ex between France and the Uni act of some agents rather tl the respective governments, ha of war, at least on the side of "Finally, sir, the treaty i

It is not called a treaty of I provide for putting an end to h not one word of any preceding say that 'differences' have a two states, and that they h spectively, appointed their ple given them full powers to treaterness,' and to terminate the

"But the second article of t tiated and agreed on by the governments, is, of itself, a co of the whole argument which this bill, on the ground that th extinguished by war, since tha and expressly acknowledges tl claims, and contains a solemi two governments, not being them at present, will negotiate at convenient time thereafte look, then, to the decisions courts, to the acts of Congres tions of the American execu to the language of our ministe tions of the French governmen ministers, or to the unequivoc made suitable provision, uld it occur; but it is made the express and so tions of these statutes, anning through 1799, and a actual existence of war ries at any period within mber's second principal make out the fact of a eral non-intercourse acts. s to me an exactly opporue one. In 1798, 1799 ess were passed suspend. ntercourse between the one year. Did any gov. aw of temporary non-in-ic enemy? Such a law n an absurdity. Waritnon-intercourse. It renne enemy illegal, and, of els found so engaged, with re and condemnation as The first of these laws '98, the last, February 27, able member from Newwar commenced? When ien did those 'differences,' Congress speak, assume a hostility? Was there a 3th of June, 1798, when irst non-intercourse act; state of public war, limit the enemy to one year? of peace in June, 1798? at what time after that ember, 1800, did the war es of no small magnitude 1. I think, whatever course se statutes, while he athem a state of war. The incontestably, a state of lgered, disturbed, agitated of peace. Finding themeat misunderstanding and and seeing our commerce acity of her cruisers, the 1 non-intercourse to war. the non-intercourse acts. heless, that war might ade prudent provision for nilitary force of the counnd of the laws for raising 'he entire provisions of all suppose an existing state ply also an apprehension nce. For a state of actual nited; and some of them och a state, preposterous state of present peace, oted, and likely to termis, they were all perfectly s many of these acts m f war as not actually exr liable to break out it is

Jear, beyond all reasonable question, that Congress never, at any time, regarded the state of things existing between the United States and France as being a state of war.

"As little did the executive government so regard it, as must be apparent from the instructions given to our ministers, when the mission was sent to France. Those instructions, having recurred to the numerous acts of wrong committed on the commerce of the United States, and the refusal of indemnity by the government of France, proceed to say: 'This conduct of the French Republic would well have justified an immediate declaration of war on the part of the United States; but, desirous of maintaining peace, and still willing to leave open the door of reconciliation with France, the United States contented themselves with preparations for defence, and measures calculated to protect their commerce.

"It is equally clear, on the other hand, that neither the French government nor the French ministers acted on the supposition that war had existed between the two nations. And it was for this reason that they held the treaties of 1778 still binding. Within a month or two of the signature of the treaty, the ministers plenipotentiary of the French Republic write thus to Messrs. Ellsworth, Davie, and Murray: 'In the first place, they will insist upon the principle already laid down in their former note, viz.: that the treaties which united France and the United States are not broken; that even war could not have broken them; but that the state of misunderstanding which existed for some time between France and the United States, by the act of some agents rather than by the will of the respective governments, has not been a state of war, at least on the side of France.'

"Finally, sir, the treaty itself, what is it? It is not called a treaty of peace; it does not provide for putting an end to hostilities. It says not one word of any preceding war; but it does say that 'differences' have arisen between the two states, and that they have, therefore, respectively, appointed their plenipotentiaries, and given them full powers to treat upon those 'differences,' and to terminate the same.

"But the second article of the treaty, as negotiated and agreed on by the ministers of both governments, is, of itself, a complete refutation of the whole argument which is urged against this bill, on the ground that the claims had been extinguished by war, since that article distinctly and expressly acknowledges the existence of the claims, and contains a solemn pledge that the two governments, not being able to agree on them at present, will negotiate further on them, at convenient time thereafter. Whether we look, then, to the decisions of the American courts, to the acts of Congress, to the instructions of the American executive government, to the language of our ministers, to the declarations of the French government and the French treaty itself, as originally agreed to, we meet irresistible proof of the truth of the declaration, that the state of misunderstanding which had existed between the two countries was not war.

"If the treaty had remained as the ministers on both sides agreed upon it, the claimants, though their indemnity was postponed, would have had no just claim on their own government. But the treaty did not remain in this states This second article was stricken out by the Senate; and, in order to see the obvious motive of the Senate in thus striking out the second article, allow me to read the whole article. It is in these words:

"The ministers plenipotentiary of the two parties not being able to agree, at present, respecting the treaty of alliance of the 6th of February, 1778, the treaty of amity and commerce of the same date, and the convention of the 14th of November, 1788, nor upon the indemnities mutually due or claimed, the parties will negotiate further on these subjects at a convenient time; and until they may have agreed upon these points, the said treaties and convention shall have no operation, and the relations of the two countries shall be regulated as follows."

"The article thus stipulating to make the claims of France, under the old treaties, matter of further negotiation, in order to get rid of such negotiation, and the whole subject, the Senate struck out the entire article, and ratified the treaty in this corrected form. France ratified the treaty, as thus amended, with the further declaration that, by thus retrenching the second article, the two hations renounce the respective pretensions which were the object of the article. In this declaration of the French government, the Senate afterwards acquiesced; so that the government of France, by this retrenchment, agreed to renounce her claims under the treaties of 1778, and the United States, in like manner, renounced the claims of their citizens for indemnities due to them.

"And this proves, sir, the second proposition which I stated at the commencement of my remarks, viz.: that these claims were released, relinquished, or extinguished, by the amendment of the treaty, and its ratification as amended. It is only necessary to add, on this point, that these claims for captures before 1800 would have been good claims under the late treaty with France, and would have come in for a dividend in the fund provided by that treaty, if they had not been released by the treaty of 1800. And they are now excluded from all participation in the benefit of the late treaty, because of such release or extinguishment by that of 1800.

100k, then, to the decisions of the American courts, to the acts of Congress, to the instructions of the American executive government, to the language of our ministers, to the declarations of the French government and the French sunisters, or to the unequivocal language of the

ANNO

that the claims and complaints of France against the government of the United States were well founded. It is certain that she put forth such claims and complaints, and insisted on them to the end. It is certain that, by the treaty of alliance of 1778, the United States did guaranty to France her West India possessions. It is certain that, by the treaty of commerce of the same adate, the United States stipulated that French vessels of war might bring their prizes into the ports of the United States, and that the enemies of France should not enjoy that privilege; and it is certain that France contended that the United States had plainly violated this article, as well by their subsequent treaty with England as by other acts of the government. For the violation of these treaties she claimed indemnity from the government of the United Without admitting the justice of these pretensions, the government of the United States found them extremely embarrassing, and they authorized our ministers in France to buy them off by money.

"For the purpose of showing the justice of the present bill, it is not necessary to insist that France was right in these pretensions. Right or wrong, the United States were anxious to get rid of the embarrassments which they occasioned. They were willing to compromise the matter. The existing state of things, then, was exactly this:

"France admitted that citizens of the United States had just claims against her; but she insisted that she, on the other hand, had just claims against the government of the United States.

"She would not satisfy our citizens, till our government agreed to satisfy her. Finally, a treaty is ratified, by which the claims on both sides are renounced.

"The only question is, whether the relinquishment of these individual claims was the price which the United States paid for the relinquishment, by France, of her claims against our government? And who can doubt it? Look to the negotiation; the claims on both sides were discussed together. Look to the second article of the treaty, as originally agreed to; the claims on both sides are there reserved together. And look to the Senate's amendment, and to the subsequent declaration of the French government, acquiesced in by the Senate; and there the claims on both sides are renounced together. What stronger proof could there be of mutuality of consideration? Sir, allow me to put this direct question to the honorable member from New-York. If the United States did not agree to renounce these claims, in consideration that France would renounce hers, what was the reason why they surrendered thus the claims of their own citizens? Did they do it without any consideration at all? Was the surrender wholly gratuitous? Did they thus solemnly renounce claims for indemnity, so just, so long | zens, it will be necessary to provide for the ap-

"Now, sir, I do not feel called on to make out | insisted on by themselves, the object of two special missions, the subjects of so much previous controversy, and at one time so near being the cause of open war—did the government surrender and renounce them gratuitously, or for nothing? Had it no reasonable motive in the relinquishment? Sir, it is impossible to mahtain any such ground.

And, on the other hand, let me ask, was it for nothing that France relinquished, what she had so long insisted on, the obligation of the United States to fulfil the treaties of 1778? For the extinguishment of this obligation we had already offered her a large sum of money, which she had declined. Was she now willing to give it up without any equivalent?

"Sir, the whole history of the negotiation is full of proof that the individual claims of our citizens, and the government claims of France against the United States, constituted the respective demands of the two parties. They were brought forward together, discussed together, insisted on together. The French ministers would never consent to disconnect them. While they admitted, in the fullest manner, the claims on our side, they maintained, with persesevering resolution, the claims on the side of France. It would fatigue the Senate were I to go through the whole correspondence, and show, as I could easily do, that, in every stage of the negotiation, these two subjects were kept together. I will only refer to some of the mere prominent and decisive parts.

"In the first place, the general instructions which our ministers received from our own government, when they undertook the mission directed them to insist on the claims of American citizens against France, to propose a joint board of commissioners to state those claims, and to agree to refer the claims of France for infringments of the treaty of commerce to the same board. I will read, sir, so much of the instructions as comprehend these points:

"'1. At the opening of the negotiation you will inform the French ministers that the Unted States expect from France, as an indispensable condition of the treaty, a stipulation to make to the citizens of the United States fall compensation for all losses and damages which they shall have sustained by reason of irregular or illegal captures or condemnations of their vessels and other property, under color of authority or commissions from the French Republic or its agents. And all captures and condemnations are deemed irregular or illegal when contrary to the law of nations, generally received and acknowledged in Europe, and to the stipulations in the treaty of amity and commerce of the 6th of February, 1778, fairly and ingenuously interpreted, while that treaty remained in force.'

"'2. If these preliminaries should be satisfactorily arranged, then, for the purpose of examining and adjusting all the claims of our citto that described in the sixth cles of the treaty of amity tween the United States and

"'As the French govern fore complained of infringem of amity and commerce, by or their citizens, all claims for occasioned to France or its submitted to the same boa damages they award will b United States, and deducte awarded to be paid by Franc

"Now, sir, suppose this bo stituted, and suppose that it against France, in behalf of c ted States, and had made av of the government of France ernment of the United State last awards had been deducte of the former, and the proper applied to discharge the pu the country, would any body citizens would be entitled to are they less entitled, becaus first liquidated and ascertai off, one against the other, agreed to be set off against ea tually relinquished in the lur

"Acting upon their instri seen that the American min tual offer to suspend the clai till France should be satisfie cal rights under the treaties July they made this proposi negotiators:

'Indemnities to be ascert in the manner proposed in ou ty, but not to be paid until shall have offered to France : ing free admission, in the por privateers and prizes of the o sion of their enemies.'

"This, it will be at once s offer to suspend the claims of till our government should b to France the obligation of t Was not this an offer to ma property for public purposes?

"On the 11th of August, potentiaries thus write to the United States:

"The propositions which ters have the honor to commu isters plenipotentiary of the reduced to this simple alterna

" Either the ancient treatic leges resulting from priority, of reciprocal indemnities;

"'Or a new treaty, assuring indemnity.'

"In other words, this offer knowledge or renew the obl treaties, which secure to us 1 ports which our enemies are I

Vol. I.—33

res, the object of two jects of so much preone time so near being id the government surem gratuitously, or for asonable motive in the is impossible to male-and, let me ask, was it relinquished, what she the obligation of the the treaties of 1778 of this obligation we a large sum of money, Was she now willing

y equivalent? ry of the negotiation is ndividual claims of our ment claims of France tes, constituted the rene two parties. They together, discussed toher. The French minsent to disconnect them. the fullest manner, the maintained, with perseclaims on the side of ue the Senate were I to rrespondence, and show, it, in every stage of the subjects were kept toer to some of the more parts.

the general instructions eived from our own gordertook the mission, din the claims of American to propose a joint board ate those claims, and to s of France for infringecommerce to the same , so much of the instruc-

ese points: g of the negotiation you ministers that the Una France, as an indispentreaty, a stipulation to f the United States full sses and damages which ied by reason of irregular condemnations of their perty, under color of aufrom the French Repubd all captures and con-1 irregular or illegal when of nations, generally reged in Europe, and to the eaty of amity and com-rebruary, 1778, fairly and ed, while that treaty reminaries should be satisen, for the purpose of exall the claims of our citiary to provide for the appointment of a board of commissioners, similar to that described in the sixth and seventh articles of the treaty of amity and commerce between the United States and Great Britain.'

"'As the French government have heretofore complained of infringements of the treaty of amity and commerce, by the United States or their citizens, all claims for injuries, thereby occasioned to France or its citizens, are to be submitted to the same board; and whatever damages they award will be allowed by the United States, and deducted from the sums awarded to be paid by France.'

"Now, sir, suppose this board had been constituted, and suppose that it had made awards against France, in behalf of citizens of the United States, and had made awards also in favor of the government of France against the government of the United States; and then these last awards had been deducted from the amount of the former, and the property of citizens thus applied to discharge the public obligations of the country, would any body doubt that such citizens would be entitled to indemnity? And are they less entitled, because, instead of being first liquidated and ascertained, and then set off, one against the other, they are finally agreed to be set off against each other, and mutually relinquished in the lump?

"Acting upon their instructions, it will be seen that the American ministers made an actual offer to suspend the claim for indemnities till France should be satisfied as to her political rights under the treaties. On the 15th of July they made this proposition to the French negotiators: 'Indemnities to be ascertained and secured in the manner proposed in our project of a treaty, but not to be paid until the United States shall have offered to France an article stipulating free admission, in the ports of each, for the privateers and prizes of the other, to the exclusion of their enemies.'

"This, it will be at once seen, was a direct offer to suspend the claims of our own citizens till our government should be willing to renew to France the obligation of the treaty of 1778. Was not this an offer to make use of private property for public purposes?

On the 11th of August, the French plenipotentiaries thus write to the ministers of the United States:

"The propositions which the French ministers have the honor to communicate to the ministers plenipotentiary of the United States are reduced to this simple alternative:

"Either the ancient treaties, with the privileges resulting from priority, and a stipulation of reciprocal indemnities;

"'Or a new treaty, assuring equality without indemnity.

"In other words, this offer is, 'if you will actreaties, which secure to us privileges in your quished. ports which our enemies are not to enjoy, then we will make indemnities for the losses of your citizens; or, if you will give up all claim for such indemnities, then we will relinquish our especial privileges under the former treaties, and agree to a new treaty which shall only put us on a footing of equality with Great Britain, our enemy.

Vol. I.—33

"On the 20th of August our ministers propose that the former treaties, so far as they respect the rights of privateers, shall be renewed; but that it shall be optional with the United States, by the payment, within seven years, of three millions of francs, either in money or in securities issued by the French government for indemnities to our citizens, to buy off this obligation, or to buy off all its political obligations, under both the old treaties, by payment in like manner of five millions of francs,

"On the 4th of September the French ministers submit these propositions.

"'A commission shall regulate the indemnities which either of the two nations may owe to the citizens of the other.

"'The indemnities which shall be due by France to the citizens of the United States shall be paid for by the United States, and in return for which France yields the exclusive privilege resulting from the 17th and 22d articles of the treaty of commerce, and from the rights of guaranty of the 11th article of the treaty of al-

"The American ministers considered these propositions as inadmissible. They, however, on their part, made an approach to them, by proposing, in substance, that it should be left optional with the United States, on the exchange of the ratification, to relinquish the indemnities, and in that case, the old treaties not to be obligatory on the United States, so far as they conferred exclusive privileges on France. This will be seen in the letter of the American ministers of the 5th of September.

"On the 18th of September the American ministers say to those of France;

"'It remains only to consider the expediency of a temporary arrangement. Should such an arrangement comport with the views of France, the following principles are offered as the basis

"'1st. The ministers plenipotentiary of the respective parties not being able at present to agree respecting the former treaties and indemnities, the parties will, in due and convenient time, further treat on those subjects; and, until they shall have agreed respecting the same, the said treaties shall have no operation.

"This, the Senate will see, is substantially the proposition which was ultimately accepted, and which formed the second article of the treaty. By that article, these claims, on both sides, were postponed for the present, and afterwards, by other acts of the two governments, they were knowledge or renew the obligation of the old mutually and for ever renounced and relin-

"And now, sir, if any gentleman can look to the treaty, look to the instructions under which it was concluded, look to the correspondence which preceded it, and look to the subsequent agreement of the two governments to renounce claims, on both sides, and not admit that the property of these private citizens has been taken to buy off embarrassing claims of France on the government of the United States, I know not what other or further evidence could ever force that conviction on his mind.

"I will conclude this part of the case by showing you how this matter was understood by the American administration which finally accepted the treaty, with this renouncement of indemnities. The treaty was negotiated in the administration of Mr. Adams. It was amended in the Senate, as already stated, and ratified on the third day of February, 1801, Mr. Adams being still in office. Being thus ratified, with the amendment, it was sent back to France, and on the thirty-first day of July, the first Consul ratified the treaty, as amended by striking out the second article, but accompanied the ratification with this declaration, 'provided that, by this retrenchment, the two states renounce their respective pretensions, which are the object of the said article.'

"With this declaration appended, the treaty came back to the United States. Mr. Jefferson had now become President, and Mr. Madison was Secretary of State. In consequence of the declaration of the French government, accompanying its ratification of the treaty and now attached to it. Mr. Jefferson again referred the treaty to the Senate, and on the 19th of December, 1801, the Senate resolved that they considered the treaty as duly ratified. Now, sir, in order to show what Mr. Jefferson and his administration thought of this treaty, and the effect of its ratification, in its then existing form, I beg leave to read an extract of an official letter from Mr. Madison to Mr. Pinckney, then our minister in Spain. Mr. Pinckney was at that time negotiating for the adjustment of our claims on Spain; and, among others, for captures committed within the territories of Spain, by French subjects. Spain objected to these claims, on the ground that the United States had claimed redress of such injuries from France. In writing to Mr. Pinckney (under date of February 6th, 1804), and commenting on this plea of Spain, Mr. Madison says:

"The plea on which it seems the Spanish government now principally relies, is the erasure of the second article from our late convention with France, by which France was released from the indemnities due for spoliations committed under her immediate responsibility to the United States. This plea did not appear in the early objections of Spain to our claims. It was an afterthought, resulting from the insufficiency of every other plea, and is certainly as little valid as any other.

"'The injuries for which indemnities are claimed from Spain, though committed by Frenchmen, took place under Spanish authority Spain, therefore, is answerable for them. To her we have looked, and continue to look for redress. If the injuries done to us by her resulted in any manner from injuries done to her by France, she may, if she pleases, resort to France as we resort to her. But whether her resort to France would be just or unjust is a question between her and France, not between either her and us, or us and France. We claim against her, not against France. In releasing France, therefore, we have not released her. The claims, again, from which France was released, were admitted by France, and the release was for a valuable consideration, in a correspondent release of the United States from certain claims on them. The claims we make on Spain were never admitted by France, nor made on France by the United States; they made therefore, no part of the bargain with her, and could not be included in the release.

"Certainly, sir, words could not have been used which should more clearly affirm that these individual claims, these private rights of property, had been applied to public uses. Mr. Madison here declares, unequivocally, that these claims had been admitted by France; that they were relinquished by the government of the United States; that they were relinquished for a valuable consideration; that that consideration was a correspondent release of the United States from certain claims on them; and that the whole transaction was a bargain between the two governments. This, sir, be it remembered, was little more than two years after the final promulgation of the treaty; it was by the Secretary of State under that administration which gave effect to the treaty in its amended form, and it proves, beyond mistake and beyond doubt, the clear judgment which that administration had formed upon the true nature and character of the whole transaction.

CHAPTER CXX.

FRENCH SPOLIATIONS-MR. BENTON'S SPEECH

"THE whole stress of the question lies in a few simple facts, which, if disembarrassed from the confusion of terms and conditions, and viewed in their plain and true character, render it diffcult not to arrive at a just and correct view of the case. The advocates of this measure have no other grounds to rest their case upon than an assumption of facts; they assume that the United States lay under binding and onerous stipulations to France; that the claims of this bill were recognized by France; and that the United States made herself re claims, instead of France; to self, and became bound to sideration of getting rid of t weighed upon her. It is claims were good when the U doned them; and that the co it is pretended the United S of a nature to make her fully claimants, and to render it o to satisfy the claims.

"The measure rests entire sumptions; but I shall sh nothing more than assump claims were not recognized by not be, by the law of nations for nothing when they were good for nothing when we The United States owed noth received no consideration wha make us responsible for paym maintain, I shall proceed to artful chain of argument, but torical facts.

"Let me ask, sir, on what s tained that the United States: consideration for these clain onerous stipulations did she l her debt consist, which it is al up in payment for these claims of '78, the United States was b the French American posses and France, on her part, g United States her sovereign In '93, the war between G France broke out; and this those nations immediately question how far this guarant upon the United States? \\ bound by it to protect France American possessions agains tack of Great Britain; and thu as subalterns in a war in which cern or interest whatever? the point at once : for if it sl we were not bound by this gr parties to a distant European w be an evident, a decided resul that we were under no obligation we owed her no debt on accoun and, plainly enough, it will fo no valuable consideration for nder Spanish authority werable for them. To continue to look for done to us by her refrom injuries done to if she pleases, resort to her. But whether uld be just or unjust is and France, not between and France. We claim t France. In releasing have not released her. which France was re-France, and the release deration, in a corresponited States from certain aims we make on Spain France, nor made on tates; they made, thererain with her, and could is could not have been ore clearly affirm that , these private rights of lied to public uses. Mr. inequivocally, that these ed by France; that they the government of the ey were relinquished for n; that that considerant release of the United ms on them; and that was a bargain between This, sir, be it rememthan two years after the he treaty; it was by the ider that administration e treaty in its amended ond mistake and beyond ent which that adminison the true nature and transaction.

ER CXX.

-MR. BENTON'S SPEECH

the question lies in a few disembarrassed from the d conditions, and viewed character, render it diffijust and correct view of ttes of this measure have est their case upon than ts; they assume that the der binding and onerous by; that the claims of this by France; and that the United States made herself responsible for these claims, instead of France; took them upon herself, and became bound to pay them, in consideration of getting rid of the burdens which weighed upon her. It is assumed that the claims were good when the United States abandoned them; and that the consideration, which it is pretended the United States received, was of a nature to make her fully responsible to the claimants, and to render it obligatory upon her to satisfy the claims.

"The measure rests entirely upon these assumptions; but I shall show that they are nothing more than assumptions; that these claims were not recognized by France, and could not be, by the law of nations; they were good for nothing when they were made; they were good for nothing when we abandoned them. The United States owed nothing to France, and received no consideration whatever from her, to make us responsible for payment. What I here maintain, I shall proceed to prove, not by any arful chain of argument, but by plain and historical facts.

"Let me ask, sir, on what grounds is it maintained that the United States received a valuable consideration for these claims? Under what onerous stipulations did she lie? In what did her debt consist, which it is alleged France gave up in payment for these claims? By the treaty of '78, the United States was bound to guarantee the French American possessions to France; and France, on her part, guaranteed to the United States her sovereignty and territory. In '93, the war between Great Britain and France broke out; and this rupture between those nations immediately gave rise to the question how far this guaranty was obligatory upon the United States? Whether we were bound by it to protect France on the side of her American possessions against any hostile attack of Great Britain; and thus become involved as subalterns in a war in which we had no concern or interest whatever? Here we come to the point at once: for if it should appear that we were not bound by this guaranty to become parties to a distant European war, then, sir, it will be an evident, a decided result and conclusion, that we were under no obligation to France—that we owed her no debt on account of this guaranty; and, plainly enough, it will follow, we received no valuable consideration for the claims of this bill, when France released us from an obligation which it will appear we never owed. Let us briefly see how the case stands.

"France, to get rid of claims made by us, puts forward counter claims under this guaranty: proposing by such a diplomatic manœuvre to get rid of our demand, the injustice of which she protested against. She succeeded, and both parties abandoned their claims. And is it now to be urged upon us that, on the grounds of this astute diplomacy, we actually received a valuable consideration for claims which were considered good for nothing? France met our claims. which were good for nothing, by a counter claim, which was good for nothing; and when we found ourselves thus encountered, we abandoned our previous claim, in order to be released from the counter one opposed to it. After this, is it, I would ask, a suitable return for our overwrought anxiety to obtain satisfaction for our citizens, that any one of them should, some thirty years after this, turn round upon us and say: "now you have received a valuable consideration for our claims; now, then, you are bound to pay us!" But this is in fact, sir, the language of this bill. I unhesitatingly say that the guaranty (a release from which is the pretended consideration by which the whole people of the United States are brought in debtors to a few insurance offices to the amount of millions), this guaranty, sir, I affirm, was good for nothing. I speak on no less authority, and in no less a name than that of the great father of his country, Washington himself, when I affirm that this guaranty imposed upon us no obligations towards France. How, then, shall we be persuaded that, in virtue of this guaranty, we are bound to pay the debts and make good the spoliations of France?

"When the war broke out between Great Britain and France in 1793, Washington addressed to his cabinet a series of questions, inquiring their opinions on this very question—how far the treaty of guaranty of 1778 was obligatory upon the United States—intending to take their opinions as a guidance for his conduct in such a difficult situation. [Here the honorable Senator read extracts from Washington's queries to his cabinet, with some of the opinions themselves.]

"In consequence of the opinions of his cabinet concurring with his own sentiments, President Washington issued a proclamation of neutrality,

disregarding the guaranty, and proclaiming that we were not bound by any preceding treaties to defend American France against Great Britain. The wisdom of this measure is apparent. He wisely thought it was not prudent our infant Republic should become absorbed in the vortex of European politics: and therefore, sir, not without long and mature deliberation how far this treaty of guaranty was obligatory upon us, he pronounced against it; and in so doing he pronounced against the very bill before us; for the bill has nothing to stand upon but this guaranty: it pretends that the United States is bound to pay for injuries inflicted by France. because of a release from a guaranty by which the great Washington himself solemnly pronounced we were not bound! What do we now behold, sir? We behold an array in this House, and on this floor, against the policy of Washington! They seek to undo his deed; they condemn his principles; they call in question the wisdom and justice of his wise and paternal counsels; they urge against him that the guaranty bound us, and what for? What is the motive of this opposition against his measures? Why, sir, that this bill may pass; and the people, the burden-bearing people, be made to pay away a few millions, in consideration of obligations which, after mature deliberation, Washington pronounced not to lie upon us!

"I think, sir, enough has been said to put to rest for ever the question of our obligations under this guaranty. Whatever the claims may be, it must be evident to the common sense of every individual, that we are not, and cannot be, bound to pay them in the stead of France, because of a pretended release from a guaranty which did not bind us; I say did not bind us, because, to have observed it, would have led to our ruin and destruction; and it is a clear principle of the law of nations, that a treaty is not obligatory when it is impossible to observe it. But, sir, leaving the question whether we were made responsible for the debts of France, whether we were placed under an obligation to atone to our own citizens for injuries which a foreign power had committed; leaving this question as settled (and I trust settled for ever). I come to consider the claims themselves, their justice, and their validity. And here the principle of this bill will prove, on this head, as weak and untenable-nay, more-as outrageous to every idea of common sense, as it was on the former head. With what reason, I would ask can gentlemen press the American people to pay these claims, when it would be unreason able to press France herself to pay them? If France, who committed the wrong, could not iustly be called upon to atone for it, how can the United States now be called upon for this money? In 1798, the treaty of peace with France was virtually abolished by various acts of Congress authorizing hostilities, and by proclamation of the President to the same effect. it was abolished on account of its violation by France: on account of those depredations which this bill calls upon us to make good. By those acts of Congress we sought satisfaction for these claims; and, having done so, it was too late afterwards to seek fresh satisfaction by demanding indemnity. There was war, sir as the gentleman from Georgia has clearly shown -war on account of these spoliations-and when we sought redress, by acts of warfare we precluded ourselves from the right of demand. ing redress by indemnity. We could not there. fore, justly urge these claims against France; and I therefore demand, how can they be urred against us? What are the invincible arm ments by which gentlemen establish the justice and validity of these claims? For surely before we consent to sweep away millions from the public treasury, we ought to hear at least some good reasons. Let me examine their good reasons. The argument to prove the validity of these claims, and that we are bound to pay them, is this: France acknowledged them, and the United States took them upon herself; that is, they were paid by way of offset, and the valuable consideration the United States received was a release from her pretended obligations! Now, sir, let us see how France acknowledged them. These very claims were denied resisted, and rejected, by every successive gorernment of France! The law of nations was urged against them; because, having engaged in a state of war, on the account of them, we had no right to a double redress-first by fe prisals, and afterwards by indemnity! Besides, France justified her spoliations, on the ground that we violated our neutrality; that the ships seized were laden with goods belonging to the English, the enemies of France; and it is well known, that, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, this was the fact-that lent their names to the Engli to risk all the dangers of Fr sake of the great profits. covered the risk. And, in the facts, we are told that the Fr the claims, paid them by a r now bound to satisfy them! proved? Where are the in by which the public treasury Hear them, if it is possible with patience! When we u the French negotiators set u and to obtain a release from them! Thus it is that the Fre these claims: and, on this pr this diplomatic cunning and now told that the national he nay them! Was ever such before? Why, sir, if we I shall deserve eternal obloquy the whole American people. peatedly and perseveringly de ing these claims, at last gets r by an ingenious trick, and by knowledge them; and now l a debt) is thrown upon us; as of this little trick, the public tricked out of several millions strous! I say it is outrageo personal disrespect to any go observations; but I must do country, and I repeat it, sir

"It is strenuously insisted a to be firmly relied upon by se advocated this measure, that has actually received from Fra ation for these claims; in a v has paid them! I have alread torical facts, by the law of nat by the authority and action himself, the father of his c were placed under no obligation the treaty of guaranty; and release from obligations which no valuable consideration at al can it be urged upon us tha paid us for claims which wer sisted, when we all know ve undisputed claims, for claims a reaty, for claims solemnly eng dred, this was the fact—that American citizens

lent their names to the English, and were readv ne American people to to risk all the dangers of French spoliation, for it would be unreason. sake of the great profits, which more than rself to pay them? If covered the risk. And, in the face of all these the wrong, could not facts, we are told that the French acknowledged o atone for it, how can the claims, paid them by a release, and we are e called upon for this now bound to satisfy them! And how is this treaty of peace with proved? Where are the invincible arguments olished by various acts by which the public treasury is to be emptied? hostilities, and by pro-Hear them, if it is possible even to hear them lent to the same effect: with patience! When we urged these claims. ount of its violation by the French negotiators set up a counter claim: hose depredations which and to obtain a release from this, we abandoned o make good. By those them! Thus it is that the French acknowledged sought satisfaction for these claims; and, on this pretence, because of ing done so, it was too this diplomatic cunning and ingenuity, we are k fresh satisfaction by now told that the national honor calls on us to There was war, sir, as pay them! Was ever such a thing heard of orgia has clearly shown before? Why, sir, if we pass this bill, we these spoliations-and shall deserve eternal obloquy and disgrace from s, by acts of warfare, we the whole American people. France, after rem the right of demandpeatedly and perseveringly denying and resisty. We could not, thereing these claims, at last gets rid of them for ever claims against France: by an ingenious trick, and by pretending to ac-, how can they be urged knowledge them; and now her debt (if it was re the invincible argua debt) is thrown upon us; and, in consequence men establish the justice of this little trick, the public treasury is to be laims? For, surely, betricked out of several millions! Sir, this is moneep away millions from strous! I say it is outrageous! I intend no ought to hear at least personal disrespect to any gentleman by these et me examine their good observations; but I must do my duty to my nt to prove the validity country, and I repeat it, sir, this is outrageat we are bound to pay acknowledged them, and them upon herself; that sense, as it was on the

at reason, I would ask way of offset, and the

the United States re-

om her pretended obliga-

see how France acknow-

ery claims were denied,

by every successive gor-

The law of nations was because, having engaged

the account of them, we

ble redress-first by he

by indemnity! Besides,

poliations, on the ground

cutrality; that the ships

a goods belonging to the

of France; and it is well

-nine cases out of a hun-

"It is strenuously insisted upon, and appears to be firmly relied upon by gentlemen who have advocated this measure, that the United States has actually received from France full consideration for these claims; in a word, that France has paid them! I have already shown, by historical facts, by the law of nations, and, further, by the authority and actions of Washington himself, the father of his country, that we were placed under no obligations to France by the treaty of guaranty; and that," therefore, a release from obligations which did not exist, is no valuable consideration at all! But, sir, how can it be urged upon us that France actually paid us for claims which were denied and resisted, when we all know very well that, for undisputed claims, for claims acknowledged by reaty, for claims solemnly engaged to be paid, we could never succeed in getting one farthing I thank the senator from New Hampshire (Mr. Hill), for the enlightened view he has given on this case. What, sir, was the conduct of Napoleon, with respect to money? He had bound himself to pay us twenty millions of francs, and he would not pay one farthing! And yet, sir, we are confidently assured by the advocates of this bill that these claims were paid to us by Napoleon! When Louisiana was sold, he ordered Marbois to get fifty millions, and did not even then, intend to pay us out of that sum the twenty millions he had bound himself by treaty to pay. Marbois succeeded in getting thirty millions of francs more from us, and from this the twenty millions due was deducted; thus, sir, we were made to pay ourselves our own due, and Napoleon escaped the payment of a farthing. I mean to make no reflection upon our negotiators at that treaty; we may be glad that we got Louisiana at any amount; for, if we had not obtained it by money, we should soon have possessed it by blood: the young West, like a lion, would have sprung upon the delta of the Mississippi, and we should have had an earlier edition of the battle of New Orleans. It is not to be regretted, therefore, that we gained Louisiana by negotiation, although we paid our debts ourselves in that bargain. But Napoleon absolutely scolded Marbois for allowing the deduction of twenty millions out of the sum we paid for Louisiana, forgetting that his minister had got thirty millions more than he ordered him to ask, and that we had paid ourselves the twenty millions due to us under treaty. Having such a man to deal with, how can it be maintained on this floor that the United States has been paid by him the claims in this bill, and that, therefore, the treasury is bound to satisfy them? Let senators, I entreat them, but ask themselves the question, what these claims were worth in the view of Napoleon, that they may not form such an unwarranted conclusion as to think he ever paid them. Every government of France which preceded him had treated them as English claims, and is it likely that he who refused to pay claims subsequent to these, under treaty signed by himself, would pay old claims anterior to 1800? The claims were not worth a straw; they were considered as lawful spoliations; that by our proclamation we had broken the neutrality; and, after all, that they were incurred by English enterprises, covered by the American flag. It is pretended he acknowledged them! Would he have inserted two lines in the treaty to rescind them, to get rid of such claims, when he would not pay those he had acknow-

To recur once more, sir, to the valuable consideration which it is pretended we received for these claims. It is maintained that we were paid by receiving a release from onerous obligations imposed upon us by the treaty of guaranty, which obligations I have already shown that the great Washington himself pronounced to be nothing; and therefore, sir, it plainly follows that this valuable consideration was-nothing!

What, sir! Is it said we were released from obligations? From what obligations, I would ask, were we relieved? From the obligation of guaranteeing to France her American possessions; from the obligation of conquering St. Domingo for France! From an impossibility, sir! for do we not know that this was impossible to the fleets and armies of France, under Le Clerc, the brother-in-law of Napoleon himself? Did they not perish miserably by the knives of infuriated negroes and the desolating ravages of pestilence? Again, we were released from the obligation of restoring Guadaloupe to the French; which also was not possible, unless we had entered into a war with Great Britain! And thus, sir, the valuable consideration, the release by which these claims are said to be fully paid to the United States, turns out to be a release from nothing! a release from absolute impossibilities; for it was not possible to guarantee to France her colonies; she lost them, and there was nothing to guarantee; it was a onesided guaranty! She surrendered them by treaty, and there is nothing for the guaranty to operate on.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. King], has given a vivid and able picture of the exertions of the United States government in behalf of these claims. He has shown that they have been paid, and more than paid, on our part, by the invaluable blood of our citizens! Such, indeed, is the fact. What has not been done by the United States on behalf of these claims? For these very claims, for the protection of those very claimants, we underwent an in- tection of commerce and for the profit of our credible expense both in military and nava

[Here the honorable senator read a long lis of military and naval preparations made by Congress for the protection of these claims, specify. ing the dates and the numbers.]

Nor did the United States confine herself solely to these strenous exertions and expensive armaments; besides raising fleets and armies.she sent across the Atlantic embassies and agents: she gave letters of marque, by which every injured individual might take his own remedy and repay himself his losses. For these very claims the people were laden at that period with heavy taxes, besides the blood of our people which was wilt for them. Loans were raised at eight percent, to obtain redress for these claims; and what was the consequence? It overturned the men in power at that period: this it was which produced that result, more than political differences.

The people were taxed and suffered for these same claims in that day; and now they are brought forward again to exhaust the public treasury and to sweep away more millions vet from the people, to impose taxes again upon them, for the very same claims for which the people have already once been taxed; reviving the system of '98, to render loans and debts and encumbrances again to be required; to embarrass the government, entangle the State, to impoverish the people; to dig, in a word, by gradual measures of this description, a pit to plunge the nation headlong into inextricable difficulty and

The government, in those days, performed its duty to the citizens in the protection of their commerce; and by vindicating, asserting, and satisfying these claims, it left nothing undone which now is to be done? the pretensions of this bill are therefore utterly unfounded! Dutes are reciprocal; the duty of government is protection, and that of citizens allegiance. This bill attempts to throw upon the present gorernment the duties and expenses of a former government, which have been already once acquitted. On its part, government has fulfilled, with energy and zeal, its duty to the citizens; it has protected and now is protecting their rights, and asserting their just claims. Witness our navy, kept up in time of peace, for the pro-

citizens; witness our cruise of the globe, for the security ing every kind of lawful bu are limits to the protection individual citizens; peace m other, be obtained, and sacrif for a valuable consideration. a valuable consideration, ar necessarily abandoned to of we gave up claims for the gave up claims for Spanish treaty of Florida; we gave mark. These claims also w anterior to others I have peace is made, the claims some are given up for a gro such as these, when they a will fetch nothing. How m that measure is, which would ed and disputed claims fro which they were said to b country, to our own governn citizens, requiring us to pay (nav. what it is doubtful if quiring us to pay what we l one farthing for, and for wl ceived millions, we have pai those millions in arduous ex

I should not discharge the country, if I did not probthese transactions. What we led to these claims? Gentle themselves in all the flight peetry on this pathetic top of "ships swept from the oce in want and ruin;" and such fact, sir? It is as the gen Hampshire has said: never, si before or since, such a flouri merce as the very time ar spoliations. At that time, m they saved one ship only, out from the French cruisers! stubborn facts of sober aritl and not sit still and see tl charmed out of the treasury notes of poetry. [Mr. B her lic documents showing that, '94, '95, '96, '97, '98, '99, up ports, annually increased at 1800, they amounted to more

in military and nava

senator read a long lis reparations made by Conof these claims, specify. umbers.]

States confine herself exertions and expensive sing fleets and armies, she c embassies and agents; tarque, by which every not take his own remedy losses. For these very laden at that period with he blood of our people em. Loans were raised obtain redress for these as the consequence? It is power at that period; duced that result, more test.

ed and suffered for these day; and now they are n to exhaust the public away more millions yet ose taxes again upon them, ims for which the people taxed; reviving the sysloans and debts and ene required; to embarrass gle the State, to impoverg, in a word, by gradual iption, a pit to plunge the inextricable difficulty and those days, performed its n the protection of their indicating, asserting, and is, it left nothing undone iet the pretensions of this erly unfounded! Duties ity of government is procitizens allegiance. This w upon the present gorand expenses of a former we been already once ac-, government has fulfilled, its duty to the citizens; now is protecting their heir just claims. Witness time of peace, for the proand for the profit of our citizens; witness our cruisers on every point of the globe, for the security of citizens pursuing every kind of lawful business. But, there are limits to the protection of the interests of individual citizens; peace must, at one time or other, be obtained, and sacrifices are to be made for a valuable consideration. Now, sir, peace is a valuable consideration, and claims are often necessarily abandoned to obtain it. In 1814, we gave up claims for the sake of peace; we gave up claims for Spanish spoliations, at the treaty of Florida; we gave up claims to Denmark. These claims also were given up, long anterior to others I have mentioned. When peace is made, the claims take their chance; some are given up for a gross sum, and some, such as these, when they are worth nothing, will fetch nothing. How monstrous, therefore. that measure is, which would transfer abandoned and disputed claims from the country, by which they were said to be due, to our own country, to our own government, upon our own citizens, requiring us to pay what others owed (nay, what it is doubtful if they did owe); requiring us to pay what we have never received one farthing for, and for which, if we had received millions, we have paid away more than those millions in arduous exertions on their behalf!

I should not discharge the duty I owe to my country, if I did not probe still deeper into these transactions. What were the losses which led to these claims? Gentlemen have indulged themselves in all the flights and raptures of peetry on this pathetic topic; we have heard of "ships swept from the ocean, families plunged in want and ruin;" and such like! What is the fact, sir? It is as the gentleman from New Hampshire has said: never, sir, was there known, before or since, such a flourishing state of commerce as the very time and period of these spoliations. At that time, men made fortunes if they saved one ship only, out of every four or five, from the French cruisers! Let us examine the stubborn facts of sober arithmetic, in this case, and not sit still and see the people's money charmed out of the treasury by the persuasive notes of poetry. [Mr. B here referred to public documents showing that, in the years 1793, '94, '95, '96, '97, '98, '99, up to 1800, the exports, annually increased at a rapid rate, till, in 1800, they amounted to more than $91,000,000].

It must be taken into consideration that, at this period, our population was less than it is now, our territory was much more limited, we had not Louisiana and the port of New Orleans, and yet our commerce was far more flourishing than it ever has been since; and at a time, too, when we had no mammoth banking corporation to boast of its indispensable, its vital necessity to commerce! These are the facts of numbers, of arithmetic, which blow away the edifice of the gentlemen's poetry, as the wind scatters straws.

With respect to the parties in whose hands these claims are. They are in the hands of insurance offices, assignees, and jobbers; they are in the hands of the knowing ones who have bought them up for two, three, five, ten cents in the dollar! What has become of the screaming babes that have been held up after the ancient Roman method, to excite pity and move our sympathies? What has become of the widows and original claimants? They have been bought out long ago by the knowing ones. If we countenance this bill, sir, we shall renew the disgraceful scenes of 1793, and witness a repetition of the infamous fraud and gambling, and all the old artifices which the certificate funding act gave rise to. (Mr. B. here read several interesting extracts, describing the scenes which then took place.)

One of the most revolting features of this bill is its relation to the insurers. The most infamous and odious act ever passed by Congress was the certificate funding act of 1793, an act passed in favor of a crowd of speculators; but the principle of this bill is more odious than even it; I mean that of paying insurers for their losses. The United States, sir, insure! Can any thing be conceived more revolting and atrocious than to direct the funds of the treasury, the property of the people, to such iniquitous uses? On what principle is this grounded? Their occupation is a safe one; they make calculations against all probabilities; they make fortunes at all times; and especially at this very time when we are called upon to refund their losses, they made immense fortunes. It would be far more just and equitable if Congress were to insure the farmers and planters, and pay them their losses on the failure of the cotton crop; they, sir, are more entitled to put forth such claims than speculators and gamblers, whose trade and business it is to make money by losses. This bill, if passed, would be the most odious and unprincipled ever passed by Congress.

ANNO

Another question, sir, occurs to me: what sum of money will this bill abstract from the treasury? It says five millions, it is true; but it does not say "and no more;" it does not say that they will be in full. If the project of passing this bill should succeed, not only will claims be made, but next will come interest upon them! Reflect, sir, one moment: interest from 1798 and 1800 to this day! Nor is there any limitation of the amount of claims; no, sir, it would not be possible for the imagination of man, to invent more cunning words than the wording of this bill. It is made to cover all sorts of claims; there is no kind of specification adequate to exclude them; the most illegal claims will be admitted by its loose phraseology!

Again suffer me to call your attention to another feature of this atrocious measure; let me warn my country of the abyss which it is attemped to open before it, by this and other similar measures of draining and exhausting the public treasury!

These claims rejected and spurned by France; these claims for which we have never received one cent, all the payment ever made for them urged upon us by their advocates being a metaphysical and imaginary payment; these claims which, under such deceptive circumstances as these, we, sir, are called upon to pay, and to pay to insurers, usurers, gamblers, and speculators; these monstrous claims which are foisted upon the American people, let me ask, how are they to be adjudged by this bill? Is it credible, sir? They are to be tried by an ex parte tribunal! Commissioners are to be appointed, and then, once seated in this berth, they are to give away and dispose of the public money according to the cases proved! No doubt sir, they will be all honorable men. I do not dispute that! No doubt it will be utterly impossible to prove corruption, or bribery, or interested motives, or partialities against them; nay, sir, no doubt it will be dangerous to suspect such honorable men; we shall be replied to at once by the indignant question, "are they not all honorable men?" But to all intents and purposes this tribunal will be an ex parte, a one-sided tribunal and passive to the action of the claimants.

Again, look at the species of evidence which will be invited to appear before these commissioners; of what description will it be? Here is not a thing recent and fresh upon which evi dence, may be gained. Here are transactions a thirty or forty years ago. The evidence is gone witnesses dead, memories failing, no testimony to be procured, and no lack of claimants, notwithstanding. Then, sir, the next best evidence that suspicious and worthless sort of evidence will have to be restored to; and this will be ready at hand to suit every convenience in any quantity. There could not be a more effective and deeper plan than this devised to empty the treasury! Here will be sixty millions exhibit. ed as a lure for false evidence, and false claims: an awful, a tremendous temptation for men to send their souls to hell for the sake of money. On the behalf of the moral interests of my country, while it may yet not be too late, I denounce this bill, and warn Congress not to lend itself to a measure by which it will debauch the public morals, and open a wide gulf of wrong-doing and not-to-be-imagined evil!

The bill proposes the amount of only five millions, while, by the looseness of its wording it will admit old claims of all sorts and different natures; claims long since abandoned for gross sums; all will come in by this bill! One hundred millions of dollars will not pay all that will be patched up under the cover of this bill! In bills of this description we may see a covert attempt to renew the public debt, to make loans and taxes necessary, and the engine of loans necessary with them! There are those who would gladly overwhelm the country in debt; that corporations might be maintained which thrive by debt, and make their profits out of the misery and encumbrances of the people. Shall the people be denied the least repose from taration? Shall all the labor and exertions of government to extinguish the public debt be in vain? Shall its great exertions to establish economy in the State, and do away with asystem of loans and extravagance, be thwarted and resisted by bills of this insidious aim and character? Shall the people be prevented from feeling in reality that we have no debt: shall they only know it by dinners and public rejoicings? Shall such a happy and beneficial result of wise and wholesome measures be rendered all in vain by envious efforts to destroy the whole and render it impossible for on without borrowing and be

The bill passed the Senate 20; but failed in the House It still continues to importun and though baffled for fifty nacious as ever. Surely there limit to these presentations It is a game in which the go chance. No number of rejection thing in favor of the governn cision in their favor decides Renewed applications become endless; and eventually must become stronger upon age-ga upon time-often directly, by evidence-always indirectly, I versary evidence, and by the poraries. Two remedies are Congress-one, to break up c allowing no claim to be paid other, to break up speculating allowing no more to be receiv than he has actually paid for signees and agents are now the of claims against the governi stitute a profession-a new Washington city. Their calli new industrial pursuit-and a one-skilful and persevering, and in phalanx; and entirely a the succession of new member norantly to the consideration o they have so well dressed up. the honor of Congress, and tl the treasury, to institute a sea tion into the practices of thes whether any undue means are the legislation they desire.

CHAPTER C

ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION OF I

On Friday, the 30th of Januar with some members of his Cabin funeral ceremonies of Warren R the hall of the House of Repu

ecies of evidence which r before these commisption will it be? Here d fresh upon which evi Here are transactions a o. The evidence is gone. es failing, no testimony ck of claimants, notwiththe next best evidence thless sort of evidence ed to; and this will be very convenience in any not be a more effective nis devised to empty the e sixty millions exhibit. idence, and false claims; temptation for men to for the sake of money. ral interests of my counot be too late, I denounce ress not to lend itself to will debauch the public evil!

he amount of only five
looseness of its wording, of all sorts and different nce abandoned for gross
by this bill! One huns will not pay all that er the cover of this bill! ion we may see a covert
ublic debt, to make loans and the engine of loans

ide gulf of wrong-doing

There are those who m the country in debt; it be maintained which ce their profits out of the es of the people. Shall e least repose from taxbor and exertions of govthe public debt be in exertions to establish and do away with asysravagance, be thwarted this insidious aim and people be prevented from we have no debt: shall linners and public rejoicopy and beneficial result measures be rendered all ts to destroy the whole and render it impossible for the country to go on without borrowing and being in debt?"

The bill passed the Senate by a vote of 25 to 20: but failed in the House of Representatives. It still continues to importune the two Houses: and though baffled for fifty years, is as pertinacious as ever. Surely there ought to be some limit to these presentations of the same claim. It is a game in which the government has no chance. No number of rejections decides any thing in favor of the government; a single decision in their favor decides all against them. Renewed applications become incessant, and endless; and eventually must succeed. Claims become stronger upon age-gain double strength upon time-often directly, by newly discovered evidence—always indirectly, by the loss of adversary evidence, and by the death of contemporaries. Two remedies are in the hands of Congress-one, to break up claim agencies, by allowing no claim to be paid to an agent; the other, to break up speculating assignments, by allowing no more to be received by an assignee than he has actually paid for the claim. Assignees and agents are now the great prosecutors of claims against the government. They constitute a profession-a new one-resident at Washington city. Their calling has become a new industrial pursuit—and a most industrious one-skilful and persevering, acting on system and in phalanx; and entirely an overmatch for the succession of new members who come ignorantly to the consideration of the cases which they have so well dressed up. It would be to the honor of Congress, and the protection of the treasury, to institute a searching examination into the practices of these agents, to see whether any undue means are used to procure the legislation they desire.

CHAPTER CXXI.

ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION OF PRESIDENT JACK- 80N.

Ox Friday, the 30th of January, the President with some members of his Cabinet, attended the funeral ceremonies of Warren R. Davis, Esq., in the hall of the House of Representatives—of to visit him and examine into his mental con-

which body Mr. Davis had been a member from the State of South Carolina. The procession had moved out with the body, and its front had reached the foot of the broad steps of the eastern portico, when the President, with Mr. Woodbury, Secretary of the Treasury, and Mr. Mahlon Dickerson. Secretary of the Navy, were issuing from the door of the great rotunda-which opens upon the portico. At that instant a person stepped from the crowd into the little open space in front of the President, levelled a pistol at him, at the distance of about eight feet, and attempted to fire. It was a percussion lock, and the cap exploded, without firing the powder in the barrel. The explosion of the cap was so loud that many persons thought the pistol had fired: I heard it at the foot of the steps, far from the place, and a great crowd between. Instantly the person dropped the pistol which had missed fire, took another which he held ready cocked in the left hand, concealed by a cloak-levelled it-and pulled the trigger. It was also a percussion lock, and the cap exploded without firing the powder in the barrel. The President instantly rushed upon him with his uplifted cane: the man shrunk back; Mr. Woodbury aimed a blow at him ;- Lieutenant Gedney of the Navy knocked him down; he was secured by the bystanders, who delivered him to the officers of justice for judicial examination. The examination took place before the chief justice of the district, Mr. Cranch; by whom he was committed in default of bail. His name was ascertained to be Richard Lawrence, an Englishman by birth, and house-painter by trade, at present out of employment, melancholy and irascible. The pistols were examined, and found to be well loaded; and fired afterwards without fail, carrying their bullets true, and driving them through inch boards at thirty feet distance; nor could any reason be found for the two failures at the door of the rotunda. On his examination the prisoner seemed to be at his ease, as if unconscious of having done any thing wrong-refusing to cross-examine the witnesses who testified against him, or to give any explanation of his conduct. The idea of an unsound mind strongly impressing itself upon the public opinion, the marshal of the district invited two of the most respectable physicians of the city (Dr. Caussin and Dr. Thomas Sewell), dition. They did so: and the following is the report which they made upon the case:

"The undersigned, having been requested by the marshal of the District of Columbia to visit Richard Lawrence, now confined in the jail of the county of Washington, for an attempt to assassinate the President of the United States, with a view to ascertain, as far as practicable, the present condition of his bodily health and state of mind, and believing that a detail of the examination will be more satisfactory than an abstract opinion on the subject, we therefore give the following statement. On entering his room, we engaged in a free conversation with him, in which he participated, apparently, in the most artless and unreserved manner. The first interrogatory propounded was, as to his agewhich question alone he sportively declined answering. We then inquired into the condition of his health, for several years past-to which he replied that it had been uniformly good, and that he had never labored under any mental derangement; nor did he admit the existence of any of those symptoms of physical derangement which usually attend mental alienation. He said he was born in England, and came to this country when twelve or thirteen years of age, and that his father died in this District, about six or eight years since; that his father was a Protestant and his mother a Methodist, and that he was not a professor of any religion, but sometimes read the Bible, and occasionally attended church. He stated that he was a painter by trade, and had followed that occupation to the present time; but, of late, could not find steady employment-which had caused much pecuniary embarrassment with him; that he had been generally temperate in his habits, using ardent spirits moderately when at work; but, for the last three or four weeks, had not taken any; that he had never gambled, and, in other respects, had led a regular, sober life.

"Upon being interrogated as to the circumstances connected with the attempted assassination, he said that he had been deliberating on it for some time past, and that he had called at the President's house about a week previous to the attempt, and being conducted to the President's apartment by the porter, found him in conversation with a member of Congress, whom he believed to have been Mr. Sutherland, of Pennsylvania; that he stated to the President that he wanted money to take him to England, and that he must give him a check on the bank, and the President remarked, that he was too much engaged to attend to him-he must call another time, for Mr. Dibble was in waiting for an interview. When asked about the pistols which he had used, he stated that his father left him a pair, but not being alike, about four years since he exchanged one for another, which exactly matched the best of the pair; these were both flint locks, which he recently had altered to percussion locks, by a Mr. Boteler; lifted cane, he feared that it contained a swort

that he had been frequently in the habit of loading and firing those pistols at marks, and that he had never known them to fail going off on any other occasion, and that, at the distance of ten yards, the ball always passed through an inch plank. He also stated that he had loaded those pistols three or four days previous, with ordinary care, for the purpose attempted; but that he used a pencil instead of a ramrod, and that during that period, they were at all times carried in his pocket; and when asked why they failed to explode, he replied he knew no cause. When asked why he went to the capitol on that day, he replied that he expected that the President would be there. He also stated that he was in the rotunda when the President arrived; and on being asked why he did not then attempt to shoot him, he replied that he did not wish to interfere with the funeral ceremony, and therefore waited till it was over. He also observed that he did not enter the hall but looked through a window from a lobby, and saw the President seated with members of Congress, and he then returned to the rotunda and waited till the President again entered it, and then passed through and took his position in the east portico, about two yards from the door. drew his pistols from his inside coat pocket, cocked them and held one in each hand, concealed by his coat, lest be should alarm the spectators-and states, that as soon as the one in the right hand missed fire, he immediately dropped or exchanged it, and attempted to fire the second, before he was seized; he further stated that he aimed each pistol at the President's heart, and intended, if the first pistol had gone off, and the president had fallen, to have defended himself with the second, if defence had been necessary. On being asked if he did not expect to have been killed on the spot, if he had killed the President, he replied he did not; and that he had no doubt but that he would have been protected by the spectators. He was frequently questioned whether he had any friends present, from whom he expected protection. To this he replied, that he never had mentioned his intention to any one, and that no one in particular knew his design; but that he presumed it was generally known that he intended to put the President out of the way. He further stated that when the President arrived at the door, near which he stood, finding him supported on the left by Mr. Woodbury, and observing many persons in his rear, and being himself rather to the right of the President, in order to avoid wounding Mr. Woodbury, and those in the rear, he stepped a little to his own right, so that should the ball pass through the body of the President, it would be received by the door frame, or stone wall. On being asked if he let no trepidation during the attempt: He replied not the slightest, until he found that the second pistol had missed fire. Then observing that the President was advancing upon him, with an up which might have been thru fore he could have been pro And when interrogated as t induced him to attempt the President, he replied, that he the President had caused his and the consequent want of lieved that to put him out of only remedy for this evil; b tory, who told you this? he any one, but remarked that Mr. Redfern, told him that more business, because he w President-and he believed league with the President a being questioned, whether he the debates in Congress, session, and whether they 1 in making this attack on the sident, he replied that he had ed the discussions in both gress, but that they had, in no his action.

"Upon being asked if he e the president of the United S son had fallen, he replied no.

"When asked whom he wi sident, his answer was, there in the House of Representative if there were no persons in t veral; and it was the Senate Who, in your opinion, of t make a good President? I Clay, Mr. Webster, Mr. Ca you think of Col. Benton, M Judge White, for President? would do well. On being a any member of either house o plied that he did not-and ne in his life, or they to him. On benefit he expected himself the Fresident, he answered unless the President fell, and thereby to recover his liber mechanics would all be benefit chanics would have plenty of money would be more plenty. why it would be more plen would be more easily obtained On being asked what bank, he of the United States. On b knew the president, directors, cers of the bank, or had ever course with them, or knew h money out of the bank, he rep slightly knew Mr. Smith only.

On being asked with respect which he had heard in Congre he was particularly pleased with Calhoun, Clay, and Webster, he was, because they were on hi then asked if he was well pespecches of Col. Benton and Ji said he was and thought Col.

talented

quently in the habit of se pistols at marks, and wn them to fail going off and that, at the distance lways passed through an stated that he had loaded four days previous, with purpose attempted: but instead of a ramrod and d. they were at all times and when asked why he replied he knew no hy he went to the capitol d that he expected that e there. He also stated unda when the President g asked why he did not t him he replied that he ere with the funeral cereaited till it was over. He e did not enter the hall window from a lobby and ted with members of Conurned to the rotunda and lent again entered it, and and took his position in t two yards from the door. n his inside coat pocket, ld one in each hand, conest he should alarm the es, that as soon as the one issed fire, he immediately 1 it, and attempted to fire ne was seized; he further I each pistol at the Presiended, if the first pistol had esident had fallen, to have h the second, if defence had being asked if he did not killed on the spot, if he had he replied he did not; and tibut that he would have e spectators. He was frewhether he had any friends he expected protection. To he never had mentioned his and that no one in particu-; but that he presumed it n that he intended to put the way. He further stated sident arrived at the dor, I, finding him supported on dbury, and observing many and being himself rather to resident, in order to avoid lbury, and those in the rear, to his own right, so that s through the body of the I be received by the door On being asked if he let ig the attempt: He replied til he found that the second ce. Then observing that the

neing upon him, with an up

d that it contained a sword

which might have been thrust through him before he could have been protected by the crowd. And when interrogated as to the motive which induced him to attempt the assassination of the President, he replied, that he had been told that the President had caused his loss of occupation, and the consequent want of money, and he believed that to put him out of the way, was the only remedy for this evil; but to the interrogatory, who told you this? he could not identify any one, but remarked that his brother-in-law. Mr. Redfern, told him that he would have no more business, because he was opposed to the President—and he believed Redfern to be in league with the President against him. Again being questioned, whether he had often attended the debates in Congress, during the present session, and whether they had influenced him in making this attack on the person of the President, he replied that he had frequently attended the discussions in both branches of Congress, but that they had, in no degree, influenced

"Upon being asked if he expected to become the president of the United States, if Gen. Jackson had fallen, he replied no.

"When asked whom he wished to be the President, his answer was, there were many persons in the House of Representatives. On being asked if there were no persons in the Senate, yes, several: and it was the Senate to which I alluded. Who, in your opinion, of the Senate, would make a good President? He answered, Mr. Clay, Mr. Webster, Mr. Calhoun. What do you think of Col. Benton, Mr. Van Buren, or Judge White, for President? He thought they would do well. On being asked if he knew any member of either house of Congress, he replied that he did not-and never spoke to one in his life, or they to him. On being asked what benefit he expected himself from the death of the Fresident, he answered he could not rise unless the President fell, and that he expected thereby to recover his liberty, and that the mechanics would all be benefited; that the mechanics would have plenty of work; and that money would be more plenty. On being asked why it would be more plenty, he replied, it would be more easily obtained from the bank. On being asked what bank, he replied, the Bank of the United States. On being asked if he knew the president, directors, or any of the officers of the bank, or had ever held any intercourse with them, or knew how he could get money out of the bank, he replied no-that he slightly knew Mr. Smith only.

"On being asked with respect to the speeches which he had heard in Congress, and whether he was particularly pleased with those of Messrs. Calhoun, Clay, and Webster, he replied that he was, because they were on his side. He was then asked if he was well pleased with the speeches of Col. Benton and Judge White? He said he was and thought Col. Benton highly talented.

"When asked if he was friendly to Gen. Jackson, he replied, no. Why not? He answered, because he was a tyrant. Who told you he was a tyrant? He answered, it was a common talk with the people, and that he had read it in all the papers. He was asked if he could name any one who had told him so? He replied, no. He was asked if he ever threatened to shoot Mr. Clay, Mr. Webster, or Mr. Calhoun, or whether he would shoot them if he had an opportunity? He replied, no. When asked if he would shoot Mr. Van Buren? He replied, no, that he once met with Mr. Van Buren in the rotunda, and told him he was in want of money and must have it, and if he did not get it he (Mr. Van Buren), or Gen. Jackson must fall. He was asked if any person were present during the conversation? He replied, that there were several present, and when asked if he recollected one of them, he replied that he did not. When asked if any one advised him to shoot Gen. Jackson, or say that it ought to be done? He replied, I do not like to say. On being pressed on this point, he said no one in particular had advised him.

"He further stated, that believing the President to be the source of all his difficulties, he was still fixed in his purpose to kill him, and if his successor pursued the same course, to put him out of the way also-and declared that no power in this country could punish him for having done so, because it would be resisted by the powers of Europe, as well as of this country. He also stated, that he had been long in correspondence with the powers of Europe, and that his family had been wrongfully deprived of the crown of England, and that he should vet live to regain it—and that he considered the President of the United States nothing more than his clerk.

"We now think proper to add, that the young man appears perfectly tranquil and unconcerned, as to the final result, and seems to anticipate no punishment for what he has done. The above contains the leading, and literally expressed facts of the whole conversation we had with him, which continued at least two hours. The questions were frequently repeated at different stages of the examination; and presented in various forms.'

It is clearly to be seen from this medical examination of the man, that this attempted assassination of the President, was one of those cases of which history presents many instances -a diseased mindacted upon by a general outcry against a public man. Lawrence was in the particular condition to be acted upon by what he heard against General Jackson:-a workman out of employment-needy-idle-mentally morbid; and with reason enough to argue regularly from false premises. He heard the President accused of breaking up the labor of the country! and believed it-of making money scarce! and he believed it-of producing the distress! and believed it-of being-a tyrant! and believed it-of being an obstacle to all relief! and believed it. And coming to a regular conclusion from all these beliefs, he attempted to do what he believed the state of things required him to do-take the life of the man whom he considered the sole cause of his own and the general calamity—and the sole obstacle to his own and the general happiness. Hallucination of mind was evident; and the wretched victim of a dreadful delusion was afterwards treated as insane, and never brought to trial. But the circumstance made a deep impression upon the public feeling, and irresistibly carried many minds to the belief in a superintending Providence, manifested in the extraordinary case of two pistols in succession—so well loaded, so coolly handled, and which afterwards fired with solution. Mr. King's answer would necessarily such readiness, force, and precision-missing fire, each in its turn, when levelled eight feet at the President's heart.

CHAPTER CXXII.

ALABAMA EXPUNGING RESOLUTIONS.

MR. KING, of Alabama, presented the preamble and joint resolution of the general assembly of his State, entreating their senators in Congress to use their "untiring efforts" to cause to be expunged from the journal of the Senate, the resolve condemnatory of President Jackson, for the removal of the deposits. Mr. Clay desired to know, before any order was taken on these resolutions, whether the senator presenting them, proposed to make any motion in relation to expunging the journal? This inquiry was made in a way to show that Mr. King was to meet resistance to his motion if he attempted it. The expunging process was extremely distasteful to the senators whose act was proposed to be stigmatized; -and they now began to be sensitive at its mention .- When Mr. Benton first gave notice of his intention to move it, his notice was looked upon as an idle menace, which would end in nothing. Now it was becoming a | To a single human being he had said that be serious proceeding. The States were taking i up. Several of them, through their legislatures —Alabama, Mississippi, New Jersey, New-York North Carolina-had already given the fatal in. structions; and it was certain that more would follow. Those of Alabama were the first presented; and it was felt necessary to make head against them from the beginning. Hence, the interrogatory put by Mr. Clay to Mr. King-the inquiry whether he intended to move an expunging resolution ?-and the subsequent motion to lay the resolutions of the State upon the table if he answered negatively. Now it was not the intention of Mr. King to move the expunging resolution. It was not his desire to take that husiness out of the hands of Mr. Benton, who had conceived it-made a speech for it-given notice of it at the last session as a measure for the present one-and had actually given notice at the present session of his intention to offer the retherefore, be in the negative, and Mr. Clay's motion then became regular to lay it upon the table. Mr. Benton, therefore, felt himself called upon to answer Mr. Clay, and to recall to the recollection of the Senate what took place at the time the sentence of condemnation had passed; and rose and said:

"He had then (at the time of passing the condemnatory resolution), in his place, given immediate notice that he should commence a series of motions for the purpose of expunging the resolutions from the journals. He had then made use of the word expunge, in contradisting tion to the word repeal, or the word reverse, because it was his opinion then, and that opinion had been confirmed by all his subsequent reflection, that repeal or reversal of the resolution would not do adequate justice. To do that would require a complete expurgation of the journal. It would require that process which is denominated expunging, by which, to the present, and to all future times, it would be indicated that that had been placed upon the journals which should never have gone there. He had given that notice, after serious reflection. that it might be seen that the Senate was trampling the constitution of the United States under foot; and not only that, but also the very forms, to say nothing of the substance, of all criminal justice.

"He had given this notice in obedience to the dictates of his bosom, which were afterwards sustained by the descision of his head, without consultation with any other person, but after conference only with himself and his God should do it, but he had not one. In the ordinary rout one was more ready to cons and to defer to their opinion there were some occasions council with no man, but too without regard to consequenbeen a matter of entire indiffe the whole Senate risen as on a determination to give a una him. It would have matte would not have deferred to Actuated by these feelings h of his intention in the mont obedience to that determinat last day of the session, laid the table, in order to keep th

"This brought him to the : tion proposed. The presents tions of the legislature of A fit and proper occasion to give which he had already inform: given to many members of th said that he should bring forv at the earliest convenient time evening, when he saw the at made to give to a proceeding the Post Office Committee, the unanimous consent of t legislative direction had been form, by one of the senators lina, so as to make it a procee sons, in contradistinction to tl embodied in the report; when persons assailed by one of th South Carolina, in such a man any possibility of doubt conce when he discovered that the obje men was impeachment in substa he did at once form the deter notice this morning of his interesolution at the earliest conve "This was his answer to th had been proposed. "Mr. King, of Alabama, said to hear the question of the he from Kentucky, as he did not inquiry: for he had supposed it stood by every member of the sentiments were in regard to struction. The legislature of A structed him to pursue a partic he should obey their instruction to the resolution to which the le; he could merely say that he vo the time it was adopted by the opinion as to it was then, as we fectly understood. If the Missouri [Mr. Benton] decline subject forward relative to the punging the resolution in que journal of the Senate, he, hin some proper time, do so, and als on the great and important que right of instruction. Now, tha ie States were taking i hrough their legislatures New Jersey, New-York lready given the fatal incertain that more would ama were the first prenecessary to make head ginning. Hence, the intery to Mr. King-the inquid to move an expunging ubsequent motion to lay State upon the table if he Now it was not the inmove the expunging renis desire to take that bus of Mr. Benton, who had peech for it-given notice as a measure for the pretually given notice at the intention to offer the reanswer would necessarily, negative, and Mr. Clay's egular to lay it upon the erefore, felt himself called lay, and to recall to the nate what took place at ce of condemnation had said:

> the time of passing the ion), in his place, given imshould commence a series surpose of expunging the journals. He had then expunge, in contradistinceal, or the word reverse, inion then, and that opinion y all his subsequent reflecreversal of the resolution tate justice. To do that mplete expurgation of the equire that process which iging, by which, to the pree times, it would be indieen placed upon the jourever have gone there. He e, after serious reflection, een that the Senate was ution of the United States only that, but also the very g of the substance, of all his notice in obedience to bosom, which were afterthe descision of his head, with any other person, but with himself and his God. being he had said that he should do it, but he had not consulted with any one. In the ordinary routine of business, no one was more ready to consult with his friends. and to defer to their opinions, than he was; but there were some occasions on which he held council with no man, but took his own course. without regard to consequences. It would have heen a matter of entire indifference with him, had the whole Senate risen as one man, and declared a determination to give a unanimous vote against him. It would have mattered nothing. He would not have deferred to any human being. Actuated by these feelings he had given notice of his intention in the month of May; and in obedience to that determination he had, on the last day of the session, laid his resolution on the table, in order to keep the matter alive.

This brought him to the answer to the question proposed. The presentation of the resolutions of the legislature of Alabama afforded a fit and proper occasion to give that public notice which he had already informally and privately given to many members of the Senate. He had said that he should bring forward his resolution at the earliest convenient time. And yesterday evening, when he saw the attempt which was made to give to a proceeding emanating from the Post Office Committee, and to which, by the unanimous consent of that committee, a legislative direction had been assigned, a new form, by one of the senators from South Carolina, so as to make it a proceeding against persons, in contradistinction to the public matters embodied in the report; when he heard these persons assailed by one of the senators from South Carolina, in such a manner as to prevent any possibility of doubt concerning them; and when he discovered that the object of these gentle men was impeachment in substance, if not in form, he did at once form the determination to give notice this morning of his intention to move his resolution at the earliest convenient period.

"This was his answer to the question which had been proposed.

"Mr. King, of Alabama, said he was surprised to hear the question of the honorable senator from Kentucky, as he did not expect such an inquiry: for he had supposed it was well understood by every member of the Senate what his sentiments were in regard to the right of instruction. The legislature of Alabama had instructed him to pursue a particular course, and he should obey their instructions. With regard to the resolution to which the legislature alluded, he could merely say that he voted against it at the time it was adopted by the Senate. His opinion as to it was then, as well as now, perfectly understood. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Benton] declined bringing the subject forward relative to the propriety of expunging the resolution in question from the journal of the Senate, he, himself should, at some proper time, do so, and also say something on the great and important question as to the right of instruction. Now, that might be admitted in its fullest extent. He held his place there, subject to the control of the legislature of Alabama, and whenever their instructions reached him, he should be governed by them. He made this statement without entering into the consideration of the propriety or impropriety of senators exercising their own judgment as to the course they deemed most proper to pursue. For himself, never having doubted the right of a legislature to instruct their senators in Congress, he should consider himself culpable if he did not carry their wishes into effect, when properly expressed. And he had hoped there would have been no expression of the Senate at this time, as he was not disposed to enter into a discussion then, for particular reasons, which it was not necessary he should state.

"As to the propriety of acting on the subject then, that would depend upon the opinions of gentlemen as to the importance, the great importance, of having the journal of the Senate freed from what many supposed to be an unconstitutional act of the Senate, although the majority of it thought otherwise. He would now say that, if no one should bring forward a proposition to get the resolution expunged, he, feeling himself bound to obey the opinions of the legislature, should do so, and would vote for it. If no precedent was to be found for such an act of the Senate, he should most unhesitatingly vote for expunging the resolution from the journal of the Senate, in such manner as should be justified by precedent.

"Mr. Clay said the honorable member from Alabama had risen in his place, and presented to the Senate two resolutions, adopted by the legislature of his State, instructing him and his colleague to use their untiring exertions to cause to be expunged from the journals of the Senate certain resolutions passed during the last session of Congress, on the subject of the removal of the deposits from the Bank of the United States. The resolutions of Alabama had been presented; they were accompanied by no motion to carry the intentions of that State into effect; nor were they accompanied by any intimation from the honorable senator, who presented them, of his intention to make any proposition, in relation to them, to the Senate. Under these circumstances, the inquiry was made by him (Mr. C.) of the senator from Alabama, which he thought the occasion called for. The inquiry was a very natural one, and he had learned with unfeigned surprise that the senator did not expect it. He would now say to the senator from Alabama, that of him, and of him alone, were these inquiries made; and with regard to the reply made by another senator (Mr. Benton), he would further say, that his relations to him were not such as to enable him to know what were that senator's intentions, at any time, and on any subject, nor was it necessary he should know them.

"He had nothing further to say, than to express the hope that the senator from Alabama would, for the present, withdraw the resolutions he had presented; and if, after he had consulted precedents, and a careful examination of the constitution of the United States, he finds that he can consistently with them, make any propositions for the action of the Senate, he (Mr. C.) would be willing to receive the resolutions, and pay to them all that attention and respect which the proceedings of one of the States of this Union merited. If the gentleman did not pursue that course, he should feel himself bound, by every consideration, by all the obligations which bound a public man to discharge his duty to his God, his country, and his own honor, to resist such an unconstitutional procedure as the reception of these resolutions, without the expressed wish of the legislature of Alabama, and without any intimation from her senators, of any proposition to be made on them, at the very threshold. He did hope that, for the present, the gentleman would withdraw these resolutions, and at a proper time present them with some substantive proposition for the consideration of the Senate. If he did not, the debate must go on, to the exclusion of the important one commenced yesterday, and which every gentleman expected to be continued to-day, as he should in such case feel it necessary to submit a motion for the Senate to decide whether, under present circumstances, the resolutions could be received.

"Mr. Clay declared that when such a resolution should be offered he should discharge the duty which he owed to his God, his country and

"Mr. King of Alabama, had felt an unwillingness from the first to enter into this discussion for reasons which would be understood by every gentleman. It was his wish, and was so understood by one or two friends whom he had consulted, that the resolutions should lie on the table for the present, until the debate on another subject was disposed of. In reply to the senator from Kentucky, he must say that he could not, situated as he was, accede to his proposition. His object certainly was to carry into effect the wishes of the legislature of his State; and he, as well as his colleague, felt bound to obey the will of the sovereign State of Alabama, whenever made known to them. He certainly should, at a proper time, present a distinct proposition in relation to these resolutions for the consideration of the Senate; and the senator from Kentucky could then have an opportunity of discharging "his duty to his God, to his country, and his own honor,' in a manner most consistent with his own sense of propriety. "Mr. Clay would not renew the intimation of any intention on his part, to submit a motion to the Senate, if there was any probability that the senator from Alabama would withdraw the resolutions he had submitted. He now gave notice that, if the senator did not think fit to withdraw them, he should feel it his duty to submit a proposition which would most probably lead to a osity: I wish to see with what ingenuity of any debate, and prevent the one commenced yester. day from being resumed to-day.

Mr. Calhoun moved that the resolution he laid upon the table, to give the senator from Alabama [Mr. King], an opportunity to prepare a resolution to accomplish the meditated purpose of rescinding the former resolutions of the Senate. I confess, sir (observed Mr. C.), I feel some curiosity to see how the senator from Alabama will reconcile such a proceeding with the free and independent existence of a Senate. I feel sir. a great curiosity to hear how that gentleman proposes that the journals are to be kept, if such a procedure is allowed to take effect. I should like to know how he proposes to repeal a journal. By what strange process he would destroy facts, and annihilate events and things which are now the depositories of history. When he shall have satisfied my curiosity on this particular then there is another thing I am anxious to be informed upon, and that is, what form, what strange and new plan of proceeding, will he suggest for the adoption of the Senate? I will tell him; I will show him the only resource that is left, the point to which he necessarily comes, and that is this: he will be obliged to declare, in his resolution that the principle upon which the Senate acted was not correct; that it was a false and erroneous principle. And let me ask, what was that principle, which now, it seems, is to be destroyed? The principle on which the Senate acted the principle which that gentleman engages to overthrow, is this: 'we have a right to express our opinion.' He will be compelled to deny that; or, perhaps he may take refuge from such a predicament by qualifying his subversion of this first principle of legislative freedom. And how will be qualify the denial of this principle? that is, how will he deny it, and yet apparently maintain it? He has only one resource left and that is, to pretend that we have a right w express our opinions, but not of the President This is the end and aim; yes, this is the inevitable consequence and result of such an extraordinary, such a monstrous procedure.

"So then, it is come to this, that the Senate has no right to express its opinion in relation to the Executive? A distinction is now set up be tween the President and all other officers, and the gentleman is prepared with a resolution to give effect and energy to the distinction; and now, for the first time that such a doctrine has ever been heard on the American soil, he is prepared to profess and publish, in the face of the American people, that old and worn-out dogma of old and worn-out nations, 'the King can dow wrong!' that his officers, his ministers, are alone responsible; that we shall be permitted perhaps to utter our opinions of them; but a unanimous opinion expressed by the Senate, in relation to the President himself, is no longer suffered to exist, is no longer permitted to be given; it must be expunged from the journals.

I confess I am agitated with an intense cur-

ful disguise the Senate is to dumb legislation of Bonapa very question brings on the proposition of expunging ou question in which the expur tive freedom and independen I confess I long to see the to which the gentleman will tion of the utmost magnitud see it brought on; two sens ton, and King of Alabama] I selves to bring it forward. too soon-they cannot too so rible reality of the condition try is reduced. I hope they lay; let them hasten in their lose no time in their effort t nate, and dissolve the system constitution. Yes, I entreat deliberate purpose to a resolve given origin to a question perhaps is, in its effects and to er and more radical importance more important than that of that of the Post Office, and anxious to see how far they y doctrine they have advanced: slaving and as despotic as any by the Autocrat of all the Russi an opportunity, I move to la on the table, and I promise ther move their resolution, I will be

"Mr. Clay said that the proj the resolutions was a prelimin the question to which he had a attention of the Senate. The had been very irregular, and no der. He had contended, from purpose of avoiding an interfe hate on another subject, that tl Alabama resolutions should no that time. The senator from refused to withdraw these res compelled to a course which w bability, lead to a protracted de

Mr. Clay then submitted th "Resolved, That the resolution lature of Alabama, presented from that State, ought not to be the Senate, inasmuch as they ar to the Senate, nor contain any re be laid before the Senate; and as that which those resolutions done, cannot be done without vi stitution of the United States."

"Mr. Calhoun here moved to tions on the table, which moti dence of Mr. Clay's, and was He withdrew it, however, at the

Mr. Benton said an objection the resolutions of Alabama, rom South Carolina and the sen ware, to which he would briefly

one commenced yester-

d to-day. 1 that the resolution be give the senator from in opportunity to prepare ish the meditated purpose r resolutions of the Senate. Mr. C.), I feel some cue senator from Alabama proceeding with the free ence of a Senate. I feel, hear how that gentleman nals are to be kept, if such to take effect. I should proposes to repeal a joure process he would destroy gents and things which are f history. When he shall riosity on this particular, hing I am anxious to beinis, what form, what strange ding, will he suggest for the e? I will tell him; I will source that is left, the point ly comes, and that is this: declare, in his resolution, on which the Senate acted it was a false and erroneet me ask, what was that it seems, is to be destroyn which the Senate acted hat gentleman engages to we have a right to express rill be compelled to deny may take refuge from such alifying his subversion of legislative freedom. And he denial of this principle? deny it, and yet apparently nas only one resource left, nd that we have a right to , but not of the President m; yes, this is the inevitable ilt of such an extraordinary, ocedure. me to this, that the Senate ess its opinion in relation to listinction is now set up be t and all other officers, and epared with a resolution w rgy to the distinction; and me that such a doctrine has the American soil, he is pre-I publish, in the face of the at old and worn-out dogma nations, 'the King candom icers, his ministers, are alone e shall be permitted perhaps is of them; but a unanimous by the Senate, in relation to elf, is no longer suffered to ermitted to be given; it must he journals.

itated with an intense cure with what ingenuity of art

ful disguise the Senate is to be reduced to the dumb legislation of Bonaparte's Senate. This very question brings on the issue. This very proposition of expunging our resolutions is the question in which the expunging of our legislative freedom and independence is to be agitated. I confess I long to see the strange extremities to which the gentleman will come. It is a question of the utmost magnitude; I an anxious to see it brought on; two senators [Messrs. Benton and King of Alabama] have pledged themselves to bring it forward. They cannot do it too soon—they cannot too soon expose the horrible reality of the condition to which our country is reduced. I hope they will make no delay; let them hasten in their course; let them lose no time in their effort to expunge the Senate, and dissolve the system of government and constitution. Yes, I entreat them to push their deliberate purpose to a resolve. They have now given origin to a question than which none perhaps is, in its effects and tendencies, of deeper and more radical importance; it is a question more important than that of the bank, or than that of the Post Office, and I am exceedingly anxious to see how far they will carry out the doctrine they have advanced; a doctrine as enslaving and as despotic as any that is maintained by the Autocrat of all the Russias. To give them an opportunity, I move to lay the resolutions on the table, and I promise them that, when they move their resolution, I will be ready to take it

"Mr. Clay said that the proposition to receive the resolutions was a preliminary one, and was the question to which he had at first invited the attention of the Senate. The debate, certainly, had been very irregular, and not strictly in order. He had contended, from the first, for the purpose of avoiding an interference with a debate on another subject, that the subject of the Alabama resolutions should not be agitated at that time. The senator from Alabama having refused to withdraw these resolutions, he was compelled to a course which would, in all probability, lead to a protracted debate.

"Mr. Clay then submitted the following: "Resolved. That the resolutions of the legislature of Alabama, presented by the senator from that State, ought not to be acted upon by the Senate, inasmuch as they are not addressed to the Senate, nor contain any request that they be laid before the Senate; and inasmuch, also, as that which those resolutions direct should be done, cannot be done without violating the constitution of the United States." "Mr. Calhoun here moved to lay the resolutions on the table, which motion took precedence of Mr. Clay's, and was not debatable. He withdrew it, however, at the request of Mr. Clayton.

"Mr. Benton said an objection had been raised to the resolutions of Alabama, by the senator rom South Carolina and the senator from Dela-

he refer those gentlemen to the course of their own reading? he would refer them to the case in a State contiguous to South Carolina, where certain proceedings of its legislature were publicly burnt. (The journal of the Yazoo fraud. in Georgia.) Need he refer them to the case of Wilkes? where the British House of Commons expunged certain proceedings from their journal expunged! not by the childish process of sending out for every copy and cutting a leaf from each, but by a more effectual process. He would describe the modus as he read it in the parliamentary history. It was this: There was a total suspension of business in the House, and the clerk, taking the official journal, the original record of its proceedings, and reading the clause to be expunged, obliterated it, word after word, not by making a Saint Andrew's cross over the clause, as is sometimes done in old accounts, but by completely erasing out every letter. This is the way expunging is done, and this is what I propose to get done in the Senate, through the power of the people, upon this lawless condemnation of President Jackson: and no system of tactics or manœuvres shall prevent me from following up the design according to the notice given yesterday. "Mr. King of Alabama, in reply, said that when the proper time arrived—and he should use his own time, on his own responsibility-he would bring forward the resolution, of which the senator from Missouri had given notice, if not prevented by the previous action of that gentleman. He had no doubt of the power of the Senate to repeal any resolution it had adopted. What! repeal facts? asked the senator from South Carolina. He would ask that gentleman if they had it not in their power to retrace their steps when they have done wrong? If they had it not in their power to correct their own journal when asserting what was not true? The democratic party of the country had spoken, pronounced judgment upon the facts stated in that journal. They had declared that these facts were not true; that the condemnation pronounced against the Chief Magistrate, for having violated the constitution of the United States, was not true; and it was high time that it was stricken from the journal it disgraced.

"Mr. Calhoun observed that the senator from Alabama having made some personal allusions to him, he felt bound to notice them, although not at all disposed to intrude upon the patience of the Senate. The senator had said that he (Mr. C.) was truly connected with party. Now, if by 'party' the gentleman meant that he was enlisted in any political scheme, that he desired to promote the success of any party, or was anxious to see any particular man elevated to the Chief Magistracy, he did him great injustice. It was a long time since he (Mr. C.) had taken any active part in the political affairs of the country. The senator need only to have looked back to his vote, for the last eight years, to have been ware, to which he would briefly reply. Need satisfied that he (Mr. C.) had voluntarily put himself in the very small minority to which he belonged, and that he had done this to serve the gallant and patriotic State of South Carolina. Would the gentleman say that he did not step forward in defence of South Carolina, in the great and magnanimous stand which she took in defence of her rights? Now, he wished the senator to understand him, that he had put himself in a minority of at least one to a hundred; that he had abandoned party voluntarily, freely; and he would tell every senator—for he was constrained to speak of himself, and therefore he should speak boldly-he would not turn upon his heel for the administration of the affairs of this government. He believed that such was the hold which corruption had obtained in this government, that any man who should undertake to reform it would not be sustained."

Mr. King of Alabama moved that the resolutions be printed, which motion was superseded by a motion to lay it on the table, which prevailed-yeas twenty-seven, nays twenty-as fol-

"YEAS .- Messrs. Bell, Bibb, Black, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Ewing, Frelinghuysen, Goldsborough, Hendricks, Kent, Knight, Leigh, Mangum, Naudain, Poindexter, Porter, Prentiss, Robbins, Silsbee, Smith, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, Tyler. Waggaman, Webster.

"Nays.—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Cuthbert, Grundy, Hill, Kane, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Linn, McKean, Moore, Morris, Preston, Robinson, Shepley, Tallmadge, Tipton, White, Wright."

And thus the resolutions of a sovereign State, in favor of expunging what it deemed to be a lawless sentence passed upon the President, were refused even a reception and a printing-a circumstance which seemed to augur badly for the final success of the series of expunging motions which I had pledged myself to make. But, in fact, it was not discouraging-but the contrary. It strengthened the conviction that such conduct would sooner induce the change of senators in the democratic States, and permit the act to be done.

CHAPTER CXXIII.

THE EXPUNGING RESOLUTION.

From the moment of the Senate's condemnation of General Jackson, Mr. Benton gave notice of his intention to move the expunction of the ed by seeing the scourse which the public mind sentence from the journal, periodically and continually until the object should be effected or his political life come to its end. In conformity to this notice, he made his formal motion at the session '34-'35; and in these words:

" Resolved. That the resolution adopted by the Senate, on the 28th day of March, in the year 1834 in the following words: 'Resolved That the President, in the late executive proceedings in relation to the public revenue, has assumed upon himself authority and power not conferred by the constitution and laws, but in derogation of both,' be, and the same hereby is ordered to be expunged from the journals of the Senate; because the said resolution is illegal and unjust, of evil example, indefinite and vague, expressing a criminal charge without specification; and was irregularly and unconstitutionally adopted by the Senate, in subversion of the rights of defence which belong to an accused and impeachable officer; and at a time and under circumstances to endanger the political rights, and to injure the pecuniary interests of the people of the United States.'

This proposition was extremely distasteful to the Senate-to the majority which passed the sentence on General Jackson; and Mr. Southard senator from New Jersey, spoke their sentiments, and his own, when he thus bitterly characterized it as an indictment which the Senste itself was required to try, and to degrade itself in its own condemnation,-he said:

"The object of this resolution (said Mr. Sl is not to obtain an expression from the Senate that their former opinions were erroneous, nor that the Executive acted correctly in relation to the public treasury. It goes further, and denounces the act of the Senate as so unconstantional, unjustifiable, and offensive, that the endence of it ought not to be permitted to remain upon the records of the government. Itism indictment against the Senate. The senator from Missouri calls upon us to sit in judgment upon our own act, and warns us that we can save ourselves from future and lasting denuciation and reproach only by pronouncing our own condemnation by our votes. He assures us that he has no desire or intention to degrade the Senate, but the position in which he would place us is one of deep degradation-degradation of the most humiliating character-which not only acknowledges error, and admits inst cusable misconduct in this legislative branch d the government, but bows it down before the majesty of the Executive, and makes us offer incense to his infallibility."

The bitterness of this self trial was aggravawas taking. A current, stro constantly swelling, was so President and against the S tions from the legislatures of Alabama, Mississippi, New J lina-had already arrived inst tors to vote for the expur Benton proposed. In the r not yet made his leading spe motion; and he judged this time to do so, in order to pro the elections of the ensuing cordingly now spoke as follow "Mr. Benton then rose a Senate in support of his moti the resolution which he had o solved upon, as he had hereto out consultation with any pe solved upon without great d own mind. The criminating it was his object to expunge, the Senate, December 26th, 18 from Kentucky who introduc commenced a discussion of it o was continued through the m and February, and to the en month of March. The vote v the 28th of March; and about after he announced to the Sen to commence a series of motion the resolution from the journ were nearly four months for co the decision was expected; a anxiously considered, during th difficulties, and all the proprie which he meditated. Was the to clear the journal of the res itself? The convictions of hi him that it was. Was expurga mode? Yes; he was thorough that was the proper mode of pi case. For the criminating reso wished to get rid of combined teristics of a case which requi obliteration: for it was a case, otherauon: for it was a case, of the exercise of power with without even jurisdiction; illega unjust. Other modes of annull tion, as rescinding, reversing, i not be proper in such a case; mply rightful jurisdiction, a la legal action, though an erron mal, periodically and conct should be effected, or to its end. In conformity his formal motion at the n these words:

Vol. I.—34

ne resolution adopted by 8th day of March, in the owing words: 'Resolved. n the late executive proo the public revenue, has f authority and power not stitution and laws, but in e, and the same hereby is, ged from the journals of the said resolution is illeil example, indefinite and criminal charge without irregularly and unconstituhe Senate, in subversion of which belong to an accused fficer; and at a time and s to endanger the political the pecuniary interests of nited States."

was extremely distasteful to majority which passed the Jackson; and Mr. Southard, Jersey, spoke their sentiwhen he thus bitterly clandictment which the Senate to try, and to degrade itself ation,—he said:

his resolution (said Mr. S). expression from the Senate pinions were erroneous, nor acted correctly in relation to y. It goes further, and dethe Senate as so unconstitu-, and offensive, that the eniot to be permitted to remain of the government. It is a t the Senate. The senator s upon us to sit in judgment , and warns us that we can m future and lasting denumach only by pronouncing of a by our votes. He assured desire or intention to degrade e position in which he would f deep degradation-degrada humiliating character-which edges error, and admits inceet in this legislative branch d but bows it down before the Executive, and makes us offer Illibility."

of this self trial was aggravatacourse which the public mind was taking. A current, strong and steady, and constantly swelling, was setting in for the President and against the Senate; and resolutions from the legislatures of several States-Alabama, Mississippi, New Jersey, North Carolina-had already arrived instructing their senators to vote for the expurgation which Mr. Benton proposed. In the mean time he had not yet made his leading speech in favor of his motion; and he judged this to be the proper time to do so, in order to produce its effects on the elections of the ensuing summer; and accordingly now spoke as follows:

"Mr. Benton then rose and addressed the Senate in support of his motion. He said that the resolution which he had offered, though resolved upon, as he had heretofore stated, without consultation with any person, was not resolved upon without great deliberation in his own mind. The criminating resolution, which it was his object to expunge, was presented to the Senate, December 26th, 1833. The senator from Kentucky who introduced it [Mr. Clay]. commenced a discussion of it on that day, which was continued through the months of January and February, and to the end, nearly, of the month of March. The vote was taken upon it the 28th of March; and about a fortnight thereafter he announced to the Senate his intention to commence a series of motions for expunging the resolution from the journal. Here, then, were nearly four months for consideration; for the decision was expected; and he had very anxiously considered, during that period, all the difficulties, and all the proprieties, of the step which he meditated. Was the intended motion to clear the journal of the resolution right in itself? The convictions of his judgment told him that it was. Was expurgation the proper mode? Yes; he was thoroughly satisfied that that was the proper mode of proceeding in this case. For the criminating resolution which he wished to get rid of combined all the characteristics of a case which required erasure and obliteration: for it was a case, as he believed, of the exercise of power without authority, without even ju-sdiction; illegal, irregular, and mjust. Other modes of annulling the resolution, as rescinding, reversing, repealing, could not be proper in such a case; for they would mply rightful jurisdiction, a lawful authority,

All that he denied. He denied the authority of the Senate to pass such a resolution at all; and he affirmed that it was unjust, and contrary to the truth, as well as contrary to law. This being his view of the resolution, he held that the true and proper course, the parliamentary course of proceeding in such a case, was to expunge it.

But, said Mr. B., it is objected that the Senate has no right to expunge any thing from its journal; that it is required by the constitution to keep a journal; and, being so required, could not destroy any part of it. This, said Mr. B., is sticking in the bark; and in the thinnest bark in which a shot, even the smallest, was ever lodged. Various are the meanings of the word keep, used as a verb. To keep a journal is to write down, daily, the history of what you do. For the Senate to keep a journal is to cause to be written down, every day, the account of its proceedings; and, having done that, the constitutional injunction is satisfied. The constitution was satisfied by entering this criminating resolution on the journal; it will be equally satisfied by entering the expunging resolution on the same journal. In each case the Senate keeps a journal of its own proceedings.

It is objected, also, that we have no right to destroy a part of the journal; and that to expunge is to destroy and to prevent the expunged part from being known in future. Not so the fact, said Mr. B. The matter expunged is not destroyed. It is incorporated in the expunging resolution, and lives as long as that lives; the only effect of the expurgation being to express, in the most emphatic manner, the opinion that such matter ought never to have been put in the journal.

Mr. B. said he would support these positions by authority, the authority of eminent examples; and would cite two cases, out of a multitude that might be adduced, to show that expunging was the proper course, the parliamenmentary course, in such a case as the one now before the Senate, and that the expunged matter was incorporated and preserved in the ex punging resolution.

Mr. B. then read, from a volume of British Parliamentary History, the celebrated case of the Middlesex election, in which the resolution to expel the famous John Wilkes was expunged legal action, though an erroneous judgment. | from the journal, but preserved in the expurga-

Vol. I.—34

now as if it had nover been blotted out from the journals of the British House of Commons. The resolution ran in these words: "That the resolution of the House of the 17th February, 1769, 'that John Wilkes, Esq., having been, in this session of Parliament, expelled this House, was and is incapable of being elected a member to serve in the present Parliament,' be expunged from the journals of this House, as being subversive of the rights of the whole body of electors of this kingdom." Such, said Mr. B., were the terms of the expunging resolution in the case of the Middlesex election, as it was annually introduced from 1769 to 1782; when it was finally passed by a vote of near three to one, and the clause ordered to be expunged was blotted out of the journal, and obliterated, by the clerk at the table, in the presence of the whole House, which remained silent, and all business suspended until the obliteration was complete. Yet the history of the case is not lost. Though blotted out of one part of the journal, it is saved in another; and here, at the distance of half a century, and some thousand miles from London, the whole case is read as

tory resolution, so as to be just as well read formed upon it. Having given a precedent from British parliamentary history, Mr. B. would give another from American history; not, indeed, from the Congress of the assembled States, but from one of the oldest and most respectable States of the Union: he spoke of Massachusetts, and of the resolution adopted in the Senate of that State during the late war, adverse to the celebration of our national victories; and which, some ten years afterwards, was expunged from the journals by a solemn vote of the Senate.

fully as if no such operation had ever been per-

A year ago, said Mr. B., the Senate tried President Jackson; now the Senate itself is on trial nominally before itself; but in reality before America, Europe, and posterity. We shall give our voices in our own case; we shall vote for or against this motion; and the entry upon the record will be according to the majority of voices. But that is not the end, but the beginning of our trial. We shall be judged by others, by the public, by the present age, and by all posterity! The proceedings of this case, and of this day, will not be limited to the present age; they will go down to posterity, and to the latest ages. President Jackson is not a character to be forgotten in history. His name is not to be confined to the dry catalogue and official nomenclature of mere American Presidents Like the great Romans who attained the consulship, not by the paltry arts of electioneering but through a series of illustrious deeds, his name will live, not for the offices he filled, but for the deeds which he performed. He is the first President that has ever received the condemnation of the Senate for the violation of the laws and the constitution, the first whose name is borne upon the journals of the American 80nate for the violation of that constitution which he is sworn to observe, and of those laws which he is bound to see faithfully executed. Such a condemnation cannot escape the observation of history. It will be read, considered, judged when the men of this day, and the passions of this hour, shall have passed to eternal repose.

Before he proceeded to the exposition of the case which he intended to make, he wished to avail himself of an argument which had been conclusive elsewhere, and which he trusted could not be without effect in this Senate. It was the argument of public opinion. In the case of the Middlesex election, it had been decisive with the British House of Commons; in the Massachusetts case, it had been decisive with the Senate of that State. In both these cases many gentlemen yielded their private opinions to public sentiment; and public sentiment having been well pronounced in the case now before the Senate, he had a right to look for the same deferential respect for it here which had been shown elsewhere."

Mr. B. then took up a volume of British parliamentary history for the year 1782, the 24 volume, and read various passages from pages 1407, 1408, 1410, 1411, to show the stress which had been laid on the argument of public opinion in favor of expunging the Middlesex resolutions; and the deference which was paid to it by the House, and by members who had, until then opposed the motion to expunge. He read first from Mr. Wilkes' opening speech, on renewing his annual motion for the fourteenth time. follows:

"If the people of England, sir, have at any time explicitly and fully declared an opinion respecting a momentous constitutional question, it has been in regard to the Middlesex election in 1768." * * * * "T heard in a more clear and d on this point of the first n electors of the kingdom, as be heard favorably."

He then read from Mr. Fox had heretofore opposed lution, but now yielded to it voice of the people.

"He (Mr. Fox) had turne in his mind, he was still of a solution which gentlemen 1 was founded on proper princi "Though he opposed the m little anxiety for the event o when he found the voice of against the privilege, as he be at present, he would not pres * * * * "The people ha had declared their sentimer and had taught Parliament to of their constituents."

Having read these passage: were the sentiments of an E old school. Mr. Fox was a school. He acknowledged the ple to instruct their represents to the general voice himself, th instructed; and he uses the re sion which acknowledges the d to obey the will of the people. clared their sentiments to Par taught Parliament to listen to constituents." This, said Mr. ago; it was spoken by a memb who, besides being the first d was at that time Secretary : knowledged the duty of Parlia voice of the people. The son realm, and only not a peer hir was not the eldest son, he st the great democratic principle bottom of all representative gov this, after such an example, w nators be unwilling to obey the they require people to teach Cor which Mr. Fox says the Eng taught their Parliament fifty y voice of the people of the Un been heard on this subject. declared it. The vote of many declared it. From the confines

t Jackson is not a character tory. His name is not to dry catalogue and official ere American Presidents. ns who attained the conaltry arts of electioneering. s of illustrious deeds his or the offices he filled, but he performed. He is the nas ever received the connate for the violation of the ution, the first whose name urnals of the American So. 1 of that constitution which ve, and of those laws which faithfully executed. Such not escape the observation be read, considered, judged is day, and the passions of e passed to eternal repose. ed to the exposition of the ided to make, he wished to argument which had been re, and which he trusted ut effect in this Senate. It of public opinion. In the ex election, it had been detish House of Commons; in case, it had been decisive that State. In both these emen yielded their private entiment; and public sentivell pronounced in the case ate, he had a right to look itial respect for it here which sewhere."

c up a volume of British parfor the year 1782, the 24 arious passages from pages 411, to show the stress which ie argument of public opinion ng the Middlesex resolutions which was paid to it by the mbers who had, until then n to expunge. He read first opening speech, on renewing for the fourteenth time, as of England, sir, have at any 1 fully declared an opinion ntous constitutional question, rd to the Middlesex election in 1768." * * * * Their voice was never heard in a more clear and distinct manner than on this point of the first magnitude for all the electors of the kingdom, and I trust will now be heard favorably."

He then read from Mr. Fox's speech. Mr. Fox had heretofore opposed the expunging resolution, but now yielded to it in obedience to the voice of the people.

"He (Mr. Fox) had turned the question often in his mind, he was still of opinion that the resolution which gentlemen wanted to expunge was founded on proper principles." * * * * "Though he opposed the motion, he felt very little anxiety for the event of the question; for when he found the voice of the people was against the privilege, as he believed was the case at present, he would not preserve the privilege." * * * * "The people had associated, they had declared their sentiments to Parliament, and had taught Parliament to listen to the voice of their constituents."

Having read these passages, Mr. B. said they were the sentiments of an English whig of the old school. Mr. Fox was a whig of the old school. He acknowledged the right of the people to instruct their representatives. He yielded to the general voice himself, though not specially instructed; and he uses the remarkable expression which acknowledges the duty of Parliament to obey the will of the people. "They had declared their sentiments to Parliament, and had taught Parliament to listen to the voice of their constituents." This, said Mr. B., was fifty years ago; it was spoken by a member of Parliament, who, besides being the first debater of his age, was at that time Secretary at War. He acknowledged the duty of Parliament to obey the voice of the people. The son of a peer of the realm, and only not a peer himself because he was not the eldest son, he still acknowledged the great democratic principle which lies at the bottom of all representative government. After this, after such an example, will American Senators be unwilling to obey the people? Will they require people to teach Congress the lesson which Mr. Fox says the English people had taught their Parliament fifty years ago? The voice of the people of the United States had been heard on this subject. The elections

the voice of the people came rolling in—a swelling tide, rising as it flowed-and covering the capitol with its mountain waves. Can that voice be disregarded? Will members of a republican Congress be less obedient to the voice of the people than were the representatives of a monarchical House of Commons?

Mr. B. then proceeded to the argument of his motion. He moved to expunge the resolution of March 28, 1834, from the journals of the Senate, because it was illegal and unjust; vague and indefinite; a criminal charge without specification; unwarranted by the constitution and laws; subversive of the rights of defence which belong to an accused and impeachable officer; of evil example; and adopted at a time and under circumstances to involve the political rights and the pecuniary interests of the people of the United States in peculiar danger and serious in-

These reasons for expunging the criminating resolution from the journals, Mr. B. said, were not phrases collected and paraded for effect, or strung together for harmony of sound. They were each, separately and individually, substantive reasons; every word an allegation of fact, or of law. Without going fully into the argument now, he would make an exposition which would lay open his meaning, and enable each allegation, whether of law or of fact, to be fully understood, and replied to in the sense intended.

1. Illegal and unjust.—These were the first heads under which Mr. B. would develope his objections, he would say the outline of his objections, to the resolution proposed to be expunged. He held it to be illegal, because it contained a criminal charge, on which the President might be impeached, and for which he might be tried by the Senate. The resolution adopted by the Senate is precisely the first step taken in the House of Representatives to bring on an impeachment. It was a resolution offered by a member in his place, containing a criminal charge against an impeachable officer, debated for a hundred days; and then voted upon by the Senate, and the officer voted to be guilty. This is the precise mode of bringing on an impeachment in the House of Representatives; and, to prove it, Mr. B. would read from a work of approved authority on parliamentary practice; it declared it. The vote of many legislatures de- was from Mr. Jefferson's Manual. Mr. B. then declared it. From the confines of the Republic | read from the Manual, under the section entitled

Impeachment, and from that head of the section entitled accusation. The writer was giving the British Parliamentary practice, to which our own constitution is conformable. "The Commons, as the grand inquest of the nation, became suitors for penal justice. The general course is to pass a resolution containing a criminal charge against the supposed delinquent; and then to direct some member to impeach him by oral accusation at the bar of the House of Lords, in the name of the Commons."

Repeating a clause of what he had read, Mr. B. said the general course is to pass a criminal charge against the supposed delinquent. This is exactly what the Senate did; and what did it do next? Nothing. And why nothing? Because there was nothing to be done by them but to execute the sentence they had passed; and that they could not do. Penal justide was the consequence of the resolution; and a judgment of penalties could not be attempted on such an irregular proceeding. The only kind of penal justice which the Senate could inflict was that of public opinion; it was to ostracize the President, and to expose him to public odium, as a violator of the laws and constitution of his country. Having shown the resolution to be illegal, Mr. B. would pronounce it to be unjust; for he affirmed the resolution to be untrue; he maintained that the President had violated no law, no part of the constitution, in dismissing Mr. Duane from the Treasury, appointing Mr. Taney, or causing the deposits to be removed; for these were the specifications contained in the original resolution, also in the second modification of the resolution, and intended in the third modification, when stripped of specifications, and reduced to a vague and general charge. It was in this shape of a general charge that the resolution passed. No new specifications were even suggested in debate. The alterations were made voluntarily, by the friends of the resolution, at the last moment of the debate, and just when the vote was to be taken. And why were the specifications then dropped? Because no majority could be found to agree in them? or because it was thought prudent to drop the name of the Bank of the United States? or for both these reasons together? Be that as it may said Mr. B., the condemnation of the President, and the support of the bank, were connected in the resolution, and will be indissolubly connected in the public mind; and the President was unjustly condemned in the same resolution that befriended and sustained the cause of the bank. He held the condemnation to be untrue in point of fact, and therefore unjust; for he maintained that there was no breach of the laws and constitution in any thing that President Jackson did, in removing Mr. Duane, or in appointing Mr. Taney, or in causing the deposits to be removed. There was no violation of law, or constitution, in any part of these proceedings; on the contrary, the whole country, and the government itself, was redeemed from the dominion of a great and daring moneyed corporation, by the wisdom and energy of these very proceedings.

2. Vague and indefinite; a criminal charge without specification. Such was the resolution. Mr. B. said, when it passed the Senate; -but such it was not when first introduced, nor even when first altered; in its first and second forms it contained specifications, and these specifications identified the *condemnation of the President with the defence of the bank; in its third form, these specifications were omitted, and no others were substituted; the bank and the resolution stood disconnected on the record but as much connected, in fact, as ever. The resolution was reduced to a vague and indefinite form, on purpose, and in that circumstance, acquired a new character of injustice to President Jackson. His accusers should have specified the law, and the clause in the constitution which was violated; they should have specified the acts which constituted the violation. This was due to the accused, that he might know on what points to defend himself; it was due to the public, that they might know on what points to hold the accusers to their responsibility and to make them accountable for an unjust accusition. To sustain this position, Mr. B. had recourse to history and example, and produced the case of Mr. Giles's accusation of General Hamilton, then Secretary of the Treasury, in the year 1793. Mr. Giles, he said, proceeded in a manly, responsible manner. He specified the law and the alleged violations of the law, so that the friends of General Hamilton could see what to defend, and so as to make himself accountable for the accusation. He specified the law, which he believed to be violated, by its date and its title; and he specified the two instances in which he held that law to have been infringed

Mr. B. said he had a dou this resolution of Mr. Gile to lay the foundation for an General Hamilton; it wa speciality with which these tions should be drawn; r sence of any allegations of intention. The mere vic charged as the offence, as in articles of impeachment as and thus, the absence of a rupt intention in the resolu President Jackson, was no a impeachment character, est in its first and second forr averment, "dangerous to 1 people."

For the purpose of ex vagueness of the resolution ing its connection with the States, demonstrating its cri twice retaining the criminal ous to the liberties of the pe the progressive changes it I fore it could conciliate a ma Mr. B. would exhibit all solutions, and read them sie other, as they appeared bef the first, second, and third were made to wear. They as embryo, or primordial form; their aurelia, or chrysalis st stage, they reached the ultir their imperfect nature.

FIRST FORM.—Decemb

"Resolved, That by dismiss tary of the Treasury, becau contrary to his sense of his the money of the United States the Bank of the United States in conformity with the Presid by appointing his successor t moval, which has been done, t assumed the exercise of a pow sury of the United States no by the constitution and laws, the liberties of the people."

SECOND FORM.—March

"Resolved, That, in taking a responsibility of removing the

nd the President was un. the same resolution that ed the cause of the bank. tion to be untrue in point unjust; for he maintained ach of the laws and conthat President Jackson Juane, or in appointing Mr. re deposits to be removed. n of law, or constitution proceedings; on the conntry, and the government from the dominion of a neved corporation, by the f these very proceedings. efinite; a criminal charge

Such was the resolution, t passed the Senate;-but first introduced, nor even n its first and second forms itions, and these specificacondemnation of the Presie of the bank; in its third ions were omitted, and no ted; the bank and the remeeted on the record, but in fact, as ever. The resoto a vague and indefinite d in that circumstance, acer of injustice to President sers should have specified clause in the constitution, they should have specified tituted the violation. This sed, that he might know on end himself; it was due to might know on what points to their responsibility, and ntable for an unjust accusahis position, Mr. B. had reand example, and produced les's accusation of General cretary of the Treasury, m r. Giles, he said, proceeded sible manner. He specified leged violations of the law, of General Hamilton could and so as to make himself accusation. He specified the ed to be violated, by its date ie specified the two instances at law to have been infringed

Mr. B. said he had a double object in quoting public money from the Bank of the United General Hamilton; it was to show, first, the tions should be drawn; next, to show the absence of any allegations of corrupt or wicked intention. The mere violation of law was charged as the offence, as it was in three of the articles of impeachment against Judge Chase; and thus, the absence of an allegation of corrupt intention in the resolution adopted against President Jackson, was no argument against its impeachment character, especially as exhibited in its first and second form, with the criminal averment, "dangerous to the liberties of the people."

For the purpose of exposing the studied vagueness of the resolution as passed, detecting its connection with the Bank of the United States, demonstrating its criminal character in twice retaining the criminal averment, "dangerous to the liberties of the people," and showing the progressive changes it had to undergo before it could conciliate a majority of the votes, Mr. B. would exhibit all three of the resolutions, and read them side by side of each other as they appeared before the Senate, in the first, second, and third forms which they were made to wear. They appeared first in the embryo, or primordial form; then they assumed their aurelia, or chrysalis state; in the third stage, they reached the ultimate perfection of their imperfect nature.

First Form.—December 26, 1833.

"Resolved, That by dismissing the late Secretary of the Treasury, because he would not, contrary to his sense of his own duty, remove the money of the United States, in deposit with the Bank of the United States and its branches, in conformity with the President's opinion, and by appointing his successor to make such removal, which has been done, the President has assumed the exercise of a power over the treasury of the United States not granted to him by the constitution and laws, and dangerous to the liberties of the people."

Second Form.—March 28, 1834.

"Resolved, That, in taking upon himself the this resolution of Mr. Giles, which was intended States, the President of the United States has to lay the foundation for an impeachment against assumed the exercise of a power over the treasury of the United States not granted to him speciality with which these criminating resolu- by the constitution and laws, and dangerous to the liberties of the people."

THIRD FORM.—March 28, 1834.

"Resolved, That the President, in the late executive proceedings, in relation to the ablic revenue, has assumed upon himself authority and power not conferred by the constitution and laws, but in derogation of both."

Having exhibited the original resolution, with its variations, Mr. B. would leave it to others to explain the reasons of such extraordinary metamorphoses. Whether to get rid of the bank association, or to get rid of the impeachment clause, or to conciliate the votes of all who were willing to condemn the President, but could not tell for what, it was not for him to say; but one thing he would venture to say, that the majority who agreed in passing a general resolution, containing a criminal charge against President Jackson, for violating the laws and the constitution, cannot now agree in naming the law or the clause in the constitution violated, or in specifying any act constituting such violation. And here Mr. B. paused, and offered to give way to the gentlemen of the opposition, if they would now undertake to specify any act which President Jackson had done in violation of law or constitution.

3. Unwarranted by the constitution and laws.-Mr. B. said this head explained itself. It needed no development to be understood by the Senate or the country. The President was condemned without the form of a trial; and, therefore, his condemnation was unwarranted by the constitution and laws.

4. Subversive of the rights of defence, which belong to an accused and impeachable officer .-This head, also (Mr. B. said), explained itself. An accused person had a right to be heard before he was condemned; an impeachable officer could not be condemned unheard by the Senate, without subverting all the rights of defence which belong to him, and disqualifying the Senate to act as impartial judges in the event of his being regularly impeached for the same offence. In this case, the House of Representatives, if responsibility of removing the deposit of the they confided in the Senate's condemnation, would send up an impeachment; that they had not done so, was proof that they had no confidence in the correctness of our decision.

5. Of evil example.—Nothing, said Mr. B., could be more unjust and illegal in itself, and therefore more evil in example, than to try people without a hearing, and condemn them without defence. In this case, such a trial and such a condemnation was aggravated by the refusal of the Senate, after their sentence was pronounced, to receive the defence of the President, and let it be printed for the inspection of posterity! So that, if this criminating resolution is not expunged, the singular spectacle will go down to posterity, of a condemnation, and a refusal to permit an answer from the condemned person standing recorded on the pages of the same journal! Mr. B. said the Senate must look forward to the time-far ahead, perhaps, but a time which may come-when this body may be filled with disappointed competitors, or personal enemies of the President, or of aspirants to the very office which he holds, and who may not scruple to undertake to cripple him by senatorial condemnations; to at-*taint him by convictions; to ostracise him by vote; and lest this should happen, and the present condemnation of President Jackson should become the precedent for such an odious proceeding, the evil example should be arrested, should be removed, by expunging the present sentence from the journals of the Senate. And here Mr. B. would avail himself of a voice which had often been heard in the two Houses of Congress, and always with respect and veneration. It was the voice of a wise man, an honest man, a good man, a patriot; one who knew no cause but the cause of his country; and who, a quarter of a century ago, foresaw and described the scenes of this day, and foretold the consequences which must have happened to any other President, under the circumstances in which President Jackson has been placed. He spoke of Nathaniel Macon of North Carolina, and of the sentiments which he expressed, in the year 1810, when called upon to give a vote in approbation of Mr. Madison's conduct in dismissing Mr. Jackson, the then British minister to the United States. He opposed the resolution of approbation, because the House had nothing to do with the President, in their legislative character, except the passing of laws, calling for information, or impeaching; and, looking into the evil consequences of undertaking to judge of the President's conduct, he foretold the exact predicament in which the Senate is now involved, with respect to President Jackson. Mr. B. then read extracts from the speech of Mr. Macon, or the occasion referred to:

"I am opposed to the resolution, not for the reasons which have been offered against it, nor for any which can be drawn from the documents before us, but because I am opposed to address. ing the President of the United States upon any subject whatever. We have nothing to do with him, in our legislative character, except the passing of laws, calling on him for information, or to impeach. On the day of the presidential election, we, in common with our fellow-citizens, are to pass on his conduct, and resolutions of this sort will have no weight on that day. It is on this ground solely that I am opposed to adopting any resolution whatever in relation to the Executive conduct. If the national legislature can pass resolutions to approve the conduct of the President, may they not also pass resolutions to censure? And what would be the situation of the country, if we were now discussing a motion to request the President to recall Mr. Jackson, and again to endeavor to negotiate with him?"

6. At a time, and under circumstances, toinvolve the political rights and pecuniary intorests of the people of the United States in serious injury and peculiar danger. This head of his argument, Mr. B. said, would require a development and detail which he had not deemel necessary at this time, considering what had been said by him at the last session, and what would now be said by others, to give the reasons which he had so briefly touched. But at this point he approached new ground; he entered a new field; he saw an extended horizon of argument and fact expand before him, and it became necessary for him to expand with his subject. The condemnation of the President is indissolubly connected with the cause of the bank! The first form of the resolution exhibited the connection; the second form did also; every speech did the same, for every speech in condemnation of the President was in justification of the bank; every speech in justification of the President was in condemnation of the bank; an jects were identical and r tack of one was a defence defence of one was the at And thus it continued for t period of nearly one hundr cember 26th, 1833, to March for reasons not explained to private consultation among resolution, the mover of it of Secretary's table, and volunts ations which cut the conne bank and the resolution! bu record, by striking out ever the dismissal of Mr. Duane, Mr. Taney, and the remov But the alteration was made The connection still subsiste in memory, and shall live in said Mr. B., addressing hims of the Senate; ves, sir, the co President was indissolubly of cause of the bank, with the 1 posits, the renewal of the c tion of the deposits, the Duane, the rejection of Mr. elections, the overthrow of . tration, the fall of prices, the the distress memorials, the d the distress speeches; and ; hapless measures which as afflicted, and deeply injured t the long and agonized protrac panic session. All these thi said Mr. B.; and it became 1 part of the proof which estal tion before the Senate and th

Mr. B. then took up the a port made by the Senate's Cor on the bank, commonly called port, and read extracts from in two-and-twenty branches of poraneously with the progress the criminating resolutions; feet of which, and their cordebate in the Senate, would Premising that the bank had to the same branches, in the and had curtailed $4,066,000 month of October, to curtail increase the rates of their cexpressly stated in a circular

g for information, or imng into the evil conse. ng to judge of the Presi retold the exact predicanate is now involved with Jackson. Mr. B. then e speech of Mr. Macon, or to:

he resolution, not for the een offered against it, nor drawn from the documents I am opposed to address. he United States upon any Te have nothing to do with ive character, except the ag on him for information. he day of the presidential mon with our fellow-citiis conduct, and resolutions no weight on that day. It lely that I am opposed to ion whatever in relation to ct. If the national legislaitions to approve the conit, may they not also pass re? And what would be country, if we were now to request the President to and again to endeavor to under circumstances, toinights and pecuniary intehe United States in serious danger .- This head of his d, would require a develophich he had not deemed ime, considering what had the last session, and what 1 by others, to give the ed so briefly touched. But proached new ground; he d; he saw an extended at and fact expand before necessary for him to expand The condemnation of the plubly connected with the

The first form of the rehe connection; the second y speech did the sames for demnation of the President of the bank; every speech the President was in condemnation of the bank; and thus the two obiects were identical and reciprocal. The attack of one was a defence of the other; the defence of one was the attack of the other. And thus it continued for the long protracted period of nearly one hundred days-from December 26th, 1833, to March 28th, 1834—when. for reasons not explained to the Senate, upon a private consultation among the friends of the resolution, the mover of it came forward to the Secretary's table, and voluntarily made the alterations which cut the connection between the bank and the resolution! but it stood upon the record, by striking out every thing relative to the dismissal of Mr. Duane, the appointment of Mr. Taney, and the removal of the deposits. But the alteration was made in the record only. The connection still subsisted in fact, now lives in memory, and shall live in history. Yes, sir, said Mr. B., addressing himself to the President of the Senate; yes, sir, the condemnation of the President was indissolubly connected with the cause of the bank, with the removal of the deposits, the renewal of the charter, the restoration of the deposits, the vindication of Mr. Duane, the rejection of Mr. Taney, the fate of elections, the overthrow of Jackson's administration, the fall of prices, the distress meetings, the distress memorials, the distress committees. the distress speeches; and all the long list of hapless measures which astonished, terrified, afflicted, and deeply injured the country during the long and agonized protraction of the famous panic session. All these things are connected, said Mr. B.; and it became his duty to place a part of the proof which established the connection before the Senate and the people.

Mr. B. then took up the appendix to the report made by the Senate's Committee of Finance on the bank, commonly called Mr. Tyler's report, and read extracts from instructions sent to two-and-twenty branches of the bank, contemporaneously with the progress of the debate on the criminating resolutions; the object and effect of which, and their connection with the debate in the Senate, would be quickly seen. Premising that the bank had dispatched orders to the same branches, in the month of August, and had curtailed $4,066,000, and again, in the month of October, to curtail $5,825,000, and to increase the rates of their exchange, and had expressly stated in a circular, on the 17th of selves to ninety days' bills on Baltimore, and the

that month, that this reduction would place the branches in a position of entire security, Mr. B. invoked attention to the shower of orders, and their dates, which he was about to read. He read passages from page 77 to 82, inclusive. They were all extracts of letters from the president of the bank in person, to the presidents of the branches; for Mr. B. said it must be remembered, as one of the peculiar features of the bank attack upon the country last winter, that the whole business of conducting this curtailment, and raising exchanges, and doing whatever it pleased with the commerce, currency, and business of the country, was withdrawn from the board of directors, and confided to one of those convenient committees of which the president is ex officio member and creator; and which, in this case, was expressly absolved from reporting to the board of directors! The letters. then, are all from Nicholas Biddle, president, and not from Samuel Jaudon, cashier, and are addressed direct to the presidents of the branch

When Mr. B. had finished reading these extracts, he turned to the report made by the senator from Virginia, who sat on his right [Mr. Tyler, where all that was said about these new measures of hostility, and the propriety of the bank's conduct in this third curtailment, and in its increase upon rates of exchange, was compressed into twenty lines, and the wisdom or necessity of them were left to be pronounced upon by the judgment of the Senate. Mr. B. would read those twenty lines of that report:

"The whole amount of reduction ordered by the above proceedings (curtailment ordered on 8th and 17th of October) was $5,825,906. The same table, No. 4, exhibits the fact, that on the 23d of January a further reduction was ordered to the amount of $3,320,000. This was communicated to the offices in letters from the president, stating 'that the present situation of the bank, and the new measures of hostility which are understood to be in contemplation, make it expedient to place the institution beyond the reach of all danger; for this purpose, I am directed to instruct your office to conduct its business on the following footing' (appendix, No. 9, copies of letters). The offices of Cincinnati, Louisville, Lexington, St. Louis, Nashville, and Natchez, were further directed to confine them-

West.

5. That this curtailmen regulations in January volutionary, and connected resolution in the Senate of President Jackson.

6. That the distress of casioned by the Bank of the Senate of the United Semoval of the deposits.

Having stated his positi

1. As to the new mean bank. Mr. B. said there w The one indicated, that ceipt of the branch bank to the United States, exis the two-and-twenty letters president of the bank. T allegation that the measure is "in contemplation",—" contemplation," and upon of an understanding of some tion, and which something set of ruthless orders are se ter of the Union to make a and to embarrass the domes Union. Three days would answer from Washington to the Treasury to the bank; that there was no intention of these drafts at that time. that the bank did not recog of Mr. Taney's appointme would not condescend to co as Secretary of the Treasur the answer, even if the bank at the Treasury. Day aft week, month after month pa redoubtable new measures n pearance. Why not then st and restore the exchanges to ing? February, March, Ap months, on hundred and fir away; the new measures ne the pressure upon the countr two-and-twenty orders were What can be thought of an

being armed by law with moneyed system of the who cities north of it, of which they were allowed to purchase any amount their means would justify: and to bills on New Orleans, which they were to take only in payment of pre-existing debts to the bank and its offices; while the office at New Orleans was directed to abstain from drawing on the Western offices, and to make its purchases mainly on the North Atlantic cities. The committee has thus given a full, and somewhat elaborate detail of the various measures resorted to by the bank, from the 13th of August, 1833; of their wisdom and necessity the Senate will best be able to pronounce a correct judgment."

This, Mr. B. said, was the meagre and stinted manner in which the report treated a transaction which he would show to be the most cold-blooded, calculating, and diabolical, which the annals of any country on this side of Asia could exhibit.

[Mr. Tyler here said there were two pages on this subject to be found at another part of the report, and opened the report at the place for Mr. B.]

Mr. B. said the two pages contained but few allusions to this subject, and nothing to add to or vary what was contained in the twenty lines he had read. He looked upon it as a great omission in the report; the more so as the committee had been expressly commanded to report upon the curtailments and the conduct of the bank in the business of internal exchange. He had hoped to have had searching inquiries and detailed statements of facts on these vital points. He looked to the senator from Virginia [Mr. Tyler] for these inquiries and statements. He wished him to show, by the manner in which he would drag to light, and expose to view, the vast crimes of the bank, that the Old Dominion was still the mother of the Gracchi; that the old lady was not yet forty-five; that she could breed sons! Sons to emulate the fame of the Scipies. But he was disappointed. The report was dumb, silent, speechless, upon the operations of the bank during its terrible campaign of panic and pressure upon the American people: And now he would pay one instalment of the speech which had been promised some time ago on the subject of this report; for there was part of that speech which was strictly applicable and appropriate to the head he was now discussing.

Mr. B. then addressed himself to the senator from Virginia, who sat on his right [Mr. Tyler], and requested him to supply an omission in his report, and to inform what were those new measures of hostility alluded to in the two-and-twenty letters of instruction of the bank and repeated in the report, and which were made the pretext for this third curtailment, and these new and extraordinary restrictions and impositions upon the purchase of bills of exchange.

[Mr. Tyler answered that it was the expected prohibition upon the receivability of the branch bank drafts in payment of the federal revenue.]

Mr. B. resumed: The senator is right. These drafts are mentioned in one of, the circular let. ters, and but one of them, as the new measure understood to be in contemplation, and which understanding had been made the pretext for scourging the country. He (Mr. B.) was incapable of a theatrical artifice—a stage trickin a grave debate. He had no question but that the senator could answer his question, and he knew that he had answered it truly; but he wanted his testimony, his evidence, against the bank; he wanted proof to tie the bank down to this answer, to this pretext, to this thin disguise for her conduct in 'scourging the country. The answer is now given; the proof is adduced; and the apprehended prohibition of the receivability of the branch drafts stands both as the pretext and the sole pretext for the pressure commenced in January, the doubling the rates of exchange breaking up exchanges between the five Western branch banks, and concentrating the collection of bills of exchange upon four great commercial

Mr. B. then took six positions, which he emerated, and undertook to demonstrate to be true. They were:

1. That it was untrue, in point of fact that there were any new measures in contemplating or action, to destroy the bank.

 That it was untrue, in point of fact, that the President harbored hostile and revengeful & signs against the existence of the bank.

2. That it was untrue, in point of that there was any necessity for this third cural ment, which was ordered the last of January.

4. That there was no excuse, justification of apology for the conduct of the bank in relation to domestic exchange, in doubling its rates, breaking it up between the five Western branches turning the collection of bills upon the principa. o supply an omission in his rm what were those new v alluded to in the two-and. struction of the bank and ort, and which were made third curtailment, and these nary restrictions and impochase of bills of exchange. ered that it was the ex. pon the receivability of the in payment of the federal

The senator is right. These I in one of the circular let. them, as the new measure 1 contemplation, and which been made the pretext for try. He (Mr. B.) was incal artifice-a stage trick-He had no question but that nswer his question, and he answered it truly; but he ny, his evidence, against the roof to tie the bank down to pretext, to this thin disguise scourging the country. The 1; the proof is adduced; and phibition of the receivability stands both as the pretext for the pressure commenced ibling the rates of exchange zes between the five Western concentrating the collection upon four great commercial six positions, which he entook to demonstrate to be intrue, in point of fact, that · measures in contemplation, 7 the bank.

true, in point of fact, that the I hostile and revengeful de sistence of the bank.

intrue, in point of fact that ssity for this third curtaldered the last of January. s no excuse, justification of duct of the bank in relation e, in doubling its rates, break the five Western branches on of bills upon the principa commercial cities, and forbidding the branch at proceed to exercise that power to distress that

5. That this curtailment and these exchange regulations in January were political and revolutionary, and connected themselves with the resolution in the Senate for the condemnation of President Jackson.

6. That the distress of the country was occasioned by the Bank of the United States and the Senate of the United States, and not by the removal of the deposits.

Having stated his positions, Mr. B. proceeded to demonstrate them.

1. As to the new measures to destroy the bank. Mr. B. said there were no such measures. The one indicated, that of stopping the receipt of the branch bank drafts in payments to the United States, existed nowhere but in the two-and-twenty letters of instruction of the president of the bank. There is not even an allegation that the measure existed; the language is "in contemplation"-"understood to be in contemplation," and upon this flimsy pretext of an understanding of something in contemplation, and which something never took place, a set of ruthless orders are sent out to every quarter of the Union to make a pressure for money. and to embarrass the domestic exchanges of the Union. Three days would have brought an answer from Washington to Philadelphia-from the Treasury to the bank; and let it be known that there was no intention to stop the receipt of these drafts at that time. But it would seem that the bank did not recognize the legitimacy of Mr. Taney's appointment! and therefore would not condescend to correspond with him as Secretary of the Treasury! But time gave the answer, even if the bank would not inquire at the Treasury. Day after day, week after week, month after month passed off, and these redoubtable new measures never made their appearance. Why not then stop the curtailment. and restore the exchanges to their former footing? February, March, April, May, June, five months, on hundred and fifty days, all passed away; the new measures never came; and yet the pressure upon the country was kept up; the two-and-twenty orders were continued in force. What can be thought of an institu on which,

New Orleans to purchase bills on any part of the country for money, upon an understanding that something was in contemplation; and never inquire if its understanding was correct, nor cease its operations, when each successive day, for one hundred and fifty days, proved to it that no such thing was in contemplation? At last, on the 27th of June, when the pressure is to be relaxed, it is done upon another ground; not upon the ground that the new measures had never taken effect, but because Congress was about to rise without having done any thing for the bank. Here is a clear confession that the allegation of new measures was a mere pretext; and that the motive was to operate upon Congress, and force a restoration of the deposits, and a renewal of the charter.

Mr. B. said he knew all about these drafts. The President always condemned their legality, and was for stopping the receipt of them. Mr. Taney, when Attorney General, condemned them in 1831. Mr. B. had applied to Mr. McLane, in 1832, to stop them; but he came to no decision. He applied to Mr. Duane, by letter, as soon as he came into the Treasury; but got no answer. He applied to Mr. Taney as soon as he arrived at Washington in the fall of 1833; and Mr. Taney decided that he would not stop them until the moneyed concerns of the country had recovered their tranquillity and prosperity, lest the bank should make it the pretext of new attempts to distress the country; and thus the very thing which Mr. Taney refused to do, lest it should be made a pretext for oppression, was falsely converted into a pretext to do what he was determined they should have no pretext for doing.

But Mr. B. took higher ground still; it was this: that, even if the receipt for the drafts had been stopped in Japuary or February, there would have been no necessity on that account for curtailing debts and embarrassing exchanges. This ground he sustained by showing-1st. That the bank had at that time two millions of dollars in Europe, lying idle, as a fund to draw bills of exchange upon; and the mere sale of bills on this sum would have met every demand which the rejection of the drafts could have thrown upon it. 2. That it sent the money it raised by this curtailment to Europe, to the amount of three and a half millions; and thereby being armed by law with power over the showed that it was not collected to meet any moneyed system of the whole country, should demand at home. 3d. That the bank had at that time (January, 1834) the sum of $4,230,509 of public money in hand, and therefore had United States money enough in possession to balance any injury from rejection of drafts. 4th. That the bank had notes enough on hand to supply the place of all the drafts, even if they were all driven in. 5th. That it had stopped the receipt of these branch drafts itself at the branches, except each for its own in November, 1833, and was compelled to resume their receipt by the energetic and just conduct of Mr. Taney, in giving transfer drafts to be used against the branches which would not honour the notes and drafts of the other branches. Here Mr. B. turned upon Mr. Tyler's report, and severely arraigned it for alleging that the bank always honored its paper at every point, and furnishing a supply of negative testimony to prove that assertion, when there was a large mass of positive testimony, the disinterested evidence of numerous respectable persons, to prove the contrary, and which the committee had not noticed.

Finally, M. B. had recourse to Mr. Biddle's own testimony to annihilate his (Mr. Biddle's) affected alarm for the destruction of the bank, and the injury to the country from the repulse of these famous branch drafts from revenue payments. It was in a letter of Mr. Biddle to Mr. Woodbury in the fall of 1834, when the receipt of these drafts was actually stopped, and in the order which was issued to the branches to continue to issue them as usual. Mr. B. read a passage from this letter to show that the receipt of these drafts was always a mere Treasury arrangement, in which the bank felt no interest; that the refusal to receive them was an object bank! at all times of perfect indifference to the bank, and would not have been even noticed by it, if Mr. Woodbury had not sent him a copy of his circular.

Mr. B. invoked the attention of the Senate upon the fatal contradictions which this letter of November, and these instructions of January, 1834, exhibit. In Jannary, the mere understanding of a design in contemplation to exclude these drafts from revenue payments, is a danger of such alarming magnitude, an invasion of the rights of the bank in such a flagrant manner, a proof of such vindictive determination to prostrate, sacrifice, and ruin the institution, that the report, or the three hundred pages of the appendix entire continent must be laid under contribution | the four members of the Finance Committee can to raise money to enable the institution to stand | produce it when they come to reply. That there the shock! November of the same year when was evidence to contradict it, he was now ready the order for the rejection actually comes, then the same measure is declared to be one of the utmost indifference to the bank; in which it never felt any interest; which the Treasury adopted for its own convenience; which was always under the exclusive control of the Trea. sury; about which the bank had never expressed a wish; of which it would have taken no notice if the Secretary had not sent them a circular; and the expediency of which it was not intended to question in the remotest degree! Having pointed out these fatal contradictions Mr. B. said it was a case in which the emphatic eiaculation might well be repeated: Oh! that mine enemy would write a book!

To put the seal of the bank's contempt on the order prohibiting the receipt of these drafts, to show its disregard of law, and its ability to sustain its drafts upon its own resources, and with. out the advantage of government receivability. Mr. B. read the order which the president of the bank addressed to all the branches on the receipt of the circular which gave him information of the rejection of these drafts. It was in these words: "This will make no alteration whatever in your practice, with regard to issuing or paying these drafts, which you will continue as here tofore." What a pity, said Mr. B., that the president of the bank could not have thought of issuing such an order as this in January, instead of sending forth the mandate for curtailing debts. embarrassing exchange, levying three millions and a half, alarming the country with the err of danger, and exhibiting President Jackson as a vindictive tyrant, intent upon the ruin of the

2. The hostility of the President to the bank This assertion, said Mr. B., so incontinently reiterated by the president of the bank, is taken up and repeated by our Finance Committee to whose report he was now paying an instalment of those respects which he had promised then This assertion, so far as the bank and the conmittee are concerned in making it, is an assertion without evidence, and, so far as the facts are concerned, is an assertion against evidence. If there is any evidence of the bank or the committee to support this assertion, in the forty pages of the

to show. This evidence co public and prominent facts mention, and in other cir would show hereafter. T which he mentioned when th on the 18th of December la dent Jackson had nominat head of the government of indicated him for the presithree successive years after supposed to have commenc that the President had no facias to issue against the charter, which he has t twenty-third section of whenever he believed the cl The third, that during man required his Secretaries of th governmental receipt of the although his own mind upo been made up for several yea that after all the clamorupon heaven and earth aga removing the deposits-t never happened to be quite An average of near four m public money has remained bank for each month, from 1833, to the 1st of January embracing the entire period order was to take effect again Bank of the United States mencement of the present yes deposits from being quite e the public are led to believe. of fifteen months from the tir removal began to take effect, the hands of the bank the 1 millions eight hundred and s sand nine hundred and fift ninety-seven cents, according ing in her monthly statement. Jackson is, and always has be existence of the bank, is a fa honorable to him; that he is vindictive and revengeful sens an assertion, Mr. B. would ta repeat, without evidence, so fa into the proofs of the committe dence, to the full extent of a within his view. Far from ind

ful resentment against the ba

ction actually comes, then declared to be one of the the bank; in which it st; which the Treasury nvenience; which was al. sive control of the Treae bank had never expressit would have taken no had not sent them a cir. ency of which it was not in the remotest degree! these fatal contradictions. ase in which the emphatic ll be repeated: Oh! that rite a book!

he bank's contempt on the receipt of these drafts, to law, and its ability to suss own resources, and withgovernment receivability. which the president of the the branches on the receipt gave him information of drafts. It was in these ake no alteration whatever regard to issuing or pay. h you will continue as herey, said Mr. B., that the precould not have thought of as this in January, instead nandate for curtailing debts. ige, levying three millions the country with the cry iting Pre-ident Jackson as ntent upon the ruin of the

the President to the bank Ir. B., so incontinently relent of the bank, is taken our Finance Committee to now paying an instalmat ch he had promised when as the bank and the conin making it, is an assere, and, so far as the facts are rtion against evidence. If of the bank or the committee ion, in the forty pages of the indred pages of the appendix, the Finance Committee can come to reply. That there radict it, he was now ready to show. This evidence consisted in four or five on the 18th of December last, namely, that President Jackson had nominated Mr. Biddle at the head of the government directors, and thereby indicated him for the presidency of the bank, for three successive years after this hostility was supposed to have commenced. The second was, governmental receipt of the branch bank drafts, although his own mind upon their illegality had been made up for several years past. The fourth, that after all the clamor—all the invocations upon heaven and earth against the tyranny of removing the deposits—those deposits have never happened to be quite entirely removed! An average of near four millions of dollars of public money has remained in the hands of the bank for each month, from the 1st of October, 1833, to the 1st of January, 1835, inclusively! embracing the entire period from the time the order was to take effect against depositing in the Bank of the United States down to the commencement of the present year! So far are the deposits from being quite entirely removed, as patient, indulgent, and forebearing towards it, to public and prominent facts, which he would now a degree hardly compatible with his duty to his country, and with his constitutional supervision would show hereafter. The first was the fact over the faithful execution of the laws; to a degree which has drawn upon him, as a deduction from his own conduct, an argument in favor of the legality of this very branch bank currency, on the part of this very committee, as may be seen in their report. Again, the very circumstance on which this charge of hostility rests in the two-and-twenty letters of Mr. Biddle, proves that the President had never ordered a scire it to be untrue: for the stoppage of the drafts, facias to issue against the bank to vacate i.s understood to be in contemplation, was not in charter, which he has the right, under the contemplation, and did not take place until the twenty-third section of the charter, to do, pecuniary concerns of the country were tranquil whenever he believed the charter to be violated, and prosperous; and when it did thus take The third, that during many years, he has never place, the president of the bank declared it to have been always the exclusive right of the government to do it, in which the bank had no interest, and for which it cared nothing. No, said Mr. B., the President has opposed the recharter of the bank; he has not attacked its present charter; he has opposed its future, not its present existence; and those who characterize this opposition to a future charter as attacking the bank, and destroying the bank, must admit that they advocate the hereditary right of the bank to a new charter after the old one is out; and that they deny to a public man the right of opposing that hereditary claim.

3. That there was no necessity for this third curtailment ordered in January. Mr. B. said, to have a full conception of the truth of this position, it was proper to recollect that the bank the public are led to believe, that, at the distance made its first curtailment in August, when the of fifteen months from the time the order for the appointment of an agent to arrange with the deremoval began to take effect, there remained in posit banks announced the fact that the Bank of the hands of the bank the large sum of three the United States was soon to cease to be the millions eight hundred and seventy-eight thou- depository of public moneys. The reduction sand nine hundred and fifty-one dollars and under that first curtailment was $4,066,000. ninety-seven cents, according to her own show- The second was in October, and under that oring in her monthly statements. That President | der for curtailment the reduction was $5,825,000. Jackson is, and always has been, opposed to the The whole reduction, then, consequent upon the existence of the bank, is a fact as true as it is expected and actual removal of deposits, was honorable to him; that he is hostile to it, in the $9.891,000. At the same time the whole amount vindictive and revengeful sense of the phrase, is of deposits on the first day of October, the day an assertion, Mr. B. would take the liberty to for the removal, or rather for the cessation to derepeat, without evidence, so far as he could see posit in the United States Bank to take effect, was into the proofs of the committee, and against evi- $9868,435; and on the first day of February. dence to the full extent of all the testimony 1834, when the third curtailment was ordered, within his view. Far from indulging in revenge- there were still $3,066,561 of these deposits on ful resentment against the bank, he has been hand, and have remained on hand to near that amount ever since; so that the bank in the two first curtailments, accomplished between August and January, had actually curtailed to the whole amount, and to the exact amount, upon precise calculation, of the amount of deposits on hand on the first of October; and still had, on the first of January, a fraction over three millions of the deposits in its possession. This simple statement of sums and dates shows that there was no necessity for ordering a further reduction of $3,320,000 in January, as the bank had already curtailed to the whole amount of the deposits, and $22,500 over. Nor did the bank put the third curtailment upon that ground, but upon the new measures in contemplation; thus leaving her advocates every where still to attribute the pressure created by the third curtailment to the old cause of the removal of the deposits. This simple statement of facts is sufficient to show that this third curtailment was unnecessary. What confirms that view, is that first thing to be looked to is the chronology of the bank remitted to Europe, as fast as it was collected, the whole amount of the curtailment, and $105,000 over; there to lie idle until she could raise the foreign exchange to eight per cent. above par; which she had sunk to five per cent. below par, and thus make two sets of profits out of one operation in distressing and pressing the country.

4. No excuse for doubling the rates of ex- of December, 1833, to the 28th of March, 1834; change, breaking up the exchange business in the bank movement is included in the same the West, forbidding the branch at New Orleans period; the orders for the pressure were isked to purchase a single bill on the West, and con- from the 21st of January to the 1st of February centrating the collection of exchange on the four and were to accomplish their effect in the month great commercial cities. For this, Mr. B. said, of March, and by the first of April; excepting no apology, no excuse, no justification, was of-place, where, for a reason which will be shown fered by the bank. The act stood unjustified at a proper time, the accomplishment of the and unjustifiable. The bank itself has shrunk effect was protracted till the 10th day of April from the attempt to justify it; our committee. These, Mr. B. said, were the dates of issuing the in that report of which the bank proclaims orders and accomplishing their effect; the date itself to be so proud, gives no opinion in its of the adoption of the resolution in the bankfer brief notice of a few lines upon this transaction; this movement is not given in the report let but leaves it to the Senate to pronounce upon must have been, in the nature of things, anterior its wisdom and necessity! The committee, Mr., to the issue of the orders; it must have been B. said, had failed in their duty to their country some day's before the issue of the orders; and by the manner in which they had veiled this was, in all probability, a few days after the comaffair of the exchanges in a few lines; and then mencement of the movement in the Sesate blinked the question of its enormity, by refer- against the President. The next point of the ring it to the judgment of the Senate. He made nection, Mr. B. said, was in the subject matter the same remark upon the contemporaneous' and here it was necessary to recur to the original measure of the third curtailment; and called on form, and to the second form, of the resolution the author of the report [Mr. Tyler] to defend for the condemnation of the President. In the

his report, and to defend the conduct of the bank now, if he could; and requested him to receive all this part of his speech as a further instal. ment paid of what was due to that report on the

5. That the curtailment and exchange regulations of January were political and revolutionary, and connect themselves with the contemporaneous proceedings of the Senate for the condemnation of the President. That this curtailment, and these regulations were wanton and wicked, was a proposition, Mr. B. said. which resulted as a logical conclusion from what had been already shown, namely, that they were causeless and unnecessary, and done upon pretexts which have been demonstrated to be false. That they were political and revolutionary, and connected with the proceedings in the Senate for the condemnation of the President, he would now prove. In the exhibition of this proof, the the events-the time at which the bank made this third curtailment, and sent forth these exchange regulations-and the time at which the Senate carried on the proceeding against the President. Viewed under this aspect the two movements are not only connected, but identical and inseparable. The time for the condemnation of the President covers the period from the 25th first, or primordial form, pressly connected with t It was, for dismissing A would not remove the de Mr. Taney because he wo the second form of the which naturalists would chrysalis state-the phras tion was varied, but stil retained and expressed. Duane and Mr. Tanev we removal of the deposits up bility, was the alleged offe In its third and ultimate t lusion to the bank was dr term "revenue" was subs substitution of phrase only tion of sense or meaning. same under all its phases. and Mr. Taney, and Mr. Di of the deposits, which are derstood, though no longer All these substantial obje substituted by the empty which might signify the Carolina, and the bank ques The vagueness of the expre tleman to fight upon his ow his vote upon any mental could be found in his own would go before the intellige man with the declaration between the condemnation of the cause of the bank was d by the words of the resolution omission of those words. connection, Mr. B. said, w times, varied to suit each ? pressure under the curtailme maximum; and the manner strictions upon the sale and of exchange was made to f. heavily upon the principal co the moment when most dee purchase and shipment of I New-York, where the great were to take place during April, the curtailment was to pressure on the first day of Virginia, where the electio throughout the whole month

sure was not to reach its clim nd the conduct of the bank requested him to receive neech as a further instalis due to that report on the ilment and exchange rewere political and revoect themselves with the ceedings of the Senate for the President. That this e regulations were wanton proposition, Mr. B. said ogical conclusion from what wn, namely, that they were ssarv, and done upon pren demonstrated to be false ical and revolutionary, and proceedings in the Senate of the President, he would exhibition of this proof the ted to is the chronology of e at which the bank made it, and sent forth these exand the time at which the the proceeding against the under this aspect, the two only connected, but identical ie time for the condemnation ers the period from the 25th o the 28th of March, 1834; t is included in the same or the pressure were isked uary to the 1st of February, lish their effect in the month first of April; except in one eason which will be shown he accomplishment of the 1 till the 10th day of Amil vere the dates of issuing the shing their effect; the date ie resolution in the bankfor ot given in the report but the nature of things, anterior orders : it must have been e issue of the orders; and ty, a few days after the commovement in the Senate it. The next point of de-, was in the subject matter ssary to recur to the original cond form, of the resolution on of the President. In the pressly connected with the cause of the bank. It was, for dismissing Mr. Duane because he would not remove the deposits, and appointing Mr. Taney because he would remove them. In the second form of the resolution-that form which naturalists would call its aurelia, or chrysalis state-the phraseology of the connection was varied, but still the connection was removal of the deposits upon his own responsibility, was the alleged offence of the President. In its third and ultimate transformation, all allusion to the bank was dropped, and the vague term "revenue" was substituted; but it was a substitution of phrase only, without any alteration of sense or meaning. The resolution is the same under all its phases. It is still the bank, and Mr. Taney, and Mr. Duane, and the removal of the deposits, which are the things to be understood, though no longer prudent to express. All these substantial objects are veiled, and substituted by the empty phrase "revenue;" which might signify the force bill in South Carolina, and the bank question in Philadelphia! The vagueness of the expression left every gentleman to fight upon his own hook, and to hang his vote upon any mental reservation which could be found in his own mind! and Mr. B. would go before the intelligence of any rational man with the declaration that the connection between the condemnation of the President and the cause of the bank was doubly proved; first ty the words of the resolution, and next by the omission of those words. The next point of connection, Mr. B. said, was detected in the the moment when most deeply engaged in the first, or primordial form, the resolution was ex- day of that month. In Connecticut, where the elections occurred about the first of April, the pressure was to have its last turn of the screw in the month of March. And in these three instances, the only ones in which the elections were depending, the political bearing of the pressure was clear and undeniable. The sympathy in the Senate in the results of those political calculations, was displayed in the exultation retained and expressed. The names of Mr. which broke out on receiving the news of the Duane and Mr. Taney were dropped; and the elections in Virginia, New-York, and Connecticut -an exultation which broke out into the most extravagant rejoicings over the supposed downfall of the administration. The careful calculation to make the pressure and the exchange regulations fall upon the commercial cities at the moment to injure commerce most, was also visible in the times fixed for each. Thus, in all the western cities, Cincinnati, Louisville, Lexington, Nashville, Pittsburg, Saint Louis, the pressure was to reach its maximum by the first day of March; the shipments of western produce to New Orleans being mostly over by that time; but in New Orleans the pressure was to be continued till the first of April, because the shipping season is protracted there till that month, and thus the produce which left the upper States under the depression of the pressure, was to meet the same pressure upon its arrival in New Orleans; and thus enable the friends of the bank to read their ruined prices of western produce on the floor of this Senate. In Baltimore, the first of March was fixed, which would cover the active business season there. So much, said Mr. B., for the pressure by curtailment; now for the pressure by bills of exchange, and he would take the case of New times, varied to suit each State, at which the Orleans first. All the branches in the West, pressure under the curtailment was to reach its and every where else in the Union, were authormaximum; and the manner in which the re- ized to purchase bills of exchange at short dates, strictions upon the sale and purchase of bills not exceeding ninety days, on that emporium of exchange was made to fall exclusively and of the West; so as to increase the demand for heavily upon the principal commercial cities, at money there; at the same time the branch in New Orleans was forbid to purchase a single purchase and shipment of produce. Thus, in bill in any part of the valley of the Mississippi. New-York, where the great charter elections This prohibition was for two purposes; first to were to take place during the first week in break up exchange; and next, to make money April, the curtailment was to reach its maximum scarce in New Orleans; as, in default of bills of pressure on the first day of that month. In exchange, silver would be shipped, and the ship-Virginia, where the elections are continued ping of silver would make a pressure upon all throughout the whole month of April, the pres- | the local banks. To help out this operation, sure was not to reach its climax until the tenth | Mr. B. said, it must be well and continually remembered that the Bank of the United States itself abducted about one million and a quarter of hard dollars from New Orleans during the period of the pressure there; thus proving that all her affected necessity for curtailment was a false and wicked pretext for the cover of her own political and revolutionary views.

The case of the western branches was next adverted to by Mr. B. Among these, he said, the business of exchange was broken up in toto. The five western branches were forbid to purchase exchange at all; and this tyrannical order was not even veiled with the pretext of an excuse. Upon the North Atlantic cities, Mr. B. said, unlimited authority to all the branches was given to purchase bills, all at short dates, under ninety days; and all intended to become due during the shipping season, and to increase the demand for money while the curtailment was going on, and the screw turning from day to day to lessen the capacity of getting money, and make it more scarce as the demand for it became urgent. Thus were the great commercial cities, New Orleans, New-York, Baltimore, and Philadelphia, subject to a double process of oppression; and that at the precise season of purchasing and shipping crops, so as to make their distress recoil upon the planters and farmers; and all this upon the pretext of new measures understood to be in contemplation. Time again becomes material, said Mr. B. The bank pressure was arranged in January, to reach its climax in March and the first of April; the debate in the Senate for the condemnation of President Jackson, which commenced in the last days of December, was protracted over the whole period of the bank pressure, and reached its consummation at the same time; namely, the 28th day of March. The two movements covered the same period of time, reached their conclusions together, and co-operated in the effect to be produced; and during the three months of this double movement, the Senate chamber resounded daily with the cry that the tyranny and vengeance of the President, and his violation of laws and constitution, had created the whole distress, and struck the nation from a state of Arcadian felicity—from a condition of unparalleled prosperity—to the lowest depth of misery and ruin. And here Mr. B. obtested and besought the Senate to consider the indifference with which the bank treated its friends in the still more for its criminal audacity in charging

Senate, and the sorrowful contradiction in which they were left to be caught. In the Senate, and all over the country, the friends of the bank were allowed to go on with the old tune, and run upon the wrong scent, of removal of the deposits creating all the distress; while, in the two-and-twenty circular letters dispatched to create this distress, it was not the old measure alone, but the new measures contemplated, which constituted the pretext for this very same distress. Thus, the bank stood upon one pretext. and its friends stood upon another; and for this mortifying contradiction, in which all its friends have become exposed to see their mournful speeches exploded by the bank itself, a just indignation ought now to be felt by all the friends of the bank, who were laying the distress to the removal of the deposits, and daily crying out that nothing could relieve the country but the restoration of the deposits, or the recharter of the bank; while the bank itself was writing to its branches that it was the new measures understood to be in contemplation that was occa sioning all the mischief. Mr. B. would close this head with a remark which ought to excite reflections which should never die away; which should be remembered as long as national banks existed, or asked for existence. It was this: That here was a proved case of a national bank availing itself of its organization, and of its power, to .send secret orders, upon a false pretext, to every part of the Union, to create distress and panic for the purpose of accomplishing an object of its own; and then publicly and calumniously charging all this mischief on the act of the President for the removal of the deposits. This recollection should warn the country against ever permitting another national bank to repeat a crime of such frightful immorality, and such enormous injury to the business and property of the people. Mr. B. expressed his profound regret that the report of the bank committee was silent upon these dreadful enormities, while so elaborate upon trifles in favor of the bank. He was indignant at the mischief done to private property; the fall in the price of staples, of stocks, and of all real and personal estate; at the ruin of many merchants, and the injury of many citizens, which took place during this hideous season of panic and pressure. He was indignant at the bank for creating it, and its own conduct upon t was mortified, profound this should have escaped Finance Committee, and a report of which the bar declares itself to be justly has undergoing the usua through the publication of which it openly avers wo recharter if it had come out it now looks for such rech ident Jackson retires, and thrown into confusion by presidential election.

Mr. B. now took up ano to prove the fact that the change regulations of Janu revolutionary, and connect ings of the Senate for the President; and here he evidence drawn from the then read extracts from M instructions (January 30, 18 son, Esquire, president of Charleston, South Carolina lows: "With a view to me in the banking concerns o especially to provide agains hostility understood to be i the executive officers at Wa reduction has been ordered a and I have now to ask your to accomplish it." * * * agreeable to us as it can b impose any restrictions upon office. But you are perfectly which has been making for son the bank, to which this new I have alluded will soon be projectors become alarmed at of these attempts to destroy in our deliberate judgment, 1 cuniary interests, but the who of our country; and our det even a temporary sacrifice of bank entirely beyond the re meditate its destruction."

Mr. B. would invoke the de this letter. The passages w! were not in the circulars addr time to the other branches. this letter, with something sir ful contradiction in which aght. In the Senate, and the friends of the bank with the old tune, and scent, of removal of the edistress; while, in the ar letters dispatched to was not the old measure sures contemplated, which t for this very same disstood upon one pretext pon another; and for this on, in which all its friends to see their mournful the bank itself, a just ino be felt by all the friends laying the distress to the its, and daily crying out lieve the country but the osits, or the recharter of ank itself was writing to as the new measures unemplation that was occa ief. Mr. B. would close rk which ought to excite ld never die away; which as long as national banks existence. It was this: d case of a national bank organization, and of its orders, upon a false prethe Union, to create dis-· purpose of accomplishing ; and then publicly and g all this mischief on the or the removal of the deion should warn the counmitting another national e of such frightful immonous injury to the business people. Mr. B. expressed nat the report of the bank upon these dreadful enororate upon trifles in favor indignant at the mischief erty; the fall in the price nd of all real and personal many merchants, and the is, which took place during panic and pressure. He bank for creating it, and ninal audacity in charging its own conduct upon the President; and he was mortified, profoundly mortified, that all this should have escaped the attention of the Finance Committee, and enabled them to make a report of which the bank, in its official organ, declares itself to be justly proud; which it now has undergoing the usual process of diffusion through the publication of supplemental gazettes; which it openly avers would have insured the recharter if it had come out in time; and to which it now looks for such recharter as soon as President Jackson retires, and the country can be thrown into confusion by the distractions of a presidential election.

Mr. B. now took up another head of evidence to prove the fact that the curtailment and exchange regulations of January were political and revolutionary, and connected with the proceedings of the Senate for the condemnation of the President; and here he would proceed upon evidence drawn from the bank itself. Mr. B. then read extracts from Mr. Biddle's letters of instructions (January 30, 1834) to Joseph Johnson Esquire, president of the branch bank at Charleston, South Carolina. They were as follows: "With a view to meet the coming crisis in the banking concerns of the country, and especially to provide against new measures of hostility understood to be in contemplation by the executive officers at Washington, a general reduction has been ordered at the several offices. and I have now to ask your particular attention to accomplish it." * * * * "It is as disagreeable to us as it can be to yourselves to impose any restrictions upon the business of the office. But you are perfectly aware of the effort which has been making for some time to prostrate the bank, to which this new measure to which I have alluded will soon be added, unless the projectors become alarmed at it. On the defeat of these attempts to destroy the bank depends. in our deliberate judgment, not merely the pecuniary interests, but the whole free institutions of our country; and our determination is, by even a temporary sacrifice of profit, to place the bank entirely beyond the reach of those who meditate its destruction."

Mr. B. would invoke the deepest attention to this letter. The passages which he had read were not in the circulars addressed at the same time to the other branches. It was confined to this letter, with something similar in one more

which he would presently read. The coming crisis in the banking concerns of the country is here shadowed forth, and secretly foretold, three months before it happened; and with good reason, for the prophet of the evil was to assist in fulfilling his prophecy. With this secret prediction, made in January, is to be connected the public predictions contemporaneously made on this floor, and continued till April, when the explosion of some banks in this district was proclaimed as the commencement of the general ruin which was to involve all local banks, and especially the whole safety-fund list of banks, in one universal catastrophe. The Senate would remember all this, and spare him repetitions which must now be heard with pain, though uttered with satisfaction a few months ago. The whole free institutions of our country was the next phrase in the letter to which Mr. B. called attention. He said that in this phrase the political designs of the bank stood revealed; and he averred that this language was identical with that used upon this floor. Here, then, is the secret order of the bank, avowing that the whole free institutions of the country are taken into its holy keeping; and that it was determined to submit to a temporary sacrifice of profit in sustaining the bank, which itself sustains the whole free institutions of the country! What insolence! What audacity! But, said Mr. B., what is here meant by free institutions, was the elections! and the true meaning of Mr. Biddle's letter is, that the bank meant to submit to temporary sacrifices of money to carry the elections, and put down the Jackson administration. No other meaning can be put upon the words; and if there could, there is further proof in reserve to nail the infamous and wicked design upon the bank. Another passage in this letter, Mr. B. would point out, and then proceed to a new piece of evidence. It was the passage which said this new measure will soon be added, unless the projectors become alarmed at it. Now, said Mr. B., take this as you please; either that the projectors did, or did not, become alarmed at their new measure; the fact is clear that no new measure was put in force, and that the bank, in proceeding to act upon that assumption; was inventing and fabricating a pretext to justify the scourge which it was meditating against the country. Dates are here material, said Mr. B. The first letters, founded

January; and spoke of them as being understood to be in contemplation. This letter to Mr. Johnson, which speaks hypothetically, is dated the 30th of January, being eight days later; in which time the bank had doubtless heard that its understanding about what was in contemplation was all false; and to cover its retreat from having sent a falsehood to twoand-twenty branches, it gives notice that the new measures which were the alleged pretext of panic and pressure upon the country were not to take place, because the projectors had got alarmed. The beautiful idea of the projectors—that is to say, General Jackson, for he is the person intended-becoming alarmed at interdicting the reception of illegal drafts at the treasury, is conjured up as a salvo for the honor of the bank, in making two-and-twenty instances of false assertion. But the panic and pressure orders are not countermanded. They are to go on, although the projectors do become alarmed, and although the new measure be dropped.

Mr. B. had an extract from a second letter to read upon this subject. It was to the president of the New Orleans branch, Mr. W. W. Montgomery, and dated Bank of the United States the 24th of January. He read the extract: "The state of things here is very gloomy; and, unless Congress takes some decided step to prevent the progress of the troubles, they may soon outgrow our control. Thus circumstanced, our first duty is, to the institution, to preserve it from all danger; and we are therefore anxious, for a short time at least, to keep our business within manageable limits, and to make some sacrifice of property to entire security. It is a moment of great interest, and exposed to sudden changes in public affairs, which may induce the bank to conform its policy to them; of these dangers, should any occur, you will which the bank artillery incessantly thundered have early advice." When he had read this extract, Mr. B. proceeded to comment upon it; almost every wor.' of it being pregnant with killing him off with a senatorial condemnation; political and revolutionary meaning of the plainest import. The whole extract, he said, was the language of a politician, not of a banker. and looked to political events to which the bank intended to conform its policy. In this way, he commented successively upon the gloomy state of things at the bank (for the letter is dated in

on these new measures, were dated the 21st of | grow their control, unless Congress took 80mm decided step. These troubles, Mr. B. said, could not be the dangers to the bank; for the bank had taken entire care of itself in the two-andtwenty orders which it had sent out to curtail loans and break up exchanges. Every one of these orders announced the power of the bank. and the determination of the bank, to take care of itself. Troubles outgrow our control! What insolence! When the bank itself, and its confederates, were the creators and fomenters of all these troubles, the progress of which it affected to deplore. The next words-moment of great interest, exposed to sudden changes in public affairs, induce the bank to conform its policy to them-Mr. B. said, were too flagrant and too barefaced for comment. They were equivalent to an open declaration that a revolution was momently expected, in which Jackson's administration would be overthrown, and the friends of the bank brought into power; and, as soon as that happened, the bank would inform its branches of it; and would then conform its policy to this revolution, and relieve the country from the distress which it was then inflicting upon it. Sir, said Mr. B., addressing the Vice-President, thirty years ago, the prophetic vision of Mr. Jefferson foresaw this crisis; thirty years ago, he said that this bank was an enemy to our form of government; that, by its ramification and power, and by seizing on a critical moment in our affairs, it could upset the government! And this is what it would have done last winter, had it not been for one man! one man! one single man! with whom God had vouchsafed to favor our America in that hour of her greatest trial. That one man stood a sole obstacle to the dread career of the bank; stood for six months as the rampart which defended the country, the citadel upon And what was the conduct of the Senate all this time? It was trying and condemning that man; removing the obstacle which stood between the bank and its prey; and, in so doing establishing the indissoruble connection between the movement of the bank in distressing the country, and the movement of the Senate in condemning the President.

Mr. B. said that certainly no more proof was the bank), and the troubles which were to out- necessary, on this head, to show that the designs of the bank were political and intended to put down General J istration, and to connect itself v but he had more proof, that o under the editorial head of the No and which publication he assum written by the president of the l long article of four columns; but read a paragraph. He read: " test now waging in this country free institutions and the violen despotism. The government is baneful faction, and the spirit tends against it throughout the the one hand is this miserable the patronage of the Executive hand, the yet unbroken mind and country, with the Senate and the reading these words, in which the ated itself with the Senate, Mr. B famous expression of Cardinal V sociating himself with the king: meus;']—the House of Represent to the intuitive champion of freedo the intrigues of the kitchen, hesitar but cannot fail before long to breal ters first, and then those of the that quarrel, we predict, they wh the bank will shrink from no prope the country may assign to them. they must be as indifferent as any of citizens to the recharter of the ban will not suffer themselves, nor the intrusted to them, to be the ins private wrong and public outrage; 1 omit any effort to rescue the institu country from being trodden under i tion of interlopers. To these profi turers, whether their power is disp executive or legislative department, of the bank will, we are satisfied, the thousandth part of an inch o personal rights, or their own offi and will continue this resistance unt try, roused to a proper sense of its its wrongs, shall drive the usurpers high places they dishonor." This Mr. B., discloses, in terms which a explanation or denial, the design of creating the pressure which was got tinued during the panic session.

rouse the people, by dint of sufferi Vol. I.—35

ngress took some Mr. B. said, could nk; for the bank f in the two-andsent out to curtail es. Every one of ower of the bank, bank, to take care ur control! What tself, and its couand fomenters of ss of which it aft words-moment sudden changes in ik to conform its were too flagrant ent. They were tion that a revolu-1, in which Jacke overthrown, and ought into power; ed. the bank would d would then conlution, and relieve which it was then Mr. B., addressing ears ago, the proforesaw this crisis; t this bank was an iment; that, by its 1 by seizing on a irs, it could upset is what it would t not been for one man! with whom or our America in al. That one man Iread career of the is as the rampart v, the citadel upon essantly thundered! f the Senate all this idemning that man; orial condemnation; stood between the so doing establishection between the stressing the counthe Senate in con-

> no more proof was how that the designs of the bank were political and revolutionary, intended to put down General Jackson's administration, and to connect itself with the Senate; but he had more proof, that of a publication under the editorial head of the National Gazette, and which publication he assumed to say, was written by the president of the bank. It was a long article of four columns; but he would only read a paragraph. He read: "The great contest now waging in this country is between its free institutions and the violence of a vulgar despotism. The government is turned into a baneful faction, and the spirit of liberty contends against it throughout the country. On the one hand is this miserable cabal, with all the patronage of the Executive; on the other hand the vet unbroken mind and heart of the country, with the Senate and the bank; -[in reading these words, in which the bank associated itself with the Senate, Mr. B. repeated the famous expression of Cardinal Wolsey, in associating himself with the king: 'Ego et rex meus;']—the House of Representatives, hitherto the intuitive champion of freedom, shaken by the intrigues of the kitchen, hesitates for a time. but cannot fail before long to break its own fetters first, and then those of the country. In that quarrel, we predict, they who administer the bank will shrink from no proper share which the country may assign to them. Personally, they must be as indifferent as any of their fellowcitizens to the recharter of the bank. But they will not suffer themselves, nor the institution intrusted to them, to be the instruments of private wrong and public outrage: nor will they omit any effort to rescue the institutions of the country from being trodden under foot by a faction of interlopers. To these profligate adventurers, whether their power is displayed in the executive or legislative department, the directors of the bank will, we are satisfied, never yield the thousandth part of an inch of their own personal rights, or their own official duties; and will continue this resistance until the country, roused to a proper sense of its dangers and its wrongs, shall drive the usurpers out of the high places they dishonor." This letter, said Mr. B., discloses, in terms which admit of no explanation or denial, the design of the bank in creating the pressure which was got up and continued during the panic session. It was to rouse the people, by dint of suffering, against the President and the House of Representatives, and to overturn them both at the ensuing elections. To do this, now stands revealed as its avowed object. The Senate and the bank were to stand together against the President and the House; and each to act its part for the same common object: the bank to scourge the people for money, and charge its own scourging upon the President; the Senate to condemn him for a violation of the laws and constitution, and to brand him as the Cæsar, Cromwell, Bonaparte—the tyrant, despot, usurper, whose head would be cut off in any kingdom of Europe for such acts as he practised here. Mr. B. said, the contemplation of the conduct of the bank, during the panic session, was revolting and incredible. It combined every thing to revolt and shock the moral sense. Oppression, falsehood, calumny, revolution, the ruin of individuals, the fabrication of false pretences, the machinations for overturning the government, the imputation of its own crimes upon the head of the President; the enriching its favorites with the spoils of the country, insolence to the House of Representatives, and its affected guardianship of the liberties of the people and the free institutions of the country; such were the prominent features of its conduct. The parallel of its enormity was not to be found on this side of Asia; an example of such remorseless atrocity was only to be seen in the conduct of the Paul Benfields and the Debi Sings who ravaged India under the name of the Marquis of Hastings. Even what had been casually and imperfectly brought to light, disclosed a system of calculated enormity which required the genius of Burke to paint. What was behind would require labors of a committee, constituted upon parliamentary principles, not to plaster, but to probe the wounds and ulcers of the bank; and such a committee he should hope to see, not now, but hereafter, not in the vacation but in the session of Congress. For he had no idea of these peripatetic and recess committees, of which the panic session had been so prolific. He wanted a committee, unquestionable in the legality of its own appointment, duly qualified in a parliamentary sense for discovering the misconduct they are set to investigate; and sitting under the wing of the authority which can punish the insolent, compel the refractory, and enforce the obedience which is due to its mandates.

6. The distress of the country, occasioned by the Bank of the United States and the Senate of the United States.—This, Mr. B. said, might be an unpleasant topic to discuss in the Senate; but this Senate, for four months of the last session, and during the whole debate on the resolution to condemn the President, had resounded with the cry that the President had created all the distress; and the huge and motley mass, throughout the Union, which marched under the oriflamme of the bank, had every where repeated and reiterated the same cry. If there was any thing unpleasant, then, in the discussion of this topic in this place, the blame must be laid on those who, by using that argument in support of their resolution against the President, devolved upon the defenders of the President the necessity of refuting it. Mr. B. would have recourse to facts to establish his position. The first fact he would recur to was the history of a reduction of deposits, made once before in this same bank, so nearly identical in every particular with the reduction which took place under the order for the late removal of deposits, that it would require exact references to documentary evidence to put its credibility beyond the incredulity of the senses. Not only the amount from which the reduction was made, its progress, and ultimate depression, corresponded so closely as each to seem to be the history of the same transaction, but they began in the same month, descended in the same ratio, except in the instances which operate to the disadvantage of the late reduction, and, at the end of fifteen months, had reached the same point. Mr. B. spoke of the reduction of deposits which took place in the years 1818 and 1819; and would exhibit a table to compare it with the reductions under the late order for the removal of the deposits.

Here, said Mr. B., is a similar and parallel reduction of deposits in this same bank, and that at a period of real pecuniary distress to itself; a period when great frauds were discovered in its management; when a committee examined it, and reported it guilty of violating its charter; when its stock fell in a few weeks from one hundred and eighty to ninety; when propositions to repeal its charter, without the formality of a scire facias, were discussed in Congress; when nearly all presses, and nearly all voices, condemned it; and when a real necessity compelled it to reduce its discounts and loans with more rapidity, and to a far greater comme rative extent, than that which has attended the late reduction. Yet, what was the state of the country? Distressed, to be sure, but no panic; no convulsion in the community; no cry of revolution. And why this difference? If mere reduction of deposits was to be attended with these effects at one time, why not at the other? Sir, said Mr. B., addressing the Vice-President the reason is plain and obvious. The bank was unconnected with politics, in 1819; it had m desire, at that time, to govern the elections, and to overturn an administration; it had no political confederates; it had no president of the bank then to make war upon the President of the United States, and to stimulate and aid a great political party in crushing the President, who would not sign a new charter, and in crushing the House of Representatives which stood by him. There was no resolution then to condemn the President for a violation of the law and the constitution. And it was this fat resolution, which we now propose to expune which did the principal part of the mischie That resolution was the root of the end the signal for panic meetings, panic meme rials, panic deputations, panic speeches, and panic jubilees. That resolution, exhibited in the Senate chamber, was the scarlet mantle the consul, hung out from his tent; it was the signal for battle. That resolution, and the alam speeches which attended it, was the tocsin which started a continent from its repose. And the condemnation which followed it, and which is this chamber just in time to reach the New York, Virginia, and Connecticut elections, onpleted the effect upon the public mind, and upa the politics and commerce of the country, which the measures of the bank had been co-oper ating for three months to produce. And her he must express his especial and eternal work how all these movements of bank and Semi co-operating together, if not by arrangements least by a most miraculous system of accident to endanger the political rights, and to injurch pecuniary interests of the people of the United States, could so far escape the observation of the investigating committee of the Senate, # not to draw from them the expression of # solitary opinion, the suggestion of one simple idea, the application of one single remark, the prejudice of the bank. Surely they

to have touched these scenes more than a few meagre, stin lines of faint allusion to the "n derstood to be in contemplati measures which were so false fabricated to cover the precommeditated plot to upset the gover ulating the people to revoluti combined operations of the per and political alarms.

The table itself was entitled recollection, not only for the co it suggested, but the fact of sho progress and history of the rem posits, and blasting the whole st sident's hostility to the bank. it is seen that the deposits, in po never been all taken from the removal, so far as it went, was g tle; that an average of three mill been there; that nearly four mil on the 1st day of January last; a facts, the fabricated story of t hostility to the bank, his vind violent determination to prostrat ruin the institution, must fall bac thors, and recoil upon the heads tors and propagators of such a ; putation

Mr. B. could give another fact it was the Senate and the bank, a more than the bank, which prod tress during the last winter. It v although the curtailments of th much larger both before and afte of Congress, yet there was no di country, except during the session the alarm speeches were in a cours on this floor. Thus, the curtailm 1st of August to the 1st of Octo 066,000; from the 1st of October ing of Congress in December, the was $5,641,000—making $9,707 months, and no distress in the coun the session of Congress (seven m was a curtailment of $3,428,138; this time the distress raged. Fro Congress (last of June) to the 1st of a period of four months, the curt $5,270,771, and the word distress w in the country. Why? Because th panic speeches. Congress had adje to have touched these scenes with something the bank, being left to its own resources, could which has attended the more than a few meagre, stinted, and starved it was the state of the lines of faint allusion to the "new measures unbe sure, but no panic; derstood to be in contemplation;" those new munity; no cry of remeasures which were so falsely, so wickedly s difference? If mere fabricated to cover the preconcerted and pres to be attended with meditated plot to upset the government by stimwhy not at the other? ulating the people to revolution, through the ng the Vice-President, combined operations of the pecuniary pressure byious. The bank was and political alarms. cs, in 1819; it had no overn the elections, and ation; it had no politi-

o a far greater compa-

10 president of the bank

n the President of the mulate and aid a great ng the President, who

narter, and in crushing

atives which stood by esolution then to con-

a violation of the laws

And it was this fatal

w propose to expung

I part of the mischiel

the root of the enl

meetings, panic meme

s, panic speeches, and resolution, exhibited in s the scarlet mantle d

om his tent; it was the resolution, and the alm

it, was the tocsin which

m its repose. And the

lowed it, and which it

time to reach the Ner

nnecticut elections, our

he public mind, and upa

rce of the country, which ank had been co-ope

s to produce. And her ecial and eternal work

nts of bank and Senne

f not by arrangement #

lous system of accident

ul rights, and to injure

the people of the United

scape the observation

mittee of the Senate, #

n the expression of a suggestion of one sim

of one single remark,

pank. Surely they out

The table itself was entitled to the gravest recollection, not only for the comparison which it suggested, but the fact of showing the actual progress and history of the removal of the deposits, and blasting the whole story of the President's hostility to the bank. From this table it is seen that the deposits, in point of fact, have never been all taken from the bank; that the removal, so far as it went, was gradual and gentle; that an average of three millions has always been there; that nearly four millions was there on the 1st day of January last; and before these facts, the fabricated story of the President's hostility to the bank, his vindictiveness, and violent determination to prostrate, destroy, and ruin the institution, must fall back upon its authors, and recoil upon the heads of the inventors and propagators of such a groundless imputation.

Mr. B. could give another fact to prove that it was the Senate and the bank, and the Senate more than the bank, which produced the distress during the last winter. It was this: that although the curtailments of the bank were much larger both before and after the session of Congress, yet there was no distress in the country, except during the session, and while the alarm speeches were in a course of delivery on this floor. Thus, the curtailment from the 1st of August to the 1st of October, was $4,-066,000; from the 1st of October to the meeting of Congress in December, the curtailment was $5,641,000—making $9,707.000 in four months, and no distress in the country. During the session of Congress (seven months) there was a curtailment of $3,428,138; and during this time the distress raged. From the rise of Congress (last of June) to the 1st of November, a period of four months, the curtailment was $5.270,771, and the word distress was not heard only injure individuals, but could not alarm and convulse the community.

Mr. B. would finish this view of the conduct of the bank in creating a wanton pressure, by giving two instances; one was the case of the deposit bank in this city; the other was the case of a senator opposed to the bank. He said that the branch bank at this place had made a steady run upon the Metropolis Bank from the beginning to the ending of the panic session. The amount of specie which it had taken was $605,000: evidently for the purpose of blowing up the pet bank in this district; and during all that time the branch refused to receive the notes, or branch drafts, of any other branch, or the notes of the mother bank; or checks upon any city north of Baltimore. On the pet bank in Baltimore it would take checks, because the design was to blow up that also. Here, said Mr. B., was a clear and flagrant case of pressure for specie for the mere purpose of mischief, and of adding the Metropolis Bank to the list of those who stopped payment at that time. And here Mr. B. felt himself bound to pay his respects to the Committee on Finance, that went to examine the bank last summer. That committee, at pages 16 and 22, of their report, brought forward an unfounded charge against the administration for making runs upon the branches of the United States Bank, to break them; while it had been silent with respect to a well-founded instance of the same nature from the Bank of the United States towards the deposit bank in this district. Their language is: "The administrative department of the government had manifested a spirit of decided hostility to the bank. It had no reason to expect any indulgence or clemency at its hands; and in this opinion, if entertained by the directors, about which there can be but little question, subsequent events very soon proved they were not mistaken. The President's address to his cabinet; the tone assumed by the Secretary (Mr. Taney) in his official communication to Congress, and the developments subsequently made by Mr. Duane in his address to the public, all confirm the correctness of this anticipation. The measure which the bank had cause to fear was the accumulation by government in the country. Why? Because there were no of large masses of notes, and the existence therepanic speeches. Congress had adjourned; and by of heavy demands against its offices (p. 16).

"In persevering in its policy of redeeming its notes whenever presented, and thereby continuing them as a universal medium of exchange, in opposition to complaints on that head from quiry—like that of the Post Office. The creasome of the branches (see copies of correspond- tion of such a committee, Mr. B. said, was the ence), the security of the institution and the more necessary, as one of the main guards in good of the country were alike promoted. The tended by the charter to be placed over the accumulation of the notes of any one branch for bank was not there during the period of the the purpose of a run upon it by any agent of pressure and panic operations; he alluded to the the government, when specie might be obtained government directors; the history of whose reat the very places of collection, in exchange for jection, after such long delays in the Senate to the notes of the most distant branches, would act on their nomination, is known to the whole have been odious in the eyes of the public, and country. ascribed to no other feeling than a feeling of vindictiveness" (p. 22). Upon these extracts, Mr. B. said, it was clear that the committee had been so unfortunate as to commit a series of Pennsylvania, now minister to St. Petersburg mistakes, and every mistake to the advantage of the bank, and to the prejudice of the government and the country. First, the government is charged, for the charge is clear, though slightly veiled, that the President of the United States in his vindictiveness against the bank, would him, whilst he was here opposing the bank. cause the notes of the branches to be accumurated, and pressed upon them to break them. Next, the committee omit to notice the very thing actually done, in our very presence here, by the Bank of the United States against a deposit bank, which it charges without foundation upon the President. Then it credits the bank with the honor of paying its notes every where, and exchanging the notes of the most distant branches for specie, when the case of the Metropolis Bank, here in our presence, for the whole period of the panic session, proves the contrary; and when we have a printed document, positive testimony from many banks, and brokers, testifying that the branches in Baltimore and New-York, during the fall of 1833, positively refused to redeem the notes of other existence of the great distress which had been branches, or to accept them in exchange for the depicted at Pittsburg; and the necessity that notes of the local banks, though taken in payment of revenue; and that, in consequence, the notes of distant branches fell below par, and members of Congress, as reported by the Fr were sold at a discount, or lent for short periods nance Committee, had received "accommodiwithout interest, on condition of getting specie tions" from the bank and its branches in the for them; and that this continued till Mr. Taney coerced the bank, by means of transfer drafts to cause the notes of her branches to be received and honored at other branches as usual. In all this, Mr. B. said, the report of the committee was most unfortunate; and showed the borrowers and applicants, of different politica necessity for a new committee to examine that institution; a committee constituted upon parliamentary principles—a majority in favor of in-

The next instance of wanton pressure which Mr. B. would mention, was the case of an individual, then a member of the Senate from (Mr. Wilkins). That gentleman had informed him (Mr. B.), towards the close of the last session, that the bank had caused a scire facias to be served in his house, to the alarm and distress of his wife, to revive a judgment against

[Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, here rose, and wished to know of Mr. B. whether it was the Bank of the United States that had issued this scire facias against Mr. Wilkins.]

Mr. B. was very certain that it was, Herecollected not only the information, but the time and the place when and where it was given; it was the last days of the last session, and at the window beyond that door (pointing to the door in the corner behind him); and he added if there is any question to be raised, it can be settled without sending to Russia; the scire facias, if issued, will be on record in Pittsburg. Mr. B. then said, the cause of this conduct to Mr. Wilkins can be understood when it is recollected that be had denied on this floor the the bank was under to push him at that time can be appreciated by seeing that two and fifty same year that a senator, and a citizen of Pennsylvania, opposed to the bank, was thus proceeded against.*

Mr. B. returned to the res was proposed to expunge. He go. It was the root of the e the mischief, the source of the of Pandora, which had filled t lamity and consternation for s It was that resolution, far mor duct of the bank, which raised the price of property, crushed 1 impressed the country with t impending revolution, and frigh good people out of the rational elective franchise at the spring these evils have now passed aw has subsided; the price of produ has recovered from its depressio yond its former bounds. The c quil, prosperous, and happy. Th had been frightened from thei the spring elections, have regain command. Now, with the total effects, let the cause vanish also solution for the condemnation of 1 son be expunged from the journa ate! Let it be effaced, erased, b literated from the face of that pa should never have been written! it could be expunged from the pa tory, and from the memory of Would that, so far as it is concern of the whole existing generation dipped in the fabulous and obliv the river Lethe. But these wis The resolution must survive and l will record it; memory will retain will hand it down. In the very ac tion it lives; for what is taken fr is placed on another. All atonemes fortunate calamitous act of the Ser fect and inadequate. Expunge, if the only effect will be to express convictions, by that obliteration, th solution ought never to have soiled our journal. This is all that we this much we are bound to do, by tion of justice to the President, who been attainted; by every considera to the country, whose voice demands tion; by our regard to the constit has been rampled under foot; by re House of Representatives, whose f been usurped; by self-respect, whi ittee to examine tha constituted upon parnajority in favor of inost Office. The crea-Mr. B. said, was the the main guards in be placed over the ng the period of the ons; he alluded to the history of whose reelays in the Senate to s known to the whole

* At pages 87 and 88 of the report, the Finance Committee fully acquits the bank of all injurious discriminations between

anton pressure which as the case of an inof the Senate from ter to St. Petersburg ntleman had informed the close of the last caused a scire facias to the alarm and dise a judgment against opposing the bank. re rose, and wished to t was the Bank of the sued this scire facias

a that it was. He reormation, but the time where it was given; ne last session, and at door (pointing to the 1 him); and he added, o be raised, it can be to Russia; the scire in record in Pittsburg. use of this conduct to erstood when it is renied on this floor the stress which had been nd the necessity that oush him at that time eing that two and fifty s reported by the Fr 'eccived "accommodaid its branches in the , and a citizen of Pennbank, was thus pro-

> port, the Finance Committee rious discriminations between erent politics.

Mr. B. returned to the resolution which it the Senate to vindicate its justice, to correct its It was that resolution, far more than the conduct of the bank, which raised the panic, sunk the price of property, crushed many merchants. impressed the country with the terror of an impending revolution, and frightened so many good people out of the rational exercise of their elective franchise at the spring elections. All these evils have now passed away. The panic has subsided; the price of produce and property has recovered from its depression, and risen beyond its former bounds. The country is tranquil prosperous, and happy. The States which had been frightened from their propriety at the spring elections, have regained their selfcommand. Now, with the total vanishing of its effects, let the cause vanish also. Let this resolution for the condemnation of President Jackson be expunged from the journals of the Senate! Let it be effaced, erased, blotted out, obliterated from the face of that page on which it should never have been written! Would to God it could be expunged from the page of all history, and from the memory of all mankind. Would that, so far as it is concerned, the minds of the whole existing generation should be dipped in the fabulous and oblivious waters of the river Lethe. But these wishes are vain. The resolution must survive and live. History will record it; memory will retain it; tradition will hand it down. In the very act of expurgation it lives; for what is taken from one page is placed on another. All atonement for the unfortunate calamitous act of the Senate is imperfect and inadequate. Expunge, if we can, still the only effect will be to express our solemn convictions, by that obliteration, that such a resolution ought never to have soiled the pages of this much we are bound to do, by every obligation of justice to the President, whose name has been attainted; by every consideration of duty to the country, whose voice demands this reparation; by our regard to the constitution, which has been rampled under foot; by respect to the House of Representatives, whose function has was proposed to expunge. He said it ought to errors, and re-establish its high name for equity, go. It was the root of the evil, the father of dignity, and moderation. To err is human; not the mischief, the source of the injury, the box to err is divine; to correct error is the work of of Pandora, which had filled the land with ca-supereminent and also superhuman moral exlamity and consternation for six long months. cellence, and this exalted work now remains for the Senate to perform.

CHAPTER CXXIV.

EXPUNGING RESOLUTION: REJECTED, AND RENEWED

THE speech which had been delivered by Mr Benton, was intended for effect upon the country—to influence the forthcoming elections -and not with any view to act upon the Senate, still consisting of the same members who had passed the condemnatory resolution, and not expected to condemn their own act. The expunging resolution was laid upon the table, without any intention to move it again during the present session; but, on the last day of the session, when the Senate was crowded with business, and when there was hardly time to finish up the indispensable legislation, the motion was called up, and by one of its opponents-Mr. Clayton, of Delaware-the author of the motion being under the necessity to vote for the taking up, though expecting no good from it. The moment it was taken up, Mr. White, of Tennessee, moved to strike out the word "expunge," and insert "rescind, reverse, and make null and void." This motion astonished Mr. Benton. Mr. White, besides opposing all the proceedings against President Jackson, had been his personal and political friend from early youth-for the more than forty years which each of them had resided in Tennessee. He expected his aid, and felt the danger of such a defection. Mr. Benton defended his word as our journal. This is all that we can do; and being strictly parliamentary, and the only one which was proper to be used when an unauthorized act is to be condemned—all other phrases admitting the legality of the act which is to be invalidated. Mr. White justified his motion on the ground that an expurgation of the journal would be its obliteration, which he deemed inconsistent with the constitutional injunction to been usurped; by self-respect, which requires "keep" a journal—the word "keep" being taken in its primary sense of "holding," " preserving," instead of "writing," a journal; but the mover of the resolution soon saw that Mr. White was not the only one of his friends who had vielded at that point—that others had given way-and, came about him importuning him to give up the obnoxious word. Seeing himself almost deserted, he yielded a mortifying and reluctant assent; and voted with others of his friends to emasculate his own motion-to reduce it from its high tone of reprobation, to the legal formula which applied to the reversal of a mere error in a legal proceeding. The moment the vote was taken, Mr. Webster rose and exulted in the victory over the hated phrase. He proclaimed the accomplishment of every thing that he desired in relation to the expunging resolution: the word was itself expunged; and he went on to triumph in the victory which had been achieved, saying:

"That which made this resolution, which we have now amended, particularly offensive, was this: it proposed to expunge our journal. It called on us to violate, to obliterate, to erase, our own records. It was calculated to fix a particular stigma, a peculiar mark of reproach or disgrace, on the resolution of March last. It was designed to distinguish it, and reprobate it. in some especial manner. Now, sir, all this most happily, is completely defeated by the almost unanimous vote of the Senate which has just now been taken. The Senate has declared, in the most emphatic manner, that its journal shall not be tampered with. I rejoice most heartily, sir, in this descisive result. It is now settled, by authority not likely to be shaken, that our records are sacred. Men may change, opinions may change, power may change, but, thanks to the firmness of the Senate, the records of this body do not change. No instructions from without, no dictates from principalities or powers, nothing—nothing can be allowed to induce the Senate to falsify its own records, to disgrace its own proceedings, or violate the rights of its members. For one, sir, I feel that we have fully and completely accomplished all that could be desired in relation to this matter. The attempt to induce the Senate to expunge its journal has failed, signally and effectually failed. The record remains, neither blurred, blotted, nor disgraced."

And then, to secure the victory which he had gained, Mr. Webster immediately moved to lay the amended resolution on the table, with the peremptory declaration that he would not withdraw his motion for friend or foe. The resolve was laid upon the table by a vote of 27 to 20.

The exulting speech of Mr. Webster restored me to my courage—made a man of me again; and the moment the vote was over, I rose and submitted the original resolution over again, with the detested word in it—to stand for the second week of the next session—with the peremptory declaration that I would never yield it again to the solicitations of friend or foe.

CHAPTER CXXV.

BRANCH MINTS AT NEW ORLEANS, AND IN THE GOLD REGIONS OF GEORGIA AND NORTH CAROLINA.

THE bill had been reported upon the proposition of Mr. Waggaman, senator from Louisiana and was earnestly and perseveringly opposed by Mr. Clay. He moved its indefinite postponement, and contended that the mint at Philadelphia was fully competent to do all the coinage which the country required. He denied the correctness of the argument, that the mint at New Orleans was necessary to prevent the transportation of the bullion to Philadelphia It would find its way to the great commercial marts of the country whether coined or not. He considered it unwise and injudicious to establish these branches. He supposed it would gratify the pride of the states of North Carolina and Georgia to have them there; but when the objections to the measure were so strong he could not consent to yield his opposition to it. He moved the indefinite postponement of the bill, and asked the yeas and nays on his motion; which were ordered.-Mr. Mangum regretted the opposition of the senator from Kentucky (Mr. Clay), and thought it necessary to multiply the number of American coins, and bring the mints to the places of production There was an actual loss of near four per cent. in transporting the gold bullion from the Georgia and North Carolina mines to Philadelphia for coinage. With respect to gratifying the pride of the Southern States, it was a misconception; for those States had no price to gratify. He saw no evil in the multi ication of these mints. It was well shown by the senstor from Missouri, when the bill was up before, was understood that branches plied.—Mr. Frelinghuysen thou ject of having a mint was mista was established for the accom government, and he thought sufficient. Why put an adupon the government because t South have been so fortunate -Mr. Bedford Brown of Nort the senator from New Jersey. apply to Congress to relieve us den of transporting our bullio when the manufacturers of the ask to be paid for transporting He said it was true the manufa asked for this transportation they asked for what was much and got it-protection. The South ask no protection; they own exertions; they ask but a iustice-for their rights, und granted by the States to Cong the value of coin, and to make It has the exclusive privilege of he wished to see it exercised in the it was granted; and which was to age general for the benefit of all the Union, and not local to one sec mark of the gentlemen is found What are the facts? - Can the g North Carolina be circulated We all know it cannot; it is onl lion and carried to Philadelphia : Another reason for the passage o one which Mr. Brown hoped wou regarded by senators on the oth House, was that the measure woul to the restoration of the metallic bring the government back to t which was the only one contem; constitution.

onstitution.

Mr. Benton took the high grout tutional right to the establishme branches, and as many more as the States required. He referred ralist, No. 44, written by Mr. Massurrendering the coining power to government, the States did not suright to have local mints. He reaction the number which he mention was the exposition of the clause in tion relative to the coining power.

Vebster restored me n of me again; and ver, I rose and subm over again, with stand for the second with the peremptory ver yield it again to

CXXV.

LEANS, AND IN THE IA AND NORTH CARed upon the proposiator from Louisiana rseveringly opposed its indefinite postnat the mint at Philnt to do all the coinquired. He denied ment, that the mint ssarv to prevent the ion to Philadelphia. he great commercial ther coined or not. nd injudicious to es-Ie supposed it would ites of North Caroliem there; but when sure were so strong. eld his opposition to ite postponement of as and nays on his lered.-Mr. Mangum of the senator from thought it necessary American coins, and places of production f near four per cent. illion from the Geornines to Philadelphia ct to gratifying the ates, it was a misconhad no prise to grain he multi ication of shown b the senahe bill was up before, on the constitution it was understood that branches might be multiplied.-Mr. Frelinghuysen thought that the object of having a mint was mistaken. The mint was established for the accommodation of the government, and he thought the present one sufficient. Why put an additional burden upon the government because the people in the South have been so fortunate as to find gold? -Mr. Bedford Brown of North Carolina, said the senator from New Jersey, asked why we apply to Congress to relieve us from the burden of transporting our bullion to be coined, when the manufacturers of the North did not ask to be paid for transporting their material. He said it was true the manufacturers had not asked for this transportation assistance, but they asked for what was much more valuable. and got it-protection. The people of the South ask no protection; they rely on their own exertions; they ask but a simple act of justice-for their rights, under the power granted by the States to Congress to regulate the value of coin, and to make the coin itself. It has the exclusive privilege of Congress, and he wished to see it exercised in the spirit in which it was granted; and which was to make the coinage generel for the benefit of all the sections of the Union, and not local to one section. The remark of the gentlemen is founded in mistake. What are the facts? - Can the gold bullion of North Carolina be circulated as currency? We all know it cannot; it is only used as bullion and carried to Philadelphia at a great loss. Another reason for the passage of the bill, and one which Mr. Brown hoped would not be less regarded by senators on the other side of the House, was that the measure would be auxiliary to the restoration of the metallic currency, and bring the government back to that currency which was the only one contemplated by the constitution.

Mr. Benton took the high ground of constitutional right to the establishment of these branches, and as many more as the interests of the States required. He referred to the Federalist, No. 44, written by Mr. Madison, that in surrendering the coining power to the federal government, the States did not surrender their right to have local mints. He read the passage from the number which he mentioned, and which

press, and clear in the assertion, that the States were not to be put to the expense and trouble of sending their bullion and foreign coins to a central mint to be recoined; but that, as many local mints would be established under the authority of the general government as should be necessary. Upon this exposition of the meaning of the constitution, Mr. B. said, the States accepted the constitution; and it would be a fraud on them now to deny branches where they were needed. He referred to the gold mines in North Carolina, and the delay with which that State accepted the constitution, and inquired whether she would have accepted it at all, without an amendment to secure her rights, if she could have foreseen the great discoveries of gold within her limits, and the present opposition to granting her a local mint. That State, through her legislature, had applied for a branch of the mint years ago, and all that was said in her favor was equally applicable to Georgia. Mr. B. said, the reasons in the Federalist for branch mints were infinitely stronger now than when Mr. Madison wrote in 1788. Then, the Southern gold region was unknown, and the acquisition of Louisiana not dreamed of. New Orleans, and the South, now require branch mints, and claim the execution of the constitution as expounded by Mr. Madison.

Mr. B. claimed the right to the establishment of these branches as an act of justice to the people of the South and the West. Philadelphia could coin, but not diffuse the coin among them. Money was attracted to Philadelphia from the South and West, but not returned back again to those regions. Local mints alone could supply them. France had ten branch mints; Mexico had eight; the United States not one. The establishment of branches was indispensable to the diffusion of a hard-money currency, especially gold; and every friend to that currency should promote the establishment of branches.

Mr. B. said, there were six hundred machines at work coining paper money—he alluded to the six hundred banks in the United States; and only one machine at work coining gold and silver He believed there ought to be five or six branch mints in the United States; that is, two or three more than provided for in this bill; one at Charleston, South Carolina, one at Norfolk or was the exposition of the clause in the constitu- Richmond, Virginia, and one at New-York or tion relative to the coining power. It was ex- Boston. The United States Bank had twentyfour branches; give the United States Mint five its banks, fill all its towns, cities, and villages or six branches; and the name of that bank would cease to be urged upon us. Nobody would want her paper when they could get gold.

Mr. B. scouted the idea of expense on such an object as this. The expense was but inconsiderable in itself, and was nothing compared to its object. For the object was to supply the country with a safe currency,-with a constitutional currency; and currency was a thing which concerned every citizen. It was a point at which the action of government reached every human being, and bore directly upon his property, upon his labor, and upon his daily bread. The States had a good currency when this federal government was formed; it was gold and silver for common use, and large bank notes for large operations. Now the whole land is infested with a vile currency of small paper: and every citizen was more or less cheated. He himself had but two bank notes in the world, and they were both counterfeits, on the United States Bank, with St. Andrew's cross drawn through their faces. He used nothing but gold and silver since the gold bill passed.

In reply to Mr. Frelinghuysen, who asked where was the gold currency? He would answer, far the greatest part of it was in the vaults of the Bank of the United States, and its branches, to be sold or shipped to Europe; or at all events, to be kept out of circulation, to enable the friends of the bank to ask, where is the gold currency? and then call the gold bill a humbug. But he would tell the gentleman where a part of the gold was; it was in the Metropolis Bank in this city, and subject to his check to the full amount of his pay and mileage. Yes, said Mr. B., now, for the first time, Congress is paid in gold, and it is every member's own fault if he does not draw it and use it.

Mr. B. said this question concerned the South and West, and he would hope to see the representatives from these two sections united in support of the bill. He saw with pleasure, that several gentlemen from the north of the Potomac, and from New England were disposed to support it. Their help was most acceptable on a subject so near and so dear to the South and West. Every inhabitant of the South and West was personally interested in the success of the bill. From New Orleans, the new coin would as- $100), and where, in consequence, there was a send the Mississippi River, scatter itself all along gold and silver circulation of upwards of five branch off into the interior of the country, ascend all the tributary streams, and replenish and refresh the whole face of the land. From the Southern mints, the new gold would come into the West, and especially into Kentucky, Ohio, and Tennessee, by the stock drivers, being to them a safe and easy remittance, and to the country a noble accession to their currency: enabling them quickly to dispense with their small notes.

It was asked, Mr. B. said, what loss has the Western People now sustained for want of gold? He would answer that the whole West was full of counterfeit paper; that counterfeit paper formed a large part of the actual circulation. especially of the United States branch drafts; that sooner or later all these counterfeits must stop in somebody's hands; and they would be sure to stop in the hands of those who were least able to bear the loss. Every trader down the Mississippi, Mr. B. said, was more or less imposed upon with counterfeit paper; some lost nearly their whole cargoes. Now if there was a branch mint in New Orleans every one would get new gold. He could get it direct from the mint; or have his gold examined there before he received it. Mr. B. said that one great object of establishing branch mints was to prevent and detect counterfeiting. Such establishments would detect every counterfeit piece, and enable every body to have recourse to a prompt and safe standard for ascertaining what was genuine and what not. This was a great reason for the ten branches in France.

Mr. B. was against the paper system. He was against all small notes. He was against all paper currency for common use; and being against it he was in favor of the measures that would put down small paper and put up gold and silver. The branching of the mint was one of the indispensable measures for accomplishing that object, and therefore he was for it. He was in favor of practical measures. Speeches alone would not do. A gentleman might make a fine speech in favor of hard money; but unless he gave votes in favor of measures to accomplish it, the speech would be inoperative. Mr. B. held the French currency to be the best in the world, where there was no bank note under 500 francs (near hundred millions of dollars; had lately stood two revoluti quest, without the least fluctu tity or value.

New Orleans, he said, occup citous point in America for a the point of reception and diffu of Mexico came there; and w cended the river into the whol the market city-the emporio Valley; and from that point e produce could receive his supp home. Mr. B. reiterated that th of currency; of hard money as gold against United States Banl a struggle with the paper syster gold bill was one step; the bran would be the second step; the su notes under twenty dollars wou step towards getting a gold and The States could do much toward small notes; the federal governi them down, by putting the bank them under the ban; or, what best of all, returning to the act enacted that the revenues of the ment should be received in gold

The question was then put o motion for indefinite postponeme -16 yeas to 27 nays. Further st tion was made to defeat the bil moved to postpone it to the en which, being near the end of the s be a delay which might be fatal came near passing-20 yeas to motion was made by Mr. Clay to bill to the Committee of Finance-a valent to its abandonment for the se failed. Mr. Calhoun gave the bil support. He said it was a question o and of vital importance to the Sou served the most serious considerati was sorry to say, he had seen mo ing opposition made to it than t measure for the last two years. sectional question, but one intended equal benefits to all the States-Mr if there had been resistance on one sic also been a most unparalleled, and h unbounded perseverance on the other cities, and villages of the country, ascend and replenish and f the land. From ew gold would come ally into Kentucky. the stock drivers. sy remittance, and to on to their currency: dispense with their

1, what loss has the ned for want of gold? whole West was full t counterfeit paper e actual circulation, ates branch drafts: se counterfeits must and they would be those who were least ery trader down the 3 more or less imposiper; some lost nearif there was a branch one would get new t from the mint; or re before he received reat object of estabo prevent and detect lishments would dee, and enable every compt and safe standas genuine and what on for the ten branch-

per system. He was e was against all pae; and being against neasures that would ut up gold and silver. vas one of the indisuplishing that object,

He was in favor ceches alone would t make a fine speech unless he gave votes mplish it, the speech B. held the French e world, where there 500 francs (near quence, there was a of upwards of five hundred millions of dollars; a currency which had lately stood two revolutions and one conquest, without the least fluctuation in its quantity or value.

New Orleans, he said, occupied the most felicitous point in America for a mint. It was at the point of reception and diffusion. The specie of Mexico came there; and when there, it ascended the river into the whole West. It was the market city-the emporium of the Great Valley; and from that point every exporter of produce could receive his supply and bring it home. Mr. B. reiterated that this was a question of currency; of hard money against paper; of gold against United States Bank notes. It was a struggle with the paper system. He said the gold bill was one step; the branching the mint would be the second step; the suppression of all notes under twenty dollars would be the third sten towards getting a gold and silver currency. The States could do much towards putting down small notes; the federal government could put them down, by putting the banks which issued them under the ban; or, what was better, and best of all, returning to the act of 1789, which enacted that the revenues of the federal government should be received in gold and silver coin

The question was then put on Mr. Clay's motion for indefinite postponement-and failed -16 yeas to 27 nays. Further strenuous exertion was made to defeat the bill. Mr. Clay moved to postpone it to the ensuing weekwhich, being near the end of the session, would be a delay which might be fatal to it; but it came near passing-20 year to 22 nays. A motion was made by Mr. Clay to recommit the bill to the Committee of Finance-a motion equivalent to its abandonment for the session, which failed. Mr. Calhoun gave the bill an earnest support. He said it was a question of magnitude, and of vital importance to the South, and deserved the most serious consideration. Yet, he was sorry to say, he had seen more persevering opposition made to it than to any other measure for the last two years. It was a sectional question, but one intended to extend repeat that in whatever light he had received the proposed measure, he had been unable to come to any other conclusion than this, that it was, in his humble judgment, delusive, uncalled for, calculated to deceive the people—to hold out ideas which would never be realized; -and as utterly unworthy of the consideration of the Senate.-Mr. Calhoun was astonished at the warmth of Mr. Clay on this question-a quesas much sectional in one point of view, as a measure could be, but national in another. Let senators say what they would, this government was bound, in his opinion, to establish the mints which had been asked for. Finally, the question was taken, and carried-24 to 19-the yeas being: Messrs. Benton, Bibb, Brown, Calhoun, Cuthbert, Hendricks, Kane, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Leigh, Linn, Mangum, Morris, Porter, Preston, Robinson, Ruggles, Shepley, Tallmadge, Tyler, Waggaman, Webster, White, Wright. The nays were: Messrs. Bell of New Hampshire, Black of Mississippi, Buchanan, Clay, Clayton, Ewing, Frelinghuysen, Goldsborough, Isaac Hill, Knight, McKean, Naudain, Robbins, Silsbee, Smith, Southard, Swift, Tipton, Tomlinson. The bill was immediately carried to the House of Representatives; and there being a large majority there in favor of the hard money policy of the administration, it was taken up and acted upon, although so near the end of the session; and easily passed.

CHAPTER CXXVI.

REGULATION DEPOSIT BILL.

The President had recommended to Congress the passage of an act to regulate the custody of the public moneys in the local banks, intrusted with their keeping. It was a renewal of the same recommendation made at the time of their removal, and in conformity to which the House of Representatives had passed the bill which had been defeated in the Senate. The same bill was sent up to the Senate again, and passed by equal benefits to all the States-Mr. Clay said, a large majority: twenty-eight to twelve. The if there had been resistance on one side, there had yeas were: Messrs. Benton, Black of Missisalso been a most unparalleled, and he must say, sippi, Calhoun, Clayton of Delaware, Cuthbert of unbounded perseverance on the other. He would Georgia, Ewing of Ohio, Frelinghuysen, Goldsborough, Kent, Knight, Leigh, Linn, McKean, Mangum, Moore, Alexander Porter, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Robinson, Smith, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, Tyler, Waggaman, Webster, Wright. The navs were: Messrs. Bibb, Brown, Buchanan, Hendricks, Hill, Kane, King of Alabama, Morris of Ohio, Poindexter, Ruggles, Shepley, Tallmadge, And thus, the complaint ceased which had so long prevailed against the President, on the alleged illegality of the State bank custody of the public moneys. These banks were taken as a necessity, and as a halfway house between the Bank of the United States and an Independent treasury. After a brief sojourn in the intermediate abode, they passed on to the Independent treasury—there, it is hoped, to remain for ever.

CHAPTER CXXVII.

DEFEAT OF THE DEFENCE APPROPRIATION, AND LOSS OF THE FORTIFICATION BILL

THE President in his annual message at the commencement had communicated to Congress the state of our relations with France, and especially the continued failure to pay the indemnities stipulated by the treaty of 1831; and had recommended to Congress measures of reprisal against the commerce of France. The recommendation, in the House of Representatives, was referred to the committee of foreign relations, which through their chairman, Mr. Cambreling, made a report adverse to immediate resort to reprisals, and recommending contingent preparation to meet any emergency which should grow out of a continued refusal on the part of France to comply with her treaty, and make the stipulated payment. In conformity with this last recommendation, and at the suggestion of Mr. John Quincy Adams, it was resolved unanimously upon yeas and nays, or rather upon yeas, their being no nays, and 212 members voting-"That in the opinion of this House, the treaty of the 4th of July 1831 with France be maintained, and its execution insisted upon:" and, with the like unanimity it was resolved-"That preparations ought to be made to meet any emergency growing out of our relations with France." These two resolutions showed the serve unimpaired that honor.

temper of the House, and that it intended to vindicate the rights of our citizens, if necessary at the expense of war. Accordingly an appropriation of three millions of dollars was inserted by the House in the general fortification bill to enable the President to make such military and naval preparations during the recess of Congress as the state of our relations with France might require. This appropriation was zealously voted by the House: in the Senate it met with no favor; and was rejected. The House insisted on its appropriation: the Senate "adhered" to its vote: and that brought the disagreement to a committee of conference, proposed by the House. In the mean time Congress was in the expiring moments of its session; and eventually the whole appropriation for contingent preparation, and the whole fortification bill, was lost by the termination of the Congress. It was a most serious loss; and it became a question which House was responsible for such a misfortuneregrettable at all times, but particularly so in the face of our relations with France. The starting point in the road which led to this loss was the motion made by Mr. Webster to "adhere "-a harsh motion, and more calculated to estrange than to unite the two Houses. Mr. King, of Alabama, immediately took up the motion in that sense; and said:

"He very much regretted that the senator from Massachusetts should have made such a motion: it had seldom or never been resorted to until other and more gentle means had failed to produce a unity of action between the two Houses. At this stage of the proceeding it would be considered (and justly) harsh in its character; and he had no doubt, if sanctioned by the Senate, would greatly exasperate the other House, and probably endanger the passage of the bill altogether. Are gentlemen, said Mr. Mr. K., prepared for this? Will they, at this particular juncture, in the present condition of things, take upon themselves such a fearful responsibility as the rejection of this bill might involve? For himself, if your forts are to be left unarmed, your ships unrepaired and out of commission, and vour whole sea-coast exposed without defences of any kind, the responsibility should not rest upon his shoulders. It is as well, said Mr. K., to speak plainly on this subject. Our position with regard to France was known to all who heard him to be of such a character as would not, in his opinion, justify prudent men, men who look to the preservation of the rights and the honor of the nation, in withholding the means, the most ample means, to maintain those rights and pre-

"Mr. K. said, while he was fr the proposed appropriation was altogether as specific as he con it, he could, not view it in the or seemed to have, so much alar from Massachusetts, and others on the subject. We are told, s the adoption of the amendmen House will prostrate the fortres tution and bury under its ruins the people. He had too long l to the course of debate here, part of high party excitement, to pay to bold assertion or violent de what, he asked, does it violate th Does it give to the President th claring war? You have been to ly, by my friend from Pennsylv chanan], that this power alone ! gress; nor does this bill in the impair it. Does it authorize armies? No, not one man can vond the number required to fil of your little army; and whether amendment or not, that power seed under existing laws. Is i even unprecedented and unsual tention to the history of our gov satisfy all who heard him, that it one nor the other.

"During the whole period of th tions of General Washington a Adams, all appropriations were g ing a gross sum for the expenditur ent departments of the governme direction of the President; and i Mr. Jefferson came into office, the commendation, specific appropri adopted. Was the constitution vic down, and destroyed, under the ac of the father of his country? Or tress to which the senator from M on this occasion, clings so fondly, in when millions were placed in Mr. Vefferson himself, to be dispo designated object, but, in every thing to his unlimited discretion? . No, s our liberties remained unimpaired; a ed in God, would so remain for cent come. He would not urge his confi distinguished individual at the head ernment as a reason why this amenda cass; he was in favor of limiting discretion as far as practicable; but whom, then, should they look? Su head of the government—to the man the people to guard their rights and p laterests. He put it to senators to se in a possible contingency, which all we stand, our forts should not be armed put in commission? None will ventu say it. Yet the extent to which such ces may present themselves, causes which would place it out of the pow

gress promptly to meet the emerg

at it intended to ens, if necessary rdingly an approllars was inserted fortification bill to such military and ne recess of Contions with France tion was zealously Senate it met with The House insisted nate "adhered" to e disagreement to proposed by the ongress was in the on; and eventually contingent preparaion bill, was lost by ess. It was a most a question which uch a misfortunerith France. The particularly so in nich led to this loss r. Webster to "admore calculated to two Houses. Mr. ely took up the mo-> hat the senator from nade such a motion; esorted to until other failed to produce a ie two Houses. At it would be consids character; and he by the Senate, would House, and probably bill altogether. Are , prepared for this? ar juncture, in the s, take upon themsibility as the rejecve? For himself, if marmed, your ships mmission, and your hout defences of any ald not rest upon his aid Mr. K., to speak ur position with reto all who heard him as would not, in his n, men who look to its and the honor of the means, the most hose rights and pre-

"Mr. K, said, while he was free to confess that the proposed appropriation was not in its terms altogether as specific as he could, have wished it he could, not view it in the light which had, or seemed to have, so much alarmed the senator from Massachusetts, and others who had spoken on the subject. We are told, said Mr. K., that the adoption of the amendment made by the House will prostrate the fortress of the constitution and bury under its ruins the liberties of the people. He had too long been accustomed to the course of debate here, particularly in times of high party excitement, to pay much attention to bold assertion or violent denunciation. In what, he asked, does it violate the constitution? Does it give to the President the power of declaring war? You have been told, and told truly, by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. Buchanan], that this power alone belongs to Congress; nor does this bill in the slightest degree impair it. Does it authorize the raising of armies? No, not one man can be enlisted bevond the number required to fill up the ranks of your little army; and whether you pass this amendment or not, that power is already posseed under existing laws. Is it, said Mr. K., even unprecedented and unsual? , A little attention to the history of our government must satisfy all who heard him, that it is neither the one nor the other.

"During the whole period of the administrations of General Washington and the elder Adams, all appropriations were general, applying a gross sum for the expenditure of the different departments of the government, under the direction of the President; and it was not till Mr. Jefferson came into office, that, at his recommendation, specific appropriations were adopted. Was the constitution violated, broken down, and destroyed, under the administration of the father of his country? Or did the fortress to which the senator from Massachusetts, on this occasion, clings so fondly, tumble into in when millions were placed in the hands of Mr. Vefferson himself, to be disposed of for a designated object, but, in every thing else, subject to his unlimited discretion? - No, said Mr. K., our liberties remained unimpaired; and, he trusted in God, would so remain for centuries yet to come. He would not urge his confidence in the distinguished individual at the head of the government as a reason why this amendment should pass; he was in favor of limiting executive discretion as far as practicable; but circumstances may present themselves, causes may exist, which would place it out of the power of Congress promptly to meet the emergency. To whom, then, should they look? Surely to the head of the government—to the man selected by the people to guard their rights and protect their interests. He put it to senators to say whether, in a possible contingency, which all would understand, our forts should not be armed, or ships put in commission? None will venture to gain-should be carried must, from the very recessity of the case, be left to the sound discretion of the President. From the position he occupies, no one can be so competent to form a correct judgment, and he could not, if he would, apply the money to other objects than the defences of the country. Mr. K. said he would not, at this last moment of the session, when time was so very precious, further detain the Senate than to express his deep apprehension, his alarm, lest this most important bill should be lost by this conflict between the two Houses. He would beg of senators to reflect on the disastrous consequences which might ensue. He would again entreat the senator from Massachusetts to withdraw his motion, and ask a conference, and thus leave some reasonable ground for hope of ultimate agreement on this most important subject."

The motion was persisted in, and the "adherence" carried by a vote of twenty-nine to seventeen. The yeas and navs were:

YEAS.-Messrs, Bell, Bibb, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Ewing, Frelinghuysen, Goldsborough, Hendricks, Kent, Knight, Leigh, Mangum, Moore, Naudain, Poindexter, Porter, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Silsbee, Smith, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, Tyler, Waggaman, Webster, White.—29.

Navs.—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Cuthbert, Grundy, Hill, Kane, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Linn, McKean, Ruggles, Robinson, Shepley, Tallmadge, Tipton, Wright .-

Upon being notified of this vote, the House took the conciliatory step of "insisting;" and asked a "conference." The Senate agreed to the request—appointed a committee on its part, which was met by another oh the part of the House, which could not agree about the three millions; and while engaged in these attempts at concord, the existence of the Congress terminated. It was after midnight; the morning of the fourth of March had commenced; many members said their power was at an end-others that it would continue till twelve o'clock, noon; for it was that hour, on the 3d of March, 1789, that the first Congress commenced its existence, and that day should only be counted half, and the half of the next day taken to make out two complete years for each Congress. To this it was answered that, in law, there are no fractions of a day; that the whole day counted in a legal transaction: in the birth of a measure or of a man. The first day that the first Congress sat was the day of its birth, without looking to the hour at which it formed a quorum; the day a man was say it. Yet the extent to which such armament born was the day of his birth, and he counted from the beginning of the day, and the whole day, and not from the hour and minute at which he entered the world—a rule which would rob all the afternoon-born children of more or less of the day on which they were born, and postpone their majority until the day after their birthday. While these disquisitions were going on, many members were going off; and the Senate hearing nothing from the House, dispatched a message to it, on the motion of Mr. Webster, "respectfully to remind it" of the disagreement on the fortification bill; on receiving which message, Mr. Cambreleng, chairman of conference, on the part of the House, stood up and said:

"That the committee of conference of the two Houses had met, and had concurred in an amendment which was very unsatisfactory to him. It proposed an unconditional appropriation of three hundred thousand dollars for arming the fortifications, and five hundred thousand dollars for repairs of and equipping our vessels of war-an amount totally inadequate, if it should be required, and more than was necessary, if it should not be. When he came into the House from the conference, they were calling the ayes and noes on the resolution to pay the compensation due the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. Letcher). He voted on that resolution, but there was no quorum voting. On a subsequent proposition to adjourn, the ayes and noes were called, and again there was no quorum voting. Under such circumstances, and at two o'clock in the morning, he did not feel authorized to present to the House an appropriation of eight hundred thousand dollars. He regretted the loss, not only of the appropriation for the defence of the country, but of the whole fortification bill; but let the responsibility fall where it ought-on the Senate of the United States. The House had discharged its duty to the country. It had sent an amendment to the constitution. With this the fortification bill to the Senate, with an additional appropriation, entirely for the defence of the country. The Senate had rejected that appropriation, without even deigning to propose any amendment whatever, either in form or amount. The House sent it a second time; and a second time no amendment was proposed, but the reverse; the Senate adhered, without condescending to ask even a conference. Had that body asked a conference, in the first instance, some provision would have been made for defence, and the fortification bill would have been saved before the hour arrived which terminated the existence of the present House of Representatives. As it was, the committees did not concur till this House had ceased to exist- the ayes and noes had been twice taken without a quorum—the bill was evidently lost, and the Senate must take the responsibility of leaving the country defenceless. He could not feel authorized to report the bill to the House, situated as it | dexter was appointed in his place; Mr. South was, and at this hour in the morning; but if any other member of the committee of conference proposed to do it, he should make no objection, though he believed such a proposition utterly ineffectual at this hour; for no member could, at this hour in the morning, be compelled to vote."

Many members said the time was out, and that there had been no quorum for two hours, A count was had, and a quorum not found. The members were requested to pass through tellers and did so: only eight-two present. Mr. John Y. Mason informed the House that the Senate had adjourned; then the House did the samemaking the adjournment in due form, after a vole of thanks to the speaker, and hearing his part ing address in return.

CHAPTER CXXVIII.

DISTRIBUTION OF REVENUE.

Propositions for distributing the public land revenue among the States, had become common to be succeeded by others to distribute the lands themselves, and finally the Custom House revenue, as well as that of the lands. The progress of distribution was natural and inevitable in that direction, when once begun. Mr. Calhoun and his friends had opposed these proposed distributions as unconstitutional, as well as demoraliing; but after his junction with Mr. Clav. he began to favor them; but still with the salvod view, in the latter part of the session of 1835, he moved a resolution of inquiry into the extent of executive patronage, the increase of public expenditure, and the increase of the number of persons employed or fed by the federal govern ment; and he asked for a select committeed six to report upon his resolution. Both motions were granted by the Senate; and, according " parliamentary law, and the principles of fair legislation (which always accord a committee favorable to the object proposed), the members of the committee were appointed upon the selection of the six which he wished. They were Messrs. Webster, Southard, Bibb, King of Geor gia, and Benton-which, with himself, would make six. Mr. Webster declined, and Mr. Poir

ard did not act; and the con of five, stood, politically, three ministration-two for it; and tion of Mr. Calhoun's plan of I committee, taken equally from cal parties. He had propos upon the basis of three politi Senate, desiring to have two no party; giving as a reason for he wished to go into the exam portant inquiry proposed, with from all prejudice, and calculat impartial consideration. This parties was not to the taste of and hence the refusal of som it. It was the first time that three parties was proposed to b of senatorial action, and did no actual committee classed den with the majority opposed to the

At the first meeting a sub-co was formed—Mr. Calhoun of co -to draw up a report for the the full committee: and of this a majority was against the admin soon the committee was assemble report read. I was surprised at quickness of the preparation and of the paper. It was an elabo and plausible attack upon the accusing it of having doubled th the government—of having doubl of persons employed or supported ing the public moneys in illegal co ercising a patronage tending to the whole the result of an over which there was no way to depl distribution of the surplus revenu States; for which purpose an ame constitution would be necessary; posed. Mr. Benton heard the readi and when finished declared his d said he should make no minority re of reports which he always disliked read in the Senate he should rise in oppose it. Mr. King, of Georgia, Mr. Benton; and thus the report w Calhoun read it himself at the secre and moved its printing. Mr. Poind an extra number of 30,000 copies; length in support of his motion, and the report. Mr. King, of Georgia, fo the morning; but if committee of confershould make no obed such a proposition hour; for no member morning, be compelled he time was out, and morum for two hours. norum not found. The to pass through tellers to present. Mr. John Iouse that the Senate House did the samen due form, after a vote and hearing his part

CXXVIII.

OF REVENUE.

uting the public land , had become common to distribute the lands ie Custom House rerelands. The progress il and inevitable in that un. Mr. Calhoun and hese proposed distribu-, as well as demoralizion with Mr. Clay, he still with the salvod nstitution. With this f the session of 1835, inquiry into the extent the increase of public ease of the number of by the federal governa select committeed solution. Both motions ate; and, according # the principles of far 's accord a committee roposed), the members pointed upon the selecwished. They were: rd, Bibb, King of Geor , with himself, would declined, and Mr. Poin his place; Mr. South ard did not act; and the committee, consisting of five, stood, politically, three against the administration-two for it; and was thus a frustration of Mr. Calhoun's plan of having an impartial committee, taken equally from the three political parties. He had proposed the committee upon the basis of three political parties in the Senate, desiring to have two members from each party; giving as a reason for that desire, that he wished to go into the examination of the important inquiry proposed, with a committee free from all prejudice, and calculated to give it an impartial consideration. This division into three parties was not to the taste of all the members; and hence the refusal of some to serve upon it. It was the first time that the existence of three parties was proposed to be made the basis of senatorial action, and did not succeed. The actual committee classed democratically, but with the majority opposed to the administration.

At the first meeting a sub-committee of three was formed-Mr. Calhoun of course at its head -to draw up a report for the consideration of the full committee: and of this sub-committee a majority was against the administration. Very soon the committee was assembled to hear the report read. I was surprised at it-both at the quickness of the preparation and the character of the paper. It was an elaborate, ingenious and plausible attack upon the administration, accusing it of having doubled the expenses of the government-of having doubled the number of persons employed or supported by it-of holding the public moneys in illegal custody-of exercising a patronage tending to corruptionthe whole the result of an over full treasury. which there was no way to deplete but by a distribution of the surplus revenue among the States; for which purpose an amendment of the constitution would be necessary; and was proposed. Mr. Benton heard the reading in silence; and when finished declared his dissent to it: said he should make no minority report—a kind of reports which he always disliked; but when read in the Senate he should rise in his place and oppose it. Mr. King, of Georgia, sided with Mr. Benton; and thus the report went in. Mr. Calhoun read it himself at the secretary's table, and moved its printing. Mr. Poindexter moved an extra number of 30,000 copies; and spoke at length in support of his motion, and in favor of the report. Mr. King, of Georgia, followed him tive must prove ineffectual.

against the report: and Mr. Benton followed Mr. King on the same side. On the subject of the increase of expenditures doubled within the time mentioned, he showed that it came from extraordinary objects, not belonging to the expenses of the government, but temporary in their nature and transient in their existence: namely, the expenses of removing the Indians, the Indian war upon the Mississippi, and the pension act of 1832; which carried up the revolutionary pensions from $355,000 per annum to $3,500,000—just tenfold—and by an act which the friends of the administration opposed. He showed also that the increase in the number of persons employed, or supported by the government, came in a great degree from the same measure which carried up the number of pensioners from 17,000 to 40,000. On the subject of the illegal custody of the public moneys, it was shown, in the first place, that the custody was not illegal; and, in the second, that the deposit regulation bill had been defeated in the Senate by the opponents of the administration. Having vindicated the administration from the charge of extravagance, and the illegal custody of the public moneys, Mr. Benton came to the main part of the report—the surplus in the treasury, its distribution for eight years among the States (just the period to cover two presidential elections); and the proposed amendment to the constitution to permit that distribution to be made: and here it is right that the report should be allowed to speak for itself. Having assumed the annual surplus to be nine millions for eight years-until the compromise of 1833 worked out its problem; -that this surplus was inevitable, and that there was no legitimate object of federal care on which it could be expended, the report brought out distribution as the only practical depletion of the treasury, and the only remedy for the corruptions which an exuberant treasury engendered. It proceeded thus:

"But if no ubject of expenditure can be selected on which the surplus can be safely expended. and if neither the revenue nor expenditure can, under existing circumstances, be reduced, the next inquiry is, what is to be done with the surplus, which, as has been shown, will probably equal, on an average, for the next eight years, the sum of $9,000,000 beyond the just wants of the government? A surplus of which, unless some safe disposition can be made, all other means of reducing the patronage of the Execu-

"Your committee are deeply sensible of the great difficulty of finding any satisfactory solution of this question; but believing that the very existence of our institutions, and with them the liberty of the country, may depend on the success of their investigation, they have carefully explored the whole ground, and the result of their inquiry is, that but one means has occurred to them holding out any reasonable prospect of success. A few preliminary remarks will be necessary to explain their views.

"Amidst all the difficulties of our situation, there is one consolation; that the danger from Executive patronage, as far as it depends on excess of revenue, must be temporary. Assuming that the act of 2d of March, 1833, will be left undisturbed, by its provisions the income, after the year 1842, is to be reduced to the economical wants of the government. The government, then, is in a state of passage from one where the revenue is excessive, to another in which, at a fixed and no distant period, it will be reduced to its proper limits. The difficulty in the intermediate time is, that the revenue cannot be brought down to the expenditure, nor the expenditure, without great danger, raised to the revenue, for reasons already explained. How is this difficulty to be overcome? It might seem that the simple and natural means would be, to vest the surplus in some safe and profitable stock, to accumulate for future use; but the difficulty in such a course will, on examination, be found insuperable.

"At the very commencement, in selecting the stock, there would be great, if not insurmountable, difficulties. No one would think of investing the surplus in bank stock, against which there are so many and such decisive reasons that it is not deemed necessary to state them; nor would the objections be less decisive against vesting in the stock of the States, which would create the dangerous relation of debtor and creditor between the government and the members of the Union. But suppose this difficulty surmounted, and that some stock perfectly safe was selected, there would still remain another that could not be surmounted. There cannot be found a stock, with an interest in its favor sufficiently strong to compete with the interests which, with a large surplus revenue, will be ever found in favor of expenditures. It must be perfectly obvious to all who have the least experience, or who will duly reflect on the subject, that were a fund selected in which to vest the surplus revenue for future use, there would be found in practice a constant conflict between the interest in favor of some local or favorite scheme of expenditure, and that in favor of the stock. Nor can it be less obvious that, in point of fact, the former would prove far stronger than the latter. The result is obvious. The surplus, be it ever so great, would be absorbed by appropriations, instead of being vested in the stock; and the scheme, of course, would, in practice, prove an abortion; which brings us back to the ture and its consequent tendency to retreat original inquiry, how is the surplus to be disposed of until the excess shall be reduced to the just and economical wants of the government?

"After bestowing on this question, on the successful solution of which so much depends, the most deliberate attention, your committee, as they have already stated, can advise but one means by which it can be effected; and that is an amendment of the constitution, authorizing the temporary distribution of the surplus revenue among the States till the year 1843; when as has been shown, the income and expenditure will be equalized.

Your committee are fully aware of the many and fatal objections to the distribution of the surplus revenue among the States, considered as a part of the ordinary and regular system of this government. They admit them to be as great as can well be imagined. The proposition itself, that the government should collect money for the purpose of such distribution, or should distribute a surplus for the purpose of perpetuating taxes, is too absurd to require refutation: and yet what would be when applied, as supposed, so absurd and pernicious, is, in the opinion of your committee, in the present extraordinary and deeply disordered state of our affairs not only useful and salutary, but indispensable to the restoration of the body politic to a sound condition; just as some potent medicine, which it would be dangerous and absurd to prescribe to the healthy, may, to the diseased, be the only means of arresting the hand of death. Distribution, as proposed, is not for the preposterous and dangerous purpose of raising a revenue for distribution, or of distributing the surplus as a means of perpetuating a system of duties or taxes; but a temporary measure to dispose of an unavoidable surplus while the revenue is in the course of reduction, and which cannot be otherwise disposed of, without greatly aggranting a disease that threatens the most dangerous consequences; and which holds out hope not only of arresting its further progress, but also of restoring the body politic to a state of health and vigor. The truth of this assertion a few ob servations will suffice to illustrate.

"It must be obvious, on a little reflection, that the effects of distribution of the surplus would be to place the interests of the States, on all questions of expenditure, in opposition to & penditure, as every reduction of expense would necessarily increase the sum to be distributed among the States. The effect of this would be to convert them, through their interests, in faithful and vigilant sentinels on the side of economy and accountability in the expenditure of this government; and would thus powerfully tend to restore the government, in its fisal action, to the plain and honest simplicity of former days.

"It may, perhaps, be thought by some that the power which the distribution among the States would bring to bear against the expendthe disbursements of the gov so strong, as not only to cur proper expenditure, but also cessary. Such, undoubtedly sequence, if the process were but in the present irregular a of the system, when its centr ens to concentrate all its pov partment, the fear that the ac ment will be too much reduc under consideration, in the sho it is proposed to limit its ope just foundation. On the con posed measure should be appl diseased state of the governme be like that of some powerfu cine operating just long enoug present morbid action, but not to superinduce another of an

But it may be objected tha tribution might reduce all use it would at the same time give to the interest in favor of tax denied that such would be its if the danger from increased dut at this time as great as that fr renue, the objection would be confidently believed that such On the contrary, in proposing tl assumed that the act of March main undisturbed. It is on the assumption that the measure is s it is believed, safely proposed. "It may, however, be said tha tion may create, on the part of appetite in its favor which may 1 to its adoption as a permanent me indeed tend to excite such an appe the period proposed for its opera obvious that this danger is far m tervailed by the fact that the pro ment to the constitution to autho. bution would place the power bey of legislative construction; and the prevent the possibility of its adop manent measure; as it cannot be contraction three-fourths of the States will e an amendment of the constitution a distribution, except as an extrac of the country like the present. "Giving, however, to these and otl which may be urged, all the force claimed for them, it must be rem question is not whether the measu s or is not liable to this or that o whether any other less objection devised; or rather, whether there i which promises the least prospect o can be applied. Let not the delu that the disease, after running throu ral course, will terminate of itself, w consequences. Experience is oppos anticipations. Many and striking

sure applicable to some extraordin

he surplus to be disfiall be reduced to the s of the government? is question, on the sucso much depends, the l, your committee, as l, can advise but one effected; and that is, nstitution, authorizing n of the surplus revethe year 1843; when he were and expenditure > illy aware of the many he distribution of the the States, considered and regular system of admit them to be as ined. The proposition t should collect money distribution, or should ne purpose of perpetuato require refutation; when applied, as supnicious, is, in the opin-1 the present extraorered state of our affairs tary, but indispensable body politic to a sound potent medicine, which nd absurd to prescribe he diseased, be the only hand of death. Distrot for the preposterous of raising a revenue for outing the surplus as a a system of duties or measure to dispose d while the revenue is in and which cannot be thout greatly aggrantens the most dangerous h holds out hope, not ther progress, but also litic to a state of health this assertion a few ob illustrate.

n a little reflection that n of the surplus would to of the States, on all e, in opposition to exciton of expense would sum to be distribute effect of this would be their interests, manninels on the side of lity in the expenditures would thus powerfully vernment, in its field honest simplicity of for-thought by some that listribution among the ear against the expendnt tendency to retrend

the disbursements of the government, would be so strong, as not only to curtail useless or improper expenditure, but also the useful and necessary. Such, undoubtedly, would be the consequence, if the process were too long continued: but in the present irregular and excessive action of the system, when its centripetal force threatens to concentrate all its powers in a single department, the fear that the action of this government will be too much reduced by the measure under consideration, in the short period to which it is proposed to limit its operation, is without just foundation. On the contrary, if the proposed measure should be applied in the present diseased state of the government, its effect would be like that of some powerful alterative medicine operating just long enough to change the present morbid action, but not sufficiently long to superinduce another of an opposite charac-

"But it may be objected that, though the distribution might reduce all useless expenditure, it would at the same time give additional power to the interest in favor of taxation. It is not denied that such would be its tendency; and, if the danger from increased duties or taxes was at this time as great as that from a surplus rerune, the objection would be fatal; but it is confidently believed that such is not the case. On the contrary, in proposing the measure, it is assumed that the act of March 2, 1833, will remain undisturbed. It is on the strength of this assumption that the measure is proposed, and, sit is believed, safely proposed.

"It may, however, be said that the distribution may create, on the part of the States, an appetite in its favor which may ultimately lead to its adoption as a permanent measure. It may indeed tend to excite such an appetite, short as is the period proposed for its operation; but it is obvious that this danger is far more than countervalled by the fact that the proposed amendment to the constitution to authorize the distribution would place the power beyond the reach outon would place the power beyond the reach of legislative construction; and thus effectually prevent the possibility of its adoption as a permanent measure; as it cannot be conceived that three-fourths of the States will ever assent to an amendment of the constitution to authorize a distribution, except as an extraordinary measure applicable to some extraordinary condition of the country like the present.

"Giving, however, to these and other objections which may be urged, all the force that can be claimed for them, it must be remembered the question is not whether the measure proposed is or is not liable to this or that objection, but whether any other less objectionable can be devised; or rather, whether there is any other, which promises the least prospect of relief, that can be applied. Let not the delusion prevail that the disease, after running through its natural course, will terminate of itself, without fatal consequences. Experience is opposed to such anticipations. Many and striking are the experience.

amples of free States perishing under that excess of patronage which now afflicts ours. It may, in fact, be said with truth, that all or nearly all diseases which afflict free governments may be traced directly or indirectly to excess of revenue and expenditure; the effect of which is to rally around the government a powerful, corrupt, and subservient corps—a corps ever obedient to its will, and ready to sustain it in every measure, whether right or wrong; and which, if the cause of the disease be not eradicated, must ultimately render the government stronger than the people. What progress this dangerous disease has already made in our country it is not for your committee to say; but when they reflect on the present symptoms; on the almost unbounded extent of executive patronage, wielded by a single will; the surplus revenue, which cannot be reduced within proper limits in less than seven years—a period which covers two presidential elections, on both of which all this mighty power and influence will be brought to bear; and when they consider that, with the vast patronage and influence of this government, that of all the States acting in concert with it will be combined, there are just grounds to fear that the fate which has befallen so many other free governments must also befall ours, unless, indeed, some effectual remedy be forthwith applied. It is under this impression that your committee have suggested the one proposal; not as free from all objections, but as the only one of sufficient power to arrest the disease and to restore the body politic to a sound condition; and they have accordingly reported a resolution so to amend the constitution that the money remaining in the treasury at the end of each year till the 1st of January, 1843, deducting therefrom the sum of $2,000,000 to meet current and contingent expenses, shall annually be distributed among the States and Territories, including the District of Columbia; and, for that purpose, the sum to be distributed to be divided into as many shares as there are senators and representatives in Congress, adding two for each territory and two for the District of Columbia; and that there shall be allotted to each State a number of shares equal to its representation in both Houses, and to the territories, including the District of Columbia, two shares each. Supposing the surplus to be distributed should average $9,000,000 annually, as estimated, it would give to each share $30,405; which multiplied by the number of senators and representatives from a State will show the amount to which any State will be entitled."

The report being here introduced to speak for itself, the reply also is introduced as delivered upon the instant, and found in the Congress register of debates, thus:

"Mr. Benton next came to the proposition in the report to amend the constitution for eight years, to enable Congress to make distribution among the States, Territories, and District of Columbia, of the annual surplus of public money. The surplus is carefully calculated at $9,000,000 per annum for eight years; and the rule of distribution assumed goes to divide that sum into as many shares as there are senators and representatives in Congress; each State to take shares according to her representation; which the report shows would give for each share precisely $30,405; and then leaves it to the State itself, by a little ciphering, in multiplying the aforesaid sum of $30,405 by the whole number of senators and representatives which it may have in Congress, to calculate the annual amount of the stipend it would receive. This process the report extends through a period of eight years; so that the whole sum to be divided to the States, Territories, and District of Columbia, will amount to seventy-two millions of dollars.

"Of all the propositions which he ever witnessed, brought forward to astonish the senses, to confound recollection, and to make him doubt the reality of a past or a present scene, this proposition, said Mr. B., eclipses and distances the whole! What! the Senate of the United States-not only the same Senate, but the same members, sitting in the same chairs, looking in each others' faces, remembering what each had said only a few short months ago -now to be called upon to make an alteration in the constitution of the United States, for the pupose of dividing seventy-two millions of surplus money in the treasury; when that same treasury was proclaimed, affirmed, vaticinated and proved, upon calculations, for the whole period of the last session, to be sinking into bankruptcy! that it would be destitute of revenue by the end of the year, and could never be replenished until the deposits were restored! the bank rechartered! and the usurper and despot driven from the high place which he dishonored and abused! This was the cry then; the cry which resounded through this chamber for six long months, and was wafted upon every breeze to every quarter of the Republic, to alarm, agitate, disquiet and enrage the people. The author of this report, and the whole party with which he marched under the oriflamme of the Bank of the United States, filled the Union with this cry of a bankrupt treasury, and predicted the certain and speedy downfall of the administration, from the want of money to carry on the operations of the government.

"[Mr. Calhoun here rose and wished to know of Mr. Benton whether he meant to include him in the number of those who had predicted a deficiency in the revenue.]

"Mr. B. said he would answer the gentleman by telling him an anecdote. It was the story of a drummer taken prisoner in the low countries by the videttes of Marshal Saxe, under circumstances which deprived him of the protection of the laws of war. About to be shot the poor drummer plead in his defence that he was a non-combatant; he did not fight and kill people; he did nothing, he said, but beat his drum in the rear of the line. But he was answered, so much the worse; that he made other people fight, and kill one another, by driving them on with that drum of his in the rear of the line; and so he should suffer for it. Mr. B. hoped that the story would be understood and that it would be received by the gentleman as an answer to his question; as neither in law. politics, nor war, was there any difference between what a man did by himself, and did by another. Be that as it may, said Mr. B. the strangeness of the scene in which we are now engaged remains the same. Last year it was a bankrupt treasury, and a beggared government; now it is a treasury gorged to bursting with surplus millions, and a government trampling down liberty, contaminating morals, bribing and wielding vast masses of people, from the unemployable funds of countless treasures. Such are the scenes which the two sessions present; and it is in vain to deny it, for the fatal speeches of that fatal session have gone forth to all the borders of the republic. They were printed here by the myriad, franked by members by the ton weight, freighted to all parts by a decried and overwhelmed Post Office, and paid for! paid for! by whom? Thanks for one thing, at least! The report of the Finance Committee on the bank (Mr. Tyler's report) effected the exhumation of one mass-one mass of hidden and buried putridity; it was the printing account of the Bank of the United States for that session of Congress which will long live in the history of our country under the odious appellation of the panic session. That printing account has been dug up; is the black vomit of the bank! and he knew the medicine which could bring forty such vomits from the foul stomach of the old red harlot. It was the medicine of a committee of investigation, coasttuted upon parliamentary principles; a committee, composed, in its majority, of those who charged misconduct, and evinced a disposition to probe every charge to the bottom; such a committee as the Senate had appointed, at the same session, not for the bank, but for the post

"Yes, exclaimed Mr. B., not only the tressurv was to be bankrupt, but the currency was to be ruined. There was to be no money. The trash in the treasury, what little there was was to be nothing but depreciated paper, the vile issues of insovlent pet banks. Silver, and United States bank notes, and even good hills of exchange, were all to go off, all to take lear, and make their mournful exit together; and gold! that was a trick unworthy of counter nance; a gull to bamboozle the simple, and to insult the intelligent, until the fall elections were over. Ruin, ruin, ruin to the currency, was the lugubrious cry of the day, and the sor rowful burden of the speech for Now, on the contrary, it seems that there is to be money, real the treasury, such as the fierce. pet banks would wish to have ; little, since seventy-two millio are proposed to be drawn for empty treasury in the brief space Not a word about ruined curren word about the currency itself. seems to be dropped from the voc tlemen. All lips closed tight, all still, all allusion avoided, to phrase. The silver currency dou four millions of gold coins in he changes reduced to the lowest an rates; the whole expenses of Co gold; working people receiving for their ordinary wages. Such which have confounded the pr silenced the tongues of lament the word currency from our brought the people to question bring themselves, to doubt, the bility of those undaunted alarm go forward with new and confide notwithstanding they have been so conspicuously deceived in their of a ruined currency, a bankrupt a beggard government.

"But here we are, said Mr. 1 gaged in a serious proposition to stitution of the United States for eight years, in order to get rid of nue; and a most dazzling, seduct nating scheme is presented; no 1 millions a year for eight consecut took like wildfire, Mr. B. said, an a member-no, that might seem -he had seen a gentleman who le as establishing a new era in the America, establishing a new test 1 tion of parties, bringing a new que our elections, State and federal; the political salvation and elevation supported it and the immediate, u trievable political damnation of all it. But Mr. B. dissented from tl the scheme. It was an old acquai only new vamped and new burn present occasion. It is the same only to be accomplished in a d which was brought forward, some a senator from New Jersey (Mr. and which then received unmeast nation, not merely for unconstitu for all its effects and consequences dation of mendicant States, receiv nual allowance from the bounty c government; the debauchment of morals, when every citizen was to federal treasury for money, and eve for office was to outbid his compet ing it; the consolidation of the Sta Vol. I.—36

About to be shot, his defence that he id not fight and kill said, but beat his ac. But he was anthat he made other mother, by driving f his in the rear of I suffer for it. Mrould be understood ed by the gentleman n; as neither in law, re any difference behimself, and did by ay, said Mr. B., the I which we are now

Last year it was a eggared government; ed to bursting with overnment trampling g morals, bribing and ople, from the unems treasures. Such are sessions present; and the fatal speeches of ie forth to all the borey were printed here members by the ton rts by a decried and , and paid for! paid or one thing, at least! ce Committee on the ) effected the exhumamass of hidden and the printing account d States for that seswill long live in the nder the odious appelon. That printing acis the black vomit of w the medicine which vomits from the foul arlot. It was the mef investigation, constry principles ; a commitrajority, of those who evinced a disposition o the bottom; such a e had appointed, at the

B., not only the treet, but the currency was to be no money. The what little there was depreciated paper, the pet banks. Silver, and es, and even good bills go off, all to take learn, aful exit together; and k unworthy of countries with the fall elections, ruin to the currency, of the day, and these rowful burden of the speech for six long months. Now, on the contrary, it seems to be admitted that there is to be money, real good money, in the treasury, such as the fiercest haters of the pet banks would wish to have; and that not a little, since seventy-two millions of surpluses are proposed to be drawn from that same empty treasury in the brief space of eight years. Not a word about ruined currency now. Not a word about the currency itself. The very word seems to be dropped from the vocabulary of gentlemen. All lips closed tight, all tongues hushed still all allusion avoided, to that once dear phrase. The silver currency doubled in a year: four millions of gold coins in half a year; exchanges reduced to the lowest and most uniform rates; the whole expenses of Congress paid in gold; working people receiving gold and silver for their ordinary wages. Such are the results which have confounded the prophets of wo, silenced the tongues of lamentation, expelled the word currency from our debates; and brought the people to question, if it cannot bring themselves, to doubt, the future infallibility of those undaunted alarmists who still go forward with new and confident predictions. notwithstanding they have been so recently and so conspicuously deceived in their vaticinations of a ruined currency, a bankrupt treasury, and a beggard government.

"But here we are, said Mr. B., actually engaged in a serious proposition to alter the constitution of the United States for the period of eight years, in order to get rid of surplus revenue: and a most dazzling, seductive, and fascinating scheme is presented; no less than nine millions a year for eight consecutive years. It took like wildfire, Mr. B. said, and he had seen a member-no, that might seem too particular -he had seen a gentleman who looked upon it as establishing a new era in the affairs of our America, establishing a new test for the formation of parties, bringing a new question into all our elections, State and federal; and operating the political salvation and elevation of all who supported it and the immediate, utter, and irretrievable political damnation of all who opposed it. But Mr. B. dissented from the novelty of the scheme. It was an old acquaintance of his, only new vamped and new burnished, for the present occasion. It is the same proposition, only to be accomplished in a different way, which was brought forward, some years ago, by a senator from New Jersey (Mr. Dickerson) and which then received unmeasured condemnation, not merely for unconstitutionality, but for all its effects and consequences: the degradation of mendicant States, receiving their annual allowance from the bounty of the federal government; the debauchment of the public morals, when every citizen was to look to the federal treasury for money, and every candidate for office was to outbid his competitor in offering it; the consolidation of the States, thus re-Vol. I.—36

folly of collecting with one hand to pay back with the other; and both hands to be greased at the expense of the citizen, who pays one man to collect the money from him, and another to bring it back to him, minus the interest and the cost of a double operation in fetching and carrying; and the eventual and inevitable progress of the scheme to the plunder of the weaker half of the Union by the stronger; when the stronger half would undoubtedly throw the whole burden of raising the money upon the weaker half, and then take the main portion to themselves. Such were the main objections uttered against this plan, seven years ago, when a gallant son of South Carolina (General Hayne) stood by his (Mr. B.'s) side—no, stood before him—and led him in the fight against that fatal and delusive scheme, now brought forward under a more sedusive, dangerous, alarming, inexcusable, unjustifiable, and demoralizing form.

"Yes, said Mr. B., it is not only the revival of the same plan for dividing surplus revenue, which received its condemnation on this floor, seven or eight years ago; but it is the modification, and that in a form infinitely worse for the new States, of the famous land bill which now lies upon our table. It takes up the object of that bill, and runs away with it, giving nine millions where that gave three, and leaves the author of that bill out of sight behind; and can the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. Calhoun) be so short-sighted as not to see that somebody will play him the same prank, and come forward with propositions to raise and divide twenty, thirty, forty millions; and thus outleap, outjump, and outrun him in the race of popularity, just as far as he himself has now outjumped, outleaped, and outran, the author of the land distribution bill?

"Yes, said Mr. B., this scheme for dividing surplus revenue is an old acquaintance on this floor; but never did it come upon this floor at a time so inauspicious, under a form so questionable, and upon assumptions so unfounded in fact, so delusive in argument. He would speak of the inauspiciousness of the time hereafter; at present, he would take positions in direct contradiction to all the arguments of fact and reason upon which this monstrous scheme of distribution is erected and defended. Condensed into their essence, these arguments are:

"1. That there will be a surplus of nine millions annually, for eight years.

"2. That there is no way to reduce the revenue.

<sup>6</sup> 3. That there is no object of general utility to which these surpluses can be applied.

4. That distribution is the only way to carry them off without poisoning and corrupting the whole body politic.

"Mr. B. disputed the whole of those propositions, and would undertake to show each to be unfounded and erroneous.

ing it; the consolidation of the States, thus realting from a central supply of revenue; the bably equal, on the average, for the next eight years, the sum of $9,000,000 beyond the just years, the sum of the government; and in a subsequent made, he computes the income and outlay of the part it says, supposing the surplus to be distributed should average $9,000,000, annually, as estimated, it would give to each share $30,405, which, multiplied by the senators and representatives of any State, would show the sum to which it would be entitled. The amendment which has been reported to carry this distribution into effect is to take effect for the year 1835 -the present year-and to continue till the 1st day of January, 1843; of course it is inclusive of 1842, and makes a period of eight years for the distribution to go on. The amendment contains a blank, which is to be filled up with the sum which is to be left in the treasury every year, to meet contingent and unexpected demands; and the report shows that this blank is to be filled with the sum of $2,000,000. Here, then, is the totality of these surpluses, eleven millions a year, for eight consecutive years; but of which nine millions are to be taken annually for distribution. Now, nine times eight are seventy-two, so that here is a report setting forth the enormous sum of $72,000,000 of mere surplus, after satisfying all the just wants of the government, and leaving two millions in the treasury, to be held up for distribution, and to excite the people to clamor for their shares of such a great and dazzling prize. At the same time, Mr. B. said, there would be no such surplus. It was a delusive bait held out to whet the appetite of the people for the spoils of their country and could never be realized, even if the amendment for authorizing the distribution should now pass. The seventy-two millions could never be found; they would exist nowhere but in this report, in the author's imagination, and in the deluded hopes of an excited community. The seventy-two millions could never be found; they would turn out to be the 'fellows in Kendal green and buckram suits,' which figured so largely in the imagination of Sir John Falstaff —the two-and-fifty men in buckram which the valiant old knight received upon his point, thus! [extending a pencil in the attitude of defence]. The calculations of the author of the report were wild, delusive, astonishing, incredible. He (Mr. B.) could not limit himself to the epithet wild, for it was a clear case of hallucination.

"Mr. B. then took up the treasury report of Mr. Secretary Woodbury, communicated at the commencement of the present session of Congress, and containing the estimates required by law of the expected income and expenditure for the present year, and also for the year 1836. At pages 4 and 5 are the estimates for the present year; the income estimated at $20,000,000, the expenditures at $19,683,540; being a difference of only some three hundred thousand dollars between the income and the outlay; and such is the chance for nine millions taken, and two left in the first year of the distribution. At pages 10, 14, 15, the revenue for 1836 is computed; and, after going over all the heads of surplus of nine millions a year for eight year, expense, on which diminutions will probably be year at about equal; or probably a little surplus to the amount of one million. These are the estimates, said Mr. B., formed upon data and coming from an officer making reports upon his responsibility, and for the legislative guidance of Congress; and to which we are bound to give credence until they are shown to be incorrect Here, then, are the first two years of the eight disposed of, and nothing found in them to divide The last two years of the term could be dispatched even more quickly, said Mr. B.; for every body that understands the compromise act of March, 1833, must know that, in the last two years of the operation of that act there would be an actual deficit in the treasury. Look at the terms of the act! It proceeds by slow and insensible degrees, making slight deductions once in two years, until the years 1841 and 1842, when it ceases crawling, and commences jumping; and leaps down, at two jumps to twenty per centum on the value of the articles which pay duty, which articles are less than one half of our importations. Twenty per cent. upon the amount of goods which will then pay duty will produce but little, say twelve or thirteen millions, upon the basis of sixty or seventry millions of dutiable articles imported then, which only amount to forty-seven millions now. Then there will be no surplus at all for one half the period of eight years: the first two and the last two. In the middle period of four years there will probably be a surplus of two or three millions; but Mr. B. took issue upon all the allegtions with respect to it; as that there was mo way to reduce the revenue without disturbing the compromise act of March, 1833; that there was no object of general utility to which it could be applied; and that distribution was the only way to get rid of it.

"Equally delusive, and profoundly errore ous, was the gentleman's idea of the surplus which could be taken out of the appropriations. True, that operation could be performed once, and but once. The run of our trasury payments show that about one quarter of the year's expenditure is not paid within the year, but the first quarter of the next year, and thus could be paid out of the remnue received in the first quarter of the next year, even if the revenue of the last quarter of the preceding year was thrown away. But this was a thing which could only be done once You might rely upon the first quarter, but you could not upon the second, third, and fourth There would not be a dollar in the treasury a the end of four years, if you deducted a quariers amount four times successively. It was a care if a homely adage might be allowed, which would well apply—you could not eat the cake and have it too. Mr. B. submitted it, then to the Sense. that, on the first point of objection to the report, his issue was maintained. There was no such as had been assumed, nor any this assumption being the co whole edifice of the scheme was sufficient to show the fal to blow the whole scheme into Mr. B. admonished the Sen ridicule. To pass a solemn v the constitution, for the pur Congress to make distribution revenue, and then find no surn might lessen the dignity and din of so grave a body. It might e cule; and that was a hard thing and public men, to stand. The much in its time; much in the ! Monroe's administration, when Republican habitually denounce and displayed many brilliant es no mean hand, to prove that the applied, though applied to a n stood much, also, during the fo second Mr. Adams's administrat riving pages of the defunct N could still attest: but in all the clear of ridicule; it did nothi saucy wit could lay its lash. Le for the passage of this amendme it to untried peril; the peril of ture. And wo to the Senate, far nity, if it once gets into the windo shop, and becomes the burden which the milkmaids sing to the "2. Mr. B. took up his second tion. The report affirmed that way to reduce the revenue befor year 1842, without violating the compromise act of March, 1833 he had opposed that act when it sage, and had then stated his o It was certainly an extraordinary new constitution for nine years, a it felicitously called. It was mad manner, not precisely by three m on the coast of Italy, but by two of a boarding-house in this city; as through Congress under a press

duresse of feeling; under the fa

dissolution of the Union, raised

had been declaring, on one hand.

could not be reduced without

Union; and on the other that be kept up without dissolving the

The value of all such cries, Mr.

be appreciated in future, when it

how much facility certain persons under the opposite poles of the ear

on the subject of the tariff, had a to compromise their opinions, as tariff on the shelf for nine years!

covered two presidential election was no favorite of his, but he would

and thus leaving it to work out nine years, he would say there wer

duce the revenue, very sensibly, w

ng the terms or the spirit of th

tions will probably be come and outlay of the robably a little surplus illion. These are the ormed upon data, and aking reports upon his e legislative guidance h we are bound to give hown to be incorrect. wo years of the eight ound in them to divide. he term could be diskly, said Mr. B.; for tands the compromise know that, in the last ion of that act, there in the treasury. Look It proceeds by slow aking slight deductions il the years 1841 and wling, and commences wn, at two jumps, to re value of the articles ticles are less than one Twenty per cent. ds which will then pay tle, say twelve or thirasis of sixty or seventy es imported then, which en millions now. Then at all for one half the he first two and the last iod of four years there us of two or three milsue upon all the allega-; as that there was no nue without disturbing 1arch, 1833; that there utility to which it could stribution was the only > and profoundly errone 1's idea of the surplus out of the appropriation could be perform-The run of our treshat about one quarter are is not paid within t quarter of the next e paid out of the rerest quarter of the next ie of the last quarter of thrown away. But this ald only be done once ne first quarter, but you cond, third, and fourth dollar in the treasury you deducted a quarter's essively. It was a care be allowed, which would not eat the cake and have ed it, then, to the Senate, of objection to the report, red. There was no such s a year for eight years, this assumption being the corner-stone of the whole edifice of the scheme of distribution, it was sufficient to show the fallacy of that data to blow the whole scheme into the empty air.

Mr. B. admonished the Senate to beware of ridicule. To pass a solemn vote for amending the constitution, for the purpose of enabling Congress to make distribution of surpluses of revenue, and then find no surplus to distribute. might lessen the dignity and diminish the weight of so grave a body. It might expose it to ridicule; and that was a hard thing for public bodies, and public men, to stand. The Senate had stood much in its time; much in the latter part of Mr. Monroe's administration, when the Washington Republican habitually denounced it as a faction, and displayed many brilliant essays, written by no mean hand, to prove that the epithet was well applied, though applied to a majority. It had stood much, also, during the four years of the second Mr. Adams's administration; as the surriving pages of the defunct National Journal could still attest: but in all that time it stood clear of ridicule; it did nothing upon which saucy wit could lay its lash. Let it beware now! for the passage of this amendment may expose it to untried peril; the peril of song and caricature. And wo to the Senate, farewell to its dignity, if it once gets into the windows of the printshop, and becomes the burden of the ballads which the milkmaids sing to their cows.

"2. Mr. B. took up his second head of objection. The report affirmed that there was no way to reduce the revenue before the end of the year 1842, without violating the terms of the compromise act of March, 1833. Mr. B. said he had opposed that act when it was on its passage, and had then stated his objections to it. It was certainly an extraordinary act, a sort of new constitution for nine years, as he had heard it felicitously called. It was made in an unusual manner, not precisely by three men on an island on the coast of Italy, but by two in some room of a boarding-house in this city; and then pushed through Congress under a press of sail, and a duresse of feeling; under the factitious cry of dissolution of the Union, raised by those who had been declaring, on one hand, that the tariff could not be reduced without dissolving the Union; and on the other that it could not be kept up without dissolving the same Union. The value of all such cries, Mr. B. said, would be appreciated in future, when it was seen with how much facility certain persons who had stood under the opposite poles of the earth, as it were, on the subject of the tariff, had come together to compromise their opinions, and to lay the tariff on the shelf for nine years! a period which covered two presidential elections! That act was no favorite of his, but he would let it alone; and thus leaving it to work out its design for nine years, he would say there were ways to reduce the revenue, very sensibly, without affectng the terms or the spirit of that act. And as had been assumed, nor any thing near it; and here he would speak upon data. He had the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury (Mr. Woodbury) to declare that he believed he could reduce the revenue in this way and upon imports to the amount of five hundred thousand dollars; and he, Mr. B., should submit a resolution calling upon the Secretary to furnish the details of this reduction to the Senate at the commencement of their next stated session, that Congress might act upon it. Further, Mr. B. would say, that it appeared to him that the whole list of articles in the fifth section of the act, amounting to thirty or forty in number, and which by that section are to be free of duty in 1842, and which in his opinion might be made free this day, and that . not only without injuiry to the manufacturers, but with such manifest advantage to them, that, as an equivalent for it, and for the sake of obtaining it, they ought to come forward of themselves, and make a voluntary concession of reductions on some other points, especially on some classes of woollen goods,

"Having given Mr. Woodbury's authority for reduction of $500,000 on imports, Mr. B. would show another source from which a much larger reduction could be made, and that without affecting this famous act of March, 1833, in another and a different quarter; it was in the Western quarter, the new States, the public lands! The act of 1833 did not embrace this source of revenue, and Congress was free to act upon it, and to give the people of the new States the same relief on the purchase of the article on which they chiefly paid revenue as it had done to the old States in the reduction of the tariff. Mr. B. did not go into the worn-out and exploded objections to the reduction of the price of the lands which the report had gathered up from their old sleeping places, and presented again to the Senate. Speculators, monopolies, the fall in the price of real estate all over the Union; these were exploded fallacies which he was sorry to see paraded here again, and which he should not detain the Senate to answer. Suffice it to say, that there is no application made now, made heretofore, or intended to be made, so far as he knew, to reduce the price of new land! One dollar and a quarter was low enough for the first choice of new lands; but it was not low enough for the second, third, fourth, and fifth choices! It was not low enough for the refuse lands which had been five, ten, twenty, forty years in market; and which could find no purchaser at $1 25, for the solid reason that they were worth but the half, the quarter, the tenth part, of that sum. It was for such lands that reduction of prices was sought, and had been sought for many years, and would continue to be sought until it was obtained; for it was impossible to believe that Congress would persevere in the flagrant injustice of for ever refusing to reduce the price of refuse and unsalable lands to their actual value. The policy of President Jackson, communicated in his messages, Mr. B. said, was the policy of wisdom and justice. He was for disposing of the lands more for the purpose of promoting settlements, and creating freeholders, than for the purpose of exacting revenue from the meritorious class of citizens who cultivate the soil. He would sell the lands at prices which would pay expenses—the expense of acquiring them from the Indians, and surveying and selling them; and this system of moderate prices with donations, or nominal sales to actual settlers, would do justice to the new States, and effect a sensible reduction in the revenue; enough to prevent the necessity of amending the constitution to get rid of nine million surpluses! But whether the price of lands was reduced or not, Mr. B. said, . the revenue from that source would soon be diminished. The revenue had been exorbitant from the sale of lands for three or four years past. And why? Precisely because immense bodies of new lands, and much of it in the States adapted to the production of the great staples which now bear so high a price, have within that period, come into market; but these fresh lands must soon be exhausted; the old and refuse only remain for sale; and the revenue from that source will sink down to its former usual amount, instead of remaining at three millions a year for nine years, as the report assumes.

"3. When he had thus shown that a diminution of revenue could be effected, both on imports and on refuse and unsalable lands, Mr. B. took up the third issue which he had joined with the report; namely, the possibility of finding an object of general utility on which the surpluses could be expended. The report affirmed there was no such object; he, on the contrary, affirmed that there were such; not one, but several, not only useful, but necessary, not merely necessary, but exigent; not exigent only, but in the highest possible degree indispensable and essential. He alluded to the whole class of measures connected with the general and permanent defence of the Union! In peace, prepare for war! is the admonition of wisdom in all ages and in all nations; and sorely and grievously has our America heretofore paid for the neglect of that admonition. She has paid for it in blood, in money, and in shame. Are we prepared now? And is there any reason why we should not prepare now? Look at your maritime coast, from Passamaquoddy Bay to Florida point; your gulf coast, from Florida point to the Sabine; your lake frontier, in its whole extent. What is the picture? Almost destitute of forts; and, it might be said, quite destitute of armament. Look at your armories and arsenals-too few and too empty; and the West almost destitute! Look at your militia, many of them mustering with corn stalks; the States deficient in arms, especially in field artillery, and in swords and pistols for their cavalry! Look at your navy; slowly increasing under an annual appropriation of half a million a year, instead of a whole million, at which it was fixed soon after the late war, and 1821, of a plan for ninety forts upon that part from which it was reduced some years ago, when of the coast; namely, twenty-four of the first money ran low in the treasury! Look at your class; twenty-three of the second; and forty-dock-yards and navy-yards; thinly dotted alone the maritime coast, and hardly seen at all on the gulf coast, where the whole South, and the great West, so imperiously demand naval protection! Such is the picture; such the state of our country; such its state at this time, when even the most unobservant should see something to make us think of defence! Such is the state of our defences now, with which, oh! strange and wonderful contradiction! the administration is now reproached, reviled, flouted, and taunted, by those who go for distribution, and turn their backs on defence! and who complain of the President for leaving us in this condition, when five years ago, in the year 1829, he recommended the annual sum of $250,000 for arming the fortifications (which Congress refused to give), and who now are for taking the money out of the treasury, to be divided among the people; instead of turning it all to the great object of the general and permanent defence of the Union, for which they were so solicitous, so clamorous, so feelinely alive, and patriotically sensitive, even one short month ago.

"Does not the present state of the country (said Mr. B.) call for defence? and is not this the propitious time for putting it in defence and will not that object absorb every dollar of real surplus that can be found in the treasury for these eight years of plenty, during which we are to be afflicted with seventy-two millions of surplus? Let us see. Let us take one single branch of the general system of defence, and see how a stands, and what it would cost to put it in the condition which the safety and the honor of the country demanded. He spoke of the fortifications and selected that branch, because he had data to go upon; data to which the senator from South Carolina, the author of this report, could not

'The design (said Mr. B.) of fortifying the coasts of the United States is as old as the United itself. Our documents are full of executive recommendations, departmental reports, and reports of committees upon this subject, all urging this great object upon the attention of Congress From 1789, through every succeeding administration, the subject was presented to Congress; but it was only after the late war, and when the evils of a defenceless coast were fresh before the eyes of the people, that the subject was presented in the most impressive, persevering, and sretematic form. An engineer of the first rank (General Bernard) was taken into our service from the school of the great Napoleon. Arse lution of the House of Representatives called a the War Department for a plan of defence, and a designation of forts adequate to the projection of the country; and upon this call examinations were made, estimates framed, and forts projected for the whole maritime coast from Savannah to Boston. The result was the presentation, I

three of the third. Under th of Mr. Monroe, and the urgent of the then head of the War Calhoun), the construction of commenced, and pushed with s but, owing to circumstances n to be detailed, the object decli favor, lost a part of its popular ly, and has since proceeded so s end of twenty years from the I than thirteen of these forts hav ed; namely, eight of the first of second, and two of the third; a teen constructed, none are arme them are without guns or carr ready for the occupation of an the defence of ourselves. This fortifications on the maritime co the New England coast to the r exclusive of Cape Cod, south of clusive of the Atlantic coast o lake frontier is untouched. Th almost two thousand miles in l dotted with a few forts in the n Pensacola, New Orleans, and 1 rest of the coast may be set dow defenceless. This was our condit B. did not venture to give an o whole plan of fortifications devel ports of 1821 should be carried i e would say, and that most co much of it ought to be; and it business of Congress to decide of making a specific appropriation for also say that many forts would necessary which were not embrace for it did not touch the lake coas coast, nor the New England coast ton, nor any point of the land fre out going into the question at all, were necessary, or where they she it was sufficient to show that ther wanting, beyond dispute, to const of utility, worthy of the nationa and sufficient to absorb, not nine nual surplus, to be sure, but about lions of surplus as would ever be f bank stock into the bargain. The constructed had cost twelve milli dred and thirteen thousand dolls million of dollars each. But this struction only; the armament wa low; and for this object two mill timated in 1821 for the ninety fort mended; and of that two million assumed that but little has been Congress. So much for fortificati a single branch of defence, and absorb many millions. But there other branches of defence which, he would barely enumerate. There including its gradual increase, its its navy-yards; then the armories which were so much wanted in th

West, and especially in the South,

s; thinly dotted along rdly seen at all on the le South, and the great and naval protection the state of our countime, when even the see something to make ch is the state of our oh! strange and wonadministration is now 1. and taunted, by those nd turn their backs on in of the President for n, when five years ago, mmended the annual ning the fortifications to give), and who now out of the treasury, to ple; instead of turning of the general and per-Jnion, for which they amorous, so feelingly nsitive, even one short

state of the country ence? and is not this putting it in defence? absorb every dollar of found in the treasury lenty, during which we eventy-two millions of is take one single branch defence, and see how it does to put it in the y and the honor of the olde of the fortifications, because he had data to the senator from South this report, could not

. B.) of fortifying the es is as old as the lain re full of executive reiental reports, and ret this subject, all urging e attention of Congress ry succeeding adminispresented to Congress; late war, and when the it were fresh before the he subject was presene, persevering, and sisneer of the first rank taken into our service eat Napoleon. Arse epresentatives called a r a plan of defence, and equate to the projection n this call examinations med, and forts projected coast from Savannah to as the presentation, I ty forts upon that part venty-four of the first the second; and forty-

three of the third. Under the administration of Mr. Monroe, and the urgent recommendations of the then head of the War Department (Mr. Calhoun), the construction of these forts was commenced, and pushed with spirit and activity; but owing to circumstances not necessary now to be detailed, the object declined in the public favor, lost a part of its popularity, perhaps justly, and has since proceeded so slowly that at the end of twenty years from the late war, no more than thirteen of these forts have been constructed; namely, eight of the first class, three of the second, and two of the third; and of these thirteen constructed, none are armed; almost all of them are without guns or carriages, and more ready for the occupation of an enemy than for the defence of ourselves. This is the state of fortifications on the maritime coast, exclusive of the New England coast to the north of Boston. exclusive of Cape Cod, south of Boston, and exclusive of the Atlantic coast of Florida. The lake frontier is untouched. The gulf frontier, almost two thousand miles in length, barely is dotted with a few forts in the neighborhood of Pensacola, New Orleans, and Mobile; all the rest of the coast may be set down as naked and defenceless. This was our condition. Now, Mr. B. did not venture to give an opinion that the whole plan of fortifications developed in the reports of 1821 should be carried into effect; but he would say, and that most confidently, that much of it ought to be; and it would be the business of Congress to decide on each fort in making a specific appropriation for it. He would also say that many forts would be found to be necessary which were not embraced in that plan; for it did not touch the lake coast, and the gulf coast, nor the New England coast, north of Boston nor any point of the land frontier. Without going into the question at all, of how many were necessary, or where they should be placed, it was sufficient to show that there were enough wanting, beyond dispute, to constitute an object of utility, worthy of the national expenditure: and sufficient to absorb, not nine millions of annual surplus, to be sure, but about as many millions of surplus as would ever be found, and the bank stock into the bargain. The thirteen forts constructed had cost twelve millions one hundred and thirteen thousand dollars; near one million of dollars each. But this was for construction only; the armament was still to follow; and for this object two millions were estimated in 1821 for the ninety forts then recommended; and of that two millions it may be assumed that but little has been granted by Congress. So much for fortifications; in itself a single branch of defence, and sufficient to absorb many millions. But there were many other branches of defence which, Mr. B. said, he would barely enumerate. There was the navy, including its gradual increase, its dock-yards, its navy-yards; then the armories and arsenals, which were so much wanted in the South and West, and especially in the South, for a reason (besides those which apply to foreign enemies) which need not be named; then the supply of arms to the States, especially field artillery, swords, and pistols, for which an annual but inadequate appropriation had been made for so long a time that he believed the States had almost forgot the subject. Here are objects enough, Mr. President, exclaimed Mr. B., to absorb every dollar of our surplus, and the bank stock besides. The surpluses, he was certain, would be wholly insufficient, and the bank stock, by a solemn resolution of the two Houses of Congress, should be devoted to the object. As a fund was set apart, and held sacred and inviolable, for the payment of the public debt so; should a fund be now created for national defence, and this bank stock should be the first and most sacred item put into it. It is the only way to save that stock from becoming the prey of incessant contrivances to draw money from the treasury. Mr. B. said that he intended to submit resolutions, requesting the President to cause to be communicated to the next Congress full information upon all the points that he had touched; the probable revenue and expenditure for the next eight years; the plan and expense of fortifying the coast; the navy, and every other point connected with the general and permanent defence of the Union, with a view to let Congress take it up, upon system, and with a design to complete it without further delay. And he demanded, why hurry on this amendment before that information can come in?

"Now is the auspicious moment, said Mr. B., for the republic to rouse from the apathy into which it has lately sunk on the subject of national defence. The public debt is paid; a sum of six or seven millions will come from the bank; some surpluses may occur; let the national defence become the next great object after the payment of the debt, and all spare money go to that purpose. If further stimulus were wanted, it might be found in the present aspect of our foreign affairs, and in the reproaches, the taunts, and in the offensive insinuations which certain gentlemen have been indulging in for two months with respect to the defenceless state of the coast; and which they attribute to the negligence of the administration. Certainly such gentlemen will not take that money for distribution, for the immediate application of which their defenceless country is now crying aloud, and stretching forth her imploring hands.

"Mr. B. would here avail himself of a voice more potential than his own to enforce attention to the great object of national defence, the revival of which he was now attempting. It was a voice which the senator from South Carolina, the author of this proposition to squander in distributions the funds which should be sacred to defence, would instantly recognize. It was an extract from a message communicated to Congress, December 3, 1822, by President Monroe, Whether considered under the relation of similarity which it bears to the language and sentiments of cotemporaneous reports from the then head of the War Department; the position which the writer of those reports then held in relation to President Monroe; the right which he possessed, as Secretary of War, to know, at least, what was put into the message in relation to measures connected with his department; considered under any and all of these aspects, the extracts which he was about to read might be considered as expressing the sentiments, if not speaking the words, of the gentleman who now sees no object of utility in providing for the defence of his country; and who then plead the cause of that defence with so much truth and energy, and with such commendable excess of patriotic zeal.

Mr. B. then read as follows:

" 'Should war break out in any of those countries (the European), who can foretell the extent to which it may be carried, or the desolation which may spread? Exempt as we are from these causes (of European civil wars), our internal tranquillity is secure; and distant as we are from the troubled scene, and faithful to just principles in regard to other powers, we might reasonably presume that we should not be molested by them. This, however, ought not to be calculated on as certain. Unprovoked injuries are often inflicted, and even the peculiar felicity of our situation might, with some, be a cause of excitement and aggression. The history of the late wars in Europe furnishes a complete demonstration that no system of conduct, however correct in principle, can protect neutral powers from injury from any party; that a defenceless position and distinguished love of peace are the surest invitations to war; and that there is no way to avoid it, other than by being always prepared, and willing, for just cause, to meet it. If there be a people on earth, whose more especial duty it is to be at all times prepared to defend the rights with which they are blessed, and to surpass all others in sustaining the necessary burdens, and in submitting to sacrifices to make such preparations, it is undoubtedly the people of these States.

"Mr. B. having read thus far, stopped to make a remark, and but a remark, upon a single sentiment in it. He would not weaken the force and energy of the whole passage by going over it in detail; but he invoked attention upon the last sentiment—our peculiar duty, so strongly painted, to sustain burdens, and submit to sacrifices, to accomplish the noble object of putting our country into an attitude of defence! The ease with which we can prepare for the same defence now, by the facile operation of applying to that purpose surpluses of revenue and bank stock, for which we have no other use, was the ample which this republic owed to the world point on which he would invoke and arrest the Senate's attention.

"Mr. B. resumed his reading, and read the next paragraph, which enumerated all the causes which might lead to general war in Europe, and | the passage, and presented a grand and philosoour involvement in it, and concluded with the phic conception to the reflecting mind. The declaration 'That the reasons for pushing for ward all our measures of defence, with the ut. most vigor, appear to me to acquire new force And then added, these causes for European war are now in as great force as then; the danger of our involvement is more apparent now than then; the reasons for sensibility to our national honor are nearer now than then; and upon all the principles of the passage from which he was reading, the reasons for pushing forward all our measures of defence with the utmost vigor, posessed far more force in this present year 1835 than they did in the year 1822

"Mr. B. continued to read:

"'The United States owe to the world a great example, and by means thereof, to the cause of liberty and humanity a generous support. They have so far succeeded to the satisfaction of the virtuous and enlightened of every country. There is no reason to doubt that their whole movement will be regulated by a sacred regard to principle, all our institutions being founded on that basis. The ability to support our own cause, under any trial to which it may be exposed, is the great point on which the public solicitude rests. It has often been charged against free governments, that they have neither the foresight nor the virtue to provide at the proper season for great emergencies; that their course is improvident and expensive; that war will always find them unprepared; and whatever may be its calamities, that its terrible warnings will be disregarded and forgotten as soon as peace returns. I have full confidence that this charge, so far as it relates to the United States, will be shown to be utterly destitute of

"Mr. B., as he closed the book, said, he would make a few remarks upon some of the points in this passage, which he had last read-the reproach so often charged upon free governments for want of foresight and virtue, their improvedence and expensiveness, their proneness to disregard and forget in peace the warning lessons of the most terrible calamities of war. And he would take the liberty to suggest that, of all the mortal beings now alive upon this earth the author of the report under discussion ought to be the last to disregard and to forget the solemn and impressive admonition which the passage conveyed! the last to so act as to subject his government to the mortifying charge which has been so often cast upon them! the last to subject the virtue of the people to the humiliating trial of deciding between the defence and the plunder of their country

"Mr. B. dwelt a moment on another point in the passage which he had read-the great exand to the cause of free governments, to prove itself capable of supporting its cause under every trial; and that by providing in peace for the dangers of war. It was a striking point in example to be shown to the duty of this republic to exhib vated and patriotic conception the genius which then preside Department. But what is th we are now required to exhibi a people preferring the spoils to its defence! It is that of going from city to city, from even to the uninformed tenan hamlet, who has no means of d lacies which are brought from his understanding: it is the electioneerer, with slate and pe (and here Mr. B. took up an and a pencil, and stooped over i as if working out a little sum it is the example of this election for distribution that money v sacred to the defence of his couing out for overthrow, at the every candidate for office who in opposition to this wretched scheme of distribution. This which it is proposed that we sh bit. And little did it enter int imagination, about the time th written that it should fall to 1 for the defence of his country thor of this report. He admirof conception which the repor office then displayed. He said the party with whom he then a general, though not a universal. Secretary of War. He looked who, when mellowed by age an experience, might be among the Presidents that ever filled the pr Mr. B., by a lapsus lingua, sa corrected the expression on its galleries.]

"Mr. B. said there was an ex was worthy to imitate: that o coast defended by forts and ba which the rich city reposed in sa quil peasant cultivated his vine while the proud navy of Engl noxious before them, a spectacle not an object of terror. And th ample to be avoided: the case America during the late war; whe of a British squadron, upon an extended coast, was the signal terror, for consternation; when the brave and the almost naked h were the sole reliance for defend those hearts and those hands co the ruffian soldier and the rude the insolent masters of our cit. their footsteps marked by the fields the conflagration of cities, isons for pushing fordefence, with the utto acquire new force, ises for European war as then; the danger re apparent now than sibility to our national a then; and upon all ge from which he was ishing forward all our the utmost vigor, poshis present year 1855, 1822.

ead: owe to the world a neans thereof, to the anity a generous supsucceeded to the satis-1 enlightened of every on to doubt that their regulated by a sacred our institutions being he ability to support trial to which it may point on which the has often been charged that they have neie virtue to provide at eat emergencies; that it and expensive; that em unprepared; and, nities, that its terrible ded and forgotten as have full confidence t relates to the United e utterly destitute of some of the points in ad last read—the reipon free governments virtue, their improvis, their proneness to ace the warning lessons nities of war. And he o suggest that, of allalive upon this earth mder discussion ought and to forget be dmonition which the st to so act as to subthe mortifying charge cast upon them! the of the people to the ling between the detheir country! nt on another point in 1 read—the great esc owed to the world governments, to prove rting its cause under providing in peace for was a striking point in ed a grand and philosoreflecting mind. The ie book, said, he would example to be shown to the world, and the duty of this republic to exhibit it, was an elevated and patriotic conception, and worthy of the genius which then presided over the War Department. But what is the example which we are now required to exhibit? It is that of a people preferring the spoils of their country to its defence! It is that of the electioneerer, coing from city to city, from house to house, one to the uninformed tenant of the classes, even to the uninformed tenant of the distant hamlet, who has no means of detecting the fallacies which are brought from afar to deceive his understanding: it is the example of this electioneerer, with slate and pencil in his hand (and here Mr. B. took up an old book cover, and a pencil, and stooped over it to make figures, as it working out a little sum in arithmetic), it is the example of this electioneerer, offering for distribution that money which should be sacred to the defence of his country; and pointing out for overthrow, at the next election, every candidate for office who should be found in opposition to this wretched and deceptive scheme of distribution. This is the example which it is proposed that we should now exhibit. And little did it enter into his (Mr. B.'s) imagination, about the time that message was written, that it should fall to his lot to plead for the defence of his country against the auther of this report. He admired the grandeur of conception which the reports of the war office then displayed. He said he differed from the party with whom he then acted, in giving a general, though not a universal, support to the Secretary of War. He looked to him as one who, when mellowed by age and chastened by experience, might be among the most admired Presidents that ever filled the presidential chair. Mr. B., by a lapsus lingua, said throne, but corrected the expression on its echo from the galleries.] "Mr. B. said there was an example which it was worthy to imitate: that of France; her coast defended by forts and batteries, behind which the rich city reposed in safety-the tranquil peasant cultivated his vine in securitywhile the proud navy of England sailed innoxious before them, a spectacle of amusement, not an object of terror. And there was an example to be avoided: the case of our own America during the late war; when the approach of a British squadron, upon any point of our extended coast, was the signal for flight, for terror, for consternation; when the hearts of the brave and the almost naked hands of heroes were the sole reliance for defence; and where those hearts and those hands could not come. the sacred soil of our country was invaded; the ruffian soldier and the rude sailor became the insolent masters of our citizens' houses; their footsteps marked by the desolation of fields the conflagration of cities, the flight of amendment to permit it.

virgins, the violation of matrons! the blood of fathers, husbands, sons! This is the example which we should avoid!

"But the amendment is to be temporary: it is only to last until 1842. What an idea !--a temporary alteration in a constitution made for endless ages! But let no one think it will be temporary, if once adopted. No! if the people once come to taste that blood; if they once bring themselves to the acceptance of money from the treasury they are gone for ever. They will take that money in all time to come; and he that promises most, receives most votes. The corruption of the Romans, the debauchment of the voters, the venality of elections, commenced with the Tribunitial distribution of corn out of the public granaries; it advanced to the distribution of the spoils of foreign nations, brought home to Rome by victorious generals and divided out among the people; it ended in bringing the spoils of the country into the canvass for the consulship, and in putting up the diadem of empire itself to be knocked down to the hammer of the auctioneer. In our America there can be no spoils of conquered nations to distribute. Her own treasury—her own lands -can alone furnish the fund. Begin at once, no matter how, or upon what-surplus revenue, the proceeds of the lands, or the lands themselves-no matter; the progress and the issue of the whole game is as inevitable as it is obvious. Candidates bid, the voters listen; and a plundered and pillaged country - the empty skin of an immolated victim-is the prize and the spoil of the last and the highest bidder."

The proposition to amend the constitution to admit of this distribution was never brought to a vote. In fact it was never mentioned again after the day of the above discussion. It seemed to have support from no source but that of its origin; and very soon events came to scatter the basis on which the whole stress and conclusion of the report lay. Instead of a surplus of nine millions to cover the period of two presidential elections, there was a deficit in the treasury in the period of the first one; and the government reduced to the humiliating resorts to obtain money to keep itself in motion-mendicant expeditions to Europe to borrow money, returning without it-and paper money struck under the name of treasury notes. But this attempt to amend the constitution to permit a distribution, becomes a material point in the history of the working of our government, seeing that a distribution afterwards took place without the

ANNO

liam B. Carter, William C. 1

Joseph R. Underwood, John Williams.-13. MISSOURI.-Wm. H. Ashley.

rison.-2.

Illinois.—Zadok Casey, W John Reynolds.—3.

Indiana.-Ratliff Boon, Jo W. Davis, Edward A. Hannegan nard, Amos Lane, Jonathan Mct Оню. - William K. Bond, Thomas Corwin, Joseph H. Cr Hamer, Elias Howell, Benjamin Kennon, Daniel Kilgore, Sampso miah McLene, William Patter Sloane, David Spangler, Bellam Thompson, Samuel F. Vinton, T Elisha Whittlesey.—19.

DELEGATES.

ARKANSAS TERRITORY.—Ambi FLORIDA TERRITORY.-Joseph MICHIGAN TERRITORY .- Georg

Mr. James K. Polk of Tenness speaker of the House, and by a over the late speaker, Mr. John B. State. The vote stood one hundr two to eighty-four, and was conof the administration strength, M supported by that party, and M become identified with those who, Mr. Hugh L. White as a candidat sidency, were considered as having the democratic party. Among names missed from the list of the resentatives, were: Mr. Wayne of pointed to the banch of the Supre he United States; and Mr. Edwa Massachusetts, who declined a re-e

The state of our relations with 1 continued non-payment of the stips nity, was the prominent feature dent's message; and the subject its more serious in the apparent ind Congress to sustain his views, man oss of the fortification bill, throu

CHAPTER CXXIX.

COMMENCEMENT OF TWENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS -PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The following was the list of the members:

SENATORS:

MAINE—Ether Shepley, John Ruggles. NEW HAMPSHIRE-Isaac Hill, Henry Hubbard. Massachusetts-Daniel Webster, John Davis. RHODE ISLAND-Nehemiah R. Knight, Asher

CONNECTICUT—Gideon Tomlinson, Nathan Smith.

Vermont-Samuel Prentiss, Benjamin Swift. NEW-YORK-Nathaniel P. Tallmadge, Silas Wright, jun.

NEW JERSEY-Samuel L. Southard, Garret D. Wall.

PENNSYLVANIA- James Buchanan, Samuel

DELAWARE-John M. Clayton, Arnold Naudain.

MARYLAND—Robert H. Goldsborough, Jos. Kent.

VIRGINIA-Benjamin Watkins Leigh, John

NORTH CAROLINA-Bedford Brown, Willie P. Mangum.

South Carolina-J. C. Calhoun, William C. Preston.

GEORGIA—Alfred Cuthbert, John P. King. KENTUCKY-Henry Clay, John J. Crittenden. TENNESSEE-Felix Grundy, Hugh L. White. Ohio-Thomas Ewing, Thomas Morris. LOUISIANA-Alexander Porter, Robert C. Nicholas.

Indiana-Wm. Hendricks, John Tipton. Mississippi-John Black, Robert J. Walker. ILLINOIS—Elias K. Kane, John M. Robinson. ALABAMA—Wm. R. King, Gabriel P. Moore. MISSOURI-Lewis F. Linn, Thomas H. Benton.

REPRESENTATIVES:

MAINE-Jeremiah Bailey, George Evans, John Fairfield, Joseph Hall, Leonard Jarvis, Moses Mason, Gorham Parks, Francis O. J. Smith-8. NEW HAMPSHIRE-Benning M. Bean, Robert

Burns, Samuel Cushman, Franklin Pierce, Jos. Weeks-5.

Massachusetts-John Quincy Adams, Nathaniel B. Borden, George N. Briggs, William B. Calhoun, Caleb Cushing, George Grennell, jr., Samuel Hoar, William Jackson, Abbot Lawrence, Levi Lincoln, Stephen C. Phillips, John Reed-12.

RHODE ISLAND-Dutee J. Pearce, W. Sprague

CONNECTICUT-Elisha Haley, Samuel Ingham, Andrew T. Judson, Lancelot Phelps, Isaac Toucey, Zalmon Wildman-6.

VERMONT-Heman Allen, Horace Everett Hiland Hall, Henry F. Janes, William Slade

NEW-YORK—Samuel Barton, Saml. Beardsley Abraham Bockee, Matthias J. Bovee, John W. Brown, C. C. Cambreleng, Graham H. Chapin, Timothy Childs, John Cramer, Ulysses F. Dou-bleday, Valentine Efner, Dudley Farlin, Philo C. Fuller, William K. Fuller, Ransom H. Gillet. Francis Granger, Gideon Hard, Abner Hazeltine, Hiram P. Hunt, Abel Huntington, Gerrit Y. Lansing, George W. Lay, Gidson Lee, Joshua Lee, Stephen B. Leonard, Thomas C. Love, Abj. jah Mann, jr., William Mason, John McKeon Ely Moore, Sherman Page, Joseph Reynolds, David Russell, William Seymour, Nicholas Sickles, William Taylor, Joel Turrill, Aaron Vanderpoel, Aaron Ward, Daniel Wardwell-40.

New Jersey-Philemon Dickerson, Samuel Fowler, Thomas Lee, James Parker, Ferdinand S, Schenck, William N. Shinn-6.

PENNSYLVANIA. - Joseph B. Anthony, Michael W. Ash, John Banks, Andrew Beaumont. Andrew Buchanan, George Chambers, William P. Clark, Edward Darlington, Harmar Denny, Jacob Fry, jr., John Galbraith, James Harper, Samuel S. Harrison, Joseph Henderson, William Hiester, Edward B. Hubley, Joseph R. Ingersoll, John Klingensmith, jr., John Laporte, Henry Logan, Job Maan, Thomas M. T. McKennan, Jesse Miller, Matthias Morris, Henry A. Muh. lenberg, David Potts, jr., Joel B. Sutherland David D. Wagener.—28.

Delaware.—John J. Milligan.—1.

MARYLAND. - Benjamin C. Howard, Daniel Jenifer, Isaac McKim, James A. Pearce, John N. Steele, Francis Thomas, James Turner, George C. Washington.—8.

VIRGINIA.—James M. H. Beale, James W. Bouldin, Nathaniel H. Claiborne, Walter Coles. Robert Craig, George C. Dromgoole, James Garland, G. W. Hopkins, Joseph Johnson, John W. Jones, George Loyall, Edward Lucas, John Y. Mason, William McComas, Charles F. Mercer, William S. Morgan, John M. Patton, John Roane, John Robertson, John Taliaferro, Henry A. Wise.—21.

NORTH CAROLINA. Jesse A. Bynum, Henry W. Connor, Edmund Deberry, James Graham, Micajah T. Hawkins, James J. McKay, William Montgomery, Ebenezer Pettigrew, Abraham Rencher, William B. Shepard, Augustine H. Shepperd, Jesse Speight, Lewis Williams.-Il.

SOUTH CAROLINA. - Robert B. Campbell, William J. Grayson, John K. Griffin, James H. Hammond, Richard J. Manning, Francis W. Pickens, Henry L. Pinckney, James Rogers, Waddy Thompson, jr.—9.

GEORGIA.-Jesse F. Cleveland, John Coffee Thomas Glasscock, Seaton Grantland, Charles E Haynes, Hopkins Holsey, Jabez Jackson, George W. Owens, George W. B. Towns.—9.

ALABAMA. - Reuben Chapman, Joab Lawler, Dixon H. Lewis, Francis S. Lyon, Joshus L. Martin.-5.

len, Horace Everett, Janes, William Slade

arton, Saml. Beardsley as J. Bovee, John W., Graham H. Chapin, imer, Ulysses F. Dou-Dudley Farlin, Philo ler, Ransom H. Gillet, Hard, Abner Hazelel Huntington, Gerrit F. Gidkon Lee, Joshua Thomas C. Love, Abifason, John McKeon, ymour, Nicholas Sickurrill, Aaron Vander-Wardwell—40. n Dickerson, Samuel es Parker, Ferdinand inn—6.

re, Joseph Reynolds

sh B. Anthony, Miss, Andrew Beaumont, e Chambers, William ton, Harmar Denny, raith, James Harper, h Henderson, William y, Joseph R. Ingersoll, fohn Laporte, Henry as M. T. McKennan, orris, Henry A. Muh-Joel B. Sutherland

Iilligan.—1.
C. Howard, Daniel es A. Pearce, John N. ames Turner, George

H. Beale, James W. iborne, Walter Coles, Dromgoole, James oseph Johnson, John Edward Lucas, John nas, Charles F. Merohn M. Patton, John hn Taliaferro, Henry

se A. Bynum, Henry erry, James Graham, s J. McKay, William Pettigrew, Abraham pard, Augustine H. ewis Williams.—13. bbert B. Campbel, m K. Griffin, James Manning, Francis W. ney, James Rogers, veland, John Coffee Grantland, Charles E abez Jackson, George Towns.—9.

napman, Joab Lawcis S. Lyon, Joshua

Mississippi.—David Dickson, J. F. H. Claiborne.—2.

LOUISIANA.—Rice Garland, Henry Johnson, Eleazer W. Ripley.—3.

TENNESSEE.—John Bell, Samuel Bunch, William B. Carter, William C. Dunlap, John B. Forester, Adam Huntsman, Cave Johnson, Luke Lea, Abram P. Maury, Balie Peyton, James K. Polk, E. J. Shields, James Standefer.—13.

Kentucky.—Chilton Allan, Lynn Boyd, John Calhoun, John Chambers, Richard French, Wm. J. Graves, Benjamin Hardin, James Harlan, Albert G. Hawes, Richard M. Johnson, Joseph R. Underwood, John White, Sherrod Williams.—13.

MISSOURI.—Wm. H. Ashley, Albert G. Har-

rison.—2.
ILLINOIS.—Zadok Casey, William L. May.
John Reynolds.—3.

INDIANA.—Ratliff Boon, John Carr, John W. Davis, Edward A. Hannegan, George L. Kinnard, Amos Lane, Jonathan McCarty.—7.

OHIO.—William K. Bond, John Chaney, Thomas Corwin, Joseph H. Crane, Thomas L. Hamer, Elias Howell, Benjamin Jopes, William Kennon, Daniel Kilgore, Sampson Mason, Jeremiah McLene, William Patterson, Jonathan Sloane, David Spangler, Bellamy Storer, John Thompson, Samuel F. Vinton, Taylor Webster Elisha Whittlesey.—19.

DELEGATES.

Arkansas Territory.—Ambrose H. Sevier. Florida Territory.—Joseph M. White. Michigan Territory.—George W. Jones.

Mr. James K. Polk of Tennessee, was elected. speaker of the House, and by a large majority over the late speaker, Mr. John Bell of the same State. The vote stood one hundred and thirtytwo to eighty-four, and was considered a test of the administration strength, Mr. Polk being supported by that party, and Mr. Bell having become identified with those who, in siding with Mr. Hugh L. White as a candidate for the presidency, were considered as having divided from the democratic party. Among the eminent names missed from the list of the House of Representatives, were: Mr. Wayne of Georgia, appointed to the beach of the Supreme Court of he United States; and Mr. Edward Everett of Massachusetts, who declined a re-election.

The state of our relations with France, in the continued non-payment of the stipulated indemnity, was the prominent feature in the President's message; and the subject itself becoming more serious in the apparent indisposition in Congress to sustain his views, manifested in the oss of the fortification bill, through the disagreement of the two Houses. The obligation to pay was admitted, and the money even voted for that purpose; but offence was taken at the President's message, and payment refused until an apology should be made. The President had already shown, on its first intimation, that no offence was intended, nor any disrespect justly deducible from the language that he had used; and he was now peremptory in refusing to make the required apology; and had instructed the United States' chargé d'affaires to demand the money; and, if not paid, to leave France immediately. The ministers of both countries had previously withdrawn, and the last link in the chain of diplomatic communication was upon the point of being broken. The question having narrowed down to this small point, the President deemed it proper to give a retrospective view of it, to justify his determination, neither to apologize nor to negotiate further. He said:

"On entering upon the duties of my station, I found the United States an unsuccessful applicant to the justice of France, for the satisfaction of claims, the validity of which was never questionable, and has now been most solemnly admitted by France herself. The antiquity of these claims, their high justice, and the aggravating circumstances out of which they arose, are too familiar to the American people to require description. It is sufficient to say, that, for a period of ten years and upwards, our commerce was, with but little interruption, the subject of constant aggressions, on the part of France-aggressions, the ordinary features of which were condemnations of vessels and cargoes, under arbitrary decrees, adopted in contravention, as well of the laws of nations as of treaty stipulations, burnings on the high seas, and seizures and confiscations, under special imperial rescripts, in the ports of other nations occupied by the armies, or under the control of France. Such, it is now conceded, is the character of the wrongs we suffered; wrongs, in many cases, so flagrant that even their authors never denied our right to reparation. Of the extent of these injuries, some conception may be formed from the fact that, after the burning of a large amount at sea, and the necessary deterioration in other cases, by long detention, the American property so seized and sacrificed at forced sales, excluding what was adjudged to privateers, before or without condemnation. brought into the French treasury upwards of twenty-four millions of francs, besides large custom-house duties.

more serious in the apparent indisposition in Congress to sustain his views, manifested in the oss of the fortification bill, through the dis-

this period, whilst other nations were extorting from her payment of their claims at the point of the bayonet, the United States intermitted their demand for justice, out of respect to the oppressed condition of a gallant people, to whom they felt under obligations for fraternal assistance in their own days of suffering and of peril. The bad effects of these protracted and unavailing discussions, as well upon our relations with France as upon our national character, were obvious; and the line of duty was, to my mind, equally so. This was, either to insist upon the adjustment of our claims, within a reasonable period, or to abandon them altogether. I could not doubt that, by this course, the interest and honor of both countries would be best consulted. Instructions were, therefore, given in this spirit to the minister, who was sent out once more to demand reparation. Upon the meeting of Congress, in December, 1829, I felt it my duty to speak of these claims, and the delays of France, in terms calculated to call the serious attention of both countries to the subject. The then French Ministry took exception to the message, on the ground of its containing a menace, under which it was not agreeable to the French government to negotiate. The American minister, of his own accord, refuted the construction which was attempted to be put upon the message, and, at the same time, called to the recollection of the French ministry, that the President's message was a communication addressed, not to foreign governments, but to the Congress of the United states, in which it was enjoined upon him, by the constitution, to lay before that body information of the state of the Union, comprehending its foreign as well as its domestic relations; and that if, in the discharge of this duty, he felt it incumbent upon him to summon the attention of Congress in due time to what might be the possible consequences of existing difficulties with any foreign government, he might fairly be supposed to do so, under a sense of what was due from him in a frank communication with another branch of his own government, and not from any intention of holding a menace over a foreign power. The views taken by him received my approbation, the French government was satisfied, and the negotiation was continued. It terminated in the treaty of July 4, 1831, recognizing the justice of our claims, in part, and promising payment to the amount of twenty-five millions of francs, in six annual instalments.

"The ratifications of this treaty were exchanged at Washington, on the 2d of February. 1832; and, in five days thereafter, it was laid before Congress, who immediately passed the acts necessary, on our part, to secure to France the commercial advantages conceded to her in the compact. The treaty had previously been solemnly ratified by the Kingsof the French, in terms which are certainly not mere matters of form, and of which the translation is as fol-

all and each of the depositions which are contained in it, do declare by ourselves, as well as by our heirs and successors, that it is accepted approved, ratified, and confirmed; and by these presents, signed by our hand, we do accept, approve, ratify, and confirm it; promising, on the faith and word of a king, to observe it, and to cause it to be observed inviolably, without ever contravening it, or suffering it to be contravened directly or indirectly, for any cause, or under any pretence whatsoever.

"Official information of the exchange of ratifications in the United States reached Paris whilst the Chambers were in session. The extraordinary, and, to us, injurious delays of the French government, in their action upon the subject of its fulfilment, have been heretofore stated to Congress, and I have no disposition to enlarge upon them here. It is sufficient to observe that the then pending session was allowed to expire, without even an effort to obtain the necessary appropriations—that the two succeeding ones were also suffered to pass away without any thing like a serious attempt to obtain a decision upon the subject; and that it was not until the fourth session-almost three years after the conclusion of the treaty, and more than two years after the exchange of ratifications-that the bill for the execution of the treaty was pressed to a vote, and rejected. In the mean time, the government of the United States, having full confidence that a treaty entered into and so solemnly ratified by the French king, would be executed in good faith and not doubting that provision would be made for the payment of the first instalment, which was to become due on the second day of February, 1833, negotiated a draft for the amount through the Bank of the United States. When this draft was presented by the holder, with the credentials required by the treaty to authorize him to receive the money, the government of France allowed it to be protested. In addition to the injury in the non-payment of the money by France, conformably to her engagement, the United States were exposed to a heavy claim on the part of the bank, under pretence of damages, in satisfaction of which that institution seized upon, and still retains, an equal amount of the public moneys. Congress was in session when the decision of the Chambers reached Washing ton; and an immediate communication of this apparently final decision of France not to fulfill the stipulations of the treaty, was the course naturally to be expected from the President The deep tone of dissatisfaction which pervaded the public mind, and the correspondent excitment produced in Congress by only a general knowledge of the result, rendered it more than probable, that a resort to immediate measures of redress would be the consequence of calling the attention of that body to the subject. Sincerely desirous of preserving the pacific relations which had so long existed between the two countries, Lows: 'We, approving the above convention, in I was anxious to avoid this course if I could be satisfied that, by doing so, ne nor the honor of my country mitted. Without the fullest as point, I could not hope to acc responsibility to be incurred gress to adjourn without layin fore them. Those received by to be of that character.

"The expectations justly f promises thus solemnly made ment by that of France, were French Chambers met on the 3 soon after the election, and alt ter in Paris urged the French the subject before them, they He next insisted that the C rogued without acting on the s reassembled at a period so ea tion on the treaty might be kno ton prior to the meeting of reasonable request was not or the Chambers were prorogued December; a day so late, that however urgently pressed, could bability, be obtained in time to ton before the necessary adjou gress by the constitution. The 1 the ministry for refusing to conbers, at an earlier period, were af not to be insuperable, by their tion, on the first of December, call for domestic purposes, which did not become known to this go after the commencement of the Congress.

"Thus disappointed in our jus it became my imperative duty t Congress in regard to the expedie to retaliatory measures, in case t of the treaty should not be spewith; and to recommend such a ment, the occasion called for. unreserved communication of the aspects, became indispensable. To in making it, from saying all that to its correct understanding, and t would justify, for fear of giving off would have been unworthy of a gone, on the other hand, a single for the purpose of wounding the p ernment and people with whom we motives of cultivating relations ( reciprocal advantage, would have and improper. Admonished by th difficulty of making even the simple of our wrongs, without disturbing ties of those who had, by their posi responsible for their redress, and sirous of preventing further obstacl source, I went out of my way to pro struction of the message, by which mendation that was made to Congre regarded as a menace to France, in 1 avowing such a design, but in declar pride and her power were too wel

itions which are conourselves, as well as s, that it is accepted. firmed; and by these and, we do accept, apit; promising, on the to observe it, and to riolably, without ever g it to be contravened. ny cause, or under any

the exchange of rati-

States reached Paris, e in session. The exjurious delays of the heir action upon the have been heretofore have no disposition to It is sufficient to obng session was allowed an effort to obtain the -that the two succeedd to pass away withus attempt to obtain a ; and that it was not -almost three years the treaty, and more exchange of ratificathe execution of the vote, and rejected. In rnment of the United ence that a treaty enmnly ratified by the xecuted in good faith, ovision would be made first instalment, which e second day of Februdraft for the amount United States. When by the holder, with the he treaty to authorize ey, the government of protested. In addition payment of the money to her engagement, the sed to a heavy claim on er pretence of damages, that institution seized 1 equal amount of the ss was in session when bers reached Washing communication of this of France not to fulfil treaty, was the course d from the President. faction which pervaded correspondent excite ress by only a general rendered it more than immediate measures of asequence of calling the the subject. Sincerely e pacific relations which reen the two countries his course if I could be satisfied that, by doing so, neither the interests expect any thing from her fears. The message nor the honor of my country would be compromitted. Without the fullest assurances upon that point, I could not hope to acquit myself of the responsibility to be incurred in suffering Congress to adjourn without laying the subject before them. Those received by me were believed to be of that character.

"The expectations justly founded upon the promises thus solemnly made to this government by that of France, were not realized. The French Chambers met on the 31st of July, 1834, soon after the election, and although our minister in Paris urged the French ministry to press the subject before them, they declined doing so. He next insisted that the Chambers, if prorogued without acting on the subject, should be reassembled at a period so early that their action on the treaty might be known in Washington prior to the meeting of Congress, This reasonable request was not only declined, but the Chambers were prorogued on the 29th of December; a day so late, that their decision, however urgently pressed, could not, in all probability, be obtained in time to reach Washington before the necessary adjournment of Congress by the constitution. The reasons given by the ministry for refusing to convoke the Chambers, at an earlier period, were afterwards shown not to be insuperable, by their actual convocation, on the first of December, under a special call for domestic purposes, which fact, however, did not become known to this government until after the commencement of the last session of

"Thus disappointed in our just expectations. it became my imperative duty to consult with Congress in regard to the expediency of a resort to retaliatory measures, in case the stipulations of the treaty should not be speedily complied with; and to recommend such as, in my judgment, the occasion called for. To this end, an unreserved communication of the case, in all its aspects, became indispensable. To have shrunk, in making it, from saying all that was necessary to its correct understanding, and that the truth would justify, for fear of giving offence to others, would have been unworthy of us. To have gone, on the other hand, a single step further, for the purpose of wounding the pride of a government and people with whom we had so many motives of cultivating relations of amity and reciprocal advantage, would have been unwise and improper. Admonished by the past of the difficulty of making even the simplest statement of our wrongs, without disturbing the sensibilities of those who had, by their position, become responsible for their redress, and earnestly desirous of preventing further obstacles from that source, I went out of my way to preclude a construction of the message, by which the recommendation that was made to Congress might be regarded as a menace to France, in not only disavowing such a design, but in declaring that her did not reach Paris until more than a month after the Chambers had been in session; and such was the insensibility of the ministry to our rightful claims and just expectations, that our minister had been informed that the matter, when introduced, would not be pressed as a cabinet measure.

"Although the message was not officially communicated to the French government, and notwithstanding the declaration to the contrary which it contained, the French ministry decided to consider the conditional recommendation of reprisals a menace and an insult, which the honor of the nation made it incumbent on them to resent. The measures resorted to by them to evince their sense of the supposed indignity were, the immediate recall of their minister at Washington, the offer of passports to the American minister at Paris, and a public notice to the legislative chambers that all diplomatic intercourse with the United States had been suspended.

"Having, in this manner, vindicated the dignity of France, they next proceeded to illustrate her justice. To this end a bill was immediately introduced into the Chamber of Deputies, proposing to make the appropriations necessary to carry into effect the treaty. As this bill subsequently passed into a law, the provisions of which now constitute the main subject of difficulty between the two nations, it becomes my duty, in order to place the subject before you in a clear light, to trace the history of its passage, and to refer, with some particularity, to the proceedings and discussions in regard to it. The Minister of Finance, in his opening speech, alluded to the measures which had been adopted to resent the supposed indignity, and recommended the execution of the treaty as a measure required by the honor and justice of France. He, as the organ of the ministry, declared the message, so long as it had not received the sanction of Congress, a mere expression of the personal opinion of the President, for which neither the government nor people of the United States were responsible; and that an engagement had been entered into, for the fulfilment of which the honor of France was pledged. Entertaining these views, the single condition which the French ministry proposed to annex to the payment of the money was, that it should not be made until it was ascertained that the government of the United States had done nothing to injure the interests of France; or, in other words, that no steps had been authorized by Congress of a hostile character towards France.

"What the disposition or action of Congress might be, was then unknown to the French Cabinet. But, on the 14th of January, the Senate resolved that it was, at that time inexpedient to adopt any legislative measures in regard to the state of affairs between the United States and France, and no action on the subject had pride and her power were too well known to occurred in the House of Representatives. These facts were known in Paris prior to the 28th of March, 1835, when the committee, to whom the bill of indemnification had been referred, reported it to the Chamber of Deputies. That committee substantially re-echoed the sentiments of the ministry, declared that Congress had set aside the proposition of the President, and recommended the passage of the bill, without any other restriction than that originally proposed. Thus was it known to the French ministry and chambers that if the position assumed by them, and which had been so frequently and solemnly announced as the only one compatible with the honor of France, was maintained, and the bill passed as originally proposed, the money would be paid, and there would be an end of this unfortunate controversy.

But this cheering prospect was soon destroyed by an amendment introduced into the bill at the moment of its passage, providing that the money should not be paid until the French government had received satisfactory explanations of the President's message of the 2d December, 1834; and, what is still more extraordinary, the president of the council of ministers adopted this amendment, and consented to its incorporation in the bill. In regard to a supposed insult which had been formally resented by the recall of their minister, and the offer of passports to ours, they now, for the first time, proposed to ask explanations. Sentiments and propositions, which they had declared could not justly be imputed to the government or people of the United States, are set up as obstacles to the performance of an act of conceded justice to that government and people. They had declared that the honor of France required the fulfilment of the engagement into which the King had entered, unless Congress adopted the recommendations of the message. They ascertained that Congress did not adopt them, and yet that fulfilment is refused, unless they first obtain from the President, explanations of an opinion characterized by themselves as personal and inoperative."

Having thus traced the controversy down to the point on which it hung—no payment without an apology first made—the President took up this condition as a new feature in the case—presenting national degradation on one side, and twenty-five millions of francs on the other—and declared his determination to submit to no dishonor, and repulsed the apology as a stain upon the national character; and concluded this head of his message with saying:

"In any event, however, the principle involved in the new aspect which has been given to the controversy is so vitally important to the independent administration of the government, that it can neither be surrendered nor compromitted without national degradation. I hope it is unnecessary for me to say that such a sacrifica will not be made through any agency of mine, The honor of my country shall never be stained by an apology from me for the statement of truth and the performance of duty; nor can I give any explanation of my official acts, except such as is due to integrity and justice, and consistent with the principles on which our institutions have been framed. This determination will, I am confident, be approved by my constituents. I have indeed studied their character to but little purpose, if the sum of twenty-five millions of francs will have the weight of a feather in the estimation of what appertains to their national independence: and if, unhappily, a different impression should at any time obtain, in any quarter, they will, I am sure, rally round the government of their choice with alacrity and unanimity, and silence for ever the degrading imputation."

The loss of the fortification bill at the previous session, had been a serious interruption to our system of defences, and an injury to the country in that point of view, independently of itseffect upon our relations with France. A system of general and permanent fortification of the coasts and harbors had been adopted at the close of the war of 1812; and throughout our extended frontier were many works in different degrees of completion, the stoppage of which involved loss and destruction, as well as delay, in this indispensable work. Looking at the loss of the bill in this point of view, the President said:

" Much loss and inconvenience have been experienced, in consequence of the failure of the bill containing the ordinary appropriations for fortifications which passed one branch of the national legislature at the last session, but was lost in the other. This failure was the more regretted, not only because it necessarily interrupted and delayed the progress of a system of national defence, projected immediately afterthe last war, and since steadily pursued, but also because it contained a contingent appropriation, inserted in accordance with the views of the Executive, in aid of this important object, and other branches of the national defence, some portions of which might have been most usefully applied during the past season. I invite your early attention to that part of the report of the Secretary of War which relates to this subject, and recommend an appropriation sufficiently liberal to accelerate the armament of the fortfications agreeably to the proposition submitted by him, and to place our whole Atlantic set board in a complete state of defence. A just regard to the permanent interests of the country duty to call the subject to sideration."

The plan for the removal of west of the Mississippi bein progress and having well ni summation, the President while communicating that make an authentic exposition policy which had governed th adopting this policy. He sl still more for the benefit of that of the white population of their presence-that beside for all the lands they abandon annuities often amounting a head, and being inducted into ized life, they also received i more land than they abandoned better situated for them from tion, and in the same parallels portion of his message will be r lar gratification by all persons positions, and especially so by sons who had been deluded in injustice and oppression pract people. He said:

"The plan of removing the a who vet remain within the set the United States, to the coun Mississippi River, approaches its It was adopted on the most matu of the condition of this race, an persisted in till the object is accounted prosecuted with as much vigor a to their circumstances will peri as their consent can be obtained. experiments for the improvement have failed. It seems now to be fact, that they cannot live in cont ilized community and prosper. A endeavors have, at length, brought ledge of this principle of interc with them. The past we cannot future we can provide for. Indepe treaty stipulations into which we with the various tribes, for the rights they have ceded to us, no o the moral duty of the government States to protect, and, if possible and perpetuate, the scattered rem race, which are left within our bor discharge of this duty, an extensi the West has been assigned for the residence. It has been divided in and allotted among them. Many removed, and others are preparing with the exception of two small bal Ohio and Indiana, not exceeding 1, that such a sacrifice th any agency of mine. shall never be stained for the statement of ce of duty; nor can I ny official acts, except ty and justice, and cones on which our insti-d. This determination approved by my con-studied their character the sum of twenty-five have the weight of a of what appertains to nce: and if, unhappily, hould at any time obv will, I am sure, rally their choice with alacsilence for ever the de-ation bill at the previous our interruption to our in injury to the country dependently of its effect. France. A system of ortification of the coasts dopted at the close of roughout our extended ks in different degrees bage of which involved well as delay, in this poking at the loss of the the President said:

venience have been exe of the failure of the nary appropriations for sed one branch of the ne last session, but was s failure was the more use it necessarily interprogress of a system of ed immediately after the adily pursued, but also ontingent appropriation with the views of the s important object, and national defence, some have been most usefully season. I invite your part of the report of the relates to this subject, propriation sufficiently armament of the forte proposition submitted ur whole Atlantic setate of defence. A just interests of the country neasure. But there are h at the present june orce, and make it my duty to call the subject to your special consideration."

The plan for the removal of the Indians to the west of the Mississippi being now in successful progress and having well nigh reached its consummation, the President took the occasion, while communicating that gratifying fact, to make an authentic exposition of the humane Rolicy which had governed the United States in adopting this policy. He showed that it was still more for the benefit of the Indians than that of the white population who were relieved of their presence—that besides being fully paid for all the lands they abandoned, and receiving annuities often amounting to thirty dollars a head, and being inducted into the arts of civilized life, they also received in every instance more land than they abandoned, of better quality, better situated for them from its frontier situation, and in the same parallels of latitude. This portion of his message will be read with particular gratification by all persons of humane dispositions, and especially so by all candid persons who had been deluded into the belief of injustice and oppression practised upon these people. He said:

"The plan of removing the aboriginal people who vet remain within the settled portions of the United States, to the country west of the Mississippi River, approaches its consummation. It was adopted on the most mature consideration of the condition of this race, and ought to be persisted in till the object is accomplished, and prosecuted with as much vigor as a just regard to their circumstances will permit, and as fast as their consent can be obtained. All preceding experiments for the improvement of the Indians have failed. It seems now to be an established fact, that they cannot live in contact with a civilized community and prosper. Ages of fruitless endeavors have, at length, brought us to a knowledge of this principle of intercommunication with them. The past we cannot recall, but the future we can provide for. Independently of the treaty stipulations into which we have entered with the various tribes, for the usufructuary rights they have ceded to us, no one can doubt the moral duty of the government of the United States to protect, and, if possible, to preserve and perpetuate, the scattered remnants of this race, which are left within our borders. In the discharge of this duty, an extensive region in the West has been assigned for their permanent residence. It has been divided into districts, and allotted among them. Many have already removed, and others are preparing to go; and with the exception of two small bands, living in Ohio and Indiana, not exceeding 1,500 persons, and of the Cherokees, all the tribes on the east side of the Mississippi, and extending from Lake Michigan to Florida, have entered into engagements which will lead to their

ments which will lead to their transplantation. "The plan for their removal and re-establishment is founded upon the knowledge we have gained of their character and habits, and has been dictated by a spirit of enlarged liberality. A territory exceeding in extent that relinquished, has been granted to each tribe. Of its climate, fertility, and capacity to support an Indian population, the representations are highly favorable. To these districts the Indians are removed at the expense of the United States, and with certain supplies of clothing, arms, ammunition, and other indispensable articles, they are also furnished gratuitously with provisions for the period of a year after their arrival at their new homes. In that time, from the nature of the country, and of the products raised by them, they can subsist themselves by agricultural labor, if they choose to resort to that mode of life. If they do not, they are upon the skirts of the great prairies, where countless herds of buffalo roam, and a short time suffices to adapt their own habits to the changes which a change of the animals destined for their food may require. Ample arrangements have also been made for the support of schools. In some instances, council-houses and churches are to be erected, dwellings constructed for the chiefs, and mills for common use. Funds have been set apart for the maintenance of the poor. The most necessary mechanical arts have been introduced. and blacksmiths, gunsmiths, wheelwrights, millwrights, &c. are supported among them. Steel and iron, and sometimes salt, are purchased for them, and ploughs and other farming utensils domestic animals, looms, spinning-wheels, cars, &c., are presented to them. And besides these beneficial arrangements, annuities are in all cases paid, amounting in some instances to more than thirty dollars for each individual of the tribe; and in all cases sufficiently great, if justly divided, and prudently expended, to enable them, in addition to their own exertions, to live comfortably. And as a stimulus for exertion, it is now provided by law, that, "in all cases of the appointment of interpreters, or other persons employed for the benefit of the Indian, a preference shall be given to persons of Indian descent, if such can be found who are properly qualified for the discharge of the duties.

The effect of the revival of the gold currency was a subject of great congratulation with the President, and its influence was felt in every department of industry. Near twenty millions of dollars had entered the country—a sum far above the average circulation of the Bank of the United States in its best days, and a currency of a kind to diffuse itself over the country, and remain where there was a demand for it, and for interest was paid for its use, and no danger incurred of its becoming useless. He thus referred to this gratifying circumstance:

"Connected with the condition of the finances, and the flourishing state of the country in all its branches of industry, it is pleasing to witness the advantages which have been already derived from the recent laws regulating the value of the gold coinage. These advantages will be more apparent in the course of the next year, when the branch mints authorized to be established in North Carolina, Georgia, and Louisiana, shall have gone into operation. Aided, as it is noped they will be, by further reforms in the banking systems of the States, and by judicious regulations on the part of Congress in relation to the custody of the public moneys, it may be confidently anticipated that the use of gold and silver as a circulating medium will become general in the ordinary transactions connected with the labor of the country. The great desideratum, in modern times, is an efficient check upon the power of banks, preventing that excessive issue of paper whence arise those fluctuations in the standard of value which render uncertain the rewards of labor. It was supposed by those who established the Bank of the United States, that, from the credit given to it by the custody of the public moneys, and other privileges, and the precautions taken to guard against the evils which the country had suffered in the bankruptcy of many of the State institutions of that period we should derive from that institution all the security and benefits of a sound currency and every good end that was attainable under that provision of the constitution which authorizes Congress alone to coin money and regulate the value thereof. But it is scarcely necessary now to say that these anticipations have not been realized. After the extensive embarrass-Inent and distress recently produced by the Bank of the United States, from which the country is now recovering, aggravated as they were by pretensions to power which defied the public authority, and which, if acquiesced in by the people, would have changed the whole character of our government, every candid and intelligent individual must admit that, for the attainment of the great advantages of a sound currency, we must look to a course of legislation radically different from that which created such an insti-

Railroads were at this time still in their infancy in the United States; they were but few in number and comparatively feeble; but the nature of a monopoly is the same under all circumstances; and the United States, in their postoffice department, had begun to feel the effects of the extortion and overbearing of monopolizing companies, clothed with chartered privileges inwhich, different from a bank paper currency, no tended to be for the public as well as private advantage, but usually perverted to purposes of self-enrichment, and of oppression. The evil had already become so serious as to require the at. tention of Congress; and the President thus recommended the subject to its consideration:

"Particular attention is solicited to that portion of the report of the postmaster-general which relates to the carriage of the mails of the United States upon railroads constructed by private corporations under the authority of the several States. The reliance which the general government can place on those roads as a means of carrying on its operations, and the principles on which the use of them is to be obtained cannot too soon be considered and settled. Already does the spirit of monopoly begin to exhibit its natural propensities in attempts to exact from the public, for services which it supposes cannot be obtained on other terms, the most extravagant compensation. If these claims be persisted in the question may arise whether a combination of citizens, acting under charters of incorporation from the States, can, by a direct refusal or the demand of an exorbitant price, exclude the United States from the use of the established channels of communication between the different sections of the country; and whether the United States cannot, without transcending their constitutional powers, secure to the post-office department the use of those roads, by an act of Congress which shall provide within itself some equitable mode of adjusting the amount of compensation. To obviate, if possible, the necessity of considering this question, it is suggested whether it be not expedient to fix, by law, the amounts which shall be offered to railroad companies for the conveyance of the mails, graduated according to their average weight, to be as certained and declared by the postmaster-gene ral. It is probable that a liberal proposition of that sort would be accepted."

The subject of slavery took a new turn of disturbance between the North and South about this time. The particular form of annoyance which it now wore was that of the transmission into the slave States, through the United States mail, of incendiary publications, tending to excite servile insurrections. Societies, individuals and foreigners were engaged in this diabolial work—as injurious to the slaves by the further restrictions which it brought upon them, as 10 the owners whose lives and property were a dangered. The President brought this practice to the notice of Congress, with a view to a remedy. He said:

"In connection with these provisions in " lation to the post-office department, I must also invite your attention to the produced in the South by at through the mails inflammato to the passions of the slave various sorts of publications, late them to insurrection, an horrors of a servile war. Th respectable portion of our co be so far misled, as to feel ar than that of indignant regret structive of the harmony and try, and so repugnant to the national compact and to the di and religion. Our happines essentially depend upon peace ders: and peace depends upor in good faith, of those compre stitution upon which the Unic is fortunate for the country th. the generous feeling, and the de ment of the people of the non-sla to the Union, and to their fello same blood in the South, have and impressive a tone to the s tained against the proceedings persons who have engaged in tional and wicked attempts. against the emissaries from for have dared to interfere in this thorize the hope that those a longer be persisted in. But if t of the public will, shall not be si so desirable a result, not a doub tained that the non-slaveholdin from countenancing the slight with the constitutional rights of be prompt to exercise their au pressing, so far as in them lies, 1 culated to produce this evil. care of other branches of this in ject to the State authorities, to y perly belong, it is nevertheless I gress to take such measures as w ost-office department, which w foster an amicable intercourse a ence between all the members of acy, from being used as an instru posite character. The general g which the great trust is confided inviolate the relations created amo by the constitution, is especially b in its own action any thing that them. I would, therefore, call the tion of Congress to the subject, an suggest the propriety of passing will prohibit, under severe penalt lation in the Southern States, thro of incendiary publications intended the slaves to insurrection."

The President in this impressiv makes a just distinction between of misguided men, and of wicked er gaged in disturbing the harmony of olic as well as private erverted to purposes of pression. The evil had s as to require the atthe President thus reports consideration:

is solicited to that northe postmaster-general iage of the mails of the lroads constructed by ler the authority of the ance which the general those roads as a means tions, and the principles a is to be obtained, cand and settled. Already oly begin to exhibit its attempts to exact from which it supposes cannot as, the most extravagant claims be persisted in whether a combination charters of incorporation a direct refusal or the price, exclude the Uniof the established chanbetween the different and whether the United transcending their conre to the post-office derose roads, by an act of ovide within itself some ting the amount of comif possible, the necessity estion, it is suggested lient to fix, by law, the offered to railroad comce of the mails, graduaterage weight, to be asby the postmaster-gene , a liberal proposition of pted."

y took a new turn of dis-North and South about ular form of annoyane that of the transmission grough the United State lications, tending to eris. Societies, individuals gaged in this disbolish he slaves by the furber rought upon them, as y s and property were esent brought this practice rress, with a view to in

h these provisions in to department, I must also invite your attention to the painful excitement produced in the South by attempts to circulate through the mails inflammatory appeals addressed to the passions of the slaves, in prints, and in various sorts of publications, calculated to stimulate them to insurrection, and to produce all the horrors of a servile war. There is doubtless no respectable portion of our countrymen who can be so far misled, as to feel any other sentiment than that of indignant regret at conduct so destructive of the harmony and peace of the country, and so repugnant to the principles of our national compact and to the dictates of humanity and religion. Our happiness and prosperity essentially depend upon peace within our borders: and peace depends upon the maintenance, in good faith, of those compromises of the constitution upon which the Union is founded. It is fortunate for the country that the good sense, the generous feeling, and the deep-rooted attachment of the people of the non-slaveholding States, to the Union, and to their fellow-citizens of the same blood in the South, have given so strong and impressive a tone to the sentiments entertained against the proceedings of the misguided persons who have engaged in these unconstitutional and wicked attempts, and especially against the emissaries from foreign parts, who have dared to interfere in this matter, as to authorize the hope that those attempts will no longer be persisted in. But if these expressions of the public will, shall not be sufficient to effect so desirable a result, not a doubt can be entertained that the non-slaveholding States, so far from countenancing the slightest interference with the constitutional rights of the South, will be prompt to exercise their authority in suppressing, so far as in them lies, whatever is calculated to produce this evil. In leaving the care of other branches of this interesting subject to the State authorities, to whom they properly belong, it is nevertheless proper for Congress to take such measures as will prevent the ost-office department, which was designed to foster an amicable intercourse and correspondence between all the members of the confederacv, from being used as an instrument of an opposite character. The general government, to which the great trust is confided of preserving inviolate the relations created among the States, by the constitution, is especially bound to avoid in its own action any thing that may disturb them. I would, therefore, call the special attention of Congress to the subject, and respectfully suggest the propriety of passing such a law as will prohibit, under severe penalties, the circulation in the Southern States, through the mail, of incendiary publications intended to instigate the slaves to insurrection."

The President in this impressive paragraph makes a just distinction between the conduct of misguided men, and of wicked emissaries, engaged in disturbing the harmony of the Union.

and the patriotic people of the non-slaveholding States who discountenance their work and repress their labors. The former receive the brand of reprobation, and are pointed out for criminal legislation: the latter receive the applause due to good citizens.

The President concludes this message, as he had done many others, with a recurrence to the necessity of reform in the mode of electing the two first officers of the Republic. His convictions must have been deep and strong thus to bring him back so many times to the fundamental point of direct elections by the people, and total suppression of all intermediate agencies. He says:

"I felt it to be my duty in the first message which I communicated to Congress, to urge upon its attention the propriety of amending that part of the constitution which provides for the election of the President and the Vice-President of the United States. The leading object which I had in view was the adoption of some new provision, which would secure to the people the performance of this high duty, without any intermediate agency. In my annual communica tions since, I have enforced the same views. from a sincere conviction that the best interests of the country would be promoted by their adoption. If the subject were an ordinary one, I should have regarded the failure of Congress to act upon it, as an indication of their judgment, that the disadvantages which belong to the present system were not so great as those which would result from any attainable substitute that had been submitted to their consideration. Recollecting, however, that propositions to introduce a new feature in our fundamental laws cannot be too patiently examined, and ought not to be received with favor, until the great body of the people are thoroughly impressed with their necessity and value, as a remedy for real evils, I feel that in renewing the recommendation I have heretofore made on this subject, I am not transcending the bounds of a just deference to the sense of Congress, or to the disposition of the people. However much we may differ in the choice of the measures which should guide the administration of the government, there can be but little doubt in the minds of those who are really friendly to the republican features of our system, that one of its most important securities consists in the separation of the legislative and executive powers, at the same time that each is held responsible to the great source of authority, which is acknowledged to be supreme, in the will of the people constitutionally expressed. My reflection and experience satisfy me, that the framers of the constitution, although they were anxious to mark this feature as a settled and fixed principle in the structure of the government, did not adopt in order to set up the line mistake and what was crimeacts of individuals, on one has on the other; and in that se following speech:

"Mr. Benton rose to expres in the suggestion of the senate vania (Mr. Buchanan), that of this subject be postponed u had come up suddenly and une and the postponement would gi for senators to reflect, and to and to conclude what was best all were united in wishing the s to allay, and not to produce, had risen for this purpose; 1 feet he would say a few word subject, which the presentation tions had so suddenly and unexi up. With respect to the petitic with whom they acted, he had that many of them were good p benevolent objects, and endeavo ate the condition of one part of without inflicting calamities on but they were mistaken in their ceeding; and so far from accompl of their object, the whole effect position was to aggravate the cor in whose behalf they were int there was another part, and he : of the abolition ts. generally, as taining the part of which he spo another part whom he could not people, seeking benevolent ends means, but as incendiaries and a diabolical objects in view, to be acc wicked and deplorable means. II into the proofs now to establish the his opinion of this latter class, but it would be admitted that every att upon the passions of the slaves, a them to murder their owners, was diabolical attempt, and the work c incendiary. Pictures of slave deg misery, and of the white man's luz elty, were attempts of this kind; f appeals to the vengeance of slaves the intelligence or reason of thos lated for them. He (Mr. B.) had pictures of this kind, as well as man all the precautions that were necessary to secure its practical observance, and that we cannot be said to have carried into complete effect their intentions until the evils which arise from this organic defect are remedied. All history tells us that a free people should be watchful of delegated power, and should never acquiesce in a practice which will diminish their control over it. This obligation, so universal in its application to all the principles of a Republic, is peculiarly so in ours, where the formation of parties, founded on sectional interests, is so much fostered by the extent of our territory. These interests, represented by candidates for the Presidency, are constantly prone, in the zeal of party and selfish objects, to generate influences, unmindful*of the general good, and forgetful of the restraints which the great body of the people would enforce, if they were, in no contingency, to lose the right of expressing their will. The experience of our country from the formation of the government to the present day, demonstrates that the people cannot too soon adopt some stronger safeguard for their right to elect the highest officers known to the constitution, than is contained in that sacred instrument as it now stands."

CHAPTER CXXX.

ABOLITION OF SLAVERY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

MR. BUCHANAN presented the memorial of the religious society of "Friends," in the State of Pennsylvania, adopted at their Caln quarterly meeting, requesting Congress to abolish slavery and the slave trade, in the District of Columbia. He said the memorial did not emanate from fanatics, endeavoring to disturb the peace and security of society in the Southern States, by the distribution of incendiary publications, but from a society of Christians, whose object had always been to promote good-will and peace among men. It was entitled to respect from the character of the memorialists; but he dissented from the opinion which they expressed and the request which they made. The constitution recognized slavery; it existed here; was found here when the District was ceded to the United States; the slaves here were the property of the inhabitants; and he was opposed to the disturbance of their rights. Congress had no right to thropists, and mischievous incendiaries-alobe interfere with slavery in the States. That was | tween the free States themselves and the incordetermined in the first Congress that ever sat- | diary societies and individuals within them; and ended in 1791-and in the first session of that Congress. The Religious Society of Friends then petitioned Congress against slavery, and it was resolved, in answer to that petition, that Congress had no authority to interfere in the emancipation of slayes, or with their treatment in any of the States: and that was the answer still to be given. He then adverted to the circumstances under which the memorial was presented. A number of fanatics, led on by foreign incendiaries, have been scattering firebrands through the Southern States-publications and pictures exciting the slaves to revolt, and to the destruction of their owners. Instead of benefiting the slaves by this conduct, they do them the greatest injury, causing the bonds to be drawn tighter upon them; and postponing emancipation even in those States which might eventually contemplate it. These were his opinions on slavery, and on the prayer of this memorial He was opposed to granting the prayer, but was in favor of receiving the petition as the similar one had been received, in 1790, and giving it the same answer; and, he had no doubt, with the same happy effect of putting an end to such applications, and giving peace and quiet to the country. He could not vote for the motion of the senator from South Carolina, Mr. Calhoun to reject it. He thought rejection would inflame the question: reception and condemnation would quiet it. Mr. Calhoun had moved to reject all petitions of the kind-not reject upon their merits, after consideration, but before hand, when presented for reception. This was . the starting point of a long and acrimonius contest in the two Houses of Congress, in which the right of petition was maintained on one side and the good policy of quieting the question by reception and rejection: on the other side, it was held that the rights, the peace, and the dignity of the States required all anti-slavery petition to be repulsed, at the first presentation, without reception or consideration. The author of this View aspired to no lead in conducting this quetion; he thought it was one to be settled by policy; that is to say, in the way that would soonest quiet it. He thought there was a det line of distinction between mistaken philat in the Congress which commenced in 1789 and mmenced in 1789 and he first session of that 18 Society of Friends against slavery, and it to that petition, that rity to interfere in the r with their treatment I that was the answer en adverted to the cirthe memorial was prenatics, led on by foreign scattering firebrands ates-publications and zes to revolt, and to the ners. Instead of beneconduct, they do them ising the bonds to be ; and postponing emantates which might even-These were his opinions raver of this memorial ting the prayer, but was e petition as the similar n 1790, and giving it the had no doubt, with the outting an end to such peace and quiet to the ot vote for the motion of 1 Carolina, Mr. Calhoun, ght rejection would in eption and condemnation alhoun had moved to reie kind-not reject upon nsideration, but before for reception. This was a long and acrimonious ses of Congress, in which s maintained on one side quieting the question by : on the other side, it was re peace, and the dignity all anti-slavery petitions irst presentation, without ion. The author of this I in conducting this que as one to be settled by , in the way that would hought there was a der tween mistaken phian ous incendiaries-al-obs hemselves and the incoviduals within them; and took an early moment to express these opinions in order to set up the line between what was mistake and what was crime—and between the acts of individuals, on one hand, and of States, on the other; and in that sense delivered the following speech:

"Mr. Benton rose to express his concurrence in the suggestion of the senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. Buchanan), that the consideration of this subject be postponed until Monday. It had come up suddenly and unexpectedly to-day, and the postponement would give an opportunity for senators to reflect, and to confer together. and to conclude what was best to be done, where all were united in wishing the same end, namely, to allay, and not to produce, excitement. He had risen for this purpose; but, being on his feet he would say a few words on the general subject, which the presentation of these petitions had so suddenly and unexpectedly brought up. With respect to the petitioners, and those with whom they acted, he had no doubt but that many of them were good people, aiming at benevolent objects, and endeavoring to ameliorate the condition of one part of the human race. without inflicting calamities on another part; but they were mistaken in their mode of proceeding; and so far from accomplishing any part of their object, the whole effect of their interposition was to aggravate the condition of those in whose behalf they were interfering. But there was another part, and he meant to speak of the abolition ts. generally, as the body containing the part of which he spoke; there was another part whom he could not qualify as good people, seeking benevolent ends by mistaken means, but as incendiaries and agitators, with diabolical objects in view, to be accomplished by wicked and deplorable means. He did not go into the proofs now to establish the correctness of it would be admitted that every attempt to work upon the passions of the slaves, and to excite them to murder their owners, was a wicked and diabolical attempt, and the work of a midnight incendiary. Pictures of slave degradation and misery, and of the white man's luxury and cruelty, were attempts of this kind; for they were appeals to the vengeance of slaves, and not to the intelligence or reason of those who legislated for them. He (Mr. B.) had had many publications, sent to him on this subject, during the last summer; the whole of which he had cast into the fire, and should not have thought of referring to the circumstance at this time, as displaying the character of the incendiary part of the abolitionists, had he not, within these few days past, and while abolition petitions were pouring into the other end of the Capitol, received one of these pictures, the design of which could be nothing but mischief of the blackest dye. It was a print from an engraving (and Mr. B. exhibited it, and handed it to senators near him), representing a large and spreading tree of liberty, beneath whose ample shade a slave owner was at one time luxuriously reposing, with slaves fanning him; at another, carried forth in a palanquin, to view the half-naked laborers in the cotton field, whom drivers, with whips, were scourging to the task. The print was evidently from the abolition mint, and came to him by some other conveyance than that of the mail, for there was no post-mark of any kind to identify its origin, and to indicate its line of march. For what purpose could such a picture be intended, unless to inflame the passions of slaves? And why engrave it, except to multiply copies for extensive distribution? But it was not pictures alone that operated upon the passions of the slaves, but speeches, publications, petitions presented in Congress, and the whole machinery of abolition societies. None of these things went to the understandings of the slaves, but to their passions, all imperfectly understood, and inspiring vague hopes, and stimulating abortive and fatal insurrections. Societies, especially, were the foundation of the greatest mischiefs. Whatever might be their objects, the slaves never did, and never can, understand them but in one way: as allies organized for action, and ready to march to their aid on the first signal of insurrection! his opinion of this latter class, but he presumed It was thus that the massacre of San Domingo was made. The society in Paris, Les Amis des Noirs, Friends of the Blacks, with its affiliated societies throughout France and in London, made that massacre. And who composed that society? In the beginning, it comprised the extremes of virtue and of vice; it contained the best and the basest of human kind! Lafayetteand the Abbé Gregoire, those purest of philanthropists; and Marat and Anacharsis Clootz, those imps of hell in human shape. In the end pictures of this kind, as well as many diabolical | (for all such societies run the same career of de-

generation), the good men, disgusted with their associates, retired from the scene; and the wicked ruled at pleasure. Declamations against slavery, publications in gazettes, pictures, petitions to the constituent assembly, were the mode of proceeding; and the fish-women of Parishe said it with humiliation, because American females had signed the petitions now before us —the fish-women of Paris, the very poissardes from the quays of the Seine, became the obstreperous champions of West India emancipation. The effect upon the French islands is known to the world; but what is not known to the world, or not sufficiently known to it, is that the same societies which wrapt in flames and drenched in blood the beautiful island, which was then a garden and is now a wilderness, were the means of exciting an insurrection upon our own continent: in Louisiana, where a French slave population existed, and where the language of Les Amis des Noirs could be understood, and where their emissaries could glide. The knowledge of this event (Mr. B. said) ought to be better known, both to show the danger of these societies, however distant, and though oceans may roll between them and their victims, and the fate of the slaves who may be excited to insurrection by them on any part of the American continent. He would read the notice of the event from the work of Mr. Charles Gayarre, lately elected by his native State to a seat on this floor, and whose resignation of that honor he sincerely regretted, and particularly for the cause which occasioned it, and which abstracted talent from a station that it would have adorned. Mr. B. read from the work, 'Essai Historique sur la Louisiane: ' 'The white population of Louisiana was not the only part of the population which was agitated by the French revolution. The blacks, encouraged without doubt by the success which their race had obtained in San Domingo, dreamed of liberty, and sought to shake off the yoke. The insurrection was planned at Pointe Coupeé, which was then an isolated parish, and in which the number of slaves was considerable. The conspiracy took birth on the plantation of Mr. Julien Poydras, a rich planter, who was then travelling in the United States, and spread itself rapidly throughout the parish. The death of all the whites was resolved. Happily the conspirators could not egree upon the day for the massacre; and from | be more tightly drawn. Nor was the mischil

this disagreement resulted a quarrel, which led to the discovery of the plot. The militia of the parish immediately took arms, and the Baron de Carondelet caused them to be supported by the troops of the line. It was resolved to arrest, and to punish the principal conspirators. The slaves opposed it; but they were quickly dispersed, with the loss of twenty of their number killed on the spot. Fifty of the insurgents were condemned to death. Sixteen were executed in different parts of the parish; the rest were put on board a galley and hung at intervals, all along the river, as far as New Orleans (a distance of one hundred and fifty miles) The severity of the chastisement intimidated the blacks, and all returned to perfect order.'

"Resuming his remarks, Mr. B. said he had read this passage to show that our white population had a right to dread, nay, were bound to dread, the mischievous influence of these 80cieties, even when an ocean intervened, and much more when they stood upon the same hemisphere, and within the bosom of the same country. He had also read it to show the miserable fate of their victims, and to warn all that were good and virtuous-all that were honest, but mistaken -in the three hundred and fifty affiliated societies, vaunted by the individuals who style themselves their executive committee, and who date, from the commercial emporium of this Union, their high manifesto against the President; to warn them at once to secede from associations which, whatever may be their designs, can have no other effect than to revive in the Southern States the tragedy, not of San Domin go, but of the parish of Pointe Coupeé.

"Mr. B. went on to say that these societies had already perpetrated more mischief than the joint remainder of all their lives spent in prayers of contrition, and in works of retribution, could ever atone for. They had thrown the state of the emancipation question fifty years but They had subjected every traveller, and every emigrant, from the non-slaveholding States, # be received with coldness, and viewed with sa picion and jealousy, in the slaveholding States They had occasioned many slaves to lose the lives. They had caused the deportation of many ten thousands from the grain-growing to the planting States. They had caused the privilege of all slaves to be curtailed, and their bonds w of their conduct confined t the free colored people, and of misery to that population States, this population has their intermediate position; as tion as the instruments, real abolition societies. In all exodus had either been enfor ing. In Missouri there was titution which prohibited the State; but that clause had re ter in the book until the a among the slaves by the dista abolition thunder, led to the l instances, and to the belief in people were the antennæ of the their medium for communicati and for exciting them to dese insurrection eventually. Then scene. The people met, resolv thirty days for the exodus of caste. Under that decree a go had to take place at the comme ter. Many worthy and indust to quit their business and their go forth under circumstances them objects of suspicion whe and sealed the door against th new friends while depriving the tion of old ones. He (Mr. B.) many instances of this kind, an tificates to several, to show that ished, not for their offences, but fortunes; for the misfortune of the race which the abolition soci the object of their gratuitous pl

"Having said thus much of the cieties in the non-slaveholding turned, with pride and exultation theme-the conduct of the grea people in all these States. Befor conduct, and while the black qu portentous cloud was gathering ; on the Northeastern horizon, he for the South, but for the Union that he saw the fatal work of disto begin, and the bonds of this gl eracy about to snap; but the co great body of the people in all the r ing States quickly dispelled that fe place planted deep the strongest as harmony and indivisibility of the ilted a quarrel, which led plot. The militia of the ok arms, and the Baron hem to be supported by . It was resolved to are principal conspirators. ; but they were quickly of twenty of their num-Fifty of the insurgents eath. Sixteen were exes of the parish; the rest galley and hung at interr, as far as New Orleans andred and fifty miles). stisement intimidated the d to perfect order.'

arks, Mr. B. said he had low that our white popuread, nay, were bound to s influence of these sociean intervened, and much d upon the same hemisosom of the same country. show the miserable fate of warn all that were good were honest, but mistaken ed and fifty affiliated sone individuals who style stive committee, and who ercial emporium of this nifesto against the Prest once to secede from asever may be their designs ect than to revive in the agedy, not of San Dominf Pointe Coupeé.

say that these societies had ore mischief than the joint lives spent in prayers of rks of retribution, could had thrown the state of estion fifty years buck every traveller, and every on-slaveholding States, # iess, and viewed with sun the slaveholding States many slaves to lose their ed the deportation of many the grain-growing to the y had caused the privilegs tailed, and their bonds to n. Nor was the mischiel of their conduct confined to slaves; it reached the free colored people, and opened a sudden gulf of misery to that population. In all the slave States, this population has paid the forfeit of their intermediate position; and suffered proscription as the instruments, real or suspected, of the abolition societies. In all these States, their exodus had either been enforced or was impending. In Missouri there was a clause in the contitution which prohibited their emigration to the State; but that clause had remained a dead letter in the book until the agitation produced among the slaves by the distant rumbling of the abolition thunder, led to the knowledge in some instances, and to the belief in others, that these people were the anternæ of the abolitionists; and their medium for communicating with the slaves. and for exciting them to desertion first, and to insurrection eventually. Then ensued a painful scene. The people met, resolved, and prescribed thirty days for the exodus of the obnoxious caste. Under that decree a general emigration had to take place at the commencement of winter. Many worthy and industrious people had to guit their business and their homes, and to go forth under circumstances which rendered them objects of suspicion wherever they went, and sealed the door against the acquisition of new friends while depriving them of the protection of old ones. He (Mr. B.) had witnessed many instances of this kind, and had given certificates to several, to show that they were banished not for their offences, but for their misfortunes; for the misfortune of being allied to the race which the abolition societies had made the object of their gratuitous philanthropy.

"Having said thus much of the abolition societies in the non-slaveholding States, Mr. B. turned, with pride and exultation, to a different theme-the conduct of the great body of the people in all these States. Before he saw that conduct, and while the black question, like a portentous cloud was gathering and darkening on the Northeastern horizon, he trembled, not for the South, but for the Union. He feared that he saw the fatal work of dissolution about to begin, and the bonds of this glorious confederacy about to snap; but the conduct of the great body of the people in all the non-slaveholding States quickly dispelled that fear, and in its place planted deep the strongest assurance of the

he had felt for many years. Their conduct was above all praise, above all thanks, above all gratitude. They had chased off the foreign emissaries, silenced the gabbling tongues of female dupes, and dispersed the assemblages, whether fanatical, visionary, or incendiary, of all that congregated to preach against evils which afflicted others, not them; and to propose remedies to aggravate the disease which they pretended to cure. They had acted with a noble spirit. They had exerted a vigor beyond all law. They had obeyed the enactments, not of the statute book, but of the heart; and while that spirit was in the heart, he cared nothing for laws written in a book. He would rely upon that spirit to complete the good work it has begun; to dry up these societies; to separate the mistaken philanthropist from the reckless fanatic and the wicked incendiary, and put an end to publications and petitions which, whatever may be their design, can have no other effect than to impede the object which they invoke, and to aggravate the evil which they de-

"Turning to the immediate question before the Senate, that of the rejection of the petitions, Mr. B. said his wish was to give that vote which would have the greatest effect in putting down these societies. He thought the vote to be given to be rather one of expediency than of constitutional obligation. The clause in the constitution so often quoted in favor of the right of petitioning for a redress of grievances would seem to him to apply rather to the grievances felt by ourselves than to those felt by others, and which others might think an advantage, what we thought a grievance. The petitioners from Ohio think it a grievance that the people of the District of Columbia should suffer the institution of slavery, and pray for the redress of that grievance; the people of the District think the institution an advantage, and want no redress; now, which has the right of petitioning? Looking to the past action of the Senate, Mr. B. saw that, about thirty years ago, a petition against slavery, and that in the States, was presented to this body by the society of Quakers in Pennsylvania and New Jersey; and that the same question upon its reception was made, and decided by yeas and nays, 19 to 9, in favor of receiving it. He read the names, to show that the senators from the slave and non-slaveholding States voted harmony and indivisibility of the Union which some for and some against the reception, accord ing to each one's opinion, and not according to not; and, if so, on that ground to put a check the position or the character of the State from on their transmission through the mails. He which he came. Mr. B. repeated that he thought | could not but express his astonishment at the this question to be one of expediency, and that objection which had been taken to his motion it was expedient to give the vote which would for he knew that the Senator from Alabama go furthest towards quieting the public mind. The quieting the South depended upon quieting the North; for when the abolitionists were put down in the former place, the latter would be at ease. It seemed to him, then, that the gentlemen of the non-slaveholding States were the proper persons to speak first. They knew the temper of their own constituents best, and what might have a good or an ill effect upon them, either to increase the abolition fever, or to allay it. He knew that the feeling of the Senate was general; that all wished for the same end; and the senators of the North as cordially as those of the South."

CHAPTER CXXXI.

MAIL CIRCULATION OF INCENDIARY PUBLICA-TIONS.

MR. CALHOUN moved that so much of the President's message as related to the mail transmission of incendiary publications be referred to a select committee. Mr. King, of Alabama, opposed the motion, urging that the only way that Congress could interfere would be by a postoffice regulation; and that all such regulation properly referred itself to the committee on post-offices and post-roads. He did not look to the particular construction of the committee, but had no doubt the members of that committee could see the evil of these incendiary transmissions through the mails, and would provide a report were soon brought in by the committee a remedy which they should deem constitution- - a bill subjecting to penalties any post-master al, proper and adequate; and he expressed a who should knowingly receive and put into the fear that, by giving the subject too much im- mail any publication, or picture touching the portance, an excitement might be got up. Mr. subject of slavery, to go into any State or to Calhoun replied that the Senator from Alabama | ritory in which the circulation of such publicahad mistaken his object—that it was not to pro- tion, or picture, should be forbid by the Same duce any unnecessary excitement, but to adopt laws. When the report was read Mr. Mangun such a course as would secure a committee which moved the printing of 5000 extra copies of it would calmly and dispassionately go into an ex- This motion brought a majority of the commitamination of the whole subject; which would tee to their feet, to disclaim their assent to park investigate the character of those publications, of the report; and to absolve themselves from to ascertain whether they were incendiary or responsibility for its contents. A conversational felt that deep interest in the subject which pervaded the feelings of every man in the South He believed that the post-office committee would be fully occupied with the regular business which would be brought before them; and it was this consideration, and no party feeling, which had induced him to make his motion. Mr. Grundy. chairman of the committee on post-offices and post-roads, said that his position was sch as to have imposed silence upon him, if that silence might not have been misunderstood. In reply to the objection that a majority of the committee were not from the slave States, that circumstance might be an advantage; it might give the greater weight to their action, which it was known would be favorable to the object of the motion. He would say that the federal government could do but little on this subject except through a post-office regulation, and thereby aiding the efficiency of the State laws. He did not desire to see any power exercised which would have the least tendency to interfere with the sovereignty of the States. Mr. Calhoun adhering to his desire for a select committee and expressing his belief that a great constitutional question was to be settled, and that the crisis required calmness and firmness, and the action of a committee that came mainly from the endangered part of the Union-his request was granted; and a committee of five appointed composed as he desired; namely, Mr. Calhom chairman, Mr. King of Georgia, Mr. Mangun of North Carolina, Mr. Davis of Massachusetta and Mr. Lewis F. Linn of Missouri, A bill and

"Mr. Davis said that, as made to print the paper put port from the select committ a member, he would remark tained in it did not entirely tion, though it contained ma approved of. He had risen for than to make this statement, should go abroad with the sented to those portions of meet his approbation."

"Mr. King, of Georgia, said misunderstanding should go f to his views, he must state the not entirely assented to by hit he gentleman from South (houn), in making this report, I that the majority of the comm to the whole of it, though man concurred in by all."

"Mr. Davis said he would he might have taken the usual an additional report, containing the subject, but thought it hau and he had contented himself statement that he had just mad

"Mr. King, of Alabama, saic parture from the usual coursemight dissent; and yet, when published, it would seem to be committee of the Senate, and two members of it. It was whole matter should go togeth that the report submitted by the be read with the bill, to show to the report was not in conflict ciples of the bill reported. He to alter from North Carolina (Mr. better modify his motion, so as a port and bill published together.

"Mr. Linn remarked that, bein the committee, it was but proper that he had assented to several proper, though he did not concur was parts. Should it become necess when the subject again came befexplain in what particulars he had the views given in the report, a had dissented from them. The bemet with his approbation."

"Mr. Calhoun said he hoped I North Carolina would modify his to include the printing of the bi port. It would be seen, by comp pether, that there was no non see bill coming as it did after this rep

"Mr. King, of Alabama, had o impressions from hearing the re rad. It appeared to him unusual should be made by a minority, ar ground to put a check brough the mails. He his astonishment at the en taken to his motion Senator from Alabama the subject which pervery man in the South. -office committee would e regular business which them; and it was this party feeling, which had s motion. Mr. Grundy. ttee on post-offices and position was sich as to on him, if that silence isunderstood. In reply majority of the commitlave States, that circumintage; it might give the r action, which it was ble to the object of the that the federal governon this subject except regulation, and thereby the State laws. He did power exercised which ndency to interfere with e States. Mr. Calhoun for a select committee, ief that a great constitube settled, and that the ss and firmness, and the that came mainly from the Union-his request nmittee of five appointed d; namely, Mr. Calhoun f Georgia, Mr. Mangum Davis of Massachusetta of Missouri, A bill and aught in by the committee penalties any post-master receive and put into the or picture touching the go into any State or terculation of such publicad be forbid by the State rt was read Mr. Mangum f 5000 extra copies of it majority of the commitclaim their assent to parts absolve themselves from ontents. A conversational debate ensued on this point, on which Mr. Davis, Messrs. King of Alabama and Georgia, Mr. Linn and Mr. Calhoun thus expressed themselves:

"Mr. Davis said that, as a motion had been made to print the paper purporting to be a report from the select committee of which he was a member, he would remark that the views contained in it did not entirely meet his approbation, though it contained many things which he approved of. He had risen for no other purpose than to make this statement, lest the impression should go abroad with the report that he assented to those portions of it which did not meet his approbation."

"Mr. King, of Georgia, said that, lest the same misunderstanding should go forth with respect to his views, he must state that the report was not entirely assented to by himself. However, the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. Calhoun), in making this report, had already stated that the majority of the committee did not agree to the whole of it, though many parts of it were concurred in by all."

"Mr. Davis said he would add further, that he might have taken the usual course, and made an additional report, containing all his views on the subject, but thought it hardly worth while, and he had contented himself with making the statement that he had just made."

"Mr. King, of Alabama, said this was a departure from the usual course—by it a minority might dissent; and yet, when the report was published, it would seem to be a report of the committee of the Senate, and not a report of two members of it. It was proper that the whole matter should go together with the bill, that the report submitted by the minority might be read with the bill, to show that the reading of the report was not in conflict with the principles of the bill reported. He thought the senator from North Carolina (Mr. Mangum) had better modify his motion, so as to have the report and bill published together."

"Mr. Linn remarked that, being a member of the committee, it was but proper for him to say that he had assented to several parts of the report, though he did not concur with it in all its parts. Should it become necessary, he would, when the subject again came before the Senate, explain in what particulars he had coincided with the views given in the report, and how far he had dissented from them. The bill, he said, had met with his approbation."

"Mr. Calhoun said he hoped his friend from North Carolina would modify his motion, so as to include the printing of the bill with the report. It would be seen, by comparing both together, that there was no non sequitur in the bill, coming as it did after this report."

"Mr. King, of Alabama, had only stated his impressions from hearing the report and bill read. It appeared to him unusual that a report quiesced in by the committee, and that the bill should be adverse to it."

"Mr. Davis said the report was, as he understood it to be read from the chair, the report of the committee. He had spoken for himself only, and for nobody else, lest the impression might go abroad that he concurred in all parts of the report, when he dissented from some of them."

"Mr. Calhoun said that a majority of the committee did not concur in the report, though there were two members of it, himself and the gentleman from North Carolina, who concurred throughout; three other gentlemen concurred with the greater part of the report, though they dissented from some parts of it; and two gentlemen concurred also with some parts of it. As to the bill, two of the committee would have preferred a different one, though they had rather have that than none at all; another gentleman was opposed to it altogether. The bill, however, was a natural consequence of the report, and the two did not disagree with each other.'

The parts of the report which were chiefly exceptionable were two: 1. The part which related to the nature of the federal government, as being founded in "compact;" which was the corner-stone of the doctrine of nullification, and its corollary that the laws of nations were in full force between the several States, as sovereign and independent communities except as modified by the compact; 2. The part that argued, as upon a subsisting danger, the evils by an abolition of slavery in the slave States by interference from other States. On the first of these points the report said:

"That the States which form our Federal Union are sovereign and independent communities, bound together by a constitutional compact, and are possessed of all the powers belonging to distinct and separate States, excepting such as are delegated to be exercised by the general government, is assumed as unquestionable. The compact itself expressly provides that all powers not delegated are reserved to the States and the people. To ascertain, then. whether the power in question is delegated or reserved, it is only necessary to ascertain whether it is to be found among the enumerated powers or not. If it be not among them, it belongs, of course, to the reserved powers. On turning to the constitution, it will be seen that, while the power of defending the country against external danger is found among the enumerated, the instrument is wholly silent as to the power of defending the internal peace and security of the States; and of course, reserves to the States this important power, as it stood before the adoption of the constitution, with no other limitation, as has been stated, except such brould be made by a minority, and merely ac- | as are expressly prescribed by the instrument

question of property to the

of the Union, has a very imp

the institution, and the imp

ing it without disasters une tory of the world. To une and importance fully, it mu

that slavery, as it exists in (including under the Souther

ing States), involves not or inferred that the right of a State to defend itself against internal dangers is a part of the great, primary, and inherent right of self-defence. which, by the laws of nature, belongs to all communities; and so jealous were the States of this essential right, without which their independence could not be preserved, that it is expressly provided by the constitution, that the general government shall not assist a State, even in case of domestic violence, except on the application of the authorities of the State itself; thus excluding, by a necessary consequence, its interference in all other cases.

"Having now shown that it belongs to the slaveholding States, whose institutions are in danger, and not to Congress, as is supposed by the message, to determine what papers are incendiary and intended to excite insurrection among the slaves, it remains to inquire, in the next place, what are the corresponding duties of the general government, and the other States, from within whose limits and jurisdiction their institutions are attacked; a subject intimately connected with that with which the committee are immediately charged, and which, at the present juncture, ought to be fully understood by all the parties. The committee will begin with the first. It remains next to inquire into the duty of the States from within whose limits and jurisdiction the internal peace and security of the slaveholding States are endangered. In order to comprehend more fully the nature and extent of their duty, it will be necessary to make a few remarks on the relations which exist between the States of our Federal Union, with the rights and obligations reciprocally resulting from such relations. It has already been stated that the States which compose our Federal Union are sovereign and independent communities, united by a constitutional compact. Among its members the laws of nations are in full force and obligation, except as altered or modified by the compact; and, of course, the States possess, with that exception, all the rights, and are subject to all the duties, which separate and distinct communities possess, or to which they are subject. Among these are comprehended the obligation which all States are under to prevent their citizens from disturbing the peace or endangering the security of other States; and in case of being disturbed or endangered, the right of the latter to demand of the former to adopt such measures as will prevent their recurrence, and if refused or neglected, to resort to such measures as its protection may require. This right remains, of course, in force among the States of this Union, with such limitations as are imposed expressly by the constitution. Within their limits, the rights of the slaveholding States are as full to demand of the States within whose limits and jurisdiction their peace is assailed, to adopt the measures necessary to prevent the same, and if refused or neglected, under the relation of master and slave as in-itself. From what has been stated, it may be if they were separate and independent commu-

This part of the report was that which, in founding the federal government in compact, as under the old articles of the confederation, and in bringing the law of nations to apply between the States as independent and sovereign communities, except where limited by the compact was supposed to contain the doctrine of nullification and secession; and the concluding part of the report is an argument in favor of the course recommended in the Crisis in the event that New-York, Massachusetts, and Pennsylvania did not suppress the abolition societies. The report continues:

"Their professed object is the emancipation of slaves in the Southern States, which they propose to accomplish through the agencies of organized societies, spread throughout the nonslaveholding States, and a powerful press, directed mainly to excite, in the other States. hatred and abhorrence against the institutions and citizens of the slaveholding States, by addresses, lectures, and pictorial representations abounding in false and exaggerated statements. If the magnitude of the mischief affords, in any degree, the measure by which to judge of the criminality of a project, few have ever been devised to be compared with the present, whether the end be regarded, or the means by which it is proposed to be accomplished. The blindness of fanaticism is proverbial. With more zeal than understanding, it constantly misconceives the nature of the object at which it aims, and towards which it rushes with headlong violence, regardless of the means by which it is to be effected. Never was its character more fully exemplified than in the present instance. Setting out with the abstract principle that slavery is an evil, the fanatical zealots come at once to the conclusion that it is their duty to abolish it. regardless of all the disasters which must follow. Never was conclusion more false or dangerous. Admitting their assumption, there are innumerable things which, regarded in the abstract, are evils, but which it would be madness to attempt to abolish. Thus regarded government itself is an evil, with most of its institutions intended to protect life and properts, comprehending the civil as well as the criminal and military code, which are tolerated only be cause to abolish them would be to increase instead of diminishing the evil. The reason is equally applicable to the case under considertion, to illustrate which, a few remarks on slavery, as it actually exists in the Southern States, will be necessary.

"He who regards slavery in those States simply to resort to means to protect themselves, as portant as that relation is, viewed merely 184 master and slave, but, also, t cal relations of two races, of bers, from different quart and the most opposite of a particular that distinguishes from another. Emancipation these relations-would dive their property, and subvert and political, that has existed from almost the first settleme States. It is not the intention to dwell on the pecuniary a subject, the vast amount of equal at least to $950,000.0 families and individuals; the in prostration of an entire section the fatal blow that would be ductions of the great agricu which the commerce, the navi factures, and the revenue of th entirely depend. As great a would be, they are nothing, c must follow the subversion of tion between the two races, to mittee will confine their rema relation, the two races have lo and prosperity, and if not distu continue so to live. While the has rapidly increased in wealth a at the same time has maintain at least, morally and intellectu brethren of the non-slavehold African race has multiplied with accompanied by great improver and intellectually, and the enjo gree of comfort with which the in few countries can compare, greatly superior to what the fre same race possess in the non-slav It may, indeed, be safely asserte no example in history in which a such as their ancestors were whe the country, have ever advance period so rapidly in numbers and To destroy the existing relation destroy this prosperity, and to races in a state of conflict, whic the expulsion or extirpation of or No other can be substituted, co their peace or security. The diff diversity of the races. So strong line between the two, in conseque so strengthened by the force of 1 cation, that it is impossible for together in the same community numbers are so nearly equal as in id independent commu-

ort was that which, in ernment in compact, as f the confederation, and ations to apply between it and sovereign commumited by the compact. I the doctrine of nullifi. nd the concluding part rument in favor of the the Crisis in the event chusetts, and Pennsylthe abolition societies.

ect is the emancipation n States, which they proarough the agencies of ad throughout the nonl a powerful press, die, in the other States, against the institutions eholding States, by adsictorial representations, exaggerated statements. mischief affords, in any which to judge of the few have ever been deith the present, whether · the means by which it aplished. The blindness ial. With more zeal than tantly misconceives the at which it aims, and s with headlong violence. s by which it is to be ts character more fully present instance. Setact principle that slavery zealots come at once to s their duty to abolish it. sasters which must folusion more false or daneir assumption, there are which, regarded in the which it would be madbolish. Thus regarded 1 evil, with most of its protect life and property, il as well as the criminal ch are tolerated only be-1 would be to increase the evil. The reason is ie case under considertich, a few remarks on exists in the Southern

ery in those States simply master and slave, as inn is, viewed merely as a question of property to the slaveholding section of the Union, has a very imperfect conception of the institution, and the impossibility of abolishing it without disasters unexampled in the history of the world. To understand its nature and importance fully, it must be borne in mind that slavery, as it exists in the Southern States (including under the Southern all the slaveholding States), involves not only the relation of master and slave, but, also, the social and political relations of two races, of nearly equal numbers, from different quarters of the globe, and the most opposite of all others in every particular that distinguishes one race of men from another. Emancipation would destroy these relations—would divest the masters of their property, and subvert the relation, social and political, that has existed between the races from almost the first settlement of the Southern States. It is not the intention of the committee to dwell on the pecuniary aspect of this vital subject, the vast amount of property involved, equal at least to $950,000,000; the ruin of families and individuals; the impoverishment and prostration of an entire section of the Union, and the fatal blow that would be given to the productions of the great agricultural staples, on which the commerce, the navigation, the manufactures, and the revenue of the country, almost entirely depend. As great as these disasters would be, they are nothing, compared to what must follow the subversion of the existing relation between the two races, to which the committee will confine their remarks. Under this relation, the two races have long lived in peace and prosperity, and if not disturbed, would long continue so to live. While the European race has rapidly increased in wealth and numbers, and at the same time has maintained an equality, at least, morally and intellectually, with their brethren of the non-slaveholding States; the African race has multiplied with not less rapidity, accompanied by great improvement, physically and intellectually, and the enjoyment of a degree of comfort with which the laboring class in few countries can compare, and confessedly greatly superior to what the free people of the same race possess in the non-slaveholding States It may, indeed, be safely asserted, that there is no example in history in which a savage people, such as their ancestors were when brought into the country, have ever advanced in the same period so rapidly in numbers and improvement. To destroy the existing relations would be to destroy this prosperity, and to place the two races in a state of conflict, which must end in the expulsion or extirpation of one or the other. No other can be substituted, compatible with their peace or security. The difficulty is in the diversity of the races. So strongly drawn is the line between the two, in consequence of it, and so strengthened by the force of habit, and education, that it is impossible for them to exist together in the same community, where their

ing States, under any other relation than which now exists. Social and political equality between them is impossible. No power on earth can overcome the difficulty. The causes resisting lie too deep in the principles of our nature to be surmounted. But, without such equality, to change the present condition of the African race, were it possible, would be but to change the form of slavery. It would make them the slaves of the community, instead of the slaves of individuals, with less responsibility and interest in their welfare on the part of the community than is felt by their present masters; while it would destroy the security and independence of the European race, if the African should be permitted to continue in their changed condition within the limits of those States. They would look to the other States for support and protection, and would become, virtually, their allies and dependents; and would thus place in the hands of those States the most effectual instrument to destroy the influence and control the destiny of the rest of the Union. It is against this relation between the two races that the blind and criminal zeal of the abolitionists is directed-a relation that now preserves in quiet and security more than 6,500,000 of human beings, and which cannot be destroyed without destroying the peace and prosperity of nearly half the States of the Union, and involving their entire population in a deadly conflict, that must terminate either in the expulsion or extirpation of those who are the object of the misguided and false humanity of those who claim to be their friends. He must be blind, indeed, who does not perceive that the subversion of a relation which must be followed with such disastrous consequences can only be effected by convulsions that would devastate the country, burst asunder the bonds of Union, and ingulf in a sea of blood the institutions of the country. It is madness to suppose that the slaveholding States would quietly submit to be sacrificed. Every consideration-interest, duty, and humanity, the love of country, the sense of wrong, hatred of oppressors, and treacherous and faithless confederates, and finally despair—would impel them to the most daring and desperate resistance in defence of property, family, country, liberty, and existence. But wicked and cruel as is the end aimed at, it is fully equalled by the crimimality of the means by which it is proposed to be accomplished. These, as has been stated, consist in organized societies and a powerful press, directed mainly with a view to excite the bitterest animosity and hatred of the people of the non-slaveholding States against the citizens and institutions of the slaveholding States. It is easy to see to what disastrous results such means must tend. Passing over the more obvious effects, their tendency to excite to insurrection and servile war, with all its horrors, and the necessity which such tendency must impose on the slaveholding States to resort to the most numbers are so nearly equal as in the slavehold- rigid discipline and severe police, to the great miury of the present condition of the slaves. there remains another, threatening incalculable mischief to the country. The inevitable tendency of the means to which the abolitionists have resorted to effect their object must, if persisted in, end in completely alienating the two great sections of the Union. The incessant action of hundreds of societies, and a vast printing establishment, throwing out daily thousands of artful and inflammatory publications, must make, in time, a deep impression on the section of the Union where they freely circulate, and are mainly designed to have effect. The well-informed and thoughtful may hold them in contempt, but the young, the inexperienced, the ignorant, and thoughtless, will receive the poison. In process of time, when the number of proselytes is sufficiently multiplied, the artful and profligate, who are ever on the watch to seize on any means, however wicked and dangerous, will unite with the fanatics, and make their movements the basis of a powerful political party, that will seek advancement by diffusing, as widely as possible, hatred against the slaveholding States. But, as hatred begets hatred, and animosity animosity, these feelings would become reciprocal, till every vestige of attachment would cease to exist between the two sections, when the Union and the constitution, the offspring of mutual affection and confidence, would forever perish. Such is the danger to which the movements of the abolitionists expose the country. If the force of the obligation is in proportion to the magnitude of the danger, stronger cannot be imposed, than is at present, on the States within whose limits the danger originates, to arrest its further progress—a duty they owe, not only to the States whose institutions are assailed, but to the Union and constitution, as has been shown, and, it may be added, to themselves.

The insidiousness of this report was in the assumption of an actual impending danger of the abolition of slavery in all the slave States-the destruction of nine hundred and fifty millions of property—the ocean of blood to be shed—the war of extermination between two races-and the necessity for extraordinary means to prevent these dire calamities; when the fact was, that there was not one particle of any such danger. The assumption was contrary to fact: the report was inflammatory and disorganizing: and if there was any thing enigmatical in its conclusions, it was sufficiently interpreted in the contemporaneous publications in the Southern slave States, which were open in their declarations that a cause for separation had occurred, limited only by the conduct of the free States in suppressing within a given time the incendiary Carolina in her nullification proceedings; and societies within their borders. This limitation would throw the responsibility of disunion upon the non-slaveholding States failing to suppress these societies: for disunion, in that case was foreshadowed in another part of this report. and fully avowed in contemporary Southern pullications. Thus the report said:

"Those States, on the other hand, are not only under all the obligations which independent communities would be, to adopt such measures. but also under the obligation which the constitution superadds, rendered more sacred, if possible, by the fact that, while the Union imposes restrictions on the right of the slaveholding States to defend themselves, it affords the medium through which their peace and security are assailed. It is not the intention of the committee to inquire what those restrictions are, and what are the means which, under the constitution, are left to the slaveholding States to protect themselves. The period has not yet come and they trust never will, when it may be necessary to decide those questions; but come it must, unless the States whose duty it is to suppress the danger shall see in time its magnitude and the obligations which they are under to adopt speedy and effectual measures to arrest its further progress. That the full force of this objegation may be understood by all parties, the committee propose, in conclusion, to touch briefy on the movements of the abolitionists, with the view of showing the dangerous consequences to which they must lead if not arrested."

These were ominous intimations, to receive their full interpretation elsewhere, and indissolubly connecting themselves with the late disunion attitude of South Carolina-the basis of discontent only changed. Mr. King of Georgia said that positions had been assumed and principles insisted upon by Mr. Calhoun, not only inconsistent with the bill reported, but he thought inconsistent with the "existence of the Union itself, and which if established and carried into practice, must hastily end in its dissolution." Mr. Calhoun in his reply pretty well justified these conclusions of the Georgia senator. He made its point that the non-slaveholding States had done nothing yet to suppress the incendiary societies within their limits; and joining that non-action of these States with a refusal of Congress to pass this bill, he looked upon it as in vain to expect security or protection for the slaveholding States except from themselves-from State interposition, as authorized in the Virginia resolutions of 1798; and as recently carried out by South declared that nothing was wan among themselves to place th tutions, their peace and securit protection and beyond the read this was thus intelligibly, and in his reply to Mr. King:

"Thus far (I say it with regr have not been realized. The le South, backed by the voice the expressed through innumerable called upon the non-slavehold press the movements made wit tion of those States against the curity. Not a step has been to has been passed, or even propo ture to assert that none will be there is a favorable disposition t North, but I clearly see the st parties there presents insuperab to any legislation on the subje opinion on the fact that the n States, from the elements of th are and will continue to be, divid ed by parties of nearly equal stre each will always be ready to movement of the other which ma superiority, without much regard ces, as affecting their own States, remote and distant sections. No less disappointed as to the proces gress. Believing that the gener has no right or authority over t slavery, we had just grounds to would refuse all jurisdiction in rein whatever form it might be pro very opposite course has been pur tion petitions have not only bee both Houses, but received on the m and dangerous of all grounds—that to receive them; that is, to take ju the question of slavery whenever 1 ists may think proper to petition for either here or in the States. Thus of the slaveholding States have bee disappointed. One question still r decided that is presented by this bil to pass this bill would be virtually t with the abolitionists-would be t officers and agents of the post-office in effect their agents and abettors culation of their incendiary publicat lation of the laws of the States. It questionable duty, as I have de proved, to abstain from their violatic refusing or neglecting to discharge you would clearly enlist, in the exist versy, on the side of the abolitionists Southern States. Should such be yo by refusing to pass this bill, I shall people of the South, look to yours have nothing to hope from others. tell the Senate, be your decision wh the South will never abandon the pr ers. This limitation bility of disunion upstates failing to suplisunion, in that case, er part of this report, porary Southern pubt said:

other hand, are not ons which independent adopt such measures, ion which the constimore sacred, if posle the Union imposes of the slaveholding es. it affords the mepeace and security are ention of the commitrestrictions are, and , under the constituholding States to prood has not yet come. , when it may be neestions; but come it lose duty it is to supin time its magnitude h they are under to measures to arrest its e full force of this oblid by all parties, the lusion, to touch briefhe abolitionists, with ngerous consequences not arrested."

> timations, to receive ewhere, and indissoluwith the late disunion -the basis of discon-King of Georgia said sumed and principles noun, not only inconrted, but he thought istence of the Union shed and carried into its dissolution." Mr. y well justified these enator. He made its ding States had done e incendiary societies ning that non-action il of Congress to pass as in vain to expect ie slaveholding States from State interpo-Virginia resolutions carried out by South on proceedings; and declared that nothing was wanted but "concert" among themselves to place their domestic institutions, their peace and security under their own protection and beyond the reach of danger. All this was thus intelligibly, and ominously stated in his reply to Mr. King:

"Thus far (I say it with regret) our just hopes have not been realized. The legislatures of the South, backed by the voice their constituents expressed through innumerable meetings, have called upon the non-slaveholding States to repress the movements made within the jurisdiction of those States against their peace and security. Not a step has been taken; not a law has been passed, or even proposed; and I venture to assert that none will be; not but what there is a favorable disposition towards us in the North but I clearly see the state of political parties there presents insuperable impediments to any legislation on the subject. I rest my opinion on the fact that the non-slaveholding States, from the elements of their population, are, and will continue to be, divided and distracted by parties of nearly equal strength; and that each will always be ready to seize on every movement of the other which may give them the superiority, without much regard to consequences, as affecting their own States, and much less. remote and distant sections. Nor have we been less disappointed as to the proceedings of Con-Believing that the general government has no right or authority over the subject of slavery, we had just grounds to hope Congress would refuse all jurisdiction in reference to it, in whatever form it might be presented. The very opposite course has been pursued. Abolition petitions have not only been received in both Houses, but received on the most obnoxious and dangerous of all grounds—that we are bound to receive them; that is, to take jurisdiction of the question of slavery whenever the abolitionists may think proper to petition for its abolition. either here or in the States. Thus far, then, we of the slaveholding States have been grievously disappointed. One question still remains to be decided that is presented by this bill. To refuse to pass this bill would be virtually to co-operate with the abolitionists-would be to make the officers and agents of the post-office department in effect their agents and abettors in the circulation of their incendiary publications, in violation of the laws of the States. It is your unquestionable duty, as I have demonstrably proved, to abstain from their violation; and, by refusing or neglecting to discharge that duty you would clearly enlist, in the existing controversy, on the side of the abolitionists against the Southern States. Should such be your decision, by refusing to pass this bill, I shall say to the people of the South, look to yourselves-you have nothing to hope from others. But I must tell the Senate, be your decision what it may, this bill. If you refuse co-operation with our laws, and conflict should ensue between your and our law, the Southern States will never yield to the superiority of yours. We have a remedy in our hands, which, in such events, we shall not fail to apply. We have high authority for asserting that, in such cases, 'State interposition is the rightful remedy'-a doctrine first announced by Jefferson-adopted by the patri otic and republican State of Kentucky by a solemn resolution, in 1798, and finally carried out into successful practice on a recent occasion, ever to be remembered, by the gallant State which I, in part, have the honor to represent. In this well-tested and efficient remedy, sustained by the principles developed in the report and asserted in this bill, the slaveholding States have an ample protection. Let it be fixed, let it be riveted in every Southern mind, that the laws of the slaveholding States for the protection of their domestic institutions are paramount to the laws of the general government in regulation of commerce and the mail, and that the latter must yield to the former in the event of conflict; and that, if the government should refuse to yield, the States have a right to interpose, and we are safe. With these principles, nothing but concert would be wanting to but defiance to the move-ments of the abolitionists, whether at home or abroad, and to place our domestic institutions, and, with them, our security and peace, under our own protection, and beyond the reach of danger."

These were very significant intimations. Congress itself was to become the ally of the abolitionists, and enlist in their cause, if it did not pass his bill, which was opposed by Southern senators and founded upon a minority report of a Southern committee selected by Mr. Calhoun himself. It was well known it was not to pass; and in view of that fact it was urged upon the South to nullify and secede.

Thus, within two short years after the "compromise" of 1833 had taken Mr. Calhoun out of the hands of the law, he publicly and avowedly relapsed into the same condition; recurring again to secession for a new grievance; and to be resorted to upon contingencies which he knew to be certain; and encouraged in this course by the success of the first trial of strength with the federal government. It has been told at the proper place-in the chapter which gave the secret history of the compromise of 1833—that Mr. Webster refused to go into that measure, saying that the time had come to try the strength of the constitution and of the government: and it now becomes proper to tell that Mr. Clay, afthe South will never abandon the principles of ter seeing the relapse of Mr. Calhoun, became doubtful of the correctness of his own policy in that affair; and often said to his friends that, "in looking back upon the whole case, he had seriously doubted the policy of his interference." Certainly it was a most deplorable interference, arresting the process of the law when it was on the point of settling every thing without hurting a hair of any man's head, and putting an end to nullification for ever; and giving it a victory, real or fancied, to encourage a new edition of the same proceedings in a far more dangerous and pervading form. But to return to the bill before the Senate.

"Mr. Webster addressed the Senate at length in opposition to the bill, commencing his argument against what he contended was its vagueness and obscurity, in not sufficiently defining what were the publications the circulation of which it intended to prohibit. The bill provided that it should not be lawful for any deputy postmaster, in any State, territory, or district of the United States, knowingly to deliver to any person whatever, any pamphlet, newspaper, handbill, or other printed paper or pictorial representation, touching the subject of slavery, where, by the laws of the said State, district, or territory, their circulation was prohibited. Under this provision, Mr. W. contended that it was impossible to say what publications might not be prohibited from circulation. No matter what was the publication, whether for or against slavery, if it touched the subject in any shape or form, it would fall under the prohibition. Even the constitution of the United States might be prohibited; and the person who was clothed with the power to judge in this delicate matter was one of the deputy postmasters, who, notwithstanding the difficulties with which he · was encompassed in coming to a correct decision, must decide correctly, under pain of being removed from office. It would be necessary, also, he said, for the deputy postmasters referred to in this bill, to make themselves acquainted with all the various laws passed by the States, touching the subject of slavery, and to decide on them, no matter how variant they might be with each other. Mr. W. also contended that the bill conflicted with that provision in the constitution which prohibited Congress from passing any law to abridge the freedom of speech or of the press. What was the liberty of the press? he asked. It was the liberty of printing as well as the liberty of publishing, in all the ordinary modes of publication; and was not the circulation of papers through the mails an ordinary mode of publication? He was afraid that they were in some danger of taking a step in this matter that they might hereafter have cause to regret, by its being contended that whatever in this bill applies to publications touching slavery, applies to other publications to any person whatever, any pamphlet, newsparent that the States might think proper to prohibit: and Congress might, under this example, be called upon to pass laws to suppress the circulation of political, religious, or any other description of publications which produced excitement in the States. Was this bill in accordance with the general force and temper of the constitution and its amendments? It was not in accordance with that provision of the instrument under which the freedom of speech and of the press was secured. Whatever laws the State legislatures might pass on the subject; Congress was restrained from legislating in any manner whatever, with regard to the press. It would be admitted, that if a newspaper came directed to him, he had a property in it; and how could any man, then, take that property and burn it without due form of law? and he did not know. how this newspaper could be pronounced an unlawful publication, and having no property in it, without a legal trial. Mr. W. argued against the right to examine into the nature of publications sent to the post-office, and said that the right of an individual in his papers was secured to him in every free country in the world. In England, it was expressly provided that the papers of the subject shall be free from all un reasonable searches and seizures—language, he said, to be found in our constitution. This principle established in England, so essential to liberty, had been followed out in France, where the right of printing and publishing was secured in the fullest extent; the individual publishing being amenable to the laws for what he published; and every man printed and published what he pleased, at his peril. Mr. Webster went on at some length, to show that the bill was contrary to that provision of the constitution which prohibits Congress to pass any law abridging the freedom of speech or of the press."

Mr. Clay spoke against the bill, saving:

"The evil complained of was the circulation of papers having a certain tendency. The papers, unless circulated, did no harm, and while in the post-office or in the mail, they were not circulated-it was the circulation solely which constituted the evil. It was the taking them out of the mail, and the use that was to be made of them, that constituted the mischief. Then it was perfectly competent to the State authorities to apply the remedy. The instant that a prohibited paper was handed out, whether to a citzen or sojourner, he was subject to the laws which might compel him either to surrender them or burn them. He considered the bill not only unnecessary, but as a law of a dangerous, if not a doubtful, authority. It was objected that it was vague and indefinite in its character; and how is that objection got over? The bill provided that it shall not be lawful for any depaty postmaster, in any State, territory, or district of the United States, knowingly to deliver per, handbill, or other printed p representation, touching the sul where, by the laws of the said or district, their circulation is prowhat could be more vague and this description? Now, could it this description, what publicati withheld from distribution? from Pennsylvania said that th States would supply the omission the senator was premature in say would be precision in State la showed it by producing the law. no such law, and he did not kno description in the bill was appl There was another objection to the bill; it applied not only to the p the States, but to any future law pass. Mr. C. denied that the bill slaveholding States only; and wer that it could be applied to all the any publication touching the subje whatever, whether for or against it lication was only prohibited by the State. Thus, for instance, a non State might prohibit publications i the institution of slavery, and thi apply to it as well as to the laws holding States; but the law would tive: it declared that the deputy should not be amenable, unless he shall deliver, &c. Why, the postm plead ignorance, and of course the la inoperative.

"But he wanted to know whene derived the power to pass this law. that it was to carry into effect the States. Where did they get such He thought that their only author laws was in pursuance of the constit to pass laws to carry into effect the States, was a most prolific authority. was no knowing where it was to stop make the legislation of Congress depe the legislation of twenty-four divice reignties. He thought the bill was dangerous tendency. The senator fr sylvania asked if the post-office pow give them the right to regulate what carried in the mails. Why, there was power as that claimed in the bill; an passed such a law, it would be exercisi dangerous power. Why, if such doc vailed, the government might designate sons, or parties, or classes, who should benefit of the mails, excluding all other

At last the voting came on; and, w sufficiently curious on the outside-vie were three tie votes successively—two o ments, and one on the engrossment of The two ties on amendments stood fifteen—the absentees being eighteen: proper to prohibit; this example, be uppress the circulaany other descriproduced excitement in accordance with of the constitution s not in accordance instrument under h and of the press vs the State legislabject; Congress was any manner whats. It would be adr came directed to it; and how could operty and burn it nd he did not know. be pronounced an ving no property in . W. argued against e nature of publica-, and said that the papers was secured in the world. In provided that the e free from all un zures-language, he constitution. This and, so essential to it in France, where olishing was secured idividual publishing or what he publishand published what . Webster went on, t the bill was conconstitution which any law abridging the press."

e bill, saying:

was the circulation endency. The pa-10 harm, and while nail, they were not ation solely which s the taking them hat was to be made mischief. Then it he State authorities instant that a prot. whether to a citubject to the laws either to surrender sidered the bill not aw of a dangerous, It was objected ite in its character; ot over? The bill awful for any depu-, territory, or dis nowingly to deliver pamphlet, newspaper, handbill, or other printed paper or pictorial representation, touching the subject of slavery, where, by the laws of the said State, territory, or district, their circulation is prohibited. Now. what could be more vague and indefinite than this description? Now, could it be decided, by this description, what publications should be withheld from distribution? The gentleman from Pennsylvania said that the laws of the States would supply the omission. He thought the senator was premature in saying that there would be precision in State laws, before he showed it by producing the law. He had seen no such law, and he did not know whether the description in the bill was applicable or not. There was another objection to this part of the bill; it applied not only to the present laws of the States, but to any future laws that might pass. Mr. C. denied that the bill applied to the slaveholding States only; and went on to argue that it could be applied to all the States, and to any publication touching the subject of slavery whatever, whether for or against it, if such publication was only prohibited by the laws of such State. Thus, for instance, a non-slaveholding State might prohibit publications in defence of the institution of slavery, and this bill would apply to it as well as to the laws of the slaveholding States; but the law would be inoperative: it declared that the deputy postmaster should not be amenable, unless he knowingly shall deliver, &c. Why, the postmaster might plead ignorance, and of course the law would be inoperative.

"But he wanted to know whence Congress derived the power to pass this law. It was said that it was to carry into effect the laws of the States. Where did they get such authority? He thought that their only authority to pass laws was in pursuance of the constitution; but to pass laws to carry into effect the laws of the States, was a most prolific authority, and there was no knowing where it was to stop; it would make the legislation of Congress dependent upon the legislation of twenty-four different sovereignties. He thought the bill was of a most dangerous tendency. The senator from Pennsylvania asked if the post-office power did not give them the right to regulate what should be carried in the mails. Why, there was no such power as that claimed in the bill; and if they passed such a law, it would be exercising a most dangerous power. Why, if such doctrine prevailed, the government might designate the persons, or parties, or classes, who should have the benefit of the mails, excluding all others.'

At last the voting came on; and, what looks sufficiently curious on the outside view, there were three tie votes successively-two on amendments, and one on the engrossment of the bill. The two ties on amendments stood fifteen to

of the Senate: the tie on engrossment was righteen to eighteen—the absentees being twelve: one fourth of the Senate. It was Mr. Calhoun who called for the yeas and nays on each of these questions. It was evident that there was a design to throw the bill into the hands of the Vice-President—a New-Yorker, and the prominent candidate for the presidency. In committee of the whole he did not vote in the case of a tie; but it was necessary to establish an equilibrium of votes there to be ready for the immediate vote in Senate on the engrossment; and when the committee tie was deranged by the accession of three votes on one side, the equilibrium was immediately re-established by three on the other. Mr. Van Buren, at the moment of this vote (on the engrossment) was out of the chair, and walking behind the colonnade back of the presiding officer's chair. My eyes were wide open to what was to take place. Mr. Calhoun, not seeing him, eagerly and loudly asked where was the Vice-President? and told the Sergeant-at-arms to look for him. But he needed no looking for. He was within hearing of all that passed, and ready for the contingency: and immediately stepping up to his chair, and standing up, promptly gave the casting vote in favor of the engrossment. I deemed it a political vote, that is to say, given from policy; and I deemed it justifiable under the cfrcumstances. Mr. Calhoun had made the rejection of the bill a test of alliance with Northern abolitionists. and a cause for the secession of the Southern States: and if the bill had been rejected by Van Buren's vote, the whole responsibility tits loss would have been thrown upon him and the North; and the South inflamed against those States and himself-the more so as Mr. White, of Tennessee, the opposing democratic candidate for the presidency, gave his votes for the bill. Mr. Wright also, as I believe, voted politically, and on all the votes both in the committee and the Senate. He was the political and the personal friend of the Vice-President, most confidential with him, and believed to be the best index to his opinions. He was perfectly sensible of his position, and in every vote on the subject voted with Mr. Calhoun. Several other senators voted politically, and without compunction, although it was a bad bill, as it was known it would not pass. The author of this fifteen-the absentees being eighteen: one third | View would not so vote. He was tired of the eternal erv of dissolving the Union-did not believe in it—and would not give a repugnant vote to avoid the trial. The tie vote having been effected, and failed of its expected result, the Senate afterwards voted quite fully on the final passage of the bill, and rejected it—twentyfive to nineteen: only four absent. The yeas were: Messrs. Black, Bedford, Brown, Buchanan, Calhoun, Cuthbert of Georgia, Grundy, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Mangum, Moore, Nicholas of Louisiana, Alexander Porter, Preston of South Carolina, Rives, Robinson, Tallmadge, Walker of Mississippi, White of Tennessee, Silas Wright. The nays were: Messrs. Benton, Clay, Crittenden, Davis of Massachusetts, Ewing of Illinois, Ewing of Ohio, Goldsborough of Maryland, Hendricks, Hubbard, Kent, Knight, Leigh, McKean of Pennsylvania, Thomas Morris of Ohio, Naudain of Delaware, Niles of Connecticut, Prentiss, Ruggles, Shepley, Southard, Swift, Tipton, Tomlinson, Wall of New Jersey, Webster: majority six against the bill; and seven of them, if the solecism may be allowed, from the slave States. And thus was accomplished one of the contingencies in which "State interposition" was again to be applied -the "rightful remedy of nullification" again resorted to-and the "domestic institutions" of the Southern States, by "concert" among themselves, to be placed beyond the reach of danger."

CHAPTER CXXXII.

FRENCH AFFAIRS—APPROACH OF A FRENCH SQUADRON—APOLOGY REQUIRED.

In his annual message at the commencement of the session the President gave a general statement of our affairs with France, and promised a special communication on the subject at an early day. That communication was soon made, and showed a continued refusal on the part of France to pay the indemnity, unless an apology was first made; and also showed that a French fleet was preparing for the American seas, under circumstances which implied a design either to overawe the American government, or to be ready for expected hostilities. On the subject of the apology, the message said:

"Whilst, however, the government of the United States was awaiting the movements of the French government, in perfect confidence that the difficulty was at an end, the Secretary of State received a call from the French charge d'affaires in Washington, who desired to read to him a letter he had received from the French minister of foreign affairs. He was asked whether he was instructed or directed to make any official communication, and replied that he was only authorized to read the letter, and furnish a copy if requested. It was an attempt to make known to the government of the United States privately, in what manner it could make explanations, apparently voluntary, but really dictated by France, acceptable to her, and thus obtain payment of the twenty-five millions of frances. No exception was taken to this mode of communication, which is often used to prepare the way for official intercourse; but the suggestions made in it were, in their substance, wholly inadmissible. Not being in the shape of an official communication to this government, it did not admit of reply or official notice; nor could it safely be made the basis of any action by the Executive or the legislature; and the Secretary of State did not think proper to ask a copy, because he could have no use for it."

One cannot but be struck with the extreme moderation with which the President gives the history of this private attempt to obtain a die tated apology from him. He recounts it soberly and quietly, without a single expression of im tated feeling; and seems to have met and put aside the attempt in the same quiet manner. It was a proof of his extreme indisposition to have any collision with France, and of his perfect determination to keep himself on the right side in the controversy, whatever aspect it might assume. But that was not the only trial to which his temper was put. The attempt to obtain the apology being civilly repulsed and the proffered copy of the dictated terms refused to be taken, an attempt was made to get that com placed upon the archives of the government, with the view to its getting to Congress, and through Congress to the people; to become: point of attack upon the President for not giving the apology, and thereby getting the mony from France, and returning to friendly relations with her. Of this attempt to get a refused pper upon our archives, and to make it openate as an appeal to the people against their om government, the President (still preserving all his moderation), gives this account:

"Copies of papers, marked Nos. 9, 10, and IL show an attempt on the pa chargé d'affaires, many weel place a copy of this paper am of this government, which for was not allowed to be done; I before given was repeated, that munication which he might make in the accustomed form prompt and just consideration. of this attempt was made more subsequent avowal of the Fre faires, that the object was to before Congress and the Amer foreign agents, on a subject of d tween their government and thi an appeal to the American pe hereafter, it is hoped, better a own rights, and the respect due to attempt to use the Executive organ of their communications. character of our institutions that intercourse of this government ducted with the utmost directness and that, in all cases of import munications received or made by should assume the accustomed off is only by insisting on this form powers can be held to full respon their communications can be of to; or that the advice or interf legislature can, with propriety, be President. This course is also be on the one hand, to shield that off just suspicions; and, on the other this portion of his acts to public ; if occasion shall require it, to animadversion. It was the more adhere to these principles in the inst tion, inasmuch as, in addition to oth interests, it very intimately concer tional honor; a matter, in my judg too sacred to be made the subject of unofficial negotiation."

Having shown the state of the q President next gave his opinion of to be done by Congress; which was diction of our ports to the entry of sels and French products:—a mile than that of reprisals which he is mended at the previous session. He

"It is time that this unequal posfairs should cease, and that legislar should be brought to sustain Executive in such measures as the case require France persists in her refusal to content terms of a treaty, the object of weather than the terms of a treaty, the object of weather than the two nations in the bonds of amity mutually beneficial commerce, she can complain if we adopt such peaceful rest the law of nations and the circumstance."

government of the ng the movements of in perfect confidence an end, the Secretary m the French charge who desired to read to ved from the French He was asked whedirected to make any d replied that he was e letter, and furnish a an attempt to make of the United States. it could make explary, but really dictated her, and thus obtain ve millions of francs. to this mode of com-1 used to prepare the e; but the suggestions substance, wholly inthe shape of an official overnment, it did not notice; nor could it of any action by the re; and the Secretary per to ask a copy, bee for it."

> ick with the extreme e President gives the tempt to obtain a die-He recounts it soberly gle expression of irri to have met and put ame quiet manner. It indisposition to have e, and of his perfect iself on the right side ever aspect it might not the only trial to . The attempt to obilly repulsed, and the ated terms refused to made to get that copy of the government, ing to Congress, and people; to become a resident for not giving getting the money g to friendly relations ot to get a refused pr d to make it operate le against their own t (still preserving all account:

> > ted Nos. 9, 10, and ll

show an attempt on the part of the French case may authorize and demand. Of the nature chargé d'affaires, many weeks afterwards, to place a copy of this paper among the archives of this government, which for obvious reasons. was not allowed to be done; but the assurance before given was repeated, that any official communication which he might be authorized to make in the accustomed form would receive a prompt and just consideration. The indiscretion of this attempt was made more manifest by the subsequent avowal of the French chargé d'affaires, that the object was to bring the letter before Congress and the American people. If foreign agents, on a subject of disagreement between their government and this, wish to prefer an appeal to the American people, they will hereafter, it is hoped, better appreciate their own rights, and the respect due to others, than to attempt to use the Executive as the passive organ of their communications. It is due to the character of our institutions that the diplomatic intercourse of this government should be conducted with the utmost directness and simplicity. and that, in all cases of importance, the communications received or made by the Executive should assume the accustomed official form. It is only by insisting on this form that foreign powers can be held to full responsibility; that their communications can be officially replied to; or that the advice or interference of the egislature can, with propriety, be invited by the President. This course is also best calculated. on the one hand, to shield that officer from unjust suspicions; and, on the other, to subject this portion of his acts to public scrutiny, and if occasion shall require it, to constitutional animadversion. It was the more necessary to adhere to these principles in the instance in question, inasmuch as, in addition to other important interests, it very intimately concerned the national honor; a matter, in my judgment, much too sacred to be made the subject of private and unofficial negotiation."

Having shown the state of the question, the President next gave his opinion of what ought to be done by Congress; which was, the interdiction of our ports to the entry of French vesels and French products:—a milder remedy than that of reprisals which he had recommended at the previous session. He said:

"It is time that this unequal position of affairs should cease, and that legislative action should be brought to sustain Executive exertion in such measures as the case requires. While France persists in her refusal to comply with the terms of a treaty, the object of which was. by removing all causes of mutual complaint, to renew ancient feelings of friendship, and to unite the two nations in the bonds of amity, and of a mutually beneficial commerce, she cannot justly complain if we adopt such peaceful remedies as the law of nations and the circumstances of the

of these remedies I have heretofore had occasion to speak; and, in reference to a particular contingency, to express my conviction that reprisals would be best adapted to the emergency then contemplated. Since that period, France, by all the departments of her government, has acknowledged the validity of our claims and the obligations of the treaty, and has appropriated the moneys which are necessary to its execution; and though payment is withheld on grounds vitally important to our existence as an independent nation, it is not to be believed that she can have determined permanently to retain a position so utterly indefensible. In the altered state of the questions in controversy, and under all existing circumstances, it appears to me that, until such a determination shall have become evident, it will be proper and sufficient to retaliate her present refusal to comply with her engagements by prohibiting the introduction of French products and the entry of French vessels into our ports. Between this and the interdiction of all commercial intercourse, or other remedies, you, as the representatives of the people, must determine. I recommend the former, in the present posture of our affairs, as being the least injurious to our commerce, and as attended with the least difficulty of returning to the usual state of friendly intercourse, if the government of France shall render us the justice that is due; and also as a proper preliminary step to stronger measures, should their adoption be rendered necessary by subsequent events."

This interdiction of the commerce of France. though a milder measure than that of reprisals, would still have been a severe one-severe at any time, and particularly so since the formation of this treaty, the execution of which was so much delayed by France; for that was a treaty of two parts-something to be done an each side. On the part of France to pay us indemnities: on our side to reduce the duties on French wines: and this reduction had been immediately made by Congress, to take effect from the date of the ratification of the treaty; and the benefit of that reduction had now been enjoyed by French commerce for near four years. But that was not the only benefit which this treaty brought to France from the good feeling it produced in America: it procured a discrimination in favor of silks imported from this side of the Cape of Good Hope-a discrimination inuring, and intended to inure, to the benefit of France. The author of this View was much instrumental in procuring that discrimination, and did it upon conversations with the then resident French minister at Washington, and founding his argument upon data derived from him. The data He often applied for the appropriation, but could were to show that the discrimination would be beneficial to the trade of both countries; but the inducing cause was good-will to France, and a desire to bury all recollection of past differences in our emulation of good works. This view of the treaty, and a statement of the advantages which France had obtained from it, was well shown by Mr. Buchanan in his speech in support of the message on French affairs; in which he said:

"The government of the United States proceeded immediately to execute their part of the treaty. By the act of the 13th July, 1832, the duties on French wines were reduced according to its terms, to take effect from the day of the exchange of ratifications. At the same session, the Congress of the United States, impelled, no doubt, by their kindly feelings towards France, which had been roused into action by what they believed to be a final and equitable settlement of all our disputes, voluntarily reduced the duty upon silks coming from this side of the Cape of Good Hope, to five per cent, whilst those from beyond were fixed at ten per cent. And at the next session, on the 2d of March, 1833, this duty of five per cent. was taken off altogether; and ever since, French silks have been admitted into our country free of duty. There is now, in fact, a discriminating duty of ten per cent. in their favor, over silks from beyond the Cape of Good Hope.

"What has France gained by these measures in duties on her wines and her silks, which she would otherwise have been bound to pay? I have called upon the Secretary of the Treasury, for the purpose of ascertaining the amount. I now hold in my hand a tabular statement, prepared at my request, which shows, that had the duties remained what they were, at the date of the ratification of the treaty, these articles, since that time, would have paid into the Treasury, on the 30th September, 1834, the sum of $3,061,525. Judging from the large importations which have since been made, I feel no hesitation in declaring it as my opinion, that, at the present moment, these duties would amount to more than the whole indemnity which France has engaged to pay to our fellow-citizens. Before the conclusion of the ten years mentioned in the treaty, she will have been freed from the payment of duties to an amount considerably above twelve millions of dollars."

It is almost incomprehensible that there should have been such delay in complying with a treaty on the part of France bringing her such advantages; and it is due to the King, Louis Philippe to say, that he constantly referred the delay to the difficulty of getting the appropriation through the French legislative chambers. degradation; joining the President in his call not venture to make it an administration question; and the offensive demand for the apology came from that quarter, in the shape of au un. precedentd proviso to the law (when it did pass), that the money was not to be paid until there had been an apology. The only objection to the King's conduct was that he did not make the appropriation a cabinet measure, and try issues with the chambers; but that objection has become less since; and in fact totally disappeared from seeing a few years afterwards, the ease with which the King was expelled from his throne, and how unable he was to try issues with the chambers. The elder branch of the Bourbons, and all their adherents, were unfriendly to the United States, considering the American revolution as the cause of the French revolution: and consequently the source of all their twenty. five years of exile, suffering and death. The republicans were also inimical to him, and sided with the legitimists.

The President concluded his message with stating that a large French naval armament was under orders for our seas; and said:

"Of the cause and intent of these armaments I have no authentic information, nor any other means of judging, except such as are common to yourselves and to the public; but whatever may be their object, we are not at liberty to regard them as unconnected with the measures which hostile movements on the part of France may compel us to pursue. They at least deserve to be met by adequate preparations on our part and I therefore strongly urge large and speedy appropriations for the increase of the navy, and the completion of our coast defences.

"If this array of military force be really designed to affect the action of the government and people of the United States on the questions now pending between the two nations, then indeed would it be dishonorable to pause a moment on the alternative which such a state of things would present to us. Come what may, the erplanation which France demands can never be accorded; and no armament, however powerful and imposing, at a distance, or on our coast, will I trust, deter us from discharging the high deties which we owe to our constituents, to our national character, and to the world."

Mr. Buchanan sustained the message in a careful and well-considered review of this whole French question, showing that the demand of an apology was an insult in aggravation of the injury, and could not be given without national for measures for preserving the of the country; declaring that they were preferable to disgr whole world would put the Mr. Calhoun took a different ing that the state of our affairs the effect of the President's mis that if war came it would be e and affirmed his deliberate belie President's design to have w

"I fear that the condition in try is now placed has been the erate and systematic policy. speak my sentiments freely. I constitutents and the country, t fect candor and truth on a que their interests is so deeply involve assert that the Executive has del at war from the commencement; that, from the beginning of the the present moment, the course sident has pursued is precisely th ted to terminate in a conflict bet nations. It has been in his powe riod, to give the controversy a dire the peace of the country might without the least sacrifice of repu or; but he has preferred the opp said Mr. C.) how painful it is declarations; how unpleasant it position which might, by any possi strued in opposition to our cour but in my conception, the honor ests of the country can only be m pursuing the course that truth and lictate. Acting under this impress hesitate to assert, after a careful ex the documents connected with the controversy, that, if war must come authors-we are the responsible pa mg, as I fear we do, on the eve of would to me have been a source pleasure to make an opposite decla that sacred regard to truth and just trust, will ever be my guide under t ficult circumstances, would not pern

Mr. Benton maintained that it w duct of the Senate at the last session given to the French question its I hostile aspect: that the belief of divide and of a majority against the Presider we looked to money and not to hon couraged the French chambers to in demanding an apology, and to atter timidate us by sending a fleet upon o

"It was in March last that the three propriation, but could administration quesmand for the apology 1 the shape of an un. e law (when it did s not to be paid until The only objection that he did not make t measure, and try isout that objection has ct totally disappeared afterwards, the ease as expelled from his he was to try issues elder branch of the erents, were unfriendsidering the American the French revolution; ce of all their twentyr and death. The reical to him, and sided

> ed his message with nch naval armament eas; and said:

t of these armaments nation, nor any other uch as are common to lic; but whatever may at liberty to regard the measures which part of France may iev at least deserve to arations on our part. irge large and speedy rease of the navy, and t defences.

ry force be really deof the government and s on the questions now nations, then indeed to pause a moment on ch a state of things me what may, the exemands can never be ent, however powerful e or on our coast, will scharging the high der constituents, to our the world."

ed the message in a d review of this whole ; that the demand of in aggravation of the given without national President in his call for measures for preserving the rights and honor of the country; declaring that if hostilities came they were preferable to disgrace, and that the whole world would put the blame on France. Mr Calhoun took a different view of it, declaring that the state of our affairs with France was the effect of the President's mismanagement, and that if war came it would be entirely his fault: and affirmed his deliberate belief that it was the President's design to have war with France. He said:

"I fear that the condition in which the country is now placed has been the result of a deliberate and systematic policy. I am bound to speak my sentiments freely. It is due to my onstitutents and the country, to act with perfect candor and truth on a question in which their interests is so deeply involved. I will not assert that the Executive has deliberately aimed at war from the commencement; but I will say that from the beginning of the controversy to the present moment, the course which the President has pursued is precisely the one calculated to terminate in a conflict between the two nations. It has been in his power, at every period, to give the controversy a direction by which the peace of the country might be preserved. without the least sacrifice of reputation or honor; but he has preferred the opposite. I feel (said Mr. C.) how painful it is to make these declarations; how unpleasant it is to occupy a position which might, by any possibility, be construed in opposition to our country's cause; but in my conception, the honor and the interests of the country can only be maintained by pursuing the course that truth and justice may dictate. Acting under this impression, I do not hesitate to assert, after a careful examination of the documents connected with this unhappy controversy, that, if war must come, we are the authors—we are the responsible party. Standmg as I fear we do, on the eve of a conflict, it would to me have been a source of pride and pleasure to make an opposite declaration; but that sacred regard to truth and justice, which, I trust, will ever be my guide under the most difficult circumstances, would not permit.'

Mr. Benton maintained that it was the conduct of the Senate at the last session which had given to the French question its present and hostile aspect: that the belief of divided counsels, and of a majority against the President, and that we looked to money and not to honor, had encouraged the French chambers to insult us by demanding an apology, and to attempt to intimidate us by sending a fleet upon our coasts.

and the fortification bill were lost: since then the whole aspect of the French question is changed. The money is withheld, and emplanation is demanded, an apology is prescribed, and a French fleet approaches. Our government, charged with insulting France, when no insult was intended by us, and none can be detected in our words by her, is itself openly and vehemently in-The apology is to degrade us; the fleet to intimidate us; and the two together constitute an insult of the gravest character. There in no parallel to it, except in the history of France herself; but not France of the 19th century, nor even of the 18th, but in the remote and ill-regulated times of the 17th century, and in the days of the proudest of the French Kings, and towards one of the smallest Italian republics. I allude, sir, to what happened between Louis XIV. and the Doge of Genoa, and will read the account of it from the pen of Voltaire, in his Age of Louis XIV.

". The Genoese had built four galleys for the service of Spain; the King (of France) forbade them, by his envoy, St. Olon, one of his gentlemen in ordinary, to launch those galleys. The Genoese, incensed at this violation of their liberties, and depending too much on the support of Spain, refused to obey the order. Immediately fourteen men of war, twenty galleys, ten bombketches, with several frigates, set sail from the port of Toulon. They arrived before Genoa. and the ten bomb-ketches discharged 14,000 shells into the town, which reduced to ashes a principal part of those marble edifices which had entitled this city to the name of Genoa the Proud. Four thousand men were then landed. who marched up to the gates, and burnt the suburb of St. Peter, of Arena. It was now thought prudent to submit, in order to prevent the total destruction of the city. The King exacted that the Doge of Genoa, with four of the principal senators, should come and implore his clemency in the palace of Versailles; and, lest the Genoese should elude the making this satisfaction, and lessen in any manner the pomp of it, he insisted further that the Doge, who was to perform this embassy, should be continued in his magistracy, notwithstanding the perpetual law of Genoa, which deprives the Doge of his dignity who is absent but a moment from the city. Imperialo Lercaro, Doge of Genoa, attended by the senators Lomellino, Garibaldi, Durazzo, and Salvago, repaired to Versailles, to submit to what was required of him. The Doge appeared in his robes of state, his head covered with a bonnet of red velvet, which he often took off during his speech; made his apology, the very words and demeanor of which were dictated and prescribed to him by Seignelai,' (the French Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs).

"Thus, said Mr. B., was the city of Genoa, and its Doge, treated by Louis XIV. But it was not the Doge who was degraded by this indignity, but the republic of which he was "It was in March last that the three millions | chiof magistrate, and all the republics of Italy, besides, which felt themselves all humbled by the outrage which a king had inflicted upon one of their number So of the apology demanded, and of the fleet sent upon us, and in presence of which President Jackson, according to the Constitutionnel, is to make his decision, and to remit it to the Tuileries. It is not President Jackson that is outraged, but the republic of which he is President; and all existing republics, wheresoever situated. Our whole country is insulted, and that is the feeling of the whole country; and this feeling pours in upon us every day, in every manner in which public sentiment can be manifested, and especially in the noble resolves of the States whose legislatures are in session, and who hasten to declare their adherence to the policy of the special message. True, President Jackson is not required to repair to the Tuileries, with four of his most obnoxious senators, and there recite, in person, to the King of the French, the apology which he had first rehearsed to the Duke de Broglie; true, the bomb-ketches of Admiral Mackau have not yet fired 14,000 shells on one of our cities; but the mere demand for an apology, the mere dictation of its terms, and the mere advance of a fleet, in the present state of the world, and in the difference of parties, is a greater outrage to us than the actual perpetration of the enormities were to the Genoese. This is not the seventeenth century. President Jackson is not the Doge of a trading city. We are not Italians, to be trampled upon by European kings; but Americans, the descendants of that Anglo-Saxon race. which, for a thousand years, has known how to command respect, and to preserve its place at the head of nations. We are young, but old enough to prove that the theory of the Frenchman, the Abbé Raynal, is as false in its application to the people of this hemisphere as it is to the other productions of nature; and that the belittling tendencies of the New World are no more exemplified in the human race than they are in the exhibition of her rivers and her mountains, and in the indigenous races of the mammoth and the mastodon. The Duke de Broglie has made a mistake, the less excusable, because he might find in his own country, and perhaps in his own family, examples of the extreme criticalness of attempting to overawe a community of freemen. There was a Marshal Broglie, who was Minister at War, at the commencement of the French Revolution, and who advised the formation of a camp of 20,000 men to overawe Paris. The camp was formed. Paris revolted; captured the Bastile; marched to Versailles; stormed the Tuileries; overset the monarchy; and established the Revolution. So much for attempting to intimidate a city. And vet, here is a nation of freemen to be intimidated: a republic of fourteen millions of people, and descendants of that Anglo-Saxon race which, from the days of Agincourt and Cressy, of Blenheim and Ramillies, down to the days of Salamanca and Waterloo, have always known perfectly well how to deal with the impetuous and fiery courage of the French."

Mrø Benton also showed that there was a party in the French Chambers, working to soparate the President of the United States from the people of the United States, and to make him responsible for the hostile attitude of the two countries. In this sense acted the deputy, Mons. Henry de Chabaulon, who spoke thus:

"The insult of President Jackson comes from himself only. This is more evident, from the refusal of the American Congress to concur with him in it. The French Chamber, by interfering, would render the affair more serious. and make its arrangement more difficult, and even dangerous. Let us put the case to ourselves. Suppose the United States had taken part with General Jackson, we should have had to demand satisfaction, not from him, but from the United States; and, instead of now talking about negotiation, we should have had to make appropriations for a war, and to intrust to our heroes of Navarino and Algiers the task of teaching the Americans that France knows the way to Washington as well as England."

This language was received with applause in the Chamber, by the extremes. It was the language held six weeks after the rise of Congres, and when the loss of the three millions asked by the President for contingent preparation, and after the loss of the fortification bill, were fully known in Paris. Another speaker in the Chamber, Mons. Rancé, was so elated by these losses as to allow himself to discourse thus:

"Gentlemen, we should put on one side of the tribune the twenty-five millions, on the other the sword of France. When the Americans see this good long sword, this very long sword gentlemen (for it struck down every thing from Lisbon to Moscow), they will perhaps recolled what it did for the independence of their outtry; they will, perhaps, too, reflect upon what it could do to support and avenge the honoral dignity of France, when outraged by an ungrateful people. [Cries of 'well said!'] Believe me gentlemen, they would sooner touch your money than dare to touch your sword; and for your twenty-five millions they will bring you back the satisfactory receipt, which it is your duty to exact."

And this also was received with great approbation, in the Chamber, by the two extremes; and was promptly followed by two royal ordidances, published in the Moniteur, under which the Admiral Mackau was to take command of a "squadron of observation," and proceed to the West Indies. The Constitution official paper of the government, st measure was warranted by the act the relations between France an States—that the United States ha oppose to it—and applauded the go its foresight and energy. Mr. commented upon the approach of soundron:

#A French fleet of sixty vessels followed by sixty more, now in co proaches our coast; and approach avowed purpose of observing our c lation to France. It is styled, in papers, a squadron of observation sufficiently acquainted with the n bulary of France to know what means. In the days of the great were accustomed to see the armie molished empires at a blow, wear title up to the moment that the blo to be struck. These grand armie on the frontiers of empires, gave negotiation, and crushed what resis dron of observation, then, is a squ timidation first, and of attack ever nothing could be more palpable the was the character of the squadron It leaves the French coast conten with the departure of our diplomat the assembling of our Congress; it our coast at the very moment that v to vote upon French affairs; and it tion upon our Southern borderabove all others, on which we are, a peculiarly sensitive to hostile appro

"What have we done, continued draw this squadron upon us? W no wrong to France; we are maki rations against her; and not even o parations for general and permane We have treaties, and are executing the treaty that she does not execut been executing that treaty for fou may say that we have paid Fran under it as we have in vain demand as the first instalment of the inde in fact, by taking money out of o and delivering to her, but, what is be namely, leaving her own money hands, in the shape of diminished her wines, as provided for in this which we execute, and which she de this way. France has gained one or t of dollars from us, besides the enc to her wine trade. On the article is also gaining money from us in the not by treaty, but by law. Our dis duties in favor of silks, from this si of Good Hope, operate almost ent favor. Our great supplies of silk France, England, and China. In fou rith the impetuous ach."

Vol. I.—38

that there was a ers, working to so-United States from tates, and to make tile attitude of the e acted the deputy. who spoke thus:

Jackson comes from e evident, from the Congress to concur ich Chamber, by inaffair more serious more difficult, and out the case to oured States had taken we should have had from him, but from stead of now talking ld have had to make nd to intrust to our Algiers the task of at France knows the l as England."

ved with applause in mes. It was the lanthe rise of Congress, three millions asked igent preparation, and cation bill, were fully speaker in the Chamelated by these losses course thus:

put on one side of the nillions, on the other When the Americans this very long sword lown every thing from will perhaps recollect ndence of their coun-100, reflect upon what avenge the honor and utraged by an ungratell said!'] Believe me, poner touch your moyour sword; and for s they will bring you ceipt, which it is your gived with great approby the two extremes ed by two royal ordi-Moniteur, under which s to take command of ation," and proceed to the West Indies. The Constitutionnel, the demiofficial paper of the government, stated that this measure was warranted by the actual state of the relations between France and the United States-that the United States had no force to oppose to it—and applauded the government for its foresight and energy. Mr. Benton thus commented upon the approach of this French squadron:

#A French fleet of sixty vessels of war, to be followed by sixty more, now in commission, approaches our coast; and approaches it for the avowed purpose of observing our conduct, in relation to France. It is styled, in the French papers, a squadron of observation; and we are sufficiently acquainted with the military vocabulary of France to know what that phrase means. In the days of the great Emperor, we were accustomed to see the armies which demolished empires at a blow, wear that pacific title up to the moment that the blow was ready to be struck. These grand armies assembled on the frontiers of empires, gave emphasis to negotiation, and crushed what resisted. A squadron of observation, then, is a squadron of intimidation first, and of attack eventually; and nothing could be more palpable than that such was the character of the squadron in question. It leaves the French coast contemporaneously with the departure of our diplomatic agent, and the assembling of our Congress; it arrives upon our coast at the very moment that we shall have to vote upon French affairs; and it takes a position upon our Southern border—that border. above all others, on which we are, at this time, peculiarly sensitive to hostile approach.

"What have we done, continued Mr. B., to draw this squadron upon us? We have done no wrong to France; we are making no preparations against her; and not even ordinary preparations for general and permanent security. We have treaties, and are executing them, even the treaty that she does not execute. We have been executing that treaty for four years, and may say that we have paid France as much under it as we have in vain demanded from her, as the first instalment of the indemnity; not, in fact, by taking money out of our treasury and delivering to her, but, what is better for her, namely, leaving her own money in her own hands, in the shape of diminished duties upon her wines, as provided for in this same treaty, which we execute, and which she does not. In this way, France has gained one or two millions of dollars from us, besides the encouragement to her wine trade. On the article of silks, she is also gaining money from us in the same way, not by treaty, but by law. Our discriminating duties in favor of silks, from this side the Cape of Good Hope, operate almost entirely in her

Vol. I.—38

under the operation of this discriminating duty, our imports of French silks have risen from two millions of dollars per annum to six millions and a half; from England, they have risen from a quarter of a million to three quarters; from China, they have sunk from three millions and a quarter to one million and a quarter. This discriminating duty has left between one and two millions of dollars in the pockets of Frenchmen, besides the encouragement to the silk manufacture and trade. Why, then, has she sent this squadron, to observe us first, and to strike us eventually? She knows our pacific disposition towards her, not only from our own words and actions, but from the official report of her own officers: from the very officer sent out last spring, in a brig, to carry back the recalled min-

Mr. Benton then went on to charge the present state of our affairs with France distinctly and emphatically upon the conduct of the Senate, in their refusal to attend to the national defences—in their opposition to the President and in the disposition manifested rather to pull down the President, in a party contest, than to sustain him against France—rather to plunder their own country than to defend it, by taking the public money for distribution instead of defence. To this effect, he said:

"He had never spoken unkindly of the French nation, neither in his place here, as a senator, nor in his private capacity elsewhere. Born since the American Revolution, bred up in habitual affection for the French name, coming upon the stage of life when the glories of the republic and of the empire were filling the world and dazzling the imagination. politically connected with the party which, a few years ago, was called French, his bosom had glowed with admiration for that people; and youthful affection had ripened into manly friendship. He would not now permit himself to speak unkindly, much less to use epithets; but he could not avoid fixing his attention upon the reason assigned in the Constitutionnel for the present advance of the French squadron upon us. That reason is this: 'America will have no force capable of being opposed to it.' This is the reason. Our nakedness, our destitution, has drawn upon us the honor of this visit; and we are now to speak, and vote, and so to demean ourselves, as men standing in the presence of a force which they cannot resist, and which had taught the lesson of submission to the Turk and the Arab! And here I change the theme: I turn from French intimidation to American legislation; and I ask how it comes that we have no force to oppose to this squadron which comes here to take a position upon our borders, and to avor. Our great supplies of silks are from show us that it knows the way to Washington France, England, and China. In four years, and as well as the English? This is my future

theme; and I have to present the American Senate as the responsible party for leaving our country in this wretched condition. First, there is the three million appropriation which was lost by the opposition of the Senate, and which carried down with it the whole fortification bill, to which it was attached. That bill, besides the three millions, contained thirteen specific appropriations for works of defence, part originating in the House of Representatives, and part in the Senate, and appropriating $900,000 to the completion and armament of forts.

"All these specific appropriations, continued Mr. B. were lost in the bill which was sunk by the opposition of the Senate to the three millions, which were attached to it by the House of Representatives. He (Mr. B.) was not a member of the conference committee which had the disagreement of the two Houses committed to its charge, and could go into no detail as to what happened in that conference; he took his stand upon the palpable ground that the opposition which the Senate made to the three million appropriation, the speeches which denounced it, and the prolonged invectives against the President, which inflamed the passions and consumed the precious time at the last moment of the session, were the true causes of the loss of that bill; and so leaves the responsibility for the loss on the shoulders of the Senate.

"Mr. B. recalled attention to the reason demiofficially assigned in the Constitutionnel, for the approach of the French fleet of observation, and to show that it came because 'America had no force capable of being opposed to it.' It was a subsidiary argument, and a fair illustration of the dangers and humiliations of a defenceless position. It should stimulate us to instant and vigorous action; to the concentration of all our money, and all our hands, to the sacred task of national defence. For himself, he did not believe there would be war, because he knew that there ought not to be war; but that belief would have no effect upon his conduct. He went for national defence, because that policy was right in itself, without regard to times and circumstances. He went for it now, because it was the response, and the only response, which American honor could give to the visit of Admiral Mackau. Above all, he went for it because it was the way, and the only manly way, of letting France know that she had committed a mistake in sending this fleet upon us. In conclusion, he would call for the yeas and nays, and remark that our votes would have to be given under the guns of France, and under the eyes of Europe."

The reproach cast by Mr. Benton on the conduct of the Senate, in causing the loss of the defence bills, and the consequent insult from France, brought several members to their feet in defence of themselves and the body to which they belonged.

"Mr. Webster said his duty was to take care that neither in nor out of the Senate there should be any mistake, the effect of which should be to produce an impression unfavorable of reproachful to the character and patriotism of the American people. He remembered the progress of that bill (the bill alluded to by Mr. Benton) the incidents of its history, and the real cause of its loss. And he would satisfy any man that the loss of it was not attributable to any member or officer of the Senate. He would not however, do so until the Senate should again have been in session on executive business. As soon as that took place, he should undertake to show that it was not to any dereliction of duty on the part of the Senate that the loss of that bill was to be attributed.

"Mr. Preston of South Carolina said every senator had concurred in general appropriations to put the navy and army in a state of defence. This undefined appropriation was not the only exception. The gentleman from Missouri (Mr. Benton) had said this appropriation was intended to operate as a permanent defence. The senator from Missouri (Mr. Benton) had preferred a general indictment against the Senate before the people of the United States. It was strange the gentleman should ask the departments for calculations to enable us to know how much was necessary to appropriate, when the information was not given to us when we rejected the undefined appropriations. I rejoice said Mr. P., that the gentleman has said even to my fears there will be no French war. France was not going to squabble with America on a little point of honor, that might do for duellists to quarrel about, but not for nations. There was no reason why blood should be poured out like water in righting this point of honor. If this matter was placed on its proper basis his hopes would be lit up into a blaze of confidence. The President had recommended making reprisals, if France refused payment. France had refused, but the remedy was not pursued. Is may be, said he, that this fleet is merely coming to protect the commerce of France. If the President of the United States, at the last session of Congress, had suggested the necessity of making this appropriation, we would have poured out the treasury; we would have filled his hands for all necessary purposes. There was one hundred thousand dollars appropriated that had not been called for. He did not know whether he was permitted to go any further and say to what extent any of the departments were disposed to go in this matter.

"Mr. Clayton of Delaware was surprised at the suggestion of an idea that the American Senate was not disposed to make the necessary appropriations for the defence of the country that they had endeavored to prevent the passage of a bill, the object of which was to make provision for large appropriations for our defense. The senator from Missouri had gone into a liberal attack of the Senate. He (Mr. C.) was not disposed to say any thing further of the night of the session. He took there were other matters in con appropriation. Before any der friend of the administration has propriation for defence, he made appropriate five hundred thous was on his motion that the Con tary Affairs made the appropria the fortifications. Actuated by motives which induced him to m priation, he had moved an additi tion to Fort Delaware. The me crease the seventy-five thousand and fifty thousand, and elicited ; bate. The next question was, general bill, five hundred thousan be appropriated. He recollected chairman of the Committee or them there was an amendment b mittee of similar tenor. As ch Committee on Military Affairs, he to give it up. The amendment fe ground, by one vote, that the Finance had before it the identic made by the Committee on Milita appealed to the country whether circumstances, they were to be ar the people of the country on a ch: of patriotism. He had always felt ed when those general remarks w pugning the motives of patriotisn tors. He was willing to go as fi goes farthest in making appropria national protection. Nay, he wou vance of the administration."

Mr. Benton returned to his chi defence bills of the last session were the conduct of the Senate. It was which disagreed to the House ar three millions to the fortification be self-contained appropriations to the $900,000); and it was the Senate via the "adhere" to its disagreement, the ing the harsh measure which so reges legislation. And, in support to he said:

"The bill died under lapse of tin because not acted upon before midd last day of the session. Right or session was over before the report feres could be acted on. The Housentatives was without a quorum, at at was about in the same condition fempts in the Senate to get a vot printing moved by his colleague (acre both lost for want of a quorum sion then was at an end, for want o whether the legal right to sit had cea. The bill was not rejected either in the Representatives or in the Senate, but duty was to take care ne Senate there should of which should be 1 unfavorable or reand patriotism of the embered the progress ed to by Mr. Benton), , and the real cause I satisfy any man that ibutable to any memnate. He would not Senate should again recutive business. As e should undertake to ny dereliction of duty that the loss of that

h Carolina said every general appropriations in a state of defence. ion was not the only n from Missouri (Mr. ropriation was intendent defence. The sen-Benton) had preferred nst the Senate before States. It was strange k the departments for s to know how much riate, when the inforus when we rejected ions. I rejoice, said nan has said even to o French war. France ale with America on a might do for duellists ot for nations. There I should be poured on s point of honer. If on its proper basis, his o a blaze of confidence. mended making repripayment. France hal was not pursued. It fleet is merely coming of France. If the Prees, at the last session sted the necessity of n, we would have pourwould have filled his purposes. There was ollars appropriated that or. He did not know ted to go any further my of the departments his matter. tware was surprised a lea that the American to make the necessary efence of the country ed to prevent the pas of which was to make oriations for our defence ri had gone into a liberal Mr. C.) was not disposed to say any thing further of the events of the last night of the session. He took occasion to sav there were other matters in connection with this appropriation. Before any department or any friend of the administration had named an appropriation for defence, he made the motion to appropriate five hundred thousand dollars. It was on his motion that the Committee on Military Affairs made the appropriation to increase the fortifications. Actuated by the very same motives which induced him to move that appropriation, he had moved an additional appropriation to Fort Delaware. The motion was to increase the seventy-five thousand to one hundred and fifty thousand, and elicited a protracted debate. The next question was, whether, in the general bill, five hundred thousand dollars should be appropriated. He recollected the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance told them there was an amendment before that committee of similar tenor. As chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, he felt disinclined to give it up. The amendment fell on the single ground, by one vote, that the Committee on Finance had before it the identical proposition made by the Committee on Military Affairs. He appealed to the country whether, under those circumstances, they were to be arraigned before the people of the country on a charge of a want of patriotism. He had always felt deeply affected when those general remarks were made impugning the motives of patriotism of the senators. He was willing to go as far as he who goes farthest in making appropriations for the national protection. Nay, he would be in advance of the administration."

Mr. Benton returned to his charge that the defence bills of the last session were lost through the conduct of the Senate. It was the Senate which disagreed to the House amendment of three millions to the fortification bill (which itself contained appropriations to the amount of $900,000); and it was the Senate which moved to "adhere" to its disagreement, thereby adopting the harsh measure which so much endangers legislation. And, in support of his views. he said;

"The bill died under lapse of time. It died because not acted upon before midnight of the last day of the session. Right or wrong, the session was over before the report of the conferees could be acted on. The House of Representatives was without a quorum, and the Senate was about in the same condition. Two attempts in the Senate to get a vote on some printing moved by his colleague (Mr. Linn), were both lost for want of a quorum. The session then was at an end, for want of quorums. whether the legal right to sit had ceased or not. The bill was not rejected either in the House of

want of action upon it; and that action was prevented by want of time. Now, whose fault was it that there was no time left for acting on the report of the conferees? That was the true question, and the answer to it would show where the fault lay. This answer is as clear as midday, though the transaction took place in the darkness of midnight. It was the Senate! The bill came to the Senate in full time to have been acted upon, if it had been treated as all bills must be treated that are intended to be passed in the last hours of the session. It is no time for speaking. All speaking is then fatal to bills, and equally fatal, whether for or against them. Yet, what was the conduct of the Senate with respect to this bill? Members commenced speaking upon it with vehemence and perseverance, and continued at it, one after another. These speeches were fatal to the bill. They were numerous, and consumed much time to deliver them. They were criminative, and provoked replies. They denounced the President without measure; and, by implication, the House of Representatives, which sustained him. They were intemperate, and destroyed the temper of others. In this way the precious time was consumed in which the bill might have been acted upon; and, for want of which time, it is lost, Every one that made a speech helped to destroy it; and nearly the whole body of the opposition spoke, and most of them at much length, and with unusual warmth and animation. So certain was he of the ruinous effect of this speaking, that he himself never opened his mouth nor uttered one word upon it. Then came the fatal motion to adhere, the effect of which was to make bad worse, and to destroy the last chance, unless the House of Representatives had humbled itself to ask a conference from the Senate. The fatal effect of this motion to adhere, Mr. B. would show from Jefferson's Manual; and read as follows: 'The regular progression in this case is, that the Commons disagree to the amendment; the Lords insist on it; the Commons insist on their disagreement.; the Lords adhere to their amendment; the Commons adhere to their disagreement; the term of insisting may be repeated as often as they choose to keep the question open; but the first adherence by either renders it necessary for the other to recede or to adhere also; when the matter is usually suffered to fall. (10 Grey, 148.) Latterly, however, there are instances of their having gone to a second adherence. There must be an absolute conclusion of the subject somewhere, or otherwise transactions between the Houses would become endless. (3 Hatsell, 268, 270.) The term of insisting, we are told by Sir John Trevor, was then (1678) newly introduced into parliamentary usage by the Lords. (7 Grey, 94.) It was certainly a happy innovation, as it multiplies the opportunities of trying modifications, which may bring the Houses to a concurrence. Either House, however, is free to pass over the Representatives or in the Senate, but it died for | term of insisting, and to adhere in the first instance. (10 Grey, 146.) But it is not respectful to the other. In the ordinary parliamentary course, there are two free conferences at least before an adherence. (10 Grey, 147.)

"This is the regular progression in the case of amendments, and there are five steps in it. 1.
To agree. 2. To disagree. 3. To recede. 4.
To insist. 5. To adhere. Of these five steps adherence is the last, and yet it was the first adopted by the Senate. The effect of its adoption was, in parliamentary usage, to put an end to the matter. It was, by the law of Parliament, a disrespect to the House. No conference was even asked by the Senate after the adherence, although, by the parliamentary law, there ought to have been two free conferences at least before the adherence was voted. All this was fully stated to the Senate that night, and before the question to adhere was put. It was fully stated by you, sir (said Mr. B., addressing himself to Mr. King, of Alabama, who was then in the Vice-President's chair). This vote to adhere, coupled with the violent speeches, denouncing the President, and, by implication, censuring the House of Representatives, and coupled with the total omission of the Senate to ask for a conference, seemed to indicate a fatal purpose to destroy the bill; and lost it would have been upon the spot, if the House of Representatives, forgetting the disrespect with which it had been treated, and passing over the censure impliedly cast upon it, had not humbled itself to come and ask for a conference. The House humbled itself; but it was a patriotic and noble humiliation; it was to serve their country. The conference was granted, and an amendment was agreed upon by the conferees, by which the amount was reduced, and the sum divided, and $300,000 allowed to the military, and $500,000 to the naval service. This was done at last, and after all the irritating speeches and irritating conduct of the Senate; but the precious time was gone. The hour of midnight was not only come, but members were dispersed: quorums were unattainable; and the bill died for want of action. And now (said Mr. B.) I return to my question. I resume, and maintain my position upon it. I ask how it came to pass, if want of specification was really the objection -how it came to pass that the Senate did not do at first what it did at last? Why did it not amend, by the easy, natural obvious, and parliamentary process of disagreeing, insisting, and asking for a committee of conference?

'Mr. B. would say but a word on the new calendar, which would make the day begin in the middle. It was sufficient to state such a conception to expose it to ridicule. A farmer would be sadly put out if his laborers should refuse to come until mid-day. The thing was rather too fanciful for grave deliberation. Suffice it to say there are no fractions of days in any calendar. There is no three and one fourth, three and one half, and three and three fourths of March, or any other month. When one day this vote of the House. My relation to the sub-ends, another begins, and midnight is the turn, ing point both in law and in practice. All our laws of the last day are dated the 3d of March: and, in point of fact, Congress, for every beneficial purpose, is dissolved at midnight. Many members will not act, and go away; and such was the practice of the venerable Mr. Macon of North Carolina, who always acted precisely as President Jackson did. He put on his hat and went away at midnight; he went away when his own watch told him it was midnight: after which he believed he had no authority to act as a legislotor, nor the Senate to make him act as such. This was President Jackson's course. He stayed in the Capitol until a quarter after one, to sign all the bills which Congress should pass before midnight. He stayed until a majority of Congress was gone, and quorums unattainable. He stayed in the Capitol in a room convenient to the Senate, to act upon every thing that was sent to him, and did not have to be waked up, as Washington was to sign after midnight; a most unfortunate reference to Washington, who, by going to bed at midnight, showed that he considered the business of the day ended; and by getting up and putting on his night gown, and signing a bill at two o'clock in the morning of the 4th, showed that he would sign at that hour what had passed before midnight; and does not that act bear date the 3d of March?

Mr. Webster earnestly defended the Senate's conduct and his own; and said:

"This proposition, sir, was thus unexpectedly and suddenly put to us, at eight o'clock in the evening of the last day of the session. Unusual unprecedented, extraordinary, as it obviously is on the face of it, the manner of presenting it was still more extraordinary. The President had asked for no such grant of money; no department had recommended it; no estimate had suggested it; no reason whatever was given for it. No emergency had happened, and nothing new had occurred; every thing known to the administration at that hour, respecting our foreign relations, had certainly been known to it for days and for weeks before.

"With what propriety, then, could the Senate be called on to sanction a proceeding so entirely irregular and anomalous? Sir, I recollect the occurrences of the moment very well, and I remember the impression which this vote of the House seemed to make all around the Senate We had just come out of executive session; the doors were but just opened; and I hardly remember whether there was a single spectator in the hall or the galleries. I had been at the clerk's table, and had not reached my seat when the message was read. All the senators were in the chamber. I heard the message certainly with great surprise and astonishment; and I immediately moved the Senate to disagree to iect, in consequence of my con Committee on Finance, made i pose some course, and I had doubt or hesitation what that be. I took upon myself, then, bility of moving that the Senat to this vote, and I now acknow ponsibility. It might be pres that I took a leading part, but an early part, a decided part, part, in rejecting this broad gra lions of dollars, without limit or specification of object; calle commendation, founded on no necessary by no state of things known to us. Certainly, sir, I its rejection; and I stand here, the Senate, to-day, ready to defe taken by me; or rather, sir, I fence, and all occasion of defen it as meritorious to have been as arrested, at the earliest moment nary departure from all settled think, from plain constitutional i indefinite voting of a vast sum of executive discretion, without without object specified, without and without the least control un spoke with warmth, and I suppo done so. If I did, it was a war from as honest a conviction of di fluenced a public man. It was unaffected, sincere. There had b sir, no consultation, no concert. have been none. Between the r message and my motion to disag not time enough for any two m Senate to exchange five words or The proposition was sudden and expected. I resisted it, as irregul ous in itself, and dangerous in its wholly unnecessary, and as violat intention, if not the express word stitution. Before the Senate I ther before the country I now avow, m opposition. Whatsoever is to fall sanctioned it, of that let me have r

"Sir, I am told that, in opposing

"The Senate, sir, rejected this gr of twenty-nine against nineteen. T nine names are on the journal; and the expunging process may comm far soever it may be carried, I pray not to erase mine from that record it in its sparing goodness, to lea proof of attachment to duty and tmay draw around it, over it, or black lines, or red lines, or any lin mark it in any way which either the trate and fantastical spirit of manthe most ingenious and elaborate st degradation may devise, if only it w so that those who inherit my blood, hereafter care for my reputation, sh to behold it where it now stands midnight is the turn. 1 in practice. All our ated the 3d of March; gress, for every beneat midnight. Many d go away; and such venerable Mr. Macon always acted precisely d. He put on his hat light; he went away him it was midnight: e had no authority to e Senate to make him President Jackson's : Capitol until a quarthe bills which Conmidnight. He stayed ess was gone, and ouotayed in the Capitol he Senate, to act upon it to him, and did not Washington was, to nost, unfortunate refero, by going to bed at e considered the busiand by getting up and n, and signing a bill at ing of the 4th, showed t hour what had passed oes not that act bear defended the Senate's d said:

was thus unexpectedly at eight o'clock in the 'the session. Unusual, nary, as it obviously is, ner of presenting it was for money; no departity no estimate hai whatever was given for happened, and nothing thing known to the nour, respecting our family been known to it of ore.

, then, could the Senate 1 proceeding so entirely Sir, I recollect the ent very well, and I re which this vote of the all around the Senate executive session; the ened; and I hardly rewas a single spectator ies. I had been at the t reached my seat when All the senators were d the message certainly 1 astonishment; and I Senate to disagree to My relation to the subject, in consequence of my connection with the Committee on Finance, made it my duty to propose some course, and I had not a moment's doubt or hesitation what that course ought to be. I took upon myself, then, sir, the responsibility of moving that the Senate should disagree to this vote, and I now acknowledge that responsibility. It might be presumptuous to say that I took a leading part, but I certainly took an early part, a decided part, and an earnest part, in rejecting this broad grant of three millions of dollars, without limitation of purpose or specification of object; called for by no recommendation, founded on no estimate, made necessary by no state of things which was made known to us. Certainly, sir, I took a part in its rejection; and I stand here, in my place in the Senate, to-day, ready to defend the part so taken by me; or rather, sir, I disclaim all defence, and all occasion of defence, and I assert it as meritorious to have been among those who arrested at the earliest moment, this extraordinary departure from all settled usage, and, as I think, from plain constitutional injunction—this indefinite voting of a vast sum of money to mere executive discretion, without limit assigned. without object specified, without reason given, and without the least control under heaven.

"Sir. I am told that, in opposing this grant, I spoke with warmth, and I suppose I may have done so. If I did, it was a warmth springing from as honest a conviction of duty as ever influenced a public man. It was spontaneous, unaffected, sincere. There had been among us. sir, no consultation, no concert. There could have been none. Between the reading of the message and my motion to disagree there was not time enough for any two members of the Senate to exchange five words on the subject. The proposition was sudden and perfectly unexpected. I resisted it, as irregular, as dangerous in itself, and dangerous in its precedent, as wholly unnecessary, and as violating the plain intention, if not the express words, of the constitution. Before the Senate I then avowed, and before the country I now avow, my part in this opposition. Whatsoever is to fall on those who sanctioned it, of that let me have my full share.

"The Senate, sir, rejected this grant by a vote of twenty-nine against nineteen. Those twentynine names are on the journal; and whensoever the expunging process may commence, or how far soever it may be carried, I pray it, in mercy, not to erase mine from that record. I be seech it, in its sparing goodness, to leave me that proof of attachment to duty and to principle. It may draw around it, over it, or through it, black lines, or red lines, or any lines; it may mark it in any way which either the most prostrate and fantastical spirit of man-worship, or the most ingenious and elaborate study of selfdegradation may devise, if only it will leave it so that those who inherit my blood, or who may hereafter care for my reputation, shall be able to behold it where it now stands

"The House, sir, insisted on this amendment. The Senate adhered to its disagreement. The House asked a conference, to which request the Senate immediately acceded. The committees of conference met, and, in a short time, came to an agreement. They agreed to recommend to their respective Houses, as a substitute for the vote proposed by the House, the following:

"As an additional appropriation for arming the fortifications of the United States, three hundred thousand dollars."

" As an additional appropriation for the repair and equipment of ships of war of the United States, five hundred thousand dollars."

"I immediately reported this agreement of the committees of conference to the Senate; but, inasmuch as the bill was in the House of Representatives, the Senate could not act further on the matter until the House should first have considered the report of the committees, decided thereon, and sent us the bill. I did not myself take any note of the particular hour of this part of the transaction. The honorable member from Virginia (Mr. Leigh) says he consulted his watch at the time, and he knows that I had come from the conference, and was in my seat, at a quarter past eleven. I have no reason to think that he is under any mistake in this particular. He says it so happened that he had occasion to take notice of the hour, and well remembers it. It could not well have been later than this, as any one will be satisfied who will look at our journals, public and executive, and see what a mass of business was dispatched after I came from the committees, and before the adjournment of the Senate. Having made the report, sir, I had no doubt that both Houses would concur in the result of the conference, and looked every moment for the officer of the House bringing the bill. He did not come, however, and I pretty soon learned that there was doubt whether the committee on the part of the House would report to the House the agreement of the conferees. At first I did not at all credit this; but it was confirmed by one communication after another, until I was obliged to think it true. Seeing that the bill was thus in danger of being lost, and intending, at any rate, that no blame should justly attach to the Senate, I immediately moved the following resolution:

"'Resolved, That a message be sent to the honorable the House of Representatives, respectfully to remind the House of the report of the committee of conference appointed on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate to the bill respecting the fortifications of the United States.'

"You recollect this resolution, sir, having, as I well remember, taken some part on the occasion.

"This resolution was promptly passed; the Secretary carried it to the House, and delivered it. What was done in the House on the receipt journal. I have no wish to comment on the proceedings there recorded—all may read them, and each be able to form his own opinion. Suffice it to say, that the House of Representatives, having then possession of the bill, chose to retain that possession, and never acted on the report of the committee. The bill, therefore, was lost. It was lost in the House of Representatives. It died there, and there its remains are to be found. No opportunity was given to the members of the House to decide whether they would agree to the report of the two committees or not. From a quarter past eleven, when the report was agreed to by the committees, until two or three o'clock in the morning, the House remained in session. If at any time there was not a quorum of members present, the attendance of a quorum, we are to presume, might have been commanded, as there was undoubtedly a great majority of the members still in the city.

But now, sir, there is one other transaction of the evening which I feel bound to state, because I think it quite important, on several accounts, that it should be known.

"A nomination was pending before the Senate, for a judge of the Supreme Court. In the course of the sitting, that nomination was called up, and, on motion, was indefinitely postponed. In other words, it was rejected; for an indefinite postponement is a rejection. The office, of course, remained vacant, and the nomination of another person to fill it became necessary. The President of the United States was then in the capitol, as is usual on the evening of the last day of the session, in the chamber assigned to him, and with the heads of -departments around him. When nominations are rejected under these circumstances, it has been usual for the President immediately to transmit a new nomination to the Senate; otherwise the office must remain vacant till the next session, as the vacancy in such case has not happened in the recess of Congress. The vote of the Senate, indefinitely postponing this nomination, was carried to the President's room by the Secretary of the Senate. The President told the Secretary that it was more than an hour past twelve o'clock, and that he could receive no further communications from the Senate, and immediately after, as I have understood, left the capitol. The Secretary brought back the paper containing the certified copy of the vote of the Senate, and indorsed thereon the substance of the President's answer, and also added that, according to his own watch, it was a quarter past one o'clock."

This was the argument of Mr. Webster in defence of the Senate and himself; but it could not alter the facts of the case—that the Senate disagreed to the House appropriation—that it adhered harshly—that it consumed the time in

of this message now appears from the printed elaborate speeches against the President-and that the bill was lost upon lapse of time, the existence of the Congress itself expiring while this contention, began by the Senate, was going on.

Mr. Webster dissented from the new doctrina of counting years by fractions of a day, as a thing having no place in the constitution, in law, or in practice; -and which was besides impracticable, and said:

"There is no clause of the constitution, nor is there any law, which declares that the term of office of members of the House of Representatives shall expire at twelve o'clock at night on the 3d of March. They are to hold for two years, but the precise hour for the commencement of that term of two years is nowhere fixed by constitutional or legal provision. It has been established by usage and by inference and very properly established, that, since the first Congress commenced its existence on the first Wednesday in March, 1789, which happened to be the 4th day of that month, therefore the 4th of March is the day of the commencement of each successive term, but no hour is fixed by law or practice. The true rule is, as I think, most undoubtedly, that the session holden on the last day, constitutes the last day, for all legislative and legal purposes. While the session commenced on that day continues, the day itself continues, according to the established practice both of legislative and judicial bodies This could not well be otherwise. If the precise moment of actual time were to settle such a matter, it would be material to ask, who shall settle the time? Shall it be done by public authority; or shall every man observe the tick of his own watch? If absolute time is to fornish a precise rule, the excess of a minute it is obvious, would be as fatal as the excess of an hour. Sir, no bodies, judicial or legislative have ever been so hypercritical, so astute to no purpose, so much more nice than wise, as to govern themselves by any such ideas. Thesesion for the day, at whatever hour it commences. or at whatever hour it breaks up, is the legislative day. Every thing has reference to the commencement of that diurnal session. For instance, this is the 14th day of January; we assembled here to day at twelve o'clock; our journal is dated January 14th, and if we should remain until five o'clock to-morrow morning (and the Senate has sometimes sat so late) on proceedings would still all bear date of the 14th of Jahuary; they would be so stated upon the journal, and the journal is a record, and is a conclusive record, so far as respects the proceedings of the body."

But he adduced practice to the contrary, and showed that the expiring Congress had often sat after midnight, on the day of the 3d of March, in the years when th of the Congress; and in spe often occurred, he was right it myself; but in such cases an acknowledgment of the the Senate clock, or setting also seen the hour called a journal after twelve, and tl President, noted as passed a the morning of the fourth; w untouched by the President ; acts sent to him on the mor are dated of the third; and them, although erroneous But, many of the elder mem Macon, would have nothing contrivances, and left the chasaying that the Congress wa extinct, and that they had no to sit and act as a Senate. U1 Grundy, of Tennessee, a distin well as statesman, delivered 1 consonance with the best auth

"A serious question seems as to what time Congress con minates. Until lately, I have ously urged that twelve o'clo-March, at night, is not the true insisted, however, that at twelve 4th of March is the true time ment in support of this is, th gress met at twelve o'clock, on This is not placing the quest ground; it is not when the Co or when the President was qua the oath of office, but when di constitutional right to meet? was, and is, in all future cases March; and if the day commer the universal acceptation and the country, at the first mome o'clock at night on the 3d of M tutional right or power of the ne mences at that time; and if call Magistrate to meet at that tir then qualify and open their would be no use in arguing aw understanding of the country, an as reasonable to maintain that the ended when the first Congress is to say that it began when th twelve o'clock at night until tw night is the mode of computing people of the United States, and authorized to establish a differen putation for Congress. At w Christmas commence? When do of the year, or the first of Janua Is it at midnight or at noon? st the President—and oon lapse of time, the s itself expiring while by the Senate, was

I from the new doctrine actions of a day, as a in the constitution, in and which was besides

f the constitution, nor declares that the term the House of Repretwelve o'clock at night ney are to hold for two our for the commencetwo years is nowhere or legal provision. It usage and by inference, lished, that, since the ed its existence on the h, 1789, which happened it month, therefore, the of the commencement but no hour is fixed true rule is, as I think, the session holden on he last day, for all legiss. While the session w continues, the day ling to the established ive and judicial bodies. otherwise. If the pre ime were to settle such sterial to ask, who shall Lit be done by public man observe the tick absolute time is to farexcess of a minute, it is al as the excess of an judicial or legislative. critical, so astute to no nice than wise, as to y such ideas. Theseever hour it commences, reaks up, is the legislahas reference to the diurnal session. For a day of January; we at twelve o'clock; our y 14th, and if we should ck to-morrow morning netimes sat so late) or all bear date of the 14th I be so stated upon the is a record, and is a r as respects the pro-

> ce to the contrary, and ng Congress had often the day of the 3d of March, in the years when that day was the end of the Congress; and in speaking of what had often occurred, he was right. I have often seen it myself; but in such cases there was usually an acknowledgment of the wrong by stopping the Senate clock, or setting it back; and I have also seen the hour called and marked on the journal after twelve, and the bills sent to the President, noted as passed at such an hour of the morning of the fourth; when they remained untouched by the President; and all bills and acts sent to him on the morning of the fourth are dated of the third; and that date legalizes them, although erroneous in point of fact. But, many of the elder members, such as Mr. Macon, would have nothing to do with these contrivances, and left the chamber at midnight, saying that the Congress was constitutionally extinct, and that they had no longer any power to sit and act as a Senate. Upon this point Mr. Grundy, of Tennessee, a distinguished jurist as well as statesman, delivered his opinion, and in consonance with the best authorities. He said:

"A serious question seems now to be made. as to what time Congress constitutionally terminates. Until lately, I have not heard it seriously urged that twelve o'clock, on the 3d of March, at night, is not the true period. It is now insisted, however, that at twelve o'clock on the 4th of March is the true time; and the argument in support of this is, that the first Congress met at twelve o'clock, on the 4th of March. This is not placing the question on the true ground; it is not when the Congress did meet, or when the President was qualified by taking the oath of office, but when did they have the constitutional right to meet? This certainly was, and is, in all future cases, on the 4th of March; and if the day commence, according to the universal acceptation and understanding of the country, at the first moment after twelve o'clock at night on the 3d of March, the constitutional right or power of the new Congress commences at that time; and if called by the Chief Magistrate to meet at that time, they might then qualify and open their session. There would be no use in arguing away the common understanding of the country, and it would seem as reasonable to maintain that the 4th of March ended when the first Congress adjourned, as it is to say that it began when they met. From twelve o'clock at night until twelve o'clock at night is the mode of computing a day by the people of the United States, and I do not feel authorized to establish a different mode of com-At what wur does putation for Congress. Christmas commence? When does the first day of a year or month begins and ends at midnight, does not every other day? Congress has always acted upon the impression that the 3d of March ended at midnight; hence that setting back of clocks which we have witnessed on the 3d of March, at the termination of the short session.

"In using this argument, I do not wish to be understood as censuring those who have transacted the public business here after twelve o'clock on the 3d of March. From this error, if it be one, I claim no exemption. With a single exception, I believe, I have always remained until the final adjournment of both Houses. As to the President of the United States, he remained until after one o'clock on the 4th of March. This was making a full and fair allowance for the difference that might exist in different instruments for keeping time; and he then retired from his chamber in the Capitol. The fortification bill never passed Congress; it never was offered to him for his signature; he, therefore, can be in no fault. It was argued that many acts of Congress passed on the 4th of March, at the short session, are upon our statute books, and that these acts are valid and binding. It should be remembered that they all bear date on the 3d of March; and so high is the authenticity of our records, that, according to the rules of evidence, no testimony can be received to contradict any thing which appears upon the face of our acts."

To show the practice of the Senate, when its attention was called to the true hour, and to the fact that the fourth day of March was upon them, the author of this View, in the course of this debate, showed the history of the actual termination of the last session—the one at which the fortification bill was lost. Mr. Hill, of New Hampshire, was speaking of certain enormous printing jobs which were pressed upon the Senate in its expiring moments, and defeated after midnight; Mr. Benton asked leave to tell the secret history of this defeat; which being granted, he stood up, and said:

Magistrate to meet at that time, they might then qualify and open their session. There would be no use in arguing away the common understanding of the country, and it would seem the reasonable to maintain that the 4th of March ended when the first Congress adjourned, as it is to say that it began when they met. From the red o'clock at night until twelve o'clock at night is the mode of computing a day by the people of the United States, and I do not feel authorized to establish a different mode of computation for Congress. At what I, aur does the first day of the year, or the first of January, commence? When does the first day of the year, or the first of January, commence? If the first day officer (Mr. B. said) directed an officer of the House to put forward the clock to the right time; which was done; and not another vote was taken that night, except the vote to adjourn."

This was a case, as the lawyers say, in point. It was the refusal of the Senate the very night in question, to do any thing except to give the adjourning vote after the attention of the Senate was called to the hour.

In reply to Mr. Calhoun's argument against American arming, and that such arming would be war on our side, Mr. Grundy replied:

"But it is said by the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. Calhoun), that, if we arm, we instantly make war: it is war. If this be so, we are placed in a most humiliating situation. Since this controversy commenced, the French nation has armed; they have increased their vessels of war; they have equipped them; they have enlisted or pressed additional seamen into the public service; they have appointed to the command of this large naval force one of their most experienced and renowned naval officers; and this squadron, thus prepared, and for what particular purpose we know not, is now actually in the neighborhood of the American coast. I admit this proceeding on the part of the French government is neither war, nor just cause of war on our part; but, seeing this, shall we be told, if we do similar acts, designed to defend our own country, we are making war? As I understand the public law, every nation has the right to judge for itself of the extent of its own military and naval armaments, and no other nation has a right to complain or call it in question. It appears to me that, although the preparations and armaments of the French government are matters not to be excepted to, still they should admonish us to place our country in a condition in which it could be defended in the event the present difficulties between the 'wo nations should lead to hostilities."

In the course of the debate the greater part of the opposition senators declared their intention to sustain measures of defence; on which Mr. Benton congratulated the country, and said:

"A good consequence had resulted from an unpleasant debate. All parties had disclaimed the merit of sinking the fortification bill of the last session, and a majority had evinced a determination to repair the evil by voting adequate appropriations now. This was good. It bespoke better results in time to come, and would dispel that illusion of divided counsels on which the French government had so largely calculated. The rejection of the three millions, and the loss of the fortification bill, had deceived France; it had led her into the mistake of supposing that we viewed every question in a mermantile point of view; that the question of profit and loss was the only rule we had to go by: that national honor was no object; and that to obtain these miserable twenty-five millions of francs, we should be ready to submit to any quantity of indignity, and to wade through and depth of national humiliation. The debate which has taken place will dispel that illusion; and the first dispatch which the young Admiral Mackau will have to send to his government will be to inform it that there has been a mistake in this business-that these Americans wrangle among themselves, but unite against foreigners; and that many opposition senators are ready to vote double the amount of the twenty-five millions to put the country in a condition to sustain that noble sentiment of President Jackson, that the honor of his country shall never be stained by his making an apology for speaking truth in the performance

CHAPTER CXXXIII.

FRENCH INDEMNITIES: BRITISH MEDIATION: INDEMNITIES PAID.

The message of the President in relation to French affairs had been referred to the Senate's committee on foreign relations, and before any report had been received from that committee a further message was received from the President informing the Senate that Great Britain had offered her friendly mediation between the United States and France-that it had been accepted by the governments both of France and the United States; and recommending a suspension of all retaliatory measures against France; but a vigorous prosecution of the mational works of general and permanent defence. The message also stated that the mediation had been accepted on the part of the United States with a careful reservation of the points in the controversy which involved the honor of the country, and which admitted of no compromise -a reservation which, in the vocabulary of General Jackson, was equivalent to saying that the indemnities must be paid, and no apologies made. And such in fact was the case. Within a month from the date of that message the four instalments of the indemnities then due, were fully paid and without waiting for any action on the part of the mediator. In communicating the offer of the British mediation the President expressed his high appreciation of the "elevated and disinterested motives o motives were, in fact, both terested; and presents one tacles in the conduct of nat tory loves to dwell. France States had fought together aga now Great Britain steps be the United States to prevent ing each other. George the combined attacks of French ar son, William the Fourth, inte their arms from being turned It was a noble intervention, for the good work of the Emp offering his mediation between and Great Britain-good work diations, and as nearly divine reach; -worthy of all praise, brance, and continual imitation in this case of the British med event to be prevented would ha able to British interests-wou the commerce of the United Stat into her hands, and enriched her of both. Happily the progress of in cultivating good will among 1 great powers above all selfishness unfriendly recollection—no selfis to balk the impulsions of a noble I have made a copious chapter ject of this episodical controvers -more full, it might seem, than quired, seeing its speedy and h tion: but not without object. lessons result from this history; French and American side of it. the United States came from the ber of deputies-from the opposit composed of the two extremes ( and legitimists, deadly hostile to ea combined in any attempt to embe whom both wished to destroy: an opposition inflamed the question t United States there was also an opp posed of two, lately hostile parties whigs and the southern dissatisfied and this opposition, dominant in the frustrating the President's measur touragement to the French oppositi two together, brought their respecti to the brink of war. The two opp responsible for the hostile attitude t rule we had to go by; no object; and that, to twenty-five millions of eady to submit to any nd to wade through any The debate niliation. ill dispel that illusion: which the young Atto send to his governt that there has been a -that these Americans lves, but unite against inv opposition senators ole the amount of the put the country in a at noble sentiment of the honor of his counned by his making an th in the performance

CXXXIII.

RITISH MEDIATION: IN-ES PAID.

resident in relation to referred to the Senate's lations, and before any from that committee a ved from the President at Great Britain had ation between the Uni--that it had been acts both of France and recommending a susrv measures against prosecution of the nand permanent defence. that the mediation had t of the United States n of the points in the ved the honor of the tted of no compromise the vocabulary of Genlent to saying that the aid, and no apologies was the case. Within that message the four mities then due, were waiting for any action or. In communicating rediation the President ciation of the "elevated and disinterested motives of that offer." The motives were, in fact, both elevated and disinterested; and presents one of those noble spectacles in the conduct of nations on which history loves to dwell. France and the United States had fought together against Great Britain: now Great Britain steps between France and the United States to prevent them from fighting each other. George the Third received the combined attacks of French and Americans; his son, William the Fourth, interposes to prevent their arms from being turned against each other. It was a noble intervention, and a just return for the good work of the Emperor Alexander in offering his mediation between the United States and Great Britain-good works these peace mediations, and as nearly divine as humanity can reach;-worthy of all praise, of long remembrance, and continual imitation; -the more so in this case of the British mediation when the event to be prevented would have been so favorable to British interests-would have thrown the commerce of the United States and of France into her hands, and enriched her at the expense of both. Happily the progress of the age which in cultivating good will among nations, elevates great powers above all selfishness, and permits no unfriendly recollection—no selfish calculation to balk the impulsions of a noble philanthropy.

I have made a copious chapter upon the subject of this episodical controversy with France -more full, it might seem, than the subject required, seeing its speedy and happy termination: but not without object. Instructive lessons result from this history; both from the French and American side of it. The wrong to the United States came from the French chamber of deputies-from the opposition part of it, composed of the two extremes of republicans and legitimists, deadly hostile to each other, but combined in any attempt to embarrass a king whom both wished to destroy: and this French opposition inflamed the question there. In the United States there was also an opposition, composed of two, lately hostile parties (the modern whigs and the southern dissatisfied democracy); and this opposition, dominant in the Senate, and frustrating the President's measures, gave entouragement to the French opposition: and the two together, brought their respective countries to the brink of war. The two oppositions are two countries were brought. That this is not a harsh opinion, nor without foundation, may be seen by the history which is given of the case in the chapter dedicated to it; and if more is wanting, it may be found in the recorded debates of the day; in which things were said which were afterwards regretted; and which, being regretted, the author of this View has no desire to repeat:-the instructive lesson of history which he wishes to inculcate, being complete without the exhumation of what ought to remain buried. Nor can the steadiness and firmness of President Jackson be overlooked in this reflective view. In all the aspects of the French question he remained inflexible in his demand for justice, and in his detrmination, so far as it depended upon him to have it. In his final message, communicating to congress the conclusion of the affair, he gracefully associated congress with himself in their joy at the restoration of the ancient cordial relations between two countries, of ancient friendship, which misconceptions had temporarily alienated from each

CHAPTER CXXXIV.

PRESIDENT JACKSON'S FOREIGN DIPLOMACY.

A view of President Jackson's foreign diplomacy has been reserved for the last year of his administration, and to the conclusion of his longest, latest, and most difficult negotiation; and is now presented in a single chapter, giving the history of his intercourse with foreign nations. From no part of his administration was more harm apprehended, by those who dreaded the election of General Jackson, than from this source. From his military character they feared embroilments; from his want of experience as a diplomatist, they feared mistakes and blunders in our foreign intercourse. These apprehensions were very sincerely entertained by a large proportion of our citizens; but, as the event proved, entirely without foundation. No part of his administration, successful, beneficial, and honorable as it was at home, was more successful, beneficial and honorable than that of his foreign diplomacy. He obtained indemnities for all responsible for the hostile attitude to which the outrages committed on our commerce before his time, and none were committed during his time. He made good commercial treaties with some nations from which they could not be obtained before—settled some long-standing and vexatious questions; and left the whole world at peace with his country, and engaged in the good offices of trade and hospitality. A brief detail of actual occurrences will justify this general and agreeable statement.

1. THE DIRECT TRADE WITH THE BRITISH West Indies.—I have already shown, in a separate chapter, the recovery, in the first year of his administration, of this valuable branch of our commerce, so desirable to us from the nearness of those islands to our shore, the domestic productions which they took from us, the employment it gave to our navigation, the actual large amount of the trade, the acceptable articles it gave in return, and its satisfactory establishment on a durable basis after fifty years of interrupted, and precarious, and restricted enjoyment: and I add nothing more on that head I proceed to new cases of indemnities obtained, or of new treaties formed.

2. At the head of these stands the French Is-DEMNITY TREATY.—The commerce of the United States had suffered greatly under the decrees of the Emperor Napoleon, and redress had been sought by every administration, and in vain, from that of Mr. Madison to that of Mr. John Quincy Adams, inclusively. President Jackson determined from the first moment of his administration to prosecute the claims on France with vigor; and that not only as a matter of right, but of policy. There were other secondary powers, such as Naples and Spain, subject to the same kind of reclamation, and which had sheltered their refusal behind that of France; and with some show of reason, as France, besides having committed the largest depredation, was the origin of the system under which they acted, and the inducing cause of their conduct. France was the strong power in this class of wrongdoers, and as such was the one first to be dealt with. In his first annual message to the two Houses of Congress, President Jackson brought this subject before that body, and disclosed his own policy in relation to it. He took up the question as one of undeniable wrong which had already griven rise to much unpleasant discusbetween the two governments; and expressed a son, after a just congratulation on putting a confident hope that the injurious delays of the past would find a redress in the equity of the future. This was pretty clear language, and stood for something in the message of a President whose maxim of foreign policy was, to "ask nothing but what was right, and to submit to nothing that was wrong." At the same time. Mr. William C. Rives, of Virginia, was sent to Paris as minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary, and especially charged with this reclamation. His mission was successful; and at the commencement of the session 1831-32, the President had the gratification to communicate to both Houses of Congress and to submit to the Senate for its approbation, the treaty which closed up this long-standing head of complaint against an ancient ally. The French government agreed to pay twenty-five millions of france to American citizens "for (such was the language of the treaty) unlawful seizures, captures, sequestrations, confiscations or destruction of their vessels, cargoes or other property;" subject to a deduction of one million and a half of frances for claims of French citizens, or the royal treasury, for "ancient supplies or accounts," or for reclamations on account of commercial injury. Thus all American claims for spoliation in the time of the Emperor Napoleon were acknowledged and agreed to be satisfied, and the acknowledgment and agreement for satisfaction made in terms which admitted the illegality and injustice of the acts in which they originated At the same time all the French claims upon the United States, from the time of our revolution, of which two (those of the heirs of Bear marchais and of the Count Rochambeau) had been a subject of reclamation for forty years were satisfied. The treaty was signed July th 1831, one year after the accession of Louis Phil lippe to the French throne—and to the natural desire of the new king (under the circumstances of his elevation) to be on good terms with the United States; and to the good offices of General Lafayette, then once more influential in the councils of France, as well as to the zealous & ertions of our minister, the auspicious conclusion of this business is to be much attributed. The indemnity payable in six annual equal instalments, was satisfactory to government and to the claimants; and in communicating informa tion of the treaty to Congress, President Jack

end to a subject of irritatio years had, in some degree, alie from each other, which, from from early recollections, oug most friendly relations-and further consequential advantag went on to state, as some of t result from it, that it gave persevere in demands for justi tions; that it would be an adn claims would be prosecuted to clusions, and give assurance to that their own government wil stitutional power to obtain rec foreign wrongs. This latter afterwards put to the proof, in execution of the treaty itself, and whole extent of its letter and good results both to France States. It so happened that the tive chambers refused to vote necessary to carry the treaty in arimonious correspondence be governments took place, becomi with resentment on the part of F expressions, which she found to b in a message of President Jackson minister was recalled from the the American minister received and reprisals were recommended by the President. But there wa. for them. The intent to give of disrespectful, was disclaimed; th harrear were paid; the two nati to their accustomed good feeling: trace remains of the brief and tra which for a while overshadowed finished, in the time of Jackson. satisfaction to ourselves, and wit both parties, the question of reclan France for injuries done our cit ime of the Great Emperor; and wh ministrations of Jefferson, Madison, John Quincy Adams had been un

3. DANISH TREATY.—This was a or indemnity for spoliations on Ame herce, committed twenty years before general Jackson's administration. The mmitted during the years 1808, 1809 all, that is to say, during the last y efferson's administration and the three injurious delays of the ss in the equity of the ty clear language, and the message of a Presireign policy was, to "ask right, and to submit to g." At the same time, of Virginia, was sent to otentiary and envoy exlly charged with this rewas successful; and at he session 1831-'32, the ification to communicate ress and to submit to the tion, the treaty which nding head of complaint The French governaty-five millions of france or (such was the language 1 seizures, captures, sens or destruction of their r property;" subject to a n and a half of francs for is, or the royal treasury, or accounts," or for reof commercial injury. ms for spoliation in the Napoleon were acknowbe satisfied, and the acreement for satisfaction Imitted the illegality and 1 which they originated. the French claims upon the time of our revoluse of the heirs of Bear Count Rochambeau) had amation for forty years, eaty was signed July th e accession of Louis Philone-and to the natural (under the circumstances on good terms with the he good offices of General more influential in the well as to the zealous esthe auspicious conclusion e much attributed. The six annual equal instaly to government and to communicating informa ongress, President Jack ratulation on putting an end to a subject of irritation which for many years had, in some degree, alienated two nations from each other, which, from interest as well as from early recollections, ought to cherish the most friendly relations—and (as if feeling all the further consequential advantages of this success) went on to state, as some of the good effects to result from it, that it gave encouragement to persevere in demands for justice from other nations; that it would be an admonition that just claims would be prosecuted to satisfactory conclusions, and give assurance to our own citizens that their own government will exert all its constitutional power to obtain redress for all their foreign wrongs. This latter declaration was afterwards put to the proof, in relation to the execution of the treaty itself, and was kept to the whole extent of its letter and spirit, and with good results both to France and the United States. It so happened that the French legislative chambers refused to vote appropriations necessary to carry the treaty into effect. An arimonious correspondence between the two governments took place, becoming complicated with resentment on the part of France for some expressions, which she found to be disrespectful, in a message of President Jackson. The French minister was recalled from the United States: the American minister received his passport; and reprisals were recommended to Congress by the President. But there was no necessity for them. The intent to give offence, or to be disrespectful, was disclaimed; the instalments narrear were paid; the two nations returned to their accustomed good feeling; and no visible trace remains of the brief and transient cloud which for a while overshadowed them. So finished, in the time of Jackson, with entire satisfaction to ourselves, and with honor to oth parties, the question of reclamations from France for injuries done our citizens in the ime of the Great Emperor; and which the administrations of Jefferson, Madison, Monroe and John Quincy Adams had been unable to en-of Mr. Madison s. They consisted of illegal seizures and illegal condemnations or confiscations of American vessels and their cargoes in Danish ports, during the time when the British orders in council and the French imperial decrees were devastating the commerce of neutral nations, and subjecting the weaker powers of Europe to the course of policy which the two great belligerent powers had adopted. The termination of the great European contest, and the return of nations to the accustomed paths of commercial intercourse and just and friendly relations, furnished a suitable opportunity for the United States, whose citizens had suffered so much, to demand indemnity for these injuries. The demand had been made, and had been followed up with zeal during each succeeding administration, but without effect, until the administration of Mr. John Quincy Adams. During that administration, and in the hands of the American Chargé d'Affaires (Mr. Henry Wheaton), the negotiation made encouraging progress. General Jackson did not change the negotiator-did not incur double expense, a year's delay, and substitute a raw for a ripe minister-and the negotiation went on to a speedy and prosperous conclusion. The treaty was concluded in March, 1830, and extended to a complete settlement of all questions of reclamation on both sides. The Danish government renounce I all pretension to the claims which it had preferred, and agreed to pay the sum of six hundred and fifty thousand dollars to the government of the United States, to be by it distributed among the American claimants. This convention, which received the immediate ratification of the President and Senate. terminated all differences with a friendly power with whom the United States never had any but kind relations (these spoliations excepted), and whose trade to her West India islands, lying at our door, and taking much of our domestic productions, was so desirable to us.

3. Dayish Treaty.—This was a convention or indemnity for spoliations on American comerce, committed twenty years before the time of General Jackson's administration. They had been ommitted during the years 1808, 1809, 1810, and all, that is to say, during the last year of Mr.

4. NEAPOLITAN INDEMNITY TREATY.—When Murat was King of Naples, and acting upon the system of his brother-in-law, the Emperor Napoleon, he seized and confiscated many vessels and their cargoes, belonging to citizens of the United States. The years 1809, 1810, 1811 and 1812 were the periods of these wrongs. Efforts had been made under each administration, from Mr. Madison to Mr. John Quincy Adams, to obtain redress, but efferson's administration and the three first years in vain. Among others, the special mission of

Mr. William Pinknev, the eminent crator and Jackson's first presidential term, which had been inrist was instituted in the last year of Mr. Madison's administration, exclusively charged. at that court, with soliciting indemnity for the Murat spoliations. A Bourbon was then upon the throne, and this 'legitimate,' considering Murat as an usurper who had taken the kingdom from its proper owners, and done more harm to them than to any body else, was naturally averse to making compensation to other nations for his injurious acts. This repugnance had found an excuse in the fact that France, the great original wrongdoer in all these spoliations. and under whose lead and protection they were all committed, had not vet been brought to acknowledge the wrong and to make satisfaction. The indemnity treaty with France in July 1831, of colonies from its hands; and although unable put an end to this excuse; and the fact of the to subdue the new governments, was able to me depredations being clear, and the law of nations fuse to acknowledge their independence-able indisputably in our favor, a further and more to issue paper blockades, and to seize and conearnest appeal was made to the Neapolitan gov- fiscate the American merchant vessels trading ernment. Mr. John Nelson, of Maryland, was to the new states. In this way much damage appointed United States Chargé to Naples, and had been done to American commerce, even in concluded a convention for the payment of the the brief interval between the date of the treaty claims. The sum of two millions one hundred of 1819 and General Jackson's election to the and fifteen thousand Neapolitan ducats was presidency, ten years thereafter. A newlist of stipulated to be paid to the United States gov- claims for spoliations had grown up; and one ernment, to be by it distributed among the claim- of the early acts of the new President was to ants; and, being entirely satisfactory, the con- intstitute a mission to demand indemnity. Mr. vention immediately received the American Cornelius Van Ness, of New-York was the ratification. Thus, another head of injury to minister appointed; and having been refused in our citizens, and of twenty years' standing, was his first application, and given an account of the settled by General Jackson, and in a case in refusal to his government, President Jackson which the strongest prejudice and the most re-dispatched a special messenger to the American olting repugnance had to be overcome. Murat minister at Madrid, with instructions "one had been shot by order of the Neapolitan king, more" to bring the subject to the consideration for attempting to recover the kingdom; he was of the Spanish government; informing Congress deemed a usurper while he had it; the exiled at the same time, that he had made his last deroyal family thought themselves sufficiently mand; and that, if justice was not done is wronged by him in their own persons, without would bring the case before that body. "as the being made responsible for his wrongs to others; constitutional judge of what was proper to be and although bound by the law of nations to done when negotiation fails to obtain redressir answer for his conduct while king in point of wrongs." But it was not found necessary fact, yet for almost twenty years-from their res- bring the case before Congress. On a down toration in 1814 to 1832—they had resisted and examination of the claims presented and for the repulsed the incessant and just demands of the enforcement of which the power of the govern-United States. Considering the sacrifice of pride, as well as the large compensation, which this branch of the Bourbons had to make in paying a bill of damages against an intrusive king of the Bonaparte dynasty, and this indemnity Detained from Naples in the third year of General interference. Faithful to his principle to at refused to his three predecessors—Messrs, Madia son, Monroe and John Quincy Adams-may be looked upon as one of the most remarkable of his diplomatic successes.

SPANISH INDEMNITY TREATY.—The treaty of 1819 with Spain, by which we gained Florida and lost Texas, and paid five millions of dollars to our own citizens for Spanish spoliations settled up all demands upon that power up to that time: but fresh causes of complaint soon grew up. All the Spanish-American states had become independent—had established their own forms of government—and commenced political and commercial communications with all the world. Spanish policy revolted at this escape ment had been invoked, it was found that there had occurred in this case what often takes place in reclamation upon foreign powers; that claims were preferred which were not founded in justice, and which were not entitled to the national nothing but what was righ ordered these unfounded clair the just claims only to be in communicating this fact to C his policy characteristically eign nations, and in terms w remembered. He said: "Fa "nle of asking nothing but wh additional instructions have our demands, so as to embi which according to the laws a strict right to insist upon." dified instructions a treaty concluded (February, 1834), twelve millions of reals vellor paid to the government of the distribution among the claiman instance of spoliation upon merce, and the last that remain was closed up and satisfied ur tration of General Jackson; ar revolutionary men had the gr store unmixed cordial intercou which had been our ally in the lution; which had ceded to us round off with a natural bounds territory; which was our neigh ous in dominions, from the Atla fic; and which, notwithstanding collisions to which bordering nat subject, had never committed an upon the United States. The co affair was grateful to all the reme revolutionary history, and equal. both parties: to General Jackson, unfounded claims, and to the S ment, which paid the good as soc from the bad.

6. RUSSIAN COMMERCIAL TRE lations with Russia had been po cally, always friendly; commercially, liberal-yet, no treaty of amity, c navigation, to assure these advants antee their continuance. The Unit often sought such a treaty. Many sions, and of the most eminent cit various times, and under differen tions, and under the Congress of t tion before there was any admini been instituted for that purpose-Francis Dana of Massachusetts (1 the young John Quincy Adams, at tial term, which had been lecessors—Messrs. Madi-Quincy Adams—may be the most remarkable of

TREATY.—The treaty which we gained Florida id five millions of dollars for Spanish spoliations. s upon that power up to causes of complaint soon nish-American states had had established their own -and commenced political unications with all the v revolted at this escape nds; and although unable ernments, was able to retheir independence-able es, and to seize and conmerchant vessels trading this way much damage erican commerce, even in een the date of the treaty lackson's election to the hereafter. A new list of had grown up; and one ne new President was to demand indemnity. Mr. of New-York, was the nd having been refused in nd given an account of the ment, President Jackson essenger to the American with instructions, "one ibject to the consideration nent; informing Congress he had made his last deustice was not done, in before that body, "as the of what was proper to be I fails to obtain redress for s not found necessary to e Congress. On a close ims presented and for the the power of the governd, it was found that there ase what often takes place reign powers; that claims were not founded in justice, entitled to the national I to his principle to ask nothing but what was right, General Jackson ordered these unfounded claims to be dropped, and the just claims only to be insisted upon; and in communicating this fact to Congress, he declared his policy characteristically with regard to foreign nations, and in terms which deserve to be remembered. He said: "Faithful to the princi-"ple of asking nothing but what was clearly right, additional instructions have been sent to modify our demands, so as to embrace those only on which, according to the laws of nations, we had a strict right to insist upon." Under these modified instructions a treaty of indemnity was concluded (February, 1834), and the sum of twelve millions of reals vellon stipulated to be paid to the government of the United States, for distribution among the claimants. Thus, another instance of spoliation upon our foreign commerce, and the last that remained unredressed, was closed up and satisfied under the administration of General Jackson; and this last of the revolutionary men had the gratification to restore unmixed cordial intercourse with a power which had been our ally in the war of the Revolution; which had ceded to us the Floridas, to round off with a natural boundary our Southern territory; which was our neighbor, conterminous in dominions, from the Atlantic to the Pacific: and which, notwithstanding the jars and collisions to which bordering nations are always subject, had never committed an act of hostility upon the United States. The conclusion of this affair was grateful to all the rememberers of our revolutionary history, and equally honorable to both parties: to General Jackson, who renounced unfounded claims, and to the Spanish government, which paid the good as soon as separated

6. Russian Commercial Treaty.—Our relations with Russia had been peculiar—politically, always friendly; commercially, always liberal—yet, no treaty of amity, commerce, and navigation, to assure these advantages and guarantee their continuance. The United States had often sought such a treaty. Many special missions, and of the most eminent citizens, and at various times, and under different administrations, and under the Congress of the confederation before there was any administration, had been instituted for that purpose—that of Mr. Francis Dana of Massachusetts (under whom the young John Quincy Adams, at the age of sixteen, served his diplomatic apprenticeship as private secretary), in 1784, under the old Congress; that of Mr. Rufus King, under the first Mr. Adams; that of Mr. John Quincy Adams, Mr. Albert Gallatin, Mr. James A. Bayard, and Mr. William Pinkney, under Mr. Monroe; that of Mr. George Washington Campbell, and Mr. Henry Middleton, under Mr. Monroe (the latter continued under Mr. John Quincy Adams); and all in vain. For some cause, never publicly explained, the guaranty of a treaty had been constantly declined, while the actual advantages of the most favorable one had been constantly extended to us. A convention with us for the definition of boundaries on the northwest coast of America, and to stipulate for mutual freedom of fishing and navigation in the North Pacific Ocean, had been readily agreed upon by the Emperor Alexander, and wisely, as by separating his claims, he avoided such controversies as afterwards grew up between the United States and Great Britain, on account of their joint occupation; but no commercial treaty. Every thing else was all that our interest could ask, or her friendship extend. Reciprocity of diplomatic intercourse was fully established; ministers regularly appointed to reside with us-and those of my time (I speak only of those who came within my Thirty Years' View), the Chevalier de Politica, the Baron Thuyl, the Baron Krudener, and especially the one that has remained longest among us, and has married an American lady, M. Alexandre de Bodisco—all of a personal character and deportment to be most agreeable to our government and citizens, well fitted to represent the feelings of the most friendly sovereigns, and to promote and maintain the most courteous and amicable intercourse between the two countries. The Emperor Alexander had signally displayed his good will in offering his mediation to terminate the war with Great Britain; and still further, in consenting to become arbitrator between the United States and Great Britain in settling their difference in the construction of the Ghent treaty, in the article relating to fugitive and deported slaves. We enjoyed in Russian ports all the commercial privileges of the most favored nation; but it was by an unfixed tenure-at the will of the reigning sovereign; and the interests of commerce required a more stable guaranty. Still, up to the commencement of General Jackson's administration, there was no American treaty of amity, commerce, and navigation with that great power. The attention of President Jackson was early directed to this anomalous point; and Mr. John Randolph of Roanoke, then retired from Congress, was induced, by the earnest persuasions of the President, and his Secretary of State, Mr. Van Buren, to accept the place of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the Court of St. Petersburg—to renew the applications for the treaty which had so long been made in vain. Repairing to that post, Mr. Randolph found that the rigors of a Russian climate were too severe for the texture of his fragile constitution; and was soon recalled at his own request. Mr. James Buchanan, of Pennsylvania, was then appointed in his place; and by him the long-desired treaty was concluded, December, 1832the Count Nesselrode the Russian negotiator, and the Emperor Nicholas the reigning sovereign. It was a treaty of great moment to the United States; for, although it added nothing to the commercial privileges actually enjoyed, yet it gave stability to their enjoyment; and so imparted confidence to the enterprise of merchants. It was limited to seven years' duration, but with a clause of indefinite continuance, subject to termination upon one year's notice from either party. Near twenty years have elapsed: no notice for its termination has ever been given; and the commerce between the two countries feels all the advantages resulting from stability and national guaranties. And thus was obtained, in the first term of General Jackson's administration, an important treaty with a great power, which all previous administrations and the Congress of the Confederation had been unable to obtain.

7. Portuguese Indemnity. - During the years 1829 and '30, during the blockade of Terceira, several illegal seizures were made of American vessels, by Portuguese men-of-war, for alleged violations of the blockade. The United States chargé d'affairs at Lisbon, Mr. Thomas L. Brent, was charged with the necessary reclamations, and had no difficulty in coming to an amicable adjustment. Indemnity in the four cases of seizure was agreed upon in March, 1832, and payment in instalments stipulated to be made. There was default in all the instalments after the first—not from bad faith, but from total inability-although the instal- personal compliment from the Porte in doing ments were, in a national point of view, of small amount. It deserves to be recorded, as an instance of the want to which a kingdom, whose very name had been once the synonym of gold regions and diamond mines, may be reduced by wretched government, that in one of the interviews of the American chargé (then Mr. Edward Kavanagh), with the Portuguese Minister of Finance, the minister told him "that no persons in the employment of the government, except the military, had been paid any part of their salaries for a long time; and that, on that day, there was not one hundred dollars in the treasury." In this total inability to pay, and with the fact of having settled fairly, further time was given until the first day of July. 1837; when full and final payment was made, to the satisfaction of the claimants.

Indemnity was made to the claimants by al. lowing interest on the delayed payments and an advantage was granted to an article of American commerce by admitting rice of the United States in Portuguese ports at a reduced duty. The whole amount paid was about $140,000 which included damages to some other vessels and compensation to the seamen of the captured vessels for imprisonment and loss of clothes-the sum of about $1,600 for these latter items-so carefully and minutely were the rights of American citizens guarded in Jackson's time. Some other claims on Portugal, considered as doubtful, among them the case of the brave Captain Reid, of the privateer General Armstrong, were left open for future prosecution, without prejudice from being omitted in the settlement of the Terceira claims, which were a separate class.

8. TREATY WITH THE OTTOMAN ENPIRE-At the commencement of the annual session of Congress of 1830-'31, President Jackson had the gratification to lay before the Senate a treaty of friendship and commerce between the United States and the Turkish emperor-the Sultan Mahmoud, noted for his liberal foreign views his domestic reforms, his protection of Christians, and his energetic suppression of the janissans -those formidable barbarian cohorts, worse than prætorian, which had so long dominated the Turkish throne. It was the first American treaty made with that power, and so declared in the preamble (and in terms which implied a now what it had always r and was eminently desirab cial, political and social rea dominions include what w one half of the Roman w which had celebrity before Sacred and profane history minions a venerable interest covered the seat which was the human race, the cradle of ligion; the early theatre of th and contained the city which y first Roman Christian emperor ernment it had always been th merce and of great wealth. U it was desirable to the United social, political and commercia these dominions placed on a sa ing under the guaranty of treaty this object was now accomplis the general considerations; par circumstances gave them additi Exclusion of our commerce Sea, and the advantages whic had lately gained by the tres ple, called for renewed exertion and they were made by Ge A commissioner was appointed Rhind) to open negotiations w Porte; and with him were associ States naval commander in the (Commodore Biddle), and the consul at Smyrna (Mr. David Rhind completed the negotiation other gentlemen joined in the si treaty. By the provisions of t trade with the Turkish dominion on the footing of the most favored being without limitation as to considered as perpetual, subject of regated by war, in itself improbabl events not to be expected. The riq the Dardanelles and of navigating was secured to our merchant ships with cargo, and to carry the pro United States and of the Ottomar cept the prohibited articles. The United States was to be respected. commercial brokers, of any religion v to be employed by our merchant were placed on a footing of securi veiling with passports was protected al point of view, of small o be recorded, as an inwhich a kingdom, whose ce the synonym of gold ines, may be reduced by that in one of the interchargé (then Mr. Edthe Portuguese Minister r told him "that no pert of the government, exbeen paid any part of time; and that, on that hundred dollars in the tal inability to pay, and g settled fairly, further the first day of July. nal payment was made, to claimants.

e to the claimants by ale delayed payments, and ted to an article of Amenitting rice of the United ports at a reduced duty. iid was about $140,000 es to some other vessels, the seamen of the capprisonment and loss of Sout $1,600 for these laty and minutely were the ens guarded in Jackson's laims on Portugal, conlong them the case of the of the privateer General open for future prosecue from being omitted in Terceira claims, which of the annual session of President Jackson had before the Senate a treaty nerce between the United she emperor—the Sulnas liberal foreign views. In protection of Christians, ression of the jamisarus arbarian cohorts, worse had so long dominated It was the first American t power, and so declared n terms which implied a from the Porte in doing now what it had always refused to do before). and was eminently desirable to us for commercial political and social reasons. The Turkish dominions include what was once nearly the one half of the Roman world, and countries which had celebrity before Rome was founded. Sacred and profane history had given these dominions a venerable interest in our eyes. They covered the seat which was the birth-place of the human race, the cradle of the Christian religion; the early theatre of the arts and sciences; and contained the city which was founded by the first Roman Christian emperor. Under good government it had always been the seat of rich commerce and of great wealth. Under every aspect it was desirable to the United States to have its social, political and commercial intercourse with these dominions placed on a safe and stable footing under the guaranty of treaty stipulations; and this object was now accomplished. These were the general considerations; particular and recent circumstances gave them additional weight.

Exclusion of our commerce from the Black Sea, and the advantages which some nations had lately gained by the treaty of Adrianople, called for renewed exertions on our part; and they were made by General Jackson. A commissioner was appointed (Mr. Charles Rhind) to open negotiations with the Sublime Porte; and with him were associated the United States naval commander in the Mediterranean (Commodore Biddle), and the United States consul at Smyrna (Mr. David Offley). Mr. Rhind completed the negotiation, though the other gentlemen joined in the signature of the treaty. By the provisions of this treaty, our trade with the Turkish dominions was placed on the footing of the most favored nation; and being without limitation as to time, may be considered as perpetual, subject only to be abrogated by war, in itself improbable, or by other events not to be expected. The right of passing the Dardanelles and of navigating the Black Sea was secured to our merchant ships, in ballast or with cargo, and to carry the products of the United States and of the Ottoman empire, except the prohibited articles. The flag of the Inited States was to be respected. Factors, or commercial brokers, of any religion were allowed to be employed by our merchants. Consuls were placed on a footing of security, and tratelling with passports was protected. Fairness and justice in suits and litigations were provided for. In questions between a citizen of the United States and a subject of the Sublime Porte, the parties were not to be heard, nor judgment pronounced, unless the American interpreter (dragoman) was present. In questions between American citizens the trial was to be before the United States minister or consul. "Even when they (the American citizens, so runs the fourth article), shall have committed some offence, they shall not be arrested and put in prison by the local authorities, but shall be tried by the minister or consul, and punished according to the offence." By this treaty all that was granted to other nations by the treaty of Adrianople is also granted to the United States, with the additional stipulation, to be always placed on the footing of the most favored nation—a stipulation wholly independent of the treaty exacted by Russia at Adrianople as the fruit of victories, and of itself equivalent to a full and liberal treaty; and the whole guaranteed by a particular treaty with ourselves, which makes us independent of the general treaty of Adrianople. A spirit of justice, liberality and kindness runs through it. Assistance and protection is to be given throughout the Turkish dominions to American wrecked vessels and their crews; and all property recovered from a wreck is to be delivered up to the American consul of the nearest port, for the benefit of the owners. Ships of war of the two countries are to exhibit towards each other friendly and courteous conduct, and Turkish ships of war are to treat American merchant vessels with kindness and respect. This treaty has now been in force near twenty years, observed with perfect good faith by each, and attended by all the good consequences expected from it. The valuable commerce of the Black Sea, and of all the Turkish ports of Asia Minor, Europe and Africa (once the finest part of the Roman world), travelling, residence, and the pursuit of business throughout the Turkish dominions, are made as safe to our citizens as in any of the European countries; and thus the United States, though amongst the youngest in the family of nations, besides securing particular advantages to her own citizens, has done her part in bringing those ancient countries into the system of modern European commercial policy, and in harmonizing people long estranged from each other.

ANI

It is painful to see the u alarm the South by imput North of unconstitutional des of slavery. You are right, I believing that no such interm exists in the body of our N Their good faith is sufficient the interest they have as m wners, and as manufacturers Union with the slaveholding other hand what madness in for greater safety in disunion worse than jumping into the fi frying pan. The danger from t the pride and resentment exert be an overmatch for the dictat and favor the project of a Sout insidiously revived, as promising the best securities against grievar from the North."—So wrote Mr Clay, in June 1833. It is a wri of which is matter for grave ref date at the head of all. It is d months after the tariff "compro which, in arranging the tariff qu years, was supposed to have qui -put an end to agitation, and t Southern convention-and given mony to the whole Union. Not s least not so the fact in South Car tion did not cease there on one p began on another: the idea of a vention for one cause, was hard before it was "insidiously revived" I use the language of Mr. Madison this revival with a term of odious no man was a better master of our l he was—no one more scrupulous! his judgments upon men and this one occupying a position either pe litically, or locally, to speak more ; the subject of which he spoke. He to see the efforts to alarm the South ject of slavery, and the revival of the Southern convention; and he feare

11. THE SAME WITH THE SULTAN- OF MUS-

10. TREATY OF AMITY AND COMMERCE WITH

Such were the fruits of the foreign diplomacy of President Jackson. There were other treaties negotiated under his administrationwith Austria, Mexico, Chili, Peru, Bolivia, Venezuela-but being in the ordinary course of foreign intercourse, do not come within the scope of this View, which confines itself to a notice of such treaties as were new or difficult -which were unattainable by previous administrations; and those which brought indemnity to our citizens for spoliations committed unon them in the time of General Jackson's prede cessors. In this point of view, the list of treeties presented, is grand and impressive; the bare recital of whiche in the most subdued language of historical narrative, places the foreign diplomacy of General Jackson on a level with the most splendid which the history of any pation has presented. First, the direct trade with the British West Indies, which had baffled the skill and power of all administrations, from Washington to John Quincy Adams inclusive recovered, established, and placed on a permanent and satisfactory footing. Then indemnitis from France, Spain, Denmark, Naples, Portugal for injuries committed on our commerce in the time of the great Napoleon. Then original traties of commerce and friendship with great powers from which they never could be obtained before -Russia, Austria, the Sublime Porte. The leaving his country at peace with all the world after going through an administration of edit years which brought him, as a legacy from is predecessors, the accumulated questions of bil an age to settle with the great powers. This the eulogy of FACTS, worth enough, in the plan est language, to dispense with eulogium

9. RENEWAL OF THE TREATY WITH MOROC-SIAM.—This was concluded in March, 1833, Mr. co.-A treaty had been made with this power Edmund Roberts the negotiator on the part of in the time of the old Congress under the Conthe United States, and contained the provisions federation; and it is honorable to Morocco to in behalf of American citizens and commerce see in that treaty, at the time when all other powers on the Barbary coast deemed the prowhich had been agreed upon in the treaty with perty of a Christian, lawful prey, and his person the Sublime Porte, which was itself principally framed upon that with Morocco in 1787; and a proper subject for captivity, entering into such which may well become the model of all that stipulations as these following, with a nation so may be made, in all time to come, with all the young as the United States: "Neither party to take commissions from an enemy; persons and Oriental nations. property captured in an enemy's vessel to be released; American citizens and effects to be restored; stranded vessels to be protected; vessels engaged in gunshot of forts to be protected; enemies' vessels not allowed to follow out of port for twenty-four hours; American commerce to be on the most favored footing; exchange of prisoners in time of war; no compulsion in buying or selling goods; no examination of goods on board, except contraband was proved; no detention of vessels; disputes between Americans to be settled by their consuls, and the consul assisted when necessary; killing punished by the law of the country; the effects of persons dving intestate to be taken care of, and delivered to the consul, and, if no consul, to be deposited with some person of trust; no appeal to arms unless refusal of friendly arrangements; in case of war, nine months to be allowed to citizens of each power residing in the dominions of the other to settle their affairs and remove." This treaty, made in 1787, was the work of Benjamin Franklin (though absent at the signature). John Adams, at London, and Thomas Jefferson, at Paris, acting through the agent, Thomas Barclay, at Fez; and was written with a plainness, simplicity and beauty, which I have not seen equalled in any treaty, between any nations, before or since. It was extended to fifty years, and renewed by General Jackson, in the last year of his administration, for fifty years more; and afterwards until twelve months' notice of a desire to abridge it should be given by one of the parties. The resident American consul at Tangier, Mr. James R. Leib, negotiated the renewal; and all the parties concerned had the good taste to preserve the style and language of the original throughout. It will stand, both for the matter and the style, a monument to the honor of our early statesmen.

hich these alarms should have on th Vol. I.-39

Y AND COMMERCE WITH ded in March, 1833, Mr. egotiator on the part of contained the provisions citizens and commerce upon in the treaty with ch was itself principally Morocco in 1787; and ne the model of all that me to come, with all the

I THE SULTAN OF MUS-

s of the foreign diploma-There were other ler his administration-Chili, Peru, Bolivia, Venthe ordinary course of o not come within the hich confines itself to a as were new or difficult able by previous adminishich brought indemnity liations committed upon teneral Jackson's prede of view, the list of treand and impressive; the in the most subdued lanrrative, places the foreign Jackson on a level with ch the history of any ma-First, the direct trade with es, which had baffled the all administrations, from Quincy Adams inclusive, , and placed on a permafooting. Then indemnitis enmark, Naples, Portugal 1 on our commerce in the oleon. Then original tresiendship with great powers er could be obtained before ne Sublime Porte. The t peace with all the world n administration of eight him, as a legacy from in imulated questions of his the great powers. This rorth enough, in the plant spense with eulogium

CHAPTER CXXXV.

SLAVERY AGITATION.

