As I stood among the graves of these unfortunates, I could not restrain the thought that were they to be permitted to revisit the glimpses of the moon how harrowing would be the spectade. But they rest well, and, I hope, with restored and expanded minds, are in the enjoyment of a blessed eternity.

bleasant friend without having such things said."
But her pretty pontings and protestations made little difference, and it was generally understood that the affair, if not an absolute engagement amounted to "an understanding," whatever that may mean.

At last the long, lovel y summer came to end, as summers will. Scarlet boughs flamed in the forests, golden-rod burned along the brook-sides, the birds flew, and with them Capt. Hallett prepared for flight. His orders had come to report in Galveston, Texas, and his leave-takings were hurried. The last moment was Milly's, and though no one knew the exact situation of affairs, it was taken for granted that another year would bring orange blossoms and a wedding.

Milly's own expectations were not so definite. No definite promise had passed between her and her lover; but she trusted him, and waited brightly and hopefully. Letters came and went; the scarlet boughs burned into ashes and fell to the ground in pale heaps; then came snow and the winter, to be in its turn scourged away by the whip of the fierce New England spring. Sill Milly waited; but not so brightly now, for the letters came less regularly than at first. By-and-byt they ceased at logether. Weeks passed without a word. Milly, with visions of yellow fever and Indians chasing each other across her terrified brain, wrote and wrote again; but no presage of the real danger which threatened glanced over her till one day, opening the newspaper, this met her eyes:
