Mr. Jarvis: Madam Speaker, I am sorry the Minister did not hear the question. The 200,000 jobs to which he referred are largely in the service and natural resource industry. I am delighted for those people finally being gainfully employed, but I am talking about the lack of recovery in the manufacturing sector where tens of thousands of skilled workers are not able to put their skills to work, not only in their own interests but in the interests of the country. Apparently, and the Minister can confirm this, this situation is attributable to the manufacturers' uncertainty and lack of confidence.

RESTORATION OF CONFIDENCE

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my question to the Minister, on behalf of those tens of thousands of skilled manufacturing workers now without a job, is to ask what steps he proposes to take in an attempt to restore confidence and give some certainty to those employers and those jobless Canadians.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would advise the Hon. Member to go back and take a more careful reading of those figures.

Mr. Jarvis: I did.

Mr. Axworthy: What he would find if he did that—

Mr. Jarvis: I did.

Mr. Axworthy: —is that in the last month there was a net gain of 32,000 jobs in the manufacturing area. This shows there is a beginning of a positive trend, and with the introduction of the budget of the Minister of Finance in April, which has set out a number of incentives for the private sector, we fully expect that trend will expand and enhance itself in the months to come.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

ISSUANCE OF CONTRACTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development. At a time when medium and small businesses across Canada are struggling to survive, and when a federal Crown corporation is in business to encourage Canadian small and medium sized business to obtain overseas or foreign contracts as a result of a Crown corporation bringing foreign contracts together for Canadian suppliers, does the Minister feel strongly that the Crown corporation should be sensitive to providing those opportunities across Canada as opposed to simply one region of Canada?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I do not know how one should answer such a hypothetical question. The fact is that Crown corporations, by definition, are created in the national interest and, therefore, have to be sensitive to national responsibilities, and that means also regional sensitivities in the national context.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL CORPORATION—BRITISH COLUMBIA SUPPLIERS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, if Crown corporations are to have regional sensitivities, particularly during these difficult economic times, I want to inform the Minister of State for Economic Development that the Canadian Commercial Corporation provided $554 million worth of orders to suppliers across Canada, yet only 1 per cent of those orders was issued in British Columbia to British Columbia suppliers. Does the Minister support this obvious form of discrimination? If not, what is he prepared to do about it?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, on issues of procurement and contracting we try to distribute work across the regions. I do not know what specific contracts the Hon. Member is referring to when he talks about discrimination or what were the products involved.

Mr. Riis: There were $554 million in orders.

Mr. Johnston: If the Hon. Member can produce specific evidence I will be more than pleased to bring it to the attention of the responsible Minister.

TRADE

ACCESS TO UNITED STATES MARKETS

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Canada stands unattached to any major trading bloc, yet Canada is one of the most trade dependent nations in the world. One-third of our GNP is generated by foreign trade, and one out of every four jobs in dependent upon foreign trade. Given the fact that 70 per cent of Canada's export market is in the United States, is the Government planning any new sets of arrangements with the United States which, while ensuring our own Canadian sovereignty, will also ensure secured access to vital American markets?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Government is seeing its Ministers cross the border almost in a perpetual fashion.

An Hon. Member: By JetStars.

Mr. Trudeau: There are constant exchanges of visits between Canadian Government Ministers and Ministers in the United States of America, not only trade Ministers but Communication Ministers, Immigration Ministers, and the Transport Minister.

Miss MacDonald: And Gerry Regan.

Mr. Trudeau: There is a great deal of day-to-day contact in the United States. We have several trade officials dispersed across that country in embassies and consulates. The Government realizes, as the Hon. Member puts it, that the United States is and will remain our most important trading partner.

That being said, Madam Speaker, this Government has looked at other possibilities, and I believe there is one candidate who presented another possibility to the Tory convention. It is one that we have not accepted and it is one, I understand, which the Tory Party itself has not accepted, namely, another greater continental link between the two countries.

Mr. Wenman: Madam Speaker, I would be concerned about the informality of the relationship that exists and wonder, with the vulnerability of the Canadian market, whether that is an adequate response.

CANADIAN TRADE WITH ASEAN COUNTRIES

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, let us turn for a moment to something else. Canada must also increase its trading relationships not only with the United States but also with the newly industrialized nations. In January of this year the Prime Minister undertook a tour of the Asian Pacific region and returned to report to this House on January 20 that, while no trade agreements had been signed, the ASEAN bloc became "aware of the vast trading possibilities potential between us." Six months later, and given Canada's continuing need for expanded markets to broaden its international trading base and thereby increase job creation in Canada, can the Prime Minister tell the House at this time, specifically six months later, what new trade arrangements have been made or are being negotiated as a result of the Prime Minister's and his other Ministers' visits to the Asian Pacific Rim?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, that is obviously a question for the Minister of State for International Trade.

Mr. Crosbie: Where is he?

Mr. Trudeau: I am sure he will be happy to answer it when he is in the House.

Mr. Crosbie: After seeing his family again.

Mr. Trudeau: The Hon. Member will recall that my trip to the Pacific Rim was not met with universal favour on the other side of the House. Still I am glad to see that at least one Tory over there thinks it important to find new markets. I can assure the Hon. Member he shares that view with many people on this side, and that is why the Minister for international trade has had an extended trip to the Pacific Rim countries. I know for a fact that the businessmen who were with me, and whom I have met since, thought that trip was very important, and that they see their prospects for trade vastly improved.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

GOVERNMENT'S ELECTION PROMISE ON PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. During the 1980 election the Liberal Party promised Canadians cheap gas.

Mr. Crosbie: What a joke.

Mr. Gurbin: The Liberal Government, through the National Energy Program, has given us loss of investment, loss of jobs, and high gasoline prices. For the upcoming discussions and negotiations in July, I would like to know whether or not the Minister has directions or whether he has been given instructions to change the National Energy Program to revitalize the industry and to fulfil the promise he made to Canadians prior to the last election.

• (1430)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I would like to know what is the view of the Hon. Member on the subject. So far this year we have had some negotiations with the Government of Alberta. In 1983 the cash flow of the industry in Canada will be higher than the cash flow of last year, while in the United States it will be the reverse situation. One company was very happy to report the other day that it was not able to sell its assets in Canada because they were the only ones with which it was making profits at this time in its international operations. There are some problems in the oil and gas industry at this time caused by the decline in the international price, but we are doing our best to ensure that the Canadian industry remains as viable as possible.

Mr. Gurbin: I say to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that we know the problem. What we need is definitive and constructive action.

EMPLOYMENT CREATED BY DRILLING RIGS

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Labour. He will be aware that 1.5 million Canadians continue to be unemployed. Also, he will know that for each oil or gas rig that operates in Canada there are 700 man-years of employment created, and $10 million worth of investment.

Given those facts, and the fact that two-thirds of all oil rigs in Canada are not functioning now, has the Minsiter of Labour made any representation to the Minister of Energy to change the National Energy Program so that we can get oil rigs back to work and have the best possible long-term job creation program in Canada?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is presenting a situation which is well under consideration in terms of job creation and on many occasions has been expressed in the House by the Minister of Employment and Immigration. If the Hon. Member would like me to make representations on job creation, I can assure him that the Minister is fully aware of the situation, is consistently acting on creating jobs in a variety of ways, and is fully cognizant of the situation.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

COMMISSION'S RECOMMENDATION ON MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. The McDonald Royal Commission took four years to prepare three volumes of recommendations, costing Canadian taxpayers $10 million. If one phrase can sum up the essence of that Commission, it would be the ultimate necessity for ministerial responsibility over the Security Service.

In light of the ability of the Director General to override the Minister, even if the Minister objects to the matter, why have the Minister and the Government stripped the heart out of the McDonald Royal Commission recommendations? Why have they repudiated it? Why in these circumstances is the Government violating a basic tent of parliamentary democracy, namely, ministerial responsibility over the Security Service?

[Translation]

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I disagree with the Hon. Member's suggestion that we have failed to consider the main recommendations of the McDonald Commission. We did, in fact, accept the principal recommendations which included the separation of security services and the creation of a civilian agency that would provide for greater control by and accountability to the House of Commons.

[English]

ROLE OF REVIEW COMMITTEE

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question on the same subject is directed to the same Minister. In view of the three Privy Councillors who will form and comprise the review committee with which I agree, and in view of the fact that the Government appoints them, that they all have an oath of office, and would be pre-eminent Canadians, will the Minister tell the House why they would not be entrusted with Cabinet confidences that are held by the Security Service? Is the Government in a position to answer that question?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, in so far as the point in the former question about the power of the Minister in relation to the power of the Director is concerned, the system composed in the legislation, copied incidentally from Australian parliamentary democracy which works very well, was designed to assure that in moving the agency from the RCMP where there was considerable public assurance and confidence that there was no partisan abuse of the agency it provided for the direction and safeguard that the Director would have the final authority only in relation to a particular case, not in relation to the over-all direction of the agency. Also it provided that there would be an assurance the new agency, for which the Solicitor General would be accountable to Parliament, would clearly not be subject to any partisan direction and that it could not be abused by the government of the day. That is the whole reason for the safeguard.

So far as confidences of Privy Councillors are concerned, that is a general position the Government has taken in the access to information law and in the proposal in this area. Great progress has been made in making the Government fully accountable and in making its documents fully accessible. To make Cabinet confidences available would be damaging to the structure of Cabinet Government as it is known in Canada.

I look forward very much to discussing these relatively technical issues with the Hon. Member and with other Hon. Members opposite in committee, when the Bill proceeds to committee. Meanwhile I think the Hon. Member would agree with me and with commentators who have analysed the Bill that it represents a considerable step forward in safeguarding the privacy and civil liberties of Canadians.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

REQUEST THAT PUBLIC INQUIRY BE INSTITUTED

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In light of the growing concern among Canadians as to the economic viability of the nuclear industry in Canada, the ongoing problems with waste storage, and in terms of the export of our Candu technology to such countries as Argentina, countries which are clearly interested in using the nuclear fuel cycle to create atomic weapons, would the Minister tell the House at what point he is prepared to have a full public inquiry into the entire nuclear industry and nuclear cycle in Canada?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I appear regularly in front of committees of the House and the Hon. Member never came to question me on that subject. The Candu reactor is a technology developed by Canadians which has worked very well so far. As long as a country wants to sign the appropriate international obligations about utilization of that energy, I think we should be able to sell that technology, because the Candu reactor is one of the best performing instruments in atomic energy around the world.

Mr. Fulton: I have attended committees around the House for the last four years and I rarely saw the Minister of Energy there. I remind him that this is Question Period and that is why I am asking the question.

SELECTION OF REACTOR SITES IN NORTHERN REGIONS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, approximately ten days ago I asked the Minister about the Slowpoke III proposals that have been put out. The Minister said that he did not know anything about them. He must know by now that his regional directors across Canada are being asked to evaluate siting in at least 400 communities for Slowpoke III nuclear reactors across northern Canada. Would he tell the House, and northerners who might be watching, just exactly what kind of public process or public inquiry there will be in relation to the Slowpoke III, which has a very dangerous waste storage problem for spent fuel?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I think there is no danger at present. Some of these plans have been in operation in universities, and some technicians are looking at the possibility of using that technology in many other places in Canada, but there are no specific plans to proceed at this time with that. If we decide to proceed we will take action to ensure that there is the appropriate consultation with the localities.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ACQUISITION OF CAST SHIPPING GROUP—GOVERNMENT APPROVAL

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It appeared that it would have been useful, prior to Cabinet taking a decision with respect to a Canadian National takeover of Cast, that the combines investigation hearings into that matter should have been completed, that the CTC hearings should have been completed, and that, at the very minimum, the Standing Committee on Transport should have had an opportunity to examine further the matters surrounding this situation. Could the Minister indicate whether or not Cabinet has now issued an Order in Council authorizing Canadian National's full takeover the Cast and its group?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Yes, Madam Speaker, indeed Cabinet authorized CN to negotiate an alliance of some kind with Cast, but the deal has not yet been done. The order in council is an authorization to negotiate on certain terms.

• (1440)

On the subject raised by my Hon. friend, first on the combines investigation, I already answered that question saying that I had consulted with the Minister responsible who told me there was no objection to any negotiation. On the second point, the CTC inquiry, it is the practice for both the private and public sector in Canada to conclude first and then refer to the CTC for approval or denial. That is the normal practice. We proceeded in that way in the knowledge that, in a previous case, the acquisition of Dart by CP ships, on the one-third basis, the CTC rendered a favourable decision, justified by the requirements of vertical integration. With respect to the committee, my hon. friend is a member of it. He can question the President of CNR at any time.

POSSIBILITY OF FREIGHT RATE WAR ON ATLANTIC SHIPPING ROUTES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, the Minister will be aware that any action by Cabinet may very well precipitate a massive North Atlantic Conference shipping rate war. Has the Minister taken advice and consulted with his Cabinet colleagues with respect to Cabinet not taking a decision until every public opportunity for objection to this move has been given? Has he done that, or will he give the House the undertaking that that will be done?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend raised this question the other day. I mentioned that members of the Cabinet were present at that time and consequently could listen to him. Indeed, this was done. However, the general result of honouring the requirements indicated by my hon. friend would be that we would have to wait for a year or so for all these authorizations, the Cabinet committee, the CTC, the Committee of the House of Commons on Transport, et cetera. There is a transaction to be made. It cannot wait until all parties have agreed to it. We are following the traditional pattern in Canadian decision making in these matters.

FISHERIES

RESTRUCTURING OF EAST COAST INDUSTRY—INQUIRY RESPECTING OFFSHORE FLEET

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development. In answer to a question from my colleague, the Hon. Member for Central Nova, the Prime Minister said with reference to fisheries that the delay was as a consequence of detailed negotiations with a lot of people other than the Government. The Minister said there was no split in the Cabinet committee. Everybody knows there has been a split. What position has the Cabinet committee taken in its negotiations with the Provinces and the industry with respect to nationalization of the offshore fleet?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the point I made is that there was a mandate given by the Cabinet committee to Mr. Kirby and his team of negotiators. They are currently negotiating pursuant to that mandate.

There have been extensive negotiations with the Province of Newfoundland. As the Prime Minister indicated, agreement has been reached on at least two documents between our Minister of Fisheries and the Minister of Fisheries of the Province of Newfoundland. There have been meetings that I participated in, with Premier Peckford. I had exchanges of correspondence pursuant to that with Premier Peckford. This week there are ongoing negotiations with the banks. The Hon. Member will appreciate that the bankers have a very real interest in how these negotiations materialize. This is what the Prime Minister was referring to, that there are detailed negotiations being conducted simultaneously to the extent possible on all fronts.

I can assure the Hon. Member that there was complete agreement on the mandate which Mr. Kirby and his negotiators are carrying forward on behalf of the Government.

REOPENING OF FISH PLANTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I remind the Minister that he has a mandate under the Fisheries Act to deal with all matters relating to fisheries. I therefore ask him, and not the Minister of State for Economic Development, to tell us if the decision has been reached on restructuring. Can he tell us what plants will be reopened, if all of the down deep-sea plants will be reopened and, if not, what plants will stay down and not be reopened? That question is critical to the thousands of plant workers and fishermen who are awaiting a decision by the Minister.

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I am happy to report to the Hon. Member that the Minister of Fisheries of Newfoundland and Labrador and myself have reached an agreement in principle. Since that time Cabinet has confirmed that agreement in principle which I reached with him. He has asked for several other amendments. Our Cabinet has agreed to them. All we are waiting for at this moment is for the different parties to give their consent to that agreement. I can tell the Hon. Member that, the sooner that is done, the sooner we will bring stability to the fishery in Newfoundland.

TEXTILES AND CLOTHING

INQUIRY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT MEETING WITH CLOTHING MANUFACTURERS ASSOCIATION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (External Relations).

Madam Speaker, I shall continue to defend the interests of my province, as I have always done in the past. Hon. Members are asking what I intend to do. I have a question for the Minister of State (External Relations). It is now two weeks ago since the Minister answered in the House that the Minister responsible would be meeting the garment industry within the next two weeks. Can the Minister inform the House today when the meeting requested by the industry's Association will take place?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations): Madam Speaker, the entire issue of the textile and garment industry is the responsibility of my colleague, the Minister of State for International Trade. When I answered the other day, I was doing so on his behalf, but since my colleague is now in the House, I think it would be up to him to answer this question.

Oral Questions

RENEGOTIATION OF QUOTAS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, can the Minister inform the House today whether a meeting will take place between the Minister and the garment industry, a meeting that has been requested for the purpose of discussing the renegotiation of quotas? If so, could the Minister inform the House when this meeting will take place?

[English]

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member may not be aware of the fact that I, along with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, met with representatives of the industry who are concerned about the present increase in the level of imports and garments. We have had thorough discussions. Pursuant to that meeting, a dossier was placed before the Cabinet for consideration. That consideration is now under way. I expect there will be a decision and possible action by Government in the very near future.

LABOUR RELATIONS

RESOLUTION OF EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS PILOTS' STRIKE

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. There have been negotiations and discussions for some six months with respect to the pilots' strike at Eastern Provincial Airways. Weekend press reports indicate there has been an agreement. Will the Minister share with the House some of the details as to when this agreement may be put into effect and as to when that company might be able to meet the transportation regulations in this country so that there will again be full service for the citizens of Atlantic Canada?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, the agreement in essence boils down to the fact that the striking pilots return to the payroll on June 10. The replacement pilots will work until August 30 as the striking pilots use up 50 per cent of their credited leave time and go through retraining. Following retraining, the striking pilots will be returned to the position they occupied prior to the strike. These, in essence, are the elements of the agreement.

UNITED STATES REQUEST TO TEST CRUISE MISSILE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. We have been informed today that the United States has in fact asked for approval to test the Cruise missile in Canada. The communique issued by the Minister of National Defence indicates two things. The first is that the proposed test program falls within the terms of the Canada-U.S. test and evaluation program agreement. And, in a somewhat contradictory way, the Minister indicates that officials of the Department of National Defence will now begin an assessment of the proposed test program. Given that there appears to be some contradiction, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if the proposal submitted by the U.S. falls within the terms four-square of the agreement signed between Canada and the United States. Will the review process that is to be undertaken be undertaken in such a way as to allow for public input?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct. There was a request made this morning to the Minister of National Defence. He consulted with me and we did announce this morning that the request had been received.

As to the question the Hon. Member puts, I must point out to him that the weapons testing agreement that had been signed many months ago with the United States was an umbrella agreement. What the Minister is stating now is that the request we have fits within that umbrella agreement. In other words, it is not a request for the test that would be made outside of the agreement or outside of the over-all understanding.

The purpose for the Minister and his Department now will be to examine and to assess, as the Minister says, the precise request, now that he has ascertained that it comes under the agreement. That is all that the Hon. Member's first paragraph or first quotation means, that it is within the terms of the umbrella agreement. But there was never any general understanding or particular one that everything submitted to us within the umbrella agreement would be agreed to. Now we have to look at each specific test, Madam Speaker.

PUBLICIZING OF REQUEST

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister further if it will be possible for the submission that has now been received by the Canadian Government to be made available to the Members of the House of Commons, as was the test agreement, in order that we can determine, on behalf of the people whom we represent, what effect this particular proposal or set of proposals will have on the communities or areas that will be affected by the testing. Further, I ask him again if there will be further opportunity for public input prior to the Government making a final decision.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I cannot say whether the request itself could be made public. I have seen it; I have not read it. I would think that is a question on which I would have to seek advice.

As to the concern of the Hon. Member, I do not think he has to wait to see any fine print to make up his mind as to whether we should test the Cruise or not. The parameters are well known. It is a non-armed missile. It is a request which comes under the two-track decision, or at least it is a request which Cabinet is considering as related to the two-track decision of NATO taken in December, 1979, and obviously it will involve testing over some part of Canada. If the Hon. Member needs more details to know whether he is in favour of it or opposed to it, perhaps he could ask me what those details are and I would attempt to give him the answer.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I personally do not require any further information to determine that I am opposed to it. My concern is that the public of Canada should be made fully aware of the implications of the announcement which was made today.

GOVERNMENT'S DECISION—TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, is there any doubt in the mind of the Prime Minister that Canada has now committed itself fully to promote Cruise testing within this umbrella agreement as submitted by the U.S. Government to the Canadian Government, as of today's announcement? Will the Prime Minister undertake not to announce his decision, if there is any decision to be made, while the House is not in session during the summer months?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as to the first part of the question, I would point out to the Hon. Member that he is going back to something that I believe his Party has been saying for quite a while, that we had been asked, that we had given an answer, and so on. I think now at least he should be recognizing that we have not been asked before. We were only asked this morning to test the non-armed Cruise missile. The answer will be forthcoming and I would like to give it as soon as practical, Madam Speaker. I do not know how long it will take to examine the specifics of that request. If it happens before the end of June, we will certainly inform the House. If we have not made up our minds before that, Madam Speaker, and the assessment is not finished, then it could only be announced some time later. Whether it would be appropriate to call the House back some time in July or August, assuming the decision can be made then, is a consideration the Hon. Member may want to put to the various House Leaders so they could examine it.

REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY DEBATE ON ISSUE

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and deals with the same subject. Unlike the NDP, I think that we would rather debate this before the decision is made rather than afterward.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: An official with the Prime Minister's office has said that the decision would be made in late summer. I wonder if the Prime Minister could guarantee us that we will have an opportunity to debate this matter before the final decision is made.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not understand the nature of the jibe at the NDP. The spokesman for the NDP just made his position clear, which, I take it, is that of his Party, that he is opposed to testing of the non-armed Cruise missile. I understand from the other side of the House that each candidate for the leadership and, presumably, Mr. Mulroney who has won, is in favour of testing the non-armed Cruise missile. Therefore, what is the debate about at this stage, Madam Speaker? If the Hon. Member wants to debate it, tomorrow is—

Mr. Nielsen: Stop sitting on the fence.

Mr. Trudeau: The Hon. Member for Yukon has moved geographically, Madam Speaker. I think this is a sign of things to come. I hope to see him move further and further until he is—

Some Hon. Members: Out, out!

Mr. Trudeau: If the Hon. Members opposite will give me four minutes more, I will be out, and happy to be so. With the Member for Yukon, it will take a little longer, but we will see him behind the curtains and out of Parliament Hill, I think, before the year is out.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I repeat, Madam Speaker, that presumably there is a House Leader over there. If the Opposition still want to debate this, they can raise the subject tomorrow and we will hear all of those fine speeches from the Tories as to why we should support the testing of the non-armed Cruise missile.

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, we want to debate this with the information on what the Americans are proposing in our hands. There are many points in the umbrella agreement with which we are not in full agreement.

NATURE OF REQUEST FOR TESTING

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. I would ask him if the proposal he has now received from the United States is a proposal that, as one would gather from paragraph 4 of note 64 which is the umbrella agreement, is a project arrangement providing implementation arrangements for each test of evaluation projects that shall be negotiated and concluded by the Department of National Defence. Can he assure us that he will pass this to the Cabinet, and can he assure us that we will have a chance to debate it with the document in our hands so that we will know what we are talking about?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, first I would like to make the position of the Department clear. The umbrella agreement signed in February for the possible testing of some of the American Cruise missiles, was not a commitment to test any of them. The only commitment that was made, according to this agreement, was that the Americans have to make a request and then we will decide if we accept it or not. We are not committed to test anything until the request is made.

This morning we did received a request from the United States Defence Department to test the unarmed guided Cruise missile. We must now look into the document that they have submitted to us. As the Hon. Member who just asked the question is a former Minister of Defence, he should know that these documents are confidential. At some time, Canada and the United States might together agree to declassify some of the information. As far as the Hon. Member is concerned, he should therefore know that, between the two countries, the document is confidential and I cannot divulge the contents of it.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INITIATE PARLIAMENTARY DEBATE

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I direct a question to the Prime Minister that deals with the same subject. One of the great weaknesses of the umbrella agreement is that it does not call for any of the subsequent proposals by the United States to be debated in Parliament. The agreement does not call for parliamentary approval.

• (1500)

This is the first request made under that umbrella agreement. It therefore becomes a precedent as to how our Government follows it. We on this side very much want to see that the precedent laid down is one of having parliamentary debate on the issue. Will the Prime Minister set the tone for anything that is agreed upon under the umbrella agreement by bringing this first request into the House of Commons as a Government issue to be debated by Parliament?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I said, there is an opposition day tomorrow.

An Hon. Member: This is a Government day.

Mr. Trudeau: It is just possible that the NDP would want to agree with the Hon. Member and debate this subject tomorrow. We would be happy to discuss it. As a matter of fact the House knows that I am always ready to make deals. If we could get the Crow into Committee this week, say, I am sure I could convince our House Leader to find a day next week to debate this important subject.

As to the fact that it is not in the umbrella agreement, surely the Hon. Member, as a former Minister, should realize that when we sign an agreement with the United States we do not undertake to tell the United States how Parliament will conduct its affairs.

The Hon. Member says that we should set an example. I would say, somewhat nostalgically to her, that if she had set an example in the Fall of 1979 when she was Minister before going to Brussels to sign the NATO two-track agreement, and if there had been a debate in the House, perhaps the positions of the Government and Parliament would be somewhat different now. When we became the Government we were faced with the two-track decision.

An Hon. Member: That is a cheap shot.

Mr. Trudeau: Hon. Members opposite talk about cheap shots. I have always said that we supported the two-track decision. That has been my position. But the Hon. Member is in a very sorry position to say it should have been debated in this House when it was a fundamental decision for the alliance, and I never saw it being debated in this House by any means.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PETITIONS

BILL C-85—RECONSIDERATION OF BUY AND SELL PROVISION

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, I have a duty to present a petition on behalf of my constituents. The purpose of this petition, signed by a number of citizens in central Alberta, is to registrer concern over Bill C-85, an Act to establish a corporation called Canagrex.

The nature of this petition is to request that Clause 14, the clause that provides the potential for the Government of Canada to do all buying and selling of all agricultural products, be removed from Bill C-85. I hope we can have further discussion on this clause before the Bill passes.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I have a petition from the constituents of Portage-Marquette in the Province of Manitoba. Approximately 400 people have asked that the buy and sell powers of Canagrex be removed. They point out that they are in favour of those parts of the proposed Crown corporation, Canagrex, that provide additional support for Canadian agricultural exports, but are not in favour of the Government receiving the buy and sell powers which are embodied in Clause 14. We hope that Parliament will not enact this legislation until Clause 14 has been removed.

MR. RIIS—BROADCASTING ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure to offer the following petition regarding the amending of the Broadcasting Act to include abusive comment or abusive pictorial representation on the basis of sex, asking for its removal from the Act.

THE LATE HON. SENATOR MAURICE LAMONTAGNE

EXPRESSIONS OF CONDOLENCES

Mrs. Eva Côté (Rimouski-Témiscouata): Madam Speaker, I would like to say that today, Canada has lost a great Canadian in the person of the Hon. Senator Maurice Lamontagne. I am speaking today because Senator Lamontagne was born in Mont-Joli, a small town about 20 miles from Rimouski. He received his formal education at a collège classique in Rimouski, and was a Member of this House and President of the Privy Council before being appointed Senator. Madam Speaker, with your permission, I want to express my admiration for Senator Lamontagne who was a great Canadian and a well-known economist, a person of whom the people of the Lower St. Lawrence region are extremely proud. All of us, either directly or indirectly, have benefited from his experience and the years he spent teaching young people at various Canadian educational institutions and also when he acted as economic adviser to two illustrious Liberal Prime Ministers, the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent and the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I also wish to express personally, at this time, since the Hon. Member has already done so on behalf of us all, the admiration I had for this man of many merits to whom we owe so much, both as an intellectual and as a source of moral leadership, as the Hon. Member implied. I must say, however, that to many of us, Senator Lamontagne was also the archetype of the academic, of the man who stood above the fray, but nevertheless decided to plunge into politics with all the problems and ingratitude such a decision signifies. He did so out of dedication to his country, and he believed it was his duty to enter the political arena with all the trouble that awaits those who take this step. For me personally, Mr. Lamontagne was a truly outstanding man and a good friend whom I shall always remember with feelings of profound gratitude.

[English]

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, on behalf of my colleagues and myself may I join in the expressions of sympathy that my colleagues opposite, including the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), have expressed.

Tributes to Late Senator Lamontagne

I was privileged to serve on more than one committee with the late Senator Lamontagne. Those of us who denigrate the committee work of both the Senate and this House would find inspiration in the contributions that the late Senator made to committee work. As a Member of the Senate Reform Committee, one of my greatest regrets is that I will not have the benefit of his participation or testimony before the Committee. I knew that he held very strong views and I am not sure I would have agreed with all of them, but I would have respected them. I think I speak for every member of that Committee in expressing a very particular and specific regret.

On a personal note, I had the great privilege, pleasure and enjoyment of travelling to Mexico to meet with the Senator's daughter there. I even delivered a parcel to his daughter from the Senator. I remember the kind moments that the Senator and I had together following that trip discussing his family and mine.

On behalf of all my colleagues in this Party I must say that we have lost a distinguished Canadian and, I think for most of us, a very warm and endearing friend.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I want to join in expressing our sympathy on the passing of Senator Maurice Lamontagne and express the condolences of this Party to his family and friends.

One thinks of the many things that the senator stood for. As an example, he called for a Standing Committee on Science and Technology, recognizing the importance of new technologies in our society. Perhaps it is a tremendous tribute to him that the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates is about to make or has just made that recommendation to the House. I think that is a very good testimony to him.

[Translation]

I also knew him as member of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution, and he has always presented the fair and constructive federal position on the future of Canada, on the Constitution and on federalism.

[English]

On behalf of this Party may I express to his family and friends our deepest sympathy.

• (1510)

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I too would like to add a few words because Senator Lamontagne and I were co-chairmen of two joint parliamentary committees.

[English]

I would like to say, Madam Speaker, that I probably had closer contact with him than most other people now in this Chamber, since we jointly chaired one parliamentary committee on the Constitution and for a considerable time another one.

I believe he is one of the outstanding minds which I have come across in Parliament. He was able to turn his mind not only to his principal subject of economics but also to any other subject which was at hand. In addition to that, he was a thorough gentleman. He was a faithful friend, a good companion, and much beloved of those with whom he was in contact.

I would like to extend my regards, and those of others from this House who served with him on committees. To his wife and family, our most sincere sympathy.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: I believe that Hon. Members will want me to express the condolences of all members in a letter to the family of Senator Lamontagne on the occasion of the deep bereavement suffered by the family. If I may, I should like to express my personal admiration for Senator Lamontagne whose career has been so widely acclaimed by many parliamentarians and the general public. It is always hazardous to try to sum up someone's career, but I think that the least that can be said about Senator Lamontagne is that he was a firm believer in national unity and that, above all, he strove to find ways and means to cement that unity which is so essential to the various provinces of Canada.

On your behalf and in my name, I offer our heartfelt condolences to the family of Senator Lamontagne.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,577, 4,862 and 4,863.

[Text]

CMHC—DISPOSAL OF PROPERTIES

Question No. 4,577—Mrs. Cossitt:

1. Does the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation list the properties it has repossessed due to defaults on mortgage payments with (a) multiple listing brokers (b) trust companies (c) any other type of real estate agent?

2. Does the Corporation call tenders for the listing of these properties and (a) if so (i) is it a public or an invited tender (ii) what were the complete details of all tenders called in the Constituency of Leeds—Grenville for the past five years, including the names and addresses of those who tendered, the amounts tendered and the date of tender (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

1. (a), (b) and (c) CMHC lists single units and small multiple unit projects for sale on MLS through local real estate boards. Where MLS is not available, properties are listed with active brokers in the area who are members of the local real estate board. Large multiple unit projects are offered for sale to the private sector through requests for proposals from potential, interested purchasers through advertisements and direct mailings.

2. (a) No. (i) and (ii) N/A. (b) The large volume of individual units handled by CMHC prohibits the calling of tenders for individual units. The request for proposal technique has proven to be the best method of disposal of large multiple unit projects to date.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): The contract was awarded by the Department of Supply and Services on behalf of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and not the Department of National Defence.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. McKenzie: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary about a question I placed on the Order Paper on November 18, 1981. I raised this question last week; it is question No. 3,441. It is with regard to the three Cabinet Ministers who took three JetStars to Winnipeg on the same day.

The reason I am raising it so soon again is that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is supplying the manifest information to members of the news media but is refusing to supply the information to Hon. Members of Parliament. I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary to make inquiries of the Minister of Transport, and could he inform me what the Minister is going to do about it?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I cannot advise the Hon. Member what the Minister will do about it, but I will assure my hon. friend that I will take it up with the Minister and convey the Hon. Member's request to him.

Mr. McKenzie: On a further point of order, Mr. Speaker, in this question to the Parliamentary Secretary I asked who they were transporting on these aircraft. I was wondering if the Parliamentary Secretary would inquire whether the three Ministers were taking relatives to Winnipeg or were they transporting Liberal campaign workers to work in the provincial election of 1981 in Manitoba?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I will raise these concerns with the Minister.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANAGREX

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan that Bill C-85, an Act to establish a corporation called Canagrex to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural and food products in Canada, be read a third time and do pass.

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be taking part in the debate on third reading of this Bill, and I am looking forward to the moment when the question will be put. We are going to have a chance to do something positive for Canada. This will be another step towards a stronger Canada and a more prosperous future.

This morning, I was very pleased to hear the Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) express his agreement with the principle of Canagrex. It is a fact, Mr. Speaker, that, with a few exceptions, we have varying views on the way this Bill should be implemented. However, I wonder who understands agriculture and the farmer. Is it the consumer? Is it the editorial writers or the organizations that stand up for the rights of farmers in this country?

Mr. Speaker, I think that those in the best position to judge are the large organizations that defend the interests of our producers. When I sat on the Standing Committee on Agriculture, almost all of these organizations supported this legislation aimed at exporting Canadian agricultural products throughout the world. I noticed that all provincial organizations and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and almost all its branches were almost totally in support of the Bill's concept.

Nowdays, it is fashionable to be aggressive and to criticize pratically everything. However, if we are to progress, we must make constructive decisions and have confidence in the future. This legislation is based on the confidence we have in our farmers, processors and business people, and on our confidence in our natural ability to produce and market even more than we are doing at the present time.

This legislation offers Canadians in the agri-food industry a set of new mechanisms that will help them compete on foreign markets. These objectives deserve our support, Mr. Speaker. On many occasions, the Minister has said that he would like to see an agricultural export corporation very shortly. He has said this so many times and for so long, that some people wondered whether the Bill would ever be passed at all. Quite sincerely, I am very glad to see that we are now seeing the light at the end of the tunnel, and that Canagrex has almost become a reality.

Canagrex

Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Agriculture sat for four months. We have been sitting for hours to consider the third reading and final stages of this legislation. Thirty-two or 37 different groups took part in our discussions. All the major organizations contributed their ideas, and today, I must say that, as I said earlier, all the provincial federations, all those who are in fact working in the agri-food industry, are practically unanimous in saying that the corporation is necessary. Once again, I would like to say that we have some differences as to the implementation of this legislation, but it would seem that on the whole, most people approve of this legislation, which will have a very positive effect on the agricultural industry.

With a $12.3 million budget for three years, a Board of 11 Directors and a staff of 20, Canagrex will be a small but powerful corporation whose main role will be to act as catalyst between foreign buyers and Canada's producers, processors and exporters. It will be particularly useful to small businesses by helping them steer through the uncharted waters of new foreign markets. As one of our colleagues from Prince Edward Island so aptly put it last week, we in this country have major organizations which look after our main crops, but we also have very remote regions which need that assistance to be more dynamic, more productive, and to export more. During his trips abroad, the Minister soon became convinced that there was a need for such services, and he constantly noticed that a demand for our food products did exist. Unfortunately, nothing was being done to translate that demand into export orders. No one bothered to find out whether the necessary measures were being taken to identify those markets and follow through to the final sale.

The Minister is not saying that our export efforts have failed, for Canada's agricultural food export industry is strong and flourishing, as evidenced by the fact that last year we exported close to $9 billion worth of agricultural products and had a trade balance surplus of $3.1 billion. In spite of that, a number of sectors of the agricultural food industry throughout Canada could be improved if appropriate steps were taken to find new markets for our increasing production.

Canada needs exports because they are at the core of our economic activities. They are vital for our economy as a whole. Since our domestic market is rather small and cannot absorb everything we can produce, we must have foreign markets to achieve our full productive capacity as a nation and as individuals. In addition, Canada being one of the three or four countries which export more food than they import, it has the obligation, generally speaking, of helping others who increasingly suffer from famine. On a per capita basis, we have five times more agricultural land than the world average. It would be a shame to leave that land fallow when hundreds of millions of people are going hungry and would like our food.

I should think there is no need for me to dwell on these points because they are rather obvious. I would simply like to mention a few features of the new corporation and emphasize the guarantees that Canagrex will continue to serve the agricultural food industry.

As Hon. Members know, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Canagrex is to promote, facilitate and, to a limited extent, engage in exports of agricultural and food products. Most members of the Board of Directors of Canagrex will come from the private sector and the President will be responsible for the operations. He or she will be on the Board of Directors and will exercise the duties assigned to the Board.

Canagrex will help private businesses as well as marketing councils and co-operatives in various ways such as financial services through loans or guarantees, advertising, consultation and information facilities, the search for markets, joint undertakings, as well as through grants or contributions to help develop and promote products, and provide the necessary infrastructure. Practically every group which appeared before the Standing Committee agreed on the need for Canagrex to provide credit, advertising and market identification services. Other groups, however, questioned the need for Canagrex to engage in the export trade. They feared that such an initiative could result in unfair competition with the private sector. I believe that those concerns are adequately met by the amendments to the Bill, as I intend to demonstrate.

In addition to the fact that most members of the board will be appointed from the private sector, a Policy Advisory Committee will be established. It will include representatives from all parts of the Canadian agri-food industry. Thus, Canagrex will benefit from the experience and the advice of the private and public sectors. Canagrex will not import, export or process products on its own initiative. It is not a marketing cooperative. Its services will only be provided on a voluntary basis. The most important amendment made to the Bill is probably the restriction placed on the powers of Canagrex to engage in the export trade. The Bill clearly states that Canagrex will not engage in the export of Canadian agricultural and food products to other countries except from state to state or in cooperation with, at the request of or jointly with the private sector.

It should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that the Canagrex concept is similar to what many other countries have already done to increase their share of the agri-food export market. As the Minister of Agriculture has pointed out this morning, we already have in Canada large organizations for the grain industry, such as the Canadian Wheat Board in Western Canada. This sector of the agricultural industry is very well organized and the Canadian Wheat Board has the same powers to purchase and export as Canagrex will have. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, I find it surprising that so many Members opposite are shocked that the Minister is making a praiseworthy effort to give Canagrex the same privileges and the same rights so that it may increase our export trade throughout the world. This is not a plot aimed at taking over the industry, as several Members opposite have said, but rather a response to meet acknowledged needs. I am firmly convinced that Canagrex will meet a real need and that it will give Canada the means to fill the ever increasing gap between the Canadian agri-food sector and our competitors. Reference was also made this morning to other countries which use similar instruments and are becoming increasingly aggressive on the export market.

I noticed recently that England, France, the United States and Mexico now have legislation to provide similar tools to Canagrex and are becoming increasingly aggressive on the export markets. In Canada, we are told to be very careful and to ask other people to deal with the problem. I am not blaming the system, Mr. Speaker. In the past, many people have tried to export our agricultural products, and as I said earlier, who knows agriculture better? Is it the merchants, the farmers or the agricultural organizations? I seriously wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether the major agricultural organizations are really more knowledgeable about the needs of the Canadian farmer and the needs of the export and foreign markets.

So, personally, I am not distressed about the fact that powers are to be given to that corporation, and that such powers will also be restricted. The day Canagrex will be going abroad to identify trading opportunities, it will inform all the producers and processers who are in a position to develop such opportunities by themselves, in co-operation with Canagrex.

It is clearly provided in the Bill that Canagrex will not handle products that come under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board or the Canadian Dairy Commission, so long as it has not been requested to do so. Whenever this will prove useful, Canagrex will resort to existing government services, such as those of trade commissioners.

I would like again to deal with the matter of checks on Canagrex activities, and suggest that this House has no cause for concern over the powers which will allow Canagrex to discharge the following responsibilities. First, Canagrex will have to identify and supply information on markets, and supply promotional information services.

Mr. Speaker, I see no production problem in this country at present, but we do have selling and exporting difficulties. I appreciate the fact that Canagrex will provide promotional and informational services that will be very important to farmers, namely with respect to the granting of loans and guarantees and the underwriting of insurance. When I was working with the Standing Committee on Agriculture, I have been aware all along that several of my colleagues were suggesting that Canagrex, or whatever corporation is to be established, should grant loans, assign guarantees and underwrite insurance. In my view, those requirements are essential to that corporation's efficiency, because on export markets now the majority of our producers do not have the know-how and expertise needed to penetrate those markets, and often those who have tried in the past, for a lack of know-how or information, have simply gone bankrupt or otherwise obtained contracts that were not profitable, where buyers failed to pay their debt or failed to pay for the products that were purchased.

Canagrex should also enter into joint ventures with private companies. It will act as a Crown agent in the negotiation of contracts between governments. The trend today in international trade, is for nations to deal on the government level. We have seen how North-African nations, other Arab countries and even Mexico, and the USSR are increasingly anxious to deal directly with government-controlled corporations. So, in my view, it is in Canada's best interests to have this corporation, which will be limited, which will have an annual budget and which will be subject every year to the Auditor General's examination.

Therefore, I want to suggest to my colleague opposite that both the grain industry and the Canadian Dairy Commission will remain outside the jurisdiction of the Canagrex corporation. Whenever Canagrex will be collecting products for an export contract, it will use public adjudicators and act in such a way as not to affect the competitive position of any agri-food export operation. It will not duplicate the work of the Canadian Wheat Board, as I said, nor that of the Canadian Dairy Commission. It will handle products falling under these organizations only at their request.

Five years after its inception, the performance of Canagrex will be subject to a complete review by the Standing Committee on Agriculture. As a further guarantee, as I said, the Auditor General can proceed to an exhaustive audit of the corporation's operations.

Indeed, in his latest report, the Auditor General has already pointed to the merits of Canagrex which, even before being established, was already taking very practical steps to become very dynamic and eliminate any concern it may have aroused.

To my mind, those clauses provide an overall protection for the private sector and the taxpayers. Indeed, we have taken the necessary steps to make sure that Canagrex will exercise its powers in a responsible manner.

Canagrex will provide tremendous opportunities especially with regard to products other than our traditional exports—wheat, feed crops, oilseeds and meat. A few commodities identified in joint studies carried out by Agriculture Canada and Industry, Trade and Commerce also include maple syrup, field peas, honey and other horticultural products.

I should like to add, Mr. Speaker, as one of my colleagues has said it so well last week, we have many productions in this country, especially at the horticultural level where producers, as opposed to other areas, have a surplus and they will now be in a position to be more dynamic on world markets. And also consider Mr. Speaker, that Canagrex should be most helpful with respect to all commodities especially in the central and eastern areas of the country so that we may become more dynamic on export markets and help reduce our trade balance.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would some Hon. Members care to address questions to the speaker who has just resumed his seat.

[English]

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order rather than to question the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Dionne). I do so in an effort to expedite the debate this afternoon. I have had some discussion with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). We would like to propose that our two or three remaining 20-minute periods this afternoon before 5.45 p.m. be split so that we can put forward two speakers. I recognize that the Minister or any Member of the House will reserve his or her right to utilize ten minutes in the form of questions. As far as House rules are concerned, Mr. Speaker, I realize that you have some difficulty with that. The responsibility would be placed on Members of my Party to discipline themselves and to watch the clock.

We would have to proceed on the basis of unanimous consent. Discussions have been held, and I think the Minister would agree with that proposal. If the House agrees, we would appreciate it very much.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, we have no objections on this side as long as they divide the 20 minutes amongst themselves and agree not to use any more than 20 minutes between the two speakers.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, we are quite prepared to support this recommendation in order to provide an opportunity for the maximum of speakers on this critical topic.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, first I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) the agriculture critic for our Party, for doing such an outstanding job in the presentation of the facts with respect to his position, our Party's position and the farmers' position as it relates to Canagrex. I believe it was a forthright and courageous statement which was presented with a great deal of integrity. I support his position totally.

The last speaker stated that Canagrex has but $12.6 million as a budget. Having been in the House for some 10 ten years now, I am very well aware of the fact that there are two ways by which that budget could be supplemented indefinitely at any time when it suits the Minister of the day. With approval from Treasury Board, he can get any additional amount of money which may be required and we shall later consider it in Supplementary Estimates. Therefore, the $12.6 million is not a constraining factor at this point in time.

Second, the Hon. Member referred to instruments of legislation which are applied in the United States in situations which require public treatment for the disposition of agricultural products. Yes, they have them but not in the socialistic form in which they now exist in Canagrex. Any suggestion that they are in such a form there is entirely deceptive as far as the public and Canadian farmers are concerned.

I think it is interesting to note that the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has agreed that he will support this Bill. At the same time he has expressed certain reservations about the fashion in which it will be done. He pleads for caution and good judgment in the administration of the Bill after it is passed. In fact, he reflects the position which many farm organizations in the West, particularly in Saskatchewan, have taken in their reserved judgment as to what the real value of this Bill is. I think the Minister of Agriculture would be very well advised at this time to give further consideration to the reservations expressed by the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville and a multitude of other farm organizations. If the Minister would reflect on the minutes of the meeting, he would see that the New Brunswick Potato Agency expressed strong opposition to the opportunity which this Bill would extend to the Government. It did not want the joint venture aspect of this Bill. It does in fact support the principles which this Bill suggests but it does not support the vehicles which we are legislating to make the Bill active. For instance, I have been pressing since my earliest Agriculture Committee meeting in this House for an international capability for the extension of our trade in agricultural products abroad. I strongly disagree with the vehicle which the Minister is going to use. In discussing this particular facet of the Bill I will explain my objections. I pleaded for more agricultural representation in the consulates of the world to represent Canadian trade. In 1972, in the earliest Agriculture Committee which I attended, I was advised that Canada has one full-time agricultural representative in our consulates abroad. We had just one.

I will acknowledge that there has been a further extension of that service and that we do now have some five official representatives in our embassies abroad. As well, we have some seconded people and some part-time people representing agricultural trade abroad. But we are still not universally represented for trade in this agricultural world which demands food.

I do in fact support the principle that we put greater emphasis on the international trade aspect and the extension of that capability world-wide. I do not support the concept that we put two bureaucracies in place which will find themselves in conflict, one from Agriculture and one from Industry, Trade and Commerce, or whatever Department now looks after that in this confused state of portfolio responsibilities.

I do support the principle of export credits and the principle of export insurance, but I do not support the concept that this should be extended to a Crown corporation. I think rather that it should be extended to traders in food in Canada who are recognized in the rest of the world. I do not suggest that it should go through a Crown corporation.

I do suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that we need these three things. I repeat, we need export credit, export insurance and agricultural expertise in our consulate representation abroad. We do need a capability to facilitate, to expedite and to finalize certain trade opportunities, but not a Crown corporation of the magnitude that is being put in place. I do suggest that we need influence for orderly markets, but I do not suggest that we legislate upon farmers of this land the criteria by which they may be able to produce and trade, which is what this Bill will do.

The Minister has tried to hide behind the fact that he really will not be doing much buying and selling, that he will not be getting any land, that he will not be producing anything, yet he insists on a joint venture. This is an indirect vehicle for the acquisition of land and the production of crops. That is the mildest way in which we can describe it. This Corporation will also allow the extension of this capability into the processing, marketing, buying and selling. The whole field of agriculture is engulfed. The Minister has been extending unto himself the capability of participation in agriculture from the sod to the starving millions of this world in every aspect of agricultural production, management, processing and sales. I do not like that aspect of this Bill.

I want to draw to the Speaker's attention and to the attention of this House that virtually every agricultural ministry in every provincial Government in Canada has expressed reservations. While supporting the three principles which I first enunciated, these ministries have asked that he amend and qualify the method of application and eliminate some of the vehicles the Minister proposes to put in place, particularly as it relates to joint ventures and to the Crown corporation.

The Minister has become personal when he referred to the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). I, too, have had conversation with the gentleman to whom the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) referred, and he did, as I do, agree with the principles contained in this Bill. But the Hon. Member objected to the method of application of the principles to the field of agriculture and their invasion of the privacy of the farmer, the marketing board and the market in general. This we cannot tolerate, and the misrepresentation and reflection upon a Member of this House is something which we hope to see no more.

Mr. Whelan: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. Member is imputing motives in saying that I said something that would degrade anyone at all.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Whelan: Just a minute, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Minister is entering into an argument with regard to what was said or not said. I believe we have an agreement with regard to time. There will be a period for an exchange of questions at the end, and I suggest the Minister reserve his comments until then. The Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain).

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, in closing I simply want to say, as I leave the next ten minutes to the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan), yes, help finance, help insure, help market but do not enter farming through joint ventures. Do not put in place a Crown corporation. Do not get into buy and sell activities. It is the vehicle to which the farmers have objected, not the principle.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) for the House order so that more Members can participate in this debate under this closure motion until the bells start to ring at 5.45 p.m. Admittedly, a 20-minute loaf is better than a ten-minute loaf, but usually I like the full loaf. Usually I do not have notes and take my full time. This is a ten-minute rule which I do not want to abuse. I want to say though that it is a very innovative procedure that should be adopted more often. It allows more Members to speak when this type of restrained debate is in place. I thank the Minister very much for this order and those Members who co-operated.

I want to say very briefly, and without trying to cause any problem in the House in the ten minutes I have allotted to me, that the Government, in my humble opinion, has been erroneous in its defence of Canagrex on three major points. First, the Government has suggested that the agriculture industry needs a Crown corporation as extensive as Canagrex and that it ought to play that great a role in the industry.

Second, the Government has assured the House and the public that under the provisions of Bill C-85 Canagrex will be sufficiently accountable to Parliament and that it will not become another expensive drain on the public purse.

Third, the Government has claimed that the majority of the agriculture industry in Canada is in favour of Canagrex as it is now proposed. I am not talking about principles but all the details that are in the Bill, many of which my friend from Carleton-Charlotte has touched upon.

I suggest to you that these three areas, these assertions of the Government, are highly suspect. They are in reality traverses of the truth, figments of fabrication and really do dishonour to honesty. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the agriculture industry is not in need of a brand new corporation with such extensive potential for intervention.

Virtually all Parties in the House recognize the fine track record of private export and marketing endeavours to date. They also recognize the potential for even further improvement of marketing and export management. Thus there is room for a government body, no doubt about that, to come in and play an important role, and we, the Opposition, have endorsed those portions of the Bill that "promote and facilitate" powers in the Canagrex Bill. We have supported ideas of credits and insurance, but we refuse to endorse the provisions of the Bill which would allow Canagrex to engage in the buying and selling of agricultural products.

Much has been said on the topic of these powers. The issue came up in committee, and indeed the Government has accepted amendments that would restrict these powers in part, but are they restrictive enough? The restrictions do not alleviate the concern that Canagrex may end up participating in the agricultural market not only as a facilitator for private deals, as the Government suggests will be the case, but also as a direct participant itself. We, the Opposition, are not satisfied that such concern is sufficiently alleviated. The powers are there and they can be used. If they can be used, in our humble opinion they can be abused.

Subsection 4(1)(d) as reported from committee allowed Canagrex to "enter into contracts with foreign governments to provide agricultural products", and to "enter into subcontracts with Canadian enterprises or individuals . . . for the provision to foreign governments of any of the products and services that Canagrex has itself contracted to provide".

Deciphered somewhat, this subsection allows Canagrex to engage in extensive buying and selling of agricultural products. Perhaps this is a far-out example but let me put it in far-out terms so that we understand what we are doing. If Canagrex contracted to sell five mangoes to the Government of Upper Volta—my voice is somewhat hoarse today; I need a mango to clear it in view of the activities of the last few days—it would then have the power to make good that contract by buying those mangoes from Canadian producers. This may sound relatively harmless. But what if the Government were to contract to sell Upper Volta not five but five million mangoes and chose to purchase them exclusively from the mango producers of one Province or region? I am using mangoes as my example so that I will not have to worry about casting aspersions on any part of the productivity of the country, because I do not think we produce a heck of a lot. The potential implications of Government participation in buying and selling become more clear. Alternatively, what if Canagrex were to decide to seek bids from Canadian producers to supply the mangoes? The result would be increased domestic competition among Canadian producers that would drive prices down. Canagrex could also wind up taking profits which would otherwise end up in the hands of producers.

Perhaps the Government will tell us that Canagrex is not designed to do any of this, that it is not within the spirit of Bill C-85. This is what the Government has more or less said. We all know, if the power is there under the letter of the law in the Bill, that potentially it can be done.

In looking at legislation, legislators have to look at any new Bill to see what its potential may be, not just at the best wishes of the Minister no matter how sincere, assuming the best wishes and sincerity of this Minister. We have to look at the letter of the law in the Bill to see what is its potential, and we say that the potential is there.

In the case of Canagrex, the Government tells us that the corporation will use its buy and sell powers only in very narrowly defined ways. However, the Bill as it now stands would enable a Crown corporation to play a significant trading role in the agricultural markets of Canada. We know too well how governments like to expand and increase their powers. For example, let us look at Petro-Canada which was supposed to be a window on the industry, a minor observer in the petroleum world. Now it has become a major participant in the petroleum industry itself. We have seen other examples of extensive government intervention in all sorts of industries, and that is our fear here.

We are very much against the buy and sell provisions. The proposed power to enter into joint ventures is not as harmless as the Government would lead us to believe. Again the problems of patronage and favouritism could arise. The potential is there. Any businessman knows that a government agency is a powerful competitor. The absence of strict profit-loss motives and the access to public funds give government corporations a decided advantage over other firms in an industry. Therefore, by picking and choosing its partners in joint ventures, Canagrex could promote the welfare of certain produces while hurting others.

In short, the restrictions placed upon the powers of Canagrex to buy and sell agricultural products are not sufficient. The simple fact is that the Government could still become a trading partner in the agricultural export business and an active producer and processor in the domestic industry. We cannot allow the Government to extend another long and harmful tentacle into the private sector which, ironically, is a sector that is basically productive. There are problems but it is alive and well without Canagrex. With Canagrex our fear is that even with the best of intentions it could become the chloroform of the industry rather than the catalyst for growth which is so necessary.

There is a temptation for Ministers here in Ottawa at the head of large Departments to think that they know best. We are very much against that concept. We believe that the industry itself should be the judge. In representations before the committee there was agreement in principle on the need to facilitate and promote but a real question about the buy and sell provisions.

Let me draw a comparison with another industry that has not really been debated in the House. I know my time is almost up but I would like to look at the fishing industry. We all know about the Kirby Report. The fishing industry recently confronted the question of whether there should be significant government participation or intervention. The Kirby task force recently examined this question. The federal Government pushed for the creation of a Crown corporation, presumably one similar to Canagrex. However, the majority of participants in the fishing industry opposed such extensive government participation. They realized that they were better off keeping the Government out of their business operations wherever possible.

In its final report, the task force recommended the creation of an Atlantic Fisheries Marketing Commission to promote and co-ordinate market development with "minimum government involvement". This was a sound recommendation. It would have enabled the Government to facilitate marketing and exporting without being an active trader in the market. We, the Opposition, could accept a comparable role for Canagrex. But Government members want a greater role in the agricultural industry, a greater role, ironically, than was created in the fishing industry. As a result, they have reserved judgment on the task force recommendation for a commission in the fishing industry. Indications are that they are unsatisfied with the amount of government control such a commission would provide and would only accept the commission if they saw it as a starting point from which they could eventually establish a full-fledged Crown corporation to meddle in the fishing industry. So far the fishing industry has resisted excessive government intervention in its sales management, and we must help the agricultural industry do the same. We can do that if we do not support the present Bill.

In my remaining two minutes there are two other matters upon which I would like to touch. They have been dealt with generally, as we have dealt with most of these issues, but I appreciate the chance to speak as I have not spoken on any stages of Bill C-85. There are other Hon. Members who were more involved in committee stage. I appreciate and respect that, but I also appreciate the chance to ventilate a few views today. There are two other flaws, in my humble opinion, in the Government's defence of Bill C-85. First, Hon. Members opposite assure us that Canagrex would be sufficiently accountable to Parliament and would not become yet another drain on the public purse. We are very apprehensive about that, regardless of the low initial budget and the best of intentions. I accept the best of intentions, but we only have to look at Canadair and some other Crown corporations to see that with low initial payments moneys have got out of control.

Second, the Government assures us that agricultural industry is largely in favour of Canagrex as it exists in Bill C-85. We do not accept that. Of the 32 groups that appeared before the Standing Committee on Agriculture to present their views on Canagrex, 20 were either opposed completely to the corporation or had reservations. These are some of the matters that I would like to discuss and that I find very unfortunate, but being in a very temperate spirit today, I will not even start talking about the club of closure which cuts me off at this time.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I have only a couple of questions for the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan). He must be aware that the Government did not suggest Canagrex. Farm organizations suggested it. Also the Hon. Member referred to the fishing industry. Surely he is aware of the very successful Saltfish Corporation which has been in operation for several years. It is an ideal situation, as the Hon. Member will see if he wants to look at it and see how well it works. Is the Hon Member aware of the Saltfish Corporation?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, to answer both questions, I am most aware of the Saltfish Corporation. I was here when the matter was debated.

Mr. Whelan: So was I.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Kirby looked at the total fishing industry. The recommendations are there. The fact of the matter is that we have an interesting paradox between what the Government is doing with Canagrex by creating a Crown corporation and the fishing industry. I am not talking about all the things which have been created. I am not making the case that there should not be Crown corporations in many areas. As the Minister stated in the debate, many Crown corporations are providing a good and fundamental service and are fulfilling a need which could not be fulfilled by the private sector.

• (1600)

In terms of agriculture, which is the most independent incentive-oriented individual industry in the country, our position is that we do not need the heavy hand of corporations to such an extent, which comes to the first question. Yes, I am aware, as the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) said earlier today in answer to a question from the Minister, that there was a concern and a need to have some type of assistance in export credits and export insurance and to facilitate marketing but, as the Minister well knows, no one from this side suggested we have the buy-and-sell or the joint venture.

Mrs. Eva Côté (Rimouski-Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, today we are continuing the debate on Bill C-58, to establish the Canagrex corporation. I would like to start by quoting Mr. William Jenkins, former dean of the Agricultural College of Nova Scotia, who said in an interview in 1981, and I quote:

> In the Atlantic Provinces, exporting agricultural products is like a battle. It is every man for himself, a very primitive way of selling anything . . . It is an almost chaotic state of affairs.

Canadian agriculture cannot afford this kind of situation, and that is why today, Mr. Speaker, we are considering the third reading stage of legislation to create a Crown corporation to be called Canagrex, and the purpose of this legislation is to provide for an effective mechanism that will help Canada find its true place on the international market for agri-food products. The corporation will be structured very carefully to provide for joint action by both public and private agents in the industry. It is not an attempt to take over the industry, as some Hon. Members have suggested or claimed. Canagrex will be a mechanism used by the industry in situations which historically have been obstacles to progress. It will provide financial, promotional and technical assistance and will also be used to facilitate identification of markets. Canagrex will be in a position to create markets, not to obstruct their development. Canagrex will therefore help Canada to provide, for the first time, a co-ordinated approach to its export markets. It will seek out new opportunities both for exporters that have been traditionally involved in the business and for newcomers to this field. In other words, Canagrex will make it possible for Canada to increase its profits on international export markets and to increase job opportunities within this country.

I cannot believe that the Official Opposition could be against this concept. One of the most attractive aspects of this legislation is the fact that thanks to the new corporation, new exporters will be helped to get started in the business, and this will increase the variety of Canadian agri-food products available on export markets. Finally, Canagrex will be taking a very active interest in new exporters without harming those already in the business. It is clear that Canagrex will be acting only as a co-ordinating body when it meets requests for assistance from those engaged in the export business or those who intend to enter this field.

Canada's potential in the agri-food export field is unlimited but it has not been developed as well as it could be. We have the resources here in this country for truly taking advantage of our potential in an area which has often been thought of as too hard to "crack". We must know where our real potential lies. From there on, we can set our objectives and concentrate our efforts in order to attain a level of competitiveness that will be hard to beat. That is why I am surprised when I hear people say that the Government is trying to compete with the private sector in the agri-food industry. Nothing could be further from the truth, and to anyone who is still not convinced, I would suggest they read the legislation very carefully and they will realize that this is not the Government's intention. On the contrary, Canagrex will be able to help the farm export industry. We are not trying to take contracts away from the private sector. We want to make it possible for the private sector to grow and continue to play the important part it has played for so many years in the development of our export markets.

I can hardly accept the motion that some people are opposed to the establishment of Canagrex because they fear that the corporation might get involved in the purchase, sale or processing of farm products. The bill limits the use of these powers. Canagrex could be party to a contract only at the request of or in co-operation with a private concern, or if foreign countries showed interest in dealing only on a country-to-country basis. In this connection, please refer to Section 14(5) which states that Canagrex shall not engage in the export of farm products from Canada to other countries except in joint ventures or when acting on behalf of Canada as an agent of the Crown under country-to-country basis agreements.

Moreover, I repeat that most of the 11 members of the Board of directors will come from the private sector. Also, there will be an advisory committee, made up entirely of private sector representatives, which will provide advice and direction with a view to ensuring that Canagrex operates well.

The corporation will function on a three-year plan, which will serve as a basis for its operations and budget. At the end of a five-year trial period, a complete review of its operations will be carried out by the Standing Committee on Agriculture. As the Minister of Agriculture indicated in his remarks, Canagrex will be subjected to a yearly control by the Auditor General, which means that an integrated and complete audit of all its operations will be carried out, something no other Crown corporation is required to have.

I should like to comment briefly on the importance of agri-food products in the context of our foreign trade. Last year, Canada's farm exports totalled $9.6 billion and its market surplus amounted to some $3.1 billion. Nearly 60 per cent of these products were made up of grain and oil seeds. Yet, if we compare the rest of our exports with our total exports, we find a non-grain deficit of some $2 billion. Canada has the resource potential to do much better than that and requires an agency similar to the Canadian Wheat Board to promote the sale of its non-grain products for export.

To increase our agri-food production, we need to develop new markets, and Canagrex could and should play an important role in this regard. We need this co-ordinating entity to ensure the development of our agri-food industry. Canagrex has no intention whatsoever of monopolizing any farm export. It can only use its powers in conjunction with the private sector to promote the export of agricultural products.

I cannot understand how behind the establishment of Canagrex some people can imagine a huge conspiracy to take over or harm the private sector. It is but a myth spread by a minority both inside and outside the private sector and I should like to take this opportunity to urge private enterprise to try to understand the predicament some very specialized producers find themselves in, since they get no assistance and lack the necessary mechanism to export their goods to foreign countries, for the benefit of Canada as a whole.

I would like to quote once again the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, which many have already mentioned. I simply want to remind the Members that last November, during a meeting when it submitted a brief to us, the Federation said that Canada needed an export or agri-food products export assistance agency such as Canagrex that the government wants to create. The Federation also said that this legislation was aimed at producers. All producers are entitled to play a role in the agricultural export trade. By denying them this opportunity, we would be going against democratic principles.

Mr. Speaker, I have listened carefully to the interventions made by Government Members on this side of the House and Members opposite. I have a great deal of respect for the opinions which have been expressed, but it seems to me that, especially in the agri-food sector, the Canadian Wheat Board and the Canadian Dairy Commission have only played a very positive and creative role for Canada. Since their establishment, these two Canadian Government institutions have been the major innovators in agri-food production. They have been at the source of agricultural development in Canada. It saddens me that the opposition can imagine or fear that Canagrex could act against both farm producers themselves and private companies which are already very successful in this field. I also want to say that the private sector greatly benefits from the international contacts which have been made and will continue to be made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). In this regard, I shall simply mention his visit to China and Mexico, where new markets were opened for all Canadian farm producers and the private sector, used them very successfully, for which I congratulate it.

In the future, if the Government as such or the Minister of Agriculture acting as an intermediary or Canagrex in its capacity as export development agent can enable the private sector and each farm producer in Canada to be better off, it will be to the advantage of everyone of us.

Mr. Speaker, before concluding, I would like, as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Agriculture, to thank the Members of the Committee on the three sides of the table, if I may put it in these terms. During four months, we discussed this bill with a lot of interest and sometimes with passion, because each of us was very much concerned about what we wanted to see included in this legislation in order to meet as much as possible the needs and interests of agriculture producers. I would also like to thank all the witnesses who expressed their views to the committee. I would like to extend special thanks to the critic from the Official Opposition, the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise), who was most helpful since this was my first experience in hearing witnesses on such an important bill. And I thank the representatives of the Official Opposition and of the New Democratic Party who were most effective and who led the discussion in a very positive and constructive way.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to express the hope that this day, June 13, will not be remembered by Canadians only as a sad day, because we have lost a Member of the Senate who has been a Member of this House and who was my neighbour for many years, namely Senator Maurice Lamontagne. Rimouski is only 20 miles away from Mont-Joli, and many Members of his family still live in the Lower St. Lawrence area, particularly in Rimouski. I would like this day to be also remembered as an auspicious day by agricultural producers in Canada. I trust that both the legislation and the regulations which will go along with it will make sure the Canagrex Corporation will be helpful to the agricultural community and will contribute to the wealth of Canada in our international trade.

[English]

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, today is the third reading of Bill C-85, and a vote will be forced at 5.45 to terminate debate. Today may or may not turn out to be a good day for agriculture depending on how Canagrex performs. I do not undertsand why the Government is so reluctant to listen to the legitimate concerns that we in the Opposition are expressing on behalf of constituents who send us here to represent their views.

I would like to make two points, Mr. Speaker, in the ten minutes that I have in which to talk about Bill C-85, Canagrex. I would first like to touch on what the Government has been doing to help agriculture. It seems to me to be a sad commentary on the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) when he holds Canagrex out as being something that will help the industry when the industry is in considerable trouble and there are many other things that the Government could be doing to help agriculture. New legislation for the the Farm Credit Corporation was passed that included provisions for the agri-bond concept. We have seen nothing of that. In fact, I now hear that the Farm Credit Corporation is becoming very short of funds. A year ago in June of 1982, I heard the Minister say on an open line program in Winnipeg that the Farm Credit Corporation would very shortly have a large sum of money at preferred interest rates because of the Bill that had already been passed. We have not seen any of that.

As well, the Minister has done nothing for stabilization of the red meat industry. The first time that I ever visited Ottawa, this very beautiful capital of Canada, was in 1977 as a representative of the beef industry in Manitoba. At that time, I had the pleasure and privilege of appearing before a Senate committee that was looking into the beef industry. One of the recommendations that came out of that inquiry was that there be a stabilization program. For several years now, the industry has recommended that there be a stabilization program funded by the two levels of Government as well as the producers. The Minister has done nothing about that to assist the industry.

At the Liberal Party meeting which I believe was held in July, 1980, a resolution was passed to the effect that the Government should do something about capital gains. Again, the Government has done nothing about that. The reason I am making these points, Mr. Speaker, is to show that if the Government really wants to assist Canadian farmers and producers to export, it should be doing everything it can to make them competitive at home and to keep their cost down. After all, if we can produce a quality product with a competitive price, we will sell goods abroad. We will not be competitive on the international market if we cannot handle our costs and see that we produce effectively and efficiently at home.

One of the areas that we do have an advantage in is the area of energy. Yet look at what the Government has done to energy. It takes a great, big mark-up on every gallon of gasoline that goes into a farm tractor. That is one of the things that we on this side of the House have talked about for a long time. We want to cut down on the amount of tax taken by the federal Government when farmers burn fuel for the production of food. Yet no action has been taken on that.

It seems to me that if the Minister were really interested in doing something on behalf of the Canadian producer and farmer, he would be interested in talking to the farmer and working with the Provinces. We know that many of the Provinces are not in favour of the provisions of this Bill, particularly the buy and sell provisions of this Bill. We all agree with the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr.

Nystrom) who said that we need to support Canadian agriculture. There is absolutely no question about that.

We have a right to expect support back from the Government, and when I say we, I speak as a farmer. Look at the amount of taxation the Government takes from each farmer or from each acre of land that is farmed each year. It is an astronomical amount of money. To expect that the Government should put some of that money back is not expecting a lot.

I do not have time to go through the powers in Clause 14 of the Bill, but I am sure that every power conceivable was put into that Clause to make sure that the Government, through Canagrex, had as much access to power to purchase as possible. That concerns us. It is the same old story. When a farmer sees someone driving into his yard and that person says, "I am a Government man and I am here to help you", the farmer immediately becomes a little bit suspicious. We all know that farmers work very hard and that they are held accountable to their bankers. They have commitments to meet each year. When it is a Government operation, it is a little different. When somebody else's money is at risk, one does not get quite as involved. It is the same old story. Unless one risks one's own life or money, it is very easy to go through the whole process without becoming directly involved.

That is what concerns us about the buy and sell provision in the Bill. The Minister is kidding himself if he thinks those powers will not be used. If he is putting the powers in there and saying not to worry because they will not be used, that is fine, but if he is sincere, he should be prepared to take the powers away if they are not going to be used.

We can talk about what went on with PetroCan, for instance. It was supposed to be a small operation with a window on the industry to check things out. Now it is exploring for oil using Government dollars and it is checking oil and cleaning windshields. That is not what I understood to be the concept for PetroCan.

The Minister says we have to see what we can do about a $2 billion trade deficit in agricultural products in the country. I agree. We buy a tremendous amount of fruits and vegetables out of season because we cannot grow pineapples and oranges here. Canagrex is not going to achieve a lot in those areas.

I do not think the Minister is listening, Mr. Speaker. He likes to talk a lot but he does not listen very well. We can make sure that Canadian farmers are competitive. The Minister says that with Canagrex it will not be a case of the Government competing against farmers. That may be true, but what concerns me is that there are other programs in place and we do not want to see the Government competing against itself.

I have here the outline of a program in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce called the Program for Export Market Development for Food. The application form is quite extensive and applies to many areas that Canagrex will serve. How do we know that when Canagrex becomes operational there will not be a Canagrex Crown corporation competing with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce for a share of export markets. With Government competing against Government and the first job of the bureaucracy being to grow, we know that our tax dollars are being used unwisely.

We have a legitimate concern about the proliferation of Crown corporations and the fact that they are not accountable. There may be all kinds of auditing after the fact but in many cases it is too late. We want to make sure that there is accountability up front. It seems to me that encouraging the private sector is the only way to get accountability up front.

The Minister is trying to ram the Bill through, and that is dividing the agricultural constituency, Mr. Speaker. Regardless of whether or not he believes it, we have very real concerns about the fact that the Government is becoming involved in joint ventures and in the actual production of food. Whether or not the Minister wants to admit it, that is the perception of the Bill.

I plead with the Government to remove the buy and sell provision and pass those parts of the Bill that everyone favours. That would be doing a service to agriculture and would enable us to show faith in the Government. It is not too late. I think everyone on this side of the House would agree with taking the buy and sell provision out of the Bill and leaving the good parts in there.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take a brief moment to thank my colleagues for filling in and speaking on my behalf on my amendment to the Canagrex Bill, last week. I am glad to see that the Minister of Agriculture is in the House. I must say that I am very disappointed that Motion No. 2 standing in my name has been considered inappropriate and has been disallowed. I am genuinely concerned about that.

My remarks will deal almost exclusively with the implications that flow from this Bill for the beef cattle industry in Canada. I have spent a lifetime in that industry and have concerns that I want to put on the record.

I was disappointed that there was no proper debate on my motion. I understand it was disallowed on a rather trivial technicality. The motion was made in response to what I would describe as almost total support in the beef cattle industry. This was expressed very forcibly in the standing committee by a significant number of associations. The motion would have removed beef cattle and beef products from the legislation entirely. It was as simple and straightforward as that. It seemed it was disallowed because it was included in the interpretation section with two other exclusions already there, namely, fish and forestry products. That seemed the natural place to put it. I have since wondered if it would have suffered the same fate had it been included with two other exclusions in the Bill, dairy products and grain products, in Clause 14(2)(c)(i)(ii) in Bill C-85. I think it is fair to suggest that.

My main argument must be based on what I think is a very clear precedent that I found in the debate on Bill C-176 that took place 12 or 13 years ago. The Minister must have been here then; I was not but I was involved in the public debate at that time in western Canada. That was the marketing board debate which went on for over two years, 1971 and 1972. At that time a similar amendment was proposed, debated and voted upon. The intent of that amendment was to exclude cattle and calves from the provisions of the Bill. A debate went on for many hours and included at least one all-night session. The important precedent is that this similar amendment was properly debated and the debate is recorded in Hansard.

My motion to amend Bill C-85 should have enjoyed the same right of debate in this House. After all, Acting Speaker Corbin ruled on July 29, 1982, as recorded at page 19829 of Hansard, that I might be able to present certain arguments in support of the acceptability of my motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has a certain difficulty at this point. The amendment was proposed by the Hon. Member and it was carefully considered by the Chair. The reasons for rejection of the amendment were offered. While I understand how the Hon. Member feels, he cannot reflect on that decision of the Chair.

Mr. Hargrave: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In any event, I always felt that I personally, although perhaps informally, represented the total Canadian beef cattle industry in these matters and many others as well. I remind the House that almost all the organized beef cattle associations in Canada are vigorously opposed to Canagrex, especially to Article 14 of that piece of legislation, the powers to buy and sell. I make this statement on behalf of the following cattle organizations, all of which supported my amendment and so stated when they appeared before the committee meeting on Bill C-85. They are the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, the Alberta Cattle Commission, the Western Stock Growers Association, the Saskatchewan Stock Growers Association, and a number of other agricultural groups. Before leaving my references to the debate on Bill C-176, the marketing board legislation, I suggest that we could take another look at that debate, which took place many years ago, and consider the possibility of using the referendum or plebiscite approach which finally emerged out of that prolonged debate, which was also very emotional. It provided a way of resolving the difficulties in that earlier legislation. At least in western Canada agricultural producers were required to pass a majority referendum in each Province before such a proposal could be proceeded with. That was a preliminary step before a national board could be proceeded with. That pretty well resolved the difficulties. With only one or two exceptions, no marketing boards have been able to live with that criterion and successfully promote a national marketing board, certainly not in the cattle industry in Canada.

I would like to make a comment about the Canada All Breeds Association. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has made several references to this. This is a group of enterprising private enterprisers who are centered in Calgary. The managing director is Mr. Tony Saretsky. The Minister knows this gentleman. The Minister has made several comments about this group and I am curious as to what his purpose is because here is a group which had a very tough time getting its organization operating, in the export of livestock particularly. It is finally now operating very successfully. Of course it has the power to buy and sell because it is a private enterprise outfit. It does operate with powers to buy and sell and it must have them.

This group appeared before our Standing Committee, and was totally opposed to Canagrex as we are now debating it. It seems to me that the Minister tends to forget this. This group was not out there promoting Canagrex. It was totally opposed to it. I believe the remarks of the Minister suggest that there is something wrong with the private sector having the powers to buy and sell. However, by the same token, he is arguing that because it does, his Canagrex legislation should indeed be entitled to the same powers. All I can say is, no way. This is not an argument which can be used to support the Government in requiring buy and sell powers. That is where private enterprise should be involved.

I would like to report briefly on the situation in our own Province of Alberta. This information was given to me very recently. It is from the office of our Minister of Agriculture in Alberta. The Alberta provincial Government is adamantly opposed to Canagrex because of the bad experiences it has had with its own Alberta export agency, and it has such an agency. It has had many cases ending up in court over this legislation and Alberta feels that the Government should not be allowed to be involved in marketing, referring to its own provincial Government, of course. This provincial legislation was in place for about four years during which there were nothing but problems. The same Alberta legislation, if it still exists at all, has not been used for over the last six years. This must surely be a clear indication that Alberta will very likely remove that legislation from its own books.

I would also like to make a comment about the remarks which have occasionally come from the Minister and others suggesting that, because the Canadian Federation of Agriculture is supportive of this Bill, some way or other it speaks for all other sectors of Canadian agriculture. I suggest very vigorously, Mr Speaker, that this is not necessarily so. The CFA does not, and never has, spoken officially for Canada's organized beef cattle producers. The Canadian cattlemen's associations, the Alberta Cattle Commission, the Western Stock Growers Association and the Saskatchewan Stock Growers Association, have never been members or affiliated with the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. The Minister should not leave the impression that the CFA is officially speaking for organized cattlemen in Canada. I object very strenuously to that impression.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair has some difficulty at this point. Would there be unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to continue his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is agreed.

Mr. Hargrave: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to read a telegram which I received just the other day from the Saskatchewan Stock Growers Association. It is addressed to me. It reads:

During the Saskatchewan Stock Growers Association 70th annual convention held June 5th, 6th and 7th, the S.S.G.A. membership passed the resolution unanimously requesting that the federal Government withdraw cattle and cattle products from Canagrex. Again we state that Canagrex is redundant and duplicative of established programs. The private sector in conjunction with Industry, Trade and Commerce, has an excellent export performance and will not be improved by the intrusion of a new public agency. We wish to remind the Government that an overwhelming majority of western farm organizations oppose Canagrex. If there is a need for support to implement this legislation in certain sectors, the S.S.G.A. and all livestock groups wish to have their products excluded.

It then lists the various organizations, mostly in Saskatchewan but some in Manitoba, in that same telegram.

I would like to suggest that the Minister's laboured and self-conscious defence of the Government's use of closure, or time allocation, whatever you call it, is rather unimpressive. It does not matter what it is called, whether time allocation or closure, it is a spurious argument by the Minister that in no way changes the fact that the Minister, through his Bill, reduced the Canagrex debate to only two days for report stage and third reading. This same Minister was the hatchet man in the Crow debate at second reading to limit that debate to only one more day. These two pieces of legislation have upset, angered and totally frustrated all of western Canadian agriculture to an extent we have not seen since that marketing board legislation of about 13 years ago.

Canagrex is a nothing Bill which should never have come before Parliament in this form. There are presently under way in western Canada, especially in Alberta, public protest meetings going on regularly, and we have not seen this situation before, where they are protesting in the middle of their farming season to a very serious degree. I would like to close by saying that I will not be supporting this piece of legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions and comments? Debate.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in this third reading debate on Bill C-85. Right at the start I want to place on the record that on second reading this Bill was debated for five days. It was considered in committee, witnesses were heard and amendments were discussed, for a total of 28 days, or 56 hours and 45 minutes. There were two days of debate at report stage, and now we come to the time when we will be voting on third reading and bringing this debate to a conclusion.

I am one of those Canadian farmers who is not at all satisfied with our export market development over the years I have been farming. I was very upset that we have been expected to produce a product with no assurances as to price or quantity required for the export or domestic markets. By contrast, when I look at a June 9 article in The Globe and Mail I see that China has ordered wheat from the Canadian Board valued at over $400 million. The article says:

The sale is part of a long term agreement with China that calls for the sale of between 3.5 million tons and 4.2 million tons annually for three years beginning in August, 1982.

What we have in the Canagrex legislation is something which will allow other sectors of the farm economy the opportunity to make long-term arrangements with the purchasing country, thereby assuring them continuity of supply of a quality product. I would like to quote from a letter of Mr. Gordon Hill, the Former Chairman of the Ontario Bean Producers Marketing Board to the Editor of The London Free Press. I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that in 1950 and 1951 I was a committee man on that marketing board. Mr. Hill says:

The Ontario Bean Producers Marketing Board was established in 1944. In 1967, by a vote of bean producers, agency marketing came into existence. The Marketing Board has grown in an orderly fashion since its inception and the dealer facilities have also expanded. This growth has resulted in a steady expansion of export business to the point that we currently average about 80 per cent of our $50 million worth of primary sales going into the export market. The beans are currently going to 28 countries around the world with an additional 25 countries participating in food aid.

He goes on to say:

The Ontario Bean Producers Marketing Board feels that with the implementation of Canagrex, additional opportunities for trade will evolve from state-to-state trading, and the identification of new markets.

Canada is recognized, around the world, as a trading nation. Canagrex through its mandate can further develop this position.

Canagrex will be a winner for Canadian agriculture because its formation is a result of requests from grass root agriculturalists—the farmers.

Mr. Speaker, it is very clear that this Bill does have the support of farmers in eastern Canada, contrary to what others have said here today. The President of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture stressed that "the powers which would be granted to Canagrex are not extraordinary. Rather than imposing a threat to free enterprise, it would be most beneficial to smaller agricultural producer groups which normally would not be able to crack the export market". He said Canagrex is absolutely essential if we are to fill the gaping void between our potential to produce and manufacture agricultural products for export and our present performance.

Just last week, Mr. Speaker, I had inquiries from two small processing companies requesting assistance in filling export contracts. Together with them I contacted the various Government Departments and agencies. The word came back to us that as of that date there were no programs available for these two small companies, but the departmental people told me that if Canagrex were in place, that body could facilitate their needs.

There are a lot of areas I would like to touch on in this debate, but there seems to be a perception that Canagrex is going to get involved in primary food production. That is not the case. One of the amendments to Clause 14 in committee was that if Canagrex aquires property for lease or otherwise, it does not include the power to purchase, lease or otherwise acquire real property for the production of fruit, forage, grain, vegetable or other crops, and so on. Canagrex cannot get involved in actual production for domestic or export, unless it is in coordination with or at the request of other groups who wish the assistance of Canagrex, it cannot get involved in production except for new market development.

The make-up of the board of directors of Canagrex is clearly spelled out in the legislation. Seven of those directors have to come from outside the civil service. But there will be one from each of the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Department of Finance from within the Civil Service. I would hope we would have some expertise from the red meat sector. The Canadian Pork Council supports Canagrex, and I would expect they would want to be involved because they are very aggressively going after export markets. I would also hope there will be one from the poultry sector because they are very forward looking as far as export markets are concerned. Perhaps Canagrex will be the missing link we have been looking for to enable us to plan our poultry and livestock production and know that we have continuity of supply for the countries which wish to import the food. Certainly I would hope the horticultural sector would have someone involved in this agency as well. Naturally, we need some business and trading expertise too. I would hope we would have a blend of expertise, people who will work together on the production of food so amply produced here in Canada to supply world markets. I believe there is tremendous opportunity here for Canadians.

I see the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) has just come into the House. I have had inquiries from the Tobacco Marketing Board about the progress of the Canagrex legislation and the need for it in that particular industry. I have tobacco producers in my own riding who are vitally concerned about the fact that more and more countries want to deal on a state-to-state basis. They envisage new markets opening up because Canada has the highest quality tobacco of any country in the world. It is only human nature for the farmer to want to expand his production to supply those markets.

The legislation before us today, Mr. Speaker, was started quite a few years ago, first of all through a series of meetings of the major farm organizations in Canada with input from the various sectors. They discussed the concept, the needs, and they saw the shortfall of the organizations already in place. They felt that, with the high cost of production in Canada, we had to have some vehicle to act as a focal point to bring together not only the production sector but the processors, packers and exporters to work together in a meaningful partnership on behalf of the whole Canadian economy. It is very interesting that in some of those early meetings the Canadian Labour Congress was involved. They followed the development of this legislation in the discussion stage. They saw the spin-off effects, what it would do for job creation. They recognized that this is a good piece of legislation and we had to proceed if we were to realize our potential. The Canagrex formula, guided by the philosophy of serving the needs of all the producers to facilitate the agri-food industry, would assist in the diversification of products offered to the foreign buyer.

The potential market possibilities are real. Conditions in the marketplace indicate that with a co-ordinated approach Canadian agri-food exports could stand on a firmer footing and become a more potent competitor. I recently had inquiries from two different countries which wanted to import Canadian dairy cattle, the Canadian Holstein-Friesian. That breed is one of the most efficient producers of dairy products in the world. There are two countries that want to import that cattle, but they will need the help of Canagrex to fulfil that mandate.

One can see the fragmented approach which is taken by the various Provinces. I understand that the Province of Quebec presently provides a subsidy of $250 for each animal going into the export field. How do other Provinces compete against that? Consequently, we need a co-ordinating body such as Canagrex to fulfil that need to ensure that the product is available for those markets and the back-up services are provided so that the animals are put on the correct rations and kept in the proper environment to produce to their capacity.

I think it is only fair to look at Canagrex in the context of the missing link between our marketing board structures which are already in place in Canada. That structure did not recognize the potential which we had in Canada. The marketing boards themselves should be a body which is expansionary in concept in terms of striving to fill those markets whether they are in Canada or outside. Canagrex can be the mechanism to utilize that potential.

The former chairman of the White Bean Growers Marketing Board wrote a letter to the editor in which he recognized the need for the various other marketing boards which we have. I hope Canagrex will be able to work very closely with these organizations and provide the bridge financing required when necessary, which may include terms for payment six months down the road.

Possible market potential as identified by Agriculture Canada and other federal Government agencies relates directly to the need for Canada to begin to be more dynamic in export marketing. This is not a condemnation of what has traditionally taken place in the agri-food sector but rather a recognition of the ever changing world of the export marketplace. It is an ever changing world that shows that there is a quiet and subtle trade war evolving between the United States and the European Common Market. This is happening more often and the competition is becoming stronger. Can those other two countries, without the marketing board structures such as we have in Canada, assure themselves of long-term continuity of supply of a quality product or will they have to rely on programs such as the PIK Program which is in place in the United States? Do we know what these markets will be next fall? Do we know what crops will be in Russia? Do we know what they will be in the United States, let alone Ontario?

Since export markets are traditionally highly volatile, the best way for Canada to achieve additional exports in non-grains is also to create a strong and stable domestic market for those commodities. This will help meet the objective of reducing the trade deficit in certain sectors of the non-grains area as Canagrex will help industry in linking export development and import replacement. I cannot help but reflect on the 1982 statistics which show that the dollar value of wheat sales last year was up by 15 per cent over 1981 while export sales in other sectors of the agricultural industry are up by only 2 per cent. Surely we must have a more efficient system than the one that exists at the present time.

I am reminded of a book entitled "Not for Export" which was written by a Carleton University professor. He points out many of the problems with which we are confronted today. These problems date back to the 1800s, to the time of Confederation. He points out the fact that all too often we have subsidiary companies in Canada whose head offices are located elsewhere. Consequently, when an order is placed it is not filled by the Canadian subsidiary but by the parent company in another country. Canagrex can give us a clear Canadian identity and also ensure that we have the mechanisms in place by which the Government can work with producers to fill those markets if requested to do so.

While Canada does have a number of export market tools at present, as a country we have not moved to present to the foreign buyer an agri-food focus for exports. Our efforts are fragmented and this tends to lead to what the Canadian Federation of Agriculture referred to as missed opportunities.

Similarly, potential exports of Canadian agricultural products have suffered because they have not had the means to become involved in world trading. Canagrex can be the catalyst by which doors of opportunity will open through various programs as outlined in the legislation for these potential exporters.

The benefits to the Canadian agri-food industry both in the long and short term will be significant because it will enable Canada to offer a more diversified range of product possibilities to foreign buyers. This can be of benefit to the industry and to the country's over-all balance of trade.

What all this points to is that Canagrex will, over the long run, have an opportunity to develop a trade philosophy which will relate directly to increased foreign trade dollars for Canada and the creation of additional employment. Whether that employment is in the agricultural industry itself or a related industry, there must be a concentrated effort to ensure that we get our share of these foreign markets. These spin-off effects will be felt throughout the Canadian economy.

I urge passage of this important legislation. The markets are out there and Canada can and will be competitive in all areas to ensure that we capture those markets as identified by Agriculture Canada and other Government agencies. I believe that it will take three years before we are able to bring our true trade potential into focus. I hope that Members of the Opposition will work together with the Government to ensure that the farm organizations will have their views taken into consideration. For example, I hope that the red meat sector in Canada will be able to partake in the benefits of this legislation, whether it is only the participation of the Pork Council at the present time or the ability to become competitive in the near future as far as the marketing of beef in offshore markets is concerned.

When I look at the trade figures in Hong Kong and see one of our major Canadian exporters getting one-third of his trade from another country to fill that market, I would hope that Canagrex would become very actively involved there to fill that market with Canadian products. The spin-off effects would benefit our total economy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, comments? Debate.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, if there is anything pleasant to say about this Bill, it is simply to thank the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) for staying at least once in the House during debate on a piece of legislation related to agriculture. It is nice to have "Green Gene" in the House when we are debating subject matter of this nature.

It is an insult to this Parliament, the people of Canada and the farming community of the country that with a Bill of this magnitude on which there is this diversity of opinion and which has poisoned and marinated the prospective discontent that is divided largely between East and West, the Minister would bring it to the House under the guillotine of closure. This piece of legislation does not strive toward achievement but strives toward power. This represents an attempt by the Government to achieve complete and absolute Government involvement in farm management in the farming communities of this country. That is the kind of extent of Government involvement with which we will end up in Canada where Government will control farm management.

As long as the Government controls the concept of marketing and its process, then in effect the Government controls all management decisions. The farmers, following the passage of this legislation, at least until that Party is on the Government side of the House, will find out that the right of control and decision-making has slid from the farm desk to the bureaucracies of the corporation called Canagrex. With respect to the buy and sell power, the Minister, very wrongly, told us today it is analagous to that which is used by Crown corporations in the Province of Alberta.

If I might, Mr. Speaker, I want to take just a moment to share with you the great illusion under which the Minister of Agriculture buries himself and to the way in which he deceives the people of Canada by simply mentioning those names.

In the Constitution of the Soviet Union we note there is freedom of speech, freedom of association and also people have freedom of travel. The only difference is that a person in the Soviet Union has to get a permit to go from Moscow to Kiev. While the Minister of Agriculture quite rightly says that in the Province of Alberta with its Crown corporations there are provisions for buy-sell, what he said is really like trying to make the analogy of a North American claiming he is free or a citizen of the Soviet Union claiming he is free. Both Constitutions say the words but the facts are not the same.

The Minister of Agriculture said today in his speech that the Province of Alberta has buy-sell power. I simply say to him that if he thinks those two buy-sell programs are the same, he deceives this House. The fact is that if the Government used the buy-sell provisions as defined by the Province of Alberta, it would find that they are far less offensive than the buy-sell definition in this Bill. Sure the words are the same in the title, but what is the actual legislation? There are four pages of definition in the description marked Canagrex. In the very first paragraph of Clause 14 it reads:

(a) purchase agricultural products and food products and package—

Package. Let me emphasize "and package."

—process, store, ship, insure, import, export or sell or otherwise dispose of products purchased by it;

To package or otherwise sell is the extent to which it will go. We could wind up in the supermarkets of the country and on the Canagrex shelf find Whelan beans. With the label reading "It's ours." We can get rid of all the various kinds of food labels we see on cans and replace them with "Canagrex. It's ours."

The Minister across the way tells us about something or another but his implications are that I am simply fabricating the facts. But we all recall the days in 1972 when the Liberal Minister of Energy was going around the country telling people "Don't fear PetroCan" because it is simply to be, and I quote from that period of time, "a window on that industry."

We were told that all the Government wanted was to get into the board rooms to see how the oil industry worked. The Minister of the day said we had no reason at all ever to be associated with the service station end of the industry. That window on the industry, PetroCan, became an employer of 8,000 people and it ended up right in marketing at street level. The point to be made is that once power is granted, power is used. If the Minister thinks I am fallacious in my imagination of the full extension of the use of the power as defined, then the Minister defies history. When you grant power, as I said the power ends up by being used.

I join with many others in opposing this legislation. I am in good hands in saying that I will vote against this Bill later this day. Noting that the last speaker for the Liberal side listed two or three groups saying they are in favour of the Canagrex legislation, let me put on the record the fact that the following are opposed to this legislation:

Alberta Beekeepers Association, Ablerta Canada All Breeds Association, Alberta Canola Growers Association, Alberta Cattle Commission, Alberta Pork Producers Marketing Board, British Columbia Cattlemen's Association, British Columbia Pork Producers Association, Canadian Cattlemen's Association, Canadian Export Association, Canadian Meat Council, Canadian Seed Trade Association, Consumers' Association of Canada, Flax Growers Western Canada, Manitoba Canola Growers Association, Manitoba Cattle Producers' Association, Ontario Bean Dealers Association, Palliser Wheat Growers Association, Saskatchewan Canola Growers Association, Saskatchewan Hog Marketing Commission, Saskatchewan Stockgrowers' Association, Shippers and Exporters Association, Western Barley Growers' Association, Western Stockgrowers' Association—

And the list goes on. This Minister operates in the milieu of deceit, Mr. Speaker, when he implies to us that there is some kind of blanket acceptance in general for his legislation. He operates on the fact that by far the majority of Canadians are in favour of his legislation. I know there are people in the Province of Quebec and in the Province of Ontario, even to some extent in the Maritime Provinces, who believe this legislation would be good for them. We in this Party are willing to accept that that marketing agency is of some value. But it is absolutely unacceptable to have that legislation contain Clause 14 with such a full extension of power, with that vast number of associations, which I have listed, opposed to it, and for the Minister to come to the House and tell us that there is broad acceptance, when in fact there is not, and for the Minister to do this under the threat of closure. That defies the democratic process by which we come to represent our constituents. I tell you, Sir, this piece of legislation is, for that reason, unacceptable.

The time is all too short in this debate, particularly because of closure. I have an agreement with my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) to share some time. I want to wrap up by saying that this Minister of Agriculture who often gives himself praise, irregardless of the fact there is no such word as irregardless, and who keeps et cetering his way through the House, has never before passed a major piece of legislation in all the years he has been Minister of Agriculture. Today we will have his first piece of major legislation in all the years he has been the Minister. This will be done through closure. It has taken him three years. He has stubbornly done it without listening to any amendment. He has stubbornly done it without listening to the majority of the agricultural communities in Canada, and he will obtain this legislation only because he prefers closure to democracy. I tell you, Sir, he is the worst Minister of Agriculture in the history of the country. I will now sit down so that I can share the speaking time with the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster who will take off on this Minister with equal tenacity. I hope he will call for his resignation.

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I would like to thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) for allowing me to take part in this debate. It seems strange that we must now share the 20-minute speaking time allowed each Member because of the rush and the inability of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to convince the majority of Canadians that this Bill called Canagrex is needed. We have closure imposed upon us.

Mr. Cullen: Time allocation.

Mr. McKnight: Therefore, as Members we must share the time and limit our debate so that this legislation may be imposed against the will of the majority of the farming communities and producers in Canada.

I want to say a few words on the supposed need and the great benefit that will accrue from this Crown corporation to be imposed on the people of Canada. I guess that we should not be concerned. I guess it is the right of the Government to pass bad legislation. It has not stopped the Government in the past. I suppose it will not stop the Government in the next six to ten months on whenever the Government screws up enough courage to call an election. The people of Canada will find a method of removing this bad legislation from the books. That is called a general election, and certainly we on this side of the House look forward to that opportunity.

The need for Canagrex, as expressed by the Minister and by other Government Members, is that it will increase the volume of goods which can be exported from Canada. Let us take a look at some of the things that have happened without this Crown corporation. I will be referring to ten-year averages from 1968 to 1970. For example, the export of buckwheat increased 94 per cent in ten years. Corn went up 12,000 per cent without any help, without any marketing agency imposed upon the growers against their will. Turning to flaxseed, it went up 14 per cent in ten years, and soyabean went up 149 per cent. Now let us talk about the Cinderella crop of western Canada, canola, which was originally rapeseed. It increased 258 per cent without a Government marketing agency or without a Crown corporation to sell it. I think the numbers and the commodities speak for themselves. The exporters of these goods, the people who work along with the producers of these commodities to export them into the world, are doing a very good job.

There is an opportunity for the Government to become involved. The Government has had that opportunity for the past number of years with Government agencies to which it could have given assistance. Let us look at the new crops, the pulse crops which are coming on board in western Canada. They are being marketed by individual enterprisers without a Crown corporation. Canary seed and lentils, pulse crops in my part of Canada, are taking a large amount of acreage and are providing producers with a beneficial return. The only reason they grow these crops is that they make a profit. Exporters are making a profit and are encouraging it. I think they are doing it very well.

During the short time allowed in the House for this debate we continually heard the Canadian Wheat Board being compared with Canagrex. Anyone who knows anything about the operation of the Canadian Wheat Board and its structure compared with Canagrex would be amazed that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) or the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Dionne) would have the audacity to compare them. The Canadian Wheat Board is funded by producers. It is operated out of the hip pockets of farmers. Also it has an elected advisory board. Free and democratic elections take place. They advise the Canadian Wheat Board. There are five commissioners appointed by the Government of Canada. No one, not even the strongest critics of the Canadian Wheat Board, could say that any of the five commissioners were painted with a political brush of one stripe or another. The producers of western Canada fund the Canadian Wheat Board out of their sales. They feel they have control over that Board. They do not have a worry about it because it is funded out of their pockets. They provide the operating money. They are the ones who have input through their elected advisory board.

When we take a look at the review by the Auditor General in the Bill, we realize that it comes three years after it has started. I cannot understand why a review would be allowed only after three years. Why could it not be allowed after the first or the second year? It is far too late.

The Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) presented an amendment which in my opinion was certainly a reasoned and rational one. When we consider that wheat and dairy products are excluded and that by far the vast majority of cattle associations in the country were against their product being included in the Bill to establish Canagrex, why would the Minister not listen to cattlemen as well as he listened to wheat growers and dairy producers? I think this is unbecoming of a Minister of Agriculture who is a democrat and has the best interests of agriculture at heart. There is some difficulty at times recognizing that, but I do not understand why he would not listen to the loud voice of cattle producers and breed associations of Canada. They did not ask for the Bill to be killed or for it to be removed from the Order Paper; they only asked that their product not be included.

When we take a look at the Bill, we find that it is redundant, inappropriate and misdirected. Presently the Government has at its disposal all the means it needs to support export growth in agriculture. With only a few minor enlargements of the mandate of the Export Development Corporation, the Canadian Commercial Corporation and the Foreign Trade Service, they could quite adequately fulfil the financing and marketing needed to support exports. I think that could be done at a much lower cost to Canadian taxpayers.

It is mot inappropriate that through Canagrex the Government could establish itself as a direct trader with the power to buy and sell on international markets. As we have indicated previously, it will bring unfair competition to bear on the existing export structure. The consequences of the unfair competition will have a negative effect on over-all trade performance in the export field. It is misdirected because the basic issue in Canada's export growth has been totally ignored by Canagrex. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) identified the crucial issue, that is our ability to supply internationally competitive prices. The Government proposal for Canagrex does not address that problem.

We have had discussions about international trading organizations in the House. We had a special standing committee of the House of Commons which travelled to gain knowledge as to whether an international trading corporation would be necessary and would be of assistance to the people of Canada. On June 28, 1982, I asked the then Minister of State for International Trade, the Hon. Member for Stormont-Dundas (Mr. Lumley), why he was even considering supporting Canagrex when he, as Minister responsible, had not seen fit to go ahead with the implementation of an international trading corporation. If the international trading corporation for other products was not acceptable to the Government, why would it find acceptable to impose upon the agricultural community the Bill before us?

During this debate we have heard Hon. Members on the Government side indicate that the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) was responsible for the Bill. Any time the discussion of Canagrex arose, as the Minister of Agriculture and his Parliamentary Secretary should know full well, the Hon. Member for Elgin did not at any time endorse the buy and sell proposal. Under his direction it was to be a Bill to facilitate, assist and encourage, but at no time distract from the individual initiatives of exporters and producers.

After straightening out the record in that regard, I will sit down as my time has expired, but I will certainly rise in my place to vote against Bill C-85.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) stated that he finds it hard to understand why grains produced under the Canadian Wheat Board and dairy products which are sold under the Canadian Dairy Commission were being pulled out of the Bill. He cited that as an example or a reason why livestock production should be exempted from the Bill as well. Grain producers and dairy producers which have marketing organizations work with them. Therefore, I can understand that exemption.

Can the Hon. Member explain to the House how exempting livestock, something which did not pass in committee by the way, from the powers of the Bill would meet the requirements or expectations of his fellow Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) who in his speech on second reading was hoping that a Canagrex operation would assist some of his constituents to export calves to Israel. That is now possible with the way the Bill has been handled. What would he propose to do for his fellow Member for Provencher if livestock and beef cattle had been exempted from the Bill?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I guess I should not be surprised at the question because it comes from the philosophy shared by the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse). Number one, the dairy producers of Canada want a dairy marketing board, they have one and that is what they should have because they want it. Number two, the Canadian wheat producers want a Canadian Wheat Board, they have it and they should have it. Number three, Canadian cattlemen do not want a marketing board. They do not want Canagrex. If we can recognize those facts and those democratic responses of those who produce goods, then we will live in a democracy which continues to function. As to what I would do for my colleague from Provencher, I would explain to his constituents that there is already the Canadian Export Development Corporation and the Canadian Commercial Corporation which could facilitate and assist in financing the export of calves all over the world. We do not need Canagrex in order to export cattle.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of questions for the Hon. Member. First, is he aware that in the Province of Saskatchewan the provincial Minister of Agriculture, the Deputy Premier and House Leader for that Province, is using the Crown corporations set up by the previous Government to export cattle to Romania? It has the power to buy and sell. Is the Member also aware that he is not intending to abandon any Crown corporations in Saskatchewan at the present time because they are all making money? Is he aware of that?

Also, is he aware that it is not closure that is being used in the House of Commons? In the books of procedure there is a definition for closure and a definition for time allocation. The most democratic Parliament in the world, the Mother of Parliament in Great Britain, uses time allocation nearly every day that it is in session. Is he aware of that? Why does he continue to try to get across the point that this Minister of Agriculture, who has been elected for 37 years in the most democratic forms of Government that there is, would do anything that would be undemocratic?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I would never question the good judgment of the good people of the county which the Hon. Minister comes from, but I am sure that some of them have found 37 years a bit trying on their patience and look forward to an apportunity to change that.

In answer to the Minister's question, yes, I am aware that cattle is exported from Saskatchewan through the Saskatchewan Agricultural Corporation. That is because the people of Saskatchewan want that Crown corporation. The Minister of Agriculture finds that humorous.

Mr. Whelan: I do.

Mr. McKnight: In Saskatchewan there happens to be a Government that recognizes the value of Crown corporation. If he looks at the restructuring of Crown corporations in Saskatchewan he will find that they have become fiscally responsible. Second, there has been the elimination of some Crown corporations since the return of the Progressive Conservative Government in Saskatchewan. Third, when the Minister refers to closure, anything that limits debate and stops the democratic process short of fulfilment is closure. When closure is administered in committee by the Liberal and NDP Members to stop the Saskatchewan stock growers and Saskatchewan honey producers from appearing before the Standing Committee on Agriculture and presenting their feelings and their case, it does not matter what it says in the Standing Orders, it is closure and a gagging of the democratic process.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose a question to the Hon. Member. It seems that the main problem the Official Opposition has with Canagrex is the buy and sell power. Is he aware that a commercial corporation has existed since the 1940s and that it has exactly the same powers as Canagrex in commercial areas? With regard to certain agricultural commodities, this corporation has been doing exactly what Canagrex is proposed to do, and has been doing for a great many years with regard to canola, that is, the Canadian Commercial Corporation. It has been doing a very fine job. We had the Estimates before the Finance Committee not more than two weeks ago. Members opposite were present. That corporation was given a glowing round of applause for the work that it has been doing. Indeed, Members asked why it had not moved into the agricultural area and whether it could do the kinds of things that Canagrex is proposed to do. Members of that committee were told that yes, it could, if the Government and the Opposition wanted it to do so, but Canagrex was being designed specifically to deal with agricultural commodities. That is why the Canadian Commercial Corporation is not moving into that area.

We have had a corporation like this for a great many years with the buy and sell power and with the power to deal state to state. It does not currently have the power to deal state to private sector, but it could have if the Government gave it that mandate. It could do that by simply saying, "Would you please do it". It would not even take a change in parliamentary legislation.

We have this corporation already. It has been doing a good job. It has been serving the farmers of western Canada with regard to canola very well. The Crown corporation does exist. If that is the case, why all this great hue and cry when the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) brings forward legislation to provide an agricultural equivalent to the Canadian Commercial Corporation?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, in response, I would pose a question to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans). He must not be aware that under the Agriculture Products Act the Minister of Agriculture already has those powers. They are all there, they have been there for a long time and the Minister did not use them. He said he needs a new Act, a whole new Bill. He needed more powers when he had all the powers which the Member for Ottawa Centre asks for.

We have the Canadian Commercial Corporation which has powers in agricultural export also, and the Government did not use them. It wanted to bring in another Bill, a Canagrex Bill designed specifically for agriculture. When we look at other countries that have state-controlled agriculture and export organizations, we see that they are not doing so great when it comes to feeding their own people. We in Canada have been doing pretty well. That is one of the reasons why we are suspect. All these powers have been in these two Acts. We are not sure why the Minister wants to bring in more.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to speak in the House to a Bill we shall be adopting today, whose purpose is to create the Canagrex corporation. I think Canada has a duty to acquire this export mechanism if it is to remain competitive with other countries in the world that are taking concrete steps to extend export markets for their agricultural products. These countries, which are providing some very stiff competition, have already taken steps to increase their exports of agri-food products, and I am thinking more particularly of our neighbours to the South, the Americans.

In fact, the U.S. has several mechanisms, such as the Foreign Agriculture Service, the Co-operative Program, the Commodity Credit Corporation and many related credit programs such as Public Law 480, which are aimed at improving their agri-food exports which are already earning $36 billion for the U.S.. This shows the kind of priority set by countries like the United States on exports of agri-foods products. Other countries have followed suit, including France, Denmark, Great Britain, Germany, Israel and Mexico, and set up appropriate mechanisms to maximize the development of their export markets.

The powers granted to agencies in the United States to facilitate sales of agricultural products provide for a sensible and flexible approach to seeking out export markets. It is also very interesting to note that the industry is seeking further powers. In addition, many groups are in favour of increased co-ordination of efforts, and pressure is very strong for adopting the Export Trading Act, which will create export trading companies similar to the Japanese giants that deal with all aspects of exports. In other words, Canada will be facing increasing competition on the market, and it must act now before it is too late.

Some people claim that Canagrex will not be like the mechanisms that already exist in other countries for the purpose of developing exports of agri-food products. Nothing could be further from the truth! Our competitors are not competing with other sectors in their own countries but with other countries. They have created agencies to facilitate sales to foreign buyers, in order to maximize sales of their products. That is exactly what Canagrex will do: Act as an agent to facilitate and promote, through all its members as enumerated in the Bill, the rapid sales of Canadian agri-food products on foreign markets.

Mr. Speaker, to illustrate what is now happening to the export of Canadian agri-food products in certain sectors, I would like to quote the comments made by Mr. William Jenkins, former dean of the Nova Scotia College of Agriculture, during an interview last year. He said:

> In the Atlantic provinces, the export of farm products is like a war. It is every man for himself, which is a very rudimentary way of selling any product . . . It is nearly perfect chaos.

The Canadian agricultural industry cannot afford this. What the other countries are now doing to prevent such a war only confirms the importance of Canadian competition on export markets. I therefore urge the House to give rapid passage to the Bill on Canagrex by voting for it this evening. Thanks to the markets it will provide abroad, this corporation will help our farmers as well as Canada as a whole.

I heard earlier some Progressive Conservative Members who seemed at one point to give the impression that everyone is against the establishment of Canagrex, but I would like to mention a few organizations that have supported Bill C-85, such as the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, which stated that the Canagrex Bill should be passed during this session, and that the agricultural industry desperately needs such a legislation.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture also sent a brief to members on both sides of the House in which it expressed its serious concern about the Canagrex issue. The Federation believes that it is desirable that such a development corporation have all the flexibility required to promote the development of Canadian exports, to take the risk of joint ventures, to provide specialized advice if need be, to negotiate from state to state in many circumstances where it is desirable or essential to share the risks and support long-term development, meet publicity requirements, provide guarantees and allow its employees to accept responsibility if required and to actively seek market opportunities.

And to that end, Mr. Speaker, in a document recently made available to us, it was stated that in the maple syrup industry, in particular, it was expected that with the setting up of this Canagrex corporation, sales could be arranged right now or at least over the next few months, the next few years, for up to $5 or $6 million more on markets such as Germany or Japan. I feel this is most important, especially in my constituency of Lévis, on the South Shore, where a number of maple syrup producers, especially in the Beauce, Bellechasse and Lotbinière areas have been faced over these last few years with important surpluses. It is my view that Canagrex comes at the right time in these circumstances to allow those maple syrup producers to unload or sell on export markets that production that is so expensive in Canada and in Quebec. I therefore expect that our Progressive Conservative friends cannot afford to oppose that over a long period.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture goes on to say that in their view, they cannot but conclude that the opposition to Canagrex should not be considered as a valid or substantive opposition but rather as a concern that the Corporation might be mismanaged and misused, that it might further its own expansionist goals without regard to the commodity sectors involved.

In setting up Canagrex, we explicitly and specifically say that for once, from its very beginning, we will have a Crown corporation that will be submitted to the control of the Auditor General. Reference is made to integrated audit, to reports which will have to be submitted to the Standing Committee on Agriculture. And these will come back to the House. I think that we have all the possible safeguards to make sure that the corporation will be efficiently managed.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, we had the opportunity to meet with spokesmen for the Union des producteurs agricoles who were heard several times in connection with grain transportation and I have in mind that well-known Gilson report. In this case as with the policy on grain transportation, the UPA is begging the government to pass this legislation on Canagrex. I refer to a statement made by the UPA spokesman who appeared before the Senate committee on February 2, 1983 and I quote:

> The UPA welcomes, therefore, the principle of creating a corporation intended to promote, improve and diversify our export of agricultural and food products, and supports entirely the position taken by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture to that effect. We hope, nevertheless, that Quebec will be adequately represented within Canagrex and that this Corporation will show both flexibility and good judgment in using the powers which are given to it. Finally, we hope fervently that the Federal Government will provide to Canagrex all the necessary funds for its effective functioning and that, on the other hand, the work of Canagrex will never be hampered by the sloth and bureaucratic complexity which are too often found in this kind of corporation.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and all of us have done a good job and in this legislation we have all the provisions required by the UPA.

And the UPA representative added this, since the submission of this brief, the UPA in particularly its president, Mr. Jacques Proulx, has constantly reiterated its support for the creation of a corporation to promote the export of agricultural and food products, and to press for the passage of Bill C-85, as can be seen from the various telegrams of which copies are appended to today's brief and which were sent to the Minister of Agriculture, the Prime Minister of Canada, the government House Leader, the leader of the official opposition, various federal and provincial ministers and the president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

Finally, last autumn, the UPA began to study the amended text of Bill C-85, as tabled by the Commons Standing Committee on Agriculture on July 19, 1982. After studying the amendments, the UPA declared itself to be completely in agreement with the proposed changes, while continuing to press for all the recommendations contained in its brief of April, 1982.

As well, Mr. Speaker, a spokesman for the Montreal Board of Trade appeared before the same Senate committee. I will quote him to indicate, as I said earlier, that someone may have been trying to give the impression that we are creating some kind of monster which will be a disservice to the agricultural community, but I think that by now we have the proof that many agricultural organizations support the establishment of Canagrex. Here is the statement which can be found in the minutes of the proceedings of the Senate Standing Committee on Agriculture of Tuesday, February 1, 1983:

> What we need is some way of guaranteeing steady supply—multi-year contracts—and, in addition, assisting with infrastructure in the receiving country because many of the countries we are talking about do not have the sophistication in terms of infrastructure—

I think that the Montreal Board of Trade goes further than the other organizations. It even talks about giving immediate and direct assistance to those countries which might eventually become our clients.

The spokesman for the Montreal Board of Trade went on to say:

> One of the reasons Canagrex is needed is that we have to start developing long-term markets. We have to do that to, basically, find out that specific research we need in order to match our ability to produce and the product we produce to the markets. It seems to me that nobody is doing enough in terms of finding out what the needs and plans are in each country and converting that to what Canada has. Although research is covered in the bill, it seems to me that this would have to be done in co-ordination. Canagrex would be only a catalyst to get the research done. I do not think Canagrex should be the researcher per se.

We, as a country, have to export more agricultural products. Agribusiness is one of only about five areas of Canada's industry and economy where we can actually grow and, in fact, create employment. Referring to information I received from the Financial Post conference, there is capacity in Canada to produce two-thirds again the amount of agricultural products we currently produce.

Mr. Speaker, I have also read in Le Devoir an article by Florent Plante. It said that the National Council of the Parti Québécois was warning farmers against Bill C-85 concerning Canagrex. I have been sitting in this House for a little more than two years, and my experience tells me that when the Parti Québécois says that a proposal by the federal government should be rejected, it means precisely that it is time to approve this proposal. I believe we had had many examples of this in the last couple of years or months.

Also, we had the opportunity during the weekend to witness the nomination of a new leader for our friends in the Progressive Conservative Party, and I suggest we should perhaps ask Mr. Mulroney what is the position of this party concerning the establishment of Canagrex.

I think the time has come to ask the real questions, now that the convention is over, now that all those nice things have been said. Perhaps the time has now come to ask the new leader—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but it is now 5.45.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 62—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—NUCLEAR WEAPONS TESTING

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Before putting the motion to the House, since today is the final allotted day the House will go through the usual procedures to consider and dispose of the supply Bill. In view of recent practices, do Hon. Members agree that the supply Bill, which will go through all stages later today, be distributed now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa) moved:

That this House express its opposition to the escalation of the nuclear arms race by any nation and, in particular, its opposition to Canada's participation by testing in Canada any nuclear weapon or nuclear weapon delivery vehicle such as, and including, the Cruise missile.

He said: Mr. Speaker, last evening around 9.30 o'clock I was in the airport in Toronto, having spent a very busy day in southern Ontario. I, as other Hon. Members will recognize from their own personal experience, decided at that particular moment to telephone my home in Ottawa to tell my wife the time I managed to get a flight and the approximate time that I would be arriving home. Somewhat as a surprise to me, my daughter answered the telephone even though it was that time of night. It was a humid evening in Ottawa, as everyone in the city knows. She had trouble sleeping, but she was exuberant and happy to talk to her father. I in turn, as parents will certainly recognize for whatever unique, particular reason at a given time, was delighted to speak to my daughter because she symbolized in her own exuberance in the conversation a sort of warmth, humanity and the possibilities for life that one sees in children, particularly that one sees in a special way in one's own children. I hung up the telephone feeling much better, a much more contented and less tired human being than I was before I called.

I had a unique experience this morning which I would like to share with Hon. Members of the House, obviously having mulled over in my own mind at some subconscious level during the night the subject matter of today's debate. When I awoke this morning I thought of another ten-year-old child. This time she was not a blonde, blue-eyed Canadian ten-year-old by the name of Christine, but I thought back to 1945 in Japan. No doubt at that time there was in Hiroshima a ten-year old child, perhaps named Sachi, Setsu or Yuriko, just as exuberant and just as full of the promise for life, and quite conceivably she had spoken to her father by telephone at some point on that day. Within seconds, that young, exuberant, dark-eyed, black-haired girl was blown to smithereens.

I relate this to you, Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, because I say with all the depth that I can muster that what is involved in nuclear weaponry is the ultimate possibility that I think mankind, wherever they may live, senses at quite an unconscious level that we may well be involved in the process in this century of taking steps, through our own genius at one level in terms of creative scientific imagination, to create weapons of such devastating capacity that all of mankind could be obliterated. All of the prospects, not only for my daughter obviously but for every child and adult in the world, the kinds of things they might do, the poetry they might write, the architectural leaps of the imagination that they may reveal in terms of contributing to society, the dancing they may do, the songs they may sing, the friendships they may have, may never exist again for mankind.

What is at stake in talks that are now going on in Geneva, and in a more limited but very real way the kind of decision process taking place here in the City of Ottawa in the northern part of North America, will have the most profound implications for the future of mankind. I want to quote Pope John Paul II when he visited Hiroshima in February, 1981. He said:

In the past, it was possible to destroy a village, a town, a region, even a country. Now it is the whole planet that has come under threat. This fact should finally compel everyone to face a basic moral consideration: From now on, it is only through a conscious choice and through a deliberate policy that humanity can survive.

I want to emphasize in particular in Pope John Paul's words the last phrase:

—it is only through a conscious choice and through a deliberate policy that humanity can survive.

We in this country are now at a crossroads. We have a profoundly important decision to make. In my judgment, we can continue to make fine speeches and persuasive, rhetorical arguments about the need for peace and disarmament. They are not to be dismissed because we need talk about peace and disarmament. However, words are certainly not adequate in terms of political life because speeches and rhetoric are not enough.

We can go on talking, or we can put rhetoric aside and make a decision that will take us concretely toward a sane nuclear policy, which is to say a step toward nuclear disarmament. Surely to God now is the time that we in our own land took the same step toward nuclear disarmament.

• (1115)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I want to begin the substance of my argument not by merely expressing the moral concern that is appropriate and is, I am sure, felt by Members on all sides. I want to underline that concern and the moral implications for the possible obliteration of mankind that is a unique situation in our century in the history of mankind. That kind of moral decision is before us. But I want to face the concrete power arguments, if you like, the legitimately perceived security concerns of the great powers of the Soviet Union on the one hand and the United States of America on the other.

Both sides have legitimate security interests; no one in his or her right mind will deny that. But in my view and in the view of many thoughtful people on this continent and in Europe and Asia, both sides have indulged in practices and argumentation since the Second World War that ultimately are false.

Each time one of the great powers has embarked upon a further escalation of the nuclear arms race, it has used its perceived security interests as the rationale. I think we must be honest and put aside ideology. There is no doubt which side, ideologically speaking, of those broad camps every Member of the House is on. But putting that aside, one must acknowledge a certain legitimacy in the military concerns of each of the great powers. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself has said that in the House on a number of occasions. But surely we ought to be disturbed that when the Russians put in SS-20s, they invariably say they are doing that to counter some perceived American threat of American missiles that are already there, and they use that as a bargaining instrument that they hope will cause the West to embark upon serious negotiations that will lead to disarmament.

The same kind of argument is used by the Americans and indeed has been used by the Government of Canada in the past justifying the deployment of nuclear weapons and, in the present, it is an argument that is being used with reference to the proposed deployment of ground-launched Cruise missiles and Pershing missiles in Europe.

This argument, Mr. Speaker, that is so common to both of the great powers was used in a direct conversation I had with Mikhail Gorbachev, senior member of the Politburo who visited Canada recently and met with the Prime Minister and with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen). In a private conversation, he repeated the Soviet argument, which is exactly parallel to the American argument, that they have to escalate in this way, or they have to develop a Cruise, because if they do not the Americans will not come to their senses and so on.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that it is surely time that we recognize that both powers make these arguments and that in the context of existing nuclear strength those arguments do not now have, if they ever had, any logical validity at all. I want to stress that. Such experts in the field from the Soviet Union are not normally free to speak, and we know that, but in the United States the experts in the field, including former Secretaries of Defence, a former head of the CIA, former Rear-Admirals, and the experts in Canada, including George Ignatieff, the distinguished former ambassador to the UN, and retired military people in Canada, all agree that there is a balance of terror in the world. They agree that the Soviet Union has superiority in some weapons but that the United States has superiority in others. One side has a more sophisticated kind of delivery system with some kind of orbital nuclear weapon, and the other side has a different kind of delivery system.

When you take all this into consideration and seriously calculate the total implication, any rational person has to conclude, as the people I have just referred to concluded, that there is a balance of terror now. That is important in the strategic argument and discussions that are going on and it is crucial to the argument that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) has been making and that the Government of Canada has been making.

The point I want to make, Mr. Speaker, is that if the Soviet Union embarks on some kind of madness and we in the West retaliate with nuclear weapons—and there are serious moral questions about that, to say the least—there is absolutely no question of the capacity of western powers and the United States to do that and vice versa. If one side has the deterrent, both sides have the deterrent in terms of existing weapons systems now. Any question about limited nuclear wars or theatre nuclear wars is a particular kind of madness entertained by certain military figures in the United States and the Soviet Union. People whose intelligence and imagination I have a greater respect for acknowledge that this is completely ridiculous. Once the trigger is pulled, whatever the situation, however limited, we are in for a nuclear holocaust. We should have no illusions about that, Mr. Speaker.

Where does the Cruise come into this discussion? I want to say something about the Cruise because that is the subject matter of this debate; that is the entity we are talking about testing in this country. In particular, of course, I am talking about the air-launched Cruise.

What is particular about the Cruise as a nuclear weapon? First of all, all Cruise weapons, ground-launched or air launched, are deadly accurate and are low flying. In addition, they are very small and this makes their existence difficult to verify. Finally, the air-launched Cruise, the kind of weapon that is being discussed for development in this country, has a unique characteristic not common to other Cruises: it has the potential for being a first-strike weapon. When you add that potential to its accuracy, its low-flying capacity and its small size, you are confronted with a qualitative change in the development of nuclear weapons.

We are not just talking about another extension of the number of missiles or an increase in megatonnage or what have you; we are talking about a qualitatively different horrific weapon that has the potential for a first strike against the Soviet Union. Or as I understand it—because the Soviet Union is probably doing the same thing—for the Soviet Union to launch a surprise attack on the United States of America with its Cruise missile.

In this context I should like to quote an eminent authority on the seriousness of the Cruise, Mr. Speaker. Mr. William Epstein is the former director of disarmament at the United Nations and just two weeks ago he wrote in an article:

The long-range nuclear tipped Cruise missile is one of the most dangerous and destabilizing weapons ever conceived.

Mr. Epstein went on to emphasize that in his view what was particularly ominous about the air-launched Cruise was its first-strike potentiality. It completely destabilizes the current balance of terror, if you like, that exists between the two superpowers.

The other point I would make in this context is that because of its small size, it can be hidden. If the United States, with our complicity, proceeds to develop and deploy the Cruise, it will make almost impossible—but not impossible—future negotiations for verifiable disarmament agreements. This is precisely because the Cruise will be very hard to detect, whether located here in North America or somewhere in the Soviet Union. Therefore, by proceeding with this now, if we think we are having difficulty at Geneva in terms of what is being discussed, it will perhaps be a "piece of cake" to reach a settlement in the current talks compared to the kind of negotiations which would be required after the two sides develop and deploy a Cruise missile.

I would like to switch now to a related matter, Mr. Speaker, which the Government has talked about with a lot of misleading argumentation, and that is the position of NATO when it comes to the Cruise. I would like to begin with a quote from the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), who is here today for this debate, when she raised a question in the House of Commons on March 24 of this year. She said the following when referring to NATO, and I quote:

—the decision which was taken in 1979 applied to the arms control talks and to the deployment of the Cruise—

That is to say, the ground Cruise.

—and Pershing missiles in Europe only, and had nothing to do whatsoever with the testing of any guidance missile system here in Canada.

The Hon. Member made that assertion and, of course, she had responsibility for Canada at that time and knew what she was talking about. The Prime Minister, in response to the question which was raised by the Hon. Member, agreed and said:

That understanding is correct—

That is to say that there was no obligation coming out of a NATO agreement at all for Canada to proceed to test, particularly, an air-launched Cruise missile. It is clear in my mind that the decision to test, or to participate in discussions which led to the formulation of an agreement between Canada and the United States pertaining to the air launched Cruise, came as a result of a specific request not from NATO but from the United States of America.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) but the time allotted to him for his remarks has expired. He would be allowed to continue by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Agreed.

Mr. Broadbent: I thank Hon. Members for giving me the extended time. The request, Mr. Speaker, to provide a facility for testing that weapon clearly came from the United States to Canada. I would like to say in this context that the former Secretary of State for External Affairs acknowledged in the House on April 29 last that this was the case. That Minister has never denied, either outside the House or in the House of Commons, that this was the case, that it was a bilateral arrangement made between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States.

However, I regret to say that on a matter as fundamentally important as this, the Prime Minister, as is so often his wont, has attempted to mislead the people of this country. He has systematically tried to confuse the nature of the decision which was made about the Cruise. Time after time he has asserted that if Canada goes ahead and tests the air-launched Cruise, it is somehow intrinsically related to our commitments to NATO. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that this is not the case. The former Secretary of State for External Affairs on the Conservative side, who is in the House today, says it is not the case. The former Secretary of State for External Affairs on the Government side says it is not the case. I say it is time that the Prime Minister of Canada stood up and said it is not the case.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I would like now, Mr. Speaker, to refer to the Geneva talks. Without sounding Pollyannaish, I am sure I speak not only for all Hon. Members of my Party but for all Hon. Members here, and indeed for all people around the world who are watching what is going on, when I say that it has been refreshing to see both the United States and the Soviet Union alter their positions.

• (1130)

I will not go through the sequence of bargaining stances taken by the two great powers, but the whole world notes that each has recognized the legitimacy of changes made by the other side. There is an apparent kind of realism developing which may lead to some kind of sanity in those talks and could result in agreements signed between the two great superpowers. But again I want to stress, Mr. Speaker, that even if we get agreements in the two series of talks going on in Geneva, as important and positive as that will be for mankind, most Canadians are unaware that such agreements will have absolutely nothing to do with the right of either the Soviet Union or the United States to develop an air-launched Cruise missile. I repeat, whatever agreement is reached in the present talks, either the United States or the Soviet Union would be entitled to go on and develop the Cruise missile.

Therefore, I want now to come to our country's role in this historic process. We are at a turning point. It is not customary for Canadians to think in these terms. We are, after all, a limited power. We are not a great nation when it comes to global considerations in either our economic or military impact on the world. But I say, Mr. Speaker, that we are in a particularly important and unique position because we are part of an alliance and have entered into a bilateral arrangement with the United States concerning the possible testing of the Cruise missile. We can now as a country take a positive moral and yet realistic step towards peace and nuclear disarmament on the one hand, or we can continue in what could be a deadly march towards the ultimate holocaust by making a decision which says we, too, in Canada will play our role in developing the Cruise missile.

In what evidently is the majority of opinion of Canadians from coast to coast, including housewives, miners, loggers, bank clerks, professors, former military personnel, clergymen, farmers and political theorists, a whole cross-section of mankind as represented in our country have made it clear they are in opposition to the testing of the Cruise. Our view in this Party is that we should recognize what those people are saying to us. Sometimes majorities can be wrong, and intellectual honesty compels everyone in this House to say that. But if there ever was an instance when the collective conscience of a nation was expressing itself on the side of truth, it is on the issue of the Cruise missile. The majority is right!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I want to conclude with these two basic recommendations on behalf of my Party. We should take that small but important step for peace by making it very clear that we will not test the Cruise missile in Canada. In addition, we should exercise a kind of imaginative leadership, appropriate for perhaps a middle power in the world, by taking the initiative to urge the United States on the one hand, and the Soviet Union on the other, to begin immediately to negotiate a complete ban on the testing and development of air-launched Cruise missiles.

The argument we could make to both sides would have much more moral and practical persuasiveness if we have already taken the correct decision ourselves. Therefore when the Minister and the spokesperson for the Conservative Party enter into this debate, I hope they will address this very practical proposition. If they have arguments against it, we on this side would like to hear what they are.

I began, Mr. Speaker, with a personal reference to my daughter and with a reference to that other ten-year-old who was destroyed many years ago in an instant flash in Japan. Surely to God, Mr. Speaker, it is time for idealism and realism to come together in this debate and make the right choice so that children in our land will be able to develop their capacities and talents and have some joy so that never again will ten-year-olds have their lives snuffed out.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I would like the Leader of the New Democratic Party to clarify that portion of this rather unusual resolution which reads:

—by testing in Canada any nuclear weapon or nuclear weapon delivery vehicle such as . . . the Cruise—

What does he mean "any nuclear weapon", and could he explain to me if anyone in Canada with even a smidgen of authority has ever contemplated, suggested or mentioned testing any nuclear weapon in Canada, if by that he means a nuclear detonation?

Mr. Broadbent: I would be happy to answer the Hon. Member's question. It is a two-part resolution, as the Hon. Member knows. We are asking the House to commit itself to opposing the testing of any nuclear weapon on the one hand—it is a long-range commitment—but on the other hand, regarding the immediacy of the request which has now been made by the Government of the United States to the Government of Canada, we are specifically asking the House to oppose the testing of nuclear weapon delivery vehicles such as, and including, the Cruise missile. I think it is reasonably straightforward but I hope my response has clarified it.

Mr. McKinnon: No, that is not the answer I was looking for. To his knowledge, has anyone in Canada with a smidgen of authority ever suggested for a moment that we would be testing nuclear weapons in Canada as opposed to a nuclear weapon delivery vehicle?

Mr. Broadbent: Well, I think the answer to that is no.

Mr. McKinnon: I am very curious as to why he bothered putting it in if he was simply not trying to frighten the general public by insinuating someone was thinking of testing nuclear weapons.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKinnon: Well, it is in the motion and we did not put it in, the NDP did.

The Leader of the NDP brought up the spectre of the Russians reacting to the development of the Cruise missile by building a Cruise missile of their own with, as seems to be a favourite word of the Leader of the NDP, a potential for striking North America. Surely the Hon. Member is aware that the Russians have been deploying an SS-20 missile every five days for a couple of years now, and at a slightly lesser rate than that in the previous two years. Also, these do not have a potential, but, rather, a capacity to strike North America if they were sighted on the closest Russian soil in eastern Siberia. Why does he worry about the Cruise missile, which does not have the range to get here in the first place—

• (1140)

Some Hon. Members: Air-launched.

Mr. McKinnon: —and, in the second place, when there is something he could worry about a great deal more, the SS-20s, which can reach the northwestern United States?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I must say candidly that I am a little surprised at the question. I am well aware of the existing weapons of the Soviet Union. They are capable of being used against Canada and the United States, and I am as concerned about that possibility as the Hon. Member.

What I was discussing, in terms of the air-launched Cruise, is that if the Soviets go ahead and develop and deploy it, it will give them the real capacity of launching a strike, with first-strike capacity, which could be devastating because of all the reasons I gave concerning the uniqueness of the weapon, its accuracy and so on. Here we have a qualitative change in the arms race. I would be very interested to hear what the Hon. Member's Party stands for on this matter.

Mr. Darling: You will hear.

Mr. Broadbent: However, this Party is opposed to the development of this kind of weapon by either the United States or the Soviet Union. We would like to see this country showing a little practical and moral leadership in proposing an agreement and helping to facilitate the great powers reaching an agreement in which neither of them develops this horrendous weapon.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert: It is just that on this particular occasion it is a New Democratic motion, However, I would say to him that I trust that even some of the more senior Members in his Party could recall for him and for many of his younger brethren the attitudes prior to World War II, when the same arguments which he made today with regard to nuclear arms were raised with regard to nerve gases and bacteriological warfare. They were, shall we say, the thrills of the sensational press of the weekend in those days. There was not television. Is he not aware that both sides had those weapons in World War II, but did not use them because they were so terrible? Therefore, how does he feel that appealing only to emotions, and most of his arguments were on emotional sides, will guarantee—

An Hon. Member: Were Hiroshima and Nagasaki emotional?

Mr. Lambert: —that nuclear weapons will be used?

Mr. Broadbent: To answer very quickly, Mr. Speaker, it would seem to me, although there are some factual inaccuracies in the contention, that the weapons prior to World War II which he described were indeed on both sides. However, with respect, I do not see how that is relevant to the argument.

Mr. Lambert: Oh?

Mr. Broadbent: He went on from there to ask how I would think that emotional arguments would somehow be relevant to bringing about peace or disarmament and so on. That was the thrust of his point. I categorically reject the suggestion that what I offered was what the Hon. Member described as an emotional argument. I am among those who believe that passion and logic can be fused, that we are not disembodied spirits. However, I appeal to the Hon. Member that if he is not persuaded by some kind of emotional concern with the fate of mankind, will he at least do me the service of reading the logic which is embedded in the argument? If he does a little research, he will find all kinds of military experts around the world who agree with me and not with him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, the question that I would like to address to the Leader of the New Democratic Party is a request that he outline the attitude of himself and his Party, if they are the same, toward the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the commitments that bind the allies in that organization.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, so far as that is relevant to the debate, I made it very clear. I spoke of NATO's position and Canada's position as stated by his former Secretary of State for External Affairs and by the present Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan). I am making the assumption that the Hon. Member heard my argument. If he did not, and I do not say this sarcastically, he could simply read Hansard when it is published. I made it very clear that there is no connection between a Cruise commitment and a NATO obligation.

Mr. Darling: Aren't you against NATO?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): If I might ask just one small supplementary question, is the Hon. Member suggesting that Canada withdraw from NATO?

Some Hon. Members: No, no!

Miss Jewett: That has nothing to do with it.

Mr. Broadbent: Sometimes the logical capacity of Hon. Members here is a little bizarre. If I said that there is no connection between a Cruise decision and NATO commitments, it would seem to me, in terms of my old Logic IB, to be a non sequitur to say that this has implications for withdrawing from NATO. It may be that the Hon. Member has taken a more advanced logic course than one of which I am aware.

An Hon. Member: You are the one who's lost.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, first I want to tell the House that I greatly appreciate the words of the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) in that we all seem to be searching together for the same goal—how to preserve peace. I agree with him on that score, but I certainly do not agree on the modality or the means of reaching the objective of preserving peace. When he says that speech and rhetoric are not enough, I agree, because reality is a completely different matter.

I am also very glad to have heard the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) raising the point with regard to the motion itself which, to my way of looking at it—

Miss MacDonald: It's dishonest.

Mr. Lamontagne: —seems to be very misleading in that it implies that someone or some Government in Canada, the previous Government or the present Government, has considered the possibility of testing nuclear weapons in Canada. No Government of which I know, neither previous ones nor the present one, has found this to be the way our Defence was heading.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, needless to say, I am very pleased to be taking part in this debate—first of all, as Minister of National Defence, because in that capacity, I share the reponsibility with Cabinet for ensuring that the sovereignty of our country is both protected and respected, and, with our allies and our various alliances, for maintaining our democratic traditions and our rights and freedoms in this country of ours.

[English]

I am also very proud to participate in this debate because, along with many others in the House and I am sure many in the public who are listening to us this morning, we as veterans have been through war. I have been lucky enough to live through and survive one and have been a prisoner of war, like many other Canadians and allies. I know the difference between war and peace, between the misery of war and the comfort and delight of peace; but not just any kind of peace—peace with freedom. This is very important.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lamontagne: I now have a few remarks because I think it is very important, in a debate like this one, to get the facts straight, to ensure that people across Canada have the right information, the right facts about what the Government and the House might be doing as far as defence is concerned. I welcome this debate because it provides me with an opportunity to clarify exactly what has transpired thus far in relation to the proposed testing of the guidance system of an unarmed Cruise missile. I repeat that I am referring to the guidance system of an unarmed Cruise missile.

I was at a university last week or the week before and many questions were asked. They were exactly the same as what the resolution today asks. "Mr. Minister, is it true Canada wants to test nuclear weapons?" That just shows how misinformation can get into the minds of people. The testing which is proposed is strictly for the guidance system of the unarmed Cruise missile.

I would like to make it very clear just exactly what was received by the Canadian Government from the American Government yesterday morning. As I announced yesterday, the United States Department of Defense submitted a project proposal for the testing of unarmed Cruise missiles in Canada to the Canadian Defence Department, as called for under the terms of the memorandum of understanding between our two countries. The memorandum of understanding gains its authority from the February 10, 1983 Canada-U.S. umbrella agreement; that is, the Test and Evaluation Program Agreement under which the U.S. may make specific requests to test a variety of weapons systems in Canada.

When I heard the Leader of the New Democratic Party saying that we have no commitment or that we have no obligation, if he had read the memorandum of understanding or the umbrella agreement, itself, it is very well written in very clear words that Canada may accept or refuse any test program which is proposed by the United States. There is no question of commitment. Even the previous Government did not make any commitment to test any kind of missile in Canada unless it is agreed.

Each project proposal outlines exactly what the U.S. would like to test in Canada. The project proposal for the testing of the guidance system of the Cruise missile in Canada is no different. Following our assessment of the project proposal, a recommendation will then be brought to Cabinet for discussion and decision.

If the Cabinet and the Government agree to the project proposal, a separate "project arrangement" will then be drawn up in which the details of the proposed tests will be set out and the obligations of both Parties clearly specified and defined like any other testimony under this agreement.

I must emphasize that the project arrangement itself, if one is indeed entered into, will be basically an administrative document, not a policy document. The policy itself is to be determined by Cabinet prior to the drafting of the project arrangement.

There is in Canada today a rather tense and certainly polarized debate over arms control strategy. There are numbers of people who are beginning to discover some of the facts of life in the nuclear age and, inevitably, they are getting a lot of them wrong.

Let us be absolutely clear on one point. There is no policy that can provide an absolute assurance that it will not lead to nuclear war. Consequently, we do not have the luxury of choosing a policy wholly untainted by the nuclear danger. We can only choose between policies that entail different degrees of risk. We and our western allies have chosen what is called deterrence.

NATO's security policy is one of deterrence. Within that policy rests the firm conviction that in a nuclear war there would be no winners. The entire purpose of nuclear weapons is to deter aggression, to deter their use by others. The Cruise missile around which this debate is centred shares that purpose with all other nuclear weapons, that is, to deter aggression. But there is a paradox in the strategy of deterrence which must be recognized. If nuclear weapons are to be useful to deter aggression, they must be credible. To be credible, there must be confidence, especially on the part of the opposition, that is the other side, that they will work.

Deterrence is not an attractive way of ensuring peace but it has worked. For it to work, NATO must possess the means to respond to aggression, both conventional and nuclear. The maintenance of a credible deterrent has helped to make western Europe strong and to keep the peace between East and West for over 30 years, despite circumstances that were often very difficult. It is hard to think of any other period in European history where such political divisions and so many potential flash points would not have led to war. That deterrent posture of the West still keeps the peace today.

Deterrence also provides the necessary stability to enable us to pursue arms control measures which will really give us a safer world if they are verifiable and apply equally to both sides. The posssession of nuclear weapons is an essential fact of deterrence. In a world where such weapons exist the NATO alliance must be able to deter their use by an enemy or to resist blackmail based on the threat of nuclear attack. Moreover, the possibility that nuclear weapons might be used remains a valuable disincentive even to conventional aggression against a power possessing them.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, do you think for one minute that if Afghanistan had been a nuclear power Soviet Russia would have invaded it? I think nuclear possession by Afghanistan would have been an absolute deterrent to such invasion.

Since 1945 conventional war in other parts of the world has killed over ten million people, and more are being killed with each passing day. Not only has nuclear war between East and West been avoided, but so also has conventional war in Europe been prevented. Nuclear war is a terrible threat; conventional war a terrible reality.

The crux of the debate is the validity of the strategy of deterrence. The ethical questions raised are grave and difficult. Churchmen and laymen alike are divided by the problem. It is argued that the indiscriminate mass killing associated with nuclear weapons is invariably and absolutely wrong. Therefore deterrence is wrong, some people say. But nuclear weapons exist and they cannot be disinvented.

I noted the Leader of the New Democratic Party quoted Pope John Paul. Let me quote what Pope John Paul said last June in his message to the United Nations special session on disarmament. He attacked the arms race but called for the mutual, progressive and verifiable reduction of armaments. He emphasized that negotiation was still the only realistic response to the threat of war. On the subject now at the centre of the Christian debate he said that: in current conditions deterrence based on balance, should certainly not be seen as an end in itself but as a step on the way to progressive disarmament, may still be judged morally acceptable. The Pope commented to anti-nuclear groups that there is a profound and sincere desire for peace but noted that their project proposal and policy can often lend themselves to political exploitation. I think what Pope John Paul has said is indeed something on which we should reflect.

There is as well a second morality at issue. Deterrence can be made and kept as a stable system, with only a remote chance of nuclear war. The primary intention is not to kill the enemy but to keep the peace. The question is: Does the immorality of something which will only happen in extreme circumstances outweigh the morality of what is being achieved day by day, and has been achieved for over 34 years, peace in Europe? Surely the greater good is served by ensuring that nuclear weapons are never used by preventing nuclear war in the first place.

Many Hon. Members will have followed the discussion at the recent Anglican General Synod in England on the morality of deterrence. One-sided disarmament, which is indeed what this motion calls for—

Mr. Broadbent: It does not. Be honest.

Mr. Lamontagne: —was turned down by more than three to one. I think it is unilateral because the Hon. Member only spoke about the West. He never spoke about the other side. Instead, the church called upon the British Government to sustain their nuclear deterrent while seeking multilateral disarmament. We, too, are convinced of the correctness of this multilateral approach. In the meantime deterrence, although perhaps morally flawed for some, is the only means at present whereby war can be prevented and the threat of war kept as it is now, very low. Clearly it is the lesser evil.

Of course, that is not the end of it. No one can rest comfortably on such a policy alone as the basis of international peace for the rest of time. This is why we have to search unremittingly for better ways of ensuring a stable world. Vital among these is the Government's commitment to pursue effective measures of arms control and disarmament. In the meantime, for deterrence to remain effective Canada and other NATO nations must from time to time modernize their defence equipment, as existing systems become obsolete, if they want to retain a deterrent capability.

To those people who imply that Canada believes in building up a western nuclear war fighting capacity, I would like to say that the Government, together with other alliance governments, sees every part of our security policy and every weapon in the alliance arsenal as having only one purpose, that of contributing to deterrence and preventing war. A military balance is essential in today's world to our own security and that of our allies. We must use it as the basis for arms control, not as the starting point for an arms race. We want a balance, but we want one at much lower levels of armament on both sides than is the case at present.

Of course, that has long been the basis of NATO policy. It was the entire basis for NATO's December, 1979 two-track decision. Canada supported that decision and continues to support its implementation on both tracks, including deployment if arms control negotiations fail to yield satisfactory results. Our deepest wish is that deployment will not be necessary. But in logic it is difficult to see how, if Canadian support for the NATO decision was not then regarded as contributing to nuclear proliferation or to the arms race, any possible assistance with the testing of one of the delivery vehicles could be so construed now.

I recognize that there is a widespread climate of uncertainty, and in some cases fear and insecurity seems to have spread in recent years in the West. Sadly some Canadians seem determined to cultivate that fear and insecurity. They would even have us believe that they have the monopoly on concern for humanity. Of course they have no such monopoly. The Government shares the same concern, at least to as great a degree. We respect those who work for peace, but we reject the sanctimony of those who take unto themselves the word "peace" as if it were their own. We are convinced that Canada and Canadians are best served by a prudent defence strategy and a realistic arms control policy. Within the NATO alliance we have both.

The upsurge of anti-nuclear sentiment, with its overtone of anti-Americanism, is one of the most important problems we face today. The United States has been and remains essential to our security and that of Europe. NATO policies and determination have brought about changes in Soviet attitudes, not those of the peace movements or the unilateralists. It is NATO which is proposing radical solutions in arms negotiations and the Soviet Union which is holding things up. Popular protest should be directed at the Soviet Union, not at the United States. If one had only two choices, to live in one or the other country as a pacifist, which one would be chosen—to live in the United States with its freedoms or in Soviet Russia which incarcerates pacifists or anyone who wants to petition their Government?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lamontagne: Perhaps we have only ourselves to blame. We had assumed that our security policy and the basis for it was both well understood and accepted by the great majority of Canadians. But we may have failed to put over to some the basic aims of the strategy of deterrence—the maintenance of peace as well as freedom. We and everyone listening to my comments are horrified by any prospect of war, but responsible governments have an obligation to face up to the horror of war and work to prevent it. That is what our security policy is about.

Quite frankly, such a motion from a Party that proposes that Canada withdraw from NATO and end our alliance with the Americans does not surprise me. Their ideas on Canadian defence policy or the lack of it in most areas are well known to the Canadian people. It is more or less a policy of submission. Canadians are overwhelmingly in favour of NATO and our alliance partnerships. The Government will continue its current policy direction so that the freedom, security and peace of all Canadians are maintained.

To do otherwise would be to invite aggression. I am thankful that ideas and solutions such as those proffered by Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party did not carry the day in the 1940s in England when the liberty of all the free world was at stake. We on this side of the House have learned from history. I suggest Hon. Members opposite spend a little more time reading and pondering the hard lessons of the past. I could give them a few lessons from my own experiences.

The Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party mentioned something about his small daughter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Minister but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lamontagne: I will be just a few minutes, Mr. Speaker. At the beginning of his speech the Hon. Leader of the NDP mentioned with great emotion his love and concern for his ten-year-old daughter. I could tell him that I have four children and I do not want them to go through what I went through in 1937, 1938 and 1939.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lamontagne: Some people at that time lacked the courage or the vision to see what was coming. They did not believe that was was imminent. Do they remember Mr. Chamberlain returning from that great peace mission in Munich? There was great elation in England.

Mr. Broadbent: Be honest, face the argument.

Mr. Lamontagne: Don't worry. No one remembers the non-aggression pact signed between Russia and Germany. All these things were not worth the paper on which they were written.

What this Government and most Canadians want is for us to do everything we can to preserve peace and our freedoms, liberties and rights. At the same time they want us to work very hard toward negotiations so that we can look at de-escalation of nuclear weapons and see how we can attain peace. It takes two to do this. I do not think it is right to blame the United States, as many people do, for not negotiating seriously and never mentioning that on the other side Soviet Russia is not dealing seriously with the matter at all.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, as an individual I have a great deal of respect for the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) and for what he and others did to serve Canada during the Second World War. Also I respect his integrity as a member of the Privy Council. However, I would like to point out that the New Democratic Party has never stood and I hope will never stand for any kind of unilateral disarmament.

I say sincerely to the Minister that I think the matter is cheapened when it is put to the issue of choosing whether we would rather be under Soviet control or American control. As an individual I believe, as do Hon. Members of the NDP across the country, in the freedoms and justices for which people like the Minister of National Defence and other Members of the House of Commons fought during the Second World War and during other wars in which Canada has been involved. I do not want to see this debate cheapened to an issue of politics choosing either a communist or free world. I believe all Members of this House would choose the free world in which we live, which we would go to arms again for under similar circumstances. I am sure Members would take up that call.

It is not an issue of the United States versus the Soviet Union. It is not an issue of New Democrats versus Conservatives versus Liberals. The question is nuclear arms. This House of Commons and this Parliament should deal very seriously with that issue. The consequences are devastating. Although the Minister mentioned that the Pope had taken an initial step, we must take steps beyond that to work for some kind of multilateral disarmament around the world. Canada can play a very key role in that. I want to set the record straight.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I apologize for interrupting the Hon. Member, but the provisional orders of the House provide for brief questions and comments. It has been determined previously that 90 seconds would be reasonable in the circumstances, especially in view of the large number of Members rising to put questions and make comments. Would the Hon. Member please make his point.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, I respect your intervention. I think the less than a minute which I took is reasonable in terms of addressing the speaker. The question I have directly for the Minister of National Defence follows on a very local concern. I understand that the nuclear arms issue and the Cruise missile is a much larger issue, a global issue. My question relates to a local concern.

The constituency I represent contains within it part of the Primrose Lake air weapons range where the Cruise missile is proposed to be tested. I have constituents who live within three miles of the border of the Primrose Lake air weapons range. It has been admitted in the umbrella agreement which was tabled in this House that the Cruise missile can become lost. It was admitted as a fact that a couple of Cruise missiles have recently crashed in the United States. It does not matter to those people whether the delivery system contains a nuclear warhead or not; there is the possibility of its crashing in their community. It is nuclear weaponry. The only thing that is not there is the nuclear warhead.

What provision is made for people just outside the range with regard to the possibility of the Cruise missile becoming lost and crashing into one of the communities I represent as a Member of Parliament in this House of Commons? What provisions are there to provide security to them and to provide compensation in cases where a faulty Cruise missile is proposed to be tested?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Hon. Member read very carefully the agreement and also the memorandum of understanding in which all the security measures are listed—what we should ask from our American friends, what is the possibility of an accident and so on.

In view of the few words that have just been said, I would like to mention again that it is an unarmed missile. There is no question of a nuclear weapon at all in this case. It is the guidance system we are testing. This missile has already been tested in other places. May I assure you that all precautions will be taken to ensure that it does not fly over urban areas. All security measures will be taken, just as security measures are taken with regard to any plane or other flying object travelling over a particular area. Therefore the Hon. Member need not worry about a possible accident. Everything will be taken care of very carefully.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister regarding that part of his speech in which he compared this motion to the proposal that was under debate within the Anglican Church in England. The Minister may have unintentionally misled the House by his remarks; his remarks could have that effect.

The motion of the Anglican Church in England was a recommendation for complete nuclear disarmament. The motion now before the House refers to only one element of the nuclear armaments system, in fact one element of the nuclear arms delivery system. The Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) went to pains to make clear in his speech that he was talking about only that one part of the system, particularly for the reason that that would have an excalating effect if allowed to proceed. He made it clear that neither he nor his Party advocates complete nuclear disarmament, as did the resolution before the Anglican Church in England. Therefore I would ask the Minister to clarify his remarks to that effect so as to remove any completely erroneous suggestion that what we are dealing with today is total nuclear disarmament.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I agree it is not exactly the same issue, but it is very hard to dissociate this resolution or the Anglican Church resolution from deterrence. Any weakening on what we claim to be a critical, credible deterrent would diminish the power and the credibility of such a deterrent. That was the basis on which the Anglican Church in England was discussing the issue. When they said they should eliminate all nuclear weapons in Great Britain, the argument came back as to how there would be a deterrent which would be credible if that was done. It is the same situation here. We consider the Cruise missile testing as part of the global deterrent asked for by the Europeans on the two-track decision. We consider this as giving our allies moral support for what they are doing in Europe.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, during the course of the Minister's speech he developed an argument around the deterrent factor and suggested that if Afghanistan had had a nuclear weapon, it would have been a deterrent to any invasion by the Soviet Union. Is the Minister proposing that there be a wider proliferation of nuclear weapons as a deterrent? For example, in Third World countries such as Nicaragua, where there are tensions, should there be nuclear warheads as a deterrent against countries that may threaten them? Is that what the Minister was suggesting or was he being a bit facetious when he made that kind of argument?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, what I meant when I said that was much more profound. I did not have time to elaborate on the issue. I wanted to illustrate the kind of power which invaded Afghanistan. I mentioned that the nuclear deterrent is essential in order to prevent war and preserve peace. I do not want to imply that every country should have nuclear weapons in order to prevent invasion. I just say that if Afghanistan had been a nuclear power, I do not think Soviet Russia would have dared risk a nuclear war by invading it. I just wanted to illustrate that when the Soviets decide to have their way, making people submit who would not do that voluntarily, they do what they want by force. That is contrary to the manner on our side which always tries to act as democratically as possible. This can be argued either way.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to say that I regret that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is not present to hear this debate. I have noticed during Question Period that he is interested in the subject and one would assume that, because of his intimate knowledge of the subject, he has quite a considerable bit to do with the making of the policy of the Government. I do regret that he is not here. I am sure that he has other duties that have kept him away.

There are really three issues that we should be discussing today in a debate on nuclear disarmament. We should first of all talk about nuclear arms control, which everybody is in favour of. We should then talk about the testing of the Cruise missile as another facet of the same problem. Finally, we should talk about the Canada-U.S. agreement. These three things are completely intertwined, and it is very difficult to discuss them together in the context of non-confidence motion. I shall have more to say about this motion in a moment.

Yesterday when I spoke in the House, I was critical of the Government for not giving us more information on the agreements that are likely to be signed. I was looking at the "Memorandum of Understanding Relating to the Canada-U.S. Test and Evaluation Program", which contains the kinds of things that I think the Government should be telling us about before it takes the final step, if it ever does, and agrees to test the Cruise missile. I expect that what we really want is the project arrangement document. Now, as we listen to what I am about to read, we should search our minds to see if there is any security aspect that, if breached, would be devastating to a defence effort. The document reads:

> The Project Arrangement document will contain, as applicable, the following:
> a. an outline of the T&E project;
> b. a description of the agreed location and the project plan;
> c. a full description of access to and use of test sites accorded to DOD including:
> (1) details of personnel and equipment to be employed in Canada,
> (2) details of troop movements, flight plans, and reconnaissance requirements,
> (3) general details of RF emitters, (specific details on power and bandwidth will be provided separately to DND for concurrence),
> (4) details of required installation and removal of DOD fixed equipment,
> (5) restrictions on access and any plans to provide additional site security that DOD may find necessary, and
> (6) any other special requirements;
> d. details of the DND control, safety and security precautions for the T&E project;
> e. details of the DND support and/or participation;
> f. a description of construction requirements;
> g. DOD mapping requirements;
> h. details of stores and equipment to be expended or left at the test site for DND disposal;
> j. a statement of DND rights to data arising from the T&E projects;
> k. description of management arrangements including the identification of Project Managers for each Department and a statement on reporting requirements;
> m. a detailed estimate of the anticipated costs for approved DND support;
> n. details on the arrangements for the protection of Intellectual Property;
> p. details of arrangements for security;
> q. details of arrangements for visits;
> r. details on the duration and arrangements for termination of a T&E project before its conclusion; and
> s. details of financial arrangements and reimbursement.

This is not Question Period, but I would hope that if the Minister gets a chance he would respond by telling me what there is within that document that would, if made known, breach security or imperil the security of Canada. If there is anything within that document that would do that, then I would be willing to back off from it. To my mind, that is exactly what I want to know about these tests and I cannot see how it would imperil security at all if I were to find out about them.

Perhaps I could now speak to this rather odd resolution that is before us. I must say that I think the Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish), who was talking to the Minister about cheapening this debate, presumably had nothing to do with preparing this cheap little resolution that quite obviously was designed for purely political reasons. It should be borne in mind that this is a mischievous little resolution that includes the implication that someone is considering the testing of nuclear weapons here in Canada while it does not mention whether the two-track policy should be favoured or not. As a matter of fact, we thought of amending this resolution, but its syntax is of such a nature that it would be almost impossible to amend without deleting the entire motion and writing a new one.

Mr. Broadbent: It is very clear.

Mr. McKinnon: It is very clear? What does it mean when it says that it opposes testing in Canada of any nuclear weapon if it does not mean that the drafters of this document are trying to frighten the population?

So far, something else has arisen out of these speeches. Disregarding how Members of the NDP have taken this very, very serious subject and have tried to turn it into a political brownie point for themselves, I would like to point out that, by my understanding, today is the final Opposition Day before we rise for the summer. Today is the last Opposition Day with a vote of non-confidence and we are not touching upon employment, we are not touching upon the economy, we are not touching upon things that are important to the people. We are only touching upon this issue that is important to considerably fewer people than the number of people who are interested in unemployment and in knowing from where they will get their next meal.

Recently I sent out a questionnaire to my constituents to which I received 5,000 responses. I realize the bias that is created by questionnaires with questions that are improperly phrased and I also realize that the people who answered my questionnaire are, to a large degree, people who support me. However, the third question on the questionnaire read: "Do you believe Canada should remain in NATO?" I like to keep these questions short because I do not like to influence people. The responses were yes, 86.6 per cent; no, 7.5 per cent; and no answer, 5.9 per cent. The fourth question read: "Do you believe Canada should agree to have the Cruise missile tested at Cold Lake provided no nuclear armaments are carried into Canada during the tests?" The responses were yes, 72 per cent; no, 23 per cent; and no answer, 4 per cent.

Now, to me, the answers to these two questions were particularly interesting when considered within the context of the answer to the eighth question: "Thinking of federal politics only, do you generally consider yourself to be a supporter of the Liberal Party, the NDP or the PC Party?" The responses were Liberal, 7.3 per cent; NDP, 7.3 per cent; and PC, 73.2 per cent. There were 609 responses that did not answer that question.

Now, in actual figures that comes out to 364 people who claim that they are NDP supporters.

An Hon. Member: Were all those PC supporters your relatives?

Mr. McKinnon: I do not have 3,661 relatives, unfortunately. I segregated those 364 NDP responses to see how the respondents had answered these two questions. It might be of interest to the Hon. Member who led off this debate that in response to the question whether we should stay in NATO or not, 67 per cent of NDP supporters believed that Canada should remain in NATO. These are people who identify themselves as belonging to the NDP and 67 per cent of them go directly against the declared policy of the NDP, which is to withdraw from NATO. Perhaps Members of the NDP should wonder how well they actually represent their own grass roots.

I was equally surprised by the response to the Cruise missile question in that 35 per cent of NDP supporters answered in favour of testing the Cruise missile and 65 per cent were opposed.

I mention these figures in order to impress upon the House something that the House knows very well at the present time, and that is that this issue runs across Party lines. There are many people in Canada who have very sincere opinions on this issue, and I think it is up to all of us to try to educate these people as much as we can so that their decisions and ultimately our decisions will reflect the deepest possible spectrum of public opinion.

Before I go to the main body of my speech, I would like to mention the theological background of this question. For a while this morning, I began to feel as if I were at some kind of a theological college where people were questioning what the General Synod of the Church of England said. A headline from the London Times of Friday, February 11, reads: "General Synod rejects unilateral nuclear disarmament". The article went on to say that unilateral nuclear disarmament was rejected and support given in principle to a British nuclear deterrence. The Synod called for a British commitment to no first use.

Along this theological vein, I read further and found a quotation from Pope John Paul who was mentioned by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. An article in The Economist said that Pope John Paul attacked the arms race and called for mutual, progressive and verifiable reductions of armaments. That is exactly what the Conservative Party called for. The article continues:

Negotiation was still, he emphasized, the only realistic response to the threat of war. On the subject now at the centre of the Christian debate, he said:

"In current conditions, deterrence based on balance, certainly not as an end in itself but as a step on the way towards a progressive disarmament, may still be judged morally acceptable".

The article also had this to say:

Inconveniently, Christianity's founder left behind a less than wholly clear set of rules. He instructed his followers to love their enemies, not to resist evil and, when struck, to turn the other cheek. (Matthew 5:39-44). In the Sermon on the Mount, he praised the peacemakers (Matthew 5:9). Yet he also whipped the traders and the money-changers out of the Temple (John 2:14-16), and rather ambiguously said he had come into the world "not to send peace but a sword" (Matthew 10:34). What were his followers to do?

What his followers do 2,000 years later, I suppose, is to debate the thing to some degree. I would ask that the debate be as informed as possible.

I am pleased that this motion is before the House because we have needed one, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to have a debate after we got the information that I have detailed today. I want to point out some of the misconceptions and some of the misinformation that seems to be abroad in the country concerning the Cruise missile. In view of the number of misconceptions, perhaps it would be wise to include some of the history of the initiation and development of this weapon which has brought it to its present stage.

First of all, I believe this missile is not the great leap forward in technology that some people would have us believe. In fact, many knowledgeable people have been concerned that while the Cruise missile and the Pershing II are meant to counter the Russian SS-20, which first came into operational service some four years ago, they are not in the minds of many its equivalent.

The second point is that the Cruise missile is not a first-strike weapon. I realize that the Leader of the New Democratic Party said that it had a potential for that. For those people whose main characteristic is a kind of paranoiac anti-Americanism, it is fashionable to claim that the Cruise missile is a quintessential first-strike weapon. Such is not the case. It is, however, a very capable second-strike weapon. The main requirement of a second-strike weapon is that it should deter a first strike. The capabilities of a first-strike weapon are that it should be able to render the enemy's nuclear armaments incapable of retaliation.

Until quite recently one seldom heard the expression "first-strike weapon" applied to any type of weapon except the intercontinental ballistic missile, the ICBM, and rightly so. To fulfil the prime requirement, the ability to destroy all of the enemy's weapons that can reach your territory, is not possible at the present time for either side, and there is very little likelihood that it will be possible within the next decade.

There are really no weapons with a first-strike capability, therefore. The main weapon that prevents the first-strike scenario from being valid is nuclear-powered, nuclear-armed submarines on both sides, cruising in the deepness of the oceans. It is not possible at the present time to track or locate them but their armament is well able to be fired with fairly good accuracy onto the enemy's homeland. So let us stop the misinformation about the Cruise missile being a great leap forward and the ultimate in first-strike weapons.

I am not alone in this, Mr. Speaker. I should like to quote someone who might be recognized by the Party on my left. Mr. Ernie Regehr is the research director for Project Ploughshares. I do not agree with Mr. Regehr very often but I respect him as one who is dedicating his life to examining the question of nuclear armaments. In a letter to The Globe and Mail on February 14 he wrote:

> The term "first-strike" is used by nuclear strategists to refer to a pre-emptive nuclear attack by one side against the other's nuclear weapons system—
> Any country pursuing a first-strike capability would build weapons systems that are highly accurate, with a short warning time—
> Any country pursuing a first-strike capacity would be unlikely to rely on cruise missiles—

Another authority, Adam Bromke, who I believe was a former adviser to the President of the United States, said:

> The cruise missile is not an offensive, "first strike" weapon. The Soviets, in fact, are more concerned about the deployment in Europe of the Pershing II—

If one compares the Cruise missile to the SS-20, the comparison is not too favourable for the Cruise. To understand this it should be pointed out that the method of propulsion and the airframe that compose the main components of the Cruise missile are very similar to the German weapon of World War II which was known as the V-1. That is, both vehicles are air-breathing, pilotless aircraft. The improvement in the Cruise missile over the V-I is mainly in the guidance system, which is much more sophisticated. The Cruise missile, however, flies along at 450 to 600 miles per hour and has a range of approximately 1,800 miles. The SS-20, which it is supposed to counter, can cover 1,800 miles in some six minutes whereas the Cruise missile would take three hours to do the same thing.

Much has been made of the fact that the Cruise missile flies close to the ground and cannot be picked up by radar. In opposition to this, one should realize that whether you can pick up the SS-20 or not makes very little difference. There is nothing in any nation's arsenal at the present time that is able to stop the SS-20 from completing its course and landing on the target. Think about that for a moment—the weapon that the Cruise missile is supposed to counter is incapable of being stopped by existing defensive weapons and can go from launch to target, 1,800 miles, in six minutes. The Cruise missile could be shot down by any modern fighter if it had sufficient warning; it can be shot down by enemy ground fire and it takes three hours to cover the same distance.

In view of time constraints, Mr. Speaker, and for other reasons I will leave the history of the Cruise missile to my distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), who will go into that aspect of the debate, considering that the two-track decision was taken in 1979.

A year or two after that the NATO allies announced the development of the Pershing II and the Cruise missiles must go ahead if a self-imposed deadline were to be met; that is, that deployment should start in the late fall of 1983 or in early 1984. This announcement served to bring the Russians to the negotiating table in Europe. Unfortunately, little has developed until quite recently. I for one am very encouraged by the developments of the last six months. I agree with those who say that the fact that the Russians have made concessions is not unrelated to the NATO decision to go ahead with the deployment of the Cruise and the Pershing II and to show their united determination on this matter. It is partly because of the request of the other nations in NATO that the United States has taken a conciliatory attitude as well. I feel much more optimistic than I did six months ago about the likelihood of us taking some strides towards what we all wish to do, and that is to reduce the risk of nuclear war and reduce nuclear armaments to a manageable level at least. It is to be hoped that some time in the future we will do away with them altogether.

As to the decision at the present time as to whether we should test the Cruise missile, we should bear in mind that the missile will not bear nuclear arms in Canada. We should also bear in mind that for the last 37 years we have had the benefit of the protection of NATO and the alliance. We have not been a strong ally, while expecting to have the protection. There is a limit, I expect, to the extent to which our allies would be willing to accept our non-effectiveness. That might well be when we not only preach to them about nuclear weapons but would refuse to allow them to be able to test the carrying vehicles in Canadian skies. If we expect to be treated as a member of the alliance, then surely we must expect to contribute something.

I suppose the whole question comes down to whether or not nations can trust each other. There has been little in the behaviour of the U.S.S.R. in the post-World War II era to instil confidence in us that they can as a nation be trusted. I do not believe that the people of Czechoslovakia, Poland, Hungary or Afghanistan believe that Russia can or should be trusted. This presents real difficulty, of course, on the international stage. All Canadians, in fact all intelligent beings on earth, hope that nuclear arms can be first restricted, then reduced, and that greater security can be brought about by that means.

The main difference, in truth, between the peace activists and the rest of us, is how to get from the position we are in now to that future day when we hope to have the world not absolutely nuclear free, but at least have clear evidence of control. What I am saying is that our aim is identical. We wish to have that peaceful world where we can rest assured there is control over the defence forces which will lessen the likelihood of an outbreak.

The question is how we get from here to there without endangering ourselves unduly. I doubt if unilateral disarmament is the way. I doubt if sanctimonious protestations of our own purity will guarantee our safety. The recent statements made by the U.S.S.R. that they might be adopting a policy of launch and warning is what used to be called "sabre rattling".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) but his time has expired. He can continue with unanimous consent of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Agreed.

Mr. McKinnon: I wish to thank my colleagues for the extended time. There is no evidence in our recent history that disarmament leads to peace. In fact, the nations which have fallen to aggressors have been those with weak forces and no allies. All of us, I am sure, certainly the Conservative Party, are in favour of nuclear disarmament, but it must be mutual, balanced and verifiable.

I wish to add a few words which were written to the Conservative Party outlining our policy in this matter on March 29. We have had a long and serious debate in our caucus on this matter. There was a memorandum circulated to all Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament from the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) which stated, and I quote:

> As I understood the consensus reached by us last Wednesday, March 23rd, the essence of the Progressive Conservative Party policy on disarmament is to have the Canadian government, with other middle powers, press both the Soviet Union and the United States to make progress in the Geneva negotiations for mutual, balanced and verifiable cuts in nuclear arms.
> We call for productive negotiations that will result in a balance so that no new nuclear missiles will be deployed in Europe.
> If the negotiations fail and NATO's deployment of Cruise and Pershing missiles proceeds, we support the testing of the Cruise missile delivery system in Canada.
> Canada's defence budget and our alliance with NATO must remain strong, as our contribution to maintaining security against a conventional attack.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment by way of a question to the last speaker. I might say my comments apply equally to the speech of the Minister and I am disappointed that he has already left the House. They both raised the same notion. They tried to attach to the resolution which we have brought before this House the notion that what we are advocating is unilateral disarmament. They also tried to label the peace movement in this country as calling for unilateral disarmament. That is completely false, Mr. Speaker. It is misleading and if is unfair. It is precisely what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) tried to do in his open letter to the public.

On June 11, Mr. Speaker, we had some 25,000 people in the City of Winnipeg marching against the testing of the Cruise missile in this country. The reason they marched, and in the process formed a complete circle over many blocks, was because they are against Canada participating in the nuclear arms race. They are for multilateral mutual disarmament. They are for negotiations. We must stop this misleading, this attempt to smear the peace movement as being in favour of simply surrendering to the Soviet Union, as the Minister suggested. What we are in favour of is mutual disarmament and we are against this country participating in a nuclear arms race.

Mr. McKinnon: I thought that the new rules included the likelihood of having a question. I am sorry that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) forgot to ask his question, if he had one.

He did imply that the Minister and I are on exactly the same footing with respect to this matter. I cannot remember exactly what the Minister said, but I feel fairly confident that an examination of Hansard would not disclose where I disparaged the peace groups at all. I feel they are fine citizens, very dedicated and sincerely believe that they are going the right way, as many people in this House who are not going the same way believe that they are going the right way. It is an honest difference of opinion among grown up people.

I do not believe the peace movement is in favour of unilateral disarmament. I believe the idea expressed that there should be no Cruise testing is symbolic. Cruise testing is not dangerous to the people near the ranges, but it is a handy and convenient symbol. If these people really want to secure peace, and I am sure they do, I feel it would be more logical to try and stop the Pershing II, for example, which really is a much more efficient and stronger weapon than the Cruise missile. However, the Cruise missile is the one which is being tested in Canada so that has grabbed their imagination. I believe they are a fine bunch of people. I have had almost numberless meetings with them this past six months and I have found them to be great Canadian citizens to talk to and I rather like them, as a matter of fact. We have received many a constructive suggestion from them. I have nothing against them at all and I do not believe the Minister has much against them either; but he can speak for himself.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question dealing with the Cruise missile. The Hon. Member was present when Mr. Anderson, a senior official of DND, stated that the first missile which they would like to test would be an air-launched Cruise missile. He then stated that DND might be interested in testing a ground-launched missile subsequently—"might" be interested. I would ask the Hon. Member, who was the former Minister of National Defence, if he seriously believes that the Cruise missile testing in Canada has anything to do with the ground-launched General Dynamics missile which apparently will be deployed this fall, which will have been ordered in March at the latest with all the specifications built in and which has been thoroughly tested? Or has it to do with the whole SAC Stealth project which will be coming along and which we will be testing next winter? The basic reason for testing it is that they want a polar situation similar to the Soviet tundra area, which does not have the same kind of reference points. Given the statement of the Minister, which was that of the Department and was solicited by the Hon. Member himself, it seems to me at this particular point we are talking about an entirely different situation.

I would also like to ask the Hon. Member—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, order. The question has been put.

Mr. McKinnon: I have been waiting some time for you to interrupt, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I am rather surprised that the Hon. Member should not have asked his own Minister of National Defence what Mr. Anderson meant. The Minister has just finished speaking and was open for questioning. Mr. Anderson stated Department policy and it is really strange for me to be held responsible for the answer I received to a question which I asked one of the officials.

The Hon. Member talked about the Stealth system which is coming on. I do not know if this had anything to do with his first question or not. I do not know why the extra issue was thrown in. However, as I understand his question which was included in all that verbiage, it was did I honestly believe that the tests which they are going to carry out at Cold Lake have anything to do with the ground-launched Cruise missile such as will be deployed in Europe. The answer to that is yes. That is because the guidance system is still under test. It is a very complex system, as the Hon. Member no doubt knows. They are testing it in a part of the world which is ideally suited for the test. Therefore there is a connection, that is, as far as I can tell from the word I received—I hate to tell the Hon. Member this in the Minister's presence, but I do receive some word out of the Department occasionally—which leads me to believe that the main purpose of the testing here is going to be the guidance system. We are ideally suited for it. Therefore the answer to the question is yes.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to the drafting of our resolution and that the use of the words "nuclear weapons" was a scare tactic. I admit that if I had personally drafted the resolution it would have included "nuclear warheads" as well. It is interesting that the Member talked about a questionnaire he sent out which said that there would be no nuclear weapons carried during the testing, which also could be a scare tactic as well by implying that at some point there could be nuclear weapons used in the testing process in Canada.

As the Hon. Member knows, I proposed a Private Members' Bill in the House calling for Canada to become a nuclear weapons free zone. The purpose of that, of course, is to have more countries not involved in any way in the nuclear arms race by way of testing or production. Therefore they could work to encourage countries who do possess nuclear weapons to have verifiable, negotiated multilateral arms reduction. I would ask the Hon. Member if he would in fact support a Bill that would declare Canada a nuclear weapons free zone?

Mr. McKinnon: We went through this when the Hon. Member put forward such a Bill, which I found unacceptable for several other reasons. I do not think there was a vote on that Bill in the House, and there were quite a few other aspects concerning this brought up during the debate. I think I pointed out at that time that the Conservative Party is the only Party in this House whose skirts are clean on the subject of whether we will have a nuclear free Canada or not. The NDP voted the Diefenbaker Government out of office on that very issue by aligning themselves with their traditional allies, the Liberals, who were even hungrier for power than they are now.

Miss MacDonald: Including the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett).

Mr. Broadbent: We will watch your vote today, talking about "allies".

Mr. McKinnon: We are the one Party in this House which has never voted in favour of having nuclear weapons in Canada. That is what it amounts to.

Mr. Anguish: You could answer the question as well, Allan. Excellent politics.

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested that it might be a good idea to call it one o'clock.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Is there a disposition to call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It is not agreed.

Miss Jewett: Mr. Speaker, in listening to the Hon. Members who spoke subsequent to the introduction of this debate by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, I was struck by the fact that they seemingly missed what it is that the Canadian, American, West German and even the East European public are concerned about. What they are concerned about and what they fear is nuclear war itself.

The words "nuclear war" are a contradiction in terms. The idea of a nuclear exchange being anything like a conventional war is absurd. When the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) and the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) refer back to World War II and suggest that somehow a nuclear exchange would be in any way comparable to that, they are absolutely and totally wrong. They remind me of the woman who felt very deeply about it and who said: "I don't want to send my boy to a nuclear war".

Mr. Lamontagne: Any war.

Miss Jewett: The Minister says "any war". Once again he shows that he has simply not yet grasped the fact—

Mr. Lamontagne: You have to prevent any war.

Miss Jewett: —that a nuclear exchange would mean a nuclear holocaust and not a war in the conventional sense of the word. That is what is frightening people. That is what has everyone marching and protesting. Their leaders do not seem to understand that nuclear war is impossible. It would be nuclear holocaust.

At one point in his speech the Minister said that nuclear weapons may be used. Once again he is apparently under the impression that nuclear weapons serve a military purpose. As many military people will tell him, as Lord Louis Mountbatten wrote so eloquently, nuclear weapons serve no military purpose whatsoever. The minute a nuclear weapon is used, or possibly even a warning that a nuclear weapon might be used leading to an attack on warning, there will be no limitation of the nuclear exchange that will follow and millions upon millions upon millions of people—two-thirds, three-quarters or four-fifths of the whole northern hemisphere—will in a few hours' time die.

Another related reason why people feel so insecure over the possession by many countries now of nuclear weapons is that they have no voice whatsoever in their possible use. There is no sense of public participation in a nuclear holocaust, except the participation that comes with annihilation, annihilation without representation. They have no voice.

I will call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BILL C-155—CROWSNEST TARIFF—PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY'S POSITION

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, yesterday, the following headline appeared in Le Droit: "The Leader will speak for the Party", and the newspaper was quoting Brian Mulroney.

In her article, the reporter said that Mr. Mulroney would not tolerate Members of his party making statements on all kinds of issues. He added, however, that he would be consulting his Members.

In view of these two statements, I would appreciate it if the new Leader would publicly state his position on the new grain transportation policy, better known as the change in the Crow rate.

First of all, I would like to know whether he agrees with Bill C-155 which is now before the House, and second, whether he agrees that grain transportation subsidies should be paid in full to the railway companies.

The Canadian people have a right to know the position of the Progressive Conservative Leader, especially since the debate on this question is to resume on Thursday. The Leader of the Liberal Party and Prime Minister has only a few seconds to answer such questions in the House, and I shall therefore give the new Leader two days to make his position on this issue clear to the Canadian people.

TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE—HAZARDS FACED BY CIVILIAN POPULATION

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, while the Progressive Conservative Party staunchly supports Canada's commitment to NATO and, in principle, supports the testing of unarmed Cruise missiles in Canada, it is obvious that specific approvals cannot be given until full knowledge of any given test proposal is made available.

As the Member of Parliament for the region over which the testing of the Cruise missile may take place, I insist that public safety of people close to the flight path be of prime consideration, and that testing not take place until it be demonstrated that there be no danger involved for the residents in the test area.

We must be assured that the missile performs properly on short range tests in the U.S. before long range trials take place in Canada. We must be assured that the proposed flight path is nowhere near inhabited settlements.

We must know what will happen in case of a malfunction during flight, and what precautions have been taken against this possibility. Only after these and numerous other questions have been answered can we be sure that the tests can take place without danger to Canadian citizens or to their property.

NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE—DENIAL OF FRANCHISE TO SASKATOON

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, yesterday, the National Hockey League took over the St. Louis Blues. NHL President, John Ziegler, said the League will "try to find suitable ownership that will take over the team and operate it in St. Louis". As you know, Saskatoon had already put in a bid, "cash on the barrell", to buy the St. Louis Blues and move the team to Saskatoon. That bid was refused by the NHL. Personally, I was not surprised. Professional hockey is big business, and the lords and barons of big business do not really care for little folks. Many hockey fans are from the rank and file of Mr. and Mrs. Ordinary Person.

In Saskatchewan people are born and bred hockey fans. They grow up in the "hockey player factory of the world". Saskatchewan is Gordie Howe country, Bentley country, Metz country. Mayor Cliff Wright of Saskatoon, Bill Hunter, and many others have worked hard and seriously to see that professional hockey comes to Saskatchewan. They are not going to stop now. Yesterday Mayor Wright told me that he was very pleased with the rapid progress being made in the inquiry under the Combines Investigation Act, and the serious way in which the matter was being taken.

Other NHL teams are in trouble and will be coming up for sale. If John Ziegler feels he can stop Saskatoon by letting the League take over losing teams, he should pause to reflect.

Lastly, Saskatchewan is "next year" country. Every Saskatchewan-born person always knows that if you get "hailed out" this year, all you have to do is wait for next year.

In this vein, all seven Saskatchewan NDP federal Members are "on side" and support the efforts of Saskatoon and Mayor Wright to make Saskatchewan a National Hockey League Province.

METRIC CONVERSION

AIR CANADA—USE OF IMPERIAL MEASUREMENT IN IN-FLIGHT ANNOUNCEMENTS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, on Sunday, on board Air Canada's Flight 472 en route from Toronto to Ottawa, the captain announced to the people that we were flying at an altitude of 20,000 feet above ground level.

It is of concern to me that a Crown corporation, which provides such an important service to the public, continues to use imperial measurements—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hudecki: —even though Canada has metric legislation in place. One would expect that under these circumstances a Crown corporation would be among the first to join in converting—

Mr. Nielsen: That's for air safety.

Mr. Hudecki: —its measurements to the metric system, or would at least use both systems of measurement as an interim policy while people adjust to metrication. All Crown corporations should share in the responsibility of helping to educate the public to use the metric system.

I do not know if making announcements about the altitude in feet is a general policy of Air Canada, or whether a choice is given to the individual pilots on whether they may make announcements in either metres, or feet, or both.

In light of the fact that Air Canada is a Crown corporation, and that the move to metric conversion is a reality in this country, I would urge the Government to insist that Air Canada and all other Crown corporations—

Mr. Domm: Put them in jail!

Mr. Hudecki: —fulfil their obligations to convert to the metric system.

TOURISM

CALL FOR MEASURES TO PROMOTE INDUSTRY

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, it was encouraging to see the reduction in our tourist deficit from $1.09 billion to $1.05 billion in the first quarter of this year compared to the same time last year.

However, the bad news is that our two main airlines are again requesting a further increase in their fares of 5 per cent, for what they claim is compensation for losses caused by the recession.

To me, and to the business community, one does not further penalize one's customers by making them pay a higher price for a product without first making every attempt to cut fat and waste from the overhead.

By raising travelling costs, by charging double the cost of a gallon of gasoline more than is paid by our neighbours to the south, by excessive taxation on spirits, and the high cost of accommodations in Canada, everything possible is being done to discourage foreign tourists from coming to Canada, and to negate real opportunity to increase tourism and to reduce our tourist deficit further.

Our country has the potential to offer tourists every type of holiday and relaxation package that is possible. All we need is for all of us and all our Governments, municipal, provincial and federal, to work together and dovetail all our efforts, and to withdraw or negate all legislation that is detrimental to tourism. As well, it is essential to give the more than 100,000 tourist operators in Canada the assistance needed to develop this very important industry to its full potential. It is my hope that all this will be noted by all Governments, and that some positive action for the Canadian tourist industry will finally be undertaken.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: —by the Secretary of State Mr. Joyal and a member of the other place.

Mr. Nielsen: Keith Davey.

Mr. Lewis: At a time when there are more than two million Canadians out of work, desperately looking for jobs, at a time when personal and business bankruptcies have reached an all-time high, at a time when Canadians are still faced with no protection from high interest rates on their mortgages, at a time when the Government cannot even process income tax returns, at a time when its credibility is at an all-time low due to the Gillespie affair, the Maislin bailout, and the Canadair fiasco, with all of these other scandals, we suggest—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Lewis: —that the Liberal Government should turn its attention to the problems of Canada and forget about fancy dinners and self-congratulatory advertising schemes.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

OPPOSITION TO UNITED STATES REQUEST TO TEST CRUISE MISSILE

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, today I would like to put into the public record my own personal opposition and that of the New Democratic Party to the proposed testing of the Cruise missile, and take this opportunity to urge the Liberal Government to refuse the request of the United States Defence Department to test the Cruise missile in Canada.

I am not only opposed to the testing of this single weapons system, but I am also opposed to the testing or build up of all nuclear weapons and weapons systems wherever these occur or may occur. I had proposed in my private member's Bill, Bill C-678, an Act declaring Canada a nuclear weapons-free zone, that we join with others who also desire a world free of nuclear arms. At the present time there are six nations in the world which can set off a nuclear explosion, and which possess nuclear arms. It is also speculated by some that Israel, South Africa, and Pakistan also have the capability or soon will have the capability to use nuclear weapons in some cases. In addition to that, we have documented proof that there are another nine countries that could come into the nuclear weapons field within the next couple of years.

An intelligent and compassionate Canadian Government would be taking steps to halt the nuclear arms race. We are traditionally a peace loving and a peace keeping nation. We have the ability to exercise our traditions on the world stage. I believe that now is the time to do that. Now is the time to play a more meaningful role, and we should begin by refusing to test the Cruise missile.

Madam Speaker: Order.

VOTE ON TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE—MEMBER'S POSITION

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I rise to indicate my strong opposition to the flight testing of the air launched Cruise missile. The testing will not add to the ground launch missile being deployed in Europe but is based on SAC needs and the preparation for the production of 7,000 to 8,000 stealth Cruise missiles making, among other things, long-term arms control impossible.

I object at this point to a polarizing vote in this House on the subject. Since the vote is a matter of confidence in the Government, I will not vote against the Government—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McRae: —because it is my belief that within the Government there is growing support for not testing the Cruise missile. A vote that would defeat this Government would turn this matter over to Mr. Mulroney—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McRae: —an avowed supporter of Mr. Reagan.

Given the alternatives, and the desire for my Government to change its policy, it is my intention, along with some other Members on this side, to refrain from adding to the polarization by not voting, unless the Government is clearly threatened.

PROJECT TO BUILD RESORT FACILITY IN PARRY SOUND-MUSKOKA RIDING

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, there are two featured articles on the front page of last Thursday's Parry Sound North Star, one of the great weeklies in my riding—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darling: —that together tell us a lot about the effect of government policies out in Main Street, Canada. One says, "105 jobs foreseen in construction of $5 million resort." The other says "Only 52 out of 176 CIL Nobel employees to retain jobs."

Under the terms of the COED Program which is the NEED Program as applied to Ontario, the federal and provincial Governments are combining to build a resort facility in the riding, which will create 105 jobs. The catch is that those jobs last for only 2,538 work weeks, or an average of 24 weeks each. At the same time 124 family bread winners in nearby Nobel are left permanently without a livelihood.

It is all very well to shrug and say, "Well, think of how much worse it would be if the NEED program were not in place." It would be never so much more constructive to point out how much better it would be if this Government were not in place.

Let us not lose sight of the desperate economic situation in which Canadians find themselves with the worst "misery index" in the western world. This is the direct result of the policies selected and followed by the Government.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

CALL FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kinsgway): Madam Speaker, today Mitel Corporation of Kanata, in the Ottawa Valley, saw its shares drop substantially due to IBM plans to buy a 15 per cent interest in Rolm Corporation, which is Mitel's leading rival in the switching system market. Mitel lost a key contract. It shows the volatility of the new high tech market. If Mitel collapses, what will happen to its workers? An assembler, one of 152 workers laid off recently by Nabu Technology, said:

> All high tech workers in the region better take notice of what's happening at NABU. We are among the lowest paid and most vulnerable industrial workers and we are all going to get the shaft.

We cannot be Luddites, that is, resisters to technological change. But neither should we be Atari Liberals, those who believe that all the answers will come from technological change.

Marshall McLuhan once said, "New means create new ends as new services create new discomforts." That is all the more reason why, in light of these recent developments, we should get going with a House of Commons committee on technological change, and learn to control high technology for the benefit of Canadian workers.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT LEVELS—PROJECTION OF FUTURE JOB LOSSES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister who, as we know, has been in office for something over a decade now, a time during which the nation has been plagued with rising unemployment to the point where we now have one million more Canadians out of work than ten years ago. Most alarmingly we find that Data Resources of Canada project that this situation of having an extra one million Canadians unemployed will continue right into the 1990s. Would the Prime Minister explain to the House how we have slipped into this predicament of so many working people being without jobs? Can the Prime Minister offer any hope that the projected almost chronic unemplyment that we foresee in future years will not, in fact, materialize?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I could explain. I am not sure the Hon. Member would accept or understand the explanation.

Mr. Stevens: Try me.

Mr. Trudeau: It will take a little bit of time. If the Hon. Member is patient, I will give him various reasons why this has happened. In this period of time there is a developing of new technology. There is an emerging in the Third World of countries which are getting not only into export markets that we had held in the past but are also developing higher technologies than some of the newly industrialized nations. There is a complete restructuring of the patterns of international trade. There has been a world-wide economic slow down, of which every one of the industrialized nations has been a victim. That has been caused in part by very high interest rates. That, in turn, was caused by very high inflation.

The inflationary expectations, Madam Speaker, were a result of a series of events going back to the late 1960s and the early 1970s, a time when inflation was still relatively low but when unemployment was showing signs of creeping up to 5 per cent and 6 per cent, and when the consensus, not only of the economists and specialists, but, I believe it is true to say, of most informed members of the public, was that we should try to stimulate the economy in Canada at that time to bring unemployment down from a rate which was around 6 per cent.

Unfortunately, other countries at the same time were responding to the same kind of political and social pressure. They, too, were stimulating their economies at the same time, and we laid the basis—

An Hon. Member: Speech.

Mr. Trudeau: I have been asked for a speech. So, if the Hon. Member will be patient, I will come to the 1980s if he lets me finish with the 1970s.

Mr. Epp: You will be finished in the 1980s.

Mr. Trudeau: There was, therefore, a reinforcing of inflationary pressures by the economic policies of the major industrialized countries. At the same time, Madam Speaker, there was a crisis in food production.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I know the question was quite general and, therefore, the answer has to be that way. But I think I have to interrupt even this answer and ask everyone to be as brief as possible. The Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens).

PRODUCTIVITY GROWTH RATES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my supplementary, of course, is for the Prime Minister. He has referred to changing technology during this period, and he is undoubtedly aware of a very recent report from the Conference Board in Canada. It points out that one of the disappointing aspects of the Canadian economic performance over the past decade has been the sharp deterioration in productivity growth.

• (1420)

As the Prime Minister undoubtedly knows, since 1977, while our productivity growth was flat, in Japan it went up 29 per cent, and in England it went up 13 per cent.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stevens: My question to the Prime Minister—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I will stop it right now because the whole Question Period will go that way. The Hon. Member's question should be brief, as should the answers.

Mr. Stevens: If technology has been the problem leading to our unemployment, why is Canada's record the worst of major industrial nations, for productivity growth?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is just making up that statistic. It is not the worst. Some countries have been successful in productivity. The Hon. Member mentioned Japan, but most of the other industrialized countries, including the United States, have suffered very low rates of productivity, presumably because in the previous part of the economic cycle productivity had been very high in Canada and in the Unites States.

What happened in the 1970s was that Canada had the fastest rate of job creation of any industrialized nation. We were dedicated then to the creation of jobs. I repeat that we had the fastest growing labour force of any of the major industrialized nations and that we had a record much higher than even Japan or the United States in job creation. We tackled that problem.

In so far as technology is concerned, the Hon. Member has heard the budget speech. He has heard the Minister of Finance indicate the funds which would be going into research and development. He has heard the Minister of Finance announce the creation of a centre for productivity. We are asking for the co-operation at this time of the various decision makers in society to help us with that centre. I am talking of the labour side and of the managerial side.

COMPARISON WITH UNITED STATES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, again my question is directed to the Prime Minister who, undoubtedly, is taking some comfort today in the plight of other countries. If he wants to compare Canada, perhaps he would compare its record with that of the United States since 1975, where we find that our real growth has been less, our employment creation has been less, and our unemployment has risen faster. Why are the Americans more successful in coping with current economic conditions in the world than his Government in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not know to what period the Hon. Member is referring. If we take the whole period of the 1970s, or indeed the whole period since 1968, which is the date that sticks in the Hon. Member's craw, we have created jobs at a faster rate than the United States and, indeed, than even Japan. We had to be attacking the problem of unemployment here—of employment, rather—because we had the fastest growing labour force. There were other countries like Germany and Switzerland which could export their unemployment by sending their gastarbeiten home. We did not use that approach in Canada. We created jobs.

So far as the ranking of Canada is concerned, the Minister of Finance just handed me an analysis in The Gazette this morning which indicates that Canada has gone up in the past year from twelfth to sixth. Even if the Hon. Member is only looking at the past year, he has the answer. If he wants to look at the whole period of the decade, I repeat that in terms of job creation, in terms of unemployment fighting, in terms of bringing down inflation, and in terms of exports, we rank among the two or three best. In some instances we are the best, such as job creation. In others, such as inflation, some other countries did better than we did. But on the average we did very well, and the Hon. Member should not try to hide that.

WEST COAST GRAIN HANDLERS' DISPUTE—PROGRESS OF MEDIATION

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour regarding the grain handling situation on the West Coast. I know the Minister appointed Mr. Kelly on Friday as labour mediator. He is a well respected person in that field. Also we know that the parties met yesterday and again this morning at 9.30 Vancouver time. Could the Minister bring us up to date on how the negotiations are progressing?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has correctly stated the situation. Meetings are taking place. It would be inappropriate for me to make any further comments, except to say that we have a highly respected official representing Labour Canada involved, and that we hope the outcome will be a positive one.

Mr. Mayer: I appreciate the Minister's response.

ROLE OF DEPARTMENT

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I would just like to point out to the Minister that this is a very crucial industry not only to western Canada but to the country as a whole, and that it would be very unfortunate if there were any kind of work stoppage in this vital industry. Again I ask him to ensure that his Department stays involved to see that everything is done and that there is a settlement without a work stoppage.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, the presence of the senior assistant deputy minister in charge of mediation is proof of the importance the Government attributes to this particular situation.

REQUEST FOR NEGOTIATION OF TEST BAN TREATY ON AIR LAUNCHED MISSILES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister concerning nuclear disarmament. He knows that the two series of talks taking place in Geneva on nuclear disarmament do not have any relevance whatsoever to the testing of air launched Cruise missiles either by the Soviet Union or by the United States. To be specific, even if an agreement is reached in those talks at Geneva, for which we all hope, it would still permit either the United States or the Soviet Union to test an air launched Cruise.

Given the qualitative horrific nature of that particular weapon, and the possibility of both the United States and the Soviet Union proceeding each in its own way to test it, will the Prime Minister take an important step for peace and propose to each country that they begin negotiations, with the view of obtaining agreement on a test ban treaty on air launched Cruise missiles?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as far as test ban treaties are concerned, certainly I can indicate that Canada will continue advocating them and, indeed, trying to enjoin the major nuclear powers to accept a general test ban treaty, not only a partial one. The Hon. Member is correct in stating that Cruises are not directly involved in the negotiations in Geneva. Perhaps is talking in the sense that they were not excluded in SALT II, that neither side found it advantageous to say that they would not be developing the Cruise. Of course he is not correct if he is implying—and I do not think he is—that the INF negotiations going on at this time are not concerned with the Cruise. They are. For instance, we know that during the walk in the woods between the two main negotiators there was a recognition by both sides that there would be some Cruise deployed.

I am in sympathy with the hopes of the Hon. Member that there would be a total test ban, but I have to point out to him that it is well known at this time that the Soviets are testing Cruise missiles. They have an advance over us on the short range missiles; they are testing long range missiles. Secretary Andropov said so publicly last December. Therefore the case we have to solve is whether we should unilaterally stop testing when we know this and the other side says that it is testing.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER INITIATE NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the precise point at issue is to present a concrete challenge, both to the Soviet Union and to the United States, on their willingness with reference to this very specific weapon, to enter into a test ban agreement. I suspect that in his conversations with Mr. Gorbachev, when he was in this country, the Prime Minister might have had with him on this matter and might have obtained some indication that the Soviet Union might be interested in that. I do not know. It will be interesting to see what the Prime Minister says.

I repeat the question. In the interests of mankind in not having either country proceed with the development of this missile beyond the level of development that has already taken place, will he go out front and publicly urge both the United States and the Soviet Union to negotiate toward a test ban treaty concerning air launched Cruise missiles?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, that, of course, is exactly what I urged when I proposed in 1978, and again in 1980, the strategy of suffocation. By another name, that is stopping of all testing of new weapons and new weapons delivery systems whether they be in the laboratory or on the ground. That is what I proposed to both sides. As I have reported repeatedly to the House, neither the Americans nor the Soviets, nor for that matter the French nor the British, have been prepared to say that they would no longer test weapons. There is a partial test ban treaty but it does not cover delivery systems. It does not cover developing new weapons. It does not even cover testing those weapons by underground explosion.

Once again, I can only say that certainly this side of the House is very anxious to see that kind of a treaty be developed. I did not talk directly with Mr. Gorbachev on that particular subject. I did talk a great deal about the SS-20s and asked why they were deployed. I had occasion to report on that to the House previously.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister knows that the proposal he made at the United Nations, with which we are in sympathy and which he acknowledged obtained agreement from neither side, goes well beyond the very specific kind of test ban treaty I am talking about, which refers exclusively to the air launched Cruise missile.

REQUEST THAT FREE VOTE BE HELD ON CRUISE TESTING ISSUE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a final question concerning a point raised by one of the Prime Minister's own Members earlier today on the importance of this issue to Canada. Will the Prime Minister take steps to ensure that his House Leader will view the vote that will take place later today on the important matter of testing the Cruise in Canada as not being a vote of confidence, and therefore allow his Members to vote as their consciences dictate? I assure the Prime Minister that is the way we would view this matter on this side of the House.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am afraid I cannot answer that particular suggestion with as much understanding and sympathy as I tried to understand the two previous ones. The NDP is playing games, just as the Tories played games when they had a non-confidence motion on property rights. We are voting the last supply day today. The fate of the Government hangs on whether we get supply or not. If the Hon. Member is suggesting that we change the rules and we get unanimous consent that this not be a supply vote or a confidence vote, and if they now report to me that there has been agreement, I will consult with a few Ministers and give an answer. As far as I know, the question is hypothetical. If we are going to change the rules and say that a non-confidence motion is not a non-confidence motion, then I hope we will do that on many occasions other than just this one.

SPORTS

DENIAL OF NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE FRANCHISE TO SASKATOON—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER INTERVENE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The National Hockey League is resorting to extraordinary efforts to keep the St. Louis Blues franchise from coming to Saskatchewan. It includes the disbanding of the team and the dispersal of its players. I know that the Government has been helpful in terms of the Combines Investigation Act. I appreciate that very much, as do many Canadians. I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether, on behalf of the Government and the people of Canada, he would be prepared to communicate with the President of the Board of Governors of the National Hockey League, Mr. John Ziegler, indicating support for the application by Saskatchewan for the transfer of the National Hockey League team to that Province.

my advisers, including the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Minister responsible for sport. I have had the advice of one of our good Saskatchewan Liberals, Mr. Doug Richardson. I am happy that there is also one elected Tory who is interested in this matter. I will report to him later today or this week as to whether there is some way in which I can use my good offices to influence the President of the National Hockey League.

REQUEST FOR FAIR HEARING

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I can only thank the Prime Minister for his consideration of this important matter which has the support of so many Canadians and which, in my opinion, is an important ingredient in terms of national unity. Indeed, I understand that the Members of the New Democratic Party are changing their position and may in fact support this application. In view of the fact that Saskatchewan has contributed so much to the National Hockey League, and that indeed the people of Canada in various ways support the National Hockey League, such as through the use of the air waves and the amateur draft, supported by taxpayers' money, is it not a reasonable expectation for the people of Saskatchewan to get a fair hearing from the NHL for a legitimate application for a franchise within their Province?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is making a representation. I have indicated to him that I have had such representations from people on this side. I hope they will be made known to the President of the National Hockey League and the members of the board.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The much heralded task force report on the auto industry was presented to the Minister nearly a month ago, yet the Government continues to keep this vital sector in the dark, denying the opportunity for long-range planning in that industry and thereby creating the potential for massive employment. Can the Minister tell us at least whether he supports the thrust of the report, if not the details of it? If so, what is he going to do about it? If he has not made up his mind about the report, when, for goodness sake, is he going to come up with a decision so the industry will know where it is heading?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as I indicated the day after the report was made public, the Government will be giving serious consideration to the recommendations of the report, particularly because of the dedicated work the members of the task force put into it. We will discuss the report over the course of the summer and respond some time in the fall.

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Speaker, the industry wants to know how long the Government will take to come up with a decision. That is the question I put to the Minister.

VOLUNTARY RESTRAINTS ON JAPANESE IMPORTS—EXPIRY OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for International Trade I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. With respect to the voluntary restraints on Japanese auto imports which expire at the end of this month, the travelling but ineffective Minister of State for International Trade said in this House last week that a decision will be made soon on that and, if not, he would "recommend other appropriate steps to the Government". Can the Minister tell this House and the industry whether an agreement in fact will be forthcoming before the end of this month when it expires and, if not, what those other so-called "appropriate steps" will be that the Minister of State for International Trade was talking about?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, with respect to the first part of the Hon. Member's question, if he checks he will find that the co-chairmen of the task force indicated that they did not expect to get an answer on the major thrust of the task force recommendations until the Fall. Our thinking is along the same line. Regarding the Member's second question, I do not profess to speak for any of my colleagues. When the Minister of State for International Trade returns, I am sure he can answer the Hon. Member more directly than I can.

TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE—TIMING OF GOVERNMENT DECISION

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister regarding Cruise missile testing. The Prime Minister has said on many occasions, most recently on March 24, and I quote:

• (1440)

—our judgment of how the other track was proceeding—

That is negotiations.

—would influence us in deciding whether we would go with the Cruise or not.

On June 1 the Prime Minister said that he would hope to be hearing "very specific proposals rejected or accepted before the end of December", in Geneva. May I ask the Prime Minister if this therefore means that there would be no question of accepting the request for testing the air launched Cruise missile before December?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, when I made that statement I did not know when the request would be made of us. It was made of us yesterday. I answered a question in the House yesterday indicating that we would be examining this question, that the Minister of National Defence would be bringing his appreciation of the situation to his colleagues, and that we would be making a decision. I do not know when we will be making that decision, Madam Speaker.

I do know that there has been some indication of flexibility by both sides in recent months. Secretary Andropov moved some distance in December and then he moved again in March, I believe it was, when he offered to count warheads rather than delivery missiles. President Reagan has made other moves as regards the hotline, and has made other suggestions as regards confidence building measures, but also very recently he has made an offer to count warheads rather than missiles, and he has not held to the figure of 800 and some, which he wanted the START talks to bring the Soviets down to. He has recognized that the Soviets wanted more than that number.

There has been some show of flexibility on both sides. I can only say that the Government will continue to pursue its duties as it sees them under the two-track system, and we will continue monitoring the situation. The Cruise, in terms of the request itself, will only be tested next year, but it is logical that Canada continue to act as though it had confidence and faith in its main ally.

REQUEST THAT DECISION BE POSTPONED

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister said that the Cruise would only be tested next year. May I remind him that he said quite explicitly that the negotiations would influence us in deciding whether we would test the Cruise or not. From what he has said, negotiations are proceeding, both sides showing some flexibility. I therefore repeat my question. Will he allow a really adequate length of time for negotiations to continue, both IMF and START, as the air launched Cruise has more to do with START, before there is any thought whatsoever given to testing the Cruise?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Indeed, Madam Speaker, I have said that negotiations will influence us, and that is why I have given examples of the negotiations which have influenced us. I must say that I feel more secure with the possibility of successful negotiations now than I felt several months ago before Andropov and Reagan made their offers. So, Madam Speaker, that is the only answer I can give. We have to make our decision on the basis of the facts as we know them and as we see them.

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT FUND

CRITERIA GOVERNING EXPENDITURE OF MONEY

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and deals with the approval that Cabinet gave to an expenditure of $345 million known as the Indian economic development fund. I would ask the Minister whether this money is to be spent in accordance with the Cabinet memorandum of April 29, namely, that the money is not to be spent in accordance with need or with any social objectives such as housing but rather in accordance with criteria designed to promote urban entrepreneurship and to promote the rewarding of Indian entrepreneurs who are Liberal supporters.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, it is not an Indian economic development fund, it is a Native Economic Development Fund. It includes Metis and other natives. As well, Madam Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism, has responsibility for the corporation. I believe that the Hon. Member should direct his comments to that Minister.

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, if the Minister thinks that the people for whom he has a very special trust responsibility are not natives, then I would like him to explain his portfolio. He has a very special trust responsibility and I wonder how he can exercise that trust responsibility, a component of which is economic stability in native communities, when he gives away $345 million to a colleague of his who manages small businesses.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I did not say that Indians were not Natives. I did say that the title of the fund is the Native Economic Development Fund, and that includes Metis and Indians. If the Hon. Member will direct his question to my colleague, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism, who has already consulted with Mr. Ahenakew, head of the AFM, about his participation in it, I am sure that the Hon. Member will find that there is no doubt that they will receive moneys in addition to the Indian economic development moneys that are already in the Department that we disburse each year for Indian economic development. Therefore, Indians will have two pools of funds from which to draw in order to get ahead with native economic development.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FREEZING OF BAND TRUST ACCOUNTS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Bankruptcies will force band councils to close down their administration offices very soon if the Minister continues to freeze their trust accounts as he refuses to negotiate with them a mutually acceptable accounting practice. Does the Minister recognize the administrative difficulties caused by and the paternalistic effect of withholding Indian bands' own trust accounts unless they submit to his financial circulars?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I have found, and again this may be an example of it, that when Indian financial matters are such that they might result in some non-Indians in a community not getting paid, then the Hon. Members opposite are all too ready for me to become paternalistic and interfere in Indian affairs. I would like all Hon. Members to remember what the Official Opposition are now saying. They do not want a Minister who is paternalistic and who will interfere in financial handlings, and I wish that in asking future questions they would be consistent throughout the remainder of this Parliament at least.

It is very refreshing for me to hear that the Hon. Member does not want this Minister to interfere in the financial affairs of the bands. I can only tell him that any interference in the affairs of the particular band in question, Madam Speaker, has happened simply because the affairs have been found to be irregular, and not because we wish to be paternalistic. Under the Financial Administration act, certain actions are required on the part of our Department. Until Parliament wishes to change those regulations, we are bound by Parliament to carry them out.

BAND RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, the Minister professes to be doing everything possible to transfer decision-making authority to Indian bands, yet in the case of the Stony Indian band, where Indian mineral contracts were renegotiated without the band's knowledge or participation, his actions were inconsistent with what he just told me. I wonder whether he is continuing this practice or whether he will in fact live up to his promise to turn decision-making authority and responsibility over to Indians when those decisions affect them directly.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I wish that the Hon. Member would talk to his colleagues who have been asking me questions about West Bank for the last year. Some of his colleagues have feelings that are very close to his feelings about how I should be interfering in the affairs of that particular Indian band. But let me tell the Hon. Member again that it is only with reluctance that we do interfere, and in this particular case it was not done with any great enthusiasm and was done only because we were legally required to do so in order to live up to the obligations we have to Parliament under the appropriate legislation.

I will check into the situation again in order to report back to the Hon. Member. If there is any way around this provision that will not infringe upon the freedom of action of the Indian people, I am quite prepared to undertake it, but I do not see a way around it at the moment.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REPORTED SURVEILLANCE OF GROUPS OPPOSED TO CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Recently I received reliable information to the effect that the RCMP are involved in surveillance of groups and individuals organizing protests against the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada, that a well respected national peace and development organization is also the object of surveillance, and that the anti-Cruise demonstration planned for Cold Lake, Alberta, on June 26 is the object of a special task force of the Security Service. Is the Minister aware of these activities on the part of the RCMP? If so, can he explain the reasons for them and, if not, would he inquire into the matter?

• (1450)

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I should like the opportunity to inquire into the matter and I would appreciate having any additional information that the Hon. Member has.

INQUIRY RESPECTING SURVEILLANCE OF OTHER GROUPS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, if the Minister makes inquiries and finds that the facts are as I have indicated, will he inquire if the Security Service is going to put Members of Parliament under surveillance, or leaders of church communities who have expressed opposition to the testing of the Cruise missile?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I can certainly assure the Hon. Member that the peace movement is not and could not be a target of surveillance within the meaning of the mandate of the Security Service. However, any individuals who by virtue of their activities or goals and objectives, are targets within the meaning of the mandate of the Security Service, would be the object of surveillance whether they were infiltrating the peace movement or any other non-targeted activity or movement within the country.

PETRO-CANADA

ISSUANCE OF DISMISSAL NOTICES TO EMPLOYEES

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Within the last few days well over 1,000 employees of Petro-Canada were given termination notices. A PetroCan spokesman said that this was necessary because there is an overlapping of staff in the wake of acquisitions such as Petrofina and BP Canada. In essence, in the height of a recession, the Government taxes Canadians, the money is used to build Petro-Canada's empire, and thousands of Canadians are put out of work.

What sense of responsibility does the Minister have toward these 1,000 or 2,000 Canadians who have lost their jobs because of the Government's policy? Is he going to take some action on behalf of these employees?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am very surprised by the question and that the Hon. Member would ask me not to promote within Petro-Canada the best techniques of management that are possible, and ask that we should keep on staff people who are not needed. I will note that for future consideration.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, that is not what I suggested. If the Minister were promoting good business practices he would not have allowed the Petrofina and BP takeovers in the first place. Taxing Canadians to put other Canadians out of work is a dumb policy.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, can the minister indicate whether he has learned from this, and will he make a commitment to the House that there will be no more of this folly?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that in the case of the purchase of BP by Petro-Canada, there was no payment of funds by the Government, since it was done on a strictly commercial basis. The President of Petro-Canada at first considered using the Canadian Ownership Tax to make this purchase, but the Government refused, and we then obliged Petro-Canada to acquire BP on a strictly commercial basis. Once the transaction was completed, there was the process of integrating BP employees and applying the appropriate management procedures, and unfortunately, as a result of wanting to have a more viable company, some employees may be forced to lose their jobs, and I am happy to see that the Progressive Conservatives want us to keep these people on the Petro-Canada payroll, even if they are redundant.

FINANCE

REQUEST THAT INTEREST ACT BE AMENDED TO ASSIST HOME OWNERS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance. A previous Minister of Finance in the Government indicated that banks and financial institutions should be required to bleed a little in the current recession. Since the banking and financial institutions have been making the highest profits and have not been bleeding too much, I wonder if the suggestion that was made earlier in the House, and which was supported by Members of all Parties, to change the Interest Act, or some other financial consideration, would be supported by the Government to assist the some 700,000 home owners who are suffering as a result of high mortgage rates?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the monetary policy and the budgetary policy followed by the Government have gone much further than the Hon. Member tends to indicate. About a year and a half ago the prime rate was something like 21 per cent; it is down to 9.5 per cent now. This has been achieved because we have been able to bring inflation down to 6 per cent or 6.5 per cent. We have also succeeded in reducing the spread between the United States' rates and Canadian rates to less than half of one percentage point; they were as high as 6 or 7 percentage points apart some 18 months ago. We have done a lot to try to help people who have mortgages, and people who have loans on which they pay interest.

Mr. Dick: Madam Speaker, of course the Minister knows what he just said is garbage. I am talking of apples, not of oranges. I am talking about the 700,000 Canadians who are locked into mortgages for three or five more years at 21 per cent interest—not those who will get a mortgage tomorrow or the next day.

PLIGHT OF HOME OWNERS WITH HIGH INTEREST RATE MORTGAGES

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Madam Speaker, the United States and England both assist people greatly with their mortgages by making the interest deductible from taxable income. The United States has gone further by recently introducing a Bill to provide $750 million to help people so that their mortgages will not be foreclosed. Does the Minister have anything to propose that will help people in this country who are locked into high interest rates and who, because of their financial circumstances, are going to lose their homes?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member must have been absent from the House during the last two years. Otherwise, he would have known that during that time, the Government implemented a number of programs, especially when my colleague, the Minister of State (Finance), was responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. We adopted a program under which people who were in financial difficulty and were unable to meet their mortgage payments would be able to receive help from the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. My hon. colleague would have been aware of this if he had bothered to keep informed of what was going on in the House and the measures taken by the Government.

I would also invite him to take a look at the representations made to financial institutions by Hon. Members who are concerned about the welfare of their constituents, and perhaps he could follow the example of Liberal Members on this side of the House who have been quick to make representations to the appropriate financial institutions. In many cases they were able to persuade them to change their attitudes to some of their debtors. This action was taken by Liberal Members of this House who approached the financial institutions concerned. I would therefore invite my hon. colleague to try and do the same. He may get results for his constituents, if he is willing to take the trouble.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

TRUST COMPANIES' COMMITMENTS—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in the same vein as the previous questions.

I have received a number of communications from constituents who took out three-year mortgages at high interest rates with trust companies, on the understanding that they could rewrite the mortgages upon payment of a three-months' interest penalty. These people now find that the trust companies will not live up to that commitment, which was not in writing; in every instance it was given verbally. Will the Minister investigate what appears to be a bait and switch practice on the part of some trust companies?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, this question has been brought to the attention of my departmental officials. It is a situation that should not be allowed to occur, and I can assure the Hon. Member that my officials are, at the present time, making representations to the companies concerned with a view to correcting this situation.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PROSECUTION OF FORMER RCMP OFFICER—POSSIBLE HOLDING OF TRIAL IN CAMERA

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice and Attorney General and relates to the prosecution under the Official Secrets Act of one James Morrison, also allegedly known under the code name "Long Knife". I wonder if the Attorney General could indicate if the Crown will be moving at the trial for the trial to be held in camera and if so, why, when the events complained of took place 25 years ago.

• (1500)

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, no questions of that kind have yet come before me for decision. When they do, I will certainly give them the proper consideration.

INSTRUCTIONS TO COUNSEL

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, in the belief that the motivation of the Government should be for an open trial, I wonder if the Minister would also give consideration to instructing Crown counsel also to oppose any defence motion for the trial to be in camera.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I will take my hon. friend's representation under consideration also.

Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

REQUEST FOR FREE VOTE ON SUPPLY MOTION

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order with regard to House business. Earlier today the Government House Leader no doubt heard the exchange between the Prime Minister and the Leader of the New Democratic Party with respect to the vote which will take place later today, and the willingness expressed from this side not to have the vote considered to be a matter of confidence. The Prime Minister appeared to indicate in response that he also was prepared to consider the possibility of the vote which will take place later today on the question of the testing of the Cruise missile not to be a matter of confidence.

I would like first of all to assure the Government House Leader that our Party is prepared to enter into any manner of House order dealing specifically with this question, which will guarantee the Government that this vote will not be a matter of confidence. I would like to ask the Government House Leader whether, over the course of the last half hour, he has been able to ascertain if the position of the Government is that a free vote could be taken today to facilitate the wishes of many of his own colleagues who have come to me and asked that such a thing occur. Many other Hon. Members of the House of Commons have said as well that a free vote such as this would be useful, particularly in a matter as crucial as this is to the safety of Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I do not know whether the Hon. Member is serious about what he wants to negotiate or is just trying to make political points. If he is serious, he is not taking the right approach. The Hon. Member is aware that we are having a House Leaders meeting in a few minutes, as scheduled. I believe that is the proper venue for raising his question. The whole process of the Business of Supply is extremely complicated, and I would like to take the time to consider the implications. For instance, if today, we are prepared not to consider a vote of non-confidence as such, would the Opposition at some later date, if ever the Government were defeated on a motion of non-confidence, be prepared to agree that in exchange, that motion would not be considered a question of non-confidence, thus putting us on equal terms? That is one of many points that must be considered, and in any case, my learned friend knows perfectly well that nothing can be done in this respect without the unanimous consent of all Members of all parties of this House. I am prepared to discuss the matter with my hon. colleague, but I would have preferred the question to have been raised much sooner, because by doing so two or three hours before the vote it may be impossible to draft an appropriate order that would cover all aspects of supply proceedings. Nevertheless, I am prepared to give this matter very careful consideration, always provided that my learned colleague agrees that if ever the Government, during this session, were to lose a vote of non-confidence other than this afternoon's, it would not be considered as a vote of non-confidence.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I want to assure the Government House Leader that the reason I raise this matter in the House is specifically to have on record that we are indeed serious about it. This is not a frivolous matter. I want to assure him that we are prepared to consider very seriously a motion which he might like to put which would guarantee the Government that the vote taken today on the question of supply, which just happens to be the same vote which deals with the testing of the Cruise missile, would not be considered a question of confidence as far as those of us on this side of the House, at least speaking for this Party, are concerned.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, my colleague knows very well that with unanimous consent there are many things that can be done. For example, we could tie the Crow Bill to the vote tonight and send the Bill to committee at the same time. Perhaps we will consider that also.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I would just like to indicate that as far as this Party is concerned we feel these negotiations should take place at the House Leaders' meeting which has already been set.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. MUNRO (ESQUIMALT-SAANICH)—DISTRIBUTION OF PROJECTED ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order which I believe is important. It is almost a question of privilege. The distribution of the Projected Order of Business for today, for example, reached my office at 10.15 this morning. I was looking for the text of the motion which we would be debating today. My office happens to be in the Confederation Building. I am sure that everything which is in these pages was available to be printed overnight and could have been available first thing in the morning. It may very well be that it was decided to hold the distribution of this document to be circulated with the other documents such as Hansard. However, I do believe the Projected Order of Business should receive every priority in order to reach the offices of Hon. Members at the earliest possible moment. I received this document 45 minutes before we assembled to discuss this motion. I realize that our messengers work hard, but I do believe, with all due respect, that a special effort might be taken to get the Projected Order of Business distributed to the offices which are not in the Centre Block but in some of the outlying buildings.

Madam Speaker: I take the Hon. Member's point. However, these documents are usually distributed with all the other parliamentary documents and, of course, since the House is sitting earlier, we cannot give the same lead time which we used to give when the House started only at two. The staff works terribly hard, as the Hon. Member has said. We are doing our best. I do not know why the Hon. Member did not receive his document earlier today, but I will inquire.

Hon. BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Broadbent:

That this House express its opposition to the escalation of the nuclear arms race by any nation and, in particular, its opposition to Canada's participation by testing in Canada any nuclear weapon or nuclear weapon delivery vehicle such as, and including, the Cruise missile.

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, in addressing the House just before one o'clock, I was taking particular issue with the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) and the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) for looking at nuclear war in a very conventional sense rather than realizing it is not only quantitatively but totally different from conventional war, such as World War I and World War II. It is because a nuclear exchange could result, indeed it is 99 per cent likely that it would result, in a nuclear holocaust that so many people in the world today are becoming concerned with the enormous nuclear arsenals. I would remind Hon. Members that it was the equivalent of 15,000 tons of tnt which exploded over and devastated Hiroshima. Today the world's nuclear arsenals are the equivalent of 16 billion tons of tnt, which could destroy the world many times over along with all life on it.

It also seems to me that the Minister is out of date when he talks about the doctrine of deterrence. I think most people saw that as the deterrence of war. Nowadays the military and civilian strategists are not talking about deterring nuclear war; they are talking about fighting and winning a nuclear war. This, too, has been so alarming to the public everywhere. It is bad enough to have a strategy of nuclear deterrence, but it is far, far worse to have a doctrine of fighting and prevailing in a nuclear war. The Minister has absolutely no concept of this radical change in thinking about nuclear arms. He stills talks about the doctrine of deterrence as it was talked about almost a generation ago, not recognizing that we have gone far beyond the real needs of deterrence.

It is significant that the Cruise missile is not simply a weapon of deterrence. It is designed for the purpose of intimidation and to fight a nuclear war. Whether we talk about the land, air or submarine-launched Cruise missile, the whole point is its pinpoint accuracy so that it can be used to take out missiles in their silos. In other words, it is designed for fighting a nuclear war, not deterring a nuclear war. Again, the Minister and others seem to have simply not recognized what has been taking place in the nuclear war strategy with the development of a new generation of nuclear weapons like the Cruise missile.

A third area where the Government and the Minister are so old fashioned and out of date is that of Canada playing a non-nuclear role in the alliance. There was a time when Canada was moving in that direction. Indeed, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took credit for it in answer to a question on April 22, 1983 when he said:

—I have done a great deal in Canada to denuclearize our whole approach to defence. I did that in Canada and I did that in NATO by denuclearizing our planes in Germany.

What we are asking for in this motion today is a logical extension of those independent initiatives we took by saying not only will we not deploy nuclear weapons on our soil, not only will we not have our forces in Europe nuclearized, but we will also refrain from testing any nuclear weapon delivery systems. It seems to me that is part of the logic of denuclearization.

For some reason the Government has now decided not to continue a non-nuclear role. Our military and political commitment in Europe, indeed with the United States, does not need to be expressed in nuclear terms. I have heard many Members on the Government side and within the Conservative Party say that, so why, then, are so many of those same Members urging us to play once again a nuclear capable role, which is exactly what testing is all about? Have we simply lost all capacity for taking independent initiatives, for doing an independent assessment, or for a less uncritical acceptance of the nuclear armed strategy we hear about from Washington and elsewhere? Why do we simply and uncritically accept that if they want us to test the Cruise we will test the Cruise? It really has nothing to do with NATO, or NORAD commitments, or anything else. What it has to do with, I am sorry to say, is that we have become more and more integrated into the economic and military doctrines and values of Washington. We have therefore simply abandoned any independent judgment, any independent evaluation, any independent decision-making with regard to alliance nuclear weapons policies.

That is also what the Canadian public is so alarmed about. The public would like to see their Government taking a lead among the smaller nations of the world, among members of the alliance, like the lead taken by Norway, which is still a faithful member of the alliance, in saying no to any further escalation of the nuclear arms race. What the Canadian public wants is a freeze, bilateral, mutual, verifiable, followed by massive reductions; to use George Kennan's phrase, "massive reductions and final elimination". We are not discussing any old weapon. We are discussing nuclear weapons which could see the end of this planet, whether accidentally or deliberately, and it is more likely to be accidental.

This is what the public is crying for from its Government. It thought the Government might do this a few years ago, referring to the policies of the Prime Minister, both of Canadian initiatives in denuclearization and promoting the concept of a strategy of suffocation by all the powers. Now it does not see either of them being followed by the Government.

We could untie ourselves without hurt or harm to our economy or to our relationship with the United States. We could untie ourselves from this total dependence, this uncritical acceptance of everything that is done. We could join other smaller nations and medium-sized nations in the alliance and in relations with other nations and members of other alliances in developing nuclear weapons free zones. Once one develops a nuclear weapons free zone, whether it is a single country or a group of countries, one is saying; "We will not be subject to nuclear intimidation", and that is one of the most significant aspects of the development of nuclear weapons free zones. We would be free to pursue the goals that everyone in the world wants to reach, namely, the goal of peace, freedom and security.

I close by emphasizing again, as strongly as possible, that the escalation of nuclear arms holdings does not provide security, either national security or international security, let alone personal security. We must realize, not that we must drop the word "security" but that the way to attain security, mutual security, national and international, is ultimately by ending the nuclear arms race. Only when we have done that and, as Canadians, have participated in reaching that end will everyone feel secure once again.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the Hon. Member whether she favours Canada withdrawing completely from NATO, from NORAD and from any other western world alliance and, if so, why?

Miss Jewett: Mr. Speaker, that is the kind of interjection that gives the Hon. Member a big kick but which really trivializes this very important debate. I have already said that Canada could play a non-nuclear role in the alliance, as does Norway. I am urging Canada, the Hon. Member and his Party to have us play a completely non-nuclear role in the alliance.

Mr. Taylor: What is that?

Miss Jewett: A non-nuclear role means that we would not be testing weapons, nor assisting in the manufacture of nuclear arms components, nor testing nuclear capable weapons. That is the subject of the debate. I look forward to hearing whether any Hon. Member of the Conservative Party or Liberal Party will say: "Yes, we will play only a non-nuclear role in the alliance. We think the nuclear arsenal has gone far beyond the real needs of deterrence, and we will not put up with a nuclear war-fighting scenario, wherever it is".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I will ask as short a question as posssible, and I hope the Hon. Member will answer it. Does her Party favour getting out of NATO completely or not? It is a very simple question. Would she please just answer that question?

Miss Jewett: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can read our platform, and I dearly wish he would address the issue which we are discussing today. He is dodging it because he does not want Canada to play a non-nuclear role. He is not facing the nuclear issue. He can read our policies any time he wants to see them.

Mr. Kilgour: What is it?

Miss Jewett: Why does he not focus on what we are debating today? Membership in NATO is irrelevant to what we are debating today.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to say to the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) that it is extremely important to have this debate today because not only the Members of the New Democratic Party, but also the Liberals and the Progressive Conservative Members consider this issue a crucial one. I recall that about seven years ago, I and a former Member of this House, Mr. Andy Brewin, as well as the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) made several speeches on this whole issue in various parts of the country. What I deplore in the speech made by the Hon. Member is this. I listened to her very carefully and she made many very interesting comments, but she referred repeatedly to a nuclear missile. I find this quite surprising because the Cruise is not a nuclear missile. Missiles are not nuclear or atomic. A missile is a delivery system and I believe that the debate is already complicated enough without making it more so when reference is made to the missiles themselves rather than the bombs they may carry. I hope that the other speakers will not make the same mistake because the subject is already complicated enough without adding that dimension to it.

[English]

Miss Jewett: Mr. Speaker, the subject is complex. Nevertheless, the air-launched Cruise missile that we are being asked to test can have either a nuclear or a conventional warhead.

Mr. Forrestall: That's not entirety so and you know it.

Miss Jewett: It can be either conventional or nuclear. Of course it can. Indeed, udner SALT II, as Hon. Members know, it is the American B-52 which flies the air-launched missile, right? Under SALT II, there is an agreement that if it has a nuclear warhead on it, that must be indicated in a visible way on the plane. So far, that is a part of SALT II which has been adhered to. Therefore it seems to me that the Hon. Member is confusing the Canadian public when he suggests that the missile will have only a conventional warhead. It could have either conventional or nuclear. We are particularly concerned because the 7,000 or so which are now being deployed or are about to be deployed, particularly on submarines but the air-launched as well, will have the nuclear warhead.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to what the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) said. I think I quote her accurately that she said it is possible for Canada to play a non-nuclear role in NATO. I have in my hand press clippings from the time of the 1980 federal election campaign when Canada's relations in NATO and NORAD played a very key role within the New Democratic Party. I would like to quote what the Hon. Member said at that time when there was a dispute between herself and her Leader with regard to Canada's role in NATO and NORAD. When seeking re-election in the British Columbia riding of New Westminster-Coquitlam, and referring to her Leader, she told reporters:

> He (Broadbent) is not speaking for me, the caucus or the Party. We do not support military action or saber-rattling. Our emphasis is and must continue to be disarmament because it is madness to have any other emphasis.

That was never in the context of nuclear war; it simply involved membership in NATO. Has the Hon. Member reversed her position?

Miss Jewett: The Hon. Member has missed the point which I was making then, would make today and would make on every possible occasion, that we are a Party of disarmament and our goal is all disarmament. On that occasion, however, there was also a very serious talk, and if the Hon. Member had been at the meeting he would know that it was primarily the nuclear arms race and the escalation of nuclear arms that we were discussing on that occasion.

• (1530)

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker, could the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) tell me whether she at least recognizes that the request to deploy Cruise missiles in Europe was made by the members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and not necessarily by the United States alone, and that this was done to counterbalance the deployment of Soviet missiles?

[English]

Miss Jewett: Mr. Speaker, once again the original NATO decision made in December, 1979, was to deploy ground-launched Cruise missiles if negotiations, the second track, did not succeed. Indeed, Canada has no part, so far anyway, in helping either to deploy or to help in the testing of ground-launched Cruise missiles.

I asked an official from the Ministry of National Defence just the other day at a briefing for the Minaki conference beginning Thursday whether it was not true that regardless of the outcome of the Geneva negotiations and the deployment or otherwise of the ground-launched Cruise missiles in western Europe the United States would still want us to test the air-launched Cruise missile, because it is part of the U.S. strategic force. His answer was explicit. There were several people there. He said, yes, the U.S. would want us to test the air-launched Cruise missile regardless of what happens at Geneva.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, the air-launched Cruise missile is not, of course, a strategic weapon system. It is something entirely different.

Might I ask the distinguished Member if she could give the House the benefit of her references upon which she bases the assumption that the air-launched Cruise missile in fact has a nuclear capability?

Miss Jewett: It is not an assumption, Mr. Speaker. It is a fact.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, briefly, I ask the distinguished Member, now having said it is not an assumption but it is a fact, whether she would care to give us the basis on which she makes that factual statement?

Miss Jewett: Mr. Speaker, I was just reminded, I have not read it lately, but the umbrella agreement itself says that Cruise missiles must be unarmed. The Hon. Member must realize that the intercontinental strategic force, the Strategic Air Command, includes B-52 bombers, and it is on the B-52 that the Cruise missile rests.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, in one of the questions, the Hon. Member mentioned that there would be 7,000 or 8,000 Cruise missiles produced and deployed. Is she aware of the fact that the U.S. Government had ordered some 4,300 Cruise missiles and then cancelled the order, cut it back to one-third, and was going to build 7,000 or 8,000 Stealth version missiles which will be longer range, probably interhemispheric and will be able to avoid radar and so on. It will be a far more dangerous weapon and much smaller. This is the kind of thing we are actually testing. We are testing for a new type and a new generation of weaponry.

Miss Jewett: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, the Hon. Member may have forgotten that I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) one day about what I called the Stealth missile, which was a shorthand form for Cruise missiles with the Stealth technology, and whether we would ever test those. His first reply was, no, of course we never would. Then someone told him what was happening, that the Department of Defence in the United States had already started phasing out the Cruise missile we now have, as the Hon. Member said, to develop one with the Stealth technology. From everything I have read, the Hon. Member is absolutely right, the Stealth weapon presents even more difficult problems of verification and has even greater accuracy.

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised at the speech we just heard by the Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett). At first, she spoke of thousands of tons of TNT that were to be found all over the world and mentioned how all this might blow up our planet. I know the thought is rather terrifying, but the Hon. Member forgot to finish her scenario. Would she rather have all those tons of TNT in the enemy camp and have us turn our backs on reality and say: TNT is terrible, we do not want any on our territory because it is dangerous. I am surprised at this extremely naïve approach, especially coming from a person of her experience, who in the past has accustomed us to a far greater measure of intellectual honesty.

The Hon. Member went on to say that Liberal and Progressive Conservative Members wanted to push Canada into a nuclear role. There again, Mr. Speaker, we have a mental reservation that I would almost qualify as dishonest. The Hon. Member knows perfectly well that Canada's official policy is that there shall be no nuclear arms on Canada soil. This policy has been stated and restated many times by the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau). Through a very nebulous choice of words, the Hon. Member would have her audience believe that Canada is about to establish nuclear weapons on its territory. The same misrepresentation can be found in the motion moved today in the House by the New Democratic Party.

Further on, the Hon. Member goes so far as to say that this debate has no connection with NATO or NORAD. It is only concerned with the fact that some people want to test, on Canadian soil, the guidance system of an empty unarmed shell called the cruise missile. This has no connection with NATO or NORAD, as the Hon. Member said. I did not think the Members of the New Democratic Party would be so narrow-minded as to focus their comments on such a limited debate, oblivious to everything else that is happening in the world and to the fact that within the territory of Warsaw Pact countries, 350 SS-20 missiles are aimed at our allies, at Western Europe. As far as the Hon. Member is concerned, all this does not exist! I suppose there is no Soviet Block or Warsaw Pact Block either. I suppose there is no such thing as zones of influence between the two super powers. The Hon. Member prefers to put her head in the sand and say: Here I am, all alone in my own little hole and that is how I like it.

Mr. Speaker, I must admit that during the ten years I have been sitting in the House, I have always suspected that the Members of the New Democratic Party were like white-washed sepulchers, and the speech made by the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam has just confirmed that suspicion.

One question the Hon. Member could have answered in a way that would have restored her credibility somewhat—there again, she refused to do so, to avoid focussing attention on dissension within the New Democratic Party—is as follows. The Hon. Member refused to answer a, or rather two, basic questions put to her by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour): Does she or does she not favour our being members of NATO? Does she or does she not favour our membership in NORAD? The Hon. Member carefully avoided saying what she thought about the subject because, as I said earlier, she is afraid to bring to light the dissension existing within the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Speaker, the debate in the House today reflects a new awareness involving not only the politicians in this House, religious leaders and academics, but all Canadians of all ages. This debate comes forth out of a profound desire for peace and could only take place thanks to the essentially democratic nature of our society. We are all very aware of the dangers inherent in the existence of nuclear weapons. Beset by uncertainty and fear, a number of governments and individuals are urging a stop to the development and deployment of new weapons.

I feel that no rational person could be in favour of reinforcing nuclear arsenals as such. However, in a world that remains essentially polarized, unilateral disarmament—whether it means putting a stop to the development of new weapons or dismantling existing ones—remains a basically wrong approach, because there is no incentive for the other party to do likewise. For instance, when, at the end of the sixties, the United States decided to discontinue unilaterally the manufacture of chemical weapons, we all hoped at the time that the Soviet Union would follow suit. The USSR, however, continued to develop and manufacture such weapons. There were no protests among the Warsaw Pact countries, and we all know that people in Warsaw Pact countries are seldom, if ever able to voice any criticism of their governments. Surprisingly, however, there were also very few protests from Westerm countries. Today, how could anyone who is at all realistic imagine that the USSR would act any differently if we were to stop the development of defensive nuclear weaponry? Unfortunately, no incentive is created by a unilateral approach. In the long run, it can only lead to domination or aggression. There is no easy way out of our present dilemma.

Realizing this, in 1979, NATO governments undertook to modernize NATO's nuclear force through the deployment of new missiles, in the event of failure of certain negotiations with the USSR, what is now referred to as the two-track decision that was accepted by NATO countries in December 1979 for negotiations with the USSR, in order to bring nuclear weapon systems down to their lowest possible level. It would have been much easier, in the short term, to ignore the gigantic arms effort of the Warsaw Pact member countries, both with respect to conventional and nuclear arms. The imbalance which already existed in 1979 when NATO made its two-track decision to react to the massive deployment of SS-20 Soviet missiles has increased, because since then the USSR has almost doubled the number of its missiles. More than 350 of those missiles, and we have no equivalent weapons in the West, represent a constant destructive threat to our allies.

I think that any politician who is the least bit responsible cannot ignore this fact, nor the complex lines of force that exist in our world today, nor the fact that nuclear disarmament cannot be seen apart from this context. The NATO Council, which called a meeting at the ministerial level last week in Paris, has restated NATO's primary objective which is to maintain peace while guaranteeing the right to freedom and justice on which our democracies are based. Mr. Speaker, how could anyone support such values without being prepared to defend them? That is the responsibility Canada would take on if it decided to authorize testing of weapon systems on its territory. Canada's policy of solidarity with its allies is not one of confrontation. On the contrary, it constitutes the only possible approach, as part of a gradual movement towards mutual and balanced disarmament. It is based on the concept of deterrence, which for almost forty years has prevented any major conflicts, to an extent unheard of before in the history of Europe where unprecedented military forces stand face to face. That is in fact, why mutual deterrence is so useful. Not only is there no question of resorting to nuclear arms, since the super powers have the ability to resist a preventive attack and to inflict, as a retaliatory measure, an intolerable level of destruction on the other side, but also any recourse to conventional weapons which during the last two World Wars alone were responsible for many millions of deaths and widespread destruction.

The development and deployment of defensive weapons to guarantee a proper balance between the two sides is an essential condition to maintain the state of deterrence when the strategy is to avoid war and an actual use of force. Only such an initiative taken in co-operation with other NATO member states can pave the way for negotiating the verifiable, balanced and mutual nuclear disarmament which we all strive for. Greater security is the purpose of any action aimed at controlling weapons and disarmament and establishing nuclear-free zones. Canada is a strong supporter of the concept of nuclear-free zones, provided they are approved by neighbouring countries and promote international and regional stability. Such approval is consistent with Canada's efforts to establish an effective non-proliferation system fashioned after the non-proliferation treaty. The suggestion that Canada be made a nuclear-free zone would be realistic only if we were prepared to withdraw from the Atlantic Alliance which has served us well and has helped us maintain peace for over 30 years. That is why the Government is still convinced that our association and co-operation with our allies, and the defence production sharing agreement we have with them do a lot more to maintain peace and security than would our withdrawal from that alliance and our isolated situation as a nuclear-free zone.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer my colleagues of the New Democratic Party, and particularly the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam, to a book published recently and written by Jean-François Revel, Comment les démocraties finissent. Here is a paragraph on page 151 of that book by Jean-François Revel:

> Others before the Communists knew the art of calling "peace" a certain way of waging war. In the year 341 before our era, Demosthenes was trying to make the Athenians see the "peace offensives" of Philip of Macedonia for what they really were.

And Demosthenes said in the Third Philippic:

> 'Our enemy, wielding weapons and surrounded by impressive forces, talks about peace as he makes acts of war', he said to them. Indeed, Philip had his Afghans or his Czechs because, as Demosthenes tells us, 'did he not say to the unfortunate inhabitants of Oreos that, as a friendly gesture, he was sending them troops to protect them?' One has to be stupid, warned the orator, to 'consider as a state of peace a situation which will enable Philip, once he has taken everything else, to launch an attack against us . . . That is how he sees peace, undoubtedly, but certainly not us'.

Since Demosthenes was speaking to the Athenians in his Philippics, far from me to suggest that the members of the New Democratic Party have the basic qualities of the Athenians of the Antiquity, or even to think that I am a Demosthenes. However, given the naivety we have witnessed since the debate began this morning, and the mental restrictions which they made as they were playing with words to make us believe that Canada wants to have nuclear weapons, I wish the Members of the New Democratic Party would be more honest, more open-minded and less naïve when they speak about that important issue.

We all want peace, Mr. Speaker; the holier-than-thou members of the New Democratic Party are not the only ones who do. We are all seeking peace when we try to convince the members of the Warsaw Pact, the countries under Soviet control to sit down with the other superpower represented by the United States of America to agree on a balance and verifiable reduction of nuclear arms. It is not with high-sounding rhetoric such as we heard this morning from a party which is completely cut off from reality that we can restore to the world the peace that we all hope for. I am therefore happy, Mr. Speaker, that this debate is being held today so that the Members opposite may be seen in their true light, especially the small group to my right on the other side.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, I want to pose a question to the Minister and to make some brief comments as I will not have an opportunity to speak on this matter. The real question today as I see it is: should Canada participate with the United States of America in the testing of (a guidance system that is called TERCON) an unarmed air-launched cruise missile? I recognize fully and appreciate the massive apprehension and revulsion in the use of this issue as a symbol against the fear of nuclear annihilation.

A nuclear war can come about because of three reasons. I want to address a question to the Minister in this area. The first reason is that it may come about by aggressive design or intent by one of the superpowers. This is highly unlikely because they will destroy the world and themselves. The second is by escalation of a minor conflict such as a triggering conflict in the Middle East. The potential for escalation is massive and scary in the world today. That is what bothers me more than anything else, the potential for escalation. The third way a nuclear war can occur is through accident. There is real potential in this area due to a failure of equipment, a failure of systems, or a failure on the part of humans who man the systems. If there is anything we should do with a system we are going to deploy, we would want to test it extensively until we knew it would never fail or, if it did fail, under what conditions it happened.

With regard to preserving peace and preventing war, particularly by accident, which I consider the most likely reason for a nuclear war in the future, and with the tremendous potential for escalation being awesome, is the Minister considering seriously in his discussions with the Americans whether this testing is absolutely vital to the nth degree so that if the U.S. deploys the Cruise in Europe, at least we know it will not fail or cause a war by accident?

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the analysis of the Hon. Member about the possible causes of a nuclear war, namely the possible escalation of a regional conflict, the possibility of accidents. For that reason, the more we test or check the equipment, either the missile guidance system under discussion today or other systems, the easier it will be to prevent accidents and to guard against them.

Now, I am not the one in charge of negotiating with Washington our umbrella agreement with the United States, but rather my colleague the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne). However, it seems obvious to me that the testing of the guidance system for the unarmed Cruise missile is part of the research needed to provide a practically ironclad guarantee that the deployment of these missiles will be accident-free.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister, because to us this is most important. I know that several Hon. Members of this House are wavering and are still wondering how they are going to vote. This is not my case. However, the Minister said in his speech that he was pressing—to use his own words—the Soviet block and especially the Soviet Union to start negotiating seriously. I share his view. But since the United States, this friendly nation to the south of us, have chosen to speak for the Western block of which we are a part, can he give us the assurance that every effort is being made by the Government of Canada to also convince the United States to discuss seriously first, rather than letting us believe that we should deploy the missiles and start discussing seriously afterwards? It is my feeling that Canadians do not share that view. We are willing to honor our commitments, keeping in mind that we will deploy the missiles if negotiations fail. But for the negotiations to succeed, the United States must also be serious in these negotiations, to the same degree as their vis-à-vis. Will the Minister therefore assure this House that our ally, our friend and our neighbour, the United States, will be receiving from Canada instructions or recommendations pressing them to discuss very seriously before a final decision is taken to deploy?

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) for his question, since we know the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis is the Chairman of our Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence and has an awareness, a very thorough knowledge of all those matters of foreign policy, and I would like to assure him that we are making identical representations to both the Americans and the Russians, in order to live up to the thrust of the decision made in December 1979 in co-operation with our NATO partners to arrive through negotiations on INF at a balanced and verifiable reduction of the number of such missiles. We exercise the same degree of pressure on both Washington and Moscow.

I would like to suggest to the Hon. Member that if he will read again the first Williamsburg declaration on armaments and the negotiations going on in Geneva, and also President Reagan's statement issued a few days after the Williamsburg Summit, in which he made new proposals to the Soviet Union, he will come to the conclusion that our American friends are very serious in their search for a balanced and verifiable reduction of INF missiles.

[English]

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, in the Minister's presentation this afternoon he said on more than one occasion that he was not very happy or impressed with the intervention of the NDP to this point because we were misleading the Canadian public and the Members of this House by the arguments we were making. If the Cruise missile is not a piece of weaponry to carry a nuclear warhead, or in some cases a conventional warhead, does it have any other purpose? I submit that the Minister discredits his own argument. If the NDP has a slant on it of scare tactics toward people, he discredits his argument by the fact that he insinuates that we stand for unilateral disarmament, which is not correct. He also put out a scare tactic of his own to the public of the bogeyman in the closet when he says that if we do not have nuclear weapons to protect us, somebody will attack and blow us to smithereens. That is not the case. We do not advocate unilateral disarmament. It has to be a platform where we work toward a verifiable arms reduction through multilateral negotiations even beyond the bilateral.

The other point the Hon. Member makes—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. If the Minister is to respond, he might be given the floor at this time because the period is ending.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, since the Hon. Member did not ask his question it is very hard for me to answer. Referring to my comments, he suggested I was far from being impressed by the arguments presented by the New Democratic Party. I would like to tell him I have never been impressed by any of the NDP's arguments. And when I say that the New Democratic Party's arguments tend to give a partial and biased illustration of the facts, I will repeat the words used by the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett), when she said that Liberal Members and Conservative Members would have Canada play a nuclear role, although the Hon. Member knew full well that the deployment of nuclear arms is not on Canadian soil. So let her cease and desist making statements that are almost accurate while ignoring what is essential.

This is what I wanted to say.

• (1600)

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to participate in this debate because it is a somewhat historic debate. In the 17 or 18 years that I have been in this Chamber, today offers me the first opportunity that I have had to participate in a debate on this subject at this level.

Let me begin by making the statement that it is high time that Canada started letting honourable people, honourable nations, their spokesmen and their knowledgeable negotiators do the right thing. I read a story in the Christian Science Monitor some time ago when this debate, first started, particularly in Europe because it had reference to Europe, and I will paraphrase that article, with apologies to its author. But I have paraphrased that article on my own behalf, and in any event, never before has mankind had such an opportunity to understand the reasons why we must lay down instruments of massive, massive destruction. We have that opportunity now.

Let me address myself very briefly, Mr. Speaker, to what my colleague, the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), suggested much earlier, and that is, that this debate includes three or four parameters. We are probably at fault because we in this Chamber have not debated this subject. We in the country have not debated the broad questions of armament, arms procurement, burden sharing and all such questions. Not only have we not done that but we are remiss and responsible for not having debated the nuclear question to the degree that our allies from the North Atlantic Alliance have.

Let me deal with one narrow aspect of the question. I was concerned by the assumption of the last speaker for the New Democratic Party that the air-launched Cruise missile is in fact a dedicated nuclear weapons system. That is absolute nonsense. The air-launched Cruise missile is put together with rivets. It is a simple vehicle that has only one dedicated function.

I want to tell my hon. colleagues something that obviously very few of them are aware of. In the first three days of a conventional war in Europe, the task of the allies will be to interdict airports from which enemy aircraft are launched in a pre-emptive and conventional strike, to interdict important transportation corridors, to interdict radar and other electronic radio communications systems and to interdict a dozen other very important targets. Those targets are fixed. They are not mobile targets. We know precisely and exactly where they are. There is no need to use an atomic warhead to blow up an airport or a building that houses a communications centre. Perhaps it is time that the secrecy that surrounds these things was lifted a little bit and that we come to understand the potential of conventional explosives.

In the first three days of interdicting key elements in a pre-emptive advance against our allies, we will lose 75 per cent of all airplanes that are sent down the middle of a runway in order to render them inoperable to a potential enemy. We will lose 75 per cent of the aircraft we send because those very airports are heavily defended. As we know, those airplanes range from a single man fighter bomber all the way to a three man fighter bomber. They cost anywhere from $30 million to $75 million or $80 million each. They are operated by one, two or three living persons, human souls on board, and we will lose 75 per cent of these men and planes. Given the choice, Mr. Speaker, of sending a manned fighter bomber at a cost of $30 million, $40 million or $50 million each with one, two or three souls on board, or an unmanned Cruise missile that is air-launched and that, in terms of production if we can ever get rid of inflation in the country, would in fact cost $900,000 or $1 million, what choice would you make? The lack of knowledge that we as Canadians have with respect to what is in fact going on in the world scares and horrifies me.

This afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I essentially want to deal with host countries because I think it is important that we understand what our allies are trying to do. Later I will discuss the recipient or host country of the ground-launched Cruise missile which is a dedicated nuclear vehicle.

If I have a complaint against my friends in the New Democratic Party, it is the opportunism that they display by turning the air-launched Cruise missile testing in Canada into a nuclear debate. Let us have both. Let us debate all of this. Let us try to understand, but let us not confuse and let us not ever again convey to the Canadian people that when we talk about the technology of an air-launched Cruise missile system that is conventionally dedicated to a specific conventional role and would be finished within the first three or four days of a war, that we are talking about a massive, first strike, nuclear dedicated weapons system. I have invited Members of the New Democratic Party to tell me what their source of reference is that indicates to them that it is a massive first strike dedicated nuclear weapons system. It is no such thing and was never intended to be that. As a matter of fact, it is a drone that flew over the skies of Alberta 25 years ago that has been upgraded slightly. We are trying to test and to perfect the guidance system. It is a conventional vehicle.

Leaving that aside, the New Democratic Party has afforded us an opportunity to discuss nuclear weapons systems. Well, let there be no mistake. There is absolutely no relationship whatsoever except in appearance between a sea-launched Cruise missile, a ground-launched Cruise missile and an air-launched Cruise missile. I doubt very much that my friends even know what the central system is. From what I have heard today, I have some doubts as to whether Members of the New Democratic Party, aside from their Leader, know the difference between a strategic philosophy and a theatre philosophy. I honestly do not think that they know what is going on in Europe.

I have had the privilege, Mr. Speaker, of sitting on the Special Nuclear Weapons in Europe Committee for some three and a half years now and I think that perhaps I have a responsibility to address myself to what is going on in West Germany, in the United Kingdom, the Netherlands, Italy and Belgium. We all know what happened in West Germany. On the strength of continued support for the deployment of ground-launched Cruise missiles in Europe, dedicated weapons systems have the capacity to be converted back to conventional whereas the air-launched Cruise missile does not have the capacity to be converted to a nuclear system in under three or four years because of the entirely different technology. You can certainly drop a nuclear capable air-launched Cruise missile, there is no question about that, but what we are building is not dedicated to that. To those who express surprise and say we are testing a Stealth vehicle, I say, of course we are. What do they think the name of the game is? If they trust Moscow, they can go and live there. I do not.

Under the terms of the twin-track decision of December, 1979, it was envisioned that in the event of failure to achieve INF agreement, 108 Pershing II and 96 ground-launched Cruise missiles would be deployed in Germany. Public and Government attitude toward this deployment, scheduled to begin in December, 1983, has attracted considerable attention within Germany, from other members of the alliance and certainly from the Soviet Union. Much of this attention is focused on the March 6 Bundestag election which was viewed by the outside world largely as a missile referendum. The crucial votes determining the election were in fact actually economic and social. The current 10 per cent rate of unemployment, the question of higher pensions and schemes for economic recovery appear to have been more important than nuclear missiles in spite of the extensive publicity and media coverage given to the nuclear issue.

On the other hand, the issue of missiles prompted acrimonious debate between the parties in that election held just recently. The tenor of the exchanges was harsher than in any post-war election. Some analysts have concluded that the strong emotions and fears raised may very well leave lasting scars on the population.

The divergent attitudes of political parties in West Germany toward the INF deployment provoked an unprecedent degree of outside involvement in that general election. The Soviet Union was notable for opposing deployment and intimidating those who favoured it. They used the carrot and stick approach as they frequently do. Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko visited the FRG in January and figured prominently in the partisan domestic campaign. Painting a picture of the U.S.S.R. as benevolent and committed to a reasonable arms agreement in the Geneva INF talks, he characterized the Reagan administration as "gamblers and con men", insensitive to European problems and uncommitted to a successful outcome at Geneva.

We all know President Reagan's conclusion. He said this:

> These actions reflect a bipartisan consensus on arms control, and new flexibility in the negotiations—steps to be viewed seriously by the Soviets and all others who have a stake in world peace. To the leaders of the Soviet Union, I urge that this new opportunity not be lost. To America's friends and allies around the world, I say that your steadfast support for the goals of both deterrence and arms control is essential in the future. To Congress and to the American people, I say let us continue to work together in a bipartisan spirit so that these days will be spoken of in the future as the time when America turned a corner. Let us put our differences behind us. Let us demonstrate measured flexibility in our approach, while remaining strong in our determination to reach our objectives of arms reductions, stability, and security. Let us be leaders in the cause of peace.

That is what we should be, Mr. Speaker. It is what Mr. Kohl in West Germany wants. It is what Prime Minister Thatcher wants, and she has just come through a very successful election. It is what the leaders in Holland want. Italy is going into an election, and that is what its leaders want. It is what the socialist movement in Italy wants; it is what members of the Communist Party in Italy want. They want a negotiated peace. It is what Canadians want. We differ on how we reach those goals, but at least let us support the leaders of the alliance who are our friends. Let us not go off on tangents and confuse an unsophisticated Canadian public on the nuclear debate. We must not do that either wittingly or unwittingly, and that is why I chose to take some time to speak about this. I am amazed that it was necessary to do so as I thought everyone understood the difference, the role and purpose of an air-launched Cruise missile compared to that of a ground-launched, Cruise missile or a sea-launched Cruise missile. Entirely different technologies are involved and each has a different purpose and a different role.

West Germany continues to support the principles of the December, 1979, decision. It was not easy for the leader. I tell this the way I understand it, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Kohl's victory did not necessarily come out of the debate, nor did the opposition to it. The growth of the Green Party in West Germany has been noted but it has lost most of its credibility.

In the United Kingdom, Prime Minister Thatcher did not waver at all. She has supported the 1979 agreement since its beginning. What nappened to the coalition in that country? We all saw the manifesto printed down one side of the page and another manifesto down the other. There were 21 points, 17 of them identical. If Hon. Members would do a little research, they would understand why honourable men and women of good will always defer to the right pursuit of peace. They do not necessarily reject other courses toward peace but they will always accept the right course.

How many Governments are there in Europe? We have 15 allies in NATO. Are we always right? Are we the only ones who know what is right? In Canada we have little choice but to support the knowledgeable decisions of the Government, and I hope this is a position that this Party would take. We have the same qualifications as the Government with respect to any escalation of the nuclear arms race. Those things are clear and are well set out. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Victoria, has done that, and others will follow.

Prime Minister Thatcher's Government repeatedly rejected the Soviet demand that the United Kingdom's independent nuclear forces be included in the Geneva INF negotiations. The Government has taken the position, shared by the NATO allies, that the Soviet posture is, in fact, an attempt to decouple the U.S. from Europe by excluding U.S. nuclear weapons systems from Europe. United Kingdom officials have argued that the British and French independent nuclear systems should not be included for several reasons; they are by definition and nature strategic and not theatre forces; they are minimal deterrent forces vis-à-vis the vast Soviet nuclear arsenal, and the INF negotiations are strictly bilateral. The March, 1982, U.K. white paper did indicate, however, that if circumstances were to change significantly, that is, if Soviet military capabilities and the threat they posed to the United Kingdom were to be reduced substantially, the U.K. would, of course, be prepared to review its position in relation to arms control. They have said these things. They are in place. They are part of the debate. It is incumbent upon us to be aware of it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time allotted for his speech has expired.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, the eloquence of the Hon. Member in describing his knowledge with respect to the Cruise missile, I believe has only portrayed his vast ignorance. I would like to quote to him from two sources. He has stated in questions today, and also in his speech just now, that the air-launched Cruise missile is not or cannot be equipped with a nuclear warhead. I would like to quote to him from a statement by William Epstein, who is the former director of Disarmament at the United Nations. He is referring to the air-launched Cruise missile to be tested in Canada. He said:

> Each missile can carry a nuclear warhead up to about 300 kilotonnes in yield, about 20 times the power of the Hiroshima bomb.

If that does not satisfy the Hon. Member, I can go to another source to back up our assertion that the air-launched

Cruise missile is designed to carry a nuclear warhead. If you look at the background papers, tabled with the umbrella agreement, which was tabled in this House, Section E, entitled, "The Cruise Missile—Deterrents and Arms Control", you will see in the last paragraph on Page 2:

> Cruise missiles can be armed with either conventional or nuclear warheads. Any missiles which may be tested in Canada would, of course, be unarmed.

That is the source of our information when we say that the air-launched Cruise missile is designed to carry a nuclear warhead. Would the Hon. Member tell us what is his source of information which says the air-launched Cruise missile is not designed to carry a nuclear warhead?

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, my sources are the United States military authorities, the Pentagon, General Rogers, and a host of other people. I do not believe that I said that the air-launched Cruise missile was not capable of nuclear capability. I said that its role and purpose has a three or four-day duration, that it is designed to do a specific job. That job is conventional because there is no need to use a nuclear weapon to blow up a runway or a railway station. No military man whom I have met in three and a half or four years on the nuclear arms committee in Europe has ever suggested anything else. The Boeing people do not suggest that, nor does the Pentagon, where I have asked this question specifically—without getting into names. As a matter of fact, I asked General Rogers the question. General Rogers would deploy the air-launched Cruise missile specifically for the purpose I have indicated. He has said that publicly. He has said that it has no better role than to relieve the commanders of the responsibility of sending men, live people, souls, human beings, down the middle of a runway to destroy it only to know that when they issue that order three-quarters of the men will not come back. That is its role and its mission. Every nation in the world, unless we come to our senses, will deploy air-launched Cruise missiles in this particularly narrow way. There is absolutely no need to increase the cost of an air-launched Cruise missile to the level of the cost of a ground-launched missile or a sea-launched Cruise missile. There is no need to do that. You have the other weapon systems.

The Hon. Member is right in saying the system can carry anything. It can carry leaflets. It can carry mail, and God knows we need to speed up the mail around the country. However, it is not a dedicated nuclear system. I do not argue with the fact that it has the capacity to be converted to that, but it would take two to three years of new technology and new work to turn that vehicle into a nuclear-capable Cruise missile.

Mr. Sargeant: Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure who the Hon. Member was trying to "snow" in his answer to my friend, the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadowlake (Mr. Anguish). I would like to ask him about the arguments which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has thrown at us over the last number of months when we have opposed the testing of this missile in Canada. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) has also repeated this same point. We have said that this is not the missile which is going to be used in NATO. They have said, however, that it does not really matter which of the three missiles we test, that what they are testing is the guidance system. Therefore, they are using this as a test bed for a guidance system which can subsequently be used in the ground-launched or sea-launched, or whatever launched missiles which are designed to carry nuclear weapons. That is the point we are trying to make. It is not whether this specific missile happens sometimes to carry nuclear and sometimes to carry conventional. Would the Hon. Member comment on that, please?

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of putting words in the mouth of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), or anyone else. He can do what he wants. The air-launched Cruise missile, just as the Tomahawk, as my friend knows very well because we viewed it together, I believe, has the capacity to carry a 1,000-pound conventional warhead. It can be converted. It is not my fault if the Prime Minister and the Minister of National Defence are not fully conversant with this subject. The secrecy which surrounds this debate, my dear friend, is nonsense. I believe Canadians should be aware of what is going on so that when we react out of natural human fear, we understand what we are reacting to, so that we are not reacting to something which we do not understand. It is my understanding that the system is designed to carry up to—and I should not say the numbers because I am not sure—a 1,000-pound conventional warhead missile, and that to convert it to a nuclear capacity would take at least two years. Even the guidance system is entirely different. The whole response is entirely different because its mission is entirely different from that of the air-launched Cruise missile. But it is immaterial. My concern, Mr. Speaker, is that we have taken advantage of the testing of a guidance system in Canada to expand that into a nuclear debate, and we have labelled the air-launched Cruise missile as a horrendous nuclear dedicated weapon system, which it is not.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of difficulty with the statements of the Hon. Member. I do not in any way question his sources or what he is trying to put across. However, it seems to me that there is one very good reason why a conventional weapon would not be satisfactory, that is, that you need a much larger explosive force in order to be as accurate as you need to be, even though you can get 100 meters from your source. I have a list of all the Cruise weapons with built-in guidance systems, the TERCON guidance system. They are the ALCM AGM 86B, which is nuclear; the GLCM, the ground-launched BGM 109G, which is a tactical weapon, nuclear; and the SLCM BGM 109A, nuclear, and there are only a few of these coming along, and they will not come on until 1986. They actually will be conventional and are for that purpose.

I believe we are talking very seriously about a nuclear weapon which can get close enough to destroy a command post, but that cannot be done in any kind of hardened situation, and cannot be done if you are using a conventional weapon. The Hon. Member is correct, it would be a 1,000-pound warhead, but a 1,000-pound warhead is not capable of doing what he says it is capable of doing. It is only a nuclear weapon with 17 times the power of the Hiroshima bomb.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, the last time I used a sledge hammer to crack a peanut I did not have anything left. You do not need a nuclear weapon to blow up a runway or render it less than useful to an enemy! You need only modern explosives.

Rather than get into a debate and take up the time of the House, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that my hon. friend use the influence of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) and others in the Government to get himself into a United States explosives factory and get himself a first-class briefing on just exactly what we can do with modern explosives. Then he will understand that no man in his right mind would drop an atomic bomb on a radio station. What in hell for? What is this debate about? To kill innocent, harmless people? It is crazy, insane and nobody would do it. Not even Moscow would do it and they have the equivalent capability. If the Hon. Member is not aware of that, perhaps he had better do a little bit of reading.

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would like to open my remarks by commenting on the role of the Department of National Defence. The role is a very specific one. It is the protection of this bountiful land of ours against aggression and the preservation of peace and freedom. It must do this in the real world where there are foreign powers who do not share our values of freedom and dignity for each human being. Peace has different meanings and perceptions in different lands. For example, the Soviet Union's definition, as expressed by Lenin many years ago, was that peace simply means communist world control.

In this world, nuclear weapons do exist. We cannot wish them away or demonstrate them away. They will not go away. They exist as weapons in the hands of sovereign states, friend or foe alike, such as the Soviet Union, the People's Republic of China, the United Kingdom, and most likely other countries as well. Indeed, these terrible weapons are in the hands of nations whose leadership is dedicated to the very antithesis of democracy and freedom. One such superpower is the Soviet Union.

A nuclear weapon is not just a qualitative advance over previous weapons. They have added a new dimension, not only to warfare but to our very human existence. There can be no winners in a nuclear war, but nuclear arms are a reality that we must face as a nation and address as a Defence Department.

In light of its size and geography, its vast and unpopulated frontiers, its three ocean coastlines and its wide expanse of ice and snow in the north, Canada relies heavily on its alliance with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and operates under an allied defence system. There is no doubt but that Canada's security depends on co-operation with our neighbour to the south as well as with our other partners in NATO. The motion today deals with our participation in NATO concerning deterrence, which is interpreted as an escalation in nuclear arms.

In the first place, the House is asked to oppose escalation of the nuclear arms race by any nation. Inherent in this proposition are two implications: the first is that there is in progress a "nuclear arms race". The second is that the pace of this arms race is quickening in that its dimensions are getting larger; that it is indeed escalating.

Historically the concept of an arms race has been applied to a situation in which potential military rivals or adversaries have engaged in competitive programs of armament or rearmament, each with the objective of gaining superiority over the other. Is this in fact the process in which, with respect to their nuclear arsenals, the two superpowers and, more generally, NATO and the Warsaw Pact are now engaged? If so, Mr. Speaker, if we conclude that the two rival superpowers on the one hand and NATO and the Warsaw Pact on the other hand are indeed engaged in a race for superiority in nuclear weapons, do we not then have to examine how that race was started and what are its current dynamics before we can reach sensible conclusions as to how it can best be halted and as to the effects upon the arms race of particular weapon decisions taken by either? As the Minister said in his statement on Estimates to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence on March 15:

> For two decades the Soviet Union has had the potential to threaten Western Europe with intermediate-range ballistic missiles armed with nuclear weapons, without there ever having been a large number of similar systems available in the allied military structure of NATO Europe. NATO was able to tolerate this situation as long as the United States enjoyed a superiority in intercontinental ballistic missiles which kept not only the Soviet Union's counterparts, but also its land-based Intermediate-Range Nuclear Force (INF) missiles facing Europe in rough balance. Since the Soviet Union has become equally strong in intercontinental weapons, and since this rough strategic parity has been codified by the SALT agreements, there is now a greater need to correct the pronounced imbalance in intermediate-range weapons, either through a reduction by the Soviet Union or by the installation of some offsetting system by the West. In the area of intermediate-range weapons, the Soviet Union made a great and deliberate leap forward with the introduction of SS-20 missiles. The North Atlantic Alliance members were understandably concerned by this new threat to the territory of its European states.
> When early efforts to dissuade the Soviet Union from deploying its SS-20s failed, Western governments took the 'two-track' decision in December 1979 to modernize NATO's intermediate-range weapons through the introduction of the Pershing II and Ground Launched Cruise Missile (GLCM) and to offer arms control negotiations to the Soviet Union, an unprecedented procedure in which negotiations were proposed on new weapons systems before their deployment and whose objective it is to bring about a limitation of these systems in both East and West at the lowest possible level, desirably zero. Canada is convinced, as are her European allies, that the threat posed by the presence of the Soviet Union's long-range land-based INF missiles cannot be ignored. Though we greatly prefer to deal with this threat through negotiations, we also recognize and support the requirement for NATO to negotiate from a position of strength."

The lesson of history is that peace is made more likely by a balance of power; so long as East and West maintain broadly equivalent forces, there is little danger of war. But the West can only sustain its part of this relationship if its own forces are kept up to date. There is also a need to guard against attempts by the Soviet Union to achieve military superiority in any particular area, such as the INF. Moreover, such decisions are taken only after the most careful consideration. They are not autonomous or planned. Arms control aims to control this competition, to stabilize the balance and, if possible, to reduce the level of forces on both sides.

Among the Hon. Members opposite who put forward the resolution before us, there is a number who have philosophical leanings. I would suggest that even the best philosophers would benefit from minimal knowledge of history. It would not have taken much research to show that the West simply cannot be charged with escalating the nuclear arms race. One does not even require this degree of historical expertise to observe that the only conceivable cause for war between East and West would be a Soviet military attack.

Cruise missiles are not a new weapon, nor will they give a new twist to the arms race. The Soviet Union is deploying its new SS-20s now, and has been doing so since 1977. One new SS-20 missile has been deployed on an average each week, to a total of 350, each with three warheads.

From their silence over the past six years, one can only conclude that those who tabled the resolution today were not troubled by such developments. The NATO Cruise missiles, on the other hand, which are the object of the resolution, are not due to start arriving in Europe until the end of this year at the earliest, and only then if a satisfactory arms control agreement is not reached.

In taking its modernization decision, NATO agreed that before the first missile arrived, a major effort should be made to prevent an arms spiral. As evidence of this, the Americans have already withdrawn 1,000 nuclear warheads from Europe, and they will remove one more for every new warhead deployed.

It is worth recalling that at the start the Russians refused to even talk. It was only when faced with NATO's determination to proceed with the modernization decision that the Russians concluded that they could not get what they wanted on a one-sided basis and agreed to negotiate.

The resolution must be opposed. It is flawed in its essence. It has no redeeming features. It does not even call for a lessening of reliance on nuclear weapons through improvements to our conventional defences. Rather, it betrays a state of mind prepared to acquiesce in Soviet strategic superiority and to dismantle or disavow any weapons systems on our soil that the Soviet Union might regard as being provocative. The resolution bears eloquent if unwitting witness to the policital dividends that the development of nuclear superiority brings in its wake.

In conclusion, let me say that living with nuclear weapons is one of the inevitable results of mankind's unrelenting search for knowledge, just as are the many benefits that we enjoy in medicine, communications and agriculture. Nuclear weapons cannot be disinvented. We must learn to live with them. We need to create an environment where there is stability between nuclear equipped forces so that there be no incentive to attempt aggression.

Nuclear deterrence is a dreadful form of security, but it is effective, it has proven itself, and it does prevent the horrors of any type of war. However, to be effective, it must be such that there is no doubt but that initiating a nuclear engagement would entail absolutely unacceptable costs and punishment to the initiator. I will therefore vote against the resolution.

Mr. McKinnon: I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary a question concerning a Government policy which seems to me to be overly dedicated to secrecy. I do not know if he listened as I read a list of things that I thought we could have without endangering national security in this matter. I wonder if he could tell us if the Government will relax its attitude. It is not always in the interests of security to keep everything secret about everything. Would the Parliamentary Secretary have a look at the list in the Cruise Missile Project Arrangement to see if there is any reason we cannot have a much fuller briefing, a written briefing, that we could use as reference material in future debates of this nature?

Mr. Hudecki: Yes, I heard the worthy recommendations of the Hon. Member this morning. They do make sense. It seems to me, however, that it is a bilateral agreement. We would probably need agreement from NATO and from the United States officials as well. I have already taken the liberty of passing on the Hon. Member's thoughts and concerns not only to the Ministers but to the officials in the Department as well. I hope that we will receive a favourable answer in that respect.

Mr. McKinnon: I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary would take note that in a Congressional committee in the United States, there would not be the slightest question. Agreement would be given before it was ratified. It would be the same with SALT II. It would not be held in secret by the administration in the United States until such time as the Senate or the Government there decided whether it would passs it. We are doing things backwards. We are making the decisions and then, afterwards, we receive a little dribble of information and a kind of staged debate as to whether we should or should not have gone along with the decision.

Mr. Hudecki: I was just wondering whether one of the obstacles is the need of previous knowledge of technology that is associated, whether this subject lends itself to scrutiny by a committee, or one which does not have the background in the technical knowledge of the various weapons and weapons systems.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions to ask. Instead of asking a supplementary question, I will pose both questions at the same time and ask the Parliamentary Secretary to response to them. If in fact the Canadian people accepted the build-up of nuclear arms, nuclear weaponry, as a deterrence, where does it stop? At what point do we stop building up nuclear arms, stop hiding our heads in the sand as an ostrich would, in terms of our Canadian Government, and proposed some kind of meaningful intervention by the Canadian Government, by the Canadian people, to reduce and eventually stop nuclear arms on the face of the earth? I am sure that that must be the objective of all people in Canada.

The second question I pose is the following: Instead of Cabinet deciding sometime during the summer, in its own isolation, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has pointed out, why can there not be a decision as to whether or not we test the Cruise missile, a decision of this Parliament assembled in the House, in a vote which is not viewed as being a vote of non-confidence, so that Members of Parliament can freely express their views and that of their constituents on the question of testing the Cruise missile in Canada?

Mr. Hudecki: I do not feel that the whole issue of deterrence is entirely understood. It is a technique whereby the country or the force which is using deterrence must have two components. First, it must show that it has the equipment and the material with which to deter the enemy and, second, there must be a will, both a political will and a will of the people, to use it if it must. If these conditions are fulfilled, then deterrence will work and will not necessarily have to escalate, because with NATO, we have the second track. Using this second track approach, it is anticipated there will be a reduction, not an escalation. What will happen if none of these systems will work is a question that I am not that much of a visionary to be able to answer. But the very fact that for 38 years it has worked, and has some credibility, gives reason to hope for and to anticipate a favourable result.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a short comment and then ask a question. I found out years ago as a boy that the only way to stop a bully in the school yard was with a strong punch to the nose. Otherwise, you continued to be bullied and there was no stopping a person whose objective was to bully.

In the Hon. Member's speech he mentioned the two superpowers. He did not mention that the objectives of the United States, one of the superpowers, is peace. The U.S. protects people. The Americans have no ambitions to take over the world. The declared objective of the Soviet Union, of communism, is world domination. That is why the communists walk into nations that cannot defend themselves, such as Afghanistan, Poland, Hungary and the Ukraine. I do not want to live in a country in which the communists can march in. I want to be able to protect myself.

Why in Canada do we have a continual bombarding of a nation whose objective is peace, namely the U.S.A., while the build-up of weaponry in the Soviet Union whose objective is world domination is almost ignored?

Mr. Hudecki: Mr. Speaker, I think that is the crux of the whole issue. It may very well be that we in the role of the Department of National Defence and we in the role of Government from a political point of view have not really stated the issues clearly enough. We have not used our educational techniques in order to get down to the basic issues and to distribute information.

Mr. Sargeant: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hudecki). In his speech he talked about the need for stability between the two nuclear camps. How does the Cruise missile contribute to that stability when almost every serious thinker and writer on disarmament issues, and indeed people who practise disarmament negotiations for both sides—and another person who made this assertion was a former Secretary of the U.S. Navy—have all said that the Cruise missile in particular is a destabilizing weapon because of its non-verifiability? It does not add anything to the stability of the nuclear camps. There is no denying that it adds to the punch of the nuclear camps. Would the Parliamentary Secretary please explain how these things fit together?

Mr. Hudecki: Mr. Speaker, I think it has to a degree promoted stability in that along with the threat of using a Pershing II missile it has been able to bring the superpowers together at Geneva to the IWF and the Start meetings. It has been very difficult for those who have been promoting peace and who wanted NATO to meet with these organizations and have been unable to do so. When the threat of using these two weapons is made available, the two of them will meet and hopefully it will be the beginning of a de-escalation of the arms race, and that will add to the stability of the country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period of questions and answers has expired. It may continue if there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, we are today debating an issue of the utmost gravity to mankind. In doing so, surely we can agree that no one individual in this House and no single Party has a monopoly on the desire for peace in this world. Surely that is a goal we all seek. Yet I find the wording of this NDP motion before us today demeans and belittles the seriousness of this critical debate.

In the confusion and controversy that presently surrounds the role that Canada may be called upon to play in the testing of the Cruise missile guidance system, we should begin by recognizing that a limited nuclear war in Europe would be disastrous. Not only would it devastate the towns and cities of that continent but it is inconceivable that it would remain limited in terms of the size of the weapons used or of the geographic area. There are no obvious fire breaks that would halt it. There are no sure ways of limiting the use of these weapons to the so-called "little ones". To use the word "limited" is to commit a double error. A limited nuclear war would in all probability destroy western Europe. A limited nuclear war would almost certainly become intercontinental and, therefore, unlimited. For these reasons we here in Canada cannot suppose that this is a remote issue, remote from us. We are not armchair spectators watching in some disinterested fashion the tactics of the respective sides or pontificating from a limited base of knowledge. We have a role to play, and that role is to be found within NATO.

The policies that Canada advocates in the Council at NATO can do two things. They can take us closer to a nuclear war which would engulf this country among others, or the policies that we advocate within NATO can lead to a safer, more stable and perhaps ultimately non-nuclear environment in Europe. That would be vastly to our advantage. Nor should any of this surprise us, Sir. Twice alreadly in this century Canadians have felt obliged to enter a war which began as a European conflict. The great difference now is that the nuclear tinderbox in Europe includes us, whether or not we wish to be included.

Given the immense gravity of this issue then, there is a broad path that I think we should take. On the one hand we must make sure that the immediate balance of forces is preserved so that the mutual deterrent continues to work in Europe as it has worked for almost 40 years. On the other hand, we must lend our weight to reversing the nuclear militarization of Europe even if this involves greater commitments to conventional weapons.

The 1979 decision of NATO of which, as Secretary of State for External Affairs I was a part, was quite compatible with this approach that I have outlined. At that time, as I remember, there was widespread concern in European countries about the Soviet deployment of SS-20 missiles and Backfire bombers in the western Soviet Union. There was a great deal of concern. The SS-20 missile, in particular, was seen directly to threaten the European members of NATO. There were no long-range theatre nuclear weapons held by NATO forces which could counter or offset the SS-20 missiles.

The vulnerability of our NATO partners—and it was expressed by so many of them in very direct terms—led us, that is the countries, of NATO to what has become known as the two-track decision. That decision meant, first, countering the SS-20 missiles and the Backfire bombers by deploying long range theatre nuclear weapons within the European countries of NATO, namely deploying the Pershing II and the Cruise missile. That was the first track of that two-track decision. Second, that decision meant seeking arms control negotiations with the Soviet Union to eliminate all long range theatre nuclear weapons from Europe, both East and West. Deployment was not to take place for four years. The decision reached was that there would be no deployment by NATO of these weapons for a four-year period, namely until December 1983 at the earliest. In the intervening period, the intention was to concentrate on the second track, to concentrate consistently and urgently on the arms control negotiations which would be carried out in Geneva.

One of the major concerns at that 1979 NATO ministerial meeting was to find a policy which would maintain the unity of NATO members. It was not easy; it was a very difficult search. Small countries of NATO, in particular, were not anxious to participate in a policy which would lead to arms escalation. The search for a consensus was indeed a difficult one. The Government of which I was a part agreed with the analysis of the imbalance in theatre nuclear forces in Europe at that time and it accepted that this imbalance had the very serious effect of potentially decoupling the American nuclear deterrent from the deterrents of nuclear war in Europe.

Our European partners in NATO were very concerned about this possibility. It bespoke volumes about their vulnerability to the SS-20 and the Backfire bombers with no guarantee that they could ultimately rely on the back-up of the American deterrent. The Canadian position at that time sought to allow European members of NATO to find their own consensus about the most appropriate response to the Soviet deployment of SS-20s. Clearly any NATO deployment would be on their territory, not in Canada. The deployment would be on the territory of western European countries. It was up to them to decide whether and how they wished to deploy these weapons.

Our concern at that time was not to strike any postures or to engage in rhetoric which might prejudice the ability of western Europeans to achieve a consensus. We should be quite clear, though, that throughout those meetings which resulted in the decision in 1979 at Brussels the decision in no way constituted a commitment by Canada to test the Cruise missile, nor was any such discussion entered into at the time of the NATO agreement. It never came up for discussion.

If we have an obligation now, it is because our attempt to find a common policy with our allies clearly imposes responsibilities, including co-operation in the testing of weapons systems which we have collectively agreed to deploy in western Europe should the arms control negotiations not be successful. Therefore, and specifically in regard to the Cruise missile, it is quite clear that our first and most urgent obligation is to use all our influence in the pursuit of an arms control agreement with the Soviet Union in Geneva. Anything else, including the testing of the guidance system of the Cruise missile, is secondary to the central issue of arms control. We must not allow ourselves to be deflected from the goal of arms control and reduction. That is what the 1979 decision of NATO was all about.

We should realize that today we have only six months left of the original four years which were agreed to to make progress toward an arms control agreement before deployment of the Cruise missile takes place in western Europe, six months left out of that four-year period. If the decision to deploy is implemented, if that is what we arrive at at the end of this year because the arms control negotiations have not been successful, then I feel we are obliged to share in the alliance effort which obviously will involve testing the guidance system of the Cruise missile in Canada. But that obligation, related as it is to arms control negotiations, in no way required the Canadian Government to sign a bilateral agreement with the United States to test all manner of American weapons systems on Canadian territory. Yet that is the situation the Government created on February 10, 1983, when it signed the umbrella agreement with the U.S. That is the situation into which we have been put.

Under this new agreement or umbrella arrangement we have no guarantee that the weapons which are to be tested in Canada in the future will be part of our alliance commitments. They could equally be used for counterinsurgency in any part of the world, and the decisions could be made in secret, with no guarantee that Parliament will ever have the opportunity to debate the merits of these arrangements. All of this is being done by a Government which promised to suffocate the arms race in the laboratories. It is being done by a Government which has scarcely made any contribution to the discussion of arms control in Europe. Since the decision was taken in 1979, three and a half years have gone by and the Government has not yet been seized of the urgency of this situation. Surely it should realize that now is the time for Canada to take the initiative in an effort to move the negotiations forward. We should not underestimate our potential for doing so, nor our opportunity, nor indeed our responsibility.

If we look at the situation with regard to our other NATO colleagues, we realize it is extraordinary difficult for the British and the French to show flexibility because their nuclear forces are at the very heart or the centre of the dispute. For political reasons it is equally difficult for the West German Government to take the lead in the promotion of new ideas. If one looks at the political positions of the more junior members of NATO, one by one it becomes clear that there are precious few governments able to take initiatives and to introduce arms control proposals into public discussion. By contrast, Canada is in a position to test new ideas and to put into private and public discussion suggestions which may command some considerable support within the alliance. That is something we can do. As an interested and involved party, we should now be concentrating our efforts on presenting proposals to NATO which reflect both our own concerns and the political realities confronting our European allies, those I have mentioned.

We should begin not by engaging in a debate about the number of missiles on each side but by identifying some guiding principles. The Palme Commission suggested the notion of mutual security as the touchstone for negotiations with the Soviets. We should not, therefore, ignore the security dilemmas feed by the Soviets and we must realize the reality with which they live, namely that British and French or sea-based nuclear warheads are just as devastating as land-based warheads. Mutual security requires a formula and an approach which will deal with the Cruise and the SS-20 and will place them in the broader context of all medium range nuclear weapons currently targeted on both parts of Europe, East and West.

Our task as Canadians is to consider some of these possible solutions. It is well within the capacities of our experts to evaluate them and to explore the common ground of Washington and our European partners. To be rebuffed in this exercise will be disheartening. If we were to undertake it and be rebuffed, it would indeed be disheartening, but not to attempt it at all would be an abandonment of our role and our interest in the alliance. It would be to forget that there is still a place for genuine mediation within the alliance. It would be to assume that we in Canada have entirely lost influence and credibility with our closest friends. It would be to accept passivity and helplessness as the mark of our international diplomacy.

There are times when I am critical of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for some of his travels abroad, that they have not brought about the results that he or we might want to see. However, I would have no criticism, only commendation, if I could see the Prime Minister of this country engage in shuttle diplomacy from one country to the other in the western alliance to try to promote a much stronger effort by Canada for arms control negotiation in Geneva.

In this particular context, it is inappropriate to dwell upon specific numbers. Before we come to the precise arguments of the specialists, our task is to impose certain political principles on the negotiating process. Both in North America and in Europe there are hundreds of thousands of ordinary citizens who perhaps have seen more clearly than the scientists in defence laboratories and the strategists in the world of acronyms who know where present trends are leading us. We are faced with an apparently endless proliferation of nuclear weapons and destructive capabilities. Every new weapon has its own logic and its own reason, but the outcome is illogical, irrational and inhumane.

Therefore, and beginning with the INF negotiations Canada's approach to arms control should be guided by two broad principles. First, we must present realistic negotiating positions which emphasize minimal deployment of new weapon systems. We must begin to stem the tide of nuclear proliferation in Europe. Second, a negotiated outcome to the INF problem must encourage and actively promote further discussions on nuclear arms control.

In summary, the testing of the Cruise missile is not a decision which can or should be taken in isolation. Instead it must be placed, as I have argued, in the broader context of direction in arms control.

Finally, Canada must establish its own purposeful criteria for arms control and bend its efforts to achieving the only goal that in the long-term makes any sense, the progressive denuclearization of the world.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to hear the speech of the Hon. Member. I am sure she is aware that before 1963 there were 600 SS-4s and SS-5s deployed in the eastern European operation. The Americans withdrew their Jupiter and Thor missiles. Therefore, there were 600 single missile warheads in place until the SS-20s were deployed. Then there were the SS-20, SS-4 and SS-5. Two weeks ago the Russians made an offer to get rid of the SS-4 and the SS-5 and to reduce the SS-20 to the number equivalent to that which the French and British have, that is, 594, almost 600. The Russians said they would reduce their SS-20 warheads to the number that were there before 1963.

The SS-20 is a much less dangerous weapon, with only one-seventh of the capability of the SS-4 and the SS-5. It is much more stable in the sense that it is mobile, cannot be destroyed and does not have to be used as a first strike. It is an arms controller's dream. Are we not in a much better position today with this offer than we were in 1963 when we removed these missiles? Is this not an approach we might accept in terms of the negotiations?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I will not ask the Member to repeat the question. He asks that I remember back to 1963. I remember 1963 very well. It was at that time that the Liberal Government wanted to install Bomarc missiles in Canada. The Party of which I am part stood very staunchly against that. We did not want nuclear weapons in Canada at that time or at any time since.

With regard to the hypothetical position the Hon. Member has put forward, as far as I am concerned the role that Canada can take in this is to look at the situation that now exists in Britain and in France. That is one of the major stumbling blocks in the negotiations in Geneva, the missiles that are deployed in those countries at the present time. I would sooner see us use every bit of influence and power that we have to try to bring these countries into some discussion on what would happen in the balance between East and West that could incorporate the missiles that are presently deployed by those countries. I may say that that was a proposal put forward just the other day by Lord Carrington, the former foreign minister of Britain. If we were to advocate something like that and see it come to a successful conclusion, we might break some of the deadlock that presently exists in Geneva.

Miss Jewett: Mr. Speaker, I found the Hon. Member's address very interesting. I would agree with a great deal of it. In fact, I hope everyone in the House would agree that enormous emphasis must be placed on Canada's participation, providing ideas, assistance and so on for arms control negotiations.

I wonder if the former Minister would have something to say about the testing of the Cruise in the context of the negotiations, both INF and START. Although the air-launched Cruise missile is not yet in the START negotiating structure, it certainly was in SALT II and I hope would come again.

Because it is the air launch that we are being asked to test, would she not see some merit for putting off any decision to test until we see more about the progress of the negotiations in Geneva which may take many months? I know she spoke of four years, but negotiations were not going on a lot of that time.

Even though the Hon. Member does not want Canada to play a non-nuclear role in the alliance, which would include not testing, does she not see some merit in putting this way off down the line while the very negotiations that she feels very strongly about are going on?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, not only do I feel strongly about the arms control negotiations now, I felt strongly about them when that decision was made in 1979. If there is one great regret that I have, it is that we in Canada have treated the arms control negotiations as a secondary issue and have focused the attention of the country on the testing of a weapons system rather than the other way around. The important issue is surely how we can bring some control and reduction to nuclear weapons.

That we will come to a breakthrough in the negotiations within the next few months is not yet apparent, although there has been some minor movement, but if I were to see that we were anywhere near a major breakthrough that would then not necessitate the deployment of Cruise missiles or Pershing missiles in western Europe, I would certainly advocate that the negotiations continue for a limited period of time. No one would be so foolish as to turn down a possibility and a hope of that nature.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I have listened very closely to the hon. lady and I was pleased to hear—

Miss MacDonald: Member will do.

Mr. Allmand: Excuse me, I apologize to the Hon. Member. I was pleased to hear her say that there was nothing in the 1979 NATO agreement which obliged Canada to test any nuclear weapon. I would like to ask first if, according to her experience and her assessment, under the first track of the 1979 agreement which was to maintain the balance of power and deterrents, it is necessary to develop the Cruise missile system. Does she not agree that NATO now has enough nuclear power to obliterate the Soviet Union? In other words, is it necessary to move ahead with these weapons under that policy?

My second question is with respect to the second track of the agreement, which was to pursue arms control and disarmament. Does she believe that the NATO alliance, in the last couple of years, has been faithful to the 1979 commitment by pursuing that side of the policy with enough vigour and commitment?

Finally, after listening to the Hon. Member's speech, I must say that I am not too sure which side she is voting for. Is she voting for the motion or against the motion? I did not hear that.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I will begin by answering the last part of the Hon. Member's question. I will be voting against the motion. I want the Hon. Member to know that from the outset I have said that if the arms control negotiations are not successful, then I feel that Canada should, as part of the collective decision which is arrived at, assume some role in implementing that decision. That is why we are in NATO. If we are then asked to test the guidance system of the Cruise missile, I feel that we should do so. That was not ever raised as part of the discussion in 1979. There were no assignments handed out. All we knew was which countries would deploy the missiles on their own territory.

I am sorry, there was a second question which the Hon. Member asked.

Mr. Allmand: Yes, Mr. Speaker, does the Hon. Member think that it is necessary, under the 1979 agreement, that we do in fact develop a missile such as the Cruise when we already have overwhelming fire power that could destroy the East?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I tried to express the very real feeling of vulnerability that was conveyed at that December, 1979, meeting that the population of these countries in western Europe have because they have nothing to counter the SS-20. These people have lived through two world wars. But they have seen thousands of citizens of their countries die. They do not want to be overwhelmed again. They want something in the way of a deterrent, and the only thing they have in the way of a deterrent to the SS-20 at the present time is the American inter-continental ballistic missile system. That is where their defence lies, and they articulated that they are not at all sure that they can count on it.

If there is a strike made against them by the Soviet Union, they are not at all sure that the United States will automatically put itself into that battle. That is why these people say, "We want to be sure that we have some defensive mechanism to protect ourselves." As long as the people of the countries of western Europe feel that way, then I feel that we as a member of NATO supporting them must agree to that kind of defensive system which, in this case, means the Cruise missile and the Pershing II.

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to comment on a subject that has received a great deal of attention lately, and that is the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada. As all Hon. Members know, on February 10, 1983, Canada and the United States signed a five-year umbrella weapons testing agreement which established general ground rules for the testing of some of the U.S. military equipment and defence systems in Canada. At a later date, negotiators from both countries will try to establish a precise framework for the testing of different weapons, including the air-launched version of the Cruise missile in Alberta. However, to date no specific arrangement has been made to test Cruise missiles in Canada.

At the heart of the recent controversy is the Cruise missile itself, a missile which is basically a small, pilotless vehicle capable of delivering a nuclear warhead with great accuracy over long distances. It is too slow to be counted as a first strike weapon, but its accuracy and difficulty of detection makes it a devastating weapon. The Cruise missile is really the now generation of the V-1 rocket the Germans developed near the end of the Second World War that wrought such havoc on old London. The Cruise missile is very similar to that rocket except that it has wings and a guidance system. The Americans are not the only ones to have a Cruise missile. The Soviets, the French and the British also have similar vehicles, but only the Americans have developed the missile to such a high degree.

The U.S. is currently working on half a dozen different types of the Cruise missile. Most versions are being developed by the United States Navy and can be launched from submarines, surface ships or, in the case of the European version, by land. The other major type of Cruise is designed to be launched by B-52 bombers. This is the only type of Cruise that is presently being considered for operational testing in Canada.

The Cruise missiles have interchangeable roles. Almost every type of Cruise can be converted from nuclear to conventional warheads in relatively short order. They can also be outfitted to perform electronic warfare or surveillance roles. By making trade-offs with weapon payload, speed and fuel volume, the range of a Cruise can be extended from 370 miles to 1,500 miles without changing the missile's basic design.

Since Canada has foresworn the use of nuclear weapons on its own soil, it is already understood that none of the U.S. tests will involve nuclear warheads, nor will Canada be expected to deploy any of the missiles. The United States is expected to bear all testing costs. Also, there is a provision in the umbrella agreement which gives both countries the right to cancel or suspend any specific test. This gives us a great deal of control over the actual testing of weapons in Canada.

I think it is very important for Canadians to realize that we fully support NATO and the alliance. We believe that a credible deterrent is needed to maintain peace with liberty. That is why we supported NATO in 1979 when it adopted the "talk and deploy" or the two-track strategy. This strategy allows the western world to actively engage in negotiations that could contribute to meaningful and verifiable arms control and disarmament agreements, while at the same time to work with our allies to modernize our theatre and conventional defence forces in Europe so that they will in fact form a deterrent to the frightening build-up of Soviet armaments.

The military strategy of NATO, the strategy of flexible response, serves to preserve military security. Its aim is to prevent war through deterrence. Deterrence is effective when the allies are able to make credible their capability and willingness to defened themselves against any conceivable attack and can make the risk of attack unacceptable for a potential aggressor.

NATO is only capable of deterrence and defence through the close political and strategic co-ordination between North America and western Europe. Intercontinental strategic nuclear weapons, nuclear forces in Europe and conventional forces are required as deterrents for the entire spectrum of possible armed conflicts. NATO holds nuclear weapons at the ready not because it wants to wage a nuclear war, but rather because it wants to prevent war. The destructive power of nuclear weapons is intended to deter the use of war as an instrument of policy.

Military security presupposes an approximate balance of military forces between East and West. Arms build-up alone, however, is not enough to provide certainty that a balance will remain stable and reliable in the long term. In order to attain lasting security, an attempt must be made to contribute to the creation of a stable military equilibrium at the lowest possible level by means of balanced limitations of military potentials.

Any efforts at obtaining quantitative and qualitative limitation and reduction of armaments must take into account the military efforts of the other side, especially existing imbalances in the ratio of military force, and must guarantee security in terms of defence capability at every stage of the process. Defence planning and arms control must be closely co-ordinated to preserve the capabilities necessary for the realization of this strategy. The defence and deterrent capability must be secured through the necessary military measures.

Deterrence is not an attractive way of ensuring peace, but at least it has worked. The maintenance of a credible deterrent has helped to make western Europe strong and to keep the peace for over 30 years, despite circumstances that were often difficult. That deterrent posture of the West still keeps the peace in Europe. To abandon our security system now in favour of alternatives that have not even been described coherently let alone thought through would be immensely dangerous. Deterrence also provides the necessary stability to enable us to negotiate international agreements on disarmament measures which will really give us a safer world if they are verifiable and apply equally to both sides. The possession of nuclear weapons is an essential fact of deterrence: in a world where such weapons exist the NATO alliance must be able to deter their use by an enemy or to resist blackmail based on the threat of nuclear attack.

At the same time, so long as there is no denying that it may fail, and it would be irresponsible not to have plans for trying to limit the damage once nuclear weapons are used. If the West is to remain dependent on the nuclear power of the United States, there is an obligation on us all to be constructive in our criticisms of United States policies, or at the very least to understand what they are trying to do. There is another obligation on which consensus appears to be developing on both sides of the Atlantic, that is, the need to improve conventional forces and so diminish reliance on nuclear weapons.

Canada participates in the nuclear strategies of NATO. However, our direct military contributions to alliance deterrence and defence lie in the defence by conventional means of land, air and maritime areas. This is not a question of morality. It is a question of how we can best contribute to our own security, given our limited resources and force size. But we cannot rationally condemn the possession of nuclear weapons by others in an alliance of which we are a member and in which nuclear weapons provide the basis of deterrence and while we are sheltered by the deterrent nuclear umbrella of the United States or while we accept the contribution to deterrence and the prevention of war made by the nuclear forces of our British and French allies. To do so would be to adopt a position of no integrity whatever.

Canada's support for the maintenance of forces sufficient to deter aggression and defend the NATO area is entirely consistent with our commitment to a vigorous arms control policy. Indeed, the two policies are more than consistent, they complement and support each other, forming a coherent whole. They serve the same goal of enhancing security and preserving peace. Security is the key. Only on a basis of undiminished security can nations be expected to accept limitations on the numbers and quality of their weapons, and only on such a basis can they be brought to consider mutual and balanced reductions of their armed forces.

We are determined to do what we can to do what we can to achieve, by negotiation, a better international security environment. We are deeply involved in this effort. Canada not only encourages nuclear arms control between the two super powers, we also continue to seek mutual and balanced reductions in the conventional forces of NATO and the Warsaw Pact countries confronting each other in central Europe. These are negotiations that impact directly on the Canadian forces.

In addition to our participation in alliance consultations on strategic arms and intermediate-range nuclear force negotiations, our direct participation in the mutual and balanced force reduction talks and the conference on security and co-operation in Europe review process, Canada also plays a full role in the work of the United Nations and the Committee on Disarmament. Like other members of the United Nations, Canada is committed to the search for realistic and verifiable multilateral measures of arms control and disarmament which will halt the arms build-up. Canada's priorities in the United Nations are the achievement of a comprehensive multilateral nuclear test ban treaty, a chemical weapons convention, intended to complement the existing 1925 Geneva protocol and the 1972 bacteriological weapons convention, which would prohibit the development, production and stockpiling of all CW and provide for the destruction of existing stocks, and a treaty to prohibit the development, testing and deployment of all weapons for use in outer space. In all these areas Canada has made major contributions to the work being undertaken by the 40-nation Committee on Disarmament in Geneva.

The call by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at the First United Nations Special Session on Disarmament, in 1978, UNSSOD I, for a four-part strategy of suffocation and the unfolding of that strategy at UNSSOD II in 1982 into a policy of stabilization which took account of on-going negotiations, illustrates the contributions to the arms control and disarmament dialogue made by Canada in the past. We will continue our efforts in the future.

Several factors have contributed to the growth of anti-nuclear sentiment in Canada, many of which are common to other alliance countries. In part, it is a natural reflection of the sharpening of East-West tensions following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and the uncertainties of the Polish situation. This has led in some quarters to a fear that war, particularly nuclear war, has become a real possibility. This has not been helped by various comments which were interpreted by some as implying that the U.S. was planning to fight a limited nuclear war in Europe. These fears have been heightened by recent nuclear defence decisions. NATO's INF modernization, in particular, continues to generate public controversy and opposition, which could grow in Europe especially as the time for the first deployment nears. The Government's decision to permit the testing in Canada of certain U.S. defence systems, particularly the Cruise missile, has added to public concern about nuclear weapons, and the debate in the U.S. over the MX strategic missile has also focused attention on the subject. The extensive media coverage given to these decisions has served to convince many that the nuclear arms race continues to escalate.

The conjunction of western decisions in the nuclear field and increased international tension has provided a natural impetus to the activities of the anti-nuclear lobby. A considerable amount of literature has appeared, much of it critical of nuclear weapons. Many of the arguments used by the anti-nuclear lobby are traceable to the Soviet propaganda campaign launched in 1979 to try to pre-empt the INF modernization decision.

The main themes of the anti-nuclear movement in part reflect the differing membership of the various organizations and in part the wider public concern about nuclear war. But the themes are relatively few, recur constantly in anti-nuclear literature and letters from the public and are concentrated on nuclear weapons issue specifically.

I personally support NATO's two-track policy and feel it is the safest route to follow at this time. To disarm unilaterally offers no protection against the bully who has expansionist tendencies and, in reality, would create a dangerous shift in the world balance of power. Indeed, it could rapidly lead to deterioration in relations between the super powers and a corresponding outbreak of another military confrontation.

For those of us who remember World War II, this position is all too clear. We can recall the disastrous appeasement policy of the allies in the pre-war days. The tragic results of this policy taught the free world that it does not pay to bow down before expansionist totalitarian powers. If we refuse to allow the testing of the Cruise in Canada by the U.S. then it will display to the Soviets that the western world is not united and will further erode the hopes for real, genuine negotiations on disarmament.

I am not suggesting that I am against disarmament; indeed I know of nobody in our country who would not favour disarmament. It is the ultimate goal that all mankind should strive to achieve. However, I do not feel this can be done by offering unilateral concessions. This tends to create imbalances, and at the very least leads to demands for more unilateral concessions. It is the path toward ultimate catastrophe. Surely we do not want to return to that pre-World War II policy of appeasement.

In light of this I feel that we should proceed with the negotiations with the U.S. on testing the Cruise missiles. If an agreement is reached, Canada will be able to play a part in ensuring the strength and effectiveness of the NATO forces in maintenance of peace and security. However, if an arms control agreement is somehow reached between the Soviet Union and the West in the meantime, then the Cruise testing will be less urgent. If history teaches us anything, we would do well to remember that compromise and weakness did not prevent World War II. It nearly cost the western world its freedoms. Canadians as a whole support the strengthening of the NATO alliance believing that the best deterrence to war is to be prepared. The NATO countries dare not allow their military capabilities to become outdated. We watch with much anxiety the happenings in eastern Europe in recent years and in Afghanistan.

I am confident that we will give serious consideration to any genuine Soviet proposals which would enhance the chance for effective and verifiable disarmament agreements. However, it is obvious that real progress can only be made on the basis of the principle of mutual security. I would like to remind all Canadians that the crux of the issue at hand is our own security, without which we are unlikely to continue to enjoy peace, independence, and hope. On this point we would all be well advised not to lose sight of these very important facts.

Mr. Sargeant: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Parliamentary Secretary. I was a little sorry when he made the comment charging that a lot of the information, a lot of the statements made by anti-nuclear groups, come out of communist propaganda. I would like to quote from a magazine article which reminds me of the fact that the more things change, the more they remain the same. This is an article from the magazine Cité Libre, about 20 years ago, at another time when we had a fairly large nuclear debate in Canada. I quote:

> I fully realize that it is fashionable among "evolved" Liberals to joke about the emotionalism, the intellectualism, the naivety, of those who are against nuclear arms.
> Mr. Pearson has even accused them of helping communism—.
> This greatly resembles the tactics of the late Mr. Duplessis and those of Senator McCarthy.
> Mr. Pearson went so far as to apply the word "slackers"—

Those are similar words to the ones the Parliamentary Secretary used in his speech. Would the Parliamentary Secretary comment on that? I should tell him that that article was in Cité Libre in April, 1963, written by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Mr. Bloomfield: I believe we would do well to remember that history repeats itself, and of course these arguments will come forward at different times and at different stages of development as a country. I do not feel that the Russian aims to circumvent or subverse our way of life have changed in 20 years. Therefore, I feel that in 20 years' time, perhaps, we will have the same or similar argument.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I have just one question. The Parliamentary Secretary made reference toward the end of his speech to his opposition to unilateral disarmament. Does the Parliamentary Secretary think for one moment there is anyone in the House who is proposing unilateral disarmament? Would he not agree that what is being proposed is that we ought not to escalate further and that we should negotiate some reasonable reduction?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 5.45 o'clock, it is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 62(10) to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the business of supply. The question is on the motion of the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). All those in favour of the motion, please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed, please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

And the division bells having been rung:

Madam Speaker: The question is the following—

Mr. Pinard: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, on a point of order.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), on a point of order.

Mr. Pinard: My apologies for interrupting you, Madam Speaker, but I had asked for a message to be sent to the Chair to the effect that I have had consultations with my Opposition colleagues with a view to avoiding a substantial number of recorded votes and saving precious time for all Hon. Members. We have reached the following agreement, which I would like to read to you.

[English]

The motion is rather short, but explicit; that following the disposal of the proceedings of the motion by the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), the House shall consider the business of Supply as follows: first, opposed item in the Main Estimates, No. 8, provided that the same division shall apply to and be recorded on opposed item in the Main Estimates, No. 15, and opposed item in the Supplementary Estimates (A), No. 2; second, opposed item in the Main Estimates, No. 3, provided any division shall apply to and be recorded on opposed items in the Main Estimates, Nos. 4, 5, 10, 11, 12 and 21, and opposed items in the Supplementary Estimates (A), No. 1, and the motion for concurrence in the remaining Supplementary Estimates (A); third, opposed item in the Main Estimates, No. 1, provided any division shall apply and be recorded to opposed items in the Main Estimates, Nos. 2, 6, 7, 14, 16, 17, 18 and 19, and the motion for concurrence in the Main Estimates; fourth, opposed items in the Main Estimates, Nos. 9, 13 and 20, each of which is to be considered separately, the understanding and the reality being that the Government votes "yea" on all the divisions on the opposed items.

● (1810)

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to this arrangement of the divisions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Broadbent) which was negatived on the following division:

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. McRae: Madam Speaker, I would like to have the record show that I was present for the vote but I refrained from voting.

Mr. Weatherhead: Madam Speaker, my position is the same as the two previous speakers.

Some Hon. Members: What position is that?

Mr. Frith: Madam Speaker, I would like the record to show that I was present and abstained from voting.

Mr. Irwin: Madam Speaker, I would like the record to show likewise.

Mr. McKnight: Madam Speaker, I would like the record to show that I was here and that I voted.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Before we proceed to the vote on the Estimates, I would like to rule on certain of the Opposition notices. Notices Nos. 9 and 13 listed under the Main Estimates oppose statutory items. As I stated in my ruling on June 6, 1983, when ruling on a point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) in relation to a statutory item, such items are not treated as budgetary matters; they are for information purposes only. In this regard I refer Hon. Members to citations 484 and 498 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition. Therefore I must rule that notices Nos. 9 and 13 are not receivable. That disposes of two of the three separate votes which were to take place.

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN VOTE 1, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Madam Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Madam Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Madam Speaker: Call in the Members. Shall we dispense with the bells?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sorry, but following the agreement that was made earlier, would you be kind enough to refer to the proposal put by the Government House Leader in order that I can determine exactly which votes we are dealing with at the moment?

Madam Speaker: Order, please. In accordance with the proposal made by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), we are on motion No. 1 and the opposed item in the Main Estimates No. 1, provided any division shall apply to opposed items in the Main Estimates, Nos. 2, 6, 7, 14, 16, 17, 18 and 19, and the motion for concurrence in the main Estimates.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

INTERNATIONAL MARITIME ORGANIZATION

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the International Maritime Organization (IMO), a specialized agency of the U.N., held its fiftieth Council session recently in London, England. Canada was the first country to join the IMO in 1948 and has played an important part in its development over the years. One hundred and twenty-four nations are now members of IMO, and a Canadian, Mr. W. A. O'Neil, President of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, is chairman of the governing council.

IMO's main objective is to facilitate co-operation among Governments on technical and related matters affecting shipping, particularly in the promotion of safety of life at sea and the prevention of maritime pollution from ships. This is accomplished by consideration and adoption of international agreements, technical assistance to governments, and an extensive exchange of information between governments.

This year, 1983, is an important one for the organization, as it is celebrating its twenty-fifth anniversary and can look back proudly on accomplishments which are reflected in the number of international conventions on maritime matters which have entered into force. This past session of Council, which I had the privilege of attending, marked a further milestone when Her Majesty the Queen officially opened the impressive new IMO building on the Thames River in London.

It is with pride that I draw this organization to the attention of the House, both because of the important and vital role Canada has assumed in its development, and in recognition of the number of accomplishments the organization has achieved in making life safer for seafarers and for the prevention of pollution of our oceans.

POLITICAL PARTIES

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S POSITION ON DISARMAMENT AND WEAPONS TESTING

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, yesterday the New Democratic Party used an Opposition day to debate the proposed testing of the Cruise missile in Canada. Members of Parliament and the Canadian public were treated to an emotional appeal for non-participation in NATO's military plan. The motion was worded in such a way as to increase the emotional effectiveness of the appeal. It implied that nuclear weapons might, at some future date, be tested in Canada. I cannot think of a more despicable method of debating than the deceitful use of fear, plus child exploitation, in an attempt to score political points.

After the debate on the ambiguous motion, which was handily defeated, the Government introduced its Main and Supplementary Estimates for 1983 and 1984. Any item which was disputed by Members was voted on individually. The remaining Estimates were voted on in toto. The Members of the New Democratic Party voted against the acceptance of the 1983-84 Estimates. The interesting part of this vote was that, included in the Main Estimates, were several allocations for the continuation of disarmament and arms control efforts. It is surprising that the New Democratic Party did not see fit to support these items after all their fine rhetoric of the afternoon. They could have done so by forcing separate consideration of the External Affairs Estimates, Vote 10. One can only assume that the New Democratic Party is more interested in political gain for itself than in the attainment of peace and security for mankind.

SASKATOON'S EFFORTS TO SECURE NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE FRANCHISE

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, hockey fans in Saskatoon and Saskatchewan were heartened yesterday when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) indicated that he would use his "good offices" to influence the President of the National Hockey League, John Ziegler, and help Saskatchewan and Saskatoon get an NHL franchise. Now I do not know what the Prime Minister's "good offices" amount to, but whatever they are I ask him to use them quickly.

Yesterday, Louis Susman, a prominent sports lawyer, flew to New York with an offer from a Vancouver businessman to buy the St. Louis Blues. There are other offers being prepared as well. Without a doubt Susman will be carrying a proposal, and because the NHL needs to find an owner for the Blues he will probably make a deal quickly.

The Mayor of Saskatoon, Cliff Wright, and his associates are working hard and are continuing to build the provincial base that is necessary to put the team on a firm financial footing.

The NHL seems not to understand that hockey fans in the Province of Saskatchewan are like the Saskatchewan Roughriders' football fans; they drive any distance, whether it is 50, 100, 200 or 300 kilometres, to support the team.

Once again my plea is for the little people, the ordinary hockey fan who has little or no power in the business world of professional sports, the person who frequently has given up belief that anybody really cares about his or her wishes. Saskatchewan fans feel that they are the soul of hockey. They know that their Province has been the home and the training ground of generations of professional players. None have had the opportunity to support their own professional team. In the Saskatoon Blues, this is a real possibility. So I ask that whatever will be done by the good offices of the Prime Minister be done quickly and well.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAELI-ARAB CONFLICT—APOLOGIES TENDERED BY MEMBER FOR LAURIER FOR CERTAIN REMARKS

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Madam Speaker, I would like to apologize to the Senate Committee for some rather heated remarks I made yesterday. I also wish to apologize to Mayor Freij of Bethlehem who has been saying for ten years that the Palestinians on the West Bank want to live in peace with Israel.

[English]

I made my comments somewhat out of frustration, because many of the questions in the committee yesterday dealt with various aspects of the military government on the West Bank, and I feel they painted somewhat of an unfair picture. For example, one of the members of the committee expressed his dismay that Mayor Freij could not display the flag of the PLO in his office. No one mentioned, however, that the PLO flag is anathema to all Israelis, that it represents a terrorist organization which is committed to destroying Israel, which has killed hundreds of innocent citizens and has gloried in those deaths. It is perhaps the flag of Mayor Freij. It is also the flag of Hawatmeh, Jibril, Abu Nidal and Habash.

• (1410)

Military rule is cruel, Madam Speaker, but I thought that there was little understanding yesterday of the fact that Israel has been in a state of war for 35 years, that it is faced by 21 Arab countries with a population of over 100 million people—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

POLITICAL PARTIES

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S VOTES AGAINST GOVERNMENT'S SPENDING ESTIMATES

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, to be critical of Government spending is one thing, especially when one is a good Conservative. But last night Members of the NDP voted against all of the Estimates and their ideologies. They voted against the Federal Business Development Bank which gives direct support to small business, and they voted against the Farm Loans Interest Rebate Act which keeps farms from going under. Last night Members of the NDP voted against job creation.

At a time when Canada's commitment to NATO is a disgrace and the Government has quite rightly tried to make use of the defence industry as a means of job creation, the NDP Members withheld support. They voted against the Petroleum Incentives Program which would create jobs in oil exploration. Worse still, on the Main Estimates they voted against the administrative expenses of the Farm Credit Corporation, CMHC and mortgage assistance, and welfare, and Unemployment Insurance. At least the Conservatives realize, Madam Speaker, that someone has to type up the forms or write the cheques which provide the assistance.

What does this mean? Simply this: By their actions last night the Members of the NDP have proved beyond a doubt that their ideology is shakier than their showing in the Gallup polls and, if possible, shakier than their support among the electorate.

Madam Speaker: I would just like to warn the Hon. Member that at some point in his statement, though not throughout the whole of it, I think he was reflecting on a vote, and that is not allowed.

NATIONAL PARKS

ACQUISITION OF MINGAN ARCHIPELAGO

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Madam Speaker, I would like to transmit to the House the best wishes of the people of Havre-Saint-Pierre, Longue-Pointe-de-Mingan, Mingan and Natasquan and their appreciation of the fact that the Canadian Government has purchased the Mingan Archipelago. "Tous les bouleaux de la rivière Mingan s'en rappellent", a line from one of Gilles Vigneault's songs. The Mingan Archipelago will now become one of the great attractions of this vast country of ours, and I believe that all Canadians are pleased about the fact that we shall now have a very wonderful park in Eastern Canada. Madam Speaker, I would like to add that people on the North Shore were very disappointed in the attitude of the Quebec Minister of Tourism, who said that the Canadian Government had paid an excessively high price for the Mingan Islands. To the people on the North Shore, the Islands are priceless, and perhaps I may say that by acting the way it did, the Canadian Government has saved Quebecers $2 million, because the $5 million are now spread over all ten provinces, which means $500,000 per province, a perfect example of co-operative federalism. Finally, Madam Speaker, I would like to say that I received many telegrams supporting this transaction from the people around the Mingan River and the Mingan area, and I think that I can therefore safely say that everyone is pleased, and we hope that Quebec will co-operate, for the sake of the people on Quebec's North Shore and for the sake of all Canadians and the whole world, since the UN has recognized the international importance of the Mingan Archipelago.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S OPPOSITION TO AGRICULTURE ESTIMATES

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, the agri-food industry and its supply and services industries comprise approximately 40 per cent of Canada's economy. While only 5 per cent of our population is engaged in primary food production, the agri-food system employs 18 per cent of the Canadian labour force. It has often been said that, as goes agriculture, so goes the nation.

One of our major problems today is the continued loss of farms and farmers. Poor economic conditions have worsened the situation as evidenced by the 60 per cent increase in farm bankruptcies. Canada cannot afford this continued and heavy loss of a productive industry.

The socialist hordes to my left pretend to support agriculture when in reality, as every independent farmer must now realize, they represent state control. The farmers of Canada will know just how concerned the New Democratic Party is for their welfare when they realize that yesterday NDP Members did not support the Main Estimates which targeted over $200 million for agri-food development.

FOOD AND DRUGS

PRICE OF DRUGS—CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) is reported to be preparing amendments to the compulsory licensing provisions for drug patents, to assist pharmaceutical manufacturers in their goal of gouging the Canadian consumer. He is aided in this enterprise by the Hon. Martin O'Connell who is now working as an adviser to the Minister and who was, until recently, employed by the drug companies which are seeking these changes.

The alliance of big business and the Government against Canadian consumers and small drug manufacturers should be instructive to farmers and gardeners who have been expecting this kind of action to be taken under Bill C-32 which would grant similar patent rights to corporate plant breeders. Seed buyers will see the way that patents are used to reinforce monopoly positions over certain drugs. They can also see the way that Government bows to pressures by some of the same companies which are also very active in the seed business around the world.

Prices charged by licensed companies competing with the giants fell by 67 per cent on the 16 best selling drugs in the four years following the loosening up of the patent provisions in 1969. Now it appears that the Government is going to reverse that good policy which allow automatic licensing. Consumers of drugs in Canada should know what the effect of this will be on drug prices. I urge the Government to reconsider this disastrous policy, and to maintain automatic licensing which allows the manufacture of drugs in Canada at prices people can afford.

CANADAIR—GOVERNMENT'S RESPONSIBILITY FOR CORPORATION'S AFFAIRS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board in his role as the reporting Minister of Canadair and any parent of Canadair. Would the Minister clear the air on the certainty that the Government accepts responsibility through the various Ministers of the Crown for the debacle that has occurred in Canadair, bearing in mind that every month for years past the reporting Minister received internal financial statements with respect to Canadair? Is he accepting responsibility for this debacle?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I am surprised at the Hon. Member's naivete, because he himself, as President of the Treasury Board in a previous Government that did not remain in power very long, received reports on the situation at Canadair, and it was his responsibility to take action, but he did not. We, on the other hand, have taken action.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, once again the Minister is quite wrong. We did take action; we started to privatize it.

CORPORATION'S LOSSES—REQUEST THAT MINISTER LAUNCH INVESTIGATION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Let me put my second question to the same Minister, Madam Speaker. In view of the fact that the write-off of $1.4 billion is equal to the total loss last year of Massey-Ferguson, NuWest Group, Inco, CNR and Sidbec, all together, would the Minister at least arrange for a proper inquiry into what happened leading up to this type of write-off, bearing in mind that we have been sand bagged in the Finance Committee and are getting nowhere in other Committees? The public should know why the Government has acted in such an incompetent way.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member started by saying that he had come up with an answer to the Canadair problem when he was President of Treasury Board, and I realize that his incompetence and that of his Government were such that he was unable to implement his solution. We have also started to deal with the situation, by making a thorough analysis of Canadair's commercial viability, with a view to restoring its commercial position. A few days ago, the Minister responsible in the other place tabled a full report on the financial situation of Canadair. The authorities of the new corporation responsible for monitoring and providing strict management principles for Canadair and other corporations, will be tabling a commercial development plan for Canadair, and Hon. Members as well as the Canadian public have had a unique opportunity in recent weeks to obtain information on the past and future positions of these corporations.

INQUIRY RESPECTING ROLE OF VICE-CHAIRMAN

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister who indicates that the Government has been taking action. If that is so, would he indicate to the House why it has allowed the Vice-Chairman, Jean-Pierre Goyer, to continue—he is known to many in this House and especially to many in the Prime Minister's office? Would the Minister answer that very simply question? Will the government indeed accept the responsibility for this debacle at Canadair, and not pass it on to management as it seems to want to do?

• (1420)

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well how Canadair operates. It is a Government-owned corporation which operates on a commercial basis. Our diagnosis was that there were a number of problems that required a more sustained presence of the principal shareholder. This was achieved by creating a new corporation whose objective will be to provide for a regular and constant presence of the Government as shareholder, to safeguard the interests of all Canadians and to provide for stricter management of Canadair as well as more realistic market expectations.

INDUSTRY

NABU CORPORATION'S ANNOUNCEMENT OF LAY-OFFS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. I should note, Madam Speaker, that the Government blames the management of Canadair. The Government was the management of Canadair.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: After sinking $125 million of taxpayers' money into Consolidated Computers Incorporated, the Government announced in November, 1981, that it was selling the company to Nabu Manufacturing Corporation for $100,000 cash. At the time the then Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce justified the bargain price by saying Nabu had committed to keep the company in operation for at least two years, to provide sufficient working capital to achieve that—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please. I must again remind the Hon. Member that questions should be short. I could be even stricter and not allow the Hon. Member to read the question. One could use notes but one should not be reading out questions. If they are not read, I am sure they would be shorter.

Miss Carney: This week Nabu announced it was laying off over 100 of its Canadian manufacturing employees. Can the Minister tell the House if Nabu has broken a commitment to preserve Canadian manufacturing employees jobs, or did the Government exaggerate the benefits of the deal in order to justify its expenditure and the $125 million loss of the taxpayers' money?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I do not believe that the actual wording of the release supports the exact interpretation given by my hon. friend. I will have to inform myself on the current situation of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and get back to my hon. friend.

Miss Carney: Madam speaker, I was quoting from the Minister's press release at the time, so it was a direct quote.

RESEARCH GRANT PROVIDED TO CORPORATION

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, last December Nabu received an additional $8.9 million in the form of a research grant from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In light of its recent announcement of lay-offs of Canadian manufacturing employees, what guarantees did the Government receive in the form of job guarantees for this money? How does the Government monitor the activities of companies which receive taxpayers' money? Or has this Government simply once again thrown more good money after bad?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, again I believe that question is best directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Stevens: He is not here.

Mr. Gray: However, I am confident that there are arrangements to monitor the grants in question, and the details on that can be presented by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

BANKS AND BANKING

INCREASE IN PROFITS OF CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who is well aware of the struggle which the average Canadian is having these days. The typical small business person in Canada is simply trying to keep his business in the black and struggling to do just that. The Minister of Finance earlier this week accused workers of asking for too much with their wage demands in excess of 5 per cent.

I will remind the Minister that the Deputy Prime Minister was on record earlier as asking the banks to bleed a little bit. We find out today, Madam Speaker, that the banks' profits are up 40 per cent. The concern now is that bank profits in 1983 will be higher than in 1981. Will the Minister indicate to this House whether he feels that the banks are playing a fair role in the recovery program, and does he not feel that profits which are up 40 per cent over last year could be considered somewhat excessive?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would like first to tell the Hon. Member I have drawn the public's attention to a particular collective agreement arrived at in Nova Scotia. I did not point the finger at the workers, I pointed the finger at management and workers for a contract which will last over four years at over 11.5 per cent. This is clearly excessive taking into account the current conditions. Look at the competition that Nova Scotia has to face in this country and which Canada has to face vis-à-vis the United States in particular, where at the present time wage settlemants are well below 5 per cent in a lot of industries. If we want to remain competitive, enlarge our economy and have jobs for our workers, we better remain competitive. That is the criterion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: My hon. friend is referring to the banks and he is resorting to the same kind of mathematical games I referred to in a recent speech. He knows that if, for instance, a company's profits in 1982 went down, let us say 50 per cent compared to 1981, even if you have a 100 per cent improvement in profits this year you will only be back where you were in 1981. My friend is resorting to this kind of gamesmanship with figures. What we need is more profit so that there will be more jobs with more Canadians put back to work as a result of more investment by Canadians. We have to do this.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, talking about profits, we in this Party prefer to see profits going into the small business sector as opposed to the chartered banks of Canada. The Minister of Finance, in his effort to mislead the House, inadvertently I am sure, refrained from indicating that the first six months' profit of the major chartered banks of Canada are up nearly $1 billion over last year. So to suggest that that is some immaterial profit gain, I think is being a little simplistic.

PENALTIES IMPOSED FOR RENEGOTIATION OF MORTGAGES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, as Members of Parliament will be aware, there are thousands and thousands of Canadians who are attempting to renegotiate their mortgages. We have case after case of people being asked to pay $5,000—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Would the Hon. Member be shorter in his questions, please.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I am simply taking as long as the Minister did in his response, but I will be short.

Considering the varied approaches financial institutions take when it comes to mortgage renegotiation, is the Minister of Finance prepared to step in and meet with the heads of the various institutions to try to bring about some similarity with regard to the penalty payments required as people attempt to take advantage of the downward trend in interest rates?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have already taken steps in that regard. I have circulated to all Members of Parliament, including my hon. friend, the names of the directors of the various financial institutions, whether they are banks, trust companies or loan companies, to whom we should address our representations when we get complaints from our constituents about this. I have also raised the issue with the Superintendent of Banks and with a number of bank presidents I had the opportunity of meeting in the last few weeks. These are the steps I have taken.

Mr. Blaikie: They are ignoring you.

Mr. Lalonde: Also, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs indicated yesterday some of the views that the Government holds in this regard. I would think, indeed I said, that it seems to me generally a three-month penalty should be enough for any particular institution.

I recognize there have been private contracts entered into by individuals and financial institutions which do not provide for this kind of arrangement. In spite of that fact I have urged and encouraged the institutions to show a little bit more heart, take the present situation into account and try to arrange it so that they can take into account the particular difficulties of individual citizens.

MARGINS BETWEEN LOAN CHARGES AND INTEREST DEPOSIT RATES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, in the same spirit, since the Minister has indicated he has taken some steps to bring the problem to the attention of the financial institutions, he will be well aware that the small business sector is the job creating sector in our country right now. He will also be aware that the level of bankruptcies in that sector has increased in the last six months. Will he take the same approach with the financial institutions, especially the chartered banks, in terms of their wide margins between what they pay to their depositors and what they charge to the small business sector? Will he consider that particular difference in interest rates?

• (1430)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, such matters are constantly under review. There is ongoing competition among financial institutions, be they banks, trust companies or others. I do not intend to intervene, issue guidelines and decide on a day-to-day basis what interest rates ought to be paid on deposits in banks or financial institutions, and what interest rates the various kinds of loans ought to command. In my opinion, we should leave the market free to operate and promote as much competition as possible among those institutions. For instance, as a Government we have decided to open Canada's market to foreign banks and to widen the field of activities of the various financial institutions with a view to encouraging and promoting competition. Inasmuch as possible, we have to let markets operate freely and stop expecting that day in and day out the Government or the Opposition will decide what interest rates financial institutions should charge. In my opinion, it stands to reason that the best way to help Canadian consumers is to encourage and promote competition.

CANADAIR—MANUFACTURE OF EXECUTIVE JET AIRCRAFT—GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue, who apologizes or speaks for the Minister of State for Social Development in the other place with respect to social causes for people who own large executive jets manufactured by Canadair. The Minister will know that yesterday a further subsidy of $240 million was approved for those who buy these jets. In view of the fact that the company cannot make the jets for what the jets are worth on the marketplace, why is it part of the social policy of the Government to manufacture executive jet aircraft to be sold to wealthy companies, individuals, and Governments, for the care of the executive personnel in the country?

Mr. Lalonde: You've got to be kidding.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, it was rather disappointing to hear the Hon. Member, who sees himself as something of a financial expert in his party, when he made such incredible statements in his introductory remarks. If the Hon. Member had some basic knowledge of the principles of economics, he would realize how important it is to Canada and Canadians to be represented in the aeronautics field. Partisan though he may be, the Hon. Member should at least have the sense to realize that by developing an aircraft like the Challenger, we have taken our place, as a country, in the advanced technology field of aeronautics, and in doing so, there is a price to pay. Some countries bury such costs in their defence expenditures, while others use their Government airlines for the same purpose. Here in Canada, the books are open to public scrutiny, and we are not afraid to reveal the cost of developing this kind of program which will give Canadians a share of the action in a very important field of technology. We have an aircraft we managed to develop ourselves, and Canadians have this know-how because the present Government had the courage to go ahead with the program instead of being afraid to act, like a Government not unknown to the Hon. Member which—

Madam Speaker: Order, please!

[English]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the apologies are ridiculous. The Minister will know that as of December 20, last year, there were only 11 Canadair aircraft operated in Canada, nine of them by the Government or the Government's agencies, one by Canadair's banker, and one by a private individual, the only people who would buy them, even though they were the third largest consumers of aircraft. No one wants the aircraft. It is not all that good.

Some Hon. Members: Not true.

Mr. Blenkarn: Why does the Government not tell us the truth? Why does it not let the committee find out about the waste, the extravagance, and the losses that the Government is burying in that aircraft company?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: Yes or no.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, unlike what the Hon. Member is alleging, the Government has not been afraid of the facts. We have analyzed the situation of Canadair. The Hon. Member was present when the results of that analysis were explained to Members of certain Committees of this House. The Hon. Member knows we have an excellent aircraft: the Challenger. We have had production and marketing problems, and we have a company that is preparing a financial and commercial recovery program for Canadair. We are going to develop new techniques for marketing the Challenger, and if the Hon. Member lacks the courage to meet this challenge, I am sure that we do have that courage and that we will succeed in marketing this outstanding aircraft.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

REGIONAL BREAKDOWN OF CONTRACTS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. The Minister's Department claims to have a regional procurement program, and the Minister pays lip service with respect to purchasing contracts being spread throughout Canada. However, the figures show that central Canada received 77 per cent of all DSS contracts, while the West received only 15 per cent and the Atlantic Provinces received only 7 per cent. How can the Minister justify this discrimination within his own Department against people who are working and living in eastern and western Canada?

Mr. Lawrence: That's where the taxes come from.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman points to figures with which we are indeed very concerned and of which we are very conscious. I want to identify, for the hon. gentleman, that we are making every effort in order to—

Mr. Lewis: I'll bet you are.

Mr. Blais: —send into all the regions of the country as much of the Government's business as is possible. However, we do face some difficulty, namely, that in western Canada—

Mr. Lewis: You don't have any seats.

Mr. Blais: —there is not the sort of concentration of manufacturing that there is in central Canada.

An Hon. Member: Concentration of Liberals.

Mr. Blais: I might indicate to the hon. gentleman that one of the reasons for the Crow changes is exactly to encourage that sort of industrialization of western Canada—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blais: —which the hon. gentleman, I am sure, wishes.

POLICY ON AWARDING CONTRACTS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, out of $5 billion worth of contracts from the Department, Saskatchewan receives 1 per cent. I will give the Minister an example. Westank-Willock of Regina has found it impossible to obtain contracts from DSS for hopper cars or design engineering for the Department of National Defence's medium logistic wheeled vehicle. The Minister has written to the company to say that, because it does not operate somewhere near Ottawa, it is too inconvenient to carry on and to receive a tender.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: In light of these facts, and the policy apparently set by the Minister that if one does not carry on one's business somewhere near Ottawa one will not receive a contract, how can he justify this inherent unfairness? How can he justify this blatant discrimination against people who live and should legitimately expect to do business in eastern and western Canada?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman should be aware of the fact that there is a company called SCD Systems in Saskatoon, with which he is undoubtedly familiar, which has indeed received a great deal of support from the Government of Canada.

Mr. Epp: One per cent.

Mr. Blais: It has been provided with contracts because we have indeed been serious about increasing the level of industrialization of western Canada, including Saskatchewan. I would be very pleased to provide the hon. gentleman with the comments that I made at that particular time.

In terms of the case which he has identified, I am very sensitive to that case as well, as I have indicated in the correspondence.

Mr. Wilson: One per cent.

Mr. Blais: However, under the circumstances related to that specific case, there was very little that I could do to change the decision that I actually made.

FISHERIES

JAPANESE BAN ON GREAT LAKES FISH IMPORTS

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent): Madam Speaker, through you I would ask a question of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Minister will know that through the unfortunate linkage in the Japanese press of erroneous information on dioxin in the Great Lakes and the freshwater smelt fishery, there have been bans placed in Japan on that particular fish. That ban has, in fact, resulted in substantial lay-offs in the Port of Wheatley and other ports on Lake Erie. Would the Minister indicate to the House what steps are being taken by himself and the Government to overcome this erroneous information, to assure the Japanese that there is not the linkage which has been made by the press in that country and that, in fact, normal trade relations in this commodity can be restored?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, may I first say that we do appreciate the importance of the Japanese market to the Canadian fishery. At the moment, it represents the third market for Canada. Second, there were articles in the United States about contamination by dioxin in the Saguenay Bay in Michigan, that were reported in the Japanese press. Third, the Hon. Member is right that there was some confusion in Japan that there could be linkage with the smelt from that area exported from Canada.

I would like to give the firmest assurances that we have tested the smelt exported to Japan from Canada and not a trace of dioxin has been found. I have sent a telex to all interested parties in Japan through our Embassy to tell them the actual fact that, if there is any dioxin in the United States, I can give the most positive and firm assurances that there is absolutely no dioxin in our own smelts that are exported from our own freshwater fishery to Japan.

VIA RAIL

TRANSCONTINENTAL PASSENGER SERVICE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport another question that "smelt" and still does. It takes 23 more hours to travel by rail from Montreal to Vancouver now than it did in 1966. Would the Minister advise the House about the plan to discontinue the Transcontinental passenger train to and from Montreal and transfer the original destination and departure point of the Transcontinental to Toronto, which would mean that people from Montreal would have to change trains and those east of Montreal would no longer be able to board the Transcontinental in Montreal?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, VIA is presently studying many ideas that are on the table. This particular one has not been accepted by the Government. In due course I will inform my hon. friend if it ever is accepted. My hon. friend should not forget the fact that the subsidy to VIA has risen to $750 million a year. I think it is normal for VIA to try to do everything to save money while providing adequate service.

Mr. Benjamin: The money that the Minister puts up, he gives to the CPR and CNR for exorbitant charges to handle the VIA passenger trains.

DINING AND SLEEPING CAR SERVICE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, since the Minister cut the National Capital, the cities of Melville, Jasper, and Edmonton out of the Transcontinental service in 1981, would he confirm that it is the intention of the Government to fractionalize Transcontinental service so that it is intercity, in order not to have to order new Transcontinental passenger equipment and to discontinue dining and sleeping car accommodation on the Transcontinental trains?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I recall vividly that at the time of the 20 per cent cut I indicated that the Transcontinental was maintained. The second Transcontinental going north was divided into a number of intercity service. That is still the situation now.

My hon. friend is possibly referring to the fact that VIA is looking at other arrangements that might resurrect the route between Winnipeg and Saskatoon. But that is one of the many plans that are being looked at now.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

FRIGATE CONSTRUCTION CONTRACT—EVALUATION OF PROPOSALS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. He will no doubt recall that on April 29, as reported at page

24992 of Hansard, he said this when speaking of the frigate program:

—the responsibility of my Department was to make a very objective evaluation of the proposals from both contractors and then present them to the Cabinet Committee at the appropriate time. I hope to be able to do that in the middle of the month of May—

He has told us outside this Chamber that the bids are still under negotiation with the contractors. Could he explain to us this misleading of the House inadvertent as it might have been?

[Translation]

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I am happy to tell the Hon. Member that the documents are indeed before the Cabinet and that this whole matter is being looked into very thoroughly. We hope to be able to announce a decision within the timeframe set by the Minister of National Defence and myself.

[English]

TIMING OF DECISION ON CONTRACT

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, it is rather unusual to hear from one Minister why another Minister has misled the House.

On May 9, as reported at page 25282 of Hansard, the Minister of Supply and Services said:

We shall be in a position to announce the name of the company that will be awarded the contract by the end of June.

Does he still hope to meet that deadline? While he is on his feet, will he tell us if he has accepted the Conservative suggestion that the shipbuilding itself should be done in shipyards in different regions of this great country?

[Translation]

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, what the Minister of National Defence and myself have said is consistent and realistic. We indeed hope to have made our decision by the end of June or the beginning of July. I have certainly heard the representations made by the Hon. member for Victoria, NPD Members as well as Members on this side of the House concerning regional distribution. This is one of the issues which must be considered before we make the decision which will be announced, as I have already said, within the timeframe we had determined.

[English]

REQUEST THAT DECISION BE ANNOUNCED IN PARLIAMENT

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister. If I understood him correctly, he said that the decision would be made before the end of June, or certainly in July. Would the Minister give the assurance to the House that the decision will be announced in the House before we adjourn for the summer?

[Translation]

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member can imagine, there are some uncertainties and I can not give him that assurance. We shall certainly try to give our answer before the summer adjournment.

FORESTRY

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF COMMITTEE'S TERMS OF REFERENCE

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for forestry. On May 31 and June 7 the committee of this House relating to forestry received some witnesses from the forest industry of New Brunswick. In view of the importance of the representations which they made and the message and information which they carried, would the Minister have the House extend a reference to the committee on forestry to include the study of research requirements, forest management, pest disease and fire control, reforestation, and viable harvest allowances for the forest industry of Canada?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I did not quite catch the beginning of the Hon. Member's question. I understand that he is asking my views about a special reference to the parliamentary committee for an examination of the forest industry across Canada. If that is the case, I will certainly take his representation seriously and reflect upon it.

REQUEST FOR EARLY REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): In view of the information which we received indicating that in the little corner of southwestern New Brunswick we have lost ten million cords of wood for harvest, which represents a ten-year supply of wood for the industry in southwestern New Brunswick, it becomes imperative that this reference be made promptly. Another representation was that a forest management policy to replace this wood would take 50 years. Would the Minister reconsider the sort of procrastinating answer which he gave, and in fact authorize this reference between now and the closing of the House so that the committee might get to work and have a report in December or January at the latest, so that we could start to plan forest management early next year?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, it is not really a question of procrastination. I am not sure if the Hon. Member was present, but I think that he knows that the House very recently had an entire day's debate on the forest industry in Canada. Maybe he missed that debate. I am not sure.

A variety of proposals has been made and actions have been taken in a continuing way over the past three years. For instance, I recommend to the Hon. Member the forest strategy paper which was published two years ago and the proposals for agreements on reforestation which presented to provincial Governments last September. We are in the process of negotiating reforestation agreements with each of the Provinces. We signed one with Nova Scotia. One is ready to be signed with Prince Edward Island. We are anxious to move ahead on signing one with New Brunswick. He will be aware of recent actions which we had taken in New Brunswick for the strengthening of the Maritime Forest Centre, including the federal Government's research centre as a key part of it.

A great deal of action is taking place. Objectives have been established and proposals for implementation have been presented. Programs are under way in every major area of deficiency which we described three years ago in the preparatory work for that action.

It is not a question of procrastination. An enormous amount of work is being done, and is generally being done with the approbation of Hon. Members on all sides of the House. I would like to reflect a little on exactly what are the purposes of such a committee inquiry to see whether this is proper timing in relation to that, or whether some other timing would be more appropriate.

NABU CORPORATION LAY-OFFS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister of State for Economic Development. I want to return to the Nabu question, because technological change is coming on more rapidly than all of us really thought. I would like to refer to a news story, and then ask the Minister a question. In part the article reads:

—Nabu announced it was laying off more than half its 225 manufacturing employees and in future would locate as much of its manufacturing operations as possible in low-wage countries.

With the Minister's well known Pollyanna views about high technological change, and considering that the Government still has an obligation to Nabu workers, and that this is a company to which it indirectly gave $125 million, would the Minister confirm that the Government obtained from Nabu job security and job guarantees for those workers in return for giving the company so much money?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, of course the issue of Nabu is well known going back to the transaction undertaken with the Government of Canada. I am not sure what were the specific terms and conditions of that agreement.

With respect to the specific concerns for unemployed workers, the Government has those same concerns for any company which rationalizes its processes in the manner that we see happening at Nabu. The Hon. Member is well aware of the kinds of steps which have been taken in all sectors to make provision in such circumstances. The same programs will apply in this case. Certainly I will look into the issue of Nabu, given the historical relationship of the company with the Government because of the transaction to which reference was made earlier during Question Period.

Mr. Waddell: The Minister knows that he has in his back pocket a departmental study which shows that technology will not create enough jobs to replace those that evaporate, unless we change the way technological development is happening in Canada.

REQUEST THAT COMMITTEE CONSIDER TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, would the minister agree that the jobs in this industry are very volatile? We can look at the example of Mitel yesterday and its loss of a contract.

Also, would the minister agree with the views which were expressed a few years ago by the late distinguished Senator Lamontagne, that we require a permanent committee of the House to study technological change and that we should get going on that committee? Why is the Government dragging its heels on this important matter when things are happening all around it affecting Canadian workers who are losing out as a result of technological change?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, certainly the Government is not dragging its heels on this issue. I do not think the striking of a standing committee will solve the kinds of problem the Hon. Member raised, although I would agree, as I said in hearings before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, that indeed such a committee could be valuable in terms of making Canadians aware of the problems and also the opportunities which will arise.

To return to the so-called "study", it was not a study. I have made that point before. It was a document designed to provoke discussing among my colleagues. Obviously the leaking of that document has provoked a good deal of discussion. That is very healthy. The Hon. Member might have noted the study by Informetrica which was published last week that, in turn, with respect to its economic models contradicted the statistics that were put forward and indeed took the view that many more jobs will be created by virtue of these new technologies than there will be jobs lost.

I am not suggesting that anyone knows the answer to this question, but to suggest that we are dragging our heels, when there are studies in almost every Department, when we are meeting with all interested groups, and when the Minister of Finance indicated that he was establishing a productivity centre to look at these very issues the Hon. Member is addressing which are being negotiated currently by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and by the Minister—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CANVASSING OF ADVERTISEMENTS—THREAT TO WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. Through its postmasters Canada Post is still selling advertising and producing flyers which are then distributed through the mails in direct competition with and threatening the very lifeblood of small weekly newspapers. Two weeks ago the Minister said that he would look into this deplorable situation. Has the Minister looked into it, and what are the results?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): After the question was put to me, Madam Speaker, I conveyed those remarks to the Canada Post Corporation Chairman who told me he would get in touch with the Hon. Member who raised the question so as to give him an explanation. I will make sure that the Hon. Member who is asking the same question gets an explanation from the Canada Post Corporation Chairman.

ROLE OF POSTMASTERS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, as yet the director of Canada Post has not been in touch, so I will ask the Minister one more question. Does he not recognize that if Canada Post is given the mandate to solicit advertising, produce flyers and distribute them, he is putting every postmaster in the country in a conflict of interest position because they, in turn, have the distribution of the local weeklies? They can throw the local weeklies in a corner and hold them back from delivery so that their advertisements go out first. Does the Minister not recognize the very dangerous precedent which he is setting by using postmasters in direct competition with weekly newspapers?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member has read the same article that I read outlining the possibility of a conflict of interest. Indeed I will review the situation and discuss it with the officials of the Canada Post Corporation to find out whether or not postmasters are in a conflict of interest position. On the surface I do not think they are, but I would like to look at it in more depth and report back to the House of Commons.

MEASUREMENT OF FLOOR COVERING—REQUEST THAT ORDER IN COUNCIL BE RESCINDED

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, my information is good news. It has been brought to my attention that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, to whom my question is directed, has announced that the Metric Commission has walked its last kilometre.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Domm: Given the fact that there is an Order in Council which indicates, "imperial units of measurement shall not be used in any advertising of floor coverings in Canada after January 1, 1981", would the Minister kindly put this Order in Council in place and rescind it, since carpet retailers across Canada, such as Eaton's, Sears, The Bay, retailers in the cities of Vancouver and Richmond, are all using imperial measurement in the advertising of their floor coverings?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, once again the Hon. Member is turning his dreams into reality. He has his own very peculiar way of presenting facts to the House, but they do not necessarily reflect reality. I might suggest to him that his double question or rather his two suggestions are quite besides the point and he ought to keep up with the facts.

[English]

Mr. Domm: I am sure the people across Canada have grown to respect and trust the word of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

SALE OF GASOLINE BY THE GALLON

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Would he advise the House and his colleagues why in December, 1982, he had a press conference at which time he announced that if the 37 Members of Parliament were to open a service station and sell by the gallon and the litre, he would prosecute? Why has the Minister not prosecuted?

• (1500)

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member can hardly wait to be hauled into court. I would not want to disappoint him, but I am convinced that the officials of my own Department and the Department of Justice who are looking into this case will straighten him out in due time. Anxious as he is about this issue, perhaps I should point out to the Hon. Member that his insistence on reopening the issue leads me to believe that business at his service station is probably not as good as he expected and he is advertising to attract customers.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION TO EXTEND SITTING HOURS

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 9, I move:

That, commencing Thursday, June 16, 1983 up to and including June 30, 1983, the House shall continue to sit beyond 6,00 p.m., and shall adjourn at 11.00 p.m., on every sitting day provided for in the Standing Orders with the exception of Fridays and days reserved for Private Members' Business.

The motion is seconded by the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde).

Madam Speaker: Is the House—

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, in speaking to this motion to extend the sitting hours, we note that it comes under Standing Order 9(1), a new Standing Order that was adopted as a result of the—Madam Speaker: Order, please. Did the Hon. Minister asked to be recognized right after he moved his motion? I did not see him rise.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, out of courtesy to the Chair, I was going to let you finish your sentence. You were asking: Is the House . . . and I did not want to interrupt, but I do have something to say. However, if you would rather not recognize me, I have no objection to giving my colleagues a chance to speak.

Madam Speaker: No, that was not my intention. I was about to put the motion to the House, and I thought the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) was rising on a point of order. I therefore interrupted the proceedings. But I was about to say: Is the House prepared to adopt this motion?

Mr. Deans: No.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the motion is an important one, and I realize that the debate has started.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, on a point of order, recognizing that the procedure is quite different from any procedure previously used, and having looked at a similar situation that arose under a different motion some time ago, I would move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That we proceed to the Orders of the Day.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member was recognized on a point of order quite clearly. He knows that in order to make a motion to proceed to the Orders of the Day he must have the floor legitimately. He did rise on a point of order, so a motion to proceed to the Orders of the Day is not acceptable at this particular time.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, as you can see, the debate has started. I wish to speak to the motion. If the Hon. Member insists—

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would draw to your attention that on a day about three weeks ago the Chair, in ruling on the appropriateness of rising to move a motion of this type, used as a precedent the example of my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) rising on November 13, 1970, as reported at page 1138 of Hansard. The Hon. Member rose on a point of order and said:

Arising out of the discussion and of the whole situation, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Comox-Alberni, that the House now proceed to Orders of the Day.

That was the precise reference used by this Speaker to rule me out of order some three weeks ago when I rose to argue the inappropriateness of the Government House Leader moving that precise motion to go to the Orders of the Day during the proceedings then under way, which at that time was the reading of petitions. When I brought to the attention of the Chair that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre had risen on a point of order and moved that motion, the Chair indicated that that was an appropriate way to do it and used that as the precedent. Having used it as a precedent, the Chair can hardly now turn around and say that I may not now do what the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre did, which was the very precedent on which the Speaker hinged her ruling of some three weeks ago.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member is quite wrong. The two situations are not at all analogous. The Hon. Member is now discussing a time at which a similar motion was presented. I just made remarks to the Hon. Member about the way in which he proposed his motion. The Hon. Member may not on a point of order proceed to Orders of the Day because he is, in a sense, taking the floor illegitimately to do something that the Chair is not legitimately aware will be coming up. Therefore, the Hon. Member is out of order because of the fact that he rose on a point of order to propose his motion to proceed to Orders of the Day.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I would like to say a few words in support of this motion. If the Leader of the New Democratic Party . . . Madam Speaker—

[English]

Mr. Deans: I rise on a point of order.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a new point of order? If so I can hear him, but I have already ruled on his first point of order.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I want to ask if the ruling of the Chair is intended to indicate that one may not move a motion on a point of order. If so, let me refer the Chair to May 7, 1979, page 1049 of Hansard, when the President of the Privy Council rose on a point of order to move a motion. The Speaker of the day ruled that there were occasions when it was appropriate to rise on a point of order in order to move a motion. In fact, there were certain motions that could only be moved on a point of order and this happens to be one of those motions. I suggest to the Chair that there is no other way to stop this Government from overriding the Opposition than to rise on a point of order and to move as I did.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I remember very clearly the occurrence in 1979 to which the Hon. Member was referring. At the time, there was a debate on whether or not the Social Credit Party had been recognized. The Speaker at the time, intending to recognize one Member, actually recognized another Member. I intervened, being in the Opposition at the time, to move that another Member be recognized, under the provisions of Standing Order 29—that is the old numbering, I do not know which Standing Order it is now. The Speaker refused to recognize me on a point of order so that I could move to have another Member recognized. It was not until the next day, after listening to my arguments, that the Speaker acknowledged that there was practically no other way to be recognized in order to interrupt one Member and have another Member recognized.

That was a very specific situation, and at the time, if I remember correctly, the Speaker said that it would have been better if I had indicated, as soon as I rose on a point of order, that I was rising on a point of order under the provisions of Standing Order 29 or 26—whatever, I think it is 29.

Therefore, in the circumstances, what the Hon. Member is saying is incorrect. This was a very specific case where, in fact, I was not recognized, and in which the Speaker told me, after the fact, that I was right and said that I should have specified that I was rising under Standing Order 29.

Finally, in answer to the point raised by the Hon. Member, perhaps I may refer the House to Beauchesne's, Fifth Edition, Citation 234, paragraph 2—

[English]

A Member cannot rise on a point of order to move a motion.

Madam Speaker: The circumstances of the precedent as described by the Hon. President of the Privy Council are absolutely correct. The situation is entirely different from the one we are discussing today. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) is certainly out of order. He cannot move a motion to proceed to Orders of the Day by rising on a point of order. That is clearly against the Standing Orders, and that is my final decision.

Mr. Pinard: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

I would like to speak briefly to the motion I moved earlier, to extend sitting hours between now and the end of June.

It should be understood that this motion is being moved, and I may say Hon. Members are aware of this, pursuant to the new Standing Orders of the House, as part of our experiment in parliamentary reform.

The basis for the motion is as follows: We already know that under the new Standing Orders, the House is to adjourn on June 30. We now have a set parliamentary calendar, and on June 30, the House will have no alternative but to adjourn until September 12 of this year. However, since the Government has traditionally been able to take advantage of part of the summer to wind up its legislative business, the Members of the Special Committee on Parliamentary Reform suggested, with the unanimous consent of the Members on both sides of the House, that a Member, and not necessarily the President of the Privy Council or the Government House Leader, be allowed to move a motion to extend sitting hours during the last two weeks or so of the month of June.

That is exactly what we are doing today. There are several other bills which we would like to get adopted before we adjourn, and we feel that by extending the regular sitting hours for a few days and with the good will of both sides of the House, we can agree to pass a reasonable number of bills. We may then go back to our constituencies and tell our constituents that we have all helped to make Parliament more productive within the framework of our parliamentary reform.

Mr. Speaker, that is the spirit of this motion. What it says in fact is that we ask that, instead of adjourning at 6 o'clock, the House adjourn at 11 o'clock between now and June 30 inclusively. This means that we shall be sitting between 6 o'clock and 11 o'clock, or five hours more than usual on each regular sitting day except Friday, of which there is only one remaining before the end of June since the last two Fridays are legal holidays, and except on the days when we deal with private members' business. Normally, we do this on Wednesdays, but we have already had discussions on this subject, and while no decision has yet been reached, it seems that we may yet agree to switch the proceedings of Thursdays and Wednesdays for the next two weeks, so that all Hon. Members may leave as early as possible the day before St. John the Baptist Day and Canada Day. I hope that such an agreement can be reached later today or in the next few days.

In the meantime, I could only suggest that our sitting hours be extended every day except on private members' days and this coming Friday, the only one remaining, and we have already informed the Opposition House leaders of the business we would like to deal with on that day.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Hon. Members will manage to tone down their animosity towards a number of bills and ensure that our parliamentary reform is success. It is the first time in our history that this type of motion is introduced to extend the sittings hours on seven days, for all practical purposes, which means that we are simply asking Parliament to give us 35 additional hours. It is the first time that we move such a motion, and it would be unfortunate if Members were to oppose it simply to show that they object to some piece of legislation or to try to score political points. Of course, Members are entitled to debate the motion as provided under Standing Order 9. My motion can be debated for two hours, and I do not intend to go on much longer so that as many Members as possible can express their views, but I can understand that some may not agree with the hours I have suggested.

However, I want to point out that I had the courtesy to consult beforehand the House leaders of the Parties opposite well before their caucus meetings this morning, but we could not come to an agreement, which is why I now have to introduce this motion. I find it quite normal that the motion should now be debated for a maximum of two hours provided under our rules and that it then be voted on. Those are the rules of the game, but what I would not like to see, however, would be a filibuster such as my friend the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) and House leader of the New Democratic Party had in mind when he suggested that we proceed with the orders of the day. I find it rather difficult to understand why he is doing that. He was a member of the committee on parliamentary reform. Indeed he was one of those who suggested that, in exchange for guaranteeing two summer months to Hon. Members who want to be in their ridings, we would allow the House to sit longer hours during the last two weeks of June. He was one of the strong advocates of that reform, and now he is trying to prevent debate on the motion, he does not want longer hours until the end of June. I wish he would explain his position clearly. If he tells me that it is because he objects to a particular Bill, I can only answer that this is not the time to raise the issue. I think it would be unfair to the Canadian people to prevent Parliament from sitting longer hours until the end of the month simply because the honourable gentleman does not fancy a piece of legislation.

I think that instead of cawing like crows, his colleagues should endorse our motion and commend us for enabling Parliament to sit longer hours to debate as many Bills as possible.

In short, Mr. Speaker, we are proposing that Members opposite have more opportunities for debate and, to my mind, it is ridiculous for a Member to try to thwart us simply because he is against a legislative measure. That flies in the face of our democratic system. I agree that he does not have to support all Government measures. Their duty is to debate in the House and vote against Government Bills, certainly not to bring Parliament to a standstill and particularly not to undermine our credibility as we try to reform Parliament. I deplore that attitude and I hope the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain will reconsider his position and realize that he ought not to jeopardize our parliamentary reform because some of his colleagues do not agree with a Government measure.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I am proposing that we sit 35 extra hours from now until the end of the month, and there is a possibility that we might agree to negotiate with the opposition parties to reduce those hours should we dispose more rapidly of a series of legislative measures on which the House has already begun debate and with which the Government would be satisfied. It is quite reasonable to expect that between now an the end of June we might reach agreement on a series of Bills acceptable to both sides of the House, and perhaps that might enable the House to adjourn earlier than 11 p.m. on those days when we propose an extension of the sittings. That is a possibility. I want to state clearly to our colleagues opposite that we on this side are prepared to renegotiate, but unless we reach an agreement today—keeping in mind that under the Standing Orders of the House this motion must be disposed of in one day, the tenth sitting day before June 30—I do not have any choice but to introduce a motion indicating specific and definite hours. Still, we will remain flexible until the end of June, assuming of course that the Opposition is reasonable.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions and comments? Debate.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to point out that when I rose to my feet after the Government House Leader announced the motion, I wanted to be sure to get on to debate and not have the motion go through as quickly as the Government wants all its Bills to go through—without any debate whatsoever—so I was willing to relinquish the floor to the Government House Leader so he might put the Government's position forward.

The motion to extend the hours comes under the new Provisional Standing Orders of the House and was adopted pursuant to a very important parliamentary committee which took a hard look at the way the House operates. It proposed a series of new Standing Orders designed to have the House operate in the way that Members of Parliament, not the Cabinet, not the Prime Minister's office and not the Privy Council office, want it to operate.

Knowing that this Standing Order was available and knowing that the Government's legislative program was stalled, I am surprised that we only received the text of the motion today at about ten minutes to three. This has caused some difficulty but we are prepared to deal with it.

The Government House Leader stated that the Government is prepared to negotiate, but, Mr. Speaker, we in this Party are not prepared to get into negotiations on the floor of the House. Surely the negotiations could take place daily between representatives of Ministers so that the business of the House could flow more smoothly than it has today. It would have been possible to circumvent the motion in the manner suggested by the New Democratic Party perhaps, but on this side we feel that would be contrary to the spirit of parliamentary reform and the way the House should operate.

What is contrary to the way the House should operate is for the Government to lay down the last Opposition day so that Canadair and other problems which might be examined when we are examining the estimates, which might be objected to, which might be brought forward, which might be exposed to the people, are cut off by the Government. What is contrary to the spirit of the way the House should operate is when Ministers make statements to the media instead of making them on motions in the House. I do not object to Ministers dealing with the media but surely they should deal with the House of Commons first. We feel that this is the place where major issues of the day should be debated. The Crow should have been debated here first and not through a series of press releases issued over the last two and half years.

I want to point out to the Government House Leader, to the New Democratic Party and to Canadians that we are here as the Opposition to do business. We are here to debate; we are here to look at Government Bills and there are some important Bills that we would like to see passed. Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, the Progressive Conservative Party, wants the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act passed. We want that Act to come forward so that where improvements in the fishery in Canada are needed, they can go forward. We want Bill C-148, amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act (No. 2), brought forward for debate. Bill C-154 which provides for the extension of DREE is even more urgent. The Government House Leader knows how important this is to areas of the country that desperately need the benefits that flow from it. I should tell the Government House Leader unequivocally that we are not going to fall into the trap of having a new Bill coming forward from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce which is designed to eliminate DREE so that the Government can porkbarrel money under that new program to Grit ridings only. The beauty of the DREE legislation is that it still covers some Conservative ridings and we feel that our people should get the money. So we are not going to fall into that trap.

There is no way that we are going to allow the RDIA Bill to be pushed through as it stands, especially when its employment factors are all out of whack. We desperately want the Canada Student Loans Act to be passed so that students who presently cannot find jobs due to the Liberal mismanagement of the economy can get the loans they need to continue their education.

On Monday the Government laid on the Order Paper the aboriginal rights resolution. Our caucus has discussed this and wants it to go ahead. We feel that it should be debated in the House and we want to see it go to committee.

Bill C-163, the Canadian Aviation Safety Board legislation, is very important. It results from the Dubin Commission report and will make it safer for people to fly.

We have indicated our displeasure with Bill C-152 to reorganize the Government but we have never said that we would stall it. A lot of things have to be improved. No one on this side of the House wants to see a senator made a parliamentary secretary. Good grief, Mr. Speaker, they do little enough as it is for the money they are paid. There is no need to give them a parliamentary secretary's salary as well. That would be an insult to the people of Canada. That part of the Bill will be debated hotly. There are enough parliamentary secretaries in the House who do not know what they are doing, but if they were in the Senate we could not even talk to them.

Bill C-95 deals with sports pools and we are sure that could be dealt with after a reasonable amount of debate.

Each of these items is important to large sectors of the Canadian population. We would be prepared to sit longer hours to make sure that they are dealt with. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, the spirit of the parliamentary reform committee is not always in evidence in the way the Government treats the Opposition. We feel that there should be some protection for the people of Canada who desperately want all that legislation.

On behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party, I move the following amendment to the motion of the Government House Leader:

> That the motion be amended by deleting the period after the word "business" and adding the following immediately thereafter:
> provided that the sitting hours of the House after 6 p.m. on any day up to and including June 30, 1983, are used to debate the Government's legislative program in the following order until such time as each is disposed of:

I make no comment on the order except to say I have seen it before today and I believe it is reasonable. The order is: Item No. 1, Bill C-147, an Act to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act (No. 2), to which I referred earlier. Item No. 2, Bill C-148, an Act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act (No. 2). Item 3, Bill C-154, an Act to amend the Regional Development Incentives Act (No. 20). Item 4, Bill C-161, an Act to amend the Canada Student Loans Act (No. 2). Item 5, the aboriginal rights resolution standing on the Order Paper under Government Notices of Motions in the name of the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan). Item 6, Bill C-63, an Act to establish the Canadian Aviation Safety Board and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof. Item 7, Bill C-152, an Act respecting the organization of the Government of Canada—heaven only knows, it needs organization—and matters related or incidental thereto. And Item No. 8, Bill C-95, an Act to provide for government operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and events and to amend the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Pinard: There is no guarantee that you will pass them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair acknowledges receipt of the proposed amendment. I would suggest that the Chair take it under consideration to determine whether or not it is in order, simply because this is the first application of an amendment under the new provisional rules. However, debate should continue as if the motion were in order until a ruling is handed down.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that this is the first time this amendment has been proposed under the new Standing Orders. I would hope that the Chair would look at it in the spirit of the amendment. Also, if there are any technical changes which are required because of the wording of the Government House Leader's motion, if the Table could suggest those, I believe that would be satisfactory to us.

I am sure that the Chair will deal with the amendment in the spirit with which it is brought forward, and that is to deal with the Government's legislation—absolutely to deal with the Government's legislation—and to see if we do not proceed to pass those pieces of legislation. The Government knows where we stand on the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

Mr. Pinard: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I just realized that my hon. colleague wants to go on with his speech. I apologize for interrupting him, but since the Chair wants to look at the admissibility of the amendment, I would like an opportunity to argue that it is not admissible. If the Chair would like to hear me after the Hon. Member has finished his speech, fine. If the Chair would like to hear me now, I am willing to argue now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair recognizes that the Hon. President of the Privy Council does wish to address himself to this matter. I believe the most satisfactory way to proceed is to allow the Hon. Member for Simcoe North to complete his remarks. The Chair will then hear any and all Hon. Members who may wish to comment on whether or not the motion is admissible, if that is agreeable.

Mr. Benjamin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, why do the Hon. Members not all leave the room and have a meeting?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand why the Government House Leader wants to debate the admissibility of an amendment which would further the operation of Government business. I cannot understand why he would want to debate it because we are trying to facilitate Government business, and that order of legislation, as I suggested earlier, without revealing any confidences, I believe is appropriate. I can assure the Government House Leader that we want to see that legislation go forward and we are doing what we are doing in an effort to assist the Government House Leader. That last comment might be subject to some discussion in my caucus.

I would like to point out that we come here to this House realizing that we are coming toward the end of the session. We appreciate that the work of an Hon. Member of Parliament is not only accomplished in this House but back in his or her riding. We know that valuable input is received by Members of Parliament back in their ridings. We realize that is a part of the job. We in this Party also realize that the job takes place in this House and in the ridings. It may be a little difficult for Hon. Members on the Government side to go back to their ridings, I can appreciate that. It may be that they will want to sit here through July and August rather than go back to their ridings, and I can appreciate that. It is probably pretty hot back in some of their ridings. However, we are prepared to come here and deal with Government business.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, we feel that the extended hours, if we are to agree to them, must be handled in a way which treats all of the Government's business seriously and which looks after all of the concerns which those pieces of legislation address. For that reason I would hope that the Government would support our amendment, which is moved in order to facilitate Government business.

I appreciate the opportunity I have had to debate this effort of the Government to extend the hours. However, I put that caveat on it. We feel that the Government must come forward with clean hands on this motion to extend hours. By "coming forward with clean hands", I mean that we must have it treat its legislation in an orderly fashion and deal with the very important items of business which are presently before the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, if my memory serves me well, section 2002 of the Civil Code provides that good faith must always be presumed and that it is up to the person who alleges bad faith to prove it. That is exactly what the Civil Code says, and I have no intention—I presume that the Hon. Member is acting in good faith, but—

[English]

The Hon. Member knows we had a meeting yesterday to discuss the extended hours. He knows that he went to his caucus this morning. He knows that we had a meeting today before Question Period to discuss the extended hours. Why has the Hon. Member waited until he delivers his speech now, without having the courtesy of giving me a copy of his amendment, while I have had the courtesy of giving him a copy of the main motion? Why did he not raise this in our meetings? Why play games?

Yes, we are willing to discuss House business. We are willing to discuss the order of business. However, why did he not make any suggestion on how to use the extended hours in our meeting? Never did he make any counter-proposal to the proposals I made. Why wait until we are on the floor of the House to try to negotiate this kind of business? The Hon. Member knows very well that under the Standing Orders it is up to the Government to establish the order of business. I will argue later on the admissibility of his amendment. However, I accept his good faith.

I presume that he is acting in good faith.

[English]

I would like the Hon. Member to convince me further by telling us why he did not raise this matter earlier when he had full opportunity to raise it with me.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I must express my shock and amazement. You will notice that I referred to the order of the proposals I put forward without suggesting where that order was first brought forward. I consider any discussions in meetings of Government House Leaders to be private and I am surprised that the Government House Leader has now revealed to the House of Commons what went on. I am sure that my friend, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), will share my surprise and concern that we now have our private meetings being brought forward in the House of Commons.

In reply to the question asked as to why the amendment was only received just now, I must say that I received the motion only at ten minutes to three o'clock with the wording on the back of an envelope. I do not feel at all embarrassed, Mr. Speaker, since the Government has had three months to prepare the motion. I do not feel at all embarrassed in giving the House Leader the amendment to the motion which I had to meld into the wording of the original motion at 25 minutes after three o'clock.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the alleged breaking of the secrecy of House Leaders' meetings is not the same as hypocrisy or bad faith. My hon. colleague knows very well that sometimes what is discussed in our meetings has to be made public—at least in our caucus, and therefore it is public. He knows very well that when I ask him to go to his caucus if he wishes and make the proposal of sitting until 11 o'clock at night, giving him the programs suggested to be dealt with until the end of June, that that cannot stay within our meetings. That information must go out. So I am not doing anything wrong. I am just asking him very honestly why did he not negotiate with me the substance of the amendment he has just proposed. He had two opportunities to do that, today and yesterday. I am just testing the good faith of my hon. colleague; I am not accusing him of doing anything wrong.

Mr. Lewis: I appreciate, Mr. Speaker that the Government House leader is not accusing me of doing anything wrong. I should tell you that yesterday obviously we had to consider the Government House Leader's suggestion. Today I am not so sure we were asked if there was an amendment. In any event, I feel we on this side are completely able to operate as the Opposition must in order to facilitate the business of the House. We have simply taken the Government's legislative program, spelled out how we are prepared to deal with it in the extended hours, and we say to the Government: support our motion and in those extended hours we will work on those Bills.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I requested a copy of the proposed amendment by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) a few moments ago. I was told by the Table that they were unable to give me a copy. I submit that if the Chair is going to entertain arguments as to the admissibility of that amendment, then surely all Members would be entitled to a copy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The point is well taken. As is obvious, copies are being made and will be distributed immediately.

Mr. Lewis: My colleagues makes a very interesting point. If that concern is shown for the amendment, surely the same concern should be shown for the motion. We have not had a copy of the motion produced.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is not telling the truth in so far as he is concerned.

Mr. Lewis: Careful.

Mr. Pinard: I saw that he had a copy of the motion before I moved it—

Mr. Lewis: I meant the House.

Mr. Pinard: Oh, he is still playing with words.

If you allow me, Mr. Speaker, I would like to illustrate very briefly why from my point of view the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North is not in accordance with the Standing Orders. The motion deals with, as it must, merely the hours of sitting and not with the legislative program of the Government. Standing Order 9(1) reads:

> On the tenth sitting day preceding June 30 a motion to extend the hours of sitting to a specific hour during the last ten sitting days may be proposed, without notice, by any Member during Routine Proceedings.

I do not think this opens the door to any proposal, whether it is in the main motion or an amendment, concerning the business to be dealt with in those hours. This could be, of course, subject to a House order if a motion was moved under another Standing Order by a Minister of the Crown. But it is spelled out in my motion that I have moved this under Standing Order 9, and all that can be dealt with under that Standing Order is the extension of hours from now until the end of June and nothing else.

The spirit of my argument is also based on Standing Order 22(2), which says very clearly:

Government's Orders shall be called and considered in such sequence as the Government—

And not the Opposition.

We want to keep our freedom to establish the order of business under the Standing Orders in our democratic system because we have the majority in this place and we are the Government. We want, respectfully, to keep the initiative. I think the motion by my hon. colleague goes against the Standing Orders and the spirit of the practices of this House.

I am not saying that I am not willing to negotiate with him. I indicated that earlier. His suggestions are negotiable. In my questions to him a few moments ago I made it clear that he never saw fit to raise this with me. There is still time to raise it with me for negotiation outside this House. We might come to an agreement. But certainly this does not render his amendment acceptable in my point of view.

Even if I oppose this amendment on the grounds of law, on the grounds of the Standing Orders and the practices and procedures of this place, that does not mean I do not want to negotiate with him and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) a reasonable time for debating specific measures. As a matter of fact, the Hon. Member and his colleague in the NDP submitted to their caucus suggestions I made in relation to different Bills on the Order Paper. I think this discussion should go on in a private meeting, not on the floor of the House, by surprise, using an amendment.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, as to the acceptability of the motion, I am sure the Chair will appreciate that this is the first time this particular Standing Order has been brought into play. The Government House Leader is trying to say that because the Standing Order does not make any references to legislation we cannot include some specificity as to which way Government legislation is dealt with. I think that argument falls on its face. Just because it does not say that does not mean we are precluded form amending the motion in a way so as specifically to say how those extended hours are to be used. It is not precluded in the actual Standing Order.

The second point bears on the spirit of what we are trying to do, which is to say to the Government: this is your legislation. We did not put in that motion any of the many things we might have wanted, such as the property rights amendment which the Government refuses to bring forward. We took the Government's legislation and said we are prepared to deal with it in this way. Instead of rejecting it out of hand on a technicality, I am surprised the Government House Leader does not want to support our motion in the spirit of parliamentary reform and in an effort to have the Government's legislation dealt with.

I suggest to the Chair that Standing Order 9 does not preclude our spelling out by way of amendment how the extended hours are to be used. In breaking this new ground I am sure the Chair will want to take that into consideration. If we are to extend hours, surely there should be an amendment allowed to state exactly what the House wants to do in those hours. It is within the spirit of the rules of this place that we as the Official Opposition, in trying to suggest to the Government how we are prepared to use those extended hours, referred specifically to the Government House Leader's priority list in drafting the list of items we included in our amendment.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the point presently before us, I want to break it into two parts because I think it has to be dealt with as two separate matters.

The first point is whether or not it is appropriate to spell out in the motion to extend the sitting hours the purpose for which that extension is required. I would put through the Chair to the Government House Leader that he surely would not want that the Chair not be allowed to accept a motion which specifically refers to the business to be conducted during a period of extended hours. I am sure there would be times when the Government would want to move an extension for the express purpose of dealing with a particular piece of legislation and no other. So I urge that the Chair not accept the Government House Leader's suggestion that, by virtue of his specifying the business to be considered during the extension, that automatically makes the amendment out of order. If that amendment had come from the Government it would also have to be out of order, based simply on the fact that no reference is made to that in Standing Order 9.

I ask Your Honour to consider the implications of not permitting anyone to include, in any motion to extend the hours under Standing Order 9, any reference to particular legislation with which one wants to deal. I think that would be an error that the Government would come to regret. Perhaps the Government House Leader himself might concede that that kind of ruling would be most restrictive.

I then want to deal with the second matter as to whether it is appropriate for an Hon. Member of the Opposition to move an amendment to a motion put down by the Government to extend the sitting hours, the purpose of the amendment being to specify what should be dealt with during that period. Surely the only thing that an amendment to a motion cannot do is to alter the substance of the motion. It can add to the motion. It can in some instances subtract from the motion. However, it may not alter the substance.

I contend that the motion by the Opposition House Leader does not alter the substance. He is not suggesting for one minute that the extension of hours should not occur, although he may well want to vote against it. He is suggesting what can and should be considered during that period. It is not for the Government House Leader to determine whether that is acceptable or not, nor is it for the Chair. It is for the House of Commons to determine whether that is acceptable or not.

Those pieces of business proposed by the Opposition House Leader are clearly those which stand on the Notice Paper. I betray no confidence in saying that they are also pieces of business which the Government has already presented as its objective in terms of what it would like to deal with between now and the end of June.

Mr. Pinard: Part of it.

Mr. Deans: Partly? The Government House Leader interjects "Part of it". He is dreaming in technicolor if he thinks he will get that and something else, I will have you know. However, with that out of way, I will say that the Opposition House Leader is not presenting anything new, is not presenting a demand that the Government introduce something it has not already introduced, is not suggesting that the Government deal with something it has not already indicated a willingness to deal with. He is simply saying that for the purpose of gaining acceptance of the extension of the hours, this business be called in that way, and then acceptance of the extension of the hours will be gained.

I suggest that it would therefore, in both instances, be ruled admissible as an amendment. It may well be disposed of by the House of Commons. Maybe the Government majority will overrule the wish of the Opposition that the amendment become part of the motion. However, I would urge that the Chair not overrule it. The Chair overrules too damn many things around here for my liking.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cousineau: Come on, now!

Mr. Deans: I just call them as I see them.

Therefore, I would urge upon the Chair that it see the matter as being two quite separate matters: first, whether it is indeed admissible to direct what should be done during the period of extended hours—and I do not think there is any question in anyone's mind that surely a motion containing reference to the subject matter would be acceptable; second, that it is the prerogative of the House to dispose of the amendment, since the amendment is not technically out of order. It is up to the Government either to accept it with its majority or reject it, as it sees fit.

Mr. Harquail: Point of order!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Simcoe North on a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, it has come to my attention, after listening to the remarks of my friend, that the Chair might also wish to consider Standing Order 8 when considering the acceptability of the amendment, since it makes specific reference to an extension of hours, either through the dinner hour or through the evening, for certain purposes. Standing Order 8(4)(a) states:

> When the Speaker is in the chair, a Member may propose a motion, without notice, to continue a sitting through a lunch or dinner hour or beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of considering a specified item of business or a stage or stages thereof—

I submit to the Chair that this Standing Order might be helpful to the Chair in its consideration as to whether or not the amendment which we have submitted, since it refers to the extension of hours and specific items of business, might therefore be acceptable.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, by quoting Standing Order 8(4)(a), the Hon. Member is making my point. It specifies the business to be dealt with, while Standing Order 9 merely deals with sitting hours and not with the kind of business to be conducted during those sitting hours. Standing Order 9 is a new Standing Order dealing with nothing else but the extension of the hours, not with the content of what is to be debated during those hours, while Standing Order 8(4)(a), as quoted by my colleague, specifies an extension of hours during lunch time or at the end of the day provided that the business to be dealt with is a specified item, and that is a different case. It is specified in the Standing Order. But in the present case there is no reference at all in Standing Order 9 to any specified business, and that is exactly my point.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, the reason I wanted Your Honour to rule on my point of order at the close of the remarks of the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, was because of his remark that the Chair over-rules too many damn things around here.

Mr. Deans: That's my opinion.

Mr. Harquail: I am sure the Chair heard what he had to say. In my opinion, he is reflecting on the Chair. When he said that the Chair overrules too many damn things around here, I did not think that that was quite acceptable or conducive to good conduct in the House, to say the very least.

Mr. Deans: It may be accurate, however.

Mr. Harquail: However, I would think that we could at least have your views, Mr. Speaker, as to what your interpretation of his remark was when he said that—

Mr. Deans: Listen, don't give him your real opinion.

Mr. Harquail: —and whether in fact you interpret it as being a reflection on the Chair and, indeed, unacceptable conduct and terminology for the House, especially since he was addressing the Chair.

Mr. Deans: Not at all. Even the Speaker believes that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): If the House is ready, we will deal with the point of order on the matter raised by the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail). There are times when it seems to me that observations made by Hon. Members are best left unremarked upon—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): —and that might include the Chair as well.

Mr. Collenette: It's a real put down, a gentleman's put down.

Mr. Deans: Don't be silly, David.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The essential argument made by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North is that this new Standing Order 9 ought to be interpreted as broadly as possible. However, if the Standing Order does not prohibit an amendment as to the type of Government business which must be done during an extension of hours, if the Standing Order is silent as to that aspect, then we ought to interpret the generality of our rules as meaning that it is not prohibited; and therein lies the difficulty. It would suggest that under Standing Order 9 Hon. Members other than those on the Government side could decide what the Government business is.

Mr. Deans: No, they can propose.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): That, as a general principle, does not appear to be acceptable under our Standing Orders.

Second, I would also refer to the interpretation of Standing Order 9, which speaks in terms of extended hours. An amendment which would order the business of the House during the extended hours seems to me to be one which goes beyond the interpretation and meaning of Standing Order 22 and the matter of the Government having control over the business of the House.

However, it is the argument which was made by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain which is most telling in one sense, and that is that if the Chair were to interpret Standing Order 9 in such a fashion as to limit the meaning of the Standing Order in the way proposed by the President of the Privy Council, the result would definitely mean that on another occasion when Standing Order 9 is used, if there is a proposal to put certain orders of Government business by the Government, then the Chair would have to be consistent and find that that kind of amendment would not be acceptable, or would not be admissible.

On the ground that the amendment goes beyond the scope of the motion and on the ground that this interpretation and ruling must be extended consistently, regardless of the source of any amendment at any time, the Chair finds that the amendment is out of order.

I do want to underline that that is not strictly an interpretation of Standing Order 9 as it stands but extends also to the general principles of admissibility of an amendment. I refer Hon. Members to Citation 437 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition. Debate.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, it is nice to get on with this. Needless to say, I have been looking forward to it for days.

At the outset I want to say to the House that the list of legislation put forward by the House Leader of the Official Opposition, whether in that order or any other order, is acceptable as far as we are concerned. We are quite prepared to deal with and make every effort to pass all of that legislation and more between now and the end of June during the existing sittings of the House and the extended sittings of the House. I have already made that offer and I believe the Government House Leader would acknowledge that I have frequently made that offer to deal with most, if not all, of what is contained in the list that the House Leader for the Official Opposition proposed as an amendment.

Our Party's position is quite simple. We would be quite content to deal with the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. We would be quite content to deal with and pass the Farm Improvement Loans Act amendment. We would be prepared to deal with the Regional Development Incentives Act. We would be prepared to deal with the Canada Student Loans Act post haste. We would be quite willing and eager to deal with the amendment to the Constitution of Canada if it were dealt with in an orderly and proper process. That amendment deals with aboriginal rights. We will make every effort, with some limited debate in the House, to deal with the resolution that directly deals with those matters to provide an opportunity for some committee work to be done on the amendment since it is, after all, an amendment to Canada's Constitution. We will be quite content to deal with that before the end of June.

At least in its early stages we will deal with the Canadian Aviation Safety Board Bill that has been proposed by the Government. We would be prepared to expedite dealing with that and sending it to committee for careful study. We are in no way opposed to proceeding with the organization of the Government of Canada legislation. We certainly do not have any particular worry about finding an appropriate way to begin to deal with the sports pool legislation that has been sitting on the Notice Paper for some time.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will note the degree of co-operation that is just flowing from this side of the House to the Government. There is very little about which we disagree to such a level that we would stand in the way of the orderly dealing with those pieces of legislation.

I want to go even further than that. For instance, consider such a controversial matter as the new security legislation. We are quite content to have the subject matter of that dealt with by a committee. We understand the Government's desire to have public hearings on that subject; therefore we are prepared to deal with that.

We go even further. You would appreciate the amount of co-operation we have extended over the course of the last few months anyway, Mr. Speaker, but we would go even further and be prepared to deal with two-thirds of the proposals put forward for the transportation, shipment and handling of western grain contained in Bill C-155. We would be prepared to deal with the question of the upgrading of the railroads which we understand to be an absolutely necessary act on the part of Canada. We would be prepared to deal with the disposition of the Dominion coal lands. We would be prepared to deal with all of those things and more between now and June 30.

However, we are not prepared to sell out the farmers of western Canada simply to expedite the vacation plans of Members of the House of Commons. I put that to you as clearly as I can. I have made every possible attempt to have the Government recognize the necessity of splitting Bill C-155 which is before us. On behalf of my caucus colleagues I have offered every co-operation in expediting this large and quite diverse range of topics which the Government wants to deal with in the form of legislation. But the Government is bound and determined that it will stuff a changed Crow rate down our throats. We are equally determined that it will not. That is where we are hung up.

The Government knows full well that if that change to the Crow rate receives second reading it will be stuck through the committee with the speed of light while Government Members nod "Aye, ready, aye, ready". It will be brought back to the House of Commons where the Government will bring in time allocation and jam it into law before one can blink an eye. We know that because we have worked with this Government before.

I suggest to the Conservatives not to be persuaded by all of the Government's promises about giving fair opportunity to the farmers of western Canada to have their say. Do not succumb to the charm of the Government and its House Leader. The Government is not only intent upon imposing this unnecessary hardship on the farmers whom we represent but, strange though it may seem, it is intent on doing that to the farmers whom the Conservatives also represent. It is time they understood that. It is time that the Conservative Members stood up firmly and said, "No, the farmers of western Canada cannot afford to take on that additional burden". It is time that the Conservatives joined in this battle and made it clear to the Government that the changes it is proposing to the Crow rate will make it virtually impossible for western grain farmers to enter into the world markets that are so vital to their survival. In fact, the proposed changes which the Government has put forward will work a terrible hardship on the western economy.

I say to the Conservative Members, the three who are here, that I have never understood how the Conservative Party could get on to its knees so quickly before the Government on this matter. As my colleague says, even their new Leader supports the changes to the Crow, I believe. It tells us something about what his priorities are.

I want to say to the Conservative Members that it is just not enough to say that they have to trust the Government to do things properly. That is not enough. The Liberal Party has never understood western Canada. It does not understand western Canada now. Therefore, how can they put the economy of Canada's Prairies at its mercy with a haste which is almost obscene?

The reason we are opposed to extending the hours is not that we do not want to work and deal with the legislation before us. It is because we do not want to facilitate the Government's desire to push through and make law immediately the Bill dealing with exorbitant increases to the Crow rate. We do not want to see it become law. We want to ensure that there is time for sober second thought across the land. We want to ensure that by holding the Bill in the House of Commons the farming community of the West, together with its allies, will have adequate time to reach Government Members when they return to their constituencies. When they get back into their constituencies, they will be hard to reach, but we want to ensure that there is time and an opportunity for western grain farmers and others concerned about the issue to reach Government Members, as they must also reach Tory Members, so that they will accept the fact that a third of the Bill about which we talk will add so much to the burden of costs of farmers in the west and that those changes should not and need not become law.

I know Mr. Speaker studies these matters. He knows as I know that every country against which we compete for the sale of grain in the world subsidizes their grain farmers. It was only months ago that we read that Argentina, as I recall, had eliminated the cost of transportation from grain-growing areas to the port. They eliminated them entirely in order to bring down the price of their product and undercut the Canadian market. When we look at that, when we look at the vast subsidies in the United States for transportation purposes, and when we look at Canada, which is about to add to the costs of farmers who are already having a tough enough time competing, it makes no sense. Because it makes no sense, it therefore must be stopped. Because it must be stopped, we must therefore use every effort available to stop it.

I ask Conservatives, for God's sake, to pluck up their courage, come aboard and join with us in trying to stop this juggernaut from running all over the country and destroying the very soul of the West. I just cannot believe it. Anyway, as I say, we do not want to see the extension of hours—and I supported the motion of the Opposition House Leader—for other than dealing with additional pieces of legislation which the Government brought forward.

Again I say to the Government, with some trepidation because I know what it means, that we will do everything in our power to stop the Crow. We will stop those changes because they are wrong. We will do whatever we must to ensure that they never become law. If it means sitting through July, it means sitting through July. If it means sitting through August, it means sitting through August. If it means sitting until midnight, it means sitting until midnight. If it means holding Government Members here until September, October or November, until farmers have been able to convince them how wrong they are, that is what it means. I assure the House that it will mean that every Liberal will have to be here, every one of them, in order to ensure that the Government gets what it wants, its ill-conceived objectives.

I do not think the Government understands the depth of the opposition to this legislation. We can and we will rebuild the railroads. It should be done, not only to move grain to the ports, but to move coal from the coal mines or coal fields of British Columbia to central Canada so that unemployed coal miners will once again be working and we will not have to buy from Ohio and Pennsylvania that which we have in abundance and in better quality in our own country. We need to rebuild the railroads for those purposes.

An Hon. Member: And cut back on the amount of acid rain.

Mr. Deans: As my colleague says, in the process we would cut back on the amount of acid rain from which we suffer because of the much lower sulphur content in British Columbia coal. It is about .02 or something, as against a range of from 2 per cent to 8 per cent in the coal from Ohio and Pennsylvania.

We are really saying that the rebuilding of the railroads has a two-way benefit. There is a benefit going west to the ports and coming east. We should get on with it, but we must not undermine the economic viability of western and prairie Canada in the process. We cannot ask prairie farmers to take on a burden which they frankly cannot afford. We cannot ask them to take on more now. The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) knows full well the plight of farmers. The markets they are hoping to gain they will not get, if the price per bushel rises in accordance with the new freight rate arrangements proposed by the Government. They are already in a tough squeeze with every other Government in the world subsidizing their grain farmers.

We just cannot afford to let this Bill pass. We cannot afford to let the extended hours go without objection, without attempting to stop it. We cannot afford to let the Bill go. In other words, I am saying that the battle continues, and the battle would be much easier if the Tories would join us, quite frankly. If the Conservatives would join with us in this battle, it would be an easier battle to win. Combined they cannot defeat us.

Mr. Lewis: We are fussy.

Mr. Deans: If every last one of us on this side of the House, all 130-odd of us, decide to stop this in the interests of Canada, then we can stop it. We can all stop it together. But if the Tories bail out and allow them to have their way, then they do so at the expense of the viability of the grain farmers of the West and ultimately at the expense of the economy of the West.

I heard the Opposition House Leader say that he is fussy. I had not noticed that before; I will take his word for it. We are prepared to join forces with the Conservatives, despicable though we find them from time to time. We are prepared to join forces with them on a matter as important as this one. We are prepared to find common ground on a matter as important as this one. We are prepared to suffer that association over a short period of time on a matter as important as this one.

Therefore we suggest to Conservatives to pluck up courage and recognize the harm the Government intends for the people we collectively represent. We suggest the Conservative Party decide once and for all that political expediency is no substitute for good judgment and that good judgment in this case is that whatever must be done to stop these proposed changes must be done by us collectively. Whatever their right-wing ideology demands of them, they must remember that farmers are independent souls, working every day with a lot at stake. They will not find a market for the market they will lose if we allow the Government to raise their costs as it is proposing. I ask them to come with us and fight together in July, August and September to ensure that it does not do this.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, others in this place may say that the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain is lying when he suggests that the PCs are not opposed to the Crow. The people of Canada may suggest that the Hon. Member for Hamilton Moutain is lying when he suggests that the Conservatives are not opposed to the Crow. But I am not prepared to say that the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain is lying when he states that the Progressive Conservatives are not opposed to the Crow. I am not prepared to do that. The people of Canada will know it, other Members of the House will know it, but I am not prepared to say that he is lying.

An Hon. Member: Come on!

Mr. Lewis: No, I am not prepared to say that.

• (1620)

I do have a question. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain suggested that we join in a great show with the NDP. In view of the fact that last evening the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain voted against spending money on many important social items already approved in the budget, how can we count on his knowing what he is doing when it comes time to vote?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to enter into the low level of debate that the questioner has entered into. Get out of the gutter.

The fact is that the recently elected Leader of the Conservative Party announced not many days ago that he was in favour of changes to the Crow rate. He said, however, that he thought it was being rushed through too quickly. I can only assume that their newly elected Leader speaks for the Conservative Party. For the Hon. Member to infer that I was not telling the truth is objectionable, but expected from him. One would expect him to say something like that in order to deflect those who are watching and listening from the real truth. The real truth is that the Tories sold out on these proposed changes some time ago. Their only interest is in saving face. Our interest is in saving farmers. If you do not believe what I say about the Leader of the Tory Party, read what he said.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Hon. Member. We are also anxious to know the position and attitude of the Progressive Conservative Government on that important legislation which aims at changing the transportation system in Western Canada.

My question therefore is to the Hon. Member, and I am in total agreement with him concerning what he said about how important it would be for other farm organizations to be heard in committee. I do not understand why there is so much opposition to referring Bill C-155, the grain transportation legislation, to the Standing Committee on Transport, so that if other farm organizations believe they have already expressed their views, they may over the summer, when there is no urgent work to be done, appear before the Transport Committee and make their submissions for and against, and also suggest potential improvements.

I therefore have difficulty understanding the NDP Members' attitude in their opposition to referring the Bill to the Committee on Transport, being the good democrats that they are, in order that interested groups may appear during the summer season before that Committee to express their views and discuss the whole question, since there will be no urgent work during that period, because during the fall, when proceedings would be very urgent, they would not be free to attend and express their views. This is a very liberal approach, Mr. Speaker, that is the referring of that legislation to the Committee on Transport in order that those groups may express their views during the summer, a relatively quiet period, on matters pertaining to agriculture.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. In most circumstances I would find the Hon. Member's argument acceptable, but there is one point on which he fails. He knows that the farmers of western Canada are in the fields. They will be in their fields between now and the end of October almost continuously. It is not possible for them to take the time from their harvesting or other work that must be done in order to come to Ottawa or, for that matter, to be heard around the country. The difficulty with passing it now is that the hearings will be conducted during the time when the farmers do not have access to the hearing process.

Let me put an alternative. Suppose we stop second reading right now and refer the subject matter to a 20-member special committee which will be sent out across the country and which will report back November 1. That would give the farmers an opportunity to speak and be heard on these important matters. They could offer some input into the final stage of the matter. Would that be acceptable?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, then the farmer would not be working in the summer because there would be a special committee.

Mr. Deans: I said if the subject matter was referred now for reporting back later, let us say November 1, it would allow adequate time for the farmers to be heard after they completed the work that must be done on their farms. If that were to be done, we might be prepared to consider such a proposal.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, will the House Leader of the New Democratic Party give us the position that his Party has taken with regard to the Progressive Conservative proposal of freedom of choice?

Mr. Deans: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member would be kind enough to repeat his question. There is something in it that I missed; I did not quite catch it.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, the House Leader of the New Democratic Party went to some length establishing the problems in the movement of grain within Canada. The Conservative Party has made a proposal. We call it the "freedom of choice". Will the House Leader of the NDP tell us the NDP position, either for or against that proposal?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, the proposal is so vague that in the first instance one would have to be opposed to it, unless it were fleshed out significantly and shown to be workable. At the moment it appears to be unworkable because no one really understands it.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, the statement of the NDP House Leader proves exactly what I thought. He does not know what he is talking about. The proposal put forward by our Party is understood by the farmers in western Canada, even though the NDP House Leader does not understand it. I ask him to take that question to the farmers and see what they want his Party to do. Evidently he does not know. He is not aware of what freedom of choice means.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I am fully aware of what the PC Party said with regard to freedom of choice. What I said is that nobody understands how it would work.

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Nystrom: En français!

Mr. Simmons: Mon ami intime, we have been here a very long time, almost a year. We have done a lot of work. A lot has been done for the people of Canada since we came here last fall.

Mr. Blaikie: Don't straddle the issue.

Mr. Simmons: My good friend for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) talks about straddling the issue. I had decided a moment ago not to take up the rather insightful question that my friend from Red Deer (Mr. Towers) put about where the NDP stands on the freedom of choice issue. He must know the answer to that question. He is a very informed man. The answer is that they are neither for it nor against it. They are both. They have what is known in the business as the "picket-fence" position, as they have on so many issues. Picket fences have a way of doing painful things to people, as the NDP are finding out on the Crow issue, and I will come back to that. I thought I would just give that little comment to my friend from Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

They should be very careful about the Crow issue but, as I say, I will come back to that. Before I do though, let me begin, in my usual non-partisan fashion, to address this clearly non-partisan issue. We have been plugging away here for almost a year on behalf of the constituents of Burin-St. George's and the other 281 constituencies across Canada who have sent us here to do a job. I believe that all of us as Members of Parliament can take some satisfaction from the amount and the quality of the work that has been done since we came here last fall. But all of us, I believe, are willing to admit that we are anxious to get out of here. Speaking for myself, I am anxious to get out of here. With the provisions that have been made by the parliamentary reform committee of which I am pleased to have been a member, provisions which have been adopted by the House, it is conceivable that we will be out of here on or about June 30.

But being the work horses we are, led by the chief workhorse, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), we want to put in some extra effort before we go. We want to find a little extra time, another five hours a day when we would normally be out attending dinner parties in the case of some Members or committee meetings in the case of others. We want to work during that period from six o'clock to 11 o'clock each night. That is what we are asking Parliament to allow us to do. We are asking Parliament to allow us to do some more good work on behalf of the Canadian people.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if there is anything particularly sinister or suspicious about that kind of request. This proposal should not have had to come before the House. We should not be spending two hours discussing it, although the rules do provide for that. There is nothing illegitimate about what we are doing, but there is something a bit uncomely and a bit unnecessary about it because we should have made a gentleman's agreement to proceed along the lines provided for in this particular motion. But we do not have that agreement and we are here begging the House to allow us to do even more work between now and the end of June. That is the only intent of the motion put under new Standing Order 9 by my friend, the President of the Privy Council.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that you listened with absolutely unbridled interest to the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) who assured the House that he and his colleagues wanted to facilitate the consideration of legislation. Having said that, in the very next sentence he came up with an amendment that thankfully was not accepted by the Chair, but nevertheless he proposed an amendment that would have cluttered up and made clumsy the very work that we are trying to achieve here. In the spirit of Standing Order 9, we want to make available to the House some additional time in which to dispose of its business. That is the spirit of that provision of the Standing Orders, and yet the hon. gentleman from Simcoe North brought in an amendment which would order very inflexibly the business we could deal with. That amendment has gone the way it should have gone because it was certainly a peevish, petty, shoddy and mischievous bit of work that would have had the effect of making the accomplishment of the work of the House pretty inflexible and unwieldy.

After all, Mr. Speaker, there are days when the Minister who is sponsoring a particular Bill is not here because he is out in the country performing his other responsibilities as Minister. Alternately, the Opposition spokesperson on a particular matter, say the Opposition spokesperson for fisheries or farm matters, may not be able to be present on the day when we would want to call that particular Bill if the order had been dictated by amendment. In courtesy to him or her, would it not be fair to try to accommodate the schedule of the House to his or particular schedule, given that he or she has been designated by the Party to speak on behalf of the Party on those matters?

Clearly the intent of Standing Order 9 under which this motion has been put is to permit the House to find additional time in which to do its business. Having said that, it is a well established practice and a long standing tradition that it is the Government that calls the order of business. The spirit of the recommendation brought forward by the parliamentary reform committee was to give the Government some flexibility in meeting the June 30 deadline. Last year we were here until some time in August, I believe, and as a group we told ourselves that that served nobody's purpose, not our own purpose nor the purpose of our constituents. It was certainly not fair to our families who had made schedules for the summer, the only time when the children of many Members of Parliament have time off from their regular school classes. So last fall we told ourselves that the time had come to regularize the schedule of the House of Commons. The committee on parliamentary reform recommended that we ought to aim for shutting this place down at the end of June. That is still our aim and it is now embodied in Standing Orders.

To help the Government and the House meet that deadline, we have before us a motion which would give us just a little more flexibility to facilitate the completion of some of the business before the House. It is not a particularly complicated motion. The motion only asks that we all agree to spend a little extra time here.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) seeks to make the motion complicated. He seeks to append to it caveats and conditions and prerequisites. In effect, he says, "We will agree to the extra time on the condition that you do not do anything that we do not like." That is basically what he said. "We will agree to the extra time, provided you dance to our tune, provided you do it our way." Well, I say to him that in February of 1980, the people of Canada addressed that problem. At that time, the people of Canada were asked in a general election whether the NDP or the Tories or the Liberals ought to form the Government and be the team that would call the order of business of the House. That question was decided. The Hon. Member may not realize that. He may not accept it very readily, but I say to him that it was decided three and a half years ago.

The Hon. Member should stop living in the past. He should recognize the realities that are applicable today, June 1983, when we are here in the Chamber with a number of pieces of legislation before us that, if passed, would be of benefit to various sectors across the country, be they the farming community, the fishing community, people who are waiting for changes in the income tax legislation and other sectors that will be affected by various pieces of legislation. To facilitate the interests of those people, we would like to get on with the work of the House and do as much of it as possible before we shut the place down for the summer.

I was also intrigued by the words used by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain when he spoke about what the priority of concern ought to be, whether we ought to be concerned about, as he put it, the vacation plans of Members of Parliament. Well, I will be the first one to admit that I would like to spend a weekend or two with my family between now and September when we come back to this place again.

Mr. Benjamin: Why not resign then?

Mr. Simmons: I say to my good friend, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), that I would like to have some time to do some of the other work which I have been elected to do. Without being overly candid, I regard being here as a vacation. I regard this place as the place I come to get a little bit of rest. The real work, Mr. Speaker, is out there in the constituency. I want to get back there and be brought up to date on the concerns and views of the people who live in the 135 communities which I represent, communities stretched along 1,500 miles of coastline. I can only get to some of those communities by water or by air. Some of these communities mean a two and a half day trip. For that reason I cannot get to them on weekends. I have not been in some of them since last summer, and if I do not get to them this summer I will not have another opportunity until the summer of 1984. I have good reason to want this place to shut down so that I can go out and discharge some of my other responsibilities. It is useless, it is hopeless, it is hypocritical to come here and tell the House and the people of Canada what my constituents believe and stand for if I have not had the opportunity to touch base with them. I know what the people in Pettiforte, South East Bight, or Paradise—Paradise is in my riding, there is no doubt about that—

• (1640)

Mr. Blaikie: They need some comfort.

Mr. Simmons: There is Little Paradise and Great Paradise in my riding. That should come as no surprise to anyone in the Chamber. In speaking for them and the people of McCallum, François or Grey River, I want to be able to represent their up to date views. To do that I must hit the road pretty soon. I have to hope that this place closes down so I can go back to my first love, the constituents who sent me here.

Mr. Benjamin: You have permission; go.

Mr. Simmons: My good friend, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain talks about stuffing the Crow Bill down people's throats. That is colourful, descriptive language, but it is not an awful misrepresentation of what happens in the House. Does he not understand or does he choose to misrepresent the process? That process admits that there will be legislation which all Members cannot necessarily support. No one has suggested that legislation must have the unanimous backing of every Member. This is an adversary forum and we are going to find ourselves on different sides of an issue, sometimes in the most vociferous fashion. There will be issues that I oppose and issues that I endorse, and that is the nature of this House. It is also the nature of the House that we have a way of settling scores, of settling issues, of dealing with business, and that is by taking votes. Before we come to the votes there is a well documented procedure in the Standing Orders which allows debate to take place in an orderly fashion.

The Standing Orders provide that in certain circumstances closure shall be introduced. At some point, in the wisdom of those who have the prerogative to introduce the motion, over the years it has been deemed by the House—which gives sanction to the Standing Orders—that under certain circumstances time allocation can be introduced. It has been introduced by this Government and it was introduced by the then Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) when he was Government House Leader in the fall of 1979. The rules provide for it.

If there are Members in the House who oppose measures, be it the Crow Bill or any other legislation, they have the same protection in the House as any other Member. I invite the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain in particular, and his colleagues in the New Democratic Party, to have the courage to play it by the rules. They need have no fear that their point of view will be trampled on. Indeed, if that view is not as well known across the country as it should be, that is because they have spent too much of the last month playing parliamentary games when they should have been articulating their position.

I know the position of the Liberal Party on the Crow issue and I know the position of the Tory Party on the Crow issue but I do not know the position of the NDP. That Party has failed the farmers of Canada in articulating that position. They have been too caught up playing delaying games. I recognize that the socialists, the NDP, may have good reason, and perhaps political reason, to look for a way to save their hide, to prevent the slide into oblivion.

Mr. Blaikie: You are not exactly on an all-time high yourself.

Mr. Simmons: They are batting on the wrong wicket if they are looking for a way to save their hides in western Canada. I implore them to stop using those scare tactics and to allow the Bill to go before the committee where it can be scrutinized on its merits and where people with an interest in the legislation can have their say. We are asking that it go to committee where people who want to address it have more flexibility than they have in this Chamber.

I have heard that farmers are busy between now and October and thank God there are people in the country who are working so enthusiastically. If the changes in the Crow proposal are as earth-shaking as the NDP would have us believe, I put it to you that the farmers will find time to do their work in the fields and to send representatives to put their case before the committee.

I was touched at the appeal of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain to the Tories, as I am sure the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) was, when he said, "We are prepared to join with the Conservatives—come with us". I ask my good friend from Bow River how he could not have walked down and joined hands. I would warn him before he jumps at the invitation to make sure he understands the implications. It is an invitation to return to 1910, to 1915 or to 1920.

We recognize that the Crow is a very emotional issue. That alone is not an excuse to treat it as a sacred cow, however. It is all the more reason to muster courage to do the right thing, and that is, not to walk away or hide our heads in the sand as the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain wants. That is why I am glad the Hon. Member for Bow River has kept his head, as he usually does. I hope very few will accept the invitation from the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain to return to 1910. How does he reconcile his position on the Crow issue with the interests of his constituents who stand to gain from the changes proposed in the legislation?

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, would the enthusiastic Member who just sat down be willing to support the concept of reasoned amendment to the legislation to improve it for the farmers for whom he pleaded so hard?

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I would. That is why my colleagues and I are so anxious to get the Bill to committee. One of the reasons for committee stage is to allow Members to scrutinize legislation at close range in a more informal setting and determine whether it can be improved. If the Hon. Member has proposals that would legitimately improve it, I will support his amendment.

• (1650)

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member then persuade his caucus to persuade the Minister, in turn, to accept the amendments which have the support of different Parties of this House so that the matter could then be settled in reason instead of in petulance as at present?

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I would take exception to the last word or two of the Hon. Member's remarks about there being petulance. There has been some heated debate because it is a very emotional issue. However, once we get it beyond second reading, we would like to get it into committee where we can look at those amendments in the light of day and see if they will do all the good things which the Hon. Member suggests they will do. Mr. Speaker, no one has said to the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) that we will not accept any amendments, and I challenge him to say otherwise. What we have said consistently is that we should bring it to committee and in committee Hon. Members will have the same freedom they always have in committee to propose amendments and then have them dealt with.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) crying and complaining about how he wants to get out of here. It seems to me his constituents are paying their income taxes for him to be here working, no matter how long Parliament has to sit. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he would oppose using every method possible under the rules of the House, whether or not he is on the Government side of the House, which would cost the people in his Province $600 million more in freight charges between now and the end of this decade? Would the Hon. Member agree that he also would fight every way he could to prevent any kind of legislation which would do that to the people in his Province?

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to address myself to the issue of whether or not the presumption in the question is accurate. It is a whole debate in itself as to whether or not that figure of $600 million is anywhere near reality. I have already answered the other part of his question when I appealed to the New Democratic Party to stop being petulant, stop using delay tactics, and just use everything within the rules to get its views across. That is why we have rules. That is why we have the various Standing Orders, including the one we are dealing with today, for that matter. I have invited them to do this, but I do not believe they need an invitation from me because they have privileges in this House which allow them to use all the rules within the Standing Orders. However, Mr. Speaker, I made the point earlier that it does not allow that Party to be parliamentary terrorists. That is what the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain gave notice of today when he indicated he was going to obstruct. I say that his constituents, including the steel workers, who will benefit from changes in the Crow legislation, did not send him here to obstruct. They sent him here to fight vociferously within the rules. I will always defend to the death his right to do that, within the rules. There will be no argument from me on that issue.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he has read the response of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to questions on the Order Paper that to date he has received over 37,000 letters and telegrams from people in western Canada asking for retention of the statutory grain rates. They were from all over Canada, for that matter, but most of them were from western Canada. Only 69 of these persons were against the retention of the statutory grain rate. Also there are over 50,000 signatures on petitions of various kinds, which still have not all been presented to Parliament, in favour of retention of the statutory grain rate. Does the Hon. Member not agree that that means that the Government should accept what our House Leader, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain just proposed a few moments ago, that the subject matter of this Bill be referred to a special committee empowered to travel from place to place and hear witnesses between now and the first of October, November or December, or whatever, so that the Government can then deal with the Bill, having received this information from the grain producers of western Canada and a lot of other people, including the steel workers in Hamilton?

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the number of people who had made representations.

Mr. Benjamin: Thirty-seven thousand.

Mr. Simmons: If you subtract 37,000 from 25 million you will find that a substantial number have not written in their views on either side of the issue. If one subtracts from the 37,000 the number who have been stirred up by the scare tactics of the New Democratic Party, the number will be substantially less than 37,000.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, to respond to the question whether I read the response in Hansard by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), no, I must admit that is one of the few responses in Hansard which I have not yet memorized.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) on two points. He mentioned the June 30 adjournment date which is provided for in the new rules. I was wondering whether he would be willing to admit that there is no danger to the June 30 adjournment. The only way that we could sit beyond June 30 is if the Government makes us sit beyond June 30, failing to respect the new rules and failing to strike a compromise between itself and the Opposition on the various proposals we have made with regard to the Bill to change the Crow rate. It is not the Opposition which can make this Parliament sit beyond June 30. It is only the Government which can do that by hypothetically recalling Parliament after June 30.

The Hon. Member commented on the invitation of our House Leader, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), to the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), the Assistant House Leader of the Conservative Party, to "Come with us. Take the hard way. Oppose the Government on this matter". The Hon. Member commented on the fact that the Hon. Member for Bow River did not respond to that invitation. I feel that the fact that the invitation was not responded to, and the cosy language which the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's used when he was describing the Hon. Member for Bow River, is further evidence of the fact that what we see before us here today is a deal between the Progressive Conservative Opposition and the Liberal Government to get the changes to the Crow rate into committee and, on the part of the Conservative Party, to get this Crow rate changed because it fully expects it will be the Government come the next election. That may or may not be true. However, that Party operates on the assumption it will be the Government, and it wants this thing out of the way because it responds to the same corporate and economic pressures as the Liberal Party from the CPR and various other large business interests, and it knows that if the Liberals do not get it done before the next election, it will have to do it because it takes orders from the same people.

That is why there is this cosy relationship here, Mr. Speaker, between the Liberal Government and the Progressive Conservative Opposition. The Conservative Party wants this thing out of the way so it will not have to do it itself. It is only the NDP which would stand up to those interests, only the NDP which would be able to bring in policies—

Some Hon. Members: Order. Order.

Mr. Blaikie: —which would see the Crow rate maintained—

An Hon. Member: Sit down.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. That was a slanderous comment which was made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). I would ask him to withdraw it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): That, in the Chair's opinion, is debate. The time provided for questions and comments has elapsed.

Mr. Blaikie: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, as ever, the truth hurts.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Chair informed the House that the time for questions and comments had elapsed. However, is the House agreeable to allowing the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) to respond to the previous comment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It is not agreed. Debate.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I regard the failure of the House to permit me to respond as a violation of the provision of the question and answer period. How can there be, Mr. Speaker, a question and answer period, if the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) is allowed to filibuster in terms of time on the question and I am not permitted time to answer? It is assumed that I ought to have some brief period to answer the question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: Is he afraid of the answer?

• (1700)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Chair would like to deal first of all with the point raised by the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons). The Chair has no choice but to apply the Standing Orders and provisional rules. The Chair informed the House that the time had elapsed. However, the Chair is patient and it sought unanimous consent, but the House did not grant unanimous consent and the Chair has to live with that decision. We must now proceed to debate and the Chair has recognized the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) in debate. However, I did see the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) rising on another point of order.

Mr. Blaikie: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that I did not stand in the way of the Hon. Member responding to the question.

Mr. Ethier: Your colleague said no.

Mr. Blaikie: I think the Hon. Member was wrong when he suggested—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): That is debate. The Hon. Member for Bow River.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the first point I would like to make is that I hope the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) knows more about fishing for cod than he does about farming in western Canada. I hope the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill would just stick to the facts a little instead of misrepresenting them so badly.

Mr. Blaikie: I did. I brought out the ultimate fact of what is going on here.

Mr. Taylor: Those people want me to come and join them. I didn't think they cared.

Mr. Deans: Believe me.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, it will be a long, long time, with a green moon in the sky, before I join the socialists. I am a free enterpriser.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: I believe in free enterprise. It is what made this country and will continue to make this country. The sooner we can get back to free enterprise principles without the shackles the Liberals put on it, the faster we will be on our way.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's was speaking so lovingly about more hours. If I spent as few hours in the House as he does I would not mind extended hours either.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Taylor: I say to the Government House Leader that when the extended hours go into effect, if they do, I hope we will have a Government quorum in the House. If I was a betting man I would wager now that between six and eight there will be only a handful of Liberals here. There is a handful of faithfuls who stay and go without their dinner. There are not too many on this side of the House who stay and go without dinner either.

I would like to make a suggestion to the Government House Leader. I do not mind working overtime and I will not be extending my hours—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's on a point of order.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, my bosom pal from Bow River now misleads the House when he says that he is here more than I. He knows that in the last week alone he and I have each given four or five speeches. He knows that I am here at least as much as he is even though I am not paid as a Deputy Whip, as he is.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: The Hon. Member is partly right, except that after he makes a speech he suddenly disappears. I stay after I make my speech and listen to the others.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: However, I do not want to spend my time arguing that point. I would like to make a suggestion to the Government House Leader. I think we would do better work if we stopped between six and seven o'clock, and Members went and had a bit of dinner and then came back and worked until 11 or 11.30. I think that would be a good, common-sense thing to do. Otherwise it simply means that some will stay here without having their dinner. I do not mind doing that if it is necessary, but I think we would do better work if we stopped at six o'clock and had 45 minutes or an hour for dinner and then came back until 11 or 11.30. It is just a suggestion, I am not going to make any motion, but I think it would be good common sense.

Some Hon. Members: Leader!

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member's House Leader had made that suggestion to me, I would have considered it very seriously.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the extended hours are not really going to mean anything to me except that I will spend more hours in this place than I do now. I come here at eight o'clock in the morning and I go home at 10.30 or 11 o'clock at night. I still do not get all my work done because I spend a lot of hours in the House and there is a lot of office work to do, as every Hon. Member knows. I am not saying that I do this and others do not, not at all. I think every Hon. Member wants to get the work of the House done. I found when I was in Government for 20 years or more—I know what it is like in Government—that you have to get legislation through. We want to do that. I am not going to vote against the extended hours. We put it in the rules and it is logical.

I am not going to vote against the fact that the Government decides what business comes in. I know the Government has that prerogative and it should carry it out.

Mr. Pinard: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: I think we might be able to make some suggestions as to how it might be done better, but that perhaps is a matter of opinion.

I now want to deal with one or two other things which were said this afternoon. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) said something that I just cannot go along with, particularly when he referred to the new Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, who is a fine man. As bad as my hearing might be, I heard my Leader say that the Crow was one of the most important things to ever come before this House. It is going to have such an impact on western Canada that it has to be dealt with thoroughly. He did not say the things the Hon. Member attributed to him. I deny those things categorically. They are not right, and I hope the Hon. Member will correct that statement at some time in the future.

Mr. Deans: What statement?

Mr. Taylor: He will be here before too long and will speak for himself, but when he is not here I cannot let a statement like that go by.

Mr. Young: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I just want to bring to the Hon. Member's attention that the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain is here and has been here during his whole speech.

Mr. Taylor: Well, I never said he was not. I do not know what he is talking about.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Taylor: The only thing I know is that they sure must be hard up for Members when they start inviting me to join them.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I just want to withdraw my offer. The Hon. Member is absolutely right; we are not that hard up and I withdraw the offer.

Mr. Taylor: That makes me feel better. I would hate to have a red face. I like the colour red but not with a hammer and sickle on it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few other things about the new Leader of the PC Party. He will be here and will speak for himself but he has already made a very definite impact on the people of Canada. He has made it very clear that he is a free enterpriser, not a socialist. He has made it very clear that he is not afraid to speak to the big corporations, the CPR, CNR, Imperial Oil or anyone else. He has made it very clear that his policies will be for the people of Canada, so that every region can have a fair show. Not just one region, not just western Canada, but all of Canada. There will be fair play for all parts of Canada, and that is the way of the United Nations. His policies on the Crow, I think, are tied in with mine, because our philosophy is freedom of choice. We want the people to be able to decide. When the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain started to answer the question from my colleague, the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), he showed that he did not know what the Crow was all about. Every farm organization in Canada, except the Farmers' Union and the NDP, state that there must be a change in the Crow. Every farmer and every organization has said that. We are not prepared to live with the present Bill C-155.

Mr. Althouse: Point of order.

Mr. Taylor: We are trying to urge the Government to do something about that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Is the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre rising on a point of order?

Mr. Althouse: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member would not want to mislead the House by leaving the inference that hardly any farm organizations are against changes to the Crow. He must certainly remember that the Saskatchewan Association of Rural Municipalities, which represents every farmer in Saskatchewan, has opposed any change to the rate on Crown, as have many organizations—

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that. There is a handful.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Taylor: However, most of the farm organizations have agreed that there will not be service on the railways if the railways are not making a profit, if they are not making the thing pay. I also want to say that I think the railways must have money to give us proper service and proper transportation, but the freedom of choice—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. It being 5.12 o'clock, the two hours provided for the consideration of the motion now before the house under the provisions of Standing Order 9(2) have expired.

It is therefore my duty under Standing Orders to interrupt the proceedings and to put forth all questions necessary to dispose of the motion.

The vote is on the motion put by Mr. Pinard, seconded by Mr. Lalonde.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Call in the Members.

[English]

Madam Speaker: Before I take the vote, I would like to tell Hon. Members that I feel very strongly that 15-minute bells should be observed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATUTES OF CANADA

TABLING OF AMENDMENTS

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to lay upon the Table of the House in both official languages a copy of the Government's proposals to correct certain anomalies, inconsistencies, archaisms and errors and to deal with other matters of a non-controversial and uncomplicated nature in the Statutes of Canada.

MR. PATTERSON—TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE ON CANADIAN SOIL

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to present the following petition to the honourable the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled: the petition of the undersigned of the Official Board of Carmen United Church, Sardis, in the Province of British Columbia, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy. It humbly sheweth that many ordinary people across Canada, church leaders, parliamentarians and others share their fears of a nuclear holocaust, but still entertain the hope that it may be prevented through Government's continued efforts to discover peaceful means of settling disputes. Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to support a nuclear freeze and oppose the testing of the Cruise missile on Canadian soil. And as in duty bond, your petitioners will ever pray.

RETENTION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATES

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Madam Speaker, this petition is from two towns in my riding, Grandview and Gilbert Plains. To the honourable the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, the petition of the undersigned residents of the Province of Manitoba who now exercise their right to present a grievance humbly sheweth that the Crow rate is an important benefit to western Canada and one of the earliest incentives granted to settlers and that the changing of the Crow rate will reduce farm incomes, contribute to the breaking up of communities and branch lines and increase trucking and road costs, and that three royal commissions have recommended the retention of the Crow rate. Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the Crow rate in perpetuity as presently guaranteed by Statute. And as in duty bond, your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I too have the honour of presenting a petition from 36 Canadians from Plunkett, Saskatchewan. The petition, Madam Speaker, reads:

[Translation]

To the Honourable the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled:

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Waddell: Can I not use Canada's other official language?

Some Hon. Members: In French!

Mr. Waddell: The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now exercise their ancient and undisputed right to present a grievance, with the assurance that your honourable House of Commons will remedy the situation.

Humbly sheweth

That the Western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain in turn contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade;

That the undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy;

And that Western farmers will pay but one time the Crow rate.

Wherefore the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate.

And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

The House resumed from Tuesday, May 24, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. Pepin that Bill C-155, to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benjamin (p. 25389).

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, at this time I rise on a point of order that I consider to be of some vital importance to the business that is now before the House. You may be aware, Mr. Speaker, that we opposed first reading of Bill C-155 because we believed that the Bill was both unacceptable in principle and confusing.

You will note, Mr. Speaker, that page 380 of Erskine May, Nineteenth Edition, deals with something called a complicated question. Page 380 of Erskine May reads as follows:

> The ancient rule that when a complicated question is proposed to the House, the House may order such question to be divided, has been variously interpreted at different periods.

It goes on to read:

> In 1888, however, the Speaker ruled that two propositions which were then before the House in one motion could be taken separately if any Member objected to their being taken together. Although this ruling does not appear to have been based on any previous decision, it has since remained unchallenged. A complicated question can, however, only be divided if each part is capable of standing on its own.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, and I hope to back my submission up with some evidence, that the Bill before us does in fact place before the House a complicated question within the definition comtemplated by Erskine May, that the question before the House has three quite different principles contained within it, that those three principles are not reliant one upon the other, and that each principle is capable of standing on its own.

I would submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that Bill C-155, when voted upon at second reading, would require Members of the House of Commons to vote on three distinctly different principles with one vote. I submit that it would be impossible for a Member to exercise his or her responsibility properly if that Member were to be required to vote for or against a Bill containing three principles when in fact the Member might find himself or herself in support of one or more of the principles but in opposition to one or more of the principles.

That goes directly, therefore, to the question that Erskine May poses, that if a question is one which a Member cannot in good conscience rise and vote for freely and with the assurance that that vote will achieve the results that the Member believes ought to be achieved in dealing with the principles of the Bill, then the Bill should be divided.

In putting this point before you, I want to indicate what those three principles are. The Bill is divided into a number of parts. I want to make it clear that I am not arguing that simply because the Bill deals with more than one amendment to more than one piece of legislation, it is necessarily dealing with more than one principle.

In the case of Bill C-155 three quite different and quite distinct principles are involved. The first is to set up a new administrative procedure for dealing with the transportation, shipping and handling of grain. This procedure could be pursued independent of any other action of the Government. It deals with the establishment of a commission, the purpose of which is to set out the methods to be used and the procedures to be followed in the technical aspects of the transportation of grain over the railroads of Canada.

The second principle contained in the Bill speaks directly to the amount of money to be charged to the farmer for the movement of grain. It is a separate principle and the amount of money to be charged to the farmer could be introduced in a piece of legislation standing on its own that could be dealt with separately and quite apart from how the transportation system is to work.

I therefore submit that although those two principles are put together—in the view of the Government they may be marginally related—they are, however, capable of being dealt with separately. That is the key—they are capable of being dealt with separately. They are capable of standing on their own. They could have been introduced as separate pieces of legislation, one without the other. One piece could have been introduced without the other ever having been dealt with.

It would be possible to redevelop the railroad system using the proposals in Part I without in any way changing the method of payment that farmers currently have enshrined in law. It would equally be possible to change the method of payment without in any way altering the basic railroad system.

I submit that those are the two principles involved, each dealing with an entirely different matter—although the Government may want to relate them—and each capable of standing on its own merits. Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but it is possible that Members of the House might want to support one of the principles while opposing another of the principles.

In order that Members of the House may do their job properly on behalf of their constituents, they must be able to vote freely on second reading, which is approval in principle, without voting to do something they do not want to happen or voting against something that would automatically require that something they want would be defeated.

There is a third principle contained in Bill C-155 which speaks directly in Part VI to the disposition of the Canada coal lands. I would like to submit again that just as the principle which applies to the management and development of the railroad can and should stand on its own, and just as the principle relating to the tariff to be paid by the farmers for the movement of grain can and should stand on its own, the disposition of the Canada coal lands is in no way related to the freight rate which will be charged for the movement of grain. Nor, for that matter, is it related to the redevelopment of the railroad system. Therefore, we now have not two but three distinctly different principles.

I put to you, Sir, that that quite clearly is within the definition as set out by Erskine May on Page 380, which definition I read to you at the beginning of my remarks, when he said that a complicated question can only be divided if each part is capable of standing on its own. I submit to you that that test is clearly met by the argument which I am making. There is no one in the House who would deny that if the Government wanted to move ahead with legislation to determine how the Dominion coal lands should be handled, as a matter of principle, the Government could bring forward a piece of legislation to do that, and that could be dealt with by each Hon. Member of the House of Commons and voted upon according to how that Hon. Member believed the proper disposition of that should be achieved.

Therefore I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that we are faced with a dilemma, that is, that if the Government persists in attempting to push this particular Bill to second reading in its present form, the Government will be requiring Hon. Members of the House of Commons to vote for or against three matters of principle which are not related, three matters of principle which the Hon. Members may quite justifiably feel cannot be dealt with properly by one vote.

I would like to point out to you, if I may, that this matter has come up previously in a variety of different ways—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I regret to have to interrupt the Hon. Member. The Chair has been listening attentively to the argumentation being made by the Hon. Member and I do not want to put that argumentation in question in any way, shape or form. The Chair, however, is concerned with the matter of the process. In the opinion of the Chair, at this stage the House is considering an amendment which would have the effect, if it carried, to have for all practical purposes the Bill die or withdrawn. In the opinion of the Chair, that matter ought to be disposed of in the first instance.

However the House disposes of the question now before the House on the amendment, the Hon. Member would be quite right in raising the argumentation which he has already begun this morning. In the Chair's opinion, however, that argumentation should not be made at this time but following the disposition of the amendment which is now before the House for consideration.

Therefore, I would ask the Hon. Member to postpone his argumentation, to wait for the disposal of the amendment which, if carried, would have the effect in any case of losing the Bill as far as the Government is concerned. At that time the Chair will listen to the Hon. Member's argumentation and take it under advisement. I will hear the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

Mr. Deans: I very much appreciate the point raised by the Chair. However, I would point out that if the amendment were carried, it would be carried as the result of a vote. The argument holds whether it be the amendment, Sir, or whether it be the main motion. It can be disposed of by only one vote. It is not only possible but is a fact without question that certain parts of the Bill, even as a result of the amendment, could be defeated without that necessarily being desirable. For example, as you say, if the amendment to the motion were to carry, the Bill would fail. The three principles of the Bill would then have failed and the fact is that the three principles stand separately, in my opinion and that of my colleagues, and I hope in the opinion of other Members. Therefore to have defeated them would require that you defeat something you are in favour of.

Mr. Smith: Nothing new about that.

Mr. Deans: Which is exactly the point I am trying to make, and I appreciate the Chair for assisting me in this way. It is true that if the amendment is defeated, then the Bill continues for further discussion. Of course, at that point there could be further discussion on the point I am making. But we cannot and may not prejudge the outcome of the vote on the amendment. We are not permitted to do that. We have to assume that the amendment might well carry, and if it did, the Bill would be defeated and with it would go clauses of the Bill which Members would have wanted to vote for.

So I urge that you consider that aspect since I think the Chair has quite well made the point I have been trying to make.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Oder. The Chair is taking the various points raised by the Hon. Member under advisement on a continuing basis. In the Chair's opinion, one way out of the difficulty which now faces the House from a procedural point of view would be to withdraw the amendment at this stage. The other option, as the Chair said earlier, would be to dispose of the amendment by a voice or recorded vote as the House may choose. Otherwise, we should at this stage be proceeding with the discussion of the amendment.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I am so reluctant to engage in this because if we were to dispose of the amendment and in doing so defeat the Bill, as you are suggesting and I would certainly hope might well be the case, we would have been required to dispose of three matters of principle which stand unrelated and which, if disposed of by a vote on the amendment, would mean that we would have voted against things we were in favour of and for things we were against. That happens in the case of an amendment just as it happens in the case of a second reading vote.

I urge that you hear the argument, Sir, because it is applicable both to the disposition of the amendment and second reading. If the Speaker were to rule that there are indeed three questions of principle contained in the Bill and as a result it is indeed a complicated question as defined in Erskine May, then we would obviously at that point have to withdraw the amendment. But surely we would not dispose of the amendment in advance of determining whether or not the Chair is in fact prepared to rule that the argument, having been made and heard, is valid, that there are indeed the components of a complicated question as established by Erskine May and as dealt with over the years, and that therefore the question should be put in three separate parts for three separate votes. I beg the indulgence of the Chair at least to hear the argument out since it applies equally to the Bill's disposition by amendment or disposition by second reading vote, in my judgment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Before deciding to recognize another Hon. Member, the Chair must remind Hon. Members that the question before the House now being debated is not so much on the principle of the Bill but, rather, "that the Bill be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence".

The Chair, of course, does not wish at this time to make a comment on the arguments presented by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain. The Chair certainly recognizes his right to raise the matter he has raised, and it does not want in any way to hamper the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain in presenting that argumentation to the Chair. However, in the Chair's opinion this is not the proper time to do it because of the nature of the amendment now before the House. Therefore, the Chair, as indicated earlier, has drawn to the attention of the Hon. Member that there is simply one other option by which he would be allowed to carry on his argumentation at this time, and that would be to withdraw the amendment, because of the very nature of the amendment before the House.

The Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) sought to be recognized earlier. I will hear him out, but the Chair does not wish to encourage a prolonged debate on this matter at this time.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I want to say at the outset that I am impressed by the arguments of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). I think he has raised a very valid point.

I have been trying to follow your rationale, Mr. Speaker, and if, as you suggest, the Bill may be in improper form, if it is in fact found to be improper, then it would seem to me that the amendment would be improper as well. Therefore, the very fundamental point here, as the Hon. Member has pointed out, is that we are really dealing with three principles. I suggest that there are probably four principles enshrined in the Bill. I think there is substantive precedent. I can refer to the omnibus energy Bill, which was really at the heart and core of this issue.

My simple point is that if a Bill is before the House in improper form, that should be decided upon right now, notwithstanding the fact that we have an amendment which is substantive. It may have a bearing upon whether or not another similar amendment may be introduced.

In attempting to follow Your Honour's reasoning, I find that I am more compelled to support the Hon. Member on the basis of Your Honour's rationale.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: Same point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair will recognize the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin).

Mr. Pepin: I will be equally brief. I entirely disagree with the validity of the argument. On the basis of substance, just to look at the Bill is sufficient. It is, as we all know, divided into seven Parts. The first Part concerns administrative measures. This relates to the institutional aspect, the senior grain committee, the grain co-ordinator, and so on. Then it moves on to the establishment of rates.

Mr. Deans: Hold on. I rise on a point of order, if I may, Mr. Speaker. I would be delighted to hear the Minister's argument, but he is now arguing the substance of what I said. I am eager at the moment to find out whether I am to be permitted to continue my argument rather than hear the Minister try to defend his ill-conceived Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Chair has heard the points of order. The Chair still maintains that there are doubts as to the raising of this matter at this time in terms of procedure. Perhaps Hon. Members would allow the Chair at this time to take the matter under advisement and I will make a definite ruling at the very earliest opportunity.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, if I may ask a question, will the Chair be in a position to indicate by three o'clock the decision with regard to the appropriateness of my raising this matter now? I am absolutely convinced that if I wait too long I will then be in more trouble. I will have lost the opportunity to raise it at the first possible opportunity after it became known to me that the Government was not prepared to consider a proposal that I made to it with regard to accommodating our desire to split the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Of course, the Chair will endeavour to come forth with a ruling at the very earliest opportunity. I think the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain can take that to mean that certainly by three o'clock, if not earlier, the Chair will be in a position to rule.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I have one other small point. I just want to be clear that the ruling that the Chair proposes to make at the earliest possible moment does not go to the substance of the argument but to whether or not the argument can be made now.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order for your consideration at noon. I was told that I was out of order in some way. The argument being presented by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) is that the Bill can be split. He is trying to invoke principles. He said that the Parts were marginally related.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Chair has informed the House that it wishes to take the matter under advisement. Therefore, it would not be proper at this time to continue the debate on the question of the principles involved. That argumentation, as suggested earlier by the Chair, should come at a later stage. Therefore I think we should continue with debate at this time.

The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) on another point of order?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order concerning whether it is appropriate for discussion to occur now or after dealing with the amendment. Since I am the mover of the amendment I wish to ask the Chair to consider me as an individual Member who would like to vote for two parts of the Bill and against one part of it. Of course, I will have to support my own amendment and that is why I wish to submit that when the Chair takes this matter under advisement it realize that all Hon. Members who may support one or more principles of the Bill and oppose others are in the same position.

Even on the amendment, Members are being asked to vote against measures they favour and for measures they oppose. Surely when the Chair is taking this under advisement it can do nothing other than to say that the appropriateness of the original point raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain is valid and that the decision on splitting the Bill must occur before a vote on the amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Chair does not wish to hear additional contributions to the point of order. I have informed the House that I wish to take this matter under advisement at this time. We are simply dealing with process. We are not arguing principles involved in the Bill but the appropriateness of hearing the points of order at this time. That is the first and fundamental matter that must be decided.

When that ruling is made the Chair will gladly hear other Hon. Members who wish to debate the points originally raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain. I think that is generally agreed.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on another point of order. I want to draw to your attention page 26363 of Hansard of June 14, 1983. It says the following:

> That Vote 40, in the amount of $35,000,000 under the Department of External Affairs—Payment to the Export Development Corporation for operating losses, in the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984, (less the amount voted in Interim Supply), be concurred in.

It then goes on to show the division. The division shows as follows—and I will not read them all because I am not trying to waste time—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: You should wait for it. The list includes Mr. Allmand, Mr. Andre, Mrs. Appolloni, Mr. Bachand, Mr. Baker (Gander-Twillingate), Mr. Beatty, Madam Beauchamp-Niquet, and the list goes on. However, the Votes and Proceedings of June 14 at page 6016 states:

> Mr. Gray, seconded by Mr. Pinard, moved,—That Vote 40, in the amount of $35,000,000 under the Department of External Affairs—Payment to the Export Development Corporation for operating losses, in the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984 (less the amount voted in Interim Supply), be concurred in.

It then shows a different list of persons having voted for the motion. The Members who voted as shown in Hansard are not the Members who voted as shown in the Votes and Proceedings. There is something drastically wrong. Either the Members did vote or did not vote for the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I am sure that the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain raises a legitimate matter. However, the Chair does not see in what way it is related to the debate now before the House.

Mr. Deans: It is not related at all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Matters of this nature are normally dealt with during Routine Proceedings following Question Period. Unless the Hon. Member can show how the point he raises is related to the Bill and the amendment now before the House, I think it is quite inappropriate to raise the matter at this time. However, I will hear the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I will not argue with you. It is my obligation to raise points of order when they are first brought to my attention. I happened to have this brought to my attention on reading it right now. I must raise it when I know it is wrong. I now know it is wrong and a point of order, regardless of its being related to what is happening, is always in order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): In any case, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain was allowed to make his point. I am sure the error will be corrected as usual.

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. You have suggested that you will be bringing back a recommendation later this afternoon. I would like you to consider the fact that Part IV of this Bill, which my House Leader has brought to your attention, affects my riding very seriously.

Mr. Smith: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Member is now raising a matter which deals with principles contained in the Bill. The Chair informed the House earlier that it would bring down a ruling on the question of the process of raising the point of order at this time. Therefore I would invite Hon. Members to proceed with debate. The Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens).

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, on May 24 I began for a few moments simply to give another perspective with respect to this debate. The bottom line of my argument is that we should all recognize in the House that the executives of CP are very clever bargainers. They are very good dealers. With respect to this matter, they obviously have the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) in their pockets. They have him doing substantially what CP feel would be very much in their interest.

I was pointing out that there is another side to this issue, and that is the injustice that has been perpetrated for years on various minority shareholders and bondholders in subsidiary companies that are controlled and dominated by CP and virtually run by CP with respect to their assets as if those assets were in fact CP assets. I say this because I think the facts will show when we get to committee that much of the land the Minister of Transport proposes to deal with, much of the tremendous new subsidy that will go into the CP, actually and rightfully should be for the benefit of shareholders and bondholders that have nothing directly to do with CP at all. The CP, through technicalities with long-term leases, sometimes running as long as 999 years, through long-term financing, sometimes in perpetuity, in some instances for 100 years, has been fleecing shareholders and bondholders not only in Canada but unfortunately in other countries, in particular the United Kingdom.

If I may, in the few minutes that I have left I would like to put on the record the case that I think can be made. The Crowsnest Pass Agreement was negotiated with CP and the Government on behalf of the people of Canada. The intention was to induce settlement of the West in reliance of the Government's promise of a fixed freight rate.

The Government of Canada and CP have made many agreements. Everyone knows of the vast land subsidies granted by the Government to induce building of the railway. Not everybody knows, however, of the many government acts entitling CP to enter into long term and perpetual leases at fixed rates and issue long term and even perpetual debt at fixed rates. The CP's method of accounting leads to tunnelvision when looking at the Crow rate. The CP has segmented its operations into rail, and other operations, such as Marathon Realty, CP Enterprises and Cominco. The enormous wealth generated from the lands and minerals granted to the CP by the Government are segregated to other companies and certain CP rail operations show a loss. The Government or people of Canada are constantly being shown the loss side of the ledger but not the profit side.

The Government provided these subsidy lands which have, through time, become enormously valuable in consideration of CP's obligation for freight and passenger service in Canada. Now that the subsidy land profits have been realized, CP appears with its segmented accounting to show a loss in freight and passenger operations. We have already totally bailed out CP in its passenger operations. VIA Rail paid outrageous prices for old rolling stock and at the present time leases the rail service of CP so that the people of Canada have paid twice for passenger service which it now provides for itself.

Take a look at the consolidated operations of CP and you will see consistent profits from the total assets provided originally by the Canadian taxpayers.

The argument really is that time has made the Crow rate an economic burden to CP and an unfair economic windfall to Canadian farmers. That, I suggest, is not a fair picture. The present Canadian farmers bought their lands at prices reflecting farm incomes based on the Crow rate. The present shareholders of CP bought their shares at prices reflecting CP's consolidated income including the Crow rate. If, therefore, the rate is increased, present wheat farmers suffer an injustice in both capital and income and CP shareholders have increased profits and capital value of their shares. What is the justice in that? The promise of the Crow rate given by the Government should not work to the detriment of those people or their descendants who relied on the promise to move west so that shareholders of CP could get an increased windfall profit.

May I continue, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I must advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for York-Peel to conclude his speech?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

An Hon. Member: Do you want to hear the truth?

Mr. Smith: I do not want to hear the filibuster.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) spoke for only five minutes the last day, and he commenced today at 11:39 a.m.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Taylor: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that does amount to ten minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Bow River is usually right.

The Hon. Member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Clark).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have this initial opportunity to rise to participate in the debates of this House and I wish to begin by thanking the electorate of Brandon-Souris for their support in the recent by-election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): I look forward to serving my constituents in the remaining days of this Parliament and, I hope, in many Parliaments to come.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): I am particularly pleased to speak on this amendment as the question of the Crow was much debated during the course of my by-election campaign. I would like, therefore, to share with you, Mr. Speaker, and the House, the views of the farmers of my constituency, views which they often expressed over the course of the last four months.

Let me begin by recognizing that there are many diverging viewpoints on this proposal but those viewpoints, in my opinion, differ more in terms of detail than they do in substance. The vast majority of farmers in my constituency are opposed to the Government's transportation policy in its present form. As a result, I rise to speak in strong support of this amendment to postpone consideration of this Bill for six months because I am of the opinion that additional time is required for consideration of this very important and very detailed proposal.

Half of my constituents reside in the so-called rural portion of Brandon-Souris, and even those who live within the city of Brandon understand fully that agriculture is the backbone of the economy of my constituency. Furthermore, all members of my constituency recognize that the agricultural industry is equally vital to the economy of all of western Canada.

Unfortunately, prairie farmers have been suffering for several years from a financial crisis which has been caused by a combination of factors, many of which are direct results of the Government's energy and economic policies. On the one hand, rising interest rates, combined with excessively high fuel and fertilizer costs, have caused the farmers' costs to rise to unequalled levels. Tragically, those costs have been escalating at the very time farmers' incomes have been falling as a result of declining world prices for grain. Western Canadian farmers, as a result, find themselves in an extremely dangerous financial crisis at this moment. Therefore the Government's proposal to abolish the Crow and to increase the farmers' transportation costs has been put forward at an extremely unfortunate time in the history of western agriculture.

The majority of farmers with whom I have spoken are painfully aware of the need for an improved transportation system, and they are prepared to pay a reasonable share of the cost to provide that system. They very legitimately argue, however, that there are very real limits to what they can afford to pay. For that reason I proposed during the course of the by-election, and as I suggested in this House last week, that the farmers' share of their transportation costs must be regulated in such a manner that their farming operations will remain viable.

What is required, therefore, is the creation by statute of a ceiling price which will protect the farmer from the possibility that his costs will rise on the one hand, while the value of his produce declines on the other. I propose, therefore, that a ceiling of approximately 7 per cent of the initial price for grain, or 7 per cent of the average price for non-board grains, be established. That percentage corresponds to the farmers' average transportation costs during the past quarter century. If this proposal is accepted, farmers will know that their transportation costs will not escalate beyond reason nor beyond their capability to pay.

The creation of such a ceiling, a ceiling that would be significantly lower than the Government's proposed safety net of 10 per cent of the weighted average price for grains, would require, of course, that the federal Government would have to contribute more than it is currently proposing to the cost of improving the country's rail system. Members on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, believe very strongly that such money would be better spent on improving the farmers' transportation system than on other projects, such as the $1.4 billion which has been recently extended to cover the losses of Canadair.

In addition to being assured that the farmers' share of transportation costs will be regulated by statute, prairie grain producers need the guarantee that these reduced rates should apply to all the grain which farmers can produce. Any proposal to charge the full commercial rates on that portion of the farmers' crop exceeding 31.3 million tonnes would only discourage increased productivity.

I would like to conclude by noting that many western grain producers wish further time to examine this very detailed proposal, as the Government's proposal could have a devastating impact upon western agricultural industry if it is implemented in its present form. Those individuals and the various farm organizations to which they belong require more time in which to study the Bill and to reach a consensus on the merits of the proposal. I will vote, therefore, in favour of the amendment which is designed to postpone consideration of this Bill for six months.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, since it is the Hon. Member's maiden speech, which we were all glad to hear, and in accordance with the tradition of the House when Members make their maiden speeches, I am sure there would be unanimous consent for him to continue his remarks if he wished to do so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It is the Hon. Member's privilege to seek extended time. I gather he is not making that request at this time.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by congratulating the Hon. Member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Clark) on his maiden speech. It was an outstanding effort of bringing to this House the very legitimate concerns of the electors who enabled him to enter this House because of their desire, first of all, that a rotten Government be replaced by a Party which is capable of bringing to this House Members such as the Hon. Member who has just spoken, to represent the concerns of their constituents, particularly in the area of the Crow rate that is of such crucial importance to western Canada. I am very pleased to pay my respects to the new Member and on behalf of my colleagues to welcome him formally here after his first speech.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roche: It may not surprise you, Mr. Speaker, that an urban Member of Parliament is now on his feet in the House. While my good friend, the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise), will recognize that my participation in the agricultural work of this House has not been particularly notable, there is a very real reason why an urban Member enters this debate. It is because what we are discussing here today on the Crow rate is of interest not only to the agricultural experts in this House and rural Members such as we have just heard, but it is central to the very life of western Canada, including the urban Members of this House.

This debate is really only beginning. We are representing here the viewpoint of western Canada. Other Members are bringing to the House viewpoints from other parts of Canada. It is a national issue. I believe it is absolutely correct to note, as the new Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, Mr. Brian Mulroney, made clear, that changing the Crow rate is akin to changing language legislation in Quebec. It is of the same dimension. That is why this Bill should not be rushed through Parliament. Careful deliberation and thought are necessary. I believe, with the new Leader of our Party, that productivity must be improved in Canada and, since agriculture is the only bright light in the Canadian economy, farmers should not be penalized under this Bill.

I want, with others, to draw the attention of the Government to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) who brought out his 14-point critique on this Bill on May 12 last. At that time he put forward a promising compromise that is at least one way for us to approach the extreme difficulties that the Bill presents. That compromise would allow the producer to decide if he wants the Crow benefit personally as opposed to having it paid directly to the railways. Such freedom of choice would give the producer the opportunity to affect the development of the grain-handling system, freeing the market to create and maximize efficiency. It would put decision making in the hands of the farmers themselves rather than having Government and the railways telling farmers what is good for them.

In this regard Bill C-155 is particularly lacking. Despite giving the railways what will amount to an extraordinary 1,000 per cent increase in freight rates by 1990, it nonetheless does not guarantee an efficient, cost-effective, and reliable grain transportation system.

In the time available for this part of the debate, I cannot deal with my many concerns and objections. Let me just concentrate on a couple of points. Perhaps I will have an opportunity at another stage of the debate to elaborate on my concerns.

The Government's initiative on changing the Crow does not give western Canada the opportunity for economic diversification which our vulnerable, resource dominated economy so badly needs, most directly in the realms of livestock and agricultural processing. According to the Minister's own figures, this Bill will further distort existing anomalies in freight rates, costing $1 billion in livestock production and an additional $350 million in processing activity. Moreover, by removing the statutory rates the agricultural sector will be denied a much needed factor of stability in an economic sphere which has been plagued by wild fluctuations in prices.

In a very real sense, these statutory rates for the shipment of western grain have been a key trade-off of Confederation, and that is the centrepiece of the positions we are presenting here. This has been a counter balance to the protection extended to industrial based central Canada. This buffered western Canada against harsh and often unfair international competition. Australian farmers pay less than 50 per cent of the cost of shipping their produce. Argentina gives free rail transport for grain. Wheat farmers in the EEC get a direct subsidy of $2.53 per bushel. Even our neighbouring farmers in the United States receive similarly large subsidies.

I call to the attention of the House what the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) recently pointed out, that the western producer must not be impeded, particularly in pursuing exports to the enlarging markets throughout the whole developing world. That will be a tremendous potential market, and to penalize Canadian farmers by not allowing them to reach that market does not make sense, as my colleague has said. Mr. Speaker, the West is not asking for some sort of special concession; it is simply seeking the capacity to compete on equal terms with the rest of the world, knowing full well that international trade is Canada's lifeblood.

By once more harming the aspirations of western Canada, the Government has again succeeded in pitting region against region and class against class. It is tragically fitting that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) should have branded the Crown initiative as the third major initiative since this Government was re-elected in 1980, referring also to the patriation of the Constitution and the National Energy Program. Like its predecessors, Sir, Bill C-155 has divided rather than reconciled.

At one time the Government claimed to have the interests of western Canada in mind. Much was heard, Sir, about the famous Western Development Fund that in 1980 promised $4 billion. Now, of course, this Fund has been relegated to the corridors of oblivion. Only $659 million has been allocated, and allocated primarily for very unimaginative and ad hoc measures. I would like to know what has happened to the Western Development Fund.

On another occasion I will make some remarks about a proposal that I want to bring to the House for a western development council that would be composed of experts on economic and social questions from the four western Provinces and the North. This council could provide a basis for integrated economic and social development in the West that would co-ordinate data from all spheres and could certainly find a just solution to the long standing problem of the Crow so that grain production in western Canada can meet the demands of a world that is in great change.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honour to have the opportunity to participate in this debate. This issue is a very fundamental and crucial one for the nation, Mr. Speaker, and this is the first chance I have had to rise in the House and address this issue in debate. Clearly I have been preceded by numerous colleagues of mine from the New Democratic Party who have put the case for the western farmers very eloquently and very strongly and have based their arguments upon concepts of social justice.

Much has already been said and there is not a great deal that I can add in terms of detail or even in terms of understanding to this issue, but I still feel that because of the fundamental importance of this issue I should add my words to what has already been said about the Government's efforts to ram through the House of Commons changes to the Crow rate.

I would like to mention briefly, Mr. Speaker, that the Government's efforts to ram changes to the Crow rate through the House has brought about a kind of an alliance, at least for a while, between the interests of people in Quebec and the interests of people in western Canada. The fact that the Government backed away from its original proposals and was forced to change those proposals—and, Mr. Speaker, we expect more changes from the Government—shows the force and the power of a potential alliance between western Canada and Quebec in terms of serving the interest of justice for all people of the nation.

[Translation]

I would like to stress, Mr. Speaker, the power of an alliance between the people of Quebec and the people of western Canada. In view of the fact that an alliance would serve the interests of social justice, it is very important to recognize in Canada that it would be easy for both the people of Quebec and of western Canada to work together to find a solution to some very formidable problems and to promote the interests of social justice. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the House will, through legislation, pursue this objective in other areas, both economic and social.

[English]

The fundamental question that faces the House with regard to this legislation is the question of who the Government is listening to. Whose side is the Government on? To whose problems are they paying attention? Clearly there are two groups of people who have put their cases to the Government and the Government is listening to one side only. These two groups are the farmers and the corporate executives of the railways. The Government has clearly put its full weight behind the interests of the corporate executives of the railways. It has decided to serve private corporate interests and to ignore community interests and the needs of many small farmers across Canada. That really tells us what the Government is all about.

Both the railways and the farmers have received subsidies and now it is the farmers who are being asked to give up those subsidies and to pay market value. Where is the proposal to ask the railways to pay market value for the subsidies that they were given in order to build a transportation system in the country? Fairness demands that both groups be treated alike. As long as the railways are allowed to continue to reap the benefits of the enormous subsidies given to them when they were formed, the farmers of the country who are in much greater financial need should be allowed to continue to reap the necessary benefits of the modest subsidies that they have been getting over the years.

This is a question of fundamental social justice. It is one of the principles of democracy in the sense that the purpose of an elected Government and an elected Parliament is to bring public concerns, the concerns of the community, to bear upon legislation and not to ally itself with powerful private interests in the country.

A part of this legislation obviously relates to a question of investment in railway redevelopment. The question that faces the House is, who will pay for that investment? The Government's policy and legislation calls upon the farmers to pay for that investment. It claims that this investment cannot go ahead unless the farmers pay for it. Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the basic principles of investment is that investment, if it is true investment, pays for itself.

The notion that is contained in the Government's proposal is that somehow, if all parts of a transportation system do not pay market value, the investment is called into question. That, Mr. Speaker, is a ludicrous notion. It is a notion that fails to take into account concepts of sharing. It fails to take into account the fact that that investment must serve the public purpose in the sense of providing service to all communities. For example, if the philosophy behind this legislation was used to run the transit system in Ottawa or the transit system in Winnipeg where I come from, there is no way that transit services could be provided to suburban communities. One must realize that the market value of transportation services within the core, the price per ticket that an individual rider of the transit system should pay, is infinitesimally smaller than that which a suburban user should pay. It only shows that investment must be used to provide service, and if it is real investment it will pay for itself. The purpose of investment, even that which pays for itself, is to provide service for all the community. We must realize that in many situations the rich part of the system has to subsidize the poorer part of it so that all can benefit.

Investment must serve social justice. In this case we call upon the Government to make sure that this investment in railways serves social justice as it affects farmers and not just the private interests of the railway magnates.

It is not only in the case of farmers that investment coming from railways must serve social justice; it must also serve the urban communities in the country. I think of my own community of Winnipeg. If there is to be an enormous investment in railways as the Government has suggested, then I should like to know what plans it has to invest in the relocation of the massive railway yards in the City of Winnipeg out of the City.

I want to know that for several reasons. First of all, if the railway yards are not removed from the centre of the City, they will continue to have a detrimental impact on the neighbourhoods in which the poorest of our citizens live. Very expensive bridges will have to be built which will cut up the inner city neighbourhoods and thus wreak further social injustice. This is not acceptable. Investment must serve social justice, not simply private interests and private property.

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to make a few comments on Bill C-155 in the brief time allotted to me and also the opportunity to support the amendment which would provide a six-month hoist.

Given the magnitude of the issue before us today and the concerns and problems associated with it, I am sure that everyone, with the exception of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), would agree that it is impossible to deal adequately, from almost any point of view, with any aspect of the Bill.

I want to take the opportunity as well, as some of my colleagues have already, to draw the attention of Members of the House and a good number of people outside the House who have been following the debate closely to the excellent, well-considered and logical response to the introduction of the Bill by my seatmate and colleague, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski).

There has been much mention throughout the debate of the historical significance of this type of legislation and I agree with those statements. I have the distinct feeling, however, that Canadians generally—even some Canadians in western Canada but more particularly in central Canada and in my Province of Ontario and to a lesser extent in Atlantic Canada—are unaware of the significance of the legislation. I do not think it is an overstatement to say that the debate has the same significance and is as important as the constitutional debate and the debate on the National Energy Program. The result of this legislation, if it is not properly amended, will be as disastrous for the nation and the individual Canadian as that national energy policy.

The Bill was introduced on May 10; second reading debate began on May 12. We argued that the two-day interval was not enough for an adequate study of the Bill and the preparation of a response to it. On May 16 the Minister of Agriculture—not the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin)—indicated that he would move closure on second reading debate. The Government had allowed only 10 hours and 50 minutes of debate at that time, although I believe there has been another day of debate since. Until that time only a handful of the 48 Opposition Members from the three prairie Provinces had spoken, although they represent the people most directly affected by the Bill. A lesser opportunity was provided to those of us from other areas of the country.

I do not profess to be an expert on this legislation, Mr. Speaker. We have gone through four stages in the Crown debate in the last year or so. We have had the Gilson report, the Pepin proposals, the introduction of Bill C-155, and finally changes were made to the Bill. Those changes made at each step of the process were never fully explained or rationalized, however. It is no wonder, then, that there is such widespread discontent and dissatisfaction with the legislation.

The original proposal of the Minister of Transport was screened by his caucus colleagues. It is an offence to Parliament that Members of the Government caucus had an opportunity to examine the legislation and make substantive changes, whereas Members of the Opposition were told that their opportunity to discuss it at second reading would be cut off. It is obvious that a dual standard has been applied to the debate.

It is even more offensive that those Members who will be prevented from debating the Bill represent the people most directly affected by it. Parliament is supposed to represent the people, so the people's representatives must be given every opportunity to speak and to be heard.

I also find it interesting, but not surprising, that it was the Minister of Agriculture and not the Minister of Transport who announced the likelihood of closure, or the application of Standing Order 75C to the Bill. The Minister of Transport was available in the House at that time and had just finished answering the questions minutes before. But it was left to the Minister of Agriculture to introduce the motion because the

We believe that the distortion of the low freight rates in grain and oil seeds vis-à-vis processed products should be removed and that natural advantages should be retained. The Bill will not achieve that goal. In fact, it will aggravate it. By making a direct payment to the railways it will also further distort existing freight rate inequities and will help prevent further diversification in western Canada. It will cost livestock producers an extra $20 per tonne for feed and that is a very serious problem. Livestock production in western Canada is a significant part of our total farm income.

The livestock sector of agriculture makes up some 40 per cent of total farm cash receipts in Manitoba, 17 per cent of total farm cash receipts in Saskatchewan, and in the large livestock Province of Alberta it makes up some 47 per cent of total farm income.

It is fundamental in my opinion—and I am speaking as a Canadian from central Canada—that western Canada's agricultural base must be broadened and diversified. According to the Minister's own statistics, the distortion will result in a loss of an additional $1 billion in livestock production, an additional $350 million worth of economic activity with respect to processing, packing plants and the feed mill industry in western Canada, costing western Canada some 6,000 jobs.

We believe that grain producers must have a statutory freight rate which preserves the benefit of the Crow and must be protected from that open-ended escalation. Producers will be paying double the existing Crow rate by 1985 and 1986, and an additional $160 million will be taken out of the prairie economy. Producers will also pay five and a half times Crow by 1991 or 1992, which means that more than $1 billion will be lost from the economy of western Canada. With the low level of grain prices today and in the foreseeable future, producers cannot afford the freight rate increases in Bill C-155 at this particular time.

As well, there is no statutory protection for the farmers in this Bill. This protection has been transferred to the federal Government which will pay a frozen amount of $651 million annually, I believe, in perpetuity. We believe that producers should be guaranteed an efficient, cost-effective and reliable grain transportation system in this country. There is no question about that. In this Bill, however, there will not be railway performance guarantees for the first three years. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the railways for the first three years will certainly receive a free ride.

We believe that the Government of Canada and the railways have a continuing obligation to provide a special low rate to assist producers competing with subsidized grain exports of other nations. Bill C-155 will be taking that away at a time when Canadian grain export competitors have been increasing their assistance to their own domestic grain producers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to inform the Hon. Member that the time allotted for his speech has expired. The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, if it is allowable to have questions, I would be willing to stand down for whoever wishes to question the previous speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): No, I should inform the Hon. Member that this time slot does not provide for questions or comments.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the debate on this Crowsnest Pass rate clearly means different things to people in different parts of Canada. Many of my New Democrat colleagues have indicated clearly what ruin this Liberal legislation would bring to the grain farmers in Canada's Prairies. I agree with them. However, I speak first of all for the people of Spadina, and I wish to tell this House what the killing of the Crow rate would mean to Spadina people, first, and to Canadians generally.

What do the Spadina people need most? What is the biggest source of worry among us? Jobs. We need jobs, well paid and secure, and in that we are like most of the rest of Canada. There is talk of economic recovery. However, there are far too many desperate people asking me about jobs.

There are jobs to be created in the rebuilding of our railway network, good permanent jobs. According to the proposal of the NDP there are main railbeds and branch lines to be rebuilt to carry heavier and faster trains; there is a double track to be built through the mountains to the Pacific, with tunnels and bridges; there is the Hudson Bay line to be rebuilt; the Thunder Bay yards and port facilities to be renovated; lines across Ontario and the Maritimes to be rebuilt; level crossings in populated areas to be replaced by grade separations—

Mr. Pepin: Let's go, then.

Mr. Heap: I hear the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) saying "Let's go". The trouble is that he gets off that train when it gets to about Manitoba. He does not have plans for renovating the lines east of Manitoba nor even up to Hudson Bay. He has forgotten his own lines.

We must also look into the matter of converting as many lines as we can to the use of electricity instead of diesel. We must build 12,000 grain hopper cars and new passenger trains, and rail service for passengers and freight should be increased rather than abandoned, which is the main preoccupation of the present Minister of Transport.

Will that mean jobs for people of Spadina? Certainly, and for many other parts of Canada. The rolling stock, tracks and other equipment can be manufactured in Canada's industrial cities, and not only steel and metal fabricating but textile manufacturing, furniture making and office supply manufacturing, which we do in Spadina.

All kinds of service work will be stimulated as well as the running and maintenance trades of the railway, which is the occupation of many Spadina residents. However, how many jobs and who pays? That is where the plan of the Minister of Transport fails. He not only plans a smaller program than the NDP, a program which fails to renovate anything east of Manitoba or in north Manitoba, but he wants to finance his program in a way which would make many Canadians poorer and also destroy many jobs. The Minister proposes to create an average of 38,500 jobs per year over ten years in the upgrading work. He would donate the whole $930 million cost to the railroads and pay for it partly out of general taxation and partly by overcharging the farmers by about five times as much as they now pay to transport their grain to eastern Canada for feed or to the ocean for export. This is monstrously unfair and in fact unworkable.

The Government has for over 30 years been raising the tax burden on working people while it lowers the tax burden on big corporations like the CPR. In 1950 total taxes paid by workers were roughly equal to the total paid by corporations. By 1970 the workers were paying three times as much as the corporations. This year the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) put through his income tax amendments, over the opposition of the New Democratic Party, which will take $2.5 billion more from workers and small business people and hand it over to corporations like the CPR.

Furthermore, the CPR, the biggest and richest corporation in Canada, has already received over $13 billion worth of gifts in today's dollars from the Government and the taxpayers of Canada in the form of cash grants, land and construction gifts and subsidies for operating and maintenance. The CPR makes over half a billion dollars a year profit. The sum of $13 billion is almost half the deficit which the Minister of Finance keeps holding over our heads, and he wants to give the railways almost $1 billion a year more. That is a rip-off! Beside that, the Gillespie and Canadair scandals are peanuts. That is about $60 a year taken from every working man and woman in Canada in order to increase the wealth and power of the shareholders of the CPR. Furthermore, the Minister of Transport plans to recover some of this fat gift from the western grain farmers. These farmers must export about 30 million tonnes of grain per year, bringing in over $4 billion to Canada.

The agreement made when the Government of Canada paid 60 per cent of the cost of building the CPR was that the railway would transport the grain to the ports for fixed cost. Canada's farmers must compete with farmers of the United States, Argentina, Australia and France, all of which subsidize their grain farmers. Therefore Canadians cannot easily raise our export prices. In fact, during 1975-80 the total income of prairie farmers dropped by 44 per cent while the total income of CP Rail went up by 284 per cent. The farmer simply cannot pay the exorbitant freight rates which the railroads and the Minister are demanding.

If this Crow Bill becomes law, many family farmers will be forced out of business. When their incomes shrink or they are forced out of business, they will have less money to spend on farm machinery and other manufactured goods which they buy from Ontario and Quebec. They would lose nearly $600 million per year, which directly means 20,000 manufacturing and retail jobs will be lost here in the East. Furthermore, if it costs more to ship the grain easterly through Canada than southerly through the United States, we will lose another 35,000 handling and transportation jobs.

What is the reasonable alternative to the Minister's crazy plan? I would say it is the New Democratic Party's plan, which is, number one, to keep the Crowsnest Pass rate for grain, and number two, to make the CPR reinvest its profits, made with public subsidy, in upgrading the railway which it solemnly promised to keep running. It must be compelled by law to maintain the level of reinvestment of 1981, which would be over $800 million this year, rather than exporting its profits to buy factories, railroads and real estate in other countries. In this way we could create 10,000 more jobs per year than under the Minister's plan. Thirdly, our plan would pay the proven cost of subsidizing grain hauling, which might be $380 million in 1983, out of Canadian taxes.

Mr. Pepin: That is the point; charge it to others. Make it $2 billion by the end of the decade.

Mr. Heap: This is less than the federal Government pays to subsidize road, air or marine transport. Number four, we would invest $550 million per year in renovating the railroads, and in return take equity or ownership in the CPR. In a few years the Canadian people would own and control the CPR, which we have already paid for so many times over.

This NDP plan keeps the Crow, keeps the grain moving through Canada, keeps the farmers from going broke, reduces the tax burden on working people, employs more workers than the Minister's plan, and gives the Canadian people ownership of what we pay for. That is good for the people of Spadina and good for the people of Canada.

There is a question still hanging: Why does the Minister push his plan to kill the Crow? Maybe he likes to increase the wealth of a handful of people. When he announced his plan to kill the Crow rate, the value of CPR shares jumped overnight by $134 million plus, and in a month had risen by over $447 million. Why? Perhaps because of the fat giveaways the Minister promises at the expense of farmers and other ordinary taxpayers. Perhaps because of $644 billion worth of coal in the 50,000 acres of coal-bearing land in southern B.C. This coal is locked up as a reserve under the Crows Nest Pass Act. Fording Coal Company next door, a subsidiary to CPR, cannot get its hand on that immense profit unless the Minister can repeal the Crows Nest Pass Act, which is his principal objective in this legislation. Under those circumstances, Mr. Speaker, repeal of the Crow's Nest Pass Act, or this Minister's legislation to kill the Crow, would be the biggest rip-off and crime any Canadian Government has ever engineered against the working people and ordinary taxpayers of Canada. I say, stop it!

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Clark), who made his maiden speech today. I think he did a marvellous job in telling the people of Canada just exactly what happened in that election campaign. The reason he won such a large majority was because of this Minister and the Crow rate.

Let me say that I have a lot of respect for this Minister, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Pepin). He is such a kind person, yet he does not care about the West.

Mr. Smith: How can you sleep at night?

Mr. Paproski: I do not think it is really him; I think it is just the Liberal Party that does not care.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: It is a heartless Party which does not really care what happens west of the Manitoba border. You people should be ashamed of yourselves.

Mr. Prud'homme: Where were you in 1968, Steve?

Mr. Paproski: I have had many calls in Edmonton from entrepreneurs who go through these different communities and towns and all they talk to me about is the Crow rate. These are people in my constituency, and I have an urban riding, who ask what the Government is doing. By doing what the Government is doing to the Crow rate, it is ruining the country. We in the West fear there will be many ghost towns all over the West.

The Bill must be changed from its present form; that is why we oppose the Bill. We do not know what its impact will be in towns and communities, particularly in the West. We do not know whether the Government will irrevocably alter this Bill. We do not know the nature and extent of any changes. For example, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson), quoted a calculation made by the Town Council of Gravelbourg in his riding which estimated that changes to the Crow would cost each Saskatchewan farmer $8,500 by 1990. Can you imagine that, Sir? That would mean an outflow of over $1 million per year for Gravelbourg alone. What will this amount of capital outflow mean to towns and villages all over the West? It is incredible. I cannot believe what this Bill is going to do to many of our communities in the West. How will they survive? How will they pay for the infrastructure and services they must provide, such as schools, hospitals and roads?

Oh, the Minister says double tracking. Big deal! Double tracking, fast tracking; we have heard that here for ten years. Every time the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) goes into an election he says they are going to twin this, twin that, do this or do that. We are still waiting for that highway to the Yukon, the Alaska Highway, which he said he was going to pave way back in 1974. I do not know who you are going to have, maybe blue-eyed Turner next time, and what is he going to twin?

Mr. Turner: You are talking about my uncle; be careful!

Mr. Paproski: Well, there is the whip. He likes you, whippy, over there. It is all right, you are going to be back. But there are a few of you under our new leadership who will not be back. The country will see the light.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Member should address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Paproski: I really am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I get a little excited or emotional. We are still sort of hung over from the euphoria of our convention. The polls will be 55 per cent next month.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: This legislation would permit the railroads to offer incentives to farmers to bypass local elevators and truck their grain to the main lines. What effect will this have on the small town whose existence revolves around the elevators? Where will the elevator operators find jobs? How are farmers going to bear the increased costs once the statutory rates are abolished? Producers will be paying double the existing Crow rate by 1985-86, and in addition $160 million will be taken out of the prairie economy. Farmers will pay five and a half times the Crow by 1991-92, which means that more than $1 billion will disappear from western Canada. How many farm bankruptcies will result? How many people will be displaced? Where will they go? Where will they find jobs? How many towns will die? Are we going to have towns whose entire population, the forest service, the utility company, the post office and liquor store, will disappear? Is that going to be the community profile of the West, decaying little towns? We should really have magnifying glasses and sunshades here because of the heat in the House.

We do not know any of the answers to these questions and the Minister has not provided us any answers. Neither has Mr. Gilson. But we do know the serious flaws of this Bill. First, we believe the freight rate structure will provide for open ended escalation without any consideration for farmers' profit position on the value of grain. The Minister has mentioned a safety net provision but has not provided any details. Second, the grain farmers will have to pay the full Crow rate whenever grain movement exceeds 31.5 million tonnes. This represents a disincentive for farmers to grow more grain and increase production.

Mr. Rossi: Who wrote that speech?

Mr. Paproski: I did. The Bill includes new crops and specialty crops. The Minister has mentioned that some speciality crops are included but again he has provided no details. One would think that some Hon. Members who are out there in urban ridings do not know what the farm community really wants and what it requires. I just want Hon. Members to know that after one has been here for 15 years, one wants to ensure that one's speech is logical and one just carries on and carries on making sure that Hon. Members opposite understand what is going on.

• (1240)

Mr. Rossi: We understand very easily.

Mr. Paproski: The Bill is extremely complex and bureaucratic, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr.

Mazankowski), pointed out. It might have been drafted by the same people who brought down the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Rossi: Have you read it?

Mr. Paproski: We think it is wrong to impose higher costs on the agricultural community just when farm community prices are declining and farm input costs are increasing.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that because of the interjections you will give me a little more time. I will feel neglected if I am to be cut off.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: The Bill would discourage diversification and further processing of agricultural production in western Canada. There is no provision in the Bill to reduce rates if costs should fall. It is the same trap as the energy agreement. The Bill concentrates power in the hands of the Minister, the Minister sitting opposite, that heartless Minister, the Minister who does not care.

Mr. Smith: He's a nice guy.

Mr. Paproski: There will be no railroad performance guarantees for the first three years. For three years, the railroads will get a free ride.

The Government should consider the context in which it is attempting to rush through such a complex and flawed piece of legislation. First, it must understand what the transportation system represents in the West. The Crow rate is the heart of the West. Someone said it is the Magna Carta of the West. If the Government takes that away, it might as well take away the second language, the official language. If that is done, that is exactly what it will represent. The gentlemen opposite from Quebec understand. They want to be "bilingue"; we want the Crow rate in the West.

Mr. Rossi: Talk to Stewart, from Simcoe South, about "bilingue".

Mr. Paproski: It is not just a method of moving goods and people. It is not just a double line steel or a length of asphalt traversing the prairie. The railroad, the highway and the river—these are frequently the reasons many of these towns exist. They determine the location, activity and well-being of the towns and villages. They represent a means of communication and the lifeline for the provision of goods and services and commerce. If the Government destroys those transportation networks, it destroys the towns and villages which make up much of western Canada.

Second, the Government must understand what a critical time this is for farmers. The amount of bankruptcies and the high costs are unbelievable. We are feeling the pinch there right now that Hon. Members opposite felt right here about a year and a half ago. The Government must understand what a critical time this is for farmers. I said that, and I repeat, repeat and repeat: please do something for them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order.

Mr. Paproski: Their costs have escalated rapidly in the past few years.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. The Chair did extend further time to the Hon. Member for the interruptions.

Some Hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Paproski: May I?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member to continue his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It is agreed.

Mr. Smith: No, no.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Paproski: David Smith, you will regret it.

Mr. Smith: We want to get this Bill through.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have been delaying my remarks on this part of the debate, waiting for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), who is a spokesman for a very important part of this policy change—

Mr. Paproski: Don't hold your breath.

Mr. Althouse: —to make his speech. However, when he did deign to stand in his place in this House, all he could do was introduce time limitation under Standing Order 82. This is a very important debate for all of the Canadian people, not only those in western Canada. A great many aspects can be and must be addressed. That is why we have put forward the amendment which we are now discussing to delay the subject matter being introduced in the House for another six months, so that people may have adequate time to analyse, assess and debate what is proposed here.

Today I will deal only with the aspects of the proposal involving agriculture, because it seems that what we have here is a very consistent move, which has been often demonstrated by the Minister of Agriculture and some of his predecessors, of attempting to create economic activity in Canada by making some farm investment redundant in order that new farm investment can be created in another region or agricultural sector. That is basically what is being proposed here, a proposal to change the economics of a production base in one part of the country, with the hope that another sector will gain an advantage and there will be some economic activity created from that advantage.

We saw this kind of activity ten or 15 years ago when the feed grain policy changed. The effect was to sell domestic feed grains at a lower price than the Wheat Board was charging users. The net result was a vast shift in feeding of livestock, particularly pork, from west to east.

If one listens to some of the proponents of the policy, one finds that Bill C-155 is designed to take some of that livestock production back to the West by increasing the cost of grain in the East and reducing it at the farm gate to the producers in the western part of Canada. Therefore, it is sort of redressing a policy move which created hardships for western Canadians ten or 15 years ago.

The net effects of this particular move on agriculture would be, by the end of this decade, to increase the amount of money coming out of the pockets of farmers of western Canada by $1 billion. To put that into perspective, we must realize that the net farm income for all farmers in Canada runs at about $3.5 billion, so we are discussing a reduction of almost one-third of the net farm income. When one considers that a little bit and realizes that only one-third of the farmers reside in western Canada, one finds that a very great burden will be placed on that important part of the agricultural economy.

As I said, the net income last year amounted to $3.5 billion. We are not discussing a net income which has been rapidly increasing; we are, in fact, discussing a net income which has been extremely stable. If one looks back as far as ten years ago, 1973, one sees that, by golly, we had a net farm income of $3.5 billion. It has varied almost not at all in ten years, yet in that time costs, including costs of living, have more than doubled; so the injustice will be compounded by this particular proposal.

The Government is taking a particular group comprised of farmers, who have not had increases in farm income, who have been stable, who have faced increases in costs as great or greater than the rest of the economy, who have suffered less than half the real net farm income over the last ten years, and it is asking them to give up another $1 billion of net farm income. It is asking them to cut it by at least another third. We think that is patently unfair and should not even have been considered. I am surprised that the Minister of Agriculture can stand in his place and simply cut the debate off rather than contributing to it and explaining why he is doing this to the farmers of eastern and western Canada.

Mr. McKnight: He's a terrible man.

Mr. Smith: He's a nice guy.

Mr. Jarvis: That's about all you can say for him.

Mr. Althouse: I think that if the Minister of Agriculture and some of the other Ministers in the Government had looked at the economics of their proposal, they too would have had second thoughts and would not have introduced such a proposal today.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has been trying to put a good face on it. He has been saying that with this proposal the railways will be investing the increased money that they will be receiving from the farmers, the $1 billion by the end of the decade. He is saying they will be investing that in more plant and equipment and that that investment will create a multiplier effect of approximately 2.1. He is suggesting that as that $1 billion works its way through the economy it will become something just over $2 billion in gross national product.

However, he forgets that, as a result of pulling that $1 billion of net income from the pockets of farmers, he is doing even more harm to the economy than the good which he alleges. The multiplier effect of that $1 billion which he is taking from the farmers would have injected a minimum of $3.5 billion to as much as $7 billion into the total economy of this country. This program, as it affects farmers and manufacturers of railway and machinery products, decreases the net gross national product of this country by anywhere from $1.5 billion and $3.5 billion. This takes place at a time when the Government is trying to restore growth and offset a recession. At this time it is pulling money out of the economy by taking money from the small farmers who are the engine of growth to a large part of this country. I would remind the House that farming is the engine of growth for close to 30 per cent of employed Canadians. Those people are helpless without the farmers.

This program not only affects the prairie economy but the entire Canadian economy. It affects the Maritimes and Quebec economies and the part of the economy which provides the goods and services to agriculture, such as those who manufacture tractors. Virtually every combines and tractor manufacturing plant that is left in Canada is in trouble. The latest plant facing receivership is the While Farm Equipment plant in Brantford. The problems of Massey Ferguson are very well known. How will those companies recover even with further financing and careful management while in receivership if there will no longer be a demand for tractors and combines as a result of a reduction of $1 billion in the net income of farmers?

Farmers almost always buy farm machinery with bank loans. The banks take a very dim view of continuing to lend money to farmers when they do not have an adequate income level. We are on the brink of a great disaster because of increases in farm debt and the rising number of bankrupt farmers. The banks are taking a dim view of continually lending money to farmers simply to keep them operating.

In summary, let me say that Government Members have made a great issue of the fact that since this policy is 86 years old it must certainly no longer have any validity. I point out to those Members who have made that argument that simply because it is an 86-year-old policy does not mean that we no longer need this transportation policy to maintain the nationhood of this country.

This policy does not affect the distances involved because our geography has not changed in 86 years. Our farmers still have further to travel to ocean shipping than any other country. It does not address the problems of competing in a world market against all of our competitors who are receiving Government subsidies directly from their treasuries.

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in the debate on the amendment not necessarily as a Member from a rural riding in Ontario, not necessarily from my specific riding, but as a Member of Parliament from Ontario to speak from a provincial point of view.

I think it is very important that all Members speak from that regional point of view. I compliment many of my colleagues from the Maritimes, British Columbia and all parts of Canada for having done so. In passing, I might say that I am disappointed and a little surprised that I have not been the beneficiary of the viewpoints of NDP Members from British Columbia. I believe there have only been one or two British Columbia NDP Members who have participated so far. I am very anxious to hear that viewpoint.

Mr. Orlikow: They will be here this afternoon.

Mr. Althouse: That is a third of them. A third of yours have not spoken.

Mr. Jarvis: I said that very kindly; I did not say it disparagingly. I want to hear that British Columbia viewpoint as far as the NDP caucus is concerned. I believe I have a right to hear it. If that will upset people, I will not dwell on it any longer.

I wish to deal specifically with the amendment that would permit me, as an Ontario Member, a reasonable length of time to discharge what I believe is my responsibility to explain this legislation. I am not concerned about dotting each "i" and crossing each "t" but I want to have the time to explain to my constituents the regional interest that is a very major part of this Bill.

I believe many of us in Ontario have long forgotten that the birth of the Crow rate resulted from the trade between industrialized central Canada and the great grain-producing areas of western Canada. Therefore I would like to have some time to remind my constituents of that fact. The purpose for seeking more time is not necessarily to gain their support for my position or that of my Party but to discharge my responsibility to explain regional views.

I hope that I strike a responsive chord in the Minister when I say that I am proud to join with two other colleagues in spending three sessions a day on the Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform. Our objective is not simply to reform the Senate but to reform it in a way that will enable the Senate to represent regional views. I feel very deeply about that goal without having any preconceived notions for the mechanism of accomplishing it.

It is surprising that two matters are frequently raised at those hearings as examples of what is needed in our process. This particular Bill has been raised by senators, academics, lawyers and other witnesses who have come before us. Another subject which is continually raised is the Pepin-Robarts Report, which is a coincidence since the Minister happens to be the Minister responsible for this legislation.

Flowing from that report and others, we have been told over and over again that we have to find mechanisms by which people in the regions would at least feel that their views were expressed as part of the process. The last Senator Lamontagne, as the Minister well knows, made great contributions in this area. People do not necessarily want their views to represent the final decision because I think they will sometimes accept decisions as long as they believe they had a voice in making that decision.

I do not wish to be patrionizing but the Minister responsible for this legislation and one of my closest and dearest friends and political mentor, John Robarts, have contributed a great deal to the initiation of the process in which I am now playing a very small part.

I would like to have six months to deal with the Crow. I cannot go to my constituents this weekend because they are very busy. I will participate in the main motion. I intend to send out approximately 25,000 copies of my speech in which I wish to explain the regional interest, its depth and the socio-economic and cultural aspect of the Crow rate. While all 25,000 copies may not be read, I hope that I will at least have discharged my responsibility as an Ontario Member to point out that this Bill concerns a regional interest. We cannot always do this on the floor of the House of Commons. We can express our views aggressively and helpfully in caucus and when the caucus decision is made one must go along with the Party. I am proud that I have always voted with my Party but I would like to be able to send a speech to my constituents which states that this is a regional interest in western Canada which we, as fellow Canadians, must understand.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

MR. ALLMAND—EXPLANATION FOR VOTE ON ANTI-WEAPONS TESTING MOTION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Madam Speaker, on Tuesday I voted for the Cruise missile resolution, but did not get recognized during the debate to explain my position and vote. I would like to do that briefly now. On Tuesday, in voting for the resolution, I voted against the escalation of the nuclear arms race by any nation, and in particular against the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada. I did so because both sides now have enough nuclear power to destroy completely—annihilate—the other side and the Cruise missile is in no way necessary to maintain the balance of power and deterrence.

In my opinion the development of the Cruise missile will only escalate the nuclear arms race, set back disarmament discussions, and divert scarce resources from more essential needs.

I argued this position at the Liberal convention last autumn and in many other meetings and writings. There is nothing in the NATO agreements which requires Canada to use or test nuclear weapons. We have been a member of NATO since the beginning and have never done so. Furthermore, Canadian Governments for some time have been committed to arms control and disarmament. If we agree to test the Cruise, we would run contrary to these policies. I want to urge the Government to consider seriously all factors and arguments before agreeing to the Cruise tests. There are many other ways in which Canada can contribute to the NATO alliance and help maintain world peace.

THE PAPACY

POPE'S VISIT TO POLAND

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, today His Holiness Pope John Paul II begins his second pilgrimage to Poland in four years. The excitement of the new freedom recognized under the Solidarity trade union that surrounded his last visit is, however, regrettably absent.

In June of 1979 the Poles could justifiably anticipate a nation without restrictions, but today their prayers are for the most basic freedoms.

The Pope's presence in Poland at this time has an important symbolic message. This Christian ambassador is pressing for the end of martial law, and amnesty for political prisoners. The military government under General Jaruzelski, however, has permitted the visit only to gain points in the West, and to stifle further dissent at home. Yesterday the home of Solidarity leader Lech Walesa was raided by the Polish authorities and he was placed under house arrest. Preventing Walesa from seeing the Pope may be General Jaruzelski's only means of asserting his authority over discontented Poles, but this action will leave a lasting impression on the West.

We, as Canadians, deplore the disregard for human rights that has been demonstrated in Poland since 1979. We are inspired, nevertheless, by the Pontiff's leadership and courage in returning to his troubled homeland. We pray that his visit will underline our hope for the return of a free political system in Poland.

LABOUR RELATIONS

WEST COAST GRAIN HANDLERS' DISPUTE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, a possible work stoppage on the West Coast caused by the dispute between the grain handlers and grain companies would hurt many more people than the workers directly involved. It could penalize grain producers by disruption in cash flow, and cause possible losses in grain sales. The railway workers and longshoremen would also be penalized because they could be laid off if movement of grain stops. The least penalized by a work stoppage are among the main antagonists, namely, the grain companies. The grain companies are not penalized because they go on collecting storage charges even while grain is not moving. Across the country last year they collected about $500,000 a week in terminal charges alone.

The Government has a responsibility to do everything in its power to keep grain moving. We thank it for appointing a mediator, William Kelly. To minimize the possibility of long and costly work stoppages the Government should take some action to equalize the penalties that stoppages cause. The Government should stop the payment of storage charges to grain companies which are partially responsible for a dispute. Such action would put both antogonists on an equal footing and no doubt reduce losses for everyone from prolonged work stoppages.

POSSIBLE DEVELOPMENT OF SAGUENAY PARK

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Madam Speaker, I would like to congratulate Parks Canada on acquiring the Mingan Islands and thus demonstrating that it is preserving exceptional natural sites for future generations. Perhaps I may point out to the House that the Saguenay Park site in my riding has also been judged worthy of preservation by Parks Canada. The Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has announced that the Canadian Government is prepared to spend $50 million to develop Saguenay Park. Since Quebec has refused to divest itself of the land, the development of Saguenay Park by Parks Canada, which would cost $50 million, is still pending. Meanwhile, the Government of Quebec has decided to invest in the development of a conservation park on part of the land. Premier Lévesque made much of the national pride of the people of the Saguenay, but the fact remains that a $50 million investment would help reduce unemployment and attract more tourists, which in turn would inject more money into the regional economy. The Saguenay region has no substantial infrastructure for tourism. Saguenay Park, with its majestic fiord, would be one of the major tourist attractions of Canada, thus making the people of the Saguenay even prouder of their region.

TRADE UNIONS

NECESSITY TO ENSURE FAIR SEAFARERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION ELECTIONS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, the recent election for the office of President of the Seafarers' International Union of Canada was the first contested election for that office since the present incumbent took office over ten years ago. Events leading up to that election, and since, point out the necessity for changes that must be made to the Canada Labour Code to guarantee standards of democratic conduct within unions.

Suspension of membership in a union where jobs are awarded through a union administered hiring hall is in effect a dismissal of employment. The Canada Labour Code does not prescribe what must be done to ensure the holding of a fair election, nor does it say what can be done about election frauds.

Action taken by the Seafarers' International Union following this election has been a discredit to the whole union movement, and has brought the SIU into disrepute to a greater degree than what was done by the sailors who were charged.

The federal Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) should act immediately to propose amendments to the Canada Labour Code to entrench democratic rights within unions so that it will not be an occupational hazard to challenge a union leader or to support a challenger in what is a generally considered acceptable democratic process.

If Governments can certify unions and grant them monopoly bargaining rights, then they must set out minimum standards of democratic conduct by which unions must operate.

EMPLOYMENT

JOB-CREATION PROGRAM FOR THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, a federal job-creation program for the disabled and those with employment disadvantages has been so popular that funding for it became exhausted shortly after it began this year.

The Program for the Employment Disadvantaged, PED, was established to offer subsidies to employers who hire disadvantaged and disabled workers for periods ranging from nine months to 65 months. The PED funded jobs for 338 Hamilton residents, but has come to an abrupt halt because the $860,000 set aside for the Hamilton area has run out and no additional funding is currently planned. Without PED funding, however, many handicapped and disadvantaged workers will not be hired by employers.

Since the funds were allocated in April, the Program has simply taken off and, even though the funds have run out, some employers have been put on hold for possible funding while others have hired workers on the basis that more funds will be added to PED and employees could be subsidized retroactively. The PED is one of the best programs for the difficult to employ that the federal Government has ever presented. Priority should be given to this Program should further funds become available.

HUMAN RIGHTS

COMMEMORATION OF HUNGARIAN REVOLUTION—BURIAL SITES OF EXECUTED PATRIOTS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, today is a special day for Canadians of Hungarian origin. All Members have received material asking us today to remember especially what has become known as the case of the "Unknown Graves".

Following the 1956 Hungarian revolution, hundreds of the participants in that event were executed. The remains of the victims, among them the Prime Minister and Minister of Defence of the legal Government during the revolution, along with scores of teenagers hanged on their eighteenth birthday, have been buried in unmarked graves whose location is known only to the authorities. Repeated appeals by relatives to recover the bodies or gain permission to visit the graves have failed.

The consistent refusal of the Government in Hungary to reveal the location of the places of burial causes concern, not only here in the West but in Hungary as well. The rights of those whose family members were executed for their participation in the revolution ought to command the sympathy and sincere concern of all those who have also lost relatives in times of turmoil and adversity.

Given its obligations under the Helsinki Final Act, it is mandatory that the Government in Hungary uphold its humanitarian commitment to those survivors. I, and I am sure Hon. Members of this House, want to urge the Government of Hungary to adhere to the principles of human rights embodied in the Helsinki Accords. Allowing the families of those executed to visit the graves and/or to recover the remains of their relatives is only simple elementary human justice, already denied far too long.

CRASH OF STARFIGHTER IN FRANCE—DEMAND THAT REMAINING PLANES BE GROUNDED

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I am certain that everyone in the House is aware by now that today another of Canada's C-104 Starfighters has crashed. The latest crash occurred in a small village in northern France. Fortunately nobody was injured.

This latest incident only serves to underline the clear need to ground all of Canada's Starfighters until such time as a thorough public investigation has taken place and these aircraft are judged to be totally safe and air worthy. There is a constant reminder that more than 600 of the 1,900 produced have now either crashed or been removed.

Three weeks ago there was a crash resulting in the deaths of five civilians in West Germany. There have been numerous other examples of difficulties with this aircraft. The Minister promised to produce a record of the air accidents in which these fighter aircraft have been involved, to this House. We would like to know where that is. The results of crash examinations must be made public and studied by a committee of this House. If the Minister had heeded earlier warnings, grounded these aircraft and made operational changes to them, the crash today might not have occurred.

The Minister's response at the time was to accuse others in this House of trying to make a tragedy out of the situation. This is now a complete scandal and must be dealt with quickly and appropriately. There must be a grounding of these aircraft. There must be a public investigation of the matter as soon as possible.

MARINE RESOURCES

THE MAURICE LAMONTAGNE INSTITUTE

Mrs. Eva Côté (Rimouski-Témiscouata): Madam Speaker, this morning, we paid our last respects to Senator Maurice Lamontagne, who died early this week.

The Government was represented by the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), who spoke about Senator Lamontagne's exceptional record as a politician and as a university professor to whom all of us owe so much. He also announced that the research institute of Fisheries and Oceans Canada, to be located in the Lower St. Lawrence region, near Mont-Joli, where Senator Lamontagne was born, will be called the Maurice Lamontagne Institute.

On behalf of the people of my riding, Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Minister of Finance, acting on behalf of the Government on this occasion, for the Government's gesture in recognition of the exceptional services rendered by Senator Lamontagne to all Canadians.

FISHERIES

REGULATION OF NORTHWEST TERRITORIES FISHERY

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, in a judgment dated May 13, 1983, the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories struck down Section 22 of the Northwest Territories Fishery Regulations, finding that the provisions contained therein discriminated against certain Canadians on the basis of race and were, therefore, in contravention of the Canadian Bill of Rights. In order that fisheries officials maintain some reasonable degree of jurisdiction over the fishery for conservation purposes, it is important that new regulations be drafted without undue delay.

Although the possibility exists for the Fisheries Act to be amended so as to legalize the present Section 22 of the Regulations made thereunder, this would be seen as being contrary to the spirit and quite possibly to the letter of the Canadian Charter of Rights and, therefore, is not to be considered a preferred option. What is required is a set of workable regulations which, while respecting treaty and like contractual obligations, treats all participants in the domestic fishery on an otherwise equal basis.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION—REQUEST THAT AUDITOR GENERAL BE APPOINTED TO AUDIT ACCOUNTS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. At the very same time as the Government is defending record losses with Canadair and de Havilland, it is moving to create the grand-daddy of all Crown corporations with the Canada Development Investment Corporation. In order to ensure that the sort of fiasco which took place with Canadair and de Havilland, with Parliament being kept in the dark, does not repeat itself with CDIC, will the Government agree that Parliament's auditor, the Auditor General of Canada, should be appointed as the auditor of the Canada Development Investment Corporation?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that the Minister responsible for this corporation has said that this possibility was still being considered by the Government, and that as soon as the Government reached a final decision, that decision would be made public.

[English]

REQUEST THAT CONTRACTS OF PRESIDENT AND CHAIRMAN BE TABLED

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, the Government cannot decide whether to give the Auditor General the job, but it decided to give jobs to some of the boys, Joel Bell and Maurice Strong. Will the Minister agree to table in the House of Commons the contracts of Maurice Strong and Joel Bell so that Members of Parliament and the public will know how much these individuals are being paid, and the terms of their contracts?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I think there is ample opportunity for discussing such questions in committee, where the issue is now being examined.

[English]

QUALIFICATIONS OF PRESIDENT

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, it is typical of this Minister that he is incapable of even making up his mind whether to make those contracts available to Parliament. One of the justifications that have been given for CIDC was that it would improve the management of the various Crown corporations. What exactly are Joel Bell's private sector qualifications which make him qualified to head the largest holding company in Canada? What exactly has been Joel Bell's experience with private sector business?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, Mr. Bell's experience in the business world has been very wide-ranging, and I am sure he is entirely capable of achieving the Government's objectives with respect to the renewed viability of Canadair, de Havilland and other corporations.

[English]

DE HAVILLAND CORPORATION—FORECAST OF FURTHER LOSSES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister, who undoubtedly noticed yesterday that the de Havilland Aircraft Company, another subsidiary company of the Government, lost some $265 million. In a most ominous tone the reporting Minister indicated that the new Dash-8 program is already facing difficulties. Apparently we are going to be required to pick up still greater losses with respect to that program. Will the Minister tell the House of Commons what will be the extent of these losses, and are we sure this time we know what we are doing?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I may remind the Hon. Member that when the Minister responsible made those statements yesterday, he also indicated to Members of the Committee and to the general public that by the end of this year, the Canada Development Investment Corporation would be submitting complete development strategy for the de Havilland, and we shall then know what the objectives are and the financial resources required to carry out this strategy.

[English]

AMOUNT OF GOVERNMENT SUPPORT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, the Minister must know, as the rest of us know, that we are being asked to pass on various appropriations and subsidy arrangements for de Havilland today. We should not be required to wait for months into the future to learn the facts. Would the Minister indicate what the reporting Minister meant when he said that there was not the same degree of Government support going into de Havilland that officials of certain other countries are giving competitor companies in their various countries? Is $265 million indeed of so little significance to the Government that it would be bold enough to say that that is not significant support for a subsidiary owned by the people of Canada?

• (1420)

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I think the comments made by the Minister responsible can be explained quite simply. We must consider the fact that after all, de Havilland has developed four major aircraft, which are the Twin Otter, the Buffalo, the Dash-7 and the Dash-8, and it was able to do so thanks to federal funding. It is a fact, and I have cited this example several times, that many countries develop civilian aircraft on their defence budgets or on the budgets of their own State airlines. This is what the Minister responsible was referring to when he said that in other countries, for instance, that develop certain prototype aircraft, costs are not as visible as they are here, because they do not appear on the books of the company that is doing the developing.

ENERGY

SALES OF WESTERN COAL IN CENTRAL CANADA

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. As he is aware, western Canadian coal producers export approximately 15 million tonnes of coal per year. At the same time, central Canadian markets import approximately 16 million tonnes of coal per year from the United States. The fact that we are only supplying a small amount of Canadian coal to central Canadian markets is costing the Canadian economy about $1 billion per year and 30,000 jobs.

Would the Government be willing to initiate studies to support the use of Canadian coal, thus reducing outflows of Canadian capital, creating jobs, and stabilizing an important Canadian industry?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, this has been a problem for a long time. Coal consumers in Ontario, with the main consumer being Ontario Hydro, have adopted a policy that favours importing coal in Ontario for use in that province. The cost of bringing coal in from British Columbia by train would apparently be too high to maintain the fuel's competitive position for the production of electric power and other uses in Ontario. Since the Hon. Member has asked me to look into the problem, I certainly intend to discuss this question with my colleague. In fact, I think the Hon. Member would probably be able to further his case considerably—

[English]

If the Hon. Member would like to look at the real problems we are having in Canada and decide to vote for changes to the Crow rate, he will help alleviate that situation.

REQUEST FOR COST STUDY OF COAL USE

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources as I do not want him to divert from his very, very important question. The fact remains that at the present time we are supplying four million tonnes of coal a year from western Canada to central Canada, so it can be produced effectively. Could the Minister examine the comparative costs of using this coal, including the environmental costs, and could he also look into the advantages of blending Canadian coal, as is done in Japan, to meet the specific requirements of different plants in central Canada?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am informed that some coal has been imported from British Columbia to the East in small quantities. With Canada's present rail capacity we could not transport all of the coal plus the wheat and other commodities. The best way to achieve what the Hon. Member has in mind is to have a good railway system, and in order to have that, the Hon. Member has to change his mind, be responsible, and vote for a change in the Crow rate.

SULPHUR CONTENT OF UNITED STATES COAL—ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment who, I am sure, is interested in the impact of burning high sulphur content United States coal which has eight times the sulphur content of good quality western Canadian coal. What steps has the Minister of the Environment taken, in light of the fact that half of the acid rain emissions in Canada are a result of coal burning in Canada? Has he undertaken any studies? Has he put any pressure on any of the companies to use good quality clean Canadian coal instead of dirty American coal?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, we do have regular discussions with provincial Governments about the kinds of coal strategies and limitation orders which would be required to meet our objective, which is the over-all reduction of sulphur dioxide emissions in eastern Canada by 50 per cent by the end of the decade. We recently met with provincial Governments and discussed that very subject. I expect that, within a few weeks' time, we will be able to deliver to the Hon. Member and to the House in general the kind of control strategy which would meet the objectives that our scientists tell us are needed if we are to meet safe sulphur dioxide emission levels. Within that context, I think that the question raised by the Hon. Member has been answered.

SOCIAL SECURITY

NEEDS OF ELDERLY POOR—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In the past couple of days the Government has forced the Canadian people to pay out $300 million to Canadair and de Havilland in order to cover their losses. That is the priority of the Government. But the Minister of National Health and Welfare has been saying for some time, as she said the other day in committee, that the first priority ought to be finding $300 million to alleviate the plight of the elderly poor.

I would ask the Deputy Prime Minister why preference is being given to de Havilland and Canadair over the needs of the elderly poor, the people who have to get by on less than $500 a month.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, it has been frequently stated by the Government that, in the field of social policy, the first priority would indeed be to assist the elderly poor, particularly single persons who are most affected by the present system. That still remains a priority. I do not believe that the whole field of social policy is analogous to the particular cases of aiding companies that are at the same time performing a very useful role in the economy, particularly in providing jobs. Does the Hon. Member suggest that we ought to have permitted these companies to close, hereby putting additional workers on the streets?

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister is prepared to treat the elderly citizens of our country in a pretty cavalier manner.

GOVERNMENT PRIORITIES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, in order that the elderly poor know where they stand in the Government's list of priorities, I wonder if the Minister would tell us where they do stand. Are they fifth, or twenty-fifth, or seventy-fifth on the list of priorities? Could the Deputy Prime Minister tell me how many bail-outs the Government is prepared to finance before it turns its attention to the needs of the people who built this country?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, we have demonstrated our priorities by our actions, because it was following the last election that we increased the Guaranteed Income Supplement. That was done following the last election, and after a period of Conservative rule in which the Guaranteed Income Supplement was totally neglected.

INCOME TAX

AUDIT OF RANCHERS' INCOME—ADVICE GIVEN BY DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Revenue and concerns the continuing harassment of farmers by auditors of the Income Tax Department. I have in my possession letters from ranchers in my constituency who are being reassessed under Section 31 of the Income Tax Act, letters that indicate Revenue Canada auditors are advising them to pocket up to $15,000 per year in cash income without declaring it for taxation purposes. This fact has also been drawn to my attention by a tax consultant and former long time Revenue Canada field auditor. Such advice might, in the minds of the tax auditors, ease the bitter pill of reassessment, but people are outraged that Government officials are advising them to commit tax fraud. Is it now the policy of the Department and its auditors to advise taxpayers not to declare income?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Certainly not, Madam Speaker. I think the auditors have a duty to make sure that such amounts are declared for the purposes of income tax.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF VANCOUVER TAXATION OFFICE

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Given the evidence in my possession, will the Minister order a full investigation of the Vancouver district taxation office to determine how widespread the practice is? Will he undertake to find out whether auditors are being advised by their superiors, or if this is a further indication of the inexperience of these auditors?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I find it hard to imagine that, as the Hon. Member said, a few mistakes might be made by inexperienced staff. I have already informed the Hon. Member, following representations he made previously, that I would personally look into those cases. I am looking into the matter, and I am checking to see whether taxpayers who happen to be farmers are also treated as farmers in terms of the Income Tax Act. I also wish to inform the Hon. Member that if anyone claims, on his income tax return, that he is earning income as a farmer, and he is not, we set the record straight and do not deal with him as a farmer. I wish the Hon. Member would understand this, and that instead of being so naïve as to make accusations of the kind he has already made—and I hope he has regretted making them—he would take the time to look into the matter and check his facts to find out if these individuals actually qualify as farmers in terms of the Income Tax Act, because if the point he raised is hypothetical and it subsequently appears that the individual in question is not a farmer and does not operate a farm, the Hon. Member will be responsible for wasting our time.

TRANSPORT

STUDY OF ATLANTIC FREIGHT RATE SUBSIDIES—POSITION OF PREMIERS

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Would the Minister confirm that all four Ministers of Transportation in the Atlantic Provinces have written to condemn him for launching a full-scale study into Atlantic freight rate subsidies without informing them beforehand, and without involving them in the process? How can the Minister justify such heavy-handed, unilateral action on the part of his Department, when just a few months ago he affixed his signature to a memorandum of understanding between the Government of Canada and the Maritime Provinces, committing the signatories to full co-operation in all transport-related matters as they affect the Atlantic Provinces? Is that memorandum of understanding now supposed to go out the window?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): No, Madam Speaker, it is exactly on the basis of the memorandum of understanding that this study is taking place. It says that there will be joint planning on transportation matters in the Maritime Provinces. That is what we are doing now. The Maritime Freight Rates Act has existed since 1927 and it has been reviewed for example in 1969 and 1974. It is quite normal that at different times we look at the subsidies to find out if they are in the best interests of the region they are supposed to serve. That is part of the memorandum of understanding.

One of the principal aspects of the memorandum is that, should changes be made, money will not be taken back to "Ottawa", as they say down there, but will be put in the Maritime envelope and directed to other transportation support programs in the Maritimes.

Mr. McMillan: Madam Speaker, the fact is that the memorandum of understanding commits the Minister to full consultation with the Atlantic Provinces in all areas relating to the Atlantic Provinces, as far as transportation is concerned.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONSULTATION

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that, for example, the Minister of Transportation for Newfoundland has written to the Minister saying that the Province of Newfoundland has not been consulted on this issue and is deeply disappointed, will he assure the House, and, through the House, the Atlantic Provinces that he will not change Atlantic freight rate subsidies one iota without involving the Atlantic Provinces fully in the process?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have said that already. We are now going through phases; first, the collection of data; second, the analysis of data, and that is where we are now; and third, consultation with provincial Governments and all interested parties. I have already said that and I am committed.

On the subject of consultation with the Provinces on these matters, I should like to remind my hon. friend that this is the spirit of the memorandum of agreement. When you ask provincial Ministers to inquire about these things it is very difficult for them to agree with you. Occasionally the federal Government has to take its responsibilities. This is federal money, spent by the federal Government. My hon. friend would be the first to criticize me, as others are criticizing us on other matters, if we did not make sure that federal moneys were well spent. That is what I am doing.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT ANNUAL REPORT OF DEPARTMENT BE TABLED

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I am in receipt of letters from the National Council of Veterans Associations and the National Indian Veterans Association. As both organizations expressed concern that many issues adversely affecting veterans have not been dealt with, would the Minister consider tabling the annual report or any other report dealing with the Department of Veterans Affairs as soon as possible, so that we can then obtain an order of reference which will enable the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs to meet in September?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, the issue of the Indian veterans, particularly in western Canada, has been brought to my attention. I met with the Alberta Indian Veterans Association and the Saskatchewan Indian Veterans Association. Their request was two-fold. The first matter was funding for a research officer for the Associations and I do not have resources to be able to give a positive response to that request. I have indicated that if they have particular cases they wish me to investigate in detail, I will be very happy to do so. To date I have received in the area of 100 specific cases and have responded to more than 90 in terms of analysing our own files and the files of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, the Minister did not answer my question about whether he would table the report so that we can have a reference for a meeting in September.

ORGANIZATIONS' APPEARANCES BEFORE STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, there is a serious breakdown in communications between the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs and the 13 veterans' organizations, regarding their appearances before the Committee. Will the Minister investigate and report to the house as soon as possible?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, first of all I do not accept the suggestion made by the Hon. Member. It has always been the practice of the Chairman and Members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs to meet with any organization that wishes to appear before the Committee.

With regard to tabling the report, if a report is available I will certainly table it.

TRANSPORT

REVIEW OF ATLANTIC FREIGHTRATE SUBSIDIES—ATTITUDE OF PREMIERS

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, my question for the Minister of Transport is supplementary to those asked by the Hon. Member for Hillsborough. Will the Minister tell the House whether it is true that the Premiers of the four Atlantic Provinces agreed to a reduction in transportation subsidies in Atlantic Canada in exchange for funds for infrastructure, and that their protests are simply another manifestation of their ardent hypocrisy and of passing the buck to he federal Government every time they have to shoulder responsibility?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, you will often find people agreeing in principle but not agreeing in practice. In this particular case the principle is that federal money in the Maritime should be well spent. Consequently, you occasionally have to review a situation to find out if that is so. When you come to a specific case, then you do not find too many friends.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Life is lonely in the middle.

REPORTED SURVEILLANCE OF PEACE GROUPS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Today's Ottawa Citizen carried a story detailing the RCMP Security Service's involvement in surveillance of anti-nuclear, anti-Cruise peace groups. This is in direct contradiction to the statement to this House on Tuesday by the Solicitor General, and to his statement to The Citizen that, "No one is being planted in the groups. No one is being asked to bring in information." The article in The Citizen suggests that the Minister may not know what the Security Service is doing and, therefore, inadvertently misled the House.

Will the Minister tell the Members of the House whether Canadians do have the right to disagree, do have the right to oppose this country's testing of the Cruise missile and participation in the arms race, and do have the right to advocate disarmament in a peaceful and patriotic manner, without being harassed, photographed and spied upon by the Security Service of this country?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, that question does not concern my responsibilities. However, since I am answering today for the Solicitor General—and he may want to answer the question more fully when he is in the House—I might say that obviously the Hon. Member knows the answer to his own question. Of course Canadians are entitled to take part in peaceful activities wherever they may take place in this country. That is one of the privileges of democracy. I am sure my hon. friend is not going to suggest that there is any kind of activity which is exempt from legitimate scrutiny, just as no kind of activity which is peaceful and democratic is of itself illegitimate. Therefore, there can be no blanket exemption from scrutiny by the authorities of any form of activity which takes place. And each one of those propositions is just as important as the other.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, The Citizen article to which I referred in my previous question cites a former RCMP Intelligence Officer as saying that all individuals associated with the peace groups are naive idealists, that the groups should be penetrated, that all major groups, including the women's movement and the labour movement, are somehow suspect. I am sure that Dennis McDermott of the CLC and Doris Anderson of the National Action Committee will be interested in that. Does the Minister share the view that, because some communists may be involved in some of these movements, all the individuals involved are suspect and fair game for surveillance? What is the Minister or the Government going to do to eliminate the McCarthyist witch hunt tendencies which seem to be running rampant in the Security Service and will only worsen with the proposed civilian security service?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is quoting from unnamed sources in an unverified newspaper article. That is not the policy of the Government of Canada. Our policy is, of course, to maintain the democratic society in which we exist. However, as I said before to the Hon. Member, surely he is not going to say that there is any kind of person in our society who can be exempt from scrutiny in the proper circumstances? It is always a question in a given case as to where the line should be drawn. That is what we are talking about here. We are not talking about principles. Principles are not in question. What is at question is the scrutiny of certain individuals. My hon. friend may want to address some questions to the Solicitor General on another day concerning that problem.

RENTAL OF HANOVER BUILDING IN CALGARY

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister said in answer to a question from the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre that he promotes the best techniques of management in Petro-Canada Resources. The Minister will know that the Hanover Building in Calgary was rented by Petro-Canada Resources last September for a 20-year period at an annual cost of $6.2 million. The building is still empty. Would the Minister tell us if this is his method of promoting the best management techniques in Petro-Canada? Would he also confirm that Petro-Canada is attempting to sublease the space for 50 per cent of what it leased it for?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I will certainly look into that question. I have not been informed of the question with regard to leasing at that price, compared to the net cost of the building. I will inquire and, if there is something to report, I will do so.

Mr. Wright: Madam Speaker, on February 23 I sent the Minister a letter on this subject. On May 31 I sent him another letter on this subject.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

STAFF REDUCTION QUOTA

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The management of Petro-Canada Resources has been told to reduce its staff by 25 per cent as of September of this year. Is this what the Minister means by "promoting the best techniques of management"?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, if management does not need its employees, it is normal that they reduce its staff. The Hon.

Member is blaming me because he claims that the building has not been well managed so far. It might be so. I do not know. I will check and report back. However, if I have not reported back to him it is because I have not received the answer. If the Hon. Member wants me to keep everyone on staff, the management might need the space for itself. I think it has an obligation to reduce its staff, if it does not need them. And if it is reducing its staff because it does not need employees, I will not quarrel with that.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

PERCENTAGE OF PROCUREMENT FROM MANITOBA SUPPLIERS

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West, yesterday in a question raised the matter of the unacceptable practice of the Department of Supply and Services in its procurement policy, whereby such small percentages of purchases were made in specific Provinces. Would the Minister tell the House why only 3.7 per cent of total procurement by DSS came from the Province of Manitoba? Could he explain to us why his Department has been so spectacularly unsuccessful in purchasing more goods and services from Manitoba suppliers?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I will be pleased to review the figures with reference to Manitoba. However, I would point out to the hon. gentleman that, quite to the contrary, we have been successful in Manitoba. We have, as a result of Government procurement, established a viable aeronautics industry within the Province of Manitoba. We are contracting with them on a regular basis. I would be pleased to be able to continue that.

REQUEST THAT MANITOBA ORDERS BE INCREASED

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, as a supplementary question, I do not feel the Minister believes those words himself because the figure of 3.7 per cent was from his own Department. The Minister says there is an aeronautics industry in Manitoba. CAE in Manitoba just closed a few weeks ago. If the Minister calls that success, then by that measurement I suppose it is a success. Therefore, I am asking the Minister whether he will be able to give us, within a very short period of time, possibly within the month, a clear policy on how that percentage will in fact be increased over a given period of time.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I discussed the very matter which is of interest to the hon. gentleman with my regional director in Manitoba less than a month ago. He advised me that the figures, in terms of contracting within the Province, were much above what they were in past years.

In terms of CAE, I agree with the Hon. Member that there has been a recent closure. However, that was not in any way related to any activity in which we were engaged. I am pleased to advise the hon. gentleman as well that I have had a recent meeting with Muriel Smith, who is the Minister of Industry in the Province of Manitoba, in order to discuss the question of the aeronautics industry, and try to strengthen that industry within the Province of Manitoba. The hon. gentleman should inform himself before he asks his questions.

IMMIGRATION

LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS GRANTED TO FOREIGN SEAMEN

M. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Employment and Immigration, who is also the Acting Minister of Labour. It has been reported that in Atlantic Canada there are some Canadian registered ships which are plying Canadian waters and which have crews aboard who come from abroad. They have been granted temporary "Landed Immigrant" status by the Department of Employment and Immigration while we have Canadian seamen lying idle ashore. Will the Acting Minister explain why the Government is allowing this situation to exist when unemployment in Atlantic Canada is horrendous, and when we should be encouraging the creation and the revitalization of the Canadian merchant marine?

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, it is too bad the Hon. Member did not give notice of his question, because otherwise we could have made some enquiries beforehand. However, I have taken note of the question and we shall see to it that he gets a satisfactory answer.

REQUEST THAT CANADIAN SEAMEN BE GIVEN WORK PRIORITY

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, while the Acting Minister is looking into the matter, will he ensure that the Minister gets the impression of what is taking place, and would he ask the Minister to assure Canadian Atlantic area seamen that they will be put to work before temporary work permits are given to foreign crew members?

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Minister will certainly take all necessary precautions. In fact, he has already taken measures to ensure that employers first advertise throughout the country to find out whether workers are available to fill these positions before work permits are issued to foreign workers who are anxious to get a job in Canada.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

PROTECTION OF WORKERS' HEALTH—INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. A year ago I asked him in this House if he would be bringing forward changes to Part IV of the Canada Labour Code, the section which protects the health of Canadian workers who come under federal legislation. At that time he indicated the legislation would be coming soon. Since 12 months have passed can he tell me how he defines the word "soon"?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows very well that in the time which has elapsed very important and urgent legislation has been debated and passed by Parliament. In the meantime the other types of legislation which are protecting workers in the various jurisdictions are in effect. I hope the Hon. Member will understand that this legislation is presently protecting the people he is concerned with, as are we.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, if the Minister thinks the present legislation is protection, then his definition of "soon" is never.

TIMING OF INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, is the Minister going to keep his promise and introduce legislation to amend Part IV of the Canada Labour Code? If so, is he going to bring the Atomic Energy workers, transportation workers, the people who died on the Ocean Ranger, under the protection of that legislation?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is entitled to his definition of the word "soon". As far as the introduction of amendments to the Code is concerned, it is my hope to introduce them as soon as this session and the legislation before the House are completed. Possibly in the next session, Madam Speaker.

FISHERIES

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans who is well aware of the ban placed on Lake Erie smelt by the Japanese because of the dioxin problem. He has telexed instructions to the Canadian Embassy on this matter. He should also now be aware, by telexes in reply, that the action taken by the Canadian Embassy is in fact ineffective. What further action is the Minister taking to guarantee this Japanese market?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I will be most grateful to the Hon. Member if he or the industry can bring me concrete proposals. Not only have I got in touch with our Embassy, but I have sent a telex to every interested party in Japan, telling them that their concern is absolutely without any foundation; that what is going on in the United States has absolutely nothing to do with Canada. We have tested the smelt we export to them and we have not found any trace of dioxin. Actually, two days ago I met some representatives of the Ontario industry who told me they appreciate our efforts very much. If the Hon. Member and others have some concrete proposals, I would gladly study them.

REQUEST THAT SPECIALIST BE SENT TO REASSURE JAPANESE

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, since we are dealing with an $8 million export market and thousands of spin-off jobs in southern Ontario, and because of the concern of the Japanese people, would the Minister consider sending a specialist trained in dioxin testing along with some of the latest test results of Lake Erie smelt, to the Canadian Embassy to work with them and reassure the Japanese about their concern?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member I will study his concrete proposal immediately and report to him within a day.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LOW FLIGHTS OVER POPULATED AREAS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence, and he is aware of it. In the past few days a notam has gone out to all private pilots telling them to expect low flying military aircraft in all areas of southern Ontario. Those low flying aircraft have caused some very near misses, particularly with a couple of light aircraft over the Muskoka area. In addition, livestock on the ground have been frightened to the point of being damaged by the aircraft coming over at very high speeds at a height of 500 feet. Could the Minister tell us if indeed it is necessary, in a country as large as ours, to have those aircraft flying over heavily populated areas?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, if that happened in the area referred to, I would think it is very unusual. I know the hon. gentleman and a couple of others have notified me of incidents in their area. I inquired this morning about what was going on. Last week there were indeed some operations of that kind, but it is now all over. This week the only thing which could have happened is perhaps an exercise wherein Boeing 707s were practising emergency landing at Trenton airport. They have to come in very low towards the airport when they do that. That could have been the disturbance.

I will make a further investigation, and I can assure you that I see no reason why our fighter aircraft should fly that low over urban areas.

REQUEST THAT JET TRAINING FLIGHTS BE POSTPONED

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, I know about the Boeings landing at Trenton, and that is not a problem. What I am concerned about are high speed jet training aircraft flying across a region, particularly holiday areas, at very low speeds. Would the Minister undertake to assure this House, if not today then early next week, that this will not take place for the balance of this summer at least?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman is right. I will investigate these matters. I certainly do not think there should be these kinds of operations over urban areas during the summer months.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

PLIGHT OF FARMERS WITH HIGH INTEREST RATE LOANS

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture who will know there are many Canadian farmers locked into loans with the Farm Credit Corporation at interest rates of 16.75 per cent when the prevailing rate is 12.75 per cent. On about April 26 the Minister stood in the House and said that within a month he would have a solution to this problem. Does the Minister have a solution, what is it and, if not, when does he propose to bring one forward?

Mr. Shields: He does not have one.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the FCC rate for long-term mortgages is 12.75 per cent. The long-term credit rate from any other private lending institution—and they call three years long term—is 15.75 per cent. So to say 16 per cent is exorbitant for a ten-year mortgage, well, the Hon. Member has the right to say that. I told him we were negotiating. I do not remember saying that I would have it within one month.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: If I remember right, Madam Speaker, I said we were having discussions on it, and those discussions are still ongoing.

DEVELOPMENT OF AGRI-BOND PROGRAM

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, each time the Minister answers a question he is confirming himself as the "Tricky Dick" of Canadian politics. He will be aware that the Official Opposition has long supported the concept of agri-bonds and that he failed to have the Minister of Finance include this in his last budget. Can the Minister of Agriculture report any progress in the development of agri-bonds to provide long-term, low interest rate loans for Canadian farmers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I am sure the Hon. Member does not want to take credit away from the Hon. Member for Elgin who brought this up earlier this week. I answered him at that time, Madam Speaker.

FINANCIAL POSITION OF CORPORATION

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, there is no question about the fact that we have been promised some reduction in interest rates for those special cases, on two or three occasions. I just want to put a very appropriate supplementary question on the subject of the FCC to the Minister.

Will the Minister take this opportunity to either confirm or deny the rumours, stories or reports that the Farm Credit Corporation in fact is out of funds at the moment? Will he confirm or deny that story?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, we do not have any funds left. All the money has been lent.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, I certainly appreciate that very frank answer. That is a very refreshing change for the Minister of Agriculture. Obviously I have a responsibility to put a supplementary question. In view of the fact that the Farm Credit Corporation is out of funds, what does the Minister intend to do about it?

• (1500)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the demand on the Farm Credit Corporation was very great. It was thrust upon it by the private interests, the private lending institutions, telling farmers to get their finances in order, that they could not give them long-term money. Since April 1 we have loaned $452 million to farmers. We have approved that many loans. If we approve any further loans, we are approving them subject to obtaining more funds. We are hoping that we can go to the private money market to arrange more funds for them. We are still approving loans in those cases where people really need the money, in the hope that we will be able to obtain more funds for them.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

FILING OF OBJECTION TO REPORT OF COMMISSION FOR SASKATCHEWAN

Madam Speaker: I would like to inform the House that an objection signed by certain Hon. Members to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Saskatchewan has been filed with me. However, as Hon. Members know, these objections should be filed within a 30-day period from the day the report of the Commission is laid before the House. Those objections have been filed three days late, so under normal circumstances they would not be acceptable. Of course, with the unanimous consent of the House, we could deem those objections to have been filed within the prescribed period.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, we do not want to delay, but we would like to take the matter under advisement and report back tomorrow.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, this being Thursday, I would like to ask the Government House Leader if he could give us some idea as to the business for tomorrow and next week.

At this time I would like to point out to the Government House Leader that we on this side are especially concerned with respect to Bill C-147, an Act to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act; Bill C-148, an Act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act; Bill C-154, an Act to amend the Regional Development Incentives Act; and especially Bill C-161, an Act to amend the Canada Student Loans Act. With the approach of June 30, we in the Progressive Conservative Party feel that it is absolutely vital that these four important Acts go forward as soon as possible.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I find it sad that the Hon. Member forgets to speak about the resolution on aboriginal rights; I think it is most urgent and important as well.

Mr. Lewis: Agreed.

Mr. Pinard: Also, the reorganization of Government and the Judges Act are measures with which we would like to deal before June 30. I have raised the matter with my colleague in meetings and I am hopeful that we will obtain some firm commitments as to the length of debate, if needed, for each of those measures.

First, I think there are agreements on two matters. I think there is unanimous consent, after consultation with House Leaders, that we adopt, without debate, motion No. 109, on the Order Paper in the name of the Minister of State for Multiculturalism, to create a special committee on participation of visible minorities in Canadian society. I would therefore seek unanimous consent that the motion be forthwith adopted without debate.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: There is unanimous consent. Therefore the motion is adopted.

PARTICIPATION OF VISIBLE MINORITIES IN CANADIAN SOCIETY

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)) moved:

That a Special Committee consisting of seven Members to be named later to act as a Parliamentary Task Force on Participation of Visible Minorities in Canadian Society, be appointed to examine the subject-matter described by its title, and in particular:

(1) to seek positive and constructive ideas and models pertaining explicitly to ameliorating relations within Canada between visible minority and other Canadians;

(2) to identify and investigate positive examples and models of the promotion of harmonious relations between visible minority Canadians and other Canadians, particularly in institutional areas, and find ways and means of improving those relations;

(3) to seek the views that contribute constructively and positively to the promotion of racial tolerance, understanding and harmony of concerned voluntary, community and minority groups and organizations and individuals, as well as business, professional and trade associations, labour unions, public and private institutions and relevant specialists;

(4) within a general review to consider federal Government policies and programs in the area of race relations;

(5) to recommend the development of positive programs that the Committee finds necessary to promote racial understanding, tolerance and harmony in Canadian society; and

(6) to encourage the continuation of the dialogue that will be initiated, in a climate that is open and constructive.

That the Committee report no later than six months after its membership is named;

That the Committee have all of the powers provided to standing committees pursuant to Standing Order 69(8);

That the Committee have the power to retain expert, professional, technical and clerical staff;

That the Committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place within Canada; and

That the provisions of sections (4) and (9) of Standing Order 69 of the House of Commons should be suspended, unless otherwise agreed to by this committee.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pinard: There is also an agreement that we change business for Wednesday and Thursday next week and the following week. The formal motion reads as follows:

That the hours of sitting and the order of business on Wednesday, June 22, 1983 and Wednesday, June 29, 1983 shall be that provided in Standing Orders 2 and 18 for a Thursday and, on Thursday, June 23, 1983 and Thursday, June 30, 1983, shall be that provided in Standing Orders 2 and 18 for a Wednesday; and

That the special order passed on June 15, 1983, pursuant to Standing Order No. 9, shall apply accordingly.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I must now answer the specific question as to what the business will be for today, tomorrow and next week. Today, as we all know, we are debating Bill C-155.

Tomorrow, because of the deadline in the statute, we will have to debate the reports of the Electoral Boundaries Commission dealing with two Provinces, Nova Scotia and Saskatchewan. I would like to start and hopefully conclude debate on the objections to those two reports tomorrow, within the first 45 minutes after the calling of Orders of the Day. If we have not completed debate after 45 minutes, we will ask that the debate be completed later before a report is made to the Chief Electoral Officer.

We have discussed with the Opposition what is to happen following those 45 minutes. I was surprised to hear my colleague say that he was in a hurry to see those measures passed, because he knows that we have an agreement among ourselves—

Mr. Nielsen: He proposed it.

Mr. Pinard: —to deal with all stages of Bill C-148, the Farm Improvement Loans Act, and all stages of Bill C-147, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. I hope that we will be able to deal with all stages of those two Bills tomorrow. They will be called in that order, as was discussed among ourselves earlier this week.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, as far as the business of the House for next week is concerned, on Monday we shall resume consideration of Bill C-155, to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain. If the Bill is adopted, on the days remaining until June 30 we would like to use the time of the House to consider the following Bills, not necessarily in the order in which they are mentioned: Bill C-152 on Government organization, Bill C-159 respecting the judges, Bill C-161 on student loans, and also the legislation on industrial and regional development to be tabled shortly by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the constitutional amendment dealing with native rights, and Bill C-95 on sports pools. There is the matter of at least $200 million in funds that will go to the Calgary Olympic Games, and a number of other measures to be determined at a later date. I can therefore inform the House that we are well aware of the urgency of these Bills but, first of all, we would like to see Bill C-155 referred to the appropriate Standing Committee of the House, which, I hope, will not take too long since today is our sixth day of debate on this Bill.

[English]

Madam Speaker: Just before I recognize the Hon. Member for Hamilton Moutain, I want the House to be quite clear on the fact that the Chair would not report on the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act before the debate is terminated. I want to make that very clear.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I wonder if I might make an inquiry of the Government House Leader. Yesterday I suggested to him that we might be able to deal with the Student Loans Act through all stages tomorrow. I notice that he did not include that in his—

Miss MacDonald: He did.

Mr. Deans: He did not include that.

Miss MacDonald: For next week.

Mr. Deans: I notice that he did not include it in his list of business for tomorrow.

I would like to confirm again that, as far as we are concerned, we would be prepared to deal with that piece of legislation tomorrow in advance of proceeding with the other two. Subject to its obtaining approval speedily, the other two would undoubtedly similarly obtain speedy approval.

Mr. Pinard: I welcome that offer which has now been made public. I will certainly not object to the Student Loans Act being adopted through all stages tomorrow without long debate, provided that, as agreed with the Conservative Party, we also pass all stages of Bill C-148 and Bill C-147. If we can pass those two Bills through all stages, then the Canada Student Loans Act may be passed through all stages very quickly. We will not object, on the contrary, but we also need the consent of the Progressive Conservative Party on this matter.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I was rather surprised that the Government House Leader did mention Bill C-147 and Bill C-148 for tomorrow, because we understood that due to a dispute between the NDP and the Liberals, the Government would forge ahead with the Crow. Given the fact that they have made up and are now prepared to do business we will certainly take that into consideration.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I would like to understand the answer of my hon. colleague. He attended the meeting with us. He is the one who said that we should deal with Bill C-148 and C-147 tomorrow. I agreed to that. Now, I am surprised that he pretended he did not know about it. It was always very clear that we were to deal with those two Bills on Friday.

A few minutes ago, the Hon. Member referred to the Canada Student Loans Act and suggested that it was a most urgent Bill to be dealt with. He now has an offer which is very simple. I fail to understand why he does not want to give his consent today to deal with that Bill through all stages tomorrow.

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, concerning Government business, could the Government House Leader indicate to the House whether or not he expects we will have a Canada health act tabled for first reading before the end of June?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I will consult with the Minister responsible and report in due time.

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, during the election three years ago the Liberal Party promised to change the valuation day for computing capital gains for retiring farmers. We have been waiting three years for that legislation. Could the Minister tell us when we can expect this sort of legislation to be before the House since it was one of the few farm promises in that election?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, if I answered in the affirmative, I would be less than honest, because I doubt the Hon. Member's allegations are correct.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I want to return to the question of Bill C-148, C-147 and the Student Loans Act. I want to be clear about what will happen tomorrow. Without divulging anything about what anyone else said, my recollection of the House Leader's meeting is that I said I was not in a position to guarantee the passage of Bill C-147 or C-148 tomorrow. However, I am in a position to say that Bill C-147 and Bill C-148 certainly would most likely get approval if the Student Loans Act was also to be dealt with.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, on a number of occasions in the House I have asked that the Government House Leader give some indication whether or not the legislation which underpins the policy on shipbuilding would be brought in before June 30 so that the House and people outside the House would have an opportunity to peruse it and deal with it expeditiously in the fall.

Second, will the Minister be bringing into the House a Government statement on construction under the frigate program which would give us some indication if the six frigates that are to be built would be built on a two-two-two basis across each region of the country so its benefits would be distributed equally and provide some regional survival in shipbuilding? Both of these matters are critical prior to adjournment. Will the House Leader be bringing that forward?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I have taken note of the Hon. Member's priorities.

[English]

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development promised last December that he would act with considerable haste to bring in legislation to end discrimination against Indian women. Could the Government House Leader give any indication as to whether such legislation will be tabled before the House rises on June 30 so that Indian people will have a chance to study that legislation during the summer?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, if we intend to act, we will do so in no uncertain terms.

[English]

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, in his report to the House the Government House Leader mentioned that the Conservative Party agreed to quick action with regard to the aboriginal rights amendment to the Canadian Constitution. With a view to developing quick action on that resolution, is the Government House Leader willing to have that resolution go to a committee of the House?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I am prepared to consider the Hon. Member's suggestion as soon as he facilitates the passing of Bill C-155.

[English]

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, my question is: Will Canadians be allowed to make representations to a committee on changes to the Canadian Constitution, or is he willing at least to guarantee that we will have resolutions changing the Constitution of Canada go to a committee so that Canadians can appear to make presentations?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I think this is a good idea. I said that I would take it very seriously. I think that the Member has very good judgment and he should apply the same to the Crow. Do Canadians have the right to go to committee to look at the Bill and try to improve it? Maybe he could contribute by allowing them to do so.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hovdebo: Madam Speaker, some time ago the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) promised to change the Auditor General's Act to allow the Auditor General to report intermittently instead of just annually. Can the Minister tell us when this legislation will be brought before the House?

Business of the House

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I will take the Hon. Member's question under advisement.

Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the Hon. Minsiter of Transport (Mr. Pepin):

That this House do now proceed to Orders of the Day.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the motion. All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Madam Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Madam Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Madam Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Pinard), which was agreed to on the following division:

OFFICIAL REPORT

DISCREPANCIES WITH VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS IN RECORDING OF DIVISIONS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, it may have been brought to your attention that this morning I raised some discrepancies that exist between Hansard, the official Debates of the House of Commons, and the Votes and Proceedings as they reflect the votes that were taken on Tuesday evening last.

This matter would have been raised yesterday but, as you know, yesterday was a most unusual day and we did not arrive at that point in the proceedings where it could have been raised.

I wonder if you might be predisposed to have a number of motions put that might help in correcting what is quite obviously some errors that exist in the record.

Mr. Kempling: No way.

Mr. Deans: For example, I doubt very much if the Conservatives intended to support the main motion of the Government.

Mr. Nielsen: We did.

Mr. Deans: Nevertheless, without going into the details of how the votes were taken, my concern is that Hansard records one set of circumstances while the Votes and Proceedings record another. I am vitally concerned that two parts of the record—

An Hon. Member: You goofed.

Mr. Deans: No, I did not. They should be consistent in order that those who review these matters in the future will be quite clear as to what actually transpired.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: I do not think any reply to the Hon. Member's point of order is required. It has been brought to my attention. I want to tell the House that what is recorded in the Votes and Proceedings is correct and applies to the situation that took place in the House at the time of the vote, and that what is recorded in Hansard is being examined and will be corrected if there is a discrepancy.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pepin that Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be now read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benjamin (p. 25389).

Mr. Jarvis: Madam Speaker, at one o'clock I was attempting to convince the Minister—I am not sure if I was making progress—of the benefits that would flow from this amendment to permit the House and our respective constituents to have the opportunity of a further six months in which regional interests could be expressed.

Mr. Pepin: Then you will ask for another six months.

Mr. Jarvis: I am sorry, I did not hear the Minister because there is so much noise in the House. I think he is on the verge of being convinced because he is smiling at me. He may agree to this amendment.

I might say that I apparently ruffled some feathers earlier when I mentioned that few NDP Members from British Columbia had participated in this debate. I was not attempting to denigrate those Hon. Members. I thought it was very strange that the regional interests of the constituents of that Province were not being properly expressed in this debate. It may be a matter of strategy and I am willing to accept that.

For example, as a Member of the Senate Reform Committee I hear witnesses talk in passing about four regions. Were I not sensitive to the thoughts and aspirations of some of my B.C. colleagues in this caucus I might be tempted just to let that reference slide by in that committee without even questioning it, whereas I believe there are some very strong feelings among the people of British Columbia about being included as one part of the four regions. Their aspirations are not necessarily reflected in that type of attitude. That is why I probably should have heard more from the NDP Members from British Columbia with respect to this particular amendment.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, as a Member of Parliament from British Columbia and as a Member of the New Democratic Party, I am sure that the Member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis) would like to check Hansard to see that just as many Members in the NDP who are from British Columbia have spoken as have Tories.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member has the same problem counting as his House Leader does with respect to the votes that we cast last night.

In any event, my point was that the advantage of a six-month hoist with respect to this legislation would give those of us in certain regions that extra time not to defend but to explain the legitimate historic, economic, social and cultural interests of their fellow Canadians from a different region. It is not necessarily incumbent upon me to explain all the details of this legislation to the constituents of Perth. But surely it is my responsibility to convey to my constituents as best as I am able the legitimate aspirations of a different region so that they may make that judgment to which they are entitled with respect to such profound and complicated legislation.

You are indicating to me that my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I very much look forward to participating in the debate on the main motion. I hope that I have convinced the Minister that a six-month hoist would be very advisable indeed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Before I recognize the next Hon. Member, may I deal with proceedings on the adjournment debate this evening.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger)—Indian Affairs—Freezing of band trust accounts. (b) Band responsibility; the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson)—Northern Afairs—Northern Canada Power Commission—Committee recommendations. (b) Price of electricity supplied to Pine Point Mines; the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky)—Canadian Transport Commission—Rulings on railway branch line abandonments in Manitoba. (b) Request for protection of subdivisions.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I also have to deliver a ruling related to a point of order raised this morning by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain rose this morning on the point of order suggesting that Bill C-155 was improperly before the House because, he submits, it has three separate and distinct principles. He also suggests that the Bill should therefore be divided. I will address simply and only the point of order relating to the amendment.

The Chair stated that the question before the House was an amendment that the Bill be not now read a second time this day but six months hence. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain submitted that the House should not proceed further with the amendment until his point of order has been addressed and ruled upon.

After further consideration, the Chair finds that the amendment before the House must just be disposed of either by being adopted, negatived or withdrawn, before any discussion is entertained on a point of order relating to the main motion for second reading and referral to committee. The Chair recognizes that if the amendment is carried, the Bill may be rejected but it is not for the Chair to judge the consequences of the decisions of the House but rather to ensure that the proper procedures are followed. In this case, an amendment is properly before the House and a discussion on the Member's point of order can only be entertained once the amendment has been disposed of.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pepin that Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be now read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benjamin (p. 25389).

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to the amendment which, of course, is a six-month hoist. Most Hon. Members have not addressed themselves to the amendment before us but have talked about many subjects.

I appreciate the situation of the Hon. Member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Clark) who, of course, was giving his maiden speech. He followed the usual proprieties and talked about many other things instead of addressing the substance of the Bill. I can understand the situation of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), who represents an urban riding. He naturally would want to address certain concerns and explain the relevance of the legislation before us to his community.

I have also heard some very good speeches on the subject. Many Members have dealt with important points. The question before us is one of process. Our amendment is to delay the discussion of this Bill in the House for six months. There are very good reasons for this. The legislation before us is extremely bad legislation and the ordinary procedures of discussion before a committee hearing representations are really not as good as some other procedures of going back to the drawing board in a more fundamental way.

We are extremely concerned with the way the Government has proceeded on this question. People were given assurances that there would be no change in the Crow rate without consensus, but now the Government is trying to ram through something without consensus. That is a clear violation of trust. It is inexcusable and we have to protest in no uncertain terms. Frankly, the Government has reneged on its promises. We want to bring this to the attention of all Canadians and make the Government live up to the promise with which it initially came to the people. We are optimistic that some kind of suitable arrangements can be made and that good will can prevail if people would get together and negotiate in good faith.

The issues before us are extremely complex. That is another reason for taking a sober six-month look at the problem. The problem has been with us for a long time, and six months is a very modest time in which to try to deal in a realistic fashion with it.

Let me refer to some of the problems with which the legislation has to deal. One is transportation. Clearly this is a transportation Bill, but we have to put it in a broader context. We are dealing with transportation by railways but we have to think of transportation by highways and competing transportation in that field and we have to think of ports and of subsidy policies. These are extremely complex matters.

What about jobs? Certainly there is provision in this legislation to create jobs. But is this Bill going to do that in the best way possible? How will these jobs be distributed? This is an extremely important question with the rate of unemployment that we have now. We have to consider urban jobs as well as jobs in steel manufacturing and in farming. There is the situation of the family farm.

Some provisions of this legislation are very harmful, so we get down to very basic principles as to what kind of society we want and what kind of farming communities we want. Is the family farm really to survive? There is the issue of the size of communities. Should small communities be wiped out by some of the presumably unintended effects of this legislation? We do not want to see that, but it is a possibility with some of the provisions in this legislation. This is too important a matter to be rushed through the House. We must go back to the drawing board and see that we have transportation policies to keep small communities alive. We have to consider the situation of the consumer. Food prices are very basic. All Canadians, people who are not farmers and people who will not be directly affected by jobs in steel, will be affected by the harm that is done to food prices by this legislation if it passes. We have to consider the situation of corporations. There are scandalous give-away provisions in this legislation whereby corporations will be allowed to go their way without being held to account. There are very unacceptable provisions as far as corporations are concerned and we have to object to them.

The NDP's approach to this legislation is completely different and we think there is a far better approach. We are not against all change. We are against change that will be unfair, change that would hurt farmers, that would hurt consumers and urban workers. We are against the fact that it will guarantee profits to the CPR.

What would the NDP policies do instead of the proposal before us? First, we would pay the railways for their proven operating losses hauling grain. To that we are agreeable. But we are in disagreement with the scandalous extent of profit that will be allowed by this legislation. We agree that some subsidies have to be provided. Certainly other countries subsidize transportation of food products and of grain, and so would we to the tune of $380 milion a year.

We want to keep the Crow rate for grain farmers. This is a historic promise that was made. We see no reason to sacrifice it now, certainly not with all the nefarious effects that this legislation would have.

We want to see public investment to upgrade the railways to the tune of $550 million a year. The railways do need to be upgraded. This situation has been discussed at great length. Our objections are to the way in which the Government wants to provide for this.

Back in the 1800s the people of British Columbia gave the CPR a large coal deposit which it put in reserve with the federal Government. The Pepin plan will remove the price ceiling on this coal but will not tell us who will own and benefit from the $450 billion reserve. This resource rightfully belongs to the people of British Columbia and we want to keep it that way.

The total cost of our plan is roughly along the lines of the proposal before us in the sense of its being $930 million per year. But we would see that more upgrading got done because we would prevent public money from leaving the rail system to real estate or dividends. The opportunities the Government's legislation provide are for the usual boondoggle subsidies with no control over how the money will be spent. Money could leave the country and may or may not make money for those who profit from the CPR, money that may go out of the country and create jobs elsewhere that will see Canadians deprived of further jobs. That money should be invested here. What about money that would go to other companies that would not provide the same number or the kinds of jobs we would like to see?

It was public money that built the CPR in the 1880s to bring British Columbia into Confederation. It was public money and therefore the public is entitled to see to it now that any changes made are ones that respect the investment the public made in the first place. One of the purposes of building the CPR was to prevent American railroads from integrating the Prairies into the U.S. economy. The Crow rate agreement was established in 1897 to protect mineral development in British Columbia from exploitation by U.S. railways, to develop the prairie wheat economy as a market for central manufacturers to funnel Canadian grain through Canadian ports and to protect farmers from monopoly pricing by the railroads. All of these objections are extremely important. Cancelling the Crow rate would be a major step to a user-pay transportation policy which will encourage north-south trade with the United States instead of east-west trade in Canada. This, of course, has been the historic problem we face in Canada but it is something that we, as Canadians, who want to keep our country together have to address. We cannot simply succumb to the pressure of the north-south ties. Cancelling the Crow rate will end Canadian control in all three segments of the grain chain: gathering, marketing and transportation. At stake are about 35,000 jobs in Canada related to grain handling and transportation alone. Of course, many other jobs are at stake in the manufacturing sector.

The Crow is a barrier to non-agrarian capital exploiting the prairie region because the Crow would ensure fair freight rates for all shipping points, regardless of the volume shipped. This is a fundamental point of disagreement between the NDP and the Government. Grain gathering on the Prairies is decentralized in a number of country elevators mostly owned by farmers. Without the Crow the railways could charge variable rates, higher rates on branch lines than main lines. This would consolidate grain gathering in a few inland terminals owned by multinational grain companies.

Ending the Crow rate will centralize and stratify prairie society making farmers and workers less aware of each other's contribution to the community. We think in terms of a whole community in which people co-operate together, in other words, solve problems together and share the resources. The Canadian Wheat Board uses quotas to equalize delivery opportunities so that a large operator with semi-trailer trucks cannot plug an elevator to the exclusion of other farmers. Inland terminals require large volumes of grain at any given time to fill a unit train, which would require preferential quotas at the expense of nearby country elevators. The Board also averages the price of grain to protect farmers from violent price fluctuations in a season. During periods of temporarily high grain prices, multinational grain companies with inland storage terminals could pressure farmers to lobby politicians to stop price averaging. During periods of low prices and surplus grain, private grain companies could pressure farmers to end the quota system so the companies could take large volumes of grain at low prices and resell later at high prices.

• (1650)

The Canadian Wheat Board itself would cease to exist in such an environment and Canadian grain policy would be more vulnerable to manipulation by American politics and boycotts. Without the Crow rate, it will be less expensive to ship Canadian grain through U.S. ports than through Canadian ports. CN and CP already have lines to Duluth, Minnesota where grain can be loaded on boats for shipment to east coast elevators. Through its subsidiary Soo Line, CP owns track to Minneapolis, Minnesota where grain can be loaded on barges for shipment to export elevators at New Orleans. Minneapolis is—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair hesitates to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the time allotted to her has expired. She may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Member: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to follow my friend from British Columbia who is a British Columbian transplanted to the streets of Toronto.

Ms. McDonald: Oh, oh!

Mr. Friesen: I did not intend to make that kind of allusion. However, with her broad background on farming, having been raised on a farm in British Columbia, she draws on that incredibly intensive experience to bring that depth of background to this debate. It is even more interesting that she was so well versed on corporations and understands them very well.

We are debating an amendment which is to hoist this Bill for six months. Even though the amendment was proposed by the NDP, it happens to be a very good amendment. They in particular need six months to study any subject. Therefore, it happens to be an amendment to my liking.

I am always wondering where they are on this subject. I noted with particular attention the statement under Standing Order 21 submitted by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) at two o'clock today in which he was decrying the management-labour tension in the Port of Vancouver and the fact that the few people involved in that dispute are going to create massive problems for the $6 billion industry in the Prairies.

I understand very clearly what he said because it was very accurate, that the few people involved in that tension are disrupting the whole agricultural community on the Prairies and will create losses that cannot be recouped. Think of the demurrage charges and all of the other related expenses that come about as a result of that work problem. I will not call it a stoppage, but it certainly is a problem.

What the Hon. Member for Prince Albert failed to say—and this is why I always wonder why they pose themselves as friends of the farmer—was that every time there is a work stoppage at the Port of Vancouver which stops the flow of grain from the Prairies and there is back to work legislation proposed in the House, since I have been here the New Democrats from the Prairies, who are supposed to be the champions of the farmers, vote against the back to work legislation. While the Hon. Member for Prince Albert is decrying the imposition of those terrible costs on the farmers from the Prairies, his colleagues from the Prairies always support the work stoppage and the increased cost to the prairie farmer.

The Members on my left cannot have it both ways. They either have to be for the farmer in this case or against the farmer. When it comes to voting back to work legislation for a few hundred workers in the Vancouver area, they will vote for the union and against the farmer. They have done it ever since I have come to this House. I fail to see why they have been successful in posing as the friend of the farmer when they actually vote against the farmer whenever there is a confrontation between the farmer and the port workers in Vancouver.

In the few minutes remaining to me, I would like to speak about this very important issue, the Crow rate. It is true that the legislation would do away with the statutory protection for the farmer and provide statutory protection for the railway. That in itself is an inequity that violates the basic sense of fairness that the Canadian people have. It is not fair to continue protection to the railways but to deny it to the farmer.

While inflation and increased costs of production impinge heavily on the farmer, and in the last ten years there has been 135 per cent increase in inflation and the cost of production for the farmer, there is still no protection for the farmer in terms of freight rates. Therefore, I understand the tension that exists on the Prairies when it comes to this legislation.

What bothers me most in the sweetheart deal between the railways and the Government is the double standard that has been invoked. We are arguing a rate that was established 80 years ago. At that time the railways agreed through a statutory limit that they would not charge more than a certain amount for the transport of grain. Today those costs bear no resemblance to the present day costs. The payment established 80 years ago bears no relationship to today's transport costs. We have the railways coming to us and saying they cannot operate under this arrangement because there is no realistic relationship between the cost of 80 years ago and today. I can understand that, but let us examine the language of the railway on another issue, namely, railway pensions.

My friend, the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) indicated this morning the way the railways treat their minority shareholders in terms of stocks and dividends and the way they have robbed minority shareholders over the years by the way they have treated long-term arrangements. The same is true of the workers. If there is one thing that has gratified me over the years, it is the sense of loyalty that I have experienced on the part of railway workers to the railways. CPR and CNR employees are proud of their railways.

Mr. Benjamin: No, of the work.

Mr. Friesen: The Hon. Member says of the work, but they are proud of the railways. What bothers me is that in spite of this intense pride those workers have for their work and for their railways, they have been betrayed by the railways. Let me illustrate by way of their pension plans.

There are two pension plans that have been devised by the railways over the years, one covering pensions from 1935 to 1959 and one covering from 1959 to 1967. The pension plan devised for 1935 to 1959 gave the workers a pension of 40 per cent over the best ten years of employment. Let us say that that was a $3 average over 1950 to 1960; 40 per cent of those best ten years. What relationship is there between that payment now and the cost of living for those pensioners? There is no fairness at all.

Some years ago when I wrote to Ian Sinclair of CP Investment about that inequity, he said, "That's tough, they invested that money in long-term arrangements and they have to pay back according to their return on that investment". I have a letter from Mr. Roy Lowry, administrative officer of the president's office of CNR. Listen to the language he uses: "The employees' contribution, subject to matching contributions from the company with interest accrued to date of retirement, represented the company's obligation." When it comes to the employers' or the former employees' obligations, it is all statutory. There is no consideration given to the increased cost of living. There is no consideration given to the inflationary spiral. There is no consideration given to the plight of those former employees who are now living on meagre pensions. It is always a statutory obligation.

Why is it, Mr. Speaker, that the railway can argue so eloquently about changing the statutory regulation when it comes to subsidies for the railway, but it is speechless when it comes to the statutory obligations for the pensioner? Why is it, Mr. Speaker, that it needs so much to operate because of the spiralling costs of production, but it cannot argue on behalf of its employees who are living on a meagre income?

Let me close by saying, Mr. Speaker, that it seems to me that the unions that are supposed to be defending employees have been no better because the unions forget the employees as soon as they are retired. They work for them as long as they are employed, but out of sight means out of mind. In that sense the unions have done no better than management.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to say a few words on Bill C-155 today. The Bill has commonly been called the Crow rate Bill and is perhaps not readily understood in large urban centres such as metropolitan Toronto. Generally speaking, it is viewed as something that concerns only those Canadians who are involved in the farming communities.

Mr. Cosgrove: They know that it means jobs.

Mr. Young: They certainly do know that it means jobs and, apparently, they understand that much better than does the Liberal Party. That is why the farming community is so concerned about the changes that the Government is trying to impose upon them.

My good friend, the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith), wondered whether there were any farmers in Beaches who were particularly concerned about the amendments that the Government intends to make to the Crow rate, and I want to assure him that while there are no farmers as they are commonly understood, certainly many of my constituents lived on farms and migrated to the city. These people certainly understand the implications of the Crow rate and they have expressed their concerns to me.

The issue that we in the House are talking about deals not only with individuals who are directly involved in the farm industry. It goes far beyond that. It goes deeper than that. It goes to a basic principle—

Mr. Cosgrove: It creates many jobs.

Mr. Young: I will talk about jobs, and I will also talk about jobs in the Hon. Minister's constituency that will be lost because of what the Government intends to do.

We are actually talking about a social contract between Canadians and their Government which goes back to the 1800s because it was back then, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian Pacific Railway received substantial mineral rights, land and cash from the people of Canada in exchange for certain responsibilities. One of those obligations was to haul grain at the Crow rate. Another was to use its mineral resources to keep its transcontinental rail line modern and efficient as the country grew.

Now Canadian Pacific says that it wants to keep the mineral rights and grants but shift its obligations to farmers and taxpayers who will have to pay the bills. The Government agrees with CP and has introduced legislation to end the Crow rates for grain transportation. This action will provoke a deep and possibly desperate reaction on the part of the people on the Prairies who consider the Crow their Confederation bargain.

The Crow is also important to central Canada. If the farmers have to pay higher freight charges, they will have less money to spend on tractors, trucks and supplies made in central Canada. Thousands of workers at farm implement plants in Ontario, for example, are already on lay-off. Doing away with the Crow will guarantee more lost jobs.

As another example, the extra freight charges to be paid by farmers under the Government's plan will lower the Canadian Gross National Product by some $1.5 billion in 1991, which means that the economy will then support some 51,000 fewer jobs than it does today.

Higher freight charges to ship grain in Canada will also divert grain from the Canadian Prairies to U.S. ports. My friend, the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong), has raised this issue in the House during Question Period and has yet to receive a satisfactory response from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). Canadians who work on the railways, the Great Lakes and the Seaway will also lose jobs because of the Government's proposals.

If farmers have to pay higher freight charges, they will produce less grain. Even Agriculture Canada admits that this will mean a reduction in grain exports which now earn our country some $6 billion a year in foreign exchange.

While the New Democratic Party is in favour of upgrading Canadian railways, we would pay the railways for their proven losses hauling grain at the Crow rate and make public investment to upgrade the rails for all commodities in all regions, not just those favoured by the Minister and Canadian Pacific and the other railways. Our proposal would cost no more than the Government's plan but more rail upgrading would be accomplished because we would prevent public money from leaving the rail system and going to dividends or foreign real estate. The taxpayers have paid for rail upgrading for over 100 years, and we say that it is time we stopped the handouts and instead took equity in Canadian Pacific Limited and Canadian National for what we pay.

In 1881, Mr. Speaker, the CPR syndicate accepted from the people of Canada land, cash, rail lines and other benefits in exchange for a commitment to "thereafter and forever efficiently maintain, work and run the Canadian Pacific Railway". Clearly Parliament intended that the vast land grants and other benefits were to permit the syndicate to finance the railway's ongoing operation.

In general terms, the Crow rate is one half of an indivisible national policy dating back to the time of Sir John A. Macdonald that was to provide tariff protection for central industry and low cost transport to develop the eastern and western region. Specifically, the Crow rate was agreed upon by the CPR and the Government of Canada and remains a valid and binding contract. Sir Clifford Sifton, party to the negotiations that established the 1897 Crow rate agreement, said in 1929:

> I remember when as a young minister in Laurier's cabinet, Van Horne and Shaughnessy said a line into the Kootenay mining district would not be considered for fifteen years. Also I remember that within six weeks the same two gentlemen came into my office and said that they had to build this line and wanted a large bonus for doing it, that the CPR was on the verge of bankruptcy. We gave them this bonus against the public sentiment of two-thirds of the people of Canada. They built the line and the Kootenay mining development (nucleus of Cominco) saved the CPR and saved a good many other things in Canada.

Again, Mr. Speaker, in 1925, Parliament put the Crow rate in a statute when the railways offered to keep grain on the Crow rate if they could be relieved from the agreement for low rates on other commodities. At the time, the CPR made it clear that they were not asking for any change in the conditions established in 1897 in regard to grain and grain products.

A. R. Gobeil, one member of the MacPherson Royal Commission on Transportation, had this to say:

> —the grain rates were not imposed by Parliament. They were not only freely accepted by the railway but were offered by them as an inducement to persuade Parliament to lift that part of the agreement which pertained to westbound rates on other commodities.

• (1710)

At no time in 1925 was there a suggestion by either Party that the agreement of 1897 was being terminated. The Crowsnest Pass Agreement is a binding contract and if the Canadian Pacific Railway wishes to be relieved of its obligation under that agreement, it must also relinquish the other benefits it derives.

I see that my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I urge the Government and all Members on this side of the House to defeat this totally inequitable Bill which will work against Canadian farmers.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, today I am speaking on something that I knew absolutely nothing about three weeks ago.

Mr. MacBain: Things have not changed!

Mr. Fennell: No, big mouth.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Remarks should be addressed to the Chair, as the Hon. Member knows.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, because of the importance of this Bill I have had an opportunity to become aware of the Crowsnest Pass rate. To me it is another example of the destruction of our national transportation system. In Ontario we have seen the destruction of the rail passenger service, and indeed that has gone on even beyond Ontario, but in my riding the train that used to go past the back of my property every day no longer operates.

This week I had an opportunity to help a gentleman who found that he could not send his vehicle by train because it was too heavy. He was told the railways did not have the service. Strangely enough, Air Canada came to the rescue; the airline could take it but VIA Rail could not. I spoke to the Minister about that case and he admitted it was strange that the train could not take a large wheelchair vehicle when it had a mail car. That is another example of the Government's attitude towards rail transportation in this country.

It is the historical implications of the Bill that we are dealing with. I support the NDP motion for a six-month hoist. It took us six months to get the Constitution and it should have taken longer. This Bill should go to committee for at least six months so that everyone in the country can discuss it, not just Members of Parliament who have been brought up to date on the matter. This is a sound proposal, Mr. Speaker. There is no reason to rush this. There is no reason that the Transport Committee could not meet throughout the summer to hear the views of people from across the land. I notice that one of my colleagues who is involved in transportation does not like that idea very well, but I would be prepared to sit on that Committee to become more aware of the transportation system in the country.

This Party agrees, in principle, to some adjustment but not that set forth by the Minister. We must have some freedom in this country and, as the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) has stated a number of times, what we are pushing for is freedom of choice. The trouble with not having freedom of choice is that it leaves too much power in the hands of Government and the railways while it removes power from the farmers, the producers and processors. I feel that the Bill leaves far too much power with the railways and too much with the Minister.

I should like to compare this subsidy with a few things in Ontario. There are local transportation commissions which are all subsidized by the taxpayer. VIA Rail is subsidized by the taxpayer, the St. Lawrence Seaway has been subsidized by the taxpayer for years and now the tolls are so high that the tonnage has dropped dramatically. This Bill could have the same effect on the western farmer, and that is what I am nervous about. The Trans-Canada highway is subsidized by the taxpayer so that people can go on holidays. Economics are far more important than putting in a Trans-Canada highway. Highways should be the responsibility of the Provinces which have been collecting gas taxes for years for that purpose. Now the federal Government has to stick its nose in and subsidize the highways.

Another classic case of subsidization is Canadair, a transportation company which cost us $1,400 million. Now we find that de Havilland is going to cost $266 million.

The Government is asking farmers to give up their rights and is removing opportunity for producers and processors in the West. We must realize that this country is 5,000 miles long and 100 miles wide, and a little wider in the West. In Ontario, however, there is not much agriculture beyond 50 to 100 miles from the border.

We are committed to subsidizing transportation for grains and agricultural products. Every country in the world subsidizes agricultural products and transportation. We have a more serious problem than any other country, however, because our agricultural belt is so far from ocean ports. Now the Government is asking that we not allow farmers to have the freedom to choose what they want to do.

The subsidy in the United States amounts to between 30 per cent and 33 per cent and is paid directly to the farmer, not to the railway. He ships by rail and receives that amount of money back. France is another good example. At the end of World War II it was not self-sufficient in the production of grain but now it has become not only self-sufficient but is a net exporter of grain. The French Government gives farmers a 50 per cent subsidy on any grain shipped out of the country. That is the kind of arrangement we should have.

I am not arguing that the railways do not need more funds, but those funds should flow from the farmers to the railways. If it happened that another form of transportation was more logical for some people than the Canadian National Railways, they should be permitted to use it. We are locking them in to the railways.

The point I am trying to make, Mr. Speaker, is that this is not right.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): You are doing a poor job of it.

Mr. Fennell: A subsidy to the railway is no guarantee that the railway will be improved. Railways are greedy and always have been. A recent example of that is that the CNR is now releasing a large number of employees because of new technology, compared to General Motors in my riding which is retraining every single employee so that they will not lose their jobs. This is a national disgrace, Mr. Speaker. That is the kind of thing that we should be speaking up for. I do not have faith in Crown corporations or in the railways. We must provide security, Mr. Speaker, for some processing of the grain in the West. It is far more economical to process the grain there, feed the beef and ship the beef out of the West. I know that some farmers in Ontario will not like that statement. However, I would like just briefly to explain that in Ontario they are fortunate. They are self-sufficient in grain. They are self-sufficient agriculturally, whereas the West, because it does not have the population, it does not have the same opportunity as those people in Ontario. However, I do stand on the principle of freedom of choice and I hope that this House will vote for this amendment.

• (1720)

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to stand and speak in favour of the amendment to have a six-month hoist on this Bill. I would like to speak particularly from the point of view of the people of British Columbia who perhaps have not been quite as close to this issue and may not understand what great relevance it really has to them, both as Canadians and as British Columbians. "Keep the Crow", the clarion cry of western Canadians sometimes mystifies the people in British Columbia. "Why is this so important to farmers on the Prairies? Why is it so important that they will fight to retain the Crow freight rates, it seems, forever?"—and certainly I can say that from the point of view of Hon. Members of this caucus. "Why have thousands of people signed hundreds of petitions?", which incidentally the Government has restricted Members of Parliament in this Party from presenting, "And why are they so up in arms right across Canada and supported by people in all Provinces? Is the Crow rate important only to prairie farmers?"

I was very interested, Mr. Speaker, to learn that indeed the farmers of British Columbia will be equally affected by the removal of the Crow freight rate promises. In my research I learned that the incomes of British Columbia farmers would be cut by 30 per cent by 1992 as a result of this legislation. The cost of feed grains alone in British Columbia would be increased by 10 per cent because the feed grains come to B.C. from the prairie Provinces. It is a very important issue not only to farmers in B.C. but also it will have an impact on other workers in B.C. along with the rest of western Canada.

There are some superficial opinions which some people may have about this subject and I believe there is one Hon. Member among the Hon. Members who are so vocal across the way whom I would perhaps include in that group. I received a letter the other day from a person who asked, "By supporting Bill C-155, are you actually opposing job creation? Does it mean that you are against transportation improvements?" Categorically—and I hope the Hon. Member who is so lippy across the way will listen to this—we, of course, do not agree with this, and I will document that in a few moments. I would like to go, first of all, Mr. Speaker, to the basic Confederation agreement which was made regarding the Crowsnest freight rate. Mr. Allen Engel, the agriculture critic from Saskatchewan spoke in April to Members of Parliament of all Parties. He said the following:

—the Crow Rate is part of the ongoing Confederation bargain. It is an offset to higher costs borne by the West from such things as tariffs, the monopoly power of the railways, and the tremendous benefits given to the railways by the people of Canada since 1867.

You can't change this balance by only altering one component, ... If more money is needed to modernize the rail system, let everyone in Canada pay for that—not just western farmers.

Everyone in Canada, after all, will benefit from the trade dollars generated by the growing volumes of exports of various commodities produced in western Canada.

And if the Canadian public is going to invest in the rail system, it should get equity in return for that investment.

No more giveaways to the railways.

The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), as you are aware, Mr. Speaker, is a long time expert on the Crow rate and on transportation matters, generally. I would just like to refer quickly to comments he made, very eloquently, I believe, on "The Nation's Business". He said the following:

Back in the late 1800s the Canadian Pacific Railway received substantial mineral rights, land and cash from the people of Canada, in exchange for certain responsibilities. One of the obligations was to haul grain at the low Crow rate.

The Crowsnest Pass grain rate is the foundation of the western Provinces' union with the rest of Canada. Just as tariffs helped central Canada develop its industry, the Crow rate still helps western Canada get its grain over long distances to market.

Times change of course, but the geographical barrier separating our grain from market remains. Other countries grow their grain close to the cheap water transport or subsidize their grain transport. Without the Crow rate, our farmers today cannot easily afford to sell grain in competition with other countries.

He went on to explain, Mr. Speaker, that if the Crow goes, shipping subsidies in Atlantic Canada will be next. It is the same principle and is the same Liberal policy. Farmers who will lose 35 per cent of their incomes, of course will buy fewer supplies from central Canada, those tractors and farm implements, and much of the equipment which supply manufacturing jobs in central Canada. They will export less grain from British Columbia ports. The New Democratic Party estimates that by abandoning the Crow rate, it could cost 50,000 Canadians their jobs.

I would like to point out to the average homemaker in British Columbia that the cost of bread in British Columbia will go up by at least five cents a loaf directly related to changing costs. If the Government removes the Crow rate subsidy, as it intends to do, cheaper transportation rates through the United States will force farmers to export grain through the United States via CPR in the U.S., instead of through the ports of Canada. I was very interested in the information provided, again by our transport critic, that the CPR is already planning for this diversion of grain transportation through the United States. It has already taken advantage of the changes which are being proposed to expand its rails in the United States at a cost which would be less than using the St. Lawrence Seaway. On May 24, the same Hon. Member said that the CNR is showing evidence of doing the same thing. These railways should improve their tracks in Canada, not bail out the bankrupt Milwaukee Railroad in the United States where some $300 million was being used, which should have been used, of course, in Canada.

I would like to point out also, Mr. Speaker, that this Bill will have an immediate effect on my riding of Vancouver East. A lot of people in my constituency perhaps are quite unaware of this. If this grain and coal as well is diverted through the United States rather than coming west through the Rockies and into the Port of Vancouver, it will have a serious impact with loss of jobs for grain workers, longshoremen, and railway workers in Vancouver east and in the B.C. lower mainland, as well as people in businesses who service the port. There are alternative plans which, indeed, we have proposed to the Government. The Government proposes to make western farmers pay for an improved transportation system. We feel that everyone in Canada should pay for this, not just the farmers. Of course, we must modernize rail transportation as well as shipping facilities in western Canada, but we believe that the geography of Canada requires that everyone, not just farmers, pay for this.

Certainly we could go on forever about the deals the CPR has pulled over the years, including the real estate deals some of us question.

We in the New Democratic Party insist that the Crow rate was an agreement of Confederation and must be maintained as a national commitment, assisting everyone in Canada. We strongly support and urge the improvement of the transportation system to serve all parts of Canada. We need improved rails, new tunnelling, a boxcar industry, and we need that in British Columbia once again as well as port improvements. These are essential to Canada's economic recovery and the creation of jobs.

Money should be invested in improved transportation. We have advocated that $550 million a year be invested, but again with equity return so that Canadians will have control. We are also concerned about the coal agreements.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time allotted to her has expired.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I think the Crow rate reforms are just another shabby example of the Liberal Party's dedication to the philosophy that the end justifies the means. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his Cabinet know exactly where the badly needed votes will be coming from in the next federal election and they will do anything in their power to make sure those votes are assured, even if that means creating disunity in a country that all of us in this Chamber love—well, most of us anyway. They will do that even if it means permitting drastic weaknesses in our agricultural economy.

Yes, we are aware that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has to some degree anyway studied the question of the Crow rate. We do not question his dedication to what is a very involved problem. We are aware that the Crow rate, as it now stands, is not without its imperfections. It is true that the rate of 1897 is not applicable to today's world. Yet the Minister's so-called solution really just creates another problem. The headaches caused by this proposal, if passed in its present form, will make past problems seem minimal by comparison. Nowhere in the new proposals can there be seen the slightest application of common sense or a sense of justice. Any notion of responsibility to the country as a whole I believe, is non-existent.

The Minister has shown himself to be agreeable to the wishes of an alliance of self-interested individuals and pressure groups. I would hope that he would now have the good sense to pay close attention to those who have the courtesy to point out to him that the present course of action is indeed sheer and utter folly. I wonder if the Minister realizes that the repercussions of this decision will be drastic and also long lasting? Is he aware that this could cause the secondary agricultural industry in the West, particularly in Alberta, to die?

I speak not as a westerner but as an eastern Canadian and an Ontarian who values the place of the western Provinces in Confederation and who deplores any action which tends to give them second billing. After all, where are the great wheat producing areas of our country? Where do we in the East obtain the materials which give us the prosperity we now enjoy? We all know. Indeed, the Minister knows. Yet he is about to cause an upheaval in our country which can only add to the great feeling of alienation shared by many and perhaps most westerners today.

As Dr. Gilson pointed out in his report, the distortion resulting from the Crow hampers all agricultural sectors in the Prairies, creating problems which are growing worse with inflation every day. The Crow is indeed a disincentive to railway investment, and the grain producer can no longer be assured of an adequate and responsive system to move his harvest.

I think the objective should then be to deal with the distortions and provide incentives to the railroads. It is hard to disagree that the freight rates must effectively be raised but the way to do it is certainly not to provide such huge subsidies to the railroads and then nothing to the farmers. The record of farmers is good. They have done more for the reputation of this country than any single group in Canada's history. Our bargaining power with the Soviet Union and China is a direct result of our massive grain exports to those countries.

Let us look at the reputation of the railways, Mr. Speaker. The name of the game has been branchline abandonment. Passenger service across this country is fast becoming a joke. Lines that were paying for themselves, for example the Atlantic run, just recently let go, and the Barrie to Toronto runs, have been cut back or dropped entirely. Meanwhile, mismanagement and overpayment of high officials are the real cause of the heavy losses incurred by the railways. Yet look who is receiving the subsidy.

Let us discuss further the potential for job losses. It is interesting to note the conflict between the Crow rate proposal and the special recovery program outlined in last month's sneaky-leaky budget. That program was designed to save jobs and the Crow rate proposal is guaranteed to destroy them. Thousands of jobs in the feeding, meat packing and food processing industries are going to be lost in the western part of our country.

Is it any wonder, then, that our Party is upset? That is where a great deal of our representation is from. We represent the western people and therefore we are truly the only national Party in this country. The Liberals have no stake in that part of the country, yet it reflects badly on them that they have chosen to ride roughshod over the best interests of that very important area.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that a powerful Quebec lobby is looking to its own best interests, realizing that the original Crow revision will have inevitably led to more agricultural diversification in the West. The areas of livestock processing and marketing of products are not the exclusive property of Quebec entrepreneurs. Is it just that they should have a monopoly on this? Is it fair that the West remain the raw material provider for the rest of the country instead of enjoying its own industry and the accompanying benefits? My answer is, I think not.

In some ways I very much admire the Minister of Transport. He has made an effort to persuade powerful Quebec Cabinet Ministers and the 74 Liberal MPs from la belle province to show some national spirit and some respect for the legitimate aspirations of the western Provinces and accept the proposals he outlined. Yet, selfishly, without long-term thought, they brought intense pressure upon the Minister to produce a half-baked compromise which brings out all the worst parts of the Bill and replaces the good ones.

The straight subsidy to the railroads, by far the most significant change in the proposal, can only add to the tragic list of plant closings in the meat processing industry in the West. Meanwhile the Quebec industry will profit. Pork producers, subsidized at great cost to the taxpayers, are living high off the hog in Quebec. Alberta now plays second fiddle to Quebec in that department. Is it really fair then, Mr. Speaker, that grain grown in Prairie fields can be bought as cheaply in Quebec as in Alberta? The Quebec producer does not have the same shipping costs as the Prairie beef man. However, he can have his livestock to market the same day with little or no weight loss. The Prairie beef producer ships his cattle East, which takes days, at considerable cost in shrinkage and shipping. No wonder farmers are going bankrupt today.

Do the huge subsidies to the railroads guarantee that branchlines will not be abandoned and that good service at reasonable rates will be provided? I heard someone in the House say that the Minister has heart, and someone else said he is heartless. Maybe he has a carburetor instead of a heart, I am not sure, but he certainly should take another look at this Bill. I tend to doubt the Minister because of the past record of mismanagement. Listen to the tales of overnight closure of branchlines with the resultant death of full towns in the West. The trouble with a subsidy is that companies get used to them. They feel the word "efficiency" is no longer in the dictionary. They can go ahead and do whatever they please with the full knowledge that they will be bailed out when it is necessary.

Is my time running out? I have only three or four more sentences, Mr. Speaker; about 30 seconds.

In conclusion, I want to keep in mind the best interests of all Canadians. There can be no favouritism here. We are facing a major question of national unity. Regional differences are one matter, but political issues are at stake. Frankly, I think the proposal reeks of political engineering. In the long run, the future of our country is at stake.

I thank Your Honour for the extension of time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin my short speech today by posing a question. Why is this major initiative to deal with the biggest transportation problem in the country today not worth careful and lengthy consideration by Parliament? Why is there this rush, this attempt to impose closure? Why is there such a decision by the Government, which it forces through because it has a majority, that the hours the House sits shall be extended to 11 o'clock in the evening three nights a week?

The proposed change in the Crow rate contained in the Bill at the present time, represents an attempt by the Government to impose an historic change on a region of Canada, western Canada, in which the Government has no members. I suggest that with a polarized Parliament such as this, in which the Liberal Government has no Members from the area where the legislation with which we are dealing will have such a major effect, it will change the established rights of that part of the country in a way and to an extent we have never seen before. I suggest that when those kind of changes are being brought forward, a Government which cares, one which wants to keep the country together, should have moved cautiously in wiping out the Crow rate, regarded by so many people in western Canada as being their Magna Carta.

People in western Canada and in Atlantic Canada have felt for many years that they are second class citizens, that their interests are sacrificed for the benefits of central Canada, for the benefits of Ontario and Quebec. The kind of provisions contained in this Bill will go a long way toward convincing many people in western Canada that their fear is justified.

It has been argued by the President of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, in support of the Government's plan, that it would put almost $1 billion into industrial, transportation and agricultural developments all across Canada. That is true. However, one must ask where that money will come from.

If one asks that question, one finds the answer to be very clear. The money would come from the pockets of Canadian farmers. Where would they obtain that money? They could not increase the price of the grain they sell, because if they did they could not compete with the Australians, the Americans or the Agentinians, all of whom are in very stiff competition with the Canadian farmer for their share of the world's grain market. Therefore, the Canadian grain farmer or producer would find his income reduced by the amount of the increase in the cost of transportation.

What would the Canadian farmer do? He would have to reduce the money he now spends and has spent for farm equipment, automobiles, trucks and other consumer goods. That would have an immediate effect on the farm equipment manufacturers and on the automobile companies, because they would use less steel, less rubber and less of all the products which go into producing the very heavy equipment they sell, and of which the farmer is a major, if not the major, purchaser.

The plan is supposedly to pump $16 billion into upgrading the transportation system. The farmer is told that it would only cost him 2 cents a bushel in the way of an increase. We know and the farmers know that that is just a beginning, that in fact, the increase will rise every year so that he will be looking at an increase in transportation costs over the next eight or ten years of something in the neighbourhood of 400 or 500 per cent.

There are people who are scandalized by the idea that a freight rate established in the 1890s should still be applied in the 1980s. Those people should remember several things. They should remember the principle of taxation, which is that any old tax is a fair tax, and any new tax is an unfair tax. It is true that 90 years have elapsed since the Crow rate went into effect, but all Governments since that time have had opportunities, which they have used, to review the Crow rate legislation and to change it. It has been scrutinized and examined by three or more Royal Commissions. All of them recommended against any change.

I am not opposed to a change in the Crow rate agreement under certain conditions. What are the conditions as I see them? The Crow rate was part of a package agreement. The railways agreed to move grain at a very cheap rate. They received compensation, the compensation being millions of dollars in cash grants, which they are still receiving, and millions of acres of land, some of the most valuable acreage in Canada. The Cominco property in Trail, B.C., was part of the land which the CPR received. Therefore, if the Government or anyone else wants to renegotiate the Crow agreement, I say let us renegotiate the whole agreement. We will ask the farmers to give up the cheap rate for moving grain if and when the CPR gives back the money and the land which it received as part of the package.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: That would be a fair deal and one to which I, and I think all Members of our Party, could agree.

The Canadian Pacific is one of the largest, if not the largest, corporation in this country. How did it get that way? It was as a result of the initial cash grabs and the land and other concessions it received. It would take me more time than that allotted to me just to list all the companies which the CPR owns—

An Hon. Member: As a result of what we gave them.

Mr. Orlikow: —as a result, of course, of what we gave them and upon which they built. I looked in the Financial Post's report on companies and found that CP Limited, in 1981—I will not list all the companies—had total assets of $16 billion. As far as I can tell, that does not include Cominco, of which it is a major shareholder, which had assets of more than $1 billion. It received that as a result of the deal it made back in 1890. We ought to keep that in mind when we speak of giving the hundreds of millions of dollars which this revision of the Crow rate will provide.

We in our Party are not opposed to modernizing and upgrading the railway system. How could I be opposed to that when I represent so many railway workers? Both the CNR and CPR in my city have recently had closures lasting for two and three months at a time. They have put thousands of workers who have worked for the company for up to 30 years on lay-off, for the first time in their history.

I have told the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) that this is idiotic. We know that our shipments of grain, sulphur, coal and potash will increase greatly in ten years. I have been telling the Government for the last couple of years that now is the time to modernize the system. We are not opposed to modernizing the system. We want the railways to get on with the job of upgrading their system in order to move all of our goods.

However, we do not want this to be done at the expense of the farmers or at the expense of the railway workers. We say that the farmers should not be required to shoulder the capital burden, as we believe this Bill will force them to do, that will be required to move the coal, sulphur, potash and other bulk commodities. We say that this Bill does not accomplish that, and we are opposed to it for that reason.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join my colleagues in today's ongoing debate on Bill C-155, the Western Grain Transportation Act, or the Crow rate as it is commonly called, because of its unquestioned importance to all Canadians. Although I usually only participate in debates relating to the scientific and industrial development of our great country, I feel I should make my views known on this important Bill because, as all Members know, it does not affect only one particular part of Canada, namely the western region, but every other part of Canada as well.

The controversy over the Crow rate has resulted in a national debate on the topic, as it well should. The Crow rate is a special rail freight rate that is applied to the transportation of export grain and stems from an agreement between the federal Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway back in September of 1897. As part of the agreement, the CPR agreed to maintain the Crow rate in perpetuity in return for land and federal aid in building the railway in the mineral-rich Kootenay region of southern British Columbia.

A short while ago I had the opportunity to briefly discuss this Bill with a number of my constituents at a brunch in my riding. One of my constituents stated that he felt the Crow rate was, in his words, a western problem and that as a resident of Ontario he did not feel he had very much at stake in this issue.

Regrettably, my constituent was wrong. It has been demonstrated decade after decade, in country after country that a healthy agricultural community is the basis for a healthy and strong economy of a country as a whole. This is particularly true in Canada's case where we depend on billions of foreign dollars to come to Canada to pay for the wheat and other grains we export.

As transportation costs are a big item in any farmer's budget, and because the Government of 1897, unlike the present Government, wanted to protect this important industry, the Crow rate was imposed upon the railroads to ensure that distance would not be a fatal charge for the wheat growers. In return for the special rate imposed on the railroads for the benefit of farmers the railroads were given vast grants of land and other concessions in perpetuity for the benefit of the railroad.

There is not a farmer anywhere in the West in any community who will argue that the rate set so many years ago should apply in the same terms today. They will admit that times have changed. But the solution put forward by the Government to give the benefits to the railroads with no concessions at all to the western farmers is completely unacceptable.

Can anyone seriously argue that the railroads are being victimized by a fixed freight rate which is far below today's actual cost of grain transportation, while ignoring the huge gain in the asset value of the lands and concessions given to the railways when they entered into the agreement? If one argues that the lands cannot be taken back for today's value without destroying the railroads—unlike my friends to my left who somehow believe that the lands could be given back, destroying the railroads totally, to all of our disadvantage—then why should we not be as concerned about the other party to the agreement, the grain farmer who similarly could be destroyed? Perhaps we should consider giving proportionate shares in the railroad to the farmers in return for increased freight rates. At least in that manner they would benefit from this one-sided solution to the problem.

Whatever solutions may lie ahead, it should not be to the detriment of one key segment of our society which year after year and at great personal financial risk grows and exports a renewable Canadian resource to the benefit of us all. While the Government may have nothing to lose in western Canada politically, the country has a great deal to lose if the Government continues to ignore what is a legitimate regional concern of the country, or how this Bill will affect the other regions of Canada.

If anything has resulted thus far in the debate, it has been a demonstration of the failure of the Government to understand Canada and those forces which bring it together and make it work. It has shown its failure to understand the differences so it can ultimately reconcile them.

Bill C-155 has widened the consensus gap. The country has moved further away from consensus on changing the Crow rate even since the announcement by the Minister of Transport to modify the Bill. Whatever general feeling or consensus existed in the West has disappeared. Not only are the grain farmers and the livestock producers bitter and angry, the modification to the Bill to make all payments to the railways has not entirely satisfied the pools. The Saskatchewan Wheat Pool is still asking for more changes.

Let us look for a moment at this piece of complex legislation which bears the Liberal trademark of complexity and bureaucracy. Let us examine why the statutory Crow rate is so important to western Canada.

The statutory rate is a constitutional pillar which provides stability, simplicity and certainty to western Canadian grain producers. At .05 cents a tonne mile, the rate has been a valuable tool for producers in their planning. The statutory rate is about the only farm input cost providing cost certainty to farmers. The statutory rate provided the historical, social and economic base of western Canada which was founded on the production, distribution and marketing of grain. The statutory rate was a trade off and acted as a counterbalance protection from industrial based central Canada. The statutory rate recognized that Canada, as a trading nation, must be competitive and it buffered farmers from the artificial and natural advantages of other grain exporting countries. The statutory rate recognized that grain and oil seeds were natural assets to Canada, contributing positively to the balance of trade and economic spin-offs.

There are a number of ways in which this Liberal Government has betrayed the statutory rate and Members should know why our Party opposes the existing Bill. First, the principles of the statutory freight rate are not retained in this legislation. There is no guarantee of international competitiveness for the future.

Second, the freight rate structure will provide for openended escalation without consideration for farmers' profit positions or the value of grain. The National Energy Program has escalated the cost of gasoline and diesel for farm equipment and has also driven up the other major cost factor, agricultural chemical fertilizers, to the point where a bushel of Canadian wheat costs over $1 more than in the United States. This latest Government bungle will further hurt the western farmer.

Third, the 31.1 million tonne cap will provide a disincentive to increase grain production. That is amazing. Any company sales manager knows enough to increase a salesman's incentive by offering greater reward for increased volume. Only a bungling bureaucrat could come up with a system that penalizes a farmer for producing more wheat and revenue for Canada.

Fourth, the blended freight rate and the prospect of variable rates will create a further disincentive.

Fifth, the Bill is a costly mechanism which will pay bureaucrats to produce more paperwork rather than farmers to produce wheat.

Sixth, the Bill will further mitigate against diversification and processing of agricultural production in western Canada.

Seventh, the Bill is overly generous to railways while neglecting the alternative means of shipping, such as commercial trucking or the farmers' own trucks.

Eighth, no provision has been made to reduce rates if costs should fall.

Finally, there are inadequate rail service performance guarantees and no incentive for the grain transport system to be cost effective and efficient.

We in this Party are not without positive suggestion and ideas with respect to this Bill and we have made them. The Government of Canada and the railways have a continuing obligation to provide a special low rate to assist Canadian producers competing with subsidized grain export nations or this valuable export of renewable resources will decline.

As well, producers should be guaranteed an efficient, cost effective and reliable grain transportation system. Producers should have the option, or choice, to ship their grain in the most cost effective way, whether by truck or train, rather than in certain instances being locked into inefficient local grain storage elevators and poorly serviced branch rail lines which, in many cases, simply adds to the cost of the product, reduces the farmers' profits, does nothing for the railway and serves the country badly. I believe I have one minute left, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Approximately.

Mr. Gilchrist: The distortion of the low freight rates in grain and oilseeds vis-à-vis processed products should be removed and the natural advantage retained. Western Canadians have the right to jobs too. Grain producers must have a statutory freight rate which preserves the benefits of the Crow and must be protected from open-ended escalation.

We are dealing with what is probably one of the most important pieces of legislation to be brought before the House in this session. This Government must not continue to act in its usual cavalier way but stop, look, and listen to what responsible and knowledgeable people are saying is wrong and damaging about this Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

Is the House ready for the question?

The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly).

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of the amendment of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), that Bill C-155 be given a six-month hoist. I do so because the Bill is a confusing piece of legislation. It incorporates three different principles, and we should not have to deal with them all at the same time. It is not good legislation.

Simultaneously, the Government has done a good job to persuade some people that this legislation will benefit them. In British Columbia particularly there are some sectors of society and the economy that feel this amendment to the Crow legislation will be beneficial. Most of us who are Members from British Columbia have received telegrams from major forest industries urging quick passage of the Bill. I note that on June 10 the Hon. Minister of Transportation and Highways for British Columbia spoke before a ports convention. I shall read some of his comments:

> We also recognize the importance of passing the legislation before Parliament rises at the end of this month. The changes that are proposed by the federal Government are critical to western Canada, its industry, its transportation system, and its communities. Like our national ports, the railways need a commercial base and a commitment of financial resources that will allow them to put the capacity in place that will be needed to move our resource products to world markets. There will be no point in developing our ports to handle growth if development plans are not matched by the railways.

Unfortunately, for the people of British Columbia, the Minister of Transportation and Highways, Mr. Fraser, sees only one aspect of the change. He isolates one factor and then uses it to suggest that the entire package will be beneficial to the people of British Columbia. That is just not the case because it ignores two basic things. First, by doing away with the statutory rates on grain shipments and allowing increased costs for shipping grain it opens the door for the possible diversion of grain to American ports in the Louisiana Gulf states because of higher Canadian freight rates. We have to ask what effect this will have on major British Columbia ports such as Prince Rupert, and especially Vancouver.

It has already been pointed out today that both the CN and the CP are involved in trying to gain control of old railways in the United States. We have to ask what is the purpose of that if it is not to serve as a way of funnelling Canadian goods through the United States? What is the purpose of us having American lines in the midwest? I suggest it is for export.

The second factor is especially important to British Columbia. It involves the Dominion coal lands. On March 15 my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker), raised his concern and the concern of all Members of this Party about the 50,000 acres of Dominion coal lands, worth some $450 billion, which were turned over to the Dominion Government as part of the original Crowsnest agreement. Clause 62 of the Bill leaves these lands with the federal Government. If this agreement is ended, why are these lands not to be returned to British Columbia so that the people of B.C. can begin to enjoy their benefit?

These lands are the richest coal lands we have in the Province at the present time, yet this Bill leaves them entirely at the mercy of an order in cabinet so the CPR or some corporation can get them again. The people of B.C. are not getting them again. That is why I and other Members of my Party would urge the Government of British Columbia to take a closer look at this Bill, and realize it is not totally favourable to the people of B.C.

It is not just wheat, but the total economy of our country that is involved. Other speakers in our Party from Ontario have pointed out the detrimental effects this Bill can have on the farm machinery implement sector of their economies. Of course, in our Party we are not only concerned about British Columbia, Ontario and the Prairies, we are concerned about the totality of the nation. We see this as one nation. We see the injury to one part of the nation as an injury to the entire nation.

In that connection I would like to read a short passage from "The Rowell Sirois Report" as follows:

> Without the construction of all-Canadian transportation facilities and an appropriate structure of freight rates (and the huge public assistance which that entailed) each of the regions would have linked up with the railway system of the United States. The connections between the various parts of the country would then have been made through the economically and politically aggressive neighbour to the south. This development would have been much less costly; it would have avoided the vast overhead of bridging great physical barriers, and it would have enabled the most intensive use of facilities already available. With the lower costs which this would have permitted, the export industries would have expanded further, the rise in the value of their natural resources would have been greater and the income obtained would have been larger. There would, however, have been no secure economic basis for a Canadian nation. Hence purely economic criteria were put aside for the creation and maintenance of a political entity.

I suggest those comments are as true today as they were in the 1930s when they were written. An injury to one part of the nation is an injury to all. If we open up the way for the diversion of Canadian grain to American ports, we will be harming British Columbia. If we reduce the cash income of prairie farmers we will be doing damage to the manufacturers in Ontario.

Certainly people in our Party have documented the negative effect these changes will have on Canadian farmers. There will be a 500 per cent increase in the cost of moving grain between now and 1991. This will force small and medium-sized farmers off the land. We have seen the results in my Province of federal government policies and the way they have forced small and medium-sized fishermen out of their jobs. Now we see the same kind of thing being applied to farmers.

We are concerned about the effects of these changes on small communities. With variable freight rates there will be much more use made of large trucks, branch lines, and branch elevators will be closed. Communities are going to be killed.

• (1810)

Our Party proposes that this Bill should be divided into three sections. This was raised as a point of order this morning. It was also raised in a letter from our House Leader to the Government House Leader over a month ago, in which he suggested:

It is the opinion of the New Democratic Party that Bill C-155 is an unacceptable omnibus Bill that must not proceed in its current form. At second reading, Members of Parliament are required to vote on the principle of the legislation. With only a single vote, Bill C-155 would require Members to pass judgment on three distinct and vital issues. Attempts to speed legislation through the House in this form have not proven successful in the past and they result in unnecessary confrontations in the Chamber. We propose this—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

Mr. Manly: Could I have just a minute to finish this letter?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to continue his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, an article appearing in the April 15 edition of the Vancouver Sun criticized British Columbia Members of Parliament for not presenting the Province's case for changes in the Crows-nest freight rate structure. The person responsible for making this assertion was no less than Mr. Don Lanskail, President and Chief Executive Officer of the Council of Forest Industries of British Columbia, commonly referred to as COFI. In the article, Mr. Lanskail is referred to as one of B.C.'s best-known lobbyists. His ties to the federal Liberal Party are well known and his Liberal credentials are impeccable. Not long ago he was rewarded by an appointment to the Board of Directors of the Canada Post Corporation.

Mr. Lewis: Some reward!

Mr. Greenaway: I remember hearing someone recount the events that took place when Mr. Lanskail, this good lobbyist, attended his first Canada Post Corporation board meeting in Ottawa. Evidently he was picked up at his Vancouver office by a limousine, handed a first-class return ticket to Ottawa, picked up at the Ottawa airport by a limousine and installed in a suite in the Chateau Laurier. When it came time to return to Vancouver, the same procedure held in reverse. Limousines and suites for the high-rollers; taxis, buses and rooms are for the great unwashed. No wonder it costs more to mail a letter than to ship a bushel of export grain.

On May 9 of this year I received my first communication from Mr. Lanskail in his position as president of COFI, urging me to support the Minister and his Crow legislation. Along with his letter was a document entitled "The Position of the Council of Forest Industries of B.C. regarding rail transportation capacity and statutory rates" dated August 1981. This was from the man who said in April of this year that British Columbia M.P.'s were remiss, if not late, in representing our Province on the Crow issue. Rather strange indeed that he saw fit to sit on a position paper for almost two years before it occurred to him that perhaps it should be shown to someone other than his Liberal friends in Ottawa. Perhaps he is overrated as one of B.C.'s best lobbyists.

In his letter, Mr. Lanskail proposes that we fully support the Minister's proposal, and also that we are expected to support the 1981 COFI position. If he had taken the time to re-read the 1981 paper he had hidden away, and to check it against the Minister's legislation, he surely would have noticed that the two are in serious conflict. For example, point four on page 13 of the COFI documents states, "Government funding should preferably be paid to the producers if a subsidy is required". They are advocating that Government funding should preferably be paid to the producers. Come, come, Mr. Lanskail, what are we to do? In your headlong rush to fall into line as a good Liberal, you have failed to amend your own position of 1981.

The other thing that annoyed B.C. Members of Parliament, and this was previously raised in the House by the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) and the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), is the telex received on May 9 by all B.C. Members from Mr. Ken Benson, President and CEO of B.C. Forest Products Limited. He also urges us to forget our responsibilities to the rest of Canada and to support the Government line. Being aware of the B.C. resource industries' situation, we can understand their position, and I will refer to this later.

However, what we could not tolerate was the fact that Mr. Benson had been clumsy enough to send his telex for distribution to the Prime Ministers office. This practice may be economical and efficient, but it may have been more effective if we had been approached via the same avenues available to most Canadians. Being lobbied courtesy the Prime Minister's Office does not sit well with B.C. Members. I suggest Mr. Benson and Mr. Lanskail have something to learn about lobbying B.C. Members of Parliament. Fortunately, many executives of the B.C. forest industry are not connected to the Liberal Party and to those good people who we have listened to well and attentively.

Let us now look at some facts about the Crow rate and British Columbia. The main argument for altering the Crow rate centres around the fact that there is little incentive for railways to improve their western systems. In particular, the forest and mining industries are concerned that capacity constraints will cause a bottleneck for the shipment of their products. This is a factor of increasing urgency, not only to these industries but to Canada's export markets.

For example, in 1960 grain dominated the bulk exports through the mountains to the West coast. By the mid-1970s, coal had surpassed grain by tonnage in these bulk exports. The latest agreements to sell B.C. metallurgical coal to Japan and other Pacific rim countries promises to continue this trend.

In 1979, forest products from B.C. made up 60 per cent of provincial exports and almost 9 per cent of Canadian exports. In 1982, a total of 4.94 billion board feet of B.C. lumber was shipped by rail. Of that total, 3.6 billion board feet was exported to the United States. Comparatively, shipment by water accounted for three billion board feet and highway shipment accounted for approximately 2.4 billion board feet. Obviously adequate rail service is vital to the good health of both the lumber and mining industries.

In 1981 the Council of Forest Industries of British Columbia argued that rationing of western rail services was imminent because current rail capacity was going to be unable to meet the demand. This possibility has been delayed by the recession which caused severe cutbacks in lumber production. However, the point remains that rail service in B.C. must be improved in order for the B.C. economy to expand in coming years.

This does not mean that British Columbia should adopt the Government's proposals as outlined in Bill C-155. Probably of greatest significance is the fact that the current legislation fails to provide adequate rail service performance guarantees. Furthermore, there is no incentive for the grain transport system to be cost effective and efficient.

There is no doubt that this Bill is generous to the railways. Under this Bill the railways will receive 100 per cent of their long-run variable costs, 20 per cent contributions to overhead and 20.5 per cent contributions to capital. In fact, by 1990 the railways will receive a 100 per cent increase in the freight rate as compared to today. Mr. Carl Snavely, who has been commissioned by the Government on numerous occasions to determine the cost of moving grain, has stated that these provisions are too generous. Unfortunately, the Government has failed to ensure that money provided to the railroads will in fact be used to increase service at a rate required to increase and improve the system. Furthermore, for the forest and mineral sectors, there is an added disadvantage in that the British Columbia Railway will not benefit from such subsidies. Therefore, services provided by B.C. Rail will be slower to improve. Furthermore, there are no benefits to truckers in the proposed legislation.

All in all, the proposals outlined in Bill C-155 fail to provide the necessary measures to guarantee the improved service required by the B.C. resource industries which depend so heavily on the country's transportation system.

I would now like to briefly discuss how cattleman in British Columbia will be affected by changes in the Crow rate. At present, the Crow rate causes higher pricing for grain for feed in the West. The Crow artificially keeps transportation costs below what they will be without the price ceiling, so farmgate prices are higher in the west than they would be without the Crow. These higher prices reduce livestock production in the West.

Would the proposals of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) alleviate this problem? Not at all. In fact, according to the Minister's own figures, these proposals will result in a loss of an additional $1 billion in livestock production and an additional $350 million worth of economic activity with respect to processing, packing plants and the feedmill industry in the West. This is not progress, Mr. Speaker.

The Progressive Conservative Party will propose an amendment which will make the Crow rate benefit optional. It will allow the producer the freedom to choose between methods of shipment and guarantee that railways will provide adequate service. We also propose that the railways should receive fair and adequate compensation in order to provide the necessary capital and maintenance of plant and equipment. We recognize that an increase in rail capacity is an absolute necessity and that railways will need extra funding to do this. However, this should not be at the expense of producers and adequate guarantees must be provided.

Finally, while I am a Member of Parliament from British Columbia, I am also a representative of all Canadians. It would be unthinkable for me to take any action which would be unfair to my fellow Canadians in other regions. Therefore, it is imperative that the Government ensure that prairie farmers retain the benefits of the Crow in order that they can compete with foreign producers who benefit from government subsidies. Failure to do so would be a disaster, not only to prairie farmers but also for the entire Canadian economy.

The proposals before the House today benefit neither the forest, mining nor cattle industries of British Columbia, nor do they provide a reasonable benefit sufficient for prairie grain farmers to remain competitive in the export market. For these reasons, the Government must adopt the amendments put forward by the Progressive Conservative Party when they come before the House.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful to have a chance to speak on this very important Bill, but it is unfortunate that under the present rules I can only speak for ten minutes.

As the representative of the Churchill constituency, a number of my constituents expect me to fight and to fight as hard as I can to prevent the passage of this legislation. One of the main concerns the people in that region have about this Bill is that it will be a knockout, killer blow to the Port of Churchill. The very fact that within this legislation before us the Government will allow variable rates to be instituted means that the Port of Churchill will lose its natural advantage as the shortest route to Europe for a good part of the grain growing area.

As long as railways are forced to charge the same rate per mile, then Churchill has the natural advantage that it should benefit from. However, if the rail lines, as a result of this Bill, introduce variable rates which are much higher on the run from the middle of Saskatchewan to the Port of Churchill and lower on lines from the middle of Saskatchewan to either

Prince Rupert, Thunder Bay or Montreal, then the people who work on the rail line in communities like The Pas, Wabowden, Gillam and Churchill, and those who work at the Port of Churchill and live in those communities will suffer very, very much.

With that in mind, Mr. Speaker, I support the amendment of my colleague from the New Democratic Party that this Bill be given a six month hoist. This Bill is not just a minor piece of legislation. This Party has always supported the traditions of the House of Commons. This Party which has been led in the House for so many years by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has always worked to try to get reasonable legislation through the House of Commons. But now we have been forced to take extra actions because to many, many western Canadians, this Bill is completely unacceptable. I could argue that because the Government has only two Members who represent constituencies west of the Ontario-Manitoba border, it has lost touch with that region. Perhaps that is true, or perhaps the few people it does listen to from western Canada have lost touch with the majority feeling in that region.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to read an advertisement that was placed by the Manitoba Government in the Winnipeg Free Press of Saturday, June 11, 1983. It is a full page advertisement paid for by the Government of Manitoba. The program of the NDP Government in Manitoba is supported by the minority Party in that Province, the Conservative Party. The ad reads:

DON'T EAT CROW! JUST BECAUSE IT'S PUT IN FRONT OF YOU.

Mr. Blenkarn: That is only temporary. That is what is going to happen to you; you are crow.

Mr. Murphy: I wish the Hon. Member from the extreme idiotic fringe of the Conservative Party would be quiet. This is a serious matter. I recognized that Members of the Conservative Party in the Province of Manitoba support the NDP campaign, and I would hope that Members would take the issue seriously instead of playing small minded and cynical games. If they wanted to play—

Mr. Blenkarn: There is no mind over there, never mind small minds.

Mr. Murphy: If Members of the Conservative Party want to play political games in the House, let me mention that they are only putting up one speaker to each of our speakers, instead of the three speakers they would put up to each of our speakers if they were really opposed to the passage of this legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Churchill was given the floor to make a speech. He should not be interrupted.

Some Hon. Members: Why not?

Mr. Blenkarn: He is not making a speech, he is making a political statement.

Mr. Murphy: Far be it for any Member of the House to make a political statement, Mr. Speaker.

If I may continue by reading the ad that is supported by both Parties that have elected representation in the legislature in the Province of Manitoba, the Government and the other Party, as follows:

DON'T EAT CROW! JUST BECAUSE IT'S PUT IN FRONT OF YOU. We refer of course, to the present CROW rate issue that the federal government has placed before the people of Manitoba, and Canada. In an attempt to increase the farmers' cost of shipping grain from the prairies, the Trudeau government is trying to pass off the Crow changes as being good for our farm industry. They aren't! If anything, the proposed rate increases will have damaging effects on Manitoba's farm industry! And, that's more than a farmers' concern, because whatever affects our farm industry in the next decade will have a serious effect on the entire Manitoba economy. Changing the Crow Rate means losing jobs now (at the worst possible time) and for years to come.

Sure! We need an improved rail transportation system, but changing the Crow is not the answer. When the farmer loses, Manitoba loses. You, as a proud and concerned Manitoban, have a decision to make. Do you take a stand . . . or, do you simply eat Crow? For further information, or to register your concern, please call collect. 944-2004.

Mr. Parent: What is going on here?

Mr. Blenkarn: If the Crow answers, hang up.

Mr. Murphy: The ad concludes:

NOW IS NOT THE TIME TO EAT CROW.

What I am trying to point out, Mr. Speaker, is that the people who live in my constituency, and those who work on the rail line to Churchill, and at the Port of Churchill are concerned about the passage of this legislation.

The Manitoba Government, through a resolution supported by both Parties in that House, has expressed its concern for the passage of this legislation. The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) proposed the amendment that we hoist this Bill for six months. If accepted, it will meet the needs of those people in that it will give them the chance to organize opposition to the Bill. It will give them a chance to explain to Government Members why the Bill would not only hurt the Port of Churchill and the people who work on those rail lines, but would hurt the very economy of the Province of Manitoba and the other western Provinces. We are not talking about a benefit to one or two farmers or even thousands of farmers, we are talking about a benefit that helps the economy of western Canada. To kill the Crow is to kill that economy. To kill the Crow is to make the West even more alienated than it is at the present time. There is no use talking about reform of the Senate; there is no use talking about revitalizing the Liberal Party; talk about passing legislation which has the support of western Canadians. Obviously the legislation before us is going to kill our economy in western Canada. Obviously the petitions we have presented and those that we wish to present show that many, many western Canadians do not want this legislation to pass. That is why the motion of my hon. colleague should go forward. We should put this Bill on ice for six months and give western Canadians an opportunity to persuade the Government not to pass legislation which will hurt not only the farmer but the whole basis of the western economy.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, when I first looked at the Bill I saw that it was a Bill for the movement of western grain. It should have been described as the railway subsidy Bill. It is a $651 million Bill to provide money for the railways. It does not require them to do a damn thing. They get $651 million per year for the next five years, then the situation is reviewed and we give them more money. They do not have to spend a nickle or a dime on track or improving transportation in Canada. This is a Bill to give $651 million to the railways.

If the Government were to present the Bill in that fashion, in that fashion only, and not tied to the movement of grain, then we might discuss the question of whether the Government of Canada should use the taxpayers' money to support the railways—but it proposes to tie it to the movement of grain. I say to you that there is nothing in the Bill that ties the subsidies to the railways and what the railways might do with that money for the movement of grain. The railways are not required to put down a single tie, lay a single length of track, or improve a single terminal. They are not required to do a darn thing but still, they get $651 million.

There may be some requirement in terms of moving grain and the products of the country but there is no requirement to improve the service or do anything other than they are doing already. It is a railway subsidy Bill.

My friend from the riding of Churchill spoke about the line owned by the Canadian National Railways which runs to the Port of Churchill. I have travelled that line by passenger train; it goes up and down through the muskeg; it carries freight cars provided they are not too loaded and provided the train is not too big or is not too heavy. You can get a train across that line although it is not much of a line. One begins to wonder why in 1983 we should have a railway line built to the standard and quality of that particular line. There is nothing in the Bill that requires the Government or the railways to use any of its $651 million to rebuild the line to the Port of Churchill. They do not have to rebuild that port either. There is absolutely nothing in the Bill. It subsidizes railways and does not do anything for the farmers or to improve the transportation of the country. The railways get money. Canadian Pacific may build up a bigger dividend and Canadian National may not have quite the loss it would normally have, but there is nothing in the Bill to require any improvement to rail transportation in the country.

Only certain parts of the grain growing areas of the prairie region are covered by the Bill. New land that may be opened up at some time and is not presently covered by the Crow rate subsidy is not included so it is only a portion of the grain growing area of western Canada that is included. It is not all protected by the Bill. This is a discriminatory Bill—a Bill that says Canada finished growing in 1982.

If you were to clear land in 1983 or 1984 and were to decide to grow grain, you would not be covered. The Bill is anti-Canadian; it is against growth in Canada. This Bill is designed to terminate Canada. This Bill is a central Canadian Bill formulated in Mount Royal where, as far as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is concerned, Canada has already grown to its maximum capacity.

The new lands in Canada cannot be developed because they will be subject to penalty. They will not receive any assistance in terms of transportation. If crop is grown on those new lands they will pay the full rate. Only the existing lands are to be covered. What kind of Bill to build Canada is this? It is a disaster Bill. It is a Bill that really does nothing to create the growth we need.

Let us look at some other parts of the Bill. This Party has suggested some sort of system whereby the Crow benefit—and there is no question that there is a Crow benefit because those who grow grain are directly or indirectly receiving a subsidy for the transportation of their crop to the seaport—should be paid directly to the farmer. Why should it not be? The farmer should use the money in the way he wants to—to hire the kind of transportation he wants to hire. If that transportation involves the hiring of a tractor and semi to haul grain to Vancouver or Thunder Bay, so be it. Perhaps he then transfers it to a port in the United States.

One thing about tractor-trailer transportation in Canada is that it can be a two-way street. At the moment there is more tractor-trailer transportation of commodities into western Canada than there is transportation of products out from western Canada. A great deal of capacity already exists on tractor-trailers out of western Canada that travel empty. The capacity is there to carry a great deal of our grain to port at compensatory rates. That will not be possible if this Bill passes, however.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) rises on a point of order.

• (1840)

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order as to the time. Are you sure the ten minutes have not expired? It seems like an hour and a half.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): No, the Hon. Member has one minute left.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I am impressed with the capacity of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) to understand logic. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre is only going to be in this House for a short period of time. He will have the opportunity to be here until the next go around with the public who will then have an opportunity to judge whether the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre can keep time. I am saying to you, Sir, that what we should give to the people who grow the crops in this country is the alternative, the right to take other forms of transportation. The subsidy, the implicit subsidy in the Crow rate, ought to apply to the people who grow the grain. They should be able to use that subsidy, that implicit subsidy, to hire the transportation they want. They should not be tied to the railways. They should be able to use their own trucks. They should be able to use other railways which are not already covered, as in the case of the British Columbia Railway. They should not be tied down to the monopolies, and that is what this Government wants to give them, the monopoly treatment.

I notice, Mr. Speaker, you are prepared to rise. However, please remember that I was interrupted by that funny fellow, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Darling: Thirty seconds more.

Mr. Blenkarn: My colleague says I should have 30 seconds more. However, this matter requires a lot more than 30 seconds. We are dealing with a very serious issue in western Canada. The people of western Canada are entitled to fair treatment, to fair debate and to a fair understanding of their concerns. I say to you, Sir, that this Bill should not be pushed, rushed and mashed through by the Government, in this way.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I wonder if the House might consent to give the previous speaker, by unanimous consent, more time. Such bizarre concepts should be explored in greater detail so that a diagnosis could be attempted here.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Under our rules it is for the Hon. Member who has the floor to request on extension of time.

Mr. Blenkarn: It would be a pleasure to ask for extra time. I am sure my friend, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, would agree.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Does the House give its consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Evans: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There is not unanimous consent. Debate.

Mr. Blenkarn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the extra time—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I must inform the Hon. Member that unanimous consent was not granted to the Hon. Member to continue.

Mr. Blenkarn: I was sure, Mr. Speaker, it was granted.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, at least the record reflects that we tried to assist the Hon. Member. There are occasions when no means yes, and it is unfortunate your ruling was in the negative.

It is a pleasure this evening to rise to speak on the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). There is no doubt that this particular legislation has caused a great deal of consternation across the country. It is a proposal to abandon a very long tradition in this country, a tradition which has supported one of the major economic sectors of the Canadian economy, the agricultural sector, as well as others, and it should not be abandoned in the way the present Government has decided. There is no doubt that there are a great many problems with our transportation system which have developed over the years. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that those problems in our transportation system are due in large part to the failure of the Government to fulfil its responsibilities and insist on investment by railways in upgrading the rail system in order to be provided with certain kinds of assistance over a period of time, and to insist that that rail system provide adequate transportation for goods and services in Canada.

The reason we are here today, Mr. Speaker, and I imagine it will be for a much longer period of time, is as a result of the tremendous controversy which exists in the country over this particular piece of legislation, this attempt to place on the backs of Canadians the responsibility which, in fact, should have been taken by the railway companies. I am referring both to the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railways. The Canadian Pacific Railway was given enormous concessions in the Province of British Columbia and, indeed, across Canada. I would like to deal just briefly with my own Province of British Columbia in which from Victoria to Seymour Narrows, some one hundred odd miles up the coast of Vancouver Island, the Canadian Pacific Railway was given a 40-mile wide strip of land, forest and mineral resources, provided that it build a railroad to Victoria and that it continue to operate that railroad. The system contained enormous resources of coal, of timber and of land. Today we find companies like Marathon Realty with enormous land holdings which are based on that original grant given for the commitment the railway made to the people of Canada. The timber resources were used to catapult Canadian Pacific into large shareholding positions in major forest companies, including MacMillan Bloedel. Undoubtedly, the coal situation was exploited as well.

What we have today is a rail line going up and down Vancouver Island which is in very poor shape and it is proposed that it be abandoned. That is the Esquimalt-Nanaimo railroad. This particular piece of railroad is of intense interest to the people who live on Vancouver Island. It symbolizes the betrayal of Canadians by the railway companies. In a small section of this country, one strip of railroad runs just basically between Victoria and Courtney and is of tremendous interest to the people of Vancouver Island. The railway company has struggled for years to abandon that piece of territory. It has taken all the resources, taken away the benefits provided by the lands, the forests and the mineral resources. Now that they are gone, it does not want to operate the rail system any more. It does not want to keep the railroad upgraded and continually it has tried to abandon that entire system. Potentially it is probably one of the most lucrative trunks of the rail system in the country. With some input, some sincere input from the companies which now operate services on it, there is no doubt that a very viable transportation system on Vancouver Island could be developed. That is an example of areas where the railway has not become involved in developing its service, especially in the marketing area. The railroad owners do not market properly the services of transportation. There are new ski resorts, new tourist facilities by the drove on Vancouver Island. There is a tremendous influx of people into the capital city of British Columbia, Victoria. Certainly, those kinds of opportunities to develop new markets have never been taken advantage of by the railway companies.

There is also a tremendously successful venture which has been put on to capitalize on tourism by the Government of British Columbia with the Royal Hudson railroad system in which the old steam locomotives were brought back and run on a tourist section over a period of time, bringing back history and enhancing tourism. This has been proposed numerous times for Vancouver Island, but the railway companies reject it out of hand. They want nothing to do with that stretch of railroad. They do not want to enhance the transportation of goods. They do not want to enhance tourism. In fact, they are into far more lucrative activities. They do not want to run the railroad any more. It costs too much money. The railway guaranteed to run that system in perpetuity. It guaranteed to build it. It has failed in its guarantee and we should take back the resources and take the railroad business out of there. It should become a public venture, a public utility.

The legislation which is before us today is reprehensible. It is the responsibility of the railways to build a railroad system, an effective railroad system in Canada, and those companies have failed to do so. The Canadian Pacific Railway is attempting to take money earned in Canada and buy 800 miles of railroad in the United States, to build and operate. It is absolutely contemptible that a company which is going to attempt to load the costs of building and maintaining a railroad system in Canada, for which it obtained billions of dollars in resources, is turning around and telling the Canadian farmer and Canadian taxpayer that they must build their railroad system if it is going to continue to operate it, and at the same time removing capital earned in this country to invest elsewhere. The CNR tried to acquire 2,100 miles of rail on the old Milwaukee line in the United States. A Crown corporation was taking capital from Canada instead of building and running the railroad system here. They want to abandon it and place the responsibility on the backs of taxpayers. That is not good enough. As far as we are concerned, that legislation sits where it lies and it should be put back for another six months.

My colleague in the Liberal Party is worried about mixed metaphors. He should be more concerned about the taxpayer and about providing a decent railway system in this country. If we were giving serious consideration to hoisting this Bill for six months while we had a chance to deal with a more appropriate alternative, the Hon. Member would not be worried about mixed metaphors.

There is another point that should be put on the record concerning the role the Conservative Party has played in the whole debate. That Party does not put forward a policy for the Canadian people. It prefers to have it both ways, with its Members in their riding saying to farmers: "We are with you", but not coming into this House and standing up and fighting effectively with the numbers they have to hold this Bill until we can get better opportunities for the Canadian public. It is reprehensible that the Liberals and Conservatives are secretly together on this Bill. I notice some of them now stirring with concern, and I would be more than pleased to see them stand up—

Mr. Mazankowski: It is nice to see you smiling when you say that, Skelly.

Mr. Skelly: —in appropriate numbers to defend the taxpayers and farmers of Canada. I certainly recognize one or two individuals over there and I can have some respect for them, but as an organization they have adopted a tactic which is virtually immoral. There is a lust for power over there. They have their tongues hanging out down to their knees, yet to a man and to a woman they should be standing up in order to hold this Bill back. I see the Speaker is giving me an indication that time is running out before the full truth can be told.

Mr. Taylor: You have not said anything yet.

Mr. Skelly: There are some serious issues involved here, Mr. Speaker. It is hoped that this Bill will be delayed for six months until we have further opportunity to study the matter, look at the serious problems in the rail system and deal with them in a manner other than abandoning the Crow rate. There is no doubt that there have to be improvements in that rail system. There are serious problems in the lumber industry and with resource delivery, but they are not to be solved on the backs of Canadian farmers. The CPR and CNR cannot pass off their obligation and take billions in resources and then throw the rest of it on the backs of farmers.

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): I am a little astounded, Mr. Speaker, at the remarks made by the preceding speaker, my good friend, the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly). He speaks with such great sanctimony about the lack of contribution from Members of this Party. He knows full well that the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) has spearheaded the debate and set out clearly the options the Government should have followed in dealing with this very serious problem. He also knows that Members of this Party are able to match that rag-tag group to my left speaker for speaker and person for person any time of the year in this House.

Mr. Deans: I remember when you used to insist on three to one.

Mr. Siddon: I do not know why he is so preoccupied with irrelevance when certain Members of the NDP in British Columbia have been hesitant to speak on this Bill because they are concerned about the forest and mine workers and everyone else in British Columbia—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Kempling: the "Minnie Pearl" of British Columbia.

Mrs. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I must say that I feel it is time to set the record straight, that indeed many of us from British Columbia have been speaking very strongly on this Bill and that it is time that the present speaker recognized that.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, that comment will receive the degree of attention it deserves.

What we are talking about here is something fundamental to the economy and history of western Canada. Although I presently represent a constituency in the mouth of the Fraser River where the only affiliation really with the railway is through the Roberts Bank super port, the port of export for the coal mined in the southeast corner of B.C., and of course I represent a Province where the forest and mining industries are very important, my roots, like those of many Members of this Party, are in western Canada. I grew up in a community in Alberta. In fact, I am honoured to say that when I was a small boy one of my honoured colleagues in this House, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), had been a member of the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Alberta for perhaps 25 years.

Mr. Deans: One hundred years.

Mr. Siddon: Perhaps he can speak better than I—

Mr. Deans: We noticed that.

Mr. Siddon: —of the origins of those people who went to western Canada in wagons, boxcars and rail cars to clear the land and build communities in a very hostile environment. I might say that I know the Hon. Member for Bow River has narrated the story about arriving in the coal mining community of Drumheller, where I was born, in a wagon in 1915. I do not want to date him but he can speak much better than I about how important it has been to have the benefit of the Crow rate in order to ensure that the promise of western Canada was realized by so many of us.

It was my own great grandfather, Mr. Speaker, who packed his family in a boxcar three springs in succession and moved into the foothills of Alberta to a place called Westward Ho and established a farm there. He had returned to Ontario each year because of the difficult conditions, but finally, because of a strong-minded wife and a desire to become a part of the West, they stayed and the family spread and many of my relatives went into farming in Alberta and Saskatchewan. I know just how important this Crow rate is and how important it is that we do not make any major alterations in this historic rate structure established in 1897 and confirmed by an Act of Parliament in 1925. It is so fundamental to the culture and underpinnings of western Canada.

I have recollections of hauling grain with my uncles to grain elevators. I drove my first vehicle sitting in my uncle's lap. It was a John Deere tractor. I remember putting posts in and working late at night in the Prairie dust where real men knew what real hard work was about. It would not have been possible to develop western Canada and build the communities, schools, churches, highways and all that has materialized in the West had it not been for this very fundamental measure, the statutory rate for shipping from those very bountiful grain-producing areas in western Canada. It is important that we recognize all of those pioneers and many new Canadians who came with the turn of the century to cut trees, pull stumps and set up small sawmills and clear land. Those same people singing songs around the piano are really part and parcel of the culture of western Canada. They would not have realized the great benefits they have today had it not been for this historical Crow rate structure.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Vegreville, pointed out in this House a few weeks ago that farmers today are receiving $4.63 a bushel for wheat, and ten years ago they received $4.57. He pointed out just how little the price that is available to the western farmer has increased over the past ten years and how fragile is their situation, particularly in light of inflation in terms of fertilizer costs, land costs and interest costs, and the plight of the family farm which is susceptible to any major changes in the cost of shipping grain to port and to market.

Therefore, it is essential that the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. Benjamin) be supported in the House because, as I have pointed out, and as many of our colleagues have pointed out, this legislation and initiative, which has only been before the House for about five weeks, is so fundamental to the culture and to the future destiny of western Canadians that it cannot be passed through the House in the twinkling of an eye. We cannot allow the Government to run roughshod over the rights and aspirations of so many western Canadians.

If one reads the Bill and its provisions with respect to calculating the actual rate which farmers will pay, one finds that there will be an utter lack of predictability on the part of the western grain producer as to what his costs will be from year to year. It is a very complicated, bureaucratically designed formula which will make it impossible to determine. Faced with the fluctuations in world price structure for grains and other agricultural commodities, it will be virtually impossible for the western producer to have the security of being able to plan ahead to know what area should be planted, what amount of equipment he can count on purchasing, such as new tractors, combines and the like, because of the uncertainty which this sudden change will impose upon him.

I realize it is designed so that the increase in the rate for grain would be gradually phased in, and there is much talk of a healthy subsidy to the farmers, something like $650 million a year. But in fact this will not be a subsidy to the farmer; it will be a direct cash grant to the railways. It is the railways of western Canada that we thank for helping to bind together all those rural communities and, in my own Province of British Columbia, the resource enterprises of the various saw mills, pulp mills and mining operations. Therefore, we are grateful to the contribution the railways have made to the development of western Canada, but we also realize that they have obtained considerable benefits in return for the services they have provided in building railways and communities and binding together the people of western Canada.

We now read that the federal Government, as one condition of this agreement, will completely disavow any prior commitments with respect to a major block of natural resource, and that is known as the Dominion coal block in the area of southeast British Columbia, in that this block of between one billion tonnes and 8.5 billion tonnes of first rate metallurgical coal will become a windfall to the federal Government if this legislation is allowed to proceed in its present form. In fact, that coal block was a gift from the Province of British Columbia in return for a guarantee that the railways would continue to modernize and operate their services throughout western Canada and to provide for the shipment of grain, timber, mineral products and everything else that is rolling on the rails. The federal Government will have realized a windfall of between $16 billion and $75 billion if the legislation goes through.

I think it is time we studied many of these factors in much greater detail. I therefore heartily endorse the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Regina East. I hope we can get on with passing it so that we can have this legislation set aside for another six months.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to speak on the Bill. I appreciate that once again we are hearing from two Conservative Members in a row, compared to my socialist friends to the left, who scrambled all day to find Hon. Members to speak in support of the legislation. I think this points to the difference between the two Parties. The NDP is interested only in obstruction. It has done nothing throughout this entire debate for the substance of the issue, and it has never addressed the substance because, quite frankly, Members of the NDP do not understand the substance, whereas in our case, we have worked to improve the Bill. We have demanded amendments. We indicated to the Government that we were not happy with the Bill as it came down. We indicated that the safety net is not sufficient for our purposes and, in fact, this was not even in the original Bill.

It was only through the efforts of the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) that we in the Progressive Conservative Party achieved the improvements in the Bill, meagre and insufficient though they are, whereas the NDP has no idea as to how to create improvements and improve the substance. We have seen that in the results of the election in Brandon-Souris, where the NDP was completely obliterated by the Progressive Conservative candidate, fortunately for the health of the nation and that seat.

I must admit that I listened to the debate on the six-month hoist with great amusement when I heard from Members of the NDP because, having placed on the floor the amendment asking for a six-month hoist, out of the other sides of their mouths they were saying, "Golly, there are some things in the Bill we like". It is hard to understand why they hoist it on the one hand and like it on the other hand. However, I want everyone in the House to know that we in this Party have waited with bated breath to hear the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), the economic guru of the NDP. We all waited to hear his words of wisdom. It is much easier to hear the words now. He shaved off his beard for the election out there. It did not help, the NDP lost. However, he shaved it off so that he could look a little more clean-cut. We thought he would come back after the election and shed some light on this Bill for us. He was here the other day, when the Cruise missile debate was on. He was here in his place, not in his normal seat, but in place for the picture, and afterwards he was gone. Here we have such an important debate, but we do not have the economic guru from the NDP to enlighten us all. That was a great disappointment to us.

I was amazed and amused to hear the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly). When he was finished, a page came up to him and asked him for his notes. I distinctly heard him say, "Do you think I would have made that speech and written it down that way?" Anyway, the page did not receive the notes.

Seriously, I want to speak for a minute or two about the importance of the Crowsnest Pass legislation. We in Ontario understand why the West feels so strongly about the Bill. There are a couple of reasons we understand. The first is that this Party, the Progressive Conservative Party, represents the country. We have the Members in the West to understand the full ramifications of what this Bill means to the West. It is a great disadvantage to the Party in Government that it does not have any Liberal Members west of Ontario. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, it does have two. However, based on calibre, they do not really count. They just do not understand the depth of feeling that exists in the country concerning the Crowsnest Pass legislation.

It is quite evident to this Party that when the original agreement was signed, it was signed to give reduced rates for transporting grain across this big country of ours. It was pinned down to 5 cents a tonne mile from western Canada to the lakehead.

Mr. Neil: Half a cent a tonne mile.

Mr. Lewis: Half a cent a mile. Then, in 1925, it became a statutory matter. Be that as it may, as far as the actual legislation is concerned, what we are really discussing is what it means to the West, to the economic base of western Canada.

In the early years of our country, western Canada relied strictly on the grain economy. It was a big part of the economy of western Canada. That is why this statutory rate meant so much to western Canada. It was a subsidy for transportation. We understand that. We understand that this is a big country. It may not be all that easy for the people from Ontario and Quebec in the Liberal Party to understand that this is a big country, but we have the vision on this side of the House and can understand it. We subsidize the transportation of grain. We have no problem with that because we are subsidizing other industries such as manufacturing and fishing. Can one imagine, when it comes to changing legislation, if the Kirby Report had been brought into legislation by being introduced on a Tuesday, debated on a Thursday and have had closure imposed on it on Monday? Can one imagine the Liberal Party doing that? Oh, no. That would hurt home to Liberal Members. When it comes to doing it to the grain industry, they have no hesitation in doing it quickly. That is what is behind the objections we have had to the actions of the Government on this Bill.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is misleading the House, I would like to think inadvertently. He knows very well that closure has not been imposed on this Bill.

Mr. Lewis: Closure has been threatened and hanging over this House for some time on this Bill, and the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) knows it. He knows that is the way the Government has operated some 18 times when it has brought in closure.

Mr. Ferguson: Rubbish.

Mr. Smith: Garbage.

Mr. Lewis: The Government has cut off debate and cut off free speech on at least 18 occasions. The only time it cuts off rubbish is when it cuts you off, my friend.

What did the Government do on this Bill? It introduced it on the Tuesday after two and a half years of press conferences by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). It started debate on the Thursday, carried it through the Thursday and the Friday, and then attempted to bring in closure on the following Tuesday. It was a threat of closure, a threat of closure. The Liberal Government fails to realize that this is a big country and that it takes a while for legislation and its full import to travel across the country.

By way of comparison with other legislation, I invite the House to consider the security service legislation which, putting aside the value of the Bill, at least is being carried forward properly. At least the process is proper. I give the Minister his due in that case. The Bill was introduced. Interest groups have had a chance to read it and to bring forward opinions. They have had a chance to inform Hon. Members of Parliament. There has been editorial opinion on it and a great deal of discussion. We feel that this legislation deserves the same treatment. This is why we have objected to this rush to judgment which the Liberal Party wants to make. We have not been given the proper length of time for the entire country to understand it.

I want to discuss the reasons we oppose this legislation. We feel that the principle of a fair statutory freight rate has not been maintained in this legislation. We feel that this freight rate structure will increase the costs to the producers of western Canada on an unfair basis, because they will be paying double the existing Crow rate by 1985-86. That will take an additional $160 million out of the economy of western Canada. In 1982, as a result of the high energy costs of the Government, which got in on the promise of low energy costs, the net incomes of farmers decreased 35 per cent due entirely to the Liberal Government. One does not have to be a grain farmer to understand that a 31.1 million tonne cap will provide a disincentive to increase grain production. If we are producing more grain, if our railways are rolling more often and we are putting more people to work, surely to goodness economics say that the price should go down, but the Government does not see it that way.

Mr. Mazankowski: And think of all the money spent on improvements.

Mr. Lewis: On improvements, certainly. Anyone who trusts the railways had better take a hard look at this Bill. Quite frankly we in eastern Canada do not trust the railways. The Government has let them get away with murder, whether it be VIA Rail, freight rates, CN or CP. Anyone who thinks that the railways will adhere to this without strict controls, which the makers and overseers of Canadair have failed to produce, or anyone who thinks that those people can control the railways, is really looking at this Bill with blinders.

I would like to conclude on that note. We oppose the Bill, but we will always do it based on thought, theory and in an attempt to improve it, not as the NDP does it, by pure obstruction.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, the amendment—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), having moved the amendment, has already spoken.

Mr. Deans: There is no harm in trying.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Call in the Members.

• (2220)

And the division bells having been rung:

Some Hon. Members: Out, out!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member who has just arrived may sit in the House but he may not vote.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Benjamin) which was negatived on the following division:

Motion (Mr. Benjamin) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to indicate my opposition to the six-month hoist on this motion and my support of the Government.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a legitimate point of order. Earlier today the Government moved and carried a motion for extended hours. I should like to ask whether the fact that the Government Members refused to come into the House for four hours is a point of disorder.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member does not have a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, it is high time Bill C-155 was referred to the Committee on Transport. The Bill is now being debated, and I simply want to say that the Crow rate is a matter that concerns all Members of this House. Consequently, I fail to understand why certain parties in the House are refusing to even consider the issue, with all its implications, before the Committee on Transport.

Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt in my mind that everyone agreed the system must be reformed—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On what grounds does the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) rise?

Mr. Deans: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: What is the point of order?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain seeks to be heard on a point of order. We have resumed debate and I have recognized the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance). What is the purpose of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Order, please. Order.

Mr. Deans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I apologize for not getting to the point of order immediately but my light was not on—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: It never was.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order. The Chair has recognized the Hon. Member for Rosemont.

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: Everyone agrees, Mr. Speaker, that the rate system—

[English]

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. If the Hon. Member is rising on a point of order, he should state his point of order.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, you will be aware that earlier today I rose on a point of order that had to do with what I chose to call, in the language used by Erskine May, a complicated question. At the time I rose to discuss the matter you will also recall that the Speaker—the Deputy Speaker as I recall—indicated to me that the timing was inappropriate and that I ought to raise it when we are dealing with the main motion. We are now dealing with the main motion; therefore I should like to ask the indulgence of the House to put before the House—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: —the argumentation I was beginning to develop this morning.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Deans: I find it a little difficult to do that properly, given the rabble—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain on a point of order.

An Hon. Member: What is it?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your intervention on my behalf. I do not know if you can hear me, but I cannot, try as I may.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, you will recall that this morning I referred to page 380 of Erskine May, Nineteenth Edition, Parliamentary Practice. Under the heading "Complicated Questions", it says the following:

• (2240)

The ancient rule that when a complicated question is proposed to the House, the House may order such question to be divided, has been variously interpreted at different periods.

Erskine May goes on to say this:

In 1888, . . . the Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans:

—ruled that two propositions—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must again appeal to the House for order. It is difficult to hear the Hon. Member and I ask Hon. Members to pay attention, perhaps, and let the Hon. Member make his point.

Mr. Deans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker for again intervening. It is quite clear that certain Hon. Members, who shall remain unnamed, do not seem to care.

Mr. Nielsen: Name them.

Mr. Deans: Let me go back—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Let the Hon. Member make his point.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: May I ask your guidance, Mr. Speaker? Given that the Liberal Members apparently do not want to hear the point at the moment, and given that this is the appropriate time to raise it, would you, Sir, be prepared to permit me to reserve the right to argue the point on Monday? The reason being that since we already have an agreement for tomorrow's House business, I do not want to disrupt the business tomorrow by raising the point and, thereby, denying the Government an opportunity to have its Bills—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has been recognized to make his point. He is invited to make his point.

Mr. Deans: I go back, then, Mr. Speaker, to—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: I am quoting from Erskine May. It reads:

In 1888, . . . the Speaker ruled—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain has been recognized and I believe the Chair owes him the courtesy of at least allowing him to express himself and to make his point. I feel it is an elementary courtesy that Hon. Members do owe to any Hon. Member of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I bring again to your attention the rule with regard to complicated questions. I point out to you that the application of the rule goes back to 1888, and I quote:

> In 1888, . . . the Speaker ruled that two propositions which were then before the House in one motion could be taken separately if any Member objected to their being taken together.

He goes on to say:

> Although this ruling does not appear to have been based on any previous decision, it has since remained unchallenged.

The key is as follows:

> A complicated question can, however, only be divided if each part is capable of standing on its own.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the question we now have before us, Bill C-155, is indeed a complicated question within the definition of Erskine May. I put it to you in the following way, Sir, for your consideration: There are three distinct principles contained within Bill C-155. Each of the distinct principles can be spelled out. Each one is capable of standing on its own merit. The principles are as follows: In the first section of the Bill, known as Part I, the Bill deals with administrative measures to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of grain. I submit that that is a question of principle, the decision on which should be made by the House of Commons separate and apart from the other parts of the Bill. The decision on the administrative measures to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of grain could be quite easily introduced in a Bill without either of the other two principles contained in this Bill being before the House of Commons. I will come back to that point in a moment.

The second principle contained within the Bill is the principle which speaks directly to the rates which will be established to be charged to farmers for the transportation of grain. I submit to you, Sir, that that is a principle quite different from the administrative measures to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of grain. The rates are a matter which could easily be dealt whith by the House of Commons in a separate Bill, as a separate principle.

The third principle in the Bill is the disposition of what is known as the Dominion coal lands. I put before the House, Mr. Speaker, that that principle alone, how the Dominion coal lands are disposed of and dealt with, is a principle which can stand on its own separate and apart from either of the other two.

I raise the three principles because I want to suggest to you, Sir, that it is important for parliamentarians to be able to vote as their conscience dictates on each of the principles. I suggest to you that the principle which speaks to the redevelopment and administration of the railroads is a principle in its own right, not necessarily hinging on whether or not there is a change to the statutory grain rates or to the Dominion coal lands. The principle of changing the statutory grain rate is a principle which can stand on its own merit and is not necessarily related to any redevelopment or upgrading of the railroad system, or to the disposition of the Dominion coal lands. I suggest to you, Sir, that the matter of the Dominion coal lands and its disposition is a principle separate and apart from the principle of the redevelopment of the rail transportation system and separate and apart from the imposition of any freight rate of any kind at all, grain or otherwise.

Therefore, we have three quite distinct questions before us and these are questions on which Hon. Members cannot necessarily vote en bloc. These are questions which deal with entirely different matters. There would be Hon. Members in the House of Commons who would want to vote one way or the other on how the Government of Canada should dispose of or deal with the Dominion coal lands. They would want to do that without any regard to whether or not we upgrade the railroad and without any regard to whether or not there are changes undertaken to the Crowsnest Pass arrangement as it applies to the freight rates charged to grain growers in western Canada. There are people in this House of Commons, men and women representing constituencies from all across Canada, who would want to be able to vote on the principle contained in the section which speaks to the redevelopment of Canada's railroad system, separate and apart from the question of whether or not there is a disposition of the Dominion coal lands, and separate and apart from whether or not there is a change which takes place to the grain freight rates as contained in the third principle. There are again Hon. Members who would want to vote one way or the other on the grain freight rates changes which are being proposed.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there is ample evidence to show that Parliaments have in fact on a number of occasions dealt with complicated questions such as this by requiring that the question be split for the purpose of the vote, that the question be split into the three principal parts in order that each Hon. Member be able to exercise his or her responsibility in the way which he or she sees fit as they understand it, given that their constituencies may well have quite different needs and quite different priorities. The way this Bill is structured makes it impossible. It is necessary for an Hon. Member to vote on all three principles at one time whether or not that Hon. Member believes that the same vote is capable of reflecting his honest opinion as to how each of the three principles should be dealt with.

I would like to urge upon you that you give serious consideration to the implications of allowing a Bill such as this to proceed in the way that it does.

A Member who believes there ought to be a revitalization of the railroad system in Canada must vote on the disposition of the coal lands and must at the same time, with the same vote, vote on whether or not the Crowsnest Pass freight rate ought to be changed. That is wrong. Of course, the same is true with regard to the redevelopment of the railroads. I contend, Mr.

Speaker, that it is impossible for any Member of the House of Commons who can identify clearly the three principles involved—and I suggest surely no one would dispute those are in fact the three principles contained in the Bill—and who wants to vote on those three principles but cannot cast the same vote on each of them, is being deprived of his opportunity and obligation to vote according to what he believes is in the best interests of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I might say that it goes even to the privileges of Members of Parliament because one of the privileges of a Member of Parliament is the right properly to represent his or her constituents. That cannot be done as long as this Bill remains as one Bill to be dealt with in one vote, dealing as it does with three principles.

I will not take much longer, Mr. Speaker, but there are references I would urge you to look at. I point out that on January 26, 1971, Mr. Speaker Lamoureux said:

> There must be a point where we go beyond what is acceptable from a strictly parliamentary standpoint.

He was referring at that time to the very question of omnibus Bills, Bills with multiple principles. He was saying that there comes a time when the Government cannot simply go ahead and inflict upon Parliament its wish to amalgamate or put into one a number of principles and expect the House of Commons to be able to deal with them. He says that there is in fact a point beyond which the Government may not go in forcing Parliament to address itself to more than one question at one time.

In much the same circumstances, Mr. Speaker Jerome, in 1971, expressed some very deep concern about whether our practice in respect of Bills does in fact provide a remedy for the very legitimate complaint that a Bill of the kind being discussed gives the Government under our practices the right to demand one decision on a number of quite different although related subjects. Now, Mr. Speaker, I concede that one can determine that these subjects are related. At least two of them are. But they are quite different and they do meet the test of Erskine May that they are capable of standing on their own as separate pieces of legislation. I suggest that to require Members of Parliament to deal with this in the way the Government is doing would work to the disfavour and disadvantage of the obligation of Members of Parliament adequately to respond to their understanding of what is right within the parliamentary process.

I put it to you that there are numerous references worthy of consideration by the Speaker. I might say that I hesitate to go into them at great length because I am aware that the Speaker has available to him all the references applicable in this case. But I do point out that facilitating legislation is an important part of the parliamentary process, to make sure that legislation can in fact be dealt with in a proper and orderly way. I would urge upon the Speaker that it is quite clearly within his power, as is pointed out in Erskine May, to determine that there are in fact three principles—

Mr. Smith: Come on; this is the fourth time.

Mr. Deans: That is fine. There are in fact three principles; that the principles, though related, are not intertwined; that they do in fact stand individually as principles in their own right; and that the Government could have, without reference to either of the two, moved any single one of those principles and put it before Parliament in legislation to be dealt with as it would have been dealt with. There would have been no need to do either of the other two. I think that is really the test that must be applied.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: It is not a question of whether the Government wants to put those three things together. That is not the question. The question is whether it is necessary for those three things to be together in order for this Bill to stand. It is quite clearly not necessary for those three things to be in this Bill. It is quite clear that any single one of them could have, in its own right, been a Bill before Parliament. Any single one of them could have dealt with a concern of the people of Canada in its own right. Any single one of these principles could have been dealt with by Parliament as a separate Bill and disposed of without in any way infringing upon the operation of the other two. Therefore I urge you, I plead with you, that in order that Members of this House can properly deal with this Bill—and this is not to suggest that all three matters cannot be dealt with—they must surely be brought forward as three distinct and separate questions.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) has a valid point of order at all. He has cited Erskine May, page 380, with regard to some quotations on the issue of complicated questions, to the effect that the House may order such questions to be divided. It says "may", it does not say "shall", it does not say "must". He then refers to a quotation which said that in 1888 the Speaker ruled that two propositions then before the House in one motion "could" be taken separately.

Mr. Deans: And were.

Mr. Smith: It does not say that they must be taken separately. What the Hon. Member is suggesting is that because a piece of legislation which may involve several principles is before the House, somehow it is necessary to divide it into as many pieces of legislation as there are principles contained in it. That is, with respect, an absurd proposition. What it suggests is that at some time we might have a Bill which contains several hundred clauses with perhaps 15 separate principles. Would that mean that we then had to have 15 Bills so the Hon. Member could vote his own way on each one? The Hon. Member is suggesting that you cannot make tough decisions or go through various principles one by one and then wind up with a package. In the final analysis you have to make a tough choice. You have to vote for or against it.

He has referred on a couple of occasions to the ruling of Speaker Lamoureux on January 26, 1971, and again those of Mr. Speaker Jerome in 1977, on May 11, but—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I call the attention of the House to the fact that it is now 11 o'clock p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: I rise on a very brief point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Simcoe North, briefly.

Mr. Lewis: I raise a very brief point of order, Mr. Speaker. May I suggest, in the interests of orderly business, that this point of order be continued on Monday when the Crowsnest legislation is called again, rather than tomorrow.

Second, I would like to inform the Government House Leader that I have now had an opportunity to consult with my caucus with respect to the suggestion that Bill C-161, the Canada Student Loans Act, be brought forward tomorrow for passage tomorrow with one Hon. Member speaking on our side, and that we go through all three stages tomorrow in order that the students of Canada can receive the assistance which is badly needed in terms of today's economy.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I want to confirm that after having consulted with the House Leaders of both Opposition Parties, we have come to the conclusion that tomorrow the business will be in the following order: first, we will spend 45 minutes debating the electoral boundaries of the two Provinces which I mentioned earlier today. Then the first Bill to be debated will be the Student Loans Act. We have an understanding to pass the Bill through all stages with one Hon. Member speaking per Party. That would be followed, with the same understanding, by Bill C-148 and then by Bill C-147. Those involve the Farm Improvement Loans Act first, followed by the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

Mr. Lewis: Simply as a point of clarification, there is an understanding that the other two Bills, Bill C-147 and Bill C-148, will proceed through all stages tomorrow, but not necessarily with one speaker, but with sufficient speakers so that all three stages on both Bills will be completed.

Mr. Smith: I rise on a point of order. Yes, may I confirm, Mr. Speaker, that when this matter is called again, I will have the floor to complete my submissions on this point of order?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hansard record will indicate that the Parliamentary Secretary was interrupted.

I now recognize the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. Deans: Al, will you shut up? I simply want to confirm that the agreement—

Mr. Kempling: What an ignorant bullhorn.

Mr. Deans: —indicated by the Government House Leader is in fact accurate and we will abide by it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. In accordance with Standing Order 45—

Mr. Deans: But we won't do it, then! I withdraw it!

Mr. Kempling: Little Ceasar.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: —a motion to adjourn the House has deemed to have been moved and seconded at this time. Therefore, the question is that this House do now adjourn.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—FREEZING OF BAND TRUST ACCOUNTS. (B) BAND RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, in my question to the Minister on Tuesday, June 14, I made the Minister aware of the fact that I had received representations from both the Sarcee and Stoney tribal administrations about fiscal problems they are currently experiencing because of the incapacity of departmental officials to consult with band councils prior to forming and implementing policy decisions.

I want to be more specific today. The Sarcee tribal administration cannot agree to the stipulations in the H-12 Circular issued March 15, 1983 by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As a result of this disagreement, the Band Council has not had access either to its capital funds or to its budget allocation. The Band Council, therefore, is forced to borrow moneys to finance current expenditures. Money urgently needed to provide for the needs of the community is being wasted on the repayment of interest charges on outstanding loans. Moreover, although the Band Council has alerted the Minister's office to the gravity of the situation in which they now find themselves, they have not yet even had the courtesy of a reply. The moneys that the Band Council is currently using to finance operating costs will run out by June 24, 1983.

The Stoney tribal administration has recently been informed that it is responsible for the repayment of approximately $4 million as a result of an alleged royalty overpayment accumulated over a number of years. Although officials in the Minister's department have been aware of this potential problem since 1979, they did not alert the Band Council to this possibility.

Moreover, when the problem became a reality in 1981, officials from Indian Minerals West unilaterally negotiated with Shell Canada for a recovery process which began on January 1, 1983. At no stage in this process was the band council informed of these developments or consulted as to a possible resolution of the situation.

Although the particulars of these two cases are quite distinct, they both serve to exemplify the extent to which current policies of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development are in direct opposition to statements made by the Minister of the Department. To prove this point, let me quote some of the Minister's statements in his appearance before the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development on June 7, 1983. He said:

> As part of my commitment to improving the conditions for native people, I have tried to foster an environment in which their governments have been better able to meet the needs of their constituents.

Despite this commitment, the current funding bypass between the Department and the Sarcee tribal administration will force the Sarcee band to close its administrative offices on June 24 of this year. The Sarcee people face that serious problem, and the federal Government has not taken the time to discuss funding problems with them or to negotiate a reasonable solution to this current impasse. This blatant example of the federal Government's inability to work with Indian governments is particularly surprising to me.

The Minister also said on June 7:

> It is important not only to understand what the place of Indian government in Canadian society should be, but also to understand how the Government and Indian people can work together to achieve our objectives for Indian government.

I sincerely hope that what I now see does not exemplify how the Government and Indian people can work together, for if it does there is little hope that Indian people can be optimistic about their future under this Liberal Government.

It may seem that I have been consistently referring back to this one particular speech. I have, but for good reason. The underlying theme of the speech was to emphasize the good will of the Minister and his Department to the Indian people of Canada and to emphasize the importance he places on full negotiation at all times so that Indian people and the federal Government may work in concert for a better future. Yet, whenever a problem arises that needs negotiation to be resolved, the Minister is never available. Instead, the Department simply continues to formulate policy which dramatically affects the daily lives of these people. When this policy is abhorrent to Indian people, they have no option but to submit to it or face bankruptcy. I realize that the Minister's time is limited and that he cannot address every issue personally, but there must be a mechanism in place that will allow Indian people, especially Indian governments, to participate in choices and decisions which affect their future.

Let me refer back to the present situation facing the Stoney Tribal Council. Because of decisions made by Indian Mineral West without consultation with the Stoney tribal administration, the band is now responsible for the repayment of approximately $4 million. In effect, what has happened is that funds allocated to existing projects and payments to band members have been cut to finance the repayment to Shell Canada Limited.

Let us be clear. I am not suggesting that there should be no repayment. Rather, I am suggesting that the Stoney tribal administration should have been party to the negotiation process or at least aware that it was taking place. I do not think that is satisfactory, but they should have known. How can the Minister in good faith continue to say that Indian governments should participate in deciding what their priorities should be when he allows, just to name one example, Indian Minerals West to decide unilaterally upon funding cuts to existing projects to finance the repayment of a debt, for which in all probability they are responsible in the first place.

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I recognize the interest of the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) in this whole question. But at the same time I cannot accept everything he has just said about the Department, about the Minister and about the Government. I think the Minister and the Department are doing a very fine job. In fact, the Liberal Government has done more for the Indian people of the country than any other Government.

I would like to add to the information which the Minister gave on June 14 in response to two questions by the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger). The first related to the alleged freezing of funds to the Sarcee band. This question related to the involvement or alleged interference by the Department in the affairs of the band and the way it is administered.

I would like to refer the Hon. Member to Circular H-12. He has a copy of it. This circular sets out certain requirements the Minister has to meet in respect to Indian bands' capital funds. These requirements are not onerous and are to some degree flexible to accommodate the different financial systems used by different bands. The requirement that basic information about what money is to be spent for or spent on is fundamental.

In the case of the Sarcee band, it has refused to provide any information about the purpose for which it proposes to use its band capital moneys. All we are asking the Sarcee band to do is to provide us with a simple explanation. It need not be in great detail. When that information has been provided, and I understand that regional officials will be meeting with the Sarcee band to discuss it, then the funds can be released immediately.

The question posed by the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin concerning the Stoney band referred to the right of the band to make decisions about its own affairs. The particular case involves the exploitation of mineral resources on the Stoney reserve. This area is the responsibility of the Director of Indian Minerals in Calgary. Past practice has always been to consult with the Indian bands about matters affecting their resources, but the final decision must rest with the director.

The current situation does not involve a question of adjusting oil royalties or in any way changing the nature of the existing agreement. Rather it is a matter of paying the processing charges on natural gas produced on the Stoney reserve which have not been paid since 1979. This amounts to a little over $4 million. These charges are against revenues paid to the band of almost $120 million since 1979.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Parliamentary Secretary but the time allotted to him has expired.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS—NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION—COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS. (B) PRICE OF ELECTRICITY SUPPLIED TO PINE POINT MINES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to register my complete dissatisfaction with the answer given on May 30 by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) to my questions concerning the report of the Parliamentary Subcommittee on the Northern Canada Power Commission, commonly referred to as the Penner Report. This report, Sir, was tabled in the House of Commons or made available on April 7, 1982, some 14 months ago. So far there has been no response to this report by the presumably or so-called responsible Minister. In answering my question on May 30 he only referred to part of the report dealing with possible subsidies. He completely ignored some of the other major recommendations contained in this report, recommendations such as the revocation of the NCPC monopoly in northern Canada. If this were to be revoked, as recommended in the report, a municipality or consumer of power would be able to accept bids from other suppliers rather than be trapped by the Northern Canada Power Commission, not being able to go elsewhere.

• (2315)

There are recommendations contained in this report dealing with better planning mechanisms so as to avoid the many mistakes of the past. One of the most important recommendations deals with the transfer of jurisdiction over power from the federal to the territorial Governments. Nowhere else in Canada, with the exception of a very small part of northern British Columbia, does the Government of Canada get involved in this type of activity. It is something that naturally falls within the jurisdiction of the Province. There is no reason why that should not happen also in northern Canada.

I sometimes wonder what the business of the Government is. Is it the business of the great Government of Canada to run little 200-kilowatt generators in remote areas? Surely we must be concerned with matters of national importance.

This report recommends a write-off of the great outstanding debt of the corporation, most of which is due to previous mismanagement, especially on capital projects. If we were in a province where power was supplied by private companies, such as Alberta, then the public utilities board of the Province would not allow these excessive capital costs to be rolled into the rate base. The responsibility for cost-over runs would be borne by the shareholders. This is not the case with NCPC.

The report recommends the authority of the Public Utilities Board in the Yukon and Northwest Territories to set the rates of the corporation, the same as for the few private power corporations operating there which are grandfathered in. Nowhere else in Canada is there a situation where the major supplier of power considers itself exempt and aloof from the regulatory process of a public utilities board.

There are a lot of things besides subsidization that should be addressed by the Minister and the Department. When it does come to subsidization, the concept in this report, the ideal or the goal, is that the average price of power in the Territories should approximate the average price of power in the Provinces. I do not think anybody can really disagree with that.

We have to realize the part played by the availability of electricity at reasonable cost in increasing standards of living in undeveloped areas. This should be recognized by the federal Government just as it is by provincial Governments in their rural electrification schemes. It is certainly recognized by Canada in the case of Africa. In 1982 CIDA gave $328 million of Canadian taxpayers' money for electrification schemes. It did not give one nickel to the undeveloped areas of Canada's North.

On many previous occasions have we asked the Minister what he is going to do about this report. When I asked him on November 2 he said he would reply shortly after Christmas. On and on it goes. All he does is commission further studies. He has had a departmental study on the NCPC and now has asked the National Energy Board to again review the matter. The matter has been studied to death. It is time for action and decisions, not further studies. It would appear that the Minister is just incapable of decision. A Member on his side is so frustrated that he said, as quoted in a CBC report dated May 10, 1983:

> Keith Penner, the Liberal Member of Parliament who chaired the parliamentary study into NCPC says the federal Government shows a lack of will for not adopting his committee's report and that referring it to the National Energy Board is a delaying tactic to buy more time.

That is also my opinion, the opinion of my constituents and the people in the Northwest Territories and Yukon.

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly pleased to be able to comment on the northern energy policy activities which have occurred since the Penner Report was issued about one year ago.

The subsidies on electric power to residents of the North outside of the Territory capitals were extended to March, 1984. This program, coupled with the 6 and 5 per cent price guidelines which the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) directed the Northern Canada Power Commission to adopt has saved consumers many millions of dollars in both Yukon and the Northwest Territories. The cost is fully absorbed by the federal Government.

It should be noted that rather than reducing capital spending during a period of reduced demand, the Government has in fact dramatically expanded the expenditures for capital works by the Northern Canada Power Commission. In 1981-82, NCPC capital expenditures were less than $10 million. This was increased to over $40 million in 1982-83, and for the current year is expected to be in excess of $20 million. These expenditures are for hydro investment which should enhance stability in electricity costs over the long-term. They are also a major source for construction employment throughout the North. This is a start on a long-term objective to reduce reliance on diesel powered generating plants.

The Penner Report did not address the issue of how to reduce costs over the long term other than by further expensive Government subsidies to consumers. It is the Government's belief that equitable pricing of energy in the North is necessary. However, this should be coupled with programs that encourage energy conservation and with programs that provide alternative sources of energy. Activities of the federal Government are now concentrated on achieving these objectives.

With respect to the equity of electricity pricing, the Minister requested that the NEB examine the methodologies of rate setting by the Northern Canada Power Commission and assess alternative approaches to regulation of electrical rates. The proposal in the subcommittee report that rate ceilings be fixed, regardless of generating costs, would discourage conservation and delay the development of more cost effective alternative energy sources. The Minister's discussions with the territorial Governments have also confirmed that they too are primarily concerned with the development of local alternate energy sources.

The recent decline in energy demand in the North illustrates the vulnerability of any utility which relies on such a small number of customers for its revenue. In times of acute financial decline, NCPC as a federal Crown corporation can still receive some form of assistance from the federal Government. Any change in ownership of NCPC would alter this support and the financial implications of this are still being examined.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret interrupting the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, but the time allotted to him has expired.

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION—RULINGS ON RAILWAY BRANCH LINE ABANDONMENTS IN MANITOBA. (B) REQUEST FOR PROTECTION OF SUBDIVISIONS

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to follow up on a question I raised on Thursday, May 12, with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). I am especially happy since my fiancé, Lois Reimer, is in the gallery tonight to observe me debate this particular question.

I was not very happy on the day the Minister of Transport responded to my question because he mentioned that he was very happy with the record of the Canadian Transport Commission. He said that 88 per cent of the branch line systems we had in the 1930s were currently in place in western Canada. I tried to point out to the Minister at that time that 100 per cent of the submissions the CN and CP had made in Manitoba were abandoned. I was very displeased by the Minister's use of those kind of statistics because he certainly did not seem to be grappling with the particular problem.

I have a list of the 18 hearings that have been held in Manitoba by the CTC. The CTC had established a western arm with the sole purpose of assuring that a more sensitive and decentralized hearing would be given to the people in western Canada whose rail lines were being abandoned. We have the record of the CTC hearings regarding the Cabot subdivision, the Boissevain subdivision, the Varcoe subdivision, the Ridgeville subdivision, the Neepawa subdivision, Pleasant Point subdivision, Carman subdivision as far as the CN is concerned, and the Carman subdivision as far as the CP is concerned, the Wawanesa subdivision, the Hartney subdivision, the Lenore subdivision, the Neepawa subdivision, the Rossburn subdivision, the Lyleton subdivision, the Oakland subdivision, a portion of the Erwood subdivision, the Winnipegosis subdivision and the Inwood subdivision.

I list all these hearings because I think it is important to see what has been happening in western Canada as far as rail line abandonment is concerned, and so the Government can understand the frustration of people in western Canada in constituencies such as Dauphin-Swan River. When a hearing comes to town it is referred to as a three-ring circus. The hoops are set up and constituents are expected to hop through them. The results of the hearing are given out even before the CTC has had an opportunity to read the submissions that have been filed.

I express concern at this time because I think it is high time the Minister looked into the situation and at some of the lines that have been slated for abandonment to ensure that some positive action is taken.

I want to refer to at least two subdivisions which are slated for abandonment in my riding. The Oakland subdivision is slated for abandonment on August 31, 1984. Four Manitoba pool elevators operate on the portion of the line which is up for abandonment, and one of the elevators on this line was upgraded considerably during the Spring of 1982. The grain producers of the area depend very heavily on this line because otherwise they would be faced with insurmountable long hauls for their grain.

I know that the Parliamentary Secretary was not able to be here tonight. When I raised this issue with him and told him that 18 hearings were held, and that 17 of the decisions on those lines were made in favour of the CNR, he expressed doubt. Then he did some independent research, and I have a copy of the results which he passed on to me. The special assistant to the Minister of Transport indicated that in Manitoba it is true that in every application heard, the CTC has decided upon abandonment. This is certainly not justice, Mr. Speaker.

I think it is very important that we look at the issues. The PRAC Commission said that if there were a trucking subsidy or some other way that farmers would be able to cope with the expense of hauling their grain, then perhaps there could be some sort of consideration given to rail line abandonment. I have a letter on file from the Minister which indicates there is no way he would even consider any kind of trucking subsidy, yet the Government allows these types of decisions to be made by the CTC.

The Parliamentary Secretary who is in the House to answer my question tonight is pinch hitting for the Government, but I am sure he will pass my concerns on to the Minister. First of all, why is there an inconsistency? There are lines in Saskatchewan, which do not handle anything like the same amount of grain as handled in those areas in Manitoba that are up for abandonment which have been granted an extension. Why is there this type of inconsistency on the part of the Government in terms of decisions that have been allowed?

When hearings are held, the CNR always makes a representation, and the people who support it are given an opportunity to say what it will cost the CNR or the CPR to maintain the line. But there is never any kind of assistance given by the Government to anyone else, such as PRAC, to indicate the economic impact on the community. Why is there no opportunity for people who have served on PRAC, and people within the Department of Transport such as Mr. Henry Roperts, to make adequate presentations indicating what the economic impact would be on those communities?

I would like to hear answers to these questions. I would like to see these injustices which exist where these railways are being abandoned rectified. I hope there is something in the answer of the Parliamentary Secretary which will at least address some of these questions.

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, let me say first of all that after listening to the Hon. Member, I would be tempted to agree with him. Of course, I too would like to have my own airport. Hon. Members of that Party are the ones who cry when the deficit goes up. How can they reconcile this?

It seems to me the Hon. Member has two concerns. One relates to what he describes as "the tarnished record of the western division of the CTC". The other is in regard to the hearing process conducted by the Canadian Transport Commission into branch line abandonments.

Dealing first with the second concern, the Hon. Member objects to intervenors going to what he calls a "three ring circus". I am not sure what he would suggest as an alternative to these public hearings. The Railway Act provides for public hearings, and the CTC makes every effort to ensure that all interested parties are heard on abandonment cases. The Act requires that the CTC determine the viability of branch lines and that it consider socioeconomic factors in making its determination. The alternative to this process would be to allow the CTC to make arbitrary decisions, which I am sure the Hon. Member does not want.

The Hon. Member's other concern is the record of abandonments in his region, and I recognize and compliment him for having the best interests of his constituents at heart. For the record, Mr. Speaker, since the western division of the CTC was established in July, 1979, there have been eight railway abandonment hearings in Manitoba. Of these eight, there is a decision pending on the Erwood Subdivision for part of the line, and a decision has been made on the Rossburn Subdivision allowing a part of the line to be abandoned on condition that a connecting rail line be constructed to ensure the continuation of adequate service.

I understand that as a result of the Hon. Member's question on May 12 the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Flis) arranged a meeting between the Hon. Member and a senior official of the Department of Transport to review the Hon. Member's concerns. I hope this meeting was useful.

I am sure the Hon. Member realizes that, in addition to the process described earlier, decisions of the CTC can be appealed to the Governor in Council. In conclusion, the Government believes that the process for branch line abandonment is extremely fair, and allows all factors to be carefully considered before a decision is taken.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

PENITENTIARIES

LACK OF REHABILITATION SERVICES

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, on May 15, at the William Head Penitentiary near Victoria, B.C., Professor Douglas Ayers drew attention to an important change in public policy with respect to penitentiaries. He reminded Canadians that traditionally in our social policy one of the purposes of our penitentiaries is rehabilitation. We have never accepted the view that the sole purpose of a penitentiary is to punish, or to deter, or to hold people in custody. Reflecting our moral perspectives, we expect penitentiaries to try very hard to encourage, direct, and lead prisoners to responsible lives. The way we deal with our prisoners reflects the kind of people we are and the kind of society we wish to be.

The annual report of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) for 1981-82 defines the over-all mandate of the Correctional Service of Canada as being " . . . responsible for administering the sentences of the courts, as well as the decisions of the National Parole Board, affecting the release of offenders sentenced to two years or more". There is nothing in this statement even suggestive of rehabilitation. The June 6 article in Maclean's magazine by Val Ross suggests that in recent years the purposes of Canadian penitentiaries have been reformulated in such a way as to exclude that goal. Dr. Ayers pointed out that this is why the Solicitor General was so easily able to threaten to cancel the effective ten-year-old education program of the University of Victoria.

I would urge the Government to be unequivocal and to restore rehabilitation as one of the primary goals of the penitentiary system.

CITIZENS' RIGHTS—CONDEMNATION OF MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, every Canadian believes deeply in two principles—that his or her fellow Canadians are decent, honest and law abiding, and that those who would disrupt our system of peace, order and democratic Government should be found and dealt with. That these two principles are sometimes difficult to reconcile is inevitable. But it is also true that, in reconciling them, balance must be steadfastly sought. For this reason, the comments of the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) yesterday, to the effect that nobody is exempt from security service scrutiny, are an affront to decent, thoughtful Canadians.

The Minister, who appears to be running for membership in George Orwell's "Animal Farm", has somehow lost sight of the first principle of justice in a free society, that is, that nobody should be the object of a security inquiry by the state without some reasonable evidence in the first place that a security risk may exist to justify the investigation.

Any Minister who accepts the view that all Canadians should be automatically and routinely suspect, that someone who is not guilty would not object to being investigated, that we, as loyal citizens, should bear the onus of proving our innocence, that Canadians should assume they are under scrutiny and behave accordingly—any such Minister has no place in office in this land and most certainly not in the office of Minister of Justice.

CENTRALIZATION OF SERVICES—EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I should like to call the attention of the House to the report that Canadian National Railways intends to merge the administration of its trucking and express divisions and to base the new operation in Toronto. That will result in the loss of some 350 jobs across the system. Also, apparently the prairie merchandising and claims centre is to be moved from Winnipeg to Calgary, meaning a loss of jobs in Winnipeg. Within this context I would also like to call attention to the increasing centralization and automation of railway services within the CNR. This all constitutes part of the continuing attack by the CNR on the number of people who work for the railways.

Mr. Pepin: An attack on deficits.

Mr. Blaikie: In this instance 350 jobs are involved, but literally thousands of jobs are being weeded out of the railway system on a year by year basis.

I call on the Minister of Transport to do something about this attack on the over-all numbers of people who work for the CNR, and particularly in the case of this latest merger on the number of unionized employees who will be working for the CNR. I should also like to call upon him to investigate the way in which safety is often affected by these so-called rationalizations. In this case I am referring to something that Members are already aware of, and that is the Nakina run-through, which will mean less actual visible inspection of track and fewer people on the ground, so to speak. We will be more reliant than ever on computers for rail safety, and this is not a good thing.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

DISARMAMENT

CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION TO NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, it is a concern to me that many Canadians are not aware of the various disarmament initiatives in which Canada participates.

The most notable arms control negotiations currently under way are, first, the Intermediate Nuclear Force talks which are being held between the United States and the Soviet Union in Geneva, and second, the Strategic Arms Reduction talks in which the United States and the Soviet Union are debating the reduction of intercontinental ballistic missiles. Canada, as a member of NATO and NORAD, through our discussions with the United States, has an important say in these arms control negotiations.

Canada is a full participant in the mutual and balanced force reduction negotiations between NATO and the Warsaw Pact, which are looking at the number of troops and weapons that would be acceptable for each side in Europe.

In addition, Canada participates in the 35-nation conference on security and co-operation in Europe, which includes discussions on military matters such as confidence building measures between east and west European nations.

Canada also participates in the United Nations Disarmament Commission which meets year round in Geneva. Of special note for the current year is that Canada is chairman of the committee which is working toward a ban on all chemical and biological weapons.

In addition, Canada is one of the very few countries which has an official ambassador for disarmament.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

CALL FOR EXAMINATION OF SENATE COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, for over a decade military observers have viewed with alarm the deterioration of the Canadian Armed Forces. Personnel has been reduced from a 1960 level of 126,000 to a current level of 80,000. The reserves experienced an even greater reduction.

• (1110)

Much of the equipment used by the Canadian Armed Forces is now aged and obsolete, yet the officers and ranks struggle to meet our NATO and other commitments in defence of Canada and the free world. Promises of improvements and increased spending on national defence have not been kept. Now the Government must act.

The House of Commons has been silenced by the Government majority, but the report of the Senate subcommittee on National Defence has exposed the real facts on Maritime Command and defence policy to public view. We see a naval force crippled by inadequate equipment and stymied by lack of ministerial policy direction.

The subcommittee recommendations are detailed and thoughtful, and deserve careful examination by the Government. In broad terms, we must give force to the demand for a $550 million annual increase in the expenditures to arrest the decline in status and readiness of our Maritime forces. Such an increase would generate job-creation activity in shipbuilding, and more important, would stall the decline in conventional arms and minimize the need to resort to nuclear weapons in our national defence.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES INVOLVEMENT IN CENTRAL AMERICA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, in a speech to the United Nations Association in Ottawa the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) stressed Canada's opposition to armed attacks on legitimate Governments in Central America but remained silent on U.S. financed and directed attacks on Nicaragua. The Canadian Government has not demanded evidence of the existence of arms shipments from Nicaragua to Honduras which the U.S. says justifies its support for counter revolutionary activities in Honduras and Nicaragua. The Canadian Government has not condemned the U.S. program of "destabilization" of Nicaragua, a program which has brought about the death of over 700 Nicaraguans in the last six months. The Canadian Government has not challenged the U.S. campaign of disinformation about conditions in Nicaragua, and in particular the American distortion of the situtaion of the Miskito Indians.

Instead of silently backing U.S. policy in Central America, Canada should be moving forward to help Nicaraguans build a democratic, pluralistic and prosperous society as they approach the fourth anniversary of their revolution this July 19.

CALL FOR MEETING OF WESTERN MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT TO SUGGEST IMPROVEMENTS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, surely by this time the Government must realize that western Canada does not want Bill C-155 in its present form. My idea of a democratic Government is that it endeavours to reflect the thinking of the people in its legislation and in its administration. If the Government would do that instead of telling the people what is good for them, as Bill C-155 does, it would call a meeting of the western Members of Parliament who represent the people of the West, and who are accountable to the people who elect them, and ascertain what has to be done to remove the major objections to the Bill.

For instance, why would the Government of Canada want to destroy the cattle and hog industry of western Canada? What changes to the Bill would have to be made to permit these industries to expand and reach their potential? Industrial development and manufacturing are required in the West. We have many raw materials and the expertise; why can we not invest and build up this industry? Surely in a country as large and as diverse as Canada there is room for development in both the West and the East. Let us start talking reasonably to each other with a view to permitting and encouraging the people of all parts of this great country to grow and play their part in building a greater Canada.

Forcing Bill C-155 on western Canada may appease the appetites for power but will, in the long run, be another nail in the coffin of Confederation. I love Canada and I do not want to see it broken up. Why can we not build this nation together, with all the regions of Canada playing their part?

CANAGREX—OPPOSITION TO ESTABLISHMENT OF CORPORATION

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, the increasing involvement of the Liberal Government in the economy through public enterprise has been questioned by many concerned Canadians as they have watched through the last decade the increased deployment of Crown corporations and the tremendous waste of public funds which followed. Yet the Liberal Government attempts to get away with another unwarranted intervention, this time in agriculture. The new state agency, Canagrex, will emerge as the Petro-Canada of the agriculture industry, with its share of debts, mismanagement, and lost opportunity for private enterprise. Again, the Government has created a public leech which is stealing business from the private sector.

The strong opposition to Canagrex voiced by numerous organizations across the country indicates our society's current mistrust of state management. Canadians are not willing to accept direct Government intervention in agriculture. The example of other bankrupt Crown corporations taught them a hard lesson. They treasure their economic and personal freedoms too much to let them perish.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADAIR—REQUEST THAT TASK FORCE REPORT BE RELEASED

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. He is aware that the Auditor General announced yesterday in committee hearings that there was a special task force report produced in early 1982 resulting from the 1981 financial statement of Canadair. Upon investigation into the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce he uncovered a need to see this report. The Minister's predecessor agreed to allow him to see the report so that he could complete his statement in his report. Therefore, I ask the Minister to release this report which has caused this country great concern, and which will result in a write-down in excess of $2 billion on Canadair's operations.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, the report was referred to by the Auditor General in his 1982 report to Parliament. The report in question, was prepared for Ministers and therefore falls within the rules applying to Cabinet documents. In spite of that, my predecessor, in an effort to be helpful, did make it available to the Auditor General on a personal basis and, as far as I know, he is satisfied with the basis on which he received it.

REQUEST THAT AUDITOR GENERAL INVESTIGATE REPORT

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, the Auditor General is responsible to Members of Parliament. He was told this report was for his eyes only. In a previous incident, referred to as "Coalgate", the Minister of Energy provided documents which assisted us in finding out what happened. In view of the depth of the debt of Canadair, I insist that this Minister at least permit the Auditor General's Department to do thorough research into this report because the Auditor General said in his statement that the company over-emphasized the sales potential. Will the Minister agree to that?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, with respect to the premise of the my hon. friend's question, I do not think the material he referred to involved Cabinet documents. I again repeat that the report in question is a Cabinet document and the principles applying to Cabinet documents are the same now as under previous administrations.

In spite of the status of that document, in an effort to be of assistance to the Auditor General my predecessor made it available to him on a personal basis. Obviously the Auditor

General made use of the material in that report in preparing his comments in his 1982 report to Parliament.

REQUEST THAT COMMITTEE BE PERMITTED TO EXAMINE REPORT

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, the Auditor General has expressed to us his frustration that this report was for his eyes only. I acknowledge that we want to get into new technology, but we are in a very serious situation where it is costing every citizen in this country $95 to support Canadair. I insist, in view of the fact the Minister has given the Auditor General this report for his eyes only, that he broaden the terms and allow this report to come before committee so that we can report back to the citizens of this country about what actually went on in Canadair.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, as far as I am aware, the Auditor General, rather than expressing frustration about the basis on which he received the report, expressed satisfaction that, in spite of its status as a Cabinet document, he was allowed to see it and review it, so I must say that I do not agree with the interpretation of my hon. friend.

Aside from that, the Minister responsible for the Canada Development Investment Corporation, as far as I am aware, has presented a very complete report to both the Public Accounts Committee and the Finance Committee, and has made himself and his officials available to provide just the kind of information my hon. friend is seeking, so that the ground he is interested in is in fact being covered.

CERTIFICATION OF 1981 FINANCIAL STATEMENTS

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the President of the Treasury Board. We all know that the underlying basis of confidence in our financial and corporate system lies in the auditors and their signing of the financial statements of corporations. On January 22, Thorne-Riddell signed the 1981 financial statements of Canadair. No mention was made of any financial problems. Yet a mere three weeks later Canadair asked for a letter of comfort in the sum of $1.3 billion. My question is this: Did the Government, or the Board of Directors of Canadair instruct, ask, or imply that Thorne-Riddell should omit any reference to the disastrous financial position of Canadair?

• (1120)

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, in line with the principles involved in the role of Cabinet Ministers, I think that that question should be referred to the Minister currently responsible for the Canada Development Investment Corporation and Canadair. However, I must say that I am surprised at the inference, the innuendo in my hon. friend's question, when he is referring to a major, respected, national accounting firm.

Mr. Thacker: If the Government would put its Cabinet Ministers in this House where we could question them, I would be asking the responsible Minister that question, but it stows him away in the Senate, where you cannot get at him. That answer is not good enough. That answer smells of a cover up.

INQUIRY RESPECTING POSSIBLE REPRESENTATIONS MADE TO AUDITING FIRM

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): I am repeating my question to the President of the Treasury Board. Did any Cabinet Minister or did any Board of Directors of Canadair instruct, ask, or imply that Thorne-Riddell should omit any comments about the disastrous financial position of Canadair in 1981?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, there is a Minister in the House answering for the Canada Development Investment Corporation, the Minister of National Revenue, and the Minister—

Mr. Nielsen: He's not here.

Mr. Gray: —who sits in the Senate has appeared both before the Public Accounts Committee and the Finance Committee and, on behalf of the Government, has attempted to be very open and very helpful to Members of Parliament in this very important matter. Again, I want to say that I am surprised at the innuendo in the question, referring, as it does, to a major, national, and reputable accounting firm. I think that that innuendo should be rejected.

Mr. Lalonde: Say it outside the House.

SPECIAL RECOVERY CAPITAL PROJECTS PROGRAM

HIRING OF CONSULTANTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the minister of Finance which concerns the 1.5 milion unemployed men and women who would still like to have jobs. It is now two months since the Minister announced in his budget—and I think he was using the language without intended irony—his special recovery, fast track, accelerated Capital Works Program intended, one thought, to create many jobs. Thus far, from the $550 million which was intended to be spent this year, the only jobs about which we know are those which have gone to five consultants who have been paid $1.5 million. Could the Minister tell us how many jobs have been created by this so-called fast track policy, and where are they?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would like to remind the Leader of the NDP that since last November we have created 300,000 more jobs in this country. On a seasonally adjusted basis, the equivalent of 200,000 new jobs have been created in Canada since last November. These are the facts.

As far as the recovery program is concerned, no five consultants have been paid $1.5 million. The consultants required for the program have been hired by the special secretariat and will be called upon to help fast track the program, and will be paid the professional fees which are normally paid in those circumstances. They are retained on a need basis in order to avoid expanding the Public Service.

Most of the projects have already been announced, and they will be taking place across the country. The secretariat is in the process of designating the professionals to undertake those particular activities. We expect that a number of them will be starting this summer and proceeding as planned during the course of this year and early next year.

As for the total number of jobs that will be created, I indicated before in answer to similar questions that I would not speculate on the specific number of jobs. We will spend, as the Hon. Member knows, over $600 million this year alone, as part of the $2.4 billion program. The number of jobs created directly and indirectly by such a program will be in the tens of thousands. Exactly how many, I cannot help the Hon. Member.

• (1125)

STRATEGY OF PROGRAM

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, with all due respect, the Minister has added even further confusion to the confused statements uttered by the Minister of State for Economic Development as quoted in yesterday's press.

I would ask the Minister of Finance to listen to what the Minister said yesterday and then respond to my question. Perhaps he will see the logic, because I cannot. On the one hand the Minister of State for Economic Development said that he could not give an estimate on jobs. On the other hand he said, "The program was not designed as a job creation program." That is rather bizarre. Finally he said, "It will eventually create tens of thousands of jobs." Perhaps that is good Liberal planning. If they sit down and devise a program that is not intended to create jobs, may be that is the only way we will get jobs from those guys.

Will the Minister tell us the definitive, coherent strategy that the Government has developed vis-à-vis this program? Is it intended to create jobs and, if so, when will we get them, and in what sectors of the economy?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have difficulty believing that the Hon. Member is serious in his question and his reasoning. It is rather flabbergasting. I do not know where he was during the last two weeks when he was not in the House but, frankly, he did not come back in a very helpful mood.

The program is a $2.4 billion program that has been presented as an acceleration of planned investment by the Government of Canada for enhancement of the infrastructure that will be required in this country to make the economy more competitive, efficient, and thereby capable of creating more jobs in the private sector. It will put us in a position to support a growing economy.

Obviously, if we spend over $2 billion on developing the infrastructure of the country it will create tens of thousands of jobs. There is no doubt about that.

The Minister responsible has indicated that the first objective of the program is to provide a better infrastructure in this country by accelerating expenditures planned by the federal Government. At the same time tens of thousands of jobs will be created.

I would remind the Hon. Member of one example. Yesterday we received tenders on the construction of icebreakers that have been planned for years. These tenders are before Treasury Board. They will be examined and, as soon as they are processed, those tenders will be decided upon. This will create jobs in the shipyards of our country.

There are more projects of this nature taking place everywhere. In the meantime I would invite my hon. friend's Party at least to let the Crow legislation go to committee.

Madam Speaker: Order.

CONSULTANTS' REMUNERATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I remind the Minister that it was not anyone on this side but he who described it in his budget puffery as a special recovery program, an accelerated spending program, and a fast track program. I say to him that ordinary people interpret that to mean jobs now and not two or three years down the road. He comes back to the House today and still talks about Treasury Board meeting to consider submissions. That is like waiting for Godot. It may be another five years before we get action.

Let me ask the Minister about the people who have jobs—the five consultants. Will he at least tell us what the Government plans to pay these five consultants? They are receiving $1.5 million. Do we divide that by five? That is quite substantial. Will he tell us what their daily rates are, because surely the people of this country have a right to know?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, again I find it amazing to hear the Leader of the New Democratic Party advocating that we do away with the public tender process on large expenditures. We have received tenders for the construction of ships. Thanks to the fast tracks process, within two months of the budget announcement we have been able to have tenders submitted on specific shipbuilding projects. These are being examined at the present time. The announcement should come very shortly.

With respect to the Coast Guard we have planned $790 million of expenditures on shipbuilding in the next period. This will mean that jobs will be created for Canadian workers in all parts of the country. The consultants are engineers who will help us speed up the process and make sure that the jobs will be created as fast as possible. As far as the specific expenditures are concerned, they will be on a professional basis and they will be available to the Hon. Member and the House on a normal basis like all expenditures that are made. My hon. friend should take the time to examine the facts.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST THAT MINISTER GROUND CF-104 STARFIGHTER AIRCRAFT

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, on May 24 I asked the Minister of National Defence whether he would consider grounding the Starfighters because of their unacceptably high attrition rate. He replied:

> Madam Speaker, if there were any unreasonable risk in letting our pilots fly any of our planes I would stop them from flying right away.

According to press reports the Minister has stated that he will not ground the fighter but will temporarily curtail certain operational exercises. In view of yesterday's accident, will the Minister not now completely ground the Starfighters until the causes of the crashes are known and, possibly, rectified?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, as I mentioned yesterday, after the news of the crash in Germany reached me I had a conversation with the Chief of Defence Staff and the Director of Air Command. I asked them for their opinions. They advised me there was no serious reason just because of the accident to ground the aircraft. They indicated that most of the maintenance and safety precautions with respect to the aircraft are at the highest level they have ever been. They also advised me that only 15 per cent of the accidents that have occurred in the last 15 years of flying these planes were due to mechanical defects. The remainder were not as a result of mechanical defects.

Also, as a precaution, the Chief of Defence Staff yesterday issued an order at my suggestion that some of the air to ground exercises will be suspended until we have the reasons for the last two crashes. According to the Chief of Defence Staff at Air Command there was no serious reason why we should ground the aircraft.

Yesterday was a very bad day. Two Jaguar aircraft from the British Air Force crashed in Goose Bay. That was not a reason, again, to ground these aircraft just because these accidents happened. These Jaguar planes were also old. They are to be replaced by the Tornado, probably next year.

Just because there are crashes and even though we know the reasons for these crashes, we do not think that these reasons call for us to ground them.

PILOT ERROR FACTOR

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of National Defence. I would like to point out to him that the CF-101s are not crashing, and the CF-105s are not crashing. It is only the CF-104 that seems to be crashing fairly frequently, much too frequently.

The Jaguar crash provided good grounds for believing there was pilot error. Yesterday in an interview the Minister said that the pilots were to blame for the crashes and not the planes.

Frankly, I think that Captain Bayles' reaction yesterday may have been the smartest move he will ever make, when he bailed out of the CF-104. Can the Minister tell us any fact or give us any evidence that he has for thinking that yesterday's crash, or indeed that the last three crashes could have been caused by pilot error?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I did not say anything about the last three crashes being due to pilot errors. I think that the media took my remarks from my interview out of context. What I did do was to quote the figures I have for the different causes for accidents. These reasons could be personnel, materiel, environment, operational, unknown. Statistics say that 60 per cent are caused by human error; 15 per cent are material; 14 per cent are environment; and 13 per cent for other reasons. I do not think I said it was strictly a human error. It could be human error. The statistics are there.

Maybe I should mention, Madam Speaker, that following these accidents, I, of course, sent my condolences to the Minister of Defence for Germany, and I received his reply today. I want to quote his concluding sentence. It reads as follows:

> We will continue trying to prevent such accidents, and it is our belief that the Canadian pilots contribute their part to flight-safety over Germany and are esteemed as especially competent and capable flyers.

I think that is a good commendation from the German Minister of Defence.

SENATE COMMITTEE FINDINGS ON MARITIME DEFENCE—LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURE

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of National Defence. It deals with policies affecting our naval force in Maritime Command. The Minister has continually assured the House that Canada is fulfilling its NATO commitments and maintaining an adequate level of personnel and equipment. Now the Senate subcommittee on National Defence has destroyed that assurance concerning maritime defence.

Since the Minister has already refused the recommendation to increase expenditures on maritime defence by $550 million per year, as recommended by the Senate subcommittee, what increase in expenditure will he provide the Maritime Command? What does the Minister intend to do in response to the scathing criticism of his administration contained in the subcommittee report on matters like the patrol frigate program, additional Aurora aircraft, diesel submarines, patrol boats, and all the other specifics which the subcommittee says are now required?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I have not finished reading the report. But, as I said yesterday, this report was made by professional people and people with great knowledge of maritime matters. However, I never said either that I would refuse $550 million a year for Maritime Command. I said that I doubted very much whether the Minister of Finance would allow me to add $550 million every year to my budget just for Maritime Command.

I would like to stress to the hon. gentleman that, for the last three years I have been Minister of National Defence, we have had a substantital increase in the budget of National Defence amounting to 15 per cent to 17 per cent every year, which brings us over the 3 per cent real growth target of our NATO commitment. I think that in this way we have done exactly what we wanted to do.

As far as the Maritime Command is concerned, Hon. Members know very well that the construction of six new frigates is currently under cabinet discussion now. I hope this decision will indeed be taken in the very near future. I would say, as Minister of National Defence, that I do hope this is a good start.

WEARING OF NAVAL UNIFORMS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of National Defence. I want to remind him that this criticism does not come from outside sources or from Maritime Command, it comes from his own colleagues in the other place. If the Minister is not going to do anything substantial right now for Maritime Command, would he at least review recommendation 19 of the Senate subcommittee report, which reads that:

—personnel be issued and permitted to wear recognizeable trade badges and distinctive rank identification.

I will add to that my own request that our Maritime Command be allowed to return to wearing navy blue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosby: Will the Minister allow that right now as a token of his esteem for Maritime Command?

Mr. MacEachen: Tory blue.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I think that as long as we will be in this House there will probably be a discussion about this question of uniforms in the Armed Forces. Since 1970 there has been unification of all the Forces, Army, Navy, and the Air Force. They all have the same coloured uniform. I am an ex-Air Force man. I can assure the Hon. Member that my heart is for my blue Air Force uniform.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lamontagne: But, on the other hand, we have to abide by the unification decision which was taken and I am sure the hon. gentleman understands that reasoning. But I do not say in their hearts that even members of the Maritime Command do not think it would certainly be something very nice to have their dark blue suits.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PARLIAMENT HILL

FORTHCOMING ROYAL VISIT—REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF PEACE CAMP

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister in the understandable absence of the Prime Minister who, I presume, is discharging his responsibilities in connection with the visit of their Royal Highnesses. It has to do with the visit of their Royal Highnesses to Parliament Hill next Monday. Will the Deputy Prime Minister take steps to remove the eyesore that is next to the Centennial Flame on the direct access route to the Centre Block in order that Canadians might perceive their Royal Highnesses on television via pictures taken from the platforms erected directly opposite that eyesore?

Their Royal Highnesses are being received with warmth, grace, and dignity. The idea of peaceful demonstrations is one thing which is acceptable in this country, but permanent squatting, particularly on this Royal occasion, is something that I suggest to the Deputy Prime Minister cannot be tolerated.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister is absent today, meeting the Prime Minister of Australia, though he did host a very splendid dinner for the Royal visitors in Halifax on Wednesday night. As my hon. friend has pointed out, the Prince and Princess of Wales have been received very enthusiastically and warmly in Nova Scotia, and today in New Brunswick. Undoubtedly they will be received in a very spontaneous and warm way when they visit Parliament Hill.

I believe, Madam Speaker, that the responsibility for locations on Parliament Hill is not the responsibility of the Government. If it is a question of taking steps to handle events in the precincts of Parliament, it is not in this case the responsibility of the Government, though I do generally support the sentiments of the Hon. Member.

Madam Speaker: I would just like to interject that it is not the responsibility of the Speaker, if the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister is alluding to that. Anything outside the Parliament Buildings is the responsibility of one or two Government Departments.

Mr. Nielsen: I commend the Chair for that intervention. May I suggest to the Deputy Prime Minister that we cannot escape the acceptance of responsibility for cleaning up Parliament Hill in anticipation of the Royal visit. The City of Halifax cleaned up the whole city to receive the Royal couple. Surely we can take some lessons from that example.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF REMOVAL

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, would the Deputy Prime Minister take it upon himself to assure us that the Prime Minister, by virtue of the fact that he is the official host of Canada to the Royal couple, sees to it that that eyesore is removed so as not to mar a visit by the Royal couple, of which I am sure all Canadians want to be proud? We certainly cannot be proud of a situation where that kind of eyesore is allowed to interfere, and will interfere, with that visit to Parliament Hill next Monday. It is surprising if he cannot give us that assurance in a major program. Today we are told that the Direct Action Group is now involved with that display on Parliament Hill. This is the group that blew up Litton Industries. Can the Government not take the responsibility, on the basis of shear security, to get rid of a security risk, if not the eyesore?

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Leader of the Opposition for his question because I think it is a matter of interest shared on both sides of the House. There is no doubt that, on the matter of security, representatives of the Secretary of State have been in touch with the Peace Camp people. We have explained to them that, for the matter of security, it would be advisable to have them move their equipment, at least during the Royal visit. They have agreed to remove their equipment. Their equipment will be moved this weekend, so that the ceremony could take place around the Centennial Flame. They will have the same right as any Canadian to attend the Royal visit, to participate and to express their opinion, as they have and as they are entitled to according to our Charter of Rights and Freedoms, but in a context which will not jeopardize the security and the proper setting of the ceremony.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I cannot believe my ears, if I heard correctly. The Government has negotiated with these squatters to see whether they might be disposed to remove this rubbish on the main entrance way for one day. Peaceful demonstration is one thing; permanent squatting is another.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, is the Minister telling us that the Government will allow untold numbers of groups, if they wish, to camp on the parliamentary lawns and on all access ways to these buildings, and that this is an open invitation to clutter up the whole of the parliamentary precincts to any group which wishes to come and set up a tent?

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Leader of the Opposition has to make up his mind. He is making speeches all over Canada saying that this Government is jeopardizing freedom. We try to respect the freedom of expression of all Canadians, especially when they are on public grounds. They have a right to come here and express their opinions, even though their opinions might be questioned by some other people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Joyal: We have voted on both sides of the House for an article in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms that established the kind of freedom of expression to which each Canadian is entitled. At the same time we have the responsibility of maintaining security of the state. That is exactly the kind of balance we want to achieve in that regard.

PERMANENT CAMP PROTESTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a final supplementary question. No one is arguing with the right of citizens to demonstrate peacefully. But I suggest that the Government is clearly ducking its responsibility if it suggests to us that there is a right to permanent squatting by tenting all over the parliamentary precincts. We are not arguing with the right to peaceful demonstration; we are arguing that permanent camping on these grounds is intolerable. Will the Government allow that sort of thing? Is this an open invitation to any group that wishes to set up a tent anywhere it pleases on the parliamentary precincts?

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, not at all. It is quite visible that the Hon. Leader of the Opposition does not know the rules. There are Acts of Parliament which have been voted, and regulations that provide the setting of orders and instructions which any citizen who wants to come on Parliament Hill has to respect. We have expressed those rules to the Peace Camp people. They have abided by those rules. At this point in time they know the rules and they know that if they break the rules they can be moved away according to that set of regulations.

Mr. Nielsen: They can legally squat; that is what you are telling us. Ridiculous.

Mr. Joyal: No government has the discretion to push away Canadian citizens without informing them of their right to come on the Hill to express their opinions.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

CANADIAN CONTENT IN JAPANESE MANUFACTURED AUTOMOBILES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the high-flying Minister of State for International Trade. It concerns the implementation of the report of the auto task force and the fact that the voluntary agreement with the Japanese on the import of Japanese automobiles expires on July 1. Could the Minister give us a commitment that in his talks with the Japanese about the importation of Japanese cars he will try to negotiate the recommendations of this task force so that there will be Canadian content in the Japanese cars which Canadians will want to buy?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his very pertinent and timely question. I want to say to him that the negotiations with the Japanese in relation to a further period of restraint are continuing and that I would be hopeful of having in place, by July 1, an arrangement which would cover a restraint level until the end of the fiscal year, next March 31. If that is not the case, then I would propose other action to Cabinet prior to July 1, 1983.

In relation to the recommendations of the task force, I think the manner in which that must be approached is that we get into place an agreed level of restraint from now until March 31, and that we take advantage of that time period for the distinguished Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, in co-operation of course with the Department of Trade, to see to it that negotiations with the Japanese on the question of content go forth pursuant to examination by Cabinet of the recommendations of the task force.

CANADIAN CONTENT IN JAPANESE MANUFACTURED TRUCKS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question also concerns the task force. The principal recommendations of the task force are really very similar to the 1965 Auto Pact with the United States that called for Canadian content for the production of American cars in this country. It is really a fair play document that is expanding the same rules to other companies in other countries.

I would like to ask the Minister, in light of the fact that the importation of Japanese trucks has gone up by 54 per cent over last year in the first quarter of this year, is he including the importation of Japanese trucks as part of his talks with the Japanese. Would he like to see the same rules of Canadian content apply to trucks as the report of the task force says should apply to both trucks and cars? Would he also negotiate for Canadian content in trucks as well?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, trucks are, of course, part of the automotive trade between our countries and provide jobs in the same way as do cars. While the Japanese have historically been reluctant to include trucks in any arrangement for restraint, that is a subject of discussions that are taking place.

I want to point out to the low-flying Hon. Member that there are two factors which I consider to be very hopeful at the present time. The first is that the market for cars is improving substantially this year as recovery from the recession takes place. The other is that there seems to be a growing indication that North American automobiles are becoming more competitive in the eyes of the public. I see a pattern of recovery coming about in the choice of North American cars over imported cars.

We are watching the situation in relation to trucks very closely and we are concerned about the number of trucks that have been sold. That is a matter for examination along with the matter of automobiles.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CANADAIR—GOVERNMENT'S REACTION TO MANAGEMENT

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board and is supplementary to that of my colleague. No one in the Progressive Conservative Party questions the integrity of Thorne Riddell whatsoever, Madam Speaker. What we do question is the matter of Joel Bell wandering around acting like a pseudo Lee Iacocca of Crown corporations.

A representative of Thorne Riddell, appearing before the committee which was examining Canadair, made it quite clear that notes to the financial statement are notes of the management. My question to the President of the Treasury Board is this: what was the reaction of the Government when it found out that it had been misled by management?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend says that he is not questioning the integrity of Thorne Riddell, but I respectfully suggest that the innuendo was very much present in the questions of his hon. friend. As far as I am aware from reports I have had of the Public Accounts Committee meeting, there was no suggestion made by Thorne Riddell that the type of activity suggested by his colleague has taken place.

With respect to my hon. friend's question, the details of action taken by Government were set out in great detail before both the Public Accounts and Finance Committees, in the statement tabled by the Minister of State for Social Development and in the subsequent exchanges with the Committees. I believe that I should refer more detailed questions on this subject to the Minister delegated to respond on behalf of the Canada Development Investment Corporation in this House.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, the puppet who responds in this House for the man in the other place is not here today.

NON-DISCLOSURE OF CORPORATION'S LOSSES

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, Canadair adopted the program accounting treatment which, according to the representative of Thorne Riddell, is only used by one other company in Canada. Is it not true that a program accounting treatment was encouraged by the Liberal Government because it enabled Canadair to hide the losses which it hid from the Government and the taxpayers of Canada for so long?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, with respect to the comment made about the absence of the Minister of National Revenue, he has been here very frequently and in fact has been present every day except today. He has been delighted to answer the questions of Members of the Official Opposition quite freely and openly. Even though the matter falls within the area for which he answers to the House, I think that I can say that it is my understanding that the program accounting method is one which is fully accepted as an accounting standard in the country. It is one which was obviously accepted and used by the accounting firm of Thorne Riddell, and my hon. friend has just testified to that firm's integrity.

REMOVAL OF PEACE CAMP SQUATTERS

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and is supplementary to the questions that were asked by the Leader of the Official Opposition. If police officers and officers of Canada Parks can forcibly evict squatters from Long Beach, on the west coast of Vancouver Island, who were enjoying a peaceful tenancy of that area which was taken over by the Government of Canada, then why does the Deputy Prime Minister not see fit to remove, for a temporary period of time, the eyesore of squatters in front of the Peace Tower in Ottawa?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member's question is a bit rhetorical. I think that he would be the first to admit that there is a difference between Parliament and its precincts on Parliament Hill and any other piece of ground in the country. I think that it has to be recognized that Parliament Hill has, over the years, become a place where people come to express their views. To that extent, it is quite different.

I believe that the answer provided by the Secretary of State was complete and comprehensive and dealt with the concerns of the Leader of the Opposition. We will endeavour to make the visit of the Royal couple successful so that the Canadian people can express their warmth to them when they arrive. I am certain that the matter raised by the Hon. Member will be dealt with satisfactorily.

Mr. Huntington: Madam Speaker, I would like to remind the Deputy Prime Minister that there has been much rhetoric about equity, and a just society, and equality for all.

POSSIBLE CREATION OF PRECEDENT

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, I would ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he is not fearful that he is setting a very dangerous precedent for all dissenters, no matter how small the minority, by allowing squatting beside the Eternal Flame on this important day in Canada's history. Is he not allowing a very dangerous potential for further disorder on Parliament Hill?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Madam Speaker, I do not think that a dangerous precedent would be set. I think that if we were to take very drastic action that would deny individuals the possibility of expressing their views, it might set an even more dangerous precedent.

AGRICULTURE

INSPECTION OF MEAT PRODUCTS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture whose Department is embarking upon a bold new experiment with meat inspection services which will increase the reliance on the plant classification system over the use of on-site inspectors to ensure the quality and safety of processed products for Canadians.

Since we already know that the Department of National Defence will not take a product from plants in Canada unless it has received continuous inspection, how can the Minister be certain that some less scrupulous operators will not take advantage of the new opportunities to pass stamped products through the system to ordinary consumers since the plant will essentially be in control of the quality standards for the product? What safeguards to consumers are there when the inspectors may be miles away from the plant while the product is being stamped as inspected and approved?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the other day, the Hon. Member and one of his colleagues tried to indicate that we were lowering standards for the inspection of meat products and meat processing in Canada. Nothing could be further from the truth. We do not intend to lower them one bit. As far as we are concerned we have one of the best inspection services, if not the best inspection service, in the whole world.

For instance, Madam Speaker, there are 541 plants in Canada that meet the American import standards. Those plants are the same plants that provide a product for people within Canada. In the United States, however, there are only 141 plants in the whole nation that will meet the specifications required to export meat to Canada. In essence what we say is that meat that is good enough for anybody else and that is exported to any part of the world, is of the same standard as that which is made available for Canadians. The Hon. Member brought up a question about the Department of National Defence. I am not aware of any ruling that the Department has, and I would have to check on that further.

• (1200)

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, I will discuss the Defence Department matter with the Minister later.

MAINTENANCE OF HIGH STANDARDS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Since there seem to be some communication problems between the veterinarians, meat inspectors, health officials and, to some extent, even Meat Council members, concerning these changes—the financing, the allocation of staff and so on—would the Minister consider referring the whole question of meat inspection to the Standing Committee on Agriculture or to another Committee of the House so that we can ensure that the inspection standards and the excellent rating that Canada has in this area are maintained?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, what the Hon. Member suggests is not unrealistic. I will consider it and make recommendations.

MR. DEANS—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of Ontario in which they say that millions of Canadians are now unemployed and that of those Canadians, thousands are exhausting Unemployment Insurance benefits every month. They say that these exhaustees are now obliged to rely on provincial and municipal social assistance programs for support and that the cost of this unemployment to social service programs is astronomical. Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to extend Unemployment Insurance coverage to all those entitled to benefit for the duration of their unemployment; and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

OVER THE COUNTER MEDICATIONS

Question No. 4,802—Mr. Howie:

What safeguards are in place to protect citizens against tampering with over-the-counter medications?

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): On December 29, 1982, a departmental news release announced that regulations would be passed ensuring that security packages are used for all non-prescription drugs manufactured after January 1, 1984. The reguations will apply to drugs for ingestion, inhalation, insertion or application to the eyes and will require that drug labels alert consumers to the security features used so that products may be examined to ensure that they have not been opened.

Although the schedule for implementing these proposals provides for orderly changes in production without disrupting the consumer's access to products for self-medication, many manufacturers have already introduced new packages with additional security features.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL CORPORATION

Question No. 4,836—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is there a Canadian Commercial Corporation Industrial Advisory Committee and, if so (a) who are the members (b) what is the (i) background or expertise (ii) term of appointment of each member (c) what remuneration, such as salary or travel expenses, do the members receive and, for the length of each appointment to date, what amount did each member receive (d) what other funding, if any, is provided by the government?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): 1. Yes, there is a Canadian Commercial Corporation Industry Advisory Committee.

(b) (i) Background or expertise: Most organizations are represented by the full-time executive director or president, as well as by one of the practising or operating members who is particularly concerned with, and knowledgeable about the types of activities in which the Canadian Commercial Corporation is engaged. (ii) Term of appointment of each member; no fixed time-limits.

(c) The members do not receive any remuneration in the form of a salary; if reasonable travel expenses are claimed they are paid. To-date, since 1979 travel expenses have been claimed by only one member, in the amount of $163.95.

They provide the Corporation with advice on these matters.

(b) In fiscal year 1982-83, it considered CCC's role, present and future.

(c) The Committee met once during fiscal year 1982-83; no specific number of meetings is prescribed, but it generally meets once or twice a year.

IMPACT OF INTEREST RATES

Question No. 4,879—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is the Economic Council of Canada's econometric model capable of estimating the impact on short-term and long-term interest rates in Canada for varying levels of the deficit and, if so, what changes in short-term and long-term interest rates from current levels does it predict based on the deficit projections contained in the Budget?

2. What impact would the changes in interest rates have on the cost of servicing the national debt?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. (a) The Economic Council of Canada econometric model is capable of estimating the impact on short-term and long-term interest rates in Canada for varying levels of the deficit. Depending on the factors that cause the deficit to vary some judgments are necessary when using the econometric model to estimate such impacts. These judgments are related to channels of influence that the econometric model, in its general form, does not account for when used in a specific application.

(b) Imposing, among other things, our best judgment about the path of interest rates in the United States, the most recent national accounts revisions and the April 19, 1983 federal budget, on the econometric model of the Economic Council of Canada, annual averages of short-term interest rates in Canada in the medium run will remain unchanged from current levels; annual averages of long-term interest rates in the medium run continue a downward trend.

2. In the absence of any change in spending levels the cost of servicing the national debt and interest rates are positively related. For example, see Table A-2 of The Fiscal Plan, April 19, 1983, The Federal Budget. In Table A-2 the impact of reducing interest rates by 100 basic points is reported. Such a reduction would reduce the deficit by $1.4 billion. A similar result has been obtained using the econometric model of the Economic Council of Canada.

OBJECTIONS TO COMMISSIONS' REPORTS RESPECTING NOVA SCOTIA AND SASKATCHEWAN

The House proceeded to the consideration of objections to the reports of the Electoral Boundaries Commissions for the Provinces of Nova Scotia and Saskatchewan.

Electoral Boundaries

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I rise in a representative capacity on behalf of my colleagues in the Progressive Conservative Party from the Province of Nova Scotia to indicate our objection to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Nova Scotia.

We appreciate and recognize that it is always a difficult task to settle what must be, in the final analysis, an arbitrary decision, but at the same time there are methods and processes that can be followed to bring about a proper distribution that will be satisfactory to the greatest number of persons.

Let me begin by recognizing that the point of the exercise is to ensure the representation of people, in this case people in the Province of Nova Scotia, in the Parliament of Canada. It is for that reason that we want to be extremely careful that the process results in a fair and adequate representation.

Let me provide some background to this process, Mr. Speaker. Under the provisions of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act we implement those provisions that were enshrined in the British North America Act, now called the Constitution Act, that were intended to ensure proper representation for Canadians as time went on. The method for ensuring such representation was to provide for a decennial census. This census began in 1871 and has continued every tenth year thereafter. It was on the basis of the results of that count of the population that we determined the representation in the House of Commons.

Nova Scotia has not always fared well in this process. In 1867, at the time of Confederation, the Province was one of the key members of the Confederation. Over the years the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec developed at a much greater rate and, in the result, Nova Scotia tended to pale in comparison to the major Provinces of Quebec and Ontario. Now there is rapid development in the West in the Provinces of British Columbia and Alberta and Nova Scotia assumes a relatively lower level role in our Confederation.

All of this has been taken into account in the process. It is now part of the process that Provinces are classified for electoral representation purposes as larger Provinces; other Provinces fall into the category of small Provinces. Nova Scotia falls into the small Province category.

I point that out because we in Nova Scotia believe that we are at our minimum level of representation. In fact, according to the floor rule for parliamentary representation, Nova Scotia cannot go below a level of ten Members of Parliament, that being the level equal to the number of seats provided for Nova Scotia in the other place.

In reviewing the history of this, I want to point out that on two occasions in the recent past, as a result of the 1941 census and as a result of the 1961 census, Nova Scotia has lost representation. Prior to the 1961 redistribution, Nova Scotia had 12 seats in the Parliament of Canada; as a result of the 1961 census, Nova Scotia was reduced to 11 parliamentary seats.

The proposal now before the House and represented by the work of the Commission under the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act would restore Nova Scotia to 12 seats. In a sense, the Province stands to gain by this process. The important point is to ensure that the gain is properly distributed over the population within the Province.

That brings me to the basis for our objection, Mr. Speaker. We do not consider that the work done by the Electoral Boundaries Commission in Nova Scotia, however adequate it was, should be approved without reflection of the kinds of criticisms we have raised. We have done that specifically in our objection which is part of the records of the House of Commons.

We believe that the Commission failed to give adequate attention and consideration to geographical, political and demographic factors when planning the distribution of electoral boundaries.

My second point, Mr. Speaker, is that the Commission included Sable Island in the constituency of Halifax. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), has a very special interest in that aspect of the redistribution; I am sure he will want to speak to that subject as this debate continues.

The third listed reason, Mr. Speaker, is that the Commission did not give adequate consideration to all the representations made to the Commission during the course of its public hearings.

I will begin, Mr. Speaker, with a consideration of the last point. There was very little in the way of public representation made to the Commission when it held its hearings across Nova Scotia. In fact, in some cases the hearings were cancelled because of lack of interest.

To put that matter in context, let me point out to the House of Commons that in the case of Nova Scotia the quotient which was used to determine the population base for each of the 12 constituencies was 70,620. Under the rules and regulations which apply to this redistribution process, that number can be varied by 25 per cent either way, that is, a minimum of 25 per cent below, which is a population of 52,965, and a maximum of 25 per cent above, which would result in a population of 88,275.

I believe the next step, Mr. Speaker, is to review the actual setting up of the 12 constituencies in relation to that population base, and what we find in terms of public objections which we feel were not given proper consideration. First of all, in those constituencies where there was no change in the boundaries and where, in fact, the population base was relatively close to the mean of 70,600—that would include the federal constituency of South Shore and the federal constituency of South West Nova—there were, naturally enough, no real objections. I feel that pertains as well to the federal constituency of Cumberland-Colchester which was unchanged with a population base of 78,455. There were no objections. I believe the area of objection, Mr. Speaker, centers in the Halifax district where there now exists under the present electoral representation three federal constituencies within the County of Halifax. Under the changes which are proposed by the Electoral Boundaries Commission for Nova Scotia, there will be four constituencies, almost exactly within that same area. It is in fact Halifax County, plus a portion of Hants County.

It is understandable, therefore, that the majority of the objections would arise in relation to this change in the Halifax area whereby three federal constituencies are being expanded into four. I will deal with that in a more direct way and I am sure my colleague, the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East, will want to make some remarks on the effects this has on his constituency, which will become the constituency of Dartmouth, and on the failure to include Sable Island within the constituency of Dartmouth.

I would like very briefly to comment on the federal constituencies for the Province of Nova Scotia. First of all, we have the constituency of Annapolis Valley-Hants, which has been well represented by my hon. colleague in the Progressive Conservative Party for over 18 years now. There has been very little change in the population base. After what little adjustments have been made it will be 72,174.

Cape Breton-East Richmond, which is a constituency the representation of which has fluctuated from party to party over the years, will have a population base of 64,495, which is a substantial 6,000 below the mean. However, there does not appear to be any special reasons for including territorial areas in that constituency beyond what are now part of the existing boundaries.

Cape Breton Highlands-Canso has a population base which has not changed. The population base is 65,883. Of course, we don't want that to change because the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) has enough difficulty getting around the constituency as it now is, and to provide the services which we all provide in our constituencies. Therefore, we do not want to see the people of Cape Breton Highlands-Canso be any less served than they are now. Therefore, we are not going to raise any special objection. Because of the fact that that is one of the smaller constituencies, no attempt has been made to enlarge it.

Cape Breton-The Sydneys involves the industrial community of the Sydneys and the surrounding area. It has a population base of 65,000. I would have to have some concern for my colleague who represents that constituency because it has a great deal of difficulty, mostly based on economic policies of the Government and the failure to provide adequate assistance for the Cape Breton steel industry—Sydney Steel Company—which is a large employer in that area. Again, there cannot be real objection to the relatively low number of persons which form the population base in that constituency because it will provide sufficient difficulties for the Hon. Member who represents it. I know that Hon. Member is having quite a bit of difficulty at the present time.

The fifth constituency of Central Nova is well represented. Of course, the seat has now been declared vacant and we are anticipating a by-election there. We anticipate the continued good representation for that constituency by not only a member of the Progressive Conservative Party, but by the newly-elected Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party who, we understand, intends to run in the constituency of Central Nova. Under the adjustment process, that constituency would have a population base similar to Cape Breton Highlands-Canso and Cape Breton-The Sydneys of 65,332. Cumberland-Colchester is the sixth constituency and it will remain unchanged, along with South Shore and South West Nova, which are the eleventh and twelfth numbered constituencies, and they have not created any great difficulty in this process.

The new proposed constituencies are as follows: No. 7, Dartmouth; No. 8, Halifax; No. 9, Halifax East; and No. 10, Halifax West. Those are the four constituencies which are in the greater Halifax-Dartmouth area and are the constituencies with which we have the greatest complaint.

In the case of Halifax West, if that constituency had been left alone to include my own area of Clayton Park, the very place in which I live, it would have had a population almost exactly similar to the constituency of Halifax. For some strange reason, however, which I have yet to understand, the Boundaries Commission took the area of Clayton Park, where I live and where my children go to school, and where we patronize the local grocery store, lifted it out of Halifax West and plumped it down alongside Halifax, which is represented by my colleague, if not my friend, the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan). In the result, instead of each constituency having the mean number of 70,6000, the federal constituency of Halifax ends up with a population base of 78,231 and Halifax West ends up with a population base of 68,676. If the location of Clayton Park in Halifax West had been left alone, the two constituencies would have been almost equal in population base. I feel it is kind of a strange thing—I am sure even my Liberal colleagues would agree—when they lift my very residence out of Halifax West and put it down in Halifax, resulting in an imbalance of population of some 10,000. There is a difference now of 10,000. Halifax West has a population of 68,676 versus Halifax with a populaton of 78,231.

One of our concerns in this process must be the allegation of gerrymandering of constituencies. Of course, that immediately comes to mind when virtually your own house is moved from one place to another. However, I do not suspect that at all because I know that the honourable persons who served on the Electoral Boundaries Commission would not do something like that. I know Mr. Justice Pace, who represented the Liberal Party so well in the House of Assembly in Nova Scotia, would not do anything like that. I know Mr. O'Coyne who worked and toiled so hard for the Liberal Party as an executive officer, or in some other capacity, would not think of doing a thing like that. I would not at all suggest that there would be any chicanery involved in this process, so I do not want to object any further to the removal of my own house and property from the constituency of Halifax West. I know the Minister of State for International Trade will not be there the next time around and I will not have to worry about that too much.

• (1220)

In summary, Mr. Speaker, let me just say that we are concerned that everyone in Nova Scotia receive adequate representation as a result of this process. We appreciate the fact that, as a result of the process, which incidentally increased the number of seats in the House of Commons from 282 to 310, Nova Scotia will get one more seat, an increase from 11 to 12, which will bring it back to the 1961 level. There are some benefits but we are concerned that the process is fairly and properly conducted. We have concern that the process was less than entirely adequate, with all due respect to the persons who applied the process and with all due regard for the fact that it is not a perfect process.

I want to give my colleague, the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East, the opportunity to contribute to this debate because I know he has some special concerns with respect to his own constituency, particularly with respect to the inclusion of Sable Island within the boundaries of the new constituency of Dartmouth.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish we had more time in debates like this. There are a lot of Members from Saskatchewan who would like to speak in this particular debate about the report of the Saskatchewan Boundaries Commission in 1983. My good friend from Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) is in the House. I know he would like to speak and I am sure he will later on. There are other Members of our Party who want to speak as well.

We had three very distinguished gentlemen on the Saskatchewan Commission which held hearings throughout the Province, Mr. Speaker, but I want to say, with respect, that I think they did not listen very well to many of the representations made to them by representatives of all three political Parties in Saskatchewan, members of which I think would concur in that statement.

Many of the hearings were very well attended. We had many ordinary citizens who came out to many of these hearings. We had representatives of all three political Parties who concurred on a number of things. We had the concurrence of the Saskatchewan MPs in the Conservative Party, which is half the Province, or seven, and the New Democratic Party, which is the other half, or seven, on many of the boundaries. Despite this harmony, this commonality, concerning what we thought should happen, in many cases the Commission did not listen to us or the people. For that reason we decided to file the objection we are now discussing in the House.

I want to stress at the outset that many of the things said to the Commission were said by representatives of all three political Parties and because of historical community interests and traditions in Saskatchewan. The point that really puzzled a lot of us in Saskatchewan is that the Boundaries Commission did not make very much use at all of the plus or minus 25 per cent rule. They drew arbitrary lines in many cases for our 14 Saskatchewan constituencies. They did not deviate from an average. For example, the least populous riding as recommended by them, to be called Regina-Lumsden, has a population of 67,183. The most populous riding is called Saskatoon-Dundurn, which is primarily city but also partly rural, with a population of 71,432. So of the 14 ridings in Saskatchewan the difference between the least and the most populous will be 4,549 people. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is good enough.

I have had a chance to look at Boundary Commission reports from other Provinces and I notice that in many other Provinces the Commission has, in my opinion, more wisely interpreted the Act by making sure that the deviation is greater for sparsely populated and remote areas. The population will be larger for the urban centres. This was not done in Saskatchewan where a lot of the boundaries are very arbitrary. It is almost as if they took a calculator and divided our population into 14, then took a ruler and put it on the provincial census map and drew 14 areas. I do not think that is good enough. We should go back to the drawing board in Saskatchewan and come up with a map that the people of our Province want, one that will reflect the reality, the community interests, the history and traditions of Saskatchewan in a way which has been done many times in the past, and in other Provinces by Boundaries Commissions in the last few months.

To be specific, Mr. Speaker, the Commission ignored some of the guiding principles in planning redistribution, mainly the recognition of a community of interest. I can go over a number of these, and the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain could do the same thing, where that community of interests was often ignored by the Boundaries Commission. They wanted to have a more exact population figure in each riding, ignoring many times the community of interests.

The second principle they often ignored was the need to follow geographical patterns and boundaries. There is an excellent example of that in that part of the Province represented by myself and the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, namely the Qu'Appelle River Valley. The Qu'Appelle River is a natural geographical boundary and a natural community boundary. It is a natural boundary in so many ways historically in our Province yet that was ignored. In addition, the Commission did not agree to make as few changes as possible to establish ridings. That is spelled out in Subsection 13(b), Subsection 13(c)(1) and Subsection 13(c)(2) of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and is included in the terms of reference of the Commission. They did not follow the principle of community interests, geographical patterns and that of making as few changes as possible.

One can go over the map specifically. The map I have before me will create a brand new riding called Prince Albert-Churchill River. That riding, believe it or not, takes up over half of our Province geographically. Yet despite its massive size that constituency has 68,132 people living in it, according to the census. We have many northern ridings in this country with small populations because they are remote, small communities, difficult to serve and with special interests and special needs. In this particular riding there are some 27,000 people who live in the north. They are lumped in with the environs of the City of Prince Albert in one particular constituency. If they wanted to recommend the creation of a northern constituency similar to some of the other Provinces or the Territories of this country, they could have recommended a special Act of this Parliament where we could create a northern riding that would have less than the minimum population. Or, Mr. Speaker, they could have used the plus or minus 25 per cent rule and create a riding which was much smaller in northern Canada. But they ignored this.

In our two big cities, Regina and Saskatoon, they once again ignored the community of interests. What they should have been doing was creating urban ridings because of the commonness of the community sense, or the community feeling. Because the two cities are now too large for just two urban ridings in each of the cases, what they should have done is what has been done time and time again in our Province and other Provinces, federally and provincially. They should have taken the overflow and the new suburbs and placed them into the most relevant rural ridings which touch the city boundaries. However, that was not done.

In the case of the city of Regina, they should have created two urban seats, placing the new suburbs on the east side of the city, into the Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain constituency, and, on the western side of Regina, placing the new suburbs in the south end of the city, Albert Park and other areas south of Waskana Creek. They should have put those into the Assiniboia riding to raise its population, so that we could have saved Assiniboia, which will disappear, by the way, for the first time ever if the new map comes into effect, a historical name and riding which the people in the Province want to keep and deserve to keep. By the way, it is not our riding now, it is a Conservative riding. However, this is one way of doing it.

Farmers in those rural communities would still have had their own constituency and some of the new suburbs of Regina, which are bordering on the riding, in the riding to give them adequate population. The people and the City of Regina would have had two totally urban constituencies, and that sense of history and tradition which is so important would have been guarded and preserved.

The same is true in the City of Saskatoon. Once again, we have a recommendation of three urban/rural ridings: part rural, part urban, part rural, part urban, part rural and part urban. That is not good enough. I do not think that reflects what our people want at all. Again, we could have had two strictly urban constituencies, placing some of the new suburbs into the adjoining rural riding of Humboldt-Lake Centre to bring up its population and to preserve it, placing some of the new suburbs in the west end of Saskatoon into the adjoining riding of Kindersley, and that riding would have then been adequate in terms of numbers as well.

These are some specific examples of where the Commission did not listen to the people, where the Commission did not follow the history, precedent and practice of other Boundary Commissions, federal and provincial, over the years. I mentioned Assiniboia. This historical riding will disappear. There is also a boundary change in Swift Current-Maple Creek but, again, I think that this is going in the wrong way. A boundary change for Swift Current-Maple Creek could have been reached north of the South Saskatchewan River, as has occurred in the past—and I want to underline that—rather than moving the boundary substantially toward the east, which means eliminating Assiniboia in the process and creating all kinds of contortions in southeastern Saskatchewan as well. If it would have moved the boundary north, the boundary would have been where it has been in the past, and that would have been much less confusing for the citizens of that part of the country.

In my own constituency of Yorkton-Melville, I believe the Commission erred in both the northern and southern boundaries of the riding. Our part of the Province is one which has two natural boundaries. We have the Qu'Appelle River, the Qu'Appelle River Valley to the south. As Saskatchewan Members like the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) and others know, that is a natural boundary. There are school board divisions where, in the south, people are in a different school board than those in the north. Wheat pools are divided by the river, municipalities are divided by the river, and all kinds of community activities, church groups and so on are divided by the river. Instead, the Commission ignores the fact that this is a natural geographical, community, social, cultural and historical boundary and tries to put people on both sides of it into the same constituency.

Mr. Pepin: Is that wrong?

Mr. Nystrom: In fact, there are people from communities in the southwest part of the new proposed Yorkton-Melville riding who never go to Yorkton and Melville to shop. They go into Regina to shop because it is much closer. That is where they always go for their social activities, or else they go into the eastern towns of Indian Head, Wolseley, Moosomin, Whitewood, or down toward Weyburn. Their sense of community is in that direction or in the direction of the City of Regina, and not north and east a long, long ways into the City of Yorkton.

I would like to mention the second natural boundary. Again, the Commission ignored the advice of ordinary citizens and folk, I suggest from all political Parties. I say this in response to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) who asks "Is it bad?" The Minister can check with Mr. Ralph Goodale, if he wishes.

In the north, we have a forest reserve. It is a natural boundary. It is natural because it is a big forest. People very seldom go through the forest reserve because all their organizations, communities and so on are to the south or, north of the reserve, to the north and to the west. It is a forest reserve where there are bears and other animals. However, people see that as being a natural boundary and that was said time and time again to the Commission. In fact, two members of the Commission on their way to Yorkton for the hearings drove through the forest reserve. They said they understood that this was a natural boundary because of the fact that they had just driven through it and they had seen what a forest reserve is really like; yet the map ignores this very natural boundary in northeastern Saskatchewan.

I do not know why these Commissions do not listen to ordinary folk. There is much more common sense in the minds of ordinary citizens of this country, it seems at times, than there is in the minds of people who are appointed to high positions by various Governments across the land.

I mention the constituency of Humboldt-Lake Centre, represented by my friend who is here in the House today. In the new map, this constituency disappears altogether. It is going, I believe, into five different constituencies. Right now that constituency which, I suppose, was historically called the old Lake Centre riding, represented by a former Prime Minister, John Diefenbaker, is one which was basically carved out of central Saskatchewan, the great grain producing area. There is commonness of interest, I suppose among those people who live between Prince Albert and Regina and Saskatoon, those who live in the central part of the Province. That riding, too, will disappear, going off into five different constituencies.

One way of saving the riding would have been to add some of the new suburbs of the City of Saskatoon, from the south eastern part of the City of Saskatoon, to Humboldt-Lake Centre. That would have raised its population very well.

Mr. Pepin: Would that be natural?

Mr. Nystrom: I think it is more natural.

Mr. Althouse: It never was natural, never.

Mr. Nystrom: It is a riding which is in the centre of everything. I think it is more natural to have two totally urban constituencies in the City of Saskatoon and to place the new suburbs into adjacent rural ridings than it is to create three ridings which are partially urban and partially rural.

Mr. Pepin: The point is that you always trade off something.

Mr. Nystrom: One always trades off something. The populations are not large enough to create three fully urban ridings, but they can create 2.5 urban ridings. Instead of creating six urban ridings between the two cities, this way there would be four which were urban and two which were urban and rural. That would give a greater sense of community. In any event, that was the feeling of so many people in the Province from all the different political Parties.

Therefore, where do we go from here? I hope we can persuade those involved in the process from here on in that we should go back to the drawing board and listen to the ordinary folk in order that we might make greater use of the plus or minus 25 per cent rule, which has been done in Quebec and other Provinces, such as Ontario. Some of our rural areas have smaller populations because they are a little more scattered and remote at the north. If we are to have only one riding there should be a smaller population because of the fact that it is also remote. The urban centres, because they are more compact, could perhaps have slightly larger ridings or populations. Perhaps even a riding like mine, which is rural and urban now but where the towns are closer together and the farms are a little bit smaller, could be on the larger side as well. Those kinds of suggestions make sense.

Another matter which arose in our hearings concerns the fact that Saskatchewan has certain ethnic patterns, cultural patterns, in terms of where people live. This is another factor which was ignored by the Commission as it sat down and arbitrarily drew 14 lines on the map of our Province without anywhere near the regard it should have had for the reality concerning the Province.

One can also say that the riding of The Battlefords-Meadow Lake changes quite drastically as well. It is interesting once again to note that representatives of both political Parties that have MPs in that area were in agreement that the proposed boundaries by the Commission did not make any sense. In this case, they made some boundary changes but a change that was not recommended by either. I do not know where they get their ideas.

With that, I look forward to hearing other Members of the Saskatchewan delegation from both our Party and the Conservative Party try to persuade the powers that be that we have a map that reflects what the people of Saskatchewan really want and need.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that there are only ten minutes left. I also know that the presentation on Nova Scotia was only half completed; the other half will be completed later.

I will reduce my remarks to approximately five minutes since they correspond in many ways with those of the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). I will put it very clearly to the House that the problem in Saskatchewan is basically that we have 4 per cent of the population of Canada and 35 per cent of the roads. The roads are our main communication technique.

The Commission has held to the view of the nineteenth century concept that one person should get one vote, or representation by population. To hold to that view realistically forced Parliament to introduce new legislation 25 years ago that used the word "may". While the British North America Act provides for keeping a provincial average, the legislation gave the Commission power to vary them up or down 25 per cent based on two reasons which were geography and community of interest. The previous speaker has already referred to that. Therefore I want to keep my remarks confined to a simple part of the problem which was dealt with by the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville. Simply, it is southern Saskatchewan.

The community of interest can only be appreciated by those who must live and work there. I come from a riding south of Qu'Appelle where the boundary line has always been that river along which we have always moved back and forth in an easterly direction. It is a historic riding from where Members of Parliament have been sent to Ottawa since 1882, long before Saskatchewan was a Province. We call ourselves the mainliners because the main line of the CPR runs through our constituency and because the Trans-Canada Highway runs through it now.

The mainliners are from a cultural community that moves towards Regina east from west. Melville has east and west connections to Regina and Yorkton has east and west connections partially to Regina and partially to Saskatoon. For any map to meet the geographic conditions of Saskatchewan, it must allow for these features of geography.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville talked about a big forest barring one part of his riding from another. I talked about the Moose Mountains that are a barrier to us in the south. The point I am making is that the historic seat of Qu'Appelle has been cut into four parts. It certainly smashes a 100-year-old tradition and breaks the hearts of those people who went there from Quebec, Ontario, the Atlantic Provinces and all over the world. We have kept it as a community and to see it broken apart is a very dreadful experience for those who must endure it.

In my submission which I intend to send to the Commission, I have proposed more precise maps based on municipal boundaries, based on the barriers and based on the community of interest. This helps the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville by putting the natural boundary of Qu'Appelle between us and ties up the highways from Melville and Yorkton running north and west right through an area that he knows well since it was part of the seat he represented when he first came here. Those people move up and down that line. It is based on highways and the geographic boundaries.

The five constituencies which I believe I have mentioned in my representation are Yorkton, Melville and Regina, Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, and Swift Current. I put this proposal forward to the Commission in the form of maps. While they have seen those maps before, they did not listen properly and I hope that this time they will seriously consider these boundary adjustments for which all Parties made strong representations in the eight meetings we had last fall on these boundary adjustments. When we have all parties in Saskatchewan agreeing, that is news.

I am simply suggesting that the Commission pay attention to what the people who have to work in the fields and with others are trying to recommend. I have suggested minor changes as well. I will conclude my remarks and hope that the House will take kindly to the representations we have made so that the Commission is impressed by the fact that Parliament does not like being confronted with actions which are different from what Parliament has directed this Commission to follow.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I will also be relatively brief since I believe there are only about four minutes left. I wish to make three points. First, I am rapidly coming to the view that perhaps this Chamber might be well advised to express its sincere appreciation to the distinguished Commissioners and ask them to retire so that the House itself could undertake this job. I am coming to that view for a variety of reasons. The principal view is that I strongly believe that Members of this Chamber, as it exists on June 17 of 1983, are quite capable of rendering that type of representation which is required for the people of this country. I suggest that enlarging the House from its present 282 Members to approximately 312 Members is a burden on the taxpayers of Canada. It costs approximately $550,000 in taxpayers' money to keep each one of us here and support us with the variety of services that we require as matters become more technical in nature.

The fact of the matter is that when I came here I represented approximately 240,000 people. We did not have telephones. I was not able to fly home every weekend. Members had secretaries whom they called up from a pool and who were kind enough to type letters for us. By and large correspondence with our constituents was handwritten. It worked well. The countryside from Ecum Secum to Hubbards, Nova Scotia, including the Cities of Halifax and Dartmouth, were well served, if I may modestly suggest that.

I see no reason for us to go through this exercise. I would simply repeat that perhaps the Commissioners might now retire and let the Members of this House finally address themselves to whether or not the formulas we worked out a few years ago are in fact necessary. Let us be absolutely certain of that before we add some $16 million or $17 million in expenditures to this Chamber and the taxpayers of this country.

Among other things, I have objected to the Commission's work with respect to Dartmouth. It is not singularly because a new seat for Nova Scotia has been carved out of the Dartmouth-Halifax East riding but that it crosses municipal and provincial lines and makes somewhat of a mockery of the social structure of our communities.

Before I adjourn the debate, I wish to make one final point. Historically, Sable Island has been administered by the Department of Transport from Dartmouth, Nova Scotia. The custodian of that island is in the marine agency in Dartmouth. The overseer is in the marine agency in Dartmouth. The facilities at Sable are maintained by employees of the Department of Transport whose headquarters are in Dartmouth. Ten years ago when we had redistribution the Commissioner was not really thinking about it and simply put it in Halifax because that is where it had always been. It had been the electoral district of Halifax. We had redistribution. We created three ridings. The commissioner left Sable Island in its unnatural habitat, that is, in the electoral district of Halifax, and it should have been in Dartmouth electoral district.

Mr. Speaker, would you like me to adjourn the debate?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to a House order adopted yesterday, we will now proceed to Orders of the Day.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe I am joined by the Government in this point of order. I simply want to say that it should be our understanding and the understanding of the House that debate on these two objections has been adjourned for continuation at a later date. It would be the wish, I believe, of all Parties that no report be made by the Speaker to the Electoral Reform Commissions of either Nova Scotia or Saskatchewan until such time as that debate has been completed by this House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that the unanimous understanding of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

CANADA STUDENT LOANS ACT (NO. 2)

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State) moved that Bill C-161, an Act to amend the Canada Student Loans Act (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole, with the unanimous consent of the House.

He said: Mr. Speaker, upon rising today to resume debate on this Bill, I would like to express my gratitude to my colleagues on the other side of the House.

[English]

I want to thank all Members on both sides of the House for their co-operation, and especially the Ministers of Education in Canada who have co-operated with the Canadian Government in past months to achieve the proposed amendments that we will be debating today.

[Translation]

The Canada Student Loans program was established in 1964 and, since that time, has benefited about two million students. In 1980, an in-depth study was made of the various federal and provincial programs providing student assistance, and it was found that the vast majority of students, parents and the general public supported the basic principles underlying current student assistance programs. We are aware, however, that after twenty years, it is time to change some of the plan's basic elements to allow for rising costs of higher education and the socio-economic climate confronting the student today. The changes we are proposing involve additional funding of $60 million, to be paid over two years. In my view, these changes should not be seen as just amendments to a specific piece of legislation but as one of the basic elements of a broader objective, which is to make education accessible to all Canadian students and to maximize development of human resources.

My colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), has established a national training program which includes the Skill Growth Fund and the Critical Trade Skills Training Program. In addition, the Minister of State for Economic Development and the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Johnston) has been collaborating with other Ministers on improving the direction and structure of research and technology development, especially in terms of the joint effort being made in this area by Government, industry and the academic world.

These initiatives and others of a similar nature, to which will be added the proposed changes in the Canada Student Loans Act, are all part of a group of proposals that reflect the changing character of higher education and of our economy.

[English]

I would now like to indicate to the House the three main concerns which are addressed in Bill C-161 and to explain their importance to Canadian students.

The first concern pertains to loan limits. The present weekly loan limit is $56.25, a limit which was based on a previous annual limit of $1,800 set in 1974. We know that a 1983 dollar and a 1974 dollar do not have the same purchasing power, hence the need for an upward revision in the loan limit. The Bill now before the House proposes increasing the weekly loan limit from $56.25 to $100 a week, with some provision for escalation as required.

The Bill also takes into account the needs of students pursuing long-term studies. It is obvious, for example, that students pursuing medicine, law or post-graduate studies will require loans over a longer period than students following a three-year undergraduate or community college program. We are, therefore, advocating in this Bill dropping the lifetime limit of what students can borrow, which presently stands at $9,800, and replacing it by a simple limit of ten years. It has been generally agreed that dollar levels will be established which will be used as guidelines by Provinces to monitor the debt load of individual students.

The increase in loan limits to $100 a week will not satisfy—everyone, but in a time of economic restraint we had to look at a scale of assistance that we could deal with, thus the determination to see if we can help those who need help most.

This brings me to the second main concern with which we deal in this Bill, the client group served. The present Canada Student Loans Program applies only to full-time students, but in today's society there is another population with very real needs as they pursue post-secondary education. I am referring to part-time students, both at universities and community colleges. This group of students has been making known its needs over the years. COPUS has made many representations. COPUS, the Canadian Organization of Part-Time University Students, represents over 250,000 students and as such reflects a real and growing constituency.

In recognizing the needs of part-time students we are recognizing the evolution of Canadian society. For instance, as women become a larger percentage of the labour force, part-time studies often provide them with a bridge between child rearing and employment. In many cases in the past, part-time students simply have not had the funds available to pursue the courses which could add to their future employability. This has meant a loss to the work force, particularly in regard to professional and skilled positions.

Under the Bill before the House, part-time students taking post-secondary courses accepted by the designated institution as credit toward a degree, diploma or certificate will qualify for a loan. There are, of course, various limitations to this provision. The course must be equivalent to a course that may be taken by a full-time student as part of a program of studies of at least 12 consecutive weeks' duration. The applicant must demonstrate a need for assistance as measured by a means test. The loan will cover the cost of tuition, books, transportation, child care and miscellaneous allowances.

At the present time it is difficult to predict how many part-time students would qualify for assistance under this new provision, but we anticipate that more than 20,000 to 30,000 students a year might apply.

The third main area of concern which we address in this Bill relates to the problems which many students are encountering when they complete their education and attempt to enter the labour force. The transition from university to the work place, which at one time could be accomplished within a space of one to four months, is no longer an easy transition.

As I see the clock, Mr. Speaker, I would like to stop at this point and resume the debate at two o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Joyal: Mr. Speaker, I would like to continue the presentation of the content and core of this Bill. As I was reminding Hon. Members before we adjourned for the luncheon break, the third main area of concern which we address in the Bill relates to the problems many students are encountering when they complete their education and attempt to enter the labour force. The transition from university to the work force, which at one time could be accomplished within a space of one to four months, is no longer an easy transition. The fight against youth unemployment is an increasingly strong priority of Government. A student loans program must therefore take into account the fact that many students will not be able to begin to repay their student loans as quickly as may have been possible in the past.

The Government of Canada recognizes the legitimate difficulties that some graduates are encountering in finding employment on the completion of their studies. We are therefore proposing in the legislation an interest relief plan to cover interest charges on outstanding loans for a period of up to 18 months, in addition to the current six-month period of interest-free status for those who complete their studies.

The interest relief provisions in the proposed amendments to the Canada Student Loans Act are aimed at the unemployed borrower who is unable to keep up the payments. Under these provisions the student will be able to apply for interest relief for an initial period of three months but for no longer than 18 months in total. To qualify for interest relief, the individual must be unemployed and have a gross family income below a minimum level.

The interest relief provision is important for a number of reasons. We know that students embarking on a loan worry about the day when they must repay it. This is a particularly vital worry to young Canadians from lower income families who realize that they will be able to account on little assistance from their families when the time for repayment arrives. For students such as these, the prospect of a major debt load combined with worries about finding a job could turn them aside from their studies. These provisions will give reassurance and a greater sense of security to students as they enter into student loans.

Interest relief will also cut down on defaults because of its more generous time period. We do not know how many defaults can be explained by unemployment since the banks, in pressing their claims, do not always give a reason for defaults. However, over the past year there has been an increase of 20 per cent in claims by the banks, and I think it can logically be assumed that much of this increase is attributable to diminished employment prospects.

It is hoped that the interest relief provision will help to alleviate time pressures which are experienced by those who are to begin repayment of their student loans. I suggest, too, that it will have a psychological benefit by presenting to young Canadians a loan plan with which they feel they can cope.

I mentioned earlier that the amendments to the Canada Student Loans Act presented in Bill C-161 are aimed at helping those Canadians who need help most. In that regard I want to highlight one provision which I feel should gain full support in this house, particularly in regard to the Government's response to the Obstacles Report. The special interest-free periods proposed in Clause 7(1) include, in addition to the unemployed, those borrowers who are incapable of working due to illness or disability. There is also a waiver provision for those who are permanently disabled. Special concern for disabled Canadian students and graduates is thus a feature of this Bill which will give added protection and security to this group of Canadians.

I have now outlined the three main features of the amendments: higher loan limits, aid to part-time students and interest relief. These amendments recognize real needs and take solid steps on a number of fronts. In addition, the proposed amendments have met with an encouraging degree of support from Provinces participating in the Canada Student Loans Program.

Consultations with the Provinces were carried out, both at the ministerial level and at the official level. It is in the context of these consultations that I point to a high degree of provincial support. Indeed, on April 25 the Hon. Bette Stephenson, chairperson of the Council of Ministers of Education of Canada, issued a communiqué to federal Ministers of Parliament which I am sure all Hon. Members will recall. In the communiqué she indicated:

> We are hoping for speedy passage of this legislation, which we believe is appropriate for these difficult times, especially in view of the fact that assistance through the federal student loan plan has not changed for almost ten years.

The Provinces are thus encouraging us to get on with it. I, for one, am most anxious to take advantage of this federal-provincial co-operation and accord to bring about much needed further assistance to Canadian students.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we obviously want students to be able to benefit from these, more generous, terms of federal assistance, and I am counting on the provincial Governments to help us achieve this objective.

In addition to encouraging comments received from the provinces and various student associations, I noticed that both Opposition parties seem to be in favour of this legislation. I would therefore urge the House to consider this Bill without delay, so that students across Canada will be able to benefit from its provisions as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in the debate on Bill C-161, an Act to amend the Canada Student Loans Act (No. 2). I assure the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) that my colleagues and I in the Official Opposition are in a position, as he knows, to co-operate in the passage today of this legislation. In fact, he knows we have been ready to do so ever since he announced his proposed changes outside the House on March 18.

Our major concern, now that it has taken the Government three months to introduce the Bill, is whether or not these changes will be in place in time for September, 1983. I, as well as other of my colleagues who represent university centres across Canada, have heard the concerns of admission officers, of students who are seeking to make their plans and of parents, families and others who are supporting students, and those anxious to continue their education.

• (1410)

The Minister is aware of the April 25 communiqué he received from the Council of Ministers of Education which stated even then the need for quick action to provide, and I quote:

—additional financial assistance to post-secondary students . . . especially in view of the fact that assistance through the Federal Student Loan Plan has not changed for almost ten years.

As we now know and as the Minister has been outlining before the House, this legislation provides for changes to three major categories. First, guaranteed loans are being extended to include eligible part-time students. Second, an interest relief program for unemployed graduates will provide for the payment of interest charges on student loans for both full and part-time students for a period of up 18 months. Third, the weekly student loan limits will be increased from the current level of $56.25 to $100.

I would like to comment on these measures, but first, in the way of general background to this legislation, I would like to take a brief look at the Government's treatment of post-secondary education as a whole and look at these amendments in that context.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) recently tabled Bill C-150, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, which enshrines the earlier announcement of his intention to limit transfer payments to the Provinces for post-secondary education support to the six and five formula. The savings to the federal Government compared with what would have been paid out under existing legislation will be $104 million in 1983-84 and $247 million in 1984-85. The two-year break in the normal escalation formula will result in additional savings in each subsequent year, since transfers will escalate from a lower base.

In the meantime, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) has announced an extra $50 million for the 1983 Canada Summer Student Job Creation Program. Likewise, the Secretary of State said that the amendments we are discussing here today would cost the federal Treasury another $60 million in loan guarantees to the bank. But I would like to know where the balance of the savings from putting the EPF transfers on six and five, some $240 million, are going.

We know that these savings are not—and I repeat not—being used to reduce the federal deficit. We are regularly asked to deal with Bills requesting additional borrowing authority for the federal Government. Now we know from the Minister of Finance that the money is not being spent in any form on either post-secondary institutions or their students.

Once again it would seem that, in a policy area that is crucial to the development of the nation's most important resource, our youth, the Government has no long-term direction. Many of us on this side have questioned various Ministers in the Government about this very troubling deficiency. We have noted that more and more people are choosing to remain in or return to post-secondary institutions because they cannot find work or because they need new skills to be able to qualify for the few existing jobs. Yet at the same time as enrolments are swelling, the federal Government has decided to cut back its support of post-secondary education.

To return, Mr. Speaker, to the amendments proposed in the legislation before us today, let me take this opportunity to congratulate the Minister for extending eligibility under the program to part-time students. This has been advocated by all sides of the House for some time. The Minister is aware that this has long been the position advocated by the Canadian Federation of Students as well as the Task Force on Student Assistance initiated by the Clark Government. It is a long overdue amendment which we on this side of the House welcome.

I do, however, have some trouble with the increase in the weekly loan limits. Let me read a recent letter sent to me by Ms. Diane Flaherty, Executive Director of the Canadian Federation of Students. She writes:

Our greatest concern with the proposed legislation is the increase in the loan ceiling. Student movement research has demonstrated that greater debt loads do not, in fact, increase accessibility for potential students from low income backgrounds. If the proposed changes are to increase accessibility for these students, as we would suggest the changes should do, then they are not fulfilling their function. The only equitable program is one based on non-repayable bursaries, not loans.

The Secretary of State will remember that last summer his predecessor told the Canadian Federation of Students to expect an announcement of a $250 million bursary program. Instead, they are now faced with an offer of $60 million in loan guarantees. The past president of the University of Waterloo Students' Federation, Win Simonis, makes the point that while more money is being made available for students, applicants from lower income families are reluctant to enter into a risky high-debt situation. They are faced with a disincentive to continue into post-secondary education. I might expand that point to include women who are seeking to re-enter the labour force by returning to universities to upgrade their skills. Without that promised bursary program, I think the Secretary of State would agree that anyone faced with the prospect of accumulating a debt load of up to $12,800 over a four-year program, taken on a full or part-time basis, will not see this as a particular incentive.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass) has asked elsewhere, what about the student who enters into a loan agreement at a given interest rate, much like someone who enters into an agreement for a mortgage at a high rate, only to see the prime rate fall, leaving him or her with an enormous repayment schedule? I see nothing in this Bill that would provide some flexibility in the interest rate formula which is established by the federal Government. I do, however, understand that negotiations between federal officials and the banks are being planned for later this summer. I want to encourage the Secretary of State to enter those negotiations mindful of the current interest rates on repayments faced by students who already carry loans taken out when rates were extremely high. This Bill, of course, in its present form, offers them no relief. We look forward to a further amendment or announcement on that.

I look forward as well to hearing of some progress that can be communicated to students who are applying for assistance in the months that lie ahead. I know that the Secretary of State is aware that applications for student assistance were up 23 per cent across the country in the last year alone.

Finally, on the matter of the extension of the interest relief period to 18 months, I and my colleagues on this side of the House welcome the proposal. My concern, however, is for those students carrying large debts, many of whom have been unable to find work. For them, this move comes rather late in the day.

The Secretary of State knows of the record unemployment rates in the age groups which encompass graduating students. Their plight has been well documented by my colleagues. I know that if today's debate were longer, my colleagues, the Hon. Members for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) and Peace River (Mr. Cooper), could express their interest. Other Members who have expressed to me their interest on this topic are the Hon. Members for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby), Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan), Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie), Edmonton South (Mr. Roche), Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) and St. Catharines (Mr. Reid). These Members and others whose constituencies include universities hear regularly from students. Until we see a comprehensive strategy from the Government on both post-secondary education and student assistance as well as an assurance from the provincial Governments that all post-secondary transfers and student assistance funds are maintained for those uses, we will continue to be watchful.

I want to conclude with the expression of this Party's overall support for the legislation. I think I have made it sufficiently clear that we have problems with some areas that we believe the Bill does not address, but in general its provisions will not be delayed by this side.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, neither shall I delay the Bill unduly today. We have an agreement to pass this necessary piece of legislation into law as quickly as possible and, as is our practice in this Party, we will attempt to co-operate on matters such as this.

I want to make it clear that I speak not only for Members of the New Democratic Party caucus who are eager to see the legislation passed, inadequate though we may feel it is, but I also speak for the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) who urged that I make his support for the legislation known to the House. I do not know why he asked me; he does not often ask for that but I assume there must be a political gain it it somewhere.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member points out to me quietly, behind his hand, that it is a confliict of interest as his daughter has made application. I will have to take that into account.

This Party is not opposed to the legislation. We recognize that young people in Canada have been suffering a serious economic setback and are in need of whatever kind of help they can get, even if it is only superficial. We believe that the Bill deals only superficially with the problems of financing education at the post-secondary level. The Bill embodies what most of the legislation has been about for the past year or two, and that is an effort to give the appearance that something is being done rather than actually doing something. What little is being offered to Canadian students will not be received by many of them in time for the fall enrolment if we do not deal with the Bill expeditiously. To get it through today is an important step in order to make sure that young people who are continuing or are beginning their education at the post-secondary level are made aware as quickly as possible of the content of the legislation and the availability of assistance.

The Bill increases Government spending at the federal level in the order of $60 million over the next two years. It amends the Canada Student Loans Act in three ways. First, it increases the weekly loan limit from $56.25 which, if it were not so pitiful, would almost be laughable, to the grand sum of $100, which I suppose is intended to take the increased cost of living into account.

Second, it provides an increased relief program for unemployed graduates of an additional 18 months, bringing the total relief plan up to two years; and after six months it is renewable every three months.

Third, and perhaps most important, it guarantees loans to part-time students to cover tuition fees, books, learning materials, local transportation and related costs. We recognize the necessity for all of these and are prepared to support them.

I would like to refer to the press release issued by the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) on March 18 in which he announced the changes and noted that the Canada Student Loans Program and the associated provincial student aid programs had been recently reviewed in depth by a federal-provincial taks force which determined that the basic principles underlying these programs had overwhelming public support. I am not surprised at that, Mr. Speaker. Those of us who have been involved in politics and active with young people were well aware that the public in general was eager to make sure that those with ability gained access to post-secondary education regardless of their financial backing.

I am curious to know exactly what the basic principles are that underlie the Canada Student Loans Program. If they aim to perpetuate a post-secondary system that increases rather than decreases the social-economic gaps in Canadian society, then the CSLP is clearly meeting its goals. It is rather odd that the Minister would use a public opinion survey to determine the worth of the CLSP when the program is utilized by only 40 per cent of the student population and only 30 per cent at the time of his survey. In short, the federal-provincial task force on student assistance did little more than what I have just said. It reaffirmed that the CLSP is a large public expenditure program in which the poor tend to subsidize the rich, unfortunately. I want to deal with that later.

What we have now in the Canada Student Loans Program is a system which, in the face of rising living costs and tuition fees, has continued to extend insufficient funding to students, penalizing those who utilize the funding with an accumulated debt burden far exceeding their ability to pay in these very difficult economic times. This debt burden ultimately rests more heavily on the poor than on anyone else. I do not have to go into detail on that, Mr. Speaker. I am sure that everyone appreciates that those with limited means accumulate the same amount of debt as those with greater means. The result is that on graduation the student has accumulated approximately the same amount of debt but has a far lesser potential for repayment or for absorbing it.

The increase in the CLSP weekly loan ceiling from $56.25 to $100 barely meets the increase in inflation and without the accompaniment of some form of grant, substantially increases the burden of debt on students from $1,800 per year in 1975 to $3,200 per year in 1983-84. A student who borrowed the maximum CSL of $3,200 for four years and repaid it over a nine and a half year period, which is entirely within the law, at current interest rates would have a total debt load of something in excess of $15,000.

We are particularly concerned about this problem as it affects women, who accounted for more than 95 per cent of the increase in full-time enrolment between 1970 and 1979 and whose enrolment in post-secondary education continues to increase at a higher rate in proportion to men. While Canadian women continue to earn only half as much as Canadian men in most, if not all, occupations, they are obviously the least able to bear the burden of debt imposed by the CLSP. Adding insult to injury, it has estimated by R. A. Holmes in a study entitled "Male-Female Earnings Differentials in Canada" that "the potential lifetime earnings of a female university graduate is about equal to that of a male high school graduate".

The fact that this slight increase in federal spending on the CSLP comes to us at the expense of federal support for the whole post-secondary system due to the imposition of six and five on the federal share of post-secondary education funding truly reflects a retrograde attitude on the part of the federal Government. Last year the system lost an estimated $1.9 billion when the federal Government eliminated the revenue guarantee in the Established Programs Financing Act, and this year losses are estimated at $102 million with the imposition of the six and five program on the federal share of post-secondary funding for 1983-84.

The Secretary of State claims that he has sought and obtained the assurances of the Provinces that this increase in spending on the CSLP will not result in provincial cutbacks. However, I want to draw to the Minister's attention that, notwithstanding his own pronouncement, we are aware that in the Province of British Columbia there has already been imposed new restrictions in the criteria for obtaining student loans. The Government of that Province has increased the course load requirement for full-time students from 60 per cent, as it exists now across the country, to 80 per cent. This will cut out a lot of students with families and part-time jobs who will not be able to afford to continue their education on the part-time assistance available from the federal Government. Of course, the provincial officials justify this change on the grounds that financial assistance is now available to part-time students. I will elaborate on the shortcomings of this assistance plan later on.

I say to the Minister that while this Government might have been happy to see Bill Bennett re-elected, whatever message he conveyed with regard to the commitment of the Province of British Columbia not to unduly interfere with the program about which we are now talking, as usual it is not living up to its commitment. I ask the Minister to review that with the Government of British Columbia because, frankly, I feel that it is typical of the way that Government has acted toward young people over the course of the last few years.

In an effort to make it more difficult all around for students to obtain financial assistance, the B.C. Government has also tightened up restrictions for independent students. A married student is presently classified as independent if he or she is (a) married or in a long-term common-law relationship, or (b) in the work force for two consecutive 12-month periods, or (c) four years out of secondary school, or (d) without a parent or guardian. The new criteria in British Columbia will disqualify any independent student if he or she receives from parents $600 in cash or kind either during the school year or in the four months prior to the beginning of the school term, or has driven a motor vehicle which is registered, owned or maintained by the parents during the same period, or has lived more than six weeks in a home owned or rented by parents.

I say to the Minister that this surely is a departure from what I know he would have wanted to see occur.It certainly does not meet the kinds of standards which we would like to see set. It is clearly an attempt by the Government of British Columbia to undermine the system. I would urge upon the Minister that he not except this kind of action by that Government, and that he make arrangements to meet with them forthwith and bring to their attention that this is a direct violation of what we in the House of Commons believe is an appropriate way to act.

The real issue here however, is not so much provincial cutbacks, but the role of the federal Government in fostering national goals in education by providing the Provinces with incentives to increase their support. Indeed, the lofty goals outlined two years ago by the then Secretary of State expressing the federal Government's "strong interest in the general health of the post-secondary system and in wide and equitable access to that system", seem to have all but disappeared. When will the federal Government begin to take some responsibility for grant assistance to students? The Provinces have been forced to introduce grants and other forms of non-repayable assistance to help students meet their financial needs and reduce their debt load. As a result, the federal share of student aid expenditures dropped from 50 per cent in 1965-66 to 26 per cent in 1980-81.

The Minister also must surely review his own statements, having promised students again this year that he would be introducing a bursary program. Of course, to this point in time neither the students nor Hon. Members of the House of Commons have seen this bursary program. I would like to urge upon the Minister on behalf of my colleagues, and I suspect on behalf of other Hon. Members, that he proceed with that bursary program as quickly as possible. It is absolutely essential.

I would like to turn to another aspect of what is before us, the interest relief plan. Federal student assistance has done more to benefit private lending institutions and collection agencies through interest and default payments and collection charges than it has helped the needy student. Over $7 million has been paid to collection agencies over the years 1980 to 1982. That is the amount of a 25 per cent collection charge on some $36 million collected. Defaults have steadily risen in the last two years, from 11,000 in 1980-81 to 13,000 in 1981-82, and a startling 15,000 just in the first three months of 1982-83. I believe the Government understands why. It is a natural consequence of the economic conditions in the country.

Going back to 1980, one could readily see that the economic conditions in the country were not fostering better occupations. The people were not provided with the necessary financial backing which they would need and so one could not expect other than that the numbers of defaults would rise. That does not mean that the students are not prepared to repay, I hasten to add. It does not mean that they do not intend to repay. I am sure the Minister would agree with me that by far the vast majority, when asked, have every intention of repaying. It is just simply that they cannot repay when their income has not yet reached the point of meeting their basic needs, let alone paying back their obligations to the Government.

The 18 months interest relief plan is a welcome recognition of this problem but is not the solution. We in this Party have proposed that the interest-free grace period be extended until the student has achieved a satisfactory job. How one defines that may be a subject for discussion. Nevertheless, I do not believe it is beyond the wit of man to find a way to define it.

We have also proposed that lending rates for student loans not be based on the bond rate, but perhaps established on the basis of a weighted average of the loan rate in effect every year that the student takes out a loan, or some other measure similar to that which would offer students some relief from the erratic fluctuation of interest rates.

Our Party would also like to see the interest relief plan extended to part-time students as well. Part-time enrolment in Canadian universities has increased dramatically in the post-war era and continues to rise. You would know, Mr. Speaker, that in 1979 there were more than a quarter of a million registered students in credit courses, representing over one-third of all students attending university. The growth rate for part-time students in the undergraduate programs between 1972 and 1981 is reported by Statistics Canada as 61 per cent. This compares with a growth over the same period for full-time undergraduates of 25 per cent. From 1970-71 to 1980-81, the part-time undergraduate student enrolment at Canadian universities grew from 52 per cent of the full-time total to 64 per cent. I believe the Minister can see the trend, as anyone else can see it. Part-time graduate and undergraduate women over the age of 25 increased by a startling 250 per cent in the period 1970-79. Just as women are attempting, through education, to break out of the low wage job ghettos which entrap them, institutions are forced by Government action to withdraw the very programs they need.

The manner in which the Government is offering assistance to part-time students is really a token recognition, however long overdue, of the increasing demand and importance of part-time study in this changing industrial climate. One wonders what benefit this assistance will be to part-time students when preferred programs of study are not available because of Government cutbacks to the system in general. In reality, the Government is merely putting up collateral for a loan to the part-time student, whose only difficulty is a temporary cash flow problem.

Holding this false perception of the part-time student, it is no wonder that the Government has failed to include part-time students in its interest relief program. Instead, the Government is requiring repayment of part-time loans in this Bill no more than two years after the loan is made, beginning payment one month after the loan is received, with interest accruing immediately and creating a more stringent means test than that in place for full-time students, such that the ability to repay seems a greater factor in determining loan eligibility than financial need.

Many part-time students are just that because of the increasingly prohibitive cost of obtaining a full-time university education. The costs incurred by a part-time student are the same per course as full-time students. A number of studies have demonstrated that part-time students tend to come from families whose parental income and educational attainment are lower than full-time students. They are part-time because they cannot afford to be full-time and cannot afford to draw on family resources to enable them to be full-time. Therefore, they should be treated in a different way than they are being treated in this legislation.

I go back to British Columbia because it is a good case in point. It costs seven times as much per instructional hour to take vocational courses part-time as it does full-time in that Province. Fees for evening courses exceed similar fees for daytime courses, measured by the instructional hour. Rural areas are poorly serviced. Use of family income criteria for a loan deters the participation of married women and works to maintain their dependency on the family situation. Financial aid for part-time college and university students remains extremely limited in spite of the Bill.

A 1982 Gallup survey commissioned by the Canadian Association of Adult Education, and the Institut Canadien d'Éducation des Adultes, using a random sample of 2,000 Canadians 18 years of age and over, determined that the greatest beneficiaries of part-time education are those who generally come from middle to high income backgrounds and have already achieved the university level of education. Those who need part-time education the most are three times less likely to enrol because of financial and social restraints of the current system which favours the rich at the expense of the poor. I think there are times when people do not believe that any more. But the facts are that with changing economic conditions there is no question in the minds of those who have looked at it that the education system once again—if it ever changed and there is some question about that—has begun to favour the entrance of the rich to post-secondary education over those who are somewhat less well endowed financially. You can see it in the education system inasmuch as universities are struggling for dollars and are very eager to have those with higher incomes involved. Those with lower incomes do not have the support base necessary to carry the additional financial burden.

The CAAE survey shows that 17 per cent of the adult population in 1982 has left initial schooling at the elementary level, and a further 47 per cent left at the secondary level. The same report argues that in view of the rising levels of educational capacity required to function in a technological society, much of this population may end up functionally illiterate. They say the persistence of this phenomenon is dangerous both for the productivity of the Canadian economy—because it so seriously hampers the adaptability of the labour force in an age of skill obsolescence—and for democracy because of the connection between functional literacy and skills of participation and citizenship. That is something I know the Minister himself is vitally interested in.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we in the NDP—

Mr. Smith: Hurray!

Mr. Deans: Well, I could go on if you like. I realize that you are always eager to have me speak and I would be delighted to continue.

Mr. Cosgrove: A very good speech.

Mr. Deans: Thank you, I appreciate that. I am sure you would recognize one, not hearing many from your own side.

We in the NDP support any federal Government move in the direction of assistance to Canadian youth and students generally, but we do wish the Government would take its responsibility somewhat more seriously, especially when youth unemployment is so high, causing unforeseen increases in enrolment over the last year of about 8 per cent. At a time when we are facing such major industrial change, only a strong post-secondary education system will equip us for this change.

The country is facing a crisis which is reflected in education and also in economic conditions. The future of the country depends on our having a well educated population, educated to the maximum of its ability, given every opportunity and encouragement to enlarge upon the capacity of each individual to absorb learning and to apply it. The future of the country socially depends to a great extent on the ability of people to learn through the education system and other systems about how to socialize, to adapt to and accommodate others in the way in which they go about their lives. The country, even from the point of view of its diversity, given that it has a number of regions, each one quite different from the other, can only benefit from an educational system which will allow for the teaching of the differences which make us one rather than divide us. The future of the country rests on whether or not we are prepared to place the kind of emphasis on education at every level which will enable each Canadian to acquire the necessary learning skills so they can adapt to the changes, technological and social, which are taking place.

I urge the Government once and for all to commit itself to developing a national policy on post-secondary education, a strategy based on the principles of equal opportunity and equal access. We are one of the few industrialized countries in the world which has not yet faced that particular challenge. Time is passing us by.

On Clause 6—Special Interest-Free Periods

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, there is one question I would like to ask the Minister. I notice there is no set amount for students; it is going to depend on the division of the total by the number of students throughout the country. There is one point I am a little bit in fear of, although it is perhaps already covered. In some of these programs there is no particular limit and the money gets used up. Then those who apply near the end are told the money is all gone. I hope that will not happen in this student program.

Mr. Joyal: Mr. Chairman, I can reassure the Hon. Member because the amount of money provided to us by the House could be readjusted through supplementary estimates. If it does happen that there is an increase in the enrolment in universities to a point that the amount of money provided by the Minister of Finance is not sufficient, then we could come back to supplementary estimates. So I can reassure the Hon. Member to that end.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, there is just one other point. I suppose this is counterbalanced because a student does not get the maximum amount. Some are more needy than others. There is provision made for that, is there?

Mr. Joyal: That is exactly so. One point I want to add is that the Canada Student Loans Program is complemented with, of course, provincial programs. I have the list here of statistics and it shows there is a great variety and diversity among, for instance, the provincial loans afforded to students by each provincial Government, or the provincial grants system administered by each provincial Government. In fact, we are dealing with a complement to the provincial system which already exists and works well in the country. Therefore, what the Hon. Member has said is exactly right, because each provincial Government administers some criteria.

• (1450)

Of course, we urge the provincial Government, as was stated by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, to have the widest opening of criteria to ensure that we in fact work on the broadest approach to student help, student grants and student loans. He is right in stating that those loans and grants are measured according to the needs of the students. There are a set of criteria which are devised by Provinces to ensure that there are some kind of national standards which can be respected in each Province to ensure mobility. One of the key or essential elements of the system is mobility, especially when one addresses post-graduate studies. A student might want to involve himself or herself in the type of curricula which is not immediately available in his or her region and must travel to another Province. Therefore, we must consider some kind of standardization of those criteria to ensure that we afford the necessary help to students.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT (NO. 2)

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-148, an Act to Amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Smith: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe there would be unanimous consent to refer the Bill to Committee of the Whole so that it could be dealt with in all stages today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House has heard the remark of the Parliamentary Secretary. Is there unanimous consent to moving immediately to Committee of the Whole?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Blaker in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-148, an Act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act (No. 2).

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I will not delay the proceedings of the House very long with respect to the Bill. It is an important Bill. It is one which we have adopted several times, changing its provisions, adding to it, making it more workable for the agriculture industry of Canada. Thousands of farmers benefited last year from many of our different programs for financial assistance. It is said that we do not care. However, these include Small Business and Small Business Development Bond programs and the Farm Credit Corporation's special farm financial assistance programs. On top of those, of course, thousands of farmers also took advantage of the Farm Credit Corporation's regular lending program, the interest-free advanced payments for crops program, the prairie grain advance payments program and the farm improvement loans program that we are passing here today.

This organization was started in 1945 and more than 1,800,000 loans, totalling over $4.7 billion, have been guaranteed to Canadian farmers under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Last year $208 million in new loans were guaranteed under the program. It was a 10 per cent increase over 1981. The figures speak for themselves. The farm improvement loans program is obviously very popular with Canadian farmers. Unfortunately, it is due to expire, if we do not pass the legislation, at the end of this month.

I wish to thank the Members of the House of Commons for what we are doing here today with this important piece of legislation. At the time the program was started, chartered banks were virtually ignoring the farm credit market. This is why the farm improvement loans program was started. In order to gear up for the post-war agricultural boom which was expected, farmers had to make significant capital investments in their farms. That called for financing. That is why the federal Government passed the Farm Improvement Loans Act for an initial period of three years. For several years after the program was introduced, nearly all the intermediate-term credit extended to farmers by banks was guaranteed under the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

Over the years, the provisions of the Act have been amended to reflect the changing conditions affecting agriculture. As a matter of fact, the Act has been amended 18 times, extending this program for 12 additional years. It clearly indicates how popular the program has been with three generations of farmers and the various Governments of the day.

Initially, in 1945, the federal Government guaranteed loans up to a maximum of $3,000 under the Act. The last time we amended it, it was changed from $75,000 per farm to $100,000 per farm. Loans can be obtained from chartered banks, credit unions, caisses populaires, trust companies or Alberta treasury branches. The Act stipulates that the repayment must be made within 10 years, except for loans to purchase land, which must be repaid within 15 years.

Currently, the Act stipulates that interest rates float at lending institutions' prime rate plus 1 per cent. Farm improvement loans must be secured and borrowers are required to provide a certain portion of the cost of a purchase or a project from their own resources.

A brief review of the 1982 farm improvement loans program shows that the federal Government guaranteed 15,584 loans at an average of $13,385, for a total of $208.6 million. Almost 69 per cent of this money was lent for the purchase of farm equipment while 11 per cent was lent for construction, repairs or changes to farm houses and buildings. The remainder of the money was lent for land and livestock purchases, other farm improvements and machinery repairs.

As you might expect, there was a slight increase in losses under the program in recent years, but the losses are still relatively small. For instance, in 1982, claims totalling just over $1 million were paid out. Yet the total loans outstanding amounted to over $500 million.

Farmers are generally a very good credit risk. This is clearly indicated by the record of the Farm Improvement Loans Program. Since 1945, more than 1.8 million loans totalling over $4.7 billion have been guaranteed under the program. But during the same period only 6,500 claims totalling $9.8 million were not paid and $2.3 million of this money was later recovered.

Farmers, by nature, pay their bills off quickly and keep their debts as small as possible. According to a nation-wide survey conducted by the Farm Credit Corporation in January, 1981, the average Canadian farmer had debts equal to only 15 per cent of the total value of his or her farm assets.

The farm credit market has changed considerably since the post-war years. It has grown by leaps and bounds, and lenders have responded. But without the Farm Improvement Loans Act a great many farmers would still have difficulty borrowing the money they need to make the necessary changes and improvements in their farming operations.

The program is still extremely important and probably more important in one region of Canada than any other, that is, in western Canada. An abrupt end to the program would cause serious repercussions in some locations, especially those rural areas that are served by only one financial institution.

The severe financial problems faced by some farmers today make it advisable to continue this program so they can obtain the credit they need. We will continue it. I might say that if I am here in two years' time this program will be completely reviewed in the next two years, and if changes are necessary at that time I am sure the House of Commons would be glad to make them. I will simply say that this is a good Bill and I thank the House for its co-operation.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a few brief remarks and indicate the support of our Party for this Bill which extends the term of the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

I would point out that over the years we have always supported this particular Bill and the amendments that have been brought forward from time to time. As a matter of fact, we in the Official Opposition support any good legislation that tends to assist the farming population. We always agree to put good Bills through in short order, as we are doing this afternoon.

Only when a Bill is detrimental to the farm population, Bills such as Canagrex or the Crow rate, do we dig in our heels and attempt to do our best to improve the legislation and make it acceptable to the farming population. I believe the Minister would agree with me in that regard.

There is one problem, not with respect to the Bill itself but to its utilization. I wish to bring to the attention of the Minister that I do not believe that this Bill has received the necessary publicity. I am aware that banks are reluctant for some reason to encourage a farmer to make use of the FIL Program. I am told that it is like pulling teeth to persuade them to allow a farmer to use the program. I have talked to many of my colleagues who represent agricultural areas who have said that their constituents have encountered the same problems.

I recall several years ago when the Hon. John Turner was Minister of Finance that this matter was brought to his attention by many on this side of the House and he undertook to speak to the banking association. I believe that as a result of his representations the banks did in fact tell the farmers that this program was available. However, I believe that an educational program still must take place.

I hope that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) will take some steps to let the farming population know that this Bill is in existence and is available to them so they may borrow money at lower rates than ones at which they would ordinarily pay to the bank. It is my understanding that interest rates under the FIL Program are one per cent above prime, which is probably somewhat lower than what the Farm Credit Corporation is charging for its loans at the present time.

In closing, I would simply say to the Minister that there is a need to help the farming population. Many farmers are in serious financial difficulties at the present time. Interest rates have been high, input costs have been high and the price of their product has been relatively low.

I am aware that the Farm Credit Corporation has done an excellent job in rearranging loans and refinancing farmers who have been in serious financial difficulties. But the interest rate is still high when one borrows from the Farm Credit Corporation.

I was interested to hear the Minister's response, I believe yesterday, to a Member when he said that the Farm Credit Corporation was now out of money and he was asking Cabinet to allow the Farm Credit Corporation to go offshore presumably to borrow money. He took similar action a short while ago when I believe the FCC borrowed $50 million offshore from Belgium at a rate of approximately 12 per cent.

I would like to list again some of the programs that we on this side of the House have proposed to the Minister and the Farm Credit Corporation over the years in order to make money available at low interest rates to the Farm Credit Corporation to lend to the farmers. I refer specifically to the agri-bond program which we have pushed for many years, as well as the program whereby the capital gains portion of the selling price of a farm might be lent at low interest rates—6 per cent or 7 per cent—to the Farm Credit Corporation and then relent to the young farmer at possibly 8 per cent or 9 per cent. That would be a substantial saving.

I hope the Minister will use his good offices and power in Cabinet to persuade Cabinet and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to adopt the agri-bond program and some other programs that we have been suggesting to him over the years.

If the Minister is seriously interested in agriculture, as I am sure he is, and seriously interested in the farming population, he will do his utmost to see that these programs are implemented. It makes no difference whether these programs have been suggested by the Opposition or by anyone else. If they are good, I think it is the Minister's responsibility to do his best to see that the programs are brought in in the best interest of the agricultural community.

In closing, I would simply say that we in the Official Opposition heartily endorse and support this Bill. I am pleased that we are able to give three readings to it this afternoon.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I only have a few things to say about this Bill. This Bill represents a very minor change and is a simple housekeeping order to make the Farm Improvement Loans Act available to farmers for another two years.

• (1510)

I would like to point out that there are a couple of things I would like to see changed in the Farm Loans Improvement Act which are beyond the power of an Opposition Member to move, so I simply raise them in the debate today and the Minister can keep them in mind for possible amendments in the near future. Any Minister in 1985 could incorporate them in the amendments that are required to continue the Farm Loans Improvement Act another two or three years at that time. Basically they have to do with the over-all limits to the loans. At the moment the Minister knows that the limit is $100,000 per customer. In the case of most other Acts where we have limits per customer, the Government and the Department of Agriculture have recognized legal partnerships and co-op farms. But that is not the case with the Farm Improvement Loans Act. The limit is $100,000 regardless of a legal partnership or a co-op farm. A co-op farm may have anywhere up to a dozen members, and it may have a great need of a broad range of capital. However, the Farm Improvement Loans Act will allow them to borrow only up to $100,000, the same as an individual operator. I think that is something the Minister should keep in mind. Perhaps he could draw it to the attention of his officials so that when he or a future Minister brings the Farm Improvement Loans Act before the House another time the needs of co-op farmers could be dealt with as well.

We note the good experience with the Farm Improvement Loans Act since its inception in 1945 or 1946. It provided loans to farmers which assisted in the recovery of the economy after the Second World War. It put the machinery manufacturing sector on its feet, because it was basically farm improvement loans that went to farm machinery, and the two programs, development of the farm machinery industry and the provisions of credit, work very well together. In fact, until 1965, 100 per cent of the intermediate term loans which farmers took out were under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Until that time the rate was fixed at 5 per cent. After 1965, there were some changes to the Bank Act which permitted the banks to get back into the mortgage field, an area they had not been in for a long time. With the experience the banks had gained from administering the Farm Improvements Loans Act, they very quickly moved into the farm credit field to the point where, rather than 100 per cent of the intermediate term agricultural loans being carried by the Farm Improvement Loans program, we had less than 20 per cent of such loans being carried under the Farm Improvement Loans program in 1980.

We can see the private banking system has moved into that particular field of credit in a fairly big way, thanks to the experience they got under the Farm Improvement Loans Act between 1946 and 1965.

The use of FIL funds for debt consolidation or for short-term loans to handle production credits is not allowed under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. That is an area not fully recognized by lending institutions operated by the Government of Canada. The Farm Credit Corporation does permit debt consolidation. At a time like the present, farmers are under considerable financial strain and are requiring debt consolidation measures in order to stay in business in the hope that the bear markets will turn up so farming can again be profitable. We note that the Farm Credit Corporation has been getting more and more into debt consolidation as a part of its business. In 1980, roughly 16 per cent of the business that the Farm Credit Corporation generated was for farm debt consolidation. The next year, 1981, that figure was up to 35 per cent. We know that in 1983 the call for funds to consolidate debts through the Farm Credit Corporation is so large that the Farm Credit Corporation has already run out of funds in just a few weeks. There is a great need for that kind of funding. I am not sure whether FIL loans are the place to do it, but certainly if farmers have chosen the Farm Credit Corporation as a place to go and the service is there, more funds should be made available so that more of those loans could be provided to farmers in an effort to stave off bankruptcy for a few more years to spread their debt repayments in order to survive this particular heavy downturn in the market for their products.

We support this amendment to renew the Farm Improvement Loans Act and we hope it goes through very quickly now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Does the House agree to the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT (NO. 2)

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. E. F. Whelan (for Mr. De Bané) moved that Bill C-147, an Act to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Some indication has been given to the Chair that there may be some discussion on third reading. Of course, I recognize now, at second reading stage, the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), if he so wishes. Shall we wait for third reading for comments by Hon. Members?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Blaker in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I report the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Bill reported.

Mr. Whelan (for Mr. De Bané) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When shall the Bill read a third time? By unanimous consent now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (for Mr. De Bané) moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce this Bill on behalf of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané). It being third reading I want to say only a few words. This legislation is to extend and simultaneously amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

In general terms, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act is intended to facilitate the availability of credit to fishermen for a variety of fisheries improvement projects. In order to encourage private financial institutions to make such loans to fishermen, the Act authorizes the federal Government to guarantee lenders against loss incurred on loans made in accordance with its provisions.

The legislation specifies the amount that can be outstanding to an an individual borrower at any one time, and the maximum repayment term of each loan. It also specifies the lending period and the aggregate principal amount of guaranteed loans that my be made by all lenders in that period.

This Act was originally administered by the Department of Finance and was transferred to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans in June, 1978. The existing legislation does not go beyond June 30, 1983, and in the interests of the many fishermen who depend on this Act for credit, I sincerely thank the House for its speedy passage. This is highly desirable action.

Here is what the amendments will do. They will extend the Act for a two-year period from July 1, 1983 to June 30, 1985, and set the aggregate principal amount of loans made during that two-year period, in respect of which the Minister would be liable for losses, at $100 million for all designated lenders under the Act.

Some people may wonder why I am speaking on fisheries. I was Parliamentary Secretary for the Minister of Fisheries for two years and I understand fisheries. It is really a crop harvested from the sea. I come from an area which has the largest freshwater fishing industry in the Commonwealth in Lake Erie. By the way, those fish are free from any impurities. People may think they have impurities, but they are perfectly safe to eat by anybody anyplace in the world. I am very familiar with the fishing industry.

I would like to think that all Hon. Members of the House of Commons take a special interest in the fisheries because it is an important industry. They should be aware that the general question of financial assistance to fishermen was raised in the two major studies recently completed on Canada's commercial fisheries. Of course I am referring to the Atlantic fisheries task force report prepared under Michael Kirby and Professor Pearse's Pacific fisheries study. Without getting into the pros and cons of the recommendations in these two reports on the particular issue, it is entirely possible that at some point in the future, with the concurrence of the industry, we can come up with an improved financial assistance program for fishermen tailored to the prevailing economic situation. However, any such new scheme will need much careful planning and consultation and could take a number of years to implement. In the meantime we feel it is in the best interest of fishermen and the industry as a whole to continue with the present Fisheries Improvement Loans Act for at least another two years.

A further amendment to the Act which is being sought will make it mandatory for lenders to comply with the provisions of the regulations. By way of explanation, perhaps I should point out that the existing Act empowers the Governor in Council to make regulations concerning the administration of the program, but there is no provision in the legislation which makes it an offence to contravene the regulations. Under the proposed amendment, failure by lenders to comply with the regulations would void the Minister's liability under the Act. In effect, the amendment will firm up the program administration and require lenders to register with the Department of Fisheries and Oceans all loans made under the provisions of the Act within three months of the granting of such loans.

Loans made by chartered banks and other designated lenders under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act have risen significantly over past years. I might point out that from the inception of the plan in 1955 to March 31, 1982, some 14,759 loans have been made, amounting in total to approximately $184 million. The average size of the loan has increased from just over $1,000 in 1955 to $18,000 at the present time.

I am sure it will be recognized that the guaranteed loans program provides a solid credit base for fishermen through recognized credit institutions across the country. In the absence of this program, it is very likely that a large number of small independent fishermen would attempt to get financial assistance from large operators, which would jeopardize their status as independent fishermen. The need to increase the independence of fishermen, rather than the reverse, was a constant preoccuption of the former Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, and it is an objective with which the present Minister is wholeheartedly in agreement.

In these times it is not easy for fishermen to maintain an independent status, particularly when it comes to paying out thousands of dollars to purchase a new boat or modify an existing one to keep up with technological advances. If fishermen cannot raise the necessary funds on their own and get locked into the position of having their boats mortgaged to a processing company, they are in a very poor position to bargain over prices for the fish they have to sell.

The Fisheries Improvement Loans Program is one avenue the fisherman can take when looking for financing to enable him to maintain his independence. It is also increasingly popular with fishermen, particularly on the West Coast where there is no provincial loan board. I might add that fishermen have proved themselves to be a good credit risk. The loss ratio of this program since its inception has been less than 1 per cent.

In conclusion, I would like to emphasize that this is a very worth-while program for which there is a great deal of support. The Provinces are familiar with it and have indicated their approval for its continued existence. I am sure Hon. Members will recognize its importance to the fishermen of the country. They have displayed this by their endorsement of the Bill, and I thank them on behalf of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané).

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief as well. I have two or three comments to make with respect to the program. It is the type of program which must be put in place. Any good government would put it in place as part of the social and structural needs of that section of Canadian society. One difficulty we continue to have with the program arises out of the fact that of all Government programs this one has had no publicity whatsoever. When a fisherman goes into a bank, the bank lends him money at prime plus four, when in fact it should be prime plus one. The bank does not tell the fisherman that he has another access.

Mr. Whelan: Shame on the banks.

Mr. Forrestall: I hear the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). He introduced this measure and has responsibility for guiding it through the House of Commons. I am sure the fishermen of Canada will applaud him. I do not say, "Shame on the banks"; I say, "Shame on the Government for not having publicized it". If the banks and lending institutions are at fault, even at greater fault are the Government and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans because they will not tell fishermen. Approximately 26 organized fishermen's groups in Altantic Canada were canvassed by Pete Marwick at the request of the Department of Fisheries. They were canvassed by Al Billard of Halifax. No one knew anything about it. They did not even know it existed. Is that why 70 per cent or 75 per cent of the loans guaranteed in fact occurred on the West Coast? What about East Coast fishermen? They did not know about the program. They did not even know it existed. Why? God knows the Government spent millions and millions of dollars advertising the Crow.

Mr. Cosgrove: And you criticized us.

Mr. Whelan: You could have put it in your householder.

Mr. Forrestall: However old this program is, not a single piece of information has come across my desk other than what I dredged out this morning by looking back at Estimates to see how much money went into Atlantic Canada. The Government, as much as the lending institutions, is at fault with respect to this program.

I agreed that we should reduce the level at which loans are guaranteed. In 1983, at the rate at which we are going, less than $8 million or $9 million will require Government guarantees. To have guarantees well in excess of $100 million is not realistic. Why is the guarantee level so high and the borrowing level so low? The Government put a program in place because it was convenient for one of the Ministers at one point in time to be able to say, "We will guarantee loans to fishermen". It was convenient politically. I am glad to see a couple of the fast trackers in the House. It is very convenient.

The people Eastern Passage, the last fishing community in Halifax harbour, one of the great harbours of the world, have tried for eight years to get new wharf facilities. Programs that would allocate money for this purpose were never make known to them. They simply did not know about them. When the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) is finished with the pot and when the other distinguished Liberal Members of Parliament are finished with the pot, there is nothing left over for the rest of the Province. We do not find this out first, second, or third. We find it out last. So, yes, I accuse the Government of deliberate deceit with respect to programs such as this. The fishermen of Atlantic Canada did not know and were not made aware and continue to be unaware of the benefits of dealing privately and being able to exercise their own judgment. Who wants to borrow from the Government if it can be done the right way from the lending institutions?

These people need help but they do not want subsidies. They do not want to borrow money and let the Government pay it off. They are independent people. They are honest, hard working, industrious Canadian citizens.

That is one concern, Mr. Speaker, that we have respect to this Bill. We will let the Bill go through, there is no question about that. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) said earlier, our concerns are for the abnormalities that come through this Chamber from time to time like the Crow and like Canagrex and all of those other nonsensical Bills. What benefit does the Crow offer eastern Canada? What happens to MFRA? What happens to CN and CAST? I wish I could have asked the Minister that question earlier today, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pepin: Do it on Monday.

Mr. Forrestall: I think that the figures with respect to borrowing under this Act as put on the record by the Minister clearly demonstrate that there will be no complicity about it. There will be no great big advertising campaigns directed to our 40,000 fishermen. They do not care.

The Minister of Agriculture is here. Where is the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. De Bané)? Where is Fishy himself?

Mr. Pepin: He is announcing a program in the Maritimes.

Mr. Tobin: He is working with great diligence.

Mr. Forrestall: Yes, I read the story in the Financial Post. He has one of the greatest pork barrels of all times, half a billion dollars to a billion dollars to restructure the East Coast. It has to be done, there is no question about that, but I would like to see what Dr. Kirby does with this before it is all finished.

I would like to make another serious comment, Mr. Speaker, with respect to this Bill. Under the legislative authority enabling the Government to guarantee the loans of fishermen, a general authority was used and cited in the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act and it was a general authority that we have had for long time. It covered students, it covered farm loans, it covered a broad spectrum of Canadian Government participation in that interface between people and their needs. But now there has been inserted into the authority a very simple word that, if interpreted closely and narrowly, can mean that Canadian fishermen may have some difficulty with respect to loans that are made and guaranteed by the Government. That word is the word "can". This amendment authorizes the Government to refuse to pay a defaulted loan if in fact any regulation has not been specifically met.

Mr. Tobin: The same as the banks.

Mr. Forrestall: Not even the banks are as cruel as the Liberal Members. They have given themselves the authority to back away from guaranteeing loans. If I were a West Coast fisherman, I would get this clearly written out in blood.

Mr. Whelan: If they get a contract, they will not have anything to worry about.

Mr. Forrestall: I notice that the Minister of Agriculture has not included that word in his own Farm Loans Board authority. That word does not appear there, does it? Admit it.

Mr. Whelan: We do a lot of—

Mr. Forrestall: Admit it. It does not appear there. At least the Minister of Agriculture has had the fortitude not to include within his own legislative authority an open door that would allow Government to run away from an undertaking to guarantee loans.

We are in general sympathy with this amendment and are quite prepared to let the matter come to some formal conclusion. But I have two points to make. The Department of Fisheries itself saw the need to call in Peat Marwick to do a survey to find out who in the fishing industry was aware of the details of this program. Peat Marwick's report, which is not a formal report, has now been buried somewhere. That report criticizes the Government for not having publicized one of its own programs. Usually it is the other way around.

Perhaps I should commend the Government for not wasting money on an advertising program, but it should tell the people at whom the legislation is aimed and to whom benefits should flow now that the program is in place and can be utilized. It should tell them about the parameters of the program. The Government did not do that and Peat Marwick, its own consultants, said that it should. We on this side of the House look forward to some indication to Atlantic, Pacific and lake fishermen that in fact this type of a protection is available to them.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that I have been given an opportunity today to place some remarks on the record that concern a piece of legislation which is before us. With the permission of the Chair and the tolerance of the Members of the House, I would like to deal with some of the other factors that influence the application of the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

I believe that we all agree that this particular legislation is necessary and should go forward as quickly as possible, but certainly some dilemmas have been created in the past that relate to expansion of the fleet under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act with the encouragement of the Government of Canada. I refer to the problem of overcapitalization of the fleet on the West Coast. That fleet has been built up to a point where fishermen, in order to build bigger and faster vessels to catch more fish, had been encouraged to do so by the Government of Canada. It is interesting to note that a number of Government programs have forced fishermen into bigger and faster vessels, but they are catching fewer and fewer fish. This has caused a tremendous problem for fishermen and has caused tremendous dislocations in the communities that depend upon them.

Historically, it was the Davis plan, I think, that first began to create tremendous problems for the fishing industry in British Columbia with its terrible lack of control over license limitations. Another factor was the complete failure of the Government to follow the recommended advice of its own people. The Davis plan ultimately led fishermen to attempt to enhance their vessels through borrowing. The Fisheries Improvement Loans Act was certainly one of the access mechanisms for this. The willingness on the part of banks to lend money during the heyday of the herring season and the time of high priced salmon when the Japanese were becoming involved led fishermen to borrow enormous sums of money to build larger and larger vessels. When the economic cycle began to turn downward, fishermen ultimately found themselves in an absolutely terrible position. As with so many other economic sectors, whether they be small business or farming, fishermen were implicitly encouraged by the Government to borrow money for bigger and faster vessels. The management plans were directed to encouraging them to do that. When things turned around, fishermen found themselves with enormous debts on vessels but they were not permitted to catch sufficient fish to pay them off. At that point interest rates took off and fishermen found that they could not meet them.

In addition, the Government of Canada imposed further costs on the fishing industry through fuel costs which rose substantially. Today an average fisherman working off the West Coast claims that if he cannot make $500 per day, he cannot meet his basic costs. When the economy turned around, the cost of fishing rose enormously but the availability and the price of fish dropped.

The role of the banks was mentioned by Members on both sides of the House today. I should like to go over some things that have happened in my area, and I am sure they have also happened in the areas represented by the two Hon. Members who spoke earlier. The banks played a very interesting role here. Due to high interest rates promoted by the Government, high energy costs promoted by the Government, and the need, because of management plans, to use overcapitalized vessels, the banks freely lent fishermen the money they needed. Then they increased the interest rates. When a fisherman could no longer meet the payments, according to many cases that are documented on my file, the bank threatened to seize the vessel. The fisherman replied that he did not make any money last year and could not even pay the interest rate on the vessel. Then the bank said that it would seize the vessel so that the fisherman could not go out and fish. The bank realized that it could not sell it because no other fisherman could pay the price. It would tell the fisherman that it was prepared to let him keep it if he would get a co-signer—his parents or friends, or family. Some fishermen were able to find a co-signer but others were not. As soon as he found a co-signer, then the bank snatched the boat. It did not matter to the bank how much money it received from it as long as it got its pound of flesh. If a fisheries improvement loan was involved, that paid off the other pound of flesh. The fisherman and the co-signer were hooked and so was the taxpayer, but the bank came out of the deal smelling like a rose. If there was not a co-signer, the bank would threaten to take the boat and deprive the fisherman of his means of making a living unless he was willing to sign his house over as security. At that particular time the price of fishing vessels and the price of houses were depressed. If the bank seized either it was not likely it would get its money back so in some cases it went after both. When the fisherman was on the hook—and some banks managed to get co-signers, the houses and the vessels—then the bank moved in. I have never seen anything so unscrupulous in my life, Mr. Speaker.

Let me give another example that happened in the community of Sointula with the Royal Bank of Canada, proud institution that it is. A fisherman had an enormous debt on a large vessel so he fished in the wintertime to try to make enough money to make a vessel payment. He managed to put $30,000 together. He assumed the bank was dealing with him in good faith so he offered it the $30,000 The bank took the money—and then seized his vessel. That is the most disgusting think I have ever heard in my life but unfortunately, it has been repeated time and time again. The Government should introduce legislation to stop this kind of nefarious activity by the banks—these predatory actions by which the banks attempt to feed on fishermen, small-businessmen and home owners. The performance of the banks throughout this recession has been disgusting. We are at fault, Mr. Speaker; we represent the people. Nothing has been forthcoming from the Government, however.

Something that should be coupled with this legislation is that people who have loans with the banks should be entitled to refinance them automatically at the lower interest rate. Interest rates have dropped like a rock but some people are still paying 19 per cent or 20 per cent. A clear message should be sent to the banking community from the House of Commons that it will no longer tolerate the exploitive activity of the chartered banks and that they must offer some sort of legitimate corporate responsibility and citizenship. The people who own vessels are labouring under enormous burdens, trying to pay off loans at outrageous rates of interest. The House should pass a law to the effect that an individual who has a loan with extremely high interest rates should be able to refinance it immediately at a lower rate. That would be a tremendous benefit not only to fishermen but to home owners and to the small business community. Without that kind of companion to the legislation before us, the Government has no conscience.

The Government could do some things that would assist this legislation which, in isolation, is of very little use in allowing fishermen to earn an income. The Minister mentioned the Pearse Commission. If its recommendations are implemented it will mean an enormous dislocation in the fishing industry in British Columbia with people being driven out of it. The Government seems to want to place the industry in the hands of a small number of people.

In some respects the processing industry in British Columbia has been in the hands of a small number of firms such as B.C. Packers for years. That company almost operated the coast of British Columbia like a feudal system. The House had the opportunity, under the Combines Act, to provide some remedy and give assistance to small firms and native communities to get into the processing industry. There was never enough money, never quite enough interest in the job to do it properly. The Pearse Commission seems to feel that there should be even more concentration in that industry with a small number of large processors and a small number of fishermen. Ultimately I think the key to preventing dislocation along the coast of British Columbia is to enhance and improve the operations of small processors and increase the number of people in the industry so that there is somewhere that fishermen can sell their product for the highest price. There should be opportunities for people to get into speciality areas such as smoking fish, pickling fish or handling speciality products. A way must be found to glean the maximum dollar value from the industry and channel it into the communities that depend on fishing. That is basic. The legislation runs contrary to the Pearse Commission report. What is the point of a fisheries improvement loan if the report recommends driving fishermen and processors out of the industry?

There is another aspect to this and that is what I call the support side of the industry. On the coast of British Columbia there are problems related to the provision of sufficient ice. Fishermen cannot operate without ice, yet the ice facilities are controlled by a small number of large companies which only provide ice to their own vessels or vessels that fish for them. There is limited access to ice. Bella Coola is short of ice, although that problem is largely due to a fire, but other communities suffer the same problems with access to ice, and that is going to impair their activities. Independent fishermen do not have access. Up and down the coast of British Columbia small craft harbours development is in absolute chaos. What we wind up with is announcements, "We are going to do this harbour, that harbour, and the next harbour". That usually comes in the form of a Senator making a pronouncement in a community. I would have suspected that this ad hoc process would be done in order to win votes. Ultimately, however, in every case which I know of, votes have been lost because such conflict and dissension have been created over the harbour development that people are just outraged.

We must have a five-year plan which is public. I have asked for this since I have been a Member. The people I represent in my riding have asked for it. I know in other ridings along the coast the people have asked for it. The needs of every harbour up and down the coast of British Columbia where harbour planning has been done, whether it be Lund, Powell River, Campbell River, Alert Bay, Bella Coola, Bella Bella, wherever it happens to be, must appear on a list, or in a development plan, in order that these communities know where they stand on the priority list. It then becomes a public process where people can understand where they are on the list in relation to other communities. They can then begin to do reasonable planning in their own communities to respond to that list and those priorities. The way the Liberal Government has handled small craft harbour development is absolutely incredible. It is hard to understand why it would continue a process which does most of those communities no good and in fact loses any confidence which those communities had in Government.

Another problem is the way in which small craft harbours are serviced. Those harbours need security. Providing services of wharfagers must be looked at seriously so that people cannot start fires and break into vessels when owners are paying harbour fees. There must be water, electricity and service facilities available. In some communities there is a desperate need to expand small craft harbour areas and provide float plane access. That is an absolute must. That is a glaring omission by this Government.

In my riding alone, Mr. Speaker, there are between 6,000 and 8,000 native people. Their sole income depends upon access to the fishing industry. The people from Bella Coola have called to the attention of the Department of Fisheries that its fishery management plans are under serious question. I would like to comment how in one particular case this is causing an enormous problem. In Rivers Inlet the Department of Fisheries advocated an escapement of 800,000 sockeye salmon. However, in the same Rivers Inlet, the Owikeno Lake area, it is allowing the logging companies to go out and strip the river valleys and the spawning areas and refuse to attempt an integrated resource management study. And it is not just Rivers Inlet, it is the Kimsquit and the Nimpkish system. In system after system they are failing to provide integrated resource management studies and plans and at the same time saying, "Well, we need to keep the stocks up and therefore we are going to have to increase the escapement". Therefore, we are in a cycle of destruction here. We are destroying the habitat in which spawning occurs. We cannot produce enough spawners to go into those areas and recover when the flooding begins to wash out the spawn and destroy the run, no matter how many sockeye salmon go in there. Ultimately, communities are destroyed all up and down the coast. Native people need access to that fishing resource. They need access to the management plan and a fair catch.

That improvement loan should be provided to native communities not only for vessels to catch the fish. Communities should be encouraged to become involved in processing so they can balance the economy and give some strength and depth to their economic base. Ultimately, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans on the West Coast of British Columbia—and I hope the Parliamentary Secretary would be in a position to press this point home, along with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan)—must get involved in an affirmative action program whereby native people would be hired by the Department eventually to go back into their communities with some expertise and create some understanding and dialogue between those communities and the Department. It is imperative that that Department, which has a very large representation of native people in the industry, begin an affirmative action plan which puts native people to work in the Department.

The Fisheries Improvement Loans Act should also be targeted to the shellfish industry. There are very few areas on the coast of British Columbia in which shellfish can be effectively developed. Okeover Inlet, Jervis Inlet, and places like that, are excellent areas. The Department of Fisheries and Oceans must allocate staff resources to move quickly to get development going in the shellfish industry in that area. The enormous red tape must be cut. Expertise and assistance must be provided, as well as financial assistance, so we can at least protect those areas. If we do not move very soon, Mr. Speaker, those areas will be subject to other competitive uses, such as mining, as in the case of Okeover Inlet, or recreational land use, and those areas will be ultimately polluted as is Boundary Bay and Ladysmith Harbour. Some of the finest shellfish areas on the coast of British Columbia have been lost because of pollution. Unless the Department of Fisheries and Oceans moves quickly, the ones which are left will be lost also.

With respect to the Unemployment Insurance Act, what point is there in lending a fisherman money to build a bigger boat if he cannot fish? As more and more of the fishing opportunities are closed down because you have bigger boats chasing fewer fish and a management plan which is beginning to fail, unemployment insurance for these fishermen becomes absolutely necessary in order to put food on the table for their families. What we have is an unemployment insurance régime in this country which discriminates against fishermen the way it does against no other occupational group.

We had a situation in this House not too long ago in which we debated the issue of fishing. I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that there were fishermen in the communities of my riding who waited up to 12 weeks before they were able to get their claims processed. They were on welfare. Trying to collect welfare took them six weeks. There is a desperate need to improve the administration of the unemployment insurance system. There is a desperate need to provide some equity in unemployment insurance benefits so that fishermen who fish in the winter can claim in the period when they are normally disqualified, and the same for individuals who injure themselves or are in ill health. There is tremendous discrimination. It has often been said that that is the only group which is self-employed which has access to unemployment insurance benefits. However, I assure you, Mr. Speaker, there are strong indications there that we need improvements and we need them soon. Thank you.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I have just a very quick comment to make. I would like to assure both hon. gentlemen that their comments have been listened to with great interest. It is my own view, and I am sure the view of the officials of the Department of Fisheries, some of whom are listening now, that very constructive advice has been given. We shall attempt to recognize that which has been constructive and to make whatever improvements can be made in future when Bills of this sort come before the House.

I would simply like to emphasize again to the Hon. Members the Minister's appreciation for allowing this Bill to go through three stages today. Without this authority, the Act would expire effective July 1 and loans could not be made. It is particularly important in the case of British Columbia where 70 per cent of all of the loans go.

It would be of interest to the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), that in the case of the Maritime Provinces, provincial Governments do provide loan board. In the case of British Columbia this is the only means available. I thank hon. gentlemen opposite for allowing this Bill to go through today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the wish of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the wish of Hon. Members that the Chair call it five o'clock?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, given that we have put three Bills today through all the stages, we have done a good day's work. I am sure everyone in the House will see the clock as reading 5 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

At 4 p.m. the House adjourned without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Thursday, June 16, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. Pepin that Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) was arguing a point of order when the debate was interrupted.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, as you pointed out, when we adjourned debate on this Bill last Thursday I was replying to a point of order made at some length by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) in which he suggested that because the Bill contained several principles it should be split, presumably by the House. The Hon. Member referred to a citation in Erskine May at page 380 under the heading "Complicated Questions" where it is stated:

—the House may order such question to be divided—

Further on down the page it states:

In 1888, however, the Speaker ruled that two propositions which were then before the House in one motion could be taken separately—

I pointed out to you, Mr. Speaker, that that quotation is in there, of course, but the verbs which are used are very important. It does not say that they "must" be split. It does not say that they "shall" be split. It simply says that they "may" be split. Frequently Bills come before the House which contain numerous principles, and if it is to be held that there must be a separate Bill for each principle, I would suggest, with the greatest of respect, Mr. Speaker, that the business of this House would literally grind to a stand still.

What will happen is that amendments will be put throughout the course of debate, perhaps after we have heard witnesses in committee and that sort of thing, and then we will arrive at a package. That package may contain some measures which the Hon. Member does like. It may contain some measures which the Hon. Member does not like. However, he has to make tough decisions. That is what politics is all about. You cannot have a separate Bill on every single principle.

Inherent in the Hon. Member's argument is really a rejection of the validity of omnibus Bills in certain situations. Omnibus Bills, of course, are a legitimate legislative device where the legislative body is dealing with a matter which relates to one over-all policy. That is certainly the case when we are talking about the whole question of railway upgrading and the rate structure. If my hon. friend were only concerned about the Dominion Coal Lands, I am sure we could solve that problem, but the response of the New Democratic Party to this issue is a typical NDP response. It, of course, wants the railway to spend more money on improvements, but it refuses to come to grips with the question of where the money will come from to do that. I feel it is legitimate and appropriate that one Bill deal with one issue which is destined to be interrelated. How can one talk about improving railways without dealing with the question of how the costs are going to be paid?

There was reference to the statement by Mr. Speaker Lamoureux made on January 26, 1971, when he said:

There must be a point where we go beyond what is acceptable from a strictly parliamentary standpoint.

He was referring in that statement to the comprehensiveness of omnibus Bills. There was also a reference to the statement made by Mr. Speaker Jerome on May 11, 1977, in which he expressed some very deep concern about whether our practices in respect of Bills do in fact provide a remedy for the very legitimate complaint that a Bill of this kind gives the Government, under our practices, the right to demand one decision on a number of quite different although related subjects. Well, the current Speaker dealt with that question in a very final way. She ruled that the Bill, based on all of the precedents before her, was in order and that the proposition that it should be divided could not be accepted. She did that quite decisively.

• (1110)

In respect to the energy legislation, in which the appropriateness of the scope of an omnibus Bill was decided, the paramaters that Bill encompassed were much more comprehensive than those of this particular Bill. Of course that Bill was split, but it was split voluntarily, not because it had to be, but it was split voluntarily after negotiations, for procedural reasons.

Mr. Lewis: After some reflection.

Mr. Smith: In those negotiations the Parties agreed to cooperate.

Well, what has been the position of the NDP on this issue? They do not want it introduced or debated. They do not want witnesses to be heard. They are prepared to deny the right of people, particularly western Canadians, who want to have their views on the record—

Mr. Deans: That is not true.

Mr. Smith: They are prepared to deny that right by trying to block it from going to committee, which is the only place where witnesses can be heard.

Mr. Deans: That is not true, either.

Mr. Smith: This, Mr. Speaker, is a dilatory tactic, a stalling tactic; we all recognize that. You really have to scratch your head at the degree of good faith of the NDP in raising this point at this stage of the debate. If you refer to the ruling of Madam Speaker on March 2, 1982, in commenting on what Speaker Lamoureux said, she said that:

> Although he expressed the reservation that the point of going too far may have been reached, he did not offer a solution, except to say that future omnibus Bills should be scrutinized at first reading stage—

At first reading stage, Mr. Speaker. This is not the first reading stage. This is the second reading stage and we are in the umpteenth day of debate on second reading in which we had countless NDP speakers participating. They did not do so under protest. They may have been protesting the contents of the Bill, but they certainly were not suggesting that it was not in order to present the Bill because it contained several different principles. Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but they moved an amendment for a six months' hoist, and we then had dozens of speakers, including virtually the entire NDP representation in the House, on that amendment. Then, when they run out of speakers and they are going to continue to filibuster this Bill from going into committee and allowing the public to be heard, they have to come up with another argument. So they reach way back and pull out this argument which, if it had any validity at all, and if we are to follow the citations read by the previous speakers, should have been raised at first reading stage. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I can only conclude there is no merit in this point of order. It is a dilatory, stalling tactic.

We do not alter the rules of Parliament to accommodate political objectives and strategies. The rules are the rules; we all live by them. I think it is an abuse of the rules when there is an attempt made to frustrate the elected representatives in dealing with the nation's business. That is what is going on there. I think the point of order should be summarily dismissed and we should get back to the debate, get the Bill out of here and into committee, and allow the public to be heard.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to intervene on this point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) and to support the contention that Bill C-155 is an omnibus Bill which, under the rules of the House, is complicated and should be divided.

Before proceeding to my argument I would like to touch on the arguments made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith). First of all he finished his summation by suggesting that any objection to splitting the Bill must be made at first reading. This will have to be a very quick objection, if the Parliamentary Secretary can find some way for us to hear the motion for leave to print the Bill and then make the objection as it sort of travels to the Table before it is printed. One wonders just exactly how the mechanics of that will be worked out.

Second, I would suggest that it is not the position of the Chair to reject matters summarily, and thankfully the Chair does not reject points of order summarily, out of hand, as the Government would wish it to do. The Chair is naturally our protection that that shall not happen.

Third, I would like to comment on the voluntary nature of the Government's agreement to split the energy Bill, as the Government was dragged, kicking and screaming, to its point of volunteering on that very important Bill. The House will know that that manoeuvre, the Energy Security Act, which the Government tried to foist on the people and Parliament, was not backed up by the people, who supported our argument, the Conservative argument, that the Bill was odious and did not make any sense the way it was, with 12 pieces of legislation contained in the Bill. It was ultimately split into nine or ten separate Bills and the House dealt with them very expeditiously.

I have reviewed the argument made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), at the time of the Energy Security Act. I want to compliment him on the way he put forward the argument. One thinks that if he had not fallen by the wayside and became a Ph.D. in engineering, he would have made a good lawyer.

The first point I want to make to the Chair is that it is within the authority of the Chair to split a proposition placed before it by way of a motion or a Bill, as long as any Hon. Member objects to the items being taken together, and as long as each part is capable of standing on its own. I refer the Chair to Erskine May, on page 380, in which the reference is to complicated questions. It states:

> In 1888 . . . the Speaker ruled that two propositions which were then before the House in one motion could be taken separately if any Member objected to their being taken together (u). Although this ruling does not appear to have been based on any previous decision, it has since remained unchallenged (a). A complicated question, can, however, only be divided if each part is capable of standing on its own (b).

We submit that the Chair does have the authority to split the Bill.

There are four arguments which I wish to place before the Speaker. The first argument concerns relevancy. The point is made, in the precedents, that there must be a relevancy between the various parts of the Bill. Citation 703 of Beauchesne's, found on page 218, states:

> Although there is no specific set of rules or guidelines governing the content of a bill, there should be a theme of relevancy amongst the contents of a bill.

The question for the Chair is: is there a relevancy? Is there, as the Deputy Speaker said on May 6, 1971, a set of guidelines? Is there a theme that runs between the contents of the Bill and subject to the umbrella which is raided by the terminology of the long title of the Bill?

To expand my argument of relevancy I would point out that the title of the Bill is, "An Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof". There is no reference in the title of the Bill to the releasing of coal lands under Clause 62. There is no reference in the Bill to the upgrading of the railway lines. There is a reference to the setting of the freight rates.

Therefore, we submit that the question to the Chair, as far as relevancy is concerned, is this: is there a relevancy between trying to tie together, in one Bill, releasing coal lands, upgrading rail transportation in western Canada, and setting freight rates? We submit that there is no relevancy in the Bill as it is drafted.

The second part of our argument concerns debate at second reading, and just exactly what it means. Citation 734 of Beauchesne states that:

• (1120)

> The second reading is the most important stage through which the Bill is required to pass; for its whole principle is then at issue and is affirmed or denied by a vote of the House. It is not regular on this occasion, however, to discuss in detail the clauses of the Bill.

That citation is important because we are trying to debate what is contained in Bill C-155 on a coherent basis. It is difficult to do that when there are these competing interests within the Bill. More important, when debating time has been cut down through the new rules a Member must address himself or herself to three different aspects of the Bill within the ten-minute speech allotted at the second reading stage.

Once again I point out to the Chair that there are these three principles that we are debating—upgrading rail transportation, releasing coal lands, and setting grain freight rates. It is quite possible for a Member to be in favour of releasing the Dominion coal lands while at the same time violently opposing, as does the Progressive Conservative Party, the increase in grain freight rates. That is where we have difficulty in debating this Bill on a coherent basis at second reading.

The third part of our submission concerns the vote at second reading. At second reading stage the whole principle of the Bill is at question. Members of this House either affirm the principle of the Bill or deny it through one vote which we cast. It is impossible for us to cast a meaningful vote at second reading if there are competing interests within the Bill. We are not concerned if the Bill has one principle and its clauses expand on that principle to state how it will be carried into law. We are arguing that it is difficult to vote in a meaningful fashion if there are three competing principles upon which one vote must be passed. For that reason we submit that the Bill should be split by the Chair.

Finally, I wish to refer the House to Beauchesne, citation 120, which states that the Chair's responsibility is to see that debate, which includes votes, is carried forward in an orderly fashion. We suggest to the Chair that through that citation it has a responsibility to see that Bills have relevancy, that debate at second reading can be coherent, that the vote at second reading is meaningful and only addresses one principle, and that the Member should not be put at odds with different principles within the Bill.

In conclusion I would respectfully suggest to the Chair that the competing principles within the Bill, which are the upgrading of railway transportation lines, release of the Dominion coal lands, and the increase in the freight rates, set up an omnibus Bill situation or, "a complicated question" to which the Chair can rightfully address itself. In the interest of orderly debate and meaningful votes, the Chair should see the strength of our argument and split the Bill into the three areas suggested in order that the House can address itself to the principles of the Bill and vote in the way in which all of us were sent here to vote by our constituents.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: At this point the Chair has heard spokesmen from each of the three Parties. The Chair does not care to have a repetition of the argument. If Hon. Members have something new to add to the point of order the Chair will listen, but it is asking Hon. Members not to simply repeat argument.

I see the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) on his feet. I will ask him to be very brief and not repetitious.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order with what I think is new material and what also may be of assistance to the Chair in terms of what the Parliamentary Secretary had to say on the point of order. I agree with the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) that it was ridiculous when it was suggested that this point of order should have been raised at first reading. How it could have been raised at that time totally escapes me.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Simcoe North covered that point adequately. Does the Hon. Member have something to add to the point of order?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the Chair and the Parliamentary Secretary that roughly a month ago, May 19, we formally wrote to the Government requesting that the Bill be split. We made that letter public, and it was not until last Wednesday that the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) was told that the Government was not going to split the Bill.

• (1125)

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. If the Hon. Member is prepared to give argument, the Chair is prepared to hear it. But the Hon. Member is not giving argument; he is giving a history of previous events. This has been well stated by his House leader. The position of his Party has been given. The Chair invites argument on the merit of the point raised, not on another matter.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, you heard the arguments of the Parliamentary Secretary on the item about which I was just talking. It was not until last Thursday that my colleague from Hamilton Mountain could raise the point of order with the Chair because we waited until we had a response from the Government on the matter, and then the Hon. Member raised it at the first opportunity. For anybody to—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The timing is not an issue. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain has made his point. He has had ample opportunity to do it. I invite the Hon. Member not to waste the time of the House but to give his argument.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, that was an issue. It was made an issue by the Government, and I am responding to it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance).

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair does not propose to hear fallacious and repetitious points of order which add nothing to the debate. At this point the Chair has heard spokesmen from each of the main Parties. The Chair will defer, carefully review the record, and render a decision. At this stage the Chair will go back to the Hon. Member for Rosemont who had the floor.

Mr. Benjamin: I thought I had the floor, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member was abusing the time of the House. He was not dealing with the point of order.

Mr. Deans: That is nonsense.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is not prepared to hear repetition and wasteful interventions.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Calgary Centre.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain. I will not be repetitious or deal with arguments that have been put by my colleague, the House Leader for our Party.

I want to deal just briefly with the role of the Speaker and the role of the House as it pertains to addressing points of order of this type. As Mr. Speaker will be aware, this kind of question has vexed successive Speakers, and the history of points of order of this type goes back a number of years. It addressed the fundamental question of the role of the House of Commons, the purpose of the House of Commons, and the intent and purpose of divisions in the House.

Among the roles of the House of Commons perhaps the clear and most important one is the role of legitimizer, to legitimize or to legalize, if you will, the proposals of the Government. Obviously it is in the executive, in the Crown's interest, that this function not take too long. The role of the Speaker in this natural conflict between Government, with its desire to have expeditious treatment of its proposals, and Parliament, with its desire to give fair and proper consideration to the proposals that have been put forward by the Crown, is that of uniquely protecting the House from the Crown. Indeed, when Speakers are appointed, as is traditional they resist such appointment because in the past there have been Speakers who have offended the Crown. They have been known to lose their heads.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair invites the Hon. Member to be specific about the point of order before us. The Chair is well aware of the problem in the decision and is aware of the responsibility, but would the Hon. Member deal with the particular point of order before us?

• (1130)

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I will get very quickly to the point I was trying to make. I have no desire to take undue time. In terms of legitimizing and legalizing Crown proposals, the House is required to exercise responsibility by ultimately reaching a decision, by dividing. When we do so the majority prevails and the question put has the force of law, if passed. To do so, it is absolutely fundamental or imperative that the question put be clear, be simple, and be understood. It is impossible to get that kind of clarity from questions which contain more than one simple principle. For that reason the question of second reading, which is vote on principle, must be clear. To put in two, three, four or more principles makes that fundamental division or decision unclear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The point was well made by the House Leader of the Hon. Member's Party. He is not breaking new ground. I implore him, if he has something to contribute, to please get to the point, not repeat and take up the time of the House on a matter which has been well argued by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, let me sum up by saying that the argument has been well argued by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North. It has been well argued by many, many Members over a number of years. It has vexed Speaker after Speaker after Speaker, and it will continue to vex Speaker after Speaker after Speaker as long as there continues to be this mixing of principles. I suggest to the Chair that perhaps this is an appropriate time for this vexing problem to be put behind future Speakers, and that a decision be made in favour of the House, not the Crown—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has made his point. Again the Chair is appealing to the House. The Chair wants to hear anything which will assist in making a decision on the matter, but the Chair requests Hon. Members, please, do not give historical items or anecdotes, or matters that are irrelevant to the essential matters before us. Deal with the principles involved in a decision which the Chair must take.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on just a brief point which concerns the procedure and the process. As I understand it, you will defer decision on this and consider the arguments which have been made. I simply put to you that I suppose it will be with the understanding that the debate will go on. If you find that the Bill is improperly before the House, then the debate will certainly be superfluous.

While you, Mr. Speaker, undertake to consider the rendering of a decision, I would suggest that the debate on this particular measure be suspended or deferred. There are lots of other House business with which we can deal. While this issue is before the House, while the question of three or perhaps four basic principles fundamental to an omnibus piece of legislation is under consideration, I think the Speaker owes it to the House to have debate on the issue deferred and/or suspended. We can go on with other business.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member, the Chair is inviting argument in order to assist in rendering a decision on the point of order raised. The Chair invites interventions dealing with the point of argument at this point. After the Chair has heard argument that appears to be relevant, the Chair will give a decision as soon as it is possible to do so. The suggestion of the Chair is that the debate be continued, and the Chair will not unduly delay a decision.

At this stage are there Hon. Members who are prepared to contribute to the argument? The Hon. Member for Regina West, in the opinion of the Chair, did not get to any point of principle. For the Hon. Member to seek to be recognized on the same point of order when he has previously not dealt with the point of order, I think, is an abuse of the House. Are there other Hon. Members who are prepared—

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke.

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity I have had to speak on the separation of the Bill. I rose once before and was ruled out of order because we were speaking on the amendment. As the Member of Parliament involved with the 50,000 acres in my riding—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has been recognized. Will he please make his point of order?

Mr. Parker: My point of order is the fact that this Bill will deal with 50,000 acres of coal land that are in my riding. I am the only Hon. Member in this situation who will have to vote on this piece of legislation. If I want to support the Transportation Act—and I want to try to support the improvement of our transportation system—I will be allowing the Government to steal 50,000 acres of land from my riding.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member, this is not really relevant.

Mr. Deans: Of course it is relevant.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is seeking argument to assist in making a decision. The Hon. Member is not giving argument. I understand his concern. He has expressed his concern previously in the House. It is very real. There is no doubt that in the minds of his voters what he does is a very serious matter. But will the Hon. Member please deal with the point of order before the House?

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, my point of order concerns the fact that we have asked to have this Bill separated. I ask each and every Member of the House of Commons whether they can support a piece of legislation which unveils three items—the cost of grain transportation, improving the transportation system, and the actual outright stealing of 50,000 acres from the Province of British Columbia. I cannot, in all conscience. I say to every Member of Parliament that this Bill must be separated in a way that we can deal with the coal blocs. I, for one, want those coal blocs to be returned to the Province.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina West. Would he please deal with the point of order?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, the Crows Nest Pass Act of 1897 reserved certain lands and it also set certain freight rates. Those certain freight rates were removed from the Crows Nest Pass Act of 1897, put into the statutes of 1925 to 1927, and became the statutory rates.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member can give the House a lecture on the history of the statutes and on the history of the rates, but the issue before the Chair is a very specific one raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain. This is the fourth time in which the Hon. Member has not dealt with the point of order. How often does the Hon. Member expect to be recognized, if he will not deal with the point of order?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, if you had given me another five seconds you would have found out why the coal lands are totally unrelated to the other two principles in the Bill. That particular item can stand on its own.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That was a point made by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain. The Hon. Member is adding nothing to the debate at this point. He is only repeating what the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain very ably said in a previous sitting of the House. I implore Hon. Members at least to give the Chair the credit of paying attention to what is said and ask them not simply to repeat argument.

Mr. Lewycky: Mr. Speaker, I just want to add something. I have listened very carefully to the debate and I do not recall anyone mentioning it. Very specifically in our rules we have Standing Order 73 which indicates that no Bill may be introduced either in blank or in imperfect shape. Of course our contention is that this Bill is presently in an imperfect shape. I would humbly suggest to the Hon. Speaker that when he discusses this or gives his ruling—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Again the Hon. Member is raising a totally different point of order. This was not the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, which we are supposed to be discussing at this point. At this stage, after no many hours of debate before the House, it is very difficult for the Chair somehow to accept an argument that the Bill is in blank or imperfectly drafted shape. I invite Hon. Members to deal with the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain. I recognize the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, who has already had ample time.

• (1140)

Mr. Deans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to ask you a question in order to clarify the matter. Am I to understand from the comments that you have just completed that the question relating to the amount of time the Bill has been before the House is relevant to a decision which might be made as to whether or not—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has raised a point of order. The Chair is trying to contain the debate to the point of order raised by the Hon. Member. If he is trying to deal with another point of order at this stage—

Mr. Deans: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky) was raising a different line of attack on the Bill, an entirely different point of order. He was stating that the Bill was in imperfect form according to Section 72 of the Standing Orders, which is not the point raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain. Therefore, in the interest of trying to be relevant and in trying to deal with the business before the House, the Chair is asking if there are any further interventions on the point of the order before us.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, if you would be kind enough just to hear me out for less than a minute, perhaps I can explain. The question of the amount of time that the Bill has been before the House was raised in the interjection by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith). I am concerned that that particular reference may well influence the decision of the Chair. I am asking simply that if that particular reference is to influence the decision of the Chair, the Chair take into account, one, that we raised with the Government on May 19—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has set forth his record of what he has done. He has to have some confidence that the Chair will not be guided by extraneous considerations. The Chair does not intend to give the Hon. Member an opportunity to deal with every extraneous consideration introduced in this debate, because there have been many of them. The Chair will deal with the point of order raised by the Hon. Member in the context in which the Hon. Member set his point. The Chair will do its very best to do justice to the point that he has raised. It invites other Hon. Members, if they are intervening, to deal with the point of order and not deliberately waste the time of the House.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, in dealing with the point of order, I intend to deal with the two parts of the Bill and try to show you, Mr. Speaker, that the two areas are quite separate and that, in dealing with the two parts together, the Members of this House, as well as the country, are being forced to look at the Bill incorrectly. The Bill deals with a change in the statutory rates for grain. It does not deal with potash—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is making the same point made by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain made the point. He called it a complicated question dealing with other matters. That is the point that the Chair must decide. Is the Hon. Member adding to the argument? If so, in what way is he adding something fresh?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, the Bill does not deal with potash, freight rates, or coal freight rates. It does deal with grain freight rates. Grain accounts for 14 per cent of the movement through the mountains, and it is a much smaller percentage of the freight moved across Canada. Therefore there is no reason why grain freight rates should be connected to the upgrading of the railways when all of the other freight rates are not connected to it.

We recognize that the grain freight rates are statutory and therefore have to be dealt with by this House. They should continue to be statutory and to be dealt with by this House. To attach them to the upgrading to the railways is unnecessary. It has no relationship. If you do that, you should bring in every other freight rate as well.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I will try to stay relevant and not waste the time of the House in reviewing the arguments advanced by the Opposition as to why the Bill should be split. I would bring to the attention of the Chair, however, that I have reviewed carefully the statements made by the Parliamentary Secretary last Thursday. I did listen carefully to him in the House. I suggest that in our parliamentary tradition there must be some onus on the Government to advance argument as to why the Bill should not be split. There has not been one single argument advanced by a Government spokesperson as to why these principles should be contained in a single measure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Can the Hon. Member cite an instance where the Chair has directed the splitting of a Bill? It would be helpful.

Mr. Hawkes: If we go back to 1888, on that occasion the Speaker acted on the advice and on the complaint of a single Member of the House who felt Members had difficulty in voting on two principles in one vote.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is this citation from our own proceedings, from our House? If the Hon. Member could give it, it would be helpful.

Mr. Hawkes: I believe it is from the British House from which our traditions flow and where the creativity of action on the part of the Speaker flows.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Can the Hon. Member give the citation?

Mr. Hawkes: Erskine May.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Hon. Member quoting the citation given very eloquently by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), and by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, also eloquently? I believe that citation dealt with motions. It did not deal with Bills. Is that the citation? If so, the Hon. Member is not adding to the debate.

Mr. Deans: It is a motion, a motion for second reading.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is a Bill?

Mr. Deans: It is a motion for second reading.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain please take his seat? The Chair has spent a little time with the particular citation. The citation appears to deal with something which is called motions which, in the procedures of this Parliament and in the Parliament of Westminster, are governed separately under the rules and procedures. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain may shake his head but that does not establish him as the authority on the matter.

Mr. Deans: Neither are you; neither are you.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has to give evidence dealing with Bills. I am looking for it. If the Hon. Member for Calgary West has a citation that is relevant, the Chair would very much like to hear it. If it is merely a repetition of the previous citation, I suggest he is not adding to the debate. Does the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) have anything to add to the debate?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the contribution that I make to this debate is to point out to the Speaker that, while the issue has been raised on many occasions and the Speaker has found difficulty accepting the petition of Members of the Opposition, a careful reading of the previous debates will indicate that in every instance the Government was vigorous in its defence of the need to retain separate principles in a common piece of legislation. I suggest this situation is unique in the sense that the Government has not advanced a single argument as to why these three principles should remain in the legislation.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise very briefly on a point of order. I would urge upon the Chair that the precedents be examined with a view to improving the operation of the House. If the precedent cited from Erskine May was strictly on motions, I urge upon the Chair to view that precedent as it will assist the functioning of this House. If the Chair has to bridge the gap from motion to Bill in the interest of the House dealing properly with questions before it in terms of relevancy and votes on second reading and principle, I urge that the Chair look favourably upon bridging that gap from motion to Bill, and not cast out a precedent simply because it does not comply strictly with the definition of a motion vis-à-vis a Bill.

• (1150)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member will want the Chair to act properly with due regard to all the matters and all the arguments brought before us, which is what the Chair is trying to do.

At this stage are there further arguments dealing with the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain? If not, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance).

Mr. Mazankowski: I rise on point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) is rising again.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise just to make my point again. The fact is that there is a clear possibility that you will find—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have dealt with the matter raised by the Hon. Member for Vegreville. The Chair is taking the matter under consideration and, in fairness to Hon. Members, I am sure the House would be very unhappy if the Chair were to do otherwise.

The Chair is inviting the debate to continue, and the Chair will give a decision as soon as it is possible to weigh all the arguments that have been put forward. The Hon. Member for Rosemont.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point or order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has been recognized on a point of order and the Chair has ruled on the point of order. If the Hon. Member is making the same point of order, there is no appeal.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I simply point out that this debate ought not attempt to go forward until the decision is available.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Rosemont.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain rises on a question of privilege. Again, I appeal to Hon. Members not to make false points and interventions that are not directed to true questions of privilege. If the Hon. Member is raising a question of privilege, will he state it?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is that at the time the Chair interrupted me while I was attempting to raise a point of order, the Chair made reference to Members wasting the time of the House. I want to reserve the right to review the "blues" and I will, if need be, challenge the Chair on that particular assertion.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. Members will have to judge the record by itself. The record will stand. The Hon. Member for Rosemont.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I would like to broach the problem underlying Bill C-155 in terms of the expansion of our export markets.

Our rail lines are the main arteries along which grain and other products are moved to export markets that are vital to the Canadian economy. Before the sixties, Canada's rail transportation system was capable of handling market expansion. However, with the advent of the sixties, our rail system began to handle other products such as coal, sulphur and potash in addition to grain. The handling capability of our rail system was simply not great enough to bring these products to our ports and, eventually, to foreign markets.

Back in the sixties, our rail lines handled only about 10 million tons annually. By 1980, the volume handled had already tripled. And, looking ahead to 1990, we can make the following projections for the commodities I mentioned earlier. By 1990, it is estimated that the system will move 53.3 million tons of coal compared with 14.1 million tons in 1980. For grain, the projected volume is 19 million tons compared to 10 million tons, for sulphur, 6.8 million tons compared to 5.4 million tons and for potash, 9 million tons compared to 3.6 million tons. Why is it so important for Canadians to tap foreign markets? How can our rail systems help to develop these markets? The answer is quite simple. These commodities, which come primarily from western Canada, can only be moved economically by rail.

To handle the increase in rail traffic, the railway authorities have been spending money for the past twenty years on improvements to the system. While I won't give you a complete rundown of all the improvements made, I will say that we are all aware of the nature of these investments which totalled approximately $2.4 billion. For the most part, these $2.4 billion came from the public coffers. Various subsidies and grants have made it possible for these companies to expand and upgrade the rail system.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that these improvements have now reached their limit and that a single track system, as opposed to a double track system, will not be able to handle the projected increase in volume that I quoted earlier for 1990. Therefore, we have to invest, and invest considerably, in order to be able to export enough commodities to enable us to survive as a trading nation. I would like at this time to quote another statistic: it is estimated that a single track is capable of handling between 30 million tons and 43 million tons per mile. We would have to move approximately 80 million tons per mile by 1990 if we wanted to meet the objectives to which I alluded earlier on. How much will this cost between 1981 and 1985? It is estimated that $7.7 billion will be needed to expand the rail system, that is about three times the amount invested during the sixties and seventies. If we look ahead to 1990, we are talking about $18 billion. And the total CN and CP revenues, before the economic recession, were somewhere around $4.6 billion. Therefore, we need to come up with an additional $3.1 billion and we have to realize that the chances of the railways securing financing from the private sector, either the private bond market or the private lending market, are rather limited.

What is the root of the problem? The fact is that while grain handling accounts for 20 per cent of overall system utilization, only 3.5 per cent of the income from the rail system stems from grain handling. And why is this? Clearly it is because of the statutory Crow freight rate which dates back to 1898, and which today represents only 18 per cent of actual grain transportation costs. It is estimated that it will account for only 9 per cent of real costs by 1990. It is also estimated that the income lost because of the freight rate amounted to approximately $469 million in 1980 and $670 million for 1981-82, considering that this was a bumper year. Why am I quoting all of these figures? Because, Mr. Speaker, with the exception of the New Democratic Party and the National Farmers Union, everyone seems to agree that the system needs to be upgraded and everyone seems to agree that the whole issue of the 1898 grain transportation freight rate needs to be reviewed.

We have no true alternative. If we do not move, we will be unable to transport the commodities we should transport by 1990. We will lose our markets abroad and Canada's reputation will suffer. We do not want to have to face such dire consequences and for this reason, we must review immediately the whole question of rail transportation and, in particular, the question of the grain freight rate. If, by 1985, a mere 10 per cent of potential exports could not be transported by rail because our system was inadequate, we would still stand to lose one billion dollars. The solution proposed by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has been the focus of numerous and lengthy debates and it's a good thing that this is so.

I had the opportunity to participate in the debate some time ago to deplore the fact that some Members do not even want us to debate this question in the House. They have tried a series of measures and manœuvres to prevent the House from debating the question of the Crow rate and the proposed amendments. They have prevented the House from doing its job. With respect to the proposals of the Minister of Transport, the ideal place to discuss his proposals and eventually to make any necessary changes would be in committee. This is a matter for the Transport Committee to deal with. However, Mr. Speaker, they are opposed even to referring this matter to the Transport Committee. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, and because I think the House must come to a decision on this matter, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras):

That the question be now put.

• (1200)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If I have correctly understood the Hon. Member, he has moved the previous question. The Chair proposes not to accept or pass judgment on the motion until the Chair has had an opportunity to render a decision on a point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain. Therefore, the Chair will simply defer consideration of this motion until the Chair has been able to deal with the point of order.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I take it, though, that the previous question has in fact been properly moved by the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance), in the event the Chair does dismiss the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Depending on the finding of the Chair, it may well be that the motion could be considered. It depends on the view of the Chair and the Chair at this point is not passing judgment or putting the motion before the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) on a point of order.

Mr. Lachance: If I understand correctly, the question has been properly moved, but you are deferring presentation of the motion in the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is correct.

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of clarification, am I to understand that in the event that the Chair finds that the Bill is properly before the House and that it should not be separated, you will then entertain arguments as to the procedural validity of the motion which has been presented?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair at that point will consider the motion which has been presented. Whether there is a point of order raised at that point, the Chair is not in any way going to try to anticipate. The Chair will deal with the motion as presented after having dealt with the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I assume that the Chair will then entertain points of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair makes no commitment other than to deal with the motion.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, following the reference to the previous question on page 157 of Beauchesne, wherein it refers to page 327 of Bourinot, it states that once it is proposed—that is the previous question—the debate may continue on the original question. Therefore, am I to assume that we will continue debate on the original—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This has been the procedure of the Chair, to continue debate until such time as the Chair has had an opportunity carefully to review the record, render a decision on the point of order, and then deal with the motion as proposed. I believe the House understands that. Are there other speakers on the main question?

Mr. Towers: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Is that motion proper to be either accepted or rejected?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is not dealing with the matter at this point. The Chair is going to render a decision on the point raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, at which time the Chair will consider the motion as proposed.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, to go back to my original point, the fact of the matter is that this Bill may very well be improperly before the House. All you are doing by taking the position that you have is simply to—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is—

Mr. Mazankowski: As I understand it, that particular motion should be put immediately.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will not put that motion until the Chair has dealt with the point of order. Hon. Members should understand this. It is a perfectly regular procedure.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Excuse me. Perhaps for the benefit of the record, the previous question is a debatable motion. There is no question about that. Any Hon. Member who would like to intervene in debate will certainly have an opportunity to intervene in debate on that motion, in case that was the point of the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski).

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, you are not accepting that motion until you render a decision on the point of order?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is perfectly correct.

Mr. Mazankowski: In that case, we have the potential of two possible motions—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will try to deal in an orderly way with the point of order and then the motion.

Meanwhile, the Chair asks the indulgence of the House to let the debate continue until the Chair can do its best to sort out the matters placed before it. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) on a point of order?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, it is really in the form of a question. Right now you are considering the previous point of order put by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). I wonder how you can accept a motion from—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair has not accepted any motions at this point. The Chair has given the floor to the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski).

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, upon rising at this particular juncture to participate in the debate, I would like to say that I was somewhat amazed when I heard the comment of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) who is proposing these changes that there should be so much opposition to his suggested changes. The Minister, as one well knows, comes from the Province of Quebec where the people take the issue of culture very seriously, and so they should. He was one of the members of the Pepin-Roberts Commission which studied the question. Of course, it was with the intent that a particular grievance in a particular part of the country had to be dealt with. What this Minister apparently is not aware of, as well as, apparently, all the Government Members, is that the Crow rate itself is part of western culture, and so it has become.

While many people regard Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta as the Prairies, it is not really so because while the CBC would have us believe that the people settled on the grass of the Prairies, much of western Canada was developed by the sweat of the brows of people settling there from many parts of the world. They did it by swinging the axe and many of us have participated in that development personally. I wonder if Hon. Members know what it is like to work in the heat? I see an Hon. Member here who originally came from my constituency. He knows what it is like. He knows that under the heat of the sun on a day like today every tree had to be hacked away. That land had to be developed by the sweat of the brows of these people who see in this Bill something being taken away. What they see is the Government telling them that all their efforts are for naught because the Government is going to change their way of life. It says so itself. The Government says it is going to change and transform western Canada. In other words, what has happened before has got to go by the board.

There has been opposition to this. Already two good amendments have been accepted by the Minister of Transport. How did they come about? Not by keeping silent.

The Indian wants his culture, and so he should. We in western Canada want it to be recognized that we played a part in the development of this country. It is for this reason, which goes beyond the development of a railway, which is strictly economical in terms of development of one particular segment of the economy, that we plead with this Government, and it is for that reason we have put up 52 speakers, as opposed to the 23 of the New Democratic Party and the eight of the Liberals. The composition of the committee is six Liberal Members, three Conservative Members and one New Democratic Member. It is there where the Government is going to open up. Why? Because it will overpower opposition Members.

• (1210)

The Hon. Member for Vegreville very clearly enunciated 14 points. Up until now the Minister has answered two of those points. He says he draws the line there. Why? Were the other 12 points not valid? Surely they are going to be considered in committee. If so, he must have had a chance to study them by now. If they are going to be valid in committee, they should be valid now. When will the answers be coming forward? Has the Minister or anyone else explained why the other suggestions or points are not to be put forward and are not valid? They had a golden opportunity to do this. We have already had some changes as a result of debate. A fifty-fifty payment was suggested and since then the Government has withdrawn this.

We came forward with another option concerning the right of the farmer to decide whether he gets the money himself or it should go to the railways. That evolved as the result of debate, not as a result of silence. The Government wants to impose silence upon us. For what justifiable reason? Just to hide this issue. When we debate an issue in this House it is on television, but in committee it is buried very silently with only a few reporters covering the proceedings and only the few people who care to read those proceedings know what has happened.

What we are doing, Mr. Speaker, is pointing an accusing finger at this Government which is trying to destroy western culture. I suggest it is time we call a spade a spade. For example, some of the mish-mash this Government is suggesting is that there will be some sort of a 10 per cent safety net. The Government throws in a little bit of this, a little bit of that. My wife does a lot of cooking and she throws in a little bit of this and little bit of that. Of course, she knows what she is doing but, watching from the sidelines, I do not. The Government might suggest that there is a safety net of 10 per cent. Nonsense. What about the amount in excess of the 31.1 million tonnes? Where does that enter into it? Has the Minister explained that? He has not. What about 6 per cent inflation? Has he explained that to my satisfaction or the satisfaction of anyone else? No, he has not bothered. He says: "Trust me". I am not going to trust someone who keeps silent, someone who will bury this Bill in a committee and then railroad it through.

What can one say in ten minutes, Mr. Speaker? Very little. I could go on and on, but because of the time limitation I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Vegreville:

That this debate be now adjourned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House has heard the motion. All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Korchinski), which was negatived on the following division:

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

If Members would now like to proceed to Routine Proceedings, I could do that. However, I am ready to rule on the point of order that was raised about the Bill that is before the House. I could do that immediately before Routine Proceedings, or now.

Some Hon. Members: Now.

Madam Speaker: Now, very well.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, since it was my point of order I would rather you ruled after Routine Proceedings.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

THE ROYAL FAMILY

FAMILY LIFE EXAMPLE SET BY PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, ours is an age where family life is seriously threatened by so-called marriage breakdowns. With divorce rates doubling in Canada between 1968 and 1978 from 124 divorces to 243 divorces for every 100,000 marriages, 456,000 children are now directly affected. When some current lifestyles are eroding Christian marriage and family values, there is a need for healthy family role models to help to restore the balance.

Today we are hosting such a role model in the persons of their Royal Highnesses, the Prince and Princess of Wales. This Royal couple, despite the heavy demands of public life, show a strong commitment to each other and are mutually supportive.

The Prince fulfilled his expectant father's task as "labour coach" at the delivery of their son. Both are comfortable and enjoy their child. Both take time out for family life activities.

Their popularity attests to the respect the public holds for a couple who so generously expend their energies in the duties of their calling and on giving and sharing love within marriage and the family.

MEDICAL CARE

CONDEMNATION OF MINISTER'S ACTIONS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of the House the fact that today we have a Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) whose actions are threatening to destroy the medicare system. I bring to the attention of the House the fact that the Minister has gone one year without meeting with provincial counterparts, and refuses such meetings. I bring to the attention of the House that the Minister chose New York City in which to announce a major change in health policy, a change which would double-tax Canadians. I bring to the attention of the House that, in response to that announcement, Mr. Nielson, the Minister in British Columbia, threatened to pull that Province out of the medicare system.

• (1410)

I bring to the attention of the House that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in an interview in Le Devoir last weekend, said:

[Translation]

—we risk the destruction of Medicare—

[English]

"We risk the destruction of the medicare system." Those are the words of the Prime Minister to Le Devoir. We have a Minister of National Health and Welfare who refuses to recognize the federal nature of the country and, in so doing, brings the whole medicare system into question, which Canadians will never forgive.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GUATEMALA—PLIGHT OF MAYAN INDIANS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, under General Rios Montt, the Government of Guatemala continues to rage genocidal war against the Mayan Indians of that country. As a result of army activities against their villages, an estimated million Indians are internal refugees, while thousands more are crowded into refugee camps in Mexico. Recently the Guatemalan Government proclaimed a false amnesty and stopped military activity, but when people returned to their villages they had to register with both civilian and military officials and faced intensive questioning. Now many of these people face a process of selective assassination and torture.

In Canada the Assembly of First Nations presented information to the Department of External Affairs concerning sites where torture and mass executions have taken place. The time has come for Canada to abandon its policy of silent agreement with the Reagan line that the Guatemalan Government is only engaged in protecting the state from Marxist guerrillas. The killings and torture must be seen as a war of extermination against the indigenous people of Guatemala, not as an extension of the East-West conflict. Canada must insist on a thorough international investigation, including visits to the sites where the atrocities are alleged to have taken place.

POLITICAL PARTIES

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY—POLICY ON PEACE MOVEMENT

Mr. Denis Ethier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, on Friday last week the Mulroney Tories made it very clear through their spokesman, the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), that they are against all peaceful and democratic demonstration; they are against the peace movement.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ethier: Do the Mulroney Tories know that peaceful demonstration is a fundamental right in our democratic system? Is this an indication of what a Mulroney government would do if ever given a mandate to govern? Would its first move be to abolish the right of peaceful and democratic demonstration? Since the Tories are given the respected title of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, it seems only reasonable that their Leader make a public statement on this issue and, while making such a statement, he could tell us where he stands on such issues as capital punishment, abortion, offshore resources, upgrading the rail system in western Canada, or the metric system, for that matter.

DOCTRINE OF MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, one of the fundamental principles of representative democracy is that the Minister must be responsible and accountable for actions and/or lack of actions of those in his Ministry. In other words, if a Department or corporation becomes inefficient, careless and dishonest, deliberately or otherwise, the Minister must take the responsibility.

Senator Austin, the Minister responsible for CDIC, has blamed the Corporation President, who has now resigned, for the $1.7 billion losses of Canadair and de Havilland Aircraft. The directors must share this responsibility, and the auditors' credibility is open to question, but most of all the Minister in charge must be held accountable for the gigantic loss of taxpayers' money.

Senator Austin inadvertently condemned himself when he said that the records "do not reveal the calibre of business shrewdness which we as shareholders should expect". When did the Minister reach this conclusion? What did he do about the continuing losses? Why is he hiding the facts? Even yet the commercial details of the losses have not been put on the table.

Did the Minister sit in silence, knowing that Canadair and de Havilland were spending public money like an intoxicated millionaire?

Negligence, and perhaps dishonesty, are written all over this loss of millions of dollars. I say that Senator Austin must resign and, if he does not, the people of Canada will want to know what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will do about it.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT LEVELS—MINISTER'S FORECASTS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, in the temporary absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, perhaps I will direct my question even more appropriately to the Minister of Finance. The Minister knows that unemployment in the United States is now down to 10 per cent and is expected shortly to break that double digit level. Yet, earlier this month Statistics Canada released figures showing that for ten consecutive months unemployment in Canada exceeded 12 per cent. On behalf of two million unemployed Canadians, a million of whom are now classified as long-term unemployed, I want to ask the Minister whether he is in a position to revise the very pessimistic projections in his budget where he saw double digit unemployment going beyond this decade. Can he give us any hope?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is certainly confused in his signals. He referred to double digit inflation.

Mr. McGrath: I meant double digit unemployment.

Mr. Lalonde: He meant double digit unemployment. The forecast which the Hon. Member has read as part of the budget indicated that we would be taking unemployment down gradually during the next four years to below the double digit level referred to by the Hon. Member. But I remind him that for seven months in a row we have had increased employment in this country. At the present time there are 330,000 more people employed than last November. The recovery, according to all the information we have been receiving, seems to be taking place in an even stronger rate than we anticipated.

Certainly the Hon. Member has noticed the leading indicator of Statistics Canada which in March had its largest increase since the early 1950s. Indeed it seems to be indicating that we will have and know a very strong recovery in this country as well as in the United States. I certainly expect that as unemployment levels in the United States decline they will also decline in Canada.

PLIGHT OF UNEMPLOYED

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The Minister knows that there are a million Canadians now who are classified as long-term unemployed. He also knows from his own statistics that unemployed heads of families have risen by 100 per cent. These are very frightening statistics, yet he talks about economic recovery.

How can the Minister stand in the House and talk about recovery when there are two million Canadians unemployed, when there are a million Canadians who are classified as long-term unemployed, and when there are a half million young people who cannot find jobs? Let him tell these people where the economic recovery is.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member may refuse to look at the whole reality, but the facts are there for him to see that recovery is taking place strongly in the country. We have created 300,000 jobs since last November. This is a critical record compared with any industrialized country at the present time.

I remind my hon. friend that unemployment is very high in other industrialized countries at the present time. We have been going through a recession the like of which we have not seen since the Great Depression. This has been the case for all industrialized countries. A number of countries in Europe at the present time have more than 12 per cent unemployment. These are countries which historically had much lower levels of unemployment than Canada.

The Government and I are very concerned about the level of unemployment. We have announced a number of measures that were contained in the budget, in addition to those the Minister of Employment and Immigration has announced. We are spending in this country at the present time record levels in terms of support for direct employment, job training, and recycling. This is the record of the Government. We have shown our care for the unemployed in the country and not only involved ourselves in rhetoric.

STUDENT UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to another Minister who has responsibility, the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister knows that the unemployment rate for non-returning students between the ages of 20 and 24 is currently 31.6 per cent. The unemployment rate for returning students is 20.7 per cent which, I might say, is an increase of 75 per cent over two years. What hope does the Minister have for these kids out there who have no place to go but to take to the streets?

• (1420)

In the estimation of a sociologist at the University of Montreal, "Collectively we may see political riots and disturbances from a group that feels left out". Obviously they feel left out. They are graduates with no job opportunities in what is supposed to be a land of opportunity. What is the Minister going to do? Is he going to give us more money for student employment? That is the very least he can do for these unemployed young people.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am very glad that the Hon. Member asked a question about what we are doing because it gives me the opportunity to tell him exactly what has been put in place. We have introduced the National Training Program through which, this year alone, we will be spending about $1.2 billion for training over 300,000 people, most of whom are young people under the age of 24. In the last six months we have invested in creating an additional 15,000 training places under that program in every region of Canada.

In addition, we have also brought forward a new employment program where we will provide direct subsidies to private employers to provide on the job work experience and training for students coming out and looking for their first-time job. That program will be coming into effect on September 1. We will be making the information available at that time.

We are following through on the principle of working with other major actors in the economy, like the private employers who can help young people and can give them the hope the Hon. Member is not prepared to give them by his comments.

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDING

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, let us take the summer employment program, for example. If you take 1979 as a base year and take the rate of inflation since 1979, the Minister is actually putting in less money today to the Summer Student Employment Program than he was five years ago. These are the statistics. Is the Minister at least prepared to add more money to create more jobs in the Canada Student Employment Program?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, one of the things I should point out is that in that five-year period we went through a very serious time under the auspices of the previous Government when all of the direct employment programs were cancelled by the Conservative Government. We have had to make up for that omission ever since, by having to build new programs and put them in place. That happens to be the case. What we are doing this year for summer employment is providing job opportunities for upwards of 75,000 students across the country. We are presently engaged in a nation-wide campaign to bring on board other employers at the provincial and municipal levels, as well as private employers. We are trying to do our best, unlike Members opposite who, when they were in Government, did nothing at all.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Calgary West.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, the Minister conveniently forgets that jobs increased by 30,000 a month in the private sector when we were in Government.

EDUCATION

CONTENT OF SCHOOL MANUALS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. A study published today has found that most books used in Canadian schools are neither written nor published by Canadians and do not reflect a Canadian point of view. Does the same situation exist as far as francophone students are concerned, and if not, why not?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I understand the Hon. Member's interest in the subject, and I am sure that those of us on this side of the House who have children are equally concerned. However, the Hon. Member ought to know that education matters fall under provincial jurisdiction, and that especially at the level he is referring to, namely, primary and secondary schools, the Canadian Government has no authority to dictate what kind of books are to be used nor to influence their content in any way.

[English]

FUNDING SOUGHT FOR ENGLISH TEXTBOOKS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister will know that under his predecessor, and carried on under his Government, a special program was produced for funding the creation of books for textbook purposes in the French language in Canada, in the late 1960s. Given the results of that study today, are the Prime Minister and his Government, some 18 years later, considering a similar program for English-speaking schools and English textbooks? It is long overdue.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the funds that the federal Government in recent years, certainly under my administration, has devoted to the area of education have been essentially for post-secondary education. It is true that we have provided funds for second language training under various programs promoted by the Secretary of State. I know of none which were directed specifically at the primary school level. I cannot recollect the program in the late 1960s to which the Hon. Member is referring. I will draw the attention of my colleague, the Secretary of State, to that program and be in a position to answer the Hon. Member when he asks the question again.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

IMPLEMENTATION OF CHANGES TO CROWSNEST PASS RATE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The Minister will know that on a number of occasions the Government of which he is a part indicated that it believed it was in the position to proceed with the implementation of certain legislation based on the fact that the legislation had received approval in principle, in other words, that the legislation had received second reading. I want to ask him a question specifically with regard to the grain transportation Bill. Can he assure the House that the Government has no intention of implementing those clauses of the Bill dealing directly with the changes to the Crowsnest Pass freight rates in advance of that legislation having received Royal Assent?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Quite right, Madam Speaker.

INQUIRY RESPECTING POSSIBLE RETROACTIVITY OF PROVISIONS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, can the Minister likewise assure the House that, under no circumstances, will the legislation dealing with the Crowsnest Pass freight rate sections be made retroactive upon passage of the legislation and its receiving Royal Assent?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I do not think I have to give legal advice, but to the best of my knowledge it is not going to be so. We have, however, made some interim payments to the railways.

Mr. Deans: That is a different matter.

Mr. Pepin: That is a different matter. We paid money for the purchase of hopper cars. Presumably that is a different matter also. Failing exact knowledge of what my hon. friend has in mind, I cannot read his eyes yet—on other matters, yes I can. When he tries to block a Bill, I can read his eyes all right. As I was saying not knowing full well what he has in mind, I can only say that, to the best of our ability, we have no intention of breaking the law.

PUBLIC SERVICE

AVERAGE WAGE INCREASES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It touches on a statement made by the Minister to the Canadian Manufacturer's Association recently, in which he stated:

—it would be very difficult to justify 8 per cent average increases for senior management salaries.

In fact it would be impossible to justify.

Having made that statement, will the Minister indicate to the House whether he is aware of the fact that the average increase for public servants in ten different Departments or programs that we reviewed was 17.2 per cent? In fact we find the National Capital Commission had wage increases of 18.2 per cent, DREE 18.6 per cent, and the Governor General 15.5 per cent. That is if you compare Main Estimates 1984 to Main Estimates 1983. Is the Minister aware of that and, if so, how does he justify it?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member would like to be a little more precise and also a little more accurate in the way he interprets the facts. The figures he is giving have no connection with the salary increases of the persons concerned. Federal public servants have had their salary increments limited to 6 per cent for 1983 and 5 per cent for 1984. Those are the ceilings that were set. Now, if, in a department, certain positions are reclassified, and if people are promoted to other duties, or if there is an increase in the number of public servants in a specific department, obviously, the total wage bill for that department will increase more than 6 per cent, but I challenge the Hon. Member to prove that the average salary of employees working, for instance, for the National Capital Commission, has increased more than 6 per cent.

• (1430)

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, of course I will take up that challenge.

COMPARISON OF MAIN ESTIMATES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my further question to the Minister of Finance is to ask, on behalf of the people of Canada, if he would look at what is set out in the Main Estimates 1984, compare that to the salaries in the Main Estimates 1983, then divide that by the average number of employees in whatever Department he wants to look at. If he would take the time to do that I think he would find that one-quarter of the 131 Departments and programs have average incomes increasing over 10 per cent between those two Estimates. Would he look at that, and then would he come back and have the courage to tell the House that he is sorry for giving misinformation and is duly critical of the Departments concerned?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I can obviously see that the Hon. Member has already started shifting his ground. Having asked the first question in a specific way, he is now clearly changing the way he is asking the question. What happens is what I have said in French: the increases for individual civil servants are set at 6 per cent this year and 5 per cent next year. If there are other changes in salaries they are related either to promotion or changes of functions, or if the total amount—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: Now you are changing your position.

Mr. Lalonde: I can understand, for instance, that the Hon. Leader of the Opposition has enjoyed an increase in salary of more than 6 per cent this year compared to what he had before he succeeded the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: No one has been walking around being scandalized that he made that huge increase in the last little while. For all I know he may have a decrease before the end of the year.

One does not go around making a big show saying it is terrible that the six and five program is not respected. Situations have changed.

If the Hon. Member looks at the total levels of remuneration and the total amount of money spent on salaries, obviously it will increase by more than 6 per cent in a number of Departments. It is related to either changes in functions or the increase in the number of public servants, or both. This is quite normal and it had been foreseen. The law passed by Parliament is quite clear—6 per cent and 5 per cent, maximum. As a matter of fact my hon. friend will find that a number of individuals in the Government received less than six and five.

MEDICAL CARE

PRIME MINISTER'S COMMENTS ON INTRODUCTION OF USER FEES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Given the fact that the Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated that under existing legislation she has no choice but to withhold federal funds from Provinces that adopt user fees under the medicare program, I wonder if the Prime Minister would please clarify comments attributed to him in today's press which seem to contradict the position of the Minister of National Health and Welfare on this matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I will be happy to do that without referring to the entire interview from which the Canadian Press seized upon an excerpt. I would say in general terms that I believe I made it clear that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is on the right track; that she is negotiating with the Provinces; that we hope that the Provinces themselves will see that it is the will of the people to preserve medicare in its integrity and its entirety, and that there will be no need for the kind of confrontation by the people that in this case the interviewer suggested.

I am convinced that the people of Canada—and I made this quite clear in the interview—are on the side of the Minister of National Health and Welfare rather than on the side of the Premier of Alberta. In the interview I said that for ideological reasons, certainly not for reasons of the poverty of that Province, he is introducing deterrent fees of one kind or another.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

NEGOTIATIONS WITH CAST SHIPPING GROUP

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport with reference to press reports late last week which indicate that Canadian National and Cast had broken off negotiations for Canadian National's takeover of Cast. I wonder if the Minister could confirm whether this is true. Also, if talks have terminated could he confirm that this means that the Canadian taxpayer will not be asked to absorb 75 per cent of the Cast debt whereas the Royal Bank of Canada, which in fact is the principal creditor, would only have to absorb 25 per cent?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, there are two things to be considered. First, I have not been notified by CN of the ending of negotiations. Consequently I gather that they are still in negotiation in some form or other. Second, I read in the papers that the banks were trying very hard to save their investment, so I put the two things together and I say wait a little while longer.

Mr. Forrestall: Madam Speaker, the sooner we lay this bogeyman to rest one way or another, the better.

BARGAINING BY CAST GROUP

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, I understand from what the Minister said that he has not been formally advised by either Canadian National Railways or the Royal Bank of Canada that negotiations ought to be terminated. If that is the case, may I put the second part of my question to the Minister? It is of primary concern, notwithstanding any dispute between the Port of Halifax and the Port of Montreal in a competitive way, or a freight war which could very well flow from this. May I ask the Minister whether one of two situations exist? Is Frank Narby, the principal of Cast, applying tighter bargaining that extends beyond the Order in Council which authorized CN to enter into negotiations or, on the other hand, does this now mean that the Canadian taxpayer will not have to pick up a little bit more of the debt of the Royal Bank of Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I would allow my friend to put whatever interpretation he wants on the events that are taking place now. I leave that to his freedom of thought and of expression.

The Government put in an Order in Council the terms it would accept. Between the two of us, I think the difficulties were irking earlier than that in the sense that the present owners were making difficulties before the Government issued the Order in Council. By issuing an Order in Council, the Governor in Council indicated clearly what were the possibilities.

FEDERAL FUNDING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, my question is about the same matter as that brought up by the Hon. Member for Algoma, the conflicting messages we are getting from the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Prime Minister vis-à-vis the federal Government's intention to withhold funds from Alberta, either under existing legislation or under any future legislation which may provide for that kind of capacity on the part of the federal Government.

My first question is directed to the Prime Minister. It seems to me that it is not good enough to say that your Minister is on the right track. I would hope you would want to say that about any of your Ministers; at least you would want to say that.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Blaikie: Would you be more clear and indicate to the House whether, as you are reported to have done, you have ruled out the question of economic sanctions against Provinces—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Blaikie: —which continue to violate national standards for medicare? Have you ruled those kinds of sanctions out?

An Hon. Member: Address the Chair.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, may I answer the Member and confirm what I have often repeated in Canada in the last weeks, namely, that that particular decision, which would be to use the existing provision of withholding funds under legislation, has not been finalized yet by Cabinet.

As I have often said, following the basic philosophy of the Government which was so well expressed by the Prime Minister on Saturday in Le Devoir, if there is one case for universality in Canada, it is medicare. We are appealing to the Canadian public right now to make sure that we have understood well what we know for sure has been their wish for 20 years, namely, to strengthen medicare in the new Act, probably by introducing more adequate penalties to deal with each of the possible breaches of medicare—to strengthen it once and for all for another 20 or 30 years.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, the Minister has indicated her intention to go beyond the penalties which are now available to her under the existing legislation, hopefully by having more flexible penalties in any new Canada Health Act. Can the Minister tell us when we are going to see the Canada Health Act when the long awaited document is going to be before us? Are we going to receive it before the end of June, as I have suggested many times in this House, so that pro medicare people would have a viable political option around which to rally? Or are we going to have to wait the Fall and have action on the erosion of medicare postponed once again?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Blaikie: And if we are not going to receive it until the Fall, what are we going to get by the end of June—more homilies from the Minister, or are we going to get some kind of action?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): By the way, Madam Speaker, may I take the opportunity to thank the Hon. Member for his good offices. For the first time in four years one provincial Minister had the guts and the common sense, thinking he would have to be re-elected one day, to be on the side of medicare and of Canadians. I am referring, of course, to the Minister of Health and Manitoba, Mr. Laurent Desjardins. That was very welcome. In the same way, every one of the 22 million other Canadians is saying publicly that they are on the side of medicare. We believed the Provinces last May when they said they would be ready to control extra billing and user fees. Therefore, there were no requisite provisions to control user fees when suddenly the very provocative initiatives of Alberta, New Brunswick, and British Columbia are making it necessary to review the Act. As soon as it will be ready it will be presented to my colleagues first, and then the House.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL NEGOTIATIONS—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister on the same subject. I do not believe the issue can be separated into some people or some provincial Governments not being in favour of medicare. I believe all Canadians want to see universal medicare preserved.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: It being the case that obviously there are negotiations which are critical in terms of the ability of the provincial Governments, and of the taxpayer, for that matter, to sustain programs, I would like to ask the Prime Minister, as he approaches these negotiations, whether he approaches them from the point of view that the federal will must prevail, or whether he looks at these negotiations in an attempt not only to strengthen medicare but also to establish a working relationship with the Provinces, so that the people who deliver these programs, that is, the Provinces, have the ability to bring those programs forward in a way which is also affordable.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I did not hear the last word.

Mr. Epp: Affordable.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the sentiments of the Hon. Member and I hope he is right that all Canadians support medicare. That is the premise on which, I believe, the Minister of National Health and Welfare is proceeding, that Canadians want the preservation of medicare. I must respectfully disagree with the Hon. Member when the suggests that there is no Province, if I understood him well, which wants to alter medicare as it now exists. I said quite clearly, in the interview which has been referred to, that I believe there is an ideological struggle here. I believe some provincial Governments do not believe in medicare as it has existed. I believe that they are introducing the kind of user fees which might, in the mind of the Hon. Member, and in mine, provide a deterrent to the universality of the scheme. However, that is precisely what the Minister of Health and Welfare is trying to determine now.

We certainly do not see a confrontation. We certainly do not want to use any financial penalty. That is what I was telling the interviewer. We would prefer to see medicare preserved in its essence through a process of discussion. In that sense, that is why the Minister is proceeding as she is. I do hope that the Hon. Member is right in so far as his Leader is concerned, that we will hear from Mr. Mulroney very soon, saying that he also wants the preservation of medicare and that he will realize that the Premier of Alberta, for one, for ideological reasons, does not seem to agree with the concept of medicare now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF ARMY, NAVY AND AIR FORCE UNIFORMS

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. The Minister will know the debacle which our Navy is in by reading the recent Senate report. He also is quite aware of the report which we completed on the reserve army and its complete and total lack of necessary equipment. He also is aware of the Fyffe Report, which stated categorically that the morale of the forces was low and that one of the easiest ways to put that morale back in place was to return to three distinctive uniforms. Would the Minister comment on whether or not he is recommending such a switch?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I believe the subject has been raised quite often by my own Department, of course, and by individuals from the Air Force, Navy, and even the Army. My answer has always been that, despite the fact that this could well be desirable, in one way or another I feel what is more desirable for the armed forces is the re-equipment program which was started a few years back in order to provide members of the Forces with better planes, better ships, better tanks, and better weapons with which to fight with. After that we could possibly discuss uniforms.

SUGGESTION FORCES BE POLLED ON ISSUE OF UNIFORMS

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Is the Minister going to recommend to Cabinet an extra $550 million in defence spending over the next few years as suggested by the Senate? Also, will he not use the Queen's Regulations to interfere, but instead allow a questionnaire to go to members of the Armed Forces concerning whether or not they would like to see a return to three distinctive uniforms?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I do not feel I can stop any Hon. Members from questioning their constituents on whatever they want. However, I am sure it would be a useless exercise to ask members of the Armed Forces if they would prefer the different uniforms because I know very well what the answer will be before the petition is sent.

Mr. Blenkarn: Yes.

Mr. Lamontagne: They would like to have different uniforms. However, at the same time they should be asked if they want us to spend millions of dollars for three different uniforms or spend hundreds of millions of dollars for better equipment and weapons to fight with. I would say, as an ex-military man, give me the tools to do the job, and the uniform can be dealt with after that.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

NEGOTIATION OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENTS

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development. In view of the fact that all development agreements and subsidiary agreements, except one, between Canada and New Brunswick, will expire this year, will the Minister tell the House if negotiations are now under way for their renewal or replacement, and when might we expect some results?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Yes, Madam Speaker, negotiations have in fact begun with a number of Provinces toward concluding new economic and regional development agreements which will come into effect at the expiration of the general development agreements in 1984. There is a tentative date scheduled for negotiations with the Province of New Brunswick. However, the Province of New Brunswick has not yet had the opportunity of having formal negotiations on that subject, although the regional Minister and I did meet with the Premier and his officials sometime before Christmas, as I recall, in a preliminary way to discuss the timetable for such negotiations.

URGENCY OF SECURING AGREEMENT WITH NEW BRUNSWICK—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, I thank the Minister for his answer. The Minister will appreciate the obvious advantage of common development goals between the federal Government and the provincial Governments. Will the Minister tell the House what, if any, joint federal-provincial development agreements he has announced with New Brunswick since assuming his present portfolio some 18 months ago? Will he discuss the urgency of this matter with his officials?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the negotiations with the Provinces, of course, are ongoing on many fronts between the various sectoral Ministers. However, the economic and regional development agreement, the framework agreement itself, as I indicated, will be entered into, hopefully before the end of this year, with luck, and pursuant to that I would hope that a number of initiatives would be brought forward by the sectoral Ministers for implementation in the very near future.

AIR CANADA

REQUEST FOR IN-FLIGHT BAN ON SMOKING

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and it relates to the disastrous Air Canada flight out of Texas where in excess of 20 lives were lost, and the subsequent fire on a flight to Bermuda allegedly caused by a deportee, in the lavatory of that aircraft. Notwithstanding the question of fire retardant material, has the Minister of Transport, together with his colleague, the Minister of Health, considered an over-all policy of banning smoking, if not on all flights at least on short-haul flights or those of less than two hours' duration? Has the Minister given this matter serious consideration in order to protect the lives of the travelling public?

• (1450)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I already answered the question some ten days ago, if I recall. I exposed myself to some chastisement by saying that smoking was still socially acceptable. I had some correspondence on the subject from people who told me that it was not. Be that as it may, the situation now in airplanes is that there are non-smoking and smoking areas, which implies that smoking is permitted. I am aware of a study that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is also involved in, having to do with smoking in general in public places, but it does not have anything to do with security in the air.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MANITOBA CHIEFS' CONTROL OVER EXPENDITURES ON RESERVES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and is in relation to the attempt by the All Chiefs Budget Committee from the Province of Manitoba to reach a memorandum of agreement with him and his officials. For the last 18 months the chiefs have been trying to come to an agreement with the Minister to give them more control over budgetary expenditures on their reserves. Can the Minister tell us when he will stop stalling and sign an agreement with the chiefs?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, it is not a question of stalling. We are very close to an agreement. There is really only one impediment. They want a type of wording that the law officers of the Crown say would not be legal under our financial administration procedures and law here in Parliament. Subject to that, we are very close indeed.

May I also say that I am meeting with David Ahenakew, the head of the AFN, here in Ottawa this afternoon and we may adopt a type of umbrella agreement, somewhat modelled on the Manitoba agreement, to apply nationally. So I am hopeful it will be worked out very soon.

SIGNING OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, the Minister knows that the Assembly of First Nations have supported the Manitoba chiefs. They want that agreement signed, and the Minister has been telling those chiefs for over a year now that it would be signed soon. He has been saying that his Department officials should not be interfering with the process of Indian self-government. Again, when is the agreement going to be signed? If the Minister cannot say when, can he explain exactly to this House why he feels it cannot be signed?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I must reiterate that the Hon. Member's premise is totally incorrect. I have indicated to the Manitoba chiefs what I am prepared to sign. I think that captures completely the spirit of what they want. I do not wish to interfere in any way with their aspirations for Indian self-government; that is the objective. That is why the Government gave the widest possible mandate, one that was supported by the Hon. Member's Party, to the Standing Committee, without any restriction at all, so that we could come to a report on which we could base Indian self-government as soon as possible. It is just that some of the wording which I believe some of the chiefs in the Manitoba group wish to persist in simply cannot be provided on the basis of the independent legal advice I have received. If we could iron that out, we could sign any day.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—FATE OF JEWISH COMMUNITY

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and relates to the state of the Jewish community in Nicaragua under the Sandinista Regime. Has the Minister received the same information about the fate of that community as is available to me, namely, that it is being exterminated by the Sandinistas? The president of the Jewish Association is in jail; those who are out of the country are being refused re-entry permits, their lands are being confiscated, and the synagogue has been converted into a child daycare centre.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I have not received the information which the Hon. Member has mentioned. He has stated a series of facts which, if true, are certainly a cause for concern. I will check into the matter as quickly as possible.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I would appreciate if the Minister would check into the facts. We do have an ambassador in the area and I hope he is still persona grata in Nicaragua.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT LODGE PROTEST

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I understand that all Jews in Nicaragua are under the ban. They are either out of the country and not being allowed back in, or they are being harassed and their property confiscated while they are there, or they are being thrown in jail. Will the Minister also consider the notion of making a very firm protest to the Nicaraguans about their handling of this particular community in Nicaragua?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, as I said, I will request immediate information on the points made by the Hon. Member, and indeed I will follow up with the appropriate action.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

EXEMPTION OF GOVERNMENT INFORMATION BANKS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Solicitor General. I understand that Cabinet, through an Order in Council, has exempted a total of 19 information banks from the provisions of the new access to information legislation. The Solicitor General's Department apparently controls five of these information banks which have been classified as exempt. We have learned in recent weeks that thousands of Canadians in the peace movement have been the subject of surveillance and that some citizens are indeed the object of, and I quote, "permanent wire taps and electronic surveillance". Will the Minister tell this House whether the information now being gathered on individuals in the peace movement is going into those exempt information banks?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I can certainly contradict, with my knowledge and the reports I have from the Security Service, the suggestion that thousands of Canadians are under surveillance because they belong to the peace movement. That is false, and I have indicated before that that is false.

HATE LITERATURE

DISTRIBUTION IN OLDS, ALTA.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice who will be aware that hate literature has been distributed in Olds, Alberta, by the Nationalist Party of Toronto. Over the weekend it was indicated that this Party intends to distribute more such literature in the cities of Edmonton and Calgary. Will the Minister tell us what, if anything, he intends to do about it?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I am not familiar with the incident to which my hon. friend refers. But, given the way he describes it, I would not understand why this would not be a matter for enforcement by the Attorneys General of the various Provinces. That is the normal course of such prosecutions, and he has said nothing to indicate this situation is exceptional in that regard.

NATIONALIST PARTY OF CANADA

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, will the Minister tell us if the Nationalist Party of Canada, a neo-Nazi Party, is legal and registered under the laws of Canada or the Provinces, and whether the Government contemplates any legislation to make it illegal for neo-Nazi Parties to operate in this country?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, we do not normally proscribe any groups in this country on the basis of their name. I am not sure that under the requirements of the Charter it would be possible to take such an approach. But we do have laws which provide that certain kinds of activity on the part of people who stir up hatred or other forms of a breach of the peace can be prosecuted according to the normal way, in actions brought by the Attorneys General of the Provinces.

With respect to registration, I would not know about that. I guess that would come under the President of the Privy Council who is responsible for the electoral law.

PETITIONS

MR. DEANS—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITIONS

MR. YOUNG—SAFE DRINKING WATER

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, this petition of the undersigned residents of the Province of Ontario, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth that toxic chemicals are posing an increasing threat to the potable waters of their Province, that there is presently no legislation which will guarantee the safety and healthfulness of those waters, and that Canada's neighbour, the United States of America, has legislation entitled "The Safe Drinking Water Act of 1974".

Wherefore we, the undersigned, hymbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact a safe drinking water act which will protect and enhance drinking water quality in all areas of Canada.

MR. PARKER—RURAL MAIL SERVICE

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition on behalf of a large number of citizens in the area of Trout Lake, Beaton and Galena Bay in the Province of British Columbia who face the loss of local rural box service for mail. The residents of these areas will now have to make a round trip of as much as 40 miles to get their mail through an area where winter traffic is often difficult or impossible because of road and weather conditions.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon this House to take whatever steps are necessary to ensure continued rural mail service for the British Columbia communities of Trout Lake, Beaton, Galena Bay and, by so doing, avoid imposing unreasonable travel requirements and the danger of winter roads on these people. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MS. McDONALD—BROADCASTING REGULATION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I would like to present the petition of the undersigned constituents of the riding of Broadview-Greenwood, in the Province of Ontario, and other concerned citizens mostly from other parts of Ontario, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your Honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth that the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission broadcasting regulations do not extend to women the same protection against abusive comment or abusive pictorial representation as now exists for racial and religious groups; that the concerns of citizens have been recently heightened, not only by the so-called adult programming on pay televison, but also by the proliferation of pornography in various media; that the degradation and exploitation of women, children and men through pornography is abhorrent to all people; that the Minister of Communications has been willing to empower the CRTC to regulate broadcasting to ensure Canadian content, but has yet to intervene to assure the protection of women against this abuse, that it is Parliament's responsibility, as provided for in the—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is arguing. At any rate, the enunciation of the petition is quite too long for what is admissible in the House. I would ask the Hon. Member to go to the prayer, because we know what the petition is about. It is sufficient to give the title of the petition and then go to the prayer.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, with the above in mind, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to demonstrate its opposition to the denigration of women by enacting an Act to amend the Broadcasting Act as introduced by myself on March 8, 1983; and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. SKELLY—ABSENTEE VOTING

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition to the House from residents of Surrey, Delta, White Rock and Richmond, who find that under the Canadian Constitution every citizen is guaranteed the right to vote, yet there are many occupational groups which are deprived of it because of a lack of an absentee voting procedure in the Elections Act of Canada. Your petitioners would humbly pray that the House of Commons direct the Chief Electoral Officer to present to the House of Commons a proposal which will allow Canadian citizens who are away from their normal polling locations an opportunity to vote directly by absentee ballot.

Petitions

RETENTION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Madam Speaker, this petition is addressed to the Honourable House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled. These petitioners from Kelwood indicate that the changing of the Crow rate will reduce farm incomes, contribute to the breaking up of communities on branch lines and increase trucking and road costs. Your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the Crow rate in perpetuity as presently guaranteed by statute. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present to the House of Commons here assembled a petition on behalf of the undersigned residents of the Province of Saskatchewan from the community of Domremy, which is in my home constituency. They express the fact that the change in the Crow rates will affect their community by $672,000 in losses per year if the higher rates are put into effect.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the Crow rate in perpetuity as presently guaranteed by statute. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. MANLY—PROPOSED SECURITY SERVICE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition to the House of Commons in Parliament assembled. The petition of the undersigned citizens of Canada, who avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your Honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth that any security service set up by the Government of Canada follow the rule of law and not have broad powers to infiltrate and disrupt legitimate organizations and associations.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact legislation based on the principles of freedom and human rights. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. ALTHOUSE—TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE ON CANADIAN SOIL

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I would like to present to the House of Commons in Parliament assembled a petition from the undersigned residents from the town of Watson in the Province of Saskatchewan, who now exercise their right to present a grievance and humbly sheweth that we should do everything in our power to prevent Cruise missile testing and that we call upon the Government to refuse to test the Cruise in our country. Your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

RETENTION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I have a petition to present to the Honourable House of Commons in Parliament assembled. It is from the citizens of the towns of Rosetown and Dinsmore, Saskatchewan. Because of the high cost and the change which the Crow rate will bring into their lives, they have signed this petition. The undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition signed by several residents of the Province of Alberta, especially the residents of the communities of Rocky Mountain House and Leslieville. In their petition the petitioners ask that the removal of the Crow rate will see its replacement by rates which will impose higher freight rates of 5.1 times the present Crow rate, and higher by 1990; that such increases are being imposed at a time when wheat prices for producers are now at 1974 levels. Detailed calculations show that the rate of 5.1 times the present Crow rate will cost the community of Leslieville $161,100 in payments for grain freight which otherwise would have stayed in that community, based on the actual deliveries in the 1980-81 crop year.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the Crow rate as presently guaranteed by statute.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I received a petition on June 14 addressed to the Hon. Members of the House of Commons. The petitioners, the undersigned residents of the Province of Manitoba, now exercise their right to present a grievance and humbly sheweth as follows. The Crow rate is an important benefit to western Canada, one of the earliest incentives granted to settlers; that a change in the Crow rate will reduce farm incomes, contributing to the breaking of communities on branch lines and increasing trucking and road costs; and three royal commissions have recommended the retention of the Crow rate.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the Crow rate in perpetuity as presently guaranteed by statute. It is signed by 20 people from Erickson, Manitoba.

MR. SKELLY—MARINE INDUSTRIAL STRATEGY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition to the House from residents of Victoria, British Columbia, stretching up the coast to Prince Rupert and including communities such as Sointula on the mainland delta, North Vancouver, Vancouver, Burnaby and Richmond. The petition, extensively signed by individuals, asks that the Government of Canada consider implementing a marine industrial strategy because of the thousands of jobs and billions of dollars which are being lost offshore.

They are also extremely concerned that the federal Government has not implemented the law backing the new shipbuilding policy and these individuals are certainly concerned about the failure of the Government of Canada to develop a regional distribution of the new frigate program which would put the construction of two in British Columbia, two in central Canada and two in Atlantic Canada.

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray that the Government of Canada be encouraged to implement immediately a sensible and effective maritime policy that will result in the creation of a Canadian merchant marine and the expansion of the Canadian shipbuilding policy and allied industries in spite of the Conservative opposition to such excellent proposals.

MR. ANGUISH—RETENTION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, it is my duty and privilege to present to the House of Commons this afternoon in Parliament assembled a petition of the undersigned residents of Canada, mostly from the Aneroid area and incidentally mostly members of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, who now exercise their right to present a grievance.

They humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade, that the undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times Crow, which is no change.

Wherefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory Crow rate. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. MANLY—EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present the petition of the undersigned citizens of Canada who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will thereby provide a remedy. They humbly sheweth that the NEED Program not be used in a manner which allows the Government to substitute long-term regular employment positions for temporary and low paid jobs under the make-work program.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to provide proper employment programs and not allow job substitution under the NEED Program to continue. And in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. BENJAMIN—RETENTION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition which I do so in all modesty. The petition contains 30 names of citizens from Ottawa, Edberg, Camrose, Bashaw, Peace River, Nampa and Red Deer, Alberta. They have carefully considered the alternative plan presented by the NDP caucus, by Les Benjamin, M.P. for Regina West, and urge the Parliament of Canada to adopt its provisions in order that the statutory Crowsnest Pass freight rate may be maintained and that the railways of all of Canada may be upgraded and developed into a modern and efficient transportation system.

All undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to adopt the provisions of the NDP alternative plan in order that the statutory Crowsnest Pass freight rate may be maintained and that the railways of all of Canada may be upgraded and developed into a modern and efficient transportation system.

MR. SKELLY—MARINE INDUSTRIAL STRATEGY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present another petition.

[Translation]

To the Honourable the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled.

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted rights thus to present a grievance common to all petitioners in the certain assurance that your Honourable House will thereby find a remedy.

Humbly sheweth that

Canadians have been deprived of billions of jobs and billions of dollars worth of industrial spin-offs because we do not have a marine industrial strategy.

And that the federal Government has neglected to provide Canada with a consistent marine policy, although it promised, more than twelve years ago, to develop such a policy.

[English]

The petitioners who have signed this petition from the community of Sept Iles in the Province of Quebec would ask that the Parliament of Canada implement a Canadian marine industrial strategy so that they may realize the full potential of employment benefits within this industrial field.

[Translation]

RETENTION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I would like to present a petition.

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted rights—

there are not two but thirty-eight petitions here, even from Quebecers—

Humbly sheweth that

Whereas Western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-1982 crop year.

That this grain in turn contributed $6.3 billion to Canada balance of trade.

Whereas the undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to Canadian economy.

And whereas Western Canadian farmers will not pay more than one times Crow.

Wherefore the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present grain Crow rate.

And as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

As I mentioned before, the petition was signed by more than thirty-eight people.

[English]

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I have a petition from residents of the Vegreville area in Alberta who exercise their right to present a grievance and humbly sheweth that the removal of the Crow rate will see its replacement by rates that will impose higher freight costs of five times the present Crow rate and higher by 1990, that such increases are being imposed at a time when prices for producers' grains are now at 1974 levels and that detailed calculations show that a rate of 5.1 times the Crow rate will cost the community of Vegreville $1,489,500 in payments for grain freight that would have otherwise stayed in that community, based on the actual deliveries that took place in 1980-81.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the Crow rate in perpetuity as presently guaranteed by statute.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I have another petition signed by the residents of the Shaunavon-Gull Lake area, almost all of whom are Members of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. They call upon this Parliament assembled and now exercise their right to present a grievance and humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow rate in 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade and the undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that the western farmers will pay one times Crow, which is no change.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain rate. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever and forever pray.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I have a petition from the citizens of Saskatoon to the Honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled. The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada now exercise their right to present a grievance. Mr. Justice Emmett Hall and his commission carefully studied the railroad situation in western Canada and indicated that the western Canadian economy is based on statutory grain rates, commonly known as the Crow rate.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain rate. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever and forever pray.

MR. BENJAMIN—RAIL SERVICE TO NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I have a different petition. It is to the Honourable the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled. The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now exercise their right to present a grievance humbly sheweth that people in northern Ontario sometimes have to wait in unheated shelters in the wintertime for trains that are as much as four hours late.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to urge the Government of Canada to provide a modern and adequate rail service for which your petitioners will ever and forever humbly pray.

MR. MANLY—RETENTION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition from residents of several small towns in Saskatchewan, most of them farmers, many of them Wheat Pool members, to the Honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled. The undersigned residents of Canada who now exercise their right to present a grievance humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year; that this grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade; that the undersigned believe this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy, and that western farmers will pay one times the Crow rate, that is no change.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. HOVDEBO—ACCESSIBILITY OF TELECOMMUNICATIONS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present to the House of Commons in Parliament assembled a petition of the undersigned residents of the Province of Ontario, who now exercise the right to present a grievance and humbly sheweth that whereas Members of Parliament are proud of the new Charter of Rights and the protection it provides handicapped persons; and whereas the recent CRTC decision denies the request that all telephones be hearing aid compatible and therefore acceptable to handicapped persons; and whereas this decision gives no commitment to modify eventually existing or all new phones for hearing aid adaptability; wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to make a clear commitment to render our telecommunication system equally accessible to all Canadians.

MR. MURPHY—CANADA LABOUR CODE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I have a petition signed by residents of Canada. In their petition they talk about the very sad fact that Public Service employees of the federal Government are not protected by the provisions of the Canada Labour Code when it comes to health and safety legislation. Therefore, your petitioners humbly pray that the federal Government will enact legislation that will place public government workers under the jurisdiction of Part IV of the Canada Labour Code and hope that this legislation will be enacted soon and will be much stronger than the existing legislation in protecting the rights of government workers.

MR. ANGUISH—RETENTION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I have a petition signed by residents of Saskatchewan from the communities of Kyle and White Bear. The petition of the undersigned residents of the Province of Saskatchewan, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your Honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth that the undersigned have carefully considered the alternative plan presented by the New Democratic Party and that the Crow rate must be maintained and the railways of all Canada upgraded and developed into a modern and efficient transportation system. Wherefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to adopt the provisions of the New Democratic Party alternative plan which will not change the Crowsnest Pass freight rate. And as in duty bound your petitioners ever pray.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières):

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the motion. All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Madam Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Madam Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pepin that Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be now read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

Madam Speaker: I would now like to rule on the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton-Mountain (Mr. Deans) before we entered into the debate. I have to tell him concerning this point of order that nowhere in our practice or precedents can I find any support for the Hon. Member's arguments. A bill may be objectionable to certain Hon. Members on account of its contents or scope but this does not make it procedurally unacceptable.

The citations used by the Hon. Member in presenting his argument do not sustain the point he was trying to make. He quoted from page 380 of Erskine May's Nineteenth Edition on the matter of complicated questions—and I emphasize the word "questions"—and for the sake of the record I will read the entire paragraph from which the Hon. Member quoted:

> The ancient rule that when a complicated question is proposed to the House, the House may order such question to be divided, has been variously interpreted at different periods. Originally the division of such question appears to have required an order of the House, and in 1770 a motion 'That it is the rule of this House, that a complicated question which prevents any Member from giving his free assent or dissent to any part thereof ought, if required, to be divided,' was negatived on a division. As late as 1883 it was generally held that an individual Member had no right to insist upon the division of a complicated question. In 1888, however, the Speaker ruled that two propositions which were then before the House in one motion could be taken separately if any Member objected to their being taken together. Although this ruling does not appear to have been based on any previous decision, it has since remained unchanllenged. A complicated question can, however, only be divided if each part is capable of standing on its own.

This paragraph is contained in a chapter which is entitled "The Process of debate, by motion, question and decision". If one examines the context of the quotation selected by the Hon. Member, it is clear that it does not refer to the content and scope of bills. The chapter deals, as the title implies, with the various forms that motions can take, the rules relating to them and the putting of the question on a motion by the Chair and precedents in our own Parliament are to that effect as well. A citation relating to motions and questions does not apply necessarily to bills.

The Hon. Member also referred to comments made by two former Speakers when ruling on similar bills. He quoted a comment by Mr. Speaker Lamoureux in the course of a ruling he gave on January 26, 1971, concerning a bill respecting the organization of the Government of Canada:

> There must be a point where we go beyond what is acceptable from a strictly paliamentary standpoint.

He did not, however, quote what Speaker Lamoureux went on to say later on in the ruling:

• (1530)

> Having said this, I would have to rule—if I must rule—that the Government has followed the practice that has been accepted in the past, rightly or wrongly, but that we may have reached the point where we are going too far and that omnibus bills seek to take in too much. All Hon. Members should be alerted to this difficulty of which the Chair is fully conscious.

Therefore, contrary to the impression left by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, Speaker Lamoureux ruled the bill in order.

The Hon. Member also referred to the concern expressed by Mr. Speaker Jerome in a ruling of May 11, 1977, concerning a Bill to amend the Criminal Code. While expressing sympathy with the point of order which had been raised, the Speaker nevertheless ruled:

> However, I certainly am bound by the clear language of our precedent rulings and previous practices to reject the point of order—

Thus, although some occupants of the Chair have expressed concern about the practice of incorporating several distinct principles in a single bill, they have consistently found that such bills are procedurally in order and properly before the House. In addition to the rulings cited above, there were others rendered on January 23, 1969, on May 6, 1971, and on March 2, 1982, which are also relevant and consistent with the precedents already referred to. Bill C-155 is therefore properly before the House and the Chair cannot intervene at this time as the Hon. Member has suggested.

It is now incumbent upon the Chair to put the previous question to a vote.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would ask whether it was in order for the Chair even to receive the motion, given that the Chair already had a question with which to deal relating directly to a matter, the outcome of which the Hon. Member making the motion was attempting to influence. I would suggest at this point that the motion was put before the Chair inappropriately and that the Chair does not have the motion in the proper form.

If it is the Government's desire to invoke closure in this way, the Government will have to wait its turn, until it legitimately has the floor to move such a motion. The motion could not be accepted by the Chair since the Chair at that point was deliberating on a ruling and had not yet given its decision.

Madam Speaker: The motion has been properly proposed by the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance); it is in order. Before the House is a certain discussion which the previous question will allow us to deal with in a certain way. The previous question is a legitimate motion. It was properly before the House and it is now the duty of the Speaker to propose the motion to the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont) moved:

> That the question now be put.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This is a debatable motion under the Standing Orders. I would point out to the Chair that our research shows that the last time this was used by the Government was in 1955. It is closure by any other name; it smacks of closure. It is a cheap way of bringing in closure.

I suggest that under Standing Order 36(1) the motion is debatable. I refer the Chair to Citation 417 on page 151 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, at which point Beauchesne differentiates between amendments and superseding motions. Citation 417(2)(b)(i) refers to the previous question. It is very clear that the motion is debatable. The question under our rules now becomes for how long it is debatable.

Mr. Pinard: Unlimited.

Mr. Lewis: Unlimited is fine; we will get to unlimited in a minute. The point is that under Standing Order 35(1) specific rules are laid out for the debate of motions. If this is truly a superseding motion, not an amendment, then I submit the length of speeches in debating the motion should be 20 minutes plus a ten-minute question period.

In putting this point of order to the Chair, I suggest that the Chair is breaking new ground in making this ruling. If ever there was a case for giving Hon. Members an opportunity to debate a motion—and this is a motion—surely it is this one. Closure cuts off debate and it cuts off amendment. Surely at this point the Chair should come down on the side of Hon. Members of the House of Commons and give them the freedom to express themselves in 20-minutes speeches and ten-minute question periods rather than the ten-minute shots which the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) and the Government would like as they cut off debate on this very important subject.

I urge the Chair to find that under Standing Order 35(1) this is truly a motion, not an amendment, and therefore the rules for the debate of motions should apply, that is, speeches should be 20 minutes long followed by ten-minute question periods.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, concerning the fact that the motion is debatable, no one is arguing with the Hon. Member. We asked for the question to be put because no one was rising to be recognized. We accept that the motion is fully debatable; that is clear under the Standing Orders.

[Translation]

Second, when he says that this motion is a motion of closure, he is entirely mistaken. I would invite my learned friend to read Standing Order 65 and Citation 452 and following of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, where it clearly says that once the motion is proposed, the debate may continue on the original question, which is the motion for second reading. Since we are now debating the second reading stage, a time limit on speeches is provided under Standing Order 35(2). In any event, the same principle applies when debating an amendment to the main question on second reading. We have just had a very clear example of this. A motion was proposed by the New Democratic Party Members to postpone adoption of the second reading stage for six months. The amendment in question was debated for many days in the House, and speeches were limited to ten minutes because Standing Order 35(2) applies to the second reading stage, and not to the amendment or the main question—it covers everything, consequently, the previous question. Madam Speaker, perhaps I may refer you once again to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, page 157, Citation 452(1), and I quote:

The previous question is moved when the original question is under debate—

That is settled, despite objections from the Members opposite. The Chair has just ruled on the question. The Citation goes on to say:

—in order to—

That is the important part.

—in order to force a direct vote on it, thereby preventing any amendments to the original question to be proposed.

So this is the original question which is now being debated simultaneously with the motion, and the debate is on the second reading stage of the bill, whence the requirement for continuing our ten-minute speeches. Perhaps I may also refer the Chair to Citation 453, which says, and I quote:

Members who have spoken to the main motion or amendments may speak again to the previous question.

That is exactly the point I have just been trying to make. All Members who have already spoken to the main motion or amendments may speak again to the previous question, because the debate is on the second reading stage, and consequently, there is a ten-minute time limit on speeches. I agree with the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), when he says that a motion is debatable. If they have anything to say, let them seek to be recognized by the Chair. No one is questioning that, but I disagree when the Hon. Member claims this is a motion of closure. It is no such thing. It is a sensible motion that allows debate on the main motion and prevents any amendments from being proposed. This means that even Hon. Members who have spoken up to now may all speak again to the second reading stage of the Bill. Third, as far as a time on speeches is concerned, since we are at the second reading stage, there is no doubt that Standing Order 35(2) must apply and that speeches must be limited to ten minutes.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, you have an interesting point before you; it is one that I spent some time on over lunch trying to determine whether or not speeches would proceed under the ten-minute rule. I would like to suggest that they should not. In fact, the time limit for debate as set out in the various Standing Orders detailing length of speeches also applies to the previous question.

• (1540)

I suggest, therefore, that when the previous question was moved, the time limits for debate start from the time of moving the previous question. Upon moving the previous question, the fact that the time limits as set out in the various Standing Orders apply means that you must go back to the beginning and apply them to the question that is before the House. The debate does not continue in the same way that it would if the motion were a motion of substance.

This is one of three potential closure motions or closure of debate motions. You can have a straight closure motion which would be subject to certain rules of debate; you can have a time allocation motion which is subject to certain rules of debate; and you can have this motion on the previous question which is subject to certain rules of debate. The rules of debate in the two previous situations are set out clearly in the Standing Orders. The rules for this motion are set out equally clearly in the Standing Orders inasmuch as the time limits for all other debates become applicable to this debate when it is moved to deal with the subject being dealt with under one of the Standing Orders in the House of Commons for debating purposes.

If the Government had moved closure, then the time limits are clearly set out as to the length of time debate would be permitted on that particular motion. The end result would be a vote on the bill. If the Government were to move time allocation, the length of time permitted is clearly set out and at the end the vote would be taken and a disposition of the Bill made at that stage. In this case it says that whatever Standing Order is applicable—and in this case we are talking about second reading stage—the time limits under the Standing Order become the time limits applicable for the motion to move the previous question.

I suggest, therefore, that at the time the motion is put the time limits become applicable based on the way they are written in the Standing Orders. In the Standing Orders the time limits are, one, that the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the Government have indefinite time; and two, that Members speaking in the first eight hours of the debate have 20 minutes and thereafter Members speaking beyond that point have ten minutes each. I suggest now that that is the Standing Order in terms of time limits that we are working under and that we should begin by accepting that the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Official Opposition have unlimited time; that any Member during the first eight hours of debate has 20 minutes; and any Member speaking thereafter is permitted ten minutes. I would urge upon you that any other ruling would clearly not permit the Standing Order as it is written to be put into force.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) is right. The motion on the previous question is debatable and probably will be debated. However, it is not up to the Chair to decide.

My next comment is that the motion on the previous question is not closure, because after the House votes on the previous question, the debate on the main question will, of course, be resumed. When the previous question is put, this is done only in order to prevent the proposal of new amendments and to ensure that the debate continues on the main question.

As for the last question put to the Chair, namely, what time limits apply in the circumstances, I must say that the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) are right. In the opinion of the Chair, and after thorough consideration of how the new Standing Orders could be interpreted, the provisions of Standing Order 35(2) apply. We are, in fact, debating the second reading of a Bill and we have exceeded the eight-hour period. Consequently, a ten-minute time limit for each speaker applies to debates at this stage in the proceedings.

[English]

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the Hon. Member. I understand that he has been recognized and has the floor for debate. Earlier this morning I was asked by the House Leader of the Official Opposition not to sit until five o'clock. As far as I am concerned, if the House wants to adjourn until five o'clock, I have no objection.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement that the sitting shall be suspended until five o'clock this day?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is agreed and so ordered.

SITTING SUSPENDED

At 3.45 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 5 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) has the floor.

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I last spoke on this Bill on the six-month amendment on May 24 and I put some rather strong remarks on the record at that time. I am very surprised that the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) would move the previous question motion today. I find it rather strange that a prominent Member who worked so hard on procedures with so many of us for the past year would do that to the House, particularly on a Bill that is so important to the region I come from. The cleavage within the debate seems to be a regional one between Quebec Members and Members from the West.

It seems that Quebec Members are under the impression that allowing the subsidy to go to the growers in the West will work to the disadvantage of their cattle and hog-feeding operations, particularly the hog-feeding operation which has been so successful as a result of activities in the Province of Quebec. It is my understanding that even the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) and the Government have tried to impress upon Members from Quebec that that is not really an issue. Feed grain prices in the Province of Quebec are a corn and soybean formula based on Thunder Bay plus freight or Chicago gate prices.

Please allow me to proceed with the debate that I want to make. It is my understanding that the strength of feelings in the West in no way, shape or form impinge upon the very successful hog raising activities in the Province of Quebec. I am sure that the Minister of Transport can agree totally with that statement.

I think the principle of the Bill was put in the most simple terms by Stan Price on May 16, 1983 when he said:

> Put simply, if someone said they would cover all of the transportation costs on pork and I pay full compensatory rate on grain, where would I locate a hog operation—right next to the grain fields. Or if they said they would pay all of the cost of shipping grain and I had to pay full freight costs on pork, I would locate the hog production and meat packing right next to Montreal, New York or Tokyo.

That is the issue here. What we are debating is the method of payment. We do not agree with the method of payment that the Minister of Transport has finally proposed in Bill C-155. Members in western Canada, and particularly British Columbia where I come from, have been inundated by a powerful lobby by industrial leaders. The Council of Forest Industries of B.C. wants us to pass Bill C-155 and not delay the Government. The president and chief executive officer of B.C. Forest Products wants the same thing. We have received a wire from the president of MacMillan Bloedel who wants us not to delay the Bill. On Wednesday, June 15, we received a submission from the Employers' Council of British Columbia telling us not to hold up the Bill. I have received other wires from 15 or 20 industrialists from British Columbia who have lobbied us. They are absolutely shocked that we are so upset with the Bill. I have even had a telephone call from the Chamber of Commerce accusing me of not representing the interests of British Columbia. I want to say that that is totally false, Mr. Speaker.

Let me discuss the principle of the Bill, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Transport had things in the palm of his hand, the way he was going. Even Mr. Bruce Howe, the president and chief executive officer of British Columbia Resources Investment Corporation, who has been organizing the lobby on B.C. Members, made a speech on January 26, 1982 in which he supported all of the essential points that we are trying to make in the debate on this side of the House. That is why the ability to debate and to have the time to debate the principle of the Bill is so important. We are shocked by the ten-minute speeches, the limitation and the closure techniques being imposed on us.

The people of Canada, let alone Members of the Government, do not understand the principle of the Bill. That principle is the method by which the subsidy is to be paid. If it is paid to the railroads, then secondary industry is locked out of western Canada forever. All we are saying is that we should study the Gilson and the Hall formulae—particularly the Gilson formulae—and that we should go that route where we have the freedom of choice to allow part or all of the payment to go to the producers.

We are not just producing grains for export but, rather, we are entering the whole world of research and development and variation in grain production so that we can start to build processing plants and hog feeding plants. I could stand here for 20 minutes, Mr. Speaker, to tell you about one of the most exciting operations I have ever been involved in in my life that could start up in western Canada should the method of payment be to the producer of the grain. That is the issue.

Mr. Bruce Howe has led the lobby on B.C. Members and he thinks he is going to ruin us politically because we are supporting what he refers to as "those guys from the Prairies". In January, 1982 the Minister was out pedalling the Bill before he changed it 180 degrees from what he knew was right. Let me tell you that Mr. Bruce Howe was supporting entirely the position of the B.C. Members on this Bill. In a speech which he gave in January, 1982 he said:

• (1710)

CP Rail estimates that grain accounts for 20 per cent of its workload but yields, at best, only 8 per cent of its revenue.

We agree that the railroads need more money. We are not saying they do not. He goes on:

Representatives from more than 50 different organizations covering every segment of the western economy—including nearly all the agricultural associations—joined together in an urgent request to Ottawa for "commercially justifiable compensation to the railways for the shipment of farm commodities currently moving at statutory rate levels".

We agree. Mr. Howe was right on when he gave his speech on the Crow rate.

—there will be a very strong temptation for the Government to side-step the issue by making direct cash grants to the railroads—

This is Mr. Howe speaking in January, 1982.

—for double tracking or building tunnels—to enable them to overcome their bottlenecks. This is the so-called 'project' approach to the problem.

I think it should be called the 'bandaid' approach. Because—while cash grants would certainly enable the railroads to start on major improvements—the problem of the Crow rate would merely be deferred. The railroads would continue to lose money handling grain;—

Mr. Howe, Mr. Speaker, said further in January, 1982:

A comprehensive solution would recognize—first and foremost—that grain as a commodity must pay its way. . . . recognize the need for statutory assurances to the grain growers; both for rail service, and for some form of compensation.

—I wholeheartedly endorse the need for such statutory assurances. The whole prairie economy has been built for 50 years on the premise of a statutory régime for grain shipment.

A fully compensatory rate to the railroads for moving grain would mean a four or fivefold increase in railroad rates.

Mr. Howe speaks against that. He said that would be a disgraceful injustice to the prairie farmers. Yet today he comes here and lobbies me, and other Hon. Members from British Columbia, against exactly what this Bill is doing. He says to pass this Bill even if it is imperfect. Yet in January, 1982 he was speaking out against everything this Bill does to western Canada and to the farmers in western Canada. Further on in his speech he said:

—the comprehensive solution has found a champion in Transport Minister Jean-Luc Pepin.

That is the way the Minister of Transport was before he tabled Bill C-155, Mr. Speaker, until the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) shook him by the ears and said it was not political. Then the Quebec caucus got hold of him and said: "You cannot do that; that is going to threaten our hog production". The Government of Canada knows, however, that it is not going to threaten the hog production of Quebec. It knows very well that the feed grain formula is corn and soybean and hog production would not be threatened.

Why should the Government shut off and smother the chance to have a secondary industry, a meat packing industry, a meat slaughter industry, a hog growing industry in western Canada? Most of our market goes out across the Pacific, Mr. Speaker, and south of the 49th parallel. In no way, shape or form are we doing any harm in asking for some decent consideration on this Bill. I feel it is despicable that the Government should treat us the way it is in forcing closure and ten-minute speeches when Hon. Members are still crying out, trying to represent their region in this great country.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, this so-called second reading debate on the Crow Bill is the action of a lame duck Government. A "lame duck Government" is an American expression. When a new President in the US. is elected in November, he does not actually take power until the next March. In the interim period governments who have the power technically should carry out the wishes of the new régime. This lame duck Government is frozen with fear, paralysed with panic, too fat to fight and too frightened to run. This deliberate closing down of our right to make speeches on a subject which affects the whole constitutional basis of our country is the action of a Government which is paralysed with panic and too frightened to fight.

This Bill, Mr. Speaker, belongs in Parliament. It does not belong in any Snavely Report. It does not belong in any consensus efforts by an economist. Under the law of this land the Crow rate is only debatable in this Parliament. However, Parliament cannot debate the Crow rate, although it knows what it is talking about. The Crow rate demands that we maintain the principle of the National Transportation Act, that we know the cost it demands, that the National Transportation Act machinery be used, and that we use the Canadian Transport Commission to examine these costs and present them to Parliament.

I have told the Minister and I have told the House that it will take six months to two years to do a proper examination of these costs because they are so complicated. The very fact that the media has never mentioned the Royal Commission report under MacPherson and has never mentioned the Royal Commission report under Hall is because Government has adopted the policy in this last three or four years, on transportation particularly but in other matters as well, of taking away from Parliament what Parliament should be doing.

In Parliament years ago we decided there was no chance of the Department of Transport solving this problem so we took the power away from it and put it into a large Canadian Transportation Commission, with all the bodies there to handle these questions. However, the Government has ignored the Canadian Transportation Commission on VIA Rail. It has ignored it on this vital Bill to our Constitution. Because whether we like it or not, Mr. Speaker, the Crow Bill is not a matter of dollars and cents; it is part of the cultural inheritance of western Canada. We drew immigrants to our area from Ontario, Quebec, the Atlantic Provinces and the whole world, to fill up this land and to help keep it away from the aggressive land hunters of the United States. The whole fabric of our being was to build that railway close to the boundary in order to keep that land as our own. We have this land in common from Newfoundland right across to British Columbia and the Yukon.

It has been suggested that since we are going to take a year or so to handle it properly we should let the Government announce an interim policy, which it can do under the Act, and carry the development of the railroad system out in the West. That is the first thing. The second thing is that it must be realized that for 20 years now the so-called economic experts have argued to the grain companies, have argued to the railways, and have argued to business, that there is no future for the grain farmer in western Canada. Even as late as 1968 and 1969, an agricultural task force recommended that we get rid of two out of three farmers right across Canada and get rid of half the farm land in the Prairies. With that type of evidence from the so-called experts, you cannot blame the grain companies for not modernizing and you cannot blame the railways for letting their lines deteriorate.

I am simply saying that now the railways realize and now the people of Canada are beginning to realize that the great wealth of the future for this whole nation in the next 40 or 50 years will come primarily from the areas west of the Great Lakes. The tonnage of minerals, lumber, potash, coal and gravel will come from the west. The first thing the railways should do, if they want to make more money immediately, is to get their rates down for the mineral products, for the potash, the lumber, the gravel and the coal. They would then see how they would make more money.

Today the lumber in British Columbia goes south to the Great Northern Railway in the United States and is then hauled across the U.S. before it is brought into Canada because the railways are trying to keep traffic down. They charge rates so high that business is driven to the U.S. They fought against coal transportation, against every form of transportation where they would make money because that would take away their excuse for trying to get rid of railway operations in Canada.

I could go on and talk about the economics which apply to a fixed cost industry. Every time you double the load factor of a railway you increase the profit tremendously. Fixed costs do not change. I would like to suggest as an interim policy, Mr. Speaker, instead of plunging into something like this which will not work, that we let the local people on the Prairies take over all these lines the railways claim they are losing money on. That was a recommendation of the Hall Commission. The farmers and businessmen of western Canada will run those 2,000 miles of line to make money on them by the simple device of operating them as a railway. Let the grain elevator be built at Yorkton so we can clean our grain and ship it nonstop to Hudson Bay. Not only the grain, but coal and potash. The Hudson Bay Railway should be operated, as we have talked about for 60 years, ten or 12 months of the year, not for six weeks. Let the railways make money, and when they do so do not complain. When the banks make money, do not complain. The farmers will be making some money, too.

This is a bad Bill. It brings fear into the hearts of the farmers in Quebec. That is why the PQ and Liberals in Quebec have come together to support us in Saskatchewan. This Bill brings fear into the hearts of the unemployed workers of Ontario. They know what it means when we lose $1 billion in the West and we cannot spend it in the East. They lose three times as much as we lose. Let us do justice to the commodity groups who have been discriminated against for these last 15 or 20 years, yes, but under the proper agency, the Department of Agriculture not through railway charges.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, if this Government had been straightforward it would have allowed a six-month hoist for this Bill so the Government could have time to get its act together. Let us help, let us co-operate. We did this from 1962 to 1967 when we put through the transportation Bill. Five years of co-operation from all parties because the Government got down on its knees and admitted it did not know what to do. We helped to put it through but it took time. Closure was not necessary. Closure, or any other trick, should not have been used in this House.

I personally wanted some settlement of this Crow issue on a fair and equitable basis, as the Act proclaims, but all we have is this scam started by the CPR. They conned the cattlemen, the commodity groups, the mining and forest industries. They were told they would benefit if the farmers paid a few dollars more. But now all those groups have had their throats cut from ear to ear under this new proposal. If we allow a dying Government to impose closure on something which affects most directly an alienated part of Canada, the Prairies, at a time when we should bring them together with Quebec because of their common interest in protecting our resources, then this Parliament will not give justice.

As the Speaker gave her ruling today, we heard the rolling of the guns for the Royal Salute. In my mind I spoke the old Latin expression which translates into English as "Though the heavens fall, let justice be done". Justice was not done today, Mr. Speaker, in this House.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pepin that Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the Crow rate is not the only issue at stake in Bill C-155. It must be recognized that this Bill attacks a number of other areas and we should have time to discuss that in this House. That opportunity was denied us in the Speaker's decision today.

One of the most successful Government agencies in Canada, Mr. Speaker, has been the Canadian Wheat Board. It has been in operation for many years and it has cost the Canadian taxpayer very little money. It was put in place to sell western Canadian grain and it was paid for by the grain producers, not by the taxpayers of Canada. Its area of jurisdiction includes northern British Columbia as well as the three prairie Provinces. As far as freight rates are concerned, that is exactly the area affected by this Bill. Grain producers send the grain to port on the basis of the Crow rate.

This Bill is called "An Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof". That description is almost in incongruous, Mr. Speaker, because that is only a very small part of the total effect of this Bill. The Canadian Wheat Board handles all of our export wheat, most of our feed, and controls the shipping of rye, canola and other prairie products. Its operation is paid entirely by the farmers from the sale of their grain. It also has buy and sell privileges, which were so abhorred in the Canagrex Bill. But even the most right-wing Liberal recognizes the value of the Canadian Wheat Board.

This Bill to change the Crow rate not only attacks the grain producers but also the agency which sells the farmers' grain. The Canadian Wheat Board has been able to take the speculation out of selling grain; regardless of what time of year you put your grain on the market, you get the best possible price that the Wheat Board can get for that particular year. This was done because many years ago the Board was given a mandate to get the best possible deal for farmers. The fact that this Government does not feel the same way about the protection of farmers is one of the really bad parts of this Bill.

The agency or group of farmers, I suppose, which is closest to the Canadian Wheat Board is an advisory committee, elected by farmers and put in place by the farmers of the area who are most affected by the Bill. On February 8, 1983, the advisory committee to the Canadian Wheat Board, a committee elected by those farmers who produce grain, passed a resolution. In the resolution the advisory committee informed the Government that it totally rejected the proposal for changes of the grain freight rate structure. That particular resolution in itself is very important, but perhaps much more important as far as the debate is concerned is the fact that it also gave reasons for that position. I will quote directly from the press release which stated:

> One of the Committee's primary concerns is the erosion of the Canadian Wheat Board's jurisdiction over transportation and quotas. The success of any sales organization depends on its ability to manage the movement of its product to market to make delivery on the date and to the ports stipulated by the purchaser. As you know, the Canadian Wheat Board has demonstrated itself to be one of Canada's most effective and respected sales agencies. Its success depends on close co-ordination of shipments and sales, and its ability to maintain the confidentiality of all aspects of its marketing decisions.

I am reading directly from the advisory committee's resolution which goes on to state:

> Preliminary information indicates some of the Board's authority in this area will be removed and transferred to a new Government agency whose function, unlike the Wheat Board's, will not make it accountable to Western Canadian grain producers. The Committee believes it is imperative that the Canadian Wheat Board maintain the powers that are presently within the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

This Act will be attacking those powers. It goes on to state:

The proposed legislation also establishes an April 30th deadline for the setting of blended freight rates, based on the estimated amount to be shipped in the following crop year.

Referring to the advisory committee to the Wheat Board, it states:

The Committee feels the Canadian Wheat Board would be put into an impossible position by having to make predictions on the expected movement of grain at a time when the new crop has not been seeded. This could also have negative implications from a sales strategy point of view.

Again referring to the advisory committee to the Wheat Board which is elected by the western grain producers, it states:

In addition, the Committee is of the view that the implementation of a new grain freight rate structure will seriously damage the income of grain producers. It is a known fact that Canadian grain producers have virtually no income protection as compared to their major competitors in the USA and the EEC.

This is a statement by an advisory committee elected by 150,000 quota holders who are the producers of grain in werstern Canada. That is the way they feel about the Bill.

The Wheat Bord has controlled the flow of grain through the quota system. Most of us who are farmers complain on occasion about the quota system. We all know that it is there and that it gives no advantage to anyone. However, this will be attacked or will be affected by the new Bill. The Bill will put an end to much of the fairness and weaken the Wheat Board in the process.

The Wheat Board is a fundamental agency as far as the Canadian grain establishment is concerned. The Wheat Board has been able to control the movement of grains to the terminals because it can call on quotas of a particular kind of grain at a particular time.

Up until a half hour or so ago, I was planning to move an amendment. I understand that it will not be accepted now; is that right?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Prince Albert is quite correct. There is now a motion on the floor that the House do now consider the previous question. Accordingly, no further amendment is possible.

Mr. Hovdebo: Therefore, the Bill jeopardizes all the well planned and established procedures, those which have been established over the years and, in the process, eliminates the strength of the Canadian Wheat Board. If one eliminates the strength of the Canadian Wheat Board, one eliminates the strength of Canada. One affects the $6 billion of money which comes back into the system from the sale of Canadian wheat.

The motion which I would like to move, and I will read it into the record, is the following: "That Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain, to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be not now read a second time, but that the order for second reading be discharged, the Bill withdrawn, and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture".

Such a motion would give us the opportunity to discuss the Bill at length and in the detail that is required in the debate before it goes to committee so that all of Canada can consider all the issues which the Bill should bring before the House. We are not given the opportunity because we are being cut off at this time. Therefore, I think it is very important that the people of Canada, particularly the grain producers, recognize that the Bill not only changes the Crow rate, but that it also starts the process of elimination of the strongest and the best agency that we have had, particularly for the western grain producer, that is, the Canadian Wheat Board. That in itself is a good enough reason to stop the Bill where it is now.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, to continue with the debate on Bill C-155, which is a Bill to change the Crow rate and shaft western Canada once again, I find it very disappointing that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is not in the House this afternoon. He has missed the contribution we have received from the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) and the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) who have more knowledge about this subject in their two little fingers than does the whole Quebec caucus combined. I cannot understand, and I find it most disturbing, why the Minister of Transport should be taking all his advice from the Quebec Liberal caucus with regard to the Crow rate changes. However, all I have heard most of this afternoon is some giggling and laughing from the backbench Liberal Members. That is all the concern they have for this particular Bill.

I have received many representations from across western Canada with regard to the Crow rate changes. One of the best contributions I have received has been from the Alberta Government. Alberta has a strong industry with a potential to be stronger. However, the impact of changes means, first, that the economic distortions which inhibit the development of the western Canadian livestock and processing industry will continue to exist and, in all likelihood, will be exaggerated. Second, farmers will be unable to develop or to benefit directly from system efficiencies that could result from the commercial operation of a compensatory rate structure. The opportunity for innovations such as unit train movements and multiple car rates will be significantly delayed and reduced. Third, shippers will be unable to affect the development of the grain handling system through the exercise of free choice. The opportunity to allow the market to create and maximize system efficiency at all levels will have been lost. Fourth, farmers and grain companies will be subject to an increasing bureaucratic and regulatory burden. That is the last thing that we need in this country. Crisis rather than the market place will continue to dictate the pace and location of private industry investment and affect systems operations. Fifth, farmers will be unable to take advantage of domestic feed barley, canola and crop diversification, production and market opportunities.

The Saskatoon Star Phoenix, in an editorial of May 25 of this year, pointed out:

A governing party as unpopular as the present Liberal regime may have little to fear in yet more evidence that it is digging itself into greater political quicksand. But there is an overriding concern—this Crow reform effort is turning out to be too divisive between regions and within regions to be safely pursued. A new beginning must be made, a fresh approach found. And most importantly, new players must enter the game. It is a part of the reality that the Government must face that, in large measure, the wall of resistance to the present Crow initiative is because of massive distrust of the central power force in the country.

It goes on to say:

A new political force, which is almost certain to emerge following the next general election, may have better luck at tackling the job.

There is no doubt about that.

But even with western support for the governing Party, it will be a difficult one.

The Liberals cannot succeed. Their best bet is to keep the present statute intact and hope the creaky rail system holds together until someone else can find a way to fix it, and maintain the viability of the agriculture industry at the same time.

As well, the Palliser Wheat Growers Association, in a news release from May, 1983, pointed out:

PALLISER REPRESENTATIVES SEE
PRODUCER CHOICE AS THE ULTIMATE COMPROMISE

Palliser Crow Committee Chairman Paul Orsak and Executive Co-ordinator Barbara Isman were in Ottawa on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday with other major farm group representatives to investigate the possibility of achieving a key amendment to Ottawa's Crow Reform legislation. This amendment being the option for producers to individually decide whether they wish to receive their portion of the Crow Gap Benefit directly or pay it to the railways.

Orsak expressed optimism for this possible solution to the division which has existed between farm groups. He said, "Western Canada has lost a great deal because governments and farm groups were unable to develop a consensus. While major farm groups, the Saskatchewan and Alberta Governments believe in the producer payment method, the prairie Pools felt it would jeopardize their position. This created a rift which allowed Quebec to make the decision for Western Canadians."

Which is totally wrong. He continues:

The option was initially brought forward by Don Mazankowski as an alternative to forcing one method or another upon Western farmers. Orsak agreed that this option would be fairest to all concerned. He explains, "As there is no difference in net cost to farmers under either method a farmer can opt for whichever method he or she feels most comfortable with."

Isman also agreed that this is the fairest solution, saying "The additional benefit to producer choice is that it will be a true test of which method works best. Then when the comprehensive review comes up in 1985-86, a clear decision can be made."

Both Orsak and Isman feel it is imperative that Western farmers move quickly to give an opinion on the compromise because Ottawa is moving rapidly toward implementation of the current bill which is a Quebec solution to a Western problem. Orsak expressed his belief that the Federal Government could be made to change their mind if a Western consensus was reached.

It is imperative that the Government hoist the Bill for at least six months so it can consider the representations from these knowledgeable groups and individuals.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, the debate which has occurred on the Crow thus far has been one that has impressed me as containing two major elements. The first concerns the process through which we have gone and the second relates to the substantive issues.

The process which we have experienced thus far is one that should discourage anyone who has followed the Pepin proposal and the prior Hall Commission and Gilson reports. Not only western Members of Parliament, who are particularly affected by the Bill, but the whole country has not had the opportunity in the first instance to become part of the proposal to help develop and improve a system which everyone agrees is in some jeopardy since it does not have the proper mechanisms not only for improving grain transportation but for the entire rail system. These problems have not been properly considered by Parliament.

When the Minister finally did make a proposal which took into account all other recommendations and presented it to us, that proposal was changed once again for what must be described as very crass, partisan political purposes. Yet again the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has contributed to offending western Members by saying that those who could yell the loudest would be heard and in fact be responsible for changes that are now before us. We have seen a number of occurrences as a result of different representatives from various groups lobbying on one side or the other. We have seen some grand conversions on the part of some railway officials. One such incident was described very well a short while ago by the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Hungtinton).

As a Member, I have found the whole process disturbing as I watched it evolve with arbitrary changes which do not include what I would consider responsible input by Members of Parliament, particularly from this side. Clearly, Members from the Government side of the House do not understand what is important on behalf of the grain producers in western Canada.

Even as recently as today and last week, we saw the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) stand in his place and indicate his intention to bring in time allocation on debate. We have seen the concern that has been raised by the NDP regarding the number of different principles involved in this Bill. It is a mini omnibus Bill, if you like. All of these factors should give anyone who is considering this proposal some concern with respect to its process. That in itself is enough to ask the Government to back away and let the substance of this issue come before a committee before the Bill is put through. It could then be properly considered after proper representations have been made. That is the first major point.

Returning to the substance of the Bill, in my opinion it concerns an issue which affects not only western grain producers but almost all matters that are important to our country. The Bill ranges from the rail system itself, which was so important in the beginning of our country toward uniting it and achieving Confederation, to questions regarding the farm economy. If there is anything that is vulnerable right now, it must be the farm economy. This Bill and some of the elements in it could affect the farm economy. Listening to the grain prices this morning on the radio we heard that a significant drop has occurred in the last few days. That kind of pressure is being felt by the agricultural producers. This, I think, threatens some of the basic economic factors that are important to this country in seeing an economic revival and in getting back on the right track again.

&ed590;-1 We now have a degree of economy recovery. We need to be able to count on that sustained recovery if we really want to have the jobs and the opportunities that all Canadians should enjoy. But when we put in another element such as that contained in this Bill, we then seriously raise in question the viability of many of those farming operations in the West. I do not think that in the short term we can tell precisely what the consequences of this will be. But there is no doubt that it does raise serious questions and could, in fact, result in some very negative effects on the farm economy.

With regard to the farm economy, we must not just zero in on the grain producer. He is the primary producer and he is producing grain for export and domestic use, but he is also responsible for many of the other economic activities in the country. The multiplier factor is probably seven for each dollar's worth of activity on the farm. There are many things involved. The production of vehicles and all the other things that go into making the farm operation work, all of those things, have impact right across the country and are basic to the economic health of Canada. We must also look at the export markets. As far as Canadian export markets are concerned, we do not have very many bright lights. But one of the bright lights, second to the forest industry, is agriculture. We can expand that.

We have had many discussions about the ways in which we could expand. Canagrex is what we have. It is also under closure. But this is something that needs to be secure in terms of the producers and in terms of the producers and in terms of our ability to deliver that which we contract for with other countries. The markets look bright. We are exporting now over thirty million tonnes per year. We may be able to go as high as exporting forty million tonnes by the years 1990 to 1992. Those things are possible. But we know they depend on the ability to transport that grain and that means some major changes in the attitude of the railway companies. We know that it will take additional capital in order for it to occur.

One of the things I ran across over the last several days when I was wondering what was happening and what was right or wrong about the CPR and the CNR was an item in the Financial Post 500. Many things have been said about the history and what was agreed upon at the very beginning when the Crow rate was brought into existence. Of interest was the question of the CPR and the CNR and the way the Financial Post 500 listed them. On the negative side was the listing of the big winners and the big losers. Most of the companies in this list are not a surprise to us. But the one that did surprise me was CN. As far as Crown corporations go, CN is the big loser. We have to question who is running CN, how it is managed and who is responsible for it. But that company as a crown corporation has not been doing well. It might be suggested that it might be as a result of the Crow rate, and so on. But on the other hand, if we look at the CPR, listed as one of the biggest of the winners and one of the largest Canadian corporations in terms of economic activity, maybe there is a lot to be said in terms of how that company is being managed and that changes should occur in the management of CN. Regardless of whether it is CN or CPR there is no question in anyone's mind that both of these companies have an opportunity and a need for major significant capital investment in order to provide the type of transportation facilities that are required by the western grain producers and that is being brought into question.

The final point in terms of substance that is important to me is the statutory agreement that had been put in place initially which is being threatened by the proposal before us in the House now in the form of Bill C-155. It seems to me there is a commitment made to the West and the grain producers. This is a fundamental factor in the whole existence of the western agricultural economy. Whether we are from Ontario, eastern Canada or British Columbia, it is one that we cannot take too lightly. I think it is probably impossible for us not having grown up with this issue, to have a full sense of it, but on the other hand, I think it is a commitment that the Government has a responsibility to honour.

I think I understand the Bill reasonably well. I know the amendments which the Minister is proposing suggest that there will be a safety net and there will be something to help protect. I do not think those things go far enough or can give the sense of security that is needed if we are to have the healthy farm production and economy that we need on behalf of all Canadians.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof. As a Member of Parliament from Kootenay East-Revelstoke, I want to say how much I resent this piece of legislation. Our House Leader on May 19 appealed to the Government of Canada to have this Bill split into three portions, first, into a transportation Bill that would deal with problems of transportation with which I and our Party very much want to deal. We want to deal with this in a very constructive way to meet the needs of our transportation in the years to come. Second, we suggested that the Bill deal with grain, the handling of grain and costs in a constructive way, to see what the costs and the consequences would be. We need to look at what would happen with regard to farmers. Third, we want to deal with the Dominion coal blocks, fifty thousand acres of which happen to be situated in my riding of Kootenay East-Revelstoke. I want to speak for a few minutes about that.

It is important to know that over 85 years ago the constituents of Kootenay East-Revelstoke allowed over 50,000 acres of their most prime coal lands to be set aside in the name of the Dominion of Canada. During that period of time they did not have the opportunities to exploit and carry out the kind of developments that took place. Eighty-five years have now gone by and the Canadian Government wants to do away with the Crowsnest rate. That may be something that should be considered, but if you do away with that you should look at the basic construction of how the Crownest rate came about and how those coal lands became available. I want to take issue with the fact that we cannot debate the coal lands in a separate Bill so that the people of Canada can understand the concerns of western Canada. When we see that the Government of Canada is mainly represented by eastern representatives dictating policies and programs that will adversely affect the people of British Columbia and the Prairies, I think that matter should be looked at in a democratic, sincere and sensitive way.

For a moment I want to reflect on some of the things that have happened. This land was turned over to the Dominion of Canada back in 1897. In 1897, through the Crowsnest agreement when it was made, the 50,000 acres were set aside. It was said that the land could only be developed if it was to produce for domestic use and the produce could only be sold at $2 a tonne loaded on the cars. We realize on this side of the House and we in British Columbia realize that that is not feasible today. We are prepared to discuss the removal of that land from the Crowsnest agreement but not if we have to support the transportation portion of the Bill and have to take it out on the farmers of the Prairies and of British Columbia. We think that is wrong, and we have said so. We have asked to have the Bill divided, but the sensitivity on this side of the House is ignored. For the life of me I wonder why.

I know that CP and the Fording Coal Company, a subsidiary of CP, have made inquiries with regard to the development of these coal lands. It could be that some sweetheart deal is already in the process. On Thursday of last week I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) if it would be possible for the West to supply coal to central Canada for its industrial belt which is now buying as much as 16 million tonnes of coal from the United States. I would like to indicate the answer I received from the Minister and the concern I have for those coal blocs when I receive such an answer. He said:

—I am informed that some coal has been imported from British Columbia to the East in small quantities.

Imported from British Columbia! Is that what the Government of Canada thinks of British Columbia? As a Member of Parliament I resent it in the strongest possible terms. I resent the fact that we were unable to separate the Bill so that we could deal with the coal deposits. These are 50,000 acres of the richest coal land, estimated to be valued at $450 billion. While I am speaking in the House, there is ongoing research in drilling for oil. A contract was let in that area for the drilling of oil. If Alberta, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland can have their energy policies and dictate their energy programs, the energy policy in British Columbia should not be dictated by the House of Commons or the Dominion of Canada. B.C. energy must be turned back to the Province of British Columbia from where it first came. To suggest that it is imported is an insult to British Columbians, and I resent it in the strongest possible manner.

Also I resent the fact that MacMillan-Bloedel, Fording and other companies from the West to which Conservative Members referred are lobbying us. They are subsidiaries of CP. They are lobbying us to pass this Bill. I will not be a lobbyist for CP or any other large company which feels its interests are more important than those of my constituents. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) and the Minister of Energy are not even in the House when this important piece of legislation is being discussed. It is another insult which we cannot and must not allow to go unheard.

I have people lobbying me and suggesting that I am opposed to the restructuring of our railways and our transportation system. For 35 years I have worked on the railways. I know as well as anyone else that our transportation system must be upgraded. There must be a method of doing it. I know that railway workers and miners in British Columbia do not want to have it upgraded on the backs of the farmers of Saskatchewan and Manitoba. That is not how it must be done. It must be done under a transportation Bill which recognizes the needs of the country. It must be done in a way which will not destroy another very viable and valuable industry which the country needs. For farmers to be designed as the ones to pay for the improvement of the railway system is wrong, and we cannot understand it.

At the present time the railways are offering to purchase railways in the United States which would provide a possibility for diverting grain to the South while Canadian farmers would pay the extra rates. I think that is wrong. The Minister should immediately step in and say that Canadian products, especially grain and other commodities, must be shipped on Canadian railways through Canadian ports before any subsidies will be offered by any government or any group.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak on Bill C-155. I would like to make a few comments on closure and then indicate how I personally feel about the Bill before the House. When I first came here as a Member of Parliament, I felt very strongly that I could represent the people of my constituency with honour, integrity and a sense of feeling which is only gained from living in a constituency or in a particular area. Basically I thought all Hon. Members of Parliament would sit with open ears during debates and allow the exchange of ideas to take place so that Opposition Members could play their role by modifying bad legislation. In the parliamentary system which I understood, we in the House of Commons, as Members representing all of Canada, would reach a solution that would be palatable to every part of the country. Instead I found much to my dismay and sorrow that every time a piece of bad legislation came before the House or a piece of legislation with which some Members disagreed, the Government moved in with closure or time allocation which is another form of closure. It is not a place for debate; it is not a place in which to exchange ideas.

I doubt whether Hon. Members sitting on the Liberal backbenches really understand what the Crow rate is all about or what Bill C-155 does. For example, let me indicate what exists right now as a statutory freight rate. The Crowsnest Pass Agreement was signed in 1897, nearly 100 years ago. CPR agreed to reduce rates for transporting grain and flour from western Canada to the Lakehead to five cents per ton mile. The rate became statutory in 1925 when it was incorporated in the Railway Act. Subsequently it was extended in later years to include Vancouver, Prince Rupert and Churchill and was broadened to include certain oilseeds and semi-processed grain products. That is what farmers in western Canada understood, and it has become part of the very social fabric of western Canada.

Now the Government virtually proposes to transfer $1 billion from the pockets of western Canadian farmers directly to the railways. That is exactly what is happening. The total revenue from farm commodities, grain from western Canada, is $6 billion. The Government is proposing to take $1 billion of that $6 billion and transfer it directly to the railways. It will not come from Government coffers; it will come directly out of the pockets of farmers in small communities in my riding and in every other western grain producing area.

It is an attack on the social fabric of western Canada. I am talking about the very small communities on the Prairies, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. The very existence of places like Rochester is threatened. When you threaten the farmer, you kill the family farm. When you do that, you kill the very small communities such as Kinsella, Smith and other places Members have not even heard of. I repeat, they are the very social fabric of western Canada.

The Government has come in with Bill C-155. I outlined what the statutory Crow rate was all about. It is very simple, five cents a tonne mile. That was the transportation cost. What will the farmer pay now? I want to quote directly from the Bill. I say to Members opposite, for God's sake, read the Bill and see if you can understand it. I know you cannot. I quote the annual rate scale, Clause 35 on page 16. This tells the farmer how much he will pay in freight rates to ship his grain from western Canada to market. I quote:

35. The Commission shall, on or before April 30th of each calendar year, by order, prescribe the annual rate scale in respect of the next crop year.

36. (1) The annual rate scale in respect of a crop year shall be determined by multiplying the amount per tonne for the movement of grain over each range of distance set out in the base rate scale by the quotient obtained by dividing the estimated eligible costs of the railway companies in respect of that crop year less the CN adjustment in respect of that crop year by the base year revenues within the meaning of subsection (2), as those revenues are adjusted in accordance with the grain tonnage forecast for that crop year provided by the Administrator.

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), "base year revenues" means the amount obtained by multiplying the rates applicable to the movement of grain under the tariffs of rates of the railway companies as derived from the base rate scale, taking into account sections 44 and 46, by the number of tonnes of grain actually moved by the railway companies from each point of origin on a line of railway in the Western Division in the most recent base year.

How much a tonne? When a farmer in western Canada picks up a piece of legislation like this, he wants to know how much his freight cost will be because he has to figure that in his overhead. He wants to know that he will make money if he plants his wheat, barley or oats. It makes eminent common sense. What do we do? We have Members opposite who do not even take the trouble to read what is in the legislation being proposed by the Minister.

Let us review what has happened. There was the Hall report and the Gilson report. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) introduced Bill C-155, which does not even resemble the suggestions made by these gentlemen. All producers in western Canada recognize that there has to be change somewhere.

We ask our western producers to produce the grain to be shipped. We ask them to create wealth for this country. We want to ship $6 billion of grain to the foreign markets to help with our balance of payments. That is what we ask them to do. We compete on the international market with countries like Argentina, the United States and Australia, which heavily subsidize the grain producer. What does this Government propose to do? It proposes to take $1 billion out of the revenue to the farmers and transfer it directly to the railroads. We have discussed that in this House.

The Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) put forward the proposal of the freedom of choice option. It suggests in effect either paying the subsidy directly to the farmer or giving him the choice of paying it directly to the railroad. It would be easy to administer. What does this Government do? Nothing. It closes its ears.

When the Government introduces legislation into the House, it will listen to no argument. It will not listen to debate. It will not take into consideration the problems faced by the areas affected. It brought in closure on the national energy policy which devastated the oil industry in western Canada. Today, even with all of the backtracking it has attempted to do, rigs are still idle in the western basin. The numbers are down 10 per cent from last year, and last year they were down 40 per cent to 50 per cent from the year before. This is shortsighted stupidity.

We are seeing exactly the same thing again today. We ask the farmer to invest a lifetime in producing wealth from the land, wealth that every person in this country can enjoy. As I mentioned before, this contributes to our balance of payments.

The Crow is a form of subsidy to the grain producer. We all recognize that. It was put in place to allow the farmer to compete in the international market against other grain-producing countries. That subsidy is now being taken away. This is not being done in the United States, Argentina or Australia. They are adding subsidies. They recognize that the production of grain is the production of wealth. Selling grain on the international market contributes to our balance of payments and to our foreign trade deficit. This is used consistently.

I wish I had more time. However, this is part of the closure episode that goes on constantly. Members opposite will not listen to the debates that go on. I am sorry I am only permitted ten minutes. I may have an opportunity to speak at a later stage.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, we are speaking to a motion that the question now be put. There is a practice in Parliament whereby Members can put reasoned amendments. The motion by a Government Member that the question now be put prevents the Chair from considering whether an amendment is in order and is a reasoned amendment. That surely is some kind of an assault on the rights and privileges of Members of Parliament on all sides of the House. Since the Chair is the servant of all Members, I hope that sometime in the course of the debate on this Bill, however long it will last, the Chair will decide that that is enough, and that as a servant of the House it will say there has to be an opportunity to speak for the Members on all sides.

I want to move a motion, seconded by an Hon. Member. The Chair will probably have no choice but to rule it out of order or inadmissible. If nothing else, it may get a message across to the Government Member who would move such a motion before any other Member of the House had an opportunity to present a reasoned amendment.

• (1820)

I want to deal with some of the points made by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) whom I consider a friend and colleague. We have served in this House together for quite a few years. I should like to deal with what he and his Party call freedom of choice. Whose freedoms are the Tories trying to protect, Mr. Speaker—the grain farmers, members of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, the farmers' union, the Manitoba elevators, cow-calf operators? The Saskatchewan Association of Rural Municipalities has said that the difference between the Crow rate and the proven cost of hauling grain should be paid directly to the railroads and that the Government should have some say in what it does with the money. The Hon. Member for Vegreville says that farmers should have freedom of choice. What kind of freedom of choice does that give them? It gives them the freedom of choice to pay more money to the railroads. That is the great freedom that is proposed by the Conservatives.

Mr. Mazankowski: How can you say that?

Mr. Benjamin: The Conservative Party has been in favour of the grain producers paying more money for freight changes. That is one of the freedoms of choice that the Hon. Member for Vegreville and other Members of his Party want to propose and see proposed in Parliament.

Mr. Mazankowski: Be honest.

Mr. Benjamin: Let us consider another freedom of choice that the Hon. Member for Vegreville wants to give to grain producers in western Canada and that is the freedom of choice to reduce the price for grain at the farm gate by $25 or $30 per tonne. The freedom of choice that the Conservative Party offers to farmers in western Canada is the choice to reduce the price at the farm gate.

Under the proposal of the Hon. Member for Vegreville farmers have the freedom to dilute the benefit to producers by spreading the so-called Crow benefit to cultivated acres which do not produce statutory grain. Then there is the psychological freedom of choice which is outweighed by reduced economic choices. There is the freedom of the railway companies to manipulate freight rates to close down country elevators and branch lines, and that is called freedom of coercion or legalized blackmail. That is the so-called freedom of choice proposed by the Tory Party. It would force the farmer to take the money and haul his grain 50 or 100 miles farther away. The branch lines would be closed and and the elevator of which the farmer is part owner would be shut down. That is the freedom of choice that the Tories offer.

I have listened to Tories talk about efficiency in Government. It seems to me that freedom of choice means that instead of sending two cheques in payment, one to the CNR and one to the CPR, what we would have would be an administrative nightmare.

The Hon. Member for Vegreville went to great lengths to show how complicated the Bill is and he quoted several clauses for that purpose. His so-called freedom of choice alternative would mean that the Bill would have to be rewritten and would probably be twice as long as it is now. It would mean sending out 150,000 cheques instead of two. It would mean setting up a bureaucracy for those farmers who decide that they want to take the money and for those farmers who want to let the railroads take it. I invite you to kick me in the head, Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: —but I should like to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse):

> That Bill C-185, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be not now read a second time but that the order for second reading be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

The Chair may have no choice in this in view of the motion presented by the Government, but Members of the Opposition have a right, and we exercise this right, to present a reasoned amendment and, as the Chair well knows, reasoned amendments are difficult to arrive at. I should like to hear from the Chair not only whether it is in order but whether it is a reasoned amendment. From some comments I heard this morning from the Chair, I think the occupant at that time had run out of string. I hope that the Chair will respond today, tomorrow or next day—I do not care when.

I hope the Conservative Party will explain about its so-called bastardization of freedom of choice, the freedom of grain producers to pay more, the freedom of grain producers to lose their branch lines, the freedom to lose their country elevators. I should like the Conservatives to explain that. They have been getting away with this Proposition 13, Ronald Reagan syndrome imported from California and have been peddling that nonsense which flies in the face of Canadian practice, which flies in the face of our national unity, which flies in the face of co-operative federalism and pits farmer against farmer, one region against another. Surely that is a betrayal of our Confederation. You cannot have livestock producers trying to gyp grain farmers, their neighbours, out of $25 or $30 per tonne on the farm gate price. The Hon. Member for Vegreville wants to give them the freedom of choice to do that.

I will keep talking until you cut me off, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): If I understood the expression used earlier by the Hon. Member, he has run out of his string.

Mr. Benjamin: May I ask the Chair's generosity to continue—

Some Hon. Members: No!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think I heard the Hon. Member indicate that he would like to seek unanimous consent to continue his remarks.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is clear that there is not unanimous consent. On the matter of the amendment, the Hon. Member declared that he understood that the rules prohibit putting the amendment. I can do no more than assure him that he was correct in his assumption.

The question of whether it is a reasoned amendment is hypothetical. I would refer the Hon. Member to Citation 445 in Beauchesne's fifth edition to the effect there can be no amendment once the motion has been put for the previous question.

• (1830)

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to follow the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). I am surprised that the Official Opposition has taken this opportunity to remain silent on this very important Bill. It would look as though they have knuckled under to the Government's desire to push this Bill through quickly, despite the implications of Bill C-155 not only to the farmers in the Prairies, but certainly on the whole issue of transportation in western Canada. Obviously the resolve of the Conservative Party of Canada to see that this Bill adequately protects the grain farmers, as well as provides adequate transportation for mineral and forest products in western Canada, its resolve to fight this Bill and to see that the Government does not jeopardize the livelihood of western Canadian farmers, has evaporated in this House this day.

The Bill with which we are dealing will do a lot more than take approximately $6,000 from each farm family by the year 1990. It jeopardizes the whole western farm future. As a Member from the Province of British Columbia I can say that we have concerns not only for the grain farmers in the Provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, we also have some very sincere concerns as to how changes to the Crow rate under this Bill will affect the producers of timber products, coal and other minerals in the Province of British Columbia.

There seems to be a perception, and a false one, that the New Democratic Party in fighting this Bill is jeopardizing increased transportation. The proposition which we have attempted to put forward regarding Bill C-155 would split the Bill and would see the House of Commons deal with transportation, in the upgrading of the rail system which we know as woefully inadequate and antiquated. We would split this Bill in order to deal with transportation needs in Western Canada, to protect the farmers and the statutory Crow rate, and to deal with the infrastructure of western Canadian products. I believe this indicates that this Party has an appreciation for the importance of rail transportation in Canada.

To support that statement I would like to comment on a situation in terms of the Government of British Columbia under former Premier David Barrett between the years 1972 and 1975. In recognizing the needs for improved rail service in British Columbia, the New Democratic Party Government of the day responded to the real need for upgrading the service by constructing, through B.C. Rail, a rail car plant at Squamish, B.C.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, it is indicative of Tory, Liberal and Social Credit Parties that they do not want any kind of successful Crown corporation which might employ people and provide services. That Crown corporation set up one of the most modern rail construction companies in North America. It was producing a car and a half a day for the B.C. Rail services. It employed 300 people. There was no indication that the rail car orders were decreasing. Yet, when the Socred coalition formed the Government in 1975 one of its first acts was to close that rail plant and lay off 300 people. We now know the need for upgrading the carrying capacity of our rail system. That rail car plant should have been producing constantly from 1975 on, which would have provided a large economic stimulus to that area which is now somewhat depressed because of the forest industry concerns.

Not only did the New Democratic Government propose and construct that rail car plant, there also were proposals to open up the North. This vision of the North would have included a rail system stretching from Vancouver through northern British Columbia, through the Yukon and into Alaska. This would open the North for the mineral and forest industries, and, more importantly, it would bring Alaskan gas and oil from Alaska down through British Columbia and into the southern States. That was a vision which never saw fruition simply because, again, a Social Credit Government did not see the economic viability of that system.

The proposal of the New Democratic Party for rail upgrading would serve the purpose of this Bill. It would serve the purpose of creating 100,000 more jobs than the Government is suggesting this Bill will produce. It would save the Canadian taxpayers and the Canadian prairie farmers hundreds of millions of dollars. It would produce a rail system which would be able to carry increased grain exports, and the mineral, forest and potash requirements of this country for its own domestic use and for export.

The record of the CPR is dismal in terms of providing an adequate rail bed for both transportation of passengers and of freight. As an Hon. Member whose riding includes the Esquimalt and Nanaimo railway system, I can speak from some experience in terms of how the CPR has neglected the needs of that rail system both for the transportation of bulk products and for passengers.

What the Government is doing with this Bill is simply adding greater subsidies on top of the estimated $13.5 billion which the CPR has received over the past many decades, with no equity for the Canadian public. Bill C-155 could adequately have been split. It could have protected the rural communities in Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta. It could have provided an adequate rail transportation system for products in my Province of British Columbia. We have seen the neglect of the CPR in anticipating increased demands. We have seen the neglect by the Liberal Government of the Canadian public and this Parliament through a hurried debate without giving any recognition of what the prairie farmers themselves have to impart to this House of Commons. The need for rail upgrading, Mr. Speaker, is recognized by everyone in this House. It would appear, however, that the Official Opposition is quite satisfied that this Bill go through. It is quite satisfied to see the final debate on second reading of this Bill conclude without putting up any more speakers this evening. It is quite prepared to see the western farmer pay the extra $6,000 a year by the year 1990 without trying to force this Government to split the Bill and to recognize that rail upgrading and prairie grain transportation costs can be achieved without ruining the western economy.

The obvious difficulty in dealing with a Bill of this nature, in terms of the perception which the public has, is that there are some aspects of it we can all support. There are other aspects which none of us can support. Certainly, the New Democratic Party has difficulty with the way in which this rail upgrading is going to be financed from the public purse without any equity.

• (1840)

We are very concerned that the coal lands in British Columbia are going to remain under federal jurisdiction. Despite the failure of the Government, through the refusal to maintain the Crow rate, it would appear these lands are going to remain in the hands of the federal Government.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we cannot tolerate a situation in which prairie farmers are going to have a significant decrease in the amount of income they and their families can expect.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to put on record certain things pertaining to this particular debate. I find it particularly repulsive that the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) moved closure on a motion which gives Members like myself, who are seriously affected, the opportunity of trying to convince my hon. friends opposite of the drastic affect this Bill will have on people in my constituency. I want to outline several of the reasons I feel that way. I want to update some of the information I gave earlier in the House regarding the disproportionate impact of this measure on constituencies such as mine.

Within the last week I was able to obtain a 1982 Government of Manitoba report which tabulates the average income of certain constituencies. The Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) said that every farmer could afford $2,800. I would point out the disproportionate impact that would have in the town of Benito, for example. The average annual income in that town for the year 1980 was $6,911. If you took $2,800 away from that, I would ask my hon. friends opposite what kind of impact that would have, and what impact it would have in their constituencies? In the town of Ethelbert, which is half way between Dauphin and Swan River, the average annual income is $6,060.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that Hon. Members opposite might at least give me the courtesy of listening to what I have to say.

Mr. Benjamin: They are busy playing cards.

Mr. Lewycky: If not, maybe they could at least excuse themselves.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Clearly, the conversation taking place on my left is not very helpful to the Hon. Member who was recognized by the Chair. I would therefore ask Hon. Members to lower their voices somewhat.

[English]

Mr. Lewycky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, as I said, Ethelbert is a town with an average annual income in 1980 of $6,060. If you take away the $2,800 that the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex suggests is not much, what type of income would be left for these people on which to survive? I would also like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that this average annual income includes the wife and children, who are unpaid labour. We are talking about communities where the wife does not have the opportunity of obtaining a second income for the family. Even if people from farming communities such as Ethelbert were to try and get a job in the service sector they would have to travel up to 60 miles one way to work in let us say, a restaurant or some other area of the service sector. We are saying that the deduction of $2,800 from the annual income of people in my constituency will have a very disproportionate impact.

I could go on and list several other communities which would be affected in the same way. For example, we have Langruth which presently pays, under the Crow rate, some 16 cents a hundredweight. The elevator handles 8,700 tonnes. At 5.1 times Crow, that community would suffer a loss of $125,900.

I could point out the impact this Bill will have on all the elevators in my constituency, Mr. Speaker, but it would be difficult for my friends in urban constituencies to understand what this would mean. However, Mr. Speaker, instead of going through the 66 communities in my constituency, perhaps I could suggest to Hon. Members opposite that they take a block from their constituency, take a street from that particular block, and suck out $220,600. From another block and another avenue they could suck out $133,700. From a crescent they could suck out $125,900. From a driveway they could suck out $199,000. Take a short street, one that does not have quite as many people on it, and suck out $95,500 from that particular street. I could go on endlessly. I could speak of the disproportionate impact upon the 66 communities. I could speak of the impact it would have in terms of destroying these areas. I make that illustration simply so that my friends opposite will understand that when I have presented these petitions from various people in my constituency I have not been speaking through my hat. I have been bringing forth the real concerns of real people, showing that this will have a real negative impact upon their livelihoods.

• (1850)

In contrast, consider what the railways are doing and what is happening in some of these areas. For example, let me refer to an article in the New York Times of May 16, 1983, wherein it is reported that the CNR is bailing out the Milwaukee Road Railway to the tune of $250 million, and refers to the CP's proposal to bail out the Rock Island Railway to the tune of $100 million. There have also been rumours that the CP might be putting in $350 million to salvage the Illinois Central Gulf Railway. It is for this reason, Mr. Speaker—I will conclude.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the time allotted for his speech has expired.

Mr. Prud'homme: More! Question!

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I hear the Members of the Government asking for the question. It is that very attitude which led the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) to stand today and, in a sort of specious way, move closure under Standing Order 56 which states:

> The previous question, until it is decided, shall preclude all amendment of the main question, and it shall be in the following words, "That this question now be put".

The Hon. Member for Rosemont, who posed the motion today, virtually cut off all means by which the Opposition may have assisted the Government in improving a very bad Bill. It does not seem reasonable to us that a Bill as important to western Canada as the statutory rate for the movement of grain should be treated in this manner by a Government which is supposedly made up of democrats.

I found it strange to hear the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) speaking in the House just a few moments ago about the freedom of choice. I know that the Hon. Member does not hold a Canadian Wheat Board permit book. I am not too sure that he has ever held one, or that he understands how a permit book works. As a matter of fact, I think there are only two Members of the NDP who do hold either an A or B Canadian Wheat Board permit book.

An Hon. Member: Is that a bad percentage?

Mr. McKnight: The Hon. Member for Regina West was asking that the Government subsidize the railroads. He said, "Please, taxpayers of Canada, subsidize the railroads. Please, farmers of Canada, subsidize the railroads". He did not want anything for the farmers, the grain producers. He wanted the Canadian Pacific Railroad to receive a subsidy from the taxpayers of Canada. After all the things I have heard the Hon. Member say about the bad Canadian Pacific, here he is begging and pleading in the House of Commons to the Government, asking for subsidies to the Canadian Pacific Railroad. I find that to be really strange. We will not go into the employment record of the Hon. Member. However, I would like the Hon. Member to understand that under his proposal, a sort of freight VIA Rail would be created, something which would cause the two railroads of Canada to continue to escalate their cost, shoving it at the grain farmers of Canada as an individual cost item. I heard the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) condemn that process at the VIA Rail hearings, and I will hear him condemn it tomorrow. However, today the Hon. Member for Regina West, a Member of the NDP, is requesting that the Government allow the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific Railroads to create the same increase and the same inflationary product there was with VIA Rail.

It is strange to discover who is criticized when the Party to my left gets into a problem. The Bill has been presented by a Liberal Government. The Progressive Conservatives are criticized, yet they are the only people who are carrying the debate, the only people who have maintained something of credibility in the eyes of the grain producers. They are trying to assist the Government and stop it from passing a bad Bill, and perhaps stop it from being completely wiped out forever in western Canada. I am not to sure that even we can do that.

The NDP proposed an amendment requesting a six month hoist. The vote was held the other night, but 35 per cent of its Members were not here to vote for their own amendment.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. McKnight: Thirty-five per cent were not here to support a six month hoist. Even the Leader of their Party was not here to vote for the six month hoist. It makes one wonder whether they are just putting up a facade or whether they are really serious. They said they would fight the Bill to the end, that they would have nothing to do with the Bill. What did I hear the Hon. Member for Regina West ask? He moved a motion that Bill C-155 be referred to committee. I do not know what is happening over to my left. I notice that the Leader of the NDP is not there. I notice that his House Leader is absent. I just cannot understand the Hon. Member for Regina West who said, "We will fight the Bill. We will kill it. We will do everything we can". Yet at the first opportunity Members of the NDP had to vote on the six month hoist 35 per cent were absent. Yet they are here today to move a motion that it be referred to committee. I am not too sure what to expect.

I would like to continue. When the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) changed the Bill he added some crops; alfalfa meal and pellets, mustard seed, sunflower seed, sunflower seed oil and triticale. I do not know where the rational for the inclusion of these crops originated, or why the Minister of Transport wanted to include only those crops, however, I would simply like to read some numbers into the record.

In 1982, some 125,000 acres were producing lentils, in comparison to 16,000 acres producing sunflowers. In Saskatchewan, canary seed is a specialty crop, and in 1982, some 136,000 acres were used for that purpose, compared to 16,000 for sunflowers. Some people wonder what a specialty crop means. A specialty crop may be defined as being any grain or forage crop other than wheat, oats, barley, rye, flax or canola. Those crops are grown in Saskatchewan to produce a cash flow. Producers have used their own management ability to decide that by growing those crops they can generate more income than they could by growing other crops. That is something I know the Members in the NDP do not understand, but that is also called freedom of choice. That is using the management tools of a manager, a farmer, to grow a crop which will give him more return.

Mustard was grown in western Canada starting back in 1936. Canada is the largest exporter of mustard in the world today. We export to Japan, the EEC and the United States.

I should like consideration given to the inclusion of pulse crops, which are lentils, field peas, fava beans and dry beans. Pulse crop production and marketing is growing yearly in Saskatchewan. Western Canadian production of peas has increased from 53,000 acres in 1968 to 125,000 acres in 1980, and these are not included under the Minister's Transportation Act. It does not seem to make much sense when we hear people arguing against freedom of choice. That freedom of choice as was proposed by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and supported by our Party is one method of taking one of the bad items in the Bill which we want removed and making it positive. It does not require huge administrative machinery, as some would have us believe. The Western Grain Stabilization Program has the exact figures for every permit book holder in western Canada. It would not require a lot of effort and work to put another page in the Canadian Wheat Board permit book. This could be done on the volume that went through the book, and on the yearly average under the Western Grain Stabilization Program.

• (1900)

Let us consider the 31.1 million tonne cap that has been imposed by the Minister of Transport. If it means that farmers in western Canada, after they reach the 31.1 million tonnes, will have to pay the full cost of the movement of Board grains, people will look for other grains to grow, and continue to grow them. By doing so they would receive more money in their hip pocket. If they could receive more money by growing all those pulse crops such as canary seed Lentils, mustard and alfalfa, they would not dilute the benefit of the Crow on movement over 31 million tonnes.

I find it difficult to adequately express my concerns about this Bill in ten minutes. I hope I will have another opportunity to do so when it comes back to the House. I find it difficult to debate a Bill of this magnitude under closure.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, since the Tories have lost their guts I am willing to speak on this motion. The score now is seven Tories, six NDPs and one Liberal. It shows that the Tories have caved in and they are in fact unwilling to admit that they are supporting the Liberal legislation by refusing to oppose it. I am interested in speaking to this Bill as often as I will have the opportunity.

When I was a child I remember going to court in Winnipeg as a spectator to hear a damage suit against the Canadian Pacific Railroad. This suit arose from an incident in a little railway town in eastern Manitoba where a nine-year old girl going to school had been crushed between some boxcars that were being shunted. On the only day I heard my father speak on a case, he was acting for the family of the girl who had been killed. Of course, if he had not won the case after two or three years of debating it through to the Supreme Court, he would have had to pay the whole cost out of pocket because the father did not have anything, being a railway worker. He also had to deal with the fact that the CPR in the meantime had moved all the witnesses around the country.

The reason I bring this up now is that we are dealing with the same company which has used every means within the law, and a good many means outside the law, not only to cheat the public generally but often to cheat its own shareholders and very often to cheat its own workers. In this particular lawsuit, the company was finally found to be at fault in as much as it failed to put a brakie on the leading end of the boxcars being shunted. Had there been a brakie there, there would have been no accident.

At that time the company had the gall to argue that it had no obligation to have the brakie as far as the little girl was concerned because she was a trespasser. This occurred in a little railway town where this girl was following a beaten path from her home to school which she and others had followed every day for months. However, the company was shunting boxcars on that day and it claimed that the laws this country had passed specifically to regulate the railroad did not apply to the railroad because to this little girl was trespassing.

The Supreme Court finally threw that silly argument out and referred the case back to the court in Winnipeg where it was to be heard by a jury. When the company found that it was up against a jury of 12 Canadians, it caved in. It knew it had lost and decided to settle.

The point I am making is that this is a company which has savagely robbed and risked the lives of Canadians ever since it was charted in 1881, which is almost the entire history of Canada. It is continuing to do so today.

The company has the same hold on the Liberal Government now as it did on the Conservative Government of John A.

Macdonald and on the Conservative Government which held office a few years ago. Whether a Conservative Government or Liberal Government is in power, the CPR can use the Government in this Parliament of either of those two Parties to milk the public for the benefits of the shareholders of the CPR.

Within approximately five years of its incorporation, the CPR had received over $100 million in funding from the Canadian Government. A small new country had given it over $100 million, which represented the majority of its total claim funding of $175 million. While $100 million of that $175 million was public money, the CPR claims total and absolute ownership and right to profit from all of that public money in addition to the private money that was put in.

It also received close to 44 million acres of land, and up to 18 years ago when it sold off a half billion dollars worth of that land it still had immense holdings which it gave to Marathon Realty. Here we meet up with CPR again since Marathon Realty is CPR.

The main disrupting force to rational city planning in downtown Toronto has been Marathon Realty. it is the main force blocking us from developing railway lands. It was the main force in disrupting the use of the lands around what is now the site for the new concert auditorium that is to replace the previous auditorium in Toronto. Marathon Realty's lawyer has told me that they will never build rental housing in Ontario so long as Ontario has the affrontry to maintain a rent control law. In other words, Marathon Realty holds all Governments in contempt as well as the people of Canada. This land that was received free from the people of Canada is now used to blackmail the people of Canada and to try to destroy legislation passed by a Conservative Government for the protection of the tenants of Toronto.

I meet up with CPR again through its lead smelter in the eastern part of downtown Toronto which has for many years flagrantly polluted and poisoned the air around Pape Avenue with its lead dust, pollution it could have restricted but did not.

My point is that Canadian Pacific Railroad can well pay for all of the improvements that are needed. At a time when it claims it cannot pay for a half billion dollar tunnel through the Rogers' Pass, it is claiming to spend that amount to buy airplaines for its other subsidiary, CP Air.

There are dozens of companies providing revenue to Canadian Pacific Limited. Let me name a few of them. Canadian Pacific Limited's net income from CP Rail in 1977 was $65 million. By 1981, that figure had almost doubled to $127 million. Its net income from Canadian Pacific Enterprises, a great conglomerate, jumped from $170 million to $287 million. Its total revenues had almost tripled from $4,899 million to $12,336 million. Its total net income went from about one-quarter of a billion dollars to almost half a billion dollars during the five years from 1977 to 1981. Its total assets more than doubled from $7.6 billion to $16.3 billion. Yet Canadian Pacific clearly knows that it has so well funded the Tory and the Liberal Parties it is assured there will be no effective means of opposing a new money grab from the people of Canada.

Canadian Pacific Limited knows very well that the Tories will put up a sham battle and that the Liberals will put on closure in one form or another, as it has attempted, and CP will be able to rob the Canadian taxpayers. The working people presently pay $3 in taxes for every $1 paid by the corporations, and will do so until the new income tax laws come into effect. Then the proportion will be greater than that for the individual. Therefore, the tax money that is being donated free and unneeded—free to Canadian Pacific Limited—is the tax money of the working people of Canada. It is being stolen from them with connivance of the silent Tory caucus to my right and the Liberal Party opposite.

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I am deeply distressed that the Government has decided to use its majority in the House to attempt to limit debate on this all important issue of the Crow. No single issue has aroused the concerns of western Canadian farmers for at least a decade as has the change to the Crow. It is equally true that no other issue has so divided public opinion in western Canada as has the Government's proposal to abolish the Crow and hence increase the farmers' transportation costs. Consequently, one can only regret that this Government should attempt to limit parliamentary discussion on this topic. It is my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that Government should attempt to encourage more discussion rather than curtail it when the issue before the House is as crucial to western Canada and is as divisive as this particular issue.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, agricultural conditions in western Canada have been severely depressed for some time, and I must with regret inform the Members of this House that this Government's policies have only aggravated those conditions.

The problem of western agriculture are severalfold, but the farmers' greatest difficulties lie in the fact that they, unlike most businessmen, do not have the capacity to control either their costs or the prices paid for their produce.

In many, if not most, economic endeavours the businessman has some opportunity to pass increased costs on to the customer. The farmer is in a largely unique position in that he has no such opportunity. He must sell the bulk of the produce on the world market, a market that unfortunately is most depressed at the moment. What we as legislators must do therefore is to strive wherever possible to help the farmer to limit his expenses in every conceivable way.

It is extremely regrettable, therefore, that this Government is proposing to abolish the Crow and hence to increase the farmers' transportation costs at precisely the worst possible moment. For that reason, I urged the Members of this House last week to postpone consideration of this Bill for six months so there would be more adequate time to consider the implications of this proposal. Unfortunately, only two-thirds of the NDP were here to vote on their own motion on that occasion, and the Members of the Liberal Party have been permitted to push ahead, regardless of the consequences.

As someone who owns a grain farm and has been in close consultation with many farmers in my constituency of Brandon-Souris during the last several months, I wish to take this opportunity to state unequivocally that many farmers are experiencing very severe financial problems. Those farmers need to be reassured that they are going to be able to continue in their chosen careers. The Bill before this House, unfortunately, has caused many to fear that they may not.

The vast majority of the farmers with whom I have been in contact recognize the need for an improved rail transportation system. They understand fully that the key to the agricultural industry's survival lies in attaining increased productivity and in moving additional tonnes of grain to market.

The Government's present plan, however, is seriously deficient in several vital aspects. First, the farmer is being asked to pay far too great a share of the costs of improving that transportation system. As I suggested last week in this House, the farmer must be protected from the spectre of rising costs on the one hand and declining world grain prices on the other. The answer is to guarantee by statute that the farmer's transportation costs should never exceed a ceiling of 7 per cent of the initial price of grain or 7 per cent of the average price for non-Board grains. While it is hoped that the farmers' share of the transportation costs would not reach that 7 per cent ceiling, farmers at least should know what their maximum costs could be. I would ask, therefore, that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) substitute my proposal of a 7 per cent ceiling for that of the overly expensive 10 per cent safety net he is currently proposing.

I have another serious concern with the Minister's proposal, a concern which is shared by many of my constituents. Where is the guarantee that the railways will provide the improved railway system promised by this proposal? Farmers, with good cause, have grown skeptical of this Government's promises over the years and they now understandably fear that they may not receive the improved transportation system for which the Government is expecting them to pay.

Finally, I and many of my constituents would like a written guarantee that we do not return to that system of variable freight rates which used to affect so detrimentally the interests of those farmers who were served only by branch lines. At one point in the history of western agriculture some farmers were severely penalized by the fact that they, by chance, had no choice but to use the services of only one elevator company and/or one railway line. Those farmers who find themselves in similar circumstances today want to be reassured that they will not be charged more for transportation than those who, again by chance, happen to reside in an area where facilities are more numerous.

I will conclude by reiterating that western Canadian farmers require an improved transportation system, but the proportion of the costs which are to be allocated to them must correspond to their ability to pay. Second, the Government must indicate more clearly than it has done to this point how it proposes to ensure that that improved transportation system will be made effective. Finally, the farmers' concerns about the possibility of the reintroduction of variable freight rates must be dispelled. These reservations are so significant that it is of the utmost importance that the Government's motion to restrict debate on this vital issue be defeated.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I heard some of the Conservative Members say that they have smoked me out. I do not think there was any problem smoking me out because I was prepared to debate this matter at any time. I am told by the mining industry of British Columbia that the Conservatives really want the Crow rate changed, but prefer that the Liberals do it. There is a lot of hypocrisy to my right. We will leave the Conservatives to their own internal problems, to decide which of their leaders, or would-be leaders, they are prepared to support.

I want to deal very briefly with the Crow rate and with the Liberal Party opposite. I see very few Members opposite.

An Hon. Member: There are four of them.

Mr. Waddell: There are five now.

Mr. Shields: There are six NDP Members here.

Mr. Waddell: I want to ask the people in British Columbia and Liberal Members just to visualize for a moment that all the forests and minerals of British Columbia were situated in the southern part of the Prairies. We would need some means to get our products to market. We would not have them on the coast at tidewater. We would need a statutory subsidy; we would need some method of help. That is the history of this country. That is why we give a subsidy to the Prairie farmers for grain transportation.

When people ask how we in British Columbia can support retaining the old statutory rate, I say there are all sorts of reasons. The main one being equity.

• (1920)

Mr. Shields: That sounds like a leadership speech.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: The Conservatives should know about leadership. They are experts at leadership but at nothing else.

Let me deal with this matter in a little more detail. The mining industry in British Columbia is a great friend of the New Democratic Party. That industry is in great trouble now, not because of anything to do with us but because of world markets. That industry is coming to us saying we have to support the changes in the Crow rate because we have to update and upgrade the railways. Of course I believe in upgrading the railways, but not in making Canadian wheat farmers pay for that upgrading. That is a whole separate issue. I believe in improved rail capacity, but there other ways of doing it. Farmers cannot charge higher prices for grain because most of it goes to very competitive world markets. What will farmers do? They must absorb the cost. That means that farmers will buy fewer tractors, fewer cars and fewer consumer goods. As Don McGillivray, an economic journalist, put it in his column, a Crow change could hurt the Canadian economy. He put it very well. He said:

> You can't get rich by taking money out of one pocket and putting it in another.

This legislation takes money out of the pockets of farmers and puts it into the pockets of the railways. That is really what this debate is about.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said we are reactionary because we will not agree to the change. We are not reactionary. The Crow rate was an historical bargain with Canadian farmers. If the Prime Minister means that we are reactionary because we want to preserve the structure of small towns and prairie life in which a lot of people take pleasure, then we are reactionary. I do not believe that is being reactionary; I believe that is being realistic.

I also object to the Liberal Government bringing in this change without really consulting farmers. It is a Government without support in western Canada. Again I make the point that if we were in the same position as the Liberal Government and we brought in a bill like this to fundamentally change the social structure of Quebec there would be a revolution. The Government has no right to change this matter.

The Government is not listening. It made changes when the Quebec caucus wanted some changes for Quebec farmers, but it will not make any changes for western farmers. It will not split this Bill. If the Government will not listen we will make it listen. There are various ways to make the Government listen. I do not think it is listening. There are very few Official Opposition MPs here this evening. There is very little interest by the Liberal Party in the debate, and there are very few of its speakers taking part. In other words, there is no listening at all, so I have no alternative but to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), the adjournment of this debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Hon. Members have heard the motion of the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Waddell) which was negatived on the following division:

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I am rising to continue my speech on the Crow Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has been recognized and has finished his speech. The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank all the Liberal Members opposite for showing up to take part in this debate simply by voting to continue it.

Mr. Waddell: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) was previously recognized. He used his time and finished his speech. He cannot be recognized again.

Mr. Waddell: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway please state his point of order.

Mr. Waddell: My complaint is, Mr. Speaker, that I still have three or four minutes left in my speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member, according to the records of the House, has no time left. The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that there were 133 Liberals—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) on a point of order.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Chair to tell us exactly how much time the Hon. Member has used up?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Calgary West has the floor. The Hon. Member is not raising a point of order.

Mr. Hawkes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of the 133 Members of the Liberal Party who showed up tonight to vote to continue this debate, not one single Member has had the courage to speak to the issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: At 12 noon today, Mr. Speaker, a Liberal backbencher stood in the House and moved closure on the Crow Bill. Since that time we have not heard one Liberal Member speak to that closure motion. Not one! There are 133 Liberal Members who say they want the debate to continue, but for what reason, Mr. Speaker, if they will not contribute to the debate? Are they ashamed? They should be, if they are not. Do they have a contribution to make?

An Hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Hawkes: Do they have an excuse to offer? There are two Liberal Members elected west of the Lakehead, who are pushing through a piece of legislation in the House which is vital to the interest of western Canadians, and yet not one Liberal Member since 12 noon today has had the courage to stand in this Chamber and speak to the motion which is before the House.

[Translation]

Silence is the rule in this party. They acted the same way during the debate on the Constitution. The Members from Quebec did not have the courage to speak in the debate on the Crow rate.

[English]

It is an abomination of the democratic process that 133 Liberal Members will show up in this House to vote the way they are told, but not one single Member has the courage to stand up, enter into this debate and tell us why we have to discuss this under closure. Not one Liberal Member, Mr. Speaker, has entered into this debate, of the 133 Members whose constituents should take down their names, addresses and telephone numbers and the next time they get a chance to vote, they should take every one of those 133 Members of Parliament and chuck them out of this Chamber, chuck them right out.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: This is a fundamental change in the law of this country which affects the western Canadian region, and not one Liberal Member out of 133—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I find it rather difficult to believe that in this place an Hon. Member of the House can vilify a Party for having its—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is not making a point of order. The Hon. Member is giving an argument, not making a point of order.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, it speaks to a certain state of mind that when you can tell the thruth in this Chamber, a whole Party takes it as vilification. If the truth is vilification to the Liberal Party, so be it.

[Translation]

A party and its Members, ruled by silence.

[English]

When I asked to be put on the agenda to speak here earlier this evening, Mr. Speaker, it was the New Democratic Party and its hypocrisy which motivated me to speak. That motivation has been superseded by the hypocrisy of the 133 Liberal Members who show up to vote and do not show up to speak. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that we get some of them sufficiently energized to enter into this debate and to tell us why they think it so important—

Mrs. Appolloni: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hawkes: —but the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mrs. Appolloni: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Hon. Members on this side of the House, I would have it noted that there are those in this House who feel that if they have nothing intelligent to say, it is better to shut up!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has not made a point of order.

Mr. Murphy: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member will be seated, please.

Mr. Murphy: Point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the Hon. Member please be seated. The Chair appeals to the House to observe decorum because it is very difficult to hear the remarks coming from Hon. Members. The Chair also would appeal to Hon. Members not to raise false points of order because the debate cannot be conducted on the basis of continuous interruptions based on false points of order. If the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) has a point of order, the Chair will hear it.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, my point of order, of course, is that I agree that the Liberal Member was correct, of course. If they have nothing intelligent to say, of course, they should stay down. But my point—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has to state a point of order. The Hon. Member is not making a point of order.

Mr. Murphy: My point of order, Mr. Speaker, is that, of course, the Leader of the speaker who is speaking at the present time is misleading the House—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Calgary West.

Mr. Hawkes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thought that the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) had really done it when she gave us a new definition of intelligence—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) rises on a point of order. The Chair does not wish to recognize Hon. Members on false points of order. Hon. Members detract from the decorum of the House when they do so. If the Hon. Member for Kootenay West has a valid point of order, would he please state it succinctly.

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, I am not the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen), I am the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke. I have a point of order. I believe that we have a responsibility to stand up in the House to express a point of order. The fact remains—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the Hon. Member please express his point of order.

Mr. Parker: The point remains that you have been dictatorial in your manner of dealing with points of order.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Parker: —and I have no—

Some Hon. Members: Out, out.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Hon. Member, or any Hon. Member of his Party, has a complaint concerning the occupant of the Chair, the Hon. Member is aware of the procedures available and the methods to follow. Idle words will not serve his purpose, nor the purpose of the occupant of the chair. The Hon. Member for Calgary West.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni), gave us in this Chamber a little earlier this evening a unique definition of an intelligence test. It is interesting to find out—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) on a point of order.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat shocked at the demeanour which we have seen tonight in this House. Let us continue with the debate. These baseless allegations made against the Chair only bring disrepute on the Hon. Members who espouse them. I, for one, commend the Chair in the way it is attempting to run this Chamber with decorum—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair does not intend to recognize continuously Hon. Members who have not succeeded in establishing a point of order. For the last time, if the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) has a valid point of order, will he please state it?

Mr. Parker: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I want to express my point of order. I think it is a valid point of order and I have tried all day today to express my point of order. This House has not given me the opportunity to express my point of order.

• (2120)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Parker: The fact remains that the Chair has repeatedly stood up and stopped my point of order by saying that I do not have a point of order.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Parker: I believe I have a point of order and it is this: the Speaker of the House has not given us the opportunity on this side of the House to express our concern as to what is happening in this House today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is making an attack on the Chair. He knows the procedures. This is not a point of order and the Hon. Member is well aware of the procedures available. I suggest that he not attempt to use a false point of order, nor make threats against the Chair.

The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, may I commend you for your patience and diligence. Earlier this evening we had the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) stand in this Chamber and talk about freedom of choice. Mr. Speaker, I was struck by the hypocrisy of that Member, just pure hypocrisy. The Liberal Party of Canada is the Party of silence, and the New Democratic Party, the Liberal Party West, is the Party of hypocrisy. I heard that Member stand in this Chamber and say that, given our freedom of choice, there would be—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) rises on a point of order?

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I am certain it is a valid point of order. It pertains to the maintenance of decorum in the House of Commons, which is absolutely imperative if we are to maintain any credibility on this issue and beyond. Of course the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) knows that what he has stated here is absolutely false.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is not making a point of order. There have been a whole series of interventions from the Hon. Member and the group with him—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are making fools of yourselves.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: —which are not points of order. They will have ample opportunity to participate in the debate. But in the interests of this House and of the respect and decorum that they owe the House and that other Members owe to them, I appeal to them to observe the rules and procedures.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the NDP, the Liberal Party West, fails to understand freedom of choice because every time they are faced with a real choice of whether to serve their constituents or their own selfish interests, they always opt for the Liberals in that way serving their selfish interests and never serving the issues of their constituents.

Earlier this day, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) stood in this House and said: if you follow the proposals of the Conservative Party, there is going to be rail line abandonment. They would leave the impression with farmers in western Canada that they are in favour of stopping rail line abandonment. Back in December, 1979, there was a Government in place in this Chamber which had stopped the abandonment of 1,400 miles of rail line.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: What did Members of the NDP, the Liberal Party West, do about that? They threw that Government out of office and put in that bunch over there, the Liberal Party of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: Have the NDP Members travelled across western Canada and—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). Again, the Chair has difficulty. When Hon. Members have raised spurious points of order which are not valid, it becomes more difficult to see Hon. Members as they repeat the exercise. But if the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway has a valid point of order, will he please state it?

Mr. Waddell: The point of order is that one has to tell the truth in the House of Commons and I wish to apologize for voting against Joe Clark.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I was just making the point that the NDP, the Liberal Party West, threw out a Government that was stopping rail line abandonment. The NDP Members, one right after the other, have stood in this Chamber and told us that it is important to move the grain. Well, any Member from western Canada can tell you clearly and absolutely that Canada is a healthier country with a better economy if the grain gets moved, if it is exported. The NDP says that is what they want. Well, Mr. Speaker, in December, 1979, the hypocrites called the New Democratic Party stood in this Chamber and threw out the Government that was moving the grain, Mr. Speaker. That is what they did. They threw it out. How can you believe members of a political Party who say they stand for the non-abandonment of rail lines and for the movement of grain, and the first time they are faced with a choice they throw out a Government which stops the rail line abandonment and a Government which in fact was moving the grain of western Canadians?

If you sit in this Chamber and listen to Members of that Party they will tell you they care about unemployment. Well, they threw out a Government that was creating 30,000 jobs a month, Mr. Speaker, then they replaced it with the Liberal Party of Canada which is losing 30,000 jobs a month.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair hesitates to interrupt the Hon. Member in view of the interruptions, but having made some allowance for the interruptions, the Chair has come regretfully to the conclusion that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I would like to seek permission of the House for unanimous consent to continue.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, when I rose earlier on a point of order I did so, wrongly I admit, because of the accusations the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) was making. I use the word "honourable" advisedly. I hesitated to speak on this issue because when it is referred to the committee I shall probably be chairing the committee that will deal with it and I want to ensure that the committee hearings are fair, forthright and complete. However, when a Member of the Opposition gets up and makes the accusation that the Hon. Member for Calgary West made here tonight, it cannot go unchallenged.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): When the Hon. Member, without knowing the motivation of Hon. Members on this side, makes—

Mr. Lambert: The hatchet man!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Yes, acts as a hatchet man, and I thank the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) for his contribution.

Mr. Lambert: No; you!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): When he acts as the hatchet man, when he gets up without knowing what he is talking about and casts reflections on Members on this side of the House who come from areas other than western Canada, and suggests that we are not Canadians, we do not have an interest in Canada as a whole, that cannot go unchallenged.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: How about talking about the Crow?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): When he says that we are the people who threw out a Government that was stopping rail line abandonment and leaves it at that, that cannot go unchallenged. He did not say that we were also the Party that stopped a Government that was prepared to impose excessive taxation—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): —and that was prepared to do away with the universality of medicare and hospitalization, an that was prepared to Balkanize this country, then I cannot sit quietly by and let him get away with it. There are Hon. Members on that side of the House but the speech we just heard was not honourable. It was totally dishonest. I hope that in continuing debate of this matter we will in fact discuss the issue of the Crow rate. It is a situation affecting the livelihood of all Canadians, one which I hope will be debated in full in committee and one which will receive the serious attention to detail that it deserves.

• (2130)

When an Hon. Member of the House rises in an attempt to condemn a Party because its Members were here to vote when his own Party did not, when there were 51 Tories present, on an issue on which they had claimed to be the saviours of the nation except, of course, for the pious protestations of the socialists, one finds it to be stretching credulity to believe that they are really serious. I think that we can give the 51, or at least most of the 51 who were here, credit for being serious because they were here. However, like the story of the ten lepers who were healed, where were the other nine, or the other 69, or whatever it is they have here?

I therefore suggest to all Members of the House that, rather than trying to score rather hypocritical points, rather than trying to inflame the issue, rather than trying to divide Canadians and to protect one area of the country against another, we take a little time. We should all examine our consciences and look to the real motive of the debate, asking ourselves whether we are in fact promoting the unity, the prosperity and the future of this country or whether we are trying to destroy it. If we are trying to unite it, in uniting we had better start talking to one another. We had better start discussing with each other rather than hurling brickbats at each other, inflaming the issue and trying to divide.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Let us try to use reason. Let us remember that what was good in 1897 is not necessarily ideal in 1983. What was good in 1897 does not necessarily promote development, prosperity and growth in 1983. What was good in 1897 does not necessarily meet the needs of 1983. Let us bear that in mind. Let us talk to each other. Let us not talk at each other. Let us try to be a little conciliatory. Let us try to unite rather than divide.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKnight: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi has just made a truism out of the statement made by the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni).

Mr. Stevens: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) was on his feet. Was it for debate or to raise a point or order?

Mr. Ogle: Debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for York-Peel.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering if the Hon. Member would reply to the question, which is simply this: As he has such preconceived notions concerning the Crow, does he feel that he can carry on as a truly neutral chairman of the committee to consider the Bill?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I would be glad to answer that question, Mr. Speaker. I have no preconceived notions about the Crow except to know that what was good in the nineteenth century is not necessarily, absolutely good in the twentieth century. That is what makes me different from the Hon. Member who just rose to ask me a question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Tonight, Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious that there is much emotional tension in the House, yet we are debating a matter which I think, and I believe everyone in the House thinks, is a serious matter. It is important that when we discuss this matter we consider it seriously, we study it and we take advice. I say that for myself in the same way I say it for everyone else in the House.

The question involving the Crow is something which has been part and parcel of the life of the person who was born on the Prairies. I am a prairie person, as are many other Hon. Members. We will all attest to the fact that the Crow rate was something which was part and parcel of our upbringing. For that reason, people on the Prairies have always been worried when there was talk of a serious change in the socioeconomic structure put in place to make it possible for them to live in equality with the rest of the people in Canada. I think the people in this House understand that fact.

In past years, studying the problem of grain transportation on the Prairies has taken on a big proportion of the time and expense of western Canadians. Mr. Justice Hall, the former Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, has made a name for himself, as a Canadian person, as a result of his great care for the social and health needs of Canadians. As well, Mr. Justice Hall was asked to chair a commission to study specifically rail transportation and grain handling in the West. The commission studied the problem of the upgrading of railroads and the problem of how grain would be moved and how the movement would be financed, and then produced a report which I am sure everyone here has seen. This took place several years ago.

Mr. Justice Emmett Hall presented a summary of the commission's findings with regard to the Crow rate at a rally called "Keep the Crow" in Regina on November 24, 1981. Although I suspect that everyone here knows what Mr. Justice Hall said in the summary, it is important to consider his advice again. We have all taken advice sometime in our lives from our fathers, mothers, teachers, priests, ministers, grandfathers or from other older persons. As our life experiences went on, we frequently found that such advice became increasingly valid.

At the meeting in Regina in November of 1981, Mr. Justice Hall said, "If once tampering with the statutory rate is accepted or condoned or is an item put on the bargaining table, all will be lost". It was not a relative matter. He said, "All will be lost. For once the subject is on the bargaining table, it will only be a matter of time until it is lost, step by step". That is advice given by a person in whom I have great faith, one who understands the problem thoroughly. He went on to speak a little further at the rally. He said:

• (2140)

> There is no position to take except to adhere through thick and thin that the Crow rate is not bargainable.

I repeat that this is serious advice.

He then explained what the Government had already done. He said:

> Railways have been given the use, rent-free, of 14,000 hopper cars which cost roughly seven hundred million dollars besides money to rehabilitate their own fleet of boxcars—and money to rehabilitate their neglected lines on which they have been collecting subsidy.

Justice Hall clearly indicated that in order to carry the grain of western Canadian farmers it would require an input to ensure that the machinery and lines were in place to do that.

However, in the termination of his speech that day he concluded with what I would consider a kind of threat. It was a threat to those who had tampered. He said:

> Lastly, all grain producers and particularly those in Saskatchewan must be alerted to the fact that if the Crow rate can be breached and in time lost, that the next assault will be against the Wheat Board itself and the system of orderly marketing the west now enjoys. The danger signals can now be detected and must be recognized for what they will do in the long run.

I suggest that that is extremely serious. I suggest that this advice should not be taken lightly.

During this continuing debate Members have attempted to rise, sometimes in frustration, and say the same thing, through other means, but to flag the danger of what is taking place and not to listen to that kind of advice.

It has been suggested this evening that Members on the Government side do not have any seats in western Canada. That is an obvious and clear statement. It is an important fact because if one is not close to the advice it cannot be heard. When making those types of judgments without hearing the advice clearly, the odds are that a poor judgment will be made.

Again, I ask the Government side to reconsider seriously the advice that has been given to all of us by Chief Justice Hall. His statement did not concern any particular situation. When he gave us that advice through his report and later through his travels across Canada, he made it absolutely clear that he was against any tampering with the Crow rate.

I too would offer some advice. Since the Government's ear is a long way away from that of the Members who represent that part of Canada, it should listen carefully to the advice coming from Members who live there. Let me repeat that as Government Members take this advice into account they should remember that Justice Hall is not a Member in this Chamber who is taking part in our controversial system but a Canadian with the good of Canada at heart. He has given this advice to all of us. Since my time is almost up, I wish to go on the record to state seriously that the advice given by Chief Justice Hall in his report to all Canadians should be seriously considered by the Government.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, this public and parliamentary debate is now being seen in the West as legislation primarily aimed at killing our statutory Crow freight rate. Furthermore, it is unfortunate that Bill C-155 is not seen as at least an attempt at new legislation to improve our grain handling and transportation system in western Canada.

Surely this is the point and purpose of this entire debate: to replace the present Crow with a new policy that will stand the test of time, perhaps for another 86 years if necessary.

The opposition to Crow reform is primarily based on the concept that western grain producers cannot afford any increase in transportation costs. That is the basis for their opposition reduced to a nutshell. It is so regardless of whether that increase is two times the Crow or perhaps five times, comparisons which have been made freely in this debate.

This is the position of the National Farmers Union, the three Prairie Wheat Pools and the New Democratic Party. This was the thrust of their persistent lobby here in Ottawa over approximately three straight months, of which I am sure all Members are aware.

Some Members may have been visited by representatives of the National Farmers Union and three ladies in particular who represented their interests. They visited me in my office and gave me their point of view. I found it rather interesting. They persisted in their view that they could not afford the cost of higher rates. They said over and over again that grain producers could not pay any more toward higher freight costs.

Therefore I posed a question to these three NFU representatives. I asked them to assume that we will keep the Crow. How will we finance the ever-increasing grain handling deficit? I gave them some examples such as the loss in moving grain by rail, that is, the difference between the actual cost of moving grain and the statutory Crow derived revenue that comes from that .5 cent per tonne mile rate. I asked who will continue paying for hopper cars which are now paid for by the taxpayers of Canada through the federal Government, the grain farmers themselves through the Canadian Wheat Board or from the various western provincial Governments of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. I asked who will finance the necessary Prairie Railway Rehabilitation Program and what would happen to the CPR's ten miles of mountain tunnel and the CNR's double tracking through the mountains that is now expected to be a major contribution by both railways. How would those costs be met without new and higher grain rail rates?

There is no guarantee that these rail line improvements can be financed and built, without a new grain handling and rail transportation system to replace the Crow. I repeat that there is no guarantee that these costs will be picked up by the federal Government or that the present program for hopper cars and rail line rehabilitation or the annual grain freight deficit of approximately $400 million will be continued at taxpayers' expense. Indeed, we are being very naive if we believe that.

If this is what "keep the Crow" means, then surely it also means that we are headed for state managed farms or the feudal system of the Middle Ages. I do not like either one of those concepts.

The Gilson recommendation to the Government almost a year ago was a good report. It was prepared by the best brains in western Canada. They were not politicians but practical, experienced farmers and livestock people. They persisted and eventually were able to coalesce around the reality that something had to be done, even though they initially could not agree what that something was that had to be done. Their consensus became a compromise eventually or what I term a trade-off which fixed the cash surrender value of the Crow at $651 million per year to be paid mostly to the grain producers on the western Prairies after a phased in payout over the six-year or seven-year suggested time frame of the trade-off. The trade-off also provided for a new blended grain freight rate to be determined on a cost basis every spring. It follows that this proposed rate cannot be a truly statutory rate since it changes every year, but it would be a rate resulting from a statutory process. It is important that we remember that difference.

• (2150)

I was personally very supportive of the Gilson recommendations, and I still am of the original recommendation in June, 1982. It was a well considered compromise by the people who knew the situation and devised a solution that received broad support in western Canada. I was also able to support the February 1 fifty-fifty program of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), although, I will say, somewhat less enthusiastically. But I was able to support the statement of the Minister at that time. This statement proposed that the Crow benefit of $651 million per year be split equally, with half going to the railways and half to the grain producers. It was shortly after this February 1 statement that the intense political lobby amounting to almost outright blackmail began and it came from two sources. The first was the three prairie Wheat Pools, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, which favoured the "pay the railway only" proposal. The second was Quebec's UPA, the Quebec farm umbrella organization, and the Quebec Liberal caucus. Both supported the Crow benefit going to the railways only.

Finally, two Crow debate developments took place that changed everything in western Canada. This was the turning point for me personally concerning how I feel about this whole debate. First, Bill C-155 was introduced on May 10 with the totally unexpected provision of paying the full amount to the railways and nothing to the grain producers in the west. Second was time allocation or closure, whatever you want to call it, that was moved by the Government after only two days' debate on second reading. These two developments caused an explosion of opposition by western farmers to Bill C-155, especially the "pay the railways only" provision. There was widespread anger, frustration and disbelief that such legislation could develop after all the good work done by the Gilson group. It was also this development that encouraged our Conservative support for the freedom of choice option that would allow western grain producers to designate who should receive that Crow benefit. Either the producers would get it themselves or they could designate that it go to the railways if they so desire. Unless this option is provided in Bill C-155 either at committee stage or in some other way, I have to say that I cannot and will not support this legislation.

Mr. Pepin: How much support do you have from your own colleagues?

Mr. Hargrave: Dr. Clay Gilson has quite recently indicated that this option or this approach could still be incorporated in a revised final transportation policy. He made that statement just a few days ago. Gilson also stated that Quebec's fears of excessive competition in its beef cattle and hog operations from western Canada are vastly exaggerated.

I want to conclude by reading an interesting letter I received quite recently. It is dated June 6, 1983, and it comes from a mixed grain farmer and cattleman at Aden, Alberta, located on the Milk River near the Montana border. His letter reads:

Dear Sir:

What is wrong with freedom? Specifically what is wrong with freedom of choice?

If we lived in the Soviet Union or one of their satellite countries we wouldn't have a freedom of choice. Government would make our decisions and choices for us. They would tell us what crops to grow, when to deliver it, and how much we get paid for it.

Increasingly the agricultural policies of the Government of Canada seem to be designed to weaken and undermine whatever freedoms we have left. If they go ahead with the "pay the railways" scheme it will essentially become unprofitable to grow anything in western Canada except wheat for export to the Soviets.

Mr. Benjamin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) is rising on a point of order, but again I appeal to Hon. Members not to make false points of order.

Mr. Epp: Let the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) finish, Les.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I hope you hear my point of order before you decide whether or not it is false.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I appeal to the Hon. Member to respect the rules and procedures of the House, as I am sure he will. Will he please state his point of order?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, you will not know whether or not my point of order is false until I have said what it is. I expect the Chair to hear my point of order. I want to ask the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat whether he believes that the livestock producers of Alberta want to rob—

Mr. Epp: That is not a point of order, that is debate.

Mr. Benjamin: —their neighbours, who raise grain, $25.00 or $35.00 a tonne when they lose the Crow rate. If that is what he is up to, I want to tell all the grain producers in Alberta—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Surely the Hon. Member realizes that he does not have a point of order. If he chooses to intervene in the debate that option is open to him. The Hon. Member cannot make complaints about the Chair when the Hon. Member in the course of one sitting has raised a whole series of false points of order.

Mr. Benjamin: I have another point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the Hon. Member please resume his seat? The Hon. Member has to recognize that the Chair is trying to preserve decorum and respect for the rules and procedures of the House. The Chair appeals to all Hon. Members to remember that they have an obligation to do so. The Hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Medicine Hat has the floor.

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Speaker, I just want to finish—

Mr. Benjamin: I have another point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the Hon. Member for Regina West please take his seat?

Mr. Benjamin: I have another point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair does its best to preside impartially. The Chair has pleaded with Hon. Members not to raise false points of order. The Hon. Member for Regina West was recognized and he was given ample opportunity to argue his point. He did not have a point of order. I ask the Hon. Member for Regina West to consider perhaps letting the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat finish his speech. The Hon. Member for Regina West can be recognized for debate at the end. Apparently the Hon. Member has something he wishes to contribute to debate—

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: —I am sure that before these proceedings are over the opportunity will be afforded to him again. The Hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hargrave: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Benjamin: I have another point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Regina West does not have the right to interrupt the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat continuously on false points of order. There is a point at which the Hon. Member has to desist when he does not have a point of order. The Hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Benjamin: I have a further point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bachand: Sit down.

Mr. Benjamin: I have another point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. If the Hon. Member has a legitimate point of order—

Mr. Benjamin: I have another point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina West on what I hope is a valid point of order.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask you how you can rule in advance of anybody saying anything about whether or not it is a false point of order.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Hon. Member has a complaint against the Chair, he is aware of the procedures available to him. It is not up to the Hon. Member to reflect idly on the Chair and not to follow through with a motion. If the Hon. Member believes what he says, he should do so. In the meanwhile will he allow the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat to finish his speech?

• (2200)

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Speaker, I just have two sentences left in the letter to which I was referring from Warren Brower of Aden, Alberta. He wrote:

> If the Government of Canada is determined to go overboard on their Crow legislation then the Soviet Union will be in a stronger position to shape and mould the Government of Canada.
> Perhaps we had better take stock of the freedoms we have taken so long for granted to see if we have a choice.

The cattle organizations and hog associations of western Canada will not accept Bill C-155 as it is now prepared and written, unless freedom of choice is included in it and made part of the Bill.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) appealed to the House for Hon. Members to talk to each other. He said that we should speak to each other. He appealed for reason. The motion before us now is in exactly the opposite direction. It is to prevent discussion. It is that the question now be put. It has been impossible to discuss this subject reasonably. The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) wanted to put—and indeed he did put it but it was ruled out of order, a motion to refer the subject matter to committee. This is the kind of motion which would have enabled a really frank discussion for which the Hon. Member called. He asked for us to be conciliatory. Certainly this is the ideal way to be conciliatory, to go back to the drawing board, to hear all sides and to set out a procedure that is fair. To proceed in the way we are now is cutting off debate. Merely to refer to committee under the terms we now have will not be adequate. A committee can make only relatively modest amendments. There cannot be the fundamental rethinking of this legislation that is called for.

I have actually prepared a serious speech on this subject. I am glad to see that tempers have cooled off, and I hope to be able to give it. In order for us to adress the question properly, we really have to understand something about CPR. We have to understand its background and the kinds of subsidies the CPR has been receiving because this is fundamentally a transportation Bill, a Bill to give a lot more money to CPR. We must understand the immensity of the gifts of the Canadian public to CPR.

The subsidy to the company that was passed in 1881 was to the tune of $25 million. There was also a grant of 25 million acres of land. As part of the agreement, the Government was to complete the rail line it was then working on, Fort William to Selkirk and Port Moody to Kamloops or, in other words, 760 miles of the 2,600 to be constructed. It was to turn over this amount of rail absolutely free of charge; an enormous subsidy. The company would build the section from Callander to Fort William and from Selkirk to Kamloops, but all the land which would be needed for rail beds, stations, yards and water frontage was free land. The company was given the right to take stone, gravel and other construction materials from public lands. There was to be an exemption from taxation by any level of government forever on properties used for railway purposes; an enormous subsidy from the Canadian people. There was to be duty free importation of materials and equipment for construction, and there was a monopoly clause.

Mr. Daudlin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I regret that I do not have the actual Standing Order to put before the House, but I suggest to you and to the Hon. Member who is in the course of her speech that notwithstanding the difficulty she may have with the light in this place—and we all have that difficulty—I think the rules are quite clear that when Hon. Members rise in their places to speak they shall rise uncovered, which I believe has always traditionally meant that one takes off one's hat.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must call to the attention of the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) Standing Order 32 which reads:

> Every Member desiring to speak is to rise in his or her place, uncovered, and address the Speaker.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. That rule says that men shall be uncovered, not women.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has obvious difficulty hearing. The rule very explicitly indicates "in his or her place". I regret that I must call it to the attention of the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood. The Hon. Member will have to take the word of the Chair that it is with considerable regret that the Chair brings Standing Order 32 to her attention. Thank you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I would ask for unanimous consent to be able to wear a hat. The lights are excessively bright in the House. Hon. Members who are wearing glasses are all going bling as a result of the lighting in the House. I have been here for less than a year. I do not want to go blind. I am not a sheep like the rest of you.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greewood have unanimous consent of the House to wear a protection against the glare?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dionne (Nurthumberland-Miramichi): No.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would hope that some sensibility would come to the House and that unanimous consent would be given. I point out to the Hon. Member who is now trying to run to his seat that when he said, "no" he was not in his seat and therefore it should be disregarded. I believe there was unanimous consent.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to let my colleague of the Opposition think that his party has a monopoly on sensibility. That is why I would urge my colleagues to understand that the Hon. Member ought to be allowed to make her speech with a hat on. I plead with my colleagues—

[English]

I plead with my colleagues to give their consent and to bring a little sense to the debate tonight. I ask them at least to understand that there are all kinds of reasons, but the one given by the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) is extremely valid. I do not see why we should have a debate on it tonight. I am very anxious to listen to what Hon. Members have to say, not to delay by various procedures taking a decision tonight. Therefore I ask my colleagues, as the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) indicated, to allow the Hon. Member unanimous consent.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, this Party agrees unanimously. We note that all NPD Members are blind ideologically but we do not think they should be blind physically.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. Ever since I have been here we have heard about equality of the sexes in the House. I agree with equality of the sexes in the House, but there has continuously been blatant discrimination here. I moved a motion under the provisions of the old Standing Order 43 many years ago that there be equality in the House among Hon. Members of both sexes. It was not even allowed by the then Speaker who ruled in a rather imperial manner—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Does the Chair understand that the Hon. Member is refusing unanimous consent?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Absolutely, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In that case there does not appear to be unanimous consent.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I regret that you ruled on this just a few seconds ago. I wish the Minister of Health, who I think is a compassionate person, were also a medical doctor. She does not have the technical Ph.D. but has a lot of common sense. In the name of all Hon. Members, I would like to support the one who needs a hat because of the exaggerated volume of the lights in the House. I have written to the Speaker more than once on this matter. It is a physical problem which should be recognized and Hon. Members should be permitted to wear hats.

• (2210)

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, two years ago I raised with Madam Speaker the matter of the damage these intense lights are doing to our eyes. I think the Hon. Member is correct when she draws this to our attention again. The reason she did not get unanimous consent is her reference that she is not going to be like the rest of the sheep in this Chamber. If the Hon. Member withdraws that remarks, she will probably get unanimous consent.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) to reconsider on a number of grounds. In particular, I think there has been considerable dialogue between the Members of the House of Commons and the administration of the House of Commons with regard to the problems that the lighting is causing. The Hon. Member is aware, I am sure, that there has in fact been a study under way for some time as to the effect of the lighting on the vision of the Members of the House. I want to assure the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi that if he should ever desire to wear a hat, we would be delighted to give unanimous consent to allow him to do so.

In the interest of my colleague who has been very detrimentally affected by the lighting, which happens to strike more severely on the back rows than it does on the front rows, I would ask that she be permitted on this one occasion, without establishing a precedent, to complete her remarks, which could not take more than five minutes, with the protection of the hat.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will ask for the last time, is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent. The Chair in the circumstances—

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would simply like the record to show that there was unanimous consent from the Progressive Conservative Party. Unanimous consent was denied by the Liberal Party Members.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure Hon. Members will understand the reasons for which the Chair is ruling, reluctantly, at this point that there is not unanimous consent. I am sure it is quite clear to all Hon. Members that there is not.

Would the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) please take his seat while I am standing. The Chair invites Hon. Members at this point to recognize the obvious fact that there is not unanimous consent. The Chair will therefore ask the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald)—

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, your tolerance is appreciated. The question really spoils over into a very interesting debate on a question of privilege. It would be my assessment that my privileges as a Member of this House are being impaired by those lights.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Skelly: I wish to suggest, Mr. Speaker, if you would allow me to continue for a moment—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member cannot challenge the fact that there is not unanimous consent. The Standing Order is clear. The Chair will not hear any further—

Mr. Skelly: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No. Please. Will the Hon. Member please resume his seat. The Chair has heard considerable argument from representatives from all sides of the House and does not propose to hear any more argument on the Standing Order which is abundantly clear. There is not unanimous consent to dispense with it and therefore the Hon. Member cannot add to what has been said.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I wish to know whether the Speaker is denying me the opportunity to raise a question of privilege which I understand to be in order at any time in which it is raised. Second, we are not debating or discussing the matter of the hat at this time and the reference under the Standing Orders. We are discussing—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair does not quite understand how the Hon. Member can talk about privilege when we have had a very specific appeal under Standing Order 32. That is the issue. The Chair is ruling with regard to Standing Order 32, a very old Standing Order of this House, the origin of which is beyond any doubt and the application of which is clear. The Chair is ruling with regard to Standing Order 32 with genuine reluctance. The Chair would like to say to the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood that if anyone sympathizes with the problem she has raised, it is the Chair. In the circumstances, the Chair must ask the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood to remove her hat to complete her speech.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, before resuming my speech, I would just like to point out that the remarks of the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) denying me the privilege of—

An Hon. Member: Don't reflect on a ruling of the Chair.

Ms. McDonald: I would like to point out that these were sexist remarks. My appeal to the House was on the basis of my eyes. I did not appeal on the basis of my sex. He assumes that when a woman rises, she is dealing with a matter of sex. This is a preposterous assumption. I happen to have extremely sensitive eyes. I resent his remarks. I resent his interpretation of it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi, and the Chair again pleads with Hon. Members not to raise spurious points of order.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I am not raising a spurious point of order. My point of order is that the Hon. Member has attributed to me motives that she does not know I have and which I do not have. When I can come into the House without a jacket and a tie, as she can, I will agree to what she wants to do.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no point of order.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, to resume my discussion of the subsidies to the CPR, among the enormous subsidies made to CPR were land rights, including mineral rights and timber rights. All together, $106 million in cash was received and about 44 million acres of land, including surface and mineral rights. It is impossible to say what the total gift was because the full value of all the subsidies has not been realized. According to John Gallagher in "To Kill the Crow", a rather useful book on the subject, and I quote:

> The land grant gave the CPR a mammoth fortune, of staggering dimensions, from which the company has drawn and continues to draw enormous profits.

The CPR profited immediately by selling some of the land, but more so by encouraging people to get free government lands and to hold theirs for the future sales. The City of Vancouver was initially built on CPR-owned land; in other words, land given by the Canadian public to the CPR in the subsidies. By 1955-56, the CPR had realized $500 million net from the sale of land. It then turned over the remainder of its holdings to a holding company, Marathon, and in 1981 Marathon reported profits of $24 million.

Canadian Pacific Limited, which is the same company as the CPR only with a name change, is the largest and richest corporation in Canada today. In 1981 its profits were $485 million on assets of over $16 billion. Its rail operation is one of the most lucrative and one of the most stable sources of profit with $127 million in profits for that year, despite cries of Crow-induced poverty and the ravages of inflation. That is a preposterous cry with profits at that level. I again quote John Gallagher "To Kill the Crow":

> The far-flung empire and vast earnings of Canadian Pacific Ltd. are a direct result of the grants in land, resources, money and business opportunities given to the company by the Canadian people. Despite the efforts of the company to disguise itself, to separate its various parts from one another, to obscure its links to the past, it cannot escape its obligations. It's almost pathetic to see a company with profits of more than $2 billion in five years shamelessly claim that it does not have the revenues needed or investment in rail capacity in an attempt to wheedle public assistance. All of its assets come from transportation activities and the gifts given to the company to provide and maintain more transportation activities. There is no other source. Yet the company brazenly claims that it cannot fund improvements to the railway at the same time that it sends off $1.16 billion to the United States to buy a paper company and set aside $5 billion for its money-losing airline. The company is clearly in violation of the original charter—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair regrets to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time allotted to her has expired. She may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There appears to be unanimous consent.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No, there is not unanimous consent. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I should like to start by saying that the remarks of the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) reminded me of a very whiny little boy. When I used to go to school in northern Saskatchewan, if a guy was losing the ball game he would take his bat and ball and go home. Even the tone of the Hon. Member's voice and the way he whines, talking of a problem he knows nothing about, irritated me to a great extent. I wish he would listen now instead of speaking to one of his front-bench caucus colleagues, because I should like him to respond and show people across Canada that he knows nothing about Bill C-155 and, in particular, even less about the Crow rate. In no way should be consider himself a candidate for the Committee that will study Bill C-155. We want someone in the Chair who will be objective and take into consideration not only the wishes of the railway companies like the CPR and the grain companies like Cargill, but also the wishes of grain farmers throughout Canada. We want this to be a special Committee. We would like to see two NDP Members on the Committee in order to provide some kind of fairness and to offer us an opportunity to move and second motions within our own group in Committee to make changes.

We also want the Committee studying Bill C-155 to be able to travel across Canada. The Committee should have an opportunity to hear not only people who can afford to come to Ottawa and sit here for a few futile hours, if the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi is the chairperson, but also to travel across the country and hear from those people who cannot afford to come here—people who are the producers of the grains that the Bill so drastically affects.

I strongly oppose Bill C-155 because of the conglomeration of things it contains. It is an omnibus Bill with three main features. The first is the upgrading of the rail line system; second is the leasing of the coal lands; and third is the statutory rate itself.

We in the New Democratic Party believe the Bill should be broken up into at least those three separate and distinct parts. We see the need to develop a more efficient and better transportation system throughout the country, particular in areas of western Canada where the rail is so important in getting the primary product, the grains, to the processing plants and to the ports for export markets.

I think of a situation in my own area where a branch line goes into Meadow Lake. Hopper cars do not go into the delivery point there where there are about one million bushels of grain stored because the track is not heavy enough to support a fully loaded hopper car out of that point. There is a need to upgrade the transportation system. We do not think the cost of upgrading the track should be borne by the grain producers many of us represent. We have been trying to convince the Government that Bill C-155 will be very detrimental to their interests.

It must be remembered that even if the rail transportation system to the West Coast is upgraded by the year 1990, when the full impact of the new statutory rate will be felt, less than 20 per cent of the volume of traffic to be hauled under that rate will be grain.

The CPR has asked the people of Canada for $500 million to upgrade the rail transportation system, while at the same time it has drained that $500 million from its other subsidiaries for CP Air to buy a new fleet of aircraft. That is just robbing the people of Canada many times over. As the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenview (Ms. McDonald) pointed out, the subsidiaries and the CPR itself have derived all their wealth from the handsome cash grants given at its beginnings, and from the land grants of some 43 million acres.

On the leasing issue of the coal lands, it is obvious that the CPR has been well enough provided for until now. The 43 million and more acres of land it received is reward enough for preserving the statutory Crow rate. Why should the CPR receive more gifts from the people of Canada to bleed off to the subsidiaries under its blankets? There is no reason that the people in western Canada who produce the grain should pay again and again because of the tax base being drained off when the rich coal lands, agricultural lands and urban lands were given to the CPR in the beginning.

The third issue is the statutory rate itself. We in the NDP do not believe that the CPR should get a cent more from the people of Canada without having equity in the company. On that issue some people would say that the CNR is not any better. Why should we have equity in CPR? I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the people who may be listening tonight, that the CNR was formed in 1923 by a Government that did not wish to see a bunch of private rail companies that had received handsome rewards from the people go into bankruptcy. That would have been a disgrace for the Government. It did not want to allow those companies to go into bankruptcy and rob the people who had invested their hard-earned savings in them, so the Canadian National Railways was formed. At the outset in 1923 it had a debt in excess of $1 billion. That is a lot of money even today, Mr. Speaker, let alone 50 or 60 years ago.

As the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi said, to take the rate in isolation is archaic. But you cannot take it in isolation, Mr. Speaker. You must look at all the other agreements that went with it to provide the statutory rate, the Crowsnest agreement, so the farmers could be competitive domestically and internationally.

If the Crow rate reaches what the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has proposed by the year 1990, it will mean millions and millions of dollars extra cost to the farmers in the constituency I represent. They cannot afford that, Mr. Speaker. Farm bankruptcies have increased by 130 per cent in the last year. If the freight rates go up as much as is proposed in the Bill, the price of grain will have to go up accordingly. They would not really be competitive because they would be outpricing themselves in the international markets of the world. They would not be able to sell the grain they produce right now in Canada, and we would not have that balance of trade to which the farmers of western Canada contribute in excess of $6 billion.

We in the New Democratic Party say it is a bad Bill. It should be split up. Certainly, the upgrading of a rail transportation system should not go on the backs of western Canadian grain producers.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, after all that has gone on heretofore with respect to Bill C-155 one might readily ask why I, coming from the heart of Niagara, the riding of St. Catharines, should rise to speak on this Bill. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that the people of St. Catharines suffer from the same abuses and afflictions perpetrated in this country on all the other regions. In particularly, they now suffer from the same power abuses inflicted upon this House. My constituents in St. Catharines pay taxes as well, and since this Bill has been so aptly described as a "railway relief Bill" I would not be doing my duty if I did not rise to speak in opposition to it.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, St. Catharines is an industrial community. If the people of the West are suffering, as they are, from the abuses of the national energy policy, and if they suffer more by reason of the passage of this Bill, then I ask who will be purchasing those consumer goods which we in the Province of Ontario produce and want to sell? Where will those jobs be found for the numbers of unemployed who exist in my riding of St. Catharines? This Bill gives me the rare privilege of speaking on behalf of two communities, St. Catharines and my home community of Govan on the Prairies of Saskatchewan where my roots have been established, and where the people have for a long time suffered the infliction of these abuses. Now there is the possibility of one more. I would be betraying my roots, Mr. Speaker, if I failed to rise in opposition to this inflammatory legislation.

I, along with all other Hon. Members of the Opposition in this House, cannot think of a worse time for the Government to introduce changes to the Crow rate. Canada is only now, slowly and haltingly, starting to recover from the worst recession since the Great Depression of the 1930s. Having been born and raised in Saskatchewan I know what the Depression of the 1930s was all about.

Grain producers, like everyone else, have suffered enormously. In 1973-74 farmers were receiving $4.57 a bushel for No. 1 hard wheat. This fiscal year, the initial price for No. 1 wheat has been set at $4.63, an increase of six cents over what it was ten years ago. Inflation over that same period has risen 135 per cent. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the price of a bushel of wheat today should be in the order of $10.75 just to track inflation. It is not yet over the $5 a bushel mark. Needless to say, the western grain farmer has found it difficult simply to get by.

Net income in 1982 fell by 35 per cent over 1981 and the situation is not expected to improve this year because grain prices are down comparatively. By any reasonable yardstick, or should I say, metre stick, now is not the time to set in place a freight rate increase that will wrench some $155 million out of the prairie economy by 1985-86. Yet this is what the Government is proposing to do. I know the Government is disputing that figure, but I ask, on what basis? The Government claims that the prairie farmer will not be losing out because wheat prices will reach $12 a bushel by 1990. What is the magic in $12 a bushel? Why stop there, Mr. Speaker? Why not set the figure at $24 or even $36 a bushel and tell Canadians that the prairie farmers will soon be millionaires, so what is their problem in paying the freight rate? The simple fact of the matter is that no one seriously believes that grain prices will triple in under seven years. If the Government chooses to be optimistic about this that is fine, but why bankrupt the prairie farmer? It is abundantly clear to anyone living and breathing today that this is the worst possible time for any tampering with the Crow rate. Only a callous, indifferent Government such as we have now would think of doing so.

Setting aside the freight rate increase aspect of Bill C-155 for a moment, I am appalled as well that the Government would scuttle the producer in favour of the railroads. A cynic might even suggest that the railways wrote this legislation themselves, for themselves. Indeed, under the terms of Bill C-155 the railways will receive 100 per cent of their long-run variable costs; 20 per cent contributions to overhead costs; 20.5 per cent contributions to capital costs and, by 1990, a 1,000 per cent increase in today's freight rate. And what does the producer receive? What does that primary producer of the West who established himself as the bread basket of the world receive? The producer sees his freight rate going up by five and a half times today's rate in under ten years. He loses his statutory protection. He has no performance guarantees from the railways for at least three years. And he has little or no choice in how he transports the products which he produces. That is the unacceptable portion of this Bill. It is unacceptable to the grain farmers and it is unacceptable to this Party. I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, the effect Bill C-155 would have on my constituents who are approaching the point of no return.

This Bill is not in the nation's interest and should not be passed as it is. Canada is a trading nation and grain accounts for some $6 billion worth of exports annually. But, and this is often forgotten, Mr. Speaker, Canada must be competitive in the marketplace. Other nations besides Canada are competing for grain sales. There is no free ride for Canada. If our prices are not competitive, we will not sell those bushels to build up our export market. And, Mr. Speaker, the competition is stiff. You must establish your market and work for it.

Subsidies to producers exist in every major competing nation. Producers in Argentina are given free rail transportation for shipping their grain from station to shipping port. The grain farmers in the European Economic Market are subsidized to the tune of $2.53 a bushel. American grain producers are nearly on a par with Canadians. In fact, while we are dreaming up ways to soak the Canadian producer, the Americans are trying to work out ways to assist their producers. That is the difference between the Americans and this Government. Last, but not least, Australian farmers pay less than 50 per cent of the average cost of freighting grain, and their taxes on diesel fuel and gasoline have been reduced by six cents a litre. We must meet those nations head-on in the marketplace. If we fail to meet that kind of challenge, then literally billions of dollars in export sales will be lost to Canada.

I would be remiss, Mr. Speaker, if I did not mention the historical side of the Crow rate issue. I see the Speaker rising, but since the Government Members are not rising to speak, I wonder if I could have the unanimous consent of the House to conclude my remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It does not appear to be unanimous.

An Hon. Member: It was a Liberal who said no.

• (2240)

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to see a friend of mine from the Niagara Peninsula remember his roots back home on the farm in Saskatchewan. I wish more of his colleagues who come from western Canada would get up in this debate and give us more support in our attempt to keep the Crow rate for western Canadian farmers, something that is so important to them and our whole country. I noted during the leadership campaign of the Conservative Party that most of the candidates were very wishy-washy when it came to making a clear statement of protecting the Crow. I am afraid that Party is going to cave in, so I am very pleased to see the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) get up and remember where his roots are and what those farmers back there want. I hope he can persuade some of his western Members to get up and make the same kind of speech.

I note also that the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) has been very quiet on the Crow ever since he supported a certain candidate in the leadership race. The new leader of the Conservative Party is not sure he wants to keep the Crow for western Canadian farmers. All of a sudden the Hon. Member for Assiniboia has been muted, he has become a political eunuch on this particular issue. He sits in this House dreaming the impossible dream of the day when he might be the Minister of Agriculture instead of the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) or the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise). Where does he stand? Why is he not getting up in this House in favour of keeping the Crow for our farmers back home in Saskatchewan?

If this Bill goes through the House, Mr. Speaker, between now and 1990-91 the increase in the grain freight rate will be about 500 per cent for the farmers in the constituency of Yorkton-Melville. That will drive a lot of small farmers off the land. The price of hauling grain under the Crow is now around 16 cents a bushel. If you increase that by 500 per cent, it will be about 80 cents a bushel by the year 1990-91. There are a lot of farmers in my part of the country who cannot afford that, and they will be driven off the land by this insensitive Government across the way which does not understand the reality of western Canada.

It is also important, Mr. Speaker, that we keep the Crow because of jobs in urban Canada. If farmers are going to be driven out of business and they sell less and less grain, there will be less money in circulation to buy farm machinery and chemicals and other things that farmers need, and more and more people will be unemployed in eastern Canada, indeed in our western cities. If we get rid of the Crow rate and we let our competitors like the Europeans, Americans and Australians continue to massively subsidize their farmers for the shipment of grain, then our farmers will no-longer be competitive and we will lose grain markets around the world. As long as the Americans subsidize their farmers, as long as the Europeans support their farm prices and their grain prices, and the Argentinians and the Australians as well, and we get rid of the Crow rate and in effect increase the price to producers of transporting grain, then they will no longer be competitive. That alone is a good argument for keeping the Crow rate for our western Canadian farmers.

Many Members of this House may not realize that the western Canadian farmer, particularly those in Saskatchewan, live further away from a sea port than any other grain farmers in the world. The farmers in Saskatchewan are about 400 to 600 miles further away from ports than the farmers in the U.S. who have the Mississippi-Missouri River system, or the Argentinians who have the ocean, or the Australians or the Europeans. If we get rid of the Crow rate and increase the cost of shipping grain by 400 per cent or 500 per cent in eight or nine years, then a lot of those farmers are going to be driven out of business because, once again, they will not be world competitive.

As far as jobs are concerned in this country as a whole, the farm machinery business of Massey-Ferguson or White Farm depend on the western Canadian economy and farmers staying on the land. If we slash our assistance to farmers, which is what the Crow rate is, and other countries continue to support their farmers or become more and more protectionist, then everyone in this country is going to suffer. It will be the country as a whole that suffers, not just the farmer.

This is not just a regional issue on the Prairies, it is a national issue of importance to all of Canada. That is why this Bill must not pass the House of Commons. That is why every Member should be aware of the irreparable damage being done. The fight to save the Crow has united many farmers and westerners who are often on the opposite side on political issues. The fight to keep the Crow is more serious than any that has been fought on the Prairies for many, many years. It is the most serious challenge our prairie farmers have faced probably since the great depression of the 1930s when we had a depression and drought at the same time.

Mr. Benjamin: And Liberals and Tories.

Mr. Nystrom: It is a fight which must be won, Mr. Speaker. We must persuade the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) and the mandarins in his Department to keep the Crow. The farmers in western Canada need the Crow and they are going to keep it because it is so important to each and every one of us. It is very frustrating to see them buy, hook, line and sinker, the arguments of the CPR or the big grain companies that the rate must go up by 400 per cent or 500 per cent. It is very frustrating to see so many Conservative Members from western Canada sitting on their hands and remaining quiet when it comes to saving the Crow.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: Here they are not putting up any speakers any more. They have three times as many Members as we have.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: But they are putting up speakers at a rate of only one to one, and sometimes not even that. They are caving in. I suspect their new leader with all his ties in the corporate boardrooms and all his friends in the CPR, Power Corporation—

Mr. Kempling: And all your friends in the Socialist International.

Mr. Nystrom: With all the friends he has which are the same friends of the Liberal Party, he has said, look, I would sooner see us get rid of the Crow before the next election campaign because—I am told that Brian Mulroney was a Member of the Liberal Party. I am not sure about that.

Mr. Mazankowski: You ought to know, you have been there for the last five years.

Mr. Nystrom: The same difference, Mr. Speaker. He has the same friends and he is not going to stand up for western Canada. In fact, I have a quote here from him during the leadership campaign which says: "Montreal businessman Brian Mulroney agrees that the Liberal Government is going in the right direction on the Crow issue".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: No wonder the Hon. Member for Assinoboia sits very quietly in his seat. Brian Mulroney, the new leader of the Conservative Party of Canada, has already sold out western Canada by saying that the Liberal Government is going in the right direction on the Crow rate. No wonder the Conservative Party is not putting up a fight in this House. No wonder so many of their Members from western Canada are sitting on their hands. No wonder the Hon. Member for St. Catharines gets up and sympathizes with western Canadian farmers, because that is where he grew up. Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that the Conservative Party has sold out to big business, to the CPR. They have a leader who comes from the corporate boardrooms and wants to get rid of the Crow rate for the farmer. The Liberal and Conservative Parties on this issue are exactly the same. They are not interested in helping the farmer, they are more interested in helping the CPR. The CPR has probably been the biggest welfare recipient this country has ever seen. We have a Bill before the House which will give even more money to the banks. Therefore, in closing I make an appeal to Hon. Members across the way that they take another look at the Bill and withdraw it. If they do not there will be thousands of farmers on the Prairies who will go bankrupt because they cannot afford to pay the increase in the freight rates.

• (2250)

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, this is not my favourite day for speaking. I have followed the debate, if we could call it that, with some interest. We have now heard from the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). I must say that it is a relief to hear some sober thoughts from that caucus today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Friesen: Incoherent, but sober.

I must say that this really began last week when we were debating the amendment the New Democratic Party put forward, one which was to give the Bill a six month hoist. We supported it, and we wanted to support it. The tragedy is that the New Democrats themselves did not support it because 35 per cent of their caucus was not here to vote, including some of the prairie Members, who were absent for the vote, as well as their Leader.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville spent part of his speech tonight attacking the Liberals for this legislation. I would remind him, and the people on the Prairies certainly know, that it was because of the New Democrats that the Liberals are in office and have had the opportunity to bring this legislation forward. It does the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville no good to shed crocodile tears tonight for what the Liberals are doing, because all along the New Democrats have been aiding and abetting the Liberal Party.

Mr. Fulton: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to remind the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) that when this legislation was brought into the House, 37 Tories were missing and the Government only got in by 24.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member does not have a point of order.

Mr. Friesen: The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) does not have a point of order, and there are lots of other things he does not have as well.

Mr. Smith: Explain.

Mr. Friesen: Then the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) has the audacity to come in here tonight, after botching the vote last week, and bring a motion to refer the subject matter of the Bill to committee and stall the debate some more.

Mr. Benjamin: Don't you want to?

Mr. Friesen: The Members of the NDP are talking out of both sides of their mouth. On the one hand, they said that they would do anything to block the legislation, but on the other hand they say they want to send it to committee.

Mr. Benjamin: No, no, the subject matter.

Mr. Friesen: The Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) is already giving the House instructions as to what kind of a committee we ought to have. How do they want to have it? They want to block it at all stages and do anything to prevent it from being passed, yet on the other hand they want to sit on the committee. Where are they?

Then I listened to the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) speak this afternoon about the Dominion lands in his riding. I listened to him as he very clearly said that the provincial Government ought to have all powers related to energy resources. That is not in agreement with his neighbour, the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) who said that he and the former Premier, David Barrett, would turn over all their resources to the federal Government. If those neighbours cannot get along, it is understandable why 84 per cent of the people of Canada cannot get along with them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: They are only part of the 16 per cent solution in Canada.

Mr. Benjamin: Benno, get some notes from somebody so you can keep talking.

Mr. Friesen: However, there is good reason why we should oppose the legislation. First, we should oppose it because of the process under which it was introduced in the House. For a year and a half the Minister travelled across the country holding press conferences, giving bits and pieces of information to the Canadian people as to what the Crow legislation ought to be. However, he never tabled a Bill in the House. He would not give us a Bill. He would not let us study it. All the while, he was giving pieces of information, to the Liberal lobbyists across Canada, just enough, at least the desirable parts which he felt they would like to have, so that they would lobby for the Government and put on the heat here, hoping there would be a stampede of support for the Crow legislation. We heard the people from the lumber industry in B.C. saying, "Support the legislation". This was said a year and a half ago when the proposals which the Minister brought to us were completely different from the legislation that was tabled a year and a half later. Those good Liberal lobbyists from the West Coast said to support the Bill, but then the Government radically changed the legislation, and the Liberal lobbyists still say, "Support the legislation". Is it any wonder why we give scant attention to the imprimatur of that kind of lobbyist? The process has been wrong, first, giving it by news conference, but also, by withholding it from the legislators so we could not study the legislation itself. The process is wrong.

Then around May 10, the Government brought in a complicated Bill with a complicated payout formula, a complicated subsidy formula. Two days later, it wanted to debate it. Then two days later, it wanted to impose closure. If the Bill is good, then it surely deserves open debate. Surely if it is that good it can withstand scrutiny under the light. Why is it that after two days of debate the Government wanted to impose closure?

When a Bill affects a $6 billion industry in one part of the country, when the livelihood, the lifestyle, the way of life of millions of people is affected, why should closure be imposed? Rest assured, as someone pointed out the other day, if it had been legislation with regard to the fisheries industry in the Maritimes it would not have faced closure in two days. However, it affects the farmers in western Canada. The well-versed Hon. Member said, "They don't have a subsidized industry". I wish that the Bill included a subsidy for the producers, but it is all going to the railways.

One of the things to which we object as being so wrong with the Bill, is that it enhances and perpetuates a monopoly for the railroads. There is absolutely no guarantee in the legislation that the $800 million, or whatever amount it would be per year, would go to the producers in any way, shape or form. I would ask the Hon. Member, who refuses to speak on the Bill, to look for any guarantee at all in the legislation that the $800 million which would be paid to the railways would enhance the transportation system for the grain producers of western Canada. They can spend it on anything.

Mr. Benjamin: Ask the NDP. They'll make them do it.

Mr. Friesen: We do not ask the NDP for anything.

This is why we find the legislation to be reprehensible. First of all, the process is wrong. Second, the principle is wrong. We should not perpetuate or make permanent a monopoly which will destroy the lifestyle of the people on the Prairies. It is wrong. There is no justice in it. There is no equity in it. That is why we oppose it. It destroys the incentive system of the farming community.

Mr. Speaker, I would call it 11 o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Just to set the record straight, the Hon. Member's allotted time has expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

CROWN CORPORATIONS—CERTIFICATION OF 1981 FINANCIAL STATEMENTS. (B) INQUIRY RESPECTING POSSIBLE REPRESENTATIONS MADE TO AUDITING FIRM

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, my objection relates to the certification of the 1981 financial statements of Canadair. You will know from my question to the Minister of June 17 that I made the point that the certification by the auditors of companies is the entire underlying basis of confidence in our whole financial system.

In short, when we go out to buy shares in companies we look at the annual report of that company and we must be able to rely on the auditor's statement, that the auditor has gone through the financial affairs of that company, and that its financial affairs are solid and sound as reported. We know that auditors carry out an extensive examination and practically come to know everything about a company.

My remarks relates to the statement made by Thorne-Riddell on January 22 regarding the 1981 financial statements of Canadair. In that auditor's statement there were no comments with respect to the huge debt that subsequently arose. If that were a private company, hundreds and thousands of Canadian citizens might have gone out and bought shares, only to find that three weeks later Canadair showed a loss of $1.3 billion. That is how much the citizens of Canada have had to put up for Canadair.

I submit that it does not matter that Canadair is in a situation where there is only one shareholder, the Government of Canada, there is still something wrong. I directed my question to the Minister because I wanted to know how that could happen. How is it that the certification three weeks earlier before the demand for the money made no reference at all to that money?

Thorne-Riddell has a longstanding contract with Canadair and collects fees of $60,000 or $70,000 a year for professional services. I asked if the Government, any Cabinet Minister of that Government, the Board of Directors or any specific director implied, asked, forced or put any pressure on Thorne-Riddell so that we as citizens could not rely on that statement. The Minister did not answer properly; he did not give any answer at all.

The Cabinet is clearly involved in a cover-up. A task force was appointed to go through those financial statements and report. This was only after incredible pressure was brought to bear. But the Government is refusing to make that report available to the committee looking into the whole question. That is a cover-up. If there was nothing to cover up, there would be nothing wrong with producing that report.

Let me suggest why the Government will not give out that data. There is something in there that should have been reported to the shareholders, the Government of Canada, by Thorne-Riddell. I suspect that because Thorne-Riddell is a nationally respected firm there was some pressure put on it, either by the Cabinet, or the Board of Directors who are all appointed by the Cabinet. There is something wrong happening and I object to the answer given by the Minister.

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend raises an issue which has been raised in two committees examining the affairs of Canadair—the Public Accounts Committee and the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Canadair's auditors, Thorne-Riddell, have insisted in all of their testimony that they were not subject to pressure from either Government of management to conceal the financial situation at Canadair in the 1981 financial statements. They have defended consistently their judgment expressed when they signed the 1981 financial statements that the financial results represented a fair and accurate view of the situation according to generally accepted accounting principles in Canada. That was their responsibility as auditors. As a national firm with a professional reputation to maintain, Thorne Riddell would not allow others to substitute their judgment for the judgment of the auditors. That is what, in the final analysis, the matter is all about. Thorne Riddell assessed the situation and concluded that the 1981 financial statements were satisfactory.

• (2305)

The issue was clearly put by the Auditor General, Mr. Kenneth Dye, before the Public Accounts Committee on June 7, 1983:

I think that the accounting principles employed here are the generally accepted accounting principles prevailing in Canada and that they are acceptable. There is a great deal of judgment used when you come to apply accounting principles and therefore, dates of commencement of full production and so on have a considerable impact on the financial statement. But it would be my view that the accounting principles are generally accepted in Canada.

There was no pressure on Thorne Riddell to make the judgment it did in early 1982, when assessing the financial situation of the company.

One can agree or disagree with the judgment that Canadair's order book for Challengers was sufficient to recover past capitalized costs. But, Mr. Speaker, it is specious and irresponsible to suggest that one of the country's leading accounting firms subordinated its own professional reputation, as is the alleged and unfounded suggestion that Government and the management applied improper pressures on the auditor.

MINES AND MINING—IMPACT OF STEEL IMPORTS

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to take part in a debate on a question I raised in this House on June 2 with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) with regard to steel dumping in Canada. On October 27, 1982, I raised my first question in the House with regard to the iron ore industry in Canada. Again tonight I would like to rise on the same point concerning the closure of iron ore mines, and the dumping of steel in Canada. There were 440 employees laid off at one site for a three-month period with a salary equal to $370,000. The amount involved at another site was another $370,000, and another three months. Three quarters of a million dollars, therefore, was taken out of the Canadian economy as a result of the dumping of steel products into Canada. Indirectly we are looking at over $2 million in one riding in Canada. There are numerous other areas of Canada in which the iron ore industry has been affected.

I would like to address a few points outlined in a letter I received from the Managing Director of one of the mines. In part his letter reads:

The effects on the Canadian steel industry of the economic downturn in 1982 are well known, and only too visible in your own riding. Strict cost reduction, cash conservation measures, and a general belt tightening have resulted in lengthy closures of steel mills and iron mines, and the resultant lay-offs and hiring freezes.

There is, however, another factor which compounds and aggravates the domestic market weakness which is controllable by the federal Government, that is, dumping of steel on the Canadian and American markets by foreign producers.

This letter is very long, so I shall just quote several parts from it. It goes on to state:

In the 1982 annual reports of the Canadian steel companies, one can detect an increasing sense of frustration at the inability, or unwillingness of the federal Government to limit imports to protect the jobs of Canadian producers.

The problem is serious enough in both Canada and the U.S.A. that domestic steel producers are being seriously injured, and growth of domestic producers will be restricted in the future.

The chairman of Algoma Steel Corporation and Peter Nixon, President and Chief Operating Officer stated:

• (2310)

The surge of low priced steel imports into Canada from countries with excess capacity or with subsidized steel industries caused an unhealthy accumulation of inventories that threatened to disrupt the domestic market. Continuing vigilance by the federal Government on monitoring of steel products entering Canada and prompt investigation of suspected dumped or subsidized imports is important to Algoma and to the Canadian steel industry.

I know Mr. Speaker has had a long day, but I would like to continue reading from this letter as follows:

Regarding the problem of dumping in general, it is a long, complex and expensive procedure and by the time all aspects of a dumping investigation are completed, a company can be permanently injured. In fact, if it were not for the support of the Corporation, Atlas Steels would be in a difficult financial position. We need a better process and I urge that the Government and Canadian steel producers work together to create procedures that, while allowing free and fair trade to continue, do not allow dumping to impair the health of our domestic industry and jobs of our workers.

In closing, I urge the Prime Minister and the Government of Canada to look deeply into the problem of dumping steel into Canada.

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, when the Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) rose in the House on June 2 of this year and put his question to the Hon. Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola), the Minister's answer at the time was that the problem was due to over-production of iron ore. I did say over-production.

For a more detailed answer to this question, it is unnecessary to dwell at length on the depressed situation of the world's economy. It is enough to say that the world economic situation was weak in 1980 and 1981, and became even worse in 1982. We are now seeing some signs of improvement, but it is still too early to speak of any sustained activity.

To give some indication of the situation in the steel industry throughout the world, I shall give a few statistics for 1982. Consumption of steel dropped 34 per cent in the United States, 34.9 per cent in Canada, 3 per cent in the Common Market and 1 per cent in Japan. With the slump in demand, steel production dropped 38.2 per cent in the U.S., 19.6 per cent in Canada, 11.6 per cent in the Common Market and 2.2 per cent in Japan. These figures show that generally, the drop in production was greater than the drop in consumption in these countries, while in Canada, the reverse has been true. We might say that Canada seems to be better off.

During this long period of depressed markets for steel, producers throughout the world have become very aggressive in competing for markets, and prices have remained low. Reference is often made to unfair trade practices such as production subsidies and dumping, which occurs in most countries, including Canada. There has been a major dispute about steel trade between the United States and the Common Market. Many other trade conflicts have been occurring on the world market.

Revenue Canada has become twice as active in monitoring steel imports. A number of cases of dumping have been revealed in Canada. Revenue Canada is now proceeding with an investigation. Although dumping is forbidden, Canada cannot afford to take an overly protectionist stance as far as the steel trade is concerned. Canada exports a host of other products besides steel, especially mineral products.

In the specific case of the Adams Mine, production ceased at the beginning of May and is to resume on August 1. Subsequently, the Sherman Mine is to close down temporarily until October 31. Both mines belong to Dofasco, which has organized production in its mines in terms of the ore requirements of its steel mills in Hamilton. Although there are temporary shutdowns in the mining industry, Dofasco expects to be operating the Adams Mine in 1983 at about 80 per cent of its normal capacity in other words, at the same production level as in 1982.

There is some solid indication that the demand for steel in the western world in 1983 is slowly improving. This should result in a stronger demand for iron ore towards the end of 1983 and in far better prospects for the iron ore market in 1984.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION—PLIGHT OF FARMERS WITH HIGH INTEREST RATE LOANS. (B) DEVELOPMENT OF AGRI-BOND PROGRAM

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, we would all like to see the Chair and others have a rest after this day. I am quite prepared to reduce my intervention as long as the Parliamentary Secretary does not use up the extra time at the other end in his response to me. I think we are all agreed that we should keep it short.

On June 16 I had a response from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to a question posed to him regarding the Farm Credit Corporation and rates that were being applied at 16¾ per cent. Farmers were locked in when the rates were that high. The farmers locked into those rates were having a great deal of difficulty trying to renegotiate or refinance at lower rates. The rate today of the Farm Credit Corporation is 12¾ per cent.

There are several points that need to be made, and I will not try to get into the agri-bond issue tonight. That was a supplementary question. The basic point is that this is a Crown corporation under the jurisdiction of the federal Government. The interest rates were being charged for approximately half a year at 16¾ per cent at a time when many people could not get financing in other areas. Indeed, the interest rates were very high at the regular lending institutions at that time and 16¾ per cent looked better than some others. That was fine, but in many cases those people were under distress. They were having difficulty refinancing. They were having difficulty making ends meet. These people are now stuck at those rates for a period of five or ten years, or whatever, depending on what happens to the rates when they have to refinance. They have to carry that 16¾ per cent, but are unable to do so.

There should be a mechanism, because it is a federal Crown corporation, whereby those people can refinance with some degree of certainty, even if they have to use another institution as intermediaries. There should be some mechanism so that the Farm Credit Corporation can give them the assurance that they will take them back as customers and allow them to carry on at the lower rates. Otherwise they too will find themselves in a distress situation and this will put an extra drain on the federal treasury. In fact, it will bring into question its viability. I think this is a reasonable request. Even though the Minister of Agriculture perhaps does not remember saying it, he said he would have an answer in a month. I can quote from Hansard for April 26 where he said precisely that. This is a reasonable and important request, something the Government should and hopefully will pay attention to.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will try to be brief and co-operate with the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) by saying that during the period when interest rates reached unprecedented levels, namely from April 1981 to December 1982, the Farm Credit Corporation of Canada made loans to farmers at rates as high as 16.75 per cent for terms of up to 30 years. The Farm Credit Corporation of Canada borrowed money from the CRF at 15.75 per cent. Since the Corporation's interest rates dropped to 12.75 per cent on April 1, 1983, it has come under strong pressure to lower its rates on unpaid loans at high rates. However, its margin of profit is historically limited to 1 per cent and the Farm Credit Corporation has been unable to accumulate enough undistributed profits to be in a position to reduce the high interest rates on the loans which have been made to eligible borrowers. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is now considering various options to help those farmers, but I should point out to the Hon. Member that such a measure would cost the Government a lot of money since the amount of lost interests would exceed $100 million. Those factors must be taken into serious consideration before a final decision is made on this issue.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Monday, June 20, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. Pepin that Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and the Motion of Mr. Lachance (p. 26521).

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, once more we open up this debate on the Crow following a day, yesterday, that had its high moments and low moments.

Mr. Friesen: Mostly low.

Mr. Roche: I think it was mostly low—

Mr. Smith: Except for your speech, Benno.

Mr. Roche: —when our friends in other parts of the House intervened.

Today I want to start out by expressing real concern on the part of the West. I would observe that an urban Member of Parliament is speaking, because we want to emphasize the point that this is not just an agricultural question, although it is certainly that. It is not just a question of transportation, although it is certainly that. It is not just a western question, although it is certainly that. But it is a national question, and every Member of Parliament who has concern for the development of transportation and agricultural policies which will benefit not only our own people here in Canada but also the world, which needs the grain that Canada is able to produce, all Members of Parliament who have those concerns want to enter this debate. We want to enter it especially because of the form of closure or whatever name applies to the motion now before us to cut off this debate at a time when the Canadian people are expecting us here in Parliament to represent their interests.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the Bill before us, Bill C-155, has the same potential for hurting our national unity and our economy as did the constitutional Bill, the National Energy Program, the Government's economic policies and its failure to honour pledges to western Canada through the Western Development Fund. This Bill before us has the same potential for wrecking unity and hurting people directly in the most severe economic ways. To limit the debate in the manner that the Government is doing is reprehensible. So we are here, Mr. Speaker, attacking not only the principle of this Bill but the manner in which it is being railroaded through the House of Commons.

We are going to continue our discussions, our protests, and our representations on behalf of the people of Canada who do not deserve to have the Crow, the Magna Carta of the West, destroyed. The Bill is as important to us as are language and cultural considerations important to the Members from Quebec and all those debates that we have been through. Throughout several years in the House we have heard of the need to satisfy the people of Quebec, and the whole question involving French Canadians. I say to Your Honour that what we are wrestling with now is a question of equal importance.

Since 1980 we have seen the Government using time allocation and closure measures some 22 times, 22 times in the life of this single, never ending session of Parliament. I believe that not only is it an insult to Parliamentarians who are here trying to represent the interests of their constituents, but it is also a very sad comment on how the Government is treating Parliament itself.

There is perhaps a special impetus felt by the prairie Members of Parliament to represent the interests of western Canada, because those interests are obviously not being represented by the Government Members since, to begin with, they only have two west of the Lakehead. In the debate, I have not heard much input from those two Hon. Members on behalf of western Canada. Naturally, it falls to western Members, who are legitimately concerned with the interests of their people, to continue the fight.

We cannot help but feel that it is western Canada that is especially being victimized by the Government's high-handed tactics. I want to ask you, Mr. Speaker, whether you could imagine the furor which would result should the Government decide to rip apart the auto pact, which is Ontario's economic mainstay, so perfunctorily. Would the Government have proceeded with such abandon to make wholesale changes to its bilingual policy, which is Quebec's lifeblood? Consider the care and attention which are paid to the Atlantic region's fisheries sector via the Kirby Report.

I believe that those instances that I have mentioned here just in passing illustrate the depth of certain questions with regard to certain regions of the country. The Crow rate is of equal, if not surpassing, importance to the lifeblood of western Canada. That is why we are on our feet again and again, and we will continue until the Government uses every last stop measure that it can possibly pull out of the rule book to end this matter.

If the Government is to continue guillotining the Crow, so be it. Let the people of Canada know where the Government is going. I would prefer that the Government would recall what it said in introducing the Western Development Fund some time ago. It stated, "The Government does not prejudge the disposition of these funds. Westerners will have much to say in this decision, as they should, and they will find the federal Government eager to listen". How hollow are those words! Western Canadians are still waiting for the Government's purported eagerness to listen.

Mr. Pepin: For three years the West has been saying, "Do something". Where were you all that time?

Mr. Huntington: Do something right.

Mr. Pepin: Pathetic.

Mr. Roche: At the heart of the principle of the Bill, is the question involving the freedom of choice, about which we have heard a good deal in the debate. The question was opened up by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). To repeat, it is the freedom of choice for which we are arguing, in directly attacking the principle of the Bill. Freedom of choice would allow the producer the choice between taking the Government subsidy or forwarding it on to the railways. That would correspond to the position of my own provincial Government, the Government of Alberta, which has heavily criticized—

Mr. Pepin: What about Saskatchewan?

Mr. Roche: —the payment of all benefits to the railways alone, on the grounds that Canada will lose the opportunity to make market responsive improvements to both the grain handling system and to the economic development potential in western Canada.

• (1115)

We have statements on file made by the Alberta Government which have already been sent to the Government. These are statements made particularly by the Ministers of Economic Development and Agriculture in the Government of Alberta who have noted that it is their intent to see that the federal Government lives up to previous commitments that it has made to western Canada, and commitments in particular which are in the best interest of Alberta's agricultural and economic development.

The question before the House now concerns the benefit paid directly to producers. Canada is going to lose the opportunity to make market responsive improvements to both the grain handling system and the economic development potential in western Canada. We consider that to be really an unfortunate move in the extreme because of the dangers that it will present to industrial development and agricultural potential in western Canada. Those are the questions before us.

The Ministers from the Government of Alberta concluded their argumentation by noting that if the reported changes are made, that is, giving the subsidy entirely to the railways, the federal Government will have ensured that the Crow rate benefits will have been lost and that any offsetting economic development benefits will have been sacrificed.

I see that my time is short. Once again Members are forced to summarize their argumentation rapidly on an extremely complex Bill. My colleague from Vegreville went to the point of listing 14 points that are the heart of this Bill. I simply say that it is very unfortunate and harmful to intelligent debate and discourse in this House for the Government to keep imposing time allocation, so that Members are prevented from fully elaborating, on behalf of their constituents and the people of Canada, the full ramifications of this Bill and what it will do to our whole national fabric.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in addressing this important issue I want to expand upon some points that my colleagues have previously made in this debate, and upon two points in particular which I want to address to the nation as a whole and not simply for Canadians living in the Prairies or any particular region of Canada. I want to make these points in the national interest of the country.

The Bill that the Government has before Parliament ought to be defeated, taken from this place, and not brought back. The point has been made on numerous occasions that this Bill is wrong in principle.

The principle of the Crow rate is to be accurately regarded as the Magna Carta of the West. As many Members have said, it is fully comparable in its significance to language rights for minorities in different parts of our country and, as the previous Member just said, comparable to the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement for working Canadians in other parts of Canada. The point I want to make is that in principle it is important to keep this commitment that was made to our prairie Canadians many years ago. It ought not to be changed because of that principle.

I want to go beyond that question to deal with the basic matter of dollars and cents. I have heard some Canadians question how we can continue subsidizing the prairie farmer to the extent that we have in the past, and that surely it should be changed. On behalf of my Party I want to say that surely it should not be changed. Let me explain why.

If we look at the international grain trade market and consider who our principal competitors are, they are the United States, Argentina, and Australia. What is the situation in terms of grain farmers in those three countries?

In the United States the degree of subsidy for the over-all cost of shipment of grain is higher than that provided to Canadian grain farmers. That is the first point.

• (1120)

If you move to Argentina, not only is the subsidy higher but there is virtually no cost at all in terms of transportation, for Argentinian grain producers when it comes to shipping and transporting their grain to ports for export elsewhere in the world.

Then there is Australia, another great grain producing nation, a nation with which our farmers have to compete, and again the economic reality is that most Australian grain producers have half the distance or less to ship their product to port before it is exported elsewhere in the world.

If you look at all three of these countries you find a situation in the first two where subsidies given to the farmers are much higher than are given to Canadian grain producers, and in the case of Australia, our other major competitor, Australian transportation costs are much lower simply because the Australian farmers do not have to ship their grain as far.

In spite of this, in spite of the subsidies which the United States provides, in spite of the subsidies which Argentina provides, in spite of the great advantage the Australian grain producer has, Canadian grain producers earn for Canada—and that is the point I want to make, our grain producers do not simply earn for the Prairies, but they earn for all Canada—some $6 billion in foreign exchange. That was the case last year. We should be thankful for the Canadian grain producer that his sector of the economy has functioned so well that it has brought in that revenue benefiting Canadians from coast to coast.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Instead of continuing to assist our farmers, instead of providing some acceleration in the benefit to this very productive part of our economy, the Liberal Government is moving in just the opposite direction. It is going to increase the cost to the typical grain producer on the average by $6,000 per year, over the period of a decade. That means, on the average, a 500 per cent increase. It means, Mr. Speaker, the kind of increase that no other worker, no other sector in the Canadian economy would tolerate, and we say, in this Party, that Canadian farmers should not have to tolerate that kind of increase either.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I want now to come to the question of subsidies. Having made the case, it seems to me that it should be self evident, except to anybody on the Government side of the House, that some subsidy is indeed warranted, warranted in principle because a commitment was made, warranted in terms of dollars and cents because of the revenue our farmers bring into Canada. But I also want to come to the question of how that subsidy should go out.

We are saying that when it comes to the CPR, in terms of its actual costs above and beyond what the CPR gets from grain farmers for the Crow rate, it is appropriate for the rest of Canada to pay the subsidy up to that actual cost for the shipping of grain because of the benefits that the earned revenue from grain provides for all of Canada. And because of the commitment in principle we have to grain farmers, yes, we should give that subsidy to the CPR for the incremental cost beyond what it gets from the Crow rate.

What we also say, Mr. Speaker, is that the approximately $550 million which the Government wants to give to the railways, and in particular I am talking about the CPR, the private railway, is unconscionable. Why should we give a very profitable enterprise a handout of some $550 million a year? I come from an automotive community. I would oppose a handout to General Motors. I would oppose giving General Motors money. To give such an enterprise a loan to facilitate financial developments for the private sector, under certain tightly controlled circumstances and in the public interest, is one thing, but to give a handout from the taxpayers of Canada to a profit-making large corporation, I say is a misuse of public funds and we should not do it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Therefore, we want to proceed immediately with the tunneling which has to be built, with the rails that have to be improved, with the bedding which has to be improved, and with the expansion that must take place, not only for grain farmers but for exporters of other raw materials and goods that will use railway facilities. We all agree with this. We in the NDP are saying that the subsidy for the cost of grain should be paid and that the CPR deserves the additional cost beyond the Crow rate. There is no question. But with respect to the other $550 million needed for tunneling and rails, we say that money should be put into investment, and that for every penny which goes from the taxpayers to the CPR we should get a share of the return. That is our position.

I want to conclude my observations with this point. We in the NDP believe that a healthy prairie economy, a healthy grain economy, is essentially important, first for farmers and their families who are doing the work and producing grain for export. Second, it is very important in terms of a revenue source for all Canada; it was $6 billion last year. Third, it is important for manufacturing jobs. If farmers are thriving, if they are doing well, they buy equipment. Where is that equipment made? It is made in places like Yorkton and Winnipeg in the West, but it is also made in places like Brantford and Hamilton in the East.

A healthy prairie economy, the generalization holds, means a healthy national economy. When the Liberals learn this, they will finally learn something about the nature of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I compliment the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) on his remarks. I will read Hansard tomorrow to find out precisely what he said and where his Party stands, because he seemed to go all over the field with respect to this matter. I am not quite sure whether he was consistent with the position of others of his colleagues in this debate, but I want to say that the New Democratic Party has every reason to cry. Members of that Party have been all over the field and reversing themselves on every issue respecting the Crow rate, to the point where yesterday we saw the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) revert to an unusual position. They said that they would kill the Bill and do everything in their power to bring the House to a halt. Suddenly that Hon. Member rose in his place and, in one of the most outstanding and unusual speeches in this place, said, "Mr. Speaker, we now want this matter to go to committee". What is that Party up to in terms of consistency of position? Does it know where it is going? Is it going only one place, from 16 per cent down to a lower position in the polls?

I remind the House that we are now faced with an additional indication of the attitude of the Government toward this very important issue. The Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) stood in his place yesterday and, once again by direction from his Party hierarchy, moved that the question be now put. It was another indication that his Party wanted to shut down debate in the House of Commons on an issue which everyone who has spoken has pointed out is the Magna Carta of western Canada.

Another indication is time allocation or closure. The Minister has been carrying on negotiations behind closed doors with respect to a matter which is important right across Canada but is particularly important to western Canada. He carried on these closed door negotiations with a select few groups of people, and has come forward and sprung on the people of Canada and the House of Commons the "Pepin" proposal and the legislation we are now considering. From the time that legislation was sprung upon us, we have been faced with threats to terminate the debate and to limit the debate. More important, of greatest concern to me is that this signals to us in the House of Commons what will happen if and when the Bill gets to committee for consideration.

We have not had any commitment from the Minister and the Government that there will be a free and fair opportunity for Members of the House of Commons on the committee to travel across Canada, as we did with respect to the Western Grain Stabilization legislation, giving an opportunity to people with very different interests to make representations to a parliamentary committee. We have no commitment. The only indication we have is that the Government is determined to ram this legislation through, to impose closure at committee stage, to ram it through the summer months without any opportunity for input, meaningful consideration or, if necessary, amendments to improve this very faulty legislation.

I say to the Minister in all seriousness that if he has any interest in terms of getting this matter dealt with in a fair and reasonable manner, he will take the step of giving a clear and unequivocal statement that a committee which considers this matter, if we reach that point, will have a free and open opportunity to receive representations from legitimate interest groups across the country and that we will have a reasonable period of time in which to carry on deliberations.

When I last spoke in this debate on May 16, the Minister had not yet presented his amendments to the Bill. At that time we had a vague promise from the Minister on a safety net that would be established. We now know that the safety net will link freight rates to the weighted average price of the six major grains. The second amendment added certain crops and products to the list of the commodities which may be shipped under the statutory rate. There are other crops that should have been included, and it appears the Government will have to be dragged into including a proper list of crops to be covered by this rate.

The introduction of these amendments, while it is in one sense a sign that the Government is very slowly realizing the impact that this legislation will have on western Canada, particularly on the producers, is really insufficient, to answer the needs of western producers. It is important that the rate be tied to the price of grain. Farmers today are simply not in a position to contribute additional funds for grain transportation.

This safety net is fixed at 10 per cent of the weighted average price, which means that farmers will probably be paying the same amount under the plan by 1990-91 as they would under the previous proposal. While in theory it may be a rational approach to tie the rate to the price of grain, the actual proposal still deals a body blow to the pocketbooks of western farmers. It is unacceptable. It is nothing more than a sham.

I suggest that we must still question whether it is really desirable to tamper with the Crow during a time of recession. The concept of a subsidy has been referred to by the Leader of the New Democratic Party and other Members participating in this debate, including my colleague the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). It has not been fully explored by the Government.

In Argentina, as has been pointed out, the National Grain Board provides free rail transport for grain, from shipping stations to the ports. In Australia farmers pay less than 50 per cent of the cost of transporting grain. One example that the Leader of the New Democratic Party failed to mention is that in the European Economic Community there is a minimum direct subsidy of $2.53 per bushel.

The United States subsidizes wheat producers at the rate of $13.81 per tonne. In addition, there are a number of ways in which the Americans subsidize the transportation of grain. The United States army engineers maintain the canal system which is used for grain export transportation. There are a number of hidden methods by which the subsidy is given to the grain farmer in the United States.

At the very time when subsidies seem to be the order of the day with all our major competitors, we in Canada are doing exactly the opposite. We are saying to the farmer that he has to have the cost of transportation substantially put upon his shoulders. This will make him non-competitive in world trade. The farmer will thereby be the loser. That is the message the Minister is giving to the western grain producer. In Saskatchewan 85 per cent of the producers oppose the Minister's proposal. That is the current statistic. He still is not able to understand what he is doing to the Province of Saskatchewan with this proposal.

To increase freight costs in Canada enormously will make our farmers uncompetitive. I wonder if the Minister has considered the value which grain producers provide to the Canadian economy. He should be more generous to the farmers as far as that consideration is concerned.

The reason why the Minister is receiving such enormous resistance throughout the West is because of the emotional ties the Crow has had to the hearts and minds of western Canadians. As has been pointed out, this is considered to be almost a constitutional right in western Canada. It should not be trifled with by devices of closure, and time allocation that "the motion now be put", limiting the ability of Parliament to deal with the matter.

At the outset of this session, in the Speech from the Throne, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made a very special point of indicating that on the Government side there was no representation from the three eastern prairie provinces or the North. He pointed out at that time that he wanted there to be full debate on matters related to western Canada. He said that Members of Parliament from western Canada would be given an opportunity to stand and adequately debate issues that had a direct impact on them. The first really serious blow to western Canadian producers in this transportation proposal has been characterized by the record of this Government attempting to limit debate and force through a proposal which the Government knows is totally unacceptable.

I want to warn the Minister that if he persists in this course of action, he will not only affect the economic future but also the social fabric of western Canada, including the Province I represent, Saskatchewan. The fabric of rural Saskatchewan will be negatively and adversely affected. This proposal will mean that farms will become larger and larger. The small family farm will be a thing of the past. In Saskatchewan there will be a drying up of the rural population, a change in the social fabric, and the Minister knows it. In his heart of hearts he knows that that will be the consequence and the effect of this legislation in its present form.

The Minister can make his own speech in his own time. Every time I get up to speak he shouts across the aisle. I know he is sensitive. He has every right to be sensitive about this issue, because he is on the wrong side.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have an opportunity to bring some honesty back into the debate. I want to remind a few of the Tories that they may be able to send some of their speeches to their constituents, but the facts are quite clear to show where the Tory Party really stands on this whole freedom of choice scam it is trying to sell in western Canada. It is certainly not selling to farmers. The farmers know that the freedom of choice they are talking about is freedom of choice as to whether the cheque goes directly to CN or CP, or comes to them temporarily and then goes on to the railways. Now that we have seen what the Tory collapse is all about—only 30 per cent have been involved in this debate—we need to remind farmers and Canadians of how this legislation was introduced in the House.

There were 37 Tories absent, and the Government only won by 24 votes. If the Tories had turned up even a fraction of their Members, and this may be interesting to the Member from Saskatchewan who just spoke because over half the Tory Members from Saskatchewan did not turn up when the legislation was introduced, the result would have been different.

We know where the Tories are coming from. For every speaker we put up, sometimes they put up one, sometimes they do not put up any. Some of the Members they put up from the West, such as the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) who spoke last night, do not know anything about the legislation. He is a typical Tory. He talked about $800 million going to the railroad. He has never read the Bill. The $800 million is not mentioned anywhere in the Bill. It is $651 million. The Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta demonstrated once again that he is good at getting up and dithering, but he does not know much about many Bills that come before the House. He certainly does not do his homework.

I would like to talk about why the Tories have taken the position that they have. A few quick quotes will tell all Canadians why the Tories are collapsing as they are. During the Tory leadership campaign, here is what John Crosbie had to say. He said that the farmers' share of the cost has to increase. Initiatives had to be taken to improve freight transportation in the West, keeping in mind that the price per ton will double in the next two years and will go up at least five times by 1991. Michael Wilson said that it was a move in the right direction.

• (1140)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member should refer to Members of the House by their constituency names.

Mr. Fulton: I certainly recognize that, Mr. Speaker. I am quoting from a press—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Member is not allowed to do indirectly what he is not allowed to do directly. He is referring to Members of the House. He must use their constituency names.

Mr. Fulton: Well, Mr. Speaker, Montreal businessman, Brian Mulroney, who is not a Member of the House, and may never be, said that he agrees that the Government is going in the right direction.

Members of the Tory Party cannot stand up in the House and say, "Well, we are opposed to this, we want freedom of choice". Mr. Speaker, a certain degree of honesty is required.

All of their leadership candidates said that it was a move in the right direction, the right kind of legislation—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) on a point of order.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, have you ever noticed that the NDP has a special school for whiners and snivellers to which they all must go?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) has the floor. He should not be interrupted in the course of his speech.

Mr. Fulton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member who just spoke is the original whiner and sniveller of the House of Commons in this session.

The Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) said that he has not had time for a detailed study of the issue. He was the Leader of the Party for seven years and did not even have time to look at the issue. We know what Members of the Tory Party will do to somebody who stands up for the West. They got rid of him in a heck of a hurry.

I would like to direct a few comments to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). I am glad to see that he is here and is continuing to follow the debate. I would like to know what his views are on splitting the Bill. There is a certain degree of dishonesty from the Government side that I find unacceptable, that occurs when the Government pushes upgrading without ever having a single Member from the Government side deal head to head with the issue of equity. We hear much chatter in the House about the NDP proposal to get equity back if we give money to the railroads. But no Liberals have told us why that is not a good idea.

I will deal with Jack Horner in a moment because he is probably the one who is telling the Tory Members where to go. We know what Tory Members from the West do. They jump from the Tory side of the House over to the Liberal side and are automatically made head of a Crown corporation so that they can tell the Tories where to go on railway policy.

An Hon. Member: Tell us about the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar).

Mr. Fulton: You can tell us about that in a moment. Mr. Speaker, a very good book that I recommend to the Minister of Transport and a few Tories is "To Kill the Crow". I read from the first chapter:

> On the day after the annoucement of the federal government's determination to repudiate the Crow's Nest Pass Agreement, the stockholders of Canadian Pacific Limited were richer by $134,677,700 than they were the day preceeding the announcement.

Perhaps Members of the Liberal and Tory Parties should have gotten together to write a Bill that would simply give money directly to the shareholders of CP, which would save the House from this long, protracted debate.

The book goes on:

> By the end of the month the value of their shares in the company had increased by $447,889,250. Their "Crow Benefit" was not long coming.

It is interesting to note that Members of the Liberal and Tory Parties are prepared to support legislation that will give $651.5 million a year in perpetuity to the railroad, yet they travel around the country saying, "Oh, the Crow rate for farmers was written in 1897. It is too old. We cannot have legislation in perpetuity. We must have a sunset on the Crow rate when it comes to the farmers."

I will return now to the problem with the Tory position because we know what is the problem with the Liberal position. Liberals will not take a position on equity in terms of upgrading. They will not take a position on returning $450 billion or $500 billion worth of coal, to British Columbia. They will not talk about the out of pocket costs to the railroads for moving grain in terms of the balance of trade that grain producers bring to all Canadians, not just to western Canada, nor will they split the Crow rate. I would like to see Government Members vote in favour of taking $6,000 a year away from farmers in western Canada. That is what the issue really is.

I know that Members of the Tory Party will slip and slide on the issue. They will say, "Oh, freedom of choice". It is freedom of choice to lose $6,000 a year. I do not think many Members of the Liberal or Conservative Parties would go to textile workers in Toronto and say, "Sorry, $500 a month must be taken away. That is freedom of choice". Freedom of choice for what? The Tory position is preposterous. As the Tory Party's lead-off speaker on the Crow debate, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), given the position of the former Leader and the future possible Leader of the Tory Party, said:

> —I ask the Minister to consider making the payment of the Crow benefit optional to the producer or to the railroad. Let the producer decide whether the money should go to the railroad, or let him decide whether it should go to him.

Does the Hon. Member for Vegreville think that a bunch of Liberal donkeys from eastern Canada will turn up and all of the grain will be loaded on them to be taken out to Prince Rupert for free? The farmers from western Canada will not buy that. They know that if grain is to be moved, a cheque may come from Ottawa. But what are Members of the Tory Party supporting? They are supporting a hugh new bureaucracy. Those farmers who want the cheque to come to them will have to pay for having the grain hauled.

Tory Members wanted to get Jack Horner a good job with a Crown corporation so they told him to become a Liberal. Now they are looking for jobs for more Tories in a new Crown corporation that would handle the freedom of choice legislation that they are supporting.

Tory policies are like that cheese that comes from Europe, the stuff with the mouseholes in it. I cannot imagine, Mr. Speaker—

An Hon. Member: It stinks.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps it is limburger cheese. Let us take a close look at the Tory freedom of choice proposal. First, farmers will have the choice to pay more to the railways. I am sure that farmers will like that. Second, it will reduce the price of grain at the farm gate. I am sure that farmers will like that. Third, it will dilute the benefit to producers of grain by spreading the Crow benefit to cultivated acres which do not produce statutory grains. I am sure that farmers are very interested in seeing that done. The psychological benefits of freedom of choice are outweighed by reduced economic choices. That, Mr. Speaker, will happen as all of the local elevators close. Tory Members know that, and that is why Tory Members from Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Alberta are not participating in this debate, though one of them pops up from time to time to make a speech like the one made by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West.

The Minister of Transport was grinning. He knows that the Tory deal has already been made. Members of the Tory Party have collapsed and are now supporting the Bill. They are taking the big business line. They are pro-CP. We know what is going on. The Minister of Transport was grinning because he knew that the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West had already swallowed the bait but needed to keep his constituents under control.

We will see. The reporters who are covering this debate, Mr. Speaker, will see how many Tory Members from the Prairies will get up to speak on this issue in the next couple of days. That will be the telling fact.

Mr. Malone: What a despicable person to be in Parliament.

Mr. Fulton: The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) has once again described himself as a despicable Member. I certainly would concur with many of his comments about himself, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Taylor: What makes you so bitter? Are you afraid you will be defeated?

Mr. Fulton: The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) is starting to sing. Members of the Tory Party are starting to sing, Mr. Speaker, because they know that I have lifted the curtain on their freedom of choice scam that would take $6,000 away from the farmers on the Prairies.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is the truth.

Mr. Fulton: The Hon. Member for Vegreville says that it is the truth. He is waving his hand. He has talked to Jack Horner. Jack Horner has said, "Hey, look, Don, you had better talk to Jean-Luc because the fix is in."

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I think that the quality of debate has dropped to a new low.

Mr. Fulton: Because you are up.

Mr. Gustafson: It is interesting to note that speaker after speaker from the NDP has done nothing more than attack Conservative Members. Members of the NDP know very well that the Conservatives represent the primary producers of western Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gustafson: I will not bear on this point, but I want to make it abundantly clear to the House and to the people of Canada that Members of the NDP have brought nothing constructive to the debate, to this point.

I think that when we look at Bill C-155 we must look at it with the best interests of the primary producer in mind. Again and again Members of the NDP have tried to bring up what various leadership candidates have said, but the position taken by the Conservative Party from day one of this debate has considered the importance of the primary producer.

• (1150)

We know what the New Democratic Party did to the primary producer in energy. Its record is clear in this House. We know how it supported the Liberals to bring in a national energy policy which put the primary producers of energy flat on their backs and cost Canada dearly. If we are going to continue in that direction, the farmers of Canada are going to suffer severely. That should not be the position of the Government and it certainly will not be the position of the Conservative Government. And we will take power. That is what all the hollering is about from the NDP. That Party can see the handwriting on the wall. It can see what is coming and it is concerned, which gives me a certain amount of satisfaction, Mr. Speaker, along with every Conservative Member on this side of the House, because we also can see the handwriting on the wall. We know that the farmers and the primary producers understand what has happened.

I would like to speak about the most important factor, how we can strengthen the position of the primary producer in Canada. First of all we must look at the timing of the situation. I am happy that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is in the House.

Mr. Pepin: I am always here.

Mr. Gustafson: The Minister tells me he is always here, but I am particularly happy he is here this morning. The farmer has faced some very serious situations in terms of the cost of production. The Minister has heard that many times in the debate. Yet he has not responded in a positive way. In the international marketplace our producers face a very serious challenge of competition.

Dr. Andy Schmidt of the University of Saskatoon has done extensive studies into exports and into competition in the international marketplace for the primary producer. He tells us that the United States of America subsidizes its producers over all by 33 per cent. He tells us that subsidies in Australia are in the neighbourhood of 50 per cent on shipping freight rates for grains exported from Australia. In addition to that, the European Common countries are subsidizing their farmers up to $5 per bushel for wheat.

The unfortunate result of the direction the Minister of Transport has followed has been that he has played producer against producer. He has played the wheat and grain producer against the cattle producer. Certainly we understand, as primary producers ourselves, that the cattlemen of western Canada have suffered some very severe problems. The grain producer is suffering a tremendous challenge in terms of the costs of production as well. The commodity groups are involved in the situation. With one blow the Minister is trying to solve a number of very complex problems which will not be solved that simply. It must be brought to his attention that he must not destroy what has been accomplished.

It is significant to note that in my riding of Assiniboia the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) announced, at Fillmore, Saskatchewan, a program to double-track the railroad clean from Winnipeg to Vancouver. It was interesting to note that the railroad men following that announcement, were literally suggesting that because many trains had been taken off the track with regard to passengers and so on, in many areas this simply was a political manœuvre.

Mr. Pepin: It is being done now.

Mr. Gustafson: We in the Conservative Party understand that there are congested areas, but the Government has not addressed those problems. It must take a positive position in solving those problems and those bottlenecks which are there. In Bill C-155 there is absolutely no guarantee, Mr. Speaker, that the Government is going to address in a position way the problems and the bottlenecks which exist in the system. It has only played politics.

We must strengthen the position of the primary producer. We must give him an opportunity to do and continue to do for Canada what he has done up to this point, in producing $6 billion worth of exports, which has been one bright spot. The people in the energy field did the same thing until the Government climbed on their backs and made them ineffective, and we will possibly see the results of that for many years. We must turn this around. Certainly our Party will look objectively at building a transportation system which will be unequalled anywhere in the world. We must get around the snowslides, we must deal with the congestion at the ports, and we must deal with other places where double-tracking is absolutely necessary. However, to make a political football out of these problems is unfair to the producer.

The statutory Crow rate is so important. As the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) has said time and time again, it is the Magna Carta of western Canada. Because of the tremendous distances we must face in transportation, the Government must look objectively at how it can strengthen the system without destroying the producer. If the producer is destroyed, Mr. Speaker, I say through you to the Minister that it will have the same impact upon this Canada of ours as we suffered in the past year and a half when the Government laid our energy people flat on their backs, imported oil from Mexico, disregarded increased prices, said in this House that it was not going to increase fuel prices beyond 18 cents a gallon, and later we saw an increase of $1 a gallon on fuel costs. This is the kind of direction which has been followed. We must avoid that, and we can avoid it. We must not play producer against producer. We must not play commodity group against commodity group.

I would suggest to the Minister that it is most important that he bring the railroads into accountability, and that he lay out purely and simply to the producers of Canada, and to all the people of Canada, the importance of this debate which the Government is trying to obstruct in this House. I cannot repeat too often the importance of the direction to be followed which will produce positive results in the improvement of the export market and will lead to a brighter day for the economy of this great country of ours, Canada.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I enter into this debate again. In my previous remarks I went over some very essential points about which I believe the farmers and, indeed, the people of Saskatchewan, are greatly concerned. The first point was that under the proposed legislation some $600 million to $1 billion annually will be taken out of the Saskatchewan economy. That is something which the Saskatchewan economy just cannot stand. It comes close to $600 to $1,000 purchasing power for every man, woman, and child in Saskatchewan which just will not be there. The effects, therefore, will not only be felt by the farmers but will also be felt by the retail sector and by the workers in Saskatchewan. In sum, Mr. Speaker, it means less jobs and less money to go around. For that reason, although there are many reasons, I stand totally opposed to the proposed legislation.

• (1200)

The other argument I brought forward concerned my suspicions as to the $650 million the Government claims is the Crow gap. I went through some of the figures Mr. Snavely used and pointed out he allowed the railroads a rate of return on money they never invested on their own. These were public moneys invested in rail operations, moneys originally given to build the CPR. Yet Mr. Snavely allowed the railroads a rate of return on those public moneys. That rate of return is included in this $650 million Crow gap. If we are serious about examining the Crow rate, then we have to have some honest and real figures. My suggestion at that time was that we go back to square one and get some accurate figures as to what it really has cost the railroads to ship grain.

Mr. Pepin: The Saskatchewan Wheat Pool does not disagree.

Mr. de Jong: When I ran out of time the last time, I was trying to cover the area of subsidies. Other speakers have pointed out this morning that Canadian agriculture is not subsidized the way it is in the European Economic Community, Argentina, Australia or the United States. In fact, I wonder if the Government really has a handle on the amount of subsidies that farmers in other countries get. For example, on July 23, 1982 I asked the Government to table any documents they might have comparing the rate of subsidies given to grain farmers in the U.S. with those in Canada. Some time later I received a reply saying that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is not aware of the existence of the documents requested. The implications of that were somewhat startling. Either the Government was lying—and I am not going to accuse the Minister of Agriculture of lying—or the Government does not have those figures. In other words, the Government is making this major assault on the economy of western Canada without even an inkling as to what the effects are going to be on our international trade. The U.S., of course, subsidize their grain farmers in several ways. A major part of their grain is barged down the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, a system maintained by the U.S. Corps of Army Engineers. That is a subsidy to American grain farmers.

Canadian grain farmers face many of the obstacles their American counterparts in North Dakota and Montana must face. There are tremendous distances to the shipping ports. The American system allows for assistance to grain farmers in shipping their grain, yet the only assistance the Canadian grain farmers get is an indirect subsidy called the Crow. To kick that support out from underneath the western grain farmer is an act of total irresponsibility. But then, what can you expect from a Government which has rattled the basis of Canadian Confederation ever since it returned to office in 1980? The assault on western Canada through the Constitution and various resource policies is inexcusable. That assault continues with this legislation, which in turn comes from a Government with hardly any representation in western Canada among the people who will be so greatly and adversely affected.

Mr. Pepin: That does not prevent you from passing judgment on Quebec.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat concerned and puzzled at the type of opposition that Members to my right have raised. To tell you the truth, it is very confusing. We hear many different arguments being introduced. Of course, the Conservative Party has a variety of interests that it must maintain. They get support from the commodity groups, and of course we all know that they would like to see this legislation go through. The Conservatives have some debts they must honour to the coal and lumber interests, and so on.

Mr. Pepin: I thought you said everyone disagreed with it?

Mr. de Jong: One of the various conflicting interests the Conservatives feel they must represent is that between the grain producers and cattlemen. Not all but many cattlemen feel this is essentially good legislation and that the statutory rates must be changed. Many of them feel this would help them and would bring processing plants to western Canada. Well, Mr. Speaker, I would dearly like to see processing plants move to western Canada; after all, a lot of our beef is produced there. But I am not convinced that doing away with the statutory Crow rate is going to result in more processing plants and better beef production in western Canada.

Mr. Malone: Why not?

Mr. de Jong: I will tell you why. Last Spring, Mr. Speaker, I took a week off from my duties in this House and paid an extensive visit to North Dakota and Montana. I talked to elevator operators, grain farmers and the Commissioner of Agriculture in the State of North Dakota. I talked to all sorts of people involved in the agriculture sector of those two States. What did they tell me? I told them that in North Dakota and Montana they do not have a statutory rate. We have the Crow but they do not. Did they feel that this had benefited them in terms of beef production and processing plants? They said no, they do not have any processing plants in North Dakota. They have one in Montana and one flour mill in North Dakota which has been supported by subsidies from the State, but there were no tremendous benefits to the beef producers in those two States. There were no flour mills to speak of because the economics are still that it is cheaper to ship the cattle on the hoof than it is to ship it as finished products in refrigerated cars.

Mr. Althouse: Because the producer is paying for it.

Mr. de Jong: That unfortunately is the harsh economic situation. For the Government to attempt to seduce western beef producers into supporting the Crow changes against their brothers who are producing grain is, I think, one of the more despicable attempts at seduction by the Government.

Mr. Blais: Oh, don't be silly.

Mr. de Jong: I am afraid that many of my Conservative colleagues to the right have fallen for that seduction from across the way.

I would like to see some honest studies, Mr. Speaker, that would show how much more beef production there is going to be in western Canada, how many more packing plants there will be if this legislation goes through. If the experience in North Dakota and Montana is any indication, there will be very minimal benefits to the beef producers in Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Mr. Pepin: Then you complain you cannot process your goods.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I see that my time is running out, so therefore—

Mr. Blais: In an electoral sense as well.

Mr. de Jong: —I will give a preview of my next speech on the Crow. I will attempt to deal with some of the double-talk coming from the Government. We are moving into 1984, which has always struck me because of a novel I read in high school by George Orwell called "1984". In that book there was a term called "double-think" and "double-speaker". The common usage of a word and its meaning was totally turned upside down. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) have called us reactionary on this side. I want to deal with that piece of double-talk at the next opportunity, because to call reactionary our attempt to save a rural way of life, to save small farmers in Saskatchewan so that they will continue to be economically viable, is a piece of double-speak straight out of "1984" and George Orwell's novel.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that we should have a lesson in prairie economics concerning cattle and grain from the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong). I wonder how many times he has used a permit book. I wonder how many Members of his Party currently have a permit book or have used a permit book. I would like to challenge the NDP to see whether they really think they represent the farmers. I could go through our ranks and about 20 of our Members have permit books.

I do not know whether some of those characters to my left even know what a permit book even is. It is the book issued by the Canadian Wheat Board allowing one to deliver grain, which makes one a bona fide farmer. I suspect that very few, if any, of these characters to my left who want to rise and speak on all the aspects of prairie agriculture know anything about it. One would have to show them with a map, which is the business end of a steer, yet they want to give us lessons as to how to run a prairie farm.

• (1210)

The Hon. Member started speaking of North Dakota and everything dealing with the beef and packing plant industry. I would point out that we currently do have what is left of a diversified industry on the Prairies. If we keep going the way we are going, we will not have one. If the Hon. Member had wanted to travel a little further south into Nebraska or Colorado, he would have found that there is a meat processing industry in the western part of the United States. What we are discussing is maintaining the industry we have in the West and not losing it all to the East.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mayer: Therefore, if the Hon. Member wants to start discussing those matters, I suspect he should either travel a little further physically or open up his brain so that a little broader range of ideas will get into it.

The Leader of the NDP spoke of the subsidy not being a question. In many ways it is true. We are not arguing as to whether or not the prairie grain producer should have a subsidy. I think we all agree that, based on the amount of taxes that producers pay, and based on the treatment of other industries in Canada, those of us who grow and want to ship grain on the Prairies should be entitled to the same sort of consideration as many of the other industries in Canada.

Our concern is the way in which the subsidy should be paid. The NDP and the National Farmers' Union are really in concert with regard to this matter. Two years ago the National Farmers' Union filed a class action suit against the CPR for damages resulting from services not rendered. Yet now it wants to give all this money to the CPR. I just do not understand. The Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) wears a hat. Last night I sympathized with her concern with regard to wearing a hat in the House. She pointed out that the CPR has made a profit of $2 billion. If it has made all of this money, why does the NDP want to continue to give it more? That does not make any kind of sense. The Leader of the NDP is a renowned economist.

Mr. Orlikow: And take equity in return.

Mr. Mayer: Whatever way one wants to do it. If one takes equity back in return, one is still giving money to it.

Mr. Orlikow: No, you will share in the profit.

Mr. Mayer: A subsidy by any other name is still a subsidy. That is exactly what is being done. Why does the NDP want to give it money and take equity back when it has already made $2 billion in the last two years? I see that I have Members of the NDP going. It reminds me of a classic statement made by Edmund Burke, a very well respected Conservative theorist in England. He said that a Conservative is someone who believes that nothing should ever be done for the first time. I think that if he were here now and could look at the NDP, he would say that the NDP is someone that believes that nothing should ever be done for the first time. That is about how enlightened and reactionary are the attitudes of its Members.

We on this side of the House, are determined that if the Government is to make any changes to the Crow, we will ensure that those changes will be improvements. The NDP is saying we should do nothing about railway capacity, but simply give the railway more money and equity. It does not do anything about comparative advantage. It wants to lose our industry to eastern Canada.

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Mayer: That is its position. As I said, it literally boggles one's mind as to why Members of the NDP can be so opposed to giving money to the farmer.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party is purportedly an economist. If he is an economist, he will know what I mean when I mention the multiplier effect. If one gives the option to the farmer to take the money, aside from the fact that we believe in some freedom and a little bit of liberty in this country, the money will stay and be spent in his community and it will have a multiplier effect working on it two, three or four times before it is shipped out of the country, whether to Japan, Poland or wherever. If one pays the producer, at least the producer has a handle as to how some of the money will be redirected. That is one of the answers in terms of the money that will be taken out of the community when the producer is asked to pay more money.

I agree that at this particular time, when grain prices are falling and costs continue to escalate, it is a concern that the producer wil be asked to pay more money. Surely, as far as the NDP is concerned, it is obvious that the producer should be given a choice as to whether he wants to see all the money continually going to the railways and being sent right out of the country with no local, multiplier effect. I assume that is not over the heads of some of my friends to the left.

The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) rose to speak. I feel that his comments and his comportment in the House reminded me of the guy who was kicked out of grade two for not shaving. That was about the level of his contribution in the House.

I want to mention that great nabob from the NDP, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), the mountains where he grows all the grain. He told us that we should stand up for farmers. As I said, I do not need anyone telling me how to stand up for farmers. I have held a permit book since I was 18 years old. I do not need guys like him to stand up and tell me what needs to be done on behalf of farmers. I happen to represent farmers and I know farmers. I speak to farmers every week when I go home. I have a fairly good idea what people are thinking at home. As I say, I do not need people from the "great plains of Hamilton Mountain" coming in to tell me how to represent farmers.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) is a long-time Member of the NDP, and I suspect—

An Hon. Member: He never had grease on his hands.

Mr. Mayer: Exactly; he never had grease on his hands. I do not know whether or not he has, but if he has I suspect it would have been accidental. I suspect he will be in some trouble at home when people begin to understand that he is in favour of giving all of the additional money to the railways.

Mrs. Mitchell: Don't you have anything to say on the issue?

Mr. Mayer: Sure, I have lots to say on the issue. I see that a Member from Vancouver is becoming involved. I wish more of these NDP Members from the West Coast would rise to speak.

Mrs. Mitchell: I thought you only wanted farmers.

Mr. Mayer: No, there is nothing wrong with rising to speak. I say that when the time comes to represent farmers, many of us on this side, including myself, do not need lectures on how we should represent farmers, because we understand farmers. If Hon. Members want to rise to make comments, we will be more than happy to hear them. We have heard some very excellent comments from people on this side of the House who represent areas outside of the Prairies. I would certainly welcome and encourage Hon. Members from the NDP who represent areas outside of the Prairies to rise and make some enlightened comment on this matter.

Yesterday the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville rose in the House and said: "I am afraid that the Conservative Party has sold out to big business, to the CPR". I submit that it is exactly the reverse. Given the fact that the Government is determined to modify the Crow legislation, and given the fact that it is willing to put up $600 million a year, we are determined to give the producers a chance to have some of that money. It is the NDP that is in favour of big business, because its Members are the ones who are in favour of giving money to the railways.

I would like to speak specifically. When I say that we are concerned about any changes being made, our concern is that there be improvements to the legislation. Let me go through some of our concerns. We want to ensure that the inflation factor, if it is applied will be an incentive to the railways to provide efficient service. I submit—I mentioned this when I had a chance to speak on the issue about six weeks ago—that the inflation factor was backwards in that if there is to be a sharing of the increase in costs as a result of inflation, the railways should be obligated to pick up the first percentage points of the inflation so that there is an incentive to railways to see that their services are run as efficiently as possible. The way the Bill is now, if the farmers are asked to pick up the first percentage points, it is almost guaranteed that there will be inflation of either three percentage points or six percentage points as far as railway costing is concerned, no matter whether there is inflation in the community at large or not. That is one of the very major concerns which we would like to see addressed.

Along the same line, we also want to ensure that if producers are to be asked to pay more, there be efficiency throughout the whole system. That means from the time the grain is loaded on to an elevator in the Prairies until the time it is put in the hold of a boat at one of the export positions in this country. That is an ongoing responsibility of the Government. It relates to everything, including labour relations and the amount of switching that goes on on the West Coast. It relates to the way our grading is established. It is a whole ongoing series of concerns which the Government must consider.

In a larger context, we must ensure that the Government understands that it has an obligation to look after some of the tariff and non-tariff barriers around the world. If we can grow things very efficiently on the Prairies, and I would submit that we can, we must ensure that Japan and the European Economic Community, for instance, do not take unfair advantage of our efficiencies here by throwing up tariff barriers and non-tariff barriers in front of our exports.

I will mention a classic example. About ten years ago, horse meat was being shipped form Montreal to France. All of a sudden, this shipment stopped. The reason was that because France decided there was a possibility of some exotic, southern hemisphere disease being transmitted from this part of the continent to France, every worker in the packing house was required to have a rectal swab once a week.

• (1220)

This is the sort of situation which the Government must address. When we do have efficiencies in production the Government must ensure that we are not left out from what happens in other parts of the world as far as exports are concerned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, as other Members have pointed out previously in this debate, we are now dealing with a form of closure. It is a rare form of closure that has not been used in this House since 1955 and was last used in Westminster in 1943, but—

Mr. Smith: It is not closure. The last time it was used in this House—

Mr. Mazankowski: —not by a Minister and not to slam the door shut on debate on a very contentious and important issue. As my colleague for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) pointed out, this form of closure is being imposed—

Mr. Smith: It is not closure.

Mr. Mazankowski: —by a dying, lame duck Government. It is being imposed upon a region of Canada where the Government does not have more than two Members representing that region. It has struck out in western Canada so western Canadians are really paying the price.

The reason it is moving closure—

Mr. Smith: It is not closure.

Mr. Mazankowski: —is that the Government knows that this is a divisive measure and that it has created a lot of anxiety. They know that it is a piece of legislation that goes to the very fabric, heart and core of western Canada's social and economic structure.

There are many things that are bad about this Bill. There are many things that are disastrous about this Bill. To use closure—

Mr. Smith: It is not closure. Stop misleading.

Mr. Mazankowski: —is an affront to western Canada, an affront to western Canadian Members of Parliament and it is an affront to this institution.

Mr. Smith: It is not closure.

Mr. Mazankowski: Could I have order, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Some Members take heckling lightly and do not mind it. The Hon. Member who was given the floor should not be interrupted. It is his right and privilege to be heard.

Mr. Blais: Tell the truth.

Mr. Smith: You cannot mislead the House.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I am not misleading the House. The facts are very clear. The fact of the matter is that this Government has used a form of closure more than 20 times in this session. This nation of Canada has had some bitter experiences with closure. We have seen the National Energy Program which destroyed the western Canadian energy industry, particularly the supply, service and exploration industry. It is a policy that has more than doubled energy prices. I should say as well that the Government had the support of my friends to the left, the NDP.

The Government did the same thing with the Constitution which really set out to colonize the western Canadian Provinces. Again it had the support of my friends to the left, the NDP. They have set out to collectivize agriculture in this country through a Crown corporation known as Canagrex. The Government used closure and again had the support of my friends to the left. They want all the policies of agriculture formulated from on high, from the ivory towers in Ottawa. That is what they want.

We now have a situation where the Government of Canada is imposing closure—

Mr. Smith: It is not closure. You are misleading.

Mr. Mazankowski: —on the dismantling of the statutory Crowsnest Pass rates which could destroy the social and economic fabric of the West and cripple further a floundering Canadian economy. This Government has had the support of the arm chair critics over there. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, what this debate is doing? It is really separating the farmers from the armchair critics to my left. That is all they are, armchair theorists. They like to see agriculture collectivized so that it could all be under the control of a central planning bureaucracy sitting here in Ottawa.

I am disappointed with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) and his lack of response. He has a chance to enter into the debate again on this particular motion. I challenge him to rise in his place. We in this Party have documented some very major objections to the piece of legislation before us, Bill C-155. We have documented at least a dozen points.

There are four or five points which I want to reiterate. First, the 10 per cent safety net that the Minister has advanced in the form of an amendment is not satisfactory. It will continue to create a situation where the statutory freight rate for the farmer will double by 1985-86 and multiply five times by the year 1990. The fact of the matter is that the historical figure is something in the order of 7 per cent or 8 per cent.

If we look over the last ten years, between the years 1970 to 1974 the farmers were paying 5.3 per cent of their income from grain for freight; from 1975 to 1979, it was 3.8 per cent; and from 1982 it was roughly 3 per cent. When one looks at it over the last ten years, farmers have been paying a freight rate equal to about 4 per cent of their weighted average of grain. This Minister has put forward a safety net of 10 per cent. That is not historical. It is far from historical and he must bend that figure or this Bill will not get passed, I can assure him of that.

The second point of contention is the 31.1 million tonne cap. That is not satisfactory. It is a disincentive. If we recognize the importance of grain to our national economy and the importance of encouraging production and marketing, then there should be an incentive to produce more. The result of putting on this 31.1 million tonne cap is tantamount to stepping on the accelerator and using the brake at the same time. It does not work.

The third point concerns the statutory freight structure. The Minister's proposal takes the railways off the hook. It takes them off their statutory and historical obligation from which they will be fully relieved. That is fundamentally wrong. Furthermore, it will perpetuate a cost-plus freight rate structure.

I suggest to the House and challenge the Minister that what will happen is that the farmers will become the same victims as the passengers of VIA Rail. This is the same type of cost-plus formula that will be put in place. It really does not matter whether it is a Crown corporation or a private company, the same cost-plus formula will be in existence. Therefore, if the NDP want to renationalize the CNR and nationalize the CPR, the formula will remain the same. The fact of the matter is that they are the friends of the railroads. They are advocating a guaranteed annual income for the railroads.

The fourth point concerns the method of payment. The Minister knows that his proposal is not satisfactory and has not met with any degree of acceptance across the Prairies. In fact, the Gilson proposal recommended an 81-19 split in favour of the producers. The Minister then chose a 50-50 split. He will now send the $651 million Crow benefit directly to the railroads. I suggest this is well documented. The livestock industry has certainly documented its case very well. The future of the livestock industry in western Canada will suffer a very serious blow. It will be a serious blow to further diversification and processing.

We have offered a suggestion. It may not be perfect and we would be the first to admit that. However, it is a principle that I believe bears some serious consideration and study by the Government.

The NDP believe that individual producers do not have the brains, capacity or ability to make their own decisions. They believe that the Government should make the decisions because producers are not capable of doing so. I ask the NDP to come forth with a solution that would address the problems of the livestock producers and the need to further diversify.

The Alberta Wheat Pool has recognized that this is a serious flaw in this particular Bill. The fact of the matter is that we have a current situation in which this Bill must be improved because it cannot go forward as it exists. In its present form it will deliver a tremendous body blow to the future of agriculture in western Canada.

I repeat that the NDP are really the friends of the railroads. They want the $651 million plus to go to the railroads in perpetuity. We have spoken out on behalf of the producers. We firmly believe that the freedom of choice option would give the individual producer the opportunity to retain some of that benefit in his own pocket, thereby maximizing incomes to the producers. It would ameliorate some tensions. It would inject some competition into the system and provide for some efficiencies. Most of all, the bottom line is that it would enhance the income potential of the producers.

I conclude by simply saying that what we solicit is a fair, equitable, reasonable, practical, common sense solution, serving the broadest interests of western Canadian agriculture. This is a complex Bill. It is a contentious Bill and it is necessary for this Minister to provide maximum flexibility. We appeal to the Minister to rise in his place to address some of the very serious objections we have made during the course of this debate. Failure to do so is a clear indication that he is not prepared to accommodate and is not prepared to be flexible on this issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to say a few words once again on the proposed Western Grain Transportation Act, Bill C-155.

There is no question, Mr. Speaker, that the passing of this Bill and the abolishment of the Crow rate will have a devastating effect on the people of western Canada and indeed on all Canadians. What this Bill does is add to the divisiveness of Canada at a time when everything should be done to heal the wounds of disunity and to make this country whole again.

I do not believe there is any place in Canada for greed and avarice by some special interest groups at the expense of the unity of our country and at the expense of the further growth and total development of our country, and I mean every section of our country, be it the East or the West.

By going out of the way needlessly to antagonize and to frustrate people in one section of the country to please people in another section is like playing both ends against the middle. The results, Mr. Speaker, always prove disastrous for everyone concerned.

This is what will happen if the producers and the people of western Canada are not given a fair shake in this proposed legislation. I believe a fair shake was in the offing when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) originally drafted the legislation to divide the proposal annual subsidy of $651 million between the producers and the railways.

Mr. Pepin: Where were you then?

Mr. Mitges: I believe this was a good proposal. But, Mr. Speaker, through pressure from the wheat pools and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Minister unfortunately was pressured to change his mind from this common-sense approach and forced to direct the full subsidy to the railways, thereby selling the producers down the river.

I do not know but perhaps the usual Liberal logic prevailed, because without any elected representatives in western Canada, the Party as a whole would have nothing to lose politically. I can tell you that such logic will have a negative lasting effect on western Canada voters regarding the Liberal Party for many generations into the future.

Mr. Pepin: Is that why you chose your Leader from Quebec?

Mr. Mitges: The fact that the railways would be receiving the subsidy means that the only way the producers could reap the benefit would be to ship their grain by rail. The 150,000 member-owned prairie wheat pools which own most of the elevators are all for this in order to retain their self-pecuniary interest. This has the effect of freezing out Canadian trucking from transporting prairie crops. To me this is discriminatory and is counter to the free enterprise system by restricting trade; and I believe that if it was ever contested in a court of law, a verdict would be reached in favour of the Canadian Trucking Association.

If a farmer received the subsidy he could well decide to sell his grain to local livestock producers and use trucking firms to do this. Unfortunately, Quebec livestock producers have been the primary force against the subsidy being paid directly to farmers because they fear that cattle producers in the West, through cheaper priced grain, could raise cattle much cheaper than in Quebec. But the western livestock producers see it as a necessary restructuring of the whole prairie economy and everything must be done to encourage this. This Bill does the opposite.

The Minister has also decided to put a ceiling of 31.1 million tonnes a year on the amount of grain eligible for the subsidy—

Mr. Pepin: The shippers did that.

Mr. Mitges: You went along with it, Sir. Anything over that, Mr. Speaker, would be shipped at the full rate. This is sheer nonsense. Now the farmers are to be penalized if they produce more or if new records are set in grain production. To me, it is ludicrous to punish producers because of excellence of production.

What this Minister does not seem to realize, Mr. Speaker, is that farming is Canada's major industry. This Government seems conveniently to forget that, despite the fact that close to 40 per cent of all jobs in Canada are directly or indirectly related to agriculture.

To show how little priority agriculture has to this Government, less than 2 per cent of the total budget is set aside for agriculture. If Agriculture Canada had access to the $1.4 billion lost by Canadair through bungling and gross inefficiencies in management, think what that money would have done for all the farmers of Canada, the most efficient producers in the world.

Agriculture Canada, Mr. Speaker, is one of the best run departments of this Government. As a former veterinary inspector in the department and a practising veterinarian for many years, I was always in contact with Agriculture Canada, and I can truthfully say that the Canadian taxpayers, as far as Agriculture Canada is concerned, do get their money's worth, which is more than I can say for many other government departments. However, the common sense of Agriculture Canada is in direct contrast to the legislation that we are debating today, which is far from common sense.

One of the incentives used by the Minister to encourage farmers to participate in the change of the Crow rate was the promise that there would be railway performance guarantees to producers in exchange for increasing the freight rate to move grain. Bill C-155 proves this to be a sham. There will be no railway performance guarantees for the first three years. Railway performance objectives will have no clout because sanctions to the railways will only be tallied, not levied. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the railways will get a free ride for three years.

Mr. Pepin: We can withhold their money if they do not perform well.

Mr. Mitges: Although the Act states that the Minister can withhold any amount of money to the railway if the railways are not adequately investing in rail plant and equipment for moving grain, there is nothing to stop the railways from claiming that the money received from the Government is inadequate to justify the needed expenditures, and therefore they let the rail system deteriorate and then wait for the Government to come back again with ad hoc measures such as hopper car supply.

That is why I say there is no adequate guarantee to producers that they would be getting their money's worth for paying the increased freight rate. A stronger commitment and guarantee by the Government and the railways is necessary and absolutely essential.

Another clause in this Bill empowers the Canadian Transport Commission to monitor the investment programs of the railways and their efforts to maintain the grain-dependent branch lines. This in no way reassures me and my colleagues that all will be well if one takes into consideration the 1982 Annual Report of the Auditor General, which roundly criticizes the Department of Transport and the CTC in their financial and engineering audits of the rail rehabilitation program.

Mr. Pepin: We have answered all that since.

Mr. Mitges: This program, begun in 1977, called for the rehabilitation of 5,675 miles by 1992 at a cost of $1.6 billion. In this program the Auditor General found profound deficiencies, including deficiencies in construction costs charged by the railways, deficiencies in assessment and poor disclosure of financial implications.

The Auditor General as well found deficiencies in the responsibility of maintaining lines and deficiencies in the development of construction standards and specifications.

Mr. Pepin: He is not infallible.

Mr. Mitges: There is no guarantee that this will not be repeated. There is no question that Bill C-155 is a Bill that is poorly drafted and poorly thought out by people I suspect who may be geniuses in theory but have no practical experience and lack total common sense. I suggest that the Minister go back to the drawing board and meet with people who have both the experience and the common sense needed to bring forth a sensible Bill that all Parties will approve and live with.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in this debate to say that while I have only a few farmers in my constituency, I have several thousand railway workers working for both the CP and the CN who have a vital concern in the efficient operation of the railway system.

We are being asked in this Bill to destroy the statutory rate for the shipping of grain which has been commonly known as the Crow rate. The Crow rate has been characterized by many people in western Canada as their Magna Carta. It has had the support of so many people and organizations that for years the Liberal Government promised that it would not change the Crow rate until there had been full discussion and a consensus reached. Indeed, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said on February 13, 1981:

We have made a decision not to deal with the Crowsnest Pass freight rates until there is a very strong demand from representatives of western farm groups and other groups to touch the Crowsnest rates.

Did he get that consensus? Let me list just a few of the groups and organizations which have expressed opposition to the present legislation. I will not list them all because it would take much more than my ten minutes. Among the groups that have expressed opposition to all or parts of the Bill are the Alberta Wheat Pool, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, Manitoba Pool Elevators and the Advisory Committee to the Canadian Wheat Board. Unanimous resolutions were also passed by the Manitoba and Saskatchewan legislatures.

An Hon. Member: No Liberals there.

Mr. Orlikow: There are no Liberals there. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) ought to give some thought as to why that is so.

Mr. Justice Emmett Hall is recognized in Canada for his ability to look at very complex problems and to give Canadians the benefit of his work and advice, which has proven over the years to be very sound. I remind the Minister of Transport that if we have a national, universal medical insurance plan in Canada, it is largely as a result of the study conducted by Mr. Justice Hall. Concerning the kind of legislation we are presently being asked to pass, Mr. Justice Hall said on November 24, 1981:

If once tampering with the statutory rate is accepted or condoned or is an item on the bargaining table, all will be lost. For once the subject is on the bargaining table, it will only be a matter of time until it is lost step by step.

I urge not only the Minister of Transport to heed the advice of Mr. Justice Hall but Hon. Members of the Conservative Party to do likewise. When they talk about freedom of choice, they have already accepted the idea that the rates for moving grain will go up and that somehow farmers will be compensated for the increase. I see an Hon. Member from Alberta nodding his head in agreement. All that means is that once the rates go up and farmers are compensated, we are really saying that farmers can endorse the cheques and pass them on to CPR. That is not acceptable to us.

We are told that if the Bill is passed the railways will invest some $16 billion in improving and upgrading the rail system. We are not told from where the money will come. It will come either from farmers in the form of increases over the next few years of up to 500 per cent in their cost of shipping grain, or through subsidies from Canadian taxpayers including farmers and city people. We are not told that under the plan as proposed by the Government over-all railway investment will actually decline or that railway investment will be reduced severely east of Calgary and Edmonton. We are not told that the Port of Churchill will be ignored or that Thunder Bay ports will be downgraded. We are not told that the rail systems in central and Atlantic Canada will also get very little support.

Where will the investment go? It will go to the mountain lines to subsidize the shipment of coal, and again CPR will benefit. We are not arguing that coal, potash or lumber should not be shipped. We are not saying that coal or these other products should not be exported if there are markets. We are saying that the cost of moving the increased shipments of grain, potash, coal and lumber should not be placed on the backs of the grain farmers of western Canada.

Who will benefit from this plan? Mainly the benefits will go to CPR, a corporation which was established and has grown fat as a result of grants of money to the tune of billions of dollars and grants of millions of acres of land over the years. I suggest that the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) ought to look at the speeches of his Conservative colleague, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), who knows much more about what CPR has done to this country than he knows. As a result of the assistance CPR has received from Canadians in the form of cash grants, subsidies, millions of acres of land and mineral rights, today it is one of the largest corporations, if not the largest corporation, in Canada with assets of over $16 billion. It owns railway lines, shipping lines and airlines.

Mrs. Mitchell: Shipping registered outside Canada.

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, with shipping registered outside Canada and using foreign crews to avoid paying the fair wages which Canadian workers would demand. It owns real estate, mines and pulp and paper companies, to mention just a small part of its assets.

We have made our position clear. We are opposed to this rip-off which the Government is proposing, this plan that will benefit CPR. We have put forward a very clear alternative. Our alternative to the Government's plan calls for upgrading the railways. In the City of Winnipeg I have seen CPR and CNR workers who were continuously employed for 15 years to 25 years being laid off for periods of six weeks to 12 weeks in the last year. Why? The reason is that CP and CN officials have said that their current business is slow. Enough studies have been conducted to show that in the next ten years our exports of grain will go up by about 100 per cent, our exports of potash by about 150 per cent and our exports of coal by about 400 per cent.

Now is the time for the railways to be entering a period of modernization. They could upgrade their system and build the equipment they will need, such as hopper cars, engines and signal systems. Now is the time for the railways to be modernized and upgraded. This would mean implementing a massive job creation program. Without it they will not be able to move the increased sales of grain, potash, coal and lumber we expect to see in the next ten or 15 years.

We say that that can be done while retaining the Crowsnest Pass rate for grain farmers. We believe it will cost Canadian taxpayers no more than the present plan of the Government and would create more than 100,000 new jobs in the next ten years, many of which would be in railway shops and plants in my City of Winnipeg. We want to stop the continuing policy which we have had for many years under both Liberal and Conservative Governments of handouts of money to the railways with no return to the public. We believe we should pay the railways proven out-of-pocket expenses—I emphasize that, not the kind of inflated figures we get from the railways—for hauling grain.

I point out that in 1983 we paid CN and CP $380 million. In return for the money we paid to those railway companies, the Government should take an equity share. In return for a specific capital investment in railway upgrading, in the last year we paid $550 million. If we took an equity share in CPR for the money we have given to it, we would get back part of the profits it earns, profits which are and will be very substantial. We would require the railways to maintain their investment. We have seen companies in Canada and the United States take public money and not use it for the primary purpose for which it was given, but use it for—

[Editor's note: At this point the electricity supply to the Chamber was interrupted.]

Some Hon. Members: One o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues in this debate this afternoon—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Perhaps the Hon. Member can wait for a few seconds until we see what the problem is.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Why not call it one o'clock and then we can get this place fixed up?

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to speak over the noise in the background. I wish to make a few comments on what we all believe to be the closing stages of second reading debate before the Bill goes to committee. Hopefully the Members of the Transport Committee will take a good, long, hard look at the Bill throughout the rest of June and during the month of July.

I wish to deal briefly with two matters. First, the whole debate which has been going on for some period of time is not about nationalization, as the former speaker indicated. It does not have any part in the subject matter we are talking about today.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know this noise is not at every desk in this House, but certainly in this part of the Chamber the noise is intolerable. We cannot hear the Hon. Member speak. Would it not make more sense to call it one o'clock and get the electrical problem attended to?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair will inquire from Hon. Members whether there is a disposition to call it one o'clock.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Keeper: We cannot hear you.

Mr. Benjamin: We cannot hear him.

Mr. Murta: I guess I have about seven or eight minutes left.

As I was saying before the interruption, what we have been talking about here for some length of time has not been nationalization of another railway or anything along that line. This in the mind of western Canadians—

Mr. Lewycky: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I cannot hear what the Hon. Member is saying. I honestly cannot discern what the Member is saying because of the noise. Maybe it is greater here than where other Members are sitting. I propose that we call it one o'clock.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) has a right to make his speech without any interference. You can hear the noise. The microphone and the sound system have all gone to hell. I do not know what it is like at the other end of the Chamber, but we cannot hear the Member speaking, and we cannot hear you, Mr. Speaker. Why are we sitting? Surely this is not in accordance with proper decorum and order in the House. Get somebody in here and repair the problem. Let us call it one o'clock and the Hon. Member can make his speech later.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I just want to point out that anything that would get close to the NDP would all go to hell.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) just rose and made a point with regard to the NDP. I am sorry but we could not hear what he said in this part of the House. This is not the way to carry on the business of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. There is a very serious technical difficulty. The Chair must admit that it is having difficulty hearing interventions from that corner of the House. If Hon. Members are being hampered in the due process of debate, that is to speak and be heard, perhaps we should adjourn at this time. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I agree that we should adjourn at this time. I hope that when the House resumes debate on this subject, the Chair will give the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) his full ten minutes because we have hardly heard a word he has said so far.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock.

At 12.54 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

SHIPBUILDING

BENEFITS FOR QUEBEC FROM FRIGATE PATROL CONSTRUCTION CONTRACT

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, last Friday, union workers from the Davie Shipbuilding Ltd. shipyards at Lauzon, representatives of socio-economic organizations, mayors and business leaders marched in the streets of Lauzon and Lévis to demonstrate their support for awarding the National Defence frigate construction project to the Scan group.

I spoke on that occasion and indicated my own support for this option as well. A petition with 5,200 signatures, collected in four days, was handed to me, a petition signed by people from all walks of life in the riding of Lévis, and by Canadians from all regions.

I hope this new development will be considered by Cabinet members before a final decision is made. This unique contract is very important to the Quebec City area, which depends on this type of government investment to continue its economic development.

I may recall that over one million people live in this area, and if this option is chosen, it will provide a reasonable level of employment for a number of years.

METRIC CONVERSION

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY COMMITMENT TO RESCIND MANDATORY ORDERS IN COUNCIL

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) has locked up his last retail grocer, put cable around his last gas pump, and prosecuted his last floor covering dealer for using imperial measurements. There has never been a survey or poll taken which would indicate that the majority of the Canadian people want metric measurement. For this reason, the Progressive Conservatives, in Opposition, make the following commitment. All Orders in Council passed making imperial measurement illegal shall be rescinded, and the Canadian people will have freedom of choice. Canada would follow the course taken by the United States and the United Kingdom by implementing a voluntary program which would leave the pace of change up to the retailers, manufacturers, and consumers.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has lost control of his senses. The people of Canada do not want mandatory metric. When Members of the Conservative Party form the next Government we will return to a voluntary program, and grocers, floor covering sales people, and gasoline station operators will not be prosecuted if they wish to use imperial measurement.

The Progressive Conservative Party has adopted the following resolution: "We deplore the continuation of the policy of the Government of enforcing compulsory metrication in Canada and we will take, when in Government, any action necessary to abandon compulsory metrication in Canada."

AIR TRANSPORT

PROVINCE OF QUEBEC'S POSITION ON QUEBECAIR

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Madam Speaker, this morning, in the Quebec National Assembly, the Quebec Minister of Transport responded to the offer he received at the beginning of April from Air Canada to settle the Quebecair problem once and for all.

The Quebec Minister of Transport responded by nationalizing Quebecair. What is even more surprising, Madam Speaker, is that since April, the Quebec Minister of Transport has never been in touch with the federal Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to enquire about the proposal that had been made by Air Canada.

Madam Speaker, the Government of Quebec is refusing the $12.5 million offered by the Government to Quebecair in order to stabilize the situation. In addition, it has turned down the federal Government's offer to help pay future debts of Quebecair.

Madam Speaker, it seems as though the Government of Quebec and the Minister of Transport are once again getting involved in a nationalist venture. On top of that, the announcement come just two days before Quebec's national holiday.

Once again, it is clear that this Government does not care at all about the current situation at Quebecair or the interest of airline users.

Madam Speaker, I think that once again, we are seeing a Government that is only interested in making Quebec independent and is not concerned about the people of Quebec.

INDUSTRY

PRODUCTION OF CIGARETTE TOBACCO—CREATION OF NATIONAL OFFICE

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, increasingly, there has been talk of the possibility of establishing a national cigarette tobacco production board.

[Editor's note: Interruption caused by power failure.]

Madam Speaker, since I represent a riding that has a vested interest in the production of cigarette tobacco, since 90 per cent of the Quebec harvest comes from the riding of Joliette, I took the trouble to send a letter to all my Quebec colleagues especially, to show the Minister that I am certainly not opposed to the idea of establishing a national board. However, since a national board will be concerned with exporting tobacco, it will also have to monitor production and set quotas. Since Quebec produces only 50 per cent of the tobacco consumed in the province, I hope that in the event Canadian production would have to be cut back, Hon. Members and especially the Minister will agree to allow Quebec production to be maintained at least at present levels. I am mentioning this as a warning to the Government that it is highly unlikely Quebec producers would agree to cutbacks in production if that became necessary, since they are producing only 50 per cent of the tobacco consumed in the province. In the circumstances, I thought it would be a good idea to make my colleagues aware of this point. I have received acknowledgements from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), and I hope all my Quebec colleagues will do likewise.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

REPORTED STATEMENTS BY CANADIAN ADMIRAL

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, yesterday Canada's own Admiral Robert Falls, the Chairperson of the NATO Military Committee, added his voice to those of many other western military leaders in condemning the nuclear arms buildup. The Admiral is particularly alarmed at the buildup of battlefield nuclear weapons in Europe and says that NATO already has more weapons than it needs even before it deploys the Cruise missiles and the Pershing II missiles in Europe.

Admiral Falls is an accomplished military leader who is obviously familiar with the strengths and the weaknesses of NATO. For the benefit of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne), I might add that he is not someone who could be accused of being either pro-Soviet or anti-American. Yet Admiral Falls feels comfortable saying that NATO could unilaterally reduce its stockpile of nuclear weapons without upsetting deterrence or undermining our security.

The Admiral's statement is only the latest one that exposes the hypocrisy of the Government's policy of talking peace while throwing fuel on the arms race. The Government is already aware that the introduction of long-range Cruise missiles will destabilize arms control agreements because the Cruise missile defies verification. Arms control agreements depend on verification, not on trust.

In good conscience the Government can only make one decision, and that is to refuse to test the Cruise and press both super powers to negotiate a ban on long-range Cruise missiles now.

SPORTS

WORLD UNIVERSITY GAMES—PRIME MINISTER'S ATTENDANCE URGED

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, from July 1 to July 11, Canada will be host to athletes from 97 countries who will be participating in Universiade '83 in Edmonton. This event is second only in size and importance to the Summer Olympics. It is an event that goes beyond athletic competition. It is a world event that builds friendship through competition, understanding through brotherhood, and peace through tolerance and good will.

The grand opening of this major international event will set the stage for subsequent competitions. It is expected that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) will play a prominent part in the opening ceremonies.

I have been advised, Madam Speaker, that the Prime Minister might not attend the grand opening of the Games. Why not? The country only has one Prime Minister. Surely when athletes from 97 countries, with all of their attendant dignitaries and officials come to our country, our Prime Minister should welcome them on behalf of all Canadians as he represents us all.

I ask the Prime Minister to rise in the House and advise the nation that he will be attending and will participate in the opening ceremonies of Universiade '83.

THE ECONOMY

CONSUMER PRICE INDEX REDUCTION

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, economic indicators continue to show that inflation is on the wane and an economic recovery is under way. Statistics Canada has reported that the Consumer Price Index rose by only .3 per cent in May, as compared to April, this reducing the increase from one year ago to 5.4 per cent. This, Madam Speaker, represents the lowest annual increase since December, 1972, and it represents a reduction of 7.5 per cent from the peak of 12.9 per cent in June, 1981. This, Madam Speaker, is irrefutable evidence of the success of the six and five program.

• (1410)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Smith: All the cynicism emanating from the other side cannot change the facts. More good news! Furthermore, the signs of an economic recovery are apparent as well. Canada had a growth rate of 1.8 per cent, inflation-adjusted, in the economy during the first quarter of 1983. That followed six quarters of decline. This is evidence, Madam Speaker, that recovery is under way.

METRIC CONVERSION

APPLICATION TO CANNING AND PACKAGING INDUSTRY

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, in the area of metric conversion it would appear that the Metric Commission has misled the Consumers' Association of Canada. All along, the Consumers' Association of Canada, because of assurances from the Metric Commission, has been promising consumers a simpler marketplace with fewer sizes, rationally related. This was supposed to be one of the advantages of conversion. Canadian canners and packagers are unwilling to convert their equipment because of the horrendous expense, so, consequently, we have cans and packages with a lot of funny numbers which are confusing to shoppers.

If, as the Metric Commission maintains, conversion is voluntary—sector by sector—the Canadian canning and packaging industry ought to be permitted to can, package, wholesale and retail in familiar imperial measures to keep industry costs down and, in the long run, to keep costs down at the supermarket checkout counters, thereby assisting in the control of inflation and at the same time protecting our trade edge with non-metric countries, especially the United States.

CALL FOR NATIONAL CONFERENCE AND INQUIRY INTO GASOLINE PRICING

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, Canadians today are suffering from the results of the Government's inept energy policies. Despite the Liberals' promises of oil prices at 75 per cent of the world price level, Canadians are now paying more at the pump than American consumers, while our oil and gas industry is in a state of chaos. Rather than helping Canadians, the National Energy Program has had a disastrous impact on the economy.

There is no doubt that Canada needs a national conference on energy pricing and taxation. Such a conference must include the federal Government, the producing Provinces, the consuming Provinces, as well as input from consumers and industry. In addition to a national conference on energy policy, there must be a national inquiry into gasoline and fuel oil pricing. No clear understanding exists today of what is a fair price for fuel, with price wars and price piggybacking going on across the country. Rather than dealing with a restrictive trade practices commission, we should have an inquiry into pricing which exists currently today. The Government must provide protection to consumers at the well head and at the gas pump. Therefore the country needs a national inquiry into the pricing procedures at the gas pump.

AIR TRANSPORT

NATIONALIZATION OF QUEBECAIR—CONSEQUENCES FOR CERTAIN REGIONS OF QUEBEC

Mrs. Éva Côté (Rimouski-Témiscouata): Madam Speaker, as was mentioned earlier by our colleague for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Bujold), Quebecair was nationalized today by the Quebec Government. The House is aware that I represent a region that is particularly lacking in air transportation. It is also a fact that under federal legislation on air transportation, the Government of Canada is obliged to maintain transportation by air to very remote areas for which specific requirements have been identified. I wonder whether there will be any legal or moral obligation on the Government of Quebec to maintain a service in a region like ours. Madam Speaker, perhaps I may point out that the kind of gifts being offered by the Government of Quebec to the people of Quebec today are strangely similar to the gift it gave us on June 23, 1982, when it passed a basic statute that retroactively excluded the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms from all Quebec legislation. I think that this year, June 24 will be a particularly sad day for Quebec.

THE ROYAL FAMILY

SYMBOLISM OF VISIT BY PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, upon meeting the Princess of Wales yesterday she expostulated that they were "overwhelmed with the warm welcome of Canadians". We Canadians were overwhelmed with the Royal couple's idyllic love, social grace, and personification of the democratic system. What a breath of fresh air they represent, as opposed to the socialist hordes in front of me and to my left.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stewart: Perhaps the socialist gathering this evening at Kingsmere will be awakened to what their Royal Highnesses really represent—freedom—and will be awakened particularly to the fact that socialism destroys morale, terminates initiative and incentive, and leaves a nation apathetic and listless.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stewart: The mythological Royal couple represents the victory of the democratic head of Government over the frugal—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Order.

Mr. Stewart: The mythological Royal couple represents the victory of the democratic head of Government over the frugal, melancholy mantle of imposed state control known as socialism. The Royal pair symbolizes the free world, no longer the divine right of kings, and in real flesh and blood. They are the living embodiment of over 1,000 years of tradition, of our parliamentary system and all the rights and freedoms—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stewart: —we cherish so dearly, the traditions, languages, rights and freedoms which have been systematically eroded by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). To Your Royal Highnesses, our unswerving love and loyalty for all that you represent. Hurry back, and God bless.

PUBLIC SERVICE

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION—SALARIES OF EMPLOYEES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and it is really a follow up to yesterday's questioning of the Minister for apparently asking those in the country to follow his word as opposed to the Government's action.

Yesterday, in reply to the suggestion on my part that many in the Public Service have exceeded the six and five guidelines, the Minister threw out a challenge to me. He said, "I challenge the Hon. Member to prove that the average salary of employees working, for instance, for the National Capital Commission has increased more than 6 per cent". Would the Minister indicate to the House, when he threw out that challenge, was he unaware of the fact that in Main Estimates 84, the average salary in the National Capital Commission was $30,344, compared to 1983 when the average salary was $25,669, an increase of 18.2 per cent?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would have been very happy to hear an introductory comment by the Hon. Member referring to the fact that today we have heard excellent news on the Consumer Price Index, that we have for the eleventh month a straight decline in inflation in this country—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: —and that from May of last year to this year, we have had an inflation rate of only 5.4 per cent.

An Hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Lalonde: That is the smallest increase recorded since December, 1972.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: I believe that clearly indicates that the measures taken by the Government, together with Canadians, have produced excellent results, and that in effect the six and five program, together with the other measures taken by provincial Governments, municipalities, and by everyone in the private sector, has produced excellent results for the country. We have succeeded in bringing inflation down quite significantly, and we will be able to ensure more jobs and more growth for the Canadian economy in the year to come, thanks to this excellent progress.

As far as the question raised by the Hon. Member is concerned, I must remind him, as I indicated yesterday, that one has to take into account several factors. Parliament passed legislation imposing a 6 per cent and 5 per cent maximum increase on public servants. That is the law under this Parliament, and that is what is being applied. The Hon. Member knows that collective agreements expire at different times, and Parliament decided not to roll back those agreements in effect. Therefore, there were increases coming into effect which were in excess of 6 per cent past last June and which would show up in those results. But what is important—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: —Madam Speaker, the Hon. Members have not taken the trouble—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

AMOUNT OF AVERAGE SALARY INCREASE

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. When inflation was on the rise in this country we were told it was due to world conditions, but with inflation coming down it is solely the Government's responsibility. Perhaps the Minister of Finance could answer a very simple question. Does he agree that average salaries in the National Capital Commission for 1984 will indeed be approximately 18 per cent above those in 1983?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): 1984?

Mr. Stevens: Fiscal year 1984.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, first of all I have to remind the Hon. Member that when inflation was high in this country he blamed the Government for it all. Now he wants to turn around and say it has come down, but no thanks to the Government. Again, he should make up his mind. Either we were to blame for inflation before, as he blames us for it, or not. But he cannot have it both ways.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: As far as the NCC is concerned, Madam Speaker, I do not have the figures at hand but I can tell the Hon. Member quite clearly that Parliament has passed a law, and the salaries of federal public servants are allowed to increase only by 6 per cent and 5 per cent when they are doing the same job, and this takes place as the collective agreements expire. I would ask my hon. friend therefore to check further into the matter.

MONITORING OF SALARY INCREASES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, would the Minister indicate to the House what guidelines have been given by his Department to ensure that, Department by Department, there are not little wrinkles to get around the guidelines through promotions and other such devices? Secondly, would he indicate what monitoring will continue to ensure that indeed these excessive average salary increases we are now witnessing in the Public Service do not continue?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as a former President of the Treasury Board the Hon. Member should know these matters are under the authority of the Treasury Board, not that of the Minister of Finance. But I can tell him without hesitation the Government has been very careful to make sure the law passed by this Parliament is being implemented and increases are not going to be more than 6 per cent and 5 per cent. That is the rule which is being applied. Obviously there are promotions, and changes in the situation of a particular individual, as I indicated before in the case of the Hon. Member for Yukon who changed jobs and also changed salaries.

I can assure the Hon. Member that the Treasury Board is exercising very strict control over this issue, and I think his comments about the Public Service are quite unfair and inappropriate.

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance will be changing jobs and changing salaries shortly, too.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT RESTRAINT PROGRAM

TAXING OF CABLE COMMUNICATIONS SUBSCRIBERS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I want to put a question to the Minister of Finance with regard to his budget. In view of the fact that cable companies under the government's 6 and 5 program have already been allowed to increase fees to their subscribers, how does he justify slapping a new tax on cable subscribers? Does six and five mean 6 plus 5?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am very interested in hearing that my hon. friend is promoting me to another, more elevated position, I suppose.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: I want to tell him that I will not go after him for support or as an organizer.

As far as the tax is concerned, the Hon. Member knows that in the budget I announced a 6 per cent tax on cable subscribers. That tax has been justified on the basis that we needed to establish a fund to provide for Canadian broadcasting production. Part of that tax is going to be used to fulfil that particular objective. I hope my friend supports this because we have come out with a clear policy of encouraging Canadian broadcasting production, and that requires public funds. Indeed, if cable subscribers are going to benefit from the programming, they should be called upon to contribute to the cost of production.

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, it is not for me to tell the Minister where to go; the Canadian people will be doing that shortly.

Oral Questions

CROWN CORPORATIONS

REQUEST THAT AUDITOR GENERAL BE PERMITTED TO CONDUCT AUDITS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that figures just released by the Government in the past few days indicate, in the case of Canadair, the largest corporate loss in the history of Canada, and it appears that, if controls apply anywhere, they do not apply to controlling the losses of Crown corporations, will the Minister now agree that the Auditor General of Canada should have full access to the books of all Crown corporations and, in particular, the grandaddy of all Crown corporations, the Canada Development Investment Corporation?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, this is an issue on which there are various arguments, which we are seriously considering. When we present to Parliament our views on possible amendments to Bill C-153, it is an issue that we will be happy to have more to say about.

BANKS AND BANKING

PROFITS OF CHARTERED BANKS—SPREAD BETWEEN DEPOSIT RATES AND INTEREST CHARGES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Figures released today show that the profits of the chartered banks are up some $1 billion for the past six months. The article containing these figures points out that the reason for this is that the spread between what the banks pay depositors and what they charge borrowers has increased, and therefore home owners, small-businessmen, and all kinds of other Canadian consumers are being overcharged by the banks. If the Minister is really concerned about inflation, why does he not take action regarding the banks and get them to reduce their charges to borrowers?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to the spread. I would like to bring to his attention that the interest rate spread for the big five banks was 2.78 per cent compared to a five-year high of 3.08 per cent. The return on assets for all Schedule A banks, although rising to .52 per cent, was still below the five-year historical high of .66 per cent. So my friend should look at the record and realize what the situation is.

Secondly, if my friend looks at the profits of the banks two years ago, for the whole year, he will realize that they were roughly double what they were for the last six months.

Mr. Deans: That was what we were telling you two years ago.

Mr. Lalonde: At that time a parliamentary committee studied this matter and came to the conclusion, two years ago, that bank profits were not excessive. That was the conclusion of a committee of this House at that time, so my friend should bear that in mind.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TAKE ACTION AGAINST BANKS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the historical reality is that for the past two years workers' wages have been going down, month after month after month. Bank profits have been going up. The bank pays a depositor 7 per cent and then increases that by 100 per cent because a typical consumer loan is now 14 per cent. That is the real cause of inflation. Is the Minister not concerned about this unfair gouging of consumers, which also causes a loss of jobs? If he is, why does he not for once take some action against the banks, instead of always talking about workers' salaries, which have been going down, not up?

• (1430)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would like to inform the Hon. Member that for the first time in five years, without the support of the NDP, by the way, Canadian workers will see their standard of living improving, this year, and they will be ahead of inflation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Again I remind my hon. friend that bank profits in 1981 were roughly $1.7 billion. For the six month period ending April 30, 1983, they were $900 million. That is equal to about half of the profits for the full year of 1981, and one should realize that this is two years later, and take inflation into account, et cetera. At that time those profits were studied by a parliamentary committee and found not to be excessive. I am not surprised therefore that my hon. friend would raise his usual rhetoric, but he should consider the facts again.

EFFECT OF BANK CHARGES ON CONSUMERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance, if he were direct in the House, would know that the reason inflation has gone down in this country is because the Government has created circumstances where there are 1.5 million unemployed.

Mr. Nielsen: Two million.

Mr. Broadbent: That is the real reason wage rates have come down, not because of the Government's silly program.

The Minister cited 1981, which was one of the years of record profits for the banks. He is now implying that it is a reasonable target. Will he not, I ask for a third time, recognize that consumers are being overcharged, home owners are being overcharged, and small-businessmen are now being overcharged by the banks? If he will recognize that fact, will he take action, or does he really want to return to the situation of 1981, where the banks made their highest profits in decades? Will he show some genuine concern, in short, about inflation, and attack it where it is occurring, instead of making scapegoats of workers?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member says that the profits were record high in 1981. I told him that the matter was studied by this House in 1981.

Mr. Broadbent: It was the Conservatives.

Mr. Lalonde: They were not found to be excessive. They were found to be appropriate profits. Far from making scapegoats of the workers, on the contrary our policy has all been aimed at trying to improve the lot of workers in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: As I said, for the first time in five years workers will see their standard of living improved in 1983, thanks to the policies we have followed in fighting inflation, without the support of the NDP, mind you. Therefore, as far as the general situation involving profits and interest rates is concerned, I believe that the solution is through competition. If the banks are overcharging, there are other financial institutions in the market, beginning with credit unions and caisses populaires, which are also in the business of lending money, and there is a great deal of competition. What we should do is to encourage competition between institutions. This is the line I have been following, and the one I intend to follow.

TRADE

EXPORTS TO PACIFIC RIM COUNTRIES

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State for International Trade. The Financial Post has just reported that Canada's prospects for international trade look extremely good in the 1980s, particularly with Pacific Rim countries. In view of the fact that Canada's trade in goods posted a surplus of $6 billion in the first four months of 1983, could the Minister inform the House whether the initiatives taken earlier this year by the Prime Minister himself, in southeast Asia, have contributed to this admirable record?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member I want to say that the southeast Asian market is our most rapidly expanding market and is of intense importance. I guess that if the rules of the House were to allow, I could read off, for the Hon. Member, an endless number of contracts which have been signed or are under their last stages of negotiation since the Prime Minister's visit to southeast Asia. Perhaps I would merely point out that exports from Canada to Asia over the past year increased at a time when Asia's over-all imports were going down, from $7.8 billion, to $8.3 billion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Regan: I would further suggest that any Hon. Member who wants to know the value on the sale of Canadian goods abroad of trips such as the one the Prime Minister made to southeast Asia need only contact any one of the 44 senior businessmen who travelled with me and who were signing contracts on a daily basis as a consequence of the Prime Minister paving the way.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT RESTRAINT PROGRAM

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS—INCREASE IN WORKERS' WAGES

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, today we have heard many platitudes coming from the Government side on the terrific success of the six—

Madam Speaker: Order. I believe every single Member who asked a question today began by making a comment on the answer which had just been received. That must definitely be ruled out.

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, concerning the six and five program, I have a question I would like to ask of the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It stems from the fact that the six and five program was introduced in order to bring down inflation. It has been brought to my attention in my riding that adults employed on the Community Development Projects, unemployed people who gained employment under the Government's program, have received an increase over a two year period, of from $158 a week to $168 a week, which represents a 3 per cent annual increase in their incomes under the Government's program. Has the Government brought about a decrease in inflation on the backs of the unemployed?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, it is that kind of question which really becomes very vexatious. It is not really a very serious problem. Through the Community Development Projects we are trying to extend the amount of money which, this year, will amount to several hundreds of millions of dollars, to help as many unemployed people as we can. Those moneys are paid according to the minimum wage standards in each of the Provinces.

If the Hon. Member has a problem with how much is being paid, I would suggest that he take it up with his provincial counterparts on the adjustment of their minimum wage requirements in the Province of Ontario.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I would like to follow my first question with a supplementary. Is the Minister comfortable with the thought that while employees of the Government under the Northern Pipeline and the National Energy Board received 13.1 per cent and 13.9 per cent salary increases in the same period of time, the people he employs, who were unemployed, received 3 per cent per year?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, what I am comfortable with is the fact that, through the initiatives of the Government, just since about one year ago we were able to bring the inflation rate down from well over 12 per cent to 6 per cent now, which will provide a tremendous amount of relief and support to all Canadians right across the country.

Mr. Lewis: How is your unemployment rate?

NATIONAL SECURITY

ISSUANCE OF SURVEILLANCE WARRANTS—ANNUAL RENEWAL

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, last week the Solicitor General was widely quoted in the media as indicating that there were many people in Canada against whom Solicitors General surveillance warrants had been permanently issued. Is the Solicitor General now claiming that he was widely misquoted in those statements, or has he drastically altered the system which was in effect in 1980 when he took office, whereby each one of those warrants had to be reviewed and reissued at least every calendar year?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, as my predecessor in office knows quite well, there is no authority under the Act for permanent warrants to be issued. In fact the articles which reported that some Canadians were under lifetime surveillance were quite inaccurate. I indicated that there were some warrants which were in place permanently, in the sense that they were renewed, but the Hon. Member is quite right in saying that they must be renewed every year. I am glad to have the opportunity to indicate that none of those warrants, and it is a rather small number which is renewed on a regular basis, are oustanding against Canadian citizens.

PLANTING OF ELECTRONIC INTERCEPTIVE DEVICES

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question to the Solicitor General also relates to some past history. He will know that when he took office in 1980, no Solicitor General's warrant authorized any surreptitious entry for the placing of an intrusive device. Has he changed that procedure as well?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): The Hon. Member, Madam Speaker, is incorrect about that matter. It is my view that the warrant authorizing the planting of an electronic intercept includes in it the right to enter surreptitiously. That view has been sustained by the law officers of the Crown. It has been supported—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That's not what Justice Spence said.

Mr. Kaplan: —by two outside legal opinions which I obtained following my release of the report of the McDonald Commission. As far as I can see, there is no way in which a device can be planted pursuant to a Solicitor General's authorization under Section 16 of the Official Secrets Act. Is the Hon. Member suggesting that when he authorized electronic intercepts to be placed, he asked members of the Security Service to obtain the permission of the target? The suggestion is ridiculous.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

NEGOTIATIONS OVER JAPANESE MANUFACTURED CAR IMPORTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for International Trade. At the end of this month the voluntary agreement with the Japanese on the importing of Japanese manufactured cars will run out. Can he tell the House what the present status of the negotiations is between Canada and Japan over limiting imports of Japanese cars? Can he tell us exactly what he has achieved to date, since he has now been the Minister for some ten months? Can he tell us what he has been able to achieve? What is the status of the negotiations, and will he state whether or not there will be more than just a temporary agreement with the Japanese this time around?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, in answer to the latter part of my hon. friend's question about what I have achieved, I would have to say that I have always been taught that self praise is poor recommendation.

I want to say to him that the six-months restraint agreement that we achieved with Japan in relation to the import of automobiles was a marked reduction, as the Hon. Member will remember, over the number that had come into the country during the same period in the previous year. I guess that is progress.

In relation to the present negotiations, I would have to say to the Hon. Member that what I am seeking is to have an agreement in place by July 1. I am seeking to have an agreement that will run for at least the rest of the fiscal year. That is not just to January 1, but to March 31, so that the term of our agreement would expire at the same time as the agreement which the United States has with Japan. The Japanese cannot then stall our negotiations for any renewal on the claim that they are waiting to complete negotiations with the larger market of the United States first. I hope to report to him on the negotiations before July 1. If that is not achieved, we will have to consider other options in those circumstances.

CANADIAN CONTENT—TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, the Minister is talking about the American agreement. The Japanese are now producing in the United States. That agreement also covers trucks.

Could the Minister confirm that this will be part of the agreement between Canada and Japan? Will he also confirm that his officials are working on a Canadian content Bill that would implement some of the recommendations, if not most, in the automobile Task Force report as a contingency plan if the negotiations with Japan on the limiting of imports fail?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I have not authorized officials to work on the drafting of any such legislation. It might well be that legislation of that type may fall under the jurisdiction of the very distinguished Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

I can say to the Hon. Member that the report of the auto task force will be carefully studied by Cabinet. Only after Cabinet has reached a conclusion on it would there be such action as negotiations on those points with Japan, or on the question of drafting legislation. I think it is important that we have a restraint arrangement in place for at least a further nine months while we proceed with the examination and consideration of the recommendations of the task force.

FISHERIES

RESTRUCTURING OF MAJOR FISH COMPANIES IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. In light of the Government's proposals for restructuring Atlantic Canada's five major integrated fish companies and, I would add, the discussions that were held only last week between the heads of these companies and officials of the Minister's Department, is he now in a position to inform the House about the Government's plans in this area? How much money will be provided to bring about the amalgamation of these companies?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that the amounts involved here will be substantial and that all parties will have to contribute. As well, I hope those negotiations will be concluded in the very near future.

FUTURE OF SMALL INDEPENDENT COMPANIES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, will the present five large companies, National Sea and H.B. Nickerson of Nova Scotia, Fisheries Products, the Lake Grop and John Penney Limited of Newfoundland be amalgamated into two companies, for example, one in Nova Scotia and one in Newfoundland? If so, what will be the future role of a large number of small and mainly specialized individually owned companies? Will they be in a position to compete with the government financially assisted companies?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, this is certainly a valid question. Like the Hon. Member, I have noticed that the smaller companies on the whole have fared better than the bigger ones. There is no reason to believe that they will be cornered by the bigger ones.

I am sure that my hon. friend understands that I cannot give any details of those negotiations and what their final outcome would be. I can tell him that I and other Members of Cabinet are overseeing that restructuring. I hope that an agreement would be reached with all interested parties in the very near future.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ELIGIBILITY OF FRESHWATER FISHERMEN—DRAFTING OF REGULATIONS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. He will know that we amended the Unemployment Insurance Act in this House two weeks ago, which will make freshwater fishermen eligible for unemployment insurance. They have been paying into the fund for a number of years. Is the Minister treating this as a priority, and when will the regulations be drafted to allow unemployed freshwater fishermen to draw on the fund?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased that the House was able to support the special application of the unemployment insurance regulations to inland fishermen. We are now working on the regulations. I would expect that they would be applied to that particular group of workers for this particular fishing season, starting this Spring and Summer.

FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION—COSTS CHARGED TO FISHERMEN

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Freshwater fishermen must market their fish through the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation in Winnipeg. The Minister will know that the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation's cost of operation is in excess of 35 per cent, which is taken directly from the fishermen's pockets and reduces their income substantially. Will the Minister do something about this very inefficient Corporation? And when will he report to the House that he has done so?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that I had the pleasure approximately two weeks ago of meeting with the Associate Minister of Resources of Alberta, who came to me to talk precisely about that topic. I would remind the Hon. Member that the Government of Alberta is a member of the board of the Freshwater Corporation. The matter to which he is referring is being investigated at the moment by the provincial authorities in Alberta.

On the other hand, I would remind the Hon. Member that when the Conservatives were in power they investigated the usefulness of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. My information is that, after having met with the fishermen of the three western Provinces, the overwhelming evidence was that that mechanism, in which there is room for improvement, of course, is the best mechanism by far to bring about stability and maximize the earnings of the fishermen.

PIPELINES

ALASKA HIGHWAY PIPELINE COMMISSION—OPERATIONAL COSTS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since he has not been able to give any projections in response to repeated questions in the House as to when the Alaska Highway Northern Gas Pipeline will be initiated on the northern route, how can he continue to justify keeping the Commission in place, which has budgeted for more than $5.3 million this year, if he cannot also point specifically to something they are doing today which could not be done when the pipeline is in fact put in place, which could take anywhere from ten years or into the next century? Why are you paying your Liberal friends $5 million if you cannot justify their activity?

• (1450)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member should know, if he is aware of the facts, that it was at the request of the industry that we are keeping this outfit in operation. The cost of this operation is paid through the Government by the industry.

An Hon. Member: It is paid by the Canadian consumer.

Mr. Chrétien: It costs the taxpayer nothing.

REQUEST THAT COMMISSION BE MOTHBALLED

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): It matters not, Madam Speaker, from where the request comes. It matters totally how the Government of Canada accounts to its people. What we have is an expenditure of $5.3 million, for which there is no accountability of activity. If the pipeline is not scheduled to be built in the foreseeable future, I ask the Minister again why he does not set this project aside until such time as he can get a commitment that the pipeline is, in fact, imminent and will be built in the near future, and then he can go ahead with activities. What activities are there today that cannot be done by the Commission that can be set up again and done tomorrow when the pipeline is being constructed?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): In my opinion, the Commission's role consists in maintaining the relations that are necessary to keep this project alive, until such time as it will be possible to proceed, and if the Hon. Member does not understand, I will say it again in French. The expenses incurred on this project are not paid by the Government but by the industry, which asked to have this program maintained, and it is the industry that is providing the Government with the necessary funding to pay the salaries to which the Hon. Member is referring.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

REQUEST THAT COMMITTEE HEARINGS BE HELD IN VARIOUS CENTRES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. He is aware that at this time of the year the majority of the farmers who would be most affected by the proposed Crowsnest Pass freight rate changes would be unable to attend committee hearings, either in Ottawa or, for that matter, in most of the other major centres across the country. Is the Minister prepared to assure them now, through the House of Commons, that he will do all in his power to guarantee that if, as, and when the Bill goes to committee, the committee hearings will be held at a time when the farmers themselves will be able to attend the hearings and in centres accessible to the majority of farmers?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I understand the Magna Carta of committees is that they decide on their own agenda. I would not dare introduce myself into their decision-making process.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I wanted to know on behalf of those people who are concerned if that answer would be forthcoming.

Is it the hope of the Minister and will the Minister express his opinion here in the House of Commons on whether he believes it is important that the farmers who are to be affected by the proposed changes should be given every opportunity to appear at the hearings? And in order to achieve that end would it be the wish of the Minister that the committee, once seized of the Bill, should travel through western Canada at such a time and to such places as to guarantee that the farmers who will have to pay the loses will be given every opportunity to appear and have their views heard, recognizing that August 1 will have passed and the Bill would not necessarily, therefore, go into effect until next year?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, if my hon. friend insists on having my own views, I would have thought, first, that there would be a happy medium between listening to 140,000 people and listening to some. Second, I would have thought that the leaders of western farm organizations and others are representative of the western farmers. Many of them are elected, and many of them elected more often than Members of Parliament. I would have thought that their views would have been representative of the views of the farmers in the West.

Mr. Deans: You are not letting the farmers be heard?

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

REPORTED STATEMENT BY CANADIAN ADMIRAL

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday Admiral Falls, Chairman of NATO's military committee, said:

> If arms control talks do not work, then it might become necessary to act unilaterally to reduce, especially battlefield nuclear weapons, because we have more than we need ... If we did that, I think we would find that we could demonstrate to the Soviets that both sides could stop the proliferation of nuclear arms.

Although Admiral Falls is under the authority of NATO, his salary is paid by the Canadian Department of National Defence. Bearing this in mind, would the Minister tell the House if Admiral Falls' statement reflects Canadian Government policy?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I have not read the precise words uttered by Admiral Falls, but I do know that currently the requirements of the NATO defence forces are under review, and it may be that type of activity to which Admiral Falls is referring. There have been comments from time to time, as the Hon. Member knows, that arouse some debate upon the use of battlefield nuclear weapons. It is not surprising that Admiral Falls would refer to a subject of this kind and also to the possibility of reducing nuclear weapons. As the former Minister of National Defence well knows, at one time NATO did reduce its nuclear weapons in Europe by about 1,000.

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs seems to have escaped the wording that it was a unilateral disarmament of which Admiral Falls was speaking.

REMOVAL OF UNITED STATES NUCLEAR WARHEADS FROM EUROPE

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, with respect to the 1,000 nuclear warheads which the United States removed from Europe, and bearing in mind that was done over a four-year period without any reciprocal motion at all by the Warsaw Pact countries, does the Secretary of State for External Affairs believe that there is any possibility that a continuation of this unilateral disarmament will have any other effect than it has so far?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows at present there is a negotiation under way at Geneva at which certainly the NATO Alliance, through the United States, is seeking a reduction in armaments. We are always working in the direction not of a unilateral disarmament but in the direction of balanced and verifiable disarmament at lower levels of armaments. That is the policy of NATO. That policy was recently restated at the meeting of NATO Foreign Ministers at which we, once again, restated the intention of the Alliance to undertake deployment of weapons in Europe unless there were concrete results in negotiations now taking place at Geneva. That is the policy of NATO which I repeat for the Hon. Member.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

MACBRIDE COMMISSION REPORT

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He will know that UNESCO, through the United Nations, is promoting what is called the MacBride Commission Report, or the new International Information Order. What is the position of Canada in relation to that MacBride Commission Report?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am familiar with the author and the nature of that report. The question of information dissemination has been under debate at the United Nations. There have been differences of opinion as to how that is best resolved. If the Hon. Member has some specific items with respect to what he describes as a New Information Order, I would be glad to get the details for him.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, the Minister will know that Mr. Séan MacBride about five years ago was awarded the Lenin Peace Prize. But, more important, the whole thrust of the report is to restrict a flow of information from each of the countries and make that flow of information subject to the wishes of each particular government. Is it the position of Canada to support that kind of policy, or is the Canadian Government going to oppose it?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member should be in no doubt about the over-all policy of the Government of Canada with respect to the flow of information and the flow of ideas and people. We are presently undertaking in concert with other countries, very important negotiations in Madrid at the Conference on Security and Co-Operation in Europe. One of the objectives of Canada and other western countries is to ensure a greater flow of ideas and a greater flow of information. We are taking a stand, for example, against eastern European states, particularly the Soviet Union on its practice of jamming radio broadcasts, which is one of the ways of stopping the flow of information.

PUBLIC SERVICE

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE ADVISER

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It concerns job changes and salary changes. Is Mr. Jack Smith, special adviser to Micky Cohen in the Department of Finance, the same Jack Smith who was a special adviser in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I shall most certainly make enquiries and check on what the Hon. Member has just said.

ADVISER'S SALARY

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, when the Minister makes his inquiry—and I am sure he will check into it this afternoon—would he please find out what this man is doing in the Department of Finance and why he is receiving $92,000 plus?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): It will be a pleasure to check that as well, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions, with the exception of one, which were presented by Hon. Members on Monday, June 20, 1983, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form. One petition presented by the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) does not meet the requirements.

Madam Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that an objection signed by the Hon. Members for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier), Stormont-Dundas (Mr. Lumley), Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Masters), London West (Mr. Burghardt), Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins), London East (Mr. Turner), York East (Mr. Collenette), Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Chénier), Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and Essex-Kent (Mr. Daudlin) has been filed with me pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, Chapter E-2, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, to the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Ontario.

If the House agrees, I would suggest we follow past practice and print the text of the objection as an appendix to this day's Votes and Proceedings.

Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. COLLENETTE—STATEMENT OF MR. STEWART PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order or a question of privilege; perhaps Your Honour could determine which it is. Earlier today in the deliberations under Standing Order 21, the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) used the Royal Family in connection with a partisan statement which he was making. This certainly runs contrary to the rules, practices and traditions of the House.

While the Hon. Member has every right to make partisan statements, I submit he has no right to use the Royal Family to influence debate. I refer to Citation 316 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which reads:

> Besides the prohibitions contained in S.O. 35, it has been sanctioned by usage that a Member, while speaking, must not:—
> (g) use the Sovereign's name for the purpose of influencing a debate;

Also I refer to page 426 of Erskine May's Nineteenth Edition where the author goes somewhat further by indicating:

> The irregular use of the Queen's name to influence a decision of the House is unconstitutional in principle and inconsistent with the independence of Parliament. Where the Crown has a distinct interest in a measure, there is an authorized mode of communicating Her Majesty's recommendation or consent, through one of her Ministers . . . ; but Her Majesty cannot be supposed to have a private opinion, apart from that of her responsible advisers; and any attempt to use her name in debate to influence the judgment of Parliament would be immediately checked and censured . . . This rule extends also to other members of the Royal Family.

I am aware that there was a lot of noise in the House at that particular time, but I submit the Hon. Member created disorder or breached the privileges of the House by that usage, and the record will officially show this. I hope, Madam Speaker, you would ask the Hon. Member for Simcoe South for an apology because his statement was certainly an affront to the Royal Family and an affront to the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member might have a point. I would want to look at the "blues". I am wondering whether the reporter was able to hear what the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) was saying. It was absolutely impossible for the Chair to hear what he was saying. I will look at the "blues" and take the Hon. Member's point into consideration.

MR. GAUTHIER—INTENSITY OF LIGHTING IN CHAMBER

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, on a point of order.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, because of a power failure in downtown Ottawa, the lights in the House of Commons have dimmed considerably today. The drop in light intensity does not seem to have had a very negative impact on the telecasting of the proceedings. Hon. Members will probably have noticed that comfort levels in the House were better than usual, at least as far as the glare is concerned. Madam Speaker, I wonder whether you could check with the television network and find out whether the televised picture was acceptable, and if so, whether you could take steps to have conditions in the House corrected or improved to make our environment a more pleasant one to work in.

Madam Speaker: I must say to the Hon. Member that I do not have the impression that the usual telecasting was possible. In any case, the proceedings were not being televised live, because the cable companies were unable to function this afternoon. However, we do have a video tape of this afternoon's sitting, which will be broadcast this evening, and we will then be able to see what the picture quality is like. I do think the bright lights and the heat they produce are most uncomfortable and that is too much to ask Members to work daily under such conditions. I realize that the technicians want to give the television audience the kind of picture they expect from studio productions, but I am looking into the matter, and I have talked to an expert who is supposed to come tomorrow, I believe, and look at the lighting in the House, so he can advise us on how to get a decent picture that will be satisfactory to the television audience. I should add that this will affect the backbenchers, unfortunately, since it was necessary to increase the brightness of our lighting because the backbenchers are hidden by the galleries which cast a shadow on their faces, which is why we needed more lighting. If the backbenchers are prepared to make some concessions for the benefit of their colleagues, perhaps we will be able to improve comfort levels in the House. As I said before, these lights are very uncomfortable for people who have to work every day in the same room.

MR. HNATYSHYN—NHL FRANCHISE FOR SASKATCHEWAN

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition containing approximately 5,000 signatures which were collected by the Spirit of Saskatchewan Committee at Diefenbaker Park, Saskatoon, on Sunday, June 19, 1983, during the "Day in the Park" celebration sponsored by Saskatoon radio station CKOM.

This petition calls upon Parliament to support an application for a Saskatchewan franchise in the National Hockey League.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: How did that happen?

Madam Speaker: Would the Hon. Member please resume his seat. I could accept his saying that he was sorry for having broken the rule, because I definitely saw the Hon. Member push the petition so that it would roll across the floor.

• (1510)

MR. PENNER—CNR STAFF REDUCTIONS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Madam Speaker, I have a petition to present to Parliament, signed by 120 residents of the Northern Ontario towns of Mattice, Hornepayne, Nakina, Geraldton, Hearst, Cochrane, Capreol and Hanmer. The Petition refers to the massive lay-offs in the Canadian National Railways system, thousands of jobs being lost due to operational, organizational and technological changes, so much so that essential services in isolated areas are being reduced or discontinued. The petitioners' request is simply that Parliament instruct the CN that any further staff reduction should be by natural attrition only.

MS. McDONALD—BROADCASTING REGULATIONS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I have a petition from constituents in the riding of Hillsborough in the Province of Prince Edward Island—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. We have had this discussion about Members rising in their place; the Standing Orders state definitely that they should be uncovered. I have to ask the Member for the time when she is reading her petition to remove her hat. The Speaker does not wear a hat in the House. I guess that is the signal to all other Members that they should not wear hats. I do not think the Hon. Member will be in discomfort because the lights are not very glaring; we have minimum lighting today. At any rate, for the few minutes it will take to read the petition, and I remind the Hon. Member it should not be long, I think the Hon. Member can manage without her hat.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, I would ask for unanimous consent to be able to—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Would the Hon. Member resume her seat. The rule states that, upon rising, an Hon. Member should be uncovered. I would ask the Hon. Member to remove her hat. This is a very simple rule. Thank you very much.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, we had a discussion about this last night. Two Members denied unanimous consent. One of them subsequently apologized and said there would be no such difficulty in the future. I have reason to believe that people will be reasonable at this point today and grant unanimous consent for such a—

Madam Speaker: Order. What is the Hon. Member's point? Is it to insist on wearing a hat in the House of Commons or is it that she needs to protect her eyes from the glare? There is no glare today. The lighting system has broken down. We are on our support system. There is minimum lighting in the House today, so I do not think the Hon. Member needs a hat.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, it may be all right for you—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Ms. McDonald: —but even minimum lighting—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Ms. McDonald: The Chair noted it is considerably more difficult—

Madam Speaker: Order. I know the Hon. Member is a relatively new Member, but she should read the rules. If she reads the rules carefully, she will know that it is not possible nor proper to talk back to the Speaker in this way. When the Speaker is asking for something that is included in the rules, the Speaker is only obeying the House in a sense because the rules are made by each and every individual Member. The Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood is a Member of this House. These are her rules, they are not mine. I am simply applying them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. McDonald: The petition is from constituents in the riding of Hillsborough in Prince Edward Island. The Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission television broadcasting regulations do not give women the same protection against abusive comments or pictorial representations as for racial and religious groups; that the Communications Minister has been willing to empower the CRTC to regulate broadcasting to ensure Canadian content—

Madam Speaker: Order. I am sorry, but I seem to have to call the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood to order several times today. Yesterday I indicated to the Hon. Member that when presenting petitions, what is allowed is to read out the title of the petition, and that a Member should not read any argumentation that is made with regard to that petition. Therefore I would ask the Hon. Member to be very short, as I would ask any Hon. Member—

An Hon. Member: What about the other one?

Madam Speaker: It was very short. I would ask the Hon. Member, therefore, to be short and just give the House the title of the petition, which she has done already. Will she now proceed to the prayer?

Ms. McDonald: I was summarizing in view of your advice of yesterday. I was summarizing and was near the end of my summary of the petition.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. There is no such thing as summarizing. The title, the prayer; that's it.

Mr. Rossi: No wonder you are NDP; you are stubborn.

Ms. McDonald: Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to demonstrate its opposition to the denigration of women by enacting an Act to amend the Broadcasting Act, as introduced by myself on March 8, 1983. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. ANGUISH—RETENTION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition this afternoon signed by farmers from the Macrorie area of Saskatchewan. The petition of the undersigned residents of the Province of Saskatchewan who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your Honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth that the undersigned have carefully considered the alternative plan presented by the New Democratic Party; that the Crow rate must be maintained; and that the railways of all Canada must be upgraded and developed into a modern and efficient transport system.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to adopt the provisions of the New Democratic Party alternate plan which will not change the Crowsnest Pass freight rate. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. YOUNG—SAFE DRINKING WATER

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I too have a petition which it is my duty and pleasure to present to the House. The petitioners from a number of residences in the Province of Ontario who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your Honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth that toxic chemicals are posing an increasing threat to the potable waters of this Province; that there is presently no legislation which will guarantee the safety and healthfulness of those waters; and that Canada's neighbour, the United States of America, has legislation entitled "The Safe Drinking Water Act, 1974".

Wherefore we, the undersigned, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact a safe drinking water act which will protect and enhance drinking water quality in all areas of Canada. It is signed by 66 Ontario residents.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION TO PROCEED TO ORDERS OF THE DAY

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne):

That this House now proceed to Orders of the Day.

Madam Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Madam Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Madam Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Madam Speaker: Call in the Members.

And the division bells having been rung:

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Order, please. From where I am, I cannot see what is written on the hats that are being worn by some Members of the New Democratic Party, but I would ask those Members to remove their hats. We spoke about hats earlier and I will not have a ruling made by the Speaker which was in perfect conformity with the rules of the House being mocked in this way.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Pinard), which was agreed to on the following division:

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pepin that Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be now read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport; and the motion of Mr. Lachance (p. 26521).

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to enter into debate on what may be the final stages of the second reading of a Bill which has proved very contentious and somewhat fractious, not only in western Canada but also in Parliament itself.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) has the floor.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, we have been debating this Bill now for some time. A good number of Hon. Members have spoken on it. They have spoken on it from a number of different points of view. The New Democratic Party keeps talking about the whole question of what it would do if only it could nationalize the CPR, which would make it somehow run better and more efficiently than the CNR, which is already nationalized. How that argument would ever work in a practical sense, of course, escapes the understanding of this House of Commons, as it escapes the understanding of most people in the country, which is reflected, of course, by the some 16 per cent or 17 per cent of the popular vote which the NDP now commands. Other people have criticized the legislation for various other reasons: farm groups for their own vested interest; the elevator companies for one reason or another.

However, it seems to me that this debate about equity. It is not about nationalization or any other aspect of what has taken place over a number of years. The debate on the changes to the Crow rate is a debate, I submit, Mr. Speaker, about equity. It is about equity between regions in this country.

We have seen the kind of nervousness which developed when Quebec itself got into the discussion of the Crowsnest Pass freight rate. We have seen the kind of nervousness which was reflected by the very substantial change in policy on behalf of the Liberal Government in its outlook and its presentation of the Bill which we are now debating. The equity question came up, certainly, as it pertains to farmers in various parts of the country.

However, more importantly, the whole question of equity is most paramount when you look at the question of farm commodities, being grain vis-à-vis the livestock sector and also the special crops sector in this country. Therein, Mr. Speaker, at least in my opinion, lies the greatest weakness in this legislation—this whole question of equity. The Bill as proposed clearly does not give the kind of equity which we hoped we would see when we set out some months ago now on this very long process of changing and updating the transportation rate so that it would reflect more the realities of Canada.

We moved along through the process, the first stage of which was generally known as the Gilson process. It was generally recognized that while the Gilson Report had a lot of faults admittedly, it did have equity, or at least it tried to address the question of equity with respect to livestock. How do you treat livestock, which is such an important component of western Canada and western Canadian life? How do you treat livestock in a manner which is fair and equitable to the grain segment of our society? The Gilson process, in my opinion one which is shared by some other Members of my Party, at least tried to address that problem in a realistic manner. Unfortunately, Bill C-155 does not address that question and I can vote against the legislation on that basis alone.

There are other things that concern Members, of course, but the fact remains that the livestock industry and to some extent the secondary processing industry have been left out of this legislation. They must have a part in the development of western Canada and the fact that they have been left out is causing great concern. Many important voices, and I am talking about the leaders of the farming groups, have voiced this concern since the Bill was presented. At present there is a desperate move by prairie farm groups to try to find a way to include the livestock industry in this legislation.

The Conservative Party, Mr. Speaker, has come up with a proposal now termed as freedom of choice, which would allow the producer to determine whether the federal Government payments will be made to himself or to the railway. That is an equitable approach. But the Government certainly has not given us any indication as to whether or not that will be adopted. The central and important question is that unless there are some changes to this legislation the livestock industry in western Canada is in danger of extinction over the coming year. That is a fact of life. Over the last number of years, Mr. Speaker, there has been a noticeable shift of the livestock industry from western Canada to eastern Canada, along with, to a large extent, the packing industry. With the packing industry have gone jobs. Of course, we must keep in mind that it does not take too many people to raise and feed cattle for market, but it takes a lot of people to operate the industry as a whole. That shift of jobs out of western Canada will continue under this legislation. That is why the livestock industry is in the forefront of all the people who want a change, and it is also the reason why the livestock industry is so opposed to this particular piece of legislation.

This Bill does not promote equity. It does not recognize that the West has more to offer than just growing grain. It has livestock, special crops and the processing involved. All that will be lost if this Bill is allowed to pass in its present form. We in this Party have put forward what I consider to be probably one of the most innovative amendments I have seen in the House of Commons in a long time. It is the key to unlocking the door to equity in western Canada. It must go through. If it is not passed, certainly our Party must present it in the next election campaign and hopefully introduce it into legislation in 1984-85.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, while I am pleased to speak on this important issue, I wish I had half an hour to address my concerns over this legislation instead of just ten minutes. However, at the outset I do want to say that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has been here during this debate, unlike the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) who has spent virtually zero time here. It is not his Bill, but he ought to be concerned about it.

We are dealing today with a Bill of great importance not only to western Canada but to Canada as a whole. It is a myth to keep talking in this country about East and West, and we have to stop doing so. The fact of the matter is that when we talk about the enhancement of secondary industry in western Canada, that means a tremendous potential growth in eastern Canada. When a westerner buys a new refrigerator or another car or a new suit of clothes, generally speaking they are manufactured in central Canada. We should remember this.

For those people, Mr. Speaker, who doubt that there should be a Crow rate at all, I would point out that this country has a transportation policy based on the theory of competition. That theory works very well, Sir, in those parts of Canada where in fact you have competition. However, when you get into the landlocked regions of the country, there is no competition. The fact that we can ship iron and steel products from Toronto to Vancouver and back to Calgary cheaper than we can ship them directly to Calgary underscores why some form of special rate is needed on the Prairies. If we had in the Prairies a Port of Halifax or a Port of Vancouver, if we had a St. Lawrence River or a Great Lakes water system, then the debate in this House would not be about the Crow rate but about some other form of equitable freight rate without any kind of subsidy at all. What we are dealing with, as the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) said, is the principle of equity in transportation throughout the country.

I want to address to the Minister now, Mr. Speaker, some concerns that we have concerning ability to pay. I have underlined the Minister's own words in some notes I have here concerning his desire for the enhancement of secondary industry on the Prairies and the fact that the Bill as presently written has precisely the opposite effect.

Mr. Pepin: It does not do the opposite; it does not do as much.

Mr. Malone: It is difficult to believe that a figure of 31 million tonnes can be in place in this Bill when in fact the world has a need for a far greater amount of food. Now when four-fifths of the world suffers from malnutrition it is the wrong time to put a cap on the incentive to grow grain. In addition, Mr. Speaker, we need to look at the question of freedom of choice. That would allow the user of the railway system to put the money in his wallet, and the only way for the railway to get that money is to provide the service. If the rancher or the farmer has the option, he will choose to use the railways if they are offering the service. If not, he will truck his product to the local feed lots flour mills, or he will use other methods of transportation. If these alternatives are not open to the railway, then what we would have is the NDP plan of a guaranteed income. While that may have some ring for many in the country, this would be a guaranteed income for CN and CP rail, an annual income guaranteed to the railway companies irrespective of what other modes of transportation are there for the competition.

• (1710)

Now that I believe I have the Minister's attention, I want to address my concern relating to the point of the 10 per cent safety net. He and I will disagree on the 10 per cent number. I would argue that it should be closer to 8 per cent. However, the other part which is very important, to set that question aside for the moment, is that whatever the percentage, it simply means that the railway companies would know in advance that they would then have the opportunity to enhance development up to 10 per cent, to add to the cost of their shipping every year by 10 per cent, knowing full well that the farmers would pay the 10 per cent. There would therefore be no market discipline on the railway companies.

I want to make a personal suggestion to the Minister, and I will check with my caucus later. Instead of having the farmers pay 8 per cent or 10 per cent before the Government pays everything, it should be changed to having 16 per cent paid, with the Government then picking up everything after that. However, on the first 16 per cent, the producers and the railways would share the cost fifty-fifty. If we simply left it so that the farmer paid all of the first 10 per cent, then it is obvious that the railway companies would automatically know year after year that they could add on 10 per cent because it would be charged through to the farmers.

I simply say that if that kind of system is put in place, it will be used. I submit to the Minister that he should give due consideration to a formula where the percentage is higher, but where there is cost sharing between the farmers and the railways of the country, because that would then bring about some market discipline. The railways would then have to give some consideration to bringing about efficiency on any extra costing.

The other reason that I believe we must consider the full question of the freedom of choice is that that is the only method by which we will ensure the enhancement of secondary industries on the Prairies. The Minister himself addressed that principle well on May 12, 1983. His turnabout, though, destroys the opportunity for the enhancement of industries on the Prairies by making it all paid to the railways.

The only way we can gain the advantage of Crow is if we export all the products. If we export all the raw products, then there is no manufacturing. We of prairie Canada know that that is not an acceptable resolution.

In 1976, 500 jobs were lost in Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, when Burns' meatpacking plant closed down. In 1978, another 120 jobs were lost when Canadian Dressed Meats in Medicine Hat closed down. In 1979, we lost another 700 jobs when Burns' in Edmonton closed down. In 1979, we lost another 550 jobs when Swift's, in Winnipeg, closed down. In 1974, we lost an additional 200 jobs when Burns' in Regina closed down.

Therefore, in conclusion, I simply want to say that we of prairie Canada never want to return to the 1930s, when our exports were raw products and sons and daughters. One of the great phenomena of the last few years in prairie Canada was the rash of homecomings. I personally experienced, as I went to these homecomings, seeing all those license plates from Ontario, British Columbia, California, Colorado and Oklahoma. These were homecomings of the people of three or four decades ago who lived in prairie Canada when our exports consisted of raw products as well as our sons and daughters. However, we needed to have these secondary industries. As the West develops and enhances, so does central Canada. We need to have a policy—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Malone: —that will allow us the freedom of choice to use the kind of transportation that has existed and that will be good for all of Canada—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his allotted time has expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall)—

Canadian National Railways—Acquisition of Cast shipping group—Government approval. (b) Possibility of freight rate war on Atlantic shipping routes; The Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain)—Forestry—Request for extension of committee's terms of reference. (b) Request for early referral to committee; The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—National Revenue—Seizure of children's theatre company funds. (b) Effect on performing arts groups.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, given the fact that this morning the Standing Committee on Transport met in camera with the President of the Canadian National Railways, and we had an exposition of the matter lasting a good three and one half hours, and because of the uncertainty as to what might happen even later today or the next day or so, it might be appropriate for me to ask to be excused or to withdraw from this position on the Late Show.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there agreement that the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East shall withdraw the item which has been submitted for the adjournment debate?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed and so ordered.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pepin that Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is customary in the House that the Speaker asks if there is unanimous consent for an Hon. Member to continue his remarks. I think that the Hon. Member was just completing his remarks at a very important point he was making, and I think that—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member had exceeded his time. He had been given ample warning by the Chair. The Hon. Member had noted the Chair's warning and had continued his remarks. With all due respect to the Hon. Member, if he had observed the courtesy to the Chair, the Chair would have extended the same courtesy to him.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, as my colleague says, it is not a pleasure nor a particular privilege but, rather, a solemn duty once again to participate in the debate which centers around the so-called Crow controversy. There is hardly anything in my experience in Parliament, which is now that of close to 11 years, which has so aroused the sensitivities and emotions of so many Canadians and, indeed, on both sides of the issue.

The Liberal Government has done its homework on this particular issue. It has called in its so-called IOUs. It has sensitized the emotions and the attention of the lumber industry in western Canada, for instance, and the mining sector, telling them that unless they support the Government on these changes to the Crow, it will not be able to live up to the commitments that it has made in terms of the upgrading of our transportation infrastructure in western Canada. Indeed, the message was even more subtle. They are being told that if they do not get out of their closet and support the Government publicly on these matters, there may no longer be any co-operation from the federal Government in terms of grants and all of the other benefits which industry, particularly large industry, has become so accustomed to and comfortable with over the last decade.

Transportation in a country like ours, particularly rail transport, is a key element in determining our socioeconomic condition and the well being of our country. It is a very important element in bringing about an industrial strategy. I can understand the legitimate and serious concerns of other sectors of the economy, such as the wood converting industries and the mining industry because they, more than anyone else, have suffered very dramatically from a lack of productivity which has rendered our industrial strength in world markets rather vulnerable. It is not the fact that our workers are producing less but that we have paid too little attention to modernizing our plants and transportation infrastructure to get our products to market. We have lived through a period of deliberate neglect in these important areas. We have heard all kinds of promises and commitments of billions of dollars toward the upgrading of our rail transportation facilities in the West, but of course nothing has happened.

As I have said, transportation is and always will be the key element in any industrial strategy, particularly in a country which has a rich geography and where some of the key industrial areas are so far removed from the market.

It means more than that to farmers in the agricultural sectors. Rail subsidies that were designed to help farmers maintain a stable farm economy in our area have an important social content to them. Indeed, the rail subsidies that were placed to help western farmers are designed to meet some of these important social objectives both domestically and internationally. These reflect our official public policy to maintain a cheap food price policy. That is the important social component for which the Crow rate was in place and for which some of these rail subsidies have been made, besides providing an incentive for farmers to go west to begin to develop the Prairies.

If farmers were permitted to charge prices for what they produce that were comparable with other industrial commodities such as lumber and minerals that we sell abroad, food prices in this country would have to at least triple. There is no question that if a farmer were permitted to receive a decent return on his investment and labour, food prices would have to triple. No one would be under any illusion as to what this would mean to our social and economic wellbeing in Canada. Obviously we could not pay the bill and it would be necessary to devise other means to subsidize those who would have to buy this expensive food.

Unfortunately, we are also exporting our cheap food policy. We are selling our agricultural products, particularly those for which the Crow rate is most important, our grain and cereal crops, to other countries at far below any reasonable cost of production. For instance, we are selling our wheat to the European Economic Community for almost 50 per cent less than what it is resold for within the EEC. In turn, the money that is earned by this exchange is used to subsidize European farmers, who have developed their own capacity to the point where they are now competing with us for our share in the world market. This is all as a result of the Government's decision to export our cheap food policy.

The farmer is charged with certain social obligations to feed the Third World. This is evident from the discussions about the food bank. If we were to sell lumber under a similar policy to that under which grain is sold, very soon the country to which we would be selling this lumber below the cost of production would run to GATT and remind us of some of the other treaty obligations we have under the OECD arrangement. We would be reminded that we cannot sell below the cost of production and subsidize the production of important industrial commodities. However, when you sell food, you can give it away to anyone you wish and no one complains. The reason for that is that other countries have not been as innovative as we have in finding ways to stabilize the farm economy and farm industry. It does not make sense.

Crow benefits were designed to support farmers. Instead, the subsidies that are inherent in the statute Crow rate are not going to the farmers or the railways. The subsidies are going to our customers. It is the Europeans, the Japanese and everyone else to whom we sell our grain that we are subsidizing.

I am a businessman in another sector although I still have my farm back home. As a businessman, I find it totally incomprehensible that we should sell far below the cost of production. In his cost of production I take into consideration a reasonable return on the farmers' investment and labour and the cost of transportation to bring the product to market. That is all part of the cost of production. I do not understand the logic behind selling this most important of our industrial commodities not only to the Third World countries that cannot afford to pay a higher price for them but to our partners in the OECD industrial world. Furthermore, we are selling our grain for half its worth to the Soviet Union so it can turn around and resell it within the East Block sphere of influence and use the credits we have given it as a gift to build up its strategic capacity. These are some matters which the Government has totally ignored and which need to be considered before we can go about changing the Crow rate.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to return to the point when the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) asked that I be given extended time. You said that it had already been signalled. What I am noticing is that it really is difficult for Members to know what the signal is. I am cognizant of the fact that often that signal is given at the eight minute mark. As a result of this practice, some of our new Members end up being cut short.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member, he is not making a point of order. If he wishes to have a private conversation with the Chair, the Chair would be more than pleased to discuss it with him.

However, the Hon. Member did go beyond his ten minutes. The Chair did its very best to communicate that fact to the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member just kept on speaking. The Chair rose and said that the Hon. Member's time expired, and the Hon. Member kept speaking. The Chair did its very best to interrupt.

There is a normal courtesy that is expected from Hon. Members with regard to the Chair. The Chair assures Hon. Members that it is a pleasure to reciprocate, but it must be a two-way street.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The normal courtesy is that the Speaker ask the House for unanimous consent for the Member to continue his remarks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Speaker rose to his feet and said that the Hon. Member's time had expired, and the Hon. Member kept speaking. The Hon. Member did not yield to the Speaker but stayed on his feet. I would suggest to Hon. Members that that is not the way in which they should choose to conduct themselves in the House.

Mr. Malone: First, Mr. Speaker, I would not in any way ever ignore you. I just never noticed you since I was speaking to the Minister. That is where I was addressing my comments.

I am not asking to speak now but simply saying, on another point of order, that I think it is very important that we in the House have some idea as to what gripping your chair and leaning forward means when that happens at the eight minute mark. We do not know when we are supposed to sit down. That time is not the same for each speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect, the Chair does not do that. The present incumbent has never done that at the eight minute mark. The suggestion that that is what the Chair practices is not fair.

I suggest that if the Hon. Member wishes to have a conversation privately, the preent occupant of the chair would be pleased to do so. In the meantime, the Chair requests Hon. Members of the House to co-operate. Is the House ready for the question?

• (1730)

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg St.-James.

[Translation]

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, the House is not ready for the question. I would like to contribute a few comments to this debate, and I shall try to do so in French, because there are people in Western Canada who speak French, and they should also be able to listen to these proceedings in their own language.

The point or points I would like to raise here are as follows: Why is this debate so important and why does our Party want to continue this debate on the Crow rate? Mr. Speaker, the question before the House is the following: Who is going to pay for the changes the Government wants to introduce in the House? There are only two groups that can pay for these changes. First, the CPR, the railways, and second, the farmers, since these changes must be paid for by someone. The question is who?

We get the impression on this side of the House that the Government wants western farmers to pay for the changes it is proposing. Is that fair, Mr. Speaker?

Both the CPR and the farmers have received subsidies from the people of Canada and the Government. Subsidies to the CPR will continue. There is no proposal before the House to take away from the CPR the subsidies it has received to build railroads in this country. But why is the Government proposing to take subsidies away from farmers? Mr. Speaker, I do not understand why the Government wants to make farmers pay more for grain transport in this country when it is seeing the results of these changes and wants to give more money to the CPR. Why, Mr. Speaker?

I have the impression that the Government is listening to the CPR bosses, to the detriment of our farmers.

We want to continue the debate in the House because we want to convince the Government it should listen to western farmers. The Government must realize that this legislation is going to cost farmers a lot. For instance, some farmers in the West have very modest incomes, as low as $9,000 or $12,000. They cannot afford a drastic increase in the cost of grain transport.

The Government wants to convince Canadians that the Crow rate has to be changed in order to upgrade the railroads.

Mr. Speaker, that is not a good reason and it is not the truth. If there is a good reason to invest in the railroads, those investments will pay for themselves. That is what investments are supposed to do, Mr. Speaker. An investment will pay for itself, and changing the Crow rate is just an excuse for the Government. The Government wants to convince Canadians that it has to change the Crow rate in order to have investments in the railroads. That is unnecessary, Mr. Speaker, because in this country, we need a better transportation system, and those investments are necessary, regardless of any changes in the Crow rate.

Mr. Speaker, there are other means of transportation, where people may be paying a certain price in one area and another price in another area. For instance, in our big cities, we have a public transit system, we have buses, and while it costs more to carry a passenger who has a long way to go, everyone using public transit pays the same rate, regardless of the distance covered. We can reason that it costs less to run a bus over a short distance than over a long distance, but we are still charging all passengers using urban public transit the same price.

Mr. Speaker, I think we can have one rate for grain transport and another rate for other products. We have to subsidize farmers in our country because farmers in other countries are subsidized, and if ours are going to compete with farmers in other countries, they need those subsidies. In those countries . . . Here, subsidies have traditionally been for transport costs because our grain growers are located at a great distance from their markets.

Mr. Speaker, we in this Party believe that it is possible to maintain subsidies to farmers while at the same time increasing investment in the railroads. We must do both, and it is not fair to tell Canadians that we have to change the Crow rate to get any investment in the railroads.

Mr. Speaker, the Government has swallowed the reasons given by the CPR. The CPR wants us to change the Crow rate at a time when it is important to our farmers that the rate stays where it is today.

• (1740)

[English]

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on an issue which is most important to my constituents and to myself as a farmer. I have spent a good deal of my life trying to raise grain, and have experienced some of the difficulties of farming, as well as being a Member of Parliament for almost 11 years. Time and time again I experience the difficulty in the House that every time we have been faced with an important issue to western Canada in the last couple of years we have been speaking under one form of closure or another. Therefore, it has been very difficult to express in a proper manner the issues which are important to those of us from western Canada who are affected not only personally but whose constituents are affected as well. Neither the Minister nor Liberal Members of Parliament are here to listen to debate under a closure motion. The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) mentioned that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has spent some time listening to this debate, but basically we have to speak to all those Members because the Bill has been changed many times from its inception until it was presented in the House.

If they had to face farmers in Wetaskiwin at a Crow rate meeting, they would realize that their frustrations are abundantly clear. They are not certain what the Government is proposing and they are not certain about their future. At this time they are facing very difficult cost problems versus the price they receive for their product. When they look at what is before the House, they find that they may be faced with substantial added-on transportation costs in the near future. It does no good for grain experts to say that the price of grain will increase to $10 tor $12 per bushel in the next five years. That is not satisfactory, because such statistics have been quoted to farmers in the past and, as we know, the price of grain today is less than it was in the 1970s and inflation has continued at a rapid pace during that time.

In the past, western farmers knew for certain that the cost of transportation for export grain would not change. All their other costs have increased, some slowly and some very rapidly. Time and time again they were faced with interferences. Clearly it is to the advantage of farmers to know one very critical cost, the cost of transportation. It has to take a reasonably predictable form. We do not see that in the Bill before us today. That is why Member after Member has risen to address the problem.

Actually there are a number of problems, such as variable rates, who pays the inflation factor, whether or not some grains are included, the 31 million tonne cap and the 10 per cent safety net which may not allow farmers in western Canada to produce barley or oats because the cost of transportation in five years will be so significant that if the price does not double they will not be able to produce those commodities.

Those questions should be answered. This is why farmers are asking us to participate in the debate and to deal with the problems before the Bill passes quickly into the other stages and suddenly becomes law. As Members of Parliament we must address the very questions which our constituents are asking. They do not understand the niceties of this place as we do. For years farmers have depended upon the hills and valleys of agricultural production. Some years are good ones—nature has been good, prices are good and reasonable profits result. In other years, as was the case in the last number of years, in most instances farmers have not even received their cost of production. If we allow the railways to set the price at which to move grain in April of each year, we may find that they will take advantage of the very fact that things are going well. We may find that the costs are up, but if things are not going well, perhaps the price will remain the same.

The point I am trying to make is the same as the one many farmers in western Canada are trying to make. We do not know enough about the costs of the railways which they attribute to the transportation of grain. We do not know whether or not they are correct.

I would like to return to the MacPherson Royal Commission of some time ago. At that time this problem was being addressed and the commissioners caused three studies to be made. One was done by the railroads, which showed that they were losing money moving grain. I believe that was back in the late 1950s or early 1960s; I am not sure of the date. Then another study was conducted by farm groups in western Canada who hired experts. That study showed that the railroads were making a profit moving grain. Then the Government commissioned a report, which report showed that the railroads were breaking even on the movement of grain. There we have it, the whole gamut of what railways were being charged or were charging for moving grain. The Royal Commission was unsure whether they were making a profit. This caused the Commission a great deal of difficulty when it ruled on that area.

Recently we had the Hall Commission. It concerned rail line abandonment. Justice Emmett Hall made some recommendations with regard to the Crow. As well, he recommended that the lines on which the railways indicated that they were not making money should be turned over to the prairie rail authority and be operated by groups in western Canada until it could be shown that they were making a profit.

Mr. Mazankowski: They recommended off-line elevators too.

Mr. Schellenberger: Yes, that is correct. I know that my tractor put on the rails could pull 15 or 20 cars down the line nicely and it would not be at a very high cost. Options are available in western Canada. This is not necessarily the only one. That recommendation came some seven or eight years ago. Mr. Justice Hall recommended keeping the Crow and paying livestock farmers the distortions involved. I believe if we talked to him today about that recommendation he would say that there was no way to anticipate the inflationary costs of the 1970s, and I am not so sure he would make the same recommendation.

Now I would like to turn to the Snavely Commission. Supposedly Mr. Snavely conducted an impartial study. I would like to quote some of his comments during a recent interview. He stated:

> I argue that you could give them less but they wouldn't have responded in the same way.

He was referring to the railways. He continued:

> They would have been back at the public trough to get money to do what they had to do in the West.

Then he referred to the numbers in the Bill by saying:

> These numbers are sufficient that the railways have no justification for coming back.

We are talking about public funds. We are talking about what the railways should and should not have. When we look in the Bill to see what guarantees the railways are giving to ensure that money from the investments will be put into transportation in the West, we have difficulty supporting the Bill. In committee the railways must give us some justification as to why the subsidy of $600 million is correct. I do not want to get into another argument with you, Mr. Speaker. I see my time is up in any event.

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few comments on Bill C-155, an Act to revise the Crowsnest statutory freight rates for prairie grains. Some question may arise as to why I would presume to speak on a Bill such as this. However, I have a very keen interest in what is taking place. I was born in the Province of Saskatchewan; I will not say how many years ago. My folks were some of the first homesteaders who moved in about 100 miles north of Regina. I missed by not too long being born in a sod shack. We lived there for a number of years and I learned what it is like to be raised on a farm.

My father was a great supporter of the United Grain Growers. I just learned recently that he served as secretary for a number of years. Therefore, I have some personal interest in what is taking place in the Prairie Provinces.

A little later in my life I had the privilege of walking a great many miles behind the harrow, driving a four-horse team and sitting on a gang plough, as well as taking part in the harvest operation. That was quite a long time ago. However, I believe farming is a very interesting, worth-while and satisfying activity.

It has been pointed out that while this Bill has a special application to western Canada, with its major changes in transportation policy it is of national concern and has national ramifications. The history of the Crow rate has been placed on the record by many Members speaking in the debate, so I am not going to yield to the temptation to restate it. The main point is that we have before us today proposals that adversely and substantially affect the whole economy of the western farm community. The proposals and provisions of this Bill undermine the economy and the social viability not only of the Prairie Provinces, but of the whole nation. Speaking on Friday May 13, as reported at page 25447 of Hansard, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) stated:

> In fact, this is the third major piece of legislation that has come before this Parliament, after the patriation of the Constitution and our national energy policy which was announced over the last few years and months.

This is supposed to be one of the great landmarks in this session. With regard to the Constitution Bill, when it was introduced there was a great deal of debate. Only after being radically changed did it go through and become the law of the country. I must say that it still leaves much to be desired and the consequences of that measure have yet to be understood.

The second disaster was the National Energy Program. I can say without fear of contradiction, at least in some areas, that it was a colossal disaster. The effects were felt right across the country. Oil rigs pulled out of the nation, thousands and thousands of jobs were lost, the whole economy was shaken and we still suffer the consequences of that program. The two major Bills which preceded this one do not give us too much to brag about. This Bill is another in a series of measures brought before the House by the Government which leave much to be desired.

There are several principles which the Progressive Conservative Party insists are necessary and important in the consideration of this measure. One is that grain producers must have a statutory freight rate which preserves the benefits of the Crow and must be protected from open-ended escalation. This Bill does not achieve that objective. Under the terms of this Bill, producers will be paying double the existing Crow rate by 1985-1986 and an additional $160 million will be taken out of the Prairie economy. They will pay five and one half times by 1991-92, which means that more than an additional $1 billion will disappear from western Canada. That is a very serious effect which this measure will have upon the Prairie economy.

Another principle is that producers should be guaranteed an efficient, cost-effective and reliable transportation system. With this Bill, there will be no railway performance guarantee for the first three years. Furthermore, under Clause 18, the grain transportation administrator has the power "to the extent that he considers it advisable to cease any activities" related to performance objective guarantees unless otherwise directed by the Minister.

I want to mention one more principle which must be recognized. The Government of Canada and the railways have a continuing obligation to provide a special low rate to assist producers competing with subsidized grain-export nations. It was put on the record today that subsidies in other countries are substantial. In the United States, subsidies account for about 33 per cent, 50 per cent in Australia, and other nations have various methods of subsidizing their product. In view of that, we must be competitive in international markets. Therefore, it is not only desirable but essential that the farming community have some guarantee and some assistance to meet the competition they face from countries with Government subsidy programs.

We propose that the railways should receive adequate and fair compensation for the movement of grain to provide the necessary capital and maintenance of plant and equipment. There is a false assumption or idea being sent abroad that unless the railways get a substantial contribution or subsidy, they will not be able to bring their rolling stock and trackage up to date, and, therefore, they will be placed at a disadvantage. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that there are other ways for the Government to ensure that the railways are taken care of without taking the money from the prairie grain farmers.

• (1800)

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the NDP has asked to have Bill C-155 divided because, as we have said many times, it includes three separate issues which should be treated as being separate and unrelated programs of Government policy. These three issues are first, the grain freight rate; second, the upgrading of the transportation system; and third, the Dominion coal lands which we believe should be turned over to the Province of British Columbia. We have also advocated a much more sound use of the $930 million item budgeted by the Government which we agree should be used to preserve and create jobs and to improve transportation systems, provided the Crow rate agreement is kept intact.

Let me deal first with the grain freight rate. The inseparable price of Canadian confederation is tariffs for the industries of central Canada and low cost transportation for Atlantic and western Canada. These, Mr. Speaker, as you well know, are the facts of Canadian history and geography which tie us together as a nation from west to east while recognizing the vastness of our country and the varying regional needs.

On June 16, I spoke in the House about the reasons why the Crowsnest freight rates must be maintained and I do not want to repeat myself in detail. We must keep the Crow to maintain the promise of Confederation and also to alleviate current costs of grain transportation to western farmers. Transportation costs should be shared by all Canadians just as costs of transportation and other systems are shared. Railways were more than fairly compensated for the Crow rate. The CPR has grown rich on land, mineral and forest rights given to it as part of the original agreement. However, we in this Party have said that if the railways can show definite proven losses on grain shipment, the taxpayers should assist with costs up to $380 million. But there must be no more giveaways.

On June 16, I referred also to the penalties which would occur in British Columbia if grain rates were increased by the Liberals and as advocated by the Tories. It would mean a 30 per cent cut in income for British Columbia farmers by the year 1992. That is something which many British Columbians do not realize. Also, Mr. Speaker, it would inevitably result in a diversion of grain through the United States on the new rails that the CP and CN are upgrading already. This of course would mean a loss of jobs, particularly for the shipping industry in British Columbia and for grain workers, longshoremen and many other tradespeople. It would also have an impact on British Columbia consumers who would have to pay five cents more for a loaf of bread.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I discovered by reading a book called "To Kill the Crow" by John Gallagher that the loss of income to British Columbians would be $3,553,000 according to Mr. Gallagher. British Columbians would suffer dramatically as would those on the Prairies and all Canadians.

The second issue that we felt should be dealt with quite separately is the whole question of the upgrading of rail transportation and the transportation system generally for the shipment of grain and coal and other products. This should be dealt with entirely separate from the Crow rate, Mr. Speaker. We have long advocated that improvements and modernization of the transportation systems are long overdue.

Some people have argued that we are against creating jobs and against transportation improvements. Those arguments are completely mythical, Mr. Speaker. We are strongly in favour of improvements. There must be improvement of rails and tunnels, and of course we would like to see a re-establishment of a modern boxcar manufacturing facility, particularly in British Columbia. The Modern Squamish Rail Car plant which employed over 300 people was done away with by the Social Credit and Liberal governments at a time when it was most needed. Of course, we would also see improved shipping facilities as an adjunct to this.

But we insist, Mr. Speaker, that no taxpayers' money be invested in the railway companies unless the people of Canada have equity in exchange. There must be no more giveaways to the Canadian Pacific Railway which has a history of exploiting them in order to escalate their own profits. As you know, Mr. Speaker, we have advocated an investment of $550 million to improve rail transportation and to create jobs.

The third issue is the releasing of Dominion Government coal lands and is another issue which I do not believe the people of British Columbia are fully aware of. Back in the 1880s, the people of British Columbia gave the CPR a large coal deposit which was put in reserve with the federal Government. The plan of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) will remove the price ceiling on this coal but it does not indicate who will own and benefit from the $450 million reserve. This resource belongs to the people of British Columbia and the federal Government should return it to provincial control. There has been no accountability by the Government on this question in debating this Bill.

I would like to refer again to the recently published book, "To Kill the Crow", by John Gallagher. The whole book is very relevant to this debate, and there are several excerpts which I believe are particularly relevant. I would first like to read a quote from Mr. Justice Emmett Hall:

> If once tampering with the statutory rate is accepted or condoned or is an item on the bargaining table, all will be lost. For once the subject is on the bargaining table, it will be only a matter of time until it is lost step by step. There is no position to take except to adhere through thick and thin that the Crow Rate is not bargainable.

This has been the position taken by this Party, the only Party to say that we must maintain the Crow through thick and thin. As was written on the hats we wore this afternoon, "Maintain the Crow, Pepin must go."

Well, what positions have the other Parties taken on this issue, Mr. Speaker? We know the position taken by the Liberals. As Mr. Gallagher said, "the activities and positions of the federal Liberals are well known". He presents considerable documentation to prove the giveaways that are involved, both the denial of promises to western farmers as well as the giveaways to the railways. Incidentally, I learned that stockholders of the CPR were richer by over $134 million the day the federal Government's determination to repudiate the Crowsnest Pass Agreement was announced.

What about Members of the Progressive Conservative Party? Where do they stand aside from their attack on the NDP which occurred today? They obviously attacked us because we are their key opposition and because they know that we are the only ones who have been continuously in support of the Crow rate and of transportation improvements. Half of the Members of the Conservative Party are for a modified version of the Crow rate because they happen to live in the West. Certainly they are not for it in the same way that we have been for it. Half of the Members are against it. I would like to know where this leaves western farmers, Mr. Speaker.

What about the eastern millionaire who is the new leader of the Progressive Conservative Party? We know that he has joined that other Quebec millionaire and that they take the same position on this Bill.

An Hon. Member: What is wrong with being successful?

Mrs. Mitchell: How will they know what the people of western Canada want, Mr. Speaker?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Mitchell: I can see by the reaction, Mr. Speaker, that we have again hit a Tory nerve. I will leave it to one of my colleagues to continue references from Mr. Gallagher's book—

Mr. Malone: That is a good idea.

• (1810)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but her time has expired.

Mr. Friesen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, has the Hon. Member overlooked the millionaire Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald)?

Mrs. Mitchell: Yes, I guess I have.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order. Is the House ready for the question? The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young).

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I rise again to speak on a Bill which is commonly referred to as the Bill to amend the Crowsnest Pass freight rates. I will come to the Tory hecklers in a moment, Mr. Speaker. The question which is being debated today is actually a motion to close debate on this particular measure before the House. The reason given by the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) who moved the motion yesterday, which is recorded at page 26521 of Hansard, is quite clear. The reason he gave the House for moving such a motion was that he felt there had been sufficient debate on this particular Bill. He suggested that the Opposition, particularly the New Democratic Party, was being obstructionist in terms of dealing with this particular piece of legislation.

Mr. Smith: Right.

Mr. Young: I hear my good friend, the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith) saying, "right". He is quite wrong, Mr. Speaker; dead wrong. What the New Democratic Members of Parliament were simply doing was exercising their responsibility toward Canadians and their constituents. They felt they had the right to present a grievance to Parliament through petitions. It was in fact the motions placed by the Government House Leader on at least four occasions which led to delays in terms of the debate which was being conducted in this House. These were not motions which were moved by Hon. Members of either the New Democratic Party or the Conservative Party.

The Table Research Branch, under the authority of the Clerk of the House of Commons, recently circulated a procedural paper entitled, "The Previous Question", which deals quite effectively, I believe, with what the Hon. Member for Rosemont did yesterday. In discussing The Previous Question under Standing Orders, the paper had this to say:

> The Previous Question is a debatable superseding motion which must be given the right of way when proposed during a debate. The wording of the Previous Question motion as set out in Standing Order 56 (1) is: "That this question be now put". Essentially, the Previous Question has two functions:
> (a) it is designed to limit debate since, until it is decided, it precludes all amendment to the main question—

Therefore, for Hon. Members on the Government side to even suggest that they were not trying to close off debate is laughable, to say the least, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to deal now with, at least my perception of what the Government is trying to do. That is, in essence, to hand Canadian Pacific Railway just another boodle of money, when it talks about changing the Crowsnest Pass freight rates. Because when one takes a look at the kind of boondoggle which Governments over the years have given to CPR, it rather boggles the mind. This is a company which has been living at the public trough since 1881.

If one takes a look at the subsidies and tax writeoffs this company has received over those years, one perhaps has a better understanding of this Government's relationship with CPR. In 1982 dollars, over the years, the CPR has been given billions of dollars of taxpayers' money in subsidies. When one looks at the number of companies which operate under Canadian Pacific investments, one sees that the list grows longer and greater and is something about which anyone in this House, and certainly Canadian taxpayers, must be rather concerned. The present value of Canadian Pacific, for example, is in the area of something like $2.9 billion. In 1981 alone, Canadian Pacific Limited owed something like $1.65 billion in deferred income tax, and that is according to its annual report. If that is adjusted to 1982 dollars, the present value of the deferred taxes alone which it owes the Canadian Government and the Canadian taxpayer is in the area of $1.83 billion.

Why all the haste? I came across some figures released by the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada which list the amount of political contributions, for example, given by Canadian Pacific companies to both the Conservative Party and the Liberal Party between 1978 and 1980. For example, the total 1978-80 political contribution to the Conservative Party was $190,257. The Liberals did slightly better than the Conservatives because in 1979 the Liberal Party received something like $198,476 from Canadian Pacific companies. In 1980 Algoma Steel gave the Conservative Party $5,000, and to be equitable it gave the Liberal Party $5,000 in the same year. In 1978 International Paper gave the Conservative Party $15,000. For some reason it took umbrage at the Tories and did not give them anything in 1979 and 1980, whereas in 1978 it gave the Liberal Party $15,123 and in 1979 they upped that to $25,572. In 1980 it decided neither of the two Parties were worth any more money and it gave them nothing.

Mr. Smith: Shocking.

Mr. Young: It was. I totally agree with the Hon. Member. Canadian Pacific, for example, in 1980 gave the Tories $35,000 and, again, it treated the Liberals, its buddies, to the same amount of money, $35,000. Cominco in 1979 and 1980 respectively gave the Conservative Party $5,000, and in the same years it gave the Liberals the same amount.

Mr. Malone: And the NDP received nothing.

Mr. Young: The NDP would not accept any money from them.

Mr. Malone: That's right, and it would not get any, either.

Mr. Young: Our Party believes that he who pays the piper calls the tune. We are not interested in that kind of money. We would rather take it from ordinary Canadians. Whether it be $5, $10 nickels or dimes, we appreciate it all, because Canadians understand we are a democratic Party which owes nothing to any vested interest in this country. Fording Coal Limited of Calgary is only a cheap bunch. It only gave the Conservative Party $415 in 1980 and gave the Liberals nothing.

An Hon. Member: What was that name again?

Mr. Young: Fording Coal Limited. Write it a letter. I am sure it will take all due dunning letters into account. Maple Leaf Mills, for example, gave the Conservative Party in 1978, $4,150; in 1979, $4,200; in 1980, $3,000. The Liberal Party in those three years only received $3,000 a year from that company, Mr. Speaker. The Conservatives must have done something between 1978 and 1979 because their contribution jumped from $397 to $5,553 and the Liberals received substantially more than that. I see my time has run out, Mr. Speaker. I hope this has been edifying for both sides.

• (1820)

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, as a Member of Parliament from central Ontario, not a westerner, it is not a pleasure to rise in my place a second time to categorically oppose Bill C-155. Why should an Ontario Member be so concerned about this Bill? I am concerned because it is fundamental to the success of all Canada that we have the best, the fairest and most economic national transportation system if this nation is to survive.

Mr. Smith: Who wrote that speech?

Mr. Stewart: The Hon. Member asks me who wrote this. I do not need anyone to write my speeches, Mr. Speaker.

The last time I spoke the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) had announced the Crow changes some five times outside this House. He once again showed the complete disdain Government Ministers have for this House, following their leader's example. Since then there has been an amendment calling for a six month hoist of the Bill which made good sense to us on this side of the House as this legislation is every bit as important as the Constitution, or the language rights in the Province of Quebec.

Subsequently, the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance), a new closure artist, muzzled, hoodwinked and garrotted debate on this Bill, because under Standing Order 56, as soon as this part of the debate ends the question is put and the whole debate ends. We have a new Government bully on the block, Mr. Speaker. A new closure kid with all guns blazing to limit debate on something as extremely important as our national transportation system. Closure has now been perpetrated some 20 odd times in this session. The people of Canada do not trust this Government and is there really any wonder why? They have every good reason not to.

We have seen the demise of so much of our rail passenger service in Ontario that it is pitiful. In my riding we lost a commuter train from Barrie to Toronto. Just imagine; Barrie is 50 miles from Toronto, a market of 2.5 million people, and that train was cancelled. The Minister has real foresight. Given the markets that are available and the extension of the triangle and what does he do? He cancels the commuter train. Now he wants to destroy the Crow and alienate the West.

Of course the question immediately comes forth: why does he want to do this? I suggest it is because of pressure from his Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and Quebec Caucus who feel that if the grain subsidy goes to western farmers it will hurt the hog feeding operations in Quebec. That is balderdash. But once again, 74 Members of one Province are acting as the tail wagging the dog of Canada.

These people, Mr. Speaker, the NDP and Liberal-socialist coalition, would sooner take from the free enterprise small-businessman, the grain producer, and subsidize the railroad. That is what the Hon. Member from Regina stated last night. This Bill negates freedom of choice, which we on this side believe in, whether it be in grain transportation, metrication or linguistics. It means the freedom to grow the most profitable crops with a fair transportation system to markets. Everyone knows that if this is to come about a subsidy must be paid. The only argument is over the method, and again it should be freedom of choice.

I ask the House to reflect on Mirabel, which loses $1 million per week, not to mention the capital cost. There are subsidies for the subways, the highways, the airports and the hospitals so, of course, why not transportation?

If the subsidy, all $651 million of it, is paid to the railroads it will effectively lock out new investment in the West, totally discourage processing in western Canada and the diversification the West so badly needs. Farm income of some $3.5 billion will be reduced by one third. The farmer will have less income so the industrial heartland of Canada, where I come from, will suffer very deleterious effects.

No one denies that the railroads need more money. The Gilson report recognized that fact and it was quite acceptable to the West. But surely the farmer counts too. Ten years ago the farmer received $4.57 a bushel for his grain and today he receives $4.63 per bushel. This does not take into account the inflation factor, so who needs help at the time of the worst recession since the great depression?

The farmer must compete with subsidized grain from other countries. In essence these are the countries which obtain the subsidy, not the farmer. It has been estimated that British Columbia would lose 30 per cent of its income in about five years, and that feed grain prices would rise dramatically. Is that how we built this country? No, Mr. Speaker, we built it with a narrow band of steel linking 4,000 miles of every type of terrain with a few million people, deeply in debt and against greater odds than the world had ever seen. We still face the same transportation problems, with only 25 million people spread across the great expanse of our country.

The farmer was promised a fair statutory rate 86 years ago and it must be perpetuated now. Farm income has dropped 35 per cent and the 31.1 million tonne cap will be a disincentive, not an incentive. Again, we on this side are appalled that the Government would subsidize railroads over the free enterprise farmer. By 1990 the railroads will receive a 1,000 per cent increase in the freight rates. In heaven's name, why? I am afraid it is because it is easier to control this country that way, Mr. Speaker; just as with Canagrex it is easier to control the production of food.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is all a grandiose scheme; state control.

Mr. Stewart: We are seeing, slowly but surely, state control by the people opposite.

The Members of the NDP pay lip service to the desirability of having this Bill held up. The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) wants to know where we stand. Well, we stand for the fullest debate possible, to the last possible speaker. I would just like to read into the record from page 26549 of Hansard of June 20, 1983, in order to show who wants to keep this debate alive. The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) moved that Bill C-185, and he meant Bill C-155:

> —an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be not now read a second time but that the order for second reading be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

These are the people who want to debate the Bill. A little further along we heard from another speaker, the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish), who said as reported at page 26567:

> In no way should he consider himself a candidate for the committee that will study Bill C-155. We want someone in the Chair who will be objective and take into consideration not only the wishes of the railway companies like the CPR and the grain companies like Cargill, but also the wishes of grain farmers throughout Canada. We want this to be a special committee. We would like to see two NDP Members on the committee in order to provide some kind of fairness—

But they do not care about speaking on this Bill and opposing it. They just talk about it. Once again I ask you to check the record on the number of speakers this Party has put forward and the stand this Party has taken. I would also ask you to check on the sentiments of the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) who, as I have said so many times in this House, has forgotten more about grain transportation than those across the aisle will ever know.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

Mr. Malone: What has Churchill got to do with grain?

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I heard one of the Hon. Members from the Conservative Party just now ask what Churchill has to do with grain? In doing so he of course is only echoing the thoughts of the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) who called Churchill a costly luxury which we could not afford. He echoes the thoughts of the Hon. Member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook) who called for grain to go through Thunder Bay and not Churchill. If the Hon. Member is telling me by his rude remarks that it is the Conservative Party's official position that they want to get rid of Churchill, and I believe that is the case, then I am glad he has the honesty to admit it.

In rising to speak against the attempt by the Liberal Government to close off debate on the Crow issue, Mr. Speaker, I would like to explain why we in the New Democratic Party, and why I as the representative of the Churchill constituency are opposed to the Government's legislation.

• (1830)

At the present time, the Port of Churchill is the closest route from the grain area to much of Europe. For many farmers, the cheapest way to ship their grain is through the Port of Churchill and into Europe.

The reason we are afraid of the legislation the Government is presenting is that it will allow for variable rates. Under the present legislation, all grain is transported on the same per mileage rate. That means that the rail companies will not be allowed to charge different rates on grain that goes from, say, Saskatoon to Churchill compared to grain which would go from Saskatoon to Thunder Bay or perhaps, if the railways had their way, even from Saskatoon into the States.

We are concerned that under the cover of updating the present Crowsnest rate structure, the Government is changing the whole direction of transporting grain in the West. Not only is the Port of Churchill threatened, but many of the lines from smaller communities to the central communities are threatened by the legislation as well. That is affecting the way of life and the economy of those small communities. It affects farmers and people who run stores in those communities. It affects the very real social life of those communities.

As Your Honour knows, we have presented a number of petitions in the House of Commons signed by residents of very many small communities in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. They realize, much more than the Liberal majority in the House, and much more than some of the people who have spoken on the Conservative side, how important the Crowsnest rate statute has been to their way of life. They are not being selfish. They are not looking strictly at their pocketbooks, although we know that if the legislation were to pass it would mean vast increases in the cost to the farmers of moving grain in that region. However, they also realize that if the legislation were to pass the whole fabric of rural society in western Canada would be destroyed. These are people who have grown up in small towns and who have farmed in those areas, people who have worked in the grocery and hardware stores, to implement dealerships in those communities, the people who would face at best a very uncertain future.

Many people in this House grew up in small or rural communities and recognize that there is a legitimate social benefit derived from life in those communities. When the Liberal Government introduces legislation which attacks that way of life, it is attacking more than the pocketbooks of these people. It is attacking their values. They live in those communities because they want to be independent. They want to have control over their own educational system, to know their neighbours, and to work on the farms of their ancestors, their fathers and mothers. That will not be possible with the legislation, because it will promote the big communities. It will promote transportation of grain from Regina to Saskatoon. However, it will hurt the small communities. It will mean that every small community which has an elevator will see that elevator being closed. Since the grain will be taken to the larger centres by truck anyway, it will mean that one might as well do one's purchasing there. Therefore, the stores in small communities will close.

If one is to be travelling back and forth, why should one even live on one's farm anymore? Why should one not live in the big community and simply commute to the farm? That may sound like a pipedream or something which would never happen, but if one considers the entire history of the depopulation of rural areas in Canada, one will know that that is what has been happening for the last 50 years in Canada, and that this legislation will only accelerate the process. If an economic tool which helps rural communities is taken away, in the long run those rural communities themselves will be taken away. That is the concern of this Party.

As the Hon. Member for Churchill, I have other concerns as well. I mentioned earlier that by introducing variable rates grain will not go to the Port of Churchill. That means that the Port will eventually be closed down. That may be satisfactory to some Members of the Liberal Party, and certainly to some Members of the Conservative Party, but it would not be a happy occasion for the people who live in the town of Churchill who work at the port or in the tourist industry there. Most of the people who come up to Churchill to see the port, the whales and the polar bears arrive by train. Obviously, those trains will not exist if grain is going elsewhere. Therefore, by taking away the grain shipments, not only will the economic industry be killed, but the economic industry of tourism in that community will die as well.

As a result of this legislation, the communities in my riding where people work on the rail line, such as those in Wabowden, Gillam and The Pas, will fold or fade.

I ask the Liberal majority in the House to consider what the passage of this legislation will do, not only to the Churchill constituency, the Port of Churchill and other communities which will be affected, but also to the many other rural communities. I also ask the Liberals to look at what will happen to the larger communities in western Canada. As the Government takes more dollars from the pockets of the farmers in western Canada, it is taking money from the urban residents of western Canada. The $6,000 more which the average farmer will be paying to the rail lines is money which will not be spent in stores in the cities of western Canada. It is money which will, for the most part, leave western Canada and never return. It is money which will go into the pocketbooks of the railways, but never into the economy of western Canada.

In an even more general area, I would like to point out that it is money which will never be spent in Canada at all. This will hurt not only the industrial towns where farm implements are built, where people are involved in the manufacturing industry. As money is taken from the pockets of farmers and small businessmen in rural Canada, as it is taken from the western economy, it is being taken from the entire Canadian economy as well. It is costing jobs in Churchill, The Pas, Humboldt, Yorkton and Melville. Money is also being taken from Regina, Winnipeg, Hamilton and all parts of the Canadian economy.

This legislation is very important. I, for one, am upset that the Government has moved the previous question to cut off debate, to cut off any chance to convince Hon. Members opposite who, by and large, are ignorant of western Canada. I mean that as no insult, but let us face the fact that the Government has only two Members from western Canada.

• (1840)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member will be aware that I have signalled him a couple of times that he should try to complete his remarks. If he has a remaining sentence, he may wish to finish.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I certainly will not ask for unanimous consent to continue because the very nature of this Bill is to cut off debate. In closing, I would say that this legislation is much more important than the Government realizes. It is much more significant and I would hope that the Government would reconsider its actions and allow more debate, and perhaps educate themselves on the effects of this Bill.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in the ten minutes available to me I want to concentrate not only on the effects of the Bill but on what significance it might have if it was changed in certain ways that have been proposed by our Party, specifically by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), in order to enhance transportation across Canada and specifically develop diversification in western Canada.

In order to do that I went back to two debates. The first was the debate of 1881 on the original Bill that formalized the agreement between the John A. Macdonald Government of the day and the CPR for the building of the railroad. I have been somewhat disturbed during this debate by the fact that the NDP have been railing against the CPR or against the railways as if everything they have done is wrong. If one reads the debates it can be seen that the purpose of the legislation was to create a transportation system which would bind the colonies together. That was the purpose and surely none of those Members in the NDP want to say today that that was not a valid objective, nor I hope would they disagree with the vision of parliamentarians past.

On January 17, 1881, the then Prime Minister, Sir John A. Macdonald said this:

> Then will the fate of Canada, as one great body, be fixed beyond the possibility of Hon. gentleman to unsettle. The emigrant from Europe will find here a happy and comfortable home in the great West, by the exertion of the Conservative party.

The reason I use that quote is that the vision expressed by Sir John A. Macdonald, and other Members of that day was to take certain risks and develop and create opportunities for Canadians yet unknown and those whose citizenships were in other countries, so that they could come to this country and not only enjoy its freedoms but help in contributing to its economic well-being. It is my hope that the Government will remain sufficiently open in this debate to be willing to accept certain changes to the legislation which will enable us to develop further that vision. To date, I have not yet seen that willingness.

I wish to raise a few issues with the Government in the time that I have.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I apologize for interrupting the Hon. Member. Since he has quoted Sir John A. Macdonald, whom I greatly respect, he must know that in 1867 Sir John A. Macdonald moved the previous question on the constitutional debate. He should keep that in perspective if he relies on Sir John A. Macdonald.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) uses another quote from our first Prime Minister. I am always pleased to identify with him as well—that is, our first Prime Minister.

I want to quote a Liberal as well. The second quote I wish to read comes from the Crowsnest debate of June 18, 1897. I quote the Minister of Railways and Canals, Mr. Blair, who said:

> But, Sir, while that is so, we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that there are circumstances arising in a portion of this country, a country of vast extend and area, which render it imperative that the Government should lend a helping hand to the prosecution of certain works, if the inexhaustible resources which Canada possesses are to be properly and sufficiently developed. Instead of its being economy to stay our hands. I maintain it would be nothing short of waste if, upon careful study and examination of any proposal submitted to us, we are satisfied that the undertaking is one which will open up large resources of great value, the development of which will stimulate all other industries in the country and greatly add to its wealth.

That is the essence of the Conservative position in this debate. While the movement of grain is the principal position, it is also the opportunities that are involved. We see this debate as an opportunity not only to show the Liberal government but Canadians that as the region of western Canada diversifies, as my colleagues from central Canada have said, all regions of the country will benefit. That is the debate.

What is being proposed by the NDP is to once again turn back the clock. All of us who live on the Prairies have seen a diversification explosion on the Prairies over the last 15 years. Perhaps that timeframe could even be expanded. Nevertheless, we are not only concerned with grain on the Prairies today but with poultry, livestock and dairy products. If any of us want to confine the production in the Prairies today for use only in the Prairies we would have to dramatically cut back on agricultural production right now. That is untenable and we will not accept that. But that is basically the position the NDP like to keep putting forward. They like to think of themselves as activists, but they are reactionary. They are reactionary in the extreme.

The point which then must be made in this debate is that when we look at the opportunities which this debate gives us compared to the propositions that the Hon. Member for Vegreville has put forward on behalf of our Party, we see a set of issues that we just do not feel develop the very potential that we believe is extant on the Prairies. I am sure that other colleagues from the Prairies have gone to meetings similar to those I have attended where farmers have stood up in question periods to ask when they will be able to diversify their agriculture. They ask, "When will we get value added production in our area? When will we get industries directly related to primary agricultural production in order that our children can stay in the areas relative to where they have grown up?" How many times have we heard that? The NDP is proposing a further demise of exactly that hope that so many Prairie farmers have had for their children. That is exactly what they are doing and that is exactly what this Bill will do.

The fact remains that the NDP are frankly now out of this debate. The only reason this debate serves them right now is, with the 16 per cent solution they now have in the country and with their fiftieth anniversary convention coming up in Regina on the July 1 weekend they are in desperate trouble they are trying to do anything and everything in order to finally save some place for themselves on the Prairies. That is the very place which was their bedrock support at one time in the 1930s but it is not there any more.

I am a strong advocate of Churchill and Arctic technology. I think it is a shame that we as Canadians have not further developed our Arctic technology. Let me suggest what we did in the period of time that we were in Government. In Churchill, we extended the shipping season further than at any other time. At that time the Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for Vegreville, brought in the MV Arctic and the Pierre Radisson. He initiated an interchange between the CN and CPR. We always looked at Churchill as one of the four major grain spouts for Canada.

We can produce in agricultural but we must have legislation that will allow us to diversify. Do not give us a 10 per cent safety net which will give an average cost for the movement of grain that will not allow farmers to produce oats or barley. How will that help up in western Canada?

• (1850)

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, a ten minute time period is not sufficient. The bottom line for us in the Conservative Party is this. We have an opportunity to develop further the diversification of western Canada, not only for the benefit of our region but for all of Canada. That is the purpose of our debate. That is the point we are making here in the House and that is the point we will make in committee.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to raise with you a question that flows from the motion before us at the moment. You will, no doubt, be aware of the wording of the motion, Sir. The motion as it is recorded in Votes and Proceedings is as follows:

That this question be now put.

I want to refer you in the first instance to Standing Order 1. It reads:

In all cases not provided for hereafter or by sessional or other orders, the usages and customs of the House of Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland as in force at the time shall be followed so far as they may be applicable to this House.

You may be interested to know, Sir, that in the nineteenth edition of Erskine May at page 378, Chapter XVIII, and I quote for your edification, although being as knowledgeable as you are you probably know it off by heart, the black type which reads "Previous question" and then we find:

A method occasionally employed in order to withhold from the decision of the House a motion that has been proposed from the chair is to move the previous question. This is a motion which compels the House to decide, in the first instance, whether the original motion shall or shall not be submitted to the vote of the House, and in the Commons the question proposed on this motion is, "That that question be not now put"—

You will have noticed, very quickly, I am sure, that there is a distinct difference between the motion we have before us and the motion used in the House of Commons which, by Standing Order 1, is the motion, we must follow. Let me point out the reason. The paragraph under the heading "Previous question" goes on to read:

If it be resolved in the affirmative, the Speaker is prevented from putting the original question, as the House has thus refused to allow it to be put. The original motion may, however, be brought forward again on another day, as the decision of the House merely binds the Speaker not to put the question thereon at that time. If the previous question be resolved in the negative, the original question on which it was moved must be put forthwith—

I do not want to go into all of the detail, but I do want to point out to you, Sir, that the reason the motion is worded in that way is very carefully set out. The Speaker of the day in the House of Commons put the previous question in this form on March 20, 1888. The Speaker decided that a motion "That the question be now put" was in fact a closure motion. Since there can be no debate thereon it was decided at that point that the wording of the motion had to be altered in order to achieve the desired result.

What this requires, as you are no doubt aware, is that a mover of a motion "That the question be not now put" would vote in the negative. In other words, the mover of the motion would vote nay and those opposed to the motion would vote yea in order to achieve the desired result, if the desired result were to stop debate and have the motion on the question.

I would ask you in the interest of House of Commons voting in the proper way, which I think is vitally important, and in the interest of not having the motion that was moved, I contend inappropriately, considered closure, which the Government has steadfastly indicated that it does not want it to be considered, that the motion should be withdrawn. That motion should then be reintroduced in the proper form according to the citations of Erskine May.

It could go ahead, I suppose, but the unfortunate part of that could be that because Erskine May has so clearly set out the precedent, confusion undoubtedly would be the order of the day. Not only that, we would be departing from the requirements of Standing Order 1. I am sure there is no Member of the House who would wish that we depart from the requirements of Standing Order 1.

If the motion now before us were to be put, it would be in direct violation of Standing Order 1. It would be in direct violation of what the Government itself has steadfastly said it does not want to do. I think the Deputy House Leader would be willing to admit that that is true, that it is not the Government's intent to move a closure motion.

Given that the motion before us has already been interpreted as a closure motion, ruled upon as a closure motion at Westminster and accepted as a closure motion at Westminster, the Government might well want to ask the concurrence of the House—which I am sure would not be forthcoming—to alter the motion. Otherwise I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to rule that the motion before us is an inappropriate one. If the Government wishes to move closure, it may do so in a quite separate and different way under a quite separate and different Standing Order. But it may not do by the back door what it will not do by the front door. It may not impose by some devious means that which it will not impose directly.

I would therefore ask if you would be kind enough to look into the arguments contained in this submission and agree that the Member who moved the motion, inadvertently, I am sure, be ruled out of order. If the Government wishes to proceed in this way I suggest that it move a proper motion rather than leaving the motion we now have before us in a way which could be and no doubt would be very confusing, and would be a direct contradiction of the rules of Parliament as they are applied by the British parliamentary system at Westminster and brought to Canada under Standing Order 1.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair is quite clear on the issue. I am perfectly prepared to rule immediately. However, if there are Hon. Members who wish to contribute to the well being of the Chair's mind, of course, I will recognize them. I will simply say as an indication that it has been an interesting exposé of an interpretation of our Standing Orders. As some indication to assist Hon. Members I can say that the specific overrules the general in every case of interpretation and that is the course the ruling will be following.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, it is reassuring to know the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) has read Standing Order 1. His problem is he does not seem to have read any of the Standing Orders subsequent to it. Regrettably, he is about as far out in left field as he could be. I would refer the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain to page 49 of the Standing Orders of this Parliament. Where he will find Standing Order 56(1) as follows:

> The previous question, until it is decided, shall preclude all amendment of the main question, and shall be in the following words, "That this question be now put."

• (1900)

It may well be that in the event the Standing Orders of this House did not address something, the rules of Westminster prevail, but in fact the Standing Orders of this House have addresed that point directly and right on. If the Hon. Member refers to page 26521 of Hansard for yesterday, he will see that the wording used by the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) when he moved this motion was in that exact form:

> That the question be now put.

Also I refer him to Citation 452(1) on page 157 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which reads:

> The previous question is moved when the original question is under debate in order to force a direct vote on it, thereby preventing any amendments to the original question to be proposed. The form of the motion is "That the question be now put."

The phrases found in both our Standing Orders and in Beauchesne's are the exact phrase, to the letter, that in fact constituted the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Rosemont. I am afraid my honourable friend is about as far out in left field as I have ever seen him on a procedural matter.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point which is somewhat connected; perhaps I could seek your clarification. As reported at page 26540 of Hansard for yesterday, Madam Speaker in responding or dealing with the motion which is now under debate indicated:

> —that the motion on the previous question is not closure, because after the House votes on the previous question, the debate on the main question will, of course, be resumed. When the previous question is put, this is done only in order to prevent the proposal of new amendments and to ensure that the debate continues on the main question.

There is some discrepancy between the Speaker's ruling and indeed that which is pointed out under Standing Orders 56(1) and (2). Either the Standing Order is being misinterpreted or when this motion is disposed of, according to the Speaker's ruling yesterday, we will then be in a position to go back on the debate of the original motion.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. Of course the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader is quite wrong, unfortunately, as is usual. He will note that the precise words to be used are the following:

> That this question be now put.

I draw attention to page 26538 of Hansard where it reads:

> That the question now be put.

There is a distinct difference between "this question" and "the question". The wording as contained in Hansard and accepted by the Speaker is not the wording required by the Standing Order. The Standing Order is quite specific. The Standing Order indicates that it must say the following. It does not give any leeway. It reads:

> The previous question, until it is decided, shall preclude all amendment of the main question, and shall be in the following words, "That this question be now put".

I draw to the attention of the House that the Hon. Member who moved the motion did not use those words. It does not say that one can use any reasonable facsimile thereof. It does not say that one can alter words. It says that they must be in those words, and I contend that those words were not used.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Would the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) or the Parliamentary Secretary assist the Chair. At what page is the reference made to when the motion was put?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, on page 26521 of yesterday's Hansard is in fact when the motion was moved.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There seem really to be several points on the floor at the moment. We will begin with the issue of the reference to Standing Order 1 and the interpretation of Erskine May in that regard. It is correct, as the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain indicated, that in the British House the question is put in the negative. It is correct that in the Canadian House the motion is put in the positive and has been since 1867 and is referred to in Standing Order 56(1). As I indicated already, any reasonable interpretation as between the general and the specific provides that the specific shall be followed, and accordingly the motion has to be put in the positive in the Canadian tradition.

On the next subject matter, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain indicated that in accordance with Hansard the previous question was not put in precisely the language called for by Standing Order 56, that instead of reading, "That this question be now put", the wording was, "That the question be now put". I think it is the responsibility of the Chair to avoid dry legalisms in an attempt to interpret the Standing Orders. They are bad enough in some cases without a fuss over the difference between the word "the" and the word "this". It seems to me that nothing is lost to the House and nothing is lost to the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) who proposed the motion in the difference between the word "the" and the word "this". If I might refer to no interpretation other than natural justice, I think the Chair ought to accept the wording as put forth by the Hon. Member for Rosemont.

I see, for what it is worth, that in Votes and Proceedings the motion was moved in the exact language referred to in the Standing Order.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, on the same point—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The problem I have now—and I will recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary in a moment—is the comments made by Madam Speaker yesterday and referred to by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). It is my view—and I am not entitled to rule on Madam Speaker's words; it is a somewhat difficult position for me to be put in—that on a review of her words Madam Speaker may choose to reword the sentences in such a way as to indicate that once the previous question is put it would follow automatically that there is no debate on the main motion, but rather that the main motion would be put. However, I understand that the Hon. Member for Vegreville and the House has an absolute right to hear that from Madam Speaker herself, not my interpretation of her words. The thing to do with that point of order is to take it under consideration and Madam Speaker at the next occasion will address herself to that point.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, it has been drawn to my attention that when the Hon. Member for Rosemont moved the motion he did so in French, not in English. I have looked at the French verson of Hansard for yesterday and found it at page 26521 and in the French version of the Standing Orders it is exact, to the last letter. There is not one difference between the form as set out in the Standing Orders and what the Hon. Member moved in French. If there is any variation, it is in the translation, not in the language used by the Hon. Member when he moved the motion, so I think the Hon. Member does not have a point at all.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, on the point I raised earlier, the Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) contended very vehemently that the motion we are now debating is not a form of closure. He may know something about this motion that we do not know and that view may very well be shared by the Speaker inasmuch as she indicated the same words. Again I repeat:

—the motion on the previous question is not closure, because after the House votes on the previous question—

And the important point here:

—the debate on the main question will, of course, be resumed.

• (1910)

I think that is important. It is a very important ruling. I am not suggesting that you challenge the Speaker's ruling, but we as Members of this House can only go by the Speaker's ruling. We will have to take it from that ruling that was advanced by her at page 26540 of Hansard of June 20, 1983.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) is perfectly correct. Madam Speaker has made a ruling to that effect, and unless for some reason she were to choose to review the wording that she had chosen, every Member in the House should be able to rely on it. There is no dispute in that sense. However, I want to indicate to the House that possibly the Speaker would like to review the words.

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, just for consideration by the Chair, by Madam Speaker, if she wishes to reconsider, at page 26540 of Hansard for June 20, Madam Speaker stated:

As for the last question put to the Chair, namely, what time limits apply in the circumstances, I must say that the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) are right. In the opinion of the Chair, and after thorough consideration of how the new Standing Orders could be interpreted, the provisions of Standing Order 35(2) apply.

For the consideration of the Chair, Standing Order 35(2) reads:

When second reading of a government bill is being considered, no Member except the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition shall speak for more than—

It then goes on with 40 minutes, 20 minutes and 10 minutes. Madam Speaker, appears to have backed up her previous ruling which the Hon. Member for Vegreville has brought to your attention, that the debate will continue and, under the time limits we have, it would continue with ten-minute speeches.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I wonder if I may explain that there is, of course, an interpretation of the Speaker's remarks which is perfectly consistent with the ruling, that is, that if the previous question as put to the House were to fail, that is to say it would be rejected in a vote, obviously the debate would continue on the main motion. The wording used and referred to can be interpreted in one sense, as I said, that the failure of the previous motion would mean the House would continue to debate, but I must point out—

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, if it is simply a matter of bringing the question that is now under debate to a vote, as is indicated by the Speaker's ruling, then the debate on the main motion, according to her ruling, would be resumed. That is the only interpretation that one can make.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I do not know why we want to challenge the Speaker's ruling. When this Speaker gives a ruling, as when previous Speakers made a ruling, that is the ruling and that is it. It is not to be discussed unless you want to challenge it, and the procedure is there. I think we should accept the ruling as given for this reason: If it was not so, this would be the most sneaky way of introducing closure, a very, very sneaky way. I do not know what the Speaker had in mind, but it may have been that very thing, that by putting the question now and discussing it, we were not permitting a sneaky way of coming in the back door with closure. That is really what it would be if we did not have the ruling as given by the Speaker. I do not know why we want to question that ruling. It really makes sure that everything is above the table and not under the table.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I think we could go on all night trying to understand what Madam Speaker meant by the words being quoted tonight.

Mr. Kempling: Go out to The Farm and ask her.

Mr. Prud'homme: In order to proceed in an orderly fashion, I think the best way is to proceed with the debate this evening, and at the next opportunity Madam Speaker could be asked to clarify exactly the meaning of her ruling.

I agree with my colleague who just spoke that Madam Speaker "seems" to have made a ruling, but I do not see this evening the relevancy of having a lengthy debate on the meaning of what Madam Speaker indicated earlier. In order to proceed in an orderly fashion, I submit that we proceed with other speakers who may have an important contribution to make. I am willing, as I have been since the beginning of this debate, to listen to something new that Members may want to put forward between now and 11 o'clock this evening.

I submit that we are going nowhere. I prefer, as has been indicated by those who are here, that Members have the opportunity to put forward their views tonight, and at the first opportunity my very good friend for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) could ask the Speaker indirectly in the House or indirectly in other ways the exact meaning of her ruling. She is not in the Chair.

You, Mr. Speaker, are not going to say what exactly she meant to say when she said something earlier on. In conclusion, I submit that we should proceed with the debate and listen to what our colleagues have to say tonight in their contribution to the debate.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, under normal circumstances, that would be a most intelligent suggestion. However, let me just ask this question: Suppose we were to decide that the vote should come now, what then would we do? Would we then proceed on the basis of the apparent ruling by the Speaker that the debate on second reading could be completed in accordance with the existing Standing Order, or would we have the vote? Would we sit and wait? What would we do?

It would be very difficult for us to allow the vote to take place not knowing the consequences of that action that would flow from the ruling of the Speaker, if I may say so. It might be more appropriate in the circumstances if we were to adjourn for an hour until the Speaker could get back from wherever she is and clarify for us exactly what she had in mind. It would be fair to the Government lest they feel they would be cheated out of their motion. It would be fair to the Opposition.

I would ask you, Sir, do you not think that since the actual vote hinges on the Speaker's interpretation of her own ruling and since it is entirely possible that the vote on the motion to have the previous question could well come at any moment, maybe you would take it upon yourself to call a brief adjournment and ask the Speaker if she would mind returning to help us out in this matter?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, as a way of attempting to assist the Chair, may I suggest that, rather than an adjourning, so that Members on this side, not the Government side, who wish to speak will not be deprived of speaking time, if the rules of the debate are going to be changed, maybe we could sit here and Government Members could carry on this debate. That would not deny Members on this side the opportunity to speak. Government Members could carry on this debate until there is a ruling. We have heard that there are several Members opposite here who are anxious to speak. We would allow them the opportunity to take part in the debate while we wait for the decision of the Chair as to the meaning of the interpretation.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear what is going on here. The NDP Members are again grasping at any flimsy excuse to try to delay the debate.

• (1920)

I would refer Your Honour to page 79, Citation 239.(2) which states:

> Hypothetical queries on procedure cannot be addressed to the Speaker from the floor of the House.

That is what has been happening here, Mr. Speaker. There have been queries directed to you about what would happen in the event that certain events occurred, what would be the application of the Speaker's earlier comments in the event that situation A, B, C or D occurred. That is specifically prohibited by Beauchesne.

You have been quite patient, Mr. Speaker, but I think it would be a travesty of all parliamentary tradition if this were allowed to go on. Surely the debate must continue. The people of Canada are entitled to have the issue discussed. They are entitled to be heard as witnesses in committee once the Bill gets there. Let us get on with the debate.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments and observations to make about the advice given to the Chair by previous speakers in the sense that the interpretation of the provisions and the ruling of the Speaker should be dealt with now. There a number of important issues that would be determined in subsequent debate, and it is my contention that, if in fact the interpretation of the ruling moves a certain way, we would find ourselves in a situation where the possibility of amendment exists. It strikes me that the benefit to Canadians that would flow from some of the motions that would have been put forward in the form of amendments would be extremely useful to the House and the country at large.

It strikes me that this is very clearly a closure or time allocation manoeuvre. Members of the Conservative Party know very well that, as we proceed, this will in fact kill debate and put the Bill to committee following second reading.

In concert with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), I would like to indicate to the Chair that it is important that an interpretation of the Speaker's ruling be brought forward so that we can determine what course of action we will follow from here.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I will assist the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) and other Hon. Members who are asking for an interpretation. The House will recognize that the weight of judgment should be given to the comments made by Madam Speaker. I find it to be a perfectly clear interpretation of her remarks as recorded by Hansard that in the event the previous question is put and the motion is negatived, then debate will continue on the main motion. I find it at the same time consistent, although not necessarily stated in her remarks, that if the previous question is put and carried, then there will be no further debate and there will be a vote taken on the main motion.

I have done my best to assist Hon. Members with the interpretation of Standing Orders, Beauchesne and Madam Speaker's remarks, and I would suggest that debate continue, unless, of course, the House wishes me to put the previous question.

Some Hon. Members: Question, question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question? The Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I certainly respect your interpretation, but nowhere in the Speaker's ruling is found the word "negatived" or the indication that it may be passed in the affirmative. The ruling simply reads:

—that the motion on the previous question is not closure, because after the House votes on the previous question—

It does not say whether it is negatived or passed in the affirmative. It simply reads, "after the House votes on the previous question". That is very clear, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Question, question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question? Does the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River rise on a point of order or in debate?

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I rise in debate. It seems that my hon. colleagues on the Liberal side are again quite prepared to prevent debate on this issue.

It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that the question that is before us tonight and has been before us for some time is of serious and extended concern to the people of Canada and that the Government has in fact imposed closure on this particular motion. Closure is understood as a mechanism by which debate is brought to a halt and the House is forced to divide on a question without having had, on an issue of this importance I would suggest, a proper opportunity to judge a number of alternatives. The Government has selected the course of action it wishes to follow. It has selected a course of action that is opposed by a large number of people in Canada and particularly by a large number of people in western Canada who will be harmed by this legislation.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, there are groups in the country that wish to see this legislation go ahead because of a serious need for improvement of the transportation system. Unfortunately, these groups are willing, because of the desperate need to get local economies going in certain regions of the country, to load the burden of paying for the rail system improvements upon a specific group of people, the people of the western farming community. It is unfortunate that the Government would see fit to place this kind of a burden on those people and to place other Canadians who depend upon an efficient transportation system in a position where the only way to develop and improve the rail system that is so desperately needed is to put the necks of fellow Canadians on the block. This is what has ultimately happened.

It strikes me that the necks that will eventually wind up on the block are those of the Members of the Liberal Party who presently form the Government of Canada. There is no doubt in my mind, Mr. Speaker, that they will pay a terrible price for what they have done to Canadians.

The other unfortunate aspect of this debate is the complicity of Members of the Conservative Party with Members of the Liberal Party. We in the House have no doubt that Conservative Members have aided and abetted the passage of this legislation without adequate consideration of the underlying principles of the Bill. "Do it to your neighbour before he does it to you", is the Conservative way. In that light, we can understand their complicity with the Liberal Party on this particular situation.

Throughout the debate, I have been disappointed by some of the propositions put forward by my Conservative colleagues. They have suggested that the Liberal way is no good, and yet in aiding and abetting the Liberals, they are allowing that way to proceed. If they were in fact able to put up sufficient speakers to express the concerns of their local constituents, we would see a much fuller debate on this Bill.

Mr. Mazankowski: Nonsense.

Mr. Skelly: It is also interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that Conservative Members, under the previous Conservative Government, said that improvements to the rail system were on the way, that there would have been no problem, and that it is the fault of the NDP that the Conservative Party hit the bricks. I think that, for the edification of the House and the country, we should look at what happened to that Government in retrospect. One of its biggest problems was its failure to deliver on the transportation system and failure to deliver on most systems in the country.

Mr. Benjamin: They hired a fellow to write this Bill.

Mr. Skelly: As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), has pointed out, it was those people opposite who put this particular solution that imposes such hardship on the farming community in the West afoot. There is no doubt that Conservative Members, in complicity with their colleagues across the floor, their bedfellows as it were, have laid this curse upon the West.

To suggest that the New Democratic Party has somehow caused a problem by kicking out the previous Conservative Government is false. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, it was the people of Canada who threw it out. They threw it out for moving a Canadian embassy to Jerusalem. They threw it out for its oil pricing policy. It is of no use to say that its rotten policy was any easier to swallow than is the current rotten policy put in place by the Liberal Government. What is the difference between one curse and another?

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker the Conservative Party of Canada is supporting an amazing position at this time, one that its Leader will ultimately support. I am speaking of its present Leader, not the one who was retired in such an undignified manner. It is interesting to note the hypocrisy of the individuals in that Party who can say that the NDP put the previous Prime Minister out on the street. When that Prime Minister admitted he had made terrible mistakes, when that Prime Minister decided to take his Government and his colleagues to the people to ask for another mandate, that Party went right down the drain because the Canadian people had an opportunity to judge the merits of it. Now we have this tremendous hypocrisy when the Hon. Members of the Conservative Party can stand up in this House and say that the NDP did something nefarious in putting forward an amendment to a non-confidence motion which resulted in the fall of the Government, and later on those same Hon. Members turn around and turf that former Prime Minister right out of the leadership of their Party.

• (1930)

The incredibility of that proposition, Mr. Speaker, almost smacks of the "big lie" technique. Nevertheless, I expect those Hon. Members to preach it, to attempt to preach it, but there are a lot of people in Canada who believe that the Conservative Party and its masters in central Canada, on Bay Street, are the ones who have in fact done it to another westerner. That Party did it to the former Hon. Member for Prince Albert and now it has done it to the former Prime Minister of Canada. It is just not acceptable to that Party to have a westerner in control of the situation. Therefore, I would not want to hear another Hon. Member stand up during this Crow debate to say that the Conservative Party had any intention of doing anything to repair the railroad system in Canada. That Party needs to work pretty well full time just trying to keep its caucus together on the same track.

The other incredible message which that Party has been trying to deliver in this House, that in some way turfing out the former Conservative Government was anything less than a service to the Canadian people, is astounding. It has also been interesting to listen to the former Conservative speaker who felt that the Canadian Pacific Railway had done a great service to Canada. He spoke of John A. Macdonald. It is interesting to note that John A. Macdonald did not lead the Conservative Party. He led an organization which was called the Liberal-Conservative Party. There is no doubt about the common interest of both Parties which John A. Macdonald represented in the House in selling out the Canadian people.

The Canadian Pacific Railway did not do a service for this country. The people who built that railroad, who poured their savings into it, who had some trust in the Government at the time, feel that they have been betrayed. Canadians, except possibly for the small covey of compatriots here who cannot see beyond their own noses on these issues, feel they have been betrayed. The Canadian Pacific Railway, in concert with the Liberal-Conservative Party, led by John A. Macdonald and the Bank of Montreal, skimmed Canada of 25 million acres of land, $25 million, a handout so incredibly rich that anyone to whom that was given would owe a duty and an obligation to this country to conduct the services which they had guaranteed to provide for time immemorial, virtually. Either that, or they should turn back the resources which they were given, turn back the benefits which those resources have gained for them over the period of years. That is a fair offer, Mr. Speaker. We may be able to assume the burden of the taxpayers if in fact that corporation is prepared to do that.

A second item which is under consideration, and it has been mentioned before, is that there is something very obscene in placing a burden, a renewed burden on the taxpayers, and a very heavy burden on western farmers, in order to bail out two railroad systems in Canada, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railways. These companies are currently investing offshore, taking funds which they have earned in Canada, and instead of investing that capital in the upgrading of the railway system, instead of investing it in hopper cars and all the station improvements and equipment, they are taking it outside the country. From the point of view of the merchant shipping issue, in which I know the Conservative Party is interested, I cannot really help but wonder about the Canadian Pacific ships and how it can buy those ships offshore with Canadian dollars, how it can operate those ships without Canadian crews, and bank the money in Bermuda. It is astounding. It does not pay tax here. It provides no benefit here. In fact, it deprives Canadians of economic opportunity and, indeed, of employment. That is the kind of thing which the Conservative Party stands for, the old allies of the CPR. That is what the previous speaker from the Conservative Party was praising.

One of the most astounding advertisements for the Canadian Pacific Railway which I have ever seen was the one it released during the period of the Grey Cup. It announced the tremendous speed of a ship called the Beaverford, which fought off a German vessel during the Second World War. At that point in time, Mr. Speaker, it claimed that it was building for a new Canada. Yet the tradition of the CP ships—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. MacLaren): Order, please. I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if my colleagues would be interested, especially my Conservative colleagues here tonight, in hearing a little more?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. MacLaren): The Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) has the floor.

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I am sure I hear the Liberals over there saying, "Tell me something about metric". Well, we would not be in the mess we are in with metric if it had not been for the help of the New Democratic Party in supporting the Liberal Government in bringing about a change to metric—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. MacLaren): Order.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, a small reminder. The Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) just asked for permission to extend the time for him to continue his remarks. It seems to me the Chair should ask the House if there is unanimous consent for him to do so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. MacLaren): I anticipated the answer by hearing several Hon. Members say, no. However, I will gladly put the question. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. MacLaren): The Hon. Member for Peterborough.

Mr. Domm: I cannot let the remarks of the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) go by, Mr. Speaker, when he criticized the actions taken by the Conservative Government in bringing about what he called "detrimental results in the West", without saying that, contrary to what the Hon. Member might think or believe, it was the New Democratic Party which allowed the Liberal Party to come back into office through its motion of non-confidence. It was the Liberal Party—

Mr. Benjamin: The voters did.

Mr. Domm: No, it was an NDP motion. It was as a result of that—

Mr. Benjamin: How come you are blaming all those voters?

Mr. Domm: I know that it bothers those Hon. Members, Mr. Speaker, when they are criticized as being, it has been said, "the little red rump" of the Liberal Party. However, we would not have had a 20 per cent cut in Via Rail service across Canada if the NDP, in conjunction with the Liberals, had not brought down the Conservative Government in 1979. That is what we received in return for the Party's efforts.

It should also be noted that it was, Mr. Speaker, the NDP Members who remained perfectly silent, almost mute, on some of the issues which have most gravely affected the West. I did not hear the New Democratic Party supporting the Conservative Party when it saw the destruction which was brought about by the National Energy Program as it pursued the nationalization of one of the richest non-renewable resources in the West. It was the Conservative Party which protected the free enterprise system. And it was the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, in concert with the Government, which brought about the abolition of property rights in our Constitution. It was true that debate over the Constitution—

Mr. Young: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the Hon. Member would not want to mislead the House. Property rights have never been in the Constitution. Property rights have been protected by provincial Governments for many, many years and they have never been included in any federal jurisdiction. For the Member to imply otherwise is really quite unforgiveable.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has a short memory. I have to remind him that it was the Conservative amendment which brought property right back into the Constitution, at least momentarily, until the NDP made a deal with the Liberals to remove it in return for NDP support on the Constitution. I know that bothers both Parties because they do not like to be considered in bed together, but there is no doubt in my mind, and I am sure from the anxiety they show here tonight there is no doubt in their mind, that they are just what they are reported to be: a socialist Party interested in the control of the free enterprise system, removal of property rights, and cancellation of 20 per cent of VIA Rail service. They put the Government in office which brought those things about which have been very detrimental—not to mention the National Energy Program—to westerners.

Perhaps they need a few more reminders from a Member from central Canada about the wrack and ruin they have caused in the West. Remember, it was the Conservative Party which fought long and hard to kill the NEP. It was the Liberals who supported the NDP when they asked for removal of property rights so that provincial NDP Governments, some of them in the West, could then control the acquisition of private property and protection of same within our Constitution. It was the Conservative Government, while it was in office for a short nine months, which brought in the Neil report. To refresh the memory of the NDP, that report brought back some semblance of branch lines, the removal of which from the west was being threatened.

Mr. Althouse: Point of order.

Mr. Domm: They are upset again, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I was just wondering if the Hon. Member would explain a little bit about the Neil report. Is that the same report which refused to grant continuation of the line through Wishart in my riding, where the line disappeared because they refused to address the needs of those people?

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, perhaps the Chair could give some consideration to advising Members of the NDP that this is time for debate, not a question period. I am sure that if they could get the unanimous support of their cohorts on the other side of the House, we would welcome a question period on the abolition of the Crow at the conclusion of the comments of every speaker. But I defy them to get in bed again with those on the other side of the House—

Mr. Smith: We do not want them; you can have them.

Mr. Domm: —and get them to agree unanimously to a question period following each ten minute speech. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, that they would have a great deal of difficulty getting that permission from the Chair.

What about the longshoremen, Mr. Speaker? What about the people in unions who support very actively the NDP and its philosophy?

Mr. Crosby: They do not support the NDP.

Mr. Domm: What? They do not support them? Well, what happens in the West when there is a problem with grain movement? They look to the NDP who literally abandon them with their concern about property rights. I come from a riding, Peterborough, which as some people might not be aware, is made up primarily of union members and unions like the United Electrical Workers and United Steel Workers. They told the labour organizers of the NDP that they were not going to be told how to vote at election time. That is not the way you get responsible Government. The day that the labour unions rely on the NDP will be the day that their interests are sorely neglected.

Concerning the legislation before us dealing with the Crow, some Members of the Government and the NDP may be concerned as to why someone from central Canada would be interested in speaking on the Crow, which is perceived by a lot of people in Ontario to be a western issue. In reality it is not a western issue. It strikes fundamentally at our system of Government, our traditions and customs which have long been abandoned by the NDP, not to mention the Government of the day. Let us examine the Bill for what it really is, let us throw light on the subject. It is nothing more nor less than a scheme to reorder rural life in western Canada. It is like changing acres to hectares for the westerners. They would not stand for that. They do not appreciate the fact that the NDP in central Canada, and some Members from western Canada, would fall in the trap of the Liberal Government of the day and be so willing and so quick to charge the Conservatives with not doing their bit in the fight against the Crow. In reality we will put up two if not three times the number of speakers they have put up.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Domm: You see, Mr. Speaker, that is what you can do when you have a true national Party. That is one thing the Government cannot do. The Government cannot speak to the Crow where it affects the people through their representation in Parliament. The Government is void of credibility on the subject. When the Government brings in legislation that abandons 20 per cent of the VIA Rail service across Canada against the wishes of the CTC and against the recommendation of every reputable board or commission in Canada, then it is not being responsible in its duty to the people of the West.

We came to discuss the Crow, Mr. Speaker, and something was going to be taken away. Then the Liberals received from Quebec the hue and cry that they did not wish the farmers of the West to receive the subsidies; they wanted it to go to the railways. Then the Government had the gall to say on national television and in the media that it was going to do what Quebec wanted because Quebec had more votes.

The NDP and the Liberals have run out of speakers. They do not have enough representatives across Canada to carry a debate in the House against the Government which is running roughshod over the Canadian people on all issues. So I would like to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Government, to show its sincerity about discussing this issue to its fullest, agree with the NDP once more, just as it is so capable of doing when the crunch is on. Let it say that after each speaker has finished speaking, there will be a question period in order that the confused NDP Members can get their questions to Members of the Progressive Conservative Party in order to get them answered in the House of Commons.

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, that was really quite an amusing if somewhat neanderthal dissertation we just heard. I believe I heard the Hon. Member mention the Crow rate once or twice in his speech. The Crow rate is too modern and it is pretty hard for him to defend something that modern or that new.

• (1950)

I was interested in his comments that his Party protects free enterprise and is preserving small business. I have been interested in the reaction of some of the gas station owners in Peterborough who are losing business to a gas station operated by a bunch of fairly wealthy Members of Parliament.

Mr. Smith: Name them.

Mr. Sargeant: That is some preservation of small business in his home constituency. I never fail to be amazed by the insults to the electorate of Canada which the Conservative Party Members continue to heap on that electorate when they continually deny that it was the voters who kicked their incompetent Government out of office three and a half years ago.

Mr. Althouse: It was the Tory delegates.

Mr. Sargeant: It was the Tory delegates, my friend said. My goodness! Any Government that was incapable of counting was hardly worth keeping in office. The people of Canada demonstrated that when they went to the polls the last time.

It was also interested in his referral to the Neil report. With all due respect to my friend, the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), the Neil report was hardly greeted with open arms in my part of the country. I know that one of the main subdivisions in my constituency is the Inwood subdivision, one of only four lines, I believe, which run up through my area and one of the two lines which really runs into the heart of the grain country in my constituency. The Neil report recommended shutting the line down.

Hon. Members know that there are two or three small farming communities which have been around for, oh, a number of decades now, notably Broad Valley and Fisher Branch. If the Inwood subdivision is ever shut down, they may well die, which may well do away with communities which have a tradition in the area and the way of life for many of the people living there. We have all seen ghost towns dotted across the Prairies. I do not think we really want any more of them.

It is a very nice, small community, Arnold. You would probably enjoy it. You should visit it sometime.

Mr. Malone: Crowfoot.

Mr. McKnight: He will, in the next campaign.

Mr. Sargeant: I am sure he will, but it will not do his Party any good.

I am interested in the Tories' commitment to the debate. We have heard them maintaining that they are the real defenders of the Crow, yet if we consider the record of this Party when it was in Government, we find that it was really prepared to do much the same, if not to go even further than the Liberal Government has gone in changing the Crow rate.

I can quote a few little excerpts from a book by a writer named John Gallagher, entitled "To Kill the Crow".

Mr. McKnight: Do you guy gives royalties, Terry?

Mr. Sargeant: No, but it is very worth-while reading. I would recommend it to all Hon. Members, particularly the prairie Members of the Conservative Party to my right. He points out that in all the Provinces, the provincial Conservative Parties have been supportive of changes to the Crow. The former Lyon Government in Manitoba was definitely in favour of changing the Crow. The current Conservative Government in Saskatchewan has sort of nicely pussyfooted around the issue and has basically not been terribly supportive of maintaining the Crow rates, even though it hedges its bets.

In Alberta, Arnold, you know—

Mr. Malone: Alberta bound.

Mr. Sargeant: —what the Lougheed Government's position is on the Crow rate. It is definitely in favour of killing the Crow rate. We all know that during the Conservative Party's term of Government, it was preparing to introduce substantially the same piece of legislation as we have before us today, a rather bad piece of legislation.

If the Conservative Opposition in the House really wants to stop this legislation, if it really wants to stand up for the farmers in western Canada and in Quebec and, really, by extension, the farm machinery manufacturers and steel companies in Ontario, as well as the iron ore companies in different parts of the country, it could do it, but I rather doubt that it will.

An Hon. Member: They are committed to multinational corporations.

Mr. Sargeant: Exactly. The Conservatives are committed to the multinational corporations. They are committed to the CP rail. I am reminded that between 1978 and 1980, for those three years, CP's companies, including Algoma Steel, Canadian International Paper, Canadian Pacific, Cominco, Dominion Bridge, Fording Coal, Maple Leaf Mills and Pan Canadian Petroleum, donated $190,257 to the Conservative Party.

Mr. Malone: And not one penny to the NDP.

Mr. Sargeant: And not one penny, I am very proud to say, to the New Democratic Party. Therefore, we know where the Conservatives' votes will be. Perhaps, in some perverse way, they will nevertheless be supporting the Liberal Government in its efforts to change the Crow rates, in its efforts to put more money into the pockets of Canadian Pacific enterprises.

Mr. Thacker: Why is it that you want the payment to go to the railways?

Mr. Sargeant: I am reminded that the Tories can ring bells in the House for a number of weeks for other corporate welfare bums. They can ring bells in the House for weeks in the interest of the oil companies.

Some Hon. Members: But not for the farmers.

Mr. Sargeant: But not for the farmers.

Mr. Thacker: Why do you want it to go to the railways? Tell us that?

Mr. Malone: Guaranteed annual income for the railways, NDP.

Mr. Thacker: I think you'd better put that hat on.

Mr. Sargeant: The twisted logic that one sees around the whole debate is amazing.

Mr. Malone: And hears.

Mr. Sargeant: Oh, yes, and hears from Conservatives and hears from Liberals opposite. We hear how this is to create tens of thousands of jobs, how this will be a big economic stimulus for the country. They speak of putting billions of dollars into the economy of Canada because of the Crow changes. Where is the money to come from? I cannot take money out of my right pocket and put it into my left pocket and suddenly be richer.

Mr. Malone: You don't have any right pockets.

Mr. Sargeant: Where is the money which is to stimulate the economy to be found? It must come out of the pockets of other Canadians. If it comes out of the pockets of prairie farmers, how is that to help the manufacturing industry in Ontario? How is that to help the consumer on the Prairie when $600 million a year is taken out of the economies of the prairie Provinces? I am astonished by some of the twisted logic that the Liberal Government has used to support its side of the debate on the Crow issue.

Mr. Pepin: One billion dollars added every year.

Mr. Sargeant: The Minister says, "One billion dollars added every year", but I ask the Minister, where is the $1 billion to come from? It will come from the taxpayers of Canada and from the prairie farmers of Canada.

Mr. Pepin: Yes.

Mr. Sargeant: It might help one sector of the economy, but it will hurt another sector of the economy. On balance, it ain't gonna help the country very much at all. Unfortunately, the big losers will be the farmers.

Mr. Pepin: No, no.

Mr. Sargeant: The farmers cannot afford to pay any more money in their costs.

Mr. Pepin: I listened to you all day and you all say the same thing.

Mr. Sargeant: If further costs are added to the farmers' operations, those farmers will go belly up. The economy of the country will not benefit in the long run.

I will leave the subject there. Perhaps at some other point in the debate I will have an opportunity to carry on and make some other very well founded, very sensible points and, hopefully, try to pound some sense into the heads of the Government Members opposite.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to be able to participate in the debate tonight and to respond to some of the comments made by my colleagues to my right, the Progressive Conservatives, and then of course I will also have some time for the Government as well with regard to this issue.

First, I would like to answer some of the immature ravings of various Conservative backbenchers about the way in which the New Democratic Party is somehow responsible for the defeat of the Conservative Government in 1979. I have said before that I think it is about time the Conservative Party put that issue behind them and realized once and for all that it was they who lost the election of February 1980 for themselves and not the NDP. I thought they had done this at their convention a couple of weeks ago.

Indeed, we moved the traditional motion of non-confidence as we were expected to move after the budget in December, 1979. We would have been criticized had we not moved such a motion. As we all know, the Government fell. That did not mean that the Progressive Conservative Party had to proceed to lose the election. Other Governments have been defeated in the House and have gone on to win subsequent elections. I really believe that it is a matter of growing up and taking responsibility for your own political destiny. The Conservatives should finally come to the conclusion that perhaps they did something wrong. In fact, I think they did come to that conclusion except that they heaped all of the blame on one man, their leader.

If there was something intrinsically wrong with the defeat of the Clark Government, they have added insult to injury by themselves getting rid of the very political person about whom they are so self righteous when talking about the NDP role. I just wanted to put that on the record. I am responding to what has already been said in the debate and in that sense I believe I am staying within the bounds of relevancy.

Every once in a while there are matters debated in this House on which Members who oppose a particular Government proposal have occasion to make predictions about the consequences of the particular legislation. Since those consequences can only happen in the future, they are always in the position of being unable to prove that what they say is the case. Therefore, it is a matter of trust and making a judgment about what the consequences of a particular piece of legislation will be. For our part in the House, we have made that judgment about what will happen to western Canada when the Crow rate is tampered with.

We share the judgment of former Chief Justice Hall that the minute one begins to tamper with the Crow rate an entire way of life in western Canada is being placed in jeopardy. That is what we are protesting in our debates. We cannot prove that this will happen, just like we could not prove in 1966 that the arguments for freeing up the interest rate would lead to higher and higher interest rates and mortgage payments. We could not prove the argument at that time that greater competition leading to even lower interest rates was wrong. However it did turn out to be wrong.

When we argued against the pre-build of the southern portion of the pipeline in 1980 and that the other portion of the pipeline would never be built, we could not prove that. But three years later that pipeline is yet to be built and that pipeline in all likelihood will never be built. Those who believed the Government then, that is the Conservative Party, and those who believed the Government in 1966, that is the Conservative Party, have been proven wrong on both of those issues.

We could not prove in 1977 that proceeding to block funding for medicare would mean the gradual erosion of medicare in Canada, yet it has. We could not prove it at that time. Again, the Liberals and Conservatives stood together.

We admit that we are at somewhat of a disadvantage. And even though we might lose this one we will not be comforted by the consolation of being able to say 10 or 15 years from now that we told you so and we were right all along; that first it was the Crow rate and then the Canadian Wheat Board, and on until we saw the eventual destruction of the economic structures that were built up over the years in western Canada to give western Canadians more control over their own economic life. That is what we are debating here tonight.

What is wrong with the Progressive Conservative position? We are glad to have them on the side opposing this Bill, although weakly and in a somewhat token manner. One day they help and the next day they decline. They are unable to make a decision. It is clear that the Conservatives would very much like to have this legislation passed so that this issue will be out of the way before the next election. As the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant) so clearly pointed out, "He who pays the piper calls the tune." The same fellow who pays the Liberal Party is the one who pays the Progressive Conservative Party to the tune of approximately $200,000 each. They know that they will have to follow the same orders from the CPR. They want the Liberals to follow those orders so that they can travel throughout western Canada talking out of both sides of their mouths; they are not for the Crow rate, they would tamper with the Crow rate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. On occasion Hon. Members interrupt on what they refer to as a point of order and it becomes evident later that it is not a valid point of order. I do not want to predispose any views but I hope Hon. Members will try to raise only those points which they firmly believe are valid points of order. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker).

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, my point of order relates to the relevancy of the comments. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) would say why his Party wants $650 million to go to the railways.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order.

Mr. Thacker: Why the railways rather than the people?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I was saying that of the Conservative Party of Canada have made it clear that they would tamper with the Crow rate. The only difference between them and the Liberals is that they would tamper with it somewhat differently. The details of this Bill would be different under a Progressive Conservative administration but the principle would remain the same. That principle would be capitulation to the blackmail that the railways of Canada have been practising on the economy and people of Canada for some time now, in spite of all the subsidies for rail line improvement and in spite of all the hopper cars that have been given to them.

If the Progressive Conservative Party was in Government it would make the same moves. Only the details would be different. That is why we see Hon. Members weaving in and out of the debate and in and out of opposition to the Bill we see before us. They are torn between opposing the legislation and what they know they would do themselves.

That is why I was even more astounded at the hypocrisy of the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) who said that we were somehow responsible for the VIA Rail cut-backs. Who has done more over the years to bring discredit to the idea of Crown corporations? Who has most often declared that anything which does not make money can be sacrificed on the alter of profit motive? The Progressive Conservative Party of Canada is the Party that has heaped criticism for years on VIA Rail and passenger rail service in the country. They are the Party who created the political context through which it was possible for the Liberals, finally taking Progressive Conservative advice, to implement the VIA Rail cut-backs. Yet the Conservatives have the nerve to say that we are somehow responsible for those cut-backs. It becomes hard to swallow after a while.

The Liberal Government has the opportunity to show for the first time since I have been here that it has the ability to listen to Members of the Opposition and the opportunity to learn from the energy that we are putting into this debate and our commitment to stop this Bill. A government which does not have any Members in the west should take a second look at what it is proposing to do to western Canada. The Government should rethink this whole Bill through and should drop the whole idea. The Crow rate has to be maintained. The Government can upgrade the railways in a half a dozen different ways and it would have our support in making an attempt to do so. But the Government does not have to change the Crow rate and do this on the backs of Canadian grain producers.

• (2010)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, one cannot help wonder, after listening to the unimaginative, unconstructive, irrelevant remarks presented to this House and to this nation first by the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant), then by the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), and lastly we heard the babblings of the little birds in the birds' nest from Birds Hill.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCain: This Government has handled the problems of transportation in this nation irresponsibly. I challenge those people on our left to address the transportation problem.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a legitimate point of order. When I was a kid my mother used to say "Sticks and stones will break my bones but names will never hurt me." Nevertheless, I wish that Hon. Members would stop abusing the name of the riding which I represent by referring to it in the half dozen ways they have a habit of doing. The name of the riding is Winnipeg-Birds Hill. That is what I prefer it to be called out of respect for my constituents, if not out of respect for me, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The point is well taken.

The Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain).

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I have no concern. I have the greatest admiration for the people of Winnipeg-Birds Hill. They made an error in judgment, as did a number of constituents in many ridings in Canada. I am quite confident after that speech is circulated in the Hon. Member's area that they will certainly not be repetitive in their erroneous judgment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCain: I want to address transportation problems in Canada. If the mainspring in those people who want to interfere with the discussion on transportation would ever unwind, we would be able to get down to the subject matter with which we are concerned tonight.

Since I arrived in this House in 1972—and long before that—the national problem of transportation has been presented to the Government on your right, Sir, which has been the same government for too long. That problem abounds from coast to coast in Canada. It has deteriorated to the point that one sees wheels that go with boxcars and other cars on the railroad transported from Atlantic Canada to some other assembly point or repair point by trucks. They have travelled through your constituency, Mr. Speaker, and they have travelled through mine by the thousands of truckloads. What is wrong with the national transportation policy when the railroad does not even transport its own wheels? That problem has not been addressed nationally. It is high time that it were.

From the earliest days that I participated in the Standing Committee on Transport we were told repeatedly—not by CP representatives, the pet peeve of those on my left, but by the executive of the Canadian National Railway, one of the stars of the Crown corporations of this land—that unless something were done to assist the railroads with their transportation problems, we, the CN, could not bear up under the losses. That estimated loss was passed on to some members of this committee. It reached $140 million a year for the CNR. But that executive never dared, apparently, to put figures in the report of the transportation committee or in the CN's own report of its losses in dollars and cents.

Let us forget for a moment whether this may or may not be of benefit to the CPR. Let us bear in mind that we have a Crown corporation which serves this nation that needs assistance through this Bill. This had to be addressed either by direct subsidization or by some kind of adjustment to the Crow rate.

We seem to be able to support Crown corporations. I have not heard any of those Members from the NDP suggesting that $1.2 billion is too much for Canadair to lose, yet we are not talking in those kind of figures in this Bill. I have not yet heard the NDP Members complain about the subsidy for that transportation company named Maislin in the form of the free interest rate it got. Nor have I heard Members of the NDP complain that there may be a new investment development corporation and a Crown corporation to take over the Crown deadbeats.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure the Hon. Member does not intend to mislead the House, but he will recall that we were the first to bring attention to the recent Canadair troubles. We did it before the Tories brought it up in this particular instance. We also brought the Maislin—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. That is debate. The Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte.

Mr. McCain: The burblings from the birds' nest, Mr. Speaker.

There are things which have to be addressed. We have not addressed the inequities that have developed in the freight costs for the feed industry in Atlantic Canada and eastern Quebec; nor has the NDP. Never has this been mentioned. The Government has not addressed the problem of transportation from Atlantic Canada. I heard not a murmur from the NDP when the express service, so vital to the transportation of fresh fish, was cancelled and the line abandoned in Atlantic Canada. Let us talk transportation and let us quit the burblings.

We had a succession of studies done on behalf of transportation, particularly in western Canada, first the subject was brought forward by the western premiers. Those four premiers for in concert once in their lives agreed that some consideration should be given to the transportation problem in the west. Then there was a study done in 1973 or 1974 by the Western Economic Opportunities Conference. Again, that problem was addressed. There was no NDP support for any consideration of the problem at that time. Later we had the Hall Report. Some recommendations were made, particularly with respect to rail line abandonment. That was never thoroughly addressed by a government. In addition to that we had the Snavely Report which outlined unequivocally the losses of the railroads, including the CNR. It made it obvious that there was no way transportation could continue to exist with losses of that nature. That loss estimate did not come from the Conservative Party. It did not come from the NDP and it has been ignored to date by the Liberal Party.

When it was finally recognized that something had to be done we were presented with an omnibus bill which refuses to allow the subject to be addressed item by item as it should be. The evils of the omnibus bill are with us, and that is one of the reasons this Bill has not made the progress in this House that it otherwise would have made.

As I did when I last spoke on this Bill, I again want to point out that there have been suggestions for amendments to this Bill emanating from this side of the House. Had there been an element of favourable acceptance of the proposals for amendment, we would not find ourselves in a position where by one means or another the Government had to impose closure on our debate.

This Government has just not recognized all the problems that exist. The Government has failed to address the decline in the efficiency and the productivity of the rail system in the last 25 years. I have said repeatedly, as it applies to rail service, there is no service in Canada for which we have continuously paid more in excess of the rate of inflation and received less in the line of proper service than from the railroads of this country. Even the Post Office is lily pure compared to the railroads, as far as I from Atlantic Canada am concerned, Mr. Speaker. These problems have not been addressed by Government, yet they have come to attention through the discontent of the public using transportation services. They have not been addressed.

I am sorry to say that I asked the Canadian Transport Commission to supply me with some estimates. Mr. Speaker, if you are about to cut me off, might I ask for unanimous consent to continue very briefly?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) to continue his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McCain: I asked the CTC to supply me with estimates of the cost of the transportation of goods on flat cars. They are the simplest and cheapest kind of vehicle moved on the railroads. I asked what would be the costs on a tonne-mile basis to move a flat car containing 5, 10, 20, 25, 50 or 100 tonne loads. I was promised personally by the Chairman that I would get the Commission's estimate of these costs. That was about five years ago, and I do not have those estimates to this date. I also addressed the fact that the railroads were having difficulty dispatching their cars. Why could they do it better 25 years ago with a pencil, a pad and a telegraph key than they now can with computers? That has not been addressed.

I expected that the Government would address the multimodal problem, and asked whether it could in fact introduce efficiency into the transportation system. We watched in the City of Saint John while the bus company built its terminal downtown, and VIA Rail built its station about three miles away in the outskirts of the city. This could not work on a multimodal basis; but it was going to work for VIA Rail. That was the procedure; Government assistance to build a bus terminal in downtown Saint John and all Government money to build a VIA Rail station some three or four miles away in the outskirts of city. That is the way the Government has addressed transportation problems.

I have watched, as a Member of the House, as the Government said that the MFRA was the greatest thing since sliced bread for Atlantic Canada, but it has cut down its effectiveness. I watched while the Government introduced an intrasubsidy into the transportation structure of Atlantic Canada to assist transportation, industry, agriculture and farmers and fishermen, and that has been withdrawn. The Provinces were told under pressure, "We will give you X number of bucks to do some infrastructure but we will cut your subsidies anyway". That is the way it was addressed.

I challenge Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party to recognize that there are in fact transportation problems in Canada, that the Crow rate is in fact one of them, and that the area of Atlantic Canada which did not send a single NDP Member to this place would like to hear them attack the Government and be protagonists for transportation in Atlantic Canada. That is what we from Atlantic Canada would like to see from the NDP. There has not been a relative word uttered by the last three speakers from the NDP, not a relative word.

We must recognize that the country needs some adjustment to the total transportation package. We can look at greater efficiency of the movement of products in this nation. We need unit trains in some parts of the West to move coal and move grain. Why do we not look at that bay up there in the North of Canada? Why do we not estimate how much we could save if we spent a little money developing that? Why do we not address the problem and get this Bill into a form of which the Minister will say—

Mr. Smith: That is right.

Mr. McCain: Just wait until I have finished; do not interrupt. If you develop your manners, you might be wiser and not get caught out on a limb. Why do we not address the problem?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This side of the House had the manners to extend the time of the Hon. Member by giving him unanimous consent to continue.

Mr. McCain: So you could be rude?

Mr. Smith: I do not think we deserve a cheap shot like that. If he repeats it, it will be the last time he gets such an extension.

Some Hon. Members: That is not a point of order.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I would recommend a good night's sleep for that gentleman in order to remove a little of the edge of his temper.

Let us address the transportation problem. Yes, unit trains have a place, but are they the only vehicle by which we should transport grain? Tank cars have a place. Is there not also a place for a multi-use car which might bring something back from the ports of Atlantic Canada or from the ports of the Pacific?

Mr. Huntington: Or a pipeline.

Mr. McCain: Or even a pipeline. Why do we not adopt a reasonable position in which the Minister will acknowledge and allow reasonable amendments to the Bill? He could state what those reasonable amendments would be such that we would know the ground on which we walk. Then we would know where we were at. If he knows that amendments should be made, let us at least get the principle of them. Will there be an opportunity for freedom of choice in the West or not? Let us address Canada's transportation problems as we are addressing this single problem.

I thank Hon. Members in the House, including the Hon. Member who raised the point of order, for providing me with an opportunity to conclude my remarks.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a very brief point of order. Might I be permitted to ask the Minister a very short question?

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Deans: No?

Mr. Pinard: A long question.

Mr. Deans: That is fine. It has been brought to my attention—

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Go ahead, ask him.

Mr. Deans: May I be permitted to ask the Minister a question at this point?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Sure.

Mr. Deans: Am I correct in my understanding of a statement made by the Minister today that it is his intention to impose the changes to the Crow rate immediately upon it receiving Royal Assent and that there will in fact be in Canada during this crop year a two-price freight rate, with some paying less than others?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the question is fair. What I said to the press, if that is the reference that is being made, was that everything depends on the date the legislation is passed. If it is passed before August 1, being the beginning of the next crop year, it would be implemented. If it is passed after, obviously it will not be implemented or applicable as of August 1. I said to the press that there would have to be adjustment if the legislation is not passed before August 1; we would have to adjust to new circumstances.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, we have reached a stage in this debate where, with respect to the rulings applied yesterday and the confused state of the House, one wonders whether or not one is in cloud-cuckoo-land. As I recall it, yesterday there was a question in hiatus or deferred by the Chair with regard to a proposal put by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). Then we had an attempt by the Hon. Member to whom is attributable the present motion that the previous question be now put. I distinctly heard the Chair at the time say that such a motion was not receivable, but somehow, although that Hon. Member has not spoken, that question has been received and has fallen into place. This was like an aircraft approaching a major terminal that had been in a staging area. The main question had to be settled, but the proposal was not receivable. Therefore in my respectful opinion it did not exist; it could not be received. Suddenly it finds itself on the table before the House. Here we are debating it. With the greatest of respect, Mr. Speaker, how can a motion which was not receivable at the time suddenly find itself now the principal motion before this House?

Mr. Smith: It was an order.

Mr. Lambert: It was not an order. With the greatest respect to the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith), that motion was declared by the Chair as not receivable and could not be put. With the greatest of respect, there is no sense in the procedures of the Chair trying to live in cloud-cuckoo-land. This situation must stop. We have been driven into this. There is no way that a motion, not in a position to be received, could be made at that time. There was no way that the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) who proposed the motion could have it brought forward again. One could try that scenario in different situations. You can see the crazy pattern this House would be in. A motion to be received must be made at the right time and under the appropriate circumstances. It is almost as though if I were to suddenly now make a motion, and I know that I cannot make a motion to amend the main motion—

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Lambert: Just make sure it is a point of order and not debate. I do not want debate.

Mr. Smith: I would refer Your Honour to page 26538 of Hansard for yesterday where the Speaker is reported as having said:

> The motion has been properly proposed by the Hon. Member for Rosemont. It is in order.

The Speaker ruled that the motion was in order. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) is now reflecting on a decision of the Chair. He cannot do that. The Speaker has said the motion is in order. We are not to be subjected to analysis of her decision by the Hon. Member. He may not reflect on a decision of the Chair.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, there is again the question of whether the Hon. Member can rise and debate if he wishes—

Mr. Smith: It was a point of order.

Mr. Lambert: This is a stupid idea, that any time one disagrees with a Member who has the floor, one may rise on a point of order. It is the usual trick under the guise of a point of order. Whether I reflect upon a ruling of the Chair is not a point of order for the Hon. Member to raise. It is a question of debate. Usually when people from that side rise on a point of order, they do so spuriously. This has to be stopped. This is one of the reasons I am speaking tonight. I want to make sure that Hon. Members such as the Parliamentary Secretary get the idea through their heads once and for all what is a point of order and what is a point of debate. Unless there is a valid point of order Hon. Members must, regardless of the Member who has the floor, allow that Hon. Member to continue to speak and not interrupt. Having said that, there is nothing that says, while I must accept the ruling of the Chair, that I have to agree with it.

Mr. Smith: You cannot reflect on it.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I certainly can do that. I do not have to agree with the ruling of the Chair. After all, there is such a thing as the ultimate. Just to prove the Parliamentary Secretary wrong on his point, that I cannot reflect upon it, let me point out that it is certainly open to me or to any Member of the House, after a ruling by an occupant of the Chair, whoever that person may be, to put down a motion of censure. That is the ultimate reflection. Therefore, there is in reply to the statement that one cannot comment upon a ruling of the Chair the question, what is a motion of censure but a total rejection of the ruling?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I am not sure what is going on in the House at the present time. The Chair recognized the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) to contribute to the debate on what is generally referred to in this House as the previous question, that the question now be put. It seems to the Chair that the Hon. Member is now debating something which took place a day earlier. First, it is a little late to raise a matter at this stage of the debate. Second, if the Chair is to apply the rule of relevance, as it is charged to do under normal rules of debate, I would invite the Hon. Member to be relevant to the matter now at hand.

Mr. Lambert: Just give me a chance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): With all respect, I will certainly give the Hon. Member for Edmonton West a chance to make his point, but surely it has to be related to the matter now before the House. If the Hon. Member is disputing the conduct of the Chair yesterday, that is an entirely different matter. I would caution the Hon. Member because he is treading, to put it mildly, on dangerous ground. The Chair recognizes that the Hon. Member for Edmonton West is an experienced Member of the House, and I say that with all respect. I will listen to the Hon. Member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, with the greatest respect to you, and I underline "greatest respect", in its true legal sense which you understand I am relevant. The motion before the House is that the previous question be now put. With the greatest of respect, Mr. Speaker, I have heard speeches today that have roamed from the subject of transportation to breakfast at high noon. The debate was not on the motion that the previous question be now put. Hon. Members were discussing the general subject of transportation. Now I am questioning the precise value of this motion as to whether the previous question should now be put.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but if that is presently the thrust of his argument, that is quite in order. I have no dispute with the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), but I was led to believe that he was going in an entirely different direction and possibly questioning the conduct of the Chair yesterday. However, the Hon. Member should continue his remarks.

Mr. Lambert: Again, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I have called into question the very being of this motion? Surely to goodness I can call into question the propriety of that motion, just as Hon. Members in the past have questioned in this debate and others the acceptance of a motion when a six months hoist is proposed. We have heard those things ridiculed from the Government side, if Government Members gave attention to the motion, and some did. But that is the purpose of the motion that is before the House. I have questioned the validity of the motion and its origins. I have questioned how it came to be before the House when, in my book, it was not possible for the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) to put the motion.

The Speaker has made a ruling. I must accept that ruling, although I do not have to agree with it. This is not withstanding the remarks of the Parliament Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) who is, with the greatest of respect to him, a relative juvenile parliamentarian.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. The Chair has allowed him extra time because of the interventions, but his time has now expired.

Some Hon. Members: More, more. Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I notice that there is an Hon. Member in the House who is without his jacket and in shirt sleeves. I thought that I should perhaps point that out.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that you did not confuse me with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). I am happy to be afforded this opportunity to speak against the motion to put the previous question, because I believe that limitation of debate on Bill C-155 at this time would not serve the purposes of the Canadian public well.

The changes to the Crow rate that the Government proposes will affect most adversely the fortune of Canadian grain farmers. This afternoon when the House Leader for the NDP asked the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) some questions, it became very obvious that the Government's intention is to push this legislation through as quickly as possible so that farmers who are busy now and will be again in the early fall will not have any opportunity at all to appear before a committee to make their views known.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that we must deal with the wider implications of this legislation. For example, in a book called "To Kill the Crow" by John Gallagher, the author includes some quotations from earlier Cabinet memoranda that illustrate that what is happening today is simply the thin edge of the wedge. Mr. Gallagher quotes from a 1981 memorandum as follows:

> A key question to be decided by Cabinet will be how far to go in seeking a remedy for these problems, particularly during the initial period of a modernized Crow regime.
> The Minister of Transport will be proposing that, because of the sensitivity of the Crow issue in Western Canada, the initial steps should be fairly limited and cautious. At the same time, the new framework that would be created should be designed to permit continued evolution over a period of years in response to changing circumstances.

This continued evolution that is spoken of, Mr. Speaker, is not something that western Canadian farmers look forward to with any joy.

Again, from a 1981 Cabinet document, Mr. Gallagher quotes:

The arrangements put in place as a result of the negotiations should be made subject to review after a specified period—perhaps four years. At this point, it should be possible to make changes that would accelerate agricultural diversification and other desired results, on the basis of experience gained with the initial set of measures—

Again it becomes very obvious that what we are dealing with in this legislation is the thin edge of the wedge. I think it is of absolute importance that we continue the—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, there are proper times and occasions for the Whips to march up the middle of the aisle of the House of Commons. Right now is not one of those times.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I would appreciate it if there could be a little more order in the House.

Let me continue on whether the question should now be put. I think it is absolutely essential that debate on the basic Bill should continue because the people of Canada are just now becoming aware of some of the issues that are involved. For example, some 25 million acres were given to the CPR for the building of the transcontinental railway and for the continued operation of that railway. Many of those lands happened to be Indian lands.

Right now we are facing a situation in which Indian people across the country are having a great deal of difficulty getting some recognition of their rights to some of their own lands. Yet in the 1881 Statute that set up the CPR, the CPR was allowed to march in and have those lands alienated with no respect whatsoever for the aboriginal title. It would be nice if the Indian people who are now seeking some kind of land entitlement could have the same consideration shown to them by the federal Government as was shown to the CPR when the CPR was given its chance to select lands.

The effect Bill C-155 would have on British Columbia is just becoming known. When the changes were first announced, there was fairly widespread recognition of the benefits that would flow to British Columbia from improved rail facilities. As a result of this recognition, Mr. Speaker, spokesmen for the major forestry companies and for the Government of British Columbia indicated their support for the changes because the changes would lead to the upgrading of the railway. But there are a couple of things that must also be taken into account. The first of these is the fact that the higher freight rates that would be charged for hauling grain to Pacific coast ports would make the diversion of some of this grain to United States ports in the Gulf of Mexico very attractive. This would have an adverse effect on the Port of Vancouver. That is one reason why I think the people of British Columbia must think twice before they hastily endorse Bill C-155.

Bill C-155, Mr. Speaker, leaves the 50,000 acres of the Dominion coal lands in the hands of the federal Government and, as you know, these lands were turned over to the federal Government at the time of the original Crowsnest Pass agreement. Now when this agreement is being abrogated, I believe it is only just that these lands, which represent some of the finest coal lands left in British Columbia, should be returned to the people of British Columbia rather than be left to the mercy of an Order in Council from the Cabinet.

As we consider the need to continue this debate, I believe it is important to perhaps pay tribute to the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) who, more than anyone else, has helped keep this issue alive, not only here in this House of Commons, but also right across Canada. By his campaigning for the cause of the prairie farmers and for the cause of the small communities across the Prairies he has done a great service to people all across Canada. We of this Party believe that an injury to one part of the nation is an injury to the entire nation. We will not see harm done to the fabric of prairie communities, because those communities will not be destroyed without that having an adverse effect on the total fabric of the nation.

I believe it is important, then, Mr. Speaker, that we have a chance to postpone any final vote on this legislation until the farmers have had an opportunity to appear and voice their views. I urge the Government again, in the words of our House Leader, to split this Bill. I would like to read a letter written by that Hon. Member on May 19 which indicates our basic position, and I quote:

Dear Mr. Minister:

It is the opinion of the New Democratic Party that Bill C-155 is an unacceptable omnibus Bill that must not proceed in its current form. At second reading, Members of Parliament are required to vote on the principle of the legislation. With only a single vote, Bill C-155 would require Members to pass judgement on three distinct and vital issues. Attempts to speed legislation through the House in this form have not proven successful in the past and they result in unnecessary confrontations in the Chamber.

We propose this basic division of Bill C-155

1. Upgrading rail transportation

2. Releasing coal lands

3. Grain freight rates

It is not possible to deal sensibly with legislation that interlinks these complex issues. Our initiative prompting a vote at the first reading stage of Bill C-155 indicated our dismay at the Minister of Transport's comments outside the House which foretold the intention of the Government to proceed with an omnibus Bill.

Our House Leader concluded by saying:

I am available to meet and discuss this with yourself and the House Leader for the Official Opposition and await your convening such a meeting.

The Hon. Members of our Party, Mr. Speaker, would still appreciate this kind of consideration from the Government. This Bill should be split. It deals with three separate principles. We should not be asked to deal with all of them at the present time. I feel there is a need for continued debate on Bill C-155. Our Party does not want to vote on it now. I therefore urge Hon. Members not to accept the motion that the question be now put.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the House ready for the question? The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse).

Western Grain Transportation Act

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is with no great pleasure that I rise tonight to speak at the end of the debate on Bill C-155.

This Bill does three things. It does away with the historic Crow rate, which is a right that has existed for Canadian farmers since 1897, a right which existed to attract people into parts of this country which were far from cheap ocean transport, without a great deal going for them in terms of climate.

As well this Bill has some proposals to improve the transportation system of this country, which I do not believe anyone is arguing about. There were some arguments put forward by some Hon. Members of my Party to point out better ways of spending the same amount of money; ways which would retain more control of the CPR and CNR and work toward the good of the people of Canada, ways which would get more "bang for the bucks", so to speak.

The third part of the Bill which is before us deals with the Dominion coal lands, a block of coal which has a current value of some $480 billion.

As the agricultural spokesperson for my Party, I considered at this stage of the debate of doing a thorough analysis—and I have the notes here—of what this kind of proposal does to farmers in western Canada, eastern Canada and in central Canada. It forces grain producers to give up some privileges to livestock producers in the way that it shifts production of livestock from one corner of the country to another in a vain attempt to give the impression that there is some economic development going on because of this policy. However, I have decided to use what time remains to me, Mr. Speaker, not to talk about what this policy does to the farmers of this country, but what it does to us all as Canadians.

Since this is the principal stage of debate where we should speak about principles I believe it is time to take a few moments to reflect on what the railway and transportation policy has attempted to do in this country. We have a kind of geography from which it is very nearly impossible to carve a country, Mr. Speaker. This was not a place where you would look at a map, understand the geography and decide that this is where a country should be. It makes absolutely no sense, geographically, economically or politically to have a country where we have this country of ours, Canada. It is held together because we are a stubborn race which insists on imposing East-West guidelines, East-West transportation and East-West communications, in spite of a more natural tendency for trade, communication and our social activities to go North-South.

What this proposal does is cut one of the fibres which holds this country together. It is a policy which was used to populate the West, the Prairies. It is a policy which we are now watching this Government abandon. It is an important move, Mr. Speaker, because it says to the people of Canada that a promise is no longer a promise and a deal is no longer a deal. It is killing the trust which has to exist if this country is going to continue as a country. It is taking away the one basic policy which held western Canada together, which created an incentive for people to go and populate that area. What is happening is very similar to what would happen if some Government someday—God help us from such a Government—came along and said, "We have done all the economic studies. Bilingualism costs the country so many millions of dollars, so let us do away with bilingualism". The reasoning and logic is very similar here. The Government has brought in some economic thinkers who do not understand what makes the country tick, what holds it together, why it exists. It has looked at a very narrow item, has decided it is costly and therefore it should go. It has ignored what that does to the other minorities which exist in this country, not only Francophone minorities, but the Indian people who also had deals which were supposed to last into perpetuity, as long as the rivers shall flow and the grass shall grow. Here we are taking a proposition that was to last into perpetuity and the Government is saying, "We do not like it, we will break it and not pay any attention to that part of the country. We will give up on the East-West ties that bind this country together and introduce a policy the economics of which will force us to trade in a more North-South pattern". If this policy is implemented, transportation from western Canada will no longer have an economic reason to go through the St. Lawrence Seaway, it will go south to the Mississippi River system. It will take away jobs from the people of the central part of the country where they are now, and there is no way this country can survive such a policy.

This Bill should not pass second reading tonight. It needs more time. Therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper):

That this House do now adjourn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Call in the Members.

Madam Speaker: The motion is defeated.

Mr. Benjamin: A point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: Would the Hon. Member resume his seat, please? It is past eleven o'clock and according to Standing Order 45 I must now go to the motion to adjourn the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: He voted and he was not entitled to do so.

Mr. de Jong: Madam Speaker, he was not entitled to vote.

Madam Speaker: Order. I will hear the Hon. Member's point of order tomorrow. I cannot hear him tonight. The question, therefore, is that this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Benjamin: One of the Liberals voted improperly, and that is what I am talking about. He came in after.

An Hon. Member: What is going on?

Madam Speaker: It is eleven o'clock.

Mr. Benjamin: I cannot help that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: It is past eleven o'clock. I must now go to this motion.

Mr. Nielsen: A point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I can hear points of order tomorrow, I can hear points of order tomorrow. It is now eleven o'clock and I must go—

Mr. Nielsen: A point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I will hear them tomorrow. It is past eleven o'clock. I must now, according to Standing Order 45, go to the motion that this House do now adjourn, and hear the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall).

Mr. Nielsen: A point of order, Madam Speaker; a point of order.

Madam Speaker: I just told the Hon. Member that it is past eleven o'clock and I will hear his point of order tomorrow.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: I am sorry, I did not recognize the Hon. Member. I have now told him that I cannot hear his point of order tonight; I will hear it tomorrow. The Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East.

Mr. Nielsen: A point of order.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East has the floor.

Mr. Nielsen: A point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member must understand that my dilemma is not that I do not want to hear the Hon. Member's point of order. I do, but it is past eleven o'clock. In all fairness I have to go now—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: —to what the Standing Orders indicate that I should do, that this House do now adjourn. I must hear, in all fairness, for the time he has allocated to him, the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, time and time again you have heard points of order; time and time again you have heard points of order.

Mr. Stevens: He has a point of order, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, time and time again you have heard points of order. Madam Speaker, I have two very straightforward points of order.

Some Hon. Members: No way.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I have a point of order.

● (2305)

Madam Speaker: Order. It is past 11 o'clock. Points of order may be dealt with tomorrow. I refused to hear the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) on a point of order. I cannot hear the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I have to be fair.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, it pertains to the vote. There are two very simple points of debate; two very brief, calm, simple points to make. One pertains to the vote of a Member whom the Hon. Member for Regina West saw come into the House after the vote had started. I think he should be heard. The second point is, with great respect, that despite my excellent French, I did not hear the translation of the number of the vote on each side. I would like, Madam Speaker, to hear the numbers in both official languages, and I think the Hon. Member for Regina West should be heard with respect to the illegality of the vote.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Normally this ought to have been translated. Although the numbers were given to me by the Clerk only in French, the yeas 91 and the nays, 120, I did say in English that the motion was defeated. I will now hear the Hon. Member for Regina West on the supposed irregularity on the vote.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, if it was an 11 o'clock adjournment, then the result of the vote was announced after 11 o'clock. The Hon. Member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ostiguy) literally crawled in on his hands and knees during the vote, and recorded his vote. I do not give a darn whether it is after 11 o'clock or not, it is an improperly recorded vote, purely and simply.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member need not make a speech about it. I did not see the Hon. Member.

[Translation]

Could the Hon. Member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ostiguy) perhaps tell me whether he entered the House when the vote was already under way?

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Yes, Madam Speaker. When I entered the House, the vote had already started. The bus I took at the Confederation Building to come up to the House was a few minutes late. I would therefore ask the Chair to delete my name from the list of Members who participated in the vote.

Madam Speaker: The vote of the Hon. Member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot is therefore struck from the list of Members who voted against the motion, and consequently, the number of nays is 119.

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—ACQUISITION OF CAST SHIPPING GROUP—GOVERNMENT APPROVAL. (B) POSSIBILITY OF FREIGHT RATE WAR ON ATLANTIC SHIPPING ROUTES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, I have the peculiar responsibility now to address a question that I posed some time ago. Because of events that took place earlier today at an in camera committee meeting, I rose in my place at five o'clock—I will wait, Madam Speaker, until Hon. Members have gone back to the barbeque to which Conservative Members were not invited—

● (2310)

An Hon. Member: And the bar.

Mr. Forrestall: And the bar which Conservative Members have been denied for some time now.

As I was saying, Madam Speaker, before it got rather noisy—

An Hon. Member: You are always drunk.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Forrestall: Madam Speaker, I rise only to indicate to you that at five o'clock this afternoon I had indicated that because of the events of this morning at an in camera meeting of the Standing Committee on Transport, during which Members of the Standing Committee on Transport were afforded a full and very frank explanation by Dr. LeClair, the President of Canadian National Railways, of the circumstances involving their negotiations with CAST for its takeover and assumption of business, for me to rise and engage in debate during this traditional period of time might in fact compromise or jeopardize the possibility of any further negotiations.

As a result of that and as a result of the very frank and full exchange we had, and while we are not entirely happy but are more than satisfied with the level of exchange—and I am sorry and apologize to you, Madam Speaker, that you were not advised of this earlier—at five o'clock this afternoon, I sought and received unanimous consent to withdraw my question. I simply advise you of that now, Madam Speaker, and that I tend to regret a comment that was made a moment ago.

FORESTRY—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF COMMITTEE'S TERMS OF REFERENCE. (B) REQUEST FOR EARLY REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, my rising this evening is pursuant to the question which I asked on June 15 of this year, and I wish to expand somewhat on my presentation of that evening.

Robert Keen, Director of Statistics in the Canadian Forestry Service, has said that of all the developed countries in the world Canada has the poorest forest inventory. Canada's forests are subject to a dangerous myth; the myth that our trees will go on forever no matter what we do.

Of the 800,000 hectares of timber the industry harvests each year, a mere one-quarter is artificially replanted or seeded. Given that another quarter or so of that will regenerate reasonably well on its own, the depressing conclusion is that only half of the cut forest each year has a prayer of returning one day. Adding to that the current rash of forest fires, insect invasion and the linking of air pollution, particularly acid rain, to the damage and death of our forests, the industry is in serious trouble.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) recently attended the Canada-U.S. Forestry Services meeting. This attests to the fact that acid rain is a growing contributing factor to the demise of our forests. The major contemporary problem with Canada's forests is a severely reduced supply of harvestable timber. The following quote places the problem in context:

> The forests provide a renewable resource. Until the last decade, however, Canadians have often regarded forests as something to be exploited and have depended too heavily on natural regeneration rather than scientific management for optimal regeneration. We are now suffering the results of this attitude. Much of Canada's high-quality, old-growth forest has been harvested; much that remains accessible is overmature and defective. Fires, insects, disease and wind destroy two-thirds as much timber as is harvested annually. Local shortages of commercially suitable wood have developed in every province in recent years, and conflicts of interest over land use are increasing. One-eighth of Canada's productive forest area has deteriorated to the point where huge tracts lie devastated, unable to regenerate a merchantable crop within the next 60 to 80 years. Each year some 200,000 to 400,000 ha of valuable forest are being added to this shameful waste.

• (2315)

These are disturbing statements. We must come to the realization that the gradual deforestation of Canada will have serious effects on the economy if it is not reversed.

In my home Province of New Brunswick—and I am repeating this for the fourth time in this House—the forest industry is the largest. Some 30 per cent of New Brunswick's employment and 36 per cent of the Province's gross domestic product are forest related. Our Province's forest industry has been devastated by the spruce budworm. The spruce budworm is the most destructive forest insect pest in Canada; the annual wood loss cause by the budworm exceeds that from any other cause. In southern New Brunswick in the 1970s there was a loss of between six million and ten million cord of softwood. This approaches an eight to ten year supply of wood for the principal consumer and employer in that area.

Because of these factors I believe it is imperative that we keep our forest alive. To reduce or deny protection to the forest from the budworm would only have very adverse economic effects on the Province. The basic thrust of the forest protection plan in New Brunswick is to prevent the insect from harvesting the trees, and to permit man to do the harvesting.

The use of pesticides and herbicides is absolutely vital if we want to keep our industry going. These chemicals have been used in New Brunswick during the past 31 years with no proven cases of injurious health effects. Extensive studies are constantly being done to make sure that the safest chemicals coupled with the safest levels of application are used. While everyone associated with the forest industry would prefer not to use chemical insecticides to control the budworm, the consensus view of most experts at this time appears to be that there is no acceptable substitute presently available.

The provincial Department of Natural Resources, like myself, is anxious to see that this issue of forest management is pursued. The industry is using the facilities available to it now, but we need more research and genuine interest in this field. To let a $24 billion a year industry deteriorate slowly, while we watch, would certainly put this country in an economic situation from which it may not recover. We have a renewable resource in its forest products and spinoffs which has the potential of making Canada great again. I urge the Minister of the Environment to actively seek a program which will save this industry now; save it from an extinction that will inevitably come about if nothing is done.

The very broad base on which this industry must be studied has been pretty clearly outlined. We need to address the problem of insects, blight, disease, fire and the lack of reforestation. We must address a long-term policy, bearing in mind that those non-productive lands today may not be productive again for 50 years. And if we add to those lands a million acres a year, as we are presently doing, it is inevitable that somewhere down the road all of Canada will suffer from the economic suicide which we are committing.

It is, therefore, the responsibility of the Government of Canada to take the lead in a problem which is common to virtually every Province in Canada. To take this lead, Madam Speaker—the first step—I urge the Minister again to please make a meaningful reference to the House of Commons committee on forestry so that it may study, hear evidence and reach conclusions as to what Canada can do to preserve and increase the potential which the forest industry has exhibited for so many years.

[Translation]

Mr. Denis Ethier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member inferred that the Minister had been lax in meeting the challenge presented by the forestry industry. That is absolutely false. In the debate held on May 30 in this House, the Minister was able to describe what this Government has done to resolve the most pressing problems in the forestry industry. And it has done a great deal. One example is the development of a forestry strategy for Canada, published in 1981. This situational analysis also provided short-and long-term approaches to meeting the national forestry challenge.

About a year later, in August 1982, the Minister signed a new federal-provincial agreement for the development of forestry resources in Nova Scotia. Under the agreement, the federal Government will be spending $27.8 million to develop private woodlands in the province. A few weeks later, the Minister became responsible for subsidiary agreements in the forestry industry, previously administered by DREE, and for the allocation of $70 million to a wide range of forestry projects, for the year 1982-83. He also undertook to negotiate similar agreements with the other Provinces. To that end, he published the first major plan of action for the implementation of the Canadian forestry strategy, namely the policy statement entitled "Summary Plan for Forest Renewal". That document will serve as a background for the negotiation of agreements with the other Provinces. Such agreements will lead to a gradual increase in federal expenditures to the point where they are expected to reach in 1987 a minimum $130 million each year.

The Government has implemented a second plan of action with respect to its Canadian forestry strategy. What is involved here is a support program for the six forestry colleges and faculties in Canada. I am proud to repeat today that this Government has committed $15.5 million up to 1987 to help forestry faculties upgrade the level of education and research at the graduate and post-graduate levels.

I ought to mention a third action plan which has just been launched with respect to research and development. First of all, the Government and several provinces have signed forestry research coordination agreements which have already enabled us to identify and coordinate forestry research requirements and priorities. I am pleased as well to point out that, thanks to the Government's Special Recovery Program, the basic research infrastructure of the Canadian Forestry Service will be expanded earlier than expected. An investment of nearly $60 million has been earmarked for expanding research laboratories in Victoria, Sault Ste. Marie and Quebec City, and for building new research facilities in Fredericton.

Madam Speaker, I conclude by saying that the Minister of Environment (Mr. Roberts) has certainly not wasted any time to meet the forestry challenge, and that the Government has established a solid basis for the major action programs which are needed.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock.

At 11.23 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DETERMINATION OF PREVIOUS QUESTION

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I understand that there have been some questions about the statement that I made in the House about the previous question. I would like to clarify that statement for the benefit of Hon. Members. On June 21 I did say that the motion on the previous question is not closure because, after the House votes on the previous question, the debate on the main question will, of course, be resumed. I should have added that it will be resumed, but only if that order is revived.

I would like to quote from the study in the procedural paper which we have prepared on the previous question, explaining what the previous question is all about. It states, "It is designed to limit debate, since until it is decided, it precludes all amendment to the main question."

That is the second point I had made on June 21, that is, that when the previous question is put, this is done only in order to prevent the proposing of new amendments, and that is the exact object of the previous question, to preclude further amendment and to deal immediately with the motion. If carried, thus resolving that the original question be now put, it forces the House to an immediate decision on the main question, in accordance with Standing Order 56(2), which states:

> If the previous question be resolved in the affirmative, the original question is to be put forthwith without any amendment or debate.

I hope this clarifies the statement that I made in the course of some points of order, I believe, which were raised on the previous question.

Mr. Lewis: I rise on a point of clarification, Madam Speaker. We were in fact wondering about your remarks and trying to relate them to the rules. In other words, this form of closure that the Government is using will mean that, immediately after the vote on the previous question, Your Honour will then call the vote on second reading unless, of course, the Government should reconsider and negative the vote on the previous question.

If there should be a change of heart on this closure matter, and the Government should vote against the motion of the Hon. Member, which was not moved by an Hon. Member on the front benches, if it were in fact to change its mind and negative the motion, Your Honour is saying that second reading debate would then be revived the next day and that at that point there would be a chance for further debate. However, the way it stands now, if the Government votes for closure by approving the motion, it will then cut off debate.

• (1110)

Madam Speaker: Well, that is where I think the Hon. Member has been a bit responsible for the confusion by calling the previous question "closure".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Be fair. I was answering the matter of closure in my remarks rather than really explaining what the previous question was, so that is why the statement was not complete. What the Hon. Member says is right; if the matter of the previous question is resolved in the affirmative, then we proceed to take action on the main motion.

Mr. Lewis: Thank you very much for the clarification, Madam Speaker. I am sure the people of Canada will call it closure.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: Briefly, Madam Speaker, last evening after the taking of the vote a question arose regarding whether the vote was accurate or not. I wonder if you would be kind enough to take into consideration that, if a point of order arises out of the vote itself, the vote is not complete until the point of order has been heard and ruled upon, notwithstanding the time of day.

Madam Speaker: Well, you have to accommodate and adjust several Standing Orders. The point of order was raised once the vote proceeding was finished.

Mr. Deans: Well, we were trying to—

Madam Speaker: Yes. When the result of the vote had been given, everything seemed to be terminated as far as the Chair was concerned. Then the point of order was raised. The Chair assumed, perhaps wrongly, but since it was past eleven o'clock, the Chair assumed that the point of order was dealing with something else. That is not surprising because several points of order had been brought up during the day.

The Chair has the responsibility to move the House from one proceeding to the other. In all fairness to the Members who wanted to participate in the adjournment debate, at eleven o'clock the Chair had to give these Members that time. The Chair did not want to take away any of their time. Therefore, at eleven o'clock, since I assumed the point of order would be about something else, not about the vote—the vote was finished and it seemed all right—the Chair protected the three Members who were to speak after eleven o'clock.

The Member's point is well taken, but he also has to remember that once a proceeding is started it is not to be interrupted, and that goes for votes. The voting procedure, once it has started, should not really be interrupted, and the Hon. Member will remember we did have a problem with that at some point.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I would not want anyone to take my raising this as in any way a criticism of the way it was handled. My concern is that we should know the procedure to follow. I can understand that at the adjournment hour, whatever it is, there is confusion. My only concern is that I want it to be clear that, if there is a point of order arising out of the taking of the vote, the vote is not complete until after the point of order has been heard. I think that is what the Chair said.

The timing is sometimes very difficult because it is almost impossible to be heard on a point of order until the Chair has heard the vote. We cannot tell how many people have voted one way or the other until the announcement is made. Therefore we cannot tell whether the totals the Chair has added up include the Member who voted improperly, or not. My only point is that in order to deal with it in a fair and equitable way, we must wait until the announcement of the vote takes place to determine whether the Chair has included the Member or Members who have voted improperly, before we can legitimately raise the point of order that someone voted who should not have done so. Therefore we must raise it after the announcement because, if it were done prior to the announcement, we would be prejudging whether or not that Member had been counted.

Madam Speaker: That is perfectly true. However, I must tell the Hon. Member that in the course of proceedings upon taking the vote I could not allow any points of order. The Chair must wait until that proceeding is completed. That is what we did last night.

The Hon. Member is raising a point which I recognize and take into account. I do not think it is necessary to expound a principle on this. The Chair always listens to points of order. At any rate, had I not listened to points of order last night past eleven o'clock, we could have dealt with it again this morning. We could have had the record of the vote corrected. It was not definitive because something could have been done about it. It was neater to have done it last night, and I thank the Hon. Members who raised the point last night.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed, from Tuesday, June 21, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. Pepin that Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport, and the Motion of Mr. Lachance (p. 26521).

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, consensus or closure—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I believe the Hon. Member has already spoken in the debate on the previous question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. There may be some confusion as to the right of the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski)—

Mr. Smith: There is no confusion. He is on the list.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I anticipated this situation, if the Hon. Member will listen for a moment. It was obvious the other day when the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) moved his motion that the Chair reserved putting it to the House at that point. Debate continued on the main motion and the Hon. Member for Mackenzie, at that stage of debate, wes recognized to speak to the main motion. In the course of his remarks he moved the adjournment of the debate. The vote on that was proceeded with later in the day. Following the vote, the motion proposed to the House was read from the Chair at that point. It is at that point that it was formally before the House. Therefore the Hon. Member for Mackenzie was not addressing his remarks to the previous question but to the main motion. The Chair has no choice but to recognize the Hon. Member for Mackenzie to speak to the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Rosemont.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, of course, I accept that ruling.

Mr. Epp: Sit down then.

Mr. Smith: I want to be fair, and I hope Hon. Members will be fair to me. I rose because I was going by a list of those who have spoken on the previous question which was provided to me by the Table.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. There is no such list, either formally or informally. The Table officers are at the disposal of the Chair. They are the advisers of the Chair. While they may well establish certain lists from time to time to assist the Chair as to who has spoken and who may want to speak, that in no way should be regarded as an official list. I trust the Parliamentary Secretary appreciates that point. It has no formal standing in the House. The only list by which Hon. Members ought to be guided is the list of speakers printed in Hansard every day.

• (1120)

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order on this last comment made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader. I think he owes an apology to the Table because hie is impugning people who cannot speak back. I think that is most improper in this assembly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I appreciate the Hon. Member's assistance. The Chair does not feel slighted in any way.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): No, the Table.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Or the Table. The Chair dealt with the matter of the Table officers. These incidents may happen. I think the Chair owed an explanation to the Parliamentary Secretary and to the whole House. I hope that situation is clear for the future. I do not think there was any undue or harsh reflection on the Table officers. I am sure it was not meant that way.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, just to clarify the matter, I am in no way reflecting upon the Table whatsoever. I simply mentioned that I had gone by a list which had been provided by them. I am not suggesting that it has any official status. If the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) would like to look at this list, if he would like me to table it, I would be happy to do so. I am casting no reflections whatsoever. I think it was a misunderstanding that has been cleared up. For anyone to cast aspersions on anybody in this matter would be unfortunate and unnecessary.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): May I have one final say on this matter? It is obvious that Hon. Members from time to time seek assistance or direction from the Table officers who are extremely happy and glad to co-operate and be helpful. But Hon. Members should be very careful in their remarks regarding the Table officers. They are not part of the debate. Their conduct is not a matter for reflection. The Chair deals with those matters, and I hope that we can now proceed with the debate.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, you will notice that I started off my remarks by referring to consensus or closure. I did that for a reason. I anticipated the Parliamentary Secretary or someone else might raise a question, and I wanted to put at least that much of my speech on the record in the event that a decision might be rendered otherwise.

However, I thank the Parliamentary Secretary at this particular time for rising. If there was ever any doubt in anybody's mind as to whether or not this was closure, his intervention indicating that I no longer have any right to speak indicates to me, and to anyone else listening to or reading my remarks, that he was under the impression I could no longer speak. That, to me, is closure. They cut off speaking. They cut off the possibility for amendment. That is closure.

There are different forms of closure in the House, as the Parliamentary Secretary well knows, having studied the rules very carefully. He has tried to make use of them from time to time. There is such a thing as agreed timing. There was no agreement from this side that we should cut off debate.

What was the one intervention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) in this whole debate? It was a notice of motion for closure.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Korchinski: The Minister of Agriculture is cutting off spokesmen for people involved in agriculture by saying that we will close off debate at a particular point. What form it was to take, he did not indicate, but the form that was taken now is a pretty good indication—

An Hon. Member: Louder.

• (1125)

Mr. Korchinski: I might have to speak louder for it to sink in. I hope it does. Eventually it will, I can assure you. I can vouch for that. The Hon. Member makes smart-aleck remarks at this point. That is the only kind of interjection he makes. I often wonder why the Members opposite, the bulk of whom are from Quebec, are so silent. Do they not know anything about the subject? Is that why the Member asks me to speak louder? Those Members do not even sit in the House. They just take off and flock in at the time of a vote. They flock around their Leader.

Is there no one opposite who will take up the challenge to debate? We had an interjection from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) who said that they would impose closure. Is that an indication that there is consensus? This Government promised it would not move on the Crow until there was a consensus. We have now reached the point where the Government is imposing closure. Is that consensus?

Do you, Mr. Speaker, feel that we should not introduce any further amendments? Do you feel that the issue is not large enough? Do you think this is only a regional problem? It affects the West Coast and it affects the Prairies. I often wonder why they call it the Prairies, because we have a lot of forests, rivers, and so on. It also affects central Canada, Quebec, and the Maritimes. It has very broad implications.

Quebec Members were very disturbed in the past that the Government was going to move on the Crow. What has silenced them? Did any one of them rise and give us an indication why they will support closure? The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) owes the Members of this House and all Canadians an explanation. What is he going to do? Where are we moving to? What guarantee do we have from the Government if we move by closure—and I repeat closure—

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wish the Hon. Member would check Hansard, because Madam Speaker ruled very clearly that this motion was in order and that it was not a closure motion. Madam Speaker made that very clear. The Hon. Member can check that in Hansard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): That is not a point of order. We are proceeding with debate. That is a matter of opinion at this stage.

Mr. Korchinski: A rose by any other name would smell as sweet. When historians look back at this debate, they will ask what happened to the Crow. They will ask whether, after 85 years, it died of old age or because it was no longer of any use. History will record that the Crow was choked. Debate on the Crow was choked. It can be called choking, or it can be called closure. I will call it closure. I will tell the people of Canada that it is closure, because that is what it is. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Flis) confirmed that. Closure is taking place even though many, many problems will arise.

• (1130)

To attend this debate which began last week, I had to absent myself from a hearing on rail line abandonment. Rail line abandonment was occurring simultaneously with the attempt to change the Crow to charge the farmer more for transporting grain.

In addition to paying a higher price for moving grain from a point further from their farms, farmers will have to deal with rail line abandonment. If you can believe it, Mr. Speaker, a 13-mile long rail line will be abandoned so that CN would then have to transfer grain an extra 146 miles to get to the same point. Now that is economy! If anyone thinks that we have no reason to continue debating this question, think again, because that is precisely what is happening in the West.

That extra mileage charge that the farmer must add to his cost of operation, is that part of the blending formula of which the Minister speaks? The Minister does not speak. He owes it to the House to tell us whether or not he has made a deal with Members of the NDP. Members of the NDP kept telling us that the Conservatives were making a deal that would make paying either the farmer or the railway optional. What kind of a deal has been cooked up with Members of the NDP? We thought they said they were opposed to it. Now we hear on the CBC that they have made a deal. I wonder what is going on over there between those two. Now who is making the deal, and what are they making a deal for? I thought they were opposed to it. If they are opposed to it, then there is no deal. But what was all that about? The Minister owes it to the House to tell us whether there is or was a deal, or whether there will be a deal with the NDP. What is going on?

Last night we heard from the agricultural spokesman for the NDP. We had to root him out a little bit, but he got up. He was up, but he never commented on the kind of wheeling and dealing that was going on.

An Hon. Member: With the man with the green hat.

Mr. Korchinski: Yes, someone has mentioned the man with the green hat. Instead of wearing a green hat, that Minister should be wearing an engineer's cap from now on. He went to Winnipeg to meet with the rail people there. They all gleefully rubbed their hands together and took a few wonderful pictures, and the people from the railway said, "Well, it is not quite good enough, but it is a step in the right direction." They said this as they smiled all the way to the bank. Of course they should smile because of the guaranteed income, and because Members of the NDP are making deals.

The Minister should change his hats occasionally, I think, if only in the interest of sanitation. Outside of that, I think that maybe an engineer's cap would suit him well.

I think that if the Minister goes to the West he might find out what effect the actions of the Government will have on the West. We in the West have no cost guarantees. We have no guarantees on what the railways will do with their books. Who will inspect those books? What will be the costs?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

Some Hon. Members: More, more. Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair will put the question. Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member to continue his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I too rise today to add my remarks to the debate on the motion to call the previous question which, by any other term, is clearly closure, because when we vote on this we must move immediately to the main motion on second reading, and that is the end of it.

There has been much debate over this issue, Sir, but I think it is clear that everyone has been trying to convince Government Members to change their views with respect to Bill C-155. I shall try to do this by showing them that it is simply improper within the Canadian context. Bill C-155 is not the Canadian way to solve the problem.

I am sure that Government Members realize that this Party is trying to represent the broad range of views and interests which a Bill like this must reflect. For example, there are the grain producers. The amendments that we fought for, such as the safety net and the removal of the cap, were designed to protect the legitimate interests of the grain producers in the West. But there are other legitimate interests in the West because the West is not a homogeneous, one product region.

There is also the livestock industry, the cow-calf producers, Canadian men and women who own their own farms. There are feedlot operators and other good Canadians who pay their fair share of taxes and more. There are the livestock processors and there are also those who grow specialty crops, Mr. Speaker.

We seem to think that this Bill will automatically cover all grain in the West. Well, it will not. It covers only Canadian Wheat Board crops, of which there are only six. A few more have been added, but there are many specialty crops that are not covered. Canadian farmers, people who have been in Canada for four and five generations and who have put their whole lives and hearts and souls into the country, will be blocked because of this Bill. They will be blocked because the process is wrong, Mr. Speaker.

We stand for the future. We recognize that there will be changes, and therefore we have addressed our attention to seeing that those changes are made with the best interests of the West and, therefore, of the whole country at heart, because as the regions are strong the whole country will be strong. In this country, there is no reason why every region cannot be strong. The Atlantic region with its fisheries and forests and minerals, Quebec with its enormous hydro-electric power, Ontario with its manufacturing base, and the West with its millions and millions of acres of land and the water that flows from the mountains, these regions can all be strong. We can produce food and livestock, Mr. Speaker, for the entire world. We have barely tapped our potential. Yet this Bill will block that potential, and the Liberal and NDP strategy to put this Bill through will just finish it off.

Contrast our position with that of the NDP, Mr. Speaker. Members of the NDP only really represent one group, the National Farmers' Union. That is a small group of farmers. There are over 150,000 farmers in the West; the NFU, as I recall, has about 3,000 to 3,500 members. When I saw the books of the NFU two years ago, it was $750,000 in debt. It cannot even run its own organization properly, just like the Liberals who are running the country. They both have debts that are truly enormous.

What else have Members of the NDP done about this, Mr. Speaker? They have been betraying the West since 1980. The constitutional proposal was a direct attack on the West, and NDP Members backed it. The National Energy Program was a direct attack upon Canadian companies, upon people who are building the nation and paying taxes to try to make Canada a world power in terms of economic strength and feeding the world, and they backed that Bill. We have since seen the decline and the absolute demise of the oil industry in the West.

What about Canagrex? In spite of the fact that we have had the experience of VIA Rail as a Crown corporation, the experience of Canadair, which is costing union labourers $1.5 billion, the experience of de Havilland—

An Hon. Member: What about the Wheat Board?

Mr. Thacker: I could talk about the Wheat Board if the Hon. Member wants to deal with it. What about Petro-Canada? That corporation has cost Canadians about $7 billion.

An Hon. Member: What has that to do with the Crow?

Mr. Thacker: Ordinary citizens, Mr. Speaker, have difficulty accepting the fact that they have less money in their pockets and less disposable income because of the over 300 Crown corporations. Yet Members of the New Democratic and Liberal Parties got together and created another Crown corporation for agriculture.

Sir, this Bill represents a problem for the West solely because of inflation. At one half cent per ton mile for 70 years, the railways made money, the grain people made money, and there was no distortion affecting the livestock industry or, if there was, it was small enough that the industry was able to cope with it, as were the processors. As a result, people made money for 70 years. Then came inflation which we know was caused by the deficits. The Government over-stimulated the economy this year to the extent of $30 billion. Those deficits lead to inflation and high interest rates, which then lead to collapse. This is exactly what was done dozens of times throughout history. It became a serious problem and the Minister, quite properly, put together a group of 60 or 70 of the finest minds in the West, men who work all the time in agriculture, and they came up with the Gilson proposals. Their suggestion was for 81 per cent to the producers and 19 per cent to the railways.

● (1140)

Mr. Pepin: That is true.

Mr. Thacker: Then the Minister came back with his February statement, called the Pepin proposals. They payment was reduced from 81-19 to 50-50. The groups in the West who would suffer under this distortion said that they could live with it. But then an entirely different group of people, the Liberal Quebec caucus, became involved, and politics entered into it. They said the payment must go 100 per cent to the railway. The NDP agreed absolutely; they want 100 per cent of the payment to go to the railways. It amounts to a guaranteed annual income to one of the largest corporations and perhaps the most wealthy corporation in the world. The NDP wants the payment to go there.

The solution to the western problem was arrived at in the West when some of the top minds got together, but because of politics, and because of the Liberal caucus, it was destroyed, and again the NDP is backing the Government.

We must have this Bill changed, Mr. Speaker. I plead with Liberal Members to change their minds. The Department of Agriculture has filed extensive information which shows that a payment to the producers will not adversely affect Quebec. The Minister of Agriculture in Ontario has said that his studies show that it would not affect Ontario either. For the Quebec caucus to direct that payment be made 100 per cent to the railways rather than to the producers, in the face of the document filed by the Minister of Agriculture, which shows that it will have no effect whatsoever, is simply wrong.

I plead with my colleagues opposite to go to work on the Cabinet and have this changed. If that payment is made to the producers it gives them some freedom of choice. When they deliver their grain or decide what to produce, they may decide not to ship it by railway but by truck. That would mean that hundreds and hundreds of Canadian owned and operated trucking companies will buy trucks manufactured in Ontario. Farmers will haul the grain to the central railway locations, and trains could go back and forth on a rotation of seven days at the most. By removing the cap at the same time, we could export 40 million tonnes of grain.

Mr. Blaikie: You want to get rid of the branch lines. You have just admitted it.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, the NDP wants to keep every branch line the way it is. Members of that Party forget that the branch lines were designed for the horse and buggy days, when a horse could only walk 4.5 miles and back in a day. That is why there was a town and village every nine miles. Now we have roads and we have trucks which can drive 30 or 40 miles quite easily.

Mr. Blaikie: You want to get rid of those towns? Is that what you are saying?

Mr. Thacker: Under the Crow those towns have been going down for years and years. They were designed for the horse and buggy days, but now, with cars and trucks, people are choosing to drive to the larger centres, and there are centres every 30 or 40 miles. That is as natural as growing from a child to an adult, but the NDP is stuck with its adolescent ideology. Members of the NDP dream that if everyone is equal, somehow things are going to be more Christian, more fair. They want equality of result, but we know from the nature of man that some people are smarter, some are more musical than others. No matter what test is applied, some people are better off and some are worse off.

We say that we need a fully competitive system, and that is what the payment to the producer will bring about, Mr. Speaker. It will bring true competition to the West. If a railway gets out of line people will just switch to trucks, to pipelines or anything else, in the future. In that way we will ensure the most efficient operation because the bottom line is that we have to put a bushel of grain at tidewater competitive to the United States, Argentina, and Australia. Those countries are whipping us, Mr. Speaker. If we follow the logic of the NDP and the Liberals, we will be in the dark ages forever.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak because I have a particular interest in this Bill. There is an aspect of it which has not been given much attention, and that is its effect on Crown lands. This aspect has been completely ignored in the debate. I am surprised to find that the Government of British Columbia has indicated in a variety of ways that it would be very favourably disposed toward Members of the House from British Columbia who would agree that the Bill should go through.

In the mail I received the text of a statement made by the Minister of Transportation and Highways for the Province of British Columbia when he spoke in Vancouver about Bill C-155 and about the length of thus debate. Thanks to the ten-minute speech rule, a variety of aspects of the Bill can be brought to the attention of Canadians, and I think this is important.

We are trying to let it be known from one coast to the other that there are elements of this Bill which are dangerous. No one contests the fact that some changes must be made to the Crow rate. The Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) has stated on more than one occasion, and in a variety of places, the principles which guide the approach of this Party to the Bill.

This Bill is meant to ensure that the federal Government and the railways continue to provide a special low rate consistent with the Crowsnest Pass agreement to assist producers to compete with subsidized grain exporting nations. This is essential. Agriculture is the lifeblood of this country. We grew up in an agricultural domain. My parents moved out to central Canada from Nova Scotia in the latter years of the previous century because there was an opportunity there to grow grain. This is what made this country—grain and the railways. They have been inevitably interwoven with our history.

Now, not content with destroying Parliament, the Government has decided to destroy the very thing that makes the nation work, the combination of railways and agriculture.

The introduction of closure stinks, Mr. Speaker. Whatever you want to call it, it still stinks. That is what is being imposed, and that is what is destroying this House. When I was first elected it was a place where I felt I could serve with dignity. Because of the disrepute into which the House has fallen as a result of the Government, I am now finding that is almost—I hesitate to use the word—but it is almost a disgrace to serve in the House. The Government has destroyed Parliament's underpinnings in the procedural sense. Now it is set on destroying the country, and it has done a pretty good job of it up till now in other areas.

We are finding that in the matter of transportation the Government is determined to set East against West. I think that is an absolutely shocking performance for any so-called Government of Canada.

• (1150)

Another principle, which is recognized in the Bill but in a different way, is to provide fair compensation to the railways for moving grain in order to provide the necessary capital to maintain new and existing plant and equipment. It must be fair compensation, not total compensation. A full compensatory rate would make our products unsaleable in the world, Mr. Speaker. That is what we must recognize. Because of the size of this country the railways have a public responsibility to ensure that the railroad continues to exist and to serve this country.

I was deeply distressed when the passenger service across this country was eviscerated. That is the best word I can think of. Passenger service was absolutely eviscerated. I saw in something I was reading the other day that VIA Rail is now registering heavy losses. It should still be possible, Mr. Speaker, for people who wish to travel across this country by train to be able to do so. You cannot get any notion of the size of this country unless you are actually on the ground, travelling at normal speed across the land. I am appalled that the transportation system, as far as passengers are concerned, has been so downgraded by the Government. I remember it was a tricky method Government had for introducing VIA Rail. I am wondering if it still has any statutory basis. I rather think it does not. However, that is beside the point.

There is a need for railroads not just to carry our products across the country, but also to carry our people. Those who feel they have no time to spare, that they must fly, do not know what this country is all about. They do not know the extent of the fields on the Prairies because they have not gone through them either in a car or on a train.

The third principle is to guarantee producers an efficient, cost-effective, and reliable grain transportation system. We have all seen those yellow and red cars, the grain tankers, moving across the country. I was absolutely appalled to think that one of the Provinces had to chip in to produce some extra cars, that our rail system had been so downgraded that it could not produce those cars. A single Province, Alberta, had to produce additional cars to carry our grain produce.

There is a need for an efficient, cost-effective, and reliable grain transportation system. There is no question about that. However, Bill C-155 is not the way to do it.

There is a need to remove the distortion of the low freight rates in grain and oilseeds vis-à-vis processed products, and ensure that the natural advantage is retained. This is what has produced a great deal of the opposition in the West to this Bill, because this Bill does not do that.

Mr. Smith: Let's hear your solution.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The best solution that I can think of, Mr. Speaker, since we have heard a muttering from the Hon. Member opposite, is an election right now!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): That is the solution.

Mr. Epp: Let's go to the people.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Let us go to the people. That is what we are doing. That is the only device we have left to reach the people to explain the iniquity of this Bill.

Mr. Smith: What is your policy?

Mr. Bosley: No iniquity.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): That is right, we avoid iniquity. We are anti-iniquity.

Mr. Fisher: That is a good policy.

Mr. Epp: That is one you have not followed.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The fifth point which was brought up, Mr. Speaker, was to ensure a statutory freight rate for grain producers which preserves the benefit of the Crow and protects it from open-ended escalation. There are so many variable costs facing the farmer, Mr. Speaker, that he has to have at least one constant. He needs a constant price for moving his grain from the field to the port. That is absolutely essential. We have to get that message across. I am absolutely staggered to think that the Government, by one device or another, including full-page advertisements, has convinced people, simply because it has not told them the full truth, that these matters will be dealt with through this legislation and that the grain will flow in consequence of it.

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely astounded that this particular legislation should be the subject matter of an obvious Government strategy not only to muzzle Parliament through closure, but to muzzle its own Members through whatever means are available to the executive. It just defies belief that we have not heard the discharge of parliamentary responsibility to the respective constituents of those Liberal Members representing, first, rural ridings, and, second, ridings in which secondary manufacturing plays a vital part. It just boggles the mind that those Hon. Members, led by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), would remain silent on this issue. To say it does not affect Ontario is absolute nonsense. Of course it affects Ontario.

I will deal first of all, Sir, with that part of Ontario which has a food producing area, such as my riding. My riding is not unique. It shares a common interest with other ridings which are represented by my colleagues in the benches opposite. What could be the effect on these ridings? What about grain production? Prairie grain competes with the grain grown in the riding of Perth, in counties such as Kent, Lambton, Huron and Oxford, a multitude of counties throughout southwestern Ontario. We compete. This Bill obviously and directly affects western grain, its price and, therefore, affects the Ontario grain grower. I would like to hear, as I have heard from my colleagues from Ontario in this Party, from those Hon. Members opposite as to what effect they believe this legislation will have on their producers.

My riding of Perth produces more hogs than any other county in Canada. It has the second highest dairy production of any county in Canada. It has a high production of red meat, beef.

Mr. Smith: Bull.

Mr. Jarvis: The Hon. Member opposite says "bull". The difference between the bulls in Perth County and the Minister of Agriculture is that that bull is all show and Perth County is all production. That is the difference between the two bulls.

How would this legislation potentially affect meat production in Ontario? We would likely face a situation in which western producers would feed livestock and compete with Ontario hog producers and beef producers. There is nothing wrong with that competition. It is good healthy competition. What astonishes me is the silence of those Hon. Members opposite, and by their silence they ignore the fact of that competition. It is just unbelievable that the Minister of Agriculture, and some of his colleagues, knowledgeable colleagues in the Liberal backbenches, would not stand up and say this is where we see this competition flowing. And this is where we think some of the resolution of the problems will be. In my county, the hog producers have developed a large export market to Japan. I presume western producers might want part of that market, and we will compete. We have done so historically and we have both benefited from the very fact of competition.

● (1200)

What is the reaction opposite, Mr. Speaker? It is silence, and not only in the House; I have not heard one peep from one Liberal MP in their ridings, at public meetings or appearances in which they had a chance to speak about this issue. Not one word. It does not matter whether they agree with the position of the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski).

Mr. Pepin: "Positions".

Mr. Jarvis: That is not the issue, but they should speak on it. Well, the Minister is interrupting. Can he still speak on this motion?

Mr. Bosley: Certainly.

Mr. Jarvis: Well, it is second best after the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), who is obviously going to ignore his responsibility. The Minister wants to dispute my point. Let me talk about those ridings in Ontario in which secondary manufacturing is an important and vital part of our economy. This is not dissimilar to another situation regarding its potential effect on my riding. With one stroke of the pen that Government, by implementing the National Energy Program, stole thousands of jobs from my riding. There is no other word for it.

Mr. Fisher: Nonsense.

Mr. Jarvis: Someone says "nonsense". I defy him to come into my riding, stand up on a public platform and debate that issue with me. Half the audience will be unemployed skilled labour who were robbed of their jobs. He is invited to the County of Perth at any time, any place, on any platform to debate it.

If there is depression in the western agricultural economy, it will take jobs out of Stratford, indeed out of every manufacturing community in Ontario, and we can ill afford that. We have seen the economic and social tragedy of the NEP and we do not want to see it again, thank you very much.

We are talking about skilled people who want to work and contribute to their community. I invite any Member opposite to come into my riding and demonstrate—I hope he can prove me wrong—that this will not steal more jobs out of those ridings of central Canada in which manufacturing plays such a vital role. Members opposite are always welcome and if they can prove me wrong I will be the first to stand up and admit it.

There is another cost, Mr. Speaker. As I calculate these figures, Ontario's share of the cost to the Treasury is in the area of $1.5 billion over the fiscal years 1982-83 through 1985-86. Ontario pays roughly 40 per cent of federal revenues, so does it not strike you as odd that not one Member or Minister over there would stand up and try and defend that $1.5 billion cost?

Mr. Epp: They will never do it.

Mr. Jarvis: I remember the "what's a million?" line. This is "what's a billion and a half?" If they think this is a good deal, let them stand up and say $1.6 billion, to be exact, is a good investment for Ontario taxpayers. I would disagree and participate in the debate and try to counter that proposition, but they remain silent hour after hour, day after day.

Mr. Fisher: Benumbed by Tory speeches.

Mr. Jarvis: We have agricultural producers in a vulnerable position in Ontario, we have manufacturing in a vulnerable position in Ontario, at a cost to the taxpayers of $1.6 billion, yet not one word is spoken by one Member on that side on any one of those three issues.

This Government, Mr. Speaker, thinks that railways are more important than people. We in this Party do not agree.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, we are debating a motion under which this Bill cannot be amended, a motion which was moved by the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) with the support and concurrence, I believe, of the Government. In other words, it may have been moved by a Member but in fact it comes indirectly from the Liberal Cabinet. We can argue about whether that constitutes closure or not; the fact is that no one can make an amendment under this motion. That, in my view, represents a type of hobbling or closure which is not acceptable. It is as if we were debating a Bill called "an Act to burn crops in western Canada" and no one in this House were allowed to amend it. That is not acceptable. This kind of thing has not been used since the 1950s, and no wonder.

Consider, Mr. Speaker, that we are talking about a $6 billion industry, one that is vital to western Canada and has been so since the last century. Then why are these people so cavalier and casual with the interests of an important part of Canada, especially a part where we have long felt that we are not full partners in our own country, that our national institutions do not represent us fully, and that to many we are, in effect, a colony of this country?

You are aware, Mr. Speaker, that the Crowsnest Pass Agreement is considered to have been the Magna Carta of western Canada for a long, long time. These people opposite are now throwing it out and I will tell you why. It is because they have been persuaded that they will lose 30 to 40 seats in Quebec if the payments under this Bill do not go to the railways in full. If they allow freedom of choice, which is what we want, they are persuaded that they will lose 30 to 40 seats in Quebec. But, Mr. Speaker, it has been pointed out that this will not happen, that it will not hurt Quebec agriculture; so they are simply caving in to someone's perception.

To have a motion made such as we are debating today, Mr. Speaker, is insulting to us in western Canada. How would the Hon. Member for, say, Lévis (Mr. Gourde) feel if a Member from western Canada in this Party moved a motion to amend the Official Languages Act in a way detrimental to French-speaking Canadians? How would he feel if his interests were treated as badly as our interests are being treated here today?

Mr. Pepin: It is a sad sight to see you making arguments like that.

Mr. Kilgour: "Why should I sell your wheat?" Do you remember that phrase? That is the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of all of Canada who makes that kind of statement and that is why we are in the position we are in today.

What about the NDP, the handmaidens or the western annex of the Liberal Party?

Mr. Smith: We do not want them.

Mr. Kempling: Get them on waivers, David.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please.

Mr. Kilgour: Some of the NDP protest that they want to kill the Bill. The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) says he wants to see it in committee. The Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) is talking about the composition of the committee. Today we learn there is a deal between the NDP and the Liberals.

Some Hon. Members: Never!

Mr. Kilgour: Never, say the Liberals. But we have seen NDP-Liberals deals before. We know when they have a deal on the NEP or the Constitution that the West is going to lose. That is why the NDP is going to lose most of their seats in western Canada in the next election.

Mr. Smith: What about your deals with the PQ?

Mr. Kilgour: The NDP wants all of the $650 million to go to the railways. In other words, we have a CP-CN-Liberal-NDP consortium. As has been said, we have guaranteed income for the railways courtesy of the Liberals and the NDP, taken from the pockets of the Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Smith: We do not want them; we want to stay pure.

Mr. Kilgour: You have got them, but you will not have them back after the next election. I find it amusing, Mr. Speaker, that if you look at the Liberal Members here today, not one of them, including the Hon. Member for Lévis, holds a safe seat. I suggest to all of the seven who are present today that there will be very few who will be back after the next election.

• (1210)

Mr. Fisher: Is there a safe Tory Leader?

Mr. Kilgour: The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) holds one of the least safe seats of that group opposite. My allotted time will be up very shortly, Mr. Speaker.

Where do we, as the Government in waiting, stand on this issue?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please! I beg the Hon. Member's pardon but I can hear interjections from the other side of the House. I even see some Members standing. Only one Member may stand, the one who has been recognized by the Chair. I must ask the Members to respect the decorum of the House.

[English]

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I can assure those opposite that each one of them can rise after me and give a speech. We will be happy to hear what they have to say. I bet that none of them do, including the Minister of Transport, who is hiding behind his beard.

Mr. Smith: He's smoking.

Mr. Pepin: "Moustache".

Mr. Kilgour: Moustache. What are our principles? We believe that the federal Government and the railways must continue to offer a special low rate consistent with the Crows-nest Pass Agreement to assist our grain producers to compete with nations that do subsidize the transport of grain. We believe, second, that our producers must be guaranteed an efficient, cost-effective and reliable grain transportation system. Third, we believe that we must remove the present distortion of low freight rates in grains and oil seeds. We hear heckling from the Hon. Member for the grain-rich district of Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans). Above all, we believe in ensuring a statutory freight rate for grain producers which preserves the benefit of the Crow and protects it from open-ended escalation.

Mr. Pepin: What does that mean?

Mr. Kilgour: Since time is running out, I would like to place on the record what the new national leader of this Party, Brian Mulroney, has said about the issue. I am commending Hon. Members opposite to consider his views.
