THE WINTER FIRE.
We piled, with care, our nightly stack
Of wood against the chimney-back—
The oaken log, the green, huge, and tall
That on its top the stoutest back
The knobby fore-stick laid apart,
And filled between with curious art,
The ragged brush, the thorn, the hawthorn,
We watched the first red blaze appear—
Heard the sharp crackle, and caught the gleam
As it leaped and danced in the room,
Until the old, rude-furnished room
Burst, flower-like, into rosy bloom.

SELECT LITERATURE.
A MYSTERY OF PARIS.
It was during the season of the Carnival, and I was at the French opera-house in Paris. It was past three in the morning, and I was seriously thinking of retiring from that wild, boisterous scene—not to call it by any harsher name—in which I had been a participant for hours. I was weary—wary of the dance, the lights, the music,
the crowd, the noise and confusion, the silly nothing that were continually dinned in my ears by the fir-ring makers—and I had withdrawn from the press and seated myself in the most quiet spot I could find.

While I was thus sitting apart from the throng, listlessly gazing upon that which no longer gave me pleasure, a mask, in the dress of a page, snatched quietly past me, and said, in a low, guarded tone:
"Monsieur will not seem to laugh or hear, but will look for the blue domino with a single spot of red in the bosom, and follow so carefully as not to attract notice."
I was only sure this language was not intended for me, by finding that there was no other at the moment within hearing; but what it meant, if it had any meaning, I was at a loss to conjecture. I would have questioned the page, notwithstanding the caution not to seem to see or hear, but that individual had already passed too far, and was about mingling again with the noisy crowd.

As I sat thinking the matter over, it occurred to me that I had been mistaken for another person, and that what had been said to me had really been intended for some one else. If this was so indeed, it might lead to a novel adventure, and so one was ever more ready for a novel adventure than myself.
"Look for the blue domino with a single spot of red on the bosom, and follow so carefully as not to attract notice," I repeated to myself.
"Very well—I think I will—if only to discover what it means."

THE next minute the object for which I was about to seek slowly passed along, not very near me, but in plain view.
I rose with a yawn, and quietly, with a sleepy, indifferent air, snatched after the blue domino. I had no difficulty in keeping it in sight—for the masker, so disguised, moved very slowly through the crowd, seemingly with no purpose.
If she had intended leaving the house, it was not apparent to me then, nor for some time after; and being really very much fatigued, and not certain I was not the sport of a mischievous page, I was about to depart myself and finish my night's adventure in my own bedroom, when I perceived my fair unknown coming toward me with a finger on her lips.
She came up close beside me and stopped, apparently for the purpose of obtaining something in another part of the house; and then, to my surprise, I heard her say in English, in a low, sweet, musical voice:
"Listen, my friend, but seem not to hear. In five minutes I shall leave the house by the entrance on the Rue Lepelletier, and will meet you at the Place Vendome—after which we will perfect our plan. Do not fail this time, or we may not have another opportunity before the Count's return. Till then, adieu!"
As she ceased speaking, she moved away, and was soon lost in the crowd.
"What did it all mean? Unquestionably I had been mistaken for some other person, as the words
"Do not fail this time," evidently proved. Who was the count alluded to, and what was the plan on foot, to be performed during his absence?
My curiosity was excited, and I resolved to go forward in the part thus thrust upon me till I could ascertain something more definite. And then her words in English, so correctly spoken, plainly showing that either she was or knew me to be a foreigner, or perhaps both—made me still more eager to fathom the mystery.
Perhaps some may blame me, knowing, as I did,
that there was a mistake, for seeking to find out that which did not concern me; and I have nothing to say in my defence, except that I saw before me the prospect of a novel adventure, the temptation of which I was not just then in the proper humour to resist.
The French opera-house had three main entrances, for three ranks, on many streets—namely:
one on Lepelletier, for those who came in carriages,
one on Grand Boulevard, for those who came on foot, and one on the Rue Lepelletier—which went far to prove that she laid claim to the highest rank among those present, if not indeed among society in general—and I went out on the Rue Pignon to order a fiacre and join her at the Place Vendome.
I reached the Place first, and dismissed my driver before her carriage appeared, which stopped under the triumphal pillar of Napoleon de Grande.
As I hastened to the carriage, which was plain black, without blazon of any kind—the door was opened by a small gloved hand from within, while the driver sat still, neither turning his head to the right or left. I could just see that the fair unknown was its only occupant, and I quietly entered and took a seat beside her, feeling a little nervous and somewhat guilty, I must confess.
The door was shut quickly, I heard the sharp snap of a spring, the blind was let down, and we were whirled away in almost total darkness.
For nearly an hour we rode in silence through the streets of the great city, I seeing nothing but the form of the fair unknown beside me, and having no idea of the direction we were going.
I thought over some curious stories I had heard of strangers being by one means and another decoyed into dens of robbers, and began to feel rather uneasy. My pistols had been left at my hotel, and I had not a single weapon with me, unless a small pocket-knife might be so considered.
I had not the feeling, moreover, of acting in a right and honorable manner, to give me manly courage; and I could not but admit to myself that should harm come to me through this adventure, it would be a great measure be owing to my own
folly.
I had been thinking over the matter for some time, and had just come to the determination of declaring that there had been some mistake, and taking a hurried leave, when the carriage stopped.
"Here we are at last!" said the sweet, musical
voice of the fair masker, the silvery tones of which coupled with my native language, tended much to re-assure me.
The next moment the door was opened by the
driver.
As I descended the stairs and offered the lady my hand, she glanced quickly around, and perceived that
we were in an inner court, surrounded on all sides
by lofty buildings.
If I had really been entrapped, escape was now
impossible, and a sudden feeling of alarm made
even my hand tremble.
"Come, my friend," pursued the lady, whose face
was still concealed by a mask, and taking my hand
as she spoke, she led me forward to a door, which she unlocked and threw open.
"What," she exclaimed, with a light laugh, "are you afraid to enter here to-night, sir Richard, where
you have so often been with me before?"
These words convinced me that I had indeed
been mistaken for some one else—no less, indeed,
than an English baronet—and determined to go forward and see the end of this strange affair.
"Of course I am not afraid of you," I ventured to say; "but what if the count should have returned
during your absence?"
"This was the first time I had spoken in the lady's hearing, and I was not a little curious to know what effect my voice would produce, notwithstanding
her eyes had been deceived by my personal appearance, for I had at no time been masked myself.

Poetry.

FORGET-ME NOTS.
She pulled the small and modest flowers,
That on the greenward clambered low,
Bright in the sunshine, wet with dew,
Nodding on slight stems—Stars of blue—
Kissed by the west-wind, washed by showers;
The bound the fragile, trembling things,
With ribbon from her own dark hair,
Tied the gay knot with loving care;
Fair are the flowers, and she as fair,
As any flower the summer brings:
She turned to him, while rising thoughts
To her pale brow sent crimson hue,
"I give these lovely flowers to you;"
Then, laughing, asked him if he knew,
That they were called "forget-me-nots."
He kissed the hand he'd just held fast,
His joy so great, his words were low,
"For each one of these flowers so blue
I promise to return to you
Many a fair forget-me-not."

Full many a Summer's sun had brought
His joyous smile to her sweet face,
Of all those beauties she could boast,
None so dear as those she had to part.
Her unremembered forget-me-nots.

Time found them walking side by side,
His arm her strength, her shield, her stay,
His bright eyes smiling gaily away,
He found life's flowers from day to day
For her—his long-time bride.
To him returned her joyful thoughts,
As she and pleasure did meet;
For he watched over her welfare yet,
And soothed to sleep each fond regret;
"These, love, are my forget-me-nots."

A DOMESTIC GRIEVANCE.
A whimsical bachelor life I've led,
In a two pair back, for many a year,
I'd half on the thing they call a bed,
Though it won't last long at this rate, I fear.
Considering handiwork on it ear,
In a fright at the ghost in my creaking chair!

Tis all very well for the folks who sit
In family circles, or at the table;
But little ones never around me fit,
And nobody bawls or comforts me;
So, upon my honor, I'd hardly care
To be worried to death by a creaking chair!
When down in the socket my cased slinks,
And the obstinate fire has ceased to burn,
Tis a terribly ghostly hour, methinks,
As I think of my creaking chair.
Beside the seat I've left—'t were idle
An echo comes out of my creaking chair.

THE WINTER FIRE.
We piled, with care, our nightly stack
Of wood against the chimney-back—
The oaken log, the green, huge, and tall
That on its top the stoutest back

right and honorable manner, to give me manly cour-
age; and I could not but admit to myself that
should harm come to me through this adventure, it
would be a great measure be owing to my own
folly.
I had been thinking over the matter for some time, and had just come to the determination of declaring that there had been some mistake, and taking a hurried leave, when the carriage stopped.
"Here we are at last!" said the sweet, musical
voice of the fair masker, the silvery tones of which coupled with my native language, tended much to
re-assure me.
The next moment the door was opened by the
driver.
As I descended the stairs and offered the lady my hand, she glanced quickly around, and perceived that
we were in an inner court, surrounded on all sides
by lofty buildings.
If I had really been entrapped, escape was now
impossible, and a sudden feeling of alarm made
even my hand tremble.
"Come, my friend," pursued the lady, whose face
was still concealed by a mask, and taking my hand
as she spoke, she led me forward to a door, which
she unlocked and threw open.
"What," she exclaimed, with a light laugh, "are
you afraid to enter here to-night, sir Richard, where
you have so often been with me before?"
These words convinced me that I had indeed
been mistaken for some one else—no less, indeed,
than an English baronet—and determined to go forward and see the end of this strange affair.
"Of course I am not afraid of you," I ventured to
say; "but what if the count should have returned
during your absence?"
"This was the first time I had spoken in the lady's hearing, and I was not a little curious to know
what effect my voice would produce, notwithstanding
her eyes had been deceived by my personal appearance, for I had at no time been masked myself.

The very idea, under the circumstances, was so startling, that in a moment I felt a cold perspiration start from every pore, and I would have given half my fortune to have been safely at my hotel.
It was not too late, however, to attempt a retreat;
we were groping our way through a dark passage;
and with the door closed behind us; and her hand rested on mine, and I held it in such a way that she could not withdraw it without my consent.
Daylight, moreover, could not be far off, and there was some little consolation in the thought.
We presently came to a flight of stairs, ascended to another story, passed through a long, narrow corridor, with several sharp turnings, and at last stopped at a door, which she unlocked, and threw open.
A blaze of light from a large chandelier almost dazzled me, and I saw at a glance that the apartment was luxuriously furnished. As soon as we had entered, she locked the door, and then removed her mask, disclosing a young and beautiful face, so animated and radiant with smiles, that instantly
I felt ashamed of my base suspicions.
"There now, sir Richard," she said, gaily, "you shall seat yourself in that fauteuil. We will have a glass of wine together and then we will arrange our plan with what haste we may so that you can depart before daylight, if you wish."
"Could it be that even here, in this light, at such close quarters, she still mistook me for some one who by her own showing was an intimate friend?
The thing hardly seemed possible.
If true our resemblance to each other must be remarkable indeed; if not true, then had I been lured hither for some dreadful purpose.
I seated myself as directed, and awaited the result with a good deal of nervous trembling.
She stepped out of the room for a minute through an inner door that was slightly ajar, and returned without her domino, in a very rich dress, and with a decanter and two wine glasses, on a silver tray.
"Here is your favorite sherry, sir Richard," she said, with a very sweet smile, placing the water on a small table, and pushing the latter up before me,
and seating herself on the opposite side.
As I filled the two glasses, the thought occurred to me that the wine might be poisoned.
If she drinks, however, I will," I said mentally,
"but not otherwise."
We touched glasses, and both carried the wine to our lips. My eye was upon her. She coughed slightly, and removed her unatoned. In an instant I threw mine over my shoulder unperceived, and remarked, as I replaced the glass, that I had never tasted anything better.
"Try another glass—one hardly gives you the flavor," she said.
I thanked her, refilled the glass, took it in my hand, and soon managed to get rid of it in the same way as the other.
"Now, then," she pursued, "let us arrange our plan about Marie, while we have an opportunity.
You know the count opposes your marriage for no other reason than—but, by the bye, sir Richard,
you have neglected to drink her health!"
"True!" returned I; "how could I have been so thoughtless?"
I refilled the glass.
"To the health of my dear Marie, and our speedy union!"
I raised it to my lips. The eye of my fair hostess gleaming with a peculiar light, was now watching me closely.
"Hark!" said I suddenly, looking quickly around.
"What sound is that?"
"Where? what, sir Richard? what do you hear?"
she exclaimed, with a startled glance around the apartment.
"I think I was mistaken," I said after a short pause, during which I had managed to get clear of the wine without drinking it.
When she turned to me again I was in the act of removing the empty glass from my lips. She saw this, and on the instant a strange expression

THE HERALD. WEDNESDAY, FEB. 19, 1868.

IMPORTANT FROM NOVA SCOTIA.

REPEAL RESOLUTIONS!

They include a petition to the Queen against the Union, and treat it as an obligatory on Nova Scotia?

The following are the Resolutions relating to the repeal of the Act of Confederation to be made the order of the day for Saturday next:

Resolved, That the Members of the Legislative Assembly of this Province elected in 1863 simply to legislate under the Colonial Constitution had no authority to make or consent to any material change of such constitution without first submitting the same to the people at the Polls.

That the Resolution of the 19th April, which preceded the enactment of the British North American Act, is as follows:

Whereas, It is the opinion of His Majesty that it is desirable that a Confederation of the British North American Provinces should take place: Resolved, therefore, that His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor be authorized to appoint delegates to arrange with the Imperial Government a scheme of Union which will effectually ensure that provision for the rights and interests of this Province, each Province to have an equal voice in such Delegation, Upper and Lower Canada being for this purpose considered as separate Provinces. This was the only authority possessed by the Delegates who procured the enactment of the Act for the Union of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

That even if the House of Assembly had had the Constitutional power to authorize such Delegation, which is by no means admitted, the foregoing resolutions did not empower the Delegates to arrange a Federal Union of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, without including in such Confederation the Colonies of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island.

That no Delegates from the two last named Colonies having attended, and an unequal number from each of the others being present, the delegation was not legally constituted, and had no authority to act under the Resolution, which expressly required each of the Colonies to be represented by an equal number of Delegates.

That the Delegates did not secure just provision for the rights and interests of this Province, as they were, by the express terms of such resolution, bound to do in arranging a scheme of Union, but, on the contrary, they entirely disregarded those rights and interests, and the scheme by them consented to would, if finally confirmed, deprive the people of this Province of their rights, liberty and independence, rob them of their revenues, take from them the regulation of their trade, commerce, public property, expose them to arbitrary and excessive taxation by a Legislature over which they can have no adequate control, and reduce this free, happy and self-governing Province to the degraded condition of a dependency of Canada.

That no fundamental or material change of the Constitution can be made in any other constitutional manner than by a statute of the Legislature sanctioned by the people, after the subject matter of the same has been referred to a vote at the Polls, the Legislature of a Colonial dependency having no power or authority implied from their relation to the people as their representative to overthrow the Constitution which they were elected and appointed to administer.

That the scheme of confederating Canada, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia was never submitted to the people of this Province, at the polls, before the 18th day of September last, upwards of two and a half months after the British North American Act, by the Queen's proclamation, declared to be in force, which the people were thereby informed that they had been subjected, without their consent, to the absolute dominion of more populous and more powerful Colonies, and that their liberty, rights and independence were to be taken away from them by the people of the Province in any other manner testified, the preamble of the Act reciting that this Province had expressed a desire to be confederated with Canada, and that the Imperial Legislature were led to believe that this Province had expressed such a desire, a formal and untrue statement.

That the truth or the preamble of the British North American Act reciting the desire of this Province to be confederated is essential to the Constitutionality of the Statute, and if the same is false, the Statute is defective, because a statute cannot be validly made by the Queen assuming as true the condition which is indispensable to its constitutionality.

That from the time the scheme of Confederation was first devised in Canada until it was consummated by the Imperial Act in London, it was systematically kept from the consideration of the people at the polls, and the Executive Council and Legislature, in the Province, were prevented from being present at the same.

That the scheme of Confederation was not submitted to the people of this Province, at the polls, before the 18th day of September last, upwards of two and a half months after the British North American Act, by the Queen's proclamation, declared to be in force, which the people were thereby informed that they had been subjected, without their consent, to the absolute dominion of more populous and more powerful Colonies, and that their liberty, rights and independence were to be taken away from them by the people of the Province in any other manner testified, the preamble of the Act reciting that this Province had expressed a desire to be confederated with Canada, and that the Imperial Legislature were led to believe that this Province had expressed such a desire, a formal and untrue statement.

That the Colonies were politically allied to each other by their common relationship to the Queen and her Empire in a more peaceable and less dangerous connection than under any other system of government, and that the same could be dissolved even in the fairest, wisest and most judicious principles.

Majesty the Queen and Her Government are unjustly, as they are well aware that fraud and deception were practised upon them by those who misrepresented the benefits of the Union, and that the Imperial Government will not venture to describe, desired that Confederation might be forced upon the Province without the consent and against the will of the people.

That a humble address be presented to the Queen, imploring Her Majesty that her loyal people of Nova Scotia do not desire to be in any manner confederated with Canada, and praying Her Majesty to revoke her Proclamation and to cause the British North American Act to be repealed, so far as it regards the Province of Nova Scotia.

NEWS BY THE ENGLISH MAIL.

An English Mail was received at the General Post Office, at Charlottetown, on Saturday night last. The following is a summary of news which is up to the 24th inst.:-

Mr. W. A. Maxwell, (Liberal) has been returned for Kingsburgh, in place of Mr. Mackie (Liberal).

A public meeting held in London, on Tuesday night, under the auspices of the Reform League, was devoted to discussing the proposed measures of the Government, and demanding a more comprehensive measure of re-distribution than that proposed by the Government.

A special meeting of the members of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce was held on Wednesday, under the Presidency of Mr. G. D. Russell, to consider the subject of the bankruptcy laws, and of other matters relating to commercial credit and morality, with a view to determining whether it was or was not expedient for the Chamber to take any steps in relation to these matters.

A conference of working men, clergy, and others, was held at Holywell, on Saturday, under the presidency of the Rev. Mr. Jones, to discuss the "cases of the poor." The sitting lasted from 10 o'clock with a short interval at 11, although the speakers were invited to sit on the ground.

New York, Feb. 18.—Gold 141 1/2. A great meeting at Birmingham yesterday, John Bright made a speech. He predicted the wrong of Ireland in past extension of the late Fenian outrage, and begged for church and legislative reform. Mr. Bright said that there was nothing that the United States Government could do, were Ireland a part and parcel of the United States.

The Board of trade inquiry relative to the loss of the steamship Chicago, near Queenstown, has resulted in the suspension of the master's certificate for six months, the cause being of opinion that he acted carelessly in permitting the vessel to start on a voyage, after obtaining soundings in 10 fathoms.

An Edinburgh jury has awarded £1,200 damages in an action for breach of promise to marry, brought by Miss Fugh, who up to a recent period was estranged with the man, Bruce Ogilvy, brother of the Earl of Airlie.

The Messenger de St. Louis contains a speech at Bristol, and the discussions in the Italian Parliament, and to the good understanding existing between Prussia and Austria, contents that a conciliatory spirit prevails among the great Powers, the same annual shows that in the present state of European civilization peace is at once the duty and interest of all nations.

Ten respectable editors of the incriminated Paris journals have been found guilty of a violation of the press laws, and have each been sentenced to six months in prison, and a fine of 1000 francs.

Reports are rife in Paris that the King of Italy meditates a coup d'etat and that five divisions of the army have been ordered to march to Rome, the object being to suppress the events of a very disturbing nature are occurring in various parts of the kingdom, and particularly in Naples, where an insurrection is considered imminent.

The betrothal of Prince Humbert, Crown Prince of Italy, with the Princess Margaria, daughter of the Duke of Genoa, has been officially announced at Florence.

Notwithstanding the one-franc press are circulating, some with the effigy of Prince Humbert, King of the Two Sicilies, and others with that of Humbert, King of Northern Italy. Both these issues bear on the obverse "Confederazione Italiana," and both were struck in France.

A second portion of the French Expeditionary force to Rome, under the command of General Lamarmora, has arrived at Civita Vecchia.

In reply to an address presented to the King of Prussia by the Prussian Delegation, His Majesty has ordered that the Prussian Government should not be bound to protect the interests of his Catholic subjects and the integrity and independence of the Union, but to protect the interests of his Protestant subjects and the integrity and independence of the Union.

The Chamber of Justice (Kammergericht) has annulled the decision of the tribunal of Bamberg, which condemned the Disputo to two years' imprisonment for abuse of authority in the Chamber. It has sentenced him to only three months, and an imprisonment of four months in case of non-payment.

Notwithstanding the more friendly feeling which is said to have recently grown up between the Governments of France and Prussia, there are indications that the old feud between the two nations is not yet entirely forgotten.

Although Russia has recently assumed a more friendly attitude in the Eastern Question, there are indications that the intrigues she has been carrying on for months are likely to be renewed.

The Russian journal asserts that, according to private intelligence received in Warsaw, an army of 200,000 men is to be assembled in Poland, and is to be sent to the frontiers of the Austrian Empire, in order to be ready for a sudden expedition.

It is stated that the British Government is preparing a hostile movement against the Emperor of Austria, and that the British fleet is to be sent to the Adriatic, in order to be ready for a sudden expedition.
