WHOM THE CAP FITS.

Punch thus discourses of the quarrel between Goldwin Smith and Mr. Discaeli, which broke out so fiercely after the publication of Lothair.

There was once an Oxford Professor. Not so often attacked as aggressor Whose sharp pen and sharp tongue, Ink and scorn freely flung. On all who displeased their possessor.

His chair was of Modern History; His lectures were bilious and blistery : When he'd served out the dead, With as small heed of mercy as mystery.

Cantank'rous, contemptuous, and clever, And enthron do'er the throng Showed where others were wrong,

So hot, hard and heavy be but tolks, That, e'en while adapting his wit, tolks Made wry moths o'er he gal, Till his truth, have matignity, bit folks.

But ne'er was his scalpel more busy Than while he was cutting up Dizzy; With hard words he bemauled him: And bad names he called him; And on this theme from frigid waxed fizzy.

But when sprightly "Lothair dans son essor," Slyly showed up an Oxford Professor-That would fit Rhadamanthus' assessor -
