ADDRESS.

The undersigned Members of the House of Representatives, to their respective Constituents.

A Republic has for its basis the capacity and right of the people to govern themselves. A main principle of a representative republic is the responsibility of the representatives to their constituents. Freedom and publicity of debate are essential to the preservation of such forms of government. Every arbitrary abridement of the right of speech in representatives, is a direct infringement of the liberty of the people. Every innecessary concentration towards tysanny. When, by systematic rules, a majority takes to itself the right, at its pleasure, of limiting speech, or denying it, altogether; when secret sessions multiply; and in proportion to the importance of questions, is the studious concealment of debate, a people may be assured, that, such practices continuing, their freedom is but short lived.

Reflections, such as these, have been forced upon the attension of the undersigned, Members of the House of Representa-tives, of the United States, by the events of the present session of Congress. They have withessed a principle, adopted as the law of the House, by which, under a novel application of the previous question, a power is assumed by the majority to deny the privilege of speech, at any stage, and under any circumstanees of debate. And recently, by an unprecedented assumption, the right to give reasons for an original motion, has been made, to depend upon the will of the majority.

Principles more hostile than these to the existence of repre-sentative liberty, cannot easily be conceived. It is not, howev-er on these accounts, weighty as they are, that the undersigned have underraken this address. A subject of higher and more immediate importance impels them to the present duty.

The momentous question of war, with Great Britain, is decided. On this topic, so vital to your interests, the right of public debate, in the face of the world and especially of their conoffituents, has been denied to your representatives. They have been called into secret session, on this most interesting of all your public relations, although the circumstances of the it is and of the nation, afforded no one reason for secrecy, onless it be found in the appreheusion of the effect of public devate, on public opinion; or of public opinion on the result of the vote.

Except the message of President of the United States, which is now before the public, nothing confidential was communicated. That message contained no fact, not previously, known. No one reason for war was intimated, but such as was of a nature public and notor ous The intention to wage war and invade Canada, had been long since openly avowed. The object of hostile enace had been estentationally announced. The inadequacy of both our army and navy, for successful invasion, and the insufficiency of the fortifications for the security of our seaboard were, every where, known. Not the doors of Congress. were shut upon the people. They have been carefully kept in ignorance of the progress of measures, until the purposes of administration were consummated, & the fate of the country sealed. In a situation so extraordinary, the undersigned have dee. aned it their duty by no act of theirs to sanction a proceeding, so novel and arbitrary. On the contrary, they made every attempt, in their power, the attain publicity for their proceedings, All such attempts were vain. When this momentous subject was stated, as for debate; they demanded that the doors should be opened.

This being refused, they declined discussion; being perfectly convinced, from indications, too plain to be misunderstood, that in the house, all argument, with closed doors, was hopeless; and that any act, giving implied validity to so flagrant an abuse of power, would be little less than treachery to the essential rights of a free people. In the situation, to which the undersined have thus been reduced, they are compelled, reluctantly to resort to this public declaration of such views of the state and relations of the country, as determined their judgment and vote. upon the question of war. A measure of this kind has appeared to the undersigned to be more imperiously demanded, by the circumstance of a message and manifesto being prepared, and circulated at public expence, in which the causes for war were enumerated and the motives for it concentrated, in a manner spited to agitate and influence the public mind. In executing this task, it will be the study of the undersigned to reconcile the great duty, they owe to the people, with that constitutional respect, which is due to the administrators of public concerns,

In commencing this view of our affairs, the undersigned would fail in duty to themselves, did they refrain from recurring to the course, in relation to public measures, which they adopted and have undeviatingly pursued from the commencement of this long and eventful session; in which they deliberately sacrificed every minor consideration to, what they deemed, the best interests of the country.

For a succession of years the undersigned have from principle disapproved, a series of restrictions upon commerce, according to their estimation, inefficient as respected foreign nations and injurious, chieffy, to ourselves, "Success, in the system, had become identified with the pride, the character, and the hope of our cabinet. As is natural with men, who have a great stake depending on the success of a favorite theory, pertinacity seemed to increase as its hopelesness became apparent. As the inefficiency of this system could not be admitted, by its advocates. without ensuring its abandonment, ill success was, carefully attributed to the influence of opposition.

To this cause the people were taught to charge its successive failures and not to its intrinsic imbecility. In this state of things the undersigned deemed it proper, to take away all apology for adherence to this oppressive system. They were desirous, at a period so critical in public affairs, as far as was consistent with the independence of opinion, to contribute to the restoration of harmony in the public councils, and concord among the people. And if any advantage could be thus obtained in our foreign relations, the undersigned, being engaged, in no purpose of personal or party advancement, would rejoice, in such an oc-

The course of public measures also, at the opening of the session, gave hope that an enlarged and enlightened system of defence, with prevision, for security of our maritime rights, was about to be commenced; a purpose, which, wherever found, they deemed it their duty to foster, by giving, to any system of measures, thus comprehensive, as unobstructed a course as was consistent with their general sense of public duty. After a course of policy, thus liberal and concillatory, it was cause of regret that a communication should have been purchased by an unprecedented expenditure of secret service money; and used, by the chief magistrate, to disseminate suspicion and jealousys and to excite resentment, among the citizens, by suggesting imputations against a portion of them, as unmerited by their pairiotismy as unwarranted by evidence.

It has always been the opinion of the undersigned, that a system of peace was the policy, which most comported with the character, condition, and interest of the United States; that their remoteness from the theatre of contest, in Europe, was their peculiar felicity and that nothing but a necessity, absolutely imperious should induce them to enter as parties into wars, in which every consideration of virtue and policy seems to be forgotten, under the overhearing away of rapacity and ambition. There is a new era in human affairs. The European world is convulsed. The advantages of our own situation are peculiar. "Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground: Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, in terest, honour, or captice !'

Of all states, that of war, is most likely to call into activity the passions, which are hostile and danger ous to such a form of government. Time is yet important to our country to settle and mature its recent institutions. Above all, It appeared to the undersigned from signs not to be mistaken. that if we entered upon this war, we did it as a divided people not only from a sense of the inadequacy of our means to success, but from moral and political objections of great weight and ve-

It appears to the undersigned, that the wrongs, of which the United States have to complain, although in some aspects, very grievous to our interests, and, in many, humiliating to our pride; were yet of a nature, which, in the present state of the world, either would not justify war, or which war would not remedy. Thus, for instance, the hovering of British vessels upon our coasts, and the occasional insults to our ports, imperiously demanded such a systematic application of harbor and sea coast defence, as would repel such aggressions, but, in ho light, can they be considered as making a resort to war, at the present time; on the part of the United States, either necessary, or expedient. So also, with respect to the Indian war, of the origin of which, but very imperfect imformation has yet been given to the pub-Jic. Without any express act of Congress, an expedition was, last year, se; on foot and prosecuted into Indian territory, which had been relinquished by treaty, on the part of the U. States. And now we are told about the agency of British traders, as to Indian hostilities. It deserves consideration whether there has been such provident attention, as would have been proper to remove any cause of complaint, either reaf or imaginary, which the Indians might alledge, and to secure their friendship. With all the sympathy and anxiety excited by the state of that frontier; important as it may be; to apply adequate means of protection, against the Indians, how is its safety ensured by a declarason of war, which adds the British to the number of enemies?

As "a decent respect to the opinions of manking" has not induced the two houses of Congress to concur in declaring the reasons, or motives, for their enacting a declaration of war, the undersigned and the public are left to search, elsewhere, for causes other real, or extensible. If we are to consider the Proconsiderations ng into the pere United States. nd the political in no small delependent soveare critical, as into situations. moral bond, by , is most likely ile and danger important to our ns. elsewhere, for insider the Pro-

Representatives, on foreign relations, as speaking on this solution occasion, for Congress, the United States have three principal topics of complaint against Great Britain. Impressments:

—blockades;—and orders in council.

Concerning the subject of impressment, the undersigned sympathize with our unfortunate seamen, the victims of this abuse of power, and participate in the national sensibility, on their account. They do not conceal from themselves, both its importance and its difficulty; and they are well aware how stubborn is the will and how blind the vision of powerful nations, when great interests grow into controversy,

But; before a resort to war for such interests, a moral nation will consider what is just, and a wise nation what is expedient. If the exercise of any right to the full extent of its abstract nature, be inconsistent with the safety of another nation, morality seems to require that, in practice, its exercise should, in this respect, be modified. If it be proposed to vindicate any right by war, wisdom demands that it should be of a nature, by war to be obtained. The interests connected with the subject of impressment are unquestionably great to both nations; and in the full extent of abstract right as asserted by each, perhaps irreconcileable.

The government of the United States asserts the broad principle that the flag of their merchant vessels shall protect the the mariners. This privilege is claimed, although every person.

on board, except the captain, may be an alien.

The British government asserts that the allegiance of their subjects is inaliceable, in time of war, and that their scannen. found on the sea, the common highway of nations, shall not be protected, by the flag of private merchant vessels.

The undersigned deem it unnecessary here to discuss the question of the American claim, for the immunity of their flag. But they cannot refrain from viewing it as a principle, of a nature very broad and comprehensive; to the abuse of which, the temptations are strong and numerous. And they do maintain that, before the calamities of war, in vindication of such a principle be incurred, all the means of negociation should be exhausted, and that also every practicable attempt should be made to regulate the exercise of the right; so that the acknowledged injury, resulting to other nations, should be checked, if not prevented. They are clearly of opinion that the peace of this happy and using community should not be abandoned, for the sale of affording facilities to cover French property; or to employ British seamen.

The claim of Great Britain to the services of her seamen is meither novel, her peculiar. The doctrine of allegiance, for which she contends is common to all the governments of Europe prance, as well as England, has maintained it for centuries. Both nations claim, in time of war, the services of their subjects. Both by decrees forbid their entering into foreign employ. Both re-wall them by proclamation.

No man can doubt that, in the present state of the French marine, of American merchant vessels were met at sea, having French seamen on board France would take them. Will any man believe that the U. States would go to war against France on this account?

For very obvious reasons, this principle occasions little collision with France, or with any other nation, except England. With the English nation, the people of the United States are closely assimilated, in blood, language, intercourse habits, dress, manners and character. When Britain is at war and the United States neutral, the merchant service of the United States, holds out to British seamen, temptations almost irresistable;—high wages and peaceful employ, instead of wages and war-service; —safety, in lieu of hazard;—entire independence, in the place

That England whose situation is insular, who is engaged in a war, apparently for existence, whose seamen are her bulwark should look upon the effect of our principle upon her safety, with jealousy, is inevitable; and that she will not hazard the practical consequences of its unregulated exercise, is certain. The question, therefore, presented, directly, for the decision of the thoughtful and virtuous mind, in this country, is—whether war, for such an abstract right be justifiable, before attempting to guard against its injurous tendency by legislative regulation, in failure of treaty.

A dubious right should be advanced with hesitation. An extreme eight should be asserted with discretion. Moral duty requires that a nation, before it appeals to arms, should have been, not one by true to itself, but that it should have failed, in no duty to others. If the exercise of a right, in an unregulated manner, be in effect, a standing invitation to the subjects of a foreign power to become deserters and traitors, is it no injury to that power?

Certainly, moral obligation demands that the right of flag like all other human rights should be so used, as that, while it protects what is our own, it should not injure what is another's. In a practical view, and so long as the right of flag is restrained, by no regard to the undeniable interests of others, a war on account of impressments, is only a war for the right of employing British seamen, or board American merchant vessels.

The claim of Great Britain pretends to no further extent than to take British seamen from private merchant vessels. In the exercise of this claim, her officers take American seamen, and fureign seamen, in the American service; and although she discuss such abuses, and proffers redress, when known, set und her extent than essels. In the an scame, and though she dismount, get in doubtedly grievous injuries have resulted to the seamen of the United States. But the question is can war be proper for such cause, before all hope of reasonable accommodation has failed? Even after the extinguishment of such hope, can it be proper, until our own practice be so regulated as to remove, in such foreign nation, any reasonable apprehension of injury?

The undersigned are clearly of opinion that the employment of British seamen, in the merchants service of the U. States, is as little reconcileable with the permanent, as the present interest of the United States. The encouragement of foreign seamen is the discouragement of the native American.

The duty of government towards this valuable class of men is not only to protect, but to patronize them. And this cannot be done more effectually than by securing, to American citizens the privileges of American navigation.

The question of impressment, like every other question relative to commerce has been treated, in such a manner, that what was possessed, is lost without obtaining what was sought. Pretensions, right in theory, and important in interest, urged, without due consideration of our relative power, have eventuated in a practical abandonment, both of what we hoped and what we enjoyed. In attempting to spread our flag over foreigners, its distinctive character has been lost to our own citizens.

The American seaman, whose interest it is to have no competitors, in his employment, is sacrificed that British seamen may have equal privileges with himself.

Ever since the United States have been a nation, this subject has been a matter of complaint and negotiation; and every former administration have treated it, according to its obvious nature, as a subject rather for arrangement than for war. It existed, in the time of Washington, yet this father of his country recommended no such resort. It existed in the time of Adams, yet, notwithstanding the zeal, in support of our maritime rights, which distinguished his administration, war was never suggested by him, as the remedy. During the eight years Mr. Jefferson stood at the helm of affairs, it still continued a subject of controversy and negotiation: but it was never made a cause for It was reserved for the present administration to press this. topic to the extreme and most dreadful resort of nations: although England has officially disavowed the right of impressment, as it respects native citizens, and an arrangement might well be made, consistent with the fair pretensions of such as are naturalized.

That the real state of this question may be understood, the undersigned recur to the following facts as supported by official documents. Mr. King, when minister in England, obtained a disavowal of the British government of the right to impress "American seamen," naturalized as well as native, on the high upon this basis and was kroken off only, because Great Britain insisted to retain the right on "the narrow seas." What however, was the opinion of the American minister, on the probability of an arrangement, appears from the public documents, communicated to congress, in the session of 1808, as stated by Mr. Madison, in these words, "at the moment the articles were extracted to be signed, an exception of "the narrow seas" was "urged and insisted on by Lord St. Vincents, and being utterly "inadmissible on our part, the negociation was abandoned."

Mr. King seems to be of opinion, however, "that, with more "time than was left him for the experiment, the objection might "have been overcome." What time was left Mr. King for the experiment, or whether any was ever made has not been disclosed to the public. Mr. King, soon after returned to America: It is manifest from Mr. King's expression that he was limited in point of time, and it is equally clear that his opinion was that an adjustment could take place. That Mr. Madison was also of the same opinion is demonstrated, by his letters to Messrs. Monroe and Pinkney, dated the 3d of February, 1807, in which he uses these expressions. "I take it for granted that you have "not failed to make due use of the arrangement concerted by Mr. King with Lord Hawksbury, in the year 1802, for settling. the question of impressment. On that occasion and under that administration the British principle was fairly renounced in fa-"vor of the right of our flag, Lord Hawksbury having agreed " so prohibit impresement on the high seas;" and Lord St. Vin-"cents requiring nothing more than an exception of the narrow "seas, an exception resting on the obsolete claim of G. Britain st to some peculiar dominion over them." Here then we have a full acknowledgment that G. Britain was willing to renounce the right of impressment, on the high seas, in favor of our flag; that she was auxious to arrange the subject.

It further appears that the British minister called for an interview with Messrs. Monroe and Pinkney, on this topic; that they stated the nature of the claim, the King's prerogative; that they had consulted the crown officers and the board of admiralty, who all concurred in sentiment, that under the circumstances of the nation, the relinquishment of the right was a measure, which the government could not adopt, without taking on itself a responsibility, which no ministry would be willing to meet, however pressing the exigency might be. They offered, however, on the part of Great Britain, to pass laws making it penal for British commanders to impress American citizens, on board of An erican vessels, on the high seas, if America would pass a law, making it penal for the officers of the United States to grant certificates of citizenship to British subjects. This will be found, in the same decuments, in a letter from Messrs. Monroe and Pinkney to Mr. Madison, dated 11th November, 1806. Under their peremptory fustructions, this proposition, on the part of Great Britain, could not be acceded to by our ministers. Such, however, was the temper and anxiety of England, and such the candor and good sense of our ministers, that an honorable and advantageous arrangement did take prale. The authority of Mr. Monroe, then Minister at the court of Great Britain, now Seeretary of State, and one of the present administration, who have recommended war with England, and assigned impressments as a cause, supports the undersigned in asserting, that it was honorable and advatageous: for in a letter from Richmond dated the 28th of February, 1808, to Mr. Madison, the following expressions are used by Mr. Monroe, "I have on the contrary al-"ways believed and still do believe that the ground on which that interest (impressment) was placed by the paper of the "British Commissioners of 8th November, 1806, and the expla-"nation which accompanied it, was both honorable and advantaof geous, to the United States, that it contained a concession in their favor on the part of Great Britain, on the great principle in contestation, never before made by a formal and obligatory "act of their government, which was highly fovorable to their "interest."

With the opinion of Mr. King so decidedly expressed, with the official admission of Mr. Madison, with the explicit declaration of Mr. Monroe, all concurring that Great Britain was ready, so abandon impressment on high seas, and with an honorable and advantageous arrangement, actually made by Mr. Monroe, how can it be pretended, that all hope of settlement, by treaty, has failed; how can this subject furnish a proper cause of war.

With respect to the subject of blockades; the principle of the law of nations, as asserted by the U. States, is, that a blockade can only be justified when supported by an adequate force. In theory this principle is admitted by Great Britain. It is alledged, however, that in practice, she disregards that principle.

The order of blockade, which has been made a specific ground of complaint, by France, is that of the 16th of May, 1806. Yet, strange as it may seem, this order, which is, now, made one ground of war between the two countries was, at the time of its first issuing, viewed as an act of favor and conciliation. On this subject it is necessary to be explicit. The vague and indeterminate manner, in which, the American and French governments, in their official papers, speak of this order of blockade, is calculated to mislead. An importance is attached to it, of which, in the opinion of the undersigned, it is not worthy. Let the faces speak for themselves.

In Aug. 1804, the British established a blockade at the enactance of the French ports, naming them, from Fecamp to Oatend; and from their proximity to the British coasts, and the absence of all complaint, we may be permitted to believe that it was a legal blockade, enforced according to the usages of nations. On the 16th of May, 1806, the English Secretary of State, Mr. Fox notified, to our Minister, at London, that his government had thought fit to direct necessary measures to be taken for the blockade of the coasts, rivers and ports, from the river

Elbe to the river Brest, both inclusive.

In point of fact, as the terms used in the order, will show. this paper, which has become, a substantive and avowed cause for non intercourse, embargo and war, is a blockade, only of the places, on the French coast, from Ostend to the Seine, and even as to these it is merely, as it professes to be, a continuance of a former and existing blockade. For with respect to the residue of the coast, trade of neutrals is admitted, with the exception only, of enemy's property and articles contraband of war, which are liable to be taken, without a blockade; and except the direct colonial trade of the enemy, which Great Britain denied to be free by the law of nations. Why the order was thus extended in its form, while in effect it added nothing to orders and regulations, already existing, will be known by adverting to papers, which are before the world. In 1806, France, had yet colonies and the wound inflicted on our feelings, by the interference of the British government in our trade, with those colonies, had been the cause of remonstrance and negotiation. At. the moment when the order of May 1806, was made, Mr. Monroe, the present Secretary of State, then our minister plenipotentiary at the Court of Great Britain, was in treaty on the subject of the carrying trade, and judging on the spot, and at the time, he, unhesitatingly, gave his opinion, that the order was made to fror American views and interests. This idea is unequivocally expressed, in Mr. Monroe's letters to Mr. Madison of the 17th, and 20th; of May, and of the 9th of June, 1806.

And as late as October, 1811, the same Gentleman, writing de-Secretary of State to the British minister, speaking of the same order of blockade of May, 1805, says, "it strictly was little more "than a blockade of the coast from Seine to Ostend." "The "object was to afford to the United States an accommodation "respecting the colonial trade."

It appears, then, that this order, was, in point of fact, made to favor our trade and was so understood and admitted by the government of this country, at that if e and since; that, instead of extending prior blockades it lessened them; that the country from Seine to Brest, and from Ostend to Elbe was inserted to open them to our colonial trade and for our accommodation, and that it was never made the subject of complaint, by the American government, during its practical continuance: that is, not until, the first order in council; and indeed not until after the 1st of May 1810; and until after the American government was apprized of the ground, which it was the will of France should be taken upon the subject.

Of this we have the most decisive proof, in the offers, made under the administration of Mr. Jefferson, for the discontinuance of the Embargo as it related to Great Britain; none of which required the repeal of the blockade of May 1806; and also in the arrangement made during the administration of Mr. Madison, and under his eye with Mr. Erskine. The non-intercourse act of March 1809; and the act, "concerning commercial inter"course" of May 1810, vest the President of the United States with the very same power, in the very same terms. Both authorise him "in case either Great Britain or France shall so re"voke or modify her edicts, as that they shall cease to violate the neutral commerce of the United States" to declare the

And in Wlike form of exception, considering every enemy as one power, wit admits the trade of neutrals, within the same limits, to be " free in the productions of enemies colonies, in every, but the di-"rect route between the colony and the parent country." Mr. Monroe adde. It cannot be combted that the note was drawn by "the government, in reference to the question, and if intended as "the foundation of a treaty must be viewed in a favorable light." On the 20th of May, Monroe, writes to Mr. Madison, that he had been "strengthened in the opinion that the order of the 16th was "drawn with a view to the question of our trade with enemies. colonics, and that it promises to be highly suffactory to our g commercial interests."

me by proclamation. And by the provisions of one law in such case, nen-intercourse was to cease; by those of the other it was to be revived. In consequence of power vested, by the first act, the arrangement with Erskine was made and the revocation of the orders in council of January and November 1807, was considered as a full compliance with the law as removing all the anti-neutral edicts. The blockade of May 1806, was not included in the arrangement, and it does not appear, that it was deene ed of sufficient importance to engage even a thought. Yet under the act of May, 1810, which vests the very same power, a revocation of this blockade of May, 1806, is made by our cabinet a eine qua non; an indispensible requisite! And now, after the British minister has directly avowed that this order of blockade would not continue after a revocation of the orders in council, without a due application of an adequate force, the existence of this blockade, is insisted upon, as a justifiable cause of war; notwithstanding, that our government admits ablockade is legal, to the maintenance of which an adequate force is applied.

The undersigned are aware, that, in justification of this new ground, it is now said that the extension on paper, for whatever purpose intended, favors the principle of paper blockades. This however, can hardly be urged, since the British, formally disawow the principle; and since they acknowledge, the very doctrine of the law of nations, for which the American administration contend, henceforth, the existence of a blockade becomes a question of fact: it must depend upon the evidence adduced, in support of the adequacy of the blockading force.

From the preceding statement it is apparent, that whatever there is objectionable, in the principle of the order of May 1806, or in the practice under it, on ground merely American, it cannot be set up as a sufficient cause of war; for until France, pointed it out as a cause of controversy, it was so far from being regarded, as a source of any new, or grievous complaint, that it was actually considered, by our government, in a favorable light.

* Mr. Foster in his letter of the 3d July 1811, to Mr. Monroe thus states the doctrine maintained by his government.

[&]quot;Great Britain has never attempted to dispute that in the ordinary course of the law of nations, no blockade can be justifiable or valid, unless it be supported by an "adequate force destined to maintain it and to expose to hazard all vessels attempting to evade its operation.

[&]quot;Mr. Foster in his letter to Mr. Monroe on the 26th July, 1811.
also says. The blockace of May 1106, will not continue after the repeal of the orders in council unless his Majesty's government shall think fit to sustain it by the special application of a sufficient naval force, and the fact of its being so continued, or ext, will be notified at the time."

The British Orders in Council are the remaining source of discontent, and avowed cause of war. These, have, heretofore, been considered, by our government in connection with the prench decrees. Certainly, the British Orders in Council and French decrees, form a system subversive of neutral rights and constitute just grounds of complaint, yet, viewed, relatively to to the condition of those powers towards each other, and of the United States towards both, the undersigned cannot persuade themselves that the Orders in Council, as they now exist and with their present effect and operation, justify the selection of Great Britain as our enemy; and render necessary a declaration of unqualified war.

Every consideration of moral duty, and political expedien-

Every consideration of moral duty, and political expediency, seems to concur in warning the United States, not to mingle in this hopeless, and, to human eye, interminable European contest. Neither France, nor England, pretends that their aggressions can be defended, on the ground of any other belligerent right, than that of particular necessity.

Both attempt to justify their encroachments, on the general law of nations, by the plea of retaliation. In the relative position, and proportion of strength of the United States, to either belligerent, there appeared little probability, that we could compel the one, or the other, by hostile operations, to abandon this

And as the field of commercial enterprise, after allowing to the decrees and orders, their full practical effect, is still rich and extensive, there seemed, as little wisdom as obligation to yield, solid and certain realities, for unattainable pretensions. The right of retaliation, as existing, in either belligerent, it was impossible, for the United States, consistent with eitherits duty. or interest, to admit. Yet such was the state of the decrees, and orders of the respective belligerents, in relation to the rights of neutrals, that, while, on the one hand, it formed, no justification to either, so on the other, concurrent circumstances, formed a complete justification to the United States, in maintaining notwithstanding these encrosedments, provided it best comported with their interests, that system of impartial neutrality, which is so desirable to their peace and prosperity." For if it should be admitted, which no course of argument can maintain, that the Berlin decree, which was issued on the 21st of November, 1806, was justified, by the antecedent orders of the British admiralty, respecting the colonial trade, and by the order of a blockade of the 16th of May, preceding, yet, on this account, there resulted no right of retaliation to France, as it respected the U. States. They had expressed no acquiescence either in the British interference with the colonial trade, or in any extension of the principles of blockade. for in adopting his principle of retaliation, yet in the exercise of that pretended right, he past the bounds of both public law and decepcy; and, in the very extravagance of that exercise, lost the advantage of whatever colour the British had afforded to his pretences. Not content with adopting a principle of retaliation, in terms limited, and appropriate, to the injury of which he complained, he declared, "all the British Islands, in a state of "block-"ade; prohibited all commerce and correspondence with them, "all trade in their manufactures; and made lawful prize of all "merchandize, belonging to England, or coming from its man-"ufactures, and colonies." The violence of these encroachments was equalled only by the insidiousness of the terms, and manner, in which they were promulgated. The scope of the expressions of the Berlin decree, was so general that it embraced within its sphere, the whole commerce of neutrals with England. Yet Decres, Minister of the Marine of France, by a formal note, of the 24th December, 1806, assured our minister Plenipotentiary, that the imperial decree, of the 21st November, 1806, "was not to affect our commerce, which would still be "governed by the rules of the treaty, established between the * two countries." Notwithstanding this assurance, however, ou the 18th September following, Regnier, Grand Minister, of justice, declared "that the intentions of the Emperor were that, by "virtue of that decree, French armed vessels, might seize in ineutral vessels, either English, property, or merchandise pro-"ceeding from the English manufactories; and that he had reserved, for future decision the question whether they might "not possess themselves of neutral vessels going to, or from " England, although they had no English manufactures on board." Pretensions, so obviously, exceeding any measure of retaliation that, if the precedent acts, of the British government, had afforded to such a resort, any colour of right, it was lost in the violence. and extravagance of the assumed principles.

To the Berlin decrees succeeded the British orders in council, of the 7th of January, 1807, which were merged in the orders of the 11th of November following. These declared "all ports, and places belonging to France, and its allies, from which the British flag was excluded, all, in the colonies of his Britannic majesty's enemies, in a state of blockade;—prohibiting all trade, in the produce and manufactures, of the said countries or colonies; and making all vessels, trading to or from them, and all merchandise, on board subject to capture and condemnation, with an exception, only in layour of the direct trade, between neutral countries and the colonies of his majesty's enemies."

These extravagant pretensions, on the part of Great Britain, were, immediately succeeded by others, still more extravagant, on the part of France. Without waiting for any knowledge of the course, the American government would take, in relation to the exercise of public law and sercise, lost the afforded to his le of retaliation, f which he comstate of "blocknce with them, wful prize of all g from its man-hese encroachf the terms, and he scope of the that it embracitrals with Engrance, by a ford our minister 21st November, h would still be ed between the ce, however, ou Minister, of jusor were that, by might seize in erchandise pr that he had reher they might ing to, or from tures on board." ire of retaliation of Great Britain, ore extravagant, ny knowledge of ke, in relation to the British orders in council, the French Emperor issued, on the 17th of December following, his Milan decree, by which "every ship of whatever nation, which shall have submitted to search, by an English ship, or to a voyage to England, or paid my tax to that government, are declared denationalized and law-

"The British Islands are declared in a state of blockade, by sea and land, & every ship of whatever nation, or whatsoever the nature of its cargo may be, that sails from England, or those of the English colonies; or of countries occupied by English troops, and proceeding to England, or to the English colonies, or to countries occupied by the English, to be good prize." The nature and extent of these injuries thus accumulated by murnal efforts of both belligerents, seemed to teach the American statesman this important lesson; not to attach the cause of his country to one, or the other; but by systematic and solid provisions, for sea-coast and maritime defence, to place its interests, is far as its situation, and resources permit, beyond the reach of the rapacity, or ambition of any European power. Happy would have been for our country, if a course of policy, so simple and obvious, had been adopted!

Unfortunately administration had recourse to a system, comlicated in its nature; and destructive in its effects; which intead of relief, from the accumulated injuries of foreign governments served only to fill up, what was wanting in the measure of vils abroad, by artificial embarrassments at home. As long ao, as the year 1794; Mr. Madison, the present President of the Inited States, then a member of the House of Representatives, evised and proposed a system of commercial restrictions, which had for its object for the coercion of Great Britain, by a denial o her of our products and our market; asserting that the forper was, in a manner essential to her prosperity; either as neessaries of life, or as raw materials for her manufactures; and, hat without the latter, a great proportion of her labouring class, could not subsist.

In that day of sage and virtuous forethougt, the proposition as rejected. It remained, however, a theme of unceasing pangyric among an active class of American politicians, who with systematic pertinacity inculcated among the people, that commercial restrictions were a species of warfare, which would enure success to the United States, and humiliation to Great ritain.

There were two circumstances, inherent in this system of coreing Great Britain by commercial restrictions, which ought b have made practical politicians, very doubtful of its result, nd very cautious of its trial. These were the state of opinion a relation to its efficacy among commercial men, in the United tates; and the state of feeling, which a resort to it would unadeniable that the creat body of commercial men, in the United. States, had no belief in such a dependence of Great Britain, upon the United States, either for our produce, or our market, as the system implied.

Without the hearty co-operation of this class of men, success in its attempt was obviously unattainable. And as on them the chief suffering would fall, it was altogether unreasonable to expect that they would become co-operating instruments in support of any system, which was ruin to them, and without hope to their country. On the other hand, as it respects Great-Britain, a system proceeding upon the avowed principle of her dependence upon us was among the last, to which a proud and power-ful nation would yield Netwithstanding these obvious considerations, in April 1806, Mr. Madison, being then Secretary of State, a law passed Congress, prohibiting the importation of certain specified manufactures of Great Britain, and her dependencies on the basis of Mr. Madison's original proposition. Thus the United States entered on the system of commercial hostility against Great Britain.

The decree of Berlin was issued in the ensuing November, (1806.) The treaty, which had been signed at London. in December, 1806, having been rejected by Mr. Jefferson, without being presented to the Senate for ratification, and the non-importation act not being repealed, but only suspended, Great Britain issued her orders in council, on the 11th November, 1877.

On the 21st of the same month, of Nov. Champagny, French minister of foreign affairs, wrote to Mr. Armstrong the American Minister, in the words following. "All the difficulties, which have given rise to your reclamatians, Sir, would be removed with ease, if the government of the United States, after complaining in vain of the injustice and violations of Englanditick, with the whole continent, the part of guaranteeing it therefrom."

On the 17th of the ensuing December, the Milan decrees was issued on the part of France, and live days afterwards the embargo was passed on the part of the United States. Thus was compleated, by acts nearly cotemporaneous, the circle of com-

After an ineffectual trial of four years to controul the policy of the two belligerents by this system, it was on the part of the United States, for a time, relinquished. The act of the 1st of May, 1810, gave the authority, however to the President of the United States to revive it against Great Britain, fin case France revoked her decrees. Such revocation, on the part of France was declared by the President's proclamation on the 2d November, 1810, and, in consequence non-intercourse was revived by our administration, against Great Britain.

At all times, the undersigned have looked, with much anxiety for the evidence of this revocation. They wished not to question, what, it various forms, has been so often asserted by the administration and its agents, by their directions. But neither as citizens, can they conjent that the peace and prosperity of the country should be sacrificed, in maintenance of a position, which on no principle of evidence they deem tenable. They cannot falsify, or conceal their conviction, that the French decrees neither have been, nor are revoked.

Without pretending to occupy the whole field of argument, which the question of revocation has opened, a concise statement seems inseparable from the occasion.

The condition, on which the nonintercourse, according to the act of 1st May 1810, might be revived against Great Britain, was on the part of France, an effectual revocation of her decrees. What the President of the United States was bound to require from the French Government was, the evidence of such effectual revocation. Upon this point both the right of the United States and the duty of the President seem to be resolvable into early distinct and undentable principles. The object to be obtained, for the United States from France was an effectual revocation of the decrees. A revocation to be effectual, must, include, in the nature of things, this essential requisite: the wrongs done to the neutral commerce of the United States, by the operation of the decrees, must be stopped. Nothing short of this could be an effectual revocation.

Without reference to the other wrongs resulting from those decrees to the commerce of the United States; it will be sufficient to state the prominent wrong done by the 3d article of the Milan decree. The nature of this wrong essentially consisted in the authority given to French ships, of war and privateers to make prize, at sea, of every neutral vessel, sailing to, or from any of the English possessions. The authority to capture was he very essence of the wrong. It follows therefore that an effectual reparation required that the authority to capture should be annulted. Granting therefore, for the sake of argument, (what row its terms and its nature was certainly not the case) that the

^{*} This article is in these words:

[&]quot;Art 111. The British islands are lared to be in a store of blockade, both by land and sea. held terth a revocation, good in point of form, and unconditional yet it was not that effectual revocation, for which the act of 1st May 1810, alone authorised the President of the United States to issue his proclamation, unless in consequence of that letter, the authority to capture was unnulled. The letter itself is no anspulment of the authority to capture, and it is notorious, that no evidence of the annulment of this authority to capture, ever has been, adduced. It has not even, been, pretended. On the contrary there is decisive, and almost daily, evidence of the contin-

The charge of executing the decrees of Berlin and Milan was. so far as concerned his department, given by the terms of those decrees to the French minister of Marine. According to establi hed principles of general law, the in perial act, which gave the authority must be annulled by another imperial act, equally forn al and solemn; or, at least, the authority to capture must be countermanded by some order, or instruction, from the minister of marine. Nothing short of this could am ul the authority according to the sea service. Was such annulling act ever issued by the French Emperor? Were any such countermanding orders, or instructions, ever given by the French minister of marine? In exercising a trust, complitted to him, by the legislature, on a point, so interesting, to the neutral commerce of the United States, and so important to the peace of the nation, was it not the duty of the President to have the evidence of such annulment, before the issuing of any proclamation? Has he ever, insisted upon such evidence? Was it of no consequence in the relative situation of this country, as to foreign powers, that the regular evidence should be received by our administration and nade known? Why has a matter of evidence, so obviously proper, so simple, in its nature, so level to general apprehension and so imperiously demanded, by the circumstance of the case, been wholly omitted? And why, if the Berlin & Milan decrees are am olled, as is pretended, does the French Empergr withhold this evidence of their annulment? Why does he withhold it, when the question of revocation is presented under circumstaces, of so much urgency?

Not only has it never been pretended that any such imperial act of annulment has issued, or that any such orders, or instructions, countermanding the authority to capture, were ever given, but there is decisive evidence of the reverse in the conduct of the French public armed ships and privateers. At all times since Nov. 1810, these ships and privateers have continued to capture our vessels and property, on the high seas, upon the principles of the Berlin and Milan, decrees. A numerous list of American vessels, thus taken, since the 1st of November 1810, now exists in the office of the secretary of state; and among the captures of August 1816; and unconditional which the ant of the United States ce of that letter, tteritself is no anotorious, that ho capture, ever has led. On the connce of the contin-are several vessels with their cargoes, lately, taken and destroy ed, at sea, without the formality of a trial, by the commander of a French squadron, at this moment, cruizing against our commerce, under orders, given by the minister of marine, to whom the execution of the decrees was committed; and these too issued in January last. In the Baltic and Mediterranean seas, cantures by French privateers are known to us, by official documents to have been made, under the authority of these decrees. How then are they revoked? How have they ceased to violate

Had any repeal, or modification of those decrees, in truth takon place, it must have been co municated to the prize courts. and would have been evidenced by some variation either in their rules, or in the principles of their decisions. In vain, however, will this nation seek for such proof of the revocation of the decrees. No acquittal has even been had, in any of the prize courts, upon the ground that the Berlin and Milan decrees had ceased, even as it respects the United States. On the contrary the evidence is decisive that they are considered by the French courte as chisting.

There are many cases corroborative of this position. enough to state, only, two, which appear in the official reports, The American ship Julian was captured by a French privateer; on the 4th July 1871, and on the tenth of September 1811, the resset and cargo were condemned, by the council of prizes Paris umong other reasons, because she was visited by several English vessels. On the same day the Hercules an American ship was condemied by the imperial court of prizes, alledging "that it was impossible, that she was not visited, by the enemy's ships of war." So familiar to them was the existence of the decrees, and such their eagerness to give them effect against our commerce, that they feigned a visitation to have taken place and that notwithstanding, the express declaration of the captain and crew, to the contrary. In addition to which evidence, tra Russels letter to the Secretary of State, dated 8th May 1811. says "it may not be improper to remark that no American vesset captured since the 1st November has yet been released."

From this it is apparent, that the commanders of the national vessels, the privateersmen, and the judges of the prize courts, to which may be added also the custom house officers, who, as the instruments of carrying into effect the decrees, must have been made acquainted with the repeal had it existed have been from first to last, ignorant of any revocation; and uniformly acted upon the principle of their existence.

If other evidence of the continued existence of those decrees were requisite, the acts of the French government afford such as is full and explicit. Champagny, Duke of Cadore minister of foreign relations, in his report to his majesty the kingerer and King, dated Paris 3d December, 1811, speaking of the decree of Berlin and Milan, says expressly "A Jong as England shall 4 persist in her orders in council, your majesty will persist, in your decrees." Than which no declaration can be more direct not only that the Berlin and Milan decrees are unrevoked, but that they will so remain, until the English orders in gouncil are withdrawn. And in the address delivered, by his imperial majesty, Napoleon, to the council of commerce on the 31st March 1811, he thus declares "The decrees of Berlin and Milan are the fundamental laws of my Empire. For the neutral naviga-A tion I consider the flag as an extension of territory. The "power, which suffers its flag to be violated, cannot be consid-"cred as neutral. The fate of the American commerce will "soon be decided. I will favor it, if the United States conform st themselves to these decrees. In a contrary case, their vessels will be driven from my empire."

And as late as the 10th of March last, in a report of the French minister of foreign relations, communicated to the conservative Schate, it is declared, "that as long as the British orders in council, are not revoked, and the principles of the treaty of Uv trecht, in relation to neutrals put in force, the decrees of Berlin and Milan, ought to subsist; for the powers who suffer their flat to be denationalised." In none of these acts, is there any exception in favor of the United States. And on the contrary in the report of March last, by placing those decrees on the basis of the principles of the treaty of Utrecht." the French Minister has extended the terms of revocation beyond all their prior pretensions.

Those who maintain the revocation of these decrees, as it respects the United States, rely wholly upon the suspension of the decisions of the French prize courts, in relation to some few vessels, and the liberation of a hers, by the special direction of the French Emperor. Can there be stronger presumptive evidence, of the existence of those decrees than this—that no vessels excepted from their operation, until after the special exercise of the Emperor's will, in the particular case.

If the decrees were effectively revoked, there would be no course; or if any were made, liberation would be a matter of course and of general right; instead of being an affair of particular lavor, or captice. Is it for vexations and indulgencies like these, that the people of the United States are to abandon their commerce and peace; is it for such favors, they are to invite the calamities of war? It the resources of negociation were exhausted, had the government no powers remaining to diminish the causes of national controversy, by preventing abuses? After this had it he powers to provide for protecting indisputable and important rights, without wa, mg a war of offence? In the regular exercise, of registative and executive powers; might not the fair objects of interest for our country have been secution ed completely, by consistent and wholesome plans for defensive protection? And would not a national position, astrictly defensive, yet highly respectable, have been less burthensome to the people than the projected war? Would it not be more friendly to the cause of our own seamen; -more safe for our navigation and commerce; more favorable to the interests of our agricule. ture; less hazardous to national character; more worthy of a people jealous of their liberty and independence ?

For entering into these hostilities is there any thing, in the friendship, or commerce, of France, in its nature very interesting, or alluring & Will the roaping of the scanty field of French trade, which we seek, in any way compensare for the rich harvest of general commerce, which by war we are about to abandon? When entering into a war, with Great Britain, for come mercial rights and interests, it seems impossible not to enquire, into the state of our commercial relations with France, and the advantages the United States will obtain. We may thus be enabled to judge whether the prize is worth the contest.

By an official statement, made to Congress during the present bession, it appears that of 45,294,000 dollars of domestic productions of the United States, exported from September 30th, 1810, to October 1st, 1811, only 1,194,275 dollars were exported to France and Italy, including Sicily, not a dependency of France.

France is now deprived of all her foreign colonies, and by reviewing our trade with that country for several years past and before, the date of the orders in council, it will appear that, exclusive of her foreign possessions, it has been comparatively inconsiderable. The annexed statement marked A, taken from official documents, shows the quantity of particular articles, the produce of the United States exported to all the world, distinguishing the amount both to France and to England and her dependencies from 1810 to 1811. From this statement it appears how small a proportion of the great staples of our country is take en by France. While France retained her colonies, her colo-

Of late years some of those articles have not been shipped at all directly to France, but they have, probably, found, their way thither through the northern ports of Europe.

It appears by it that for twelve years past, France has not taken in any year more than will produce found its way to the mother country through the United States, and our trade with her in these articles, was not inconsiderable. But since she has been deprived of her foreign possessions, and since the establishment of her municipal regulations, as the licences, this trade has been in a great degree, annihilated. With respect to colonial produce none can be imported into France except from particular ports of the U States and under special imperial licences. For these licences our merchants must pay what the agents of the French government think proper to demand. As to articles of our domestic produce, they are burdened with such exhorbitant duties, and are subjected to such regulations and restrictions on their importation as, in ore dinary times, will amount to a prohibition. On the 5th of August 1810, the very day of the Duke of Cadore's noted letter, a duty was imposed on all sea island cotton, imported into France, of more than eighty cents per pound, and on other cotton of about sixty cents per pound, amounting to three, or four, times their original cost in the United States. And as to tobacco, the French minister here on the 23d of July 1811, informed our government that it was " under an administration (en regie) in France; the administration (he says) is the only consumer and can purchase only the quantity necessary for its consumption." And by other regulations not more than one fifteenth of all the tobacco consumed, in France, can be of foreign growth. The ordinary quantity of tobacco annually consumed in France is estimated at thirto thousand hogsheads, leaving only about two thousand hogsheads of foreign tobacco to be purchased in France.

In addition to these impositions and restrictions, the importer is not left at liberty with respect to his return cargo. By other edicts, he is compelled to vest the avails of his importations, it after paying duties and seizures, any remain, in such articles of French produce and manufacture, as the French government thinks proper to direct. "Two thirds at least must be laid out, in silks and the other third in wines, brandies, and other articles, of that country. To show that this account of our commercial relations with France does not rest on doubtful authority, the undersigned would refer to the statements and declarations of out government on this subject. In a letter from Mr. Smith, the late Secretary of State, to the minister of France here, of the 18th December 1810, speaking of our trade to that country, underats regulations, after the pretended repeal of the decrees, Mr. Smith says, "The restrictions of the Berlin and Milan decrees had the effect of restraining the American merchants from sende ing their vessels to France. The interdictions in the system that has been substituted, against the admission of American products, will have the effect of imposing upon them an equal restraint." At the month he same commercial effect have been substituted, the mode one ly, and not the measure, has undergone an alteration. And howover true it may be, that the change is lawful in form, it is, nevertheless, as true, that it is essentially unfriendly, and that it does ot at all comport with the ideas, inspired by your letter of the 7th ult. in which you were pleased to declare the "distinctly pronouced intention of his imperial majesty of favoring the co nnercial relations, between France and the United States, in all the objects of traffic, which shall evidently proceed from their agrisultures." "If France, by her own acts, has blockaded up her ports against the introduction of the products of the U. States. what motive has this government, in a discussion with a third power, to insist on the privilege of going to France? Whence the nducement, to urge the annulment of a blockade of France, when, f annulled, no American cargoes could obtain a market in any of ter ports; In such a state of things, a blockade of the coast of rance would be, to the United States, as unimportant, as would be

And so far has the French emperor been from relaxing, in whoe, in part, these odious regulations as to us, in consequence of ir submitting to give up our English trade, that they have been ade a subject of special instructions, to the minister, who has een sent to the court of France. Mr. Monroe, in his letter of structions to Mr. Barlow of July 26, 1811, says, "Your early nd particular attention will be drawn to the great subject of e commercial relation, which is to subsist, in future, between e United States and France. The President expects that the ounmerce of the United States will be placed, in the ports of rance, on such a footing as to afford it a fair market; and to he industry and enterprise of their citizens, a reasonable encourrgement. An arrangement to this effect was looked for, imrediately after the revocation of the decrees, but it appears from he documents, in this department, that was not the case; on he contrary that our commerce has been subjected to the greatt discouragement, or rather, to the most oppressive restraints; at the vessels, which carried coffee sugar &c. though sailing irectly from the United States to a French port, were held in a ate of sequestration, on the principle, that the trade was proibed, and that the importation of these articles was not only unawful, but criminal; that even the vessels, which carried the inquestionable productions of the United States, were exposed o great and expensive delays to tedious investigations, in unuwal forms, and to exorbitant duties. In short that the ordinary sages of commerce between friendly nations were abandoned,"

Again Mr. Munroe, in the same letter says, "If the ports of transe, and her allies are not opened to the commerce of the United States, on a liberal scale and on fair conditions, of what wall to them, it may be asked, will be the revocation of the Brit-

Sh orders in council? In contending for the reconstitution of the orders, so far as it was an object of interest, the United States had in view, a trade to the continent. It was a fair legitimate object and worth contending for, while France encouraged it. But if she shuts her ports on our commerce, or burdens it with heavy duties, that morive is at an end." He again says, "you will see the injustice and endeavour to prevent the necessity of bringing in return for American carpoes, sold in France an co qual amount in the produce or manufactures of that country. No such obligation is imposed on French merchants, trading to the United States. They enjoy the liberty of selling their cargoes for cash, and taking back what they pleased from this country, in return. It is indispensable, that the trade be free, that all An erican citizens engaged in it be placed on the same footing, and, with this view, that the system of carrying it on, by licences gratted by French agents be immediately annulled."

The despatches from Mr. Barlow, by the Hornet, most clearly show that the expectations of our government have not only not been realized, but that even the promises obtained, by our minister are of a very unsatisfactory nature. Indeed while Bonaparte is sending armies to the north of Europe, to take possession of the ports on the Baltic, and by his fast sailing squadrons, is burning American vessels, on the Atlantic, all expectations of a free trade from Erance, must be worse than vain.

Notwithstanding the violence of the belligerents, were the restrictions of our own government removed, the commerce of the United States might be extensive and profitable. It is well known that from the gallantry of our seamen, if merchant vessels were allowed to arm and associate, for self defence, they would be able to repel many unlawful aggressions. The danger of capture would be diminished, and in relation to one of the belligerents at least, the risk, under such circumstances would soon be measured by insurance.

The discussions of our government, in relation to the British orders in council, give a currency to the opinion that they exist, without modification according to the extent of the first principles, on which they were issued. And the French minister, in his last communication, on this subject, made to the Conservative Senate, on the 10th of May 1806 "as annihilating the right of all maritime states and putting under interdiction whole coasts and en pires;" and of the orders in council of 1807, as though still subsisting, and that according to their principles all vescels were compelled "to pay a tribute to England, and all cargoes a tariff to her customs." What the real extent and principle of the blockade of May 1806 were, have already been explained. With respect to the British orders of 1807, the truths, that by a new order issued on the sock-of April 1809, the green revoked or modified, and the obnexious transit duty called the Brench Minister "tribute and tarif" was done away. The new order of April 1809, which, is now the subject of complaint is limited to "all the ports and places as far north as the iver Ems. inclusively, under the government styling itself the ingdom of Holland, and all ports and places under the government of France, together with the colonies, plantations, and settlements in the possession of those governments respectively, and all ports and places in the northern parts of Italy to be reconned from the ports of Orbitello and Pesaro, inclusively."

The effect then of the British orders of blockade, now in force, is to deprive us of the commerce of France, Holland and a eart of Italy. And they leave open to us the commerce of all the rest of the world. What that is, some estimate may bay be formed by recurrence to the subjoined table, which exhibits the tate of our commerce during 1806 and 1807 - The two last years intecedent to the operation of our restrictive system. By that of our domestic able it appears that the value of the exports roducte to France, Holland and Italy was during those two care, at an average only of about six and a half millions of dole Whereas the average of our domestic exports, to all othr parts of the world, and which are now left free, to us not withtanding the effect of the British orders in council exceed thiry eight millions! So extensive a commerce, it is proposed to urrender, for the restricted trade the French emperor will albw. A trade burdened by impositions, or harrassed by vexaions, from French demination, and French Bouaniers, or cusom house officers, in almost every port of continental Europe.

As in the scale of commercial advantages France has little to offer, in return, for the many obvious hazards, which according to the wish of her Emperor, the United States are about to incur; so, in the moral estimate of national prospects, there is like the character to gain, or consolation to expect, in the dark scene of things, on which we are entering.

A nation like the United States, happy in its great local refactions; renomined from the bloody theatre of Europe; with a maritime border, opening vast fields for enterprize;—with territorial possessions, exceeding every reall want;—its firesides safe;—its altars undefiled;—from invasion nothing to fear;—from acquisition nothing to hope;—how shall such a nation look to heaven for its smiles, while throwing away, as though they were worthless, all the blessings and joys, which peace and such a distinguished lot, include? With what prayers can it address the most high, when it prepares, to pour forth its youthful rage, upon a neighboring people; from whose strength, it has nothing to dread, from whose devastation it has nothing to gain?

If our ills were of a nature, that war would remedy; if war would compensate any of our losses; or remove any of our complaints, there might be some alleviation of the suffering, in the chaim of the prospect. But how will war upon the land, protect commerce upon the ocean? What balm has Canada for wounded honor? How are our mariners benefited by a war, which exposes those, who are free, without promising release to those, who are impressed?

But it is said that war is demanded by honor. Is national honor a principle, which thirsts after vengeance, and is appeased, only, by blooe; which, trampling on the hopes of man, and spurning the law of God, untaught by what is past and carcless of what is to come, precipitates itself into any folly, or madness, to gratify a selfish vanity, or to satiste some unhallowed rage! If honor demands a war with England, what opiate lulls that honor to sleep over the wrongs done us by France! On land, robberies, seizures, imprisonments, by French authority; at sea, pillage, sinking burnings under French orders. These are notorious. Are they unfelt because they are French? Is any alleviation to be found in the correspondence and humiliations of the present Minister Plenipotentiary of the U. States at the French Court ? In his communications to our government, as before the public, where is the cause for now selecting France, as the friend of our country and England as the enemy?

If no illusions of personal feeling, and no solicitude for elevation of place, should be permitted to misguide the public councils; if it is, indeed, honorable for the true statesman to consult the public welfare, to provide, in truth, for the public defence, and impose no yoke of bondage; with full knowledge of the wrongs inflicted by the French, ought the government of this country, to aid the French cause, by engaging in war, against the enemy of France! To supply the waste of such a war and to meet the approductions of mulicina extraordinary, for the war expenditures, must our fellow citizens, throughout the union, he downed to sustain the burden of war-taxes, in various forms of direct and indirect imposition! For official information, respecting the millions deemed requisite for charges at the war; eat local reingrope; with a ; with terri--its firesides ng to fear; a nation-look though they eace and such an it address outhful rage. , it has nothtike information, esspecting the nature and amount of taxes decined requisite for drawing those millions from the community, it is here sufficient to refer to estimates and reports made by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Committee of Ways and Means, and to the body of resolutions, passed in March last, in the House, of Representatives.

It would be some relief to our anxiety, if amends were likely to be made, for the weakness and wildness of the project, by the prudence of the preparation. But in no aspect of this anomalous affair can we trace the great and distinctive properties of wisdom. There is seen a headlong rushing, into difficulties, with little calculation about the means and little concern about the consequences. With a navy comparatively nominal, we are about to enter into he lists against the greatest marine on the globe. With a commerce, unprotected and spread over every ocean, wo propose to make profit by privateering, and for this endanger the wealth, of which we are honest proprietors. An invasion is threatoned of the colonies of a power, which, without putting a new ship into commission, or taking another soldier into pay, can spread alarm, or desolation along the extensive range of our seaboard. The resources of our country, in their natural state, great beyond our wants, or our hopes are impaired by the effect of artificial restraints. Before adequate fortifications are prepared for domestic defence, before men, or money are provided for a war of attack, why hasten into the midst of that awful contest, which is laying waste Europe! It cannot be concealed, that to engage, in the present war against England is to place ourselves on the side of France; and exposes us to the vassalage of states, serving under the banners of the French Emperor.

The undersigned cannot refrain from asking, what are the U. States to gain by this war! Will the gratification of some privateersmen compensate the nation for that sweep of our legitimate commerce by the extended marine, of our enemy, which this desperate act invites. Will Canada compensate the middle states, for New York; or the western states for New Orleans? Let us not be deceived. A war of invasion may invite a retort of invasion, When we visit the peaceable, and, as to us innocent, co-Ionies of Great Britain with the horrors of war can we be assured that our own coast will not be visited with like horrors?

At a crisis of the world such as the present, and under impressions such as these, the undersigned could not consider the war, in which the U.S. have, in secret been precipitated, as necessar ry, or required by any moral duty, or any political expediency.
