the 10 per cent limit was unsatisfactory, and many have spoken of that in this Chamber. Third, "Changing the Crow rates", said Mr. Mulroney, "is akin to changing language legislation in Quebec. The Bill should not be rushed through Parliament; careful deliberation and thought is necessary." Think about that, Members from Quebec and French-speaking Canada.

Mr. Rossi: What did you ever do for Quebec?

Mr. Kilgour: Fourth, productivity must be improved in Canada. Since agriculture is the only ray of light in the Canadian economy at the moment, farmers should not be penalized.

Mr. Rossi: What do you have against Quebec?

Mr. Mayer: What has Quebec done for the rest of the country?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order.

Mr. Rossi: What do you have against Quebec? You're supposed to defend it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please.

An Hon. Member: What about the record?

Mr. Kempling: Why don't you speak? All you ever do is holler from your seat.

[Translation]

Mr. Kilgour: The Hon. Member asked me what I have done for the Province of Quebec. I can tell him that I have made speeches at Mont-Laurier, for example.

Mr. Rossi: Ask the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) what he has done for Quebec.

Mr. Kilgour: I travelled over most of Quebec with the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and a number of other Members, to discuss the cuts made in VIA Rail service by this same Minister, which is going to cost you seats in the next election. That I can promise the Hon. Members from Quebec. What have you done for Quebec?

Mr. Rossi: Ask the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) what he has done for Quebec. That's what the people of Quebec are going to remember at the next election.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please! The Hon. Members who wish to speak in this debate must rise for recognition by the Chair. The Chair has given the floor to the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour).

[English]

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Members opposite do not understand why the statutory Crow rate is important to western Canada. It is the one constitutional pillar that we have in western Canada. It is the one advantage our producers have in our part of the country. Name me another if you can, and I can name you many that you have in central Canada and elsewhere in this country. It is the one thing we have going for us. It is stability.

Mr. Pepin: Pathetic.

Mr. Kilgour: Well, it may be pathetic—

Mr. Pepin: You are.

Mr. Kilgour: —if that is what you are saying, Mr. Pepin, but I can assure you—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Again, Hon. Members should respect the rules of debate. The Hon. Member for Edmonton Strathcona surely knows that he must refer to Hon. Members by their portfolios or their ridings.

Mr. Kilgour: The Crow rate has provided a historical, social and economic base for western Canada. It was a trade-off. It acted as a counterbalance to the tariffs, the protective tariff, and all kinds of other advantages that Hon. Members opposite have in Ontario and Quebec.

I hear the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) mentioning GATT. I would be happy to speak of GATT, but I only have about one minute left.

The statutory rate recognized that Canada is a trading nation and that it was one way of helping one of the largest areas of our exports.

Finally, the statutory rate recognized the fact that grain and oil seeds are natural advantages to Canada, and we want to encourage them. The 31 million tonne ceiling is a classic example of cutting off one's nose to spite one's exports.

My allotted time is up. I would urge Hon. Members opposite to come to their senses before it is too late and they are all beaten in western Canada.

Mr. Wright: Mr. Speaker, I noticed in the House that the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) has been interjecting.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. In the normal course of debate, the Chair should alternate. I did see the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Gourde) standing. I was not sure if he was standing to be recognized or not. However, he does indicate that he was seeking the floor. Therefore, the Chair should now recognize the Hon. Member for Lévis.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the floor for a moment, because the Hon. Member who has just spoken made a statement to the effect that his leader, Mr. Mulroney, has made a statement on Bill C-155, which is currently under discussion. Mr. Speaker, on June 14, 1983, in this House, and here it is in Hansard, page 26329, I asked publicly the day after Mr. Mulroney turned up here in the gallery to do some grandstanding, and I have sent a copy of what I asked him to the office of the House Leader, the Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), I made a statement under Standing Order 21, addressed directly to Mr. Mulroney, in which I asked him to tell us, and I quote:

> First of all ... whether he agrees with Bill C-155 which is now before the House, and second, whether he agrees that grain transportation subsidies should be paid in full to the railway companies.

—as we have it in the Bill that was tabled in the House.

Today is the 22nd of June, eight days after my request was made, and Mr. Mulroney has not responded to it either directly to me at my office or in any other manner. If he did so, he did so with his cronies. He has never dared to do so directly to the farmers of Quebec who have pressed the government in recent months to take a position that in their view would be favourable to Eastern farmers.

Mr. Mulroney, who now represents the Progressive Conservative Party, has never dared, has never had the guts, has never had the nerve, to make clear his position on the changes to the Crow rate, and there are people on the opposite side who have tried to come and tell us that we ought to take lessons from the Progressive Conservatives on how to proceed in Quebec. I think if they had as leader a guy who had guts instead of glamour, then we might take lessons.

So Mr. Speaker, I repeat that to Mr. Mulroney, but since he is not in the House and besides I said it under Standing Order 21, I said at that time: Mr. Mulroney, I realize you are not a Member of this House. When a question is directed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and after all as leader of your party you want to become Prime Minister, when he gets a question he has ten seconds in which to answer. I realize you are new, you have no experience, and so we will give you two days. I said that on Tuesday; two days later the debate began again, and there was no response. It is now eight days later, and there is still no response.

That is the type of leader the Progressive Conservatives elected on June 11. I believe the Canadian people deserve better than that and I would ask Mr. Mulroney to express clearly, plainly and precisely, via one of his people—they are on the opposite side of the House—in front of the whole population, what his position is, not a watered down position but a plain and straightforward position, for or against. It is quite simple, yes or no, that is what we want to know here.

An Hon. Member: Why don't they tell the people in Quebec?

Mr. Gourde: But I do not want any lessons from the Progressive Conservatives when their leader is incapable of expressing himself.

[English]

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, a short time ago I saw the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) interrupting the speech being made by the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour). I would encourage the Hon. Member for Bourassa to stand up in the House and speak on this motion.

Furthermore, while he was sitting down he made a statement across the floor to the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, saying "What have you ever done for Quebec?". I assume the Hon. Member was not talking to the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona personally but as a Member for that riding. I would remind him that thousands of men and women in this country gave their lives in two world wars. They did not distinguish between Provinces. There are many people in this country, including people from Edmonton-Strathcona, who gave their lives for Quebec as well as every other Province. I contribute income tax for the Province of Quebec as well as every other Province. I do not want the Hon. Member to sit in the House and point his finger and say "What have you ever done for Quebec?", because that is a false statement and he cannot back it up.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) stood in the House on May 12 to introduce second reading of Bill C-155, the western grain transportation Bill on amendments to the Crow. On June 16, the Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) rose in the House and moved that the previous motion be now put. In effect, when we vote on that motion that the previous question be now put on Bill C-155, it means that we cannot discuss the Bill any longer or move further amendments. We must vote immediately.

The Oxford Illustrated Dictionary states that closure in Parliament means "decision by a vote in the House of Commons to put the question without further debate". If that is not closure, what is it? It is closure, nothing more and nothing less.

We have seen the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) file a notice to move closure. He had the gall to stand up in the House on a point of order a few weeks ago to say that the investment climate in Canada has never been better and that foreigners eagerly invest money here. Yet every Government department that has an office overseas knows that reports have been filed both verbally and written which state that this is one of the worst countries in which to invest. There is no truth to the Minister's statement about investment.

The office of the Canadian Government in London, England, has filed numerous reports stating that something must be done about Canada's national energy policy because investors will not invest in Canada. Surely the Government is not immune to the movement of $18 billion out of this country in 1981. One only has to visit the City of Dallas which has the largest contingent of former Canadians of any city in the United States.

Bill C-155 is pitting region against region. We can go back to the constitutional debate in 1980 at a time when the economy was falling apart. We were telling the government that the unemployment rate was rising, bankruptcies were increasing and farmers were losing their farms. What was the Government doing? It was sitting across the aisle talking about the Constitution and how it would pull the country together.

This country could have been united much more quickly if the Government had put aside the Constitution and dealt with the matter at hand, namely the economy. Instead, we saw the Minister of Transport sitting across the aisle with his head in his hands too busy to worry about this. He was too busy to worry about the economy in 1980 when we knew that it was declining. We were warned by all of the experts that unemployment would rise and that the country was in deep trouble. Yet the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Liberal Government pitted Province against Province, region against region.

It then introduced the National Energy Program, one of the worst measures ever introduced. The reason this policy was implemented was that the Liberals could not stand to see the western Provinces succeed while the rest of Canada perhaps went into a recession. Therefore this national energy policy was introduced in order to squeeze the western Provinces. That is exactly what happened. Presently in Alberta only one-third of all drilling rigs are operating, but the Government was prepared to run the risk of pitting region against region.

Last week I stood in the House to ask a question of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) of which I had given him notice some four months previously and again with another letter on May 31 of this year. The Minister could only say that he would take the question under consideration. I had given him advance notice of this question which pertained to Petro-Canada, the company that the Government claims is doing so well in western Canada. It is expected to lose $15 million this year. It has an office building which it is renting in Calgary for $6.2 billion. It is empty and has never been used, yet the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources refuses to talk about it.

Now, lo and behold, it is negotiating with another company for rent-free use for the next five years because it wants to get it off the books. This is the type of company that the Government claims will be the leading oil company in the industry within five years. These facts all tie in with the National Energy Program, that scourge of the Canadian economy over the last year.

The Government is now introducing the western grain transportation Bill which will change the Crow rate. Once again, it pits region against region. When the Liberal Government is in trouble it pits region against region as it is the only way it can see of retaining some votes for the next election. That is the purpose of this legislation.

What is behind all of this? All we have to do is to look to our left to see the "Liberal Party West". The NDP were off base on the Constitution and the National Energy Program. They have suddenly realized that they had better get onside in the Crow rate debate. The Toronto Star tells us of the problems the NDP are experiencing. The NDP will have a convention next week and it will discuss a new policy. Already its Members have lined up their Leader. Some of them are sitting there saying: "We will introduce some motions at that meeting which will embarrass the Leader", yet they stand at only 16 per cent in the Gallup poll.

Mr. Fisher: It sounds like the Tories.

Mr. Wright: I hear the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher). We happen to be at 50 per cent in the polls. The Hon. Member sits there grinning through this as if he has no problems. The Liberal Party and the NDP have joined together in the past many times. We well understand that they will join together again, if not in actual name in actual fact, because the Liberal Party will never gain a seat in the West and it needs the NDP, and because the NDP now realizes that it will lose three-quarters of its seats in western Canada in the next election. The NDP attacks its Leader and puts his job in jeopardy. Once again the NDP is in real trouble and is trying to get onside with the Crow rate; but that Party will never make it.

Let me return to the Minister of Transport. Do we remember the Western Development Fund of $4 billion which the Government was to pump into western Canada? It has gone the way of the dodo bird. We do not have it any more. Of course it did not mean anything; it was one more promise the Government has not kept. What guarantees can the Minister of Transport give us that the railways will improve their lines? Not one. He would rather give them free funds. What are the railroads giving him in return?

I see the Minister of Transport has suddenly awakened. Perhaps he would like to rise and speak to the subject.

Mr. Pepin: I have already done so.

Mr. Wright: If the Minister of Transport is prepared to rise and speak, then I will sit down. Will he sit there with his arms folded, or is he prepared to rise? He cannot answer the question: What guarantees do we have that the railways will improve the beds? We have none whatsoever. Why did he shift his position from the Gilson Report? The position of the Gilson Report was far superior to his position. He knows it but is not prepared to admit it. The influence of the Quebec delegation changed his mind. Now he has to go along with them rather than with the farmers of western Canada. Once again he is pitting region against region, farmer against farmer.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to participate in the debate on Bill C-155. Also I am glad the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is in the House doing his penance, as he certainly should, and listening to the points made by Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. I really have a great deal of sympathy for the Minister. I have a great deal of personal respect for him, but I know he had his moment of truth about a month or so before this debate was launched when the Gilson Report, to which the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Wright) referred, made certain recommendations. There were certain draft bills and then almost under the cover of night interests in the West in the pools and certainly the Liberal caucus in the East got together in a sort of alliance that made strange bedfellows and there was a fundamental flip-flop from Gilson to this Bill.

I know the Minister, being a principled man and a principled Minister, wrestled with his conscience. I think he still has one but it took quite a warp when he finally decided still to be the team player and did not do perhaps the decent thing. I would have missed him if he had walked out and resigned, but I certainly think that with the flip-flop on Bill C-155 with which we are confronted today the Minister at least wrestled with his conscience. At least he had the conscience with which to wrestle. I will not talk about whether other Government Ministers would make any tag-team effort to wrestle with any conscience, but I am disappointed the Minister of Transport reached that decision.

Mr. Pepin: I found it difficult because there is such a diversity of views in the Official Opposition. When I cannot get 100 per cent, I go with 80 per cent.

Mr. Nowlan: There is no doubt that the Minister speaks with some relevance when he says that there is quite a diversity of views, obviously, on the Crow. The reason so many Members want to speak on the Bill is two-fold. First, the Crow is the constitutional pillar of the West and has been since 1897, the 80 years or 90 years it has been in effect. The Government is changing that through the club of closure. Second, that Party does not basically have any representation in the West. Indeed, that is a most dangerous thing. For those reasons Hon. Members over here are speaking as much as they can. They are saying: "Hey, hold up and see whether through the consensus about which the Minister spoke at one time there can be some medling of the different points of view".

I give credit to the Minister. He has made some changes, but he would not have made them if we had not debated the matter despite the motion of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to close off debate; this thing would not have been changed at all. The Minister knows that if he had not had the debate in his own Quebec Liberal caucus as a result of pressure from the farm groups of Quebec, there would not have been the change to which he finally acquiesced.

Mr. Pepin: Mulroney said I should put some water in my wine, and I did.

Mr. Nowlan: I will not go down those tracks. I am talking about Bill C-155. The Minister will hear a lot from Mr. Mulroney in due course. There will be other wrestlings of conscience when he takes his place in the Chamber. He is prepared to take on Members from Quebec and/or Government Members head to head. At least there will be a voice from Quebec in the House on a more regular basis.

This debate was launched by the Minister. The Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) replied on May 12, at which time I think the Minister was being his jovial self. My colleague mentioned that if a person understood Bill C-155, the gaps in the legislation and the rate structure which was supposed to apply, he or she would earn the Order of Canada. The Minister flippantly replied that that is how he earned it, if I remember correctly the reference in Hansard. He was in sort of a jovial mood, but he said: "That is how I earned it".

Is it not an ironic paradox with that beginning on May 12 and the Minister now sort of changing Bill C-155 for the purpose of clarification? If he obtained the Order of Canada for trying to understand the rate structure at that point, then with his changes and the real implications of the Bill we have the ironic paradox of the Minister obtaining the Order of Canada for the disorder which he will bring about in the grain trade, in the western economy and certainly in western wheat production.

The focus is on the West because that is where the Crow applies directly, but as other Hon. Members have indicated it is a national issue. It affects us right across the country. This is why there must be treading with care when the fundamental pillar which was the basis of growth for the agricultural industry in the West is changed. The Government is imbalanced in terms of its membership. Basically it is out of touch. It is very dangerous to bring in closure to try to choke off debate on something so fundamental, especially with the recent flip-flop of the Minister before the Bill was introduced. The Bill brings in uncertainty.

Mr. Pepin: Oh!

Mr. Nowlan: I hope the Minister will speak after I have finished. The Minister knows that this Bill brings instability and uncertainty into the entire agricultural industry of western Canada. He is asking western Canadian producers to do something which is very difficult for anyone to do. In effect, he is asking them to pay more and the moneys will go to the railways. We say balderdash to that. We like some of the recommendations of Gilson. They were a little more relevant than the Bill which pays everything to the railways.

• (1240)

The thought expressed on the first day of this debate—and it has not been responded to by the Government—was that in effect we wanted an amendment whereby the producer had the right to choose. It is a pretty catchy slogan, freedom to choose. The producers can decide to get paid directly if it is in their interest and to pay the railway, depending on whether they use the railway. If they get it, they have the option to truck the wheat to the terminal and/or sell it locally.

For the Minister to introduce closure on something so fundamental insults every opposition Member, certainly western Members who are very involved in the agricultural industry. To have the club of closure on one side and no response to date on the freedom to choose which would expedite this debate tremendously is wrong. There is no firm commitment to give the producer the right to choose as to how the money is to be paid, to the railway or the producer.

Mr. Pepin: We will have that as an amendment.

Mr. Nowlan: In some of the rhetoric the Minister has moved. I give him credit for that, but he has not gone far enough. We are entitled to only ten minutes. I have never been more constrained in my life trying to observe a ten-minute speaking rule under these provisional rules. You hiccup and burp once and the ten minutes are over, as far as I am concerned.

I have a reason for wanting to speak on this Bill and I throw this out to the Minister. I am glad that he may be more receptive to freedom of choice. I commend him for some of the changes he has talked about which I have not seen fully implemented in this Bill.

In the few remaining minutes I have left I want to talk about something which the Minister and you, Mr. Speaker, are aware of. If the Government is going to move unilaterally and/or use closure to change something so fundamental as the Crow that has been in place since 1897, then we in Atlantic Canada have to be wary indeed as to the Minister's intentions with regard to our little Crow. That, of course, is the Maritime Freight Rates Act. That came into existence to help alleviate the justified concern in Atlantic Canada in trying to get an economy going there by its bootstraps. After several royal commissions, it was put into law in 1926.

I was in the House when the then Minister of Transport, the Hon. Don Jamieson, seduced Members to agree to the Atlantic transportation amendment. That was some time in the 1970s. He said that would be the first plank in a revised transportation policy for Atlantic Canada which would make Atlantic Canada grow. It was the beginning of the whittling away of the effects, help and assistance and the subsidy for Atlantic industry in the select territory.

A month or so ago this Minister, his Department and some advisers, who very poorly advised, unilaterally set up a commission of consultants from Ottawa to assess the viability of even continuing the Maritime Freight Rates Act. All I can say in the closing 30 seconds available to me is that people in western Canada have justified concern about what is being done to the Crow, their pillar, as the pillar that we have had since 1926 is being slowly whittled away. If the terms of reference of the consultants' report are met, I predict—but hopefully there will be an election first—that it will be the serious intent of this Minister or his replacement, as long as this Government is in office, to ensure that the Maritime Freight Rates Act, let alone the At and East rates for the export of flour on which there has already been one attack, will go out the window.

There is no reason why we should support Bill C-155. The rhetoric and good intentions of the Minister have to be put into the legislation to give protection to the western producer so that the five points of Conservative policy, to answer the NDP, which have been mentioned time and time again, can be adhered to.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have to tell the House of Commons that this is one of the saddest days that I have witnessed since coming to this House of Commons 11 years ago. The Minister is bringing in legislation that is entirely unacceptable to western Canada. I have to give him full marks for totally alienating every farmer in western Canada; he has done a good job of that. When he started out he at least had 50 per cent on his side. Now he does not have any; he has lost them all.

The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Gourde) stood up and presented this House with so much garbage. He talked about something he knows very little about. He told lies to his constituents, telling them they would be badly treated by this legislation. That is completely false because it has such an insignificant effect on eastern agriculture that it is inconsequential. For him to stand up and mislead the Members of this House and at the same time mislead his own constituents is unforgivable.

Where are the speakers on the Government side? We have had eight up to the present time. Do they not recognize the importance of this legislation not only to the House of Commons but to western Canada?

Where is the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan)? Why is he not talking? On May 12 the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) said that the Minister of Agriculture would speak on this legislation. Where is he? Where is the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy)? He is from Winnipeg, which is the central exchange for the grain industry in western Canada. Where is he? Surely he has some constituents who are interested.

What about the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Bockstael)? Is he not from western Canada? Where is he? What has happened to the Liberal Party of Canada? Do they not agree with the Minister? I guess they do not agree with what the Minister of Transport is doing.

What about my twin? He just happens to be in the Chamber today. I wonder why he was put on as a twin. The Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) was supposed to be the twin. He was to be the Liberal voice in western Canada. I have to ask him whether he is just a twin for the benefit of the Liberal Party or is he a twin for western Canadians, those who live in Red Deer and the communities around it? Why does he not come out and talk to them? There was a meeting in Red Deer. The people would have loved to have had him there. They sent me a petition with the names of 364 constituents on it.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think I should point out that I was one of those who was earlier consulted on the Crow rate at the Unifarm Convention in Edmonton, Alberta in January, 1982. I did not see the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) there. There certainly was no consensus at that time—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member is seeking to contribute to the debate. I suggest that there is a way to do that.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I would like my twin to stand up in the House and tell us what he has done with regard to this legislation. We would love to have him come to my constituency. I can assure him that he would get a very warm reception, probably the warmest he has ever received in any place in Canada that he has ever visited. We would love to have him there.

These people who got together, a thousand of them, rented a hall. They have signed petitions. I have them here for the Minister to read. One of the problems when we present a petition in the House of Commons, as we do day after day, is that nothing happens as a result of that.

I say to my twin for Red Deer that we have petitions from people in all of the communities in my area. I will read them: Delburne, Bowden, Innisfail, Sylvan Lake, Linden, Rocky Mountain House, Olds, Eckville, Caroline, Carstairs, Crossfield, Acme, Red Deer, Didsbury, Cremona, Huxley, Blackfalds, Penhold, Lousana, Elnora, Markerville, Torrington, Trochu and Sundre. I have only listed representatives of people in my constituency. My colleagues for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger), Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), Crowfoot (Mr. Malone), Pembina (Mr. Elzinga) and Bow River (Mr. Taylor) all had representatives at that meeting. Some of them travelled many hundreds of miles to get there. Yet the Government and the Minister will not pay the least bit of attention to what these people are saying.

It is no wonder the Liberal Party is dead in western Canada. I can assure Hon. Members, Mr. Speaker, that there will not be another Liberal elected in western Canada for 40 years because of what they have done to us. They can laugh about it. Perhaps they do not care because they come from central Canada and they will not care as long as the power base is here. But I say that that power base will erode as well. That will change. They will lose the power base in central Canada. Canadians cannot be treated like this. Canadians cannot be misled in the way that they are being misled. Therefore, I have nothing but disgust for Members opposite and to my left when they stand up and say that we must get the legislation into committee so that we can make some changes.

Mr. Epp: They want to make a deal.

Mr. Towers: They want to make a deal. Well, I would like to see the deal that Members of the NDP make with the Members opposite. I do not anticipate, Mr. Speaker, that there will be any changes made to this legislation when it goes to committee.

An Hon. Member: They are dealing with the Liberals again.

Mr. Towers: That is right. There will be no changes made. We have seen this happen before. We have seen people come here from western Canada at their own expense. Their time and money is spent without effecting any changes. If the Minister of Transport really wanted to be honest with Canadians, he would make some changes which would be acceptable to the people of western Canada.

I have a copy of a letter, Mr. Speaker, sent by the Minister of Agriculture for Alberta and cosigned by the Hon. Hugh Planche, the Minister of Economic Development for Alberta, to the Minister of Transport. I know I do not have time to read that letter, but I would ask the Minister to find that letter. It is dated May 2, 1983. It establishes the position that officials of the Province of Alberta would like the Minister to adopt in order to alleviate some of the problems that we have with this legislation.

I realize that my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate being afforded the opportunity of at least expressing my opinion. I would hope that the Minister of Transport would have the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Employment and Immigration and his colleague from Winnipeg stand up and state the western Canadian position. What chance do they have to be elected in western Canada if they will not stand up and speak for the Canadians they represent? It is a farce, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry to say that but that is what it is.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to say a few words in connection with Bill C-155. Bill C-155 is a great betrayal, the betrayal of half a nation. On February 8, 1982 the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) said in his western rail transportation statement under item 5:

> The economic distortions within the agricultural sector stemming from the statutory rate should be reduced—

Under item 6 of the same statement, he said further:

> The most effective ways of promoting the diversification of the western agricultural economy and processing of agricultural products—

So he spent $287,000 and more to set up a committee with those statements as the terms of reference. Mr. Gilson and, as one of my colleagues noted, some of the best brains in Canada came up with a solution. The Minister should have accepted that solution. He did accept it at first. Then he cut it in half and then he threw it out altogether. This is the greatest betrayal of half the nation in Canadian history.

Judas betrayed Christ for 30 pieces of silver. He paid for it. I want to tell the Hon. Minister that he will pay for this betrayal and the Liberal Party will pay for it. It is proper that they should pay, but the Canadian people will pay for this as well, particularly the people of western Canada.

I want to deal with some of the items in this great betrayal by the Minister. If the Minister were a man of principle, he would resign from his position. If he believed what he set out in the terms of reference and then he backed out and turned his back on those promises, he should resign. If he is half a man, he should resign. But no, he sits there. His position is more important than our country. That is what this Bill is all about. This Bill will either make the country or destroy it. The way the Bill is set up now, it could well destroy the country. It is a great betrayal.

As for my hon. friends from the NDP, there has been a great sell-out. They speak up against the Bill and then they turn around and say: "Now we will pay it to the railways, not to the farmers".

Mr. Hovdebo: What is your Party's position on the Crow rate?

Mr. Taylor: After denouncing the railways, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) said that it is far better to give two cheques to the CNR and the CPR than 150,000 cheques. In this computer age, where is the difficulty in issuing 150,000 cheques?

Mr. Hovdebo: What is your Party's position on the Crow rate?

Mr. Taylor: They can shout all they like, but their move is a great sell-out of the people of western Canada and they know it.

Mr. Mazankowski: Guaranteed annual income for the railways.

Mr. Taylor: Yes, guaranteed annual income for the railways. But what about the people who are paying? This Bill will destroy the hopes of cattle producers, the hopes of hog producers, the hopes of pulse crop producers and it will destroy the processing industry. Is this a deliberate attempt on the part of the Minister to ensure that western Canadians remain drawers of water and hewers of wood? Western Canadians are tired of being drawers of water and hewers of wood. They want to process their own raw materials. The Minister is now trying to prevent this from happening.

The only bright spot in the whole debate has been the suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) who said: "Let us go back to the people; let us go back to some of the basic democratic principles and find out what the people want". So he suggested the freedom of choice proposition. He did not say that he wanted to name the formula after himself. He did not say that he wanted to make it the Progressive Conservative formula. He wants the formula for the people of Canada so that the people can decide.

When Members of the NDP oppose that proposition, they oppose people. Have they no confidence in the people? The people of the country are not illiterate, they are well educated. The farmers are well educated, but the NDP cannot trust the people to decide what is best for themselves. Their philosophy is to tell the people what is good for them, and that is the philosophy of the Liberal Government as well. It has been telling the people what is good for them for years. That is coming to an end because the people are getting tired of it. The people want some say.

The freedom of choice proposition will give the people a chance to say whether they want the money to go to the railway, as some will. It is their right to say so. If they do want the money to go to the railway, those people will get a card that will indicate the rate that is appropriate for that particular situation. There are other people who will say they want the money to go into their own pockets because they know how to spend the money better than does the Government. They will not waste it. They may want to use the money to haul feed to a feedlot where they are doing wonderful work. They may want to use it to feed hogs or use it for a pulse crop. They may want to use it for processing. Whatever way the people decide to use the money, the railway will still get its fair share.

An official of the CPR, when he came to visit me, said: "We favour seeing the money go into the pockets of the producers". I said: "You do?" He said: "Yes, I do, because that will make our railway more efficient. We will have to compete, and in order to compete we will have to be efficient." That is how some of the top men in the CPR are thinking. But no, Members of the New Democratic and Liberal Parties say that they want to give all of the money to the CPR. They want to give the CPR a guaranteed income without any thought at all for the effect it will have on the people of western Canada.

They do not mind blocking hog producers who have a tremendous potential. They do not mind killing the cattle industry when it has been making money and has a tremendous potential. They do not mind killing the processing industry which has a tremendous potential. That is a great betrayal of the people of western Canada and the Minister should resign.

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY'S POSITION

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, in this House, on June 14, 1983, I asked the new Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party to take a clear stand on the new grain transport policy, better known as the change in the Crow rate. That same day, I sent him a copy of my statement through the Office of the Opposition leader, the Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), who immediately acknowledged receipt of the document and told me it had been forwarded to Mr. Mulroney. Although we have been debating this Bill for another four days, the new Leader has not had the courage to state publicly his position to the agri-food industry in Quebec and Eastern Canada. I would therefore like to refresh his memory and inform him that Quebec farmers do not want a leader without policies.

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, the Canadian International Development Agency has been without a president for almost a year. Recently Ms. Margaret Catley-Carlson was appointed to the position. The new President comes with a good deal of experience in the field of international aid.

As Ms. Catley-Carlson prepares to take over her new job, I would suggest to her that she consider carefully some recent reports on Canadian aid published by the North-South Institute in Ottawa. The Institute criticizes the Canadian foreign aid program because it has not been allowed to develop clear, practical goals.

Foreign aid is a very difficult activity. This I know from my own experience. All Canadian experience acquired over the years must now be used to define a clear direction. The last guidelines for CIDA were laid out for the period 1975-80. This past year, even without new guidelines and without a president, aid programs have continued.

CIDA is beginning to take on the look and attitude of a middle-aged person. The wonderment of childhood is gone, the excitement of youth is over, the hard knocks of young adulthood have taken their toll, and the institution is showing signs of middle-age fatigue. I call upon the new President of CIDA to take to heart the advice of the North-South Institute, first, to decentralize decision-making; second, to speed up procedures of decision making by placing more staff in the field with more authority; and third, to remember that aid is for the poor so that aid given quickly is aid given twice.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

DEMAND FOR RESTORATION

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the large majority of the Canadian people want the death sentence restored for anyone deliberately planning and then murdering another human being, when he or she has been found guilty beyond the shadow of a doubt. Under this formula there is no chance of the wrong person being executed. Still, Liberal Members continually refer to persons where there is or was a doubt; if there is a doubt, the law would remain as it is today.

One Liberal Member calls capital punishment revenge. It is not revenge; it is just and proper punishment to fit the crime. Some way the death sentence is not a deterrent. Well, it would certainly stop a murderer from committing a second or a third or a fourth murder. Maybe nothing would stop a murder carried out in a fit of passion, but it would certainly prevent some murders that are coolly planned. Why? Because everyone loves life and has no desire to die.

Parents of murdered young people, like Walter and Marion Cook, whose beautiful teenaged daughter, Kelly, was brutally murdered, and the loved ones of the two girls killed by Peters and Brown, know what it is to go through torment and hell, and want the murderers executed to make sure such a horrible ordeal does not happen to some other family.

But the Government thinks it knows more than the people; it refuses to reflect the thinking of the people; it insists on telling the people what it considers is good for them, and so murderers will go on murdering a second and third and fourth time, until a democratic Government that will reflect the thinking of the people, is elected.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

OBSERVANCE OF RULE OF LAW

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, national security is a top priority in every nation's hierarchy of values. We Canadians treasure our sovereignty above all, and will not let any alien forces infiltrate our lives. In the era of spy networks operating ruthlessly all over the world, we must be particularly vigilant. Therefore a strong and efficient security agency is of prime importance for our defence, and every effort should be made to allow our spy chasers to do their job. Yet, in doing so, we must not forget about one of the greatest achievements of our system—the rule of law.

It is imperative that no one, not even the Security Service, should be permitted to break the law. Bill C-157, as proposed, poses a threat to our civil liberties, the integrity of democracy, and natural justice.

An increasing number of letters from my constituents, voicing their opposition to this legislation, indicates clearly where Canadians stand when it comes to attacks on our freedoms and the rule of law. They demand assurance on the part of the security forces that no abuses of law, as known in the past, will ever take place, and that their personal freedoms will not be endangered. A careful and detailed review of the legislation is needed so that both the requirements of our national interests are met and our personal freedoms preserved.

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—INVITATION TO LEADER OF PC PARTY TO EXPLAIN VIEWS TO PORTNEUF FARMERS

Mr. Rolland Dion (Portneuf): Madam Speaker, this morning in the newspaper La Presse, I read about the statements made by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) regarding the position of the Progressive Conservative Party on the Crow rate. The former Minister of Transport declared that the Party's position was that payments should be made to farmers and not to the railways. Madam Speaker, I would therefore invite the new Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, Mr. Mulroney, to visit the riding of Portneuf, which I represent, and explain his party's position to the farmers, since the former Minister of Transport, speaking on behalf of his party, stated that he wanted to make the payments in question to the farmers and not to the railways. I would appreciate it if you would do so within the next few weeks, as soon as possible, instead of just showing up in my riding now and then.

PUBLIC WORKS

EXPANSION OF WINNIPEG AIRPORT—AWARDING OF CONTRACTS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, the Winnipeg Construction Association has contacted me expressing concern at the manner in which federal public works contracts are handled. It would seem that the Association is not given adequate advance notice when a project is to begin, and often the specifics of projects are not readily available. Therefore, they cannot be fully prepared—a necessary prerequisite in order to organize and establish the detailed planning essential to beginning and completing every new project, and tendering. I am referring in particular to the expansion and modernization of the Winnipeg airport, a new project recently announced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), which will cost $32 million.

This news is most exciting for, as a rule, the weekly public works communique lists Manitoba as not being awarded any contracts, regardless of my continuous pursuit of the Minister of Employment to utilize the fine workmanship of Manitobans. I am pleased that, after all these years, he is beginning to realize that my commendation of Manitobans and their multitude of skills and talents is not unfounded.

I would ask that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration endeavour to supply the Winnipeg Construction Association with all the detailed information on the airport renovation project, as well as attempt on a regular basis to inform the Association as quickly as possible of any upcoming public works contracts, as is done by provincial Governments.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

NAKINA—OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED RUN-THROUGH

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, the CNR is threatening the life of the Towhship of Nakina, Ontario, by proposing to eliminate Nakina as a crew-change point and to run trains right through. This will have a devastating impact on the community as the proposed run-through will deprive it of its oldest industry, namely, the CNR, and make it into a one industry forestry town with all the economic instability that results from such dependence.

In addition, the run-through will cause many families to move out of Nakina, and leave the remaining residents, many of them senior citizens, to pay for all the new services and infrastructure the CNR encouraged the town to build. The people of Nakina were assured by the CNR that they had a secure future and, as a result, many families built or purchased homes in Nakina which would be radically devalued if the CNR goes ahead with the Nakina run-through.

The people of Nakina would like to remain there and to preserve their community. They quite rightly feel the CNR has an obligation to allow them to do this. It is time the CNR, as a Crown corporation, acted in the public interest and cancelled the proposed Nakina run-through so that the people of that community can continue to live and work there without fear of losing their homes, their friends, their community, and their lifestyles.

To those who like to say, as do many of my Liberal and Conservative colleagues, that you cannot stop progress, I say that the destruction of communities is not progress at all. It is an illusion of progress behind which we find the erosion of values and relationships which really count.

EMPLOYMENT

MARINE EMERGENCY DUTIES CENTRE—DECLINE IN TRAINING ENROLMENT

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, in December, 1980, a Marine Emergency Duties Centre was opened in Port Colborne, Ontario, at a cost to the taxpayer of almost $1 million. Not only was this the answer to the problem of training shipboard personnel in proper procedures to avoid and to deal with accidents and emergencies on board, but it brought much needed employment to the city. Already this much needed facility is on the verge of closing down, at least for nine months of the year. The enrolment at present is only 13 trainees. Why so few? The answer most probably lies in the fact that the cost of tuition is beyond those people who need the training the most.

The cost of courses in "Avoidance of Collision", "Fire Prevention" and "Navigation" offered by this institution is $825 per course, so one can only guess how much it would cost were one to take a good variety of courses. It stands to reason that those who are trained in the above skills are those most likely to have jobs at the present. How many unemployed seamen would very much like to take such courses which would enable them to find more suitable employment, if only they had the money? Those who do not have the money are the ones who need the training.

If Manpower sponsorship were available, there would be no shortage of pupils for such courses. After all, there are almost five hundred officers who are jobless. Perhaps provision could be made for repayment of their fees when they found employment. I urge upon the Minister of Employment and Immigration that he study the facts and consider my proposal of Manpower sponsorship for training—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

HUMAN RIGHTS

IRAN—CONDEMNATION OF EXECUTION OF MEMBERS OF BAHA'I FAITH

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, men and women who are privileged to live in a free and democratic society have an obligation and a responsibility to speak out against violations of human rights, wherever they occur in the world. We must do so because those who are the victims of oppression and terror are seldom in a position to make a public plea on their own behalf. Such is the case with thousands of victims of senseless killings in Central America, as it is with brave dissidents who dare to speak out in Iron Curtain countries. We saw another brutal example of oppression in these past few days against defenceless human beings. Once again members of the Baha'i faith in Iran have been executed for their beliefs by the Government of that country.

The Baha'is have been subjected to incredible harassment and torture by the followers of Ayatollah Khomeini. Since he seized power, 130 Baha'i leaders have been executed by the Government. This past week ten women of the Baha'i faith were executed in Iran simply for teaching children the basic tenets of their religion. Peoples and Governments around the world must protest these savage and outrageous acts of violence until the rights of Baha'is to live in peace and security, free to practise their religion, are respected.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIRPORTS

NECESSITY FOR IMPROVEMENTS IN NORTHERN MANITOBA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, recently Transport Canada supplied me with a table of projects planned for airports in northern Manitoba over the next five years. The capital outlay is small for a region which covers the northern two-thirds of Manitoba, an area which is very highly dependent on air transportation. For example, the runway in Thompson, Manitoba, which was repaired on a temporary basis in 1982, is not slated for repairs again until after 1989. This is ridiculous in view of the fact that the runway is deteriorating so badly that it has in the past been closed to jet service because of its condition and the danger to aircraft and passengers.

Flin Flon, Manitoba, is still unable to provide service to aircraft wishing to make an instrument landing approach. These are just two examples of airport planning which are necessities of life but are not being done by the Government.

The North has a strong and growing tourist industry which needs to be encouraged. We also wish to increase our number of residents, and we need to do that by developing our rich resources in the area. Our airports must be improved. I encourage the federal Government to take action beyond its present plans.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

MONITORING OF MANAGEMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will know that, following the financial disasters of Canadair and de Havilland, we now have the financial disaster of the CN investment in CAST Shipping, and we have the disaster of a $450 million loss in Via Rail despite the fact of a 20 per cent reduction in passenger train service. Would the Prime Minister tell the House what the Government proposes to do to monitor and somehow control the activities of the people running these Crown corporations, who clearly lack the expertise, the managerial ability, and are not prepared to have any regard for the taxpayers' money in their management?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has heard the Government regret very deeply and sincerely the loss of money which has been incurred in Canadair and de Havilland. I would point out to the Hon. Member that it is probably a mistake in logic to assume that that is because they are Crown corporations. He will remember that Canadair itself, when it was a private sector corporation, was going belly up. It is also true of de Havilland Canada, which was going belly up, and the private sector was not able to make it live. There was no one in the private sector prepared to keep that section of the aviation industry alive.

Hon. Members will also remember that many other important private sector operations which have been in great difficulty in past years have had nothing to do with Crown corporations. Canadian banks were in difficulty because they made loans to the Domes and to the Massey-Fergusons, and because they had made loans to Caribbean countries in difficult times. Massey-Ferguson had to be rescued, Madam Speaker, and Chrysler had to be rescued. Even Maislin, which is so loved by the other side of the House, had to be rescued.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I understand that the doctrinaires of the private sector are not prepared to admit that the private sector had difficulties in these times. The choice of the Government is to know whether it should let that aviation industry die, as the private sector was doing, or whether it should keep it alive. The same thing can be said of transportation and the other areas of our action, Madam Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, the whole country is going to go belly up unless this Government changes.

CANADAIR—REVIEW OF MONTHLY REPORTS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who in the Canadair matter had monthly reports sent to the Ministry with respect to every activity of Canadair. I would like to know what review the Minister made, or his predecessor Ministers in that Department made, with respect to those monthly reports. And why did the Minister, despite reports which were overly optimistic and which always turned out to be false, continue to recommend further advances by banks, and letters of comfort, and the rest, with all of this bad and false information which was coming to him?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that when the Government became aware that Canadair was having problems and that those problems were very severe, it analyzed the situation and tried to find the best way to correct it. This particular mechanism is now before the House in the form of a Bill. The Government has formed a corporation that will provide for a Government presence within this corporation and others that are having problems, and I am sure that with this particular mechanism, we shall be able to correct a situation that has been diagnosed as being both problematic and unsatisfactory.

HIRING OF ASSISTANT DEPUTY MINISTER

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the House will know that before this Minister became the apologist for the mess, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was responsible. The House will also know that A. M. Guérin, Assistant Deputy Minister, was the representative of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce on the board of directors of Canadair from June 5, 1976, until September, 1981. Would the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce tell us why Mr. Guérin was allowed to take a high paying job with Canadian in conflict with the interest of supervising that corporation? Why was he allowed to resign from the Ministry and take this job at a high fee that he somehow earned because of his work presumably on behalf of the Ministry?

• (1420)

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, regarding Mr. Guérin's job, he was hired by Canadair, and perhaps the Hon. Member, when he has an opportunity to meet with Canadair representatives in committee, would care to ask them why they hired Mr. Guérin.

CAPITALIZATION OF CORPORATIONS

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. As he knows, there has been a total lack of accountability concerning the affairs of Crown corporations. Now the Prime Minister tells us that he can put Crown corporations belly up faster than anyone else. Can the Minister tell us if it is common practice in Crown corporations to capitalize through debt as opposed to equity, and is it normal procedure to capitalize by means of letters of comfort?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I am not in a position to comment with respect to each and every Crown corporation. Certainly this was a practice followed with respect to at least one Crown corporation we have been discussing, and the Government went on to ask the House to enable it to replace those letters of comfort with guarantees established by Parliament, which the House did last year.

USE OF LETTERS OF COMFORT

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, the Government knew early in 1979 of the disaster it was in. The Government started issuing letters of comfort long before that, without bringing them in front of this House of Commons to be discussed, and without allowing the Auditor General to get involved.

Mr. Lalonde: You were the Government in 1979.

Mr. Fennell: Will the Minister table in this House the number of Crown corporations financed by letters of comfort?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I will be happy to see what information I can provide in that regard. However, I might observe, because my hon. friend has talked about 1979, that I am not aware of anything done by the previous Government to end the practice which, as he pointed out, had been going on prior to 1979.

ENERGY

REQUEST THAT FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE BE CONVENED

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy. It is known that he is currently meeting secretly with representatives of Alberta trying to beat out a new energy pricing and taxation agreement. The Minister has offered a great deal of criticism of the role of the consumer Provinces in energy pricing. Therefore, in order to strike a national consensus, would the Minister be prepared to convene a sort of national conference on energy pricing so that producers and consumers can reach a consensus on energy pricing and taxation?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, this is a bilateral negotiation between the federal Government and Alberta. I can see the Hon. Member is changing his tune now that Saskatchewan does not have an NDP Government. I think we will try to arrange the best agreement, keeping in mind the interests of both the producers and consumers. I hope everyone would prefer to have an agreement rather than a disagreement between Alberta and Canada.

GASOLINE PRICES—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, unfortunately I believe the Government's limited understanding of this matter is bound to set off a second round of animosity. There is another aspect to energy pricing, that is the gas pump price and not just the wellhead price. Certainly the major oil companies across the country seem to be engaged in local gas wars to destroy the independents. Those gas wars seem to be funded through gouging of the Canadian public at the pump. No one understands what the real and fair price really is of fuels, including gasoline.

Would the Minister be prepared to encourage his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, to strike a national inquiry into the retail price of fuel so that Canadian consumers will get a fair shake at both the wellhead and the gas pump?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has asked me a very surprising question. The war between the companies, generally speaking, works in favour of the consumer. The intervention of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs occurs when there is an agreement to increase the price. But in this case a price war, generally speaking, means a reduction in the price to the consumer.

At the provincial level there are rules and regulations which sometimes oblige the companies to tell the consumers how much provincial tax they pay. Sometimes the rules and regulations are not in place. The federal Government, with the producing Provinces, controls only the wellhead price. We are not involved in setting the price in the retail market; that is done through market forces.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CANADAIR—MINISTER'S STATEMENT TO COMMITTEE—EXISTENCE OF SECRET REPORT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and it goes right to the heart of the parliamentary process. Last December Senator Austin, who is responsible for Canadair, stated that the picture he was presenting to the committee in support of the request for additional moneys for Canadair was "a worst case scenario". He said that he might need more money but "the eventual requirement might not exceed the amount currently requested".

Yesterday in committee a senior Departmental official acknowledged that a secret report was available to Cabinet, in addition to the task force report, which showed that "Canadair was at that time a high risk situation". I ask the Prime Minister did the Cabinet direct Senator Austin to mislead that committee—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson: —when he requested those additional funds?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Wilson: If he was not directed to do it, why did he mislead the committee? Perhaps the Prime Minister could answer that question.

INQUIRY RESPECTING RECOMMENDATION TO CANCEL CHALLENGER PROGRAM

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, it is very clear from the testimony given last fall by Canadair officials, plus the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce as well as Senator Austin, that they were attempting to downplay the seriousness of this mess. That is completely contrary to the secret report, of which there are only five copies.

Did either the departmental task force report or this secret report recommend to the Government that the Challenger program be cancelled forthwith?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it will be remembered that at that time the difficulties were known but that Canadair was still attempting to sell the Challenger, which was and is a very good aircraft. I would assume that the directors of Canadair, as they then were, were not anxious to indicate the company was in financial difficulty lest they lose prospective buyers. To me, that is the context in which this, shall we say, over optimistic look at the future was put forward.

INDUSTRY

WHITE FARM EQUIPMENT COMPANY—RECEIVER'S ACTIONS

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture I want to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. A very serious problem has developed in the primary sector of the agricultural industry as a result of the financial problems of White Farm Equipment of Canada. The receiver has frozen the delivery of replacement parts, and I am certain the Minister will appreciate the severe difficulty such a move is causing to White dealers across the country, and subsequently to the farmers.

I ask the Minister to take a personal interest in this matter and give us a commitment to contact the receiver later today, as soon as possible, to work out some arrangement whereby these parts can be released and forwarded to dealers, so that farmers can get back into motion?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, we have already been in touch with the receiver. I understand he is giving some consideration to this if he has an infusion of capital, the sum of which I am not aware of right now. Apparently he has asked the owners of the company if they are going to put up this capital to take care of this parts situation during the interim period, until such time as they decide to either restructure the company or sell it to one of the prospective buyers.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

INCREASE IN LOCKAGE FEES

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In the debate over the important Crow rate the Minister has apparently forgotton an equally important issue, that is, the issue of shipping on the Great Lakes. In light of the many representations which have been made to me and other Hon. Members in the House with regard to the subject of lockage fees in the canals, I wonder if the Minister has considered repealing this unjust and crippling ruling.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Yes, Madam Speaker, I have brought that thought to the attention of the Seaway authority repeatedly. The answer that I have been given is that it has been studying that subject, that is, tonnage versus lockage fees. It has made a study of it. The study is still under consideration, but generally the mood has been to say that the present difficulties have been much more attributable to the general economic circumstances than to the decision to go to a form of lockage fees as opposed to tonnage fees.

Mr. Fretz: The Minister will understand that this especially hurts the owners of small ships and it affects jobs in my riding, those of the seamen who work on their ships and people who service and repair the ships as well.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER SEEK READJUSTMENT

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): In light of the fact that shipping is now down one-third, will the Minister continue to press for a readjustment or a complete elimination of lockage fees? Will he do that?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have given the answer which is considered to be the wise on at this time. However, if my hon. friend wants me to take up the subject again with the Seaway, I will, this afternoon or tomorrow.

TRANSPORT

STUDY OF ATLANTIC FREIGHT RATE SUBSIDIES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Recently the Minister established a major inquiry or study into Atlantic freight rate subsidies. Would the Minister indicate whether the establishment of that study is meant to signal that the Minister personally favours changes to the freight subsidies in question? If so, why, and specifically what does he have in mind?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Transport has only one thing in mind, and he has been stating it for the last three years—

An Hon. Member: Kill the Crow.

Mr. Pepin: —that is, that the Government and the Department of Transport, in particular, have a responsibility, which is to spend money, the people's money, in the best possible way. Consequently the poor Minister of Transport occasionally sees fit, and others have done the same in the past, to make studies to see if the money is well spent.

My only contribution to the subject has been the establishment of a Maritime envelope. Moneys saved on subsidies are put back into the envelope and used for other transportation purposes, as in the case of highways, for example, recently and in the past year.

IMPACT OF SUBSIDIES ON REGION'S ECONOMY

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. He has a responsibility to consult with the Provinces affected by any changes in the freight rate subsidies. Given the fact that the Atlantic freight rate subsidies enable the four Atlantic Provinces to transport their goods from their region to central Canada, in particular, and at affordable cost, and given the fact that any major change in the freight rate subsidies would level a crippling blow to the economy of the entire region, would the Minister assure the House that he will consider the issue not only from the point of view of transport but also in terms of the economic welfare of the whole Atlantic region?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend mentions "a crippling blow". Other authorities on the subject, some of them from the Maritimes, have said the opposite, that these subsidies do not have a direct influence on economic development in the Maritimes. That is why we have a study, to find out which of those two positions makes sense. The study is going on now and we have collected the facts. We are analysing them, and later on we will discuss the conclusions. The consultant is discussing it with the most important groups in the Maritimes. Other officials of the Department will consult with other groups. In-depth cogitation by provincial and federal authorities will take place before a decision is made.

AGRICULTURE

STAFFING OF AGASSIZ RESEARCH STATION IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture I would like to direct my question to his Parliamentary Secretary. Why have there been reductions in authorized person-years at agricultural research stations in western Canada, particularly the Agassiz Research Station in my constituency of Fraser Valley East, whose work has gained world-wide acclaim, while staff allocations have been increased in other areas of Canada?

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, this question was answered previously by the Minister, who said that there had been no cutbacks in staff in any of the research stations and that existing staff had been distributed more efficiently within those stations. My hon. colleague can therefore rest assured that there will be no drop in service in the research stations in his province.

[English]

IMPACT ON RESEARCH PROJECTS

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): I understand that there has been reduction in person-years.

I would like to ask the following question. Can the Parliamentary Secretary assure the House that the vital research and experimental work in progress at centres such as the Agassiz Research Station will not be adversely affected by any of these cutbacks?

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I have taken note of the question and I shall certainly pass this information on to the Minister, who will be able to give my colleague the assurances he needs.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

MAINTENANCE OF CHICOUTIMI REGIONAL OFFICE—INQUIRY WHETHER REPRESENTATIONS MADE

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Jonquière): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. On April 5, 1983, the National Film Board announced its intention to proceed with selective shutdowns of regional offices. The Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean region will be the first to suffer from this discriminatory policy, at the end of August, 1983. My constituents are most upset by this unfair and unacceptable decision, and I have received many representations which I have submitted to the Minister, to the effect that not only were users of this service going to be penalized but the entire region as well, because it would thus be deprived of a major and essential federal presence. My question is as follows: Could the Minister inform the House whether he has made representations to the National Film Board to reconsider his decision and whether we can assume that the regional office of the National Film Board in Chicoutimi will be maintained without any cutbacks—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I must remind Hon. Members that questions may not be read. Questions are, by their very nature, spontaneous, and I shall have to be stricter on this point, because it is the only way to keep questions fairly short.

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, perhaps I may be allowed to answer the Hon. Member's question. I am aware that the question concerns many Members on both sides of the House, but perhaps I may say that I have received particularly strong representations from the Members for Chicoutimi, Lac-Saint-Jean, Jonquière, Thunder Bay and other regions in this country. I have transmitted these concerns to the Commissioner of the National Film Board of Canada who raised the question again with his board of directors last Friday. After the board meeting, a decision was made to delay implementation of the board's decision to close the offices, until such time as other services would be available to provide the same level of service to the community.

INDUSTRY

NABU CORPORATION—AGREEMENT ON ACQUISITION OF CONSOLIDATED COMPUTERS INCORPORATED

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and it concerns Nabu Manufacturing Corporation. As the Minister knows, this corporation acquired Consolidated Computer Incorporated for some $100,000 after the Government had sunk, and lost, some $125 million in that company. As well, the Government gave Nabu some $8.9 million last December as a research grant, yet the company is to lay off half of its workers, over 100 workers. Can the Minister tell us if the company has violated its agreement with the Government in terms of maintaining and creating jobs, and what sort of agreement did the Government have with Nabu Manufacturing?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, first I want to thank the Hon. Member for advance notice of the question.

With respect to the first part of the question—

An Hon. Member: Were any deals made?

Mr. Lumley: There were no deals made. This is a very legitimate question, and I am sure that Members of the Official Opposition would like to know the answer, too.

• (1440)

In answer to the first part of the question, Nabu has lived up to the employment commitment made under the contract with the Government with respect to the purchase of CCI. The discussion on the $8.9 million grant for research and development, which could create anywhere from 250 to 500 jobs, and many other jobs depending on how successful the research is, was held in a totally different context than the discussions with CCI.

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON JOB CREATION

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I find it incredible that after the $125 million loss the Government cannot guarantee that this company will maintain its jobs. The question is on when the Government agreement took effect, because in less than a year this company will have laid off half of its workers.

A former chief executive of the company is quoted as saying that "it was a pretty loosey goosey arrangement with the Government all along". Is the Minister prepared to tell us exactly what the Government's policy is, in terms of job creation and job guarantees, when it gives a $125 million company away for less than $100,000. What is the policy, and is the Minister prepared to make public the arrangements and agreements that the Government entered into with Nabu?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the Opposition cannot have it two ways. My colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, has been under attack for the last three or four weeks with respect to what we are doing with Canadair and de Havilland into which the Government has invested a substantial amount of money in order to protect Canadian workers and Canadian jobs in a high-tech industry. Now the Hon. Member is complaining from the other side of the fence that we should not have sold this company but should have continued to put more money into it. I wish the Opposition would make up their minds.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CANADAIR—ACTIONS OF OFFICIALS

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. With respect to the Canadair matter, the Minister has no doubt had an opportunity to review all the departmental and ministerial documents on that Crown corporation. Is he contemplating any action against those officials and members of the Crown corporation and those officials of his Department who have apparently deliberately misled the Ministers of that Department in the last two Governments?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I think the charges made by the Hon. Member are very serious and that he ought to have the courage to make them outside the House. If a Minister is not satisfied with the work being done by people who work for him, it does not take him three or four months to make a decision.

[English]

INFORMATION GIVEN TO MINISTERS

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, my question was directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who has the same background and historical documents on Canadair as his predecessors. I am asking if he is satisfied that the people preparing those documents for the Ministers not only of his Government but of the previous Government should be free of blame for the information that Ministers were given on that Crown corporation?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the Government judges situations on the basis of documents and reports submitted by its officials, and the House is not the place to judge or criticize the work done by these officials.

INCOME TAX

PREPAYMENT OF TAX BY SENIOR CITIZENS—TREATMENT OF CANADA BONDS INCOME

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that retired persons are now required to pay income tax quarterly in March, June, and September, and that the prepayment imposes a hardship on some people whose income is derived primarily from Canada Savings Bonds which pay interest only in November, is the Minister considering an amendment to the legislation which would allow a more convenient method of payment for retired persons with limited incomes?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her interest in the situation of retired persons and senior citizens. I must say that many Members of the House, particularly on this side of the House, have made representations to me in this regard.

I am examining this issue which I feel to be important. There are some difficulties that I would like to address at a later stage as I examine whether an amendment to the legislation would be appropriate. I am not however, in a position today to give an answer to the Hon. Member. I can only say that I am reviewing the situation with keen interest.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICE CANADA

PRICING POLICY OF CORCAN

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General whom I see returning to the House. The Solicitor General will recall that during the last several years Members on both sides of the House have indicated concerns about the pricing policy of Corcan, the industry section of Correctional Services Canada. Could he confirm to the House that the policy of Corcan is indeed as he said to me in a letter, dated April 19, 1982, that Corcan's pricing is "to equal private sector fair market price for equivalent products sold in equivalent volumes"? Is this the present policy of Corcan, and would the Minister confirm that Corcan manufactures all of its products on a custom order basis?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): No, Madam Speaker, not all of its products are made on a custom order basis. Some products are made in order to build up an inventory for sale. In fact the statement that the Hon. Member read from my letter about pricing policy is still the policy of Corcan.

Mr. Halliday: With respect to the ordering on a custom order basis, we understand from one of the officials that that is indeed their policy.

BIDDING ON PRINCE ALBERT CONTRACT

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Madam Speaker, a particular order from the City of Prince Albert was bid on by ten different bidders, including Corcan. Their bid was one-third lower than the second lowest bid, and two-thirds lower than the highest. Will the Minister explain how that can happen if indeed they are trying to price at the same level as the private sector?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I was not aware of that particular price competition. I would like the opportunity to look into it, and I would be prepared to answer the Hon. Member's question as soon as possible.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF FOREIGN WORKERS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I am sure that he knows that there are close to two million Canadians out of work. In some areas of Canada foreign nationals are being allowed in to take jobs that could be filled by Canadians. On the "Journal" on March 10 the Minister had the following to say:

> —if an industry comes and says there's simply no Canadian available, then we say: 'Well, you may be allowed a foreign worker but you have to accompany that by a training program for a Canadian.'

Would the Minister comment on that because I am sure, as he knows, that that statement is patently false.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is using some fairly strong language. I wish he could provide a case to back it up.

EMPLOYMENT OF FOREIGN NATIONALS AT PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, on June 6 the Minister sent me a letter. On the second page he said:

> —there are no training programs accompanying the 16 positions occupied by U.S. citizens on the Ridley Island Port Development.

He went on to say that Swedish engineers, technicians, workers, and even an accountant, are allowed to work on the grain port at Prince Rupert. I am sure there are unemployed workers, or an unemployed engineer or accountant somewhere in Canada who may be able to do that. Would he tell the House and Canadians why he made that false statement on the "Journal", and what the real policy is in terms of letting foreign nationals work in Canada?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, it is unfortunate that the Hon. Member did not have the courtesy to read the other part of the letter which pointed out that, in the case of the Ridley Island construction, those workers brought in from other countries were hired on a temporary basis because the equipment being installed was designed in another country and only those technicians had the particular competence to put it in.

It would seem to me that if the Hon. Member is going to read from the record he should read from the entire record, and not try to mislead the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK

INTEREST RATES CHARGED TO SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Federal Business Development Bank. I receive complaints every day from borrowers from this bank, which is supposedly to be the bank of last resort, that they are being charged 21.75 per cent interest rates. What will the Minister do at this time to relieve the pressure that is placed upon the small business people who have had to use the Federal Business Development Bank but are now being charged unrealistic interest on loans?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of State responsible for small business and tourism, who is responsible for the day-to-day operation of the Federal Business Development Bank, is with the Prince and Princess today. I will be happy to bring the Hon. Member's representation to his attention.

AIR TRANSPORT

NATIONALIZATION OF QUEBECAIR BY PROVINCE OF QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Éva Côté (Rimouski-Témiscouata): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of Transport.

I would like to ask the Minister whether he could inform the House of his reaction to yesterday's announcement by the Government of the Province of Quebec regarding the nationalization of Quebecair. I should also like to know whether the Minister is still prepared to assist in restructuring Quebecair.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I had several reactions, but I think that first of all, I was sorry to hear that the Quebec Minister of Transport has decided not to pursue our negotiations. I think he finally gave in to certain political ideas and psychological frustrations he has had for quite some time. I would say that his true self has surfaced. I am also sorry that this is the second time we have missed a chance to put Quebecair on a maximum efficiency and viability basis. I am sorry about this, and I think everyone will agree with me. What can we do now for Quebecair? We are not dog-in-the-mangerish. We are willing to co-operate. Air Canada is prepared to co-operate with Quebecers at the technical and administrative level. As far as I and my department are concerned, we are also interested in developing the third level in Quebec, namely, intraprovincial transport. However, as soon as I say that, Mr. Clair will take this as an insult to Quebec because according to the Minister, Quebec should be up there at the international, world and space levels!

COPYRIGHT

DISCUSSION OF REVISIONS TO LEGISLATION

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, my question concerns the Copyright Act. I appreciate that the Minister responsible is not in the House, but perhaps someone could answer my question. There were printed reports yesterday to the effect that copyright revisions are currently being discussed with representatives of the Canadian Manufacturers Association and others. If the Government believes it is reasonable to discuss with business representatives proposed new amendments to the copyright legislation, could the Government please inform us why it decided not, on the same conditions and terms, to discuss those amendments with representatives of the Consumer Association of Canada, since presumably it is consumers that the copyright legislation is most intended to help?

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, as far as I am aware, any of the discussions have been of a purely general nature. None of the specific revisions or proposals of the Government have been disclosed. Certainly all groups will be consulted when the legislation is tabled in the fall.

AUTHENTICITY OF PRESS REPORTS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary. Is he saying that the press reports yesterday quoting various public officers of the Department, that private conversations were going on with representatives of business communities and not with consumers, are in fact not true? If so, could he explain why those reports came out over the authority of press officers of his Department?

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I have not seen the actual press reports. I know that I have personally engaged in such consultations but, as I said in my previous answer, none of these consultations have divulged any of the proposals of the Government. They are ongoing consultations which the Department has had with respect to the copyright revisions.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

ACQUISITION OF FUNDS TO MEET BORROWERS' DEMANDS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who yesterday received a wire from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture asking him to allow the Farm Credit Corporation to make its own decisions regarding an appropriate level of borrowings on the open market for relending to farmers. Since FCC has now run out of money until next spring and desperately needs more money to handle the needs from the pent-up demand coming out of the high interest period, and from farmers seeking refinancing, could the Minister assure the House that he will not further restrict the attempts by FCC to acquire more funds to service this need and, if not, how does he propose to permit FCC to operate under its new mandate to raise funds on the so-called open market?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is probably aware that the Minister of Finance has a certain responsibility for the Government's borrowing policies. I firmly intend to assume the responsibility vested in me by law and to do so completely and to the best of my knowledge.

As far as the specific point raised by the Hon. Member is concerned, I can inform him that I have been discussing this with the Minister of Agriculture for some time, and as soon as we finish our discussions, I can assure the Hon. Member that we shall be informing him of our conclusions.

DELAY IN APPROVING MINISTER'S APPLICATION TO CABINET

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that the Minister of Agriculture said that the Farm Credit Corporation was broke and that he had made application to Cabinet for approval for the FCC to go out on the money markets of the world, either through agri-bonds or otherwise, would the President of the Treasury Board tell the House what is the delay in allowing this application by the Minister of Agriculture to go forward?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, clearly, such a decision requires the co-operation of the Minister of Finance and Cabinet. We are looking into the financial consequences of such a possibility, and as soon as satisfactory conclusions have been reached, these will be announced.

[English]

TIMING OF CABINET APPROVAL

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that farmers are really suffering because of lack of financing at the present time, could the Minister of Finance tell us when he expects this approval to be given to the Farm Credit Corporation?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Soon, Madam Speaker.

INDUSTRY

NABU CORPORATION—TERMS OF GOVERNMENT GRANT

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It relates to the $8.9 million which was given last December to Nabu Manufacturing Corporation. Was there a condition in that research grant that it was to maintain employment levels or increase employment levels?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, because it was a grant under STEP, which is for research and development assistance for high risk projects, there was no specific condition attached regarding the hiring or laying off of people. It was expected that the grant could create anywhere from 250 to 500 jobs if the project was successful. I am sure the Hon. Member knows there is a substantial amount of risk associated with high technology. That is why, in my response to the Member for Regina East, I indicated that there were two different aspects, the one with CCI and the one with the research development project that could create many jobs for Canadians in years to come.

Mr. Dick: I appreciate the Minister's comments. I realize that there are two different aspects to it.

CREATION OF JOBS IN OTHER COUNTRIES

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Government has made an awful lot of claims that, through supporting high technology, it expected to create a number of jobs in the future. Nabu has now indicated that it will put its computer employment jobs offshore and that that is the reason it is cutting half of its present jobs. Does the Minister believe that the high technology industry will in fact create as many jobs as once thought?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, certainly there is a very strong strategy by the Government to encourage the growth and development of high technology which would source its equipment in Canada. As the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has pointed out in several of his statements, we have to insist upon encouraging the development and growth of the high technology industry in Canada. The ways we can do that are to ensure that it does its purchasing here and at the same time is able to train people here.

The Hon. Member should know, because he is from the Ottawa area, that we recently signed an agreement with eight of the high level high technology firms in the Ottawa area to establish a new on-the-job training program for high technology, which will give them the ability to attract Canadian workers and train them for qualified work which can be made available here, and therefore encourage more work to be done in Canada.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CANADAIR—ADVICE GIVEN BY DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIAL—TESTIMONY GIVEN TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns Canadair. In September, 1982 Cabinet was advised by Gordon Ritchie, Assistant Deputy Minister of Industry, to use his words, "of the high risk position of Canadair". The distorted position of the directors, perhaps for the reasons expressed by the Prime Minister, was expressed to the parliamentary committee in November. Why did Cabinet not act to rectify the distorted testimony given to the committee in November?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I cannot vouch for the exact dates, but my recollection is that it was around that time Cabinet began to seek ways to transfer control of Canadair to CDIC.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, if Cabinet was aware in September, 1982, of the financial jeopardy Canadair was in, does the Prime Minister not believe that Cabinet had a duty to an all-Party committee to correct the distortions which were left by the board of directors because of their zeal to sell the Challenger?

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question with regard to Canadair. My question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, to whom numerous questions have been directed, both today and on previous days, with respect to this issue. The Minister has refused to answer, permitting his colleague to respond. Does the Minister acknowledge a responsibility to reply with respect to Canadair for that period of time during which that company was reporting directly to the Ministry of Industry, Trade and Commerce, or does the Minister adopt the principle that he can escape his responsibility retroactively because the reporting process was changed to another Ministry?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member ought to know that another Minister is responsible for Canadair, and that the Minister in question is accountable for any developments in this case.

MR. GREENAWAY—RECONSIDERATION OF BILL C-10

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition signed by 139 citizens of the Cariboo-Chilcotin riding of British Columbia. The purpose of this petition is to protest the provisions of Bill C-10 which would allow the Government to interfere in the affairs of churches and voluntary organizations. The petitioners hope that your examination of the petition you will find it in order and that you will exercise the discretionary powers vested in the office of the Speaker of the House to allow discussion at the earliest possible time in order that the flaws in this proposed legislation may be pointed out.

Madam Speaker: I congratulate the Hon. Member on the brevity of his presentation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MR. McMILLAN—ELIMINATION OF LEAD ADDITIVES TO GASOLINE

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, the petition that the 1,267 undersigned residents of the Provinces of Ontario and Newfoundland, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your Honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth that the practice of adding lead to gasoline is the leading source of high levels of lead in the Canadian environment.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to provide legislation which calls for the total elimination of lead additives to gasoline in Canada and to ensure that safe economical alternatives which are known to exist are provided.

MR. BLAIKIE—BROADCASTING REGULATIONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and the duty to present petitions of my constituents, all of whom belong to the Springfield Heights Mennonite Church, who are concerned about pornography and the fact that the CRTC broadcasting regulations do not extend to women the same protection against abusive comments or abusive pictorial representation as now exists for racial and religious groups.

Wherefore they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to demonstrate its opposition to the denigration of women by enacting an Act to amend the Broadcasting Act, as introduced by Lynn McDonald, M.P. for Broadview-Greenwood, on March 8, 1983.

MR. McKNIGHT—METRIC MEASUREMENT

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, on behalf of petitioners from the Town of Alsask in the Province of Saskatchewan I wish to present a petition. The petitioners believe that Canadians should be free to use their customary Canadian measurements without threat of fine or imprisonment.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon the Parliament of Canada to rescind the Order in Council making the use of metric measurements compulsory and to reinstitute voluntary freedom of choice in the use of measurements. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. YOUNG—SAFE DRINKING WATER

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I have a petition signed by 22 residents of the Province of Ontario. The petition of the undersigned residents in the Province of Ontario, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your Honourable House will therefor provide a remedy, humbly sheweth that toxic chemicals are posing an increasing threat to the potable waters of this Province; that there is presently no legislation which will guarantee the safety and healthfulness of those waters; and that Canada's neighbour, the United States of America, has legislation entitled "The Safe Drinking Water Act, 1974".

Wherefore we, the undersigned, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact a safe drinking water act which will protect and enhance drinking water quality in all areas of Canada.

MR. ANGUISH—RETENTION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I have a petition I would like to present today signed by the residents of Ponteix.

Wherefore the undersigned your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory Crow rate.

MR. HEAP—AMERICAN OPERATIONS IN NICARAGUA

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of residents of Ontario, who now exercise their right to present a grievance and humbly sheweth that we request and strongly advise the Canadian Government to express the following desire of the Canadian public to the American Government. We desire the immediate cessation of the American Government's operations against the Government and people of Nicaragua in the interests of international peace and freedom in Central America. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. PARKER—NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, it is my duty and privilege to present a petition today on behalf of residents in all of the communities in Kootenay East-Revelstoke. The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada, who now exercise their right to present a grievance, humbly sheweth that whereas we now face an end to this planet as a result of the present nuclear arms race, therefore we, the undersigned petitioners, call on the Government of Canada actively to support a global freeze on testing, production and deployment of nuclear weapons and their delivery systems, to deny the United States permission to test the new Cruise missile system in Canada, to press all nations to pledge never to be the first to use nuclear weapons and to immediately set aside one-tenth of 1 per cent of Canada's defence budget, $7 million, for disarmament efforts. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

RETENTION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I have the duty and honour to present a petition on behalf of residents of the riding of Kindersley-Lloydminster. In their petition these western Canadian farmers indicate that grain has contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade in the 1982-83 crop year and the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rates.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present two petitions signed by 77 Canadian citizens of Rycroft, Peace River and Edmonton, Alberta, Ernfold, Chaplin and Morse in Saskatchewan, and Ottawa, Ontario. I must do this with all modesty. They have carefully considered the alternative plan presented on behalf of the New Democratic Party by Les Benjamin, M.P. for Regina West, and urge the Parliament of Canada to adopt the provisions in order that the statutory Crowsnest Pass freight rate may be maintained for grain producers.

Wherefore your undersigned petitioners humbly pray that Parliament will act in such a manner.

MR. SKELLY—MARINE INDUSTRIAL STRATEGY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a final petition that comes from a number of individuals from the Province of Manitoba and the Province of British Columbia in which those people request that the Government of Canada implement immediately a marine industrial strategy that would create thousands of jobs and billions of dollars in industrial benefits for Canadians. The petitioners implicitly support the concept of regional distribution of the benefits of the frigate program on a two-two-two basis, and finally, they would also implicitly support the concept that legislation should be passed immediately by the House of Commons to support the marine industrial policy that was developed by the Government in recent months.

STUDY OF ASA TABLETS BY UPSTATE MEDICAL CENTRE

Question No. 4,709—Mr. Mitges:

1. To the knowledge of the Government, did a study by the Upstate Medical Centre in Syracuse, New York indicate that pregnant women should not take the pain-killer acetylsalicylic acid tablets within five days of their delivery or immediately afterward because there was found evidence of unusual bleeding or haemorrhage?

2. Have there been any Canadian studies or other studies done to substantiate this claim and, if so, has there been any action by the Department of National Health and Welfare to alert the doctors and the general public?

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes, the Department of National Health and Welfare is aware that a study by the Upstate Medical Centre in Syracuse, New York indicated that pregnant women should not take the pain killer acetylsalicylic acid tablets within five days of their delivery or immediately afterward because evidence was found of unusual bleeding or haemorrhage.

2. Yes, the Department of National Health and Welfare has sponsored reviews of Canadian and foreign data relating to safety and effectiveness of analgesics by Expert Advisory Committees composed of nongovernment pharmacologists and clinicians on a number of occasions during the 1970s and 1980s.

These reviews led to the publication of Information Letter No. 565 in October, 1979 which cautioned that ASA might be harmful to the mother and/or her foetus when taken during the last three months of pregnancy. This was followed by Information Letter No. 622 (May 5, 1982) proposing that all products containing ASA would be required to carry the following warning on the label: "Do not take during the last three months of pregnancy or during lactation without prior consultation with a physician". This message went to Health Professional Associations, drug manufacturers and public advocacy groups for comment.

The final disposition of proposals in Information Letter No. 622 will be published in August, 1983.

REGISTRY OF INDIAN ARTS AND CRAFTS

Question No. 4,742—Mr. Schellenberger:

Does the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development keep a registry of all Indian arts and crafts it has in its possession including that used to decorate the offices of the Cabinet Ministers and the Department, as well as the Department's buildings in Canada, and are values attached to each?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has an inventory of all its holdings of art on an automated inventory control system. A more detailed record of each work of art is also maintained by the Indian Art Centre. Most of the Department's holdings of art are housed at headquarters, DIAND, 10 Wellington Street,

Hull, Quebec. The regional offices also have art holdings. These too are inventoried at headquarters. Since new curatorial procedures are now in the process of being developed, exact figures as to the value of individual works of art is not available. Our best estimate places the value of the collection at well over $1 million.

RESEARCH INTO DRUG INTERFERON

Question No. 4,854—Mr. Howie:

During the fiscal year (a) 1980-81 (b) 1981-82 (c) 1982-83, what financial support did the Government give to the research or development of the drug interferon?

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): In so far as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned: (a), (b) and (c) None.

In so far as the Medical Research Council is concerned: the following financial support (including salary support), was given for research in the development of the drug interferon.

(a) 1980-81 ..... $120,275
(b) 1981-82 ..... $222,927
(c) 1982-83 ..... $273,688.

POST OFFICE, SOOKE, B.C.

Question No. 4,887—Mr. Manly:

Was there a public tender for the new postal facility in Sooke, British Columbia and, if so, what were all the details, including information on the length of the leases and moneys involved?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Canada Post Corporation identified a requirement for 257 square metres of usable processing space for a period of ten years commencing February 1 1983.

On April 26 through 29, 1982, public advertisements were placed by Public Works Canada in major Vancouver, Victoria and local Vancouver Island newspapers requesting offers be submitted in accordance with standard Public Works Canada and Canada Post Corporation specifications. Tender call closed May 19 1982 with two valid offers being received. Both offers met all the terms and conditions of the tender specification and offered space at a gross rate of 280.73/square metre and 399/square metre respectively, firm for ten years.

Public Works Canada recommended the lowest offer, Canada Post Corporation concurred and a ten-year lease was entered into at a total annual cost of $83,298.11.

CANADIAN UNITY INFORMATION OFFICE

Question No. 4,891—Mr. Blackburn:

During certain times of the year, have staff members of the Canadian Unity Information Office performed a press clipping service for other Departments and, if so, how often is this service performed by the Office and does the requesting Department pay for the costs involved, including staff salaries, in the provision of this service?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Yes, the Canadian Unity Information Office does provide an in-house clipping service. These services are available upon request at no charge to the Departments. In 1983, the service was provided to departments an average of three times per month.

TELEPHONE REFERRAL SERVICES

Question No. 4,950—Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River):

1. Is there a listing under Telephone Referral Services for the Province of Ontario, the Province of Prince Edward Island and the Northwest Territories in the 1983 edition of the "Index to Federal Programs and Services 1983" and, if not, for what reason?

2. Does the Government maintain telephone referral services for the Provinces of Ontario and Prince Edward Island and the Northwest Territories and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, for what reason is it not listed in the Index?

3. Was a decision reached to exclude the Provinces of Ontario and Prince Edward Island and the Northwest Territories from the Telephone Referral Services and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): The Index to Federal Programs and Services 1983 list the federal and joint federal-provincial telephone referral services which were operational in January, 1983 and therefore available to the public. Listings for Ontario, Prince Edward Island and the Northwest Territories were not in the 1983 Index as service was not available at that time.

An agreement has been signed with Prince Edward Island to establish a joint federal-provincial telephone referral service. The referral service, which is listed in the most recent telephone directory, has just started up. The numbers (in Charlottetown—local 566-7575, long distance, call toll free 1-566-7575) will be listed in the next edition of the Index.

In the Northwest Territories, a joint service with the territorial government was not possible and a federal referral system was considered not economical as some federal Departments and Agencies already provide toll free service to this region. These telephone numbers are included in the 1983 edition of the Index.

In Ontario a federal toll free service will be in operation by September 1, 1983.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pepin that Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport; and the motion of Mr. Lachance (p. 26521).

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, another feature of the freedom of choice concept is that it hurts nobody. It does not hurt the railways. It puts the railways in a position that if they give good service, the people will use the railways. The more efficient the railways become, the more money they would make. That is the proper way for a free enterprise project to work.

It will not hurt the farmers of Quebec. The farmers of Quebec will still have their markets and will still have their own subsidies. Freedom of choice for western Canadians will not hurt the Quebec people. It will not hurt anybody.

It will not hurt the Government. As a matter of fact, it will be of benefit to the Government because it will allow the Government to show that it is democratic by getting back to the people and letting the people decide some of these things. The freedom of choice proposition has tremendous possibilities.

Freedom of choice would be beneficial to every farm family home in western Canada because the husband and wife and children could decide what is best for them and how they want to use the money. The people will have the say. That is a wonderful concept, and I would like to see it adopted by the Government. It would be to its credit to adopt it.

There are three or four things I would like to mention in regard to this whole issue. First, we expect the railways to be adequately compensated. They must be compensated. While they should not be making exorbitant profit, they should be making a reasonable profit so that they can do the things they want to do as can any other business. The Government should make it clear, though, that it has a funding commitment and will undertake that. There should be adequate rail service with guaranteed capacity and the best way to guarantee service in the rail transportation industries in western Canada is to allow freedom of choice.

As the official of CPR that I spoke with said: "If we do not operate well, they will take their business somewhere else. If we operate well, they will bring their money to us, they will bring their goods to us, they will bring their wheat and their crops to us." Good service will bring the railways more and more business in a proper and legitimate fashion.

The Hon. Minister said that he wanted to remove the distortions that existed and Gilson said that the only possible way to remove those distortions is to put the shortfall money in the pockets of the producers. That is what Gilson and some of the best agricultural minds of western Canada have said. The Hon. Minister should accept that. The railways will have an ongoing obligation and so will the Government. These freight anomalies should be removed.

I see that you are waving at me, Mr. Speaker. I feel like waving back because there are another dozen things that I would like to say. But I do want to say that the freedom of choice proposition should be incorporated in this Bill. If it is not and if the Government is going to stick with Bill C-155 as it is presently written, it would be better to throw the whole thing out and revert back to the Crow rate.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak on this very important legislation, Bill C-155. At the same time, I am pleased to pay tribute to the outstanding contributions which have been made by my colleagues, in particular the Hon. Members for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) and Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), who have done such an outstanding job in communicating to the people of Canada the position taken by the New Democratic Party on this very important legislation.

I would like to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that this issue does not affect only one region of the country. This issue is of national importance. Even though the Crow rate has effectively been described as the Magna Carta of the West, in many ways the ramifications of this Bill go far beyond the West. I as a representative of a constituency in British Columbia have a number of very serious concerns about the effect this Bill would have on my constituents. I know that in the course of this debate my colleagues have tried to bring forth the concerns they have as to how the Bill might affect not only their constituents but people all across the country.

I would note as well that we are faced with a very important question of process when dealing with this legislation. It has been suggested, in effect, that there has been enough debate. Parliament is being gagged and muzzled by the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) which would effectively deny us any opportunity to improve this legislation in principle at second reading. Any possible amendments are being presented. There were a number of amendments we suggested which we believed would have improved this legislation, but through a parliamentary device which was last used in the House, I believe, in 1955 we are being stifled and debate is in effect being closed. This kind of back door closure and trickery is completely unacceptable.

We have heard the Official Opposition talk about freedom of choice. In many respects, for the farmer freedom of choice means freedom to choose how he or she is to be shafted by the PC proposals. Effectively, there are no safeguards whatsoever to ensure that the farming community will not be very badly hurt by the legislation. We have seen estimates which show that some $6,000 per year will be lost by the average farmer. The Government has the nerve to suggest that he should accept that and that this debate should be ended. That is not acceptable, Mr. Speaker.

I have noted that this is an issue of national importance. I should like to draw the attention of the House to a statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) primarily in western Canada with respect to this legislation. He said that he was hearing different views on the Crow rate from different groups in the West and that he had made it clear that the Government would like to settle the matter in a way which would achieve the greatest possible consensus in the West.

There is far from being a consensus in the West, Mr. Speaker. This is one of the most divisive pieces of legislation ever seen in western Canada. On February 13, 1981 the Prime Minister said that at the present time it was the Government's policy not to touch the Crow rate, but if there was a general feeling in the West that the question must be reopened, then it would be happy to do so.

Not only is there not a general feeling in the West that the Crow rate should be reopened, but in fact the general feeling in the West is quite to the contrary. The Government of Saskatchewan, the Government of Manitoba and the Government of Alberta were not quite sure where they stood. Certainly they have been rather silent on this important issue although they have been vociferous on other questions, such as that of dismantling medicare in Alberta.

I should like to deal with some of the particular concerns that Members from British Columbia have about the legislation. I would preface my remarks by saying that it is rather curious that in this bonanza for the CPR—and that is what it is, a bonanza for the CPR—there is no suggestion there be a quid pro quo. It might be one thing if we were to be told that the poor, suffering CPR was finally going to be adequately compensated for transporting grain if in exchange, as a quid pro quo, it were to turn Marathon Realty over to the people of Canada. But we do not hear anything about the profit-making subsidiaries of CP Rail, Mr. Speaker.

Last year this corporate giant had a profit of $485 million on assets over $16 billion, so the silence is rather curious in view of the suggestion that a bargain was made with the people of Canada, particularly with the farmers in western Canada. That bargain is being broken with this legislation. That sacred trust with the farmers of western Canada and indeed with this country is being broken. In exchange for an agreement to transport grain at the statutory rate, CP Rail was given vast tracts of land, mineral rights and money.

It has been suggested that if CP were suddenly to renege on the bargain, the taxpayers of Canada have the right to insist that the resources involved be put into the hands of the people of Canada. I have heard very little about this from Members of the Official Opposition and Members of the Government. As we know very well, both Parties receive very significant corporate contributions from CP Rail, so perhaps that is why the old saying "He who pays the piper expects to call the tune" is appropriate in his case.

It has been suggested that shippers of other products in British Columbia might pay more as a result of the Crow rate, but that is not so, Mr. Speaker. To change the Crow rate will not in any way relax the freight rate screw on other shippers. The railways are in a monopoly position in western Canada and will set their rate at whatever the market will bear. In any event, the transportation of grain accounts for only 13 per cent of total transportation. The Government of Alberta, that great free enterprise Government, admits that the railways would continue to set rates on the historic basis and would not be affected by the increased grain revenues.

We are not just criticizing the Bill, saying that it must be withdrawn for all the reasons so eloquently stated across the country by the Hon. Member for Regina West, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett), the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper), the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) and others, but we offer a real, constructive alternative.

It may be asked what a New Democratic Party government would do in this area. We readily accept that it is essential that the rail system in this country be upgraded, but the history of the Government shows a systematic dismantling of the best components of our railway system. I recall vividly the proposals made to get rid of some of the most essential branch lines in western Canada when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) decided to axe VIA Rail. I believe that for a long time CP Rail has been ripping off the people of Canada. If the Bill were enacted in its present form, it would have the effect of Parliament sanctioning a continued rip-off.

What this Party has called for is better investment to upgrade the railways; an equity position for the people of Canada for any money that goes into CP Rail; and, one day in the not too distant future, we should seriously consider bringing that great corporate giant under public ownership. The time has come to recognize that it has failed to serve the people of Canada and appropriate steps should be taken to bring it under the control and direction of the people of Canada.

I urge the Government to withdraw this nefarious piece of legislation which is so destructive of the whole country, Mr. Speaker. I certainly hope the Government will come to its senses, that its Conservative allies will come to their senses, and that the legislation will be reconsidered.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) would be willing to answer a question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I am not sure that I heard the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) properly. Would he please repeat his point of order?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I wondered whether the Hon. Member for Burnaby would be willing to entertain a question at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): That would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have an opportunity to enter the debate on this motion today. I thought it would be a rather lengthy motion so I looked it up on the Order Paper and saw that it is very simple. It reads:

That this question be now put.

It sounds almost insignificant. However, there are a whole lot of implications in this one short sentence. Knowing my good friend, the Hon. Member who introduced the motion, as usual what he says has hidden implications.

• (1530)

This sentence gives me some concern because essentially what we are doing with that short phrase is moving into closure. We are cutting off debate. It is not the usual closure motion, but in fact that is simply what it accomplishes. There will be no room for further amendments. Therefore, any hope we had for discussion on various aspects of the Crow Bill is cut off. There is no chance for further debate on issues like the freedom of choice option which has been put forward by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). There is no assurance at this point that we, as an Opposition and as Hon. Members, in my case from the West, who are particularly concerned about this Bill and the effect of the legislation, have really been heard yet by the Minister. As a result of the motion, we do have some concerns because what in fact we are facing is closure.

The question I suppose then is: Why do we have closure at this particular time? The Government is always going to say that a Government has a right to legislate. It has the right to pass its laws, to introduce them into the House, and to make sure that those laws are debated and passed through the legislative process. We know that the Standing Orders of the House do make considerable reference to that opportunity. A great deal of the Standing Orders are put in place precisely for that purpose.

Of course, that is the viewpoint of the Government on that particular issue. However, on the other side of the coin, one principle which I believe is equally important is the viewpoint of the Opposition and its right—you might even say its duty—to oppose legislation in the hopes of obtaining improvement, to oppose legislation in the hopes of bringing to light some of the flaws that we as an Opposition see in a particular piece of legislation. Just as there are Standing Orders on the one side to allow the Government to proceed with its legislation, there are also Standing Orders on the other side to allow the Opposition the full and complete opportunity to oppose, to enter into debate and to discuss and report legislation. Therefore, those provisions are of equal importance to the Government's purpose. They also serve a very significant purpose in what happens in this House and what happens to legislation, and ultimately what we hope is good legislation coming through the House of Commons.

The question really boils down to why do we, as an Opposition, want to see an extended, careful, thorough debate on Bill C-155, the Crow legislation? The reason is that we feel it is important. I feel we can essentially look at approximately four particular reasons why we want to see this legislation given a thorough airing. First, it is because of the fact that the Crow is of fundamental importance, particularly to the West, but having a dramatic effect on all of Canada. That is because it is a long-term program. The Crow rate is a program which has been going on for a long period of time and any changes will have a continued effect for the foreseeable future.

Second, this particular program has been of great benefit to farmers over the years. It has allowed them time for planning, and that has been significant if one looks at many of our farmers in terms of rapidly increasing costs such as fuel, fertilizer, machinery, land, interest, development of land and so on. All those costs become very significant. Something as stable as the Crow benefit over a long period of time has allowed our farmers to plan and has allowed them to do some serious and straightforward thinking.

The farmers in my region are concerned about still having to develop some land. That was one of the original purposes of the Crow benefit. It was to allow our early farmers to be able to bring their agricultural land onstream and to develop it. In Peace River country that is quite an involved process. That means taking trees off the land, taking out the roots and breaking the land, all of which is expensive. There is still a very viable purpose for this in my area because we are still trying to bring on new land. We have a lot of agricultural land left which is tree covered, which is not yet into production. Therefore, the Crow benefit still has that particular benefit to farmers in the Peace River country.

Another reason why I believe it is necessary to have good, clear, concise debate is that the Crow rate is now nearly 100 years old. Surely, when we come into a situation such as we are facing here in the House of Commons now, there should be very little, if any, difficulty in setting aside a few months or a few hours of debate in order to assure that we do what is right to this particular piece of legislation which will have such a dramatic impact on the West and in fact on all of Canada. However, as usual, this Government once again is in a big hurry. It has to rush it through. It has to use closure in whatever form to accomplish its particular interests and goals. It is not concerned about what happens to those who are directly and dramatically affected by this legislation.

Another reason for having a good debate on this particular issue is that the Government does not have any representation in the West. Surely it is not unreasonable to ask that this House take a little time to hear some of the viewpoints which reflect that region of the country which is not represented on the Government's side in this particular legislation. There must be time to entertain amendments because those amendments provide new debate and new discussion and the chance of improving the legislation. There must be time to look at general improvements in the Bill, one of which I referred to earlier in my remarks, the proposal of freedom of choice which was put forward by the Hon. Member for Vegreville.

The whole concept of freedom of choice becomes very significant and very important to people in a region such as I represent simply because we have in so many of our areas large parts of the riding which are not serviced by rail and, therefore, our farmers must load their grain into trucks and travel as much as 100 to 120 miles to the nearest railhead. Therefore, the possibility of having a choice in terms of how farmers ship their grain and where that Crow benefit would be paid becomes very significant to them. That is one of the issues on which I would like to see a full discussion here in the House of Commons. That could have been very simply done through amendments, through discussions with the Minister and through various debates in the House. Today, however, we see this opportunity coming to an end very simply because of the motion which has been put forward that the question be now put, which is essentially closure, so that the whole debate comes grinding to a halt.

Another reason I believe it is important that we have a good debate is the basic lack of trust in this Government from coast to coast in this country. If one looks at the Gallup polls, one sees that on a national average it has around 30 per cent or 32 per cent support. That is on a national average; in the particular part of the country from which I come it is significantly lower than that. Therefore there is a real basic lack of trust.

Why has that come about? I believe part of the reason has to be because of debate and debating opportunities here in the House of Commons. I can refer to one particular piece of legislation which was railroaded through here not too long ago, the National Energy Program. We saw that piece of legislation, which was so interventionist and had such a dramatic effect on western Canada, forced through the House with very little input from western Members because, obviously, if any Hon. Member from western Canada had had any genuine opportunity to improve that legislation, we would not have the same problems we have now. In my area alone unemployment has gone up some four times since the NEP. Investment is down, bankruptcies are up, and dreams have simply been destroyed. So the bottom line, Mr. Speaker, is that once again we have some legislation very important to western Canada before this House of Commons, and once again the Government is bringing in closure. Once again we as western Canadians are asking why. What is the purpose? What is the Government doing? It is no wonder the Liberals have no elected representatives in our area; if they keep going at the present rate, they are not going to have any in the future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Before I recognize the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett), I think it is in order that the Chair make one or two general observations. I did not interrupt the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper), nor have I interrupted other Hon. Members, but there is a rule of relevance in this House. While it is the most difficult rule to enforce, some effort should be made to address the Bill in front of the House. That is the first point I want to make.

Secondly, if some Hon. Members seek to interpret the rules or Standing Orders of this House in their own manner and perception, I think probably it is the responsibility of the Chair not to intervene and correct those interpretations. On the other hand, it concerns the Chair that words are used which are not in fact relevant to the Standing Orders of this House of Commons. I do not think I see any opportunity for me or for any occupant of the chair to intervene because these words also have political connotations and I understand them and accept them. But some care should be taken. If certain expressions are used and they are said to be interpretations of the Standing Orders, it becomes difficult for the Chair in those circumstances.

That is as far as I will go in that regard and I do not think I will intervene again on that subject.

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who preceded me commented on the fact that the debate was grinding down, coming to an end. If that is so, it is because the Conservatives are not participating fully in the debate.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have just, in what I thought was the most delicate way, suggested that Members might like to address themselves to the Bill before the House. Relevance is a very difficult topic but I do think the Chair has some responsibility to encourage Members to address themselves to the Bill.

Mr. Anguish: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. When Members participating in this debate have taken all sorts of shots at political parties, when the list of speakers is likely coming to an end in a very short period of time because most of the Members who are interested have spoken in this debate, I do not see how all of a sudden you can force the rule of relevance where the Member who is speaking now and the previous speaker did not go beyond what has already been accepted in this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I want to advise the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) that whatever may be tolerated at one moment does not necessarily become the new Standing Orders or regulations pertinent to the House, nor is it an obligation upon the Chair. Furthermore, I want to make sure that the Hon. Member understands that I have not made a ruling, I have simply encouraged Hon. Members to remind themselves of the rule of relevance and to address the Bill if they can.

Miss Jewett: Mr. Speaker, I was about to point out how relevant the remarks I am making are to the Bill because the Conservatives have been arguing that the matter of the question now being put is in their eyes, I guess in everyone's eyes, a form of closure. They have been arguing strenuously that they need more and more time for debate, yet they would have to put up—and I figured this out—37 more speakers to equal the degree to which we have participated.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have indicated that I think the Hon. Member should address herself to the Bill. I understand the difficulty and I have been one of those in the Chair during times when Hon. Members have addressed themselves to a dispute between political parties. I understand that, but I do think the Hon. Member should begin by referring to the Bill we are talking about. That would at least show some concern over relevance.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I do not think the Hon. Member should be imputing motives. She is suggesting that we are not putting up our share of speakers. I simply want to point out that we are putting up the speakers who want to speak. They make their own speeches and they speak with sincerity and compassion; they do not read speeches prepared by the speech writers of the research department of their Party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. If there were any point of order relating to the imputation of motives, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) has just done exactly that.

Miss Jewett: The Hon. Member for Vegreville will see in a minute that I have no written speech whatsoever. Mr. Speaker, again I am really trying to be fair. We are discussing the matter of this question now being put according to Standing Order 56, and I felt that it should be on the record. I will then cease and go on to the Bill, but I felt, since we are talking about this Standing Order, that I should point out that the Conservatives would need 37 more speakers to equal our contribution.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. This is the third time I have warned the Hon. Member. If she proceeds in this fashion I will see another Hon. Member.

Miss Jewett: Mr. Speaker, one of the things the Government is pushing down our throats which bothers me more than anything else is the fact that it has denied a bargain, one could almost say a constitutional bargain. It is revoking that bargain unilaterally. I am surprised that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), who is a distinguished political historian, does not recognize more fully that this country was based on a series of understandings between the French and English, between central Canada and the eastern part of the country, and between central Canada and the West, the Prairies and British Columbia. Now, from time to time in our history these understandings have been broken. Certainly they are modified from time to time because that is the nature of social progress. One cannot always stick exactly to the original understanding because society changes and understandings have to change with it.

Nevertheless, in the case before us there is a fundamental understanding which is, I think as far as any Canadian is concerned, still relevant and important. The understanding was that while the CPR would be provided with a great number of enormous incentives, and they have all been discussed many times in this debate, they in turn would have certain obligations. In return for all the incentives of land, mineral rights and other things, they have the obligation to see that the Crowsnest Pass rate is maintained.

A related set of understandings, equally relevant today—and in a sense it goes back to Macdonald's national policy—were that encouragement was given the manufacturing sector in central Canada in order to survive. At that time the encouragement thought necessary was a protective tariff, thereby requiring western Canadians to buy their goods at a much higher cost than they would have if they simply went across the border. Western Canadians on the other hand, in return for giving up the cheaper manufactured goods, would themselves be supported in such matters as freight rates. Then we in western Canada, particularly prairie Canada—and we are mostly speaking of wheat—could get our produce on to world markets at a competitive and fair price.

Those understandings are really built very deeply into our society, even if they are not constitutionally embraced. That is what the Bill is destroying. It is destroying these understandings. It would have been one matter if the Bill had done something really creative in connection with the coal lands. It would seem to me that the federal Government and all Canadian Governments have, for far too long, assumed a right to the coal lands. I am now speaking in particular of those in British Columbia. It would have been an act of real understanding had the Government proposed restoring the coal lands to the Province of British Columbia in a separate Bill, as we have suggested.

The whole matter should have been divided into separate Bills. Not only has the Government, in the Bill, gone back on early agreements, bargains and understandings among Canadians in the West and the central part of the country as between the CPR and the farmers, but it has not even tried to restore to the Province of British Columbia what would seem to many of us to be a logical and very valuable ownership right.

The second important point, one which has perhaps not been emphasized sufficiently, is that contrary to what the Government seems to think, namely that the legislation will somehow enhance the activities of Canadian ports, if the Bill does pass the actual result will be that Canadian grain will be diverted, down the line, through U.S. ports. I would be grateful if people who are more knowledgeable with respect to transportation than I would correct me if I am wrong. However, if we do not have the Crow rate, it will be substantially cheaper to export our grain through U.S. ports rather than Canadian ports.

CN and CP already have lines to Duluth, Minnesota where grain could be loaded on to boats for shipment on the Great Lakes. CP owns tracks through its subsidiary Sault Lines to Minneapolis, Minnesota where grain could be loaded on to barges for shipment to export elevators at New Orleans. Minneapolis, as we know, is closer to southern Saskatchewan than Thunder Bay. Because the U.S. inland waterway system is heavily subsidized, barge rates from Minneapolis to New Orleans are less expensive than Lake transportation from Thunder Bay to Montreal.

Under the Government's plan, by 1986 it will cost $8 a tonne less to ship grain rail-barge via New Orleans than rail-Lake via Thunder bay and Montreal. The people who have been studying this matter say that this advantage to New Orleans will grow in succeeding years and it will eventually also become less expensive to ship all rail from Saskatchewan to new Orleans than rail-Lake via Thunder Bay and Montreal. Far from enhancing the role and the activities of Canadian ports, far from helping to make them more prosperous, the long-term consequences of the Government's cancelling of the Crow rate will be to make Canadian ports less prosperous.

A final point about which I am particularly concerned is that in revoking the Crow rate the Government is showing, in the most outspoken fashion possible, that it is really only interested in the big guys, the powerful, the agri-business kind of operation, not the family farm. It is interested in the big corporations, such as the CPR, which has grown into the largest corporate entity in Canada with $16 billion in assets and enormous monopolistic powers. The Government favours more, just as the Tories favour more, the big power, the big corporate entity, the huge cattle rancher, not the average one. The average one has a heard of less than 50. However, the Government is deliberately making life harder for the small and medium-sized farmer or cattleman and making life much easier, in fact making life extremely attractive, I understand, from all evidence that has been put before me, for the big guys, the ones in agri-business and the ones who have huge herds.

It bothers me to find that when other Parties in the country should be concerned with conserving values which we all hold dear, one of them being, of course, the value of independent farmers, they are taking steps which will destroy the independent farmer in this country, ending up by giving support only to huge corporate entities both in the industrial and agricultural sectors.

I would not simply or not only urge that there be amendments, but I would also particularly urge the Official Opposition to join us in opposing the Bill in its entirety.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to mention the very difficult constraints under which you have placed us in the debate with your comments of a few minutes ago. I would like to refer Your Honour to last night's proceedings as reported in Hansard. At that time, three Members of the NDP, the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant) and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) spent about 75 per cent of their time scolding the Conservative Party for things that had happened back to Sir John A. Macdonald's time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Victoria is quite correct. One of the rules which the Chair is supposed to enforce is relevance. As debate ranges on, after a certain amount of time what appears to become the case is that the tenuous links to relevance disappear altogether and another type of argument or debate takes place on the floor. There is no difficulty in my mind, as one of the occupants of the chair, that at a certain point comments may be made related to the behaviour of other political Parties or other political debate. However, the Chair does need some relevance to the Bill in front of the House. I know that it is difficult. I assure the Hon. Member that every occupant of every chair in the Commonwealth has always found that relevance is the most difficult possible rule to apply.

I think that if we use a little bit of common sense with a little bit of concern, we will find that if an Hon. Member simply addresses himself or herself to the Bill and wishes to tie in other matters as well, that will be acceptable. However, without the slightest tie-in, without the slightest relation to the Bill, then the Chair begins to worry about its responsibility involving relevance. Therefore, I accept the Hon. Member's point. There is no question but that there have been speeches which, to my mind, and I would presume to the minds of other occupants of the chair, have stretched the rule of relevance a great deal. I thought it was time to intervene and suggest that some effort be made to address the Bill.

• (1600)

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In my own defence, the Hon. Member referred to a speech that I made yesterday as not being within the bounds of relevancy. At that time, the Speaker did not make that ruling. I was responding to what had been said by a previous speaker who was not ruled outside the bounds of relevancy. I regard what I had to say yesterday as being quite relevant even if the Hon. Member did not like it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It was I who was in the chair when the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) spoke yesterday. I noted his comments with respect to how the 1979 and 1980 elections came about. As it happened, I had been in the chair previously when he raised the matter. It is clear that this is not relevant to the Bill in front of the House. I let it go because the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill only took two or three minutes to deal with that matter and because it had been within previous debate.

I do not think that I am being unfair to Hon. Members. Nothing prohibits good, sharp political debate. I am simply suggesting that it would be of help if it could be tied to the Bill that is before the House.

Mr. Blaikie: On the same point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have heard the Hon. Member but I will hear him again.

Mr. Blaikie: I appreciate your remarks, Mr. Speaker. I just wish the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) had been as accurate as you in his evaluation of my speech.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I hardly know whether I am speaking on the point of order at this time or on the debate. I can hardly resist saying that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill filled a full column of Hansard before he said anything close to the Bill last night.

Mr. Deans: Order. Be relevant.

Mr. McKinnon: I would like to talk about the problems of transportation in this country. These problems go back some considerable length of time. I believe it is usually part of the Liberal Party's disposition to choose a Minister who does not like transportation and make him Minister of Transport.

When I first came here the Hon. Jean Marchand, now the distinguished Speaker in the other place, was the Minister of Transport. One of my first experiences with disillusioned Ministers came when he told the House with a Gallic shrug of the shoulders that transport was in a mess. It was in a mess then and it is now. In fact, the mess that transport is in seems to be endemic to Canadian politics. There is one glittering exception and that is in the period of 1979 when a person who knows about transport and loves transport was Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski).

The Government has devised some of the most incompetent methods of dealing with these difficult times in which it finds itself. They have so mismanaged a series of bills for which there was hope of passage that the Opposition becomes enraged at the introduction of each Bill. There are incidents of preliminary discussions of the Bill in press releases and interviews with Ministers who say what the Bill will likely accomplish. I can think of several of these occurrences recently. I believe it is indicative of the disintegration of the Government that is occurring.

We can think of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) bringing in a Bill on the security force. This country is ready to have a civilian security force because the McDonald Commission pointed out what was wrong. The Government introduced this security force legislation while adding on a few regulations to make it anathema to everyone in the House, including Members on the Government side, I presume. That is why we see difficult legislation such as this, which need not be nearly so difficult, being jammed in at the end of June in an attempt to get it through. We have our extended hours and these rancorous debates and attempts by the Opposition to stop the Government the only way they know how—by prolonging the passage of Bills through the House. The same situation is true of Canagrex. There is nothing the Government could have done to enrage the Opposition more than bring in legislation such as Canagrex and try to pass it in the closing days of the session.

The VIA Rail cutback is another example of Government mismanagement. Of course, VIA Rail was brought in to take over the passenger service of the railway.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): How is that relevant?

Mr. McKinnon: I think this has quite a bit to do with the Bill. The CPR and the CNR wanted to get out of the passenger business because they were losing money on moving grain in western Canada. I think they are connected. When the Government implemented VIA Rail—which was a great pleasure to the Party on my left, I am sure—there was a great and sudden cut in services which occurred in the most outrageous and arbitrary fashion imaginable. Of course, as happens whenever the Government takes anything over, it immediately began losing money and becoming more out of control. Yesterday's report on VIA Rail shows that federal subsidies totalled $449 million in 1982, which is up from $422 million in 1981.

It was interesting to hear the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) say in his remarks that the CPR should be brought under public ownership. They want to nationalize it right away because it is making money. They want to turn it into a loser the same as all other Crown corporations. This would be the same philosophy as those who said we should get into the aircraft industry. While the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) pretends that nobody would take over Canadair in 1976 or 1977, the truth of the matter is that the Government paid $47 million for a company for which no one else would pay anything.

At that time the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) accused me of calling the Government stupid for getting into the Canadair deal. I clearly remember a point of order which was raised on that matter. I claimed that I had not said that the Government was stupid but that it was simply soft-headed to get into that deal. Some $2 billion later, I think the Minister would probably agree with me. Of course, he no longer has the responsibility for it since he has changed portfolios.

The worst example of all is the Crowsnest Pass rate. This subsidy must be to western Canada what several types of subsidies are to other parts of Canada. That is, they are regional subsidies. For example, we have the salmon enhancement program on the West Coast which probably exists on the East Coast as well. Fisheries do not always operate as profit-making organizations so the Government puts in money to subsidize them. In other parts of the country there are subsidies for the construction of dams for power. We have the well known protective freight rates that protect central Canada so it will remain the industrial heart of the country.

Up until now the prairie farmer had the Crowsnest Pass freight rate. That was his subsidy. We know that the Government has no Members in that area who have any idea of the enormity of the problem that they are creating. It decided that since those people had not voted Liberal it would retaliate, and that is the purpose of this Bill, to remove the subsidy from the farmer and give it to the CPR.

I can hardly believe my ears when I hear the NDP say that they are in favour of the CPR receiving the subsidy rather than the grain producers. But then, what can one expect from that Party? They voted the wrong way on the Constitution. Their leader voted one way and the western membership voted the other way. That is probably their difficulty, having a western membership and a leadership and boardrooms in Oshawa from where the Party is essentially run. That creates some problems. They had their palace revolt and I presume there will be another one later today.

In any event, the NDP went from the constitutional disaster to the National Energy Program which, in itself, is one of the most disastrous things that ever happened to industry until the Government got into Canadair. Canadair and the National Energy Program are now running neck in neck as to which will be the most damaging blow to the Canadian economy. From there they moved on to the point where approximately one year ago the NDP were the only Party in the House that voted against a Bill which would have cut MPs' pay by 5 per cent and did so over their objections.

From there they moved on to the freedom of information Bill for which everyone in the country has waited many years. They voted against that legislation. The NDP has problems. The 16 per cent of the popular wish which they have in the country has not grown in the ten years that I have been here. They are due for a rather precipitous shrinking in the next election.

I would like to talk about one matter in which British Columbians are interested. I am referring to the provision in the Bill to allow the Government to take back the coal lands from CPR. The coal lands were donated on a two-way switch by the Province of British Columbia. They were given to the CPR but the federal Government was to be the intermediary. Apparently, according to the records which I saw, the Province gave the coal lands to the federal Government and the federal Government, in turn, gave them to the CPR so that it would build the railroad through the mountains. Now the Government will take them back as part of this deal, but it will not return them to the people of British Columbia.

These are among the richest coal lands remaining in Canada. They have an almost unlimited amount of very superior quality coal. Once again the federal Government will get its hands on them. Whenever it sees anything that can be sold at a profit or into which it can become involved to prevent a profit—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak once again on the Crow rate issue and to avail the House of Commons of my deep and great knowledge and understanding of this subject, a knowledge and understanding surpassed only by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Flis) who hails from downtown Toronto.

We must remember that this afternoon we are really talking about the motion put before the House by the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance), the intention of which is again to limit debate on this subject. It is certainly my intention and it is the intention of Members on this side of the House to vote in opposition to the motion, which is tantamount to closure.

The point at issue is that second reading debate deals with the principle of the Bill before us. If second reading is passed and the matter goes to committee, it is assumed that there is general agreement on the principles in the Bill. It is then put forward to committee so taht the details can be examined. We all know after having listened to the rather limited debate so far that there is no general agreement on the principles of this Bill. There are several principles on which there is no real agreement, and debate should continue until some form of consensus has been worked out.

The Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) spoke eloquently this morning. He gave rise to suspicions which I am sure secretly exist with all Hon. Members, suspicions of a conspiracy between the Liberals opposite and the New Democratic Party to my left. Just listening to these two sets of gentlemen, it might not come immediately to mind that that is exactly what is taking place, but let us examine the strategies employed by these two like-minded political Parties.

First I will take the Liberals as an example. They have presented us with a wall of silence. They know that their position is indefensible and for that reason they have not cared to try to defend it. The minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), who should have the interests of farmers at heart, has spoken only once during the debate. His sole contribution was to give notice of time allocation; that is all the Minister of Agriculture has done.

We have listened for the last two days and I do not think there have been more than tow Members of the Liberal Party who cared to stand up and present us with any views at all. We heard the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Gourde) speak very briefly for about two or three minutes this morning. His sole contribution was a diatribe against Mr. Brian Mulroney who will shortly be the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nickerson: It was evident that he was scared of what this gentleman might do. He might well be scared because his job as the Hon. Member for Lévis is at stake and he knows it full well, as do other Liberal Members from Quebec.

Now I go to the Members of the New Democratic Party. I thought for a while that they too were engaging in this conspiracy of silence. This morning while this matter was under debate they did not put up a single speaker, and I think they have only put up two speakers so far this afternoon. If we examine their approach to the matter, we will see that it has been one of mindless opposition—there is to be absolutely no change to the Crow rates and the system of agriculture in western Canada which has existed since the last century, a century where they still belong. Their contribution has been described by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) as reactionary. I would describe it as blockheadedness. They want no change at all. They want little elevators every four miles along the railway track. They want farmers going along on horses and carts delivering a few bushels of grain. They want the old boxcars. They are not prepared to look at new modifications to the western transportation system. They belong back in the days of the horse and buggy.

When we examine the approach taken by the Liberal Government and the New Democratic Party, we see that it is a conspiracy because Members of the NDP know they are not rational and responsible and will not take a look at what the western grain transportation system really needs. They know full well that they will fail, that there is no way we will return to the days of the horse and buggy. They will go back to their constituencies and say "We fought against the Crow", while in actual fact they played into the hands of their colleagues in the Liberal Government and did more than anyone else to ensure that the Crow proposal in its present form goes through.

We, on the other hand, have taken what I would describe to be a reasonable, rational and responsible approach to the problem. We recognize the need for change. We want to see a modern and efficient grain transportation system. To that end, our transportation critic, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), has very eloquently presented a series of principles which we would like to see incorporated in any Bill that deals with Crow rates.

First we have to realize that this is a very imperfect world and that every major grain exporting country engages in some form of subsidization to its grain producers, one way or another. Therefore, we need a freight rate for western grain which will enable our producers to be competitive with producers in the United States, Argentina, Australia and other countries. We agree that there should be a special rate for the shipment of grains.

Second, we believe in the principle of providing fair compensation to the railways. We know that the accountants who work for the railways have some pretty sharp pencils; they can do wonders with figures. But there is no doubt at the present time that the recompense of the railways is not sufficient for them to engage in major capital improvements.

Third, we want to guarantee producers an efficient, cost-effective and reliable grain transportation system.

We agree, as a fourth principle, that the present distortions which exist in the marketplace for transportation should be removed. There are natural advantages to doing certain things in certain parts of Canada. Grain can be grown better in the West than it can in the Maritimes; livestock can be produced in some areas better than in others. We need a system which maintains the natural advantages of doing certain things in certain areas of the country. To do that will render the whole system most efficient and will result in a natural and efficient allocation of resources.

The farmers want a freight rate that is known and predictable, not like the one in the Bill where no one knows what the rate will be years hence. Farmers must know where they will stand a year or two from now.

I could go on at great length on this most important matter but I see that my time has come to an end. In conclusion, I and the other Members of this Party will vote in opposition to the proposition put forward by the Hon. Member for Rosemont.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald)—Human Rights—Internment of Japanese Canadians—Payment of compensation. (b) Form of compensation; the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp)—Supply and Services—Percentage of procurement from Manitoba suppliers. (b) Request that Manitoba orders be increased; the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn)—Sports—Denial of National Hockey League franchise to Saskatoon-Request that Prime Minister intervene. (b) Request for fair hearing.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pepin that Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport; and the motion of Mr. Lachance (p. 26521).

Mr. John Kushner (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak against Bill C-155, and rightly so. Having been raised on a farm, I want to say that the Crow is really outdated and needs overhaul. It should have been done years ago. However, the Government has not addressed the problem.

The Gilson Commission came out with a reasonable report. It would have been acceptable. However, the Government has decided instead to railroad this Bill through. It will divide the East from the West even more than it is today. It will destroy the hopes of Canadians and the unity of this country.

Having been raised on a farm, I quite appreciate this situation with regard to grain handling, cattle raising or hog raising. Grain handling certainly does not meet the needs of today. I remember the time when we used a team of horses to haul 60 bushels of grain. At times we used four horses and hauled 80 bushels. The elevators are still the same today; they do not meet our present needs.

This Government has destroyed hope and incentive in this country. With regard to grain transportation, we are still in the horse and buggy days; there is no question about that. It really bothers me. Because our transportation system is so outdated, we are losing between $1.5 billion and $2 billion in sales. This proposed Bill will make the situation even worse. This Government, which is further dividing Canadians, is now beginning to crumble. Thank God it is coming to an end.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There are only four supporters left.

Mr. Kushner: The Liberals are so interested in this Bill that we now have only four Members of that Party in the Chamber.

Mr. Deans: Not one from western Canada.

Mr. Kushner: That is true. The Government is not doing what is best for the country but what is best for the Party. It is unfortunate that it has reached this stage.

Mr. Flis: It is best for Canada.

Mr. Kushner: It certainly is not. The grain handling system does not meet the needs of today. This not only affects the grain and hog producer but it is affecting the coal, sulphur, lumber and packing industries. They are being destroyed. Thousands and thousands of jobs have been lost in the last several years from Vancouver to Toronto. It is needless to say how many packing plants have been closed in western Canada because of inadequate transportation and the Crow rate. There is no question in my mind about that.

At one time I was an employee of Canada Packers in Winnipeg. That was during the hungry thirties or, as some refer to it, the good old days. I and a couple of other fellows were going to Toronto to look for a job. In Winnipeg we met a bunch of guys who were returning from Toronto. They told us that they had been there and there was no sense in our going. Therefore, a couple of us decided to go to Canada Packers for a job. When we arrived, there were about 300 people waiting to be called for a job. Lo and behold, on the third day the guy called me, accepted me and gave me a job.

It is tough working in the packing industry, but very interesting. It is a shame what the Government has done to the packing industry of western Canada at the expense of the taxpayers. It has not only done this to the packing industry, but to the transportation industry and the economy in general. How does the Government expect to implement this Bill in its present form when most Canadians object to it? In spite of that, the Minister is determined to railroad the Bill through against the will of Canadian taxpayers and the industry.

When the Gilson Report was commissioned by the Government, there were consultations between the industry and the farmers in order to arrive at an acceptable rate or an acceptable proposal to be made by the Government. The Government ignored the proposal and has come up with a Bill that is definitely unacceptable to western Canadians and Canadians in general.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to direct your Honour's attention to the fact that over and over in the course of the debate today there has been reference to an undertaking made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) that, in the event this matter passes second reading, there will be an opportunity for the Standing Committee seized with the responsibility of this legislation to travel across this country in order to hear representations from a variety of people who are interested in the legislation.

The point of order I raise, Mr. Speaker, is that I do not believe this to be a statement that was actually made by the Minister. As I understand it, there was no commitment made. I raise this point of ordr as the Minister is now in the House, so that we may have this information clearly and unequivocally before us before taking a vote on second reading.

My point is that I do not believe that representations should be made which are not based on fact and which in fact would mislead Members of the House of Commons. This should be clearly stated by the Minister, and I would appreciate it if he could address himself to the question of whether or not he is agreeable to having the committee travel the country to hear representations made by interested parties, particularly those in western Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In the interests of moving the business of the House forward, I will accept the Hon. Member's point although as he knows, it is not a point of order. However, if the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) wishes to reply, I will consider it part of the business of the House.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, in only one minute I can put that to rest. I made no such commitment.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It was on the news yesterday.

Mr. Pepin: Yes, but that was not a quote from the Minister of Transport; it was an interpretation made by the reporter. I made no such commitment because I am not allowed to make such a commitment. I am told by my House Leader that this decision is to be made first by the committee.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Are you receptive to that suggestion?

Mr. Pepin: If the committee wants to travel, it must ask the permission of the House and the House may or may not give that permission. I am not willing to anticipate what view the committee would have on that subject.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure I will not add anything to this debate that has not been said already, but I feel that it is appropriate for me, as a grandson on one side and a great grandson and the other of pioneers who came to western Canada during the Sifton era and settled on 160 acres of land and attempted to produce grain, to say a few words on this debate.

I do not need to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that most of these pioneers who came to western Canada and bought 160 acres of land for $20 subsequently sold that land at very highly escalated prices. Not for one minute would anyone suggest that capital gains made on that land should revert back to the Government or anybody else. All of those families held the assets that they were given as pioneers. Therefore, I always have some difficulty when reference is made to the notion that the shareholders of CPR who also got some land should indeed turn that land back over to the Government. I say that in fairness to the events of that particular era.

I do want to say, Mr. Speaker, that the farmer is the servant of all and the master of none. Yet he produces the most vital commodity to man, food. This Bill massively interferes with the process of growing, producing and shipping food in western Canada. That process of growing, producing and shipping food is an evolutionary process in the West. It occurs over a considerable length of time, not over short periods of time. When any Government tries to change the process of this evolution, it had better be mighty careful that it does not move too fast and create revolutionary change rather than evolutionary change. The system can be partially destroyed by revolutionary change in this most vital of areas, the growth of food.

What do I have to say, Mr. Speaker, about the rate of change and the manner of change that is being made to the food growing industry in western Canada by Bill C-155? First, I want to say that Bill C-155, in my view, is massively flawed. It is an administrative and regulatory nightmare. I say that as a former Minister in the Province of Alberta who had the opportunity for seven years to structure and administer regulations.

This is a depressing Bill. Indeed, as I said earlier in the House, there are 40,278 lawyers in Canada, more per capita, I think, than in any other free country in the world. It is my belief that this Bill, as I read it, would create the need for several thousand more lawyers. It is not specific. The wording itself is, in most instances, unbelievably vague.

Second, Mr. Speaker, the rate of change to the freight rate structure is, in my view, much too rapid, even though the Minister has brought forth the ceiling which I appreciate very much and which would tend to help slow the process down. I wish that that ceiling had been incorporated earlier so that many of the adverse aspects of it could have been ruled out earlier.

Increasing input costs on any commodity by ten times in the next decade would create a change that is just too rapid. I am not particularly against changing the Crow, and I have put a motion on the paper that proposes indexing the Crow to inflation because I realize that it must change.

Mr. Pepin: It would be higher.

Mr. Yurko: No, no. With a ceiling, the rate of change would be slower than the change proposed by the Minister. It is the rate of change that bothers me. It is much too rapid a change over too short a period of time. It is revolutionary change. It would destroy a large part of the western economic industry that I grew up with, those little farmers who are dependent upon an income which is quite limited.

The third point that I draw to the attention of the Minister, Mr. Speaker, is that the redistribution of the Crow subsidy is, in my view, not equitable. It simply must be more related to what Gilson said and must be examined in much more depth in terms of the manner in which that money is redistributed. I know a suggestion has been made about freedom of choice, but I have some difficulty with that suggestion also. I am bothered by the fact that indeed, because of this suggestion, land speculators would tend to buy land for the simple purpose of harvesting the Crow. The Crow as I calculate it may indeed be in the order of $20 to $25 an acre, depending on whether it was calculated on an acreage basis over the entire period of the increase in freight rates. That is quite a bit of money per acre. I can see land speculators going for this in a substantive way which would increase the price of land substantially. They would rent the land using some form of contract and pocket the entire Crow subsidy.

Mr. Pepin: It balances out.

Mr. Yurko: There may be a balance, but I do not know that there is. I simply suggest that the freedom of choice proposition, through it is appealing and contains some aspects which I find acceptable, would have to be studied further.

Mr. Pepin: Sooner or later you have to make up your mind. To govern is to choose. You have to choose.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate to the Minister the fourth reason that I have difficulty with the Bill, and I agree with the Minister when he says that sooner or later a choice must be made. I quite agree that at some point a choice must be made. I thought I had just barely started, Mr. Speaker. These nine minutes have gone by quickly.

The fourth problem with the Bill, of course, is that it increases considerably the disparity between raw and finished food products in the West. I do not think that that is appropriate for the West at all.

The fifth problem I have, of course, is that the politics surrounding the issue are just terrible. The entire political scene of Canada is not the appropriate forum in which to change the very fundamental basis upon which the West opened up and upon which indeed it grew. I suggest to the Minister that if he were to serve another term, and I am not wishing that on him, he might delay this measure for another four or five years and in fact bring it back in four or five years.

When the Bill goes to committee I hope the Minister will do everything possible to ensure that the Committee travels. I know he cannot say that it should but he could certainly suggest that. The Committee should hold hearings in Regina and some of the small towns in the West and I know the Minister could arrange that if he wanted to.

Mr. Pepin: For how many years?

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, in the West there are three land transportation systems. The first is the railway system, the second is the pipeline system and the third is the highway system. We built a massive highway system under total subsidization by two forms of Government. Governments own the land base and do the maintenance. There is not a toll station on any highway in the West. That massive subsidy given to the highway system has literally destroyed the railway system in the West. I have no difficulty with the federal Government and some provincial Governments massively subsidizing the rebuilding of the railway system because they have done so for the competitive highway system. No truck pays one cent for the use of the highway system in the West, except for the very modest licence fee.

There is no subsidy for the pipeline system either. I investigated the question of shipping grain by pipeline and when I was a Minister in Alberta I also investigated the question of shipping coal by pipeline. Pipeline shipping for some food commodities will eventually find its place in western Canada.

The railway system has been neglected, however. It has suffered inflationary pressures. The solution to its problems has been delayed for years and, as a result, inflation has caused distortion. The Minister is trying to correct the problems too quickly. He is trying to impose revolutionary change on a system which cannot and should not take it.

I do not disagree with the work the Minister has done on this issue in the past but I believe it is incomplete. Hearings should be held in the West so that people can appear before the Committee and have their say.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Perhaps the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) would permit me to intervene before I hear his point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-164, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending 31 March, 1984.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pepin that Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be now read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport; and the motion of Mr. Lachance (p. 26521).

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, this may be a somewhat irregular point of order. I wonder if the Minister could indicate to the House whether he will enter the debate before it concludes. Also, does he intend to recommend that the Standing Committee on Transport should travel? Will he make that recommendation and can he indicate when Committee hearings will start?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): As the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) has noted, that is not a point of order, but I have already accepted a similar point from another Hon. Member. I want to warn the House, however, that if the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) were to speak, under the rules that would end debate. I think we can accept the proposition if the Minister wishes to answer what we will call a point of order, but that will not constitute a speech on his part.

Mr. Mazankowski: With respect, Mr. Speaker, we are not debating the motion at this time but the previous question. I suggest that your interpretation may be somewhat incorrect.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): That is twice in two days. The Hon. Member for Vegreville is quite correct. As far as I recall, the Minister of Transport has not spoken on the previous question. In any event, I do not think we ought to entertain an invitation to make speeches in the way it has been done. If the Minister of Transport wishes to speak he can be recognized.

I indicated to another Hon. Member earlier that I would accept a point of order for the purpose of allowing the business of the House to go forward.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I will not make a speech but just a couple of remarks.

I was asked if I was going to recommend to the Committee that it should travel. I indicated to the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) a few minutes ago what my House Leader had told me a couple of times, that the decision to travel or not to travel is for the Committee to make. I do not know why CBC quoted me the way it did yesterday—

Mr. Mazankowski: Is there a deal or is there not?

Mr. Pepin: No, there is no deal at all. If there is a deal, it is public and that is what I am talking about now. There is no agreement secretly arrived at. I said that the Committee must express its views first on whether it will travel or not. It has then to make a request to the House and the House has to approve or disapprove. I have no intention of questioning that pattern.

On the question whether I will make a speech before the end of the debate, this is the first time I have been asked to do that. I made a fairly long speech at the beginning of the debate and I thought that I had exhausted most of the subject.

At the first meeting of the Committee I intend to review everything and to try and answer all questions on the 10 per cent, the 31.1 million tonnes and all that.

The Hon. Member for Vegreville follows me very carefully and I follow him very carefully so he knows that I have expressed my views on most of these issues. When I have wanted to I have done so. In answer to a question from his colleague on the 31.1, I remember sending a little note to my friend to the effect that he must have observed that I had answered that question.

On the 10 per cent question, which is the difference between the cost of rail transportation and the transportation of grain at the international price of grain, I have said this is the figure we have arrived at. We started higher than that. I can defend the 10 per cent very well both in statistical terms and intellectual terms, but I have said that I would be willing to listen to argument.

I do not think I have much to add at this point. I will be available in Committee and I will do my very best to answer all questions and inquiries. Some of my friends seem to accuse me—I am making a speech now, Mr. Speaker and I do not want to do that.

Mr. Mazankowski: When will the Committee hearings start?

Mr. Pepin: We will start as soon as we can. If the Bill is passed today I expect the steering committee will meet tomorrow. Perhaps that question should be addressed to the chairman. We will get organized as rapidly as we can and start with energy next week. We will do our best to lay the foundation for the rest of the work and make a study and analysis of the different parts of the debate. I will be delighted to prove to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) that every part is interrelated essentially, and not only in passing. We will do all the work and then we will continue.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, we may be facilitating the debate and I appreciate your indulgence.

Perhaps I could direct a question to the chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and ask whether he has any views on when the Committee hearing might commence. Also, will arrangements be made for travel or will he await the decision of the steering committee?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I have some pretty definite views but, as the Hon. Member knows, in my role as chairman I have tried to be the servant and not the master of the Committee. As soon as the Bill is referred to the Committee I intend to call a meeting of the subcommittee on procedure and agenda. I will have a proposal to put before the subcommittee at the time. We will discuss it there and bring it before the full Committee, hopefully before the end of June. Included in that proposal I will have a suggestion for the Committee to consider with regard to our schedule of hearings.

• (1650)

Whether we travel or not is a matter, as the Minister has rightly said, in my opinion, for the committee to make. However, I remind the Hon. Member that unless we have authority from the House, we cannot travel. Also, unless we have authority from the House we cannot engage professional or expert staff. Therefore, our decision will be somewhat limited by the reference we receive from the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) on a point of order.

Mr. Deans: No, Mr. Speaker, I intend to engage in debate.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, if, as and when the Transport Committee, or its steering committee, requests the House for an order of reference to travel from place to place in Canada, to hear witnesses and to be provided with staff, may I ask the Minister if he will use his good offices to support such a request? Will he in turn request his Cabinet colleagues and the Government House Leader to allow that order of reference to be presented in the House of Commons in order to prevent what has happened too many other times, that a committee has unanimously asked for an order of reference and the Government has not allowed it?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair has attempted in every way to co-operate with the mood of the House in attempting to move the business forward. However, I believe we ought not to enter into a question and answer period. The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) has made his point.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I bluntly said I have no intention to state the whole of my mind on this subject today. I am not playing games. I believe what the Committee will do, when the Committee will sit, how often it will sit, where it will sit, if that question comes up, is a package, a total thing. That is what I would expect the chairman of the Committee to do, to develop a full package with a timetable and everything. It is only when one sees the totality of that proposition that one can pass judgment on it.

Mr. Deans: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to rise on this matter, but yesterday you will recall that I asked this question in the House of Commons with regard to the right of the Committee to travel, whether the Minister thought it would be appropriate, in his mind, without in any way attempting to direct the Committee, for the Committee to travel and to hear other than simply institutional representations. I do not believe I divulge any private conversation when I say that the Minister indicated to me, after the question, that although he did not feel that it would be appropriate for every farmer in the country to be heard—and I do not feel anyone expected that would be the case in any event—he did feel, however, that it would be appropriate for farmers to be given a chance to be heard. I want to be sure that I understood him properly, lest maybe I have misunderstood. I would not like to think I had.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I feel the Hon. Member simply went beyond what I had in mind at that time. You can listen to farmers in Ottawa. You can bring them to Ottawa to express their views before the Committee. In other words, you do not have to travel to Regina, Saskatoon, Edmonton, Calgary and Winnipeg necessarily to listen to farmers. I am being very frank. I did not connect the hearing of the individual farmers with travelling when I answered the question, to be very frank about it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Again, the Chair is anxious to assist the House. However, I must warn Hon. Members that there is nothing approaching debate in what is occurring at the moment. I point out that a meeting of House Leaders or Ministers and Hon. Members behind the curtains could probably resolve these matters in a few minutes. I want to be of assistance. However, I point out we are operating outside of our Standing Orders. If I say that this is the last point of order, doubtless someone will rise and insist on another point of order. However, I hope this is the last point in that regard.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that, as far as I am concerned, it will be the last time I will rise on a point of order. May I ask the Minister if he would just address a simple question? Yesterday I asked in the House if the Minister was prepared to have the Committee travel to those places to which there would be the easiest access for the farmers who are most affected, and others who are affected, to make representations. I subsequently spoke to him about that and I drew from his comment that he would not oppose the Committee travelling, to give reasonably easy access to those who are at this point in the year tied up most of the day and into the night conducting their business on the farms. A lot of what will happen in the next hour will hinge on the answer. Is the Minister now telling me that he does not feel that it would be appropriate for the Committee to go out and allow farm representation? Or is he saying that he feels that if the Committee were to want to do that, he would feel that that would be advisable and a useful exercise?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I have already answered the question. I want to see the total presentation of how the Committee will operate during the summer. The answer I gave yesterday, from which my hon. friend drew his quote, I do not believe gave him an authorization to do that. We spoke afterwards about the date of implementation.

What I said, Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend insists on having my own views—and I was unnecessarily daring at that point—was that I should have thought first there would be a happy medium between listening to 140,000 people and listening to some. Therefore, in my mind at that time was the possibility that some individual farmers would want to come before the Committee, not necessarily abroad but in Ottawa. That is what I had in mind at that time, if you want to psychoanalyse me, Dr. Freud.

Second, I would have thought that the leaders of the western farm organizations and others are representative of the western farmers. Many of them are elected. Many of them are elected more often than Members of Parliament. I thought that was a good remark. I would have thought their views would have been representative of the views of farmers in the West. Therefore, my hon. friend drew a conclusion, and I am not complaining, except that the CBC yesterday presented it as if I had made a deal with my friend, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). That is the way it was presented and that was not the way to present it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question or for debate? The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I must at the outset say that I am puzzled and a little distressed by the answer which the Minister has given. I want to make it clear that never was there any deal struck between the Minister and myself or myself and anyone else in regard to how the Bill would be handled. However, I will mull that over in the next nine minutes.

I want to make it clear, Mr. Speaker, that when this Bill was introduced in those days immediately prior to May 9, we already had an inkling of what was to be contained in the Bill. We were aware that the Government was intent on changing the Crowsnest Pass freight rates. We believed then that the change being proposed was a change which would work to the detriment of those who would have to pay the bills, and not only to the detriment of the farming community but to the detriment of the country as a whole. On May 10 we made that opposition known by voting against the Bill at first reading.

We still hold true to that position, that what the Government is proposing to do by way of change to the Crow rate will do nothing but harm to the farming community of western Canada, particularly on the Prairies. It will do nothing but harm to the economy of Canada with regard to our potential for exporting the grain which we grow here. We used this as the economic base for a very large part of our country. It has in fact made this country famous all around the world. I do not have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the competitive position of the grain farmers of western Canada will be detrimentally affected by the proposals the Minister has brought forward. There is no one in the world who can possibly believe that if you add to the price of a commodity in the world market it will somehow enhance your competitive position.

Our major competitors are heavily subsidized. In some instances they are granted absolutely free movement of grain from the farm to the point of distribution. Our American competitors are given a substantial subsidy through the use of the waterways to get their grain to market. Our Australian competitors are much closer to the shipping ports and do not have to carry the extremely high cost of transportation. Given all that, no right minded individual could believe that to alter the Crowsnest Pass freight rate and place an additional burden on Canadian farmers would in any way improve their capacity to sell their product to those who must buy it.

Mr. Pepin: There are compensatory factors.

Mr. Deans: Having said that, if the Government is now telling us, as it is, that it will begin a process of compensation which will ultimately become larger than the subsidy we now carry, then I suggest that is foolish. To add an administrative cost on top of all the other changes in order to bring the farmer back to where he was before, competitively speaking, surely must not make any sense to any objective observer.

Again, Mr. Speaker, what the Government is doing is wrong. The Crowsnest Pass freight rate is a subsidy, paid for in great part by the public of Canada. When properly used, it gives our grain farmers a competitive edge in world markets. For us to turn around and start tinkering with it over any number of years can only work a hardship. Therefore, the Government has taken a very regressive and regrettable step.

The Conservative Members are aware right from the very beginning that we said the Bill was complex. There were three parts to it and it should be proceeded with separately. The upgrading of the railroads should be viewed separately since it deals not only with the transportation of grain but with the transportation of all commodities from coast to coast. We also made it clear that we thought that the disposition of the Dominion coal lands was a separate matter without any relationship to the Crowsnest Pass freight rate and should be dealt with in a separate way. Finally, we suggested that if the Government was to go ahead with its proposed changes, then they should be dealt with for what they really are, an attempt by the Government to alter dramatically the arrangement entered into so many years ago from which the CPR and others have derived significant benefits.

Over the years Canada has been extremely competitive in its ability to move and sell its grain. We should view that matter separately. I appreciate very much the fact that the Conservatives supported our position on that, but unfortunately we failed in that to this point. The battle is not yet over, it is just over for now. We still believe those principles should be divided, we still believe the matter should be dealt with in that way.

The Minister seems to feel that somehow or other the farmers of Canada are not going to be as detrimentally affected as we believe they are and as I think some on the Conservative benches believe they are. I have had letters from farmers from all across the Prairies who are bringing to my attention and the attention of others the dilemma which will confront them. I will read one sent from Birch Hills to one of my colleagues. It said:

We have gone back into our income tax files and have some figures for you—

In 1973, from a gross income of $63,500, their net income was $25,400. By 1978 they had a gross income of $107,400 and a net income of $22,500. Note the decrease. By 1982 they had a gross income of $130,000, and a net income of $16,000. It is the additional costs heaped on the farming community, whether it be for fuel, fertilizer or replacement of machinery, whether it be through taxes, which has eaten away all of the surplus which should have been there to provide for that family's welfare. The letter then goes on to say:

We took our production of 1982 and if Pepin gets his way and we pay 75 cents per bushel freight by 1990, we would have to pay $30,000 in freight as we produced approximately 40,000 bushels of grain in 1982.

We have never had a $30,000 net profit in any year since we started farming some 27 years ago.

Mr. Pepin: Wrong, wrong, wrong, again!

Mr. Deans: No one can say it more eloquently than that. The fact of the matter is, Mr. Minister, that the farmers affected by this increase in costs cannot afford it. I do not know how better to say it. If someone cannot afford what you are attempting to foist upon them, they will go out of business, Sir. When they go out of business they will not be replaced by anyone else and we will have lost for all time that agricultural capacity, that revenue, which we have derived over the years from the sale of their products. We will never be able to recover it.

Mr. Pepin: You are taking one—

Mr. Deans: I am taking that farmer as representative of many farmers. If you give me the time, I will read the rest. I am putting on the record one letter taken from a number of letters, which is representative of what we understand to be the situation of the farmers in western Canada.

I will close by saying that it is obvious that ten minutes does not allow me an opportunity to put on the record how strongly we feel about what is being proposed. I am disturbed by the Minister's suggestion that the hearing process may be forestalled or foreshortened. I am concerned that the Government may attempt to push this through over the objections of farmers like this one. He and his family deserve to be heard but they cannot be heard if the hearings are in Ottawa. Obviously they cannot afford to make the trip.

Therefore, I urge that the Government pay particular heed to the people who will be most affected. It is not their representatives we want to hear at this point; we have heard from them. We know the decisions of the institutional representatives. Who we have to hear from now are the people who pay the bills.

We oppose what this Government is doing and, by God, we will oppose it to the bitter end. We will oppose it in December of this year, we will oppose it into next year if this Government does not pay attention to these people.

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, we are here to debate the issue of whether or not the question should be put. The answer is very simple, of course. It is that I am not "prepared up with that to put", because I like to go back to the first principle. Oftentimes, if one goes back to the first principles, one finds different answers from what one would otherwise. We all recognize that what is required, needed and must happen is a total upgrading of the railway system of western Canada, including that of British Columbia. I have been lobbied heavily by many interests in British Columbia saying, "Vote for the Bill because we must have the railways upgraded". I would agree that the railways must be upgraded. However, they do not seem to understand that to do it this way is raping western Canadian farmers. It is not in the best interests of British Columbia that the Prairies be raped in this particular manner.

I am a Prairie boy and they say that one can take the boy out of the Prairie but not the Prairie out of the boy.

• (1710)

I think of western Canada, Gladstone and Morris, Virden, Eyebrow, Elbow, Belle Plaine, Carstairs and Olds, right across the Prairies, those little beacons of light bringing civilization at night, right across the vast plains, and of the many people in them. I understand how they feel about this kind of thing taking place because I can tell Hon. Members how many of the people in that part of the world are thinking about this right now. They have known the CPR for a long time. They found that CPR, rather than being a good neighbour, has been a exploiter over the years. What may not be known in the House is that starting back in the 1950s, the CPR reached a corporate decision which it has been carrying out ever since.

Anyone on the Prairies looking about with the native suspicion we all have, has realized what happened. First, the CPR owned houses in practically every division for its executives. It sold them off and the money was drained out of the railway. There was a formation of Canadian Pacific oil and gas. Guess what? There was the draining off into a separate company of all the mineral wealth that it had been given. There is nothing wrong with either one of those two things, if its basic contract with the prairie settler were to be kept. Unfortunately, it has not.

One could consider Marathon Realty and the vast real estate holdings in many cities of the West which, again, were bled off by the railway. One can consider what the railways have done in terms of deterioration of passenger service. Who would want to ride their ruddy trains by the time they were done actually allowing them to go totally downhill? As a result, they got rid of that, and the Government took it over and formed VIA Rail. The only thing worse than VIA Rail, I have found in North America, happens to be Amtrak, and the American railways did the same.

Over a 20 years period, why has the Government not taken a look at the original contracts and perhaps even social contracts with the people of western Canada? Why has it not been able to realize that the CPR was almost deliberately allowing those rail lines to become obsolete, allowing the whole matter to settle down? It had taken the profits, moved them over to Canadian Pacific Investments. It had taken the profits and moved them here. It had taken most of the profitable aspects of the railway and moved so that, quite frankly, I doubt if the CPR would care at all if the Government wished to nationalize the rail line. It received its money and it moved it, rather than living up to its responsibilities to western Canada.

What have a succession of federal Governments done about this situation? I have not heard much talk over the years, saying, "Hey, wait a minute now. Is the CPR really entitled not to build more grain cars, because we are short of grain cars, in view of its initial contracts and its initial gifts from the people of Canada?" We do not see Government of Canada grain cars. We see Province of Alberta grain cars, grain hoppers. These should all be made by the CPR, paid for by the CPR and operated by the CPR. If it is at a loss, let us consider where the profits went. They went into other areas of the company having nothing to do with the railway.

The prairie farmer is entitled to have a committee take a very solid look at the actions of this giant of a company, this colossus of profits which has really moved away from the rail lines, and I hope such a committee does study it.

One of the other reasons your prairie lad is suspicious of the railway and of a succession of Liberal Governments, practically since Confederation, is that at one time one could send a widget from Toronto to the West for a dollar. However, if one wanted to send a widget from the West eastward, it cost $2. I will give only one example. Show me a flour mill existing in western Canada today. The reason one does not exist there is because of the freight rate structure of this country which gives real favouritism to the East.

What is taking place now is another rip-off of western Canada. The whole matter disturbs me mightily. Darn it, how long does the Government think the people of the West will put up with central Canada ripping them off in every way? That is exactly what changing the Crow rate will do to us again.

All I can say to the Government is, for heaven's sake, let us take another look at the whole matter. Let us go back to the basic problem of upgrading western rail lines. If we are to pay for it, let us ensure that all the people of Canada pay for it in a proper way, where the Quebecer contributes as much as anyone else, where the Maritimer takes part in it, where Ontario pays its share, rather than doing it in such a way as to lay most of the cost on the back of the prairie farmer.

I warn the Government, the Liberal majority, that if it goes through with this dastardly scheme, it will lay the seeds of discontent in the West all over again. Generations of prairie people will never forget the dastardly deed the Government will carry out with the Bill on top of their backs and at their expense. For heaven's sake, the Government must reconsider. This is no way to run a railway.

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilchrist: I do not think it was the western Members who were applauding me.

I rise to enter the debate on Bill C-155, but before making the comments I had intended to make, I would draw the attention of the Chair to the emotions of the last Hon. Member to speak who was trying to represent the concerns and frustrations of western Canadians, which is his job to do in a Party which, of course, represents all of Canada, every territory and every Province. One can see why there are differences of opinion in this Party from time to time, occasioned by the differences which occur in the country as a whole. It was with great sympathy that I listened to my colleague from British Columbia trying to represent these frustrations. I come from Ontario and I wish other eastern or central Canadians could try truly to understand the message being brought to us by our western colleagues.

I consider this matter from the point of view of any business person. When business, which is a large business, runs into the kind of problems being faced by the country today, which can only be described as a massive material handling problem, it considers the various kinds of solutions it might give. It could, of course, raise prices to solve the economic problems of grain handling, or it could squeeze suppliers to farmers. It could say, "Lower the price of your grain and you will be more competitive on the world markets and all the other costs will have to be borne", or it could reduce costs, which any sensible business would try to do. What it would not do would be to attempt to reduce its markets deliberately by letting its product price go up too high to be competitive.

What have we done to attempt to reduce the costs of grain handling in this country rather than just throw the load on to the farmers? Have we really done some serious technological studies on the size of rolling stock, the shape of hopper cars or the kind of handling practices at either end, the filling or emptying of those cars? Have we seriously done a cost study on the electrification of rail lines? Have we performed a serious cost study on the conversion of engines to compressed natural gas, which is in abundance in this country and which would certainly lower the costs of grain handling? Have we considered the efficiencies of the trunk lines and branch lines of the railroads in an effort to make them more cost effective?

In the last election, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) promised that he would doubletrack the railroads. Although he was whistling in the wind, he had the right idea in terms of cost efficiency. To do so, would undoubtedly lower the cost of transportation of grain.

I believe the railways have an obligation to look at these alternatives, such as to improve their signals and do all those things that would make them more cost effective. Another alternative is super mechanization of port facilities to improve the turnaround factor to get the cars to handle grain more quickly.

The Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) talked a few moments ago about pipeline transportation for grain. That may sound fanciful but it is not. It is quite feasible and should be seriously considered before raising the prices to farmers.

There are many things that need to be done to reduce the costs long before we raise the prices. Of course, we should not forget the job creation prospects in all of these technological developments. That would be a real boon to the country today. However, it has become a national psychosis in Canada, a mind-set of business, Government and labour that whenever you have a problem, you should raise the prices and the consumer will pick up the bill.

What incentive will the railroads have to improve their efficiency or service if we simply give them more money and just open the door to price increases forever? How will increased costs of grain caused by both the transportation cost increases and the operating inefficiencies that will result, help Canada's export grain sales and balance of payments? Obviously, the answer is that it will not.

This House is considering the possibility of establishing a standing committee on science and technology. Such a committee could very well look into these problems of grain handling and perform a detailed examination of the possible technological improvements and cost cutting potentials of advanced rail technology. That is something the Government should have done long before bringing in a Bill such as this.

In specifically addressing the question of whether we should immediately put the question to the House which would cut off all further debate and examination, I wish to say that I do not think an offhanded treatment of a century-old institution which will perpetuate the inefficiencies while increasing the cost is a proper step. I think it is well worth debating. Government Members should be clamouring for greater debate and more solutions and consensus rather than remaining quiet so that the debate will not interfere with the forthcoming summer holidays. Discussion, consensus and agreement is what is required of Parliament, not division and acrimony. Putting the question and muzzling debate is not the way to get to the satisfactory conclusion of this issue.

In the absence of any commitment by the Minister or the Government to let the farmers be heard by a travelling task force which would let them make their concerns known and give their suggestions for solutions would occasion any concerned Member of this House to vote no to the question.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, we have had a widespread debate on this Bill with many comments and recommendations for improvement.

I would like to pay tribute to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) for spending almost the entire time of the debate in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Neil: It is not often that a Minister does so, and he should be commended.

Having said that, I must say that I am very disappointed that the Minister was not prepared to stand in the House to speak at some length about what has been said by Members on this side of the House so he could give us an idea of what he will be doing when the Bill goes to committee. I was also very disappointed by the fact that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) came into the debate solely for the purpose of giving notice of closure on this Bill. The Minister of Agriculture should be dedicated to the welfare and well-being of the agricultural community. This is a Bill which affects every aspect of agriculture and, in fact, affects every region of the country from coast to coast. Having spent some $850,000 on advertising the policy of the Government, I suppose that Government Members do not feel they have to get into this debate and make their contribution.

The Minister of Transport has the opportunity at this time to rebuild our transportation system and make it one of the most modern and best transportation systems in the world. He has not chosen to do that. Instead, he has chosen to bring in a Bill which is unsatisfactory to the majority of people in this country. This Bill should be withdrawn.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Neil: It should be withdrawn and a special committee should be set up to study Canada's transportation system at length and to consider the effects of any change in the Crow rate on the western Prairies and on agricultural producers.

There is much concern over this Bill. I have received letters from hundreds of my constituents, not only from farmers but also from those who live in the cities and towns the economy of which is dependent upon agriculture. The farmers are concerned because their product price is down and their input costs are up. At this time they cannot afford any increase in costs. The Hon. Member who spoke a few moments ago indicated that five times the Crow would result in a cost per acre of $25. That assumes that every acre is seeded. If you work on a two-year rotation, the cost of freighting grain would average at about $50 an acre. When this cost is added to the costs of fuel, taxes and other charges, it becomes almost prohibitive.

I receive letters from chambers of commerce and city and town councils expressing concern about what will happen as a result of the increase in freight rates taking money away from their communities. It amounts to hundreds of millions of dollars in losses to the communities. When we talk with farmers, city people or members of corporations, they express concern about the railways. There is a mistrust of the railways, both CN and CP. They know that over the yars the railways have received branch-line subsidies, hopper cars and grants. They ask whether the railways have spent that money wisely. When we talk to farmers in areas where branch-line subsidies were paid to the railways and discover that there has not been a train over the lines for eight or ten years, we understand the concern and the mistrust. Also they ask about the $651 million, the guaranteed annual income which the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) is interested in giving the railways. They ask how accurate that figure of $651 million is. We do not know.

That is one of the things which should be discussed in committee. The railways should be called before the committee and required to give an accounting. We should have expert people to look over their records and books and to tell us whether or not the $651 million figure is accurate; it could be $200 million or even $700 million. This is what we must know and why distrust exists in the minds of people across the country. As well the committee should investigate the freedom of choice proposition put forward by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and the offline elevator concept.

Mr. Pinard: What do you mean by freedom of choice?

Mr. Neil: We should investigate unit trains.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Neil: My friends on the other side are becoming excited. I do not know why. I am only trying to suggest what should be done in committee. Hon. Members opposite sat in their seats during the entire debate. Their only contribution has been to shout from their places when a Member was speaking. It is unbelievable that only nine speakers on the Liberal side of the House participated in the debate, including the Minister who introduced the Bill, the Minister of Agriculture who moved notice of a motion of closure and the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) who brought in the previous question motion.

An Hon. Member: Call it closure, call it what it is.

Mr. Neil: Closure, that is all they are concerned about. All the things I have mentioned must be considered if we are to build a better railway system, a system which will carry our grain efficiently at the least cost.

The railway system does not only carry grain. It carries potash, coal and numerous other products. Every segment of the community should be interested in those hearings. There should be input from farmers, farm organizations, railways and elevator companies. There should be co-operation. The committee should be comprised of Members of all political Parties who are not concerned about politics but about how to make a better railroad system. This is what has to be done, and I am disappointed that the Hon. Minister is not prepared to do it.

I see my time has come to an end. As I said, I am disappointed that the Minister of Transport was not prepared to rise in the House and comment on some of our recommendations. I think it is a shame.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lachance) which was agreed to on the following division:

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion (Mr. Lachance) agreed to.

Mr. Yves Demers (Duvernay): Madam Speaker, I wish to inform the House that I was present when the vote was taken. However, I did not vote because I paired off with a Member of the Progressive Conservative Party, and if I had voted, I would have voted with the Government.

Madam Speaker: The question is on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I had consultations with the Opposition House Leaders and it seems that there is unanimous consent that the same vote be applied to the second reading motion.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. Pinard: I also had consultation and it seems, Madam Speaker, that if you seek unanimous consent you might get it, that the motion having been carried, you adjourn the House until eight o'clock, and that the House sit tonight from eight until ten o'clock.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the proposal made by the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard)?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

SITTING SUSPENDED

At 6.25 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The House resumed from Friday, May 27, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. Trudeau that Bill C-152, an Act Respecting the Organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, as we have just heard, we are dealing this evening with Bill C-152, a Bill introduced by the Government dealing basically with two items, one being the reorganization of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, as well as that of the Department of External Affairs and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. The second item the Bill deals with the is the addition of a number of parliamentary secretaries to the new Department which will be created by the passage of the Bill if, indeed, it is passed, expanding jurisdiction to include Senators as well as Members of the House of Commons.

The new Department of Regional and Industrial Expansion will be developed from the former Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Department of Regional and Economic Expansion. This particular piece of legislation will have a profound impact on various sections of the country, particularly the one for which the original Department of Regional and Economic Expansion was devised back in 1969.

Although I think there is much justification for dealing with the expansion of the bureaucracy to include an additional number of parliamentary secretaries, which no doubt will appease a number of those disgruntled backbenchers on the Opposition benches, nonetheless, I do not believe that time permits me to deal with that particular aspect of the Bill, even though I would much like to do so.

The provisions of the Bill which, as I have mentioned, deals with and would particularly affect the section of the country from which I come, namely, Atlantic Canada, have proceeded as far as departmental changes are concerned, despite the fact that this Parliament has not had the opportunity to deal with or pass any particular phase or aspect of the Bill. The Government has proceeded with changes within the Department; setting up and reorganizing its departmental to accomodate the proposed changes in the Department despite the fact that the elected representatives from the region have not had any opportunity for parliamentary input. Considering the fact that the Bill was only moved for second reading on May 27, it seems the Government is determined to move on with the Bill and the implementation of its provisions despite the fact that Parliament has not had an opportunity for input. This leaves us to be somewhat suspicious, as always, of the motives and the underlying reasons for the Government to move forward with such haste.

I do appreciate this opportunity to take Members of the House and people throughout Canada who might be interested, particularly those in Atlantic Canada, on a brief walk through the history of what DREE was all about and the reason for its implementation back in 1979. DREE was created in 1969 by the present Government. In the words of the Throne Speech at the time, it was established and was to be "charged with objectives of ensuring that all people in all areas and regions of our country have as equal an access as possible to the opportunities of Canada's development".

What did that mean to the people of Atlantic Canada and eastern Canada, since this was originally designed to include all of those regions of Canada east of Trois Rivières? The original intention of the program was to reduce disparities between the regions of Canada that had been subjected to particular economic hardships over the years. It had particular reference to eastern and Atlantic Canada.

I am sure all Members are aware that Atlantic Canada initially played a very important role in the development of our nation. The Maritime Provinces of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, some of the original partners in Confederation, were the hub of economic activity at that time and, indeed, this was the area where the very concept of Canada was devised. Canada as it exists today can be attributed to Atlantic Canadians and the Fathers of Confederation.

At that time when Atlantic Canada was the economic hub Canadians in that area envisaged a broader sense of participation in those areas which became part of the Dominion of Canada. Atlantic Canadians encouraged the expansion and development of the rest of the country which now makes up Canada. Atlantic Canadians encourage people to become pioneers in a westward expansion throughout Ontario, Quebec, the Prairie Provinces and further.

There is no question that the roots of those Canadians who now inhabit the rest of Canada originated from eastern and Atlantic Canadians, and they contributed greatly to the development of the other parts of Canada. I suggest that those people deserve a particular tribute from Canadians.

Inevitably, there was a price to be paid for the encouragement of this expansion. Indeed, that price has been paid. Unfortunately it has been to the detriment of Atlantic Canada. As a result of the markets which developed in central Canada and the United States, because of their geographic affinity, we have seen a disparity develop in Atlantic Canada that perhaps was not envisaged by the forefathers of our nation.

There evolved an improvement in the transportation system from coast to coast and a promotion of central Canada as a manufacturing base that has been healthy for the nation as a whole. I do not want the House or Canadians to think that Atlantic Canadians begrudge the development of central or western Canada over the lack of development which we have experienced in Atlantic Canada. It is a historical fact that central Canada in particular has developed an economic base as a result of encouragement from Atlantic Canada. Central Canada has claimed a portion of that wealth which might otherwise have developed in Atlantic Canada, the origination of the economic base of this great nation of which we are all proud.

A system of protective barriers has been established over a number of years to protect trade and the establishment of the central manufacturing base in central Canada. I believe this was addressed in the original establishment of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in 1969. Interestingly enough, that department was established by the very Government which now holds power.

Development in Atlantic Canada has been stymied because of the development in central Canada. There are a number of factors which have caused the slow development of Atlantic Canada, not the least of which is the distance from the Canadian market which that area must have access to in order to grow along with the rest of Canada. We have high transportation costs in moving goods from our manufacturing base in Atlantic Canada to central Canadian markets and beyond. This has resulted in a lack of capital investment in Atlantic Canada. Consequently, we have seen high unemployment and a lack of industrial growth.

Finally, and perhaps most sadly, this has resulted in a dependence on the federal Government which, while necessary, was not envisaged in the concept Atlantic Canadians held of what Canada would be. Nonetheless, this situation has developed over the years. DREE was established a number of years ago after the Government was made aware of this disparity. The establishment of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion by the Government was indeed a healthy response and one of the few positive actions we have seen the Government take over the years. Unfortunately, it did not last.

As I have stated, DREE was originally established to provide a stimulus to Atlantic and eastern Canada since its mandate included a portion of Quebec, which the present Government has been very quick to recognize over the years. One has only to review the history of the Government to see that Quebec has been the recipient of a great many benefits from the Government. I suggest that can only be expected when one considers that the Province of Quebec has to a great extent encouraged and developed this Government over the years. Nevertheless, it is a national Government which has a responsibility to the entire nation to include those portions of the country that are economically stimulated and those regions which have been economically depreciated. I think it is only fair that as Canadians we expect our government, regardless of which Party it might have as its power base, to include all persons of Canada equally and to look on them with an equally compassionate eye. This Government has fallen down; it has not kept trust with Canadians throughout the country, particularly in terms of being fair and equitable in its proportion of funding.

DREE was a positive step, a positive mesure, a positive department which the Government established, but it did not pursue its purpose; it let it die. In 1970 approximately 2 per cent of federal funding was spent on DREE, which was set up particularly to assist eastern Canada and Atlantic Canada. What have we seen last year and this year? To what degree have we seen DREE deteriorate? This year, its last year of existence, DREE provides only 0.8 per cent of its total spending to help that portion of Canada which it was originally intended to assist. It has long forgotten those portions of Canada which were instrumental in establishing it and in making great this nation of which we are so proud as Canadians.

It is a shame that the Government does not recognize the situation which continues to exist in Atlantic Canada. It fails to recognize that in 1970, only one year after the department was set up, unemployment in Atlantic Canada amounted to 41,000 people. In 1982 the statistics show that unemployment in that area had risen to 135,000, an increase of 229 per cent, in a land where the national average was 168 per cent. The Government tends to prefer to forget about Atlantic Canada. Its unemployment rate in 1970 was 6.2 per cent. In 1982 the unemployment rate had risen to 14.4 per cent. The growth in the unemployment rate in Canada rose by only 5.3 per cent from 1970 to 1982, whereas the average growth in Atlantic Canada was 8.2 per cent.

In 1970 after DREE was set up the per capita income of Atlantic Canada was $2,240. In 1982 when the Government decided unilaterally, without consultation with any of its Atlantic Canada partners in Confederation, to destroy the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, the per capita personal income was $9,241. The average throughout the rest of Canada, which the new department will most likely assist, for the Government's own political satisfaction, is now $12,764. Where is the equity? Where is the fairness? Where is the democracy?

An Hon. Member: Not here.

Mr. Corbett: Obviously, it does not exist in the mind's eye of this Government. I could refer to various experiences of the Atlantic Provinces under the umbrella, under the jurisdiction or under the dictatorship of this Government. First I refer to the reduction in transfer payments.

Madam Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but his allotted time has expired. We will now proceed to the ten-minute question period. Are there any questions Hon. Members would like to ask?

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I appreciate your acknowledging the significance of the discussion we are having this evening and showing a very distinguished interest for the reorganization of the Department of External Affairs.

The External Affairs Act incorporated in this legislation is simply the legal recognition of changes made last year after the Right Hon. Prime Minister decided to reorganize Government departments and agencies having an economic status. That reorganization has led to major changes in the terms of reference, responsibilities and structure of External Affairs, and these will merely be confirmed by the measure now before us. It is interesting to note that this legislation is the first complete legislative document identifying the role of that Department within the Government organization since 1909. The reorganization which was launched last year is the answer to a variety of questions and considerations raised within the Government. The most obvious, and clearly the driving force behind this reform is the need to adequately promote Canada's economic development. Therefore, the potential for greater economic development being closely linked to the status of our international trade which, as you know, now accounts for 30 per cent of our gross national product, has compelled us to explore a better way not only to maintain but to raise our level of penetration of international markets. That major challenge could simply not be met in any conventional way. The complexity of the markets, the interdependence of the parties concerned, the interconnection between political, economic and trade tensions were calling for concertation and imagination.

[English]

Another key objective of the changes brought about in External Affairs was the requirement to bring greater coherence to the range of the Government's policies and programs in the international domain and, in particular, to make trade and economic issues an integral part of our over-all foreign policy. This move responds to the trend which has become increasingly evident of late in international relations whereby political, economic and trade issues have become increasingly intertwined. There is thus a consequent requirement to bring together the various levels of expertise in these areas to deal most effectively with them.

In a similar vein there is a pressing need to ensure that linkages between the domestic and international sectors in terms of the Government's policy development and programs are as effective as possible. Just as the international activities of Government must be reflective of domestic constraints and considerations, so must our domestically focused initiatives be formulated and implemented with a view to their potential international implications.

This requirement is particularly applicable in the case of our own country which is so inextricably tied into the international system, especially in economic terms.

Finally, the changes envisioned reflect the desire to more effectively use and manage resources deployed in support of the Government's international activities. Canada, as is the case with most industrialized countries, has a significant investment in both financial and human terms deployed overseas in our embassies and other offices designed to further the Government's interests and manage the Government's programs. It is incumbent upon us to see to it that this investment is managed in a co-ordinated manner in the interests of economy, efficiency and effectiveness.

The External Affairs Act now being considered by this House responds in a number of ways to the Government's concerns, as I have already outlined, in respect of its international activities. A brief review of the major aspects of the Act will, I am sure, provide a useful indication as to how these concerns are met.

First, under the proposed legislation, the Department of External Affairs will henceforth have three ministers, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister for International Trade and the Minister for External Relations. I stress that this is the first time that a particular piece of legislation formally establishes the office of Minister for International Trade, which proves that economic development and particularly the active promotion of our exports are high priorities of this Government. The very existence of the office of Minister for International Trade will ensure that trade and exports will receive the attention they deserve within the administration, and especially around the Cabinet table. It is generally recognized that given the extraordinary opening of Canada onto the world, these three ministers will be able to share the task of looking after our domestic and international interests and ensuring representation of the highest order in the multitude of forums where our country is active.

[English]

Second, External Affairs is being given a new mandate in this Act which covers the spectrum of our major international activities. Thus External Affairs will have responsibility for all international trade, economic and political matters as well as our major overseas programs including consular assistance, immigration, development assistance, public and cultural affairs. Of particular importance in this regard is the responsibility External Affairs will have for international trade and economic policy and programs. The assignment of responsibility for international trade to External Affairs is indicative of the Government's concern that trade and economic concerns be better integrated into our over-all foreign policy and, no less, that trade promotion receive a higher profile and priority in our international relations. As well, the general increase in the importance of economic and trade issues in the international environment—including the growing politicization of trade, East-West trade, sanctions, protectionism and the very serious international financial liquidity issues—are such as to require that these issues be dealt with in a broader context which can bring to bear general economic and political considerations in the management of our trade development efforts.

The new mandate for External Affairs will also serve to provide the coherence needed across the range of our international programs and activities in that all of the various strands of our activity—whether political, economic or trade—will be the responsibility of one institution. This centralization of these responsibilities will also provide us with the basis to better manage and co-ordinate the resources the Government deploys in support of its international policies and programs. It will also help to assure that we attain the required balance in our treatment of domestic and international policy issues so that decisions in one area can be taken with a full awareness of the potential implications such decisions may have in other areas.

One further point of interest concerning this Act is that for the first time the authority of our heads of overseas missions is set out in legislation. This, together with the consolidation in External Affairs of the Foreign Service, will provide for a better integration of our overseas operations—whether political, trade, economic, immigration, development assistance or other programs—with consequent advantages for our administration and management of all of our efforts and resources in the international domain.

Before concluding my remarks, I should comment upon the effects which this Act will have for the business community, especially exporters, in Canada. In particular, I would like to deal with those changes which are of special concern to the private sector and, secondly and perhaps somewhat surprisingly, I would like to review a number of aspects of our trade and economic operations with which Members were familiar prior to the reorganization and which remain largely unchanged in the post-reorganization environment.

Hon. Members will recall that, in large part, the reorganization of the Government was driven by economic development considerations. Foremost amongst these in the case of External Affairs was the desire to see economic and trade considerations being given greater prominence in our foreign policy. More generally, it was also thought that the tranfer of the international trade responsibilities to External Affairs would serve to respond to the growing convergence of political, economic and trade issues in international relations.

The importance of international trade to Canada is well known: our economic well-being is heavily reliant upon our success in developing export markets. Our export capability is dependent not only on factors such as quality of product and financing considerations, but as well on the maintenance of an effective international trading environment. Today we face serious difficulties internationally in terms of potential constraints to facilitating our export growth. Rising protectionist sentiment and policies, the intermingling of political as well as economic considerations in determining commercial transactions, the growing participation of state trading institutions and a variety of other developments have all worked to complicate the international trade and economic environment. Purely export promotion activities are no longer sufficient in and of themselves to ensure that our export potential will be achieved.

The transfer of the trade responsibility to External Affairs has certainly entailed the introduction of some significant changes to our Department and have had a beneficial effect, I believe, on the Government's capacity to deal with international trade and economic policy and issues.

At the ministerial level, the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) will focus his attention on our trade development policies and programs. At the same time, however, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) will also be actively involved in the development of our over-all international economic and trade efforts. During last year's GATT Ministerial, for example, you may recall that while the Secretary of State for External Affairs chaired the meeting, the Minister of State for International Trade led the Canadian delegation to the meeting. Below the ministerial level the Department's trade and economic specialist are similarly active in the interdepartmental network of policy advisory committees and groups.

[Translation]

All in all, I think one can rightly say that these questions and these policies will receive as much if not more attention within the Department of External Affairs than before the reorganization. Indeed, I would say there are additional benefits to this reform, and I will mention a few.

The consolidation of the foreign service through the transfer of trade officers, in fact through the integration of former employees of Industry, Trade and Commerce into the personnel of External Affairs, had the net result of sensitizing everybody within the Department to trade matters and their peculiarities. I believe there has been a significant improvement in the consistency with which political, economic and trade matters are all taken into account within a global examination of issues, which is beneficial.

Moreover, our trade promotion efforts are aimed at all sectors of the economy, from primary industry to agriculture, from CANDU to Telidon.

[English]

I think this might be a useful point at which to set out the aspects of our trade operations which have not changed.

While the Trade Commissioner Service has been consolidated within the Foreign Service, its expertise and experience will be retained. Officers will continue to specialize in trade development work in the Foreign Service whether through assignments abroad or in Canada. Cross-Canada tours by trade officers, before and during overseas assignments will continue as before. As well the practices of maintaining an active secondments program with other parts of the government and, of course, with the private sector remain unchanged.

The programs supporting our export promotion activities with which you may have been familiar in Industry, Trade and Commerce, Madam Speaker, are continuing to function in the same fashion in External Affairs. The program for export market development, our support for fairs and missions, and our support for other promotion projects remain as before reorganization.

Regional trade offices throughout Canada will also be a continuing feature of our trade development activities. These units, staffed by experienced trade personnel, are operating in all of the major regional offices of the new Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. They will continue to provide the same services to the business community as did the regional offices of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Within the Government, arrangements have been concluded with the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion to ensure the required collaboration between these two departments in a variety of areas so as to retain access to the domestic industrial expertise of that Department. This will include arrangements for an extensive program of secondments between the two Departments in order to ensure that we continue to maintain the required interchange of expertise between our two organizations.

In sum, despite reorganization, a number of key elements of our trade development activities remain as they were. That being said, of course, it should also be stated that reorganization was intended to improve our capabilities in trade policy and development. My own view is that it has and that this will become evident by the Department's performance.

In concluding, Madam Speaker, I should note that much has been made of the new mandate and structure for External Affairs in terms of the contribution it is expected to make to our objectives of national economic development. This is rightly so, for indeed it is our intention to give economic and trade considerations a central role in our foreign policy and operations. The benefits which we expect to gain, however, are by no means limited to the economic sector. A renewed commitment to comprehensiveness in the formulation of our policy options and operations, coherence in their introduction and consistency in their pursuit can bring us very important advantages across the full range of our international relations.

Miss Jewett: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary why it is that this new organization of the Department of External Affairs is so important that none of the three Ministers appointed under the Act are here tonight. Do none of them care?

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Madam Speaker, I suggest this question is somewhat trivial. May I point out to the House that the three ministers are very much involved in this, namely, the minister of State (International Trade) (Mr. Regan) who is making a speech tonight before the Canada Great Britain Board of Trade; the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) who is involved in other activities; and the Minister of State (External Relations) (Mr. Lapointe) who will probably come to the House to hear our remarks, whatever they are worth.

[English]

Miss Jewett: Madam Speaker, the House Leader probably put this debate on tonight because none of those Ministers could be here. Am I correct in coming to that conclusion?

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: On the one hand, Madam Speaker, this is an hypothetical question; on the other hand, I do not see what point the Hon. Member is trying to make.

[English]

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Madam Speaker, I appreciate being afforded the opportunity to participate in this debate on Bill C-152 which deals with Government re-organization.

As I understand the current re-organization of Government departments, several changes will be occurring that have the possibility of impacting in a positive way on the constituency of Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington in southeastern Ontario. I say this based on my observation of the current Department of Regional Economic Development that will be abolished in this re-organization. It is the desire of myself and the constituents in my riding that the problems that were never fully dealt with by the old DREE Department will now be addressed.

There are two major thrusts to this Bill: first, the re-organization of Industry, Trade and Commerce, External Affairs and Regional Economic Expansion; and second, expansion of the number of Parliamentary Secretaries and extension of eligibility to include Senators.

The Government is re-organized as follows: responsibility for trade is transferred to External Affairs from Industry, Trade and Commerce; a new Department of Regional Industrial Expansion is created out of the existing Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion; the mandate of the Ministry of State for Economic Development is expanded to include regional development; and the MSED thus becomes the Ministry of State for Economic and Regional Development. A new Special Areas Act is established to deal with those DREE responsibilities that are not transferred to the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion.

The potential maximum number of Parliamentary Secretaries will be increased by four and eligibility will be expanded to include Senators. At present, the total number of Parliamentary Secretaries may not exceed the total number of Ministers who receive their salaries under Section 4 of the Salaries Act which, in effect, means Ministers with a department. The formula is expanded to include those who fall under Section 5; that is, Ministers who preside over a Ministry of State.

At present, there are three formal Ministries of State, Economic Development, Social Development and Science and Technology. Not all Ministers of State preside over a Ministry of State. There is, for example, a Minister of State for Trade, but no Ministry of State for Trade.

At the same time this Bill increases by one the number of Ministers who fall under Section 4 of the Salaries Act. Thus, the potential maximum number of Parliamentary Secretaries increases by four. However, should the Government decide to create more Ministries of State, the potential number would increase accordingly as no new legislation is needed to create new Ministries of State.

One of the problems that I hope will be addressed is the problem of relevant statistics for determining whether a particular area or region is eligible for assistance. In the northern area of my riding, employment prospects are not particularly encouraging during the best of economic conditions. Many individual communities are dependent on single employment sources, creating a very untenable situation should that employment source dry up. The region, however, has never been able to benefit from direct funding assistance from the federal Government because statistically these certain areas do not appear when calculated with the urban centres of eastern Ontario such as Belleville, Kingston and Ottawa. Therefore, what I would like to see in the new Department of Regional Industrial Expansion that is being created from the existing Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion is a more realistic assessment of those areas and regions within Canada which qualify for assistance but have been unable to obtain it.

I also believe it is very necessary to consult the various levels of Government involved to develop the most effective and comprehensive program for each region. There have been indications that provincial Governments have not been fully consulted about the changes contemplated, and I hope that consultation occurs before this legislation is finalized.

I am concerned about the new Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and the development of new DRIE programs and funding levels. It is my understanding that funding levels for a region will be based on a development index. I have difficulty with this, particularly as this development index proposes to set levels of funding based on a formula that includes percentages of unemployment and income in each census division. This funding scheme then becomes more complicated with its four levels of support and determination of how regions figure in levels of support by how the area scores on the development index.

This formula reminds me of the formula that was developed for the Electoral Boundaries Commission, the use of which somehow afforded one region which had a decrease in population with a net gain of electoral seats at redistribution. That made a mockery of the credo "representation by population". As I mentioned earlier there are several problems with the development index now being proposed in the departmental reorganization.

In the northern area of my federal riding of Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington, the labour force regions which will help determine the development index have many overlaps in the region. In my constituency the census districts follow the county boundaries. The southern sections of the Counties of Hastings, Lennox and Addington and Frontenac, are very different from the more northerly townships of each of those counties. The southern townships are more populated, more developed and generally enjoy more employment. The northern townships would find that their higher unemployment rate would be distorted by the south.

In Hastings County, the unemployment figure for the City of Belleville will distort the unemployment figure for the northern townships such as Bangor, Wicklow and McClure, Carlow, Monteagle, Herschel and Bancroft 100 miles away. The same will be true for Frontenac County where the unemployment figure for the City of Kingston will distort the unemployment figure for the northern townships in Frontenac County such as Palmerston North and South Canonto, Clarendon and Miller and Barrie Townships. The situation will repeat itself in Lennox and Addington County also.

The proposed alternative of trying to estimate unemployment rates for census districts individually will lead to a further accuracy problem. This has been pointed out to me in the size of the survey of the labour force, in that the smaller the survey, the higher the degree of inaccuracy. Even when the amount of unemployment is determined, it only tells part of the story. There are many people in areas who have given up looking for work because they know there is none available. The Government's proposal does not consider these individuals.

Finally, I would like to mention the second measure of the development index, that of income. The proposal is to use as our income measure that of personal income in a census district based on taxation data. In this accounting, there is the problem of time. Tax data that will become available will be several years old by the time it is published. In July of 1982 a major employer in the northern area of Hastings County shut down. By using the federal Government's proposed method of accounting, this major shift in the income pattern in the local economy will not be available until 1985 at the earliest, clearly years out of date.

The development index formula has many problems, however the one that is most serious is the fact that the formula will not be put into law. The possibility of year to year political tampering by the Minister in charge renders all the departmental re-organization of regional industrial expansion virtually ineffective. That does not suggest the re-organization will have any effectiveness.

Unfortunately, the major thrust in past instances of Canadian regional policy has been to support Government intervention, and the interference of the operation of natural market forces in a particular region, when and where it was politically advantageous to do so and not in consideration of those regions where need had been demonstrated. This fact becomes more painfully evident when one examines where DREE moneys have been allocated since the inception of the Department in 1969. The Province of Quebec has received $1.5 billion, $900 million more than the next most highly funded DREE Province. In the 1980-81 fiscal year Quebec received $168 million compared to $34 million in Ontario, which has a higher population, $17 million in Alberta and $38 million in British Columbia to name a few other Provinces.

We were never opposed to the goals and objectives of regional development, only to the partisan political tampering which has distorted the role of the old DREE and which, if the proper parliamentary control is not maintained, will hamper the effectiveness of the new DRIE re-organization.

Early in committee I was able to ask a number of questions to officials about DRIE. While much was said of the major commitment to the Ontario region by DRIE, no information was forthcoming about the number of projects or the specific areas in which projects were being developed. I am concerned about the lack of information available to MPs about the operation of DRIE.

In many of the areas of the less developed regions of Canada, historical as well as economic factors are responsible for poor economic growth. In the same vein, in the relatively prosperous Province of Ontario there are areas of economic distress. The federal Government should be focusing its efforts less on regional disparities and more on the areas within each Province throughout Canada that could benefit from some form of economic assistance.

It is also evident that the solutions that must be developed must be individually matched to the distinctive need within each area of all regions.

I hope we will see in this new Department a definite approach that will define the economic potential of a less developed region as opposed to the creation of a make-work project that provides no long-term lasting benefit to that region. While I do not believe this request is impossible I am not so sure this Government has the will to implement it.

Over the past few years, federal policies and programs with regard to regional development have undergone major changes. It would appear that the concern with sharing the economic benefits of Confederation more equally among all the regions of the country is being replaced by an overwhelming preoccupation with the ways and means of stimulating national economic growth. While this may be appropriate, given the current problems of the national economy, it should be clearly understood that the changes in federal policy, particularly as they affect the flow of funds into poorer regions, could have very serious short-run consequences for individuals and provincial Governments and ultimately on the national economy.

Some of the many areas which now seem to be affected by this change in policy are as follows. First, the federal Government is seeking to restrict the transfer of funds to provincial Governments for some programs, such as established program funding and equalization, through changes in the terms of the programs or limiting increases.

The new Industrial and Regional Development Program, IRDP, will form the basis of DRIE assistance. Firms anywhere in Canada can qualify for assistance which varies in degree according to a development index calculated for each of Canada's 260 census divisions. The index will be based on unemployment rate, income, and the fiscal capacity of each Province, although the relative weighting of each of these components has not yet been announced. Based on the value of the index, each census division will qualify for increasing levels of assistance according to its relative disparity on a four-tiered scale.

Was DREE a failure? I do not think so. However, to the best of my knowledge there have been no studies to assess the effectiveness of DREE programs in meeting established objectives. Certainly DREE had its faults as well as its strengths and we would welcome the prospect of a more sophisticated program appropriate to today's economic environment.

The new IRDP represents a shift in direction from previous development initiative and has been a cause of concern for APEC. It may be that some of these misgivings may evaporate as more aspects of the program become known. However, some of my preliminary concerns are that some of the previous industrial development programs, such as EDP, were unsuited to the needs of the smaller manufacturing companies. The creation of a tiered development index alone is unlikely to increase their application.

The new proposals do not appear to recognize the need for a concentrated approach to economic development beyond the boundary of a single census division. As a consequence, some of the new programs could have limited application in the smaller census divisions in Canada with their limited industrial base and weak infrastructure.

Depending on the final form of area indices, the proposed incremental incentives appear inadequate to influence decisions on plant location if that is the policy objective. Policy initiatives of the past have not succeeded in achieving this goal and we now see changes in direction.

Although details for implementation of new policies have not yet been made clear, it is essential to voice these concerns. Further disclosures on the nature of the new economic development instruments will allow a much more specific focus on the issues.

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be able to take part in the debate this evening on the second reading stage of Bill C-152, where it concerns the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. I would like to start by emphasizing that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has existed in its present form for 15 years, and I believe that Canadians from all parts of the country will acknowledge that this Department has done a great deal for the development of certain parts of Canada and especially, I think, in Eastern Canada and in other parts of Ontario which have been able to take advantage of the various programs and mechanisms made available to the various regions.

Madam Speaker, when we look at Bill C-152 which provides for the creation of a Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, we must listen to both the heart and the mind. I think that initially, we do feel sad at the thought that a department like DREE which has been doing excellent work for over 15 years, will now have to change directions and be restructured, and consequently, it is quite legitimate to expect that there will be some resistance to change, which will be normal and acceptable, but still hard to justify if we were to focus only on emotional considerations. I think we must go beyond that to seek formulas that will do a lot more for the future and will help us meet a host of technological and economic challenges. What should be said first of all, Madam Speaker, is that the new Department that has just been created . . . and here we must support and add to efforts that were made in the past, and not denigrate or simply abolish what was set up in 1969. On the contrary! I think it is normal for a Government to want to review such programs from time to time. I am convinced that after 15 years it was time this program was updated and revamped.

Madam Speaker, what exactly does this revamping of the former DREE and the former Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, propose to do? The aim is basically to be much closer to the regions than these departments were before, without necessarily being restricted to providing service or support through participation in studies of various industries and various factories, since it intends to be more concrete and more effective as far as marketing, modernization and research are concerned. I think that is very important, because these are areas that have perhaps not been neglected but not given as much attention as they should have received under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. By restructuring the Department with Industry, Trade and Commerce and the former DREE department, what we are actually aiming at is to put two tools in the same box to ensure that all our human resources that want to help this country's economic development can do so as a team. That, Madam Speaker, is the purpose of the amalgamation of the former Department of Regional Economic Expansion with that of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It is a fact that at an early stage, we were wondering whether the proposed tool was potentially the best. It is also a fact that with changes such as this, people wonder just how the new set up will be an improvement over the previous one. Of course, as was indicated by the previous speaker, we do wonder whether or not we are taking a big chance. I think that we probably are just taking a chance as with any other change, but one which will bring about new initiatives, while keeping the expertise accumulated over the past 15 years.

I think this is very important. And when he appeared before various committees, the Minister indicated most emphatically that there was not intention of taking away resources at the ministerial level or to lower the profile of the people directly involved in regional economic expansion. I think that on this we should take the Minister's word for it and rely on it, for the Minister's major concern is to ensure that the decision-making process is not merely at the central level, but also at the regional level.

I can say this with considerable pride, Madam Speaker, for the North Shore has benefited to a large extent from the various programs implemented by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. So has Eastern Canada, and people are quite satisfied with what has already been done. Most of the time, people complained that the decisions concerning industries, corporations, small and medium-size businesses, which were supposed to be responsible and wise, taken following an in-depth study, were made either in the National Capital or in major cities where the regional offices were situated which made it very difficult for small and medium-size businesses to obtain assistance at the local level.

Accordingly the new department effectively anticipates that we will be ever more present in the regions and in larger numbers to comply with the wishes of those directly involved in industry and development. Even if the parties opposite have some reservations, amendments will probably be introduced in Committee of the Whole and already as far as improvements are concerned we could perhaps make sure that we have just one wicket precisely because of the various economic needs identified by the decisions-makers because with DREE there was one major problem. When a product had to be marketed or developed or still when a new economic activity, had to be organized DREE would say: "Listen, we are only limited to that part of the job, the other part comes under the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. On the other hand this Department would answer that from now on people would have to deal with the Department of External Affairs when they needed to investigate markets abroad and there were all sorts of very specialized fields, the co-ordination of which proved to be quite a challenge.

Now that the Department has been reorganized, many of the problems usually encountered in the consideration of issues have been eliminated, and still more, we will be taking advantage of an expanded amount of expertise at the regional level. We will gain considerable time in the evaluation of issues and we will possess a mass of combined knowledge and as a result those who want to use our services will no longer be discouraged. Members from all sides of the House will note that when we have to deal with various departments, we are often shifted from one department to another and regularly told that this branch of a department works on this aspect of an issue while that branch of another department deals with that economic aspect. It proved very hard to obtain any information so that in that respect we will have made substantial progress.

And what does Bill C-152 provide in Part II?

Powers and duties are granted to the Minister. I think that this again is very clear. It is provided that the powers, duties and functions of the Minister generally extend to very specific sectors—manufacturing industries and service industries. Previously I think they were somewhat limited as far as services were concerned. We will be involved with regional industrial expansion. This means that for Members from this side of the House and even from the other side who had reservations with regard to the involvement of the new Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, the concern will remain the same, Madam Speaker. We are going to be very close to the regions, but also we will have more personnel to work directly. So for people who do have doubts in that respect, the Act actually provides for a regional presence. We are going to look after tourism. It is a well-known fact that today tourism in some Provinces is a key activity, and Canada is increasingly anxious to see all our tourist trade potential represented on the world scene. I would simply like to point out that recently one of the tourist treasures of the North Shore, the Mingan Archipelego, was added to Canada's heritage.

Often reference is made to small and medium businesses, and often they directly benefit from the assistance given to large corporations. Mention should be made of the various aircraft and shipbuilding contracts. Small and medium businesses supply larger contractors or shipyards. So these small and medium businesses will benefit, as well as interprovincial trade. Reference has often been made to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion as if that Department's operations were only restricted to the Maritimes or Quebec. But the aim must be an increasingly strengthened internal trade within Canada, and the powers and duties of the Minister are set out as very specific and well-defined functions.

And there is more to be found in that legislation when you look at it more closely. The following is provided in Section 5.1:

(a) promote the establishment, growth and efficiency of manufacturing, processing, service and tourist industries in all regions of Canada, contribute to the sound development and productivity of Canadian industries generally and foster the expansion of trade in Canada—

Needless to say, at the last Progressive Conservative Convention this was one of the major points that were emphasized. It raises the whole question of productivity in larger industries as well as in small and medium businesses in Canada.

It is therefore my view that the Opposition parties will have to admit that this has been in preparation for quite some time in order to have a Department that will better meet future challenges, and this in no way conflicts with the principles which they are putting forward. On the contrary, this emphasizes and illustrates the extent to which the productivity of Canadian industries must be increased while certain leading and traditional sectors of our economy are upgraded. The Bill provides, among other things, in paragraph (b), that the Minister shall:

(b) assist investors in the location of industries in a manner that is consistent with the needs of the investors and federal regional and industrial development policies—

In the past, major industries were often developed in large urban centres and marginal areas were left with the small businesses. However, at the present time and according to the various scenarios which the Department will introduce in the near future by regulation, all regions will have equal opportunities to attract major processing industries so that they will not always lag behind the large centres and large areas will not be more developed than others. Equal opportunities will be provided to those regions that are now known as underdeveloped. That is the important thing! Central Canada may have developed much more quickly than other regions, but the time has come to try to strike a balance.

These normal and legitimate concerns are shared by both sides of the House, and I believe that they had to be met by such a piece of legislation.

In Subclause (d) of this Bill, we also find that the Minister shall, and I quote:

(d) develop and carry out programs related to his powers, duties and functions, of a national and regional character, including programs and projects to

(i) promote and assist product and process development—

I heard that during the leadership campaign of the Progressive Conservative Party, Madam Speaker, and I have often heard NDP members say the same thing, and quite rightly.

As an exporting country, Canada must have well-organized high technology industries.

An Hon. Member: Exactly.

Mr. Maltais: The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce set up the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board, or CIRB, to try to find means of increasing production and reducing costs to promote exports in so-called soft traditional sectors, such as the textile industry.

In addition, I think it is about time we developed new products in Canada, because all our young people are looking to microprocessors and high technology. The technological revolution may be just another phrase for us, but it is a reality in other countries. It is therefore important for a Department to be able to coordinate such activities. In the past, development meant research centres under the jurisdiction of other Departments than that of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and it was the responsibility of External Affairs to find new markets, but there had never been an economically-oriented Department working in very close co-operation with businessmen and businesswomen and able to point the way to new markets and new opportunities. All these activities will now be regrouped under three Departments: External Affairs, Regional Industrial Expansion and the Department which will be responsible for marketing. That is what we had to do, and under this legislation, I think that we shall have to see to it that there will be a single government agency in the various regions. I think this is an excellent piece of legislation, to the extent that it will bring us closer to the people and that we will not forever have to give other departments the information required to enable the people to act knowledgeably and responsibly. In addition, Madam Speaker, other duties of the Department include, and I quote:

(e) provide support services for industrial and trade development, including information, import analysis and traffic services—

Everyone will admit that the last consideration is of major importance to the country, the question of traffic services. Most of the time we do experience difficulties due to the vastness of our country and the lack of modern railway facilities. Besides, let us admit it, the high cost of transportation is often the only thing which prevents our merchants, businessmen and businesswomen from moving throughout the country to sell their goods—prohibitive transportation costs. The question of traffic services is basic in this Bill and we will have to make sure that it is more than pious wishes, that it becomes a reality so that we will be able to transport our own products from the Atlantic to the Pacific and, increasingly, from the Arctic to our southern borders. Afterwards we will have to make sure that with outstanding transporters such as Air Canada and CP Air we will take our goods to Europe. There are markets but we must look beyond North America. Granted, the United States remain our main trading partner, but we must seek new outlets in China and Japan because our country is blessed with natural resources. Japan, with her huge population, must protect every single tree which grows on her islands. Europeans are now looking for lumber producing countries. Canada is a country which can meet those needs, but we must process our lumber right here. Transportation should not however be an obstacle to our trade, but it is now one of of our major difficulties. By combining the Department of External Affairs with the former Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I think we have found a major lever to ensure Canada's economic recovery and diversification.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I should like to say that we will need more that economic recovery programs. We will be successful if all Canadians, men and women alike, are truly motivated not only politically, but individually and personally. I am convinced that we will have a few false starts at the beginning, because the whole apparatus will have to be put to the test, and that is to be expected. A number of public servants will be frustrated because many of them do have soft jobs. We are here to serve the public, find new formulas and make sure that we do not fall prey to a kind of lethargic sleep. This Bill will shake up some people, but that is our job and it is important that we do it well. Knowing as I do the new Leader of the Opposition, I am almost certain that he will be tempted to repeat word for word what I have just said. The major hazard facing the Leader of the Opposition—I do know him well—is that he is a good Liberal. I have always thought that he was a Liberal who had lost his way, so those who are more conservative that progressive should be on their toes! To conclude my remarks, Madam Speaker, I will say that this legislation is welcome. Like any Hon. Member on both sides of the House, I have a few legitimate reservations. But let us give a chance to the department before destroying it and let us wait and see what the results are. In addition, I am convinced that these provisions will benefit all Canadians. Nothing prevents us from reviewing the new legislation every year, for it is wrong to make changes in our laws only every 15 years. It is about time as well that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce stop patronizing, leaving unimportant matters to small regions, and that we strike together, to achieve a really balanced development of our economy.

Madam Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a question to ask?

Miss Jewett: Yes. I will be rising later to participate in the debate.

The Hon. Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais) has now really made me confused because he is speaking as though the Bill we are discussing tonight combined the old DREE, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and the Department of External Affairs. Several times he said that there was somehow to be a grand combination of all three. On two occasions he said that the old DREE, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, was being merged with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Then when he was speaking of export promotion, he suggested that it would now presumably come within DRIE, the new Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. My question is, who is right? My understanding was that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion plus the industry part of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce was going into one Department and in fact this has already occurred, and that the trade and commerce part of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce was, of course, going into the Department of External Affairs. Is that not correct?

[Translation]

Mr. Maltais: Madam Speaker, in fact, the former department of Regional Economic Expansion will be merged with the present Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. However, within the present Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, there is a whole section which precisely allowed for the marketing of products. So that after the merger, the former department of Regional Economic Expansion, which could not benefit from the expertise in the field of marketing, will then be able to do so since there will have been a merger. That is what I intended to explain during my remarks.

[English]

Miss Jewett: Is the Hon. Member saying, because this really changes my understanding of it at least, that marketing, export promotion and so on—and he was speaking of selling our goods abroad and all that—will now be embraced within the new Department of Regional Industrial Expansion?

[Translation]

Mr. Maltais: No, Madam Speaker, what I wish to explain in very simple terms, and I believe I was very clear a moment ago, is that if you have a good knowledge of the present structure of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, you will know that this department fulfilled a particular role, namely the marketing of products at the commercial level, while the Department of Regional Economic Expansion did not exercise this function. It only had the mandate to modernize and support small businesses in designated areas. By bringing together both fields of expertise, that is, DREE and Industry, Trade and Commerce, it will be far easier for Atlantic fishermen to find new markets for their products since officers of Industry and Commerce who will be comprised in the new Department of Regional Economic Expansion will be able to help small businessmen to find new markets. Obviously, the Department of External Affairs will be responsible for negotiating new contracts among other things. I think this is quite clear.

I do not understand why there are still some doubts in the Hon. Member's mind. I suggest if you read the bill very carefully, you will find that this is clearly indicated. The Department of External Affairs will obviously develop policies pertaining to foreign affairs and will retain the authority in that field, but in trade matters, all of this will be decided within the former Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, together with the former department of Regional Economic Expansion. In my mind, this is very clear. Presently, there is a Secretary of State for External Affairs, a minister responsible for External Affairs, a minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce as well as a minister responsible for DREE.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Hon. Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais) a question. In view of the fact that based on every economic forecast, unemployment is expected to rise in every region of the country and that this bill deals with international trade and regional and industrial development, how can the Hon. Member hope to convince the Canadian people that this is a major bill or that the policies of this Government are working?

Mr. Maltais: Madam Speaker, I would like to point out one thing to the Hon. Member. In view of the fact that the rate of inflation has now dropped to 5 per cent and that in the last month there has been a decrease in the rate of unemployment, you have to admit that the situation has somewhat improved. To mention that in other industrialized countries, the number of unemployed is larger than in Canada, is to put the debate in a totally different perspective. Bill C-152 is simply aimed at enhancing previous efforts. If we look at what has already been achieved in this country in the last ten years or so in business and industry, we can see that there are small and medium size businesses in disadvantaged regions of the country. A lot has been done. To prove my point, Madam Speaker, I will only remind the Member of what has been accomplished in the fishing industry in the Maritimes which goes through various cycles as is the case for other industries. In addition, our record compares quite favorably with that of the United States. On the other hand, if the Hon. Member compares our situation with that of some European countries such as France and Great Britain, I'll say to him that his question is irrelevant and has nothing to do with the bill under discussion tonight.

[English]

Madam Speaker: I will now recognize the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam for debate.

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, now we are all really confused. It was not my intention to spend too much of my 20 minutes on the new Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, except to say that there is nothing that it will do which could not have been done by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. Indeed, it rather narrows it. The Hon. Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais) suggested that now the new Department would be able to really seek out industry. That was what DREE was supposedly to do, primarily. There were other kinds of economic expansion for DREE, but fundamentally it was an attempt to have industries locating in slow growth or less developed areas. Therefore, it is pretty much of a manicured type of thing.

The main reason the new Department of Regional Industrial Expansion has been created is the wish of the Government to break up the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and to put Industry in with the new Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, and to put Trade and Commerce in with the Department of External Affairs. I am pretty sure that is what the Government is doing, despite the Hon. Member assuring me that that is what it was not doing. I am sure he thought that that is what it was not doing.

None of the relevant Ministers in the new Department of External Affairs are here tonight. One of them peeked in for a moment and left. I guess he really does not care what is happening to this hydra which is being created in the Department of External Affairs. However, I think one of the real worries of the new Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Lumley), who is here tonight, would be that while there may have been an absence of co-ordination in the past between DREE and Industry, the absence of co-ordination in the future between Industry, Trade and Commerce will be enormous and probably far more serious.

Some of the officials to whom we spoke in the Committee on External Affairs did point out the great difficulty they would have in Trade and Commerce, in that section of the new Department of External Affairs, because they would not have as intimate and close a relationship with their domestic industrial base and their clients, their constituents, so to speak, whereas when it was all together in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, people engaged in export promotion, trade and so on, did have a pretty close tie-in with the industrial sectors of the country which they were anxious to see becoming more competitive on the world market.

Therefore, one of the toughest problems the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion will face is the very tie-in with one's industrial contituency that the old Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce had. I am sure that he will agree that that will be a problem. However, I want to talk primarily about the Department of External Affairs Act because it is an abomination. There are many parts to it which ought to be repealed. Let me name a few of those parts.

This Act, originally Bill C-123, was given first reading almost a year ago on June 30, 1982. The Government has had all that time in which it could have seen the inadequacies and horrendous mistakes made in the section headed Department of External Affairs Act and made changes.

It has made other changes. It withdrew the regional incentives part from the original Bill C-123 which the Minister has now introduced separately. The Government has withdrawn the financial administration part which will be dealt with separately. While the Government has been dealing with this hydra-headed monster, I see that it did not remove the section entitled the Parliamentary Secretary's Act. I will return to that question. Yet it did not make any changes whatsoever to Part I which is the Department of External Affairs Act. As an example of the inadequacies of this Bill, we first have the Secretary of State for External Affairs as we do today. We then have two additional Ministers, the Minister for International Trade and the Minister for External Relations, both of whom carry out their duties under the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

The powers, duties and functions of the Secretary of State for External Affairs are outlined in detail in Clause 11. The powers, duties and functions of the Minister for International Trade are outlined in Clause 12. However, there is absolutely nothing about the duties and powers of the third Minister, the Minister for External Relations. To bring forward a statute creating a new Minister for External Relations and having nothing in the statute about his powers and duties is, to me, absolutely incredible.

I have been trying to understand this Bill since it has been presented as a fait accompli and the Minister for External Relations has already been operating. I have been trying to understand what he is doing. I have read the press releases and have listened to him in the House. If the abysmal speech he made the other day when debating the Cruise missile testing during Opposition day was an example of what he is doing, then I am even more confused about what his role is supposed to be.

I would say that there is no way a statute creating a new Minister which does not indicate what his duties are should go through the House. Therefore, I would suggest that the first action should be to abolish that position. I will return to the issue of international trade, but I believe that we should abolish the position of Minister for External Relations. I hope that will be done in Committee of the Whole. Indeed, this Bill should go to the relevant standing committees because it needs much more attention than can possibly be given in Committee of the Whole.

Let me deal with the undersecretaries. We have always had an undersecretary of state for External Affairs in Canada who is the deputy head of the Department. We will now have three associate undersecretaries, positions which in fact already exist. As I said, this legislation is a fait accompli. We have talked to those undersecretaries in committee. One position is for an associate undersecretary to the Minister of State for International Trade, who is a deputy. The second is to be a deputy to the Minister in charge of foreign policy. Incidentally, he is referred to here as the Minister for Foreign Policy and elsewhere he is called the Minister for External Relations. The Government has not even figured out what the title will be. Since we do not know what the Minister will do, how are we to know what the deputy is supposed to do? Therefore, that section must be abolished when we deal with this Bill in committee.

The reason that I am looking at the Hon. Minister for the new Department of Regional Industrial Expansion is that I know he shares my concerns. He just has not been heard in Cabinet, which I find amazing, because he should be heard.

The Minister and the House will also know that there is a third associate undersecretary of state who is to be "the co-ordinator of international economic relations." He will have the rank and status of a deputy head of the Department. I have not been able to find an explanation here or anywhere else as to what he will do.

Another fascinating problem from the point of view of a student of public administration is that each of these Ministers, the Secretary of State and the other two Ministers have an undersecretary or deputy and an associate. It is not clear whether they respond to their own Minister in the case of the deputies or whether they respond to the undersecretary of state, who then responds to the Secretary of State who, in turn, informs the other Ministers what it is they have been responding about. There is simply no clarification in this area at all. Other Members here who were at the committee will agree that we tried to clarify that in committee. The Government is going to establish committees to help it decide who will respond to whom and why. As I say, any student of public administration looking at this monster would have a field day. If I only had an hour I could go on.

Mr. Prud'homme: Take it.

Miss Jewett: Thank you. I will take that as unanimous consent.

At that stage the Act finishes dealing with Ministers, deputies and so on. It does not go into any detail in this Department. Miss McDougall has pointed out that although consolidation is not a bad idea in some ways—

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): She recommended it.

Miss Jewett: Not quite. You are quite wrong. What she recommended is not what was being done. In fact, I had a long talk with her recently.

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): Read the report.

Miss Jewett: Listen, you are the one who nobody knows what you are doing.

In any event, let me deal with the assistant undersecretaries. There have always been six assistant undersecretaries, which seemed quite sufficient for the Department of External Affairs. They have now been increased to 42 assistant undersecretaries. I will not go on about that subject or the McDougall report at this time because the External Affairs Act does not deal with assistant undersecretaries. I am simply illustrating the fact that this entire measure is in a very sorry state. People's responsibilities are overlapping and they are having great difficulty in determining who is supposed to be doing what.

As I have suggested, we must abolish the position of Minister of External Relations, his deputy and the co-ordinator for international economic relations. No one knows what he is supposed to do.

I would like to proceed to the question of the division of Industry, Trade and Commerce and including Trade and Commerce in External Affairs. I realize that time should be given to determine how it would work out but one of my reservations, and indeed that of the Deputy Minister as expressed in committee, is over breaking the linkage between industry in this country and trade and commerce that this development will involve. I am also concerned because I think it is better to have trade and commerce quite separately represented at Cabinet. People may say that the Minister is separate from the Secretary of State, but that is not entirely so. The Minister should not only have close links with industry in the country but remain quite separate and equal in status. I would sooner have that than have him occupy a position in the Department of External Affairs which would not be as strong if he were an equal, but nevertheless will be strong enough for him to inject into the foreign policies of the country an extremely strong bias on the trade side.

Canada, as we have said a million times, is a trading nation. Therefore we must have a very strong trade side, strong export promotion, and so on, in the Government of Canada. But it would be a grave mistake when we consider the kinds of foreign policy initiatives which Canada has taken in the past and will take in the future—Canada may not be taking many today but it is taking a few; it has suddenly realized that Central America is there, for example—to put great emphasis upon our external appearance and thrust into the promotion of trade and commerce. We may very seriously undermine other policy directions, whether they be in human rights, peacekeeping or whatever the Department of External Affairs ordinarily conducts.

This may percolate through the whole Department. There are absolutely first class trade commissioners in the trade commissioner service; as we all know, a great many of them are first class. They are not primarily, nor should they be, people who have to embrace the totality of Canadian foreign policy. Yet, under the planned administration of the new Department of External Affairs, including Trade and Commerce, as I understand it from talking with many of the officials, they will in fact be one of the interchangeable streams within the Department which will have to take on many other functions than the trade promotion function. Because of their strength as trade people, I am not sure that they are really able to be, with a few exceptions, capable of a broad representation of Canadian foreign policy rather than simply Canadian trade abroad. I am worried that they will not do that.

Ideally, I would like us to drop this part of the Bill for both the reasons I have given. It seems to me that this reorganization will not do anything which the Department of Regional Economic Expansion could not have done. It would remove the link which I think is important between industry, trade and commerce and will give the whole Department of External Affairs, or a large part of it, a very trade and commercially oriented salience. This would be very seriously to the detriment of the salience of the Department which most of us have seen in the past and would like to continue to see. Therefore, this means a very major change. In fact, it pretty well revokes Part I and Part II. I guess we will just revoke them. That leaves us with Part IV, which was Part VI in the original Bill.

It is obvious that Part IV cannot remain. It would be very condescending of me even to address this since I am sure it is obvious to all Hon. Members of the House. In fact, this is the part which allows four new parliamentary secretaries, for some unearthly reason, to be drawn from the other place as well as from the House of Commons.

Just tonight I was glad to see one little parliamentary secretary here, but not one of the three relevant Ministers. If this Bill had been passed, we would not even have had him. I am sure one of the gentlemen in the Upper House would be dying to be parliamentary secretary, so we would not even have one body here to answer our questions and address the Bill. However, it is not only for that reason that we need to have a parliamentary secretary in the House. Frequently Ministers are not here even on matters as important as this one; it is mind-boggling. There is another very good reason. As much as we admire the Senators in the other place, particularly in their work on committees and so on, they are not elected and do not represent any constituencies in Canada. Therefore, they should not be occupying a position, which should be of some importance, as a parliamentary secretary. There goes Part VI. Now, what do we have left? We abolish Part I and Part II.

Mr. Thacker: They would fall asleep on us.

Miss Jewett: Yes. I guess we could keep Part III, and out goes Part IV. As has been suggested by other Hon. Members, if the Government—and I am being very serious now—really wants to bring Members of the House of Commons and indeed of the Senate into greater prominence in the field of external affairs generally, trade and commerce, foreign policy, defence, and so on, the way to do it would be by strengthening committees. A small beginning has been made, but it seems to me to be very small. It will be extremely difficult for the committees to create their own terms of reference. To strengthen the Chairs of committees, their membership and their powers, would be a good idea, rather than adding more parliamentary secretaries.

Madam Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but her allotted time has expired.

Mr. Roche: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask some questions of the Hon. Member who has just spoken. Has she taken note of the clause in the Bill which provides that the Minister shall lay before Parliament on the fifth sitting day after January 31 each year the annual report of the Department of External Affairs?

As a result of the rules under which we are now operating, that report would automatically be referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. I should like to have the Hon. Member's views as to how that report should be treated with respect to an examination of foreign policy by the Standing Committee with special reference to the calling of witnesses, and how the Hon. Member sees Members of Parliament on that Committee examining the conduct of foreign policy via the annual report?

Miss Jewett: Madam Speaker, it looks in Clause 14 as if the Committee might at least receive the annual report more quickly than the average Member of Parliament now sees it, because it indicates for the previous fiscal year on or before January 31. I have a feeling that much of it will be out of date, in a sense, in terms of some of the events and activities the Committee will want to examine, and that the report will not be helpful in the area of current problems the Standing Committee will want to examine.

Nevertheless, it is certainly an advance. The CIDA report should be there as well, but CIDA was not created by an Act of Parliament. It is an advance over what we have now, I would agree, and the Committee should be able to determine the needs by interviewing witnesses, holding hearings on the report and perhaps even engaging in travel. Particularly as we get more and more concerned about the actual administration of the Department of External Affairs as well as its policy, travel may be necessary as well.

Mr. Roche: Madam Speaker, I have a question which concerns CIDA. Bearing in mind that the Government Organization Act specifically empowers the chief Minister of this triumvirate to have control and supervision of the Canadian International Development Agency, is there not an anomaly that the report of CIDA will not be required to be tabled so that Hon. Members can examine the implementation of CIDA policy in the way which we will presumably be able to examine the conduct of foreign policy via the External Affairs report?

Miss Jewett: Madam Speaker, I agree entirely with the Hon. Member. There should be some way, since CIDA lacks statutory authority and does not come under the new rules, to ensure that CIDA's annual reports, indeed all its major reports, are made available to the committee at its request.

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Hon. Member, who has obviously spent some time on this and has heard witnesses. My question relates to her comment that much of this was unearthly. I agree. Star Wars was nothing compared to the departmental wars that this statute talks about. That is really what is happening. We all know how everybody is opposed to Finance, because it is so powerful. We know External had a battle with ITC and ITC lost. We recently had a Bill called Canagrex, which really was a battle between Agriculture and ITC. ITC lost again, and Agriculture won. Would the Hon. Member share her comments and view as to how much of this Bill reflects a battle between Departments and the fact that the Ministers are totally irrelevant?

Miss Jewett: Madam Speaker, that would be speculative. I did suggest that the splitting of ITC seemed in a sense to be, or was seen at that time to be, a victory for Trade and Commerce. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion was renamed the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion simply to accommodate that split. As I said before, DREE could have done anything that DRIE can do.

As far as the winners and losers are concerned, I am not sure. On the one hand, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion will be at a serious disadvantage not having links with Trade and Commerce. On the other hand, the Department of External Affairs will be seriously disadvantaged by having too dominant a Trade and Commerce within it. Beyond that it is extremely difficult to speculate.

I am very concerned about the whole problem of co-ordinating. One speaker on the Government side mentioned there could be seconding. He mentioned that the new Department of Regional Industrial Expansion could give the same service to the business community that that would be done by seconding between External Affairs, which now includes Trade and Commerce, and the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. My knowledge and experience in public administration is that that will not work. Therefore, there is a lot to be unravelled.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, I would like to spend a few minutes dealing with the second part of this Bill which creates the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. It will replace the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. When you look at in terms of names, it does not make a lot of difference. However, in terms of how the delivery system will work, it can make a great deal of difference.

The most redeeming feature is that we have a bit of hindsight because the Bill is being enacted retroactively, after the reorganization has occurred. That is not an entirely unusual situation. It has occurred with almost every new Government that has been elected in this nation. Another redeeming feature is the person who occupies the position of Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. To date he has shown that he is sensitive to the regions of Canada and to the industrial expansion of those regions. He is the only good reason I can think of for supporting this Bill because I have seen him in action.

I was very much opposed to the idea when it first appeared. However, I have had opportunity to deal with the results of the reorganization. I believe we can have a better delivery system with fewer encumbrances. The Government of Canada will be able to act in a much more expeditious and reasonable manner, without having to take into consideration the political machinations to which the Government of Canada was almost continuously subjected by the Provinces.

In New Brunswick, under DREE we had a number of development agreements covering various parts of the Province. It made the Province look somewhat like a checkerboard or hopscotch board. You could jump from one part of an area to another which had the ability to take advantage of the incentives. Two miles away, and maybe even half a mile away, there were no incentives available.

I want to express the hope that the intention of this Bill is to make it possible for a much better delivery of the economic incentives that the Government is prepared to offer to those companies, firms or individuals that are prepared to take some risk in establishing industries of one type or another, industries that will employ local people and produce goods locally and which will improve the industrial base and the ability to market in those areas of the country that to date have been left behind.

We know that the vast majority of industrial activity in this country is centred in Ontario. I do not believe there is anything wrong with Ontario being industrialized. However, there is a great deal wrong if there are only one or two areas of the country that can be industrialized. I believe that this and any successive Government must have as its prime responsibility redressing the problem of employment opportunities through industrial development in every part of this nation. No part of this nation needs that more than the Gaspé and the Atlantic Provinces.

It is convenient for a lot of people to forget that when Confederation came about, the Atlantic region was the industrialized area of Canada. It is very convenient for Deputy Ministers who spend all or most of their time in Ottawa to forget that. It will be very difficult for this Minister to forget it because I intend to remind him constantly that we were industrialized. I do not claim that the policy of Macdonald was wrong. I cannot remember any experiences from that era. However, the industrial policy, the centralization policies of his Government, destroyed the industries of Atlantic Canada. We must make every possible effort to rebuild that.

The Government of Canada has a very special responsibility to see that every possible incentive is put in place for any individual, industry or corporation wishing to establish. I would go further than that. I would say that the Government of Canada must use a great deal of persuasion to insist that industry in this country in its expansion plans looks at areas of the country other than southwestern Ontario and the Montreal region. It is absolutely imperative that Canadians who live in the rest of Canada should be able to take part in the new industrial growth, the new technological growth, the new scientific growth and the new educational growth in the country. To do otherwise would be an abrogation of the responsibility of the Government, and I hope that that will be taken seriously, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but it is now ten o'clock and, pursuant to an order passed earlier this day, I must adjourn the House until two o'clock tomorrow.

At 10 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

EMPLOYMENT

FOOD SERVICE INDUSTRY—SHORTAGE OF SKILLED WORKERS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the restaurant and food service industry has become a large and dynamic sector of the Canadian economy with sales of $15 billion, or 4.5 per cent of Canada's GNP, and 600,000 employees, or 5.7 per cent of the national labour force. In addition, it earned $1 billion in foreign exchange last year from visiting tourists.

In 1982, a recession year, employment in the food service industry actually increased by 2,000 jobs. When one considers the unemployment situation in Canada, surely the service industries are part of the solution, and the largest sector, the food service industry, deserves encouragement for job creation and business growth.

At present the industry lacks the schools and standards necessary to educate the skilled technicians who make this industry grow. Our colleges graduate good cooks but not world-class chefs.

This shortage of skilled trades is becoming a major bottleneck in the expansion of this industry, and it is an area where the Government can help by upgrading training facilities and by designating some of the food service trades as national occupations under the National Training Act.

In addition, consideration must also be given to revising the tax system to stimulate these labour intensive industries.

POTENTIAL JOB CREATION OF ERIE CONSTITUENCY PROJECTS

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, there is no shortage of work to be done in Canada. As well, there is no shortage of willing labour. All that is required is the funding and organization. I believe these are some of the reasons we have a Department of Employment and Immigration. I would like to suggest to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) that plans exist for many long term projects involving conservation and improvement of transportation facilities which would keep many people employed for a long time.

In my constituency of Erie two such projects have been on the drawing board for many, many months. These are very worth-while endeavours involving flood control in the City of Port Colborne, and modifications to the old Welland Canal to accommodate mooring of ships. The total cost of these two projects is roughly $9 million.

If the current administration were willing to sponsor either or both of these projects, which would cost but a small fraction of the $1.5 billion bailout of Canadair, the benefits to the environment and the local economy would be tremendous. Federal funding would be put to good use in assisting with these projects, especially in light of the fact that over $5 million was granted in the neighbouring constituency for creating parks and doing landscaping.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

LETTERS SUPPORTING RETENTION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his Government 1,500 letters individually signed by residents of the Prince Albert area, who ask for Crow rate retention. These letters, which are addressed to the Prime Minister, were gathered by the Prince Albert Chamber of Commerce and reflect broad based public opinion which continues to support retention of the Crow rate.

These 1,500 letters, together with 3,400 petition signatures and 2,100 signed endorsements of the New Democratic Party's Crow retention policy, add up to an extremely significant statement of public opinion. I will send these letters across to the Prime Minister and I ask him to answer my written question involving public representation of the Crow retention.

A similar question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) produced 38,713 signatures favouring Crow retention, and only 69 for Crow change. That is a 99.8 per cent vote in favour of Crow retention. This kind of public response clearly demonstrates why New Democrats continue to oppose Bill C-155 and propose an alternative policy which will upgrade the railways and keep the Crow rate for western farmers. We want to ensure that western voices are heard by the committee on transport, and we urge that the committee travel throughout the West in its examination of Bill C-155. I have those letters here in my hand, Madam Speaker.

S.O. 21

AIR TRANSPORT

SUPPORT FOR PROPOSED BAN ON SMOKING IN AIRCRAFT

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Madam Speaker, some two weeks ago I made representation to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) with regard to the possibility of having a partial or complete ban on smoking in all aircraft whose flights originate in Canada. My colleagues will be interested to know that since that time I have received over 150 letters. Just this morning I received support for that proposal from one group which spoke for 34,000 Canadians.

I realized that my colleague, the Member of Parliament for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail), asked a question yesterday. I believe the Hon. Member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott) also brought this to our attention. The purpose of my statement is to encourage Hon. Members, and to say that if they are also getting this kind of response for a ban such as this, perhaps we should be moving to institute such a ban, in view of the fact that it is for the safety of Canadians in the first instance, while also adding to the comfort of people who are travelling. I encourage those who hear me to write to me, to my colleague from Restigouche, or to the Hon. Member for Hamilton-Wentworth. Together we will try to determine if we can get this instituted into law on flights originating in Canada, on behalf of all the people of Canada.

DISCOVERY DAY IN NEWFOUNDLAND

CELEBRATION OF FOUR HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, according to our rules the House does not sit tomorrow as we celebrate St. Jean Baptiste day to honour one of the two founding peoples of Canada.

I wish to bring to the attention of the House the fact that tomorrow is also an important holiday for Newfoundland. June 24 is Discovery Day in Newfoundland, and it is especially significant this year as Newfoundland celebrates its four hundredth anniversary.

On August 5, 1583, Sir Humphrey Gilbert read a proclamation in St. John's, which was then a settled community, formally claiming sovereignty in the name of Queen Elizabeth I, and thereby establishing Britain's first colony. Today, her direct descendant, Prince Charles, and the Princess of Wales, are in St. John's to inaugurate the four hundredth anniversary celebrations officially.

I am pleased to bring this national historic event to the attention of the House in the absence of my colleagues from St. John's East and St. John's West who are in St. John's to participate in the official ceremonies. I am sure all Hon. Members will want to join me in saluting the proud people of Newfoundland on the occasion of their four hundredth anniversary.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BROADCASTING

VANCOUVER COMMENTATOR'S VIEWS OF MEDIA WATCH GROUP

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, recently a commentator on CKVU-TV in Vancouver topped his own reputation for promoting poisonous prejudice by stating, "It is my hope that Media Watch and its army of snoops will be found in the front lines where they can be raped by the Russians." I am sure that all Hon. Members of Parliament abhor such an obscene statement from a professional broadcaster on a station which is licensed by the CRTC.

Media Watch is dedicated to informing the public on issues surrounding the portrayal of women in the media and the detrimental effects of sex role stereotyping and pornography. This incident shows the need for such a service.

CKVU-TV, by refusing to apologize or demand a retraction from its commentator, has condoned hatred and violence against women generally. Media Watch appropriately refused an opportunity to rebut on CKVU because "the question of whether or not women should be raped by an invading army is not debatable."

As in the case of First Choice Pay TV, the CKVU incident makes a mockery of the unenforceable human rights policy of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters. Since the broadcasting industry is not policing itself, legislative action is imperative. I urge the Government and the House to give priority to the Private Members' Bill proposed by the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), which would amend the Broadcasting Act to prohibit such abusive comments.

Madam Speaker: Order.

BLOCK PARENT PROGRAM

FUNDS REQUIRED FOR NATIONAL MEETING

Mr. Jack Burghardt (London West): Madam Speaker, almost all Members of the House will be aware of the important work of the Block Parent Program. From its humble beginnings in London, Ontario, in the Fall of 1968, the Block Parent Program has grown to the point where it now encompasses 800 plus communities of all sizes. There are Block Parent communities in all ten Provinces and in both Territories. All of the 800 plus Block Parent communities in the national Block Parent Program use the same national symbol and house sign, thus enabling children to move from one coast of Canada to the other and still find their sign of safety, the national Block Parent house sign, in windows of houses in their new communities.

The Block Parent Program has provided a service of untold value to lost or frigthened children and their families throughout Canada. However, there is some concern that national Block Parent communication needs to be strengthened through a national advisory committee and the opportunity for Block Parent organizations from the various regions of Canada to meet face to face in personal dialogue. Toward that end a national Block Parent advisory committee meeting has been proposed for October of this year. The cost of such a meeting would be $7,000, a small price for a meeting of such an important national organization, but one which its voluntary members will find difficult to raise. In the interest of preserving the national Block Parent Program and its important work, I would hope that the federal Government, perhaps through the Solicitor General's Department, can provide some financial assistance to bring a national meeting to fruition.

ACCESS TO INFORMATION

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE REPORT ON CONSOLIDATED COMPUTERS INCORPORATED

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, yesterday the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Justice held a joint press conference at which they announced the dawn of a new day for openness of government. I would like to give the President of the Treasury Board the opportunity to demonstrate his seriousness when he talks about access to information. Will the President of the Treasury Board undertake to table in Parliament a copy of the Anderson Report on Consolidated Computers, which chronicled how that Minister presided over the $125 million loss on Consolidated Computers?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I will have to check into the status of the document and see whether it is a cabinet document—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: I will be delighted to get back to my hon. friend on this.

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, if the Minister has a hard time finding it, I will give him my copy.

THE PRESS

PROPOSALS TO REGULATE—REQUEST THAT LEGAL OPINION BE TABLED

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism who, last week, in response to a question I put on the legality of his proposals for the newspaper industry, replied, "As to constitutionality, the advice of the Department of Justice . . . ", which I take is the Minister, " . . . is that our proposal will be quite within the constitutional parameters." In keeping with the spirit of freedom of information, will the Minister table all materials he has received from the Department of Justice, or other Departments, with respect to the constitutionality of his proposals?

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Madam Speaker, I expect when this legislation does come forward, is tabled in the House and reaches debate, that that discussion can be held in committee. Surely that is the more proper procedure.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fleming: I do not understand how that is hiding anything, if we are prepared to follow the proper course in public debate and discussion. I do not know why, ahead of the event, Hon. Members would imply that. I am not trying to conceal anything. I feel that is why we have these officials, to give us advice. Their advice is that it is legal.

ACCESS TO INFORMATION

REQUEST FOR ANSWERS TO ORDER PAPER QUESTIONS PUT BY DECEASED MEMBER

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In keeping with the spirit of the new Access to Information Act, will the Government now be providing answers to the 412 unanswered questions placed on the Order Paper since the beginning of the Thirty-Second Parliament by the former Hon. Member for Leeds-Grenville?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Cossitt: Or is the Government still afraid to expose itself to the complete public scrutiny for which the Act provides?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, since this session commenced we have answered 4,151 questions on the Order Paper, which represents 82.9 per cent. I can assure the Hon. Member that the former Hon. Member for Leeds-Grenville was, in fact, the person who had more questions answered than anyone else. We are continuing to answer those questions standing in his name as I am provided with the answers by the various Ministers.

Mrs. Cossitt: The questions are being answered very slowly, Madam Speaker. It is obvious that the Government only intends to pay lip service to the new freedom of information act.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

HOLDERS OF AIR CANADA PASSES

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Question No. 30, which has been on the Order Paper for over seven years, asks for the names of all those individuals who hold free Air Canada passes. This question still remains unanswered. Is the Minister now prepared to give us a specific date when he will provide the information requested? Or does the Minister not intend to answer that question?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I will try to do better in the future than I have in the past.

THE ECONOMY

LEVEL OF INTEREST RATES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I would like to congratulate him for being so elegantly dressed today in his blue conservative jacket. His recovery is obviously well under way.

A group of Members of Parliament met recently with some Canadian and American Congressmen and Senators. We were told that the Americans were not going to get their deficit down and that all the Congressmen had other priorities, the Democrats with social programs, the Republicans with defence programs, and that there would be no compromise. Therefore the American deficit would continue and we would have upcoming high interest rates. This is a very serious matter for the Canadian economy. Would the Minister tell the House what steps he recommended to Cabinet, or he is prepared to take, to prepare against this eventuality, that is, to make our interest rates independent of American ones? Is he now prepared to bring down Canadian interest rates so that we will have some real sustained recovery as we all want?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will not pass any comment on the blue shirt worn by my colleague, but I will address the more serious aspect of his question.

I should like to remind him that today interest rates on Treasury bills and on Government bonds extending up to seven years are lower than American rates. My hon. friend remembers that over the last two years there were times when Canadian rates were up to 5 per cent and 6 per cent above American rates. We have pursued a very appropriate monetary and fiscal policy. We are seeing the very beneficial effects of that policy at the present time in terms of lower inflation, a high rate of growth, and interest rates that are now even lower than the American ones. All of this is taking place while we enjoy a stable dollar.

I think the policies the Government has followed in the last year and a half have certainly been appropriate for the situation I hope that for the rest of this year and also in 1984 the Canadian people will reap the benefits of all the sacrifices which all of us have been asked to carry in the last year.

MINISTER'S POLICIES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, as a supplementary question let me ask the Minister about the benefits people are reaping. Supposedly we have a recovery, about which the Minister has been crowing in the House of Commons. Would he agree that we have high rates of unemployment, that he has been going around the country attacking consumers because his budget will put a lot of taxes on them later, and that he has been attacking labour, because he is now speaking of wage controls?

I would like to know what are the Minister's policies. Will we face another six and five, say a four and three program? What does the Minister mean when he attacks labour, and wage increases? What will he do to lower the rate of unemployment? We cannot have a recovery if we still have so many unemployed people in the country. This is a profits recovery, not a people recovery.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, my hon. colleague has some very strange information sources. I would remind him that not only were we successful in bringing down inflation to 5.4 per cent this May, compared to last year, but since 1982, we have also managed to create about 330,000 new or additional jobs in Canada. Employment has been rising regularly and consistently during the last six months, and during the last two, we were able to bring the unemployment rate down from 12.8 percent to 12.4 per cent. The unemployment rate is still very high, too high, and we must keep on trying to bring unemployment down. In any case, we shall be successful in doing so if we bring down inflation, which will keep our interest rates at a fairly low level, and our prices competitive on world markets. When I criticized certain wage settlements, one in particular, I was not criticizing the workers or union leaders specifically. I merely said that employers and workers, or rather their union leaders, has not acted responsibly.

I am happy to see that at the present time, collective bargaining agreements are being negotiated in a very responsible manner, since the average wage settlement amounts to about 6.5 per cent in the private sector, if we exclude the construction industry. However, we shall have to try and avoid situations in the construction industry that would touch off another inflationary spiral, which would affect the workers themselves first of all.

Madam Speaker: Order, order!

EMPLOYMENT

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO PROGRAM FOR THE EMPLOYMENT DISADVANTAGED

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration I will direct my question to the Minister of Finance because it involves priority in the allocation of funds to employment programs.

• (1425)

The Government has a program called PED for the employable disadvantaged people. Fundamentally it is a wage subsidy program to subsidize the wages of people who would be otherwise on welfare, or prisoners coming out of prison as they get jobs in the private sector. The Program works providing employment—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if the Hon. Member is conscious that he is describing a Program which all Members know. He should go directly to his question. We do not need that.

Mr. Keeper: I am glad that all Members are aware of the Program. I will get straight to the question. Why is the Government putting this Program in the deep freeze for the summer? The funds are exhausted. Summer is the high point for this Program. Why not put additional funds into it, as this Program is working for the disadvantaged, rather than leaving them out to dry with no money to keep the Program working?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the promotion which he is giving to that Program and, I hope, other Government programs in the area of employment as well. I am glad to see the NDP supporting all of our efforts in the area of employment creation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: Some Members are not supporting our efforts at creating jobs, but at least one NDP Member is reasonable and has the proper appreciation of what is taking place. I want to indicate to the Hon. Member that I appreciate his support for that Program. I will examine, with my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, whether it is true that the funds are exhausted and whether the Program will be able to expand during the course of the summer. I am sure the Minister will want to examine this situation very carefully.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

NEGOTIATIONS WITH CAST SHIPPING GROUP

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It arises out of recent events with respect to Cast, the possible loss of 400 or 500 jobs, and the possibility of the creation of 7,000, 8,000 or 9,000 new jobs in Canada. Has the Minister been briefed by Dr. Maurice LeClair, the President of Canadian National Railways, any of their officials, or any of his officials, with respect to the winding down of the operations of EuroCanadian Shipholding Limited? If so, with respect to those briefings, has he contemplated any further action?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I had the same briefing the Hon. Member received in camera in committee. The gist of it is that there are still disagreements between members of Cast and CN. A number of these were listed to the Hon. Member in committee. My present position is to leave the Order in Council on the table for a short while, until we find out what is going to happen. It may be that the difficulties can be resolved in the future. Some are hopeful, some are not, but I have decided to let the situation develop for a little while.

INQUIRY RESPECTING MINISTER'S ACTIONS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, I hope I do not have to ask a third supplementary. I wish to ask the Minister a very specific question. As a result of any initiative that the Minister or any of his officials may have taken, or as a result of any initiative taken by either the Royal Bank or the Bank of Montreal, did the Minister have meetings today, or will he have meetings later today or tomorrow with that group, with respect to this issue? May I ask a third supplementary, because I realize the afternoon is waning. As a result of any briefings which the Minister may or may not have had, has he had any reason to consult with any of his colleagues in Government with respect to any further investigative action?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the answer is no to the two parts of the question. I have not had a recent report from the President of the CNR and I have not had any discussion with my colleagues on this subject since the Order in Council was passed.

REQUEST FOR ANSWERS TO ORDER PAPER QUESTIONS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, returning to the subject of freedom of information, in view of the Government's commitment yesterday to abide by the spirit of the Access to Information Act, will the Prime Minister promise to provide answers to Order Paper Questions Nos. 2,158, 2,159 and 2,160, standing in the name of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Okanagan North, since February 24, 1981? These important questions deal with Mr. Joel Bell's contractual relationship with Petro-Canada, his participation in the preparation of the National Energy Program with Energy, Mines and Resources officials, and possible serious conflicts of interest on the part of Joel Bell, Mr. Bill Hopper, Senator Jack Austin and other senior Government officials. Will the Prime Minister now give the Canadian people access to the truth of this matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if that is all that the Hon. Member can think of, I will be happy to take notice of the question.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, I presume that means that the Prime Minister is prepared to answer these important questions.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT RELEASE PUBLIC OPINION SURVEY RESULTS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, further to the Government's new informative spirit, will the Prime Minister give his undertaking to release all public opinion surveys conducted at taxpayer's expense since 1980 on such important subjects as the Constitution, the energy policy, and economic issues? Will the results of these costly polls be released on a timely basis, meaning as soon as possible, to Members of Parliament and to all the people of Canada, who paid for them?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Act is coming into effect incessantly and I would think that the Hon. Member would want to use the provisions of the Act.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Incessantly?

Mr. Trudeau: I would ask the Hon. Member to look up the word "incessantly" in the dictionary.

REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF TASK FORCE REPORT ON CANADAIR

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, I would like to commend the Prime Minister for bringing this important legislation, the Access to Information Act, forward at this time. In the spirit of this Act would the Prime Minister now permit his Departments to release the 1981 and 1982 task force report on Canadair prepared by government officials, so that the standing committee can intelligently deal with the future of the Challenger aircraft?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the last two questions have referred to the spirit of the Act. The legislation is there. It says what it says. Why does the Opposition not use the Act to get the documents it is asking for?

Mr. Fennell: Madam Speaker, that speaks well for access to information.

EMOLUMENTS OF CROWN CORPORATION EXECUTIVES AND DIRECTORS

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, I will direct a supplementary question to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the provisions of the Access to Information Act, will the President of the Treasury Board table in the House the salaries of all executives and the remuneration paid to all directors of Crown corporations that are responsible to the Government of Canada?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, that information is in the hands of the responsible Ministers. That is the type of question which, if placed on the Order Paper, generally elicits a complete and fair response. If my hon. friend is so serious about the spirit of the Act, perhaps he could also respect the spirit of the rules of Parliament in that regard.

RACISM

MONTREAL CLUB'S REFUSAL TO ADMIT BLACK CUSTOMERS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. In the past week I have learned of an ugly incident that arose in Montreal when a downtown cocktail lounge, known as Le Club Calgary, refused entry to several black citizens and the owner stated that he would close his doors before admitting any black faces. While the Government has agreed to set up a special committee to deal with racism, can the Secretary of State say whether any immediate action can be taken to deal with this issue to assure just treatment for the black community of Montreal?

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I was appalled when I read in the news the report that the Hon. Member has just mentioned. In a free and civilized society anyone should be able to enter any commercial establishment and not be barred on mere grounds of race, colour, or any other forms of discrimination. It is my strong intention to ensure that the agenda of the next federal-provincial conference on human rights, that is to take place on September 8 and 9 of this year, will include an item on implementation of a human rights act, either provincial or federal, and that that be a topic of discussion and action for all the Ministers who have accepted the invitation to attend the conference.

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT STRATEGY

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who will note that the most intensive independent investigation ever undertaken of Canada's foreign aid program has just been completed by the North-South Institute which today published two reports dealing with Bangladesh and Tanzania. The over-centralization and excessively complex approval procedures of CIDA have been criticized, along with the lack of direction toward clear and practical goals.

Given that the new president of CIDA, Mrs. Margeret Catley-Carlson, has just been appointed, will the Government produce what has been seriously lacking, a comprehensive development strategy for the eighties, so that Canadians can be assured that our aid will proceed in the smoothest way possible to help the poorest people in the least developed countries?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, that very question is under consideration by myself at the present time.

Mr. Roche: Madam Speaker, it certainly has been under consideration by the Secretary of State for External Affairs because the question has been brought up by myself in committee several times. I wonder if the reason for the lack of strategy is that the strategy for 1975 to 1980 was rated by the North-South Institute as a failure on 15 out of 21 points.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, I direct my supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs as well. The two reports in question today put only part of the blame for underdevelopment in Bangladesh and Tanzania on the respective Governments of those two countries for not giving a high enough priority to ensuring that their own people become more productive. How does the Government intend to re-gear Canada's aid program so that it will reduce aid dependency and increase self-reliance in those countries. Since aid is only a small part of the development process, will the Canadian Government now support the calling of an international financial conference to enlarge the facilities of the international financial institutions, which would resolve the debt crisis that is impairing the least developed countries today?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member when he says that international development is a much broader subject than is the question of aid. It applies to many other aspects including the question of debt.

The Hon. Member asked specifically about an international monetary conference. He will have noticed that in the Williamsburg Declaration there is an intention subscribed to, that the Ministers of Finance, in co-operation with the International Monetary Fund, will examine the circumstances under which the holding of an international monetary conference might be feasible. I believe that a very important recognition was made by the Summit leaders that the monetary situation requires constant monitoring.

FISHERIES

ALICE ARM, B.C.—IMPACT OF MINE DUMPING OPERATION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and is in regard to the Amax mining operation at Alice Arm in British Columbia. I am sure that by now, the Minister is in possession of the study made by EVS Consultants of British Columbia, which has determined that 57 per cent of the species and 51 per cent of the individual organisms within five and one half kilometres of the mine's outfall are dead. Since groups representing an absolute majority of Canadians support a full public inquiry into the mining operation, and since the mine is close, will the Minister indicate whether or not he will call a full public inquiry into the subject? Will he comment in the House on the fact that, after dumping less than 5 per cent of the allowed tonnage, over one half of the marine life is gone within five and one half kilometres of the mine's outfall in one of the best fishing grounds in Canada?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, a scientific committee has studied the question and I do not think that the assertions made by the Hon. Member reflect all of the facts.

LAND DISPOSAL OF MINE TAILINGS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Mines. I am sure the Minister must be aware of the fact that a federal Government study has determined that safe on land tailings could be constructed at the Amax Kitsault operation for about a 2 per cent difference on return on investment to Amax Corporation. Since there are still workers at the closed mine site, would the Minister undertake to make use of Section 38 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, as she has for other closed mine sites, and any other measures that Cabinet might propose at this time, to ensure that safe on land tailing ponds are constructed during this period while the mine is closed? Studies that have been provided to the Government indicate that over half of the life in the first five kilometres of the inlet is dead.

• (1440)

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I should like to inform the Hon. Member that we are looking at job-creation proposals from Amax using Section 38. The 2 per cent which the Hon. Member referred to, however, translates to $23 million. Given the current situation and the cash flow problems of the company, $23 million is a fair amount of money. In addition, I should like to point out that all environmental studies indicate that the procedure being used now is a safe procedure.

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO IMPROVE ECONOMY

Mrs. Éva Côté (Rimouski-Témiscouata): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of Finance, and with your permission, I would like to get back to the economic situation in Canada. According to the statistics, the present inflation rate is 5.4 per cent, the lowest in 10 years, and unemployment is dropping as well. It would therefore seem that the Hon. Minister of Finance made the right decision at the right time, and he is to be congratulated. However, I would like to know whether the Minister believes the economic situation will continue to improve and if so, what does he recommend Canadians should do to achieve this?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the results achieved by the Canadian economy in recent months are due to joint action taken by all levels of government in Canada and all citizens who supported the 6 and 5 program. To answer the Hon. Member's question very briefly, I think it is extremely important that we should continue to act in the same spirit of solidarity and self-discipline with respect to the demands we make on the economy, both in terms of prices and wages. I am convinced that after the experience of this past year, all Canadians will be in favour of strongly supporting the policy that has been the Government's during that time.

INDUSTRY

NEWMAC MANUFACTURING INCORPORATED—REQUEST FOR LOAN GUARANTEE

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Madam Speaker, I have but one question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and he has had previous notice of it. It concerns Newmac Manufacturing Incorporated which has plants in Nova Scotia and Ontario. The company has a dire need for an immediate loan guarantee. I am sure that Minister is aware of the viability of the company. In the last seven years of operation it has had six years of profit, and has forecast sales for this year of over $8 million, $2 million of which are for export. At the moment $1.5 million worth of orders are waiting to be fabricated and sold by the end of July.

Could the Minister indicate if he is prepared to assist this company with a loan guarantee? If he cannot give immediate approval, would his officials be willing to meet with company officials in Ottawa in the immediate future?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, my officials have already met with officials of the company this week. As the Hon. Member knows, the Government of Canada through the FBDB already has substantial financial exposure with the company to date. It is highly unlikely that we will be able to give financial assistance in the short time frame that the Hon. Member requests.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENTS TO CURB STREET PROSTITUTION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. At three o'clock this afternoon the Minister will table what are called the proposed amendments to the Criminal Code relating to obscenity, and soliciting for the purposes of prostitution. The mayors of various cities and municipalities across the country have been calling for a considerable period of time for some firm action to overcome the "pressing and persistent" requirement imposed by the Supreme Court of Canada on the provision that covers soliciting for the purposes of prostitution.

Will the proposed amendments that the Minister will table be sufficient to deal with the complaints that have been received by citizens across the country, particularly those represented by the mayors and municipalities?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, it is a little difficult to discuss this in advance of the tabling of the document to which the Hon. Member refers and of which I have given him advance notice. I think I can say that it is because I am not satisfied that the amendments I will propose in either of the areas of pornography or prostitution are in themselves sufficient, that I will also announce an additional step later this afternoon. I will certainly keep the Hon. Member informed of that.

DELAY IN ENACTING AMENDMENTS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, the matter of soliciting for the purposes of prostitution has been before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for 18 months. That Committee issued a report with very specific recommendations about amendments to the Criminal Code designed to deal with the problem presented to the Government by the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Why is the Minister delaying further any action with respect to the Criminal Code, having regard to the fact that through the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs the House has spoken very clearly and has made specific recommendations which should be taken to heart by the Minister, since they were supported by Members of his own Party?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, again it is very difficult to debate this before the documents are presented. The Hon. Member quite correctly refers to the report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. It was not unanimous support, however, Madam Speaker; three of the four women on the Committee dissented from that report. I think that is an indication of the lack of consensus that exists in Parliament and in the country on this issue. I would be very happy to discuss this more fully after the documents are in the public domain.

SUGGESTED ROLE FOR JOINT COMMITTEE ON STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board which becomes relevant because of the proclamation on July 1 of the Bill with respect to information and privacy. For some time there has been concern in the House about which Committee the Bill would be directed to. I have made suggestions, as has the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe, that the Government might consider the Joint Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments as the appropriate Committee through which the Bill would report to Parliament. I know that the Minister has been consulting with the Minister of Justice on the matter. Has a decision been made with respect to this?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I have been consulting with my colleague, the Government House Leader. There has not been a decision as yet. I note the suggestion made by my hon. friend, but another possibility is the Justice Committee. I will endeavour to have a decision available and communicated to my hon. friend as soon as possible.

STAFFING OF COMMISSIONERS' OFFICES

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have one other question with respect to the Act. So that Parliament may know the depth of the commitment of the Government in terms of man years and other assets that are important to the two Commissioners, would the President of the Treasury Board table a list of the particular public servants who are to be employed specifically in the offices of the two Commissioners who are reporting under that Act, as soon as possible. Could it include the man years that are to be allowed for the two Commissioners and whether those man years will be increased as time goes on? Could it contain, particularly, the initial man years so that Parliament may know the commitment of the Government to the two new Commissioners.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I can go beyond what my hon. friend is requesting and provide the information right now. We will be proposing to Parliament, in a supplementary estimate to be presented in the fall, an interim level of 46 person years and a budget of $2.8 million for these offices. We are willing to consider proposing to Parliament higher resource levels for future years when there has been some experience with the work load. We hope the House will support the supplementary estimates to cover these resources which we are asking for on an interim basis.

FINANCE

TAXATION OF NORTHERN BENEFITS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Is the Minister now prepared to change the plan announced last November to tax certain northern benefits which had not been previously taxed?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker.

STATEMENT MADE BY MEMBER FOR NUNATSIAQ

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): That being the case, Madam Speaker, may I ask if the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq was in error on April 13 when he said that the Minister of Finance promised to deal with the taxation issue once the budget debate was concluded?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq has been very active on this issue. He has done an excellent job and has been very devoted to the interests of his voters. In meetings that I had with him and some of his constituents I indicated that I would be ready to review the situation. As I indicated in my previous answer to the Hon. Member when he asked me if I was ready to announce anything, the answer is no.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CHILE—INQUIRY RESPECTING CANADIAN AID

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As he is no doubt aware, Chile is on the eve of a general strike led by copper workers, bus drivers and taxi drivers, who are heading up a wide, disciplined, non-violent coalition of Chileans demanding restoration of the democracy that Chile maintained for several decades before Pinochet's coup in 1973. Pinochet's dictatorship has responded with increased government violence, beatings, killings, kidnappings and jailing of union leaders.

In light of this grave unrest, fueled by 21 per cent inflation, almost 30 per cent unemployment, and the bankruptcy of several banks and mutual credit funds, will the Minister explain to this House why Canada recently chose to assist in the sale of oil to the Pinochet regime, and why Canada chose to renew the Export Development Corporation's line of credit to a Government apparently collapsing because of its brutality to its own people?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I gather the Hon. Member is raising in a general way the relationship we should draw between forms of economic assistance and collaboration with countries which have a record of less than full respect for human rights. The Hon. Member knows this is a rather complex question but it was fully addressed with respect to Central America by the sub-committee of the Standing Committee on External Affairs. I found their conclusions reasonably acceptable, namely, that in all cases it would be wrong to deny economic collaboration or assistance to a country because of human rights violations. Certainly where the violations are so gross that it is impossible to implement appropriate programs to assist people, then that ought to be a conclusive factor.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

MOVEMENT OF DIVISIONAL HEADQUARTERS FROM VICTORIA, B.C.—PLIGHT OF FORMER EMPLOYEES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. When RCMP divisional headquarters was moved from Victoria last year the Minister said the negative impact would be minimal since employees would be given top priority for other federal jobs in the Victoria area. But top priority has not helped many of these employees, especially in the CR-4 and CR-5 categories. Other Departments have sloughed them off as being unsuitable or untrainable. They face permanent unemployment because Government Departments refuse to recognize the priority system.

Is the Minister aware that the system of priority placements is not working for these employees? Will he personally look into the Victoria situation and make representations to the Public Service Commission to ensure that other Government Departments give proper priority to former RCMP employees?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, first of all I would like to assure the Hon. Member, and through him the people of British Columbia, that the move of the regional headquarters from Victoria to Vancouver has been an excellent one from the point of view of effective law enforcement, which has been considerably enhanced in British Columbia by the rationalization involved in that move. As I indicated at the time, those members who wanted to remain in Victoria, and civilian staff who did not want to move to Vancouver, would be given priority for alternate federal employment in the Victoria region. I will certainly look into the allegations of the Hon. Member and try to ensure that priority is being respected by other Government Departments.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT COMMEMORATIVE MEDAL BE STRUCK TO HONOUR DIEPPE VETERANS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. The battle of Dieppe in 1942 undoubtedly saved countless lives in the D-Day invasion two years later. Six thousand soldiers and eight RCAF squadrons participated at Dieppe. Given the fact that there were more than 3,000 casualties, including 907 Canadians killed and 1,946 taken as prisoners of war, I am wondering when the Government of Canada is going to strike a medal, or at least a ribbon, for these courageous Canadians.

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, traditionally medals are struck to commemorate participation in campaigns, not usually for participation in specific battles. It is for this reason a medal was not struck for Dieppe.

TRANSPORT

STUDY OF ATLANTIC FREIGHT RATE SUBSIDIES—PRESENTATION OF REGION'S INDUSTRIAL CAPABILITY

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of Transport. Since the freight assistance program is considered to be essential to the maintenance and development of the regional economy in Atlantic Canada, and the removal of the present subsidy could result in rate increases of as much as 50 per cent, what steps does the Minister plan to take to preserve Atlantic Canada's industrial capability?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have answered this question a number of times. The first point I made was that we are having a study done now. Similar studies were done in the past of the 1927 Maritime Freight Rate Assistance Program. The decision is not made; we just want to know what purpose these subsidies accomplish now. In knowledge there must be some value.

The second point is that I have read articles from the Maritimes, some of them by prestigious organizations, to the effect that these subsidies do not play the role they possibly used to play in the past in the Maritimes. Third, in recent years I have developed what I call the Maritime envelope under which, when the federal Government makes savings in the Maritimes on subsidies, we put them in that envelope and use them for other transportation purposes. I think that makes sense, does it not?

REQUEST THAT PROGRAM BE RETAINED

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, surely the Minister is aware that the four Premiers of the Atlantic Provinces have endorsed the present program, and any changes will result in the curtailment of markets, lost income, and reduced employment opportunities. Therefore, will the Minister encourage the retention of the freight assistance program which all Governments in Atlantic Canada have indicated is essential to the maintenance and development of Atlantic Canada's regional economy?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend is a very experienced politician. Would he not be surprised if the provincial politicians in the Maritimes did not endorse a federal subsidy in the Maritimes? Would he not be surprised? I would be very surprised.

We have a federal-provincial memorandum of understanding, under which both they and we are committed to the kind of study we are making now. It seems to me all of that makes sense. Anyway, the decision will not be taken in camera, it will be an open one following discussions with the interested parties. At the moment the consultant is consulting with some of them, and federal and provincial officials will be in communication with different groups, too. So, the decision will be a public one, not secretive.

HEALTH CARE

INQUIRY RESPECTING SERVICES TO BE PROVIDED UNDER PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can she share with the House any plans she has for the new Canada Health Act which would affect the issue of comprehensiveness? Specifically, in the new Canada Health Act will there be an expansion of services to include groups such as nurses, physiotherapists, psychologists and so on?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, in May of last year, at the annual meeting, certain proposals were made to the provincial Ministers regarding the entrenchment in the new Canada Health Act of basic health services that now exist in all ten provinces, so that once and for all, all Canadians will know that they are entitled to certain essential services throughout the country. As far as I know, there have not yet been any positive reactions. Some provinces are wondering whether or not it would be risky to do so, and all this will be discussed again when I show them the new Bill as soon as it is ready.

Madam Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that an objection signed by the Hon. If the House agrees, I would suggest we follow past practice and print the text of the objection as an appendix to this day's Votes and Proceedings. Is that agreed?

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF NOTICE

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 64(1), I wish to table, in both official languages, a Notice of Ways and Means Motion with respect to the interpretation of Canada's international conventions relating to income tax and the Acts implementing such conventions.

Tabling of Documents

CRIMINAL CODE

TABLING OF DRAFT BILL RESPECTING OBSCENITY AND SOLICITATION

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to table a draft Bill to amend the Criminal Code concerning the subjects of obscenity and solicitation. I will be making a further statement later outside the House, Madam Speaker, on these subjects.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Point of order!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Point of order!

Madam Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West on a point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to this most unusual, unprecedented practice on the part of the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan), by which he stands in his place and tables a document which is not legislative in nature but, rather, a paper which is referred to as being a proposed Bill to amend the Criminal Code. This impinges upon the rights and privileges of Members of the House of Commons inasmuch as the Minister is tabling a document on which we have no opportunity to comment or question but, rather, he runs across the street to the Press club theatre to make a statement, outside of the House of Commons.

My point of order is simply this. When the Minister stands up and abuses the privileges as a Minister by tabling a document which is not parliamentary, not legislative, and prevents us from making any comment or observations in the House of Commons, I say that my privileges and those of all my colleagues are thereby diminished. I say that this document should not be allowed to be tabled unless it is legislative in nature or unless he makes a statement on motions, a statement with respect to the document tabled, so that we may have an opportunity to question him with respect to his intention in Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is absolutely ridiculous. We have tabled many draft bills in the past. This is one other example. We did it with the Income Tax Act and we did it with the energy legislation. We are now doing it again. We are informing Parliament with courtesy. The Hon. Member is complaining. He is totally ridiculous and should go back to the small claims court.

Madam Speaker: On this particular point of order, the Hon. Member knows, of course, that the Chair has no means at her disposal to force a Minister to make a statement in the House. Ministers of the Crown may choose the manner in which to inform the population or Members of Parliament of their different moods. I am afraid that I cannot recognize this as being a point of order.

PETITIONS

MR. MITGES—NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I wish to present a petition signed by 179 residents of the City of Owen Sound and surrounding areas of the riding of Grey-Simcoe in the Province of Ontario who support the goal of general disarmament and urge the federal Government to negotiate and implement with other Governments all steps that would lead to bilateral agreement to halt the testing, production and development of all nuclear weapons systems.

MR. TAYLOR—CLIFFORD ROBERT OLSON

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I take great pleasure in presenting a petition on behalf of another 432 residents of Canada asking for early consideration of Bill C-671 and the early execution of Clifford Robert Olson. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. SARGEANT—BROADCASTING REGULATIONS

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and privilege of presenting a petition signed by a number of residents of the Province of Manitoba and one person from the Province of British Columbia who are concerned about the proliferation of so-called adult programming on pay television and of pornography in various media. They call upon this Parliament to demonstrate its opposition to the denigration of women by enacting an Act to amend the Broadcasting Act, as introduced by the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) on March 8, 1983.

MR. BENJAMIN—RETENTION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and duty to submit two petitions containing some 66 names of residents of Saskatchewan from places like Mankota, McCord, Fir Mountain, Glentworth, Meyronne and Laflèche, in which they petition Parliament assembled to maintain that western farmers will pay one times the Crow rate, since the amount that grain producers now pay to ship grain is their fair share of the cost.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate.

MR. PARKER—SALARIES OF STAFF OF M.P.s

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition. The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada, who now exercise their right to present a grievance, humbly sheweth that the salary budget for staff of Members of Parliament is frozen until August 3, 1984, under the six and five program, that M.P.s were not informed of the freeze until well into the first year of the program and that, as a result, the staffs of most M.P.s will not receive any salary increases during 1983 and most of 1984.

Wherefore the undersigned, your present petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to increase salaries of the staffs of Members of Parliament so that these employees are able to meet the financial arrangements they entered into based on salary increases M.P.s and staff were led to expect. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

DIEFENBAKER BILL OF RIGHTS NOT DISPLAYED

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I am not entirely sure whether to raise this matter or to seek your good advice, but as the House of Commons is totally under your jurisdiction, let me say that I have received a number of visitors to the House of Commons in the past two weeks and these people, who have been from western Canada, have expressed disappointment that the Diefenbaker Bill of Rights in both official languages is not displayed for view in the Hall of Honour. Would Madam Speaker perhaps consider having some attention given to this oversight?

Madam Speaker: The matter of the display in the Hall of Honour is not entirely under my jurisdiction. I simply agreed to allow the displays to be made. I believe it is the responsibility of the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) or another Minister of the Cabinet, but it is not my responsibility.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ADMINISTRATION OF COLLECTIVE AGREEMENTS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-688, an Act to Amend the Canada Labour Code (collective agreements).

He said: Madam Speaker, the explanatory note of the Bill states that this amendment to the Canada Labour Code would ensure that the administration of a collective agreement would not have a discriminatory or detrimental effect on the employees covered by that agreement in comparison to other employees not covered by the agreement.

The main reason for the Bill is that Crown corporations have a double standard in negotiating early retirement benefits. They are giving handsome settlements to some groups, but not to others.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CNR—NAKINA, ONTARIO TERMINAL

Question No. 4,722—Mr. Penner:

What are the total itemized savings and/or costs to be incurred by the Canadian National Railways, should it cease to use the Nakina, Ontario terminal for crew changes?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

An estimated annual savings of $1.2 million to CN should be realized through the avoidance of terminal time and terminal overlap time at Nakina, held-away payments at Nakina, non-operating employees costs, administration costs, such as those related to medical and uniform code of operating rule examinations, brake-shoe and wheel wear, fuel consumption, equipment delays, and building operation and maintenance.

The costs to be incurred by CN will not be known until the employee benefit and relocation agreement has been negotiated with the unions involved.

CNR—REHABILITATION PROGRAM IN WESTERN CANADA

Question No. 4,806—Mr. Murta:

Is the Canadian National Railways undertaking a rehabilitation program for the summer months in western Canada in 1983 and, if so (a) how many persons will be hired from each Province (b) will the majority of employees hired be residents of western Canada?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

Yes. (a) and (b) Based on initial hiring, personnel to be employed on Canadian National's Grain Line Rehabilitation Program in 1983 will originate from the various Provinces as follows:

Alberta	20
Saskatchewan	220
Manitoba	94
Ontario	9
Quebec	12
Nova Scotia	1

This represents initial employees hired as of May 16 and does not account for possible replacements to be taken on later in the year.

All hirings are seasonal for approximately a six month period, except for 20 full-time positions which are included in the above totals; 19 of the employees holding these positions originate from Saskatchewan and one originates from Manitoba.

CANADA-MANITOBA DROUGHT STUDIES ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Question No. 4,878—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is there a Canada/Manitoba Drought Studies Advisory Committee and, if so (a) who are the members (b) what is the (i) background or expertise (ii) term of appointment of each member (c) what remuneration, such as salary or travel expenses, do the members receive and, for the length of each appointment to date, what amount did each member receive (d) what other funding, if any, is provided by the Government?

2. (a) What are the terms of reference of the Committee (b) what matters did it consider in the fiscal year 1982-83 (c) how often did it meet and how often is it required to meet (d) what reports and/or recommendations did the Committee publish in the fiscal year 1982-83?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Yes, a Drought Proofing Studies Advisory Committee has been established under Program 1 of the Canada-Manitoba Interim Subsidiary Agreement on Water Development for Regional Economic Expansion and Drought Proofing.

(a) and (b) (i) The members are:

Dr. J. C. Gilson, Professor, Department of Agricultural Economics, University of Manitoba, Winnipeg.

Dr. R. McGinnis, Dean, Faculty of Agriculture, University of Manitoba, Winnipeg.

Dr. G. Laliberte, Head, Department of Agricultural Engineering, University of Manitoba, Winnipeg.

Professor C. Booy, Department of Civil Engineering, University of Manitoba, Winnipeg.

Dr. H. Schellenberg, at time of appointment, Resource Economist, Manitoba Department of Natural Resources; presently, Agricultural Resource Economist, Manitoba Department of Agriculture, Winnipeg.

Mr. E. Somers, at time of appointment, Development Officer, Canada Department of Regional Economic Expansion; presently, Manager, Program Implementation, Canada Department of Agriculture, Winnipeg.

Mr. J. Wiens, Acting Director of Agriculture and Food Development, Canada Department of Agriculture, Winnipeg.

Mr. D. Davis, Director, Inland Waters Directorate, Environment Canada, Regina.

Mr. D. J. Berry, Chief, Planning Services, PFRA, Regina.

Mr. M. Wallace, Senior Development Officer, Manitoba Department of Economic Development and Tourism, Winnipeg.

Mr. E. Bossenmaier, Director, Resource Allocation, Manitoba Department of Natural Resources, Winnipeg.

Mr. G. C. Jenkins, Chief, Land and Water Section, Manitoba Department of Agriculture, Winnipeg; replaced Mr. R. Filteau, who retired in 1981.

Mr. D. N. Potter, Financial Analyst, Manitoba Department of Finance, Winnipeg.

Mr. E. A. Poyser, at time of appointment, Manager, Development and Analysis, Canada Department of Regional Economic Expansion; presently, Project Co-ordinator for the Drought Proofing Studies, Department of Agricultural Economics, University of Manitoba, Winnipeg.

Mr. N. Mudry, Agreement Provincial Co-Manager, Chief of Water Management, Manitoba Department of Natural Resources, Winnipeg.

Mr. G. H. MacKay, Agreement Federal Co-Manager, Director, Manitoba Affairs, PFRA, Winnipeg.

(b) (ii) The Committee members have all been appointed for the duration of the Program 1 studies.

(c) The Committee members do not receive any remuneration for serving on the Advisory Committee. Where applicable, travel expenses for government employees have been provided by various departments. Non-government Committee members have not incurred travel expenses because all meetings to date have been held at the University of Manitoba.

(d) Other than employee time and travel costs (when applicable) there are no governmental expenditures (federal or provincial) being made for the Drought Proofing Studies Advisory Committee per se.

2. (a) The Drought Proofing Studies Advisory Committee is responsible for: ensuring that issues of concern of those knowledgeable of drought and its effects are presented to the Contractor (Department of Agricultural Economics, University of Manitoba)* and the Management Group; advising the contractor on the consistency of his analysis with actual experience; suggesting how the results can be presented in a way that provides the greatest amount of useable information to potential users; and advising the Management Group on technical aspects of the study.

(b), (c) and (d) There is no fixed schedule for Advisory Committee meetings. These may be requested at any time by either the Contractor or the Management Group.

During the fiscal year 1982-83, the Advisory Committee met twice. Its activities focused primarily on formulating a number of development and drought mitigating scenarios which the econometric models should be capable of analysing. These scenarios were forwarded to the Management Group and were accepted. The Advisory Committee also reviewed the Contractor's progress and found it acceptable. This was reported to the Management Group by the Agreement Co-Managers. Other than the above noted listing of scenarios and their components, the Advisory Committee did not publish any material in 1982-83.

* The Department of Agricultural Economics, University of Manitoba, has been retained under the Canada-Manitoba Agreement to develop and test a series of econometric models which will be used to analyse the impact of drought on Manitoba's economy under existing conditions, and, under various development and drought mitigating scenarios.

 A Management Group composed of senior federal and provincial officials has been charged with overseeing the implementation of the Agreement. The Federal Co-Chairman is Dr. H. M. Hill, Director General, PFRA, and the Provincial Co-Chairman is Mr. T. E. Weber, Director, Manitoba Water Resources Branch, Manitoba Department of Natural Resources.

SOUTH KOREA—IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

Question No. 4,900—Mr. Heap:

Does South Korea prohibit the importation of footwear or clothing from Canada?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Imports of footwear and clothing into Korea from all countries, including Canada, are not absolutely prohibited. In the case of footwear, imports are not restricted, i.e. import licences are automatically approved, but the general tariff is 50 per cent. One exception is women's dress shoes, which, though granted automatic import licence approval, are under surveillance. However, it is likely that this item will receive full automatic approval status this year.

In the case of clothing, of a total 217 tariff items, 142 items are restricted under the Annual Trade Plan and a further 34 under other Special Laws. The remaining 41 items or 18.9 per cent are automatically issued import licences. In addition, the general tariff rate on all clothing is 50 per cent.

[English]

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

[English]

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary about two questions that I have had on the Order Paper for quite some time. One question goes back to November 18, 1981. I have raised this point about six or seven times in the House. I have asked the Parliamentary Secretary to obtain some kind of answer from the Minister of Transport as to why he will not answer my question asking if the Minister of Supply and Services, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development took a JetStar flight to Winnipeg for the official opening of the General Aluminum Forgings Incorporated on October 30, 1981, and, if so, in each case, other than the Minister and the aircraft crew, who was on the flight.

It is my understanding that they were transporting Grit workers to Manitoba to work in the provincial election there. In view of all this grand ballyhoo we have heard today about freedom of information, I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to inform me what kind of an answer he has received from the Minister of Transport.

I also have an inquiry about question No. 4,175 which I have had on the Order Paper since March 24, 1982. This is an extremely important question. The Government and a number of Government departments have hiring teams going into universities in Ontario and Quebec to hire one nationality for jobs in the Government. I would like to know if these hiring teams are going into any other Provinces. I am particularly interested in my own Province. Are they going into universities there to hire people for jobs in the Government? I understand that some of the departments have provided the information to whomever is responsible for giving answers here in the House. I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to explain why he cannot provide this information to me and the Canadian people about this discriminatory policy of the Government.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that when I receive a reply from a Minister I then table it. I believe it is safe for him to assume that if I have not tabled an answer to either of those two questions it is because I have not yet received replies from the respective Ministers.

I would also like to assure him and other Hon. Members that each time a Member rises in the House, as he has just done, to ask me to make inquiries as to the progress of the preparation of an answer to a question on the Order Paper, I do in fact make those inquiries. He can assume that I have made further inquiries but I have not to date received an answer.

One course of action that is, of course, open to him is the one that the Hon. Member for Leeds-Grenville took today. If he wishes to put a question to the Minister of Transport directly in the House during Question Period, that option is open to him.

All I can do is convey his concerns and the concerns of other Hon. Members to the Ministers and once I receive the reply from them I table it. He can safely assume that if I have not tabled a reply it is because I have not received it.

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, I would like to invite you and the Parliamentary Secretary to join me in celebrating the second birthday of question No. 2,672 which was put on the Order Paper on June 23, 1981. The question is a simple one which asks about the Government's public opinion surveying since the 1980 election. The Parliamentary Secretary said that in any instance when a Member of Parliament asks why his question has not been answered he makes inquiries. I have raised this matter on at least two separate occasions.

Can the Parliamentary Secretary tell us why his track record is so poor in getting decent responses to these inquiries that he is making? What is the point of putting questions on the Order Paper in the first place if they are not answered? What is the point of our raising them with him if his inquiries go nowhere?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I have answered 82.9 per cent of all the questions placed on the Order Paper in this session. I do not think anyone is batting over .350 in the American or National Leagues. If he wants to talk about batting averages 82.9 per cent is not bad.

The answer which I gave to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine is the one that applies here. When a question is raised with me in the House, I raise it with the Minister. I cannot put that Minister on the rack and extract an answer from him.

Some Hon. Members: Why not?

Mr. Smith: Because I have no authority to do that. I do convey the concerns of Hon. Members and I do relay the answers once I have received them. Of course, I will be delighted and honoured to convey once again the concerns of the Hon. Member to the Minister in question with regard to this matter.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Beatty: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, according to my Order Paper for today, dated Thursday, June 23, 1983, the next item of business after Questions on the Order Paper is Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers. I noticed that they were not called. I wonder if you will be calling that item because I have another point to raise with regard to Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have been advised by one of the Table officers that apparently the Notice of Motion for Production of Papers to which the Hon. Member refers was called yesterday.

Mr. Beatty: It is on the Order Paper for today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Obviously I am not informed on the subject. I am relying on the information that is being given to me at the moment.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, you are quite correct. Notice of Motions for the Production of Papers was in fact called yesterday. There may be some legitimate confusion as a result of the fact that we switched the normal business for Wednesday to Thursday.

In the event that it were to be called, I would have been asking that all Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, today's Order Paper does list it, and while we are on the subject, could the Parliamentary Secretary tell the House why yesterday or today he has not responded to Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers No. 73, standing in my name since December 2, 1981, asking that an order of this House do issue for a copy of the results of each public opinion survey commissioned by the Government since the 1980 general election? If he cannot get answers from the Ministers with regard to questions on the Order Paper, how is he doing with Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers? When will I get an answer to that?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the same principle applies. If I can be of assistance to the Hon. Member, in the event that he is unhappy about the fact that the Minister concerned may not be forthcoming, he can request that the matter be transferred for debate. He could then have the matter debated. In fact, I think there is a shortage of matters on the list for debate under Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers. That is one course of action that is available to him.

Mr. Beatty: Transfer for debate.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE NAME OF ACT

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East) moved that Bill C-663, to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am indeed pleased to be able to proceed this afternoon with my Private Members' Bill. It is a rather simple Bill and I hope the House will give it expeditious approval.

In summary, Bill C-663 seeks to amend the Old Age Security Act and to change the title of that Act to read the "Senior Citizens Benefit Act". The reason I am proposing this elimination of the words "old age" is that they do imply that at age 65 a person is no longer capable of leading a productive life or making a valuable contribution to society.

• (1520)

The reason I bring this matter before the House today stems from the fact that the constituency which I represent in Metropolitan Toronto has, I believe, the highest number of senior citizens of any constituency in that area, and has probably one of the highest numbers in the country. I am sure, along with places such as Victoria, the area of York East, comprising the Borough of East York and the "old town" of Don Mills, as we call it, has one of the highest numbers of senior citizens in the country.

Tomorrow on my birthday I will become a certain age. I do not believe that the passage of time has diminished my effectiveness just because I turned a certain age. And I am sure that just because someone reaches the age of 65, their ability or effectiveness is not diminished. In my constituency, Mr. Speaker, we have a large number of senior citizen groups who perform a range of community activities and tasks. This group meets almost incessantly, whether for a legitimate community activity such as the raising of funds for worthy projects, to work on handicrafts, or for lawn bowling, to play euchre or bridge and participate in other forms of recreation. Indeed, up until recently many members of the Borough of East York Council were people approaching or over the age of 65, although that has changed somewhat in the last few years. In my constituency, however, senior citizens continue to take a leading role through church and community organizations.

As we know, Mr. Speaker, the population of senior citizens is rapidly increasing due to a number of factors, not the least of which is that married couples today are choosing to have fewer children. With medical advances, we have noted that the life expectancy for Canadians has increased dramatically over the last few years. I do not have the actual figures but I believe the life expectancy for a man in this country is about 70 years and for a women it is about 75 years. As we come out of the current recession and embark on a new era of economic growth based on high technology industries in which Canada has a leading edge, it is my submission, Mr. Speaker, that, notwithstanding all the gloomy forecasts which one reads in the press, there will indeed be a labour shortage as the years go by.

One way, of course, to deal with that, as Canada has dealt with it traditionally, is through immigration. However, there is a debate as to whether or not Canada should be taking skilled people from the underdeveloped countries. Perhaps these people should be staying in their own countries to develop the economies there. Of course, we can take large numbers of unskilled workers, and we have done that I am happy to say over the years. However, it seems to me that with new opportunities for growth and labour shortage demands, especially in skilled trades, it would be worth while if we encouraged the private sector, certainly the Public Service, to keep people on the job past the age of 65.

If the medical advances which I have cited are correct, then it stands to reason that people are just as agile at the age of 69 as they were at the age of 65. I note, for example, our colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who has toiled many years in the House, is over the age of 65. He has made and continues to make a very effective contribution to the House of Commons. He has certainly set an example for those of us who are many years his junior.

The former Member for Spadina in the 1940s and 1950s, now in the Senate, Senator David Croll, is one of those life senators who at the age of 83 still comes to the caucus every Wednesday. In fact, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail), will testify, Senator Croll made a very lucid intervention this week at our national Liberal caucus. He is a gentleman who undertakes speaking engagements at the age of 83 and chaired an all-party Senate committee a few years ago at which time he issued a very laudable and worth-while report entitled "Retirement Without Tears". If one opens that report one finds a quotation from Psalms 71:9, and I quote:

> Cast me not off in the time of old age; forsake me not when my strength faileth.

One of the recommendations in his report is that the mandatory retirement age be abolished. It has been contended by a number of people—and I would lean towards this interpretation myself—that with the recent enactment and entrenchment of the Charter of Rights, a mandatory retirement age provision of 65 may be proven to be unconstitutional.

I have been rather active in the last year or so in fighting the post office on behalf of one of its employees. I have many constituents in my riding who work at the central postal facility. This gentleman, who was doing a manual job and performing it very well, had no performance problems and a good work record, had to retire at the age of 65 when he was clearly capable of carrying on his particular tasks. We fought that case through the Canadian Human Rights Commission and we received a "stay of execution" for this particular gentleman. However, he was forced to retire this year at the age of 66. Post office officials admit that there was no appreciable difference in his performance at the age of 66 from what it was the day before his sixty-fifth birthday.

Obviously, we cannot make a carte blanche statement that all persons over the age of 65 are of sound mind and body and that they can perform the tasks of younger people. Equally, however, we cannot say that people who have reached the age of 60 years can do the same kind of work. In my submission, a retirement age of 65 is completely and utterly arbitrary and should be changed. In fact, one of the recommendations of Senator Croll's committee was, of course, to abolish this mandatory age for retirement. One of the arguments which was used is quoted on page 51 of the report:

> Finally, the increasing burden of the older dependent population should be reduced by the elimination of mandatory retirement at age 65. The new environment which is envisaged for the mid-1980s on—with demand for labour high and age discrimination abolished—should result in the increased participation of older workers in the labour force. As a result of this increased participation, more goods and services will be produced to support those of the older population who are not working.

The report then goes on to state its conclusions. Put quite simply, Mr. Speaker—and this is as a result of representations I have received from a number of my constituents—it is felt that the words "old age" are somewhat derogatory. Really, when one thinks of old age, one thinks in Keynesian terms. I feel that when one uses the term "old age this" and "old age that", it really conjures un memories of the workhouses, the alms houses, and of another era which is long gone. Today, as we see in our own House of Commons, in the Senate and through our society, because of medical advances and improved social conditions, people are living longer, making more productive use of their lives and their skills, and certainly should be utilized by society.

This change, if enacted, will not cost the Government anything; it can be done simply by a stroke of the pen. I have been led to believe that the Government has some reservations about making this change on the argument that the whole pension system is being studied by a committee of this House. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the enactment of this change, as I have proposed, will in no way undermine that particular study now being conducted by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith).

In conclusion, I take great pleasure in bringing this Bill forward. I am sure by the rapt attention I have received from Hon. Members that they are of one mind and will allow the Bill to go to committee. Hence we will have rapid passage and end this blatant discrimination, in a sense semantic discrimination, in one of our statutes. Henceforth when someone receives one's pension at the appropriate time in the month, one will not be receiving an old age pension; one will be receiving a senior citizen's benefit.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised that this particular issue was raised by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Collenette) because of his well known concern not just for senior citizens but for people. This has been very evident throughout his career as a Member of Parliament. I am sure that when he went through the legislation and saw something which struck a negative cord in his mind about the meaning or the semantic implication of words such as "old age", it was only a short time thereafter that he saw fit to draft a Bill and fortunately got it on the list for discussion today.

When we are considering this kind of Bill in Private Members' Hour, we are provided with an opportunity to be reminded of the need for additional help to senior citizens. All too often there is a tendency to think that we have done about all we could possibly do and that there is no crying need out there for anything other than possibly more money. Innovative governments have indicated areas where senior citizens have fallen short financially either because pensions were not in existence during the 1930s and 1940s or because their pensions were so small or not indexed that inflation has eaten away at them to the point where they must go out and seek employment, despite the fact that they cannot draw unemployment insurance and are not protected under provincial workmen's compensation plans. Out of sheer necessity such senior citizens have had to go out to work.

Governments of various political stripes have seen fit to get together and provide benefits, such as senior citizens not having to pay OHIP premiums. In other areas assistance is given in the form of cheaper hair cuts, free bus rides and things of that nature. At the federal Government level low rental housing units have been provided for senior citizens. It is hard to imagine that prior to 1968 some initiative had not been taken in this particular way because it has been such a successful program and has met a particular need of senior citizens.

A Bill such as this one reminds us of the fact that we must constantly look for the opportunity to come up with ways and means for Canadian taxpayers to help the people who made the country what it is today, the people who gave of their time, their effort and their skills to see to it that Canada became one of the great nations of the world. I would remind people who have a tendency to knock this country that when I held a portfolio in Immigration, in those particular days and even now somewhere between 700,000 and 900,000 people per year applied to come to Canada because they saw it as a great and wonderful place in which to live and, more important, where they would receive decent treatment. We have often heard that a country is judged by the way it treats its senior citizens or people in need. Senior citizens are the people who gave the image and character that we know as Canada today.

I was a little surprised when I heard a stage whisper across the way that this was only a frill, that it just changed the name. I suggest with respect that it is more than that. It is an indication that we are trying to remove, as we do with women's issues, any chauvinistic implication of legislation. It is appropriate that the Hon. Member for York East is trying to do what he can to give a better impact to a Bill of this nature, particularly by the name change.

It is not unusual that this kind of thing takes place in Private Members' Hour. If we want to recommend anything in this particular place, it costs money. We must do it in the form of a motion, whereas in Private Members' Hour we are pretty well confined. We have to be innovative and find ways and means for Private Members to right what is perceived as a wrong or to correct something which gives the wrong indication. For example, Canada Mortgage and Housing was once known as Central Mortgage and Housing. The idea of "Canada" being in the name rather than "Central" points to the impact of the symbolism of using the name Canada.

I believe it was the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) when he was a Private Member who brought in a Bill to change the name of TransCanada Airlines to Air Canada. We have seen things such as the Dominion Bureau of Statistics being changed to Statistics Canada because it has a more solid and better image of what that Department is all about. We had a recent indication of how a Private Member could significantly change the country's history when the name Dominion Day was changed to Canada Day, much to the pleasure of the majority of Canadians, although they might not have like the method of accomplishing it. When we have tried 347 other ways of getting this done and finally come up with a solution on a Friday afternoon, I think it is one of the better things we have done here in Private Members' Hour.

Also I remember that when Father Sean O'Sullivan was here he was checking around and discovered that there was nothing to indicate that the beaver was the Canadian symbol. Through a Private Member's Bill action was taken. It may seem a frill or it may seem unimportant, but it is one more indication of the thoughtfulness of people who want to move in this particular way to make such a change.

When I began my remarks I said that we were being given an opportunity to talk about our senior citizens. All too often we talk about two million people over the age of 65 and have a tendency to get lost in the numbers rather than deal with individual needs. There are many senior citizens, single pensioners or others, who for one reason or another—quite often through no fault of their own—miss out on the Canada Pension Plan or on an old age pension.

Because we are talking about senior citizens and the proposed name changes, I want to highlight the story of a Royal Canadian Air Force veteran who was 27 years of age when he enlisted. He won his wings at Summerside, Prince Edward Island. He rose to the rank of Warrant Officer First-Class. He was given a Spitfire and he wheeled it over Great Britain and France, as Rod Goodman indicated in his article which appeared in the Sunday Star on June 19. He pointed out that this man's war service for Canada ended when his right leg was crushed. He spent a year in British Hospitals undergoing bone transplants to save the leg; his kneecap was removed. His Spitfire was shot down by a cannon from a German fighter just off the English coast in 1943.

As Mr. Goodman indicated, this grateful country welcomed him home. He returned to his job in a meat packing plant but it was no good because his leg would not function in the cold. He decided to start his own business. While his wife worked in an insurance compensation department, he helped found the Metro Cab Company. The climate continued to torture him. The significant part of the story is that finally a doctor from the Department of Veterans Affairs—he was not one of Mr. Wright's own physicians whom he could have set up to do this—told him that he could expect pain to be his constant companion unless he moved to a warmer climate. In the spring of 1952, just before turning the age of 38, Mr. Wright and his wife moved to California. They did what they could there, working in various ways to maintain their income. They returned each year to visit his aging mother until her death four years ago.

The Wrights now live in Escondido, California. Mr. Wright thought that he should at least be entitled to a partial old age pension. He had been paying into the United States social security system and was receiving a small pension that did not help ends meet. This spring, at age 69, he applied for a partial Canadian Government old age pension; he was turned down.

What are the criteria? The regional director of pensions in Toronto says that an applicant outside Canada may qualify for a partial monthly pension provided he or she was a Canadian citizen or a legal resident of Canada on the day preceding the day he or she ceased to reside in Canada. Mr. Wright qualified on that score, but he was defeated by the second stipulation that he or she reside in Canada at least 20 full years after attaining the age of 18.

We know why that specific requirement was put into the Act. However, this war veteran who was shot down, who endeavoured to do what he could to maintain himself in Canada, who was told by a Veterans Affairs doctor that he had to move to a southern climate, is not applying for a full pension but asking for a partial old age pension.

Here is the tragic part of the whole matter. Mr. Wright qualified on the ground that he had been a Canadian citizen when he left the country, but he was defeated by the second stipulation that he or she reside in Canada 20 full years. Because a war injury forced him to a southern climate when it did, Mr. Wright fell 60 days short of help from the Canadian Government.

Mr. Goodman asks, was it fair? I do not think it was fair. I have already brought this to the attention of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell). I asked for his help in endeavouring to convince the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) that there must be some way to find a discretionary way of giving this former Royal Canadian Air Force officer, this veteran, some help with his pension when he so desperately needs it.

This is the kind of matter we can highlight in the Bill such as this. It indicates that people like Mr. Wright are part of the two million who seem to fall between the chairs of the legislation. I do not think anyone in Canada really feels that Mr. Wright is not entitled to some form of pension. It is typical of Mr. Wright that he did not ask for the full pension but for a partial pension, because he had paid into social security in the United States. I will keep pressing this issue, as other Members press issues involving senior citizens.

There are two concerns. The Hon. Member for York East indicated that the Government was not very keen on this move because pensions, and all that sort of thing, are being discussed at the present time. I do not know what the Government is thinking or whether it would contemplate raising that argument in this debate.

There are two matters that concern me. The first is whether the demand for the name change is as widespread as is indicated here, given the fact that money will have to be spent in order to make that change. I wonder if those who are looking for help at this time could see us spending money on the name change—and it would be a significant amount of money—or whether they would feel those dollars and cents might be better spent on pensioners, money they would like to see on their cheque, no matter what the name is at the top of the cheque.

I think that given the choice, most pensioners would prefer to see the significant funds associated with implementing a program name change directed instead to the pockets of their less fortunate peers. Do pensioners really want us spending taxpayers' dollars on devising and publicizing a new name and seeing its implementation through? I do not know that that is really what they anticipate or are looking for when they look to Government.

What I would like to see as our first social priority is to raise the level of the guaranteed income supplement payable to single pensioners. This was stated in the federal Government's green paper on pension reform, "Better Pensions for Canadians". The necessary funds are not available as yet. I like the "as yet" because it gives the impression that that issue as raised in the green paper is something that will be implemented by the Government. The money is not available as yet. Lest people think there is a niggardly amount of money being spent in this area, we should point out that the taxpayers of Canada contribute $8 billion annually for assistance, cheques and moneys of one kind or another for our senior citizens.

I heard a stage whisper earlier that this might be considered a frill rather than something significant that we should be doing. I do not consider it that way. I feel it is a good move by a Member who has a real concern about the impact of the negative response that one gets from the idea of old age. Old age connotes to all of us individuals passionately and desperately in need of help, unable to look after themselves and requiring assistance of one kind or another. I think the suggestion of using the term "senior citizens" is more appropriate. I hope that one day the Act will be changed in that way, if this Bill does not go to committee as a result of this debate.

We have a tendency when using the words "old age" to think, unhappily, in a negative way. Those who have taken the time, and that is probably true of all Members of Parliament, have been very much impressed with the many organizations that pensioners and older Canadians have formed in recent years, in part to present their views to Governments on various issues affecting them. I do not know whether they have made a representation with respect to this name. If not, I am sure it will be added to their list, as it should be.

These groups have a long list of accomplishments. Right now many are involved in preparing submissions and presentations to the parliamentary task force on pension reform, referred to by the Hon. Member for York East. Two such organizations have already had the opportunity to appear before the task force, the Council on Pension Reform for Singles and the National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation. The focus of their presentations was how to improve our pension system to provide better benefits for older Canadians, both now and in the future.

Among the recommendations of the Council on Pension Reform for Singles was a suggestion that the income guarantee to single pensioners be raised at least to the poverty line and then additionally increased to compensate those singles born too soon to participate in the Canada Pension Plan. The Council also suggested that a death benefit similar to that payable to a Canada Pension Plan contributor's estate be made available under the Old Age Security Program on behalf of these same single pensioners. Other recommendations concern the provision of larger tax exemptions for single pensioners and payment of Old Age Security at age 60 to single pensioners looking after aged parents or those forced to retire due to disability or poor health.

What is significant about all these studies is that when people join these organizations and bring forth these studies, they have a tendency to focus on the areas where they know the need to be rather than what you or I, Mr. Speaker, perceive the need to be.

The National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation propose, among other things, continued payment of OAS-GIS for six months to the surviving spouse of a deceased pensioner, quarterly indexation of Canada Pension Plan benefits, payment of OAS-GIS at age 55 to widows of disabled pensioners and a gradual lowering of the eligibility age for pension benefits to age 60.

If this is any indication of what the task force can expect to hear from other organizations representing pensioners, and I expect that it is, financial security for pensioners is their main concern, and I underline "main". If we lived in an unreal world where money was no object, these pensioner organizations might have suggested to the parliamentary task force that the Government consider a new name for the Old Age Security Program. However, pensioners are practical people. They know only too well what the real problems are of getting by from day to day.

I do not want to speak any longer on this Bill other than to say that I would endorse the change. If it does not come about as a result of this debate or a vote on this Bill, I expect it will be one of the changes that will come about in the not too distant future.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I did not realize that the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) wished to speak, but if there appears to be no speakers other than him, I suggest we might go on to the next matter of business, provided that this matter remains on the Order Paper.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In view of the fact that the Hon. Member for Regina West wishes to speak, the Chair should recognize him. Perhaps I can put the proposal or suggestion of the Hon. Member for Edmonton Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) after the House has heard the Hon. Member for Regina West.

• (1550)

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It shocks me somewhat that a Member from the Official Opposition would rise in his place and propose that this debate be, in effect, adjourned without hearing anyone from his Party discuss the subject. Does his Party not care about senior citizens?

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the reason it was proposed I be heard and the Bill be put over on the Order Paper. In any event, I will not take up more than a few minutes because I do not want to assist in talking out the Hon. Member's Bill.

I should say to my friend, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Collenette), that he should have talked to the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) about helping to talk out his Bill. That is something that one does not do to a colleague. If the Government does not want the Bill, it should be left for the Treasury benches or the Parliamentary Secretaries to talk out.

I would like to say that we support the Bill. We would be quite agreeable to seeing it passed today at second reading and referred to the appropriate standing committee. The Bill does not call for the expenditure of money or anything like that. It is perfectly in order.

I would also like to say that there have been numerous occasions when Private Members have had their Private Members' Bills accepted by the House, or at least there has been agreement that the subject matter of the Bill be referred to the appropriate standing committee. I would prefer to see this Bill adopted at second reading and go to the committee as is or, at the very least, the subject matter be referred. I am sure the Bill could be dealt with very expeditiously in the committee.

The test of the decency and civilization of any society is how well it treats its old and sick and disadvantaged. What we need, of course, is a Government Bill—because I know that the Hon. Member could not have proposed such a thing in his Bill as it would call for the expenditure of money—to provide that all of these people, the old, the sick and the disadvantaged, receive benefits to ensure that their incomes fall significantly above the poverty line. We need a Bill to ensure that any other benefits they might receive outside of Government programs would be taken into consideration, because there are literally hundreds of thousands of the old, disabled or disadvantaged in the nation who are at or below the poverty line.

Any nation that can afford to spend $8 billion on a fighter plane that I do not believe is needed or is of any use to us—

Mr. Cullen: Not $8 billion.

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, that is what it will end up costing. However many billions of dollars it will cost, if the money for that can be found, the money for something that is much more important to the people I have mentioned can surely be found.

I hope that the House will agree to let this Bill go to the committee. If the Government does not want the Bill, it can always stop it at report stage or at third reading if it wishes. I think the least we could do, as a courtesy to the Hon. Member for York East and because it has been requested by senior citizens right across the country, is let the Bill go through second reading and see what happens after that.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Collenette) has succeeded. Certainly he is not correct when he suggests that we on this side of the House are not interested in senior citizens. I dare say that most senior citizens of the country vote for this Party. I assure the Hon. Member that, to my knowledge every Member on this side of the House is or should be vitally concerned with the interests of all people who will be affected by the Hon. Member's Bill.

The wording of the Hon. Member's Bill, to which obviously we, or at least I, can only agree, would remove the concept of "old age" from senior citizens' benefits. I am sorry to say that I did not hear the Member's speech, but I hope that he pointed out that there are, I believe, approximately 500,000 single women in Canada who are over the age of 65 and have incomes under $5,000 a year. I hope he mentioned that people like this of both sexes are always the last to complain and the last to be heard and, it seems to me, the last to be paid any attention to.

I would think, Mr. Speaker, that these people would look askance at things like the $200,000 that taxpayers are coughing up in order to send Mr. Ed Clark and his family to Paris for an 18-month study leave courtesy of the Canadian taxpayer. In the same vein, what about the 104 people who sit in the other place of which, I am told, only about 15 or 20 do any real work? They receive an income of perhaps $55,000 or $60,000 a year and expenses until the age of 75, or for life if appointed prior to 1974. What about the $1.4 billion that may have been thrown away on Canadair? I am sure that senior citizens wonder where our priorities are when we put money into selling—what is the total now?—75 luxury executive Challenger jets. Whatever the total, it is pathetic.

I am reminded of my wife's two aunts who taught school in northern Alberta for 35 years. During the Depression they received $300 a year. One $300 cheque arrived a year, and at that time everyone in the neighbourhood descended upon them to seek a loan.

There are hundreds of thousands of senior citizens who are suffering economically because of a Government-created inflation, Mr. Speaker, because the monetary and fiscal policies which those opposite, including the Member for York East, know as surely as they know the sun will rise tomorrow would diminish the purchasing power of all Canadians and, most particularly, senior citizens who generally have the fewest dollars to spend.

It cannot be said often enough that the policy of running up a deficit which this year is $30 billion and then having the Bank of Canada finance a good chunk of that, whether it be $10 billion or $12 billion, by printing newly minted $10 or $20 or $100 bills, is one of the prime causes of inflation. This is a deliberate policy. It is a policy that has been in place in Canada for many years now. In my view, it is the reason our inflation rate has been has high as it has. It is something that I believe the senior citizens of Canada will never forgive the Government for. It is a cold-blooded policy of weakening the position of senior citizens in Canada.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that if everyone in Canada had taken a course in economics and monetary or fiscal policy, there would not be a Liberal MP left anywhere in the country. But Liberal Members, Mr. Speaker, know that most people do not understand how inflation is created by federal Government policy. I suspect Liberal Members know that most senior citizens do not believe that anyone could be so cynical as to inflate the currency in order to try to pay for deficits. The tragedy is that the Government has done this for too long, and in my view that is why most senior citizens will vote against the Government. Increasing numbers of them are aware of what is happening to their purchasing power.

Two out of three people in the country over the age of 65 are at or near the poverty line. I believe that figure is correct. I could go on, but I believe that everyone in the Chamber today knows about the lamentable situation of pensioners. Surely everyone here today would favour passage of the Bill. I do not know which Hon. Member on the Government side has been given the dirty task of talking the Bill out but I gather that will take another 15 or 20 minutes. I assume that whichever Hon. Member opposite gets up to speak when I finish is the one who has been asked to talk the Bill out while smothering it to death with kind sentiments.

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, regardless of the remarks we just heard from the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), I am very pleased to address a few remarks to Bill C-663, introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Collenette). For the record, Mr. Speaker, I should like to state that I have not been assigned any "dirty task" in talking the Bill out. I am sure that many Members in the Chamber would welcome the opportunity to give their views on the Bill.

I think it is rather interesting that the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was embarrassed into making remarks on behalf of the Loyal Opposition. Just a few minutes ago he stood to ask that we move to the next item of business. Obviously at that time he had no care or concern about matters relating to senior citizens. When the Hon. Member for York East rose on a point of order, then the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona felt his neck and had to say a few words regarding the plight of senior citizens and recipients of the old age pension. In a very partisan way he attacked the concerns that all of us have regarding Parliament and the Government of the day. I think we must take his remarks lightly as obviously he has very little concern and care for this particular Bill.

This Bill proposes to change the name of the Old Age Security Act to the "Senior Citizens Benefits Act". The basis given for this proposal is the contention that the words "old age" imply that at age 65 a person is no longer capable of leading a productive life or making a valuable contribution to society. Certainly the name "Old Age Security Program" was never intended to carry such a negative connotation.

The current Old Age Security pension—one of three benefits provided under the Old Age Security Act—is paid to everyone at age 65 who meets the necessary residence requirements in Canada. Eligibility for this pension is not dependent on labour force participation. You neither have to participate in the paid labour force prior to age 65, nor do you have to leave the labour force after age 65.

Persons 65 years of age and older are definitely not considered incapable of leading a productive life or making a valuable contribution to society. However, it is felt that these persons, in recognition of the number of years they have spent making Canada a better place in which to live, should have the right, if they so choose, to take life more easily, retire from the labour force, or pursue other interests and hobbies. To do this they must have an assured source of basic income and that is exactly what the Old Age Security Program is designed for.

Therefore, since the intent of the Old Age Security Program is to reward older individuals for past services to Canada and not to pay off individuals at age 65 because we do not believe they are capable of being valuable members of our society, I am sure Hon. Members will agree that the program title should not be viewed in a negative way.

If it is decided to change the name of the Old Age Security Program, however, surely it is important to choose a name that improves the current title. Care must be taken to ensure that any new name has none of the negative connotations this Private Member's Bill attributes to the phrase "old age". At the same time there are some very positive aspects of the current title that must be maintained.

In Canada, the phrase "old age" has been part of the title of income support programs for older Canadians for more than 55 years, since the introduction of the Old Age Pensions Act in 1927. The almost perfect take-up rate for the Old Age Security pension signifies that people readily identify with this federal program; they know what the program is, what it provides, and where to apply.

It is important that any new program name be acceptable to pensioners and that it identify the program as well as the current name. Clearly this is a difficult task since "old age pension" is a term with widely understood :meaning. In fact, these terms have become an integral part of Canadians' pension vocabulary. Regardless of any new names we might want to attach to it, I venture to guess that most people would continue to think of it simply as their old age pension. As well, it is possible that a change in the Old Age Seucrity Program name might cause confusion among pensioners who have grown accustomed to receiving the monthly Old Age Security pension. We would have to ensure that every effort be made to make the transition as easy and as understandable as possible.

While it is not essential that any new title give more than a general understanding of the nature of the program, it is assumed that a title which gives a more accurate description of the program objectives, source of the benefits, limitations, et cetera, would be more effective than a more neutral title. As well, words or phrases which could mislead the public about the nature of the program should, as much as possible, be avoided.

The title proposed in this Bill is Senior Citizens Benefits Act. While the phrase "senior citizen" has come to be widely used when referring to older individuals, it is often used to denote those persons who are retired. Since eligibility for the Old Age Security pension is not limited to retired persons over the age of 65, "senior citizen", with respect, could be misleading. As well, the number of years of residence in Canada are used to determine who over age 65 is eligible for the pension. The word "citizen" might tend to give the false impression that an individual has to be a Canadian citizen and not just have been resident in Canada. I also want to point out that there are individuals who have stated that they consider the term "senior citizen" to be as objectionable as the term "old age".

Thus, while it may be considered desirable to change the name of the Old Age Security Program, I do not believe that Senior Citizens Benefits Act would be an appropriate choice.

What, then, would be an acceptable title? How would we find out what individuals want? When should this change take place? Of those questions, I consider the "when" to be the most important. I know that with the necessary consultation and research, an appropriate new title could be found for the Old Age Security Act. Nevertheless, we must face the fact that changing the name of the Old Age Security Program is not going to be an inexpensive procedure. There is, of course, the cost associated with finding a new name, whether it be through a general survey of our current pensioners or through some other vehicle such as the Gallup poll. However, the greatest proportion of the expense would come after the fact. An extensive advertising campaign would be required in order to minimize the confusion and concern that a name change could be expected to cause. In addition, new application forms, program information booklets, ID cards, stationery and building signage would be required.

Is our current economic situation conducive to such a change? The current economic restraint program has, as with all Canadians, had its effect on our pensioner population. This session of Parliament has seen the adoption of Bill C-131(2), which amended the Old Age Security Act. Through passage of this piece of legislation we asked all Old Age Security pensioners who could afford to do so to accept limits on the amount of indexation they would receive on their basic Old Age Security pension in 1983 and 1984. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that they accepted that challenge with a great deal of grace and have worked along those lines. While inflation has been substantially reduced and the effects of the limited indexation are minimal thus far, the program will stay in effect until the end of December, 1984.

In addition, the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) in his remarks mentioned the green paper on pension reform. As stated in that green paper, improving the financial situation of low-income, single pensioners is an urgent and pressing necessity. This vulnerable group of Canadians is not yet guaranteed an adequate income with which to make ends meet, and must be assisted as soon as financial resources permit.

Therefore, even if we all agree that changing the name of the Old Age Security Program is a desirable step, I think we must carefully consider where it lies in our list of social priorities. I firmly believe, Mr. Speaker, that the people of this country understand and recognize the difficult situation facing many of their compatriots, whether it be the young, the unemployed or older, retired members of our society. I feel certain they would want us to expend our efforts and resources to ensure these groups receive the financial assistance they require.

While I congratulate the Hon. Member for York East on bringing this matter to our attention—it has given him the opportunity, of course, to express his views and concerns for our senior citizens and retired people—I think that at this particular time we should not consider undertaking expensive initiatives such as those suggested in this Bill.

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to speak in debate on Bill C-663 put forth by my colleague, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Collenette). This Bill seeks to change the name of the Old Age Security Act to the Senior Citizens' Benefit Act. In principle, I have no quarrel with the consideration of a new name for the Old Age Security Act if in fact it could be demonstrated that most pensioners find it offensive. I cannot agree, however, with the implied rationale that somehow the name "Old Age Security" means that people over the age of 65 are no longer capable of leading productive lives and making valuable contributions to society. In fact, Mr. Speaker, many Hon. Members in this House are living proof that people over age 65 can and do make valuable contributions to society. Their constituents clearly agree and history abounds with tremendous achievements by people well past the age of 65.

I do not need to remind Hon. Members that Sir Winston Churchill did not come to full—

Mr. Lewis: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the Hon. Member for interrupting him but I wish to ask a question concerning the business of the House which will give us an opportunity to put the notice out to all the offices.

Can the Government House Leader give us some idea as to the business for next week?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the Hon. Member for the interruption. We usually deal with this kind of matter at three o'clock on Thursday, but because of ongoing negotiations today we had to delay for a little while. But I think it important that we put on the record to try and be as clear as possible the order of business for next week.

First, I would like to deal with an order that we have agreed upon related to the motion standing on the Order Paper in the name of the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) relating to some amendments of the Constitution concerning aboriginal rights. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Government Notice of Motion standing in the name of the Minister of Justice be now transferred for consideration under Government Orders at the next sitting of the House;

That the said motion shall be the first item to be considered under Government Orders on Monday, June 27, 1983;

That at 1 p.m. on Monday, June 27, 1983 the debate shall be suspended and the motion shall be deemed to have been referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development;

That at 4 p.m. on Wednesday, June 29, 1983, the committee shall be deemed to have reported the motion and consideration of the motion shall be resumed; and

That no later than 5.45 p.m. on Wednesday, June 29, 1983, the Speaker shall interrupt any proceedings then before the House and shall put forthwith and successively any question or questions necessary for the disposal of the said motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is there unanimous consent for the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pinard: Yes, of course, Mr. Speaker. To determine the order of business for next week, perhaps we should know what is going to happen to the motion standing in the name of the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan). Now that we do know, I would like to confirm, first of all, that Monday morning, from 11 to 1 o'clock, in accordance with the order that has just been agreed to, we shall debate the motion on native rights to amend the Canadian Constitution. Monday afternoon, at 3 o'clock or as soon as we get to the orders of the day, after oral question period, the first item will be Bill C-165 on regional industrial development. I can confirm that the House Leaders have agreed to have one speaker per party, and that after second reading, without a recorded vote, the Bill is to be referred to committee, for study. Subsequently, we shall resume debate on the report stage of Bill C-95 on sports pools. If we complete the report stage and do not obtain the consent of the House for adopting the Bill on third reading, and there is still time on Monday, we shall resume debate on Bill C-152 on Government reorganization. Tuesday, from 11 until 1 o'clock, we shall proceed with consideration of Bill C-163, an Act to establish the Canadian Aviation Safety Board. Here again, we have an agreement at the House Leaders level to have the Bill referred to committee by 1 o'clock on Tuesday, after second reading. At 3 o'clock or after oral question period on Tuesday, we shall resume debate, if necessary, on Bill C-95 relating to sports pools, followed by Bill C-152 on Government reorganization and Bill C-159, the judges bill. I can inform the House that there has been some discussion, and that Bill C-159 may be split so that we shall be considering two Bills instead of one Bill C-159. That is a possibility, and more details will be given later, as appropriate. However, for the purposes of announcing the business of the House, I am referring to Bill C-159, because this particular Bill is well known and one of its purposes is to increase the number of judges in Canada.

Wednesday, from 11 to 1 o'clock, and from 3 to 4 o'clock, we shall first consider the report stage and third reading of Bill C-163 on aviation safety, which will have been referred to committee the day before. Subsequently, we shall consider the report stage and third reading of Bill C-165, on regional industrial development.

At 4 o'clock, we shall have an order to complete debate on the motion on native rights, and at 4:45, as soon as the motion has been disposed of, we shall resume debate, if necessary, on Bill C-95, the sports pools; Bill C-152, Government reorganization; and Bill C-159, Bill S-24 and Bill C-119, in that order. Basically, this is our schedule, and as I said earlier, agreements have been reached on some points by the House Leaders. As far as other aspects are concerned, we shall have to see how the debate evolves to find out whether it will be necessary to change the order of business. We shall be monitoring this process daily in fact, almost hourly starting Monday afternoon.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address two items, if I may. I am sure that one just involves a translation problem. On the translation system, it was mentioned as being Bill C-75; I am sure the Government House Leader said Bill C-95.

Mr. Pinard: Right.

Mr. Lewis: Fine. The other matter would be that we have agreed to split what is referred to as Bill C-159, the judges' Bill. I am not exactly sure how this is done, but if we were able to have that split, physically, on Monday, it would facilitate the debate on Wednesday or whenever it does come up for debate; I guess it is Tuesday. If it were to be split during Routine Proceedings on Tuesday or on Monday, it would certainly facilitate debate and my discussions with my people on Tuesday.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I would like some clarification, just in case it is misunderstood later. The reference was that we would deal with Bill C-163 on Tuesday morning and that it would be referred by 1 p.m.?

Mr. Pinard: Yes.

Mr. Lewis: Yes.

Mr. Deans: I just want to be clear that that is subject, of course, to there being at least one speaker for each Party.

Mr. Pinard: Sure.

Mr. Deans: I do not want to get into a hassle later if it turned out that we were not recognized.

Mr. Pinard: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, no problem.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House has heard the proposals made by the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard).

[English]

In addition to the comments which appeared to be additional considerations by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North—and it is not possible for the Chair to repeat all the details—I simply bring before the House the question as to whether there is unanimous consent for the proposals made by the President of the Privy Council—

Mr. Lewis: No, no.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): —and the Hon. Member for Simcoe North for the purpose of doing business next week.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry. I was not seeking unanimous consent for the order of business for next week. I just indicated that we had understandings. I am pretty sure that my colleagues will live, as usual, by their commitments on certain points. On others, there is no firm commitment and we will see how the situation evolves. The only firm order has been dealt with earlier today.

Since I am on my feet, my I remind my colleagues that next Thursday we will be dealing, as usual, following a House order last week, with Private Member's Business.

Mr. Lewis: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I understand. I apologize to the House. I had become confused because some of the propositions involved certain unspecific hours, and I thought that unanimous consent was perhaps required.

The House will now revert to Private Members' Business. With the permission of the Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Schroder), who had the floor, I will recognize instead the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE NAME OF ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Collenette that Bill C-663, to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Heath, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say a few words on this Bill this afternoon. I am prepared to confess my agreement to a number of suggestions that have been made, but there is one complaint about which I feel very strongly, and I dare to hope the change is being made. If I could be told that it is being made, that would be fine; but let me indicate my complaint in any case.

I refer to the fact that as the law now stands, a woman between ages 60 and 65 can receive a pension payment provided she is married to someone who is 65 and over who is receipt of the pension. That also applies to a person who may have been married for part of that time between ages 60 and 65 and the husband has died. However, in the case of persons who are single and between the ages of 60 and 65, there is no such provision.

I think it is one of the most unfair situations which has existed for some time now, for single women in particular. One could say that it applies both ways, to single men and single women, but there are so many more single women than single men that one can see that it is really women who are affected.

My hope is that the changes which are now being proposed in the pension legislation will cover the situation. If not, I urge that any further change to the Old Age Security Act should make that provision so that a single person between ages 60 and 65 should receive the consideration to which he or she is entitled, whether single or married. That other unfairness was wrong; I hope it is being corrected.

Mr. Deans: Well said.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think that with the consent of the House, I would indicate that this Private Member's Hour has now been completed. Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), I would interrupt the proceedings. Unless, of course, there is an Hon. Member who particularly wants to address the issue; I believe there are perhaps two or three minutes remaining.

Accordingly the Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Restigouche.

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, it will just take the one or two minutes remaining to make a point that I had made a few years ago concerning adequate protection for seniors. Of course, I want to joint other Hon. Members in congratulating the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Collenette) for bringing forward this important subject today.

Some years ago I introduced a proposal to give some relief to our seniors and those who have no other visible means of support or ability to earn income in excess of $15,000 per year, or a round figure of $12,000 per year. I suggested that they not be forced or called upon to pay income tax; nor should they have to bear the burden of filing income tax returns. Therefore, when we are speaking of pensions and our concern for seniors in Canada, I feel it is undue and unnecessary for men and women who have attained their retirement years to carry this extra burden of filing income tax forms.

Through this opportunity to intervene this afternoon, I hope I can focus the Government's attention once again on my proposal made a few years ago that there be a system to identify these men and women who have attained the age of retirement so that they are not forced or called upon to file these forms. For some of them, it would be a burden to pay the cost of assistance in completing these forms when, indeed, their incomes are fixed at, say, $12,000 per year or $1,000 per month. They are obviously not in the position to carry the burden of these extra costs, and it is a hardship. The Government should consider that in a civilized society this is an assistance that we could very well provide to these people in a true liberal sense.

I do thank the Hon. Member for York East for showing his concern for seniors and his understanding of what a civilized society should do in protecting our elderly, our seniors. I feel that the content of the Bill is very worth while. I do hope that by once again focusing on the matter this afternoon, the appropriate Ministers, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières), will consider my proposal to find some ways and means of eliminating, for the benefit of men and women who are in this stage of retirement in life, the unnecessary burden of filing income tax forms.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to Standing Order 24, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings. Shall all items under Private Members' Notices of Motions preceding Item No. 94 be allowed to stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA EVIDENCE ACT

ADVISABILITY OF IMPLEMENTING RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE McDONALD COMMISSION

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of amending the Canada Evidence Act to implement the recommendations of the McDonald Commission concerning the admissibility of illegally-obtained evidence, specifically that:

(1) Evidence shall be excluded if it was obtained under such circumstances that its use in the proceedings would tend to bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

(2) In determining whether evidence should be excluded under this previous section, all the circumstances surrounding the proceedings and the manner in which the evidence was obtained shall be considered, including:

(a) the extent to which human dignity and social values were breached in obtaining the evidence;

(b) whether any harm was inflicted on the accused or others;

(c) whether any improper or illegal act under (a) or (b) was done wilfully or in a manner that demonstrated an inexcusable ignorance of the law;

(d) the seriousness of any breach of the law in obtaining the evidence as compared with the seriousness of the offence with which the accused is charged;

(e) whether there were circumstances justifying the action, such as a situation of urgency requiring action to prevent the destruction or loss of evidence.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the House for this opportunity to discuss my motion this afternoon.

In Canada, the manner in which evidence is obtained has no effect on its admissibility. This simple fact has been the subject of endless comment, debate and controversy, and this afternoon, I shall try to convince my colleagues of the advisability of amending the Canada Evidence Act to include a discretionary clause that will allow judges, in specific circumstances, to exclude evidence obtained in an improper manner.

According to the traditional concept of Common Law, evidence plays a strictly utilitarian role. Since the purpose of a criminal trial is basically to dispense justice, any evidence that is relevant, and not otherwise excluded by the rules of court proceedings, must be considered admissible by the judge, who is not concerned with the manner in which the evidence was obtained, since Common Law provides for recourse before the courts against any impropriety committed in obtaining the evidence. This is due to the fact that in criminal proceedings, the courts are obliged to provide certain procedural guarantees, while the actual investigation is not subject to the same guarantees, since the purpose of the investigation is to identify a suspect, and the purpose of court proceedings is to judge whether the suspect is or is not guilty under the law.

Yet, it cannot be denied that the proceedings and the investigation converge when the evidence is submitted. That is why some people claim either that the proceedings have priority over the investigation, which can eventually result in an exclusionary rule such as exists in the United States when the police force disregards the constitutional rights of the suspect during the investigation, or that legal ethics go beyond the proceedings to include every aspect of criminal proceedings, particularly the investigation.

That is why there are three models for the admissibility of evidence obtained by illegal means: 1) admissibility regardless of the manner in which the evidence was obtained, which is the case in Canada following the ruling in the Wray case in 1970, as well as in England, with some amendments, with regard to the law of admissions; 2) the exclusionary rule, which replaces the truth as the pre-eminent purpose of the proceedings by another concept, namely the protection of the constitutional rights of the accused, because of which evidence obtained by illegal means must be excluded; and 3) a discretionary system which allows the judge in certain cases to reject that evidence when admitting it would be either unfair to the accused, when it is of such a nature as to bring the administration of justice into disrepute, or because of some other reason which may be recognized occasionally under various jurisdictions.

The common law of Scotland, Ireland, Australia and New Zealand follows the discretionary model. In Canada, the situation is quite complex. First, the general rule, which I mentioned earlier, stating that evidence obtained by illegal means is admissible was set by the Supreme Court in 1970 and the law has since remained unchanged, but this concept is certainly not unanimously accepted since, in the Ontario Appeals Court, Mr. Justice Aylesworth suggested a formula which has gained widespread acceptance, namely that the inherent discretion of a judge to ensure the accused of a fair trial extended to the exclusion of evidence, even though relevant, obtained by illegal means when its use would tend to bring the administration of justice into disrepute. This is an entirely new concept to be found nowhere else, at least under this form, in judicial precedents. While this concept was rejected by the Supreme Court, as I mentioned earlier, it was accepted by Mr. Justice Spence, who even went further when he said that such discretion should go against the Crown. Since then, various commissions have recommended that the Canadian Evidence Act include the concept of discretion to exclude evidence obtained by illegal means, and excepting the recommendations of the Ouimet Commission in 1968 which predate the Wray ruling, these recommendations include those of the Law Reform Commission, the Ontario Law Reform Commission, and finally, the Commission of Inquiry concerning certain activities of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, better known as the McDonald Commission, which are found in the motion now under consideration. I was saying that the situation was rather complex in Canada and this is because, irrespective of that general rule, Canadian law provides for a certain number of exceptions. First there is an exception proceeding from the Common Law concerning the admissibility of confessions made by the accused out of court. This House is aware of the general rule under which a non-voluntary statement made by the accused to an authorized official will not be accepted as evidence at the trial because the court has no means to guarantee the truthfulness of such statement. Indeed, another legal principle is that the accused cannot be coerced during the trial. Since the accused cannot be compelled to appear, the court cannot legally check the consistency between the non-voluntary previous statement and the testimony given at the trial.

A dissent that attracted considerable attention in the Rothman judgment, that of Justice Lamer who indicated that beyond the voluntary aspect, he recognized an additional discretion of the judge sitting on the case to dismiss a confession even when made voluntarily when the conditions under which such a confession is made to an authorized person is tantamount to non-compliance with the principle that an accused cannot be coerced and, consequently, the administration of justice is brought into disrepute. In short, Justice Lamer was going back to the administration of justice and to the obligation for a judge to see that the whole judiciary process, not only during the proceedings but also during the investigation, operates in accordance with the minimum standards of good conduct and he extended the concept initially introduced by Justice Aylesworth to the law on confessions. That is not truly a dissent because in his charge he does not agree with the legislation now in effect but he gets the same results as the judges of the majority. However the model that he proposes is surely not part of our law. Nevertheless, it is interesting to note that the same formula recurs periodically.

Section 178.16 (2) as passed by the House in 1977 goes back to the same formula by allowing the juge sitting on the case to rule out the evidence originating from an illegal interception of private communications. In other words, where there has been illegal electronic eavesdropping and the derived evidence has been adduced, the trial judge may decide to exclude such evidence if he is satisfied that its use would tend to bring the administration of justice into disrepute. This is the same formula that is found in our statutes, in the Criminal Code. Unfortunately, there is no higher jurisprudence by which we could define the exact scope of that exception to the general rule as to the acceptability of improperly obtained evidence, which brings us to Section 24(2) of the Charter of Rights. Section 24(2) also allows a trial judge to exclude evidence obtained against or in spite of the rights recognized in the Charter and therefore enshrined, where its use would tend to bring the administration of justice into disrepute. Therefore, parallel with the general rule under which evidence may be used however obtained, here are two statutes, one of which is part of our Constitution, which introduce a quite different concept, and I am reluctant to refer to an "exception" where a concept is constitutionally enshrined. It is somewhat odd that one should suggest that this is an exception to the general rule, where the discretionary ideal takes its place and becomes part of our law.

The exclusion of evidence is justified for various considerations. First, deterrence, as this is the main reason that is generally put forward, deterrence of repugnant police practices. Under that principle, there is a specific or general standard of conduct that is either left to or imposed upon the trial judge so that he may decide where applicable to penalize any abuse committed during the inquest, and through this procedural rule, namely the exclusion of evidence that could otherwise be acceptable.

This is the principle behind the American exclusion rule, known in English as the rule of the Fruit of the poisonous tree.. On the other hand, it is through an extension of the principle of the fair trial that other authorities justify the discretion to exclude improperly obtained evidence. Indeed, it is the judge's responsibility to make sure that the accused is given a fair trial. In Common Law, this was expressed by a rigid interpretation of procedural trial guarantees, although there was no intention to extend those guarantees to the inquest. For others, such as the Privy Council or more specifically the Judiciary Committee of the Privy Council, in the Sang Order of 1980, the fair trial principle was extended to documentary evidence obtained from the accused against his will, before the trial.

That is indeed an extension of justice in British trials which we Canadians do not enjoy yet. Although we might pass legislation, I do not believe we would be well advised to do so. If I may, I should like to urge Canadian judges, particularly in light of the Charter, to be more liberal in their interpretation of our principles concerning the right to confess so as to enshrine that additional element of justice which the judiciary committee of the Privy Council has acknowledged in the Sang decision.

Finally, and this relates directly to the text of the motion, an ethical conception of the role of the court in the judiciary process enables me to draw a parallel between the judiciary integrity on one hand—which does not leave any doubt—and the integrity of justice on the other—which is indeed more extensive than judiciary integrity per se.

If one endorses the principle that judiciary integrity cannot exist without the integrity of justice and the standards of behaviour which law enforcement agents must respect, one has to admit as well that a trial judge cannot be party to unacceptable investigation practices by disregarding altogether the manner in which the otherwise relevant evidence before him has been obtained. That is why the wording used in section 178.16(2) concerning wiretapping—a reprehensible activity which is strictly regulated by the Parliament of Canada and punishable by extremely severe penal and civil sanctions—and section 24(2) of the Charter of Rights, which provides for redress in cases of violations against constitutionally acknowledged or constitutionnally enshrined rights, are, in my opinion, the best answer to the double dilemma of the acceptance of a rule of admissibility so strict that it does not allow sanctioning or rather disassociating oneself from unacceptable investigation practices, on one hand, and, on the other, a rule of exclusion which is unduly restrictive, as a magistrate said in the United States: The constable blunders, the criminal goes free. And this is a delicate balancing act between opposing facets of public interest, the need to administer justice on the one hand, and the need for law enforcement agencies to use reasonable and democratically acceptable means. It is only through discretionary powers that we can achieve this.

But there is a problem, Mr. Speaker. Neither Section 178.16(2) nor Section 24(2) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms provide a discretionary code defining the various considerations which a presiding judge should assess while carrying out his or her duties. Such a judge is instructed to dismiss all illegally-obtained evidence which might otherwise bring the administration of justice into disrepute, but he or she has no indication as to how, when, and on the basis of what criteria these discretionary powers are to be used. That is why I move that the Canada Evidence Act be amended to include a discretionary code.

I drafted my bill in line with the recommendations of the McDonald Commission. I could have drafted it in line with those of the Law Reform Commission of Canada. I could have proposed the discretionary code adopted by the Common Law of Scotland, or the one adopted by the Australian Common Law. That is not the problem.

The problem is that judges, who by now have given an interpretation of Section 24(2) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedom, do not possess the means required in order to exercise this discretion according to well defined parameters and reference marks.

I suggest it would be appropriate for us to assist the judges in carrying out this responsibility they have of eventually rejecting, in some cases, the evidence improperly obtained, and I believe that to this end, we should adopt a discretionary code which would provide these reference marks. I refer my colleagues to the text of the motion enumerating some of these considerations. Unfortunately, I do not have the time to elaborate at length on each of these points today.

I would simply like to stress one thing, Mr. Speaker. This debate is far from over. Even after Section 24(2) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms has recognized this judicial discretionary power to reject evidence improperly obtained, the proposals contained in Bill S-33, presently before the Senate, take up once again the criteria formulated in the Wray decision. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, and I will conclude my remarks with this, the Wray decision recognizes a certain amount of discretionary power to reject relevant evidence, when the effect is unduly detrimental to the accused because of its extenuated probative value. Clause 24(2) of Bill S-33 takes up textually the concept enunciated in the Wray decision. Thus, we have looped the loop. First, there is the Wray case; then 178.16(2) recognizes the discretion; Section 24(2) recognizes the discretion; and then, in Bill S-33, the new evidence code presently before Parliament, such discretion is not recognized any more.

I submit to my colleagues that it is high time we resolve this dilemma. We must recognize once and for all the judiciary discretion to reject evidence improperly obtained, when its admission would bring into disrepute the administration of justice. And we must give the judges a discretionary code in order to give them guidance in this role.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I salute the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) for his most thoughtful address. In fairness I could add that he has done his thesis on the subject. He was kind enough to show me a copy of it. It has 60 pages of footnotes and many more pages of text. I indicate this in self-defence because he had many months in which to prepare and I have had less than an hour in which to prepare myself. It is not his fault; it is just that in the workings of things there has been little time to do an adequate job on a very serious subject.

The motion of the Hon. Member referred to the McDonald Commission and indicated in part:

> Evidence shall be excluded if it was obtained under such circumstances that its use in the proceedings would tend to bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

He went on to indicate that in determining whether evidence should be excluded, the manner in which it was obtained should be considered, for example, including:

> (a) The extent to which human dignity and social values were breached in obtaining the evidence;

Since we already have Section 24(2) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, why do we need to go further and further rigidify what is already there? In part Section 24(2) reads:

> Where ... a court concludes that evidence was obtained in a manner that infringed or denied any rights or freedoms guaranteed by this Charter, the evidence shall be excluded if it is established that, having regard to all the circumstances, the admission of it in the proceedings would bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

I think my concern is shared by the Hon. Member for Rosemont. Hopefully, all of us in the House agree that we do not want a situation where any evidence, no matter how heinously obtained, should be admitted into evidence. I do not think anyone wants a situation where any evidence, no matter how small the indiscretion used to obtain it, should not be admissible in evidence.

Those Members of the House who voted for the Charter of Rights and Freedoms wanted a middle ground. We did not want the absolute ban which exists in the United States. I will deal with that in a minute because it is the cause of many of the serious crime problems in the United States. Conversely, we did not want the current Canadian situation where basically if the only evidence obtainable is illegally or improperly obtained, it is admissible in the search for truth. My hon. friend referred to the Regina v. Wray case, but there have been many others.

I would like to give an example by referring to a case in the United States which will show how the other system can cause many problems. I am informed that in a drug trafficking case in New York city a warrant specified that the customs officers could look in someone's suitcase, but it did not specify that they could look for heroin. It specified other things but not heroin. They opened the suitcase and found a large quantity of heroin and charged the person with importing that drug. When the case got to trial, the judge looked at the warrant and said that it did not specify heroin, and the case was dismissed. Whereas, in our system, at least up until the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, that person would have been convicted on the basis that although the evidence may have been improperly obtained, ours is a search for truth. There are remedies to go after the customs officers, but we would not see someone walking away from a charge of murder or trafficking in heroin because of the manner in which evidence was obtained. The accused can charge the police or customs officers. They should be disciplined or whatever, but the matter should stand.

Some very eloquent statements on the issue have been made by different people. I would like to quote one or two statements which appeared in the Ottawa Law Review under the article entitled, "The Admissibility of Evidence Obtained Illegally: A Comparative Analysis". The first one was by Mr. Justice Holmes, perhaps the most famous jurist of all, who said:

> We have to choose, and for my part I think it a less evil that some criminals should escape than that the Government should play an ignoble part.

I think the Hon. Member for Rosemont referred to the other side of the issue in Britain, the other extreme, by indicating that "It matters not how you get the evidence; if you steal it even, it would be admissible". Another interesting quotation would be the one of Chief Justice Warren Burger of the United States Supreme Court who said in a recent case:

> We can well ponder whether any community is entitled to call itself an "organized society" if it can find no way to solve the problem except by suppression of truth in the search for truth.

• (1700)

That was put pretty well in an article. Chief Justice Burger talked about the "reign of terror in American cities". This was about seven years ago. He asked, "Is a society redeemed if it provides massive safeguards for accused persons yet fails to provide elementary protection for decent law-abiding citizens?"

United States Appeal Court Judge Henry Friendly asked whether "guilt is not relevant". The late Justice Robert Jackson of the United States Supreme Court reminded us "that the Constitution was not intended to be a suicide pact". The same article points out that, according to a recent poll in the United States, one in three households reported to a crime survey that they exprienced some sort of crime during 1980.

Some say that the crime rate is less in Canada than in the United States. Many people believe that to be the case. I am not sure whether that is true any longer. A Gallup poll in 1982 indicated that one in four Canadians had been a victim of crime in the previous 12 months. According to the most recent crime survey by Statistics Canada, 2.8 million Criminal Code offences were reported in Canada during the calendar year 1981. Members are aware that many crimes are not reported. No one would dispute that the figure was probably much higher for 1981.

What does all this amount to? What I am trying to say is that there are two very real social interests: one is fighting crime, and the other is having the police act within the law. I have spent a number of years in court. I believe that nobody should be above the law, including the police and the Prime Minister. The law has to apply to everybody. One must ask oneself, and I am thinking primarily in the area of drugs because this is where most crime seems to occur, what can be done.

In a recent speech in Victoria by Superintendent Thomas Gardiner of the RCMP, he was quoted as saying that a cocaine charge against an accused was dropped after an officer was unable to prove reasonable cause for a search, even though the drug was found in the search.

How far do we want to go with these rights? What do we have to do to protect the rest of us who are law abiding? That is the issue. Hardened professional career criminals know that the law is there for their protection. They know that if the warrant does not say there was heroin in the suitcase of Mr. X, he will get off scot-free. If that is the case, the crime rate in Canada will very quickly become higher than in the United States.

It is not written into the United States Constitution that improperly obtained evidence should be excluded. In the case of the people v. Mapp it was held during the mid-sixties that the right against the use of illegally secured evidence was so fundamental as to be included in the due process required by the fourteenth amendment, and thus to be binding upon the state. That is what all this leads to, and I hope the Hon. Member for Rosemont agrees. I am afraid that the Supreme Court of Canada will take Section 24 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and resolutions such as this, if they are passed—and I have knowledge of some members of that court—and will say that next year, the year after or three years from now all improperly obtained evidence will be excluded. In other words, for reasons in which they believe, they will go beyond what the Hon. Member for Rosemont is asking and go to the rule that any illegally obtained evidence is inadmissible in any court in the land. That is how their counterparts operate under a charter of rights in the United States. I am afraid that we will be in the same position as is the neighbouring republic where criminals have a field day. I do not know whether you, Mr. Speaker, have ever attended a criminal case in the United States. I have, and I suspect the Hon. Member for Rosemont has as well. The system has reached the point where one wonders whether guilt or innocence is even relevant. You wonder whether safety of the public or reasonable protection of people's rights to liberty, life and protection from being mugged or raped is important.

One question seriously being asked in the United States is whether joggers—I am a jogger—should carry money. If a mugger mugs a jogger, he becomes angry if the jogger has no money. Therefore, in some parts of the United States joggers carry money.

One may laugh and say that that will never happen in Canada. I think it is fair to say that many people in the United States believe that the exclusionary rule is one of the causes of the state of affairs whereby crime has become rampant. They have all of the rights such as liberty and pursuit of happiness, but they cannot go out at night on the streets of Detroit or many other cities. Everybody here thinks we live in a country where those rights are protected.

I believe we can go too far. The pendulum can only swing so far before your wife, my daughter and the niece of the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) cannot go out on the streets at night. People say, "By George, we have our constitutional rights in this country" and, therefore, you cannot convict Mr. Wray of murder because the weapon was found in a way that some may consider improper or illegal. Are we further ahead if we swing that far with the pendulum?

The Hon. Member for Rosemont probably thinks I am exaggerating, that this will not happen and the courts will not go that far, that they will maintain the middle ground that we have in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I remind him that the absolute ban on illegally obtained evidence was enacted by judicial legislation in the United States. Unfortunately the Hon. Member will not have time to reply later and tell us whether he disagrees, but I am afraid that that will happen under this provision in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. If it does, the dope addicts and drug pushers will be happy.

Before the Charter of Rights and Freedoms was tested, over $8 billion was spent on illegal drugs in Canada in 1981. This includes $2.2 billion on heroin by 2,000 users. These figures are from the RCMP. There was $475 million spent on cocaine by 225,000 users, $5 billion on marijuana hashish and liquid hashish by three million users, one-third of them teenagers.

I should stress that most of the problems arise in the area of drug pushers, professional drug traffickers. What it comes down to is that my hon. friend and I agree that there should be discretion in the courts to exclude or include improperly obtained evidence, depending on the circumstances. We might disagree on particular cases and his criteria would, I think, attempt to maintain a balance, but I am concerned that before many years have gone by, his proposals will be gone, the clearly stated wording in Section 24(2) will be gone, and we will find ourselves in a situation where all improperly obtained evidence is inadmissible in any court in Canada.

As crime prevention spokesman for the Official Opposition, while I am speaking as an individual, I am profoundly concerned that if that day ever comes, it will cause the crime rate to go up even higher than it already is. I am sure you are aware, Mr. Speaker, that the crime rate in Canada is already very high and getting higher with the passage of each year.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support resolution No. 94. I think that it is a very sensible, well worked out resolution. It is certainly in line with what was proposed by the Law Reform Commission. Indeed, it uses the actual wording of the recommendations of the MacDonald Commission. It is a very reasonable statement and is an attempt to repair by legislation the very serious situation brought about by decisions made by our courts, including the Supreme Court of Canada. It follows logically from the provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and, indeed, we might see it as fleshing out those proposals. Let me read from Section 24(2) of the Charter:

(2) Where, in proceedings under subsection (1), a court concludes that evidence was obtained in a manner that infringed or denied any rights or freedoms guaranteed by this Charter, the evidence shall be excluded if it is established that, having regard to all the circumstances, the admission of it in the proceedings would bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

This is a very sensible Canadian middle of the road solution to a problem. Its idea is not to go whole hog as in the United States where there is an exclusionary rule that everything would automatically be excluded if there was even the merest technical infraction. Incidentally, the position taken in the United States has been greatly exaggerated in debate by suggesting that many criminals go scot-free on the basis of technicalities. It has been estimated that getting rid of the exclusionary rule would increase the rate of conviction by less than 1 per cent.

The dramatic remarks made by the previous speaker about crime on the streets requiring joggers to carry money to buy off criminals are absolutely preposterous. Of course, what is in mind here is not even an exclusionary rule but, rather, exclusionary discretion, a rule which would not even go as far as does the rule in the United States.

This resolution is in line with, and indeed is better than, the Law Reform Commission's recommendations of 1974, for the Law Reform Commission argued the matter in a backward way. It would continue the admission of illegally obtained evidence if the evidence were otherwise relevant and credible, but would give the judge discretion to depart from this, the discretion to admit "evidence obtained through a serious violation of a substantive law or fundamental right if, considering the circumstances and the gravity of the charge against the accused, the violation is the result of a deliberate voluntary act committed in bad faith, its admission would constitute a serious injustice to the accused or bring the administration of justice into disrepute."

That is a rather heavy-handed approach on the part of the Law Reform Commission, but we all know that the Law Reform Commission is desperately afraid to be on the side of reform. What we have in the resolution is the word "shall"; that if the administration of justice would be brought into disrepute, the evidence shall be disregarded. Specific guidelines are given as to what is to be weighed in the balance. The judge is directed to weigh the pros and cons, the seriousness of the offence, the seriousness of the violation of the rights of the accused, and determine accordingly.

This position is very similar to the position taken in Scotland, Ireland, Australia, New Zealand and other countries. I can do not better than to quote from a famous Scottish case, Lawrie versus Muir, a decision of Lord Cooper. "The law must strive to reconcile two highly important interests which are liable to come into conflict: (a) the interest of the citizen to be protected from illegal or irregular invasions of his liberties by the authorities, and (b) the interest of the state to secure that evidence bearing upon the commission of a crime and necessary to enable justice to be done shall not be withheld from courts of law on any mere formal or technical ground. Neither of these objects can be insisted upon to the uttermost. The protection for the citizen is primarily protection for the innocent citizen against unwarranted, wrongful, and perhaps high-handed interference, and the common sanction is an action for damages . . . . On the other hand, the interest of the state cannot be magnified to the point of causing all the safeguards for the protection of the citizen to vanish, and of offering a positive inducement to the authorities to proceed by irregular methods."

It is not an absolute rule but a question of circumstance, and the factors to be taken into account include the following: Did the irregularity occur deliberately or accidentally? How serious is it? Is it a mere technical breach or something involving a threat to personal liberty? Was there an emergency involved in obtaining the evidence? Were those responsible for the illegal conduct police officers? How serious is the case against the accused? In fact, Scottish courts have admitted illegally obtained evidence where there is reason to believe the suspect would destroy the evidence, a rather practical approach to the problem.

The proposals of resolution No. 94 are very similar to proposals advocated by my colleague, the Attorney General for Manitoba, the Hon. Roland Penner, then acting in the capacity of a professor of law at the University of Manitoba. Professor Penner argued that it is a matter of legal and social policy that there be exclusionary discretion. Judicial integrity in the role of the courts as guardians of civil liberties is at issue, and of course it is difficult for judges to do this because of the Wray case and the Hogan case, so legislation is necessary.

Judicial discretion is already widely accepted in other matters of evidence, as we all know, so the concern over so-called unfettered discrimination, that there would be too great an element of uncertainty, can be countered by guidelines. That is precisely what the resolution before us does.

The sad fact is that violations of citizens' rights are commited in the collection of evidence, and the courts have not played a role in stopping this. There have been some very bad decisions made on the part of the Supreme Court of Canada. Some of the decisions made are as bad as those made in women's equality cases, but like in women's equality cases, there have also been some dissenting opinions. I would like to read one from Mr. Justice Laskin, 1974, in Hogan. It reads:

The choice of policy here, i.e. the majority decision to accept the evidence, is to favour the social interest in the repression of crime despite the unlawful invasion of individual interests and despite the fact that the invasion is by public officers charged with law enforcement. Short of legislative direction, it might have been expected that the common law would seek to balance the competing interests by weighing the social interests in the particular case against the gravity or character of the invasion, leaving it to the discretion of the trial judge whether the balance should be struck in favour of reception or exclusion of the particular evidence.

Where constitutional guarantees are concerned, the more pertinent consideration is whether those guarantees, as fundamentals of the particular society, should be at the mercy of law enforcement officers and a blind eye turned to their invasion because it is more important to secure a conviction. The contention that it is the duty of the courts to get at the truth has in it too much of the philosophy of the end justifying the means. It would equally challenge the present law as to confessions.

In effect, the argument here is for exclusionary discretion. The McDonald Commission advocated an exclusionary discretion as well on the basis of the Law Reform Commission's proposals, and certainly the McDonald Commission was very aware of the problems of illegally obtained evidence. That commission noted particularly the very bad effect of the current practice in Canada of there being no exclusion on police conduct. The fact that the courts have not thrown out illegally obtained evidence has been interpreted by the RCMP at all levels to mean that illegal evidence is acceptable.

Until now, the debate has been of a rather theoretical nature, and writers and commentators have perforce guessed at the effect of the law on police investigative attitudes and conduct. It can now be said, at least in this country and in regard to the RCMP, that the attitude of members of that force, as expounded by its most senior officers, is to regard the absence of critical comment by the judiciary as tacit approval of forms of conduct that might be unlawful . . . . It is in this sense that one may say that the present law has encouraged the police, quite erroneously, to infer that judicial silence implies approval of the investigative method that has been described in court.

I should like to support the resolution, Mr. Speaker, and I hope the Government will not talk it out. After all, it is a proposal, a statement of principle; it is not an Act. If parliamentary reform means anything, I think it should be possible for the House to pass matters of this sort even if they have not been introduced by a Minister.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to deal with the first part of the motion which reads as follows:

Evidence shall be excluded if it was obtained under such circumstances that its use in the proceedings would tend to bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

In 1975 the Law Reform Commission of Canada proposed an evidence code in its first report to Parliament. In that report the Commission advocated that a judge should have a power to exclude evidence in certain circumstances. Two provisions of that code are important to us in our consideration of the motion today. Section 15 of the proposed evidence code is identical to the recommendation contained in the report of the MacDonald Commission and in the motion brought before the House today. Accordingly, I need not read it now.

In Section 16 of its proposed evidence code, the Law Reform Commission recommended a specific provision concerning the admissibility of statements, and that provision reads as follows:

A statement made by the accused to a person in authority is inadmissible if tendered by the prosecution in a criminal proceeding, unless the judge is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the statement was not made under circumstances (including the presence of threats or promises) that were likely to render the statement unreliable, or unless the accused personally or through his counsel agrees to its admission.

Nothing in this section affects the admissibility of evidence other than a statement of the accused, including evidence of any fact discovered as a result of such statement or that such facts were discovered as a result of the statement.

The legal profession in Canada did not greet the report prepared by the Law Reform Commission of Canada with much enthusiasm. As a result, the Law Reform Commission of Ontario turned its attention to the law of evidence, and subsequently published a report in 1976. In that report the Ontario Commission also recommended that a judge should have the discretion to exclude evidence is it was obtained illegally and its admission would be unfair to the opposing party, or if evidence was obtained by methods that are repugnant to the fair administration of justice. The latter part of this recommendation was expressly designed to combat what the Law Reform Commission of Ontario perceived as bad policy in the decision given by the Supreme Court of Canada in Regina v. Wray. I think this case has been referred to by all Hon. Members who have spoken on this matter.

Then in 1981, the MacDonald Commission, as it was popularly known, recommended that a legislative provision be enacted in terms identical to those proposed in Section 15 of the evidence code of the Law Reform Commission of Canada. In its report, the MacDonald Commission made a brief survey of law as it stands in Canada and in other jurisdictions, as well as a summary of arguments for and against the discretion to exclude illegally obtained evidence. The Commission expressed its support for a discretion to exclude in Clause 64 which reads as follows:

In our view, the law of Canada should, like that of Scotland and Australia, give the trial judge a discretion to exclude illegally and unfairly obtained evidence. It will be noted that we do not propose the adoption of the American rule requiring the absolute exclusion of all illegally obtained evidence. The Canadian rule should be discretionary rather than absolute, because:

(A) The state's commitment to due process would be seriously diluted if the court in the most serious of crimes were to exclude evidence that was obtained as a result of the most trivial breaches of the laws of search. Rather than demonstrating the commitment of the law to principle, such a result would confirm in the minds of many members of the public the commitment of the law to technicality and in their minds would bring the law into disrepute. Therefore, the protection of judicial integrity and encouraging confidence in the judicial system require a discretionary rather than an absolute rule.

(B) The rationale of deterrence ought logically to apply only to intentional breaches of the law. Generally, an absolute rule of exclusion fails to distinguish between wilful and flagrant conduct on the part of the police on the one hand, and conscientious and careful police conduct undertaken in a difficult situation, on the other. An absolute rule fails to distinguish between errors of judgment that cause no harm and those that seriously violate fundamental values. An absolute rule fails to distinguish between a minor case such as shoplifting, and a grave case such as murder. Any rule that fails to discriminate between those different factual circumstances is too blunt an instrument to achieve any of its objectives, such as the preservation of judicial integrity and the deterrence of improper or illegal police conduct.

In the six years between 1975, when the Law Reform Commission of Canada published its evidence code, and 1981, with the publication of the report of the MacDonald Commission, three law reform bodies recommended that a judge should have the power to exclude illegally obtained evidence in certain circumstances and according to certain conditions. The argument in favour of such a power found some favour with law makers at both the provincial and federal levels because the next crucial development in this area of the law came in 1982 with the proclamation of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Section 24 of the Charter provides as follows:

24. (1) Anyone whose rights or freedoms, as guaranteed by this Charter, have been infringed or denied may apply to a court of competent jurisdiction to obtain such remedy as the court considers appropriate and just in the circumstances.

(2) Where, in proceedings under subsection (1), a court concludes that evidence was obtained in a manner that infringed or denied any rights or freedoms guaranteed by this Charter, the evidence shall be excluded if it is established that, having regard to all the circumstances, the admission of it in the proceedings would bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

Under Subsection 24(2), therefore, a court can exclude evidence obtained by virtue of a constitutional violation if in the court's assessment of all the circumstances, the admission of the evidence would bring the administration of justice into disrepute. This power is, of course, predicated upon a violation of constitutionally protected rights. Thus the Charter gives some broad recognition to the exclusion of illegally obtained evidence. However, Subsection 24(2) of the Charter is not the only provision of Canadian law that would allow the exclusion of evidence on the basis that its admission would bring the administration of justice into disrepute. In 1976 Parliament enacted a specific provision that would permit the exclusion of wiretap evidence if its admission would bring the administration of justice into disrepute. Subsection 178.16(2) of the Criminal Code reads as follows:

Notwithstanding Subsection (1), the judge or magistrate presiding at any proceedings may refuse to admit evidence obtained directly or indirectly as a result of information acquired by interception of a private communication that is itself inadmissible as evidence where he is of the opinion that the admission thereof would bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

Let us now turn our attention to current developments in Canada. In 1977, following the report on evidence from the Law Reform Commission of Canada and the Law Reform Commission of Ontario, the Uniform Law Conference undertook, as it were, to prepare a synthesis and a Uniform Evidence Act that would be amenable to application in both the provincial and federal jurisdictions. To carry out this work, the Uniform Law Conference established a federal-provincial task force on uniform rules of evidence. The work of this task force was completed before the proclamation of the Charter. The task force made recommendations for reform in the law of evidence and tabled before the Uniform Law Conference a draft Act. In its report the task force devoted an entire chapter, Chapter 16, to illegally obtained evidence. The Uniform Evidence Act, as passed by the Uniform Law Conference in plenary session, was taken up by the Governments of Canada's various jurisdictions. After several amendments to the Uniform Evidence Act and after extensive consultation with the Provinces, the federal Government tabled Bill S-33 in the Senate in November, 1982. The provision of the Bill that affects the admissibility of evidence is Clause 22 which reads as follows:

Relevant evidence is admissible unless it is excluded pursuant to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, this Act or any other Act or law, and evidence that is not relevant is not admissible.

The court may exclude evidence the admissibility of which is tenuous, the probative force of which is trifling in relation to the main issue and the admission of which would be gravely prejudicial to a party.

It would appear, therefore, that the Bill proceeds on the recommendation of the task force that no provision should be enacted to allow for the exclusion of illegally obtained evidence. This, indeed, was the position advocated by the federal-provincial task force, and I should like to quote a passage from that report. It reads:

● (1730)

The common law rule that judges should not be concerned with the propriety of the means used by a party to obtain evidence is subject to two exceptions in criminal cases: confessions and wiretap evidence. To ensure that a confession is reliable and that the accused's right to silence was not violated, the judge must inquire into whether a confession was obtained voluntarily. To protect the citizen against unauthorized wiretapping and eavesdropping the Criminal Code prohibits wiretapping or bugging unless the party obtains either the consent of a party to the communication or the authority of a court order. The Code also regulates the admissibility of such evidence in criminal proceedings. The sanctions in the Code would seem to be effective deterrents of illegal wiretapping and to make unnecessary an exclusionary provision for civil cases. The proposed discretion would require the court to speculate about the impact of admitting illegally or improperly obtained evidence upon the police and society. The role of the judge should be limited to the conduct of the trial and should not embrace these larger issues.

AN ACT REQUIRING THE CANADIAN FLAG AND THE FLAG OF THE PROVINCE TO BE FLOWN ON FEDERAL BUILDINGS

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. J.-Roland Comtois (Terrebonne) moved: That Bill C-596, an Act requiring the Canadian flag and the flag of the Province to be flown on federal buildings, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

He said: Mr. Speaker, a little over three years ago, I rose in this House to introduce this bill entitled An Act requiring the Canadian flag and the flag of the Province to be flown on federal buildings. I would like to remind my colleagues of the comments I made at that time. It was on May 21, 1980, the day after the Quebec referendum. I then said the following:

> Madam Speaker, I am very proud the day after a large majority of Quebecers have expressed their will to remain in the Canadian federation to introduce this bill to provide for the flying of the Canadian flag and the flag of the province on federal buildings.

I also said:

> Madam Speaker, Canadians from Quebec have rediscovered yesterday that they are proud of flying both the Canadian and the Quebec flags together. Given the spirit that prevails today in this House—

I asked for unanimous consent to proceed without debate with all stages of this Bill. I had consulted the then Leader of the Official Opposition, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), the Leader of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), and the Leader of my own party (Mr. Trudeau), and all three had given their consent. At the last minute, one of my colleagues, unaware of these negotiations, rushed into the House to object, and he was the only Member to oppose this motion. That is why this Bill is still on the order paper three years later.

I hope that today, my colleagues on all sides of the House, and particularly in my own Party, will do everything in their power to allow this bill to proceed through all stages with unanimous consent before we adjourn.

Mr. Speaker, all my Quebec colleagues and myself fought against the concept of separation at the time of the May 20, 1980 referendum. I would like to remind my colleagues what the supporters of separation were doing at that time. PQ members were going all over Quebec carrying the Quebec flag, which had become the symbol of Quebec separation and independence. As for us, supporters of federalism, we went all over the Province with both the Canadian and the Quebec flags. That is the symbol that prevailed at the referendum, which was won by federalist Quebecers by 60 per cent against 40 per cent.

I would like the House to reflect for a few moments on the fact that very soon, perhaps within a year, the Parti Québécois will hold another referendum or a provincial election on Quebec sovereignty. For my part, as I am convinced that, as a French-speaking Quebecer, I belong in Canada, I would like the Canadian flag and the provincial flag, the flag of my Province, to be flown on federal buildings, especially in Quebec, as a token of our attachment and our sense of belonging to this country.

This very short and simple Bill contains three Clauses. The first Clause provides the following:

> The Canadian flag and the flag of each of the provinces and of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories shall be flown from the Parliament buildings situated in Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, on Canada Day next week, all these flags will be flown side by side on Parliament Hill in front of the Centre Block. All the visitors to our national capital city will be happy to see the flag of their own province flying on Parliament Hill. Unfortunately, it is only for a week and then the flags are removed. I still wonder why. In a country such as Canada which is a federation of ten provinces and two territories, I wonder why those flags are flown during only one week in the year when they should be flown all year round on Parliament Hill. It is the first Clause of my Bill.

The second Clause of my Bill reads as follows:

> The Canadian flag shall be flown on all buildings owned by the Crown in right of Canada as well as on all buildings occupied by federal services.

We know that in all Provinces, many rented buildings are occupied by federal services. This legislation would compel the owners of those buildings to fly the Canadian flag and that of the relevant Province. Besides, several provinces if not all, except Quebec, are already flying on their own provincial buildings both the Canadian and the provincial flags. Unfortunately, in Quebec this is not done. However, I think that as federal Members we should set the example and fly both flags on our own buildings.

The third Clause merely states the following:

> The Governor in Council may by regulation define "building" for the purposes of this Act.

This is a very simple Bill which has a great symbolic importance especially in Quebec. As I said a few moments ago, we will soon have another battle to fight in Quebec over the issue of independance or attachment to the Canadian federation. I am convinced beforehand that the Parti Québécois will launch its campaign by flying the Quebec flag as a symbol and again as federal Members of Quebec, we will fight with both flags in both hands. Why not legislate this dual attachment and this dual symbol throughout the country and not just in Quebec?

I will not say anything more, Mr. Speaker, because there is very little time left until adjournment, but I hope my colleagues on both sides of the House, particularly on this side, will shorten their speeches so that before we adjourn we may ask with unanimous consent that the House go through all stages of this Bill to put this legislation on our statute books so that we will be able as soon as possible to fly both the Canadian flag and the provincial flag on all federal buildings in Canada.

• (1740)

[English]

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Comtois) for bringing in Bill C-596. I think that all of us who are at the federal or provincial level of legislative activities are interested in the symbolism of flags and feel that we bear some responsibility to consider proposals such as the one brought in by the Hon. Member. At first glance, I do not see much objection to the proposal, although I note that the description of the Bill reads: "An Act requiring the Canadian flag and the flag of the Province to be flown on federal buildings". That seems to be mandatory, as it is stated there. However, when one goes through into the reading of the Act itself, one finds that Clause 2(2) states:

> The flag of the Province or the territory in which the building is situate may also be flown on such buildings.

I simply detected a discrepancy. I am not sure whether the Hon. Member's real intention is that the flag shall be flown as the title seems to suggest, if I am using the right terms in describing the heading of the entire Act. However, I am just wondering whether or not the Government's real intention is that it will be mandatory for the Provinces to fly the provincial flags.

The only other problem I see probably lies in Clause 1 of the proposed Bill. I certainly have no objections to the philosophy of having the provincial flags flying on the Parliament buildings here in Ottawa. I see some merit in it, although it might be overdoing a good thing, in a way. It is certainly appropriate to have the Canadian flag flying here. I know that none of us would dispute that. I just wonder how it would look and the logistics that would be involved in flying the 12 other flags. I dare say that it could be done. I see the wisdom of it on ceremonial occasions such as we have had when the monarch or other people have visited. Then we want to have the flags of all our Provinces and of Canada displayed at the same time.

I think the Hon. Member for Terrebonne was perhaps suggesting that we recognize our flags in that way all the time, not just on special occasions. I am not so much arguing against it as I am simply raising the logistical question as to how we will fly those extra flags.

Therefore, I commend the Hon. Member for bringing the Bill before us for consideration. Perhaps he cannot, by the rules of the House, reply to my inquiry about the apparent conflict I see in what we have in front of us. Perhaps one of his colleagues could answer that question so that we would better understand whether or not it will be mandatory for the Provinces to fly their flags on federal buildings within each given Province.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to participate in the debate on this Bill because it was introduced by my colleague from Terrebonne (Mr. Comtois) in 1980. In my opinion, it was fitting that he introduced it the day after we won the referendum, when we Canadians of the Province of Quebec were reassured about the intentions of Canadians in that province who were anxious to remain Canadians and continue to live as such.

I am all the more pleased as I share his views on the absence of the Canadian flag on our provincial institutions, such as schools and halls of justice which are the responsibility of the Province of Quebec, and all other Government buildings which belong to the province. I think that as long as the present Quebec Government continue to refuse to fly the Canadian flag, it will be denying Canadians in that province the right to show and affirm that they belong to this great country. I think that is unacceptable. That is why I want to reassure my colleague and tell him that I support his Bill. If it is not adopted this afternoon, it will be soon, because sometimes the Government takes a little while to understand the will of Canadians. Perhaps this is a striking example of the heartfelt desire of Canadians to see the flag of their country on all Government buildings of the Province of Quebec.

As to the possibility of flying the flags of all provinces on Government buildings throughout Canada, I think that could be the subject of a debate. I am not sure I would like to see the flag . . . Perhaps there is a place near the Centre Block where the flags of the provinces and the territories might be flown.

In any event, I fully agree with my colleague from Terrebonne when he talks about the flag of the Province of Quebec.

I should like to remind the House that this blue and white flag has had an official status for a long time, for it was Queen Victoria who in 1868, granted the province of Quebec this blue flag with three white fleurs-de-lis. Even then, Quebec residents used to consider this flag as the true French-Canadian emblem, and I strongly support the Hon. Member for Terrebonne when he says that this flag cannot be identified with a political party, since it was granted to the province of Quebec in 1868, a long time before 1976.

He is perfectly right on this, and he can truly say that we are proud of our flag; I think that it is quite proper that we should be dealing with this issue on this day, the 23rd of June, the eve of St. John the Baptist Day, the day when French-Canadians everywhere celebrate their patron saint who has always been a source of inspiration to us, French Canadians, born and raised in the province of Quebec, together with other Canadians not necessarily of French descent but who are nevertheless good Canadians who have contributed to the good of our society and the economic development of our province.

I wish to say again to the Hon. Member for Terrebonne that I fully support his bill and that I hope, should it not go through today, that it will be passed in the near future, and I am looking forward to the day when this Canadian flag, which thrills the souls of all Canadians who can be proud of it, will fly over all government buildings in the province of Quebec.

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, you know very well how to recite the whole list. There is no problem.

I would also like to join my colleagues from Terrebonne (Mr. Comtois) and Labelle (Mr. Dupras) in discussing this legislation that has come in for second reading today. I would like to commend the Hon. Member for Terrebonne for introducing that Bill after the referendum campaign, and I feel we should hasten to pass it, because I feel it is mere political meanness not to have in this country two masts for flying first the symbol of Canadian unity, the Maple Leaf, and, second, the flag of each province. I feel this would simply be a sign of unity and pride, since there would be no contradiction between the two. We all know very well Gilles Vigneault's song "My Country is Winter". It is a factor of unity for this country to have a hard winter climate from South to North, from North to South, from East to West and Mgr. Savard has written quite an extraordinary poem entitled "My country" which closes with these words: "Happy the nations that get on well". It is my view that putting both flags side by side would simply show that the two founding groups, the French-speaking and the English-speaking, should be but one within this country, this Canada.

Of course, in Québec the problem has been harder to experience because there is a political war going on. But despite all this, Quebecers made their choice in 1980, even though the question seemed and was in fact biased. All Quebecers are proud of their flag, and that includes the Members in this House who represent not only Quebecers but also the French Canadians, but more so those who live in Quebec. It is my view that nobody who comes here in this House has any intention of giving up anything. It is just the opposite, because when we come here we try to enhance the pride of the Quebecers and promote it from sea to sea. It is important that this be stressed.

The goal pursued by the Hon. Member for Terrebonne is indeed to stress this. There is nothing as interesting as landing at Dorval Airport and seeing federal land with both flags flying side by side, and I would even say that municipal flags should also be flown. In Quebec City, at Laval University, we see a perfect example of a trilogy in completeness. There is a triangle, with a mast at each apex, and there we have the Canadian flag, the Quebec flag and the University flag, and to whatever side one may turn there is always one of them in the center.

Therefore nobody seeks the central spot because it is a perfect triangle. In Quebec as in this Chamber, we somewhat act as missionaries because we have to explain mysteries. In religion, you have the mystery of the Trinity. In politics duality must often be explained. Thus, if only we could come back to the good old triangle which would give us a perfect base, very much like in mathematics where the triangle is the perfect form for the proper distribution of weights, everybody would be proud, including municipal governments. Everyone knows perfectly well that in current debates, mention is often made that each level of government should guard its autonomy. We still can see instances in Quebec where as a result of government legislation , municipal authorities cannot receive federal funds. These debates may be seen as constitutional debates, but what the people of Quebec, of Ontario, of Manitoba want is to be able to keep a larger share of their tax revenues in their province.

Therefore I believe that the suggestion made by our colleague, the Hon. Member for Terrebonne, seconded by the Hon. Member for Labelle certainly deserves recognition and should be implemented without delay. I believe that when amendments are before the committee I think that one dealing with a mast for municipal governments should be moved. As a matter of fact quite often, when one refers to two flags, it is as though a choice had to be made between the two which in fact is never the case. You don't take away, you add instead, which I think is the important point. However, I find this quite difficult to explain to our constituents because we tend to refer to famous examples while we should think in more simpler terms, such as a family with the father, the mother and the child. There is never a choice to be made among them. A family is a sum of its members gathered in the same entity, just as you have a country made up of districts, municipalities and provinces.

The bill is quite welcomed and I support it fully. It is too bad Mr. Speaker, that we did not get it passed more rapidly and in that respect I think that Canadians have every right to complain when they see governments move so slowly. It is a little bit embarrassing to see such a simple and well balanced bill trigger so much debate. I believe we should speed up the process in this Chamber.

Perhaps the Hon. Member opposite was right a moment ago when he pointed out a slight difference when we say the flag should be required to be displayed, while the various clauses provide that it is merely desirable, that the Governor in Council may allow the flag to be displayed. I think we should simply try to standardize the formulation to ensure that there would be no contradiction. However, deep down, all we are asking for in this bill is that the Canadian flag as well as the flags of Ontario, Quebec and so on be equal everywhere, without one of them replacing another but instead, one adding to the greatness of the other. It is very interesting when we visit places like British Columbia or Newfoundland to see the Canadian flag everywhere and to come back home to see once more the Canadian flag, but this time accompanied by the provincial flag. I suggest one should try to the utmost to avoid such flag wars. These symbols are supposed to be a factor of unity while too often they are viewed as a factor of division. These are important aspects and I believe we should think about them.

More and more, Mr. Speaker, one can see, coming out of the economic crisis we have been through, an incredible tendency for Canadians to turn to the central Government in order to benefit from equal revenue everywhere. One can see federal buildings being constructed in greater number in the province of Quebec as well as other provinces, and I can see a stronger federal presence in the Maritime Provinces. I believe the federal Government should not be visible alone. It is important that the federal Government be visible together with provincial Governments, with each separate entity in every province, since that is what makes for the greatness of this country. It would be desirable that the provinces do likewise and fly the Canadian colours together with their own over all provincial buildings. It would not shock anyone. It is simply a matter of common sense.

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude by saying that I will probably introduce amendments in committee to make sure that there are also flagpoles for municipalities. Indeed it is fine to be proud of one's country and one's province, but one should also be proud of one's municipality. It is only when we can be proud of all three of them that the great unity problem is solved.

[English]

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to congratulate my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Comtois), the Hon. Member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras) and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Maltais) who has just spoken regarding Bill C-596, an Act requiring the Canadian flag and the flag of the Province to be flown on federal buildings. This Act would require the Canadian flag, the flag of each Province and the flag of the Yukon and Northwest Territories to be flown from the Parliament buildings here in Ottawa. It also calls for the Canadian flag and the flag of the Province or territory where a federal building is situated to be flown on such buildings.

As I have mentioned, I applaud the intent of this Bill which I know is based on the premise that flying the flags in such a manner will indicate the complementarity of both levels of Government in the lives of all Canadians.

I must point out, however, that there are several problems which require consideration before proceeding in such a manner. First, there is the matter of identity. For example, Canadians who are looking for services of the Government of Canada know that those services are located in buildings flying the Canadian flag. If provincial flags are also flown, confusion can arise as to exactly what kind of services are being provided in that building, whether they are federal or provincial. I believe that there should be visibility for services provided to Canadians by their national Government. The flying of the Canadian flag only on buildings owned by the Crown is one way of contributing to that necessary degree of visibility.

I think we should also consider what the Parliament buildings would look like with ten provincial flags and two territorial flags as well as the Canadian flag. I suggest that such a display would detract from the majesty of the Canadian flag flying in its solitary splendour atop the Peace Tower.

I would remind Members that a short distance from Parliament Hill is an area where all the provincial flags are flown—the Garden of Provinces. I feel that this is the appropriate place to display these flags. We should also remember that on all ceremonial occasions such as the proclamation of the Constitution last year or of Canada Day, we proudly fly the flags of Canada's Provinces and Territories at suitable locations.

I think we also must consider that it is not solely within the purview of the national Government to determine whether provincial flags should be flown along with the Canadian flag on federal buildings. I think it is important to determine the stand of the various provincial Governments and the territorial Governments on this issue. I believe the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) perhaps referred to some concerns along these same lines.

How many Provinces might agree with this type of suggestion? Surely provincial Governments also have a say in how their provincial flags are to be flown. It may be that some Provinces would not welcome the confusion of provincial flags flying from buildings owned by the Government of Canada.

I could go on but I believe that my time is up. I would certainly recommend to the House that while this suggestion is worth-while, there still needs to be much thought and consideration given to it. Again, I would like to compliment the Hon. Member for Terrebonne for bringing this private members' Bill to our attention for our consideration.

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT PROCLAMATION, 1983

MOTION TO AMEND CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice) moved:

That:

Whereas the Constitution Act, 1982 provides that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and resolutions of the legislative assemblies as provided for in section 38 thereof;

And Whereas the Constitution of Canada, reflecting the country and Canadian society, continues to develop and strengthen the rights and freedoms that it guarantees;

And Whereas, after a gradual transition of Canada from colonial status to the status of an independent and sovereign state, Canadians have, as of April 17, 1982, full authority to amend their Constitution in Canada;

And Whereas historically and equitably it is fitting that the early exercise of that full authority should relate to the rights and freedoms of the first inhabitants of Canada, the aboriginal peoples;

Now Therefore the House of Commons resolves that His Excellency the Governor General be authorized to issue a proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada amending the Constitution of Canada as follows:

PROCLAMATION AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

1. Paragraph 25(b) of the Constitution Act, 1982 is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(b) any rights or freedoms that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired."

2. Section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 is amended by adding thereto the following subsections:

"(3) For greater certainty, in subsection (1) "treaty rights" includes rights that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired.

(4) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the aboriginal and treaty rights referred to in subsection (1) are guaranteed equally to male and female persons".

3. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 35 thereof, the following section:

"35.1 The government of Canada and the provincial governments are committed to the principle that, before any amendment is made to Class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867, to section 25 of this Act or to this Part.

(a) a constitutional conference that includes in its agenda an item relating to the proposed amendment, composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces, will be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada; and

(b) the Prime Minister of Canada will invite representatives of the aboriginal peoples of Canada to participate in the discussions on that item."

4. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 37 thereof, the following Part:

"PART IV.1 CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCES

37.1 (1) In addition to the conference convened in March 1983, at least two constitutional conferences composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada, the first within three years after April 17, 1982 and the second within five years after that date.

(2) Each conference convened under subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on those matters.

(3) The Prime Minister of Canada shall invite elected representatives of the governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories to participate in the discussions on any item on the agenda of a conference convened under subsection (1) that, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, directly affects the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed so as to derogate from subsection 35(1)."

5. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 54 thereof, the following section:

"54.1 Part IV.1 and this section are repealed on April 18, 1987.

6. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following section:

"61. A reference to the Constitution Acts, 1867 to 1982 shall be deemed to include a reference to the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983."

7. This Proclamation may be cited as the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise, on what may be fairly called a historical occasion, to move a resolution to authorize His Excellency, The Governor General, to issue a proclamation respecting amendments to the Constitution of Canada.

For the first time in Canada's history we are today setting in motion a procedure for the amendment of our Constitution, a procedure that no longer requires us to have recourse to the Parliament at Westminster. And it is perhaps fitting that these first "made in Canada" amendments should relate to the rights and freedoms of the first inhabitants of Canada, the aboriginal peoples.

• (1110)

May I draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, the presence in the galleries of a number of the leaders of our aboriginal peoples.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacGuigan: We welcome their witness to this further stage in the work we have undertaken together.

The Constitution Act, 1982, which was proclaimed here in Ottawa by Her Majesty the Queen on April 17, 1982, contains three references to the aboriginal peoples of Canada.

Section 25, which is a Section in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, amounts to a rule of construction and provides that:

> The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any aboriginal, treaty or other rights of freedoms that pertain to the aboriginal peoples of Canada including
> (a) any rights or freedoms that have been recognized by the Royal Proclamation of October 7, 1763; and
> (b) any rights or freedoms that may be acquired by the aboriginal peoples of Canada by way of land claims settlement.

Section 35, which comprises Part II of the Act, is entitled "Rights of the Aboriginal Peoples of Canada." This Section is substantial in nature. It provides for the recognition and affirmation of the existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada, and goes on to define the term "aboriginal peoples of Canada" to include the Indian, Inuit, amd Métis peoples of Canada.

The Section reads as follows:

> 35. (1) The existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed.
> (2) In this Act, "aboriginal peoples of Canada" includes the Indian, Inuit and Métis peoples of Canada.

Two aspects of this provision are worthy of note. First, to the best of my knowledge Canada is one of the very few countries whose Constitutions recognize and affirm the existing rights of its aboriginal peoples. Second, never before, in any constitutional document or Act of Parliament have the aboriginal peoples been defined.

The third reference to the aboriginal peoples is to be found in Part IV which is entitled "Constitutional Conference". Part IV consists of Section 37, which reads as follows:

> 37. (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the First Ministers of the Provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada within one year after this Part comes into force.
> (2) The conference convened under Subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda an item respecting constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including the identification and definition of the rights of those peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on that item.
> (3) The Prime Minister of Canada shall invite elected representatives of the Governments of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories to participate in the discussions on any item on the agenda of the conference convened under Subsection (1) that, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, directly affects the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

● (1115)

This section is particularly interesting in that, since it stipulates that a constitutional conference shall be held within one year after the coming into force of the Constitution Act, 1982, with a view to considering possible amendments to the legislation, it implies that the legislation in question is incomplete in its present form.

In this respect, Mr. Speaker, the resolution now before us, while perforce presented as a proposed amendment, constitutes a first proposal to settle with our aboriginal peoples certain constitutional questions left unresolved.

To understand clearly the intent of the resolution which the House is considering today, we must, I feel, take into account not only the letter of the section in question, but its spirit as well.

[English]

First, you will note that the Conference agenda had to include "An item respecting constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including the identification and definition of the rights of those peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada". May I draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to a slight but deeply significant difference between the words respecting rights found in this Section, Section 37, and those found in Section 35. "The existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada", the wording used in Section 35, refer only to rights that are aboriginal in nature, or have been or may be acquired by treaty. This Section deals with Canada's historical obligations to its native peoples.

Turning to Section 37 we find a different wording with respect to rights. That Section speaks of "the identification and definition of the rights of those, that is, the aboriginal peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada".

It will be seen right away that the wording of Section 37 is much broader than that contained in Section 35. The rights in Section 37 need not be in existence. Rather, the section looks to rights not yet identified. Nor are these rights constrained by the terms "aboriginal" or "treaty". In other words, Section 37 concerns itself with the rights of the aboriginal peoples as they should be, as well as as they are.

I do not suggest that the Sections are not linked. The process of identification and definition of new rights certainly includes the identification and definition of the existing aboriginal and treaty rights referred to in general terms in Section 35.

Under normal circumstances anyone seeking identification and definition of any rights contained in the Constitution must have recourse to the courts, but Section 37 provides, for our aboriginal peoples, a political route to follow to seek identification and definition not only of rights now contained in the Constitution, but of rights to be included in the future.

I think this careful consideration of the wording of the Constitution is important to a proper understanding of what is proposed in the resolution before the House today. I hope that Hon. Members do not find it too wearisome, and I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I am rapidly coming to the close of the scriptural exegesis portion of my remarks.

Before I leave Section 37 may I draw the attention of the House to that part of the Section which provides that the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of the aboriginal peoples, "to participate in the discussions". This might be seen as the third element of the framework that underpins the special position of our aboriginal peoples in Canadian society as a whole. First, Section 25 protects the rights of aboriginal peoples by a rule of non-derogation in construction. Second, Section 35 recognizes their existing aboriginal and treaty rights, and third, Section 37 not only provides for the inclusion of further rights of aboriginal people in the Constitution but assures their participation in discussions of their rights.

• (1120)

The Constitution Act, 1982, as it is presently drafted, made a constitutional conference a definitive solution. However, it soon became very clear to all interested parties that the unresolved issues respecting the aboriginal peoples and the Constitution could not be settled in only one year and by only one conference. Early last summer, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) informed the aboriginal leaders, the provincial premiers and the territorial governments that it would be advisable to set up a permanent mechanism to replace the conference provided for in Section 37, a mechanism which would play a role no less important than the conference itself.

[English]

If I may now turn to the resolution, starting at the end rather than at the beginning, you will find, Mr. Speaker, that the new Section 37 that is proposed provides for two further constitutional conferences. The Section, as amended, continues the thrust of the original Section 37 and need not delay us further at this time.

I should at this point, however, draw to your attention that by an accord signed by the Government of Canada and by nine of the provincial Governments, with the participation of the leaders of the aboriginal associations and the territorial Governments attested by their signatures, a third constitutional conference, chronologically to be the first, is to be held within one year of the completion of the conference held in March of this year. The fact that this conference, being the first in time, is agreed to in an accord rather than contained in the proposed amended Section 37 derives from the delay involved in the operation of the amending formula. I shall deal with the amending formula in a moment.

So, Mr. Speaker, we look ahead to three further constitutional conferences that will deal with what I have earlier called the unfinished business respecting our aboriginal peoples and the Constitution, the first of these conferences to be held prior to March 16, 1984; the second, prior to April 17, 1985; and the third, prior to April 17, 1987.

The schedule and work plan that lie before us amply demonstrate, I believe, the shared commitment of the aboriginal peoples, the Government of Canada, and the provincial and territorial Governments to the completion of this aspect of constitutional renewal, the identification and definition of the rights of the aboriginal peoples.

But the security of the on-going process is not the only achievement of the constitutional conference. Turning once again to the resolution we find, first, a proposed amendment, by way of clarification, to the rule of construction in Section 25. A similar amendment, but this time substantial in nature, is proposed to Section 35 in the form of a new Subsection which makes it clear that the treaty rights referred to in that Section include "rights that now exist by way of land claim agreements or may be so acquired".

Hon. Members will be aware, Mr. Speaker, that our aboriginal peoples were eager to ensure that aboriginal rights are guaranteed equally to male and female aboriginal persons. Some confusion has ensued as to whether the wording contained in the resolution before us is that agreed upon at the conference. I can report to the House, however, that the leaders of the aboriginal peoples, showing a totally admirable generosity of spirit, have notified the Government in writing, that the wording now before us can stand, thereby avoiding delay in the process of amendment.

• (1125)

May I in this House express my thanks to those who have so kindly written to me and to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and confirm publicly today that we will revisit this issue when we meet again next year.

The proposed wording of the new equality Subsection in Section 35 as it now stands is as follows:

> Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the aboriginal and treaty rights referred to in Subsection (I) are guaranteed equally to male and female persons.

The last of the amendments proposed in the resolution before us today arises from the wish, common to all the aboriginal organizations, to have what they have described as a "consent" clause which would make it a constitutional requirement that they signify their consent to any amendment to any of the Sections of the Constitution that specifically affect them.

[Translation]

These provisions would give aboriginal peoples the right of veto with respect to certain sections of the Constitution. This would be unacceptable to the Government of Canada, since, with the exception of certain very specific cases, only the Parliament of Canada which represents all of the people of Canada enjoys a right of veto.

However, most of the conference participants acknowledged the fact that the sections of the legislation directly affecting the aboriginal peoples require special protection against possible, although, I would hope, unlikely, arbitrary intervention from one or the other of the governments.

[English]

In furtherance of this objective the resolution proposes a new Section in Part IV of the Act, to read as follows:

> 35.1 The Government of Canada and the provincial Governments are committed to the principle that, before any amendment is made to Clause 24 of Section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867, to Section 25 of this Act or to this Part,
> (a) a constitutional conference that includes in its agenda an item relating to the proposed amendment, composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the First

Ministers of the Provinces, will be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada; and,

(b) the Prime Minister of Canada will invite representatives of the aboriginal peoples of Canada to participate in the discussions on that item.

The effect of the new Section is to extend into the future the role played by the aboriginal leaders at the conference held this year and to be played by them at the three constitutional conferences, thereby giving permanent effect to the thrust of the original Section 37.

The new Section identifies Section 25 and Section 35 of the Constitution Act of 1982. We have looked at these earlier. It also identifies Section 91(24) of the Constitution Act of 1867. Hon. Members will recall that this is the provision that confers on the Parliament of Canada the exclusive right to legislate for Indians and Indian lands.

It should also be noted that the new Section is cast in the form of a commitment by the Government of Canada and the provincial Governments rather than in the form of a justiciable provision. This exceptional formulation brings me to a brief discussion of the amending formula.

As a general rule, an amendment to the Constitution of Canada calls for passage of a resolution by the Senate and Commons of Canada, and by at least seven of the legislatures of the Provinces together making up 50 per cent of the population. In the Accord to which I referred earlier, nine of the Provinces and the Government of Canada have undertaken to pass the necessary resolutions prior to December 31, 1983. Not forgetting the vagaries of the political life, I believe that this should ensure that the sought for amendments to the Constitution will be made in good time.

Turning once again to the proposed new Section 35.1, I may say that were it to be cast in the form of a justiciable provision, its effect would be to alter the amending formula. An amendment to the amending formula is one of the amendments which calls for unanimity, something which cannot be expected at this time for reasons I am sure the House will readily understand. Therefore, we have a political commitment enshrined in the Constitution. I do not feel we should see this as a lesser protection than a provision in justiciable form. Its exceptional nature tends rather to highlight it, and it will provie to be exceptionally difficult to amend or ignore.

Section 35.1 might be described, Madam Speaker, as an express convention of the Constitution. I should note that the resolution also contains a few consequential amendments, dearly beloved of lawyers but of little interest to anyone else.

Before I sit down I would like to say how impressed I was by the commitment and the diligence with which all the participants, Governments and aboriginal organizations alike, approached and pursued the long and difficult road which led to the agreement represented by the resolution before us. I believe that I can safely assert that we have opened a new chapter in the book which records the long and often sorry chronicle of the relations between Governments in Canada and our aboriginal peoples. Today, we write the first few paragraphs in this chapter. If we have the courage, the determination, and the respect for each other which is required, we can together complete this chapter, a chapter which our children and our children's children will read with pride.

It is now my great pleasure, Madam Speaker, to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia):

That the resolution be adopted.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, in his remarks the Minister referred to letters from the aboriginal peoples in which they expressed their approval of the Accord. Would the Minister be willing either to table those letters in this House or refer them to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs which will sit this evening, I believe, to consider this matter? I believe those letters will be very helpful in our deliberations.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly prepared to make those letters available. I understand they have already been sent to the Opposition spokesmen. Probably the best way to handle them at this point would be to make them available to the committee tonight when it meets to begin its deliberations.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I also take pride in standing today to debate the adoption of this resolution. I listened with great interest to the Minister as he put forward what in fact we were doing today, and I do not intend to repeat that. This is the first time that we, as a Parliament, will be discussing an amendment to our Constitution, an amendment which no longer has to go to Westminster to be adopted. I am very pleased that we are now able to do that. I take pride in whatever part I can play in furthering that process.

I would like also to congratulate the aboriginal people of this nation on the way in which they were able to fit into this process, so different from the process to which they are accustomed. This was their first conference, a conference which the federal Government and the Provinces had been participating in for decades. They were aware of the procedure to be followed as this negotiation was taking place, but the aboriginal people came there for the first time. Later in my remarks I will make reference to how the Government should have assisted them further. However, even though the aboriginal people came there for the first time, they were able to put forward their views and desires in a very forthright manner, which, I am sure, made the citizens of this nation very proud. I want to congratulate these people for doing that.

There are two issues which must be addressed by those of us here today, namely, the motion which is presented for deliberation, and the principle which is inherent in that motion. The Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) has placed this motion before the House. If passed, this motion would allow the Governor General to issue a proclamation to amend the Constitution so that two constitutional conferences, in addition to the one which is already specified in the Act, will be allowed to take place in the next number of years. What this is meant to do is to further the process of identification and definition of the rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada in order that those rights can be entrenched in the Constitution and there will be, once and for all, a protection of those people; and their culture, their language, their way of life will no longer be completely subject to the whims of whoever the politicians are in this Chamber, or other Chambers, at any one time.

This Accord arose from and was signed as a result of a process of consultation and negotiation amongst the parties I have mentioned. This motion, which I endorse, which I know everyone in this House will endorse, is one that both we in this House and the provincial legislatures of this country should pass in all haste so that this can be entrenched in our Constitution at the earliest possible date.

One issue which I believe is very serious is the principle which is implicit in the motion. This principle is of vital importance to myself and to my Party, and to the people of this country, Canada. What is being challenged here today, and in other legislatures across the country, is the very rigidity of our Constitution, and what is being expressed is its dynamism, its ability to fulfil the needs and aspirations of the peoples who together comprise the country in which we have so much pride. This is the process which we are witnessing, and to which I would like to draw attention. It is not just another motion which comes to the House day after day. This motion is in its very nature the foundation of our Constitution.

Today the Government is asking for our endorsement of the ongoing process of identifying and defining the rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada. This endorsement I wholeheartedly give, and I know my Party wholeheartedly gives. An ongoing process is the only means by which the aboriginal peoples can achieve the commitment of the country through its most sacred law, the Constitution, of their right to remain a distinct people within the framework of the Canadian federation. Although I wholeheartedly endorse this goal, the goal of entrenching these rights in the Constitution, I cannot wholeheartedly endorse the manner and the means by which we have achieved this goal.

In my opinion, the process that was witnessed by the Canadian people prior to the constitutional conference held in March of this year was totally inadequate from the start. There were many inadequacies in trying to reach the goal of those people who, in good faith, attempted to thrust Canada into the ranks of the forerunners of the world in the way in which we accommodate our aboriginal people. The processes that were undertaken can be summed up, I believe, in one sentence. Nothing was done beyond reaching a consensus that something must be done. I do not believe that was good enough. It was not good enough for me. I do not believe it was good enough for the people of this country.

It is now time for Canadians to see that in Ottawa and in the Provinces there is a will, the political will to initiate the changes necessary to ensure that the aspirations of distinct peoples, no matter where they happen to live in Canada, are given the opportunity to flourish in freedom. If we need new blood to accommodate this purpose, then let there be that new blood. Let us exhort our Ministers and the present Government and, if there is a change in Government, the new Government and new Ministers, to take part in this very necessary process of negotiation that will bring the aboriginal people and the federal Government together in discussions so that they can then meet the Provinces and bring about change.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in his opening remarks to the constitutional conference on March 15, was extremely candid, and I respected his candour. Upon reviewing his Government's record with regard to aboriginal peoples, he said the following: "If we did not succeed, it was not for lack of trying". I have watched over ten years, and I believe that he has tried. However, he has not tried hard enough. He particularly got off on the wrong foot some ten or 12 years ago. It has taken a long time for him and the Government finally to reach today's debate on this resolution. Perhaps he has tried in the same way he has tried with the other problems we are so remorsefully facing.

At the constitutional conference, a voice rang out long and clear above the din, the voice of the aboriginal people. With their collective voice they were expressing that they do have a resolve as a people. I believe that voice was heard. Television projected it right across the country. I feel that within this Chamber, and within the provincial legislatures, the voice was heard, as well. I hope it was a voice heard with understanding and not just one with sympathy. People in this country will only take notice if we, as politicians in this Chamber and in the provincial legislatures, move forward with understanding, setting in place the kinds of resoltuions and then amendments to our Constitution which will assist our first peoples to have the way of life they desire.

I must admit that the role played by the federal Government in the conference was not the role that I envisaged. As I understand its role, it is to be receptive to the distinct or perhaps divergent interests expressed by the various groups in the regions throughout the country, and then to forge national policy which, while accommodating or taking into consideration the distinct views, will express national priorities that promote the good of all of the country as a whole. That is not what I saw at the constitutional conference.

The Minister mentioned advocacy and the exclusive right of the federal Government to legislate on aboriginal matters. The Government should have brought these groups together to discuss the points of view that were so important to each group. However, the only meetings that took place between the federal Government and the aboriginal people were to discuss agenda items, not to discuss the very basic issues that were to be considered at the constitutional conference, and then take those issues to the provincial Governments. The federal Goverment played only a moderating role. It moderated the discussions which had taken place. The guidance and advocacy by the federal Government which were most clearly needed just were not there. That is why I said at the beginning that I congratulated the aboriginal people for the way in which they were able to deal with the conference.

A number of conferences have now been put in place in the Constitution. That is what we are dealing with today, in the main. It is my hope that the process that we watched before the last constitutional conference will be distinctly changed. I believe that is the case. I am certainly advocating much more discussion between the various aboriginal groups and the federal Government on the issues that are to be considered by the constitutional conference before we bring the other participants, the Provinces, down to the actual conference, so that it will not be necessary to ask the same questions which were asked at the last one. That brings me to some other points that I think must be mentioned before the next conference.

The funding of these peoples is very important and is a problem which must be addressed in debate. When the federal Government prepares itself to go to a conference to deal with the issues in a national way, there are no restrictions on the funds that it uses or on the amount of personnel that it draws from various Departments to deal with the issues put forward in position papers. When the Provinces come to a national constitutional conference, they, as well, are under no restrictions. They do everything in their power to present views, to bring forward papers and positions, with the best people that they have in their Provinces. They do not have to adhere to specific budgets. However, when we ask the aboriginal people to put forward their position, to meet sections in the constitutional conference, the Government immediately puts restrictions on the funds. I do not think that there is an argument in the sense that they should have open-ended funding, but surely it should be adequate for them to present their position in a forthright manner, because it is so important to their future and to that of the country. I do not believe that that has taken place and I hope it will be discussed in the committee hearings before we bring this resolution back for final reading in the House.

We have noticed that there are great leaders in Canada amongst the aboriginal people. They are performing very well for their people. I watched as they negotiated positions at the constitutional conference. The process must also be very cautious to ensure that, when we are not before the cameras and the public in the negotiating rooms, where some excellent work is being done, the work is recorded properly so that we do not have to have letters, such as the Minister read. The record should be correct so all groups believe the wording can go forward. That happened at the last constitutional conference. I hope the situation can be rectified and a better system established as we move into the next constitutional conference.

I am very pleased to be able to participate in this debate today. I feel proud that we, as Canadians, can now discuss constitutional amendments in this Chamber and test our amending formula. We are showing Canadians that the Constitution is not rigid and changes can be made when they are sought.

I am also very pleased that our first change to the Constitution is for the first peoples, of this nation, our aboriginal peoples. I sincerely hope that we make our best effort to see that this entrenchment is made possible in the proper manner, and that the process can continue not only on behalf of aboriginal people but of all Canadians when there is a desire that it ought to take place.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to address the House on this aboriginal rights resolution. I am taking this opportunity to speak in the absence of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly), who is on the Indian Affairs Committee and has other areas of responsibility in Indian Affairs which he must deal with today. Therefore I am pleased to speak to this resolution in his absence.

I would begin by pointing out that while our Party supports this resolution we do not do so with a sense of celebration or achievement. There remains a great deal to be done since many matters have not been dealt with in this resolution. Up to this point we have achieved a fundamental agreement to continue discussions on defining aboriginal rights. That is an achievement worthy of note in the Canadian context, but we are certainly far from completing the job.

Another accomplishment worthy of note is the affirmation of the existence of aboriginal rights. This is the first time that Canadians, through their Governments and the constitutional process, have affirmed that aboriginal rights exist. We can put that part of the debate behind us and begin to discuss what those aboriginal rights are, and historically to whom those rights belong. However, even that affirmation of aboriginal rights has been tainted by the imposition of the words "existing aboriginal rights" in that clause.

While our Party supports this resolution, we are asking today for a more adequate process of discussing aboriginal rights. First, it is incumbent upon the Government to recognize all aboriginal peoples, whether Inuit, Métis or Indian. In the process of that recognition it is also necessary to recognize the uniqueness of each aboriginal group. This is of particular concern at this point in history to the status Indians in this country because, based on long experience, they are afraid that being included in a larger group of aboriginal peoples rather than as status Indians they will lose even that small amount that they have gained up to this time. Therefore, while recognizing the rights of all aboriginal peoples, it is important also to distinguish between the groups and recognize the uniqueness of each group.

This process could also be enhanced by involving the elected political leaders of the aboriginal people and the elected political leaders of the Canadian people, both provincially and federally, in ongoing discussions. The substance of these discussions should not be simply left to federal civil servants. This would not do sufficient justice to the necessary process of negotiations.

In order for this process to lead to a greater resolution of the problems now facing us, the federal Government should be willing to lay all of its cards on the table prior to First Ministers' conferences. Before any such conference the federal Government should make its positions known sufficiently far in advance so that Indians, Inuit and Métis can study those positions and have an opportunity to give solid and well thought out feedback to the Government. It is not good enough for the federal Government or provincial Governments to take part in the process in a secretive manner. They must put all their cards on the table so that we can have a truly open discussion which will lead to the definition of aboriginal rights.

We must have an ongoing process. We cannot expect substantive negotiations to take place under the glaring TV lights of another First Ministers' conference. We all know that when politicians of whatever political stripe appear before cameras, they tend to posture and play to the audiences from the various constituences. It is crucial that the negotiations leading up to the definition of aboriginal rights continue on an ongoing basis so that the real work can be done before a First Ministers' conference is convened. This would make those conferences move like other meetings between First Ministers or heads of state which are essentially celebrations of agreement or simply the formal signing of agreements that have been negotiated before a conference. It is not good enough to leave the essential work to be done under the TV lights.

Another factor in making this process more adequate for dealing with this question concerns the provision of financial and other resources to various aboriginal groups. In order for true negotiations to take place between the federal and provincial Governments and aboriginal associations, it is absolutely crucial that the aboriginal associations have adequate resources to match those of the bureaucracies that are at the disposal of the federal and provincial politicians.

We all know that in our modern, technological society, knowledge is indeed power. Political leaders gain access to knowledge through their ability to hire experts from various fields and form them into a working team. When a political leader enters into negotiations he will have solid facts with which to back up whatever position he is taking. Therefore, adequate resources are crucial to meaningful negotiations over the definition of aboriginal rights.

Our Constitution is not simply a written document which is displayed as a poster or library artifact. The Constitution of Canada is not simply that document we call the Constitution of Canada, the Canada Act or whatever appellation we give it, having abandoned the notion or the name of the British North America Act; the Constitution obviously is that document and the rules under which we form our Governments. It is also the document by which we govern ourselves on a day to day basis. I mention this because the way we govern ourselves as a nation on a day to day basis colours the perceptions we have of the Constitution and of the Constitution negotiations affecting aboriginal peoples. It provides the context within which the aboriginal peoples come to the constitutional table.

I want to make a couple of references in this respect. First, the Canada Lands Act, the legislative document which virtually gives absolute power to the federal Government in terms of development of resources in the north, clearly is a constitutional document even though it was brought about through legislative means.

How can we talk about recognizing in a true sense the aboriginal rights of the native people in this country in a context in which we have already given over the governing of the natural resources in the north to the federal Government to its agencies and through that to the large corporations which seek to develop those resources in the north? Clearly, there is no real definition of aboriginal rights, particularly to those people in the north, without some meaningful access to those resources. Until those kinds of legislative actions are changed, then the fine words of an aboriginal bill of rights or of some constitutional document will have very little meaning. Native people know this and it colours the perception of what happens in the constitutional process.

As I said, the Constitution is not just the constitutional document but it sets the way we govern ourselves on a day to day basis. In the way we govern ourselves as a nation we have neglected many and most of the basic human needs of native people whether for housing, education, training or health care. All of these basic human needs have been neglected. Take employment, for example. Even the official employment statistics of Canada do not take into account employment or unemployment on reserves. This is a simple statistical measure of what is going on in the country. We all know, Mr. Speaker, that unemployment on the reserves is something in the neighbourhood of 80 per cent or 90 per cent. This applies not only to the reserves but to the Métis communities as well. It is difficult to celebrate historical constitutional agreements in a context in which the vast majority of aboriginal people are unemployed, are suffering from lack of housing, inadequate education or are frustrated in their particular need to develop themselves. But this is the context in which we are discussing the constitutional recognition of aboriginal rights.

It is not only important at this moment to call for a more adequate process in terms of how we define aboriginal rights in a document, but it is also important to call for a more adequate process as to how the various governments in Canada go about meeting the needs of aboriginal people. Let me say as well that it is not only native people who have this experience of absence of any real action to meet their needs, but this experience has become common to many Canadians. It is most clearly evident today in the totally unacceptable high levels of unemployment. As we seek to better the constitutional process as it affects the definition of aboriginal rights and as it affects the needs of native people, we must also seek to change and to better the process by which we govern ourselves so that we can meet the needs of all Canadians; for there are many today whose heeds are neglected.

Let me return to the specific substance of the resolution before us. I conclude by saying that it is worthy to note there was an agreement at the federal-provincial level to continue the discussions to seek and to search for a definition of aboriginal rights. It is worth while noting that the next to last meeting of First Ministers was able to reach an agreement as a result of considerable pressure from public opinion that the existence of aboriginal rights must be affirmed. However inadequate these measures have been, it is worthy to note this progress. But we must also at the same time note that a great deal is left to be done. The way we do it is crucial and important. We must call for an effort to do a better job and to do more.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are Hon. Members rising to ask questions or make comments? If not, the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate briefly in this debate regarding the constitutional accord on aboriginal rights which was agreed to at the First Ministers' aboriginal leaders conference on March 15-16, 1983. As I understand it, this resolution will be sent to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development later today where we will hear some witnesses and deal with the resolution at greater length. As the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) pointed out earlier this morning, this is the first amendment to the Canadian Constitution to be dealt with by Parliament under the new constitutional amendment formula.

Let me say at the outset that the conference in March was itself an important first step in recognizing the sovereign status of the first nations of this continent. It was encouraging to observe the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Premiers sitting down at the same negotiating table as the leaders of our Indian, Inuit and Métis peoples and to see how well our aboriginal people put forward their views and how well prepared they were. I was encouraged by the reaction of Canadians right across this country who watched this conference on television and commented so positively on the participation of our aboriginal peoples.

This is how it was in our earlier history when our British and French ancestors recognized the first nations of this continent, the Inuit, the Micmac, the Montagnais, the Iroquois, the Ojibway, the Cree, the Bloods, the Sarcee, the Dakotas, the Nishga, the Dene and the Athabaskans, to mention only a few of the first nations who lived on this continent as sovereign nations and as our allies. If we look back at those earlier times when the Europeans first came to this continent and made contact with these nations we will recall they treated our first nations people as their allies and they recognized their great value as allies. This is evident in the Royal Proclamation of 1763 and in the treaty making process that was observed in earlier days, just as we have started to do again when representatives of the monarchy met as equals with the leaders of the first nations to negotiate and sign these treaties.

Since last September I have had the good fortune to work with a special committee of this House on Indian self-government. We have heard witnesses from all over this country during the last number of months on subject matters which relate very closely to the subjects discussed in this accord. During the sessions where we heard witnesses on the subject, one main theme was repeated over and over again, that the aboriginal peoples of the country wanted us to recognize their right to self-government within the Canadian federation. They are not asking us to grant the right to self-government because they feel they have had it for centuries and centuries. They want us to recognize it very clearly, not just in a statement of the Government, not just in an ordinary statute, but in the Constitution where it will be enshrined like other levels of government and protected from changes which might be made through the ordinary legislative process by one government or another that might be elected. They want the same protection for their basic aboriginal rights as the minorities in Canada would like for their human, political and legal rights.

The statement by the Prime Minister at the outset of the conference was extremely important. I will refer to it very briefly. He rejected the idea of assimilation of aboriginal peoples and said that we should work toward establishing distinct institutions and arrangements for aboriginal governments. While several proposals had been made concerning aboriginal government, he said that they varied from group to group, from region to region. Also the Prime Minister indicated in his statement that there was plenty of room for variation in the range of options and full scope for serious discussion. He has gone on record for entrenching these very important rights in the Constitution.

In the Constitution Act, 1981, as was already pointed out by the Minister of Justice, there were certain provisions relating to aboriginal rights. Section 25 gave a certain priority to aboriginal rights over matters in the Constitution and in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Section 35 recognized and affirmed aboriginal and treaty rights. Section 37 provided for the aboriginal rights conference which took place in March of this year. While those provisions were important, they had certain shortcomings which were pointed out by the leaders of our aboriginal peoples. The inclusion of the word "existing" in Section 35 has left us with a statement that is ambiguous. It is on the agenda for further consideration that that term be removed so that it is a very clear and precise statement with respect to aboriginal and treaty rights.

In addition, the Constitution Act, 1981 made no provision for a consent clause with respect to amendments or some other process whereby aboriginal peoples must be involved in a bilateral process relating to amendments. Finally, the Act did not go into detail or definition on what are aboriginal and treaty rights and how they should be more explicitly defined in the Constitution.

The Accord has dealt with some of these matters and kept others on the agenda. The Accord put forward the agreement that there must be at least three further constitutional conferences to deal with these matters. If we look at the Accord, we will note the types of things which still remain to be done—removal of the word "existing" from Section 35; a preamble which would deal with the general principles relating to aboriginal rights; the definition of aboriginal rights; enforcement of aboriginal rights; the question of the amendment formula; self-government; repeal of Section 42(1)(e) and Section 42(1)(f); and amendments to Part III regarding equalization and the funding of aboriginal governments. Also the Accord provided for certain specific constitutional amendments, some to Section 25 and others to Section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1981. These are principally concerned with the recognition of rights set out in modern land claims or aboriginal claims settlements.

With respect to the process—and the speaker just before me went into some detail on this—I would ask the Government to be more open and more forward in its dealings with aboriginal leaders and that the consultation process be one in which there is openness and frankness in positions and in discussing those positions. I would ask the Government to adopt the spirit which was clear in the Royal Proclamation of 1763 and treat these representatives as leaders of people who have been present on this continent for thousands of years, as people who before contact with the Europeans had governments, their own laws, cultures, languages, religions and economies and never willingly gave them up.

This Accord is an important first step, but there is still much to be done. As a Member of Parliament I look forward to working with the Government and my colleagues in the House and getting on with the job.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there Hon. Members who are rising to ask questions? Debate.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments on this important and historic procedure. The conference between the Government of Canada and the Provinces, the constitutional partners, partners in Confederation, together with the Indian people, set in place a process through which age old questions should be answered: what are the rights of our aboriginal people and what is their relationship to the other partners in Confederation, particularly the federal Government?

The resolution reached in March did little else than establish future meetings. Section 25 of the Constitution indicates that our Constitution is not to abrogate or derogate from any aboriginal rights or any other rights. The qustion which has been with us for 220 years this coming October concerns what these rights mean. The Royal Proclamation of 1763 was very specific about some of these rights, and of course our aboriginal people are saying that the treaties and the negotiations which took place at that time and subsequently were treaties and negotiations that were carried on within or between sovereign partners or equal partners.

Let me quote very briefly one Section of the Royal Proclamation of 1763:

> And whereas it is just and reasonable, and essential to our interest and the security of our colonies, that the several nations or tribes of Indians with whom we are connected—

I emphasize the word "nations".

> —and who live under our protection, should not be molested, or disturbed in the possession of such parts of our dominions and territories as, not having been ceded to or purchased by us, are reserved to them, or any of them, as their hunting-grounds; we do therefore, which the advice of our Privy Council, declare it to be our Royal will and pleasure that no Governor or Commander-in-Chief in any of our colonies—

It continues but I do not want to spend too much time quoting these sections. This document founded the courts and is the basis of the argument which aboriginal people have laid before us throughout time in favour and in support of the fact that they have been, and still are in a sense, sovereign people under the protection of the federal Government.

Many different things are expressed in the term "aboriginal rights". By any definition, it clearly means the right to self-determination and self-government. This was made known to us in no uncertain terms throughout the hearings of the special task force which travelled across the country over the last year in order to advise the Government on necessary changes to the relationship between the federal Government and the Indian people. It was made clear that it also establishes the trust relationship between the federal Government and the Indian people.

That trust has been the source of much misunderstanding, misinterpretation and controversy. Trust means paternalism, a trustee and a dependent. Paternalism means dependency. It is this trust relationship that has rendered the aboriginal people in this country so dependent on the other forms of government which have taken over throughout the country, with the exception of the land which was set aside directly for the use of Indian people, namely the Indian reserves.

We have begun to look at the term "trust" and have attempted to break it down into different components. First, there is a legal trust, the basis for which is in the Royal Proclamation of 1763 and in a number of arrangements and agreements. It is part of the treaties we have entered into with the native people. It is also part of a whole range, about a dozen or so, of international agreements and convenants to which we are signatories in terms of the United Nations and so on. Therefore, there is a legal trust.

Strangely enough, reasoned decisions in our courts would argue that there is no legal trust but rather a political trust which the federal Government has with the Indian people. Not being a lawyer, I find this very strange. How can there be a political trust which is exercised by the Parliament of Canada and the Government of Canada when the people who are the dependants of this political trust cannot exercise any political power? That is overstating the fact somewhat, but before 1960 Indian people could not vote. They had no exercise of political rights. How can there be a political trust when the dependant has no control over the politician who exercises the trust?

In today's circumstances, Indian people have the right to vote, unlike the apartheid notion which we find so abhorrent in other jurisdictions. Since 960, Indian people in Canada can vote. It took a little longer in Quebec before the right to vote was granted, but that is only 23 years ago. Now they have some political power.

What does this really mean? They are not electing themselves a government because the Secretary of State, the Minister of Public Works, the Minister of Supply and Services, the Minister of National Health and Welfare or the Minister of Labour have no jurisdiction over Indians. The Indian people do not elect themselves a government. When they vote in a federal election they elect themselves a trustee, but they have no right to name the person who is to be the trustee. All they can do is name the Government which in turn will appoint their trustee.

The Indian Act rests under the jurisdiction of the Minister in charge of Indian affairs. He is the trustee, the parent. It is on him that the Indian people of this country are dependent. He is the Minister of labour, Minister of health, Minister of education and Minister for all other services which the Indian people receive from the federal Government. Everything is channelled through this Minister, who spends $1.2 billion a year for services to Indian people.

There is no accountability to the Indian people by this Minister. You can argue all you want, Mr. Speaker, but even though the Indian people have the right to vote, they are not equal. That privilege is totally meaningless to them because they are not electing themselves a Government but a trustee, and they have no input as to who that trustee will be.

The trust can be broken down into different categories. There is the certain trust that relates to political rights, the right to vote and all other matters of a political nature. Then there is the trust that relates to the so-called social contract; health care, education, health and safety, housing and so on. There is a third category, a crucial category. It relates to the land and the resources about which the Indian people are arguing and which are guaranteed to them by the Proclamation of 1763. That is their very special right to the land and resources of all of this nation which have not been ceded to any federal or provincial powers or have not been purchased. That is the trust which the federal Government and other Governments have in terms of assuring that Indian people will always have the right to adequate resources plus an adequate land base to pursue their traditional lifestyles.

That is a promise that will be exceedingly difficult to keep. The treaties grant the Indian peoples the right to live their traditional lifestyle—to hunt, fish and gather as long as the grass grows and the wind blows and the sun shines. In a global sense, the land base and the natural resource base in shrinking very dramatically. It will be exceedingly difficult for us to live up to this trust and obligation that we assumed when we entered into the treaties with the Indian people, treaties of peace and friendship, and proclaimed the Royal Proclamation in 1763 ensuring these kinds of rights.

The committee which has been travelling across the country and holding hearings has been looking at all of these matters. There is no doubt that the new approach is crucially important. We have assumed an entirely new obligation through the patriation of the Constitution in terms of coming to grips with the definition of the term "aboriginal rights", what the trusts mean, how the trusts have been honoured and how the obligations have been satisfied.

It is the work of this committee and the ongoing constitutional conference to come to grips with that. We must restore the rights of Indian peoples, and come to grips with the definition of what these rights mean. Recommendations must be made which will lead to redressing all grievances and the fulfilment of unfulfilled obligations connected with those trusts.

I do not have to state that the social conditions are deplorable. They have earned us the condemnation of people throughout the world. They cannot understand, as I cannot understand, how it is possible to have such an important segment of the population live in such deprived and deplorable conditions. The aboriginal people do have special rights. These rights require a special relationship within Confederation and a special relationship with the federal Government. Indian people, therefore, have not been too excited by the prospect of seeing provincial Premiers sit in on these constitutional talks, because by their interpretation of the covenants and treaties we have entered into and the Royal Proclamation of 1763, it is the federal Government and indeed the Queen herself that is responsible for their rights.

It is the federal Government that has this special trust responsibility and it is the federal Government that is responsible for them in the sense of a "dependent nation status", so to speak. This is a term that is used in other countries, such as the United States where the idea of a domestically independent nation is entrenched in the Constitution. This gives Indian nations, for example the Navahoes, a sovereign jurisdiction within a certain framework of powers and jurisdictions, but makes them dependent on the Government of the United States for a number of things that a small and weak nation cannot look after for itself.

The courts in Canada have been mute on this subject. It has not been tested in the courts to the satisfaction of the Indian people and thee is very little jurisprudence to assist the ongoing constitutional talks and committee discussions in defining these terms. However, it is clear that the term "aboriginal rights" as it is now entrenched in the Constitution must be defined in future, not only by the courts but also through the political process.

There is no doubt in my mind that Parliament and the Government has a role to play in defining the term "aboriginal rights". What does the term mean? How will it help us to redress some of the injustices of the past? How will it help the native people of this land to achieve a standard of living and self-determination which is equitable and fair and comparable to the standards enjoyed by the rest of us in this land which is blessed with such riches and favour?

These are just a few thoughts, Mr. Speaker, that I have had on the subject. As you know, we are very much in favour of having this process accelerated and having these matters dealt with in a most expedient manner. There is no doubt that the Indian people have a right to participate in the process that will lead to the necessary changes. There is no doubt in anyone's mind today that we must break down the paternalistic system which has rendered the native people so dependent on the white man's institutions and culture, which is in many cases alien to their own traditions and cultures. There is no doubt that Indian people must be given equity even in terms of the covenants that have been signed and the international standards to which we have agreed.

We must come to grips with the fact that Indian people have certain rights which are in addition to those that we enjoy in a democratic and free nation. These rights, of course, relate to their aboriginal rights, to the fact that the Indian people were here 8,000 years ago as we now know. At that time they had a system of self-government with their own culture and religion. The white man did not discover a virgin land. The land was populated by people with their own institutions which in most cases functioned well. These people have never surrendered the right to the land which they possessed since time immemorial, nor did they surrender the right to look after their affairs and therefore the right to self-government.

We look forward with some anxiety and with a spirit of cooperation to these talks which will begin again certainly within one year of March 16, 1983, and we in this Party have prepared ourselves to make whatever contribution possible to bring these talks to a just, reasonable and expedient conclusion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any Hon. Members rising to ask questions? The the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen).

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I know there are other Hon. Members who want to participate in this debate so my comments will be short. I hope to be allowed to add something to the debate today.

The Minister has indicated that as this is the first proposed amendment to the Constitution, it will be an historic occasion. I would agree with him that it will be an historic occasion, but only if the federal and provincial Governments are prepared to follow through on what is held out at the present time as great promise.

In my view, there is much in the proposed amendment to encourage native peoples but there are many things to discourage them. I would hope that the native peoples particularly would not lose patience as we in the House sometimes lose patience with the slowness by which things happen. It is probably presumptuous of me to suggest that they must have patience, because if any group has displayed that particular trait, it has been the native peoples who over the years have seen many of their rights taken away as a result of legislation like the War Measures Act and as a result of an unthinking white population that moved into areas in which they had no particular jurisdiction and no particular right.

I believe I was fortunate because very early in my childhood my parents saw fit to point out to me that our native peoples, particularly those in northern Ontario as I am from the Sudbury area, took such pride in their heritage. Hardly one occasion went by where the natives were not present putting their particular culture, their dances and their religion, on display. They taught us much about their language and the respect they had for themselves, and particularly the respect they had for their environment. So I grew up with a profound respect for our native peoples.

Subsequent to that, when I left high school I had the opportunity to live in the Northwest Territories for a couple of years where I met Inuit and northern Indian populations. Here again, if for no other reason than sheer survival, they were able to carve out for themselves a livelihood, something that we would have been hard pressed to do without the talents and skills and dedication that they brought to that particular project.

Having grown up with that kind of respect for these people, it was only natural that when I first came to Parliament I saw fit to serve as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I could detect at almost each and every meeting of that Committee the frustration experienced by people who came before us when we would say to them: "Yes, we want to change that Section in the Indian Act that discriminates against women; yes, we want to do something but we have agreed that we will not amend the Indian Act until the whole of the Indian Act is changed." So many of the wishes and aspirations of the native peoples were crushed as a result of delay. This is one of those things that illustrates the phrase "justice delayed is justice denied".

We now have an opportunity to show good faith, and I hope that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the First Ministers meet, the good feeling that is shared by all in the Chamber here today will be evident. Everybody wants to do that which is right. I hope we will see fit to do so.

I would say to the native peoples that they must remember that we are often dealing with a constituency that has no sense of history and, unhappily and all too often, very little knowledge of history. So the people of this constituency judge a situation as the result of what happened to them last week, or something they saw occur two years ago, or a bad experience as a result of one dealing with a native person. Their whole decision making process is framed around that particular type of criteria rather than the criteria of history. The history of Canada should move every Canadian person to do a little studying and reading about the splendid history of our native peoples.

I do not want to misquote, but I believe one of the Catholic Orders said something to the effect that it is better to light a candle than to stand and curse the darkness. While individual Members of Parliament, to their credit, have been lighting those candles across the country, I want to say a particular word of appreciation to the late Hon. Bob Andras who had a very short stint as Minister responsible for Indian Affairs. The statements he made 14 or 15 years ago when he held that portfolio gives some sense of the feeling he had for the native peoples and how he was trying to hurry up the process before it became "too late", in his words. He gave us a springboard from which we were able to launch what is taking place today.

I do not think any of us who were in the House when the late Hon. Arthur Laing was here will forget the sense of frustration that he felt all too often when he was prepared to give local autonomy, when he was prepared to make money available and when he visited individual reserves and said: "We have to find the money to do this. We will worry about the jurisdiction later but let us get the work done. This is what the local people want so let us find the money for it." He was the kind of Minister who took the initiative.

The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) is a former Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and he has not set down the torch. He is not the kind of individual to back away from a tough assignment even when it seems particularly unpopular. I am proud to call him an associate because his heart and his mind are set on helping the people. He does not do this in a grandfatherly or patronizing way but almost as one of our native peoples. It is a pleasure to count him as a colleague in the House of Commons.

As individual Members of Parliament we must take care that abuses do not occur that would dispel the good feeling that exists in the House today. I think particularly of the War Measures Act which was used in the 1940s to move the Chippewas of the Kettle Point reserve from a great piece of property on to a very small piece of property. They were paid chicken feed for the property and some of the money they were paid was used to cover the expenses of the move. That was clearly an injustice and it took almost 40 years for the Chippewas of Sarnia and of Kettle Point to right that particular wrong. I do not think it can ever be corrected, Mr. Speaker. If it took 40 years to correct that, we can understand the frustration in the native community. Let us give them the local autonomy that Arthur Laing spoke of, but we must also give them a sense of meaningful participation in the discussions to be held in the future.

I hope the Ministers will commit themselves to making at least one major change on behalf of our native peoples at each conference. Only in this way will they be able to show good faith. It is not good enough to have one meeting and agree to have another. We are saying to the native people that we want to do something to right so many of these wrongs. We can only do this if the Ministers make the commitment to the native peoples that they will make certain that such and such a thing is done, not that they will have another meeting.

The native peoples have an awesome responsibility to make reasonable claims. I am not certain that I can define the word "reasonable". They must recognize that in order to get something through the political process, the moderates have to be convinced. If they are not moderate in their approach, they will lose the support of the people who want to help but who are at present sitting on the fence wondering which way to fall. If they are given something they can hold on to it will be easier to get things done in the future.

Money must be made available, of course. The Member of the New Democratic Party who spoke mentioned that research funds must be made available. In this day and age no one can operate without funding and the money must be made available to the native peoples as a right. It should not be suggested that there is a conflict of interest as a result of the federal Government or the provincial Government making funds available; the money should have been available to the native peoples a long time ago. If they are to be able to hire people to do the proper research and to set forth the changes that they want, then the money must be there for them.

The bands must take concerted action. It has often been complained that the native people cannot make up their minds because one group says one thing and another group says another. Of course they have different approaches, Mr. Speaker. They must make an effort toward a concerted approach, however, with the understanding that when there is a B.C. problem, a northern Ontario problem or a northern Canada problem, someone will take the initiative and the leadership. A concerted approach will be effective. If the demands are seen by the moderates in Canadian society as being strident, they will not be as effective. A concerted approach will receive support and backing on all sides of the House and then perhaps we can do something which perhaps should have been done more than 100 years ago.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, the amendment to Canada's Constitution which is before us today, has my support and I am pleased to say a few words in support of it and to offer advice on the direction that should be taken within the Department and also in preparation for the next conference.

I think it is important to call to mind the event which led us to this juncture in our history. The Special Committee on the Constitution, after much discussion, debate and compromise, agreed to incorporate into the proposal at that time an amendment which became known as the aboriginal rights amendment. Because of the lack of time today, I will not go into the history of the events that surrounded that amendment after the resolution left the Committee. Suffice it to say that, through the leadership of the aboriginal people of Canada, their supporters, and I would say the underlying goodwill and sense of fair play of many Canadians, the aboriginal rights amendment was placed back in the resolution. That was necessary and I am pleased that it took place. That event has allowed us to take what are sometimes faltering steps forward in the recognition of the rights of Canada's aboriginal citizens.

The amendment before us today does the following things, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I believe it reaffirms the entrenchment of aboriginal rights, if it needed the reaffirmation. What is needed in preparation for future conferences is discussion and a great measure of patience. All too often I think there has been a lack of patience in the dealings that take place between the aboriginal peoples, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and various federal Governments. Despite the length of time that has elapsed in dealing with matters relating to the aboriginal peoples, patience and understanding have been lacking not only between the partners who were negotiating, but often in the larger Canadian community.

What is needed is an explanation of what is happening in terms of this amendment and, equally important, what is happening in the community of Canadians of aboriginal descent. Personally, I am enthusiastic about some of the changes I see. The stereotype image of Canada's aboriginal peoples, which unfortunately is still resident in the minds of many Canadians, must be changed. I suggest that this is the task not only of the Indian leadership but also of Parliamentarians.

I want to emphasize again that the underlying factor for Canada's aboriginal peoples, the so-called people with status, is set out in Section 91. I want to urge the federal Government and the aboriginal people to see to it that the federal responsibility as its relates to Section 91 and the Indian people of Canada remains intact. That is of paramount importance in any discussion of future changes. What this amendment does, Mr. Speaker, is put forward the fact that there will be conferences held at regular periods of time, not only to have discussion, but I hope to put the imprint of approval on discussions which took place before the conference. I am convinced, as I view federal-provincial conferences, that it is much more important to put the imprimatur on past discussions and decisions rather than it being a conference held in the light of the media where bargaining is taking place right there on the floor. We are now at a juncture where I believe we have defined at least the parameters of the areas which need discussion. What we now need to do is define the issues. I believe the First Ministers' conference, along with the aboriginal leadership, as is called for in this amendment, could verify those discussions and that preparatory work. However, I do not believe that this House is correct in emphasizing only constitutional amendments.

During the period of the Government of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), the concentration which our Government placed on aboriginal people centered around some very practical manifestations of the fact that there must be examples or models of success, in order to start to change the stereotype which was so resident among many Canadians. The emphasis must be, surely, that while constitutional amendments are of value, while these issues are of vital importance—and my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) has given much leadership, for instance, on the question of Section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act—there are matters which other Canadians take for granted in their daily lives which have to be addressed by the Department. These are decent housing; education—how can we talk about a future for Canadians if we do not stress the opportunity for education—jobs and the self-reliance and independence which comes from jobs; and opportunities, identified not always paternalistically by the Department but rather by the Indians, its leadership and its people. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I believe, if these conferences are to be a success, between now and those dates we must show the larger Canadian community that there are models of success, that there are good things happening among Canada's Indian community.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that there would be that kind of attitude within the Department of Indian Affairs, as I hope will be recommended by the committee on self-government. I would like to commend the members of that committee, as well as the chairman, the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner). I do not sit on that committee, but generally we on this side of the House would agree on the type of leadership being given to that committee in trying to resolve problems and give advice to this House. My colleague the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) and my colleague the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellengerger) are Hon. Members who have spent a lot of time trying to address the real issues, not only of self-government but how in a practical day to day manifestation can the aboriginal people of Canada take over the same levers of leadership which the rest of us take for granted in the communities in which we live. That has been the focus of these Hon. Members and I commend them for it. Therefore, if I can give any advice, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the members of the Department of Indian Affairs would look at the kind of direction which the committee on self-government is giving, not as a threat to the Department but rather as an opportunity to Canadians.

I would hope that the Department would not look upon these efforts as being a threat to dismantle the Department. I am one who has been in charge of that Department for a period of time and I am absolutely convinced that we can largely reduce both the cost of administration and the size of that Department. If we truly believe in self-government, let us give it to the leadership which the Indian people are developing. Of course, there are risks, but let us do it. Let us not procrastinate any longer.

What is happening is that there are two towers of bureaucracy which have developed. One is the traditional Department of Indian Affairs bureaucracy. As the Indian leadership is developing, so is their administration developing. We have these twin towers of administration which now must be sustained. However, we will never, I suggest, have sufficient funding for housing, for education and for economic development if we sustain these two bureaucratic towers. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, let us take some of these risks. I hope over the next period of time before the next conference that the practical matter will be addressed as to how we can not only better serve Canadians of aboriginal descent, but that these people can take their rightful place in leading their own people.

The other piece of advice I would like to give to the federal Government is to suggest that it take its role seriously. At the next conference the Federal Government should not act only as chairman but should act under the responsibilities of Section 91. It should tell Canadians and Canadian Indian leaders what the Government's position is and how it sees its relationship to Canada's emerging Indian leadership. If that is done, then I believe the amendment which we are today hopefully passing will be the harbinger of changes which all of us want to see in that community.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, is it appropriate for me to say a few words in a speech as opposed to a question or a response?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has been recognized.

2020;-1 Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) for allowing me to say a few brief words on what is becoming a most historical day for Canada's aboriginal people. I would like to encourage the Government to consider three or four points when it returns once again to the table with the leadership of the aboriginal peoples of Canada. I believe the Government should lay out its position clearly before the conference so that the participants of the conference will have a clear understanding of how the federal Government of Canada perceives the next number of years of this transition period.

I believe there is still a considerable amount of confusion in the minds of aboriginal people in terms of understanding clearly the present position of the federal Government, and just where the federal Government sees this process moving in the next number of years as the inevitable dismantling of the Department of Indian Affairs takes place.

I would like also to encourage the federal Government, Mr. Speaker, to recognize the differences, when it comes to concerns over aboriginal rights, between the Métis and Inuit peoples. It should recognize that not only are their concerns different, but they come to the table with different histories and different concepts of what their role in the future may be in terms of their rights.

I would like as well to encourage the Government to be sensitive to the concerns of native women's groups when it comes to discussing the concept of aboriginal rights. Too often we have seen their concerns ignored or perhaps glossed over during these very important discussions.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I would like to encourage the federal Government to ensure that the various players during this very important period of time have adequate funds for the preparation of their submissions so that, indeed, we can ensure that the highest quality of discussion takes place at these ongoing and most important meetings coming up in the immediate future.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock p.m., pursuant to Order made Thursday, June 23, 1983, the motion is deemed to be referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

EDUCATION

APPLICATION OF GOVERNMENT RESTRAINT PROGRAM TO UNIVERSITY TUITION FEES

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, the six and five program was supposed to be a two-edged sword. Wages would be restricted to an increase of 6 per cent, but so would the price of goods and services; especially, the services provided by the Government directly or through agencies or funded programs.

Let us consider how university students, 500,000 strong across Canada, fared with the six and five program. Post-secondary education was one of the first victims of Government spending cutbacks. Over $100 million was sliced from the federal transfer payment in 1983. The shortfall must be recovered from private contributions and tuition fees.

This is what happened. In July, 1982, the then Secretary of State said that any increase in tuition fees would be held to the 6 per cent cap because of governmental funding. He was wrong. In Nova Scotia, university tuition fees increased on a range from 12 per cent to 16 per cent. Now Canadian university students face a second round of tuition fee increases for the 1983-84 academic year. Instead of the promised 5 per cent, some universities have already scheduled increases of 17 per cent and more; and additional expense of $150 or more for each student.

This financial burden is imposed in the face of alarming statistics related to student and youth unemployment. The Government is not only breaking its six and five promise, but it will also be throwing away the key to the future of many young Canadians.

STATUS OF WOMEN

SUGGESTED INCLUSION IN COMMITTEES' TERMS OF REFERENCE

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, this morning the Government announced a new program of affirmative action in the federal Public Service and federal Crown corporations. It announced, as well, a commission of inquiry to investigate and recommend most effective forms of its implementation. In view of this announcement, I rise today in order to highlight a matter which the Government sees as a central priority of its concern. The matter relates to the status of women in Canada.

The Government is committed to enhancing the role of women in all facets of our society. It is an ongoing and ever present commitment, clearly and unequivocally perceived. In order to ensure that this ongoing process is maintained and, indeed, strengthened, I propose the following. In view of the fact that 90 per cent of all legislation introduced into this House has a direct impact on women, and in view of the fact that all Cabinet documents now include a provision requiring status of women consideration, I propose a recommendation of the House to the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedures. This recommendation would constitute the requirement that all terms of reference under which parliamentary standing committees, special committees and subcommittees operate, address and provide for status of women considerations.

It is my view, and one with which all of us in the House cannot help but concur, that this additional focus on the legislative impact on Canadian women will go a long way toward meeting the Government's commitment to true gender equality in all facets of Canadian life.

NEW EMPLOYMENT EXPANSION AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

EFFECT ON INDIAN COMMUNITIES AND INDIVIDUALS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, it is not an exaggeration to say that today unemployment is the greatest threat to peace and stability in our society. It harms not only individuals but their families and communities as well. In an attempt to confront the problem, the federal government created the NEED Program. But this program has had little effect on Indian communities where unemployment soars as high as 90 per cent. It is in communities such as these where the NEED Program is most urgently required, yet it is precisely these communities that benefit least from it.

For example, wages for employees paid through the Department of Employment and Immigration are not to exceed $800 per month worked. Status Indians cannot, however, receive over $500 of NEED monies per month worked. This amounts to $300 less per month than the sum allotted to non-Indians. If this is not discrimination, I don't know what is!

Moreover, projects approved on Indian reserves are required to follow accounting, administrative, and monthly reporting procedures established for the initiative. This monthly accounting requirement, established by the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs, is substantially more onerous than that for projects approved through the Department of Employment and Immigration.

Thus, in Indian communities where unemployment is a potentially more hazardous problem than in non-Indian communities, less money has been made available to individuals, and greater obstacles to the initiation and management of work projects have been created.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

TRIBUTE TO FIFTEEN-YEAR VETERANS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 21. I want to draw the attention of the House to the historic date last Saturday, namely, June 25, when 15 years ago, in 1968, 24 Members of Parliament were first elected to sit in this Chamber. The Class of '68 includes Party Leaders, Ministers, Privy Councillors from all three political Parties, chief Government Whips on both sides of the House, Deputy Chairmen of Committees, Parliamentary Secretaries, and Chairmen of many important House and caucus committees, all in all, a very distinguished and outstanding group of parliamentarians.

Likewise, the Right Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mr. Trudeau) was first elected as Prime Minister on June 25, 1968, and has served in that role these past 15 years, but for a brief nine-month sabbatical.

This has been a period of tremendous development for our country—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Foster: —in which many historic milestones—

Mr. Lewis: And the deficit.

Mr. Foster: —have been achieved by Canadians, by this Parliament and by this Government, which will ensure a better and brighter future for our children.

Mr. Blenkarn: And a $130 billion debt.

Mr. Foster: I know that all Members of the House will want to note this historic date and the outstanding contribution made to this—

Mr. Paproski: Name them all.

Mr. Foster: —to this country by the Class of '68.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

EXPLOSION OF FRENCH NEUTRON BOMB ON PACIFIC ATOLL

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, today we have learned that the Government of France has exploded a neutron bomb on an atoll in the Pacific Ocean. The French Defence Minister, Charles Hernu, told the Western German magazine, Der Spiegel, that if French President François Mitterand wishes production of the neutron bomb to begin, such production could begin immediately. I am raising this matter today because I want the House to know that we in this Party are opposed to this action by the French Government.

Plans by the United States to produce neutron bombs were shelved a number of years ago by former U.S. President Jimmy Carter but, in 1981, President Ronald Reagan decided to go ahead with the neutron bomb. We in the NDP have condemned the American decision on this weapon, the so-called capitalist bomb, which is designed to kill people in scenes of mass carnage but to leave real estate intact.

We are opposed to U.S. defence plans which create more and more lethal and sneakier methods of destruction, just as we oppose plans by the Soviet Union which contribute to the arms race and to the numbers of weapons on this earth. Over all, we are critical of any Government which engages in the testing of nuclear weapons with a view to production and deployment. So it follows that the French Government is not immune from our attacks.

Let the record show that the NDP condemns this testing of the neutron bomb by France and that we are opposed also to the MX missile, the SS-20, the Trident, the Cruise, and whatever new systems may be devised. We are opposed to weapons of destruction of any kind, and believe wholeheartedly—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

THE HUMAN RACE

CLEAN WATER TARGET PROPOSED FOR YEAR 2000 A.D.

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the end of the second millennium is fast approaching. The year 2000 A.D. represents 2,000 years of the Christian era and will be a monumental landmark in the recorded history of mankind.

As a citizen of Canada and of the international community, I am concerned that our country should give considerable thought to how we might best utilize the year 2000 to try to resolve the recognized problems which continue to confront mankind, and to determine what solutions would best ensure that, barring natural occurences beyond man's control, the human race will continue to survive and evolve. With this end in mind, I feel that the Government of Canada should encourage the other nations of the world to work together to set goals both, at the national and international levels, focusing on improving the human condition by the year 2000. Such goals should include the establishement of suitable projects to be completed by the year 2000, both nationally and through co-operative efforts of countries around the world. One need only to reflect on such historic events as the eradication of smallpox to appreciate the symbolism.

A recommended project would be disinfecting contaminated drinking water which now exposes 600 million people to waterborne disease in depressed areas of the world. In the Third World, construction of drinking water and sewage systems would be expected to halve the incidents of disease such as typhoid, dysentery, cholera, and schistomiasis. Large-scale global efforts of this type could help to restore confidence in the international community and mankind over-all.

THE LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

CALL FOR CONTINUED PUBLICATION OF PAMPHLET

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, the Library of Parliament in my opinion is one of the most beautiful buildings in the world. I also believe that Canadians can be proud of the history surrounding the Library.

Until recently the Library of Parliament published and distributed a very worth-while pamphlet for its visitors. It is very sad to find that the publication has ceased to be available. I would suggest that the Government provide funds to make the publication available once again.

On many occasions I have had the opportunity to take visitors from my constituency to the Library of Parliament. In my observation, they have never abused the availability of those pamphlets. They have requested extra copies to take home to their families or to their schools.

I would suggest that a Government which can find money to print an embossed invitation to a six and five birthday party should certainly be able to find enough funds to enable the Library of Parliament to continue to make available this pamphlet on what I consider to be a very beautiful and historic building here in Ottawa.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT—CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, over the past few weeks we have heard reports from a number of economic policy and forecasting institutions predicting massive levels of youth unemployment over the next several years. Most recently, Thomas Maxwell, head of the Conference Board of Canada, predicted that Canadian youth will face an unemployment rate of over 20 per cent in the next decade.

In May of this year there were 633,000 men and women between 15 and 24 years of age out of work. This represents 21.4 per cent of the workforce, an increase of 14,000 over the previous month. One of every five students who planned to return to school cannot find a job to help pay for it. Graduating students are forced to accept seasonal or part-time work, if they can find a job at all. The federal Government's feeble response is a youth job-creation program that will create fewer jobs than last year.

In the last fiscal year, federal, provincial and municipal Governments spent a total of $12 billion on education in Canada. We have encouraged youth to invest in education and career training—yet the Government and leadership of this country refuse to follow through with the long range economic planning necessary to make jobs a reality and not just a dream.

Youth and students want to work and want to contribute. They only need a reasonable opportunity to do so. The present Government offers them only fewer jobs and an economic situation which pushes them more and more into the stigma of welfare. The high rate of youth unemployment represents the unnecessary squandering of a precious national resource.

INTERNATIONAL DEMOCRAT UNION

ESTABLISHMENT OF INSTITUTION

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, last Friday's launching of the International Democrat Union, an association of 22 Conservative and like-minded parties from 14 European countries together with Canada, the United States, Japan, Australia, and New Zealand proved a most important event for all those who believe in individual rights, the rule of law, and a free market economy.

The I.D.U. represents some 150 million people throughout the free world who, in the words of the Canadian Leader of the Opposition in his address to the world leaders there assembled, including Vice President George Bush of the United States, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Great Britain, and West German Chancellor Helmet Kohl, hold that liberty is best preserved through less bureaucratic regimentation, less state intervention, less centralization, and more reliance on the capacity of individuals to think, to reason, and to act for themselves.

With these principles in mind the International Democrat Union looks forward to bringing about economic prosperity both to the developed and to the developing nations of the world, as the future surely belongs to the free democracies.

Madam Speaker: Order.

HEALTH

SUPPORT URGED FOR DONATION OF BODILY ORGANS

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, many Canadians are alive today because of tissue and organ donation programs. There is, however, a serious shortage of organs needed for transplant operations. As the public becomes more aware of the possibilities for cure, and with spectacular medical breakthroughs happening more frequently today than ever before, it seems inevitable the demand for organs will increase.

In Ontario alone an average of 200 kidneys are donated and subsequently transplanted each year. As of May 25 there were more than 200 people waiting for kidney transplants. An average of 500 corneal transplants are performed each year in Ontario. By the end of April, 200 such transplant operations had already been undertaken and 78 people were still waiting. At the end of May, 90 children were being treated for pituitary dwarfism at the Hospital for Sick Children.

There is a proven need for organ donors in this country. Presently, people may voluntarily sign donor cards. In all but one of the ten Provinces, that is PEI, the consent form is on the back of a driver's licence. Ontario, however, is the only Province having a government sponsored central information agency.

A recent Gallup Poll indicated only 21 per cent of Canadians have signed organ donation cards. It is very important that the remaining 79 per cent of Canadians understand the serious shortage of organs for transplant and the opportunity they have, at no cost to themselves, to give a magnificent gift of a whole life to the many who wait for their help. We here as Members of Parliament, and all the men and women across Canada, can give this gift by signing the backs of our drivers' licences, or by signing a donor card available through our family doctors.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DELEGATION FROM THE COMMONWEALTH OF THE BAHAMAS

Madam Speaker: I would like to draw the attention of the House to the presence in our gallery of a delegation from the Commonwealth of The Bahamas, headed by its Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Sir Lynden O. Pindling.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

GOVERNMENT RESTRAINT PROGRAM

INCREASE IN GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Government is continually patting itself on the back for restraint. However, Government spending rose by almost 16 per cent in 1982-83 over the previous year. This was the first year of the famous six and five program. How does the Minister account for that kind of increase when Old Age Security, family allowances, and wages paid to low income civil servants were held strictly to the six and five level?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member's statement was not quite accurate. Old Age Security payments were set at 6 per cent, but the Hon. Member will remember that the Guaranteed Income Supplement was fully indexed. For senior citizens needing the Guaranteed Income Supplement, they benefited from the full indexation relating to the cost of living.

The same thing is true for parents receiving the Child Tax Credit. In fact there was a $50 increase per child in the Child Tax Credit for families with lower incomes.

The Hon. Member might also remember that the federal Government contributed several hundreds of millions of dollars to the unemployment insurance fund. These are only a few of the programs which saw large increases resulting from the fact that hundreds of thousands of Canadians were in need of support at that particular time.

Finally, I would have to remind my hon. friend that the whole area of health support to the Provinces was fully indexed also. The cost of medicare and hospital insurance was not subject to six and five. These are some of the factors that explain the total increase in Government expenditures last year.

INQUIRY RESPECTING IMPACT ON SENIORS AND STUDENTS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, the Minister completely ignored the question, so I will phrase it in another way. When the non-discretionary items such as unemployment insurance, public debt charges, and transfers to individuals and Provinces are removed, the Government's spending record is even worse. When those factors are removed, it goes up 20 per cent. Can the Minister explain to senior citizens, parents, and college students why the restraint program is being fought on their backs and their backs alone?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am sorry, but my hon. colleague must have exclusive access to some very special kind of statistics.

Once again, if the Hon. Member would take the trouble to examine the figures for public spending during the past year, he will realize that a whole series of federal programs aimed at helping Canadians who need help most were not subject to the 6 and 5 ceiling and were fully indexed. The Canadian Government did not put any restrictions on the amount it transfers to the Provinces under hospital insurance or medical insurance programs. Assistance for postsecondary education was not capped at 6 and 5 during the past year but will be in 1983 and 1984. The same applies to a host of other programs, including unemployment insurance, as I said before. I also mentioned a very considerable increase in direct job creation programs. If he would care to look at the budget for the Department of Employment and Immigration, my hon. colleague would realize that we have added well over one billion dollars for assistance to young people and adults who were having trouble finding jobs this year and last year.

Those are the main reasons why our expenditures have increased, and my hon. colleague has already referred to the fact that we had to pay higher interest payments on the public debt.

• (1420)

INCREASE IN PUBLIC SERVICE SALARIES

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, if the Minister does not like my statistics, he might try this one. The Financial and Economic Policies Branch in the Minister's own Department employed 674 people a year ago. This year it employs 758, and next year it will employ 809 employees.

Our research indicates that average annual salaries have risen more than six and five in two-thirds of the federal Departments referred to in the Main Estimates. In fact in one-quarter of these Departments there has been an increase of over 10 per cent in average annual salaries. How can the Minister claim success for the Government's six and five program when, in fact, the Government itself has failed miserably itself to practise restraint? When will the Minister start practising what he and his colleagues preach?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member will realize that this Government has put forward a Bill to Parliament limiting to six and five the increases in the Public Service. That Bill was passed by Parliament, not only for checks but as a matter of fact for senior civil servants whose increases were even less than that. In some cases there were no increases at all.

An Hon. Member: That is phoney.

Mr. Lalonde: This Government put forward that Bill before Parliament. It was passed by Parliament. It has been implemented by this Government;—

Mr. Stevens: Admit it is a fraud.

Mr. Lalonde: —the law of Parliament is being implemented. The net effects have shown in the fact that we have been a situation whereby the provincial Governments have rallied to the leadership of the federal Government, as well as the municipalities and the private sector, and we have reached a situation where inflation in this country, which was 12 per cent, in May 1982 is now 5.4 per cent. This is a remarkable record.

Mr. Stevens: You can thank Reagan for that.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TIME RESERVED FOR ADDRESS BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister requested time tomorrow, Tuesday evening, from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, to make an address? If so, what is the amount of time which the Prime Minister has requested or has been allotted? When can we expect the Prime Minister to unburden himself in the House of Commons rather than having him pretend that Parliament no longer exists?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it is correct to say that my office has requested time from the public broadcasting system tomorrow night, I believe some 15 minutes or so. I have decided that perhaps one period of 15 minutes is sufficient. I will not ask for three this time—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —because I have been answering so many questions in the House of Commons on this subject that I think the Canadian public will get the point I am making in 15 minutes, the point being that the Canadian people have co-operated with the six and five program to the point where it has been a success, and within one year we have brought inflation down, without compulsory economic controls, from 12 per cent to 5.4 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKnight: Madam Speaker, I would suggest to the Prime Minister that we would gladly put aside 15 minutes of House time after three o'clock, and he can make that statement in the House.

REQUEST THAT LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION BE GIVEN EQUAL TIME

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): I have a question, Madam Speaker, for the Minister responsible for the CBC. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister is receiving special and preferential treatment, will the Minister make a representation to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation so that the Leader of the Opposition may have equal time to reply to the Canadian people, as would be his just right?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I know the Hon. Member is asking a purely rhetorical question. He knows full well that the principles governing this type of address have been clearly set out in a policy statement made by the President of the CBC not too long ago.

GOVERNMENT RESTRAINT PROGRAM

SALARIES OF CORPORATE EXECUTIVES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In the last number of days he has been very vocal in identifying the various signs of recovery. I must agree with the Prime Minister that many people in Canada have made some very major sacrifices over the last number of months to be able to participate in a recovery program in their own way. I might say it had little to do with the Government's six and five program.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: But in their own way, they made a great deal of sacrifice.

As a result the purchasing power for most Canadians has been eroded as their wage and salary settlements came in lower than the rate of inflation. However, one group has stood above this, namely, the corporate sector. When will the Minister of Finance approach the corporate sector of this country whose average settlements this past year have been in excess of 8 per cent, far above the rate of inflation? When will that sector be asked to sacrifice rather than simply give the rhetoric attached to restraint? When is the Minister going to ask for some action from this group?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I invite my hon. friend to read my speeches to the BCNI, the Business Council on National Issues, and to the Canadian Manufacturers Association. I addressed those very issues in both instances. I invited the business sector to be very careful in exercising restraint in the year to come. I was very, very clear in that regard, and I invite my hon. friend to read those speeches. He will find that in the last two months I have probably served more admonitions on the business sector than on labour in that particular regard.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I distinctly remember the Prime Minister in one of his previous addresses asking the banks to bleed a little bit. I wonder if that will be the same reaction from the executives of Canada in their response to the Minister's statement.

SMALL BUSINESS—EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. It relates to the small business sector of this country which is still not seeing any recovery in its own areas. The small business sector is still experiencing escalating bankruptcies and is having to lay off personnel. It is simply struggling to survive. Yet the financiers upon whom small business depends are now experiencing increases in profits over last year of nearly 40 per cent. Is the Minister of Finance going to do anything about the chartered banks of Canada which are permitted to make profits in excess of 38 per cent to 40 per cent over last year, while small business is struggling to survive? Is the Minister of Finance going to do anything with regard to that problem, or is he simply going to turn a blind eye to that sector of our economy, a sector that plays such a critical role in any recovery?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, far from turning a blind eye on the small business sector, the last budget of April 19 was fundamentally geared to help small and medium-sized business. Most measures contained in that budget have a special bias in favour of small business. I remind my hon. friend that the provisions having to do with the investment tax credit, and the provisions having to do with business losses were all proposed, with some measures that were more favourable to small and medium-sized business than to large business. These measures have been in effect since the budget was approved. I hope to be able to bring in the legislation implementing those changes in the fall, and I hope my hon. friend's Party will be very eager to support these measures.

As far as the analysis which my hon. friend is making of the situation is concerned, I think again his analysis is very selective, since the information I have from spokesmen for the small business sector is to the effect that things have been turning around for them. Indeed, there are still bankruptcies, but you have a very large number of new small businesses being created, and thanks to the lower rate of inflation and the lower rate of interest that we now have, the situation of small business is improving daily, contrary to what my hon. friend has been saying.

PRINCIPLE OF EQUALITY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister concerning his upcoming television address. About 200 years ago in the British House of Commons, Edmund Burke, then a Member of Parliament and a great Conservative, said—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: —that "equality was the essential principle of justice." Today in the House we gave examples of inequality in the Government's program. These were the profits of banks and corporate sector salaries. But the biggest inequality of all is the two million people who are unemployed.

• (1430)

Does the Prime Minister agree that a recovery based on inequality is no recovery at all, and that for the people who are unemployed and will be unemployed, according to his figures, for a long time we do not really have any kind of economic recovery going on at all based upon the principle of equality?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if Edmund Burke had been faced with an opposition which so tortured statistics as the Hon. Member is doing, I am sure he would have taken to television too.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER ANNOUNCE DATE OF CENTRAL NOVA BY-ELECTION

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Will he inform the House today of the date which has been set for the by-election in Central Nova?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am not in a position to do that. I intend discussing the matter with my colleagues in Cabinet this week or next.

REQUEST THAT DATE BE ANNOUNCED BEFORE SUMMER RECESS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. He will recall saying on June 13, 1983, as reported at page 26280 of Hansard, "I hope he", meaning Mr. Mulroney, "will be entering" the House "regularly, and that his Party will soon find occasion to permit him to contest a seat so that we can enjoy his presence also as a Member in the House of Commons." I believe it was on June 22 that the Hon. Member for Central Nova tendered his resignation. On that same day the seat was declared vacant. The Prime Minister knows that the final action remains with him. Can he assure us that before we rise on June 30 for the summer recess he will set the date for the by-election in Central Nova so as to give the Leader of the national Progressive Conservative Party an opportunity to win a seat in the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is wrong. The final action does not rest with me. It rests with the electors, perhaps those of Central Nova, who will be in a position to decide whether or not Mr. Mulroney will be sitting in this House.

Mr. Nielsen: I find that answer rather petty.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PARLIAMENTARY TRADITION

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister knows that, pursuant to our traditions in this place, the Prime Minister usually takes the earliest possible moment to permit a leader of a national Party in the circumstances in which Mr. Mulroney is at present to win a seat in the House. It has happened in his own Party in the past, and it happened with Mr. Stanfield under his predecessor. Can we not have a direct answer to the question? Simply, will he announce the date of that by-election before we recess on June 30?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am surprised that the Hon. Member declares it to be petty that I say the electorate of Central Nova or some other constituency would decide whether or not a man or woman would sit in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: If that is the view of the electorate held by the Hon. Member for Yukon, then I am not surprised he would judge my answer to be petty.

As to the tradition, the Hon. Member was able to quote one case. I cannot remember whether it was within days or weeks, but certainly it was reasonably soon. The intention of this Government is to announce a date reasonably soon, which incidentally would be doing considerably better than the Tory Leader of Ontario who took many, many months, I recollect, to declare a seat open so that the Leader of the New Democratic Party could contest an election. So maybe the Tories had better get their act together.

TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, may I please have a direct answer to a very simple, direct question? Will the Prime Minister announce in the House prior to next Thursday, June 30, when we rise for the summer recess, the date of the Central Nova by-election?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I answered that in the first question. I said that I intended taking it to our Cabinet this week or next week and then we will decide what the date is. I do not think the Hon. Leader of the Opposition would want to have the House called back next week to hear a date, if that is indeed when we decide. I am telling the House that we will decide soon.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CHALLENGE TO PRIME MINISTER ON ISSUE OF BY-ELECTION DATE

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Is it not simply a fact that the Prime Minister now knows that when Mr. Mulroney comes into this House he will make mincemeat of the Prime Minister?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: I suggest to him that he have some plain, ordinary, old fashioned guts and meet Mr. Mulroney on the floor of the House as he should do, and I hope will do.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the prediction about what will happen in terms of mincemeat is being laughed at because everyone remembers that when the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead was chosen Leader of that Party, the Hon. Member for Northumberland said that he would be Prime Minister for 50 years, and I do not think that happened either.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: This time I will be very, very right.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

RESULTS OF CANADA-JAPAN NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Jack Masters (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for International Trade. In view of press reports that the Minister failed to reach an understanding with the Japanese on the importation of motor vehicles, would the Minister inform the House as to the outcome of the negotiations with the Japanese? Were we able to ensure an agreement will be in place once the current interim agreement expires at the end of this month?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, the answer to the distinguished Hon. Member is that we have been able to make an arrangement with the Japanese for a mutually agreed level of restraint on the exportation of Japanese motor vehicles to Canada. That agreement will run for a nine-month period, until next March 31. That is important because it places us on the same time period as the agreement they have with the Americans. Hon. Members will remember that in the past the Japanese, because of the size of the American market, were not prepared to negotiate seriously with us when the American agreement had not expired.

The other thing I would say is that the agreement for the fiscal year—we wanted to get on the same fiscal year as the Americans—from last March 31 to next March 31 will be for 153,000 vehicles, which is the best agreement we have had yet. In view of the increase in the projected market for this year, it means that the Japanese incursion into the Canadian market for automobiles will, for the first time in some period of time, be less than 20 per cent.

Oral Questions

SALARY INCREASE FOR MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL STAFF

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Staff on the Medical Research Council, a Government agency, have received an incredible 28.4 per cent pay hike in 1983-84, and our senior citizens' pension increases are restricted to the six and five program. To me that is an incredible double standard. What steps will the Minister take to roll back this excessive increase?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I never heard about this, and I would have appreciated it if the Hon. Member had given me advance notice of his question so I could have made enquiries. I know that the 6 and 5 ceiling on wages and benefits applies to the Medical Research Council and has been applied there as in any other part of the Government. However, I will make some enquiries, just in case.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

INCREASE IN VALUE OF SHARES—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACQUIRE EQUITY FOR INVESTMENT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister concerning Government policy. I am sure he is aware that the New Democratic Party has proposed that for any funds put forward by the Government of Canada for capital investment in Canadian Pacific rail line upgrading we take equity shares in return. I communicated that in writing to the Minister of Transport, to which he has yet to respond. Since it is a matter of Government policy, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question.

• (1440)

Canadian Pacific Limited shares have increased in value since the announcement by his Minister of Transport on February 1, by $860 million. Since the passing of second reading of the Bill to change the Crownest Pass rate a few days ago, they have gone up another $259 million. Will the Prime Minister agree that for any funds which the Government of Canada puts up for capital investments that the taxpayers, through the Government of Canada, should be entitled to equity shares in Canadian Pacific Limited in order to get any return on that investment, the same as any other private investor?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, it is interesting to observe the false impression that my hon. friend has of the government's contribution. The Government contribution is not a favour to the railways. It is a favour to the farmers of Canada to reduce the cost of transportation of grain.

With regard do the acreage that CP inherited from settlements at the end of this century, my hon. friend would probably like to know that at the time CP received 36.4 million acres, and 24 million acres were sold to Canadian farmers at a cost of 50 cents to one dollar an acre. Most of the balance was given back to the Government, so much so that out of the settlements of the railways and the Crowsnest, CP today has less than 300,000 acres.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, if ever there was a total evasion of answering a question, that was it. I did not ask about land grants. We can go into that later.

In light of the speculation in the shares of Canadian Pacific Limited, which have increased in value $860 million since the announcement of the Minister of Transport, and since Mr. Desmarais and the Power Corporation of Canada, who are majority shareholders, have benefited by $101 million since February 1, $30 million of that since passage of the Bill at second reading last week, does the Prime Minister think it fair and proper that, for the investment put forward by the Government of Canada on behalf of taxpayers for capital improvements, we should receive equity shares so that we can, on behalf of taxpayers, be eligible for a return on that investment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): On the contrary, Madam Speaker, the Minister of Transport did answer that question in the first part of his answer when he indicated that the Crow legislation which we are debating is an assistance that is being given to farmers so that they continue paying low rates, rates which are non-economical. This is being adjusted, as we know, after many, many decades of losses by the railways.

When the Hon. Member talks about the shares going up, he should look at the stock exchange. He will find that the shares of many, many companies have been going up because there is a recovery, particularly because in transportation there are more goods moving, more exports taking place, and more production, which means more work in Canada. I do not see how the Hon. Member can interpret these facts as something that should worry his Party or ours.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

INQUIRY WHETHER MEASURES WILL BE TAKEN TO AMEND SECTION 16 OF THE CONSTITUTION

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Public Works and for the National Capital Commission. The NCC has just published a magnificent brochure for tourists visiting Canada's capital which extends a welcome to the National Capital Region of Ottawa-Hull. Since this is a matter of national interest, Madam Speaker, perhaps I may ask the Minister whether he also intends to recommend to all his Cabinet colleagues that Section 16 of the Constitution should be amended to make the Ottawa-Hull area the national capital of Canada instead of just Ottawa, which, in fact, is being used less and less in designating the capital of Canada?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his appreciative comments on the folders we have been distributing. In fact, I recommend these folders to all Hon. Members who receive visitors from outside the Ottawa-Hull area. We are trying to improve services for visitors from outside the National Capital Region. As for the Hon. Member's proposal that we should amend the Constitution, I think that, because of the time involved, we should be a little more realistic and develop the National Capital Region on both sides of the river so that Canadians visiting the Ottawa-Hull area will see for themselves that the bilingual and bicultural character of this country is alive and well.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN DEPARTMENT'S COSTS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs. During this fiscal year when the Minister has been transferring considerable authority from his Department to Indian bands, it is astonishing to note at the same time that instead of the administrative program within his Department decreasing, it is in fact increasing over the six and five level, all the way to 8.7 per cent. How can the Minister justify those increases?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I do not know whether the Hon. Member is referring to wages and salaries or to other expenses. If he is referring to the over-all expense of the Department, he should well know that a lot of that is governed by the actions of the provinces, and certainly in we have been endeavouring, at the urging of the Hon. Member, to increase substantially the moneys going to core funding and salaries for chiefs and band councils, which have not been raised for years and years. To correct this injustice we substantially, with the approval of my colleagues and the Prime Minister, for the first time rectified this situation and, I might say, to the gratification and satisfaction of almost every chief and band council in the country that has to administer the programs.

NORTHERN PIPELINE AGENCY—SALARIES OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It is on the subject of the Northern Pipeline Agency which this year, according to the estimates filed in this House, will spend over $5 million to regulate the non-existent Alaska gas pipeline. Looking through the figures I find that the average salary paid within that organization this year will be $43,653, an increase of over 13 per cent on the previous year. How does the Minister square this 13 per cent increase for a select few senior Government employees with the so-called six and five program that he and his Government have inflicted on so many ordinary Canadians?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have replied to some questions on this subject already. With regard to the matter of salaries, it is the first time the questions has been put in this form. I am sure that when the commission appears before the committee it will be able to answer all the questions. The Minister responsible is the Leader of the Senate, Mr. Olson. When he was in front of the committee with Mr. Sharp, they replied to all the questions. By the way, all the money paid out by this Agency is collected back from the industry. It is not costing the taxpayers a cent.

STATUS OF WOMEN

AFFIRMATIVE ACTION PROGRAM—APPLICATION TO HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Ray Chénier (Timmins-Chapleau): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Status of Women.

[English]

With regard to the statement by my colleague from London West and today's joint announcement by the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the President of the Treasury Board, and the Minister responsible for the Status of Women, on an affirmative action program, and in view of the priority commitment considerations regarding the status of women in all legislative matters, has the Minister responsible for the Status of Women undertaken any recent measures to ensure that this Government's commitment to furthering gender equality in this House is not merely met, but indeed, broadened and advanced?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member for Timmins-Chapleau, I repeat that this is a good day for the women of Canada. The President of the Treasury Board has announced affirmative action programs in all of the Public Service. My colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, has announced a commission of inquiry.

The Hon. Member has asked what moves we should take to make this House more responsive to the needs of women in Canada. My response is that it is time we did take affirmative action in this House. I met with several of my colleagues in the Opposition and I indicated to them that I have had some conversations with Members of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure. However, my position has been consistent and clear during that time. Becasue 90 per cent of all legislation has a direct impact upon women, the committee route is not one that I favour. I would prefer to follow a procedure similar to that which is followed with Cabinet documents.

Some Hon. Members: Answer the question.

Mrs. Erola: And I have written—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please.

ROLE OF JUDGE AS HEAD OF COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I direct my question to either of the two Ministers who made the announcement with regard to the appointment of Madam Justice Abella. I welcome that appointment because I am delighted to hear that somebody is finally getting on with the job of doing something about equality for women in this country.

I would like to ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration if Madam Justice Abella will be able to look into the program of affirmative action that was announced three years ago when the federal Government supposedly set up affirmative action programs in Government Departments which so far apply to only three Departments out of the total number of Government Departments and agencies. That is a disgrace. Will the appointment of Madam Justice Abella allow her to look into what the Government is not doing?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, the born again feminist from Kingston and the Islands is obviously once again out of touch.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Erola: Had she been present at the press conference this morning, she would have learned that that affirmative action program has been completely extended to the Public Service and is mandatory, and that the job of Madam Justice Abella is to look into the Crown corporations. I do regret, Madam Speaker, that the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands has not taken the time to examine what was announced this morning.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

USE OF WRITS OF ASSISTANCE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Earlier this month a distinguished British Columbia County Court Judge, Stuart Leggatt, ruled that writs of assistance violate the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Despite this ruling, senior officers of the RCMP in British Columbia have said that the police will continue to ignore the court decision by continuing to use these writs which give sweeping and uncontrolled powers of search and seizure. In fact, Inspector Wallace of the Vancouver RCMP has said that he has no instructions from Ottawa to stop using the writs. Will the Solicitor General immediately order members of the RCMP in British Columbia to stop flagrantly violating the law and to cease using writs of assistance as long as the decision by Judge Leggatt holding them unconstitutional stands?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the kinds of unreasonable attacks that the Hon. Member constantly makes against the RCMP indicate, I think, why he was removed by NDP caucus consent from the role of justice critic.

I have not read the articles to which the Hon. Member makes reference, but I can tell him quite categorically what the policy is. In any Province where court decisions have overruled to use of the writ of assistance, the RCMP are not using the writ of assistance, but those cases are under appeal. In Provinces in wich decisions have upheld the writ of assistance or in which no decisions have been reached, the RCMP are continuing to use the writ of assistance.

I have indicated that the matter should be settled by the Supreme Court of Canada. We have appealed the case in which the writ of assistance has been overruled. I have indicated that I am prepared to see the writ of assistance abandoned and have suggested some alternatives which would provide, with judicial preclearance, a system for permitting the police to enter with judicial assistance in cases where it is required in drug law enforcement which would be in full compliance with the spirit of the Charter.

But as of today, I cannot order the RCMP to stop using the writ of assistance in Provinces where it has been upheld in court, because of its importance in effective drug prosecution. Many dozens of cases against alleged drug traffickers and dealers turn on evidence obtained by writs of assistance, and I am not prepared to see all of that evidence go down the drain and all of those alleged drug traffickers, dealers, and importers escape justice.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I will not comment on the description given of the Solicitor General saying he was unforgivably naive, but it is the hope of the entire Parliament that he be removed from his portfolio as soon as possible.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am glad the Hon. Member said that he would not comment on the answer because that is not allowed at all.

PROCLAMATION OF YOUNG OFFENDERS LEGISLATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. As well, the provincial Government in the Province of British Columbia has stated that it will refuse to implement the new young offenders legislation which is scheduled to be proclaimed on October 1, citing excessive cost for extending basic rights under the Act, including the right to counsel. Despite these threats by the Government of British Columbia and the Governments of other Provinces to subvert this new legislation, will the Solicitor General assure the House and the people of Canada that he intends to proceed with the proclamation of the Bill as scheduled on October 1 of this year?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, Parliament has passed that Bill and I think there is a responsibility to proclaim it as soon as possible. The Hon. Member must bear in mind that that new regime will not work without the co-operation and support of the Provinces. In fact there are a number of additional programs that have to be introduced by the Provinces that are within their responsibility, before this legislation can be proclaimed. I do not think the Provinces should have the final say; I think Parliament should. But on the other hand, if the Provinces are proceeding in the spirit of the intention to implement the legislation, as I believe most are, then I think it is my responsibility and the responsibility of the Government to be very sympathetic to the problems that are experienced in implementing that legislation.

Dealing with the cost of implementing the legislation, there is no doubt that, under the Constitution, in the same way that it is a federal responsibility to finance federal correctional institutions, it is a provincial responsibility to finance these provincial institutions. Tremendous financial assistance has been provided in the young offender area over the years. I have indicated that we intend to maintain that assistance and increase it, but I cannot predict when satisfactory agreements will be reached with all of the Provinces. However, I can say that as long as the Provinces are moving forward in good faith to implement this major reform of the Government and of the Parliament, I cannot see myself forcing their hands on proclamation.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN SALARIES OF DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Veterans Affairs I direct my question to the Prime Minister. Our veterans, the men and women who laid their lives on the line for our country, have had their pension increases restricted to the so-called six and five program, while the bureaucrats in the Veterans Affairs Program, who have fought nothing but their desks, have received salary increases of 15.4 per cent. Madam Speaker, how does the Prime Minister justify this action? Do our veterans in the country count for 10 per cent less than do departmental bureaucrats?

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, it is of course known to all Members of the House that the Government has been constantly looking after the affairs of the veterans with great concern and devotion. I would like to point out that the six and five program has not affected the allowances and the pensions of the veterans, and I think therefore that this should be kept in mind in our discussions.

EDUCATION

APPLICATION OF GOVERNMENT RESTRAINT PROGRAM TO UNIVERSITY FEES

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, my question concerns the application of the Government's six and five program to university tuition fees and is directed to the Prime Minister. I wanted to ask him this question at the six and five birthday party, but I see that it has been cancelled.

In July of 1982 the Secretary of State said that tuition fee increases would be held to a 6 per cent level. Instead, Madam Speaker, the increases rose as high as 30 per cent for the last academic year. We now face a new academic year. I would ask the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State, bearing in mind that we have put this cap on Government expenditures and that the Government contributes 85 per cent of the cost of post-secondary education, whether the Government can use the good offices of the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State to ask university administrators to limit increases in university tuition fees to 5 per cent for the next academic year, in light of the high rate of student unemployment and the fact that limited funds are available to these students.

• (1500)

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): I should like to draw to the attention of the Hon. Member the letter I sent to all provincial Ministers of Education on January 28 this year, urging them to pass on the additional amount of money that the Canadian Government would be ready to add to the Canada Student Loans program. Last Friday this House unanimously adopted the Bill to increase the annual payment for the next two years to more than $60 million. I have received very positive answers from at least four Provinces in this regard. We are continuously making representations to the Provinces to make sure that the additional amount of money will be passed on to students and will be an increment to student revenues to make sure that they can cope with the difficult economic situation.

DISASTERS

"OCEAN RANGER"—DEATH OF THIRD DIVER

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I should like to put my question to the Minister of Transport. He will know that a third diver involved in the salvage operations of the Ocean Ranger, carrying out an order of the Canada Oil and Gas Lands Administration which comes directly under his colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, has been tragically lost within a week. Does the Minister intend to issue a cease and desist order, and will he issue an order that the Ocean Ranger be marked merely by a marker buoy so as not to pose a threat to navigation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am sorry, I did not become involved in this because it is the responsibility of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, as the Hon. Member said. He was here at the beginning of the Question Period and I will make sure he contacts my hon. friend before the end of the afternoon.

SPORTS

BASEBALL—ANNUAL GAME BETWEEN MEMBERS, PAGES AND PRESS GALLERY

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The press in this House is constantly questioning the abilities and competence of the Members of the House of Commons. Last Thursday evening, however, on the occasion of the annual baseball game between the House of Commons and the Press Gallery, we once again demonstrated our superior talents when six Members of the House, with the able assistance of some members of the page corps, soundly thrashed the press side 10-6, ending once and we hope for all time a three-year losing streak.

PETITIONS

MR. YOUNG—SAFE DRINKING WATER

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I have another petition from 24 Ontario residents who state in the petition that toxic chemicals are posing an increasing threat to the potable waters of this Province and that there is presently no legislation which will guarantee the safety and health of those waters. The petition states that Canada's neighbour, the United States of America, has legislation entitled the Safe Drinking Water Act, 1974.

Wherefore the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact a safe drinking water Act which will protect and enhance drinking water quality in all areas of Canada.

PARTICIPATION OF VISIBLE MINORITIES IN CANADIAN SOCIETY

MEMBERSHIP OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, there have been discussions between the various Parties and I believe it is agreed that the following motion might be put without debate:

That Members of the Special Committee on Visible Minorities be Messrs. Daudlin, Deniger, Kelly, Lewycky, McCauley, Crombie and Paproski.

Motion agreed to.

EXPANSION OF AIRPORT AT FORT MCMURRAY, ALTA.

Question No. 4,735—Mr. Shields:

1. Does the Department of Transport intend to expand the airport at Fort McMurray, Alberta?

2. Have negotiations taken place, are they now taking place or will they be taking place with the Alberta Department of Transportation concerning the expansion of the airport and, if so, on what date?

3. What are all the details of the planned expansion, including the (a) cost (b) time frame (c) extent?

4. On what date will the expansion be (a) started (b) completed?

5. Will work be done on the parking area for (a) cars (b) planes?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes, by providing a new air terminal building and installing associated facilities.

2. Negotiations between Transport Canada and the Alberta Department of Transportation were conducted during the summer and autumn of 1982. The strategy discussed involved provincial financing of construction costs on a partial cost-recovery basis whereby Transport Canada would pay its share of the investment back to the province over a set period. Discussions have been suspended, however, since the Province is no longer interested in the venture.

3. A new air terminal building and firehall will be built and extensive runway improvements will be carried out at a cost of more than $27 million under the federal government's Special Recovery Capital Projects Program. The terminal building and related work will cost about $24 million and will be constructed in 1985. The cost of the firehall will be approximately $1.24 million and will be completed in 1984. The runway, taxiway, and apron work will total about $1.76 million and will be completed next year.

4. The Fort McMurray Airport improvements are included in the Special Recovery Capital Projects Program and will contribute towards economic recovery and employment over the next few years. It is currently anticipated that the firehall, runway, taxiway and apron work will be undertaken in the near future with completion in 1984. The terminal building will be constructed in 1985.

5. Among the ancillary facilities provided with the air terminal building will be (a) a new parking lot for cars, (b) a parking apron for aircraft.

ASSISTANCE TO DAIRY PRODUCTION IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 4,855—Mr. Howie:

Since July 1, 1980, what amount was paid to farmers in New Brunswick to assist with dairy production?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): A total of $9,922,411 in subsidies was paid by the Canadian Dairy Commission to dairy farmers in New Brunswick.

MARINE BIOLOGICAL RESEARCH STATION, NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 4,859—Mr. Howie:

1. As of April 1, 1983, how many persons were employed by the Marine Biological Research Station at St. Andrews, New Brunswick?

2. What was the operational budget of the station for the fiscal year (a) 1980-81 (b) 1981-82 (c) 1982-83?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): 1. There are 98 continuing full time (CFT) employees, and two term employees for a total of 100.

Fiscal Year	Salaries	Operations & Maintenance	Total
1980-1981	$2.7 Million	3.3 Million	6.0 Million
1981-1982	3.2 Million	3.2 Million	6.4 Million
1982-1983	3.1 Million	2.8 Million	5.9 Million

EXPORT PERMITS

Question No. 4,898—Mr. Heap:

During (a) 1981 (b) 1982 (c) 1983, were export permits issued to Geometrix Ltd. and Sisman's Shoes for export to the United States or El Salvador and, if so, for what type of product and for which final destination?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): The records of the Export Control Division, Department of External Affairs, show that no export permits were issued in 1981, 1982 and 1983 to Geometrix Ltd. and Sisman's Shoes for the export of controlled gods to El Salvador or to the United States. It should, however, be noted that unless nuclear goods are involved, under the Export and Import Permits Act (EIPA) and its regulations, export permits are not required for exports of otherwise controlled goods when the final destination is the U.S.A.

RAILWAY SERVICES—SUDBURY BASIN AND WINNIPEG

Question No. 4,929—Mr. Benjamin:

1. In (a) 1980 (b) 1981 (c) 1982, what was the frequency and amount of lateness of VIA Rail trains which operated on CN and CP rail lines between the Sudbury basin and Winnipeg?

2. Under what arrangements is Canadian Pacific Limited meeting its obligations under Section 262 of the Railway Act to provide suitable and adequate accommodation for express traffic offered for shipment at points between Sudbury and White River?

3. Have certain railway stations been replaced by unheated passenger shelters at locations on CN and CP rail lines between the Sudbury basin and Winnipeg since 1977 and, if so (a) at how many locations (b) what were the names of such locations?

4. Did the Canadian Transport Commission monitor or investigate the railway companies to determine whether they are fulfilling their obligations under Section 262 at points between the Sudbury basin and Winnipeg?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows:

1. See table below.

2. The obligation under Section 262 of the Railway Act for the accommodation of express traffic between Sudbury and White River is being met in accordance with the requirements of Order in Council P.C. 1981-2171 dated August 6, 1981. During the off-peak period of the year, local passenger, mail and express services are provided on the transcontinental passenger train service and during the peak period the same service is provided by tri-weekly local passenger trains 185 and 186.

3. On CN line between Sudbury and Winnipeg authority has been granted to replace the stations at Caramet, Hillsport and Gomaga with an unheated shelter. Since 1977, no station on CP line between Sudbury and Winnipeg has been replaced by an unheated shelter.

4. Monitoring of all aspects of rail service is performed as an adjunct to other duties. Any deficiencies noted or brought to the Commission's attention are acted upon to ensure suitable and adequate accommodation for traffic.

The table below indicates the frequency and lateness of VIA Rail passenger-trains operated on CP and CN rail lines between the Sudbury basin and Winnipeg for the years 1980-1981 and 1982.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Question No. 4,948—Mr. Nowlan:

1. Did the Export Development Corporation receive an application for a loan or loans to Telecommunications d'Haiti S.A., also known as Teleco, or Telephone Continental Limitée of Henriville, Quebec, since 1967 and, if so (a) on what date (b) for a loan or loans of what amount (c) to be used for what purpose?

2. Was any such loan application turned down in 1970 or thereabouts and, if so, for what reason?

3. Apart from the companies mentioned in part I, what other persons and companies were mentioned in the applications or known by the EDC to be associated with the applicants and what were their addresses?

4. Who owned Teleco and Telephone Continental Limitée at the time the application was made?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Export Development Corporation states that:

As a matter of general policy EDC does not disclose its participation in a direct lending transaction in respect of an export transaction until the financing agreement therefor is signed. Since information on bids, participation or negotiations is given at the application stage by exporters to EDC in confidence, EDC, to respect that confidence, refrains, until the sale arrangements are final, from discussing a deal or even from indicating that it has been approached in a transaction. EDC has not made a loan or loans to Telecommunications d'Haiti S.A. or another foreign customer in Haiti since 1967.

CONSULTANTS EMPLOYED BY DREE

Question No. 4,801—Mr. Howie:

1. Were outside consultants employed by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in the fiscal year (a) 1981-82 (b) 1982-83 and, if so, how many and what was the total amount paid?

2. Were any consultants paid more than $20,000 and, if so, in each case (a) what was his/her name (b) what was the amount (c) what services were provided?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Taylor: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary when I will get an answer to question No. 2,329 which was filed in April, 1981. I notice that the Parliamentary Secretary is now up to questions numbered in the 4,000s. When will we receive an answer to

No. 2,329? Is the Government trying to hide something or why can I not get an answer to this simple question?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, a Government that has answered over 4,160 questions in one session is not trying to hide anything, and a Government that has passed the Access to Information Act is not trying to hide anything. I want to assure the Hon. Member that I will be delighted to convey his concern to the Minister. I will see what I can do to expedite an answer.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has been delighted seven times now. I wish he would get the answer and let me be delighted.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, each time it is an even greater joy and I look forward to the next occasion.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I have a point of order. As the month of June is running out, I know that the Parliamentary Secretary is very anxious to give us the benefit of answers to my questions. These concern the many trips that the emperor, the Prime Minister, has taken to the various parts of the world. I should like to know what these cost and how much of that cost the Canadian taxpayers will have to share. Can the Parliamentary Secretary assure us that we will have that answer before June 30?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I had two questions along the same lines from Conservative Members last Thursday, the Hon. Member for Leeds-Grenville and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine. I advised them that as soon as I get an answer from the Minister it is tabled in the House. The Hon. Member for Leeds-Grenville then decided she would put the question directly to the Minister. There is nothing to prevent the Hon. Member for York-Peel from doing the same thing. If he wishes to put question directly to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, he may do so.

I will convey his concern again and as soon as I get an answer I will table it.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INDUSTRIAL AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion) moved that Bill C-165, an Act to provide for financial assistance for industrial development in all regions of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure today to discuss Bill C-165, which provides a program for financial assistance to business and industry in all parts of Canada.

I apologize to my colleagues and to the Hansard reporters for my voice, Madam Speaker; I hope it does not fade too much before the end of my 20 minutes.

Let me begin by saying that the purpose of the Bill is very simple: it is to create and maintain long-term employment for Canadians from coast to coast. The program which will be authorized under the Bill is the Industrial and Regional Development Program which is being presented after much study by the private sector, by officials, my Cabinet colleagues and by Members of Parliament on both sides of the House.

Since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced in early 1982 the reorganization of economic departments of Government which will result in the new Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, we have examined the need to ensure regional industrial development and the existing array of industrial support programs that have been available in DREE and ITC. The reasons were the same as those which spurred the decision to reorganize. There is a need, on the one hand, to rededicate ourselves to combating regional disparity in Canada and, on the other hand, we must ensure that industrial restructuring programs are actually geared to meet the circumstances which face Canadian industries in today's very competitive world market.

Regional disparity still exists in Canada despite the successful efforts of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion which was launched some 14 years ago. These disparities not only place hardships on individual Canadians, but they also place a strain on the national fabric and detract from our ability to move forward as a unified nation in the pursuit of our common goals.

Combating regional disparity is difficult even in good economic times. With the onset of the recent world-wide recession, times have not been good. If it is difficult to offset regional disparities in times when our traditional industries in the industrial heartland are enjoying a period of strength, it is much more difficult in the period when, because of world-wide downturn, those traditional industries are suffering from soft markets, stiff international competition, rapid technological change and rising protectionism from the countries which make up our market. These circumstances demand a concerted action on the part of all Canadians, Governments at all levels and the private sector, both management and labour. With the reorganization of federal economic departments and the introduction of programs such as that contained in this Bill, the Government is trying to play its part in this concerted action.

The program outlined in this Bill has a number of features which are clearly recommended to the business community, to the Canadian public and to Hon. Members of Parliament. First and foremost, let us recognize that this program provides for the first time a regionally sensitized, multifaceted program of industrial financial assistance in all parts of Canada. I believe that is a point which has not been adequately emphasized in discussion of the program to date. This is not a program available only in certain designated regions; whatever riding any Hon. Member of this House represents, his or her constituents will be eligible for assistance under this program.

Another feature of this program is its flexibility. It is specifically designed to provide the type of assistance which is appropriate to a given industry, area or community at a given time. Hon. Members of this House well know that these needs vary greatly by region, by sector and over time in Canada. We have areas where the need is for greater investment and infrastructure in order to permit industries to establish and grow. We have areas where the need is for industrial diversification, the establishment of new plants or the launching of new product lines. We have areas and industries where the need is for innovation, to improve competitiveness.

These are more than needs. They are also tremendous opportunities, Mr. Speaker. They are opportunities to expand into the revolutionary growth industries of the future and opportunities to apply the benefits of technology and other innovations to virtually all of our existing industries in all parts of Canada, thus to ensure long-term viability and growth. We have great opportunities, through aggressive marketing techniques, to expand the international and domestic market for Canadian goods and services. This program addresses these needs and opportunities.

The program, Mr. Speaker, has yet another significant feature. In addition to the provisions I have listed, it adds a powerful new weapon to the federal Government arsenal in the continuing fight against regional disparity. The program recognizes not only the varied needs and opportunities of Canada's many regions, but also the levels of financial assistance required for effective industrial development across those regions. This program renews and renders more effective the commitment to regional economic development which underlay the establishment of DREE in 1969. It provides for the first time the levels of financial assistance specifically tailored to the level of disparity of the area concerned. Here we are not talking about broad geographic areas; we are talking about areas as small and specific as can be defined, using consistent, meaningful data which is available on a national basis. The method of using the data will be equitable, objective and subject to automatic regular review. It will provide the country's first consistent measure of regional disparity in Canada.

The mechanism I am referring to is the development index which uses data on employment, personal income and provincial fiscal capacity in order to provide a clear measure of the relative need for assistance. It will be applied to areas as small and specific as a single census district. Using the development index, areas of Canada are arranged at four levels or tiers of regional need. The first tier in which the basic level of support under the program will be provided contains the most developed 50 per cent of the population of Canada where there is a substantial need for industrial restructuring. In this tier, for example, financial assistance of up to 50 per cent of costs for innovation of marketing activities will be provided and up to 25 per cent of modernization and expansion costs. There are three other tiers with increasing levels of support. For instance, in Tier IV areas, which contain the 5 per cent of the population living in areas of greatest need, the maximum level of support of the program is provided. Here, for example, up to 60 per cent of cost for plant establishment may be provided.

Since I first proposed this program during the budget debate, there have been several refinements to it. One of these refinements refers to the tier system. In any Tier I area where the unemployment ratio exceeds the national average by 1 per cent for any consecutive six-month period, that area will be provided with the next higher, or Tier II, level of assistance for establishment for one year. This is to provide for those instances where, for example, a cyclical downturn affects an area in the short term in a way which would not show up immediately by applying the development index, but where a short-term, although very real economic hardship nonetheless dictates a need for increased assistance. That is another example of the flexibility which is designed into this program.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, the program provided for in this Bill, the Industrial and Regional Development Program, has been very carefully designed, after much consultation with the private sector and much discussion with my colleagues, to meet the general and specific goals of regional and industrial development in all parts of Canada. It provides for support over the whole range of industrial development needs, industrial infrastructure, industrial innovation, plant establishment, modernization, expansion, marketing and industrial restructuring or renewal. It provides support for these activities when and where they are needed in Canada. It provides for effective regional development by instituting a strong incentive to Canadian firms to invest in those areas of Canada which are in the greatest need of that investment.

I wish to remind Hon. Members that we have devised an organizational structure in the new department which will put the regional sensitivity and flexibility of this program into practice at the local level. We have been moving to put into place an organization based on decentralized expertise, decision making and local program delivery. We have combined the industrial sector expertise from ITC with the regional capacity of DREE. We have established regional offices in all Provinces, several new sub-offices, and more will open in the future.

We are working to establish a "one-stop shopping" approach to the Government assistance for business in our local offices. The local decision and delivery capacity of these offices should speed up the processing of applications significantly. The chief role of these offices is to make the Government services more widely available to businesses, particularly small and medium-size entrepreneurs. No longer will the business community have to travel to Ottawa to have access to federal information and assistance. The role of the people staffing these offices will be to get to know the business community and act as its advocate with the federal Government. They will take an active role in informing firms of available Government support, all of which, incidentally, will be available locally for the first time.

I have said, Mr. Speaker, that the new Industrial and Regional Development Program was devised with the benefit of consultation with the private sector. Let me assure the House that its implementation will be carried out in the same way. When referring to the private sector, I would like to reiterate that I mean business management and labour. I firmly believe, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) stated in his budget, that in order to achieve our goals we must have the active participation of all the players in the game. For these reasons we will administer the new program, and indeed all programs of the Department, with the benefit of advice from the Industrial and Regional Development Board which will be co-chaired by representatives of management and labour, with membership from each group. The board will also have appropriate regional representation in its membership. By advising the Government, through our Department, on broad policy issues, the board will have an effective instrument to ensure the Government's industrial policy and programs are based on a broad consensus.

Another means to assist this effort, as Hon. Members will be aware, has been a move through our Department to establish sector-specific task forces or advisory committees, once again co-chaired by both management and labour. The efforts of these task forces will be of great benefit in terms of establishing our goals and strategies as far as the key industrial sectors are concerned.

Before concluding, I want to make clear the status of the general development agreements which have been administered by DREE. When the new structure for economic development departments was announced, there was some speculation as to the future of the general development agreements, or the GDAs, as Hon. Members call them, that were negotiated between DREE and the Provinces. I want to make it clear that those agreements are still in place and that subsidiary agreements will continue to be struck with the Provinces. GDAs will continue until their expiry in 1984 and negotiations for new agreements to replace them will take place in due course.

The administration of GDA activities has changed, however. Instead of a single Department, DREE, being responsible for administrative activities under the GDAs, this activity is now implemented by the various appropriate federal departments, including our Department, under the over-all co-ordination of the Ministry of State for Economic and Regional Development.

I firmly believe that what I have described today amounts to a major step forward in the rationalization, simplification and perfection of the federal Government's approach to both regional and industrial development objectives. I believe Hon. Members on both sides of the House have good reasons for supporting this exciting new Bill. At a time when some 1.5 million Canadians are unemployed, a concerted effort is needed for strengthening our industries. That need will increase as we strive for economic recovery in a world of rapid technological change and extreme competition. I believe it is timely, as the economic recovery takes hold, that we are proposing an improved method to ensure that our industrial strength increases in all parts of Canada.

Canadians who are watching the deliberations of the House I am sure will support me when I ask that we proceed with the Bill and get on with the job which must remain our first priority, that of creating meaningful and rewarding employment in all regions of Canada.

I would ask unanimous consent of the House, Mr. Speaker, to refer the Bill to the Standing Committee on Regional Development, rather than what was originally proposed by my colleague the House Leader, that it be sent to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent by the House that the Minister be allowed to amend his motion to refer the Bill to the Standing Committee on Regional Development?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

Mr. Waddell: I rise on a point of order. I am not sure whether questions are allowed in this period, and I just wonder if the Minister would permit a question.

Mr. Lumley: Yes.

Mr. Waddell: The Minister spoke of decentralization. It has been written about the Bill that the Government's nose was put out of joint when its polls revealed that most Canadians were not grateful to the federal Government which was providing industrial help to the regions, so that from now on the Government is determined to get a greater share of the limelight.

Would the Minister in fact agree with the words of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), who said: "We want to move in on the West like the little bird that sits behind the elephant's ear"? Would the Minister agree that this, in fact, is not a decentralization measure at all, but rather a centralizing measure in the sense that the Government will have a larger role in directing the pattern of industrial growth in Canada, and hence will have more power? This really is not a decentralizing Bill at all. It is a centralizing Bill to give the federal Government more power and more credit for what the Government has been doing in giving money to different parts of the country.

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Speaker, I first want to say that I am pleased to answer the Hon. Member's question. As a matter of fact, one of the reasons I cut down my speech was to have more time for questions. With respect to the matter of the poll, I have no knowledge of that poll nor have I ever seen anything like it. Further, I am not aware of what Mr. Tom Axworthy said in this regard.

Let me say that we on this side feel very strongly, and I guess I feel very strongly on a personal basis, both as the former Mayor of a city which had the highest unemployment rate in Canada and as a former small and medium-sized entrepreneur, that it is very frustrating for small and medium-sized businessmen to obtain assistance out of Ottawa, because no matter what region of the country one comes from, one does not have the time or the money to come to Ottawa on a regular basis to find out what kind of assistance is available.

If one really wants to solve the problems of regional disparity in the country, one must take all of the economic tools of the Government to each region of the country. Until the Bill was introduced, neither the programs of the old Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce nor of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion were available to every part of the country. In some parts of the country only the DREE program was available and in other parts of the country only the IT&C programs were available. Therefore, we have taken the best of the programs of those two former departments and combined them into the one program called the Industrial and Regional Development Program which is being introduced today.

The other aspect is that we could not deliver these programs on a regional basis to reach out to the small and medium-sized entrepreneur because we had a totally unmanageable number of programs in the Department. It was unmanageable even here in Ottawa, where there were 2,000 to 3,000 people to administer them. Therefore, it was obviously impossible to have them delivered by the regional offices.

Therefore, we undertook what I called the "crunching" exercise to reduce over 100 programs into seven major programs. This program is one of those seven major programs and it will constitute approximately one-half of the total budget of the Department. Therefore, for the first time we will indeed have not only decentralized delivery, but also decentralized decision-making in terms of the vast majority of the applications that will be coming forward from the private sector in each region of the country.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister would expand on the population features in Tiers I, II, and III. It appears to me that this limitation of population in each may disqualify areas that are otherwise very, very needy. What is the actual purpose of the population requirement in Tiers I, II and III?

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the only areas that are now designated under the DREE program are by provincial boundaries or, in the case of B.C. his Province and my Province, the northern parts of our Provinces.

In essence, with respect to areas comprising almost 50 per cent of the population of the country, industries located in those areas are not now eligible for financial assistance under the old RDIA program. In essence, we will not take the 50 per cent which is the most developed part of Canada and ensure that it will have financial assistance for any company that wants to undertake modernization, expansion, innovation, design research and development, marketing or industrial renewal. Then we will take the 50 per cent of the country which is least developed and break it into three specific tiers, Tier IV being the bottom 5 per cent in terms of economic development in Canada. In turn, it will have the most enriched part of the program. We will then take the product cycle and the life cycle of a company and enrich the financial assistance, depending on in which of those four tiers a company is located. There is only one difference between the tiers outside of the degree of enrichment. For example, maximum assistance for modernization or expansion starts at 25 per cent of eligible capital costs for Tier I, 35 per cent for Tier II, 50 per cent for Tier III and 50 per cent for Tier IV.

The one element that is not available to the most developed part of the country is the new establishment. That has traditionally belonged to what we call the DREE-designated areas. In other words, if we allowed new companies in the most developed part of Canada to receive financial assistance, there would obviously be no reason, no justification whatsoever, for these companies to locate in the so-called disadvantaged areas of the country. That is the only element not included in each tier. It is important for Hon. Member's to realize that for the first time it is not a question as to whether one is designated or is not designated, but rather a question as to the degree of enrichment for which a Member's riding is designated. Previously, if a riding was not designated, that means a Member's companies could not receive any financial assistance. From now on, they will receive financial assistance, but the enrichment will depend on the degree of economic disparity.

Mr. Taylor: I would like to ask a supplementary question. I understand what the Minister is saying, but say that I have an area that has 10 per cent of the population of the Province and it is a very needy area. Will it be disqualified under Tier I simply because of its population?

Mr. Lumley: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I did not understand the whole question of the Hon. Member. We have taken the 260 census divisions from Statistics Canada, and we will use that as a basis for determining the regions for assistance. Then we have taken three major criteria: unemployment, disposable income and fiscal capacity of the respective Province. Then we have weighted those three because they are obviously not all of equal importance. As well as weighing those three criteria, we divide the country into the top 50 per cent or bottom 50 per cent of economic activity. Then we break down the tiers, the lowest developed 5 per cent is Tier IV, the next 20 per cent is Tier III, the next 30 per cent is Tier II and then the bottom 50 per cent, which is Tier I. It may be that some Hon. Members might have two or three census divisions in their constituencies. They may have a census division that is a Tier II, a census division that is a Tier I and a census division that is a Tier III. That sounds very complicated but it will really be very simple because of the index. If any Hon. Member wants to find out what tier any town or city in his constituency is in, or what census division it is in which, in turn, tells which tier it is in, it just takes a telephone call to the regional director and that can be established for every city and town right across the country.

The other major element that is different from when it was first raised in debate resulted from the difficulty Members from all Parties in the parliamentary committee had with the cyclical problem. In other words, a city the size of 100,000 population could lose two or three industries in a very short period of time. That would have a dramatic impact on the employment situation, yet those statistics would not show up for two or three years in the development index and that community would have been graded among the most developed regions in Canada in the initial evaluation. That is why we injected an unemployment clause which we call Tier I. For any region in Tier I that is for six consecutive months 1 per cent over the unemployment figure will automatically classify for the Tier II degree of enrichment regarding new establishment.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Minister. First, I would like to congratulate him on what I consider a very constructive program, one that has long been needed. I am glad that he finally has all of its parts together and has come out with a concise program. As Members of Parliament, we will immediately want to know, so that we can pass on the information to our ridings, what degree of help could be available to the various parts of the riding and the riding as a whole, or if there will be a variation from one part to another and what those variations will be. As well, to whom in his Department should we direct our inquiries on behalf of our ridings so that we can get a concise answer to send to our riding press so they can, in turn, advise the various parts of the riding what assistance is available to them?

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Speaker, I accept with gratitude the Hon. Member's compliments with respect to the program, particularly since it comes from such a distinguished Member of the House.

With respect to each riding, the lists are already made up of tiers for each part of every Member's riding. These could be distributed this afternoon but they will be distributed tomorrow, assuming we get concurrence in the House to refer this Bill to committee, which I understand is forthcoming. It will be referred to members of the Regional Development Committee tomorrow.

I can tell the Hon. Member right now what tiers his constituency is in. The Hon. Member can call me and I will take care of it myself rather than someone on my staff.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, in his comments the Minister made reference to the task force. There has been remarkable success with a majority of these task forces but sometimes the very volume has necessitated a delay in the immediate follow-up that one might require or feel appropriate.

Recently, in response to my question, the Minister was kind enough to answer that a Mr. Bolger and Mr. Reimer would head a special task force on the petrochemical industry. First, I assume from the chairmanship that it will be made up of management and labour. Will civil servants be sitting on that particular task force or will they be there as observers? Could he tell us when he anticipates this task force will be meeting?

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the Hon. Member. I was supposed to call him this morning but I forgot. The task force has been assigned. All those who have been asked to serve have agreed to do so. They will be holding their first meeting here in Ottawa tomorrow morning. Members of my Department, Energy, Mines and Resources, and, I believe, two other departments will be sitting as observers and will be available as a resource when necessary. It is not a Government-led task force but an industry-led task force. As it has been with all other task forces, our people are there to assist the private sector members in any way they deem appropriate.

Miss Campbell: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister concerns the development index and his reference to the Statistics Canada 260 census districts. Under the Unemployment Insurance Act, Statistics Canada presently uses economic zones. Is that the same idea behind these 260 census districts? If so, there is a big problem in passing this Act. Some constituencies, such as my own, are grouped into two different census districts or economic zones. A situation could occur where a neighbour from one county may work at the same place as a person from my county who is affected by the unemployment rate, needs more weeks because the variable entrance requirements apply to that person while not to the other.

How does the Minister rationalize these problems which may exist within an economic zone or census district under Statistics Canada? For example, if Lunenburg county in Nova Scotia, which is very prosperous, is grouped with Digby, Annapolis, Yarmouth or even Shelburne, a different picture arises.

I have protested the use of economic zones under the Unemployment Insurance Act since I became a Member in 1974. While we have arrived at a type of averaging, even that does not show the difference in the unemployment insurance rate in my constituency versus the upper half of that economic zone, which is a very well developed area with good employment. This legislation as it exists would penalize such a constituency.

Is there any leeway to look at an area outside of this development index that we are hearing about today?

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises an important point. It is one of the reasons it has taken so long to bring this Bill forward. We have been trying to develop an equitable, objective index and it has taken a substantial amount of time.

First, it is very easy to use the Statistics Canada figures from the 260 census areas for determining disposable income.

As the Hon. Member indicated, the employment figures are more difficult to ascertain. For unemployment insurance there are 66 economic zones, as the Hon. Member is aware. Not only have we expanded those 66 zones, but we will now be able to break that down even further. We have 189 areas to determine the unemployment criteria. We tried to break it down into the smallest areas possible so that we will have the most sensitive figures with respect to unemployment. Thus for the unemployment figures we have taken 189 economic areas rather than the 66 which I understand UIC uses.

While the Hon. Member was talking I was looking at her constituency, which I know very well, in order to give her an indication of how sensitive this development index is. As the Hon. Member knows, no index is perfect but we happen to believe that this is the best one to be developed to date. After one year's experience with this, we will be able to improve upon it even more.

For example, there are three census areas in the Hon. Member's constituency which are Yarmouth, Annapolis and Digby. The Hon. Member will have a Tier III zone for two of those areas and a Tier IV for the third. Obviously she is at the maximum, with the exception of the new establishment in the Tier III area, for all three census areas in her particular riding. I believe the Hon. Member can see that we have addressed the very issue that she has raised. The fact that one part of a Member's riding may be more developed than another does not totally distort the whole riding. This can be seen in the Hon. Member's specific riding in which there are three census areas where she has a Tier III and Tier IV for each one of the three census areas.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Minister for the Bill he introduced in the House today, since it in many ways embodies recommendations that have been made in recent years. The Minister referred to regional offices, and it must be said that many of these regional offices have done quite extraordinary work during the last few years. Perhaps the Minister could confirm whether or not my impression is correct that the regional offices are becoming what, in many parts of the country, is being referred to as a one-stop counter? For instance, will a businessman, instead of having to rush to Montreal, be able to go to his regional office and get all the information he needs on various programs for small- and medium-sized businesses? If that is the case, I think the Minister will be glad to hear that in many parts of Canada and especially in Quebec, there has been considerable demand for this kind of office for some time.

• (1540)

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, having been chairman of the Committee on Regional Development, I think we have raised in the Bill many of the criticisms which Hon. Members such as himself have raised over the years.

Yes, we are going to take the one-stop shop concept and make it work rather than just talking about it. For the first time all the programs that used to be available from the ITC and DREE offices will be under a one-stop shop concept. For example, in the Hon. Member's Province, ITC had an office in Quebec City and one in Montreal. DREE had an office in Montreal, Quebec City and several other cities. Programs for research and development, for example, were not under any DREE mandate but were under the ITC mandate. Consequently, they were not available to the small and medium-sized entrepreneur throughout the Province of Quebec or for other reasons across the country. Then we opened up les bureaux de l'OCRI in a couple of areas and did not open them in others.

What we are trying to do now is to ensure that a small and medium-sized entrepreneur will not have to go any further than his own sub-office to find out what is available from the Government of Canada to help him improve the competitiveness of his company. We will even take it one step further, Mr. Speaker. We are going to make better use of the FBDB offices which under the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism's (Mr. Rompkey's) direction have something like 109 branches throughout the country. We will be using those offices to a greater degree. In communities where there is a regional office of FBDB and a regional office of ITC-DREE, long-range plans call for them to be put in the same building. Now, when a small or medium-sized entrepreneur goes to a government building he has to go to one building to see what is available from one department and then go to another building to see what is available from another. But we are going to try and do our very best to make sure that one-stop shopping becomes the normal way of doing things, rather than the exception, which is what most Members of Parliament find today.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I have two short questions for the Minister. Will the passage of this Bill eliminate the discriminatory practice we have had in the past with communities within the same region, where one community is eligible for assistance while an adjacent one may not be? For instance, in the Miramichi area, in the northwest part the parish of Alnwick is eligible for assistance grants and other communities on the northwest side of the river are not. On the southeast, Glenelg, Hardwick and Rogersville are eligible for grants but other communities on that side of the river are not. Will this Bill eliminate that kind of discrimination?

When the Minister talks about putting offices of the Federal Business Development Bank and ITC-DREE in the same building, can he tell us when the offices of these two government agencies will be moved out of the larger cities of the area into the areas that are underdeveloped and where they belong?

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Speaker, I will answer the last question of the Hon. Member first. He will recall that when my colleague the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism spoke during the budget debate he indicated the new thrust which the Government has undertaken with the Federal Business Development Bank. The Government has indicated to the FBDB that it wants to concentrate its efforts on the rural regions of Canada rather than the urban centres where the commercial banks can handle most of the financing activities. A whole new thrust of the FBDB will be to concentrate its efforts in the rural areas, as lenders of last resort in those areas where the business community is having difficulty trying to raise funds for normal commercial institutions.

As to the Hon. Member's first question, with the exception of new establishments in Tier I, to me the most important part of this whole new program is the fact there will be no discrimination, whether a riding is designated or not designated. The question, now that everyone is designated, is "To what degree of financial assistance is a company in a Member's constituency entitled?" There will no longer be a dividing line indicating that this constituency will not receive assistance from the Government of Canada and that constituency will. The question will be, depending upon the economic disparity of the two constituencies, what degree of assistance a constituency will receive. There is the exception again, as I said, of Tier I. The reason for the Tier I non-eligibility for establishment is to ensure that the developed regions of the country do not compete on an equal basis with the rest of the areas. In other words, if an entrepreneur were to locate a new company and he received the same assistance in the most developed parts of the country as he did in the least developed, I would say there would be no incentive to locate in an area of regional disparity. That category of assistance for that category will not be available under Tier I. Other than that, there will still be assistance for modernization, expansion, research and development, marketing, innovation and design. In fact, all the programs of financial assistance that up until now were not available in all parts of the country will be available to those companies in all regions of the country for the first time.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Minister's answer; I thought it was very forthright. I realize the Government has proclaimed a thrust to get FBDB and ITC-DREE out of the urban centres and into the rural areas of the country where they belong, but I have not yet seen any action.

I have a concern that while these people are in urban centres, as sensitive as they may be, they do not really understand what is going on in the rural parts of Canada. In the decision with regard to the assistance to which industries will be entitled, will local representatives be consulted rather than just bureaucrats in Ottawa who go on a statistical basis which has no relevance whatever to the realistic situation in a particular area of the country?

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the Hon. Member, we have already opened several regional or sub-offices in the last couple of years. For example, in the plan for New Brunswick, when the final number of offices for that Province is determined, there will be more offices there for our Department than in the Province of Ontario. I think that will give an indication to the Hon. Member how serious we are in addressing the regional disparity issue.

With respect to consultation with individual Members of Parliament, I am sure the Hon. Member recognizes that commercial confidentiality of the information provided by the applicants is the key. In other words, if the private sector wishes to have the Member of Parliament involved in the assessment of the application, that is up to the company applying. The Government has no authority to give access to that information to anybody, otherwise you violate the confidentiality of the negotiations with an individual company. The Government does not object to that, but the decision is up to the individual company making the application to the Government of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair would like to recognize two Members, the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) followed by the Hon. Member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott).

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Minister on Bill C-165, along with all his other endeavours and thrusts in trying to streamline the delivery of all of these programs, whether ITC, DREE or the FBDB.

I want to join with my colleague the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) and again underline to the Minister the need for some of those offices and services being located where the action is. I can certainly tell the Minister that we have a need for some of those services right in my own riding of Restigouche.

With regard to the kind of liaison in communication that will take place between those officials with the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) and officials of Industry, Trade and Commerce and DREE, can the Minister tell us what mechanism will be in place? Could the Minister tell us exactly the flow of things from the time we identify projects, whatever they might be, whether infrastructure, transportation support or a new industry, and elaborate a little more about how this will work, specifically in the Province of New Brunswick day to day in terms of dealing with constituents and with requests from Members of Parliament? Can he tell us just exactly how the new programs will be operated once this legislation is adopted?

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member must recognize that there are two distinct facets to our program delivery. One is under general development subagreements with the Provinces and the other is where we do direct delivery ourselves with financial assistance to individual corporations, whether they be manufacturing, processing, tourism or related service sectors.

The direct delivery of financial assistance to companies is by application. The only time we are involved with other departments is when we feel there is some impact on them and consequently officials of our Department will consult with their officials.

We would get directly involved with my colleague, the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development, primarily in the areas where we would be negotiating general development subagreements with the Provinces. My colleague's responsibility would be for the over-all co-ordination of all the line departments to ensure that each line department has a regional sensitivity. For example, from the perspective of my Department in terms of industrial parks and tourism and with my colleague, the Minister responsible for Small Businesses and Tourism, we will not negotiate with the Provinces until such time as we have co-ordinated our efforts with the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development.

Those are the two aspects of economic development of our Department. Whereas before our Department was responsible for DREE subagreements in all sectors—transportation, urban development and forestry, these will now be handled by the line departments under the co-ordination of my colleague, the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister's time has expired. With the consent of the House I would like to recognize the Hon. Member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott). Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps we could seek unanimous consent to continue for several more minutes, maybe ten more. It might preclude many speeches if Members could put questions to the Minister and obtain answers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has shown considerable leeway and has recognized a very substantial number of Hon. Members. At this point the Chair would like to recognize the Hon. Member for Victoria-Haliburton.

Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate you on the very fair and efficient manner in which you handle the office of the Chair. Also I would like to commend the Minister on his Bill. I do not say that it has everything I would like to see but, coming from a riding with an unemployment rate 3.5 per cent above the national average and never being able to qualify for DREE, I would say that the old Bill was certainly a discrimination.

There is a lot of good in this Bill. As the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) indicated, I am also quite interested in knowing how soon we will see some benefits from this new Bill. I would like to ask the Minister how much negotiation he has to do with the implementation of any of these designated areas with the individual governments of each Province? How closely does the Minister have to work with them? Can he go out on his own, or does he still have to consult the department of industry or whatever of the different Provinces?

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Speaker, this is solely a federal initiative. It is a direct delivery program. There are no negotiations needed with anybody except the applicant. Once this Bill is passed by the House and by the other place, we could start delivery immediately. We are hoping, if colleagues on both sides of the House think the Bill is to the benefit of all Canadians, that we will have the legislation approved this week and we will be ready to go as of July 1 and provide financial assistance for companies right across the country.

I know the Hon. Member has raised this issue on many occasions before the committee. I think he will be happy to know that many of the things which he said about his own constituency in terms of need have been borne out by the development index. For example, he happens to have about four different census areas in his constituency. He will find that in most of his constituency he will have the highest level of enrichment of any constituency in the Province of Ontario. I mean this sincerely when I say it. Often we in the Government are accused of doing something which will only feather our own nests as Government Members of Parliament. For the first time in regional development terms we really have a fair and equitable index, not the arbitrary decision of a Minister depending on which Party is in power to decide which area gets designated. Also in terms of new ridings being designated under this new program, there are more Opposition ridings being added to the designation list than Government ones. If that is not an indication to Hon. Members of how fair and equitable is this program, I do not know what is.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, I want to return very briefly to the question of the smooth operation of this new delivery system. I see the Bill talks about the Minister of International Trade, and I wonder whether part of this Bill will fall under his purview. Will he be responsible for those items, or do all these matters come under the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and DREE?

Also returning very briefly to my question respecting smooth operations in individual Provinces, the Minister did not quite elaborate on what is in place from the time a suggested project goes through the policy analysis of the Minister of State and his officials in any given Province—and I am speaking of the Province of New Brunswick—through the linkages and liaisons between the officials of the Minister of State for Economic Development and the Minister's officials who are directly responsible for DREE in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In other words, I am concerned about the bureaucracy, about which there has been much discussion. Regardless of what department it is or whether it is municipal, provincial or federal, I think we are all concerned that from time to time projects are delayed, if not put off or killed off entirely, because of the necessity to go through these various steps.

I am hopeful the Minister will be able to tell us today that there is a streamlined approach to avoid delays and to avoid the prevention of worth-while projects from going ahead. There must be something in place so that there will be clear lines of communication on the policy side between officials of the Ministry of State for Economic Development and the Minister's officials who are responsible for Industrial and Regional Development, Industry, Trade and Commerce, and the DREE program.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The last speaker referred to the Minister of Trade in the Bill. I wonder whether he could point out at what page it is so that we could follow his questioning.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect, that is hardly a point of order. I think the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion should be allowed to comment upon this last supplementary question, and I hope at that point we could proceed to the next speaker.

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Speaker, there is no other direct involvement by other departments. This is a direct delivery program implemented by my Department and my Department only. With respect to the PEMD program, the Program for Export Market Development, we deliver it out of our regional offices on behalf of the Department of External Affairs. That is just a delivery mechanism, but under the new program all applicants across Canada apply under the Bill only to our Department. Obviously we consult other departments from time to time. For example, if it is a resource question, we consult with the line department to ensure that what we are doing does not impact upon a policy decision which that particular department might be undertaking.

The reason for the whole restructuring, the reason for this program, is to streamline the process. There will be delays caused by lack of information to make a proper decision, but there should be no delays caused by the bureaucracy in terms of interdepartmental discussion because there is not interdepartmental discussion on every single application.

Also as the Bill indicates, the Minister can institute private sector advisory boards, which I want to discuss with members of the parliamentary committee tomorrow. I would like to know whether they would like to see private sector advisory boards reinstituted, for example, as we did with the Enterprise Development Program where we had private sector people assess applications for Government contributions of $500,000 or more. We think that is a good avenue to follow, but it would be left to the Minister. It is one of the items I want to discuss with committee members tomorrow.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in an attempt to assist the debate. I am trying to find out to what bill or clause the questioner referred. Was he referring to Bill C-165 or Bill C-152?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect, this is hardly a point of order. At this point the Chair has extended the time period of the first speaker. I understand there was an agreement for three lead-off speakers and the Chair, with the consent of the House, would like to proceed to the next speaker.

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to thank you for extending the question period. The questions were very useful and the Minister's answers will assist us a great deal in our deliberations.

The Canadian family of Provinces and Territories has some poor and rich cousins. Since we captured our national dream and pushed the railroad through the mountains to the Pacific and developed our central manufacturing base with protective tariffs, we have witnessed the decline of the Atlantic region and the emergence of disparities which have grown and are with us today.

Distance from markets, high transportation costs, lack of capital, lack of entrepreneurship and associated skills are reflected in high unemployment, lack of industrial growth and a marked dependence on the transfer of federal funds. Wages and earned incomes remain well below the Canadian average. Other areas of Canada, notably the Gaspé region of Quebec, northern Ontario and specific regions in northern and western Canada can point to the same problems.

In the 1960s the federal Government addressed this problem with the ARDA program and the fund for rural economic development. Next came the Atlantic Development Board. In 1963 the Area Development Agency began providing assistance to the manufacturing sector. This assistance was quite properly directed to areas of high unemployment, but unfortunately it excluded major population and industrial centres in the Maritimes where new industries had the best chance of succeeding.

In 1968 we witnesed the formation of the first government department to deal exclusively with the problem of regional disparities. The special areas program and the Regional Development Incentives Act were powerful instruments in attacking the problem and together composed a clear indication of a strong dedication to regional development policy.

The initial thrust of DREE was to provide economic development in the lagging region east of Trois-Rivières and certain areas where special needs existed. In time the areas designated for assistance were broadened and the impact of the DREE effort was diluted both by the enlargement of the scope of its operation and in the reduction of real dollars made available for that purpose.

In 1982 the reorganization for economic development split DREE in two and buried it in two departments of Government. DRIE now combines the program functions of DREE with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Given our national economic problems and the high unemployment facing Canada at the moment, it is understandable and desirable that the Government address these serious national issues, but surely the Government cannot be forgiven for not also addressing the problems of regional disparities. It should address both problems.

Any further diminution in the flow of funds to poorer regions can have very serious short-run consequences for individuals and provincial Governments and ultimately the national economy. In the long term it could be a catastrophe. The federal Government is now restricting the transfer of funds to provincial Governments with established funding programs and equalization by changes in the terms of the programs and by limiting increases.

I have no quarrel with better control over federal funds, but I do quarrel with the failure of the federal Government to recognize the impact that the reduction in transfer payments has on governments in the Atlantic Provinces which are nearly 50 per cent dependent on federal funds to maintain existing programs and standards of living.

The ultimate goal of federal development policies should be to create in the poorer Provinces a secondary manufacturing capability employing more wage earners and creating more taxpayers, so that ultimately the poorer Provinces can pull themselves up by their own bootstraps and have less dependency on transfer payments and equalization grants. At the moment, their limited ability to raise revenues through taxation or borrowing makes further reductions in the level of services an alternative which they are seeking desperately to avoid.

Also under assault by the madhatters in the Department of Transport is the historic and traditional assistance given to producers, manufacturers and shippers in the Atlantic Provinces since 1927 in the form of maritime freight rate subsidies. Any further reduction in this assistance could be disastrous to the Atlantic Provinces. It could mean a loss of $64 million to the Atlantic Provinces which would have to be made up by growers, industrialists and manufacturers which depend on transportation facilities, both within the Maritimes and for westbound exports. It could mean lost markets, lost incomes and lost jobs. It could mean declining use of regional resources for materials and decimation of competitive positions in central Canada.

The Maritimes population base is too small to absorb all its production. Major manufacturing plants have to sell outside the region, overseas, in the central committee market and, to a lesser degree, the western Canadian market. The long-haul shippers of Atlantic Canada have to put their goods in these markets at competitive prices or lose them. If the subsidies are removed, the Altantic manufacturing base, which we seek to develop, would be weakened and further centralization in Quebec and Ontario would follow. The rates have already been reduced from 15 per cent to 10 per cent with the prospect of complete elimination and utter catastrophe now facing Maritimers.

The proposal contained in the Bill now before us will form the basis of DREE assistance in the future. It is a reformation of the Enterprises Development Program, the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program, the Regional Development Incentives Program and Support in Technology Enhanced Productivity Programs which have been restructured. Under this Bill, firms anywhere in Canada can qualify for assistance, which varies in degree according to a development index calculated for each of Canada's 260 census divisions. The index will be based on unemployment rates, the rate of employer per population ratio, income and the fiscal capacity of each Province.

The development index does not form a part of the Bill but is spelled out in the regulations, a copy of which has been given to us. The index contained in the regulations is different from the one mentioned by the Minister before committee a few weeks ago. Following our initial criticisms, and it is to his credit, it appears to have been improved, but since it is contained in regulations and not in the Bill, we do not know what it will be three weeks from now or even 30 weeks from now. Based on the value of the index, each census division will qualify for increases in levels of assistance according to its relative disparity on a four-tiered scale.

The new four-tier program represents a shift in direction from previous development initiatives and is a cause of some concern. I will express some potential programs. The Bill reshapes existing programs, many of which, like the Enterprises Development Program, were unsuited to the need of smaller companies in the Altantic Provinces and other areas suffering from disparity, and the mere restructuring of their application is unlikely to increase their impact.

Another major concern is that the impact of the development index is such that it does not operate at its maximum in the larger centres of industrial growth in the Atlantic Provinces and discriminates against them where average wages are higher and employment potential is better. It fails to recognize that it is in these larger centres that many people in outlying regions go seeking employment in industry and where they have a better likelihood of finding it. A failure to permit expansion to the maximum degree in these areas is a failure to provide the maximum number of potential jobs in industry that are badly needed. I am suggesting to the Minister that all of the Atlantic Provinces should be designated as qualifying for the highest tier of development assistance available.

The proposals contained in the legislation before us do not recognize the need for a concentrated approach to economic development beyond the boundary of a single census division. Consequently, many of the new programs can have limited application in the smaller census divisions in Atlantic Canada which have a limited industrial base and weak infrastructure.

Further, the incremental incentives appear inadequate to influence decisions on new plant locations and appear designed instead to concentrate on innovation and marketing, with the bulk of the funding going to the central manufacturing areas of the country. There is little stimulus to influence new plants to locate in the have-not regions that suffer greatest from disparities, and this is an essential element in any regional development policy.

In this latter regard, I would suggest to the Government that it consider the employment of a 150 per cent tax incentive, not as a grant but as a tax credit payable out of future tax by firms locating in areas that suffer from regional disparities, such as the Atlantic Provinces and the Gaspé region of Quebec. This incentive would be payable in respect to the capital cost of a new plant or an expanding plant and the cost of labour for the first three years of the plant's operation. This would not attract a single cent from our national Treasury because it would be paid out of the income tax which such a firm would otherwise pay and is not now paying until the cost of the investment plus 50 per cent has been recovered. This proposal has worked effectively in other parts of the world, such as New Hampshire, and it is a proposal that has been brought forward by the prestigious New Brunswick Industrial Development Council.

I would also like to see the Government consider making the major ports in the Atlantic Provinces duty-free areas where low-cost products from the Third World can be imported and assembled in Canadian assembly plants according to Canadian specifications, using Canadian technology and Canadian workers and then be exported to markets of the world, the same as is done in Amsterdam, Singapore and 16 ports in the United States of America under its highly successful DISC Program.

Clearly there should be a renewed and continued strong commitment made by the federal Government to the development of the economy of Provinces that suffer from the effects of regional disparity so that those Provinces can become less dependent on transfers from the federal Government. They key to such a change is reduction in regional disparities by lowering unemployment rates and taxation levels and raising per capita incomes.

High transportation costs, a weak industrial base and limited infrastructure are fundamental issues that must be addressed. I suggest that economic development can best be achieved within a framework of co-operation between federal and provincial Governments and industry and labour. Consideration must be given to the winners in the Canadian economy and the promotion and growth of an industrial base must surely be founded on the strength of the resource base and access to markets. Infrastructure development has a strong supporting role.

The Government's development policies have been consistently eroded by its monetary policy, which has been insensitive to the unfair and unequal impact it has on disadvantaged regions such as Atlantic Canada. Atlantic Canada is the first hit, the hardest hit and the last to recover from the Government's tight money policies and the Bank of Canada's heedless and stubborn refusal to consider ameliorating measures.

The bottom line is that there is no longer a federal Government department with the sole mandate of promoting development in the least developed regions of the country. The demise of DREE and the broadening of areas for regional development suggest a change in the singular emphasis put on the reduction or elimination of regional disparities. This comes at a time when other federal programs, including equalization payments and transportation subsidies, are coming under review.

Details for implementation of the programs outlined in this Bill and the dollars that are to be made available for each region have not yet been made public. The notational estimates and comparisons between existing programs and new programs on a regional basis are important. We feel that it is essential that full disclosure of the nature of the new program and its dollar impact on each region be made in committee to permit a proper evaluation. Is the new program another cosmetic or can it be adapted to the needs of our regions and made to address our serious national and regional problems? I sincerely hope it can, and that is why we are making constructive suggestions and looking forward with great anticipation to a good dialogue on this very important measure in committee.

Canada urgently needs policies to stimulate innovation, improve productivity and enable Canadian enterprises to put Canadian goods in foreign markets at competitive prices. Canada needs policies to put Canadian goods in Canadian markets at competitive prices. Canada needs policies to address regional disparities. To a degree, this Bill seeks to address all three needs, and we must have a good discourse in committee in order to determine to the best of our ability as Parliamentarians whether it achieves each of those objectives. That is why I look forward to seeing the Bill go to committee as soon as possible, and I join the Minister in that regard.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I do not plan to ask the Hon. Member a question. I want to put a few statements on record.

I am very pleased, Mr. Speaker, to be afforded this opportunity today to respond to Bill C-165, an Act to provide for financial assistance for industrial development in all regions of Canada. I want to say that we in the New Democratic party are more than anxious to get this Bill into committee as expeditiously as possible in order to carry out the fine tuning of Bill C-165 that we feel is necessary and get it back into the House for quick passage in order that it can be enacted early in the month of July.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I find it interesting that the reason we are discussing this Bill today, a Bill that recognizes the reality of regional inequality in the country, goes back to the very beginning of Confederation when Sir John A. Macdonald, a Conservative Prime Minister, introduced something called the national policy. In this policy, the central part of Canada was identified as the area where Canada would do its manufacturing and Atlantic Canada, northern Ontario and northern Quebec, the Prairies, British Columbia and the Territories would be subservient to central Canada. These areas would be the hinterland to the industrial heartland made up of the lower St. Lawrence Valley.

We have now recognized, Mr. Speaker, that not only must these regional inequalities be overcome if we are to bring equity and justice to the Canadian economic landscape, but I think the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) and the Minister responsible for regional expansion has had to agree that the present policies are anything but equitable. I would simply refer to two or three of the existing policies that I think demonstrate most clearly the injustices that are inherent in existing Government programs when it comes to providing economic opportunities for all parts of Canada.

In the period April to November, 1982 one Province received $30 million in development incentives while British Columbia received only $558,000 during that same period. On a worker basis, Mr. Speaker, this averaged out to $10.48 for every worker in that unnamed Province and only 41 cents for every worker in British Columbia. Similar figures for 1981 show an even stronger trend in favour of this special Province. That Province received $25.77 per worker compared to only 56 cents per worker in British Columbia. While we recognize that there are differences between Provinces, I believe this demonstrates unquestionably that present Government programs, for a whole variety of reasons, favour certain constituencies and certain regions of Canada.

Another demonstration of that is the work presently being done by the Canadian Commercial Corporation. That corporation is in place to bring foreign requests for goods and supplies to Canadian suppliers of those goods and supplies. A few weeks ago in the Finance Committee, representatives of the Canadian Commercial Corporation were asked what percentage of the business done by the corporation was done in conjunction with suppliers from the Province of British Columbia. Many of us were not surprised when the answer turned out to be just less than 1 per cent. Just less than 1 per cent of all of the business done by the Canadian Commercial Corporation is done in conjunction with firms from the Province of British Columbia.

All sorts of examples of the really profound injustice attached to the various Government programs could be indentified. One could say that these programs are based, by and large, on patronage and on porkbarrelling techniques.

I think that some of the best listening to be done these days, Mr. Speaker, is to be done by Members of Parliament when listening to members of such Departments as Industry, Trade and Commerce and DREE who have resigned from positions that they have perhaps held for a number of years and are now involved in some other pursuits and they sit down to reflect off the record to Members of Parliament what really has gone on in those Departments. I believe that what one finds, Mr. Speaker, is a considerable amount of what can only be described as patronage.

I am pleased to say that the present Minister, by introducing Bill C-165, has taken a major step to eliminate that kind of behaviour and in fact to make an effort to deliver an equitable industrial incentive program for all parts of Canada. We were disappointed with much of the behaviour of DREE over the past few years. While we recognize that many positive initiatives were taken by DREE, we also recognize that vast areas of the country were not designated. Areas of western Canada where for years and years the unemployment rate was 20 per cent or 25 per cent still have not been designated. The latest fiasco with the ILAP designation is almost laughable. Some areas whose problems did not begin to approach the greater problems of other areas were designated because of the political bias that exists in the system. The work done on Bill C-165, however, does much to dispel the sour taste associated with so many Government programs designed to provide industrial incentives.

• (1620)

The New Democratic Party feels that by identifying the various tiers the Bill will identify the criteria required to bring a number of industrial location factors into play. I should like to identify four or five problem areas that should be clarified in committee. There are problems for the small business sector with this Bill. I think every Member of the House recognizes the fact that the small business sector of the economy has been hardest hit in recent times. The "mom and pop" operations in the country are struggling to survive. They hope for a positive response from the Government as they see their large cousins receiving all kinds of financial handouts or making favourable arrangements with financial institutions. They themselves, however, are fighting the battle in the trenches without very much ammunition.

We must ask whether Bill C-165 provides encouragement for the small business sector. I realize the Bill must have limits but this sector of the business community must receive very serious consideration in the provision of industrial development grants.

The fact that the development index is found only in the regulations attached to the Bill means that the index can be changed by the Department without difficulty. Members of the committee will want to make sure that the present index has been arrived at carefully and that the formula used to trigger the provision of incentives for a particular region will perform equitably across the country.

In committee the Minister will have to let us know exactly how much money is attached to the program. I am sure the Minister and his Department will be sensitive to the rgional distribution of funds in view of their commitment to decentralization. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) has pointed out that this might also be interpreted as centralizing and moving away from the close federal-provincial discussions of the past. Nevertheless, as the Government indicates its intention to decentralize decision making for industrial incentive grants, the regional distribution of funds across the country must reflect the economic needs in any particular year.

The Minister has said that emphasis will be placed on one-stop shopping for the small enterpreneur but we have to wonder just how that will take place. I certainly agree with Members who spoke earlier and said that the average business person having to journey to Ottawa to beg for funds for their business or for a particular region or municipality is something that we must stop. We hope that the Bill will accomplish this. We wonder, however, whether the availability of one-stop shopping is well known to the business community. The maze of red tape that surrounds Government programs discouraged many in the small business community from seeking help. The large firms have professionals on staff who make the approach for them but the small entrepreneur must be able to go directly to a source which is accessible if the program is to be equitably administered across Canada.

I hope that when the committee has an opportunity to examine the fine points of the Bill and the regulations in detail the Minister will indicate how he plans to serve the very small entrepreneur. The Bill is designed to provide financial assistance for industrial development in all regions of Canada but it fails to address the serious problems faced by small entrepreneurs and native people. I realize that any Bill cannot be all things to all groups but I hope that in committee the Minister will address the ways and means by which the native communities can be assisted with industrial and economic development.

We are quite enthusiastic about the Bill, Mr. Speaker, because of what it can do for communities in the country. As an example I will use the community of Kamloops, British Columbia, but I could use any community. The legislation seems almost too good to be true at this point; it almost seems just to have come from the Liberal benches. Let me take the example of a firm in the Tier II ranking which is interested in locating in the Kamloops region. It would be eligible for up to 50 per cent for innovation, more specifically research and development funding; 35 per cent funding for capital costs for a new or expanded veature; 35 per cent support for modernization of plant or expansion of plant; 60 per cent assistance for introducing new marketing techniques and approaches; and 25 per cent support for renewal.

I believe that is going to assist those development officers or development commissioners, whatever title they may have in different parts of Canada, when they go about approaching firms to relocate in their regions, whether it is Canadian firms wishing to open up a new branch, whether it is larger corporations which might be interested in opening up facilities in Canada, or perhaps investors wanting to open up a new venture, particularly in one of the non-growth areas of our country. I believe it will assist them considerably when they are able to go to an investor and say: "This is what we are able to offer you at this point; based on the existing economic situation in our community, these are the incentives we have in place which are provided by the federal Government". I believe this is going to have the potential of making quite a substantial improvement, Mr. Speaker.

In closing, I would simply say that as we move to a program which I believe will be a more equitable program in terms of providing industrial and economic opportunities to the regions of Canada, other than Central Canada, which obviously has a number of built-in advantages already, we must be careful when we are simply forcing growth into areas where it may normally not go. There is an underlying assumption that by providing incentives and grants we can make an enterprise economically viable almost by definition. We all know that this is not true, Mr. Speaker. The list is long of all kinds of economic endeavours in this country which are laughable when it comes to economic viability. Even at the moment of their inception, people knew these incentives were not being provided because of an economic need which was real. They were not economically viable but were politically viable. It made political sense.

I go back to what I said at the beginning of my speech, Mr. Speaker, that for too many years we have seen industrial development associated more closely with political patronage than with the development of a real, sound economic infrastructure in this country. I simply say in closing that we must recognize that growth can take place only in areas where it does make sense. While the Government can step in and provide a serious and positive partner in that introduction, again we cannot create magic on the economic landscape either, Mr. Speaker. We in the New Democratic Party are looking seriously and enthusiastically at the discussions in committee in the next number of hours and look forward to bringing this legislation back into the House for relatively rapid passage in order to have it introduced early in July, 1983.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the spokesperson on behalf of the New Democratic Party. I believe I detected a rather major shift in emphasis on his part. In particular, near the end of the Hon. Member's address he was talking about the need for economic viability to be a criterion for Government programs. I am wondering if the Hon. Member is signalling to the House a difference in attitude towards some uneconomic activities of the Government? Examples, Mr. Speaker, might in fact be Petro-Canada and Canadair which have demonstrated quite conclusively to the Canadian people that they are not economically viable without significant Government assistance. Would the Hon. Member tell us whether or not the NDP is shifting and changing its attitude towards Government support for Petro-Canada and for Canadair?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the question of the Hon. Member in that it permits me an opportunity now to mention two particular areas, specicifically Petro-Canada and Canadair, and other Government Crown corporations. We in this Party have always felt that there was an opportunity for Government to involve itself in a most positive way with economic infrastructure building in this country, be it in the energy sector, transportation, communications, or whatever.

The important point is that if we are going to have a Crown corporation, it is important that it be run as a Crown corporation and not run simply as a corporation. There is a profound difference. Because the Government has run certain Crown corporations in such a way that they duplicate the Domes, the Massey-Fergusons, the Chryslers of the world—in other words, they were mismanaged, like many of the private corporations—we, of course, are concerned, as every Canadian is, that that is not the kind of management we would like.

It we want examples of Government and industry working in the most positive, creative and innovative way, we must look at the economic and industrial leaders of the world today. We must look at countries such as West Germany, Austria, Switzerland, Denmark, Sweden and Norway where, in spite of the difficulties which they also are having during this recessionary period, their economies are diversified and strong and are rebounding more quickly than most. One could also tack on the country of Japan. However, I put that at the bottom of the list because all of the other countries have had their economies developed under social democratic governments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has some concern about relevance to the debate before us. I will permit a supplementary question, but I suggest that relevance might be borne in mind by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Hawkes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sometimes it is difficult to be specifically relevant but I will try. The Hon. Member has brought up the issue of Sweden. I am wondering if he is signalling a different sense about user fees in terms of medical care—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member is straying from the issue of the Bill before us.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry for the digression. I will get right to the heart of the matter. In takling about the need for regional strengthening in the economy of Canada, the Hon. Member brought up the issue of transportation. One of the areas which has had a less than adequate transportation system is the West. The Crow rate is an example. I am wondering if, through the Hon. Member's comments, he is signalling a change on the part of the NDP regarding subsidies to the railroads in western Canada—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member, the issue before us is a different measure and the rule of relevance has to have some application in the House.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

FILING OF OBJECTION TO REPORT OF COMMISSION FOR PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that an objection signed by the Hon. Members for Verchères (Mr. Loiselle), Rosemont (Mr. Lachance), Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Bachand), Chicoutimi (Mr. Dionne), Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens), La Prairie (Mr. Deniger), Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau), Charlevoix (Mr. Lapointe), Charlesbourg (Mr. Bussières), Lévis (Mr. Gourde), Louis-Hébert (Mr. Dawson), Québec-East (Mr. Duquet) and Rimouski-Témiscouata (Mrs. Côté), has been filed with the Chair pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, Chapter E-2, R.S.C., 1970, to the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Quebec.

If the House agrees, I would suggest we follow past practice and print the text of the objection as an appendix to this day's Votes and Proceedings. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is agreed.

FILING OF OBJECTION TO REPORT OF COMMISSION FOR PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that an objection signed by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mrs. Erola), Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Masters), Sudbury (Mr. Frith), Algoma (Mr. Foster), London West (Mr. Burghardth), Guelph (Mr. Schroder), Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren), Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Irwin), Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Chénier) and Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins), has been filed with the Chair pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, Chapter E-2, R.S.C., 1970, to the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Ontario.

If the House agrees, I would suggest we follow past practice and print the text of the objection as an appendix to this day's Votes and Proceedings. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is agreed.

INDUSTRIAL AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lumley that Bill C-165, an Act to provide for financial assistance for industrial development in all regions of Candada, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Waddell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Bill is now going to the Regional Expansion Committee, and will be discussed tomorrow in committee. Then, I suppose, it will be brought back to the House later that day, or perhaps on Wednesday. If it is possible to get an expedited copy of the transcript of the committee debate, Mr. Speaker, I would appreciate it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member, I would like to finish the form. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We have now had second reading of the Bill and declared the Bill referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development. In regard to the request, as far as the Committee report is concerned, the Chair will take note of the request made by the Hon. Member.

ATHLETIC CONTESTS AND EVENTS POOLS ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE GOVERNMENT OPERATED POOL SYSTEMS

The House resumed from Tuesday, April 19, 1983, consideration of Bill C-95, an Act to provide for Government operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and events and to amend the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture; and Motion No. 2 (Mr. Reid, St. Catharines).

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, I rise in my place in opposition to Bill C-95, a Bill to establish a sports pool, particularly to speak to the first amendment, Motion No. 2, which calls for the striking of Clause 14(b) which states:

> To conduct and manage, in accordance with regulations made by the Governor in Council, such lawful gaming activities as the Governor in Council directs.

We have all seen how Crown corporations of the Government have conducted and managed our affairs vis-à-vis the post office, Canadair, de Havilland, et cetera, and we have also seen the regulations made by the Governor in Council which, in essence, come down from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). However, before going into this part of it in depth, I would like to say that as a Member of Parliament one of our many rights, one which I prize, is our availability to what is known as the householder. This small booklet, composed by Members and distributed to each household, can be mailed out four times a year, as Your Honour is aware.

In each of my householders, I include a questionnaire covering a wide range of topics. I do this intentionally because as a Member of Parliament I am only an extension of my constituents and their views. It is important to me that I reflect as accurately as possible these views. I receive a substantial number of responses to each questionnaire, into the many hundreds. The results of these polls greatly assist me in determining the feelings of my constituents on issues of the day.

In July of last year, one of the questions posed in my householder was as follows: "Do you favour a sports betting pool administered by the federal Government?" Seventy-five per cent of those responding answered no, 70 per cent said yes, and 8 per cent were undecided. Obviously, the majority of the people in my riding are against the creation of a sports pool. I stand here today, as is my duty, to register their opinion in this House.

The striking of the clauses is what we are discussing, and Clause 14(b) would allow the sports pool corporation to conduct and manage such lawful gaming activities as the Government directed. A federal re-entry, if you will, into the lottery field would thus be possible for any game imaginable. It is just too broad. Again, it involves the element as to whether we trust the people across the way to come back into the lottery field. Video slot machines paying cash for a win instead of a free replay is one game, and the Government might now be considering something such as that. We find the clause is just absolutely too offensive to the Provinces, with which we have an agreement on lotteries, and too open-ended in the directions that it can take to let it go unchallenged. That is why I am on my feet.

As I just intimated, this new lottery or sports pool would involve a Crown corporation. It is only a few short weeks since the Auditor General, in his annual report to Parliament, expressed strong unease and a clear caution with regard to Crown corporations, something he rightly termed "sub-governments". We are all aware of what has been happening. All one must do is pick up this morning's newspaper to see the Auditor General again decrying what happened with Canadair.

Does the Government see the problem? Does the Government hear the warnings? I think not. Does the Government say anything in response? No, it just blames management. Yet in this very clause it wants to take over management and responsibility again in the sports pool. It wants to create another Crown corporation. That is its arrogant answer, as if we had not had enough Canadairs.

The sports pool corporation to be created by this Bill will conduct and manage a federal sports pool. Why should there be another Crown corporation? Why should there be a sports pool to begin with? The Government just loves Crown corporations. It has over 300 of them now, most of them unaudited and uncontrolled. Air Canada, VIA Rail, the Commercial Investment Corporation and others are available to the Government to use as a means of rewarding its people, taking care of its own. There is Petro-Canada, which 69 per cent of Canadians do not go out of their way to use and which 45 per cent feel should be sold.

Is there another failed Liberal or miffed Liberal out there somewhere who needs some place to hang his hat and some money to line his pocket? Is that why the Government needs another Crown corporation?

Mr. McDermid: Yes.

Mr. Stewart: I think so, as my hon. colleague says. The Government says the sports pool is needed to aid fitness and amateur sport and arts and culture. Which cultured Liberal out there in the boonies is waiting for the call to show what a sport and how fit he is to run this newest enterprise? I a wait this appointment with bated breath. It will help fund the 1988 Calgary Olympics, we are told, and we are very pleased about that. We know that concerning anything that happens in Alberta, the money will be well spent. No one is denying that this event is worthy of our support, and we totally do support it. However, there must be a better, more sensible way of doing this, not a Jean Drapeau philosophy involved.

Back in the late 1960s, those same Montreal Olympics incurred a deficit of about $1 billion, and all three levels of Government, Montreal, Quebec and the federal Government, began looking for ways to pay the deficit. The Quebec Government suggested that the federal Government take over the Olympic lottery which was due to expire in 1976. As a result, Loto Canada was created. It, of course, was a Crown corporation. Loto Canada was given a three-year mandate, and its establishment was supported by all major political Parties, with the exception of the socialists to my left. The lottery made quite a great deal of money and the Government of the day, like the one now, warmed to the idea of carrying on this profitable undertaking. It meant more taxpayers' dollars to squander.

Early in 1979, a Bill was introduced in the House to make Loto Canada a permanent lottery corporation. Opposition support for this move was negative. Loto Canada had been scandal-ridden over the course of its existence. The Provinces argued that lotteries were a provincial area of concern and threatened court action. We in Opposition reminded the Government that it had promised in 1976 not to extend the lottery unless the Provinces consented. The issue was finally put to the voters of Canada. The Liberal platform called for the continuation of the lottery under redefined terms. We called for the dismantling of Loto Canada in return for an agreement with the Provinces on lottery revenues. In my view as a federalist, it was a very wise decision. We won the election and soon after gave the Provinces exclusive jurisdiction over lotteries in return for $24 million annually, indexed to 1979. This money was to be split fifty-fifty between arts and culture, fitness and amateur sport, a far cry from what the Bill before us is providing.

The Provinces also agreed to assume responsibility for the federal share of the costs related to the expansion, upgrading and renovation of three National Hockey Leagues arenas. Shortly after the agreement was signed, Parliament dissolved for the 1980 election. During the election campaign, the Liberals promised they would do everything possible to get the federal Government back in the lottery business. However, once in office they were informed by their legal advisers that the Conservative Government's agreement was binding enough to make any breach of that agreement a serious matter.

I would now like to turn to the crux of the whole issue. The loophole-lookers took over and the loophole they latched on to was that of a sports pool. With a lottery ticket, winning is simply a matter of luck. A sports pool ticket meant involving some skill. That was the loophole for the federal Government to break its word to the Provinces and get back into the lottery business. The reason was the Government's distinction between "luck" and "skill". Based on this reasoning, the Government announced in the fall of 1981 that it would seek the establishment of the Sports Pool Corporation.

• (1650)

I see that my time is running out. I had a lot more that I wished to say on the subject but suffice it to say that we on this side of the House and Canadians do not trust the Government to run a sports pool. We do not know what it will do with the money. The definition is too broad. We think that Clause 14(b) should be deleted completely. We believe that regional and provincial disparity exists and that the federal Government has no business adding to the problem. I strongly urge all Members to consider this Bill very carefully and not aid and abet the Government in its sweeping powers under a sports lottery.

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to say a few words about Bill C-95. My colleague has pointed out some of the pitfalls to be anticipated in an inept Government trying to handle a potentially scandal-ridden business.

I would confine my remarks to the potential effect that this Bill will have on one of Canada's valuable and loved industries, the horse racing business. It could be seriously damaged by the loss of some $300 million which will be taken from the disposable income of Canadian earners.

This penchant for raising money, a form of hidden taxes, by a Government which has a penchant for raising money from any source whatever totally disregards the damage which will be done to this important taxpaying business. Surely some consideration should be given to this valuable industry other than just excluding it from pool betting.

Who will protect or replace the lost jobs, the lost revenues and the lost enjoyment of Canadians if standardbred or thoroughbred horse racing is damaged beyond recovery? The Government-inspired recession is already taking its toll of the nation's racetracks. Attendance is down over 2 per cent this year and betting is down over 3 per cent. That is the official statement. In fact, in the last quarter the reality is that attendance and betting are down approximately 15 per cent.

Horse racing goes back some 3,500 years. It is an old and honoured entertainment medium. It is a sport. An afternoon in the sun watching horses run or taking one's spouse out for dinner at the track is far superior to keeping a clammy lottery ticket in one's pocket in the hope of becoming an instant millionaire against totally ridiculous odds. The track does not have the climate of a Nevada casino. It is a place where people go to have a thoroughly good time, not lose much money and perhaps even make a little. But it is always to enjoy the sport.

The horse racing business employs 50,000 people or more in Canada. These people depend on the profitability of the industry, as in any other business, for their livelihood. In effect, racetracks are the employer of horsemen, trainers, farriers, veterinarians, farmers who grow the feed and so on. It is even the employer of people who serve in the restaurants and gasoline operators who sell gasoline to the people who come to the racetrack. The spin-offs are wide and unlimited.

There are approximately 15,000 registered race horses in Canada today. One can see that there are three jobs for Canadians for every horse that is raced. There are 3,000 throughbred and standardbred breeders in Canada who employ grooms, trainers and others, all of whom pay taxes. There are 10,000 race horse-owners in Canada. All of these 50,000 people are already in some jeopardy as tracks cut back on the size of their purses and costs because of the general recession.

The largest single sporting event, certainly in North America if not in the world, is the Kentucky Derby in Louisville, Kentucky, a city of 300,000 people. Just yesterday, thousands of Canadians enjoyed the Queen's Plate at Woodbine in Toronto, and others the Confederation Cup at Flamboro in the standardbred racing business.

Simply consider some of the people involved in horse racing and some of the skills involved, not to mention the investment dollars, to raise Canadian horse breeding to world standards in order to appreciate that this is indeed a full-fledged industry. They include the trainers, the drivers, the jockeys, the owners who are people with the finances and the love of horse racing. They are people like E. P. Taylor. Look what he has done with Windfield Farms and the breeding industry and racing in Ontario. He has a great success record. As well, there is Louie Levesque, the Speers family on the Prairies and dozens of smaller operators who are dedicated to the achievement of excellence in the breeding business in Canada.

What is the point here? The point is that the $300 million which will be removed from the disposable income of Canadians will adversely affect the racing business. Let me cite a quotation:

> I want to say that there is every indication that the operations of these sports pools will not harm horse racing in any way.

That was said by the Hon. Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) to the Communications and Culture Committee hearings on Bill C-95 last December, 1982. I can tell the Hon. Minister that the $300 million taken from the pockets of Canadians will affect this industry at a time when the recession and proliferation of multi-channel satellite TV video games and other competing interests will severely affect the racing business and keep people away from the tracks.

The tracks need more money for special events, track improvements and public relations in general, not less money while Canadians buy lottery tickets which support nothing but an unproductive and increasing bureaucracy. At a time when this valuable tax-paying industry is scraping for every dollar, just as other businesses in Canada are today, this is no time to be leaching $300 million out of taxpayers' pockets in competition. What Canada does not need now is another lottery and another Government money grab. If culture, sports and medical research are deserving of increased funding, and I believe they are, they should be funded adequately by regular governmental support after due parliamentary debate and should not be subject to the vagaries of revenue pools based on the variable degree of public support in the buying of lottery tickets.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, it would appear that the Government is fed up with arresting bookies for taking bets on football games and is now making it all quite legal and respectable in the hope of turning a quick profit.

I want to make it clear for the record that Bill C-95, which seeks to establish a Government's sports pool, is blatant interference in the affairs of the Provinces of this nation. It is greatly exaggerated in terms of potential for profit and will have a negative effect, I believe, in many other areas as well. Lotteries have traditionally been the exclusive domain of the Provinces; that is, until Loto Canada was voted into existence in order to help finance the huge deficit incurred by the 1976 Olympics.

Loto Canada had the support of all major political parties mainly because it was considered only a temporary fund-raising device and contained an agreement to share revenue with the Provinces; that is, one-eighth of the profits. However, the Liberals, following along in their tradition of "Give them an inch and they will take a mile", decided that if three-years of Loto Canada is a good thing, then indeed a permanent Loto Canada would indeed be wonderful. However, here in the Opposition corner we believe in the merit principle; that is, if a notion has merit we support it. But after three years of existence Loto Canada had lost its shine. It had been scandal-ridden over the course of its very short existence. The Provinces were threatening court action and wanted the complete pie, not just a slice of the action. As well, we knew full well that the Government had promised not to go ahead with extensions of the lottery corporation without the consent of the Provinces. Therefore, in our opinion, Loto Canada was no longer worthy of merit and we ceased to support it.

The sports pool was the offspring of the controversy over Loto Canada. The Government, squandering money so merrily, finally had to think of new and tricky ways to raise it. It was aware of the Provinces' continued opposition to any form of federal lottery. Not only that, but the federal Government was aware of the Opposition Parties' continued abhorrence of any proposal to create a clone of Loto Canada. Therefore, some bright light in a Government office came up with the idea of having a sports pool.

A sports pool could not be considered to be a bona fide lottery and therefore the federal Government would be immune to any attacks from the Provinces on the basis that revenues thus raised belonged to the latter. Not only that but the element of skill involved in selecting a winner in a baseball or table tennis match removed the potential objection that these things would attract foolish gamblers throwing away their life's earnings without a hope of winning.

The federal Government hoped this would take care of church groups and other dissenters who feel that gambling is not necessarily one of life's most desirable occupations. Not only was this form of gambling less risky and therefore more desirable for people on which to blow their pay cheques but the proceeds would go to fitness and amateur sport. You would not refuse to buy Girl Guide cookies, would you, Mr. Speaker? After all, the proceeds are going to a useful and well established group. Unfortunately, such a comparison does not ring true. The Government is trying to tell us that the proceeds from its new corporation are going to go to good causes. Why not be honest and tell us that, after all is said and done and the hefty salaries have been paid to all the fat cat executives who will be appointed as heads of this new sports pool corporation, probably only peanuts will be left for the amateur sport community?

Mr. Paproski: And they are all Grits.

Mr. Fretz: And they are all Grits, right.

Mr. McDermid: And the odd NDP.

Mr. Fretz: What is the real effect of funding from lotteries, sports pools and the like? I will tell you, Mr. Speaker. When an athletic group or volunteer organization tries to go door to door to collect funds, people will say: "I'm sorry, I can't support you. You guys get your money from the Government, go ahead and apply to the Grits; apply to the Government." In effect, the money coming from the Government effectively deters normal fund raising. When the fine print is read, there is not even an assurance to the taxpayer that the funds generated by the sports pool will even go to the proper and most desirable places. Some of the proposed beneficiaries of the sports pool include fitness and amateur sport, arts and culture, medical research, the Calgary Olympics and worthy capital projects. What proportions are to go to each body is one question I would ask. What is the definition of a worthy capital project? Would it be something built in my riding as a Conservative Member? It would be wonderful if the House of Commons were made aware of the specifics of this deal, thus helping to avoid some of the scandal involved in the Loto Canada fiasco. There should be no wording in the proposed Bill which leaves potential for abuse. Not only that, but with so many beneficiaries, no one segemnt is likely to receive a significant benefit from the winnings. That is, of course, assuming that the sports pool is profitable at all. We have no guarantee of that.

The Minister responsible has high hopes for the success of the sports pool. He states optimistically that the net annual return will be in the order of $80 million. A more realistic assessment was provided by the Ontario Minister of Tourism and Recreation. He puts the gross annual return of such an endeavour to be in the area of $30 million to $40 million. This is based on the dismal weekly sales figures of the Quebec hockey pool. If you cannot sell hockey in Quebec, then you cannot sell lemonade in the desert or a sports pool to Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fretz: In other words, this one sounds like a loser.

An Hon. Member: It is a racket.

Mr. Fretz: An Hon. Member says it is a racket. It is interesting to note to what extent the Government will go to promote one of its ill fated schemes. It is even going so far as to change the Criminal Code to allow the federal Government alone to operate sports pools.

Mr. McDermid: So the Grits will not be criminals any more.

Mr. Fretz: So the Grits will not be criminals. Isn't that something? The Provinces will be able to join the action, provided they come to an agreement, which you can bet will be enormously beneficial to the federal Government, the Grits. The bothersome part about all this is that the Government can now do what private citizens cannot. We have wiretapping, distilling of liquor and now the operation of a legalized bookie joint.

The Progressive Conservative Party suggests three basic amendments to the proposed Bill C-95. The main intent of these amendements is to clarify the wording. That is first. Unfortunately, we cannot passively accept any proposals where the wording is so vague as to encourage meddling in future. We, in this Party, know all about vague wording. We sit here in Question Period daily. We know the kinds of answers we get from Government Members and Cabinet Ministers.

Since the Conservative Party prides itself on clear answers and leans toward simplicity of format rather than misleading vagueness, we propose that Clause 14(b) be eliminated, this clause, which gives the Governor in Council the power to direct the corporation to manage unspecified lawful gaming "activities". Who knows what activities are meant here? Do you know, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Paproski: Hanky-panky.

Mr. Fretz: Hanky-panky, somebody says. Knowing that Bill C-95 contains amendments to the Criminal Code, is it not possible that further amendments could be made allowing the corporation to get into any activities whether or not currently lawful? I understand that under the terms now specified in Clause 14(b), a federal re-entry into the lottery field is possible. In fact, any game imaginable might become available, cloaked under the thinly veiled respectability afforded it by the Government "seal of approval". For example, there will soon be available video slot machines which pay cash for a win instead of a free replay. Is it beyond reason to assume that this might be the next venture the Government gets into, given the inclusion of the words "gaming activities" in the Bill?

Our next amendment is one which strikes all proposed beneficiaries of the pool, save the 1988 Winter Olympics in Calgary. This is to ensure that certain athletic organizations which would benefit by the proposed legislation do not get their hopes up too high. If there were reason to believe that the proposal were going to be a long-term success, we would not have asked that that amendment be included. After reflection, it would seem to me to give the Government a chance to save face if the sports pool does not work out. The meagre profits would go to the Calgary Olympics and the legislation would die with the melting snow in the spring. After all, it is the Members of Parliament who are in the front lines of all this.

In conclusion, I would ask that Members of all Parties consider the objections to the proposed Bill, which I have raised. Can you, Hon. Members, in good conscience support such a proposal, after due consideration? I hope that your answer is no in its present form. I know what my answer is.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to join this debate. I want to get something on the record right now in terms of the position the Government is taking with respect to a sports pool. The Government is speaking with a forked tongue. The Government is a prevaricator. The Government is telling the people of Canada a story exactly opposite to the truth. The Government is misleading the Canadian public with respect to the basis upon which it enters into the sports pool, and the Government is to be severely chastised by thinking Canadians for the position it has taken.

I want to explain this basic fundamental proposition that I put forward. It is a factual proposition which will be understood by the vast majority of Canadians. I will relate the history of this matter.

During the time when we were the Government of Canada, the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski) and the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis) entered into an arrangement to get the federal Government out of the lottery business. They entered into an arrangement with provincial Governments by which it was agreed that provincial Governments would accept the responsibility of carrying on their existing lotteries and the federal Government under contract would remove itself from the position of carrying on lotteries on the federal side. When the Government across the way came into power, it was in a dilemma as to how to circumvent the contractual arrangement that had been entered into by the then Government of Canada. Of course, moral implications were not of concern, nor were the legal considerations, and it finally came upon a device known as the sports pool to take itself slightly out of the ambit of a lottery in the strict legal sense of the term.

Now the Government has a system which was modelled upon Hockey-Sélect in the Province of Quebec. In order to justify this unfortunate departure from every sense of principle and legal commitment, it had to find a justification to say to Canadians, "Support us in the creation of this new sports pool". Then it glommed on to the Calgary Winter Olympics by saying to Canadians, "Everyone in Canada needs to support the Calgary Olympics which will take place in 1988, but in order to finance it we need the new sports pool legislation to be passed".

When I talk about prevarication, forked-tongue and the federal Government saying something contrary to the truth of the matter, this is an example which can be documented. The commitment of the federal Government to support the Calgary Olympics was not tied to any sports pool. In fact, there was no specific undertaking that the sports pool or any form of lottery or other gambling device would be used to support the Olympics. The commitment was clear and unequivocal. Even the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), who got to where he is today on the basis of being one of the outstanding counsel in the small debts courts of Quebec, will agree that this proposition was really not worthy of any government representing the people of Canada.

Another example of how the federal Government speaks out of both sides of its mouth was evident in the application made to the Superior Court of the Province of Quebec in which judgment was handed down on January 26, 1983. The applicant was the Attorney General of Canada, representing the Government of Canada; the respondent was Loto-Quebec; and the Attorney General of Quebec was an intervenor. It was an application for an injunction by the federal Government against the Province of Quebec to prevent it from carrying on Hockey-Sélect. I would like to indicate what was said by the federal Government on that occasion. Quoting from the judgment of Mr. Justice Rene Hurtubise who rendered his decision on January 26, 1983, he said:

> We will first examine the arguments of the Attorney General of Canada.
> Specifying that he is acting as guardian of justice and in the interests of the public . . . which satisfies us as to his interest in this proceeding, the Attorney General of Canada puts forward principally the following arguments:
> —positively, the contest Hockey-Sélect constitutes a pool-selling game or "a system designed to promote bookmaking, pool selling or betting on a sporting event, the whole being prohibited by Section 186 of the Criminal Code";
> —negatively, Hockey-Sélect is not a lottery;
> —alternatively, even if it was a lottery, Hockey-Sélect is a pari-mutuel system from the beginning to the end of the contest and, therefore, falls within the exception to the exception, namely within the scope of paragraph (6) of Section 190 Cr.C.

Then he went on to say:

> At paragraphs 11, 12, 13, 14, 15 and 18, he explains the underlying reasons for the motion:

He was referring to the Attorney General of Canada at that point. The federal Government stood in court to save the people of Quebec from this dastardly Hockey-Sélect which was poisoning the minds of the people of that Province; the Government of Canada was the saviour of the conscience of the people of that Province. First the Government said that it wanted:

—to prevent the continuation of the illegal operation of Hockey-Sélect;

—to stop the public inducement to act illegally;

—not to permit Hockey-Sélect to continue when the federal Parliament considers amending the Criminal Code in that respect;—

—to underline that it is against public order and morality for anyone, including a mandatary of Her Majesty in the rights of the Province of Quebec, to contravene the provisions of the Criminal Code.

If I have ever heard duplicity, if I have ever heard a federal government speaking out of both sides of its mouth, this is an example. It wanted to save the morals of the people of the Province of Quebec. At the same time it brought before Parliament legislation to create a sports pool, a lottery, a parimutuel, a gambling device on which it would, on the basis of what it said in court in that instance, undermine the morals of the people of Canada. The Government is inducing people to carry on gambling which is illegal for any other institution or for any other person in Canada. Yet the federal Government finds itself in the position now of doing the very thing of which it accused the Province of Quebec in terms of Hockey-Sélect.

On the basis of the representations I have heard, the people of Canada are now fast realizing the fact that this particular proposition for a gambling pool has no basis of relationship to the Calgary Olympics; it has no validity because of the Calgary Olympics. More and more Canadians are becoming concerned about the moral side of the federal Government involving itself in lotteries, pools or gambling devices which are a tax on people least able to afford it. Gambling is a tax on the poor. It is a tax on people who try with what little money they have to invest in a ticket in order to attain some sort of monetary independence. It is a sad, sad proposition when the federal Government is so unable to manage its affairs that it creates a tax on the poor people of Canada.

Today I received a telegram which I would like to read. It reads:

On May 29th over 500 delegates to Saskatchewan Conference, United Church of Canada, unanimously passed a resolution to urge the Government of Canada to abandon its intention to re-enter the lottery and gambling field in any way including sports pool. Please do all you can to stop Bill C-95.

It was signed by Merv Harrison, Chairman of the National Working Unit on Social Issues and Justice. The United Church of Canada understands what is going on here; the people of Canada understand. I oppose this legislation because it is wrongheaded and deceitful. It is based upon the premise that the poor people of Canada have to support the mismanagement of the Government. The Government of Canada ought to do better, carry out its contractual obligations, stay out of the lottery business and do Canadians a big favour.

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I want to discuss some aspects of Bill C-95, an Act to provide for Government operated sports pools. I am personally opposed to the Bill for many reasons. The area I will be covering at this time will be the wide open use, or perhaps I should say abuse, of the game which the Government is trying to force upon Canadians.

I find it personally disgusting that the Government should try to convince Canadians that this is necessary to support Canadian athletes at the 1988 Winter Olympics together with the facilities by saying that this is the only way it can be financed. That is not true. The Government knows full well that all Provinces have agreed to share in their lottery returns to help finance the Calgary Winter Olympics. Another pool or numbers racket, and that is what it is, is being used so that once again, as one Liberal MP put it, and I will not mention names, "You guys shouldn't oppose this thing because in a year's time you will be able to use it for patronage like we are doing". That is a great line. The Minister gives me a funny look. Let me run down some of the expenses that have already been paid on this lottery and who received the money.

Let us talk about the definition of financing and accounting systems to Howard and Associates, and also a definition of financing and accounting systems of the $3,512 paid to Dr. Martin O'Connell. I understand that Dr. Martin O'Connell was once President of the Liberal Party of Canada, not too long ago.

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. McDermid: He received funding shortly after he ceased being a Member of Parliament. Goldfarb Consultants, Research, $16,000; Pugliese Consultants, $875 for research design and review; Howard & Associates, sample ticket design production; G. Kightley & Associates, ticket design and production, $18,300. There are two or three companies doing the same jobs. They are all Liberal companies being paid out of the largesse of a corporation that has not yet been formed.

This just covers from January 1, 1981 to October 6, 1981. Heaven knows what has gone on since then. SOMA Research Ltd., generation of alternative games, research design and review, $22,800. Everybody is designing something and reviewing it. Somebody by the name of P. Woodcox, research—it does not say what research—$3,850. That must have been a heavy study for that kind of money. M. C. Burns & Co., development of gaming projects, $1,250. I do not know Chris Lang, but he got paid $13,995 for liaison with professional sports leagues.

That is an interesting one. That one should be explained. It has not been explained. This individual got paid almost $14,000 for liaison with professional sports leagues. What are they doing, cooking the numbers already? Why we are associating with professional sports leagues? That is where the numbers will come from. What do they have to do with this lottery? Why is there a liaison with them? What exactly is going on over there?

This lottery is nothing but a great big pie in the sky project. It is a porkbarrel for every Liberal hack that can be found from coast to coast in Canada. When this thing is formed, if it gets through the House, and we will make sure that it does not, I will be anxious to see who is appointed as chairman and board of directors of this numbers racket.

This is one lottery that should never come into existence. Competition for the discretionary dollar between the Provinces and the federal Government will once again get completely out of hand. Millions of dollars will be spent advertising against one another's lotteries. Funding will go to the same types of projects where co-operation is now working. Money is coming into the federal coffers for the exact things that this pool or numbers racket is supposed to finance.

I remember a meeting in 1976 with the then Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, now the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien). He pleaded with the Ontario Government to give up its lotteries until the Canadian lottery had enough money to pay off the Olympics. That was to be it. We were never to hear about that lottery again. It would be gone. Once we paid off the Olympics, we would forget about it. It was not to be used for anything else. The Provinces could bring back their lotteries and there would be no competition with one another. That is what the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said in 1974 when he was saddled with the debts from the Olympics.

What happens now? The Government comes in with another numbers racket that will take the discretionary dollar from many areas. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist) said that this would damage the very important horse racing industry in this country. It will damage provincial lotteries which at the present time are competing for the discretionary dollar. It will be nothing but a huge Liberal porkbarrel.

The Calgary Olympics is being used in a very unfair way by this Government in order to promote this lottery. The Provinces are now prepared to strike a deal with the federal Government to help finance the very important Olympics that will be held in Canada in 1988. We do not need this so-called sports pool or numbers racket to raise moneys for the Government to hand out to blow itself up in the field of amateur sports. It does not say what amateur sports will be covered. It also states that it will be used for capital projects, but it does not say what capital projects it will cover.

It is interesting to note that after we have been debating this for over an hour, the Minister who is promoting this numbers racket so extensively has finally made an appearance in the Chamber. I will close by saying that we oppose this Bill. The evidence presented today is that the porkbarreling has already started. The Liberals are receiving largesse from this numbers racket or sports pool which it is trying to perpetrate on the Canadian people. We are unalterarly opposed to it and will fight it to the end.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak to Bill C-95 at report stage, in particular to Motion No. 2 in the name of my good friend the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid). Before getting into my presentation proper, I want to avail you of some fine remarks made in 1732 by Henry Fielding who said at that time:

A lottery is a taxation,
Upon all the fools in creation;
And Heav'n be prais'd,
It is easily rais'd,
Credulity's always in fashion:
For folly's a fund
Will never lose ground,
While fools are so rife in the nation.

In the eyes of the Liberal Party, there are many fools in this nation who can be persuaded to give up some of their hard-gotten gains so that hon. gentlemen opposite can spend it as they see fit. My colleague to my left gave some illustrations of how they have spent some of this money already.

The argument over lotteries, both private and state-run, has waxed and waned for hundreds of years. In some research that I performed in the last five minutes, I found that it was in 1826 that the last British state-run lottery was held. At that time a Bill was passed which outlawed state-run lotteries. It heralded an era of Victorian morality. This concept of morality spread across what is now know as the Commonwealth, and also come to Canada at that time.

My personal preference is not to have state-run lotteries. It had been my intention to make the argument in favour of that position on the basis of morality and ethics, but I realized the futility of arguing on the basis of ethics and morality in a House that is dominated by Liberals. If we are to have this type of gambling activity in Canada, and it is not necessary for us to put it all aside, I would prefer that it remain within the private domain rather than be conducted by Governments, whether they be at the federal or provincial level. The main reason for this is that if we are to have gambling, it must be subject to certain strict controls. Whether that gambling be horse racing tracks, dog racing tracks, bingos or any other form of gambling, it is impossible for the Government on the one hand to be the regulator and policeman and make sure that these things are run properly and honestly and on the other hand to be a player in the game. It is almost impossible. We have seen on so many occasions how the Government opposite wants to be the judge, jury, regulator, policeman and, at the same time, the player. We have seen this in the oil and gas industry with Petro-Canada being one of the players in the game when the Government should be content to be the regulator of the oil and gas industry.

If gambling in Canada was to be privately operated, the Government could still raise a revenue from it by means of taxation. It does this already with horse racing. Look, for instance, at the state of Nevada. Nevada receives probably its greatest state revenues from the gaming industry in Las Vegas and other localities. There is no reason why the Government cannot avail itself of some of these revenue-generating opportunities.

In the past, each nation has had its own national form of ganbling. Lotteries have been commonly associated with European and South American countries. In those countries that are without a proper welfare system, the sale of lottery tickets by people who are unable to find other means of employment provide a substitute for the proper welfare payments that are available to us in Canada. In Britain, there were the soccer pools. I presume there are still soccer pools over there.

In Canada, our national form of gambling was always the penny stock market. I see that the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) is present, and I am sure that she would agree with me that something very useful came out of this form of gambling or speculation, and in a few moments I would like to discuss the differences between gambling and speculation. Canada created, through the development of mines financed through the issuance of penny stock, a great new wealth. Although, in many cases, the people who bought and sold these stocks did not buy them by way of investment—as far as they were concerned, they were gambling—the end result was the same. Even without dealing with penny mining stocks or penny oil stocks and dealing with other stocks or commodities that are traded in this country and others, the gambler or the speculator increases the liquidity of the market. This therefore provides an underlying economic function that we do not find with the strict gambling that is contemplated under Bill C-95.

Another argument against the lotteries that we already have in Canada and against the sports pools as contemplated in this Bill is that if we look at the figures—and I am afraid that I do not have them with me today—we will see that from the point of view of the gambler who is the person who puts his money up, the return is much better at the craps tables in Las Vegas than it is when buying provincial lottery tickets in Canada or federal lottery tickets when we had them. It seems that the Governments that run these lotteries are much too greedy and are taking off a much larger cut than they should and a much larger cut than would be allowed if the Government were the only regulator and policeman rather than also a player in the game. It seems that the Governments in the country cannot resist the temptation to milk the public for all that it is worth.

I shall say a few words now, Mr. Speaker, on Motion No. 2, which, at any rate, is the motion we are supposed to be debating. This amendment would restrict the Government, under Bill C-95, to operating only sports pools. What the Government wants to do in the present Clause 14(b)(i) is give itself blanket authority to undertake any form of gaming or gambling activity that it sees fit. I do not think that we should give the Government that blanket authority. I do not know what it would get itself into. I envisage the possibility of poker machines scattered throughout the confines of the House of Commons.

I see a distinct possibility of the federal Government returning to the lottery schemes that are run by the Provinces, and I do not think that it should want to compete with the Provinces in that type of enterprise, if that is the right word for it. We debated this subject over a period of years, and it was finally determined that lotteries should remain in the provincial domain and that the federal Government should keep out of them. I am frightened by what nefarious scheme the Government might come up with if Parliament were to grant the Government that blanket authority to undertake any form of gambling activity.

We want to restrict the effect of Bill C-95 to sports pools, as bad as they might be. We really do not know what the Government is thinking of when it talks about sports pools. It has not told us exactly what it has in mind. I understand that it has paid many thousands of dollars to various Liberal consulting firms to dream up schemes that might be incorporated into its gambling practices. So far, it has not been forthcoming with Parliament by telling us really what it is that it wants to do.

If the Government were to adopt a scheme similar to the privately run but Government taxed soccer pools in Great Britain, the potential revenues from the operation of sports pools could be huge. I understand that in that country, many, many millions of dollars are wagered each week on the soccer pools. The Government, by this Bill, restricted as it must be to the operation of sports pools, has the possibility of generating millions of dollars worth of revenue.

In conclusion, Sir, I want to say that I support the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) in his Motion No. 2. We are giving the Government quite enough authority as it is and we cannot let it engage in any of these other nefarious schemes that it might dream up without its returning to Parliament to get more authority.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity I have had to speak on this legislation. I will address my remarks to the motion proposed by the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid).

Mr. Smith: The folks in Calgary are listening.

Mr. Andre: The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Concil (Mr. Smith) has spoken up about the importance of this legislation to the people of Calgary, Mr. Speaker. Why is it so much a part of the Liberal Government's approach to public policy to use and abuse Alberta, and Calgary in particular, for its partisan purposes? The Calgary Olympic Committee was formed a number of years ago and consists of citizens of Calgary, not Government, who are volunteers. They sought to bring the Winter Olympics to the City and to Canada for the first time. This seems highly appropriate. Without "big brother" providing funds, without the benefit of patronage connection to some Government, with no motive other than to provide this thrilling event for their city, their Province and their country, these citizens work hard. They sought a moral commitment of support for the games from the municipality, the provincial Government and the federal Government should they be fortunate enough to win the right for Canada. They worked for years and put together a superb package which won the approval of the International Olympic Committee.

• (1740)

The citizens of Calgary applauded their efforts and one would hope that the Government of Canada would also applaud their efforts and offer help to make the Olympics the show piece that they should be for Canada. Instead, we see the use of crude, political pressure. These members of the Olympic Committee, these volunteers, are trying to plan facilities and organize the games into something of which Canadians can be proud. Yet the Minister and his minions telephone them saying, "We cannot give you any money unless we get this sports pool Bill through the House, so you had better pressure the Opposition to get it through—pressure them into agreeing to this new gambling scheme. Otherwise you will not get your money."

These volunteers continue to work. They are not out for any patronage benefit. They will not have the rights to sell these tickets and make some money, and they have not signed consulting agreements to pick up the cash that the Government bestows on its friends. They are doing all this for nothing, but they get pressure and threats. They are told, "We do not know if we are going to give you any money. It depends on the House of Commons. We told you before that we would support you and we supported the Olympics in Montreal. We made a commitment but you know we are with commitments—they mean nothing."

Mr. Regan: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member accept a question with the unanimous permission of the House?

Mr. Andre: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Regan: Is the Hon. Member aware that before the Olympics were awarded to Calgary and when these volunteers—these excellent people he mentioned—approached the Government of Canada saying that in Baden-Baden they must show that they had financial support, they were told that it could not be given from taxation dollars but it could be done through a coin program, a stamp program and a sports pool program? That was the understanding with the Government from day one.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I am aware that when the members of the Canadian Olympic Committee went to Baden-Baden to make their application, they carried with them a commitment of the Government of Canada to support the application for facilities. The Government is collecting money from the Loto Canada contract and it has given a commitment of support. The mechanism has nothing to do with the question. The Canadian Olympic Committee did not go before the International Olympic Committee and say, "We do not know how much support we are going to get; it depends on our stamp, coin and sports pool sales. We cannot tell how much support the federal Government will give us." They went with a commitment from the Government to support the Canadian Winter Olympics.

No other city in Canada would be so used and abused, Mr. Speaker. No other group of volunteers would be so used and abused the way the Calgary group is. It seems to be a part of the system. Whether we are dealing with the Olympics or anything else, it is acceptable to the Government to use that king of crude pressure. It is especially hard to take when it is talked about in the same breath as national unity and important symbols.

If the Minister is sincere in saying that the interest of the federal Government in the sports pool is solely to help the Calgary Olympics in 1988, then he will agree with Motion No. 2 to strike out Clause 14(b) which extends the legislation far beyond what he just mentioned. It says that the Governor in Council can open up any form of lawful gaming activity as a source of revenue for whatever purpose the Government wants. If the Minister is sincere, let him accept the motion, strike out Clause 14(b) and restrict the Bill to the sports pool. If he is sincere, he will accept Motions Nos. 2 and 3 and restrict this to the Winter Olympics. That would prove his sincerity, but I do not think it is likely to happen.

Some of my colleagues have raised the question of the morality of the Government of Canada asking for the right to do what we do not think Canadian citizens have the right to do, namely, to run gambling establishments, run a gaming house, to exploit the human weakness of trying to get rich for nothing and to make money without providing goods or services. It offers the allure of gambling. If we were sincere and honest we would recognize that as a human weakness and not something to be encouraged and exploited by Government any more than other human weaknesses should be exploited for the benefit of Government.

It has been said that the reality of the situation is that taxes on gambling are a tax on the poor, and the data confirms that. There are those who do not have a lot and who hope to achieve their dream through a lottery ticket or a sports pool. Surely it is a sad situation when the Government of Canada sees an opportunity for revenue in this. It is revenue which has a real attractiveness in the political sense because it can be used for patronage purposes by granting the right to sell tickets to our friends by all of these contracts which have been talked about. It is money which, strictly speaking, does not go through the Consolidated Revenue Fund as do other tax dollars. It is money which can be used for really nice political purposes to help "us" get re-elected. That is wrong, Mr. Speaker. It is just plain immoral. The Calgary Olympics will succeed because of the Calgarians who are working on it, managing it and putting it together. It will succeed. It will be an outstanding success in spite of this Minister's attempt to undermine the confidence and the support which this group requires.

Mr. Regan: That is rather unkind.

Mr. Andre: The Minister says that that is unkind. If he would say right now that he stakes his reputation as a Minister and guarantees the Olympic Committee the support which was promised to it when it went to Baden-Baden, if he will do that, then I will withdraw my statement entirely? If he will do that simple thing, say that he as the Minister responsible guarantees that the Government of Canada will live up to its commitments, that is all that is necessary. If the Government guarantees it will live up to its commitments, then I will withdraw my remarks entirely. I do not believe that that is likely to happen, Mr. Speaker, because it has not happened so far with this bunch. Perhaps they will turn over a new leaf, but I am not expecting it.

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, when I looked at this legislation I tried to see if there was anything good in it, anything which I could accept, or anything which made any sense at all. Regretfully, I could find absolutely nothing in this legislation except that it made me feel somewhat embarrassed that this country could have such a Government which would deliberately, maliciously and viciously go in for living off the poor and living off gambling.

At the moment, Ontario residents are the biggest lottery spenders per capita in Canada, the fourth largest in North America. They spend an average now of $63.95 per person a year on lotteries. That is more than double the amount for the rest of Canada where the average spending is somewhere about $30 per person. I am even wondering if in my own Province of British Columbia, people understand that there is between $70 million and $80 million a year which flows through lotteries. I am not against an individual who wants to make a bet with the guy at the next desk over the hockey game on a particular evening. That is a simple transaction between two consenting adults. Neither one of them is going to be hurt. However, when you institutionalize the sports pool, and you ask people to select the winners of ten games—and that is really what a sports pool is, similar to the English pools—that is not what I would see as showing the ability of someone to select who is going to win and who is going to lose because they are experts in a particular sport. If you multiply the permutations which are involved in picking 10 or 12 games, you are buying a lottery ticket and that is all you are buying. It is just another lottery, regardless of what it is called.

We now have this nonsense about support of the Calgary Olympics. You can always trust the Liberals to find a red herring somewhere, or somewhere to trans-affect what is really taking place. From what I can gather, this Government could not care less about the Calgary Olympics, but it is a nice excuse to hang this fraud upon the Canadian people. "The Calgary Olympics do not get the money unless we get our sports pool", is what is implied. That is supposed to make those of us from western Canada very careful of what we say about this rather unfortunate legislation. We are supposed to lie down and pretend that, by golly, Calgary has to have support and this is the only way to get it. The Government of Canada must support the Olympic Games. I believe it is true in Ontario, and I believe even in Quebec the Liberals will find that Canadians want the Calgary Olympics fully supported by their national Government.

Let me give a little history now, and I suppose a bit of "mea culpa". I can remember in the early 1960s when a little lady by the name of Mary English in the City of Calgary became very excited about Canada's lottery laws. She found some support, raised some money, made a pilgrimage to Ottawa, appeared on radio stations, and gave interviews right across this country. I do not know where you are now, Mary, but I know this much, that I am sorry I supported you. I did not realize what was going to happen if her campaign succeeded, which it did, quite frankly. It changed the thinking of Canadian people about lotteries. So that today we have a situation where we now have super loto. It costs $10 per ticket. That is not what Mary English had in mind. Ten dollars is a lot of money. A few $10 bills put together buys an awful lot of things. When you multiply it by hundreds and hundreds, it is a significant portion of Canada's national product. For the winners there is $1 million. However, the odds are about 800,000 to one. The provincial lottery is $5 per ticket. The top prize is $500,000. Again, the chances are 800,000 to one. Wintario—there is something for everyone in the lottery field—is $1 per ticket. Top prize is $100,000. The odds are a million to one. Lottario costs $1 per ticket. The odds—you should not buy "Lottario"—are 3.2 million to one. Cash for life costs $2 per ticket. The top prize is $50,000 per year for life. The odds are 1.4 million to one. The Pot of Gold costs $2 per ticket. The top prize is $100,000. The odds are one million to one. Then there is Loto 649. If that is not close to what we are proposing with the sports pool, then I do not know what is. It costs $1 per ticket. The top prize is $1 million. The odds are, believe it or not, 13,983,806 to one. What do you suppose the odds are going to be on anyone actually cashing a sports pool ticket? The odds are going to be astronomical because it is a numbers game. Picking that many games is almost an impossibility.

What really has disturbed me about this legislation is the lack of protest in the country. I have always believed that people get the Governments they deserve, with perhaps the exception of the Canadian people in the last three years. Where has the massive protest from the recreational industry of Canada been? Do they not realize that when people are buying these ruddy tickets, those dollars are going into something where there is no real output in terms that make sense for their industry? There have been some protests from the churches. Reverend Much more, where are you when we really need you badly? We certainly can use you on this rediculous legislation which is being proposed. Where is the massive protest? Some have protested, but not nearly as many as should.

Where is the moral indignation of the Canadian people at a Government which will foist this on them? I believe part of the answer is that there is no doubt that this particular bit of legislation is likely to be "steamrollered" through. This Government is going to force this upon us whether we like it or not. That is rather unfortunate because I think that if its Members listened to some of the speeches here, as I have this afternoon, and some of the other speeches which are going to be made, it would find that a good many of them make a good deal of sense in terms of modifying this Bill or finding reasons why this legislation should not be passed. Unfortunately, the problem with the Government is that once it does something, it is like a brick wall and you can never get it to change. Even if it thought it was wrong, it would not admit it. That is what bugs me about this legislation—it is wrong. It is wrong for the Canadian people. It is not as if Canadians did not have access to a lottery ticket, a home grown lottery ticket, if you like. They do now, in several areas, and at tremendous odds. For those persons who want a lottery ticket, fine, they can buy one. But to foist this one additional sport pool lottery on top of anything else and, I might add, to change the law in such a way that it totally opens the door for other Ministers to play with this thing, to expand gambling in Canada in a variety of ways, doing it by Order-in-Council without ever having to come to the House again or to ever have it publicly debated properly in the House of Commons is, to me, the most dangerous feature about this particular legislation and the proposed changes to the Code.

I will be voting against it, of course. I will be voting against the Government all the way on this one, and talking about it in years to come. I would also warn the Minister that his projections may be wrong. It just may be that the Canadian people have become satiated with get rich quick schemes where the odds are a million to one. If that happens, then what he has done has been to waste the Canadian people's money in setting it up, in paying off patronage to all kinds of people.

Mr. Regan: Oh, no, no.

Mr. Cook: Oh, no, he has not wasted the money. All one must do is look at the list. It is a Liberal boondoggle. It is wrong. It is bad. The people of Canada should rise up in righteous indignation and say to the Government, "Do not do this dastardly deed, because you should not". The Government ought to be ashamed of itself for even suggesting such an immoral, impossible, improper thing to the Canadian people. I find myself embarrassed to have to debate such a moral issue in the House of Commons, particularly when it involves something that is so useless and unnecessary in this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. In the ordinary course of events, the Chair would now recognize the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shushwap (Mr. Riis). However, I have been indirectly informed that the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) may have some pressing obligations. I leave it to the two Hon. Members to indicate to the Chair in which order they wish to proceed.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member. In principle, I do not believe in gambling. Anyone who has been in the army, for instance, has seen it take place excessively. Anyone who has worked in the woods camp knows that for an orderly, peaceful woods operation one does not play poker. Anyone who has been associated with the Legion in this country after World War II knows that. An attempt was made after the war to extend to members of the Legion the opportunity to continue some of their former habits, one of which was gambling. Anyone who has been associated with a branch of the Legion is aware of the fact that in virutally every instance, the gambling opportunity had to be removed. Everyone knows that service clubs have tried on several occasions to raise some of their funds for their requirements with slot machines. They have found that in the main their members went broke. While the club became rich, the members went broke; some of them, not all of them, because not all people are compulsive gamblers.

The Bill, therefore, is absolutely contradictory to the principles which would support a moral operation of the olympic games in Canada. That is the first point. My principles tell me that this is a dead wrong and immoral act by the Government of Canada to try to exploit the gambling instincts of the people of Canada to fulfil an international obligation as well as a local obligation in Canada. Let us deal with the international obligation.

There are nations which are involved in a treaty type of agreement with respect to the conduct of Olympic games in this world. Any application received from any country in the world is accompanied by a recommendation from the responsible Government and, in the case of the federal Government of Canada, an indication that there will be fiscal responsibility. Oh, yes, Mr. Speaker, and without that inherent guarantee and the recommendation of the Government concerned no Olympic game would be extended to any country.

There was another little hassle over a very comparable measure in the House before the present Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) became a Member of the House of Commons. In the consultations and considerations with respect to the financing of the Olympic games in Montreal it was made very clear to the committee that the favourable recommendation of the Government of Canada for the Summer Olympics in Montreal certainly included a guarantee of fiscal capability. That guarantee was given by the Government of Canada.

The Minister may shake his head but I ask him, before he opens his mouth after shaking his head, to explore the standards by which the International Olympic Committee will extend the privilege of conducting games in any country in the world. The national Government's recommendation and support are inherent to the guarantee of fiscal responsibility.

Therefore, it is not playing perfectly honestly with the people of Canada, at best, to say, "Oh, the Government of Canada must have this Bill through by June 30". It is quite improper to say that; it is deceptive. That approach to the Olympic Committee of Calgary, to the Olympic Committee of Canada and to the athletes of Canada is absolutely and utterly ignoring the absolute guarantee of financial responsibility which was included in and interpreted as such a guarantee when the Government's support for the application went before the international committee that allocated the games. That is the first point.

Second, for any Minister of the Government of Canada to say to any local committee that it shall be financed for the sponsoring of these games in a particular way and only in a particular way is (a) a threat to the sponsors of Calgary and (b) a breach of the international obligation which this nation look on.

I want to say to Your Honour that anyone in this nation who thinks there is anything but a threat to the Olympic athletes, the Olympic Committee and the city of Calgary had better become familiarized with the terms and conditions, on an international basis, under which the Government became responsible.

I do not like deceptive methods. Yes, the Minister responsible for sports did, in fact, dissolve one loto set up by the Government of Canada. This was in fact returned to the authority to which it belonged, namely, the Provinces. When there is a mere $90 billion budget in the nation, to say to the people of Canada that we must have a loto and exploit the gamblers of Canada to finance the athletic games which will be conducted in 1988 is deception at a disgustingly low level.

I do not favour lotteries in a public sence because of the exploitation of the compulsive gambler to the detriment of his family's well being. After all the lessons learned about the impact upon the family welfare of the compulsive gambler, for the Government of Canada to be bringing in this kind of legislation is contempt of its moral responsibility.

There was an offer made to the Government. Why did it not take it up? Why did the Government not take up the voluntary offer of the provincially conducted lotteries in this nation to conduct a special program to finance the Calgary deal? Why does the Government want to get into every aspect of gambling available to mankind by the permissive legislation it is trying to get us to pass and which we are trying to amend? I hope this nation understands the outright deceit the Government is placing before athletes in Calgary and this nation as it tries to boondoggle the House into the necessity of passing this legislation; it told Calgary that it can only give it what it can get from a lottery. That is simply horseradish.

It is most difficult to understand what has happened to all those voluntary groups in the country which used to put baseball, hockey and other athletic teams together as a community effort. People were prepared to put money forward in their community to support those endeavours. Ever since the initial introduction of lotteries in Canada, those same organizations ask how much they can get from the Government whether provincial or federal. Why should they raise money? Why should there be an interest in the community any longer to try to field these teams which contribute so much to the communities? Why should they build a tennis court or a rink? Lotteries have had a very derogatory effect upon the initiative in communities of Canada since Government moneys have been allocated on a political basis from a gambling organization to support this type of event.

In principle, I denounce this Bill, and I doubly denounce the deceptive way it is being presented to Canadians. I feel sorry for misled Calgarians who believe they will only have the Olympic Games if there is a lottery. That is a downright disgraceful and deceitful proposition.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity today to speak against this particular Bill. Normally, I would relish the thought of making comments on a Government or an Opposition Bill, but I find this Bill particularly distasteful for a number of reasons. One is the link which has been made between this Bill and the Calgary Olympics. I want to say here and now that I and my Party obviously support the Olympics being held in one of our finest cities in western Canada. I am sure that all Members of the House are proud of Canada's athletes and the fact that we will host this competition, inviting athletes from around the world. We wish them the greatest success. We also support fitness and sports in general. We support the concept of fitness, recreation and other leisure activities.

However, the Government has given the impression that those who speak against this Bill also speak against the idea of the Olympics and fitness and health in general. That is absolutely false. As Opposition Members, we are trying to say in the House today that we are in favour of those activities but opposed to this Bill.

This Bill proposes to provide money for activities such as the Calgary Olympics, arts and culture in Canada, fitness and amateur sports, medical and health research and worthy capital projects. These are all projects which I believe all Members of the House strongly support. They are all worthy of the appropriate support from the federal Government, along with other levels of Government.

However, we feel very strongly that these worthwhile endeavours should not be funded on the backs of Canada's poor. If these are legitimate activities—there is no question that they are—they should be funded from general revenues, so that those who are able to pay, do so. The taxes and moneys for these worth while endeavours can be collected in an equitable fashion from our tax system; the myth of course being that our tax system is equitable and fair, and that is an entirely different matter, but at least it is the basis upon which we have a so-called progressive tax system in our country. If these are worthwhile endeavours, let us fund them properly from the general tax base in Canada and not by a gambling cassino approach to health, fitness, amateur sports, culture and arts and the Olympics.

This Bill institutionalizes gambling in this country. It sets up a gambling business on a permanent basis, endorsed by the federal Governemnt of Canada. Imagine the message being sent to Canadians from all walks of like and all regions at a time when they are desperately looking to the federal Government for leadership and direction. These are confusing and difficult times at best. The people of this country are looking to their national and regional leaders for advice. What advice is the Government of Canada giving to Canadians? It is telling them to gamble. It believes the answer to funding some of the most worthwhile endeavours in our country is to set up a gambling cassino so that all Canadians can gamble. That is the message being conveyed by the Government.

I am one of those Members of the House of Commons who does not believe that people should gamble as a way out of an economic dilemma. Gambling is not the answer to obtaining the necessary cash flow for individuals, their families or communities. I suggest the Government is providing poor leadership when it encourages people to pull $5, $20, or $100 bills from their pockets to participate in this federal Government gambling business. What sort of message does a Bill like this send to the people of Canada?

If we believe in amateur sports and fitness, in arts and culture, medical and health research, is it not time we began spending money collected from legitimate sources, using legitimate methods, as opposed to asking people to get rich quick by gambling? Perhaps that is good Liberal advice because it falls in with Liberal economic planning. I have always considered the Liberal approach to economic planning as being the Las Vegas school of economics; go out and gamble on the longshot. Of course, the longshot for the Liberal Government was called the megaprojects in western Canada or, more precisely, the energy projects. That was the Liberals' gamble. If the card they played had been the right one at the right time they would be laughing. The funds would be rolling in and all of the programs, the porkbarrelling and patronage would be flowing in all directions and they would be well off electorally as well as economically. However, the gamble did not pay off. All the eggs in that one basket called the megaprojects in western Canada failed because the right card did not come out.

The Liberal Government is now asking Canadians to use that same mentality. It is telling the average citizen of Canada who is struggling to make ends meet, the average small-business person, the farmers, the ranchers and fishermen of Canada who are struggling to establish their families' cash flow, to follow the Government's great idea to buy these tickets and spend their hard earned money because they might strike it rich. It says that they should not feel badly if they do not strike it rich because the money they invest will be used to pay for such things as medical research and the development of arts and culture in Canada.

This Bill is almost laughable. It is a sad comment when we see Ministers standing up during these tragic economic times to say that this is the answer to funding these worth while endeavours. Their answer is to turn Canadians into gamblers and Canada into one large Las Vegas. We in the NDP believe this is exactly the wrong approach. This is not the right step. This is a program that has not been thought through carefully. If it is a well thought out program I should like to hear Members opposite stand up and condone gambling; say that gambling is the best interests of the country, that gambling is in the best interests of our economy and in the best interests of arts, culture, amateur sport and fitness and so on.

• (1820)

In closing, let me say with disgust that this kind of approach to economic development, to the funding of the arts, sciences, sports and fitness is a sad proposal put forward by the Government of Canada; it is a sad proposal. The only thing I can say is that as Opposition Members we will be doing what we can to voice our opposition, and to try to bring the Government to some sense. There are much better ways to fund these worthwhile ventures, such as the Calgary Olympics, than turning the nation into one national set of Las Vegas players.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this Bill. Before I begin the remarks I wish to deliver in the short time allotted to me, I want to say that we have had from the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) a prime example of the kind of government the NDP would envisage for the country; a Government that would decree what the people should or should not do, not the other way around, the Government being the servant of the people.

I would like to suggest to the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap that lotteries have existed for a long time in some form or another in every community across this country. There are turkey raffles, car raffles, and car bingos. These are all a form of lottery. It is quite accepted that this is the way money is raised in communities to build parks, swimming pools and other things. As a former Kinsman and a former Rotarian, we did a number of these things for the good of the community. People knew what they were doing. People recognized the odds against them when they bought those lottery tickets.

The Hon. Member, like the rest of the NDP, says "no, that is wrong. Even though you want to do it you cannot do it because we know best. We will dictate to you and we will lay it out because it is morally wrong", or whatever. I do not take exception to the lottery system if that is what the people want. People have always bought lottery tickets. They buy tickets when a car is raffled, when a cake is raffled, when coins are raffled, or whatever. It is done in virtually every community of our nation. That is fine if that is what the people want to do, I believe in freedom for those people to do that.

I take considerable exception to this Government bringing in Bill C-95 at this time. It is sleazy, underhanded and wrong; not because it is another lottery but because an agreement was signed with the Provinces stating on behalf of the federal Government, "We will not enter into the lottery system." This Government took it to the courts for a legal opinion. That legal opinion received by the Minister was that the federal Government could not go into lotteries because that process had been signed away to the Provinces.

Let us look at what the Government is doing. From 1979 the federal Government was to get $24 million a year for doing absolutely nothing but leaving the jurisdiction of the lottery system and lottery games in the hands and the purview of the Provinces. This $24 million a year the Government got for doing absolutely nothing was tied to the Consumer Price Index. This year it looks like the federal Government will receive $32 million in revenue. Since the agreement was signed the federal Government has received close to $100 million for doing absolutely nothing except allowing the Provinces to control the lotteries.

The provinces are better able to protect against abuse, and better able to run the lottery system. But the federal Government has seen the potential revenue it might receive. The federal Governments now uses the argument that it takes skill to pick certain winners and therefore this system is no longer a lottery. The Government saw the possible loophole in relation to sports pools. The federal Government knew full well that the then Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport and Multiculturalism in the Conservative Government signed an agreement with the Provinces that was legally binding.

Mr. Regan: It was not his fault.

Mr. Shields: It was binding enough to make the breach of that agreement a very serious matter. But what does the present Minister for amateur sport do? In a very sleazy way he finds a loophole and says "We are going to have a sports pool because it takes skill to pick all the winners in a professional sport. Therefore the loophole exists, and we will start a sports pool." But, Mr. Speaker, this is a lottery, it is not just a sports pool.

The Minister then ties this to the Calgary Olympics and says there will be no money for the Winter Olympics in 1988 unless we have legislation passed. Yet we are looking at probably $30 million a year over the next four years, far in excess of the amount needed in Calgary, particularly when you consider the coin and the stamp program the Minister mentioned.

The federal Government with its great ability in the use of the advertising media has become the largest advertiser in Canada of any single corporation. The federal Government can hide an advertising blitz in any department it wants. As a result, this lottery pool will be detrimental to the present lottery programs running in western Canada, Quebec, Ontario and the Maritimes. This Bill is wrong on those grounds.

Once again, we have a federal Liberal Government that signed an agreement not honouring that agreement, but working around it. We have seen agreement after agreement the federal Government has worked out with the Provinces put aside when the federal Government does not like the way the Provinces are handling a program, or sees something it is missing out on. The federal Government says "No, we are going to pull away from that agreement." We saw this in respect of resources in some of the Provinces. We see the same Government breaking its word in exactly the same way.

If we allow this legislation to go through for sports pools under federal jurisdiction we will again see abuse, because this legislation will not be subject to the scrutiny of the Auditor General. We are creating another Crown corporation. The federal Government has told us we will have to put up $20 million front money to get this sports pool going in the first year of operation. The federal Government will then distribute these so-called sports pools systems across the nation through 135 wholesalers. Those 135 wholesalers will be good Liberal Party hacks who will receive $150,000 to $250,000 a year just because they are wholesalers and because they have been given the smile by the Minister. The Government will provide Party supporters with opportunities to make money out of these sports pools. There will be no auditor to control them or to see who is blessed with selling the tickets which the Government will advertise right across the country. There will be another 6,000 kiosks for people to earn $30,000 or $40,000 per year from the proceeds of sports pools. This is a great big political porkbarrel. Again it will be a Crown corporation totally outside the purview of the House of Commons and not accountable to the Auditor General. This is not the time for the federal Government with the deficit as high as it is to establish another Crown corporation. We all know that the Liberals are running low in the polls and have to do something to get their fortunes back into line. Perhaps 6,000 or 7,000 good Liberal supporters in ridings across the country will be of benefit. I think that is wrong.

• (1830)

As I have indicated, the federal Government receives $30 million per year, tied to the Consumer Price Index, for doing absolutely nothing. It receives that from the Provinces which run and control sports pools. It is received because of an agreement signed that allowed Provinces to run pools within their jurisdictions so that people would know where the funds were going. They have set up pools which are totally accountable to the federal Government. But according to this piece of legislation the sports pool Crown corporation will not be accountable to the Auditor General. Again I say that is wrong. If the federal Government is sponsoring it the federal Government is responsible, and it should be responsible to the House of Commons. It is wrong on those bases.

The amendment with which we are dealing right now would delete the following:

—to conduct and manage, in accordance with regulations made by the Governor in Council, such lawful gaming activities as the Governor in Council directs.

This makes it wide open for the Government to do absolutely anything, to steamroll over the Provinces once again, contrary to the agreement signed by my hon. colleague, the former Minister of amateur sports.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I rise with some trepidation to speak on Bill C-95. Perhaps I could first make a remark about the reformed rules of the House. I trust by the end of the year we will have looked very hard at the idea of sitting here from eleven o'clock in the morning until eleven o'clock at night. I know this has nothing to do with the Bill before the House; it is simply a bind in which we all seem to be when we are foolish enough to sentence ourselves to these hours for the month of June.

This Bill authorizes gambling. It authorizes any type or description of gambling which in future years suits the Cabinet. There are many people who should never gamble. Unfortunately most gamblers come from poorer sections of the community. They can least afford it but seem most addicted to it. When I was a youngster my very first experience with gambling was when I attended the Yorkton Fair in Saskatchewan. I was a kid off the farm. My Dad gave me a dollar for the whole day to spend on rides, for admission into the exhibition grounds, the grandstand and everything. He gave it to me at 8.30 in the morning and I was back home at 9.00, an hour later. I had found one of those wheels which went tick, tick, tick; the lights flashed and I lost my dollar. My Dad said, "a fool and his money are soon parted". His name was Peter MacDonald McKinnon; he did not part with dollars lightly.

There are what used to be called gentlemanly forms of gambling. For example, a person could play bridge with people of equal talent. If he was not of equal talent, it would dawn on him sooner or later and he could withdraw. But the type of gambling which the Government is now encouraging is addictive. People tend to get into debt over it.

We saw an example of a female accountant in a firm in Toronto the other day who had managed to get away with a couple of hundred thousand dollars. When asked what she had done with it she said she had spent it on lottery tickets because she was convinced she would win some day. As I have travelled the world I have noticed that there is a connection between the moral fibre of a country, the prosperity of a country and the amount of lottery tickets which are sold. I have travelled through western European countries, Britain, Italy, Greece, Turkey, Egypt, Mexico, United States and Canada.

Mr. Pepin: And what about Britain?

Mr. McKinnon: I believe there is a pretty close connection between poverty and government authorized or approved gambling. I hear the Minister asking me about Britain. He might well have noticed that the pool is a favourite method of gambling there. For a long time pools were conducted with a small limit. One did not bet ten pounds per week on the pools; one bet ten pence. Even so, in the poorer parts of the country more people were selling pool tickets and gambling on contrived methods. Pools are not entirely gambling. There is a certain amount of knowledge and at those levels there is very little in the way of broken homes or people spending their grocery money. But the situation is different here with a type of gambling where everyone is asked to operate as if it were a numbers game. For most people who purchase tickets it will be a numbers game.

Mr. Regan: It is exactly like the British pools.

Mr. McKinnon: Generally the people who play the British pools are very skilled at estimating soccer scores. If the Minister is to obtain the amount of money he hopes for, he has to appeal to people who do not have any more notion on what they are betting than when they buy lottery tickets and watch the bit on television with coloured balls to discover the winners. This is a form of regressive taxation of the worst kind, and there can be no doubt about it. The term "regressive" used in this sense means a taxation which hits hardest those people who can least afford it. I suspect if the Minister conducted a pool among people in the House, for instance, he would find there is very little purchasing of tickets, because most of us are not poor and have enough wits to realize what a bad investment it would be to purchase a lottery ticket hoping to win any money.

Since I lost that first dollar I must admit that I have gambled a fair amount, but usually I had a better chance of winning than I would have here. A person can always cover his gambling urges by saying that he is investing in the country or in resource industries. I have done my share of that. Sometimes he wins; sometimes he buys Dome Petroleum thinking that it might pay off. If anyone here wishes to buy shares of Dome Petroleum I have quite a few I would be willing to sell at cost. The losers, though, will be the Canadian people and the winner will be the Canadian government. But with its usual way of doing things, I suspect the Government will turn a winner into a loser. Recently someone said that if we gave the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) the Sahara Desert, in six months they would have to import sand. That is the kind of skill they have in these natural things. I recall a former Minister, Iona Campagnola, who was in early on the lottery fiasco. She managed to sign a contract before she brought it to the House and got into all kinds of trouble. I suppose that showed some kind of Party loyalty, for now she is the President of the Liberal Party. Those things could only happen in the Liberal Party.

I would like to turn to the amendment that is being considered at the moment. Let me point out one of the clauses in this boondoggle which will become a statute. It reads:

• (1840)

> One of the directors appointed ... shall be designated by the Governor in Council as Chairman and the Board shall select the Vice-Chairman from among the other such directors.

This leaves it up to the Government to appoint these people. We know from previous experience what kind of people they appoint to Government boards. As usual, they will be high-salaried and incompetent. What I worry about, and the amendment speaks of it, is the types of gaming that will be carried on. It appears to me that anything at all will be allowed.

Let us look at one of the Government's recent investments in a public corporation, Petro-Canada. Once this Bill is passed, I expect that the Government will be able to allow a poker game to take place in the back room of every PetroCanada station in this country. There will be a civil servant there taking what is commonly called the "rake-off". With most gambling, the size of the rake-off dictates whether a person should get into it or not. The rake-off on some of these games will be large indeed because this Bill permits it.

The disbursements have a peculiar tinge to them. I notice in the Bill that some of these disbursements are for good causes. However, others are a little odd. On page 8 of the Bill it states:

> There shall be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund to or for the support of any one or more of
> (a) activities in the following fields:
> (i) the arts and culture,
> (ii) fitness and amateur sport, and
> (iii) medical and health research.

This reference to medical and health research is interesting. It could entail a great deal of money if the Government is going to seriously approach funding for health research. However, it further states in paragraph (c) > —worthy capital projects of national interest in the fields described in Subparagraphs (a)(i) and (ii).

That refers to arts and culture and fitness and amateur sport, but not medical and health research. One becomes curious as to how they will become selective as they go through this process. In one paragraph certain things will be funded and in the next paragraph the funding will be cancelled. Clause 21 reads:

The accounts and financial transactions of the Corporation shall be audited each year by an auditor appointed by the Governor in Council for a term not exceeding three years.

I certainly do not agree with that. We on this side are convinced the Auditor General and not Cabinet-appointed auditors, should audit Crown corporations.

Clause 14 is the one that the amendment speaks to. I quote paragraph (d):

The objects of the Corporation are—

(b) to conduct and manage, in accordance with regulations made by the Governor in Council, such lawful gaming activities as the Governor in Council directs.

As I said before, that is a kind of open sesame to all kinds of gambling.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

Mr. McKinnon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I will be back to deal with other clauses of the Bill later.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the amendment before us deletes Clause 14(1)(b) which reads:

—to conduct and manage, in accordance with regulations made by the Governor in Council, such lawful gaming activities as the Governor in Council directs.

This Bill is not about a sports pool. Is it about the Government making lawful such gaming activities as it decides are proper. Aside from the question of lotteries, pools, olympics and sports, this is an authority by the Governor in Council, the Cabinet, to authorize all sorts of gambling activities, activities not even yet devised. On that basis alone, this Bill should fail.

I am glad the Minister is in the chamber. I want him to hear what happened to a relative of mine who was working for a major trust company in Ontario. She decided to dip into the till and falsify the records of that trust company to buy Lottario tickets and tickets on Olympic lotteries at one time run by this Government. She was very clever at it. She managed to get into that trust company to the extent of $45,000 before an audit revealed what had happened. As a result of arrangements, she did not go to jail; nor was she prosecuted. Something was done to look after her, but that did not stop her. She again got a job of trust and was able to get into her next employer to the extent of some $17,000. She felt that if the Government was going to run a lottery system, it must be good and it must be a fair system. Therefore, she could get back all the things she had taken from people and replace her losses by one of those winnings. She was going to be the one in a million winner. She was going to be independently wealthy. She was going to have the hopes and dreams that she had wanted simply because the Government was promising them to her in television ad campaigns.

An article appeared in The Globe and Mail with respect to gambling. I want to read into the record a statement made by Dr. Robert Politzer, Director of the Johns Hopkins University, Pathological Gambling Counselling sector at Mount Wilson near Baltimore. He said and I quote:

Not his family, not his job, nothing. He becomes driven to the point of breaking laws to get the money he needs to gamble. Gambling, not the winning or losing of money, becomes an end to itself.

In the practice of law I had the opportunity to handle a great number of clients in business. One was a young man who came from Yugoslavia. He had built up a very successful contracting business. When I first got to know him he owned several small appartment buildings that he had built. He managed to put together a door company in Mississauga which made fire-resistant doors. He had several pieces of attractive land on which he was speculating.

This man was on his way to becoming a millionaire, if he was not already there. Then he found out about the ponies and about gambling. He was one of those, roughly one in one hundred, persons in our society who is compulsive in gambling. He went bankrupt. His marriage went bankrupt and his family went bankrupt.

To have a Government of this country come before this House and say in the interest of sports, the Olympics, culture of all things, it is going to trade on the disease, the compulsiveness of some of its citizens who will wind up with destroyed families, who will wind up taking advantage as my relative did of the promise by a Government to make them wealthy, is wrong and must be opposed by every right-thinking person in this House. This Bill must appal the very basic conscience of every Member of the House on the basis of individual knowledge. It does not take very much experience living in a society like ours to know that there are members of society who do not buy one ticket but buy ten tickets or 20 tickets, who buy tickets with money that is not their own, who dip into the till. One does not have to be a criminal lawyer to defend that type of person because that type of person can be a member of one's own family.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that when this Minister brings forth this kind of a Bill, he ought to be ashamed of himself. This Government has an obligation to finance Olympic activities on behalf of us all. That money can come from various sources of Government revenue, from income tax to corporate tax to duties and customs. But surely the Government ought not to trade on the incapacity of some people to resist games of chance. To present a Bill that deliberately allows the Cabinet to authorize other forms of gambling behind this corporation must repel us all. It must be the kind of thing that a Government interested in criminal law, morality and the right thing would tear up in disgust. Yet the Minister says: "Oh, well, you must have it. If you want to finance these things, we must have a slush fund." Well, I say to him that if his need for a slush fund is that great, the Government is all slush and no principle. It will be defeated, if not on this Bill, then by the general public of the country in an election.

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in joining my colleagues in opposing Bill C-95, I find that there are a number of provisions in the Bill which, from a practical and moral standpoint, have not been addressed by the Government in committee. The proposals now before the House are not acceptable.

The two major practical objections to the Bill are the unsound economics of the proposed Bill and the inclusion of Clause 14(b) which we are now discussing, and which will be seriously detrimental to the setting up of the sports pool. Let me refer for a moment to the economic unsoundness of the Bill.

The Hon. Reuben Baetz, Minister of Tourism and Recreation for Ontario, appeared before the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture on December 16, 1982. As a shareholder of the Interprovincial Lottery Corporation and as their Chairman for the last four years, he is well informed about the mechanics of running a lottery. As one who had a part in setting up the first Manitoba Lottery when I was Executive Director of the Manitoba Centennial Corporation, I was particularly interested in his comments and the overview he brought to the committee. At one point, he stated categorically:

> I am here today to tell you that the federal Government sports pool cannot generate the levels of profit that have been suggested by the federal Government.

The reasons for the sports pool's undoubted failure have been well presented by my colleagues previously in this debate.

[Translation]

We know that sports pools represent a very small percentage of the market. For instance, if we look at the Province of Quebec and its Hockey Sélect lottery, we find that the percentage of ticket sales for hockey sports pools has been decreasing regularly.

[English]

Not only is there the drop suggested in expected revenue. We have been told that the sports pool will collect $30 million to $40 million a year. Mr. Baetz, when appearing before committee, suggested that this amount will not be enough to even cover the cost of the equipment needed to run the game. We have a $10.5 million start-up grant that is not even expected to be recovered and, as we were told in Committee, an estimated $20 million that will be borrowed. That makes $30.5 million. The moneys generated would not come anywhere near covering the $200 million the Government has promised Calgary for the Olympics.

Second, the motion proposed by the Official Opposition would strike Clause 14(b). This Clause is unnecessary to the running of the sports pools and is potentially harmful to our relations with the Provinces. It gives the federal Government the authority to conduct and manage, in accordance with regulations made by the Governor in Council, such lawful gaming activities as the Governor in Council directs. What does this mean, Mr. Speaker? We are told that it is not the Government's intention to get back into the lottery business. If not, what other kinds of lawful gaming activities will we see—video games, national bingo games, Trivial Pursuit on national television?

The Provinces, very rightly, I believe, mistrust this Clause. If it is not removed, the Provinces will be very unco-operative in establishing this sports pool. As officials of the Provinces have said again and again, they do not like the idea of negotiating with a gun to their heads. They feel it threatens the agreement made between the federal and provincial Governments in August of 1979 whereby the Provinces have paid to the Government about $34 million a year in exchange for having the federal Government withdraw from the lottery business. Clause 14(b), the Mack truck Clause, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid), so aptly puts it, seriously jeopardizes the spirit of mutual trust that is so essential for future negotiations.

Let me then look at the practical applications of the Bill and summarize three other objections I have in the practical sphere. First, as my colleague pointed out a few moments ago, there is the possibility of political patronage. A second objection is that it is relatively easy to fix a sports game as compared to other forms of lotteries. Therefore, the Government is taking a risk entering into this area. Third, the beneficiary structure is too large and too vague. We have no clear advance idea of how the Calgary Olympics will benefit as opposed to fitness and amateur sports, health and medical research, arts and culture, to say nothing of the specification of worthy capital projects.

I would like to make some comments in relation to the objections I have on moral grounds. I do so in relation to my own convictions and also in relation to my responsibility as Opposition critic of the Minister of the Secretary of State, a ministry directed to encouraging wholesome citizenship. I see nothing in the Government's decision to go hand in hand with the promotion of lotteries that will encourage a healthly sense of citizenship in Canada.

I, along with other Members, today received a representation made by the Reverend Robert G. Lindsey, Senior Staff Officer of Church in Society for the United Church of Canada. The representation he makes to Canadians and to the House of Commons is as follows:

> This is the time to stop further Government promotion of gambling in Canada. The United Church of Canada is concerned with the Government's refusal to understand its obligation to support morality in Canada rather than to undermine it. We hope that you will do whatever is in your power to stop Bill C-195 from becoming law in Canada.

I received a similar representation dated June 24 from Rev. A. G. Van Eek of the Council of Christian Reformed Churches in Canada. He outlines the concern of that constituency about lotteries which raise or capitalize upon false hopes and that worthy projects are somehow put in jeopardy. He also suggests that they take up the disposable income of low-income earners, and for these reasons and others he suggests that it is not in the interests of Canada to continue.

• (1900)

I believe that lotteries are an undue celebration of chance. Others who have spoken before the committee who are not in any way prudish and who do not wish to remove fun and opportunity for Canadians see this as undercutting an important fabric.

Prof. McCormack Smyth of York University says:

> Liberal democratic government has been based on a number of central ideas. One is that government must respect human beings. Governments must not exploit human weaknesses. Through their promotion of lotteries, governments are appealing to one of the lowest human qualities, that of greed. Lotteries promote, albeit unconsciously, the view that it is in order for individuals to be their brother's taker.

Because someone is willing to be taken is no excuse for exploiting that person. Public support for an idea does not make it right, as was demonstrated by child labour, slavery and racial discrimination. I think that gambling is proportionately more harmful to poor people than it is to people in high-income brackets. The net effect of lotteries and their acceleration is to warp public direction. I therefore join with my colleagues in opposing this legislation which is in conflict with other areas of Government direction.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to make a few comments in opposition to Bill C-95. The Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) has expressed his views very well and has given no useful references. Others who made representation to the committee were concerned with the principles involved with this type of legislative proposal to bring to Canadians a regressive taxation. It is a little like the photo opportunity of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde)—they do not really understand it but they are co-operating and assisting the Government in an indirect taxation that in many cases will do them harm.

The Bill represents a number of shades in a number of areas. It has gone from what I would consider the traditional Liberal red into a very grey area. It clouds a number of principles involved in federalism, democracy and participatory Government.

The first area is the commitment of several hundred million that the federal Government made to the Calgary Olympics. To use this legislation as a guise for fulfilling that commitment is not only questionable because of the undetermined profitability of the Bill, but it is also a back door approach to raising the revenues expected as a result of that commitment.

The second grey area is the whole concept of federal-provincial agreements. Relations are already strained and have been for several years on such things as the energy Bill and the Constitution. In this instance, an agreement was made with the Provinces that they would have exclusive domain over lotteries. Now there is a grand argument about whether the sports pool is a lottery. I understand that the courts may not find in favour of the federal Government. That may not be a major factor in determining whether the sports pool goes forward but it brings to light the federal-provincial agreements that should be honoured by the federal Government if we are to expect to have co-operation and confidence between Governments in the future.

The third point that many speakers have referred to is the ethics and the morality of this measure. From time to time most of us participate in events related to gambling, whether through buying a lottery ticket, playing Crown and Anchor at an amusement park or some charitable fund raising event. What we have before us is on a very different level, however. The federal Government, the highest institution in the country, is sending a signal to people who are vulnerable, who are potentially compulsive gamblers. We may be promoting a potential disease by this kind of thing whether in the young, the old, or those who are unable to meet their commitments and who become too involved in this type of activity.

Recently a newspaper published the ratio of opportunities to win. Loto Canada gives one chance to win in 600,000. The odds in other lotteries are worse and the opportunity to win can be one in several million. People who participate in this class of activity can dream of being the one person in 600,000 who will win, but participation can create a problem for a family on a rigid budget. As a federal Government we have an obligation to try to avoid promoting this participation.

The fourth grey area is that of Government revenue. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) spoke about regressive taxation. It must be made clear to Canadians that the Government is raising revenue through this type of activity and that it plans to distribute the revenue to activities that all of us would support. It is a means of raising Government revenues. It is not called taxation but it really is taxation and it is often collected from those least able to afford it.

The fifth grey area is federal Crown corporations. We might have a little more confidence in this particular Crown corporation if we had not seen some of the difficulties encountered by previous Crown corporations involved in the lottery business. It is clear that very bad decisions were made. It is a complex and very precise type of activity which requires all of the resources of Government, or whoever is involved, to make sure it is done properly. There are some good examples of extreme waste in running the lotteries. I do not believe anyone in particular, in light of the recent events on the Canadian national scene, can have confidence that this Crown corporation is going to be run any better than any of the other Crown corporations. That, I feel, gives us cause for concern. The whole problem of Canadair is the kind of thing which points to the question of whether or not the Government, and the Minister who is responsible, are going to be able to keep up to the management requirements and whether they are going to be able to make the necessary changes in time to avoid abuse and waste which will occur if we are not right on top of it.

The sixth point, which is important, is the question of disbursements of the profits, whatever those profits might be. It is clear there has been a commitment made to the Calgary Olympics. I am sure that all Hon. Members are supportive of the Government honouring that commitment. Beyond that, however, there is a list of what this amendment, which is being proposed at this time, would do. In fact, it would limit the disbursement of these funds to the Calgary Olympics. It would not give the Government the option of disbursing these funds to other areas which are defined, and which may not in fact be defined specifically in the Bill.

I feel the question which arises here, and the grey area, is what happens to these areas, for instance, medical research, when we have a situation where it becomes dependent upon a sports pool and then, all of a sudden, we find, as is happening in Quebec, that the returns are diminishing. There is less and less money available. We would have what to me is a very credible and worth-while project gradually being put in a position where it is very vulnerable because there are not the funds which were anticipated. Therefore, that puts these projects at high risk.

I will probably have an opportunity, Mr. Speaker, as further amendments are brought forward, to make additional comments. However, I feel that I should emphasize again that in spite of supporting most of the activities which the Government is suggesting in this legislation, it seems to be a very poor vehicle, one which has more problems than solutions, and we would like to see the Government withdraw it.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments to comment on this Bill. It is the kind of Bill which the Government has put forward as a necessity. The Government is saying in effect, "If we do not get this money in this way, we will not have the money to do a lot of these wonderful things which are important for the country." One of the real criticisms of our modern age has been the so-called loss of the moral approach to living. Morality is the fibre of the nation which must be recognized and held dear at all levels. We teach it in the home, we teach it in the schools, we teach it in the church. We hope that it becomes part of every person's way of dealing with life. Then, by a variety of means, our teachings on morality are diverted in such a way that it is difficult for the nation to say, "What you are doing is wrong".

A couple of thousands of years ago the collection of interest was considered immoral and probably today it still is. However, our society has condoned it for so long that we now think of it as quite acceptable. At one time the idea of speculation was considered immoral. If one went out and bought land, for instance, for $1 an acre and sold it for $1,000 an acre a few months later, that was considered immoral. Even excess profits were considered immoral at one time. There was a time when a business considered 5 per cent or 6 per cent of profit on its sales was quite a good profit. Today we allow 300 per cent, 400 per cent 500 per cent profit. And if one cannot make that kind of profit, one is not considered a very good businessman. Therefore, there has been this disintegration of the moral structure to a great extent.

It is the responsibility of the major Governments of the country, the provincial and the federal Governments, to uphold the moral fibre of the country. What is being done in this Bill, and in any Bill of this kind, is the undermining of that structure. There is quite a difference between lotteries or "raffles", as they are called, on a national basis and lotteries or raffles on a local basis. When someone comes to me in my own community to sell a ticket on a raffle, he does not spend a lot of time telling me what a great prize I am going to win if I buy this ticket. What he is actually asking me to do is to contribute very directly to something. I know that is implied in this Bill. However, if one looks at the advertising of lotteries across the country, one finds that it is not the basis on which that advertising is put forward. The advertising of both federal and provincial Governments has always been, "Spend a dollar and win a million. Be a millionaire all at once." The implication, therefore, of the Government's getting into this kind of "business", if you wish, is not in the best interest of the country.

As a number of other Hon. Members have already suggested this evening, besides the concern which we should all have as to whether this is good for the people of Canada, we have here a kind of typical Liberal approach to legislation as a whole. What the Government is suggesting here is that there are a number of items in the Bill which it knows we would like to support, things like the Olympics, culture, the development of the arts, medical research. These are things which it knows everyone is going to support. Therefore, it attaches them to a method of payment which many Hon. Members of this House, and many people across Canada—I would suggest possibly the majority—abhor. It is the method of paying for these benefits which they abhor, using the gambling instincts possibly, and appealing to greed to some extent. It is a method of supplying these benefits, which everyone wants, in such a way that it is difficult to take a stand against it.

However, it is important that we do put up a defence against this kind of development. The Government did the same thing last week with respect to the Crow Bill, which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) pushed through the House. Here again, there was something in this Bill which everyone supported, the development of the railways, the improvement of the railways. However, the method of payment was not supportable by a large portion of the population, at least those who were being asked to pay for it, the farmers of western Canada. Again, one sees the typical Liberal approach of putting in place something that is worthwhile and paying for it with something that is abhorrent.

The federal Government has a responsibility to control funding methods. There are other alternatives in funding these kinds of things. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) suggested direct taxation if we believe that these are the kinds of things we should be supporting and that they are good and necessary for the country. Then we should be quite willing to fund on a direct taxation basis. Also, there are parts of it that I am sure can be done on a straight contribution basis. Many parts of our sports and art structures are already funded on this basis. It can be continued or classified, allowing tax deductions if possible. The method being used and, again, I follow many other Hon. Members, is indirect taxation, but it is one which is not in the least progressive. If one is making $1 million a year, a tax to buy one ticket will cost $10. If one is making $5,000 a year or barely surviving and one decides to buy the ticket, it will still cost $10. Therefore, it is a really regressive tax. If one has $1 million, why should one go out and spend $10 on a ten million to one chance of getting another $1 million? However, if one has only $5,000 a year, it seems like a pretty good idea to spend $10 in the hope that one can gain $1 million. Therefore, this regressive taxation becomes a very great factor. We should consequently remove that kind of method of funding.

Finally, this matter involves a Crown corporation. As the Hon. Member who last spoke said, the people of Canada have watched the Government's involvement with Crown corporations far so long that they no longer trust the ability of the Government to operate a Crown corporation well. This may be a valuable corporation, if it must be established. However, how can we be sure that the Government, which has done so badly in the past with Crown corporations, will operate this one any better than it did Canadair or any of the other large corporations which have lost accountability?

Mr. Thacker: Or Canagrex.

Mr. Hovdebo: It's the same thing.

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in the debate this evening but I cannot say that I am happy to do so. Somehow I feel rather sad that this great institution that has such a tremendous responsibility and also an influence for good in our nation should have before it a Bill which I believe tends to erode the very ethical and moral basis and foundation of our country.

I cannot help but think back to when I wore a different hat, or collar. In preaching to my congregation, I would point out the fact that I believed that in the exchange of goods, there were only three principles that were operative: one was by purchase, the second was by barter and the third was an outright gift. When we move into the area in which we are moving with this particular Bill, we are bypassing those basic principles and carrying on one of the weaknesses of humanity, which seems to be becoming more prevalent in these days, that is, to try to get something for nothing, and get it quickly.

There are several components of the Bill that have been mentioned to which I want to refer very briefly again. First, I would start by referring to the matter which was addressed by the previous Hon. Member. His last comment concerned the fact that under the provisions of the Bill we are called upon to set up another Crown corporation. We must remember the words of the Auditor General when he referred to the Crown corporation proliferation as being a sub-government, one that was beyond the control of Parliament and one that did not have any sense of accountability.

When I think of another Crown corporation being set up at a time when there is so much criticism directed toward that type of activity, I somehow feel that we are moving in the wrong direction. We ought to call a halt and consider whether or not we are setting up just one more agency which will be beyond the power of Parliament to control, one that does not have any sense of responsibility to the Canadian people.

Another matter in that connection is that we are called upon to amend the Criminal Code. Just to bring this to our attention, Clause 33 states:

> The Criminal Code is amended by adding thereto, immediately after Section 188 thereof, the following Section:
> "188.1 Notwithstanding any provision of this Part relating to gaming or betting it is lawful
> (a) for the Government of Canada to—

That is absolutely reprehensible. It is completely immoral to say that under the Criminal Code a thing is illegal and a crime, and then for the Government to bring in a measure and say, "We will put in a clause and say, regardless of what is in the Criminal Code, that we will do it and we will not be held responsible for it. We cannot be charged under the Criminal Code". What in the world is the Government thinking about? Where are we going in this country? It is absolutely wrong for a person or a community to do something, yet a Government can do it, wrapping itself in the garb of irresponsibility and saying, "In spite of what the Criminal Code says, we will do it and you cannot charge us for the crime". I wonder how much has been spent in pressuring people to do what is intrinsically wrong according to the Criminal Code. The Government will advertise and urge the people to do what is wrong according to the Criminal Code. I would like to know just how much money Governments have spent in the past in order to get people to do what I have suggested is wrong. May I say that the Government is completely irresponsible. It is immoral for a Government to do this.

• (1930)

It is asking us to go ahead and pass this measure. I believe that if the projects that are stated as being the recipients of assistance in this Bill are laudable causes, which they are, they should not be left to chance. They should be provided for from the Consolidated Revenue Fund and the money obtained in a legitimate fashion from the people of Canada instead of through the back door via this particular mechanism.

I know that the Government will say that we are advocating greater Government expenditures. But I can outline many projects which the Government could eliminate and transfer that money to meet the demands and requirements of these particular causes. It would be far more commendable for the Government to spend its money there than the way it is spending it now.

I have documents here from the Council of Christian Reform Churches in Canada. I also have statements by the executive committee of the Baptist Federation of Canada and the Commission on Moral and Social Standards and Issues of the Salvation Army, as well as the working unit on social issues in justice, division of missions in Canada of the United Church of Canada. They suggest and urge us to reject this Bill and vote against it because they believe it is detrimental to the fabric of our nation. I believe that we ought to reject it.

I wonder why no Liberals will stand up to defend this measure. Are they all in agreement that this Bill should go through? I wish there were at least some who would stand up and say that they believe this measure is wrong and that they will not support it. The plea that I make today is that the Minister withdraw his Bill and realize that it is thoroughly wrong.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join in this debate and begin by commending the Hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson) for a first rate speech in the House. Once again, it shows how common sense can be brought to bear on these issues that are matters of great social concern to the country yet how the Government itself, because it either needs the money or is not prepared to face Canadians with a tax proposal that meets the program proposal, tries to do something indirectly which it dare not do openly or honestly. However, Government Members, some of whom I know, are opposed to this Bill. Some have spoken to us privately and said that they do not think that this is the type of society and country our ancestors envisaged. However, since this measure got through Cabinet and the Cabinet permitted this Bill to go before the House, those Members sit quietly. That is why my friend from Fraser Valley East is disappointed and that is why I am disappointed. Other Bills as well have left us disappointed when we knew that Members opposite personally did not believe that a Cabinet piece of legislation was wise but yet they sat quietly. It is certainly an argument in favour of the proposal from the special committee on procedure that there be more free votes in the House. I believe we would see an enormous shift over votes and consequently a much more sensitive Cabinet. A Cabinet which would continue to push through Bills against which large numbers of its own Members were rising to speak would soon have to respond to those people.

The basic message clearly gets out to ordinary Canadians. I believe, along with other people in this country, that this is part of a larger plan to take much more power into the central jurisdiction of Canada. Howe could this be done with Canadians who have been raised on a broadly decentralized power in the country, with individual responsibility at the family and community level, a little less at the provincial level and a little less at the federal level? First, it would demoralize people in their own individual families and communities. One clear way to do that is to bankrupt them and make them even more dependent on a handout. Programs would then be introduced for people to receive a grant from the Government. They would soon learn to respond to that. They would be given the illusion of wealth by having them spend more money than is being taken from them. This is what we have seen since this Government came to power. The national debt has been built up to $160 billion, including some of the Crown corporation debts. This simply means that the Government has stimulated the economy every year—this year by some $30 billion—which makes everyone think that there is more money available than there really is. While they receive the benefit of this for some time, it always leads to inflation, high interest rates, a collapse and then a period of great disorientation and allowance. This is what we are faced with today.

The second way to achieve this centralization is to tax people to death. Taxes simply mean that someone else decides how to spend the money that those of us who work in the mines, on the farm or in Parliament, earn. After we have paid our taxes at the municipal, provincial and federal level as well as our income tax, we find that we have very little disposable income left. That tends to make people give up, which demoralizes them.

The third method is to bring out, as the church groups call it, the bread and circuses. It keeps people happy with minimum bread and maximum circuses, or, something for nothing. That is really part of the Crown corporation spiel. This includes Petro-Canada which really purports to tell people that it is ours and that we have no energy problem in this country, whereas the fact is that we have an incredibly serious energy problem. We Members from the West, particularly from Alberta, stand up time and again to argue how we had 16 billion barrels of light conventional crude in the ground, and that it is now down to four billion barrels and dropping. When that conventional crude is gone from the western plains, this nation will be in very serious trouble because we will be held in the iron grip of those Middle Eastern countries which are unstable, not because their people are bad on an individual basis but as a result of ancient animosity and religious and ethnic hatreds that have built up. For us as an industrial nation to be left in their hands is a criminal act which should not be permitted.

I join with other Members in dealing with this amendment in Clause 14(b) for all of the general reasons such as the question of whether we as a society should be involved in gambling. It seems to me that we should rather be discussing our national defence structure and how we can promote disarmament on a world-wide basis since all of humanity will be lost if that issue is not resolved. We should be discussing the great social issues such as prostitution and abortion. Why are we at this time spending the time of the House on a gaming Bill which is in direct violation, in my opinion, of the agreement that had been entered into with the provincial Governments that we would permit only the one lottery to continue, one mistake having been made? We have received tens of millions of dollars from the provincial Governments pursuant to that agreement—$98 million, my friend from Edmonton tells me—and now we are going to try to undercut them with another one. It will lead to another federal-provincial confrontation. It certainly is not wise.

This Bill truly appeals to the sort of baser interests that we all have. I am sure all of us have bought lottery tickets and perhaps will continue to do so. Perhaps the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) does. He is the only perfect man, I guess.

Mr. Pepin: I buy lottery tickets.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Thacker: It seems that this is a nation which has lost sight of its future.

Mr. Pepin: Hope springs eternal.

Mr. Thacker: Hope springs eternal, but out of the $110,000 a year which the Minister gets from the people of Canada and the $65,000 I get as a Member of Parliament from the people of Canada, that $5 provincial ticket or that $10 lottery ticket is nothing. But to our friends who are labouring in mines and to farmers whose average income is less that $12,000 a year who are suffering in generally tough times the prospect of $1 million seems enormous. It is an attraction that you could expect reasonable people to fall for. But the effect is to impose upon them a direct tax. When you add that to the direct sales taxes which the feds have imposed so dramatically in the last few years and add it to all the fuel tax people must pay, the alcohol taxes, the cigarette taxes, in addition to the income tax that people have to pay, there is just no disposable income left at all. I ask the Minister whether that is wise for a society. Does it lead to a great future for Canada? I say no. It is legislation for a country that is sliding down the other side of a hill. Rather than climbing up the mountain and building a strong society, we are sliding down as they did in the last years of the Roman empire and other empires throughout history.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I believe every country, certainly Canada, should be encouraging athletic events inside the country. We should get people to come from other countries. They add buoyancy to our economy and this allows the development of skills in our own individuals, particularly our young people. Whenever any community makes an application for an Olympic event the Government should say whether or not it will give assistance. This Government promised assistance to the Calgary Olympic Association. The association presented its brochure and brief on the understanding that the Canadian Government would back the association to the extent of so many dollars. But then the Government puts on provisos completely contrary to the principle of athletics events, completely contrary to the morals of this country that have been with us for so many years. That is wrong, Mr. Speaker, completely wrong.

I want to make it very clear that I support the Olympics and the Government's providing money for the Olympics as it promised. But I do not support this type of legislation. I will tell you why.

First, we are setting up another corporation. I am suspicious of corporations. We have too many of them now. Maybe that is not a very good reason but that is one reason why we should not trust this Bill.

Second, this Bill will amend the Income Tax Act so that the $10.5 million of the taxpayers' money that is being given to this corporation will not be a loan but a gift. It is a gift to enable the Government to carry out gambling in this country. We are amending the Income Tax Act. This is not a loan. If this pool system is going to be doing so well, why does it not pay back the taxpayers' money? Part of this money belongs to thousands of taxpayers who do not believe in gambling, who would not buy a lottery ticket under any circumstances because they do not want to be a bad example to their children. Most of us buy lottery tickets, but that does not make it right. But this tax money belongs to all the people of Canada. The Government has no right to use that money for purposes which our people would not condone. If it does, the Government is leaving itself wide open to criticism. This Government is using taxpayers' money to do something that now is illegal in this country. But then it says, "It is illegal only if someone else does it." Let us take a look at the Criminal Code of Canada. Let me quote Section 185 and part of Section 186 under the heading "Gaming and Betting". It reads:

> 185. (1) Every one who keeps a common gaming house or common betting house is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for two years.
> (2) Every one who
> (a) is found, without lawful excuse, in a common gaming house or common betting house, or
> (b) as owner, landlord, lessor, tenant, occupier or agent, knowingly permits a place to be let or used for the purposes of a common gaming house or common betting house, > is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.
> 186. (1) Every one commits an offence who
> (a) uses or knowingly allows a place under his control to be used for the purpose of recording or registering bets or selling a pool;

Everyone who does that is liable for a prison term.

Mr. Pepin: There is not enough room in the prisons of Canada for all those people.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): They deserve a prison term.

Mr. Taylor: If this is wrong, the Government says, "We will just change it". Thank God this Government did not write the Bible or there would be nothing on earth that is wrong. There would be no right or wrong. The Government could do anything it liked.

Mr. Pepin: Going to heaven is a gamble.

Mr. Taylor: Right now it is bad enough with the Government's laws. It let a man abuse a little girl and murder her and then it expects the taxpayer to keep him the rest of his life. The Government will not even have him punished.

An Hon. Member: An eye for an eye.

Mr. Taylor: I thank God this Government did not write the Bible, but the Bible is still there and the Bible means something to most of us. It sets out what is right and what is wrong. It sets an example. But here we have a Government setting an example by telling young people to forget about the Criminal Code. It says, "If you do something wrong, we will change the code. It is not wrong. It is wrong if John Jones does it. He will go to jail for two years. It is okay if the Minister of State does it because he is part of the Government."

What kind of example is that to the boys and girls of our nation? When I was a scout master we were hard up for money. This was during the tough years and we needed money. We thought that perhaps we could raffle something. We looked into the rules and regulations of the Boy Scout Manual, but nothing doing. To raffle something was wrong and we did not want to start teaching Boy Scouts how to gamble. That would be just a beginning. It is little foxes that spoil the vines. If we start with little things, the little things lead to big things. So we did not do it. We did not have a raffle. Today most of those young people are holding responsible positions because they learned what was right and what was wrong. They did not do what was wrong even though it would have meant money in their pockets, a better camp, a better hall and better equipment. They went without rather than doing something that was wrong according to the laws of the country.

Mr. Pepin: Adjust your halo.

Mr. Taylor: But this Government simply changes the law. My colleague has just handed me the Bill and it reads:

Notwithstanding any provision of this Part relating to gaming or betting, it is lawful—

That is the kind of Government we have in this country. Government Members just simply say, "We will make black into white and white into black".

• (1950)

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Morally corrupt.

Mr. Taylor: Yes, morally corrupt. That is how the great empires of history became nothing after their glorious days. They started ignoring the things that were wrong and saying that they were right. There is no right or wrong any more. We are getting more like that in this country.

Here we have a law which we expect the House of Commons and the Senate to pass. If it ever passes here, the Senate will say, "Yea, yea". Members in the other place will have to do it because the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) tells them that they have to do so. We even passed a law with less than a quorum, with 13 Members in the House. The Senate has no principles; it passed the law and said that it was okay. It will do the same thing for this piece of legislation. It is another reason that it is wrong, completely wrong.

Then we have an Income Tax Act which says that if a person wins he does not have to pay taxes. It is simply to encourage people to spend money on betting. It is worse than Las Vegas. If a person wins a sizeable sum of money in Las Vegas, he has to pay the tax immediately to the American Government. Here we are saying to people, "Go ahead and gamble". Government Members are saying that it is no longer contrary to the Criminal Code and that they do not have to pay tax on their winnings. They can win $500,000 and do not have to pay tax, even though taxpayers' dollars will be taken from the fund and given to this corporation with no interest, not as a loan but as a gift. Approximately $10.5 million of the people's money will be given to the corporation to do with what it likes. It will teach young Canadians to become gamblers and that gaming is okay. Then something else will be okay, and there will be no morals left in the country. Surely we should expect the Government of a nation to stand high on the principles which built the nation. Those who came to Canada from other parts of the world came because they could worship in the way their conscience dictated; they could teach their children high principles and not suffer persecution. Now they are changing the laws of a country which were written to keep things right. Now they are saying there is no wrong any more.

If it is wrong, the Government does it and it becomes right. If it is wrong for an individual, the Government blatantly passes a law and says that it is okay for the Government to do it. What is the country coming to? What is the country coming to when the Government says to our young people that it is wrong for John Smith, the poor coal miner, to go into a gaming house and win $10 or $15 and that he will be put in jail for two years, and if a minister of state wins $500,000, he will not have to pay taxes on it or go to jail? It is wrong for the little guy but it is okay for the Government. What kind of a country are we building? The Government should sit up and think about what it is doing before Canada is in utter ruins, without morals and completely morally bankrupt, denying all the things for which we fought and lived to make the country worthwhile.

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, I have but a few remarks to direct to Motion No. 2, the amendment proposed with respect to Clause 14 of Bill C-95, a clause which deals with the objects and powers of the corporation, another Crown corporation being established by the Government which seems intent upon proliferating the growth of Crown corporations so that, hopefully, beyond the reach of the House, there will be created a new substructure of quasi-government actions that, when questioned by Members of the House, may be met by the standard reply that it is an independent corporation for which little answer may be given in the House of Commons. It strikes me that that process to which we have been subjected all too often in the House is one that undermines the real authority of the House of Commons and deprives us as Members of an opportunity to deal effectively with the way in which agencies of Government conduct their affairs.

The agency of Government with which we are concerned today is clearly a betting or gambling agency, and it is one that particularly requires the attention of Members of the House of Commons. It was not long ago that another government, the one which immediately preceded this one, managed to extricate the Government of Canada from an involvement in a gambling business, a business which I suspect, regardless of who operates it, is carrying on somewhat reprehensible work having regard to the victims of the process. Very clearly there is little doubt but that the victims of the process here are people who can least afford to be victimized.

Mr. Pepin: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gamble: I know that may be amusing to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) who consistently interrupts. I am sure he will avail himself of this opportunity to stand in his place and speak on the Bill. Failing to do that, I would hope that he would just hold his peace until I have concluded. I know that may be too much to ask of the Minister. Perhaps we can indeed expect him to stand up and explain the great virtues and values of this peace of proposed legislation, although having regard to his conduct in the past, I rather suspect that that is a bit too much to expect.

The great problem, as I was explaining, is that the people who are systematically victimized are those who can least afford to be caught up in another process of wagering on the ultimate outcome of what will be a new gambling venture. It is important for us to recognize that in the event the Government of Canada has abandoned the usual raising of revenues, by any mode or system of taxation as it is authorized to do under the provisions of the Constitution, it should reflect upon using this particular mode of taxation which carries with it an induced voluntary element which I must confess will extract more revenues from Canadians. In this case very clearly the majority of revenues will come from people who are least able to pay them. From the standpoint of raising revenues, in the event that the Government approaches this matter in a businesslike fashion, ought it not to be concerned about the ultimate consequences of its other sources of guaranteed contract revenue from other lottery ventures in which it is indeed a partner?

The proliferation of lotteries with additional costs and expenses of advertising and promotion surely will not return, I suspect, the kind of revenues the Government of Canada expects to generate from its own individual effort, having regard to the funds that it has been assured of receiving from its joint businesslike partnership arrangement with the Provinces. To say that this venture, in competition with itself as a partner in another venture, is poor business is to put it as gently as I can. It is very clear, recognizing that there is a tendency among the people of Canada to wager on gaming or lottery type devices, that the Government wishes to have 100 per cent of the pie, in this case regardless of what those consequences may bring to it in terms of revenue generated otherwise.

Let me pass, if I may, to an issue that has been raised time and time again, that is, the great merits of the scheme, having regard to an obligation which the Government undertook with respect to the 1988 Calgary Olympics and the defence so often raised that this particular Bill is necessary in the event that money is in fact to be made available by the Government of Canada to fund a federal Government obligation to the Olympics. Very clearly the federal Government has that obligation. It has that obligation because these are national events in Canada conducted on an international scale. It is an obligation of the Government of Canada to support the worthwhile work of a city or community which has gone out on a limb and committed itself to bring to our country an event of the significance of the Olympic games in Calgary. The Government of Canada should be proud to participate and to carry out its findancial obligations rather than endeavour to push this Bill through the House, justifying its existence and coercing some to adhere to its passage on the basis that this is a panacea for the raising of funds for an international athletic meet.

If you examine the provisions of the Bill, you find that clearly that is but one of a variety of purposes allegedly advanced by the Government to induce Members of the House to support this piece of legislation. Under Clause 18(3) we find moneys may be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, to which moneys are ultimately paid by the corporation, on a fixed term out of the revenues of the corporation "for the support of one or more of the following activities". Then a group of activities is listed, one of which happens to be the 1988 Calgary Olympics.

In the event that this Bill was designed to accomplish the purpose alleged by the Government, I would have thought we would find a sunset clause built into the Bill which would have brought the existence of this corporation to a grinding halt when the required funding for the Olympics had come and gone, but that is not the case.

To pass on to another consideration, my great concern is the required financing. Here is a money-making operation that requires $10.5 million seed money to start. There are additional funds that may be advanced. They may be advanced by the Minister of Finance on the application of the corporation, approved by the Minister, and the total amount that may be advanced under those additional financing clauses by way of loan shall not exceed $20 million. Therefore, we are looking at $30.5 million. Having regard for the rather complicated fashion that has been gone through for the purpose of setting up this corporation, the corporation will probably go through that money in short order. We will have another drag on the Consolidated Revenue Fund, and the finances of this country through another Crown corporation would get out of hand as they habitually do, much to the detriment of the taxpayers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) has just arrived. He wishes to speak on Motion No. 2.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair did notice the Hon. Member come into the House as it was prepared to put the question. I will recognize the Hon. Member.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, it is not often that one gets such attention when rising to speak in the House when one has to interrupt the deliberations of the Chair. The importance of the Bill we are now considering warrants that kind of attention. We have heard many arguments raised against the provisions of this Bill. What we have not delt with is the whole perception of this kind of legislation as it is introduced in the House of Commons. It is something we should spend some time considering.

It is a very simple matter to introduce in the House of Commons a Bill and make a claim amongst and to Members of the House of Commons and to the public as to what is the purpose and the purport of that kind of legislation. That is what we have in Bill C-95 which enacts the Athletic Contests and Events Pools Act. We are told that this Bill must have the approval of the House of Commons and must be passed in order to save the Olympics for Calgary. Surely it is a matter of perception that the purpose of this Bill is to deal with the Olympic games that are to be held in Calgary in 1984 and that the provisions of this Bill will save the Olympic games from financial ruin.

We on this side of the House know that that is not the real purpose of the Bill. If this were a Bill to aid and finance the Olympic games which are to take place in Calgary in the next year and bring credit to Canada, credit to the great Province of Alberta, credit to all athletes in Canada and across the world who participate in the Olympic games, we would of course favour it and devote our time and attention to its early passage. That is what the Government tries to sell us and the Canadian public as being the purpose of this Bill. It says, "Pass this Bill and the Olympics will be saved, not only for Calgary in 1988 but possibly for all time".

We want to stand here and tell the people of Canada through the medium of this debate on Bill C-95 that that is not the case. The case is that the Government wants to get back into the lottery business. It has seen this weakness on the part of the Canadian people. It has seen this desire on the part of the Canadian people, myself included, to get that pie in the sky, to get that million dollars from nowhere, to invest $10 and become a millionaire forever. It wants to play on that weakness of mine and of other Canadians.

The Government wants back in there because its sources of revenue have dried up. It can no longer tax Canadians in the ordinary way. It cannot impose another income tax, excise tax, sales tax and a tax on air transportation or ground transportation. We can go on and on with taxes. The Government has run out of taxes. Revenues are dried up, so it wants another tax, a voluntary tax. It has taxed the people of Canada to the limit and is now looking for other kinds of taxes. That is what Bill C-95 is all about. Don't kid yourself about that. Bill C-95 is another kind of tax. It is a voluntary tax. You do not have to pay this tax. If you are strong and you realize the percentage of winning is nearly nil and recognize that it is hard work that leads to success and not the luck of the draw, you will not be taxed. However, if you are looking for pie in the sky, for a better tomorrow, for $10 to win you a million dollars, here is the kind of tax you want to pay. That is what the Government is doing to the people of Canada.

The Government is sick of people putting up all this money in the form of a voluntary tax and its not getting any benefit, so it wants back into the field. The federal Government withdrew from the field under the Progressive Conservative Government. It considered this source of "taxation" one that should behoove and apply to the Provinces of Canada rather than to federal authority which, in a traditional and practical way, has the real source of taxation, a tax on the income of the people.

You cannot go wrong with a tax on the income of people. It goes up and down with the economy. If you cannot get your money out of income tax, you are in big trouble. That is the kind of problem the Government of Canada has today. It is in big trouble because it cannot get all the money it needs to pay for all the services it provides from the basic income tax. It has to broaden its tax base. It has to go into areas occupied by the Provinces and municipalities to find those revenues. That is the reason for this insatiable appetite of the federal Government to collect money, not only by normal taxation but by the latest kind of taxation, that is, a lottery.

If you do not agree that this is a tax, Mr. Speaker, let me tell you about the pari-mutuel betting which has been in existence in Canada for over 50 years. That is a source of revenue to the Government of Canada and to the Provinces. It is betting and it is a tax. The Governments take 20 per cent of the revenue or, actually, up to 24 per cent. But that is done legitimately. The Government says to the people involved in pari-mutuel betting at race tracks, "Put all your money in a pool and we, the Government and the track that operates the pool and the races, will take a percentage." The Government gains the taxation resource from that activity in exactly that way. That is quite fair. Everybody knows the rules.

A lottery is no different in kind or in substance. It is the same. It is a betting or wagering activity. You put your money up, Mr. Speaker, and you take your chances. In this case, the difference is that the Government of Canada that is operating the sports pool endorsed by Bill C-95 will not tell you what your return is versus the taxation aspect, Mr. Speaker. That is the only difference between this Bill with its sports pool based on a lottery and pari-mutuel betting.

The Government will not tell you what its take is, Mr. Speaker. It will not tell you whether it is 20 per cent, which is a legitimate marginal take from a wagering activity, or whether it is more. The Government wants more. In fact, as I understand it, it wants 35 per cent. In normal wagering terms, that is unfair on the face of it. That is too much money to take from Canadian people who put their money in a pool that has one declared winner from amongst the people who have participated. One out of every three dollars is too much to take. It is not the traditional rule of 20 per cent applicable to pari-mutuel betting.

Even if Government Members are right, they are wrong. Even if they are right to introduce this legislation in the House of Commons that provides for a sports pool for those willing to engage in that kind of activity, they are wrong about the amount of revenue they expect and want from that activity, particularly when it is borne in mind that no other organization or institution shares in the profits of this exercise. They claim that they will take those profits and distribute them among various organizations. I am sure that other speakers who have participated in this debate have indicated the potential sharers in this ultimate profit, and there are a great number of them. They include hospitals, medical research, and a whole variety of purposes.

The problem with the Government of Canada today is that nobody believes it any more. It makes all of these lavish claims but it does not back them up with real obligations.

Let me just say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that Bill C-95 which is designed to set up the sports pool is before us. We know it is unfair to the people of Canada. It takes too much and it does not even guarantee back to those people of Canada who have participated in it a fair return on their investment, nor does it indicate in any real way that the people of Canada will benefit.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my voice to the discussion on the amendment that has been moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid). It is important that we put what we are debating into perspective. I will repeat to some extent what I have said earlier, but I think it is well known in the House that I oppose gaming and lotteries and especially the way in which Governments, with their moral obligation to the citizens at large, use advertising which at best is questionable to entice people to get involved in lotteries. When Governments advertise that to purchase a lottery ticket is to buy a dream, the force of Government is behind that advertising to the degree that it is believed that if Government is doing it, it possibly should not or does not face the same kind of scrutiny as would be faced by a private individual who put forward a game of chance.

Second, the Government has indicated that it needs this lottery in order to fund the Calgary Olympics. It is surely known by anyone who has looked at the application made by the Calgary Olympic Committee that the only reason the International Olympic Committee recognized and gave approval to the bid from Calgary is that the Calgary sponsors had in their possession a letter stating that the Government of Canada (a), welcomed the Olympics to Canada and (b), would help with the financing of the Olympics. There was no question in the minds of the members of the International Olympic Committee that that support was conditional on whether Parliament would support a sports lottery or a stamp program or an official souvenir or artifact program in order to provide the federal portion of the funding necessary. The only criterion was that the letter was a valid letter from the Government of Canada, the invitation was valid and the financial support was guaranteed. That was it.

The amendment that has been proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. Catharines, brings directly into focus the deception that is being foisted on the House and the Canadian people by the Government through this Bill, because this Bill does not restrict itself only to the Calgary Olympics. The argument that the Government would like to see take root in Canadian society is that anyone who is against Bill C-95 is against the Olympics and against athletes competing one against another. That is not the issue. The Government wants to get back into the gaming business and it is using the Calgary Olympics as the vehicle by which to do so. Let us be blunt about it. That is what it is.

I know that those of us who have been against Government involvement in the gaming business for some time have been described in various ways. We have been told that we cannot impose our code of morality on the general public. That, Mr. Speaker, is a specious argument at best. Surely every time legislation is passed, that legislation or the regulations flowing therefrom are meant to control or limit in some way the actions of members of society.

Another argument that is used is that gaming does not hurt and that it is voluntary. Gaming hurts, Mr. Speaker. It might not hurt the Members of the House who may put a few dollars into a pool at the time of the Stanley Cup playoffs or the Grey Cup game. All evidence shows that a disproportionate number of people who buy this type of lottery tickets are from the lower economic strata of society.

It is then argued that we cannot protect everyone from his or her own folly. The argument is that you cannot protect everyone from his or her folly. How much time is spent in this House debating social policy with the hope that the human condition will be improved? I think it is almost a violation of what the Government says it stands for to bring in this type of legislation.

The other argument that is put forward is that the Government would not otherwise be able to fund worthwhile projects but that now it can find the funding through lotteries or gaming. I have always held that if the project is valid, that is what the Canadian people should be told and the money should be raised in the same way that it is for everything else that is valid—through taxation.

There is another reason why the Government wants to be in the gaming business, Mr. Speaker. I have been harshly criticized for using this expression but I will use it again—lottery proceeds are a great slush fund for Governments. They can use the money, which they did not get through direct taxation, to hand out all kinds of largesse, a pier here and there, saying, "The Government is doing this for you". There has been too much of that in society already, Mr. Speaker. Surely when the federal Government is finally extricated from this mess it should not want to jump back in with both feet.

I know it is not too common in the House any more to listen to what the churches have to say. But the churches are comprised of Canadians who have some very legitimate concerns about the direction that society takes and, I should like to think, they have a more perceptive view of what some of the steps taken today and some of the easy approvals that the House asks for such as in Bill C-95, can lead to.

I should like to put on record an except from a letter from the Lutheran Church in America—Canada Section, as follows:

At its March 10-12, 1983 meeting, the Executive Committee of the Lutheran Church in America—Canada Section adopted the following motion:

That the LCA-CS, on the basis of our position previously taken, go on record as being opposed to Bill C-95 and that the Government be so informed.

Today I received a telegram from the senior staff officer of the Church in Society, the United Church of Canada, signed by the Rev. Robert G. Lindsey. It reads as follows:

This is the time to stop further Government promotion of gambling in Canada. The United Church of Canada concerned with the Government's refusal to understand its obligation to support morality in Canada rather than to undermine it. We hope that you will do whatever is in your power to stop Bill C-95 from becoming law in Canada. Refer you to the brief by the Interchurch Committee on Gambling and Lotteries circulated to the Communications and Culture Committee December 14, 1982, re C-95 which was sent to you at a later date.

I hope that the Government, including the public servants who are responsible for the Bill, will not sit back and look at the arguments advanced against Bill C-95 as coming from another age. What we are dealing with are some of the bedrocks on which society was formed—decency, morality and the Government upholding that morality. Bill C-95 does not do that, and I oppose it.

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take part in the debate on Bill C-95 with much the same feeling as that expressed by my colleagues who have already spoken. The Bill is supposed to be a refinement of benefits for the people of Canada, proposed by the Government, but I have not heard a Member of the Government try to make the case for the benefits that can be derived through lotteries.

In 1979 when the Conservative Government was in power, the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski) was Minister in charge of the Fitness and Sports Directorate. In conjunction with the Provinces he and the Cabinet made the decision that if the Provinces wished to tax through lotteries they could do so, and that by giving up something that the federal Government had total control over, the federal Government would derive some benefit. To date the federal Government has derived almost $100 million but now it is trying again to involve itself in the lottery business, the gambling business, the gaming business.

I come from a part of the country where the men and women on the farms are gambling every year—with mother nature and their expertise. I do not think they need a lottery to stimulate their blood; it is stimulated every year when it does not rain or when it hails or when mother nature causes problems.

What did the Government do with that $100 million? The B-ski team had to come home last year and some of the members were assessed for representing the country. The Government claimed that it did not have any money—but it had $100 million and it had the general revenue of the country with which to support those young men and women—those fine athletes who represent the country. Instead, it billed them additional charges and for travel.

In Clause 14 the Bill sets out the objects of the corporation as follows:

(1) The objects of the Corporation are (a) to organize, operate and manage, alone or jointly with the governments of any one or more provinces with which the Corporation has entered into an agreement or agreements for such purpose, pool systems in accordance with regulations made pursuant to section 16;

That is already in place, Mr. Speaker. The only difference is that the Provinces have control over it. The Provinces take the lead and if they feel that is the way they would like to assist and they would like to impose lotteries upon their people, then that is fine.

Why get the federal Government more deeply involved at this time in a process of taxation—for this is purely taxation and has nothing whatsoever to do with recreation or leisure? There is a hue and cry about the Calgary Olympics. I do not think any Member on either side of the House would deny the Calgary Olympics any funding that is necessary. I do not know anyone who wished to deny funding for the Montreal Olympics when they took place either. This Bill, Mr. Speaker, is not necessary in order to provide funding for the Calgary Olympics. I would like to see any one of the Hon. Members on the Government benches stand and explain why a lottery is necessary in order to provide funding for an Olympic-type games, a grandiose meeting of young men and women from across Canada and athletes from around the world. Why must we have a lottery to do that? More importantly, Mr. Speaker, the Calgary Olympics are about fourth on the list. Clause 18(3) of the Bill states, and I quote:

There shall be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund to or for the support of any one or more of

(a) activities in the following fields:

(i) the arts and culture,

(ii) fitness and amateur sport, and

(iii) medical and health research—

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), Mr. Speaker, stood in this House and condemned some of the methods used to provide health care by the Provinces because there is not enough funding provided by the federal Government and here we have a lottery put into place, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Paproski: And she hates it.

Mr. McKnight: My colleague, the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski) says she disagrees with the lottery, and she may. I believe in committee she said she despised the lottery system, but here it is, Mr. Speaker, in this Bill.

One of the beneficiaries of this gambling system which is being put in place by the Government is health and medical research. Surely, Mr. Speaker, health and medical research is too important to be linked with gaming and gambling in this country. We, as Canadians, should be able to provide that type of research without resorting to taxing those who are gambling on a dream, who are really risking what they have because they think there is an easier way. Most of these people, deep down, know that the odds are against them, but it is a chance and it is there, so they put out the $5 or $10.

I am not arguing on the grounds of morality that gambling as proposed in this Bill is bad. I strongly support my colleagues who have spoken on it and appreciate the support which the churches have given to our Party in trying to stop this Bill. However, if one looks at the rationale, the reason behind people being put into the position of having to put out $5 or $10 every week or month to better themselves, it must fall on the shoulders of the Government; it must be a failure of the Government to provide another form, another way of getting ahead, another way of attaining that Canadian dream which so many people in this day and age under this administration have been denied. If the best that this Government can offer, Mr. Speaker, is a lottery, a chance of one in six million or one in ten million, I cannot help but know that it will suffer the eventual rejection by the people of Canada.

After the heading of the Winter Olympic Games to be held at Calgary, it is stated, and I quote:

(c) worthy capital projects of national interest in the fields described in subparagraphs (a)(i) and (ii)—

We do not even know, Mr. Speaker, what these "worthy capital projects" could be. The problem here is that the Government is asking us to pass a Bill with nothing definite in it. We have five or six proposals as to how this money may be used for the benefit of Canadians, but we have nothing specific. The only specific is the Winter Olympic Games to be held at Calgary, without specific amounts, and that is fourth on the list. If that is all the Government can put forward which is specific, I will be voting against this Bill.

The Government claims on the one hand that it does not have enough money. It does not want to add a tax right up front, lay it out and say, "Here is a tax and it is for medical research." The people of Canada would not object to that. The people of Canada would understand that. However, on the one hand it says it does not have enough money, and is afraid to raise taxes because it feels it has already raised taxes and has spent that money frivolously. However, paragraph 34 of the Bill says, "If you bet, if you take a chance, if you gamble, and if you win a million bucks, we are not going to tax you. It is going to be tax free." It does not make a lot of sense, Mr. Speaker, that on the one hand the Government is afraid to impose a tax and on the other hand, if one wins through the lottery system, it is not going to collect a tax. I look forward within the next few days to taking part in the debate on the other motions in respect of Bill C-95.

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) with respect to Bill C-95, an Act to provide for Government operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and events and to amend the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act.

It would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that we have before the House in Bill C-95 a Bill which legalizes in fact that which is now illegal. This is a Bill through which the Government imposes upon all Canadians, those who have a voice and those who do not, the legalization of gambling, lotteries, betting and pools. I would like to make very clear in this House, and to the people of Canada, that no one on this side of the House is against the Olympic Games being held in Calgary. We are not against that noble, upright and honest purpose. We stand in support of our youth and of the people from various countries who compete. We stand behind them fully. I would suggest to this House, Mr. Speaker, and to the country of Canada, that the Canadian people would stand behind such a noble undertaking as the Olympic Games.

It was mentioned earlier by the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) that when the Olympic Games were held in Montreal, the Canadian people supported and backed them fully. The Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) read into the record the protests of two major denominations and many other churches which have sent protests to the various Hon. Members of this House against what is being done to encourage betting and gambling. The motive of the Olympics is a high one, but the direction in which the Government undertakes to finance it is absolutely demoralizing to the country and to its people. I suggest that I, for one, cannot support the direction being taken in Bill C-95.

You will notice it is the poor who will be hurt. It is the person who probably is not thinking at the time and who invests maybe his last $10 in something which he believes will make him a wealthy person. Therefore, it is a tax upon the poor.

What about the morality of this matter? I believe there must be a question of whether it is right for a Government to inflict this kind of legislation upon the people of this country in the way in which it is inflicted. It is bringing before this House legislation which, as I mentioned earlier, legalizes that which is illegal. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, to Hon. Members on the other side, particular by the Ministers, that if they would go to the Canadian people with a plebiscite on this type of legislation, asking them if they are willing to support athletic events in an upright and noble manner, the people of Canada would say, "Yes, we would." However, if the Government continues in the direction it has taken through the Bill, I would say that it would receive a big "no" from the people of Canada. People in general are not in favour of this type of legislation and this type of moral approach to athletics. The Government could find other ways.

If one considers the Crown corporation which is being put into place to create, to control and to conduct gambling, pooling and betting to support the athletic event in Calgary, one might ask oneself, in what other ways could a Government move? We should consider some of the outrageous spending of the Government and some of the Crown corporations, particularly Canadair, involving $1.4 billion.

Mr. Epp: Even makes gambling look good.

Mr. Gustafson: It would make it look very sickly. It would promote, I suppose, one of the largest athletic events in the history of Canada.

Mr. Epp: In the world.

Mr. Gustafson: Probably in the world, as the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) says, just by some responsible direction by Government.

I want to make this point. Government Members opposite may say, "This is hindsight. We could not help it. We just were not on the ball. We were not looking after the business of the people of the country. We will admit that we were not responsible". If they are not saying it, they should say it. However, I am suggesting that what we need in this country is responsible Government in all Crown corporations, and a responsibility to the morale of the country and to the morals of the people whom we represent in the House. I do not see this as being a responsible move in a country like Canada, considering its roots, its background and, I should say, the importance Canadian people place on the Government's moral responsibilities in the House and to the country.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I should explain to the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) that I do not see, I hear.

Mr. McKnight: I have noticed that, Mr. Speaker, when you are recognizing me.

Mr. Mayer: You don't hear very well, is what he is saying.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Then I can assure the Hon. Member that he is well-favoured.

Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 79, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines) moved:

That Bill C-95, An Act to provide for Government operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and events and to amend the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act, be amended in Clause 18 by striking out lines 11 to 20 at page 8 and substituting the following therefor:

"of the XV Winter Olympic games to be held at Calgary, Alberta,"

He said: Mr. Speaker, I must say it is with some pleasure that I put before the House Motion No. 3 which has the effect of making the XV Winter Olympics, to be held in Calgary, the sole beneficiary of whatever games the Government introduces as the result of the proposed legislation. The Government and, perhaps particularly, the Minister responsible for the processing of the Bill through the House, have been heard to say far too frequently that if the Opposition continues to delay the Bill, then Calgary will suffer or, particularly, the Calgary Olympics will suffer. However, I want to emphasize now, as I have before, that it is not the Official Opposition that is delaying the passage of the Bill. The Minister and those on the other side must recall that it was rushed through the House, through second reading, so that it could go through the committee stage before Christmas of 1982. Here we are in the last week of this session, June of 1983, with the Government trying again to rush it through the House.

We have said with some degree of frequency that what the Government should do is to separate the sports pool Bill from the funding of the Calgary Olympics. The Government knows full well that even with the passage of the Bill today, if it happened to pass today, it would be a matter of years before the Calgary Olympics would receive any benefits from any of the resources of the Bill that is before us today.

Besides that, there are several options open to the Calgary organizational committee. However, any one of those options is dependent on the co-operation of the federal Government as, for instance, the offer which was made by the Provinces through the interprovincial lottery corporation during the committee stage, that they would assist the federal Government or even carry the commitment of the federal Government to Calgary and honour that commitment if the Government withdrew the sports pool Bill. But no, the Minister says that he must bargain from strength. I ask You Honour whether the Minister is concerned about the Calgary games or is it the Government's fixation or obsession for getting back into the gaming business? Obviously, it really is not the success of the Calgary games that is a priority with the Government.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It's not even at the top of the list.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): If that were the case, the Bill would have come on earlier or the Government would have entered into some negotiation with respect to honouring the commitment. I heard the Minister say again today that, of course, Calgary knew from the very beginning that it would be funded from non-governmental revenue sources. However, when the Minister went with the Calgary organizational committee to Baden-Baden, joining in issuing the invitation to come to Calgary for the XV Winter Olympics, I wonder whether he told the International Olympic Association that Canada's funding would be limited to non-governmental revenue sources. I suggest that that was not the case.

While the games are being held in Calgary, Canada stands to absorb some of the abuse that goes with the lack of ability to adequately fund the games that Calgary wants to put on. Each month of delay makes it less likely that Calgary will be able to stage the kind of facility presented at Baden-Baden some years ago.

The Government continues to say that the Opposition holds up or delays these games. It has not even considered the possibility that both the Canadian Olympic Association and the Calgary Organizational Committee wanted to stage a lottery game of their own. What happened to that proposition? We are still in the position of saying that we need a sports pool to fund the Calgary Olympics. But both the Government side and this side, as well as Calgary, know that we will never fund the Calgary Olympics based on the sports pool.

At third reading of this Bill we will have a chance to expand upon the various reasons why the Bill should not pass through the House. All that aside, let us concern ourselves with the motion before us now.

In 1976 the federal Government proposed to enter the lottery field to meet its commitment to the Montreal Olympics and then to vacate that field. Members will recall the commitment made to vacate that field once the Montreal Olympics were completed. On that basis, this Party supported that position and voted accordingly. Therefore, we propose through this motion that the same approach be taken with respect to Calgary. We can do no less. If the Government is not prepared to honour its commitment out of tax revenues, then it must be prepared to negotiate adequate funding from one source or another. If the sports pool is the only means that can be used to fund those Calgary Olympics, let the Government make it clear and unequivocal that the proceeds from the sports pool, or whatever other lawful game it proposes under that Clause, should go to the Calgary Olympics. If it will be sold to the public as a sports pool, then let the Calgary Olympics get the benefit of that marketing process. Such is the purpose of our amendment. Calgary should be designated as the sole recipient of the sports pool proceeds. Once the games are completed the participation of Canada in the gaming business should be discontinued. Upon the completion of the Calgary Olympics, Canadians would then have the option of continuing to show interest in gaming businesses of this nature.

More particularly, Canadians would have the opportunity to participate in the funding of the Canadian Calgary Olympics. By doing so, they would participate, as they chose, in whatever amounts they chose, in the funding of those Calgary Olympics. Once more, Calgary would then be receiving exactly the same treatment that this House accorded the Montreal Olympics. In effect, if the lottery game proposed by this legislation is primarily for Calgary, since the Government said that Calgary is being hurt by the delay of this legislation, let us name Calgary and the XV Winter Olympics as the beneficiary of this legislation.

The Minister spoke in committee of the necessity of providing the people with a voluntary means of financing such events. If we are to have the benefit of a sports pool, if the game is to be promoted as a means of assisting the Olympics, then here is a clear and unequivocal way of showing how those moneys will be spent and who will receive the benefits of the dollars spent by millions of Canadians in the purchase of lottery tickets, or participation in the unknown games which this House proposes to inflict upon Canadians. In conclusion, I support and urge the acceptance of Motion No. 3 by the House.

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, I was delighted to hear my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid), as well as my other colleagues speak today in opposition to this particular sports pool.

This weekend, thousands of the world's best athletes from five continents will be in Edmonton to participate in one of the world's greatest amateur sports and one of the greatest spectator events, the University Games. They will be held in the constituency of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche). It is a great occasion which will open on Friday, July 1, while celebrating Canada's one hundred and sixteenth birthday. At that time, Princess Diana and His Royal Highness, Prince Charles, will be at the games. Of course, this will be the twenty-second birthday of the Princess.

The reason I bring this to the attention of the House is that funding was provided under a principal agreement which was signed by the provincial Governments. It represented a great exercise in federal-provincial co-operation. In fact, it was one of the only agreements which I believe was signed in our short-lived Government.

Mr. Fox: It was the great give-away.

Mr. Paproski: It was not the great give-away as the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) realizes. He has that $98 million, half of which goes to him for culture.

Mr. Fox: How much?

Mr. Paproski: It is $98.7 million.

Mr. Fox: To give away for $35 million.

Mr. Paproski: Let us say close to $100 million, that the Government is getting from the Provinces in order to give it $50 million for culture and $50 million for fitness and amateur sports.

Mr. Fox: Twenty-four million dollars.

Mr. Paproski: That is accumulated. If the Minister would like to comment let him get up and talk. I hope these minutes will not be taken from my time, after all of this disturbance here.

I mentioned the University games because they are part and parcel of the agreement. You have no idea of what the president, Ed Zemrau and Alex Fallow, chairman of the Board, and other colleagues in Edmonton had to go through in order to receive financing from the federal Government. The money was there for the purpose of the University games and the Calgary Olympics. They were the subject of the objectives and principles in the agreement which was made with the provinces. Yet they had to get down on their knees in order to get something from the Senator in the other place. I cannot describe how badly I feel that the Government has not lived up to the agreement.

Let me bring to the attention of the House the objectives and principles for the agreement we had with the provincial Government. With respect to arts and culture, the objectives were as follows: First, to assist activities within the arts, heritage and cultural industry sectors not otherwise possible on the basis of existing resources or programs; second, to promote public access to Canadian cultural works; third, to promote public participation in arts and heritage activities; and finally, to equalize opportunities to all Canadians to share in our cultural life.

Let me describe the principles for art and culture since the Minister wants to know. They are; First, to maximize opportunities for joint federal-provincial and, where possible, municipal or private sector participation in program or project funding; second, to avoid new funding programs which would require growth in federal government personnel; third, to design programs in a way that long-term financial dependence on this source of funding is not created, but that long-term benefits are realized in the arts, heritage or cultural industries sectors; fourth, to favour programs which benefit the general public over those which relate primarily to professional, organizational or other particular interests; fifth, to ensure that all dispensements of the funds are in accordance with standard government accountability practices; and sixth, to permit a greater federal share in joint programs or projects in those regions and communities which are economically disadvantaged.

Let me tell you what happened in fitness and amateur sport. Programs and projects must be designed to encourage, promote and develop fitness, amateur sport and physical recreation in Canada. The principles are as follows:

Programs/projects must be a national or international import, including research in the areas of fitness or amateur sport or physical recreation.

Programs/projects must be easily identifiable to the general public and thus be effectively promoted or advertised.

Programs/projects must be new in nature or be expansion of existing authorized ones.

Programs/projects which receive partial federal funding should be encouraged to obtain other necessary funding from other acceptable public and/or private sources.

Programs/projects which receive funding, must not be in conflict with provincial jurisdictional programs and/or projects of similar character.

Programs/projects requiring major capital costs will not be eligible.

Programs/projects which receive funding will be subject to T.B. directives re Grants and Contributions.

Student Games for Edmonton (World Student Games).

Calgary Winter Olympics.

Next we come to the conditions as follows:

Programs/projects which conform to the above principles will be considered and evaluated against appropriate Departmental criteria for recommended funding providing the applicant(s) meet(s) one or more of the following conditions:

The applicant(s) must be one of:

(a) A national sport governing body.

(b) A multi-sport co-ordinating body or agency.

(c) A multi-sport recreation administrative organization/agency.

(d) A world-class amateur athlete or national coach as determined by the relevant sport governing body.

(e) A duly constituted Organizing Committee of a national or international sport or multi-sport event.

(f) A national organization or agency, or an institution or qualified researcher in the field of fitness, amateur sport, and physical recreation.

(g) A national multi-purpose association with a major emphasis in the field of fitness and physical recreation.

I bring this to your attention, Mr. Speaker, because I heard the Minister say the only thing the Government had to give the Calgary Olympics, or part of the criteria when Government representatives went to Baden-Baden, was the stamp, coin and sports pool. There was no such thing as a sports pool. There was no such thing as saying to the people at Baden-Baden that there were coins and stamps. You do not do that before a professional body, the COA or the International Olympic Association. You say that you are going to be part and parcel of one-third, one-third and one-third; the municipality, the province and the federal Government.

Two applications were made. An application was made on behalf of Vancouver and an application on behalf of Calgary. Calgary was awarded the games. It did not matter who received it. The Government is committed to one-third of the capital costs of the projects. It is wrong for the Minister to deceive this House. I do not know whether he did that intentionally, but I find that these types of things do happen.

Let me talk about this agreement we made with the provinces, and I must say it was a very good agreement. Let me tell you what we did. Part of this agreement reads:

In view of the fact that this agreement is expected to result in increased earnings for provincial lotteries:

(a) the Provinces of Alberta, Manitoba and Quebec will assume responsibility for any Government of Canada share estimated to be $13.5 million of the costs relating to the expansion, upgrading and renovation of the NHL arenas in Edmonton, Winnipeg and Quebec City.

The Minister under the Government previous to ours was Iona Campagnola, who went ahead and financed professional sport. We had to try to negotiate ourselves out of that deal. We did so. Another part of this agreement reads:

The Province of Ontario agrees not to request financial assistance from the Government of Canada in respect of the Royal Ontario Museum.

The Province of Alberta also looked after the Olds disaster fund in the amount of $2 million. The Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) helped negotiate that deal when we were in government. The Olds arena was burned down. We went ahead and had Alberta fund that $2 million.

There is another portion of this agreement which I think I should bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker. It reads:

On or before October 1, 1979, the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec will each remit the sum of $2,595,675.85 owed to Loto Canada Inc. under the Loto Select memorandum of understanding dated October 5, 1978.

The former Minister, Iona Campagnola, who represented the riding of Skeena, was a great Minister, but she went ahead and got herself into Loto Select, the same thing as Hockey Select and the same thing as the sports pool. We had to get her out of it. I will have more to say on these things, there is so much to say about them.

The only thing concrete about the whole affair is that there is a possibility of deceit in this Minister that I dislike. I hope other Members will bring that to the foreground. I agree with my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. Catharines, and I will vote for his amendment.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, of particular note this evening is the fact that the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party has moved a significant amendment, yet we have not yet heard from the Government side. At one point three Ministers of the Crown were present in the House. We have had no indication from the Government whether or not it supports this amendment. I suspect—

[Translation]

—Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party is a party of silent Members, as usual.

[English]

The Minister who introduced this Bill in the House has travelled to the City of Calgary and to other communities across this country. He has spoken on radio, he has given newspaper and television interviews and he has said that the Progressive Conservative Party is blocking this piece of legislation, that we are filibustering it and will not let the Bill pass. He has said "Isn't it a shame because the Bill needs to pass if there is to be funding for the Calgary Olympics?" That is what the Minister has said. The truth-telling Minister has said that we must pass this Bill in order to have funding for the Calgary Olympics.

Mr. Epp: Easy on the word "truth".

Mr. Hawkes: Easy on the word "truth"? It is a word the Minister uses to describe himself and it is one that I would not use in a million years. When a Minister says that this piece of legislation must pass this House in order to provide funding for the Calgary Olympics it behooves every voter to read the Bill. If you read it carefully, Mr. Speaker, you will notice there is not a word guaranteeing that a penny raised will go to the Calgary Olympics. There is absolutely no requirement in this piece of legislation that a penny, a dime or a dollar, will go the Calgary Olympics. When a Minister goes to public meetings and to the media and says that we have to pass this Bill in order to provide money, you would think that an honest Minister would put into the piece of legislation the simple fact that if money is raised—and there seems to be some doubt whether money can be raised through this mechanism—it will go to the Calgary Olympics.

I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for St. Catharines. He has moved an amendment, the one we are debating now, that will guarantee that if money is raised it will go to the Calgary Olympics. If the Minister, the Cabinet, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Liberal Party of Canada are telling Canadians the truth, that this piece of legislation is to provide money for the Calgary Olympics, then they should signal the fact in the House of Commons that they intend to vote for the amendment. They cannot have it both ways. They cannot tell Canadians that they need it for funding and then refuse to include in the legislation that the funding will be used for the Calgary Olympics. If the Liberals rise in the House and vote against Motion No. 3, they will be clearly branded for the Canadian voters as liars. To vote against this amendment and to stand up and say the measure is necessary for the Olympics is to brand oneself in each and every individual case as a liar, because there is nothing in the legislation to indicate that one dime has to go to the Calgary Olympics.

The legislation indicates that the money, if it is raised, could be used for arts and culture, fitness and amateur sport and for medical and health research. The only item missing in that list of activities for an advertising manager who wants to promote the sale of lotteries is something to do with children. It is a peculiar list of human activities for which the profits of this fund are to be used. It is an advertisement agency dream, because who can be against arts and culture, fitness and amateur sport or, more important, medical and health research?

The Liberals are making a public statement about their personal morality and about their concept of Canadian society, that funding for these activities shall be chancy and depend upon the willingness of Canadians to bet. What a different statement we would have if the Liberal party of Canada said it wanted a sports lottery and the funding would go to drill oil wells, to put buoys in the ocean, to build a frigate or to build an atomic bomb. No, the Liberals say that those things will get their funding. Petro-Canada will get $400 million to drill oil wells but medical research will depend upon Canadians who want to bet and take a chance. In other words, they will fund medical research, arts and culture, and fitness and amateur sport from the back pockets of the poorest segment of Canadian society. Those things will be subject to the hazards of the willingness of Canadians to bet at any given point in time.

But they want to drill oil wells in the Arctic and to give the President of Petro-Canada his private jet to fly weekly back and forth to Calgary. They will ensure that that funding is secure; they put it in the budget and they have it for spending. But when it comes to an international commitment to amateur sport around the world, it will depend upon the willingness of the poorest segment of Canadian society to bet. If we want increased medical research, it will also depend upon the poorest segment of Canadian society.

The Government's morality and priorities are upside down. The reason for the list of activities in the Bill is to sell tickets, to encourage Canadians to bet. I would not be surprised after this speech to see a Liberal rise and suggest that some kind of charity for children be added to the list because that would help sell even more tickets. The purpose of the list is to sell tickets.

I would like to suggest one more test of the sincerity of the commitment of the Liberal Government. When this Bill is pushed through the House, it will create jobs. There will be people needed to sell the lottery tickets. There are two million unemployed Canadians out there, some of whom are watching the House of Commons this evening. I suggest to every one of them that they write to the Prime Minister and say, "I want a job selling lottery tickets". They could go one step further. If they do not obtain the jobs, they could ask the Prime Minister for a list of those who got the jobs and ask him to put a little asterisk beside the ones who were on unemployment insurance or who were unemployed. I bet there will not be many asterisks, that those jobs will not go to unemployed Canadians. They could ask him to put two asterisks opposite the names of those who donated money to the Liberal Party in the last year, and I bet there would be quite a few of those asterisks.

We are not dealing tonight with a piece of legislation that makes any sense in relation to funding the Olympics. We have the experience of the Province of Quebec trying a similar idea which is going bankrupt. It will not make money, it will not get the job done. It leaves volunteers in the City of Calgary, people who are donating their time and effort to the success of this endeavour, on the horns of a dilemma. Because there is no guaranteed funding, they cannot plan.

The reputation of Canada is at stake in the international community. Our Party has made a firm commitment. If we were the government, and when we become the government we will write a cheque to the Calgary Olympic Authority and give it the money it needs to protect Canada's reputation in the international community. That is our promise, that is our commitment. It has been clear and it has been consistent.

I urge some free-thinking Members of the Liberal Party of Canada when the vote comes to be absent from the House or to have the courage to rise and vote against it. I encourage them to take their lead from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) who stated in committee that she despised lotteries. We do not need one. We do not want one. We should keep our commitment to the Calgary Olympics, but we should get rid of this piece of legislation and move on to something else.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he is prepared to accept questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I ought to interrupt the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier), but—

[English]

Apparently he seeks the unanimous consent of the House to pose a question to the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), but it has to be sought before he proceeds. Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to ask a question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I am flabbergasted at the Hon. Member's speech.

This is the party which in 1979 abolished Loto Canada and assistance to amateur sport. I remember quite clearly that universities and provinces and many people involved in amateur sport in this country protested against this action, and the the Hon. Member, who was the Minister responsible for Sports at the time, received requests from a great many people in this country. People asked him to make sure that amateur sport would be protected. Since the Hon. Member had been involved in professional sports, he said that Canadians themselves would take care of that and that people across the country in the private sector would be able to help amateur sport. This plan was bound to fail. And now the Hon. Member is saying that the Liberal Party is responsible for the lack of funds for the Calgary Games. That is simply ridiculous. If there is one party in Canada that is responsible for having practically done away with amateur sport in this country, it is the Hon. Member's party, which did not bother to protect Loto Canada—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order please. The Hon. Member asked for unanimous consent in order to ask a question. I have yet to hear the Hon. Member's question.

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to know whether the Hon. Member consulted Canadian universities about the cuts that were made when his party was in power, and second, because I also happen to know very well the people who are organizing the Calgary Olympics, I would like to know—

• (2120)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order please. One at a time.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, it may interest the Hon. Member to know that I was a member of the academic community in the university for some considerable period of time prior to my election, and I stay in touch with those organizations on quite a regular basis. I am fully aware of the negative impact on those institutions of the recent budget cuts by successive Ministers of Finance in terms of transfer payments. They are in fact very, very difficult for the university to deal with and absorb.

In my previous incarnation as an academic, I taught the issue of policy making and policy development. One of the fundamental principles of that is that any group, organization or Government is forced to make choices. It is not always possible to do all things. I point out to the Hon. Member that in two Crown corporations, Petro-Canada and Canadair, the Government has chosen to spend $2,400 million in the last 12 months in subsidies. The Olympic bill would be $200 million spread over eight years. That is $2,400 million of choice which the Cabinet has made essentially because the backbenchers in that Party have not held the Cabinet accountable to make decent public policy choices.

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I hope we will have more questions like that coming from the other side. I might suggest that the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier) stand up and participate in the debate. He likes to stand up and make speeches; why does he not participate in the debate? There has not been one Grit who has had enough nerve to get on his feet during this debate today. It has been a shameful display today by the Liberal Party.

I rise to speak to Motion No. 3, an amendment by my colleague from St. Catharines (Mr. Reid), to restrict the sports pool or numbers racket to provide funding for the 1988 Calgary Winter Olympics. I support that amendment.

Earlier today I spoke about the money paid out to the Grits already in trying to set up this sports pool. Martin O'Connell, a former Member of Parliament, received $3,102 to define financing and accounting systems. Goldfarb received $16,000 to do research. An outfit by the name of Howard & Associates received $297,687 to do a number of things. Somebody by the name of Dr. Schwartz—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I am not going to draw the Hon. Member's attention to the issue of relevance. It is my view that he can continue in the vein in which he is now proceeding. However, I must remind the Hon. Member that the precedents of the House indicate that an Hon. Member cannot make the same speech twice.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I know how much it hurts the Government to hear these things repeated to them. Therefore, I will continue with—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. It is irrelevant to the Chair whether it hurts the Government or does not. The rules are that the Hon. Member cannot make the same speech twice in a row.

Mr. McDermid: With the greatest of respect, Mr. Speaker, if you read the blues you will find that is is not the same speech.

I want to read a press release which the Minister issued when he was discussing this Bill, to show the Canadian people how misleading he has been in presenting it. It is dated March 18, 1982. I quote:

> By introducing the legislation now, Mr. Regan expressed the desire to see the Bill passed as expeditiously as possible, so that the new corporation can be established quickly and the sports pool game finalized and in operation. The Calgary Olympics will be given substantial financial support from Sports Pools revenues and it is important that funds become available soon so that the planning and preparation of facilities can begin.

That may not be the most misleading statement coming from that Minister, but it is one of the most misleading.

The planning and preparation of the facilities by the people in Calgary has been going on for a very long time. For the Minister to try and convince the people of Canada that the Olympics depends on the success of this sports pool or numbers racket is absolutely foolhardy. I can show that the moneys to be received from this numbers racket, if it ever gets into place, will not be there for the olympics. Let us look at where the money will go. The Minister is afraid to be specific. He thinks that Calgary will receive approximately 40 per cent of the net proceeds. He says that the net proceeds in one year will be about $100 million.

I want to go back to Loto Canada. In 1977-78 and 1978-79, the two full years it was in operation, lotteries were at their heyday. There was very little competition like there is today. In 1977-78, the net return to Loto Canada was $74,300,000. the following year 1978-79, it dropped dramatically to $62,471,000. At that time there was very little competition for lotteries, sports pools, or whatever you call them. It was going down rapidly when Loto Canada was put out of business, and rightly so.

Let us talk about the costs of those two years and the type of spending which the Government did on those lotteries. In 1977-78 they spent $10,400,000 on advertising and in 1978-79, $13 million. Ticket printing in 1977-78 was $3 million. It went to $8 million in 1978-79. Sales promotion went from $5 million to $7 million in one year. Public relations went from $322,000 in 1977-78 to $1,436,759 the following year. What did public relations take into account? I can see the staff giggling up there, but I want to tell Hon. Members that Loto Canada had a permanent hotel suite in the Four Seasons, outfitted with the finest of booze, food and entertainment all the time. The Chairman of Loto Canada had his own limousine and driver—nothing to it. That is where the money was being spent. That is why expenditures went from $322,000 to $1.4 million in one year.

Office supplies doubled in one year, $317,000 to $722,000. Furniture almost doubled from $250,000 to $402,000 in one year. Expenditures were phenomenal. This is why people do not want to see these great corporations, Crown corporations, established by this Government. They waste money, even though it is money raised by gambling, it is atrocious.

In our Motion No. 3 we say that we want the money to be slated for one purpose and one purpose only. If the Government is going to bring in this ill-conceived method of funding the Olympics as well as all the other things listed, then heaven knows where the money will go. We say it should be for the Olympics and the Olympics only. It should not be open-ended. There is no sunset clause and no real accounting to the Canadian people of what is going on. Some of the mess created in Loto Canada is now just coming to the fore, a mess created when it was being run by the Government that was then in power.

Let us take a hard look at Bill C-95, in particular where it says who will be the beneficiaries of this sports pool. It says there will be worthy capital projects in the area of fitness and amateur sports or arts and culture. Does that mean that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) will take money from this lottery to build a dome stadium in Toronto, for example? Is that what it says? It does not even define it clearly in the Act.

I does not set out in any way, shape or form what proportions the beneficiaries are to receive from the pool.

• (2130)

The Minister says that 40 per cent of the profit might, and I repeat might, go to the Olympics. He will never raise the $200 million that is needed to meet the commitment to the Olympics with 40 per cent of the net proceeds because I think he will find that this particular numbers racket game he is trying to put together will not in fact succeed. I do not think he will sell that many tickets.

The lack of a fixed distribution formula lends itself to a state of uncertainty. Fitness and Amateur Sport will not know how much money it is to get from year to year. There will be no way for it to budget or to make long-range plans or to set up a four year training period to lead to the Olympics games when it does not know what its funding will be.

Mr. Paproski: 40 per cent of nothing is nothing.

Mr. McDermid: As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski), has said, 40 per cent of nothing is nothing.

The number of beneficiaries of the lottery is far too large. They are spread out all over the place. I do not think there will be enough money from the lottery for anybody, let alone for the Olympics.

If the Government is determined to ram this thing through and to bring this to the Canadian people then, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that it be used for one purpose and one purpose only, and that is to come to a termination in 1988, or whenever the debt is paid off for the 1988 Winter Olympics, so that we can be assured that Canada will put on its best face in 1988 for those Winter games.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, here we are at 9:30 p.m. on Monday, June 27, 1983.

An Hon. Member: It is 9:32.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): All right, 9:32 p.m. I must ask myself, Mr. Speaker, what we are doing here tonight discussing this particular Bill when, four days from now, we should be celebrating Dominion Day and getting back to our ridings—

Some Hon. Members: Canada Day.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I insist, we shall be celebrating Dominion Day four days hence and I do not see the urgency of this particular Bill. I do not see why we are sitting here. I am baffled, Mr. Speaker. I just do not understand because, as mentioned by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid), the Bill was first introduced on March 18, 1982 with all sorts of fanfare and all sorts of requirements to be passed right then because of the money that will be needed. That was on March 18, 1982, Mr. Speaker. Then it was passed through second reading, and the amended Bill we have before us now was passed through committee and reported on December 22, nine months later.

Now, another seven months later, Mr. Speaker, we are here, having been in session today since 11 o'clock this morning, discussing a Bill which is an abomination.

But aside from that, it is not an urgent Bill. We are trying to improve it and make sure, by the amendment we are discussing tonight, that this Bill will be designed to help the Winter Olympics and that is all, nothing more. We are trying to ensure that this Bill will enable the Government to honour the commitment it made in 1977-78 when Government Members entered a field which was not properly theirs to enter in the first place in order to finance the Olympics in Montreal. At that time, they made a solemn undertaking by saying: "This is a once and for all deal. We will get out of lotteries once the Montreal Olympics have been refunded. This is an invasion of provincial jurisdiction and we recognize that, but for this particular purpose, the Montreal Olympics, we will get into it this time, and as soon as that has been cleared away we will get out of it and we will stay out of it." Now they are trying to get into it again.

Government Members are trying to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it is a matter of urgency when, 15 months ago, they introduced the Bill and we are just now coming to report stage of debate. I do not know where they get their notions of urgency and importance and priorities. It staggers the imagination.

Here we are on the 539th sitting day of this first session of the thirty-second Parliament discussing a Bill which we ought not to be discussing at all because, unless the constitutional proposals which were brought forward in 1980-81 changed the distribution of powers, we are once again invading a provincial field of jurisdiction. But here we are at this stage in the life of this particular session of the thirty-second Parliament dealing with a matter of relative inconsequence. I cannot understand why we are doing it, but here we are.

This Bill is in many ways a repudiation in legislation form, Mr. Speaker, of an undertaking made by the Government when the Montreal Olympics funding exercise was terminated, as was explained by the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski). Why the Government decides to undercut a contract which was concluded between the federal and provincial—

Mr. Dubois: Contract? It is a giveaway.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I use the word "contract" and I mean it. If Liberal Members do not know what a contract is, it is quite obvious where they have been driving the country. They do not know about contracts. They do not even honour their own word. That is the sort of Government we have been putting up with for so long.

The Bill is 15 months old. It was introduced on March 18, 1982, went through committee and was reported back to the House on December 22. Here we are on the 539th day of the sitting dealing with this particular Bill at report stage.

The Bill is offensive to me for another reason, Mr. Speaker. We are creating another Crown corporation. I do not know how many Crown corporations this makes now. I am sure that no one from the Liberal side of the House could tell me how many corporations this will make because Crown corporations have been—

Mr. McDermid: That makes 424.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): They have probably spawned some more overnight that the Hon. Member did not know about. These Crown corporations have a habit of spawning overnight.

I would like to read a few comments made by an authority on Crown corporations, and this is what he had to say only a few months ago:

> The sheer number of corporations which must report to the government has grown to the point where the relevant government departments to which they report are finding it increasingly difficult to cope with this aspect of their responsibilities. This is due to the fact that departments are structured, and properly so, around the requirements for the performance of their primary policy and regulatory functions. Departments are not structured to provide the kind of institutional environment required for performance of the role of shareholder of a commercial company—

—as are Crown corporations. He was not thinking of this particular Crown corporation as he had no idea that it was coming into existence. He goes on:

> But the system is now becoming unwieldy and needs, I would contend, even more drastic changes than those which have been contemplated to date.

He goes on:

> —despite the measure now in place or contemplated for more effective control of budgets, programmes and financing, there is as yet no actual process of reviewing all government commercial investments on a basis that applies the kind of criteria which private investors would apply.

I think it might be very revealing if I were to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that those words are taken from the notes for a speech delivered by Mr. Maurice Strong, one of the greatest advocates of Crown corporations. We do not know how to deal with Crown corporations or how to make them responsible. When we look in the Bill for provisions governing their responsiveness to Parliament, we see that Mr. Strong was quite right.

The purpose of the Bill is to provide the Government with a way out of a situation in which it ought not to have found itself in the first place. Motion No. 3 would make the lottery a one-shot operation instead of giving this or any other Government carte blanche to conduct pools in perpetuity, be they "CanPool" or "PoolCan" or "TroughCan"—and I think that is probably the best name. The amendment would provide the Government with the opportunity to honour the commitment it made in 1976 to vacate the lottery field once the Montreal Olympics had been properly financed.

Unless there have been some changes in the constitutional proposals—and I rely on my colleague the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) to put me straight on this but I do not think there were changes that gave the federal Government permission to enter this field of normal provincial jurisdiction—I feel that this Bill ought to be ruled out of order by the Chair. It is improperly drafted, and it does not belong in this Chamber but would be more properly discussed in provincial legislatures.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak to the amendment. I have said previously, and I repeat, that I oppose gaming and gambling. Therefore, to some degree, this amendment put forward for a very specific purpose by my colleague the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid), has limited appeal to me. I should like to give my reasons for this.

The reason the Hon. Member for St. Catharines put the amendment forward was specifically to try to hold the government to its word; that is, that the Bill restrict itself to the Calgary Olympics, despite the fact that this Party believes a commitment was made by the Government to the Canadian Olympic Association, and through that Association to the International Olympic Committee, and that those obligations should be honoured.

The amendment puts the Government to the test of its word, that the lottery is specifically for the Olympics in Calgary and that is why the Government needs the Bill. When the House divides on the question it will be interesting to see whether the Government backs up the words it used in the House and in committee, as well as in press releases.

I am lukewarm at best to the amendment because of the promises made by the Government at the time of the Montreal Olympics. When I became a Member of this House, the first committee I was assigned to was Miscellaneous Estimates and the first Bill that committee was seized of was related to the sports loto, the stamp program and the coin program. I remember sitting on that committee, not until a quarter to ten or eleven o'clock, but until well past midnight. The Government used its majority to keep the committee sitting, claiming that if the Bill was not passed that night the Montreal Olympics could not go forward.

First of all the Government promised that the Olympics would be self-supporting. It said that these programs would take care of every obligation it had to the Montreal Olympics. Second, it said that the Olympics would be everyman's Olympics, they would be fun, they would be first class and they would be frugal.

In the history of the Olympic games has there ever been more waste than at Montreal, Mr. Speaker? In fact, I went to a concrete contractor in my riding and told him the price of concrete delivered to the Olympic site. I asked if he could deliver from my constituency in Manitoba to Montreal. He said that he could and make a profit; the only problem was that he might not get the truck back.

Those were the promises and that was the action, Mr. Speaker, but that is not the end of the story. Some Members of the committee went to the Olympic site. We went to City Hall, we met with the mayor and we confirmed what all Canadians know about the Olympics, that the Olympics in Montreal could no more have a deficit than what—than the mayor could have a baby! Mr. Speaker, this has to be the longest gestation period in the history of mankind.

The Government, its spokesmen and all those who supported the Olympics knew that the financing was not going to be available and they had to hoodwink the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee and other Canadians who wanted the Olympics but wanted an accounting. That same hoodwinking is taking place in this House tonight. I say to Hon. Members opposite that they have cried wolf once too often. We simply do not believe them now.

That is still not the end of the story, Mr. Speaker. What has happened since the Montreal Olympics? What about the court cases? What about the lining of pockets? What about the convictions? That is the legacy. How is it that the Government did not tell us about those things?

While this amendment is put forward with the best of intentions—and I respect that—I am a Member who just does not believe that the pool is going to give the people of Calgary and the volunteers the financial commitment that the Government made in the first place.

While I might be a strong critic of the Government in the Province of Manitoba, I acknowledge that it has done one thing well—it has brought to light what the lotteries are costing Manitobans. There is a commission on lotteries and they call it the $100 million gamble. The Province has just over one million people. The closest thing to the sports pool is the Calcutta we have in Manitoba. That is why I say I do not believe this program will provide the funding. I will use the Calcuttas in Manitoba as an example and the numbers can be extrapolated for Canada.

The Calcuttas or betting pools on sports events were licensed by 77 organizations, according to an article in the Winnipeg Free Press on March 27, 1982. Those organizations raised $209,000 on those 77 licensed events. The expenses were a measly $6,133. Would you like to know what the profits were from that pool? Keeping in mind that we are looking at a $100 million business in Manitoba, the profits as listed by the organizers of those 77 events totalled $26,000. If one starts looking at this numbers racket we are talking about today, and one starts taking a look at the money spent and the profits received, one can only feel the greatest sympathy for the organizers of the Olympics in Calgary. Those people deserve better, Mr. Speaker. They deserve that this Government keep its word.

My colleague from Edmonton, Mr. Speaker, mentioned that this Government had been involved in the earlier sports gaming business and had also supported professional sports. Where is the thanks from the National Hockey League? What thanks have the people of Saskatchewan, specifically the people of Saskatoon, received in the last months from the beneficiaries of this Government largesse? The people of Saskatchewan were willing to put up an arena, they bought tickets, they produced some of the best hockey players in the world. They said, "Give us a chance. Give us a franchise. We are willing to pay for it at market value." The answer was, "Oh, no". That is the thanks, Mr. Speaker. I do not trust the word of this Government when it talks about the profits which are going to come from the sports pool. Therefore, the bottom line is not the profits, but whether the federal Government should be in the gaming business, and the answer is still no.

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat reluctant to enter into the debate on this—what is it called, anyway? I think of it as a lottery. I know it is called a sports pool. I also know we have tried to cover up the fact that it is a lottery by naming it something else, a "sports pool", trying to infer that there is an element of skill attached to this. In reality, the sports pool is nothing more or less than a chance for the majority of Canadians to contribute and lose their money so that a few can benefit. It is a lottery. It is a gamble. My upbringing tells me that gambling is anti-social. I was brought up to believe that I do not get something for nothing. My convictions were molded by the type of home environment in which I was raised. My parents taught me simply that gambling was wrong, that there were winners at the expense of losers.

Mr. Rossi: That is why you are a loser; you are a Tory.

An Hon. Member: Get into the debate, then.

An Hon. Member: Oh, keep quiet.

Mr. King: Does that gentleman have the floor, Mr. Speaker, or do I?

I was taught that winners won at the expense of those who lost, that happiness for one was at the cost of disappointment for others, that rewards were ony worthy which were earned, and that work and effort were the instruments through which one achieved both satisfaction and personal advantages. My friend, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), told us about what the Scriptures had to say, the basic moral teachings of the Scriptures, from which we as a society are removing ourselves, pushed ever by a Government which seems to be insensitive to any element of morality.

I have the conviction, Mr. Speaker, that the nation and Canadian society would be better for the observance of the basic philosophy that it is work and productivity which is the basis of wealth and happiness, and that nothing comes along which is of value to either us or society that does not cost us anything. I certainly believe that the Government of Canada should fulfill its obligation to Calgary in sharing the cost of the Olympic facilities. The question is simply how to accomplish this. I support the opposition voiced by this side of the House against financing this national obligation through the implementation of a form of national lottery.

Many arguments, substantive in nature, have been raised, and which should, in ordinary circumstances, carry enough weight to reverse the actions proposed by this Government. One of the arguments frequently raised is that this, indeed, becomes a form of tax upon the poor because it is the poor who are the most attracted to the purchase of lottery tickets and the chance to win $1 million or $100,000, or whatever it is. That has a special appeal for those who can least afford it. Several examples have been given today of instances where it has meant hardship and loss to families caught up on this kind of desire to gain instant wealth and prosperity. It has been pointed out, of course, that those who profit, do so at the expense of others.

I spent most of today travelling across Canada. Thursday night, while travelling home to beautiful British Columbia, I saw a most spectacular sight over the prairie Provinces, a sight which I have never seen before. We were flying just a few hundred feet above a cloud blanket which spread from horizon to horizon when an electrical storm developed. The clouds below were spectacularly lit up by discharges of electricity all across the sky. This went on for most of an hour. Those of us who had our eyes glued to the windows of the plane watching this spectacularly beautiful sight, little knew that below us that storm would bring tragedy and destruction to cities and people. It was only the next day that we read about some of those tragedies, about the lad in Edmonton who was swept away while in the street in front of his home and whose body has not yet been found; about the young woman who drowned in her car which was stalled in the middle of a street in Saskatoon. Therefore, what was so delightful and spectacularly beautiful to some of us who were above the storm evoked just the opposite reaction from those involved on the ground.

I suppose that is a simple demonstration of the principle that has been expounded over on this side of the House, that lotteries are beautiful to some and damaging to others. As such, I think they are incompatible with the spirit of Canada and should not be used by the Government of Canada as a form of taxation for any purpose, no matter how honourable or delightful the purpose.

We live in a unique country. We in Canada have a diversity that is part of our strength and our heritage and leads us to cherish our country beyond any other. There is a diversity in Canada in attitudes, the same as there is in typography. It is important that actions by the national Government of Canada do not abuse or offend large segments of society. This should be avoided if possible. I believe that a lottery for whatever purpose, under legislation provided by the Government of Canada, offends a great many Canadians.

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I did speak on the measure once this evening, but we are now considering a further amendment and I have a few observations in connection with it. First, the Government's claim has been that the Bill must be passed in order to facilitate the holding of the Calgary games. The inference is that without the support of the Bill, the games are in jeopardy. However, I would submit that everyone knows that that is not true. The same serious argument was used by the Government in forcing the Crow Bill through the House. In its argumentation it stated that if the transportation system was to be upgraded, the statutory Crow rate had to go because, through the change that it was proposing, the money would be forthcoming to assist the railway companies in upgrading and providing a better transportation system for Canada. I think everyone knows that that was not true. Everyone was in favour of the upgrading of our transportation system.

We think back to the days when a certain Minister of Transport said that the transportation system was a mess. The same could be said today because we remember the attempts of the railway companies to discourage passenger travel by making it almost impossible to make connections at various out of the way points and by using other techniques as well. We are still facing a situation in which the transportation system is inadequate to fulfill the purpose for which it was originally set in place. However, I would suggest that there are other options open to the transportation system than the method and the route that the Government was following in trying to destroy the statutory freight rates.

We are faced with the same situation again involving a very laudable project namely, the Calgary Olympics. I do not suppose anyone objects to the holding of the Calgary Olympics. I would say that it is a possibility that the greatest percentage of the people of Canada think it is a good idea, even though they may not be sports-minded. They say it is a good idea to encourage our athletes to participate in competition with those from other countries, and they would like to see it go ahead. However, now I say that the Government in implying that unless this particular measure goes through and the sports pool is set up, those games are in jeopardy. However, we all know, in and around this place, that if the Government wants to do something, it gets some money somewhere. If it wants to prop up an ailing industry, and many times some of its own followers can help it out in a tought spot, it can get the money all right. It can go and borrow and does not mind doing it at all. Yet if we are to have the Olympics, it says that we cannot do it that way. It says that we must put in a sports pool and get the money out of those people who are poor and hard up yet desperate to make a dollar in order to better their economic condition and so they will take a chance on buying tickets.

The Government is hypocritical in its attitude, in its proclamations, in its announcements, because it knows very well that there are other avenues that it can tap in order to ensure the holding of the Calgary Olympics. It can do so without forcing the Bill through the House as it is endeavouring to do at the present time.

There has been a question raised as to whether it is a lottery or a sports pool, or just what it is. However, we all know that it is just a gambling device. I would like to draw attention to the following statement. It was the concluding words of the joint Parliamentary Committee on Capital Punishment and Lotteries in the report which was made on July 31, 1956. It concluded with a very interesting statement:

• (2210)

That no useful purpose could be achieved by the institution of state lottery in Canada. It considered that the proper role of the state is to control and regulate such gambling activity as is permitted to private citizens by the general law, and that it is not appropriate for the state to provide facilities for gambling to the public. The committee includes, in the prohibition of state lotteries in Canada, those which might be operated by provincial and municipal Governments as well as the federal Government.

We see that the joint committee that was studying this particular activity as well as others, came to the conclusion that this was no place for the federal Government to move in and establish a national gambling facility in order to try to finance operations.

This particular amendment with which we are dealing now concerns the activities in the following fields: the arts and culture, fitness and amateur sport, medical health and research, the Winter Olympic games to be held in Calgary, and worthy capital projects of national interest in fields described in other paragraphs.

As we look at this particular matter, the Government is arguing against itself when it says that the Olympics will not take place unless this is set up. However, it has listed the Olympics as number four in its priority projects that could expect funding from this particular facility.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I rise again this evening with respect to Motion No. 3 which is an attempt to delete a part of this statute that amounts to nothing more than sheer blackmail in the very worst form that could ever be found in the deepest and darkest dens and sin holes of the world. But that is the nature of the Bill.

We have heard the very excellent debate throughout tonight and on earlier days. Interestingly enough, the speeches came only from this Party. Where are the Government backbenchers who privately told us that they do not like the concept of this Bill? They are not speaking because the Cabinet has decreed from on high that this Bill is going through and that those backbenchers should toe the line for they will not get their pay-off or an election will be called and they will lose their seats because the Cabinet has so destroyed the Party and the country. In fact, they would be of great benefit to of all of mankind if they were to bring this Cabinet down and let democracy prevail.

This Bill will never get through because we will stand up again and again. This session will go on for ten more years before this Bill passes.

The points have been made. This Bill makes gambling by the Government legal, yet if I were to go to someone's home to gamble, that would be illegal. The Criminal Code, to which we have all agreed, has said that gaming and betting houses are illegal and not an action which we should encourage in our society. This Bill says in blatant words that if the Government does this, it shall be legal. What kind of an Act is that? As my colleague says, we all know of people who have been charged for running gaming houses. They have gone to jail and paid the penalty, with the entire blight on their career that this has meant. Yet the Government said that it can run these same type of gaming houses and operations legally. That is not how our society works.

We have also heard great argument on the method of raising money. We have heard it said that what this Bill proposes is simply and intrinsically bad and immoral, let alone regressive and that it will impact upon the poor in the country far more than on those of us who are wealthy. This Bill is certainly morally debilitating.

We have heard the argument of Crown corporations. Do we really need another Crown corporation in this country with its president, vice-presidents and directors, all of whom will be paid enormous salaries and all of them appointed by that gang across there? The proof of the pudding is in the eating and Canadians have eaten some rather sour pudding, all at enormous cost.

The point is that we know that these Crown corporations never fail. It is a matter of statistics that if 100 private firms are established, at least 40 per cent or 50 per cent of them will fail just because of bad management or under-capitalization. Not one Crown corporation in 15 years has failed, with the result that we now have over 300 Crown corporations. When one looks at their subsidiary corporations and sub-subsidiaries, they become totally unaccountable to us, the people.

When these Crown corporations face difficulties, the taxpayers of the nation simply have to kick in more money, which means that there is less disposable income in the pockets of ordinary, honest hard-working Canadians. They are the Canadians who are getting black lung disease in our coals mines, the farmers who are losing arms and legs in machinery and others who pay the supreme price in order to survive and look after themselves. Yet the Government is taxing it away and other people are deciding how it will be spent.

Motion No. 3 relates to Clause 18. Clause 18(3) states:

There shall be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund to or for the support of any one or more of

(a) activities in the following fields:

(i) the arts and culture,

(ii) fitness and amateur sport, and

(iii) medical and health research—

The point has to be made that the statute does not set out a set formula for the distribution of these funds. Again, that is wrong because it means that the Cabinet will be able to choose who gets what each year and how much. This simply reflects the system that the Cabinet has tried to implement in a dozen other areas by making people come to the Government to get grants. It says that if people do the right thing and support the Liberal Party, show up in large numbers when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and others travel through their towns, they will receive a grant. However, if the other group wants to stand on its own two feet independently, it will not get any Government largesse. That is wrong in principle. Nobody should have that kind of power over any other human being. Yet that is the kind of power that the Liberal Cabinet and Liberal backbenchers permit the Cabinet to have over and over again in our society.

Clause 18(3)(b) states that one of the recipients of the money will be:

—the XV Winter Olympic games to be held at Calgary, Alberta.

This clause proves the point exactly. The Government has gone out to the organizers and officials of those fifteenth Olympics which are not to be held until 1988 and has them upset over the fact that they will not get their money. Does that not just prove the point that the Cabinet will use that leverage and blackmail to get the people to pressure others to do things that are not correct legally, morally or by any other test? Therefore, the Cabinet is in fact capable of blackmail. That is what is happening with this Bill tonight, and I will not vote for it. The Government will simply not get it through.

In fact, the money for the fifteenth Winter Olympics was promised by the Government and it has no right to tie that Calgary Olympic money to a gaming lottery that is illegal for everyone in society except the Government.

An Hon. Member: Are you going to support the amendment or not?

Mr. Thacker: The Government should stand up as an honest and decent Government to say that Calgary will get the Olympic support. We, as Canadians, all pay tax dollars and we are prepared to have that money allocated there.

Mr. Fisher: Will you add to the deficit?

Mr. Thacker: We pay a lot of tax dollars.

Mr. Fisher: Will you add to the deficit?

• (2220)

Mr. Thacker: Every time the Government brings out a program there should be a corresponding tax so the citizens of the nation have a choice. We should have that one provision in our laws and governments that honour it.

If you remember, Mr. Speaker, in 1968 we had balanced budgets. We had a small national debt, yet we had a sound old age security system. We had guaranteed supplements, we had hospital insurance, we had post-secondary education and we had medicare. In 1968, we had all of the social programs and we still had balanced budgets. We had a small national debt. We had that because we had a productive society. Everybody was working and paying in a fair share of the taxes. The money was being redistributed. The only time we got into trouble was by following the Pied Piper. We were led down the garden path. The Government proposed programs and said, "Folks, you can keep your low capitalist tax because we are simply borrowing it." At first, only 5 per cent went to service the debt, then 15 per cent, then 20 per cent, then 25 per cent, and now over 30 per cent of every tax dollar has to service the debt. While the Government was getting us into the problem, we had enormously good programs, low capitalist tax, but the Government was borrowing the difference. Now the taxes are rising to meet the programs. People do not have the cash flow and they are dropping like flies. It is predictable. It is because they were led into a trap. We had the illusion of wealth when we did not have wealth at all. Now we are paying the penalty. Regretfully, because of the actions of that Government, because of those creeps opposite, our children and our grandchildren will have to accept a substantially reduced standard of living.

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I rise to speak on the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid). If this Bill has any meaning at all, I am sure we will hear from the Minister who is now in the House and we will hear from other Members on the Government side as to their feelings on this amendment.

This amendment makes specific within this Bill something which the Minister, his Cabinet colleagues and Members on the Government side have been maintaining since the inception of this Bill. This Bill is specifically, without exception we hear, to promote the fifteenth Winter Olympics to be held in Calgary. We will be pleased to see the Minister and all his colleagues on the Government side voting to support this Bill because they have been telling the people of Calgary and the people of Canada that the only rationale for Bill C-95, the sport pools Bill, is for the Olympic games to be held in Calgary.

By definition the Winter Olympics to be held in Calgary in 1988 are a special event. We have never had Winter Olympics in Canada. If this is a special Bill for a special event, the Winter Olympics, then I can accept it. But we have culture and art in this country on a daily ongoing basis. We have fitness and amateur sport on a daily, yearly, ongoing basis. We have medical health and research on a daily, yearly, ongoing basis. Why are these specifics, medical health and research, fitness and amateur sport, arts and culture, not funded the way other programs are in our country? Why are they not funded with tax dollars? Why is the Government's revenue not used in an ordinary way for things that we have in our country on a daily basis? Why would the Government attach these things that are so important to the daily lives of Canadians to something that is special, a world class event such as the Calgary Olympics?

When the Minister made his proposal to the International Olympic Committee that Calgary would host, with the assistance of the federal Government, the fifteenth Olympiad, I am sure he did not have in place the legislation for a sports pool, I am sure he did not have in place the legislation for the stamps, and I am sure he did not have in place the legislation in place to stamp medals and medallions. What he did say was that the federal Government, in conjunction with the Province of Alberta and the municipality of the City of Calgary, would provide the funds necessary to sponsor and look after the fifteenth Olympiad. It is the same in any small part of Canada, in my riding of Kindersley-Lloydminster, that if a community wishes to go ahead with a project, it would be expected to provide some of the funding. The Province would expect to provide some of the funding. For projects of a larger size, the federal Government would be asked to become involved.

I have not seen any record in any debates in the House of Commons that there had to be a special lottery, a sports pool, made available so the citizens in other communities in Canada could benefit from a facility that would provide daily and yearly recreation for them after the event had passed. I find it strange, Madam Speaker, that this Government would feel it necessary to fund the Calgary Olympics in a manner different from the way it treats projects in any other part of the country.

But when you look at this paragraph where the amendment applies, it reads:

There shall be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund to or for the support of any one or more of

(a) activities in the following fields:

(i) the arts and culture,

(ii) fitness and amateur sport, and

(iii) medical and health research—

(b) XV Winter Olympic games to be held at Calgary, Alberta, and

(c) worthy capital projects of national interest in the fields described in subparagraphs (a)(i) and (ii)—

It does not say anything about medical and health research. Apparently now that is not in the national interest. I do not quite follow that. But the real kicker, and it is underlined in the Bill, is:

—the amounts paid into the Consolidated Revenue Fund pursuant to this section.

It does not say anything about the amount. There is not one word about the amount of money to be available for the Calgary Olympics or any other portion of this Bill. It says that what is paid in shall be paid out. I am sure, Madam Speaker, that the Minister, when he rises in his place to tell us how he feels about this amendment, will support specifically the Calgary Olympics and he will tell us how much money is involved, because I do not see that in the Bill. My colleagues do not see it in the Bill. But we are being told of the whole life and death struggle of the fifteenth Olympics in Calgary and we do not know how much money is going to be made available. We do not know whether it will be all the money that is needed or whether it will be one-third of it. We do not know the proportion. Nor do we know from where the shortfall will come. If the shortfall is to come from taxation, I would suggest, so as to be fair and straightforward to the people of Canada, that the taxation be put in place now, that it be specific so the people organizing the games in Calgary will know how much funding they will receive from this Bill and will not be buying a pig in a poke.

In closing let me say that if a lottery is needed for medical research, for fitness and amateur sport, for culture and for the Olympics in this country, maybe the grain producers in western Canada would like to have a lottery so they would not have to pay additional costs for the transport of their grain under the Crow change coming forth from this Government. Maybe we should have a lottery so that Ottawa, the capital of Canada, can have a decent airport. Maybe we should have a lottery for any number of things. I find it strange, Madam Speaker, that in this Bill, excluding the Calgary Olympics which are a special event, the rest of the projects are daily programs, programs which the people of Canada would be only too pleased to pay for if they felt the funding and the taxation dollars were spent wisely, and that they would not object to it. I will be voting in favour of this amendment and I am sure Members on the Government side, including the Minister, will be voting in favour of this amendment.

• (2230)

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, we are discussing an important Bill this evening, Bill C-95, which is entitled:

An Act to provide for government operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and events and to amend the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act.

That is quite a title. On the first page the short title reads:

This Act may be cited as the Athletic Contests and Events Pools Act.

If Al Capone were alive, I think he would be proud of us this evening. As the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) indicated, it is the great numbers game. That is precisely what I think it is. Another colleague pointed out that if Al Capone were here, he would have wondered why he had not thought of it.

Instead of being here this evening talking about the passage of a Bill to encourage Canadians to be productive or to give them a tax break or incentive to use the tax system to encourage production, we are here talking about making minimal use of the wealth which has already been created by the hard work of Canadians. I find this very disturbing although it is reflective of the socialist attitude when they see wealth to want to confiscate it and regulate; they do not want to do anything about encouraging its creation.

It has been pointed out that this is a regressive form of taxation. It holds itself out as a form of reward for some kind of chance at something to gain; it is a reward for investing a little money. As has already been very eloquently pointed out by Hon. Members who preceded me, how can anyone not be in favour of supporting arts and culture, fitness and amateur sport or medical and health research? I find it incredible that all these activities are tied up in this Bill.

This Bill will become law because the Government numbers will crush any opposition which we may put up or they will thwart any reasonable amendments on our part. If we are to have lotteries in the country, I think we should look at aiming the money at one specific project. On that basis I am very much in favour of the amendment which would have the money available from this gaming operation or from this numbers game to assist in financing the Calgary Winter Olympics. It would be worthwhile to do that with money, if it is to be raised in this fashion. Given the fact that the Government is intent upon having this crazy scheme in place, it would make much more sense for people to have an idea of where the money would go and how it would be spent.

I see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) is present this evening. He made some comments earlier about the deficit. No one likes to see deficits. I would be much more enthusiastic about debating a Bill—and I expect the Parliamentary Secretary would agree with me—to encourage Canadians to be more productive. There are two ways of getting out of a deficit. One is by holding down expenses, and the other is by increasing productivity. Too often the Government has done nothing in terms of increasing productivity; in fact it has discouraged people from being productive. This is the tragedy and the kind of thing which shows up in the very bankrupt policies of the Government.

Also I am concerned about the fact that the Government seems to have no idea about the value of money or what kind of priority it should place upon spending. For example, Canadair lost $1.4 billion in the last fiscal year. It could have been used to erect dome stadiums in 14 cities across the country. A dome stadium with 40,000 seats can be erected for approximately $100,000. This means that for the $1.4 billion which Canadair lost in one year, 14 Canadian cities could have 40,000-seat dome stadiums. When we think about the jobs that that would create and the additional economic activity that would engender, we realize that it would be a tremendous boost.

The Government is asking for additional funds for things which it really believes are legitimate. It makes me wonder where the Government's priorities are or whether it really has any. As has already been indicated, I suspect its priorities are upside down.

I have another area of concern about the Bill, that is, the possibility of abuse of the money raised on behalf of Canadians in this fashion. We have already heard some of the figures this evening. For example, in 1977-78 Loto Canada spent $273,000 on furniture. The next year it spent $402,000 on furniture. Normally when such an operation is set up, some capital expenditures are incurred in the first year and in subsequent years the figure goes down. When we see the way money has been spent in the past, money raised in a similar fashion, we really wonder where some of it goes. This again brings to mind some of the troughing that goes on. People are now accustomed to being at the trough. In my part of the country we say that they are in there with their snouts. I think the Government has set a new record. Not only is it in there with its snout; it is in there with its two front feet.

Again I say that there is no incentive for anyone to spend this money wisely because it is not one's own money that will be spent. We all know that if one is not involved in life and does not risk one's capital, it is very easy to be callous and careless with someone else's money. That is my concern with money raised in this fashion.

There are many areas with which I would like to deal, but ten minutes is a very short period of time. One must wonder whether this is the best way in which to recirculate money in the economy. There is such a thing as the multiplier effect. If the Government sat down to look at its priorities, would it believe that this is the best way to collect taxes and to redistribute them through the economy to get the best multiplier effect? It is simply a form of taxation. It is regressive taxation. It is money being taken away from people who in many cases can least afford it. I am sure it will be redistributed in such a way that it will not provide the best multiplier effect in the economy.

In terms of the odds available for people winning some of these moneys, I have heard figures quoted by mathematicians and physicists which indicate that we have about as much chance winning some of these lotteries as we have of being struck by lightning twice. When people buy these lottery tickets, they are not thinking of those kinds of things. They are told that the money they are donating on behalf of the lottery will be used for arts and culture, fitness and amateur sport and medical and health research. These are the kinds of things which concern me when I think about where we are going and why we need this Bill in front of us in the first place.

There are many other Members who want to speak on this Bill. I could make many more comments, but in closing I urge the Government to look seriously at this amendment so that, if we are to have this kind of Bill or law, it will be limited in the damage it will do to the Canadian economy. It should be directed solely at the Calgary Olympics so that once they are over we will not have to put up with this kind of nonsense any longer.

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I find myself in a strange position because I will take a slightly different tact in connection with this amendment as well as the entire Bill. I have listened to many of my learned friends give rather brilliant speeches on the subject and, quite frankly, it is not often that I find myself in concurrence with religious elements.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cook: That was not meant to be funny but it is true. For example, I find absolutely nothing wrong with a bingo game in a church basement. I find nothing wrong with a friendly game of poker with six or seven people who do not play as well as I do. I think I have made other statements dealing with the sport of kings, horse racing, where of course there is a gamble. Gambling by itself does not necessarily have to be sinful, but what we are looking at here is not gambling. We are looking at confiscation and fraudulent activity. We are looking at the national Government of Canada wanting to set up another lottery and being prepared to spend, chances are—it spent $10 million in one year, $13 million in another year—$15 million anyway purely on advertising this lottery to convince the poor sucker out there that he has a chance. It will take his money and return nothing. Let us face it, only about 49 per cent goes to those who buy tickets, even with the best lotteries. Certainly it would raise some money; how much is yet to be determined. Perhaps that native shrewdness that enables the public to survive may finally wise up and realize that with the kind of odds you get in a lottery, it simply does not make sense to buy a ticket.

• (2240)

With the exception of Ontario, the average person in this country spends $30 a year on lotteries. They are two, three or four people in the average family. A couple spends $60 a year on lottery tickets for which they receive absolutely nothing except a dream, a dream that lasts only until the numbers are called. That $60 could be spent in any number of things such as recreation or reading. I am amazed that the motion picture industry is not complaining bitterly about lotteries. If somebody buys a $10 lottery ticket, obviously that money is not being spent on going to the movies. It in no way contributes anything to the economy.

This Bill is another proliferation of the con game. I do not believe the national Government should be involved in a con game. Obviously Members opposite think that a good con game is a great thing. If it is not a con game to suggest that the Olympics in 1988 require this; that is utterly ridiculous.

A lot of my friends here, particularly westerners, have spoken about the Calgary Olympics. May I remind all Hon. Members that we are not talking about the Calgary Olympics. We are talking about the world Olympics being held in Canada. Those Olympics belong as much to Quebec, Ontario, the Maritimes as to British Columbia, Alberta and the rest of the country.

If the national Government is not prepared to spend money to make them a success, it should be thoroughly ashamed of itself. It is using this blackmail to get another lottery scheme in place when we already have eight or nine in the country. These lotteries drain off millions and millions every year right across the country. It is a totally useless activity. One in 800,000 wins. There are 799,999, including the smaller lotteries, who lose.

The only advantage I can see in buying a lottery ticket is the dream of having a million dollars, until they draw the numbers. That is all you get. On a moral basis, is it proper to give someone that kind of dream? I always believed in the right of the individual to make a damm fool of himself if he wanted to. However, standing here as a Member of the House of Commons, a Member of this august assembly, I am not so sure I have the right to feel that way when a con game of this nature is perpetrated upon society by a Government.

I only wish that Members sitting on the Government benches would hear what is being said by any number of Members on this side. They do not listen. They have not listened to anything. They have not heard anyone over here or any of our reasons.

If they were adjudicating on the debate, if they had to sit down and determine where the truth lies, who is right and who is wrong, who has presented the better reasons on this Bill and the various amendments, they would have to come to the conclusion that in this case—it is not always true, but mostly true—the Government has to be wrong in foisting this con game on the Canadian people. There are far too many of these lotteries.

There are two or three quotations which express better than I can some of my feelings in connection with this legislation. I quote:

> The present acceptance of lotteries seems to arise out of political expedience. Governments, under pressure to fund undertakings beyond the traditional expectations of the fiscal system, have resorted to the lottery instead of tax reform, and have found ready to hand a gambling medium, publicly attractive for its accessibility, simplicity and large stakes. Governments have, moreover, been able to pour millions of dollars into seductive advertising which creates the illusion of a "normal" activity in which winning is also interpreted as "normal". This attitude on the part of Government is particularly destructive when Canadians should be challenged to give for their country rather than get for themselves.

Professor D. McCormack Smyth of York University stated:

> Liberal democratic government has been based on a number of central ideas. One is that governments must respect human beings. Governments must not exploit human weaknesses. Through their promotion of lotteries governments are appealing to one of the lowest human qualities—that of greed. For one individual to win a million dollar lottery ticket, 199,999 other individuals must lose $5.

I am on the side of 199,999 rather than the one who takes the prize. In January, 1983, the Baptist Federation of Canada, the Council of Christian Reform Churches in Canada, the Salvation Army and the United Church of Canada stated in a brief:

> We see gambling as that which divides rather than unites; as destructive to genuine philanthropy; as harmful to persons, communities and nations; as pandering to the debilitating desire to get something for nothing.

It is those kinds of words that I would hope those opposite could hear, believe and understand. This Bill will not do any good for our country. This Bill will bring disrespect to every Member in the House of Commons who votes for it when he or she returns home to face his voters. Again I quote:

> The lotteries in Canada, with all the power of governments behind them, have already become a source of contention between Ottawa and the Provinces. They present a new and powerful form of political patronage and potential for corrupting abuses. They raise expectations among community organizations, where perhaps none should exist, with respect to assistance from the public purse. They lull politicians and the public away from the task of analysis, the setting of priorities, and the making of commitments, which are indispensable for the ordering of social life.

We have seen in this Government a tendency, a disease or a stumbling into scandal after scandal, a massive mismanagement of the economy. Canadair is one example. There are many others. Now this legislation is being proposed. If there is anything true about gambling dollars, it is easy come, easy go. The easy come from the lottery means there is a lot more money to play with, a lot more money to spend foolishly, a lot more money to spend on patronage, and a lot more money to use to the detriment of the Canadian people. For God's sake, gentleman, reconsider.

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, in entering the debate this evening on Motion No. 3, I do so with the shared conviction that the beneficiary structure of the present legislation is too large and too vague. If the sports pool earns $30 million to $40 million a year, it is certainly not clear how much of that money will be divided between the Calgary Olympics, fitness and amateur sport, health and medical research, art and culture and added to that, worthy capital projects.

In the moments available to me, I want to focus some attention on groups which have been named and whose expectations have been raised with the introduction of Bill C-95. How are these groups to plan on funding when there is no clear indication of what percentage is to go to each group and when in the future and under what formula they can anticipate receiving them?

Surely the distribution pattern of the money should be determined before the money is collected, not after, unless it is another illustration on the part of the Government and the Minister that there is no real perception of the importance of the voluntary sector of Canada and that it is a tool which the Minister can use. When the Minister piloting this legislation through the House was Secretary of State, he styled himself the Minister advocate for the voluntary sector. It is interesting to note that feedback from the voluntary sector indicated to its constituents across the country that the Minister had no awareness of its import to Canadian society. In this Bill, the Minister proposes a control mechanism of that sector rather than somehow allowing that sector to move in a way that his predecessor was prepared to do when calling together Consultation 81, which drew the national voluntary agencies together by saying: "We will entertain tax proposals that will give you freedom to do the things that you do best."

• (2250)

When we begin to look at the dimensions of this particular Bill, Madam Speaker, it would be wise for the Minister to leave the House, because at this particular point there is a constituency that looks at this and says: "There is nothing in this except more Government control of our initiative." Does that particular Government which wishes to cover the waterfront really believe that the 40,000 registered charities that took in $5.6 billion, according to the Ross Report recently tabled by the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal), are somehow of so little significance that they can be played off one against the other?

For a moment, Madam Speaker, let us have the Government and its supporters opposite tell the voluntary sector why it is that instead of putting in place a tax mechanism and reviewing the Department of Revenue control mechanism for that sector, they turn their backs on the Secretary of State's proposal for a task force on voluntarism. Why is it that they will not open this up for public discussion? Instead, they say: "Give us a mechanism that will make more money and then we will give out a series of grants by which we can control an entire sector."

My colleagues have already referred to the component of patronage within this whole area, but it is not just patronage that gives me concern. My concern has to do fundamentally with an attitude. Canadians are becoming aware not only in the private sector where we have seen through FIRA, the National Energy Program and a variety of other measures the whole control mechanism, that as well in the voluntary sector there is the same question of control or trust. Will we trust the private sector to generate wealth? Will the Government trust the voluntary sector to let fitness and amateur sport bloom on its own? Will it deal with the caring health voluntary agencies? Will it give them some incentive to do their own thing? Will it deal with the caring religious community and give it the same incentive as it does the political community? When there are worthy capital projects that come before the public, will it in some way give some incentive to that group?

Here we have legislation which colleagues on this side have been calling regressive. They have been calling it regressive legislation and regressive taxation. In a sense the budget that was brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) was supposed to have put out a signal of incentive. We now have the Government turning around, with the former Minister who advocated the voluntary sector putting through the House legislation which provides the reverse of any incentive to the voluntary sector. This is yet another control mechanism. Canadians should be quite clear in knowing that we have a Government which says it will control that sector along with other sectors. It will not trust Canadians or put mechanisms in place that will allow them to do the things they want to do.

How many Canadians are we talking about? What about this sector which the Government, is by and large, prepared to ignore? The sector's wage benefit bill in 1980 was $1.7 billion which which would compensate approximately 173,000 workers, 23 per cent of those part-time. This represents 1.6 per cent of all employed workers in Canada. When looking at the sector which is being ignored and which the Government is, in a sense, prepared to penalize once again, we should note that there are three million Canadians who volunteer an estimated 373 million hours which, if compensated on an average wage for the service sector, would be worth more than $2 billion. We are not dealing with some esoteric interest group that is on the fringe of Canadian society.

The Government, the Minister of Finance, the Secretary of State and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) have had before them for nearly a decade proposals made by the national voluntary agencies which would have replaced the $100 standard deduction for medical expenses and charitable donations with a 50 per cent tax credit such as political parties now receive. This sector, had it had some incentives, could have gone on to build on its proven cost-effectiveness in job creation.

The YMCA of Canada has completed a study which shows that there is a 3:1 ratio in skills training and retraining. Here we are at a time when there is a need for training in Canada, a time for economic renewal, and we have a sector which has proven its capacity to do this. What do we do? We have a Government which brings in legislation which is yet another disincentive. When the budget was to come in, the Secretary of State said that there would be a proposal for a task force to look at taxation and charitable revenue regulations, but the whole matter was ignored. What we have seen is the removal of the $100 tax deduction, which is nothing more than a $80 million tax grab. If we need $80 million for the Calgary Olympics, why not take the $80 million that has just been saved at the expense of the voluntary sector and use that for the Calgary Olympics instead of moving into this sector?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McLean: Madam Speaker, I would like to say that the voluntary sector is under attack. Its revenue capacity is down 35 per cent, due to the inability of Canadians to support it because of unemployment and rising inflation. The Government refuses the give and take tax proposals, refuses to review charitable donations, refuses to set up an all-departmental mechanism to bring departments together, and then has the final effrontery to bring in a Bill that pretends to somehow support that sector. In case anybody is in doubt, Madam Speaker, I shall not be voting for this legislation.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): If I may, Madam Speaker, I would like to enter this debate, particularly in respect to Motion No. 3 proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid).

One thing that must be made very clear when considering the suggestion to have something specific with respect to the city of Calgary is that the Government really has no business getting into the field it is proposing to get into. It has been pointed out that the Government is suggesting the Canadian public should enter into a terribly unfair gamble. For example, it has been estimated that in respect to the Wintario lottery in Ontario, there is one chance in 1,400,000 of winning one of the five prizes of $100,000. The reason I point that out, as the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) has indicated, is that this is not a partisan matter, it is simply a question of the federal Government being honest with the Canadian public.

The truth is that lotteries return a mere 38 per cent to 40 per cent of the total moneys that are paid mainly by the poor of the country. Conventional betting games offer far more appealing odds if one is looking for a gamble. For example, roulette on average returns about 95 per cent of the bettor's money. Horse racing returns about 82 per cent, black jack 94 per cent and a game of dice 83 per cent to 97 per cent. One of the worst gambles you can ask anyone to go into is the type of lottery that the Government proposes. We must ask why the Government would want to be so unfair, especially with the poor of the country. Clearly it is doing this at the behest of its advertising agency friends. It is a massive pay-off because the people who make the biggest money out of this type of promotion are the advertising agencies.

Madam Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member.

Mr. Stevens: May I call it eleven o'clock, Madam Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

HUMAN RIGHTS—INTERNMENT OF JAPANESE-CANADIANS—PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION. (B) FORM OF COMPENSATION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, the injustices done to Canadians of Japanese ancestry in Canada in 1942 in the evacuation, internment and confiscation of property, it need hardly be argued today, ought never to have happened. There was never any military reason for this kind of action and no pressure from the military authorities. Nor did the Civil Service ask for the evacuation. The Civil Service was certainly more knowledgeable than the politicians of the day. Nor did the RCMP who conducted investigations ask for it. No acts of sabotage were carried out, there was no espionage and no evidence that any was planned.

Japanese-Canadians even volunteered for military service and some actually served. Ken Adachi's book is truly titled "The Enemy That never Was". The pressure, unfortunately, was political. There was an appeal by unscrupulous politicians to racial hatred and fear on the part of white British Columbians. It is part of long-standing prejudices and was seen in the period before the war in the denial of full citizenship rights to orientals throughout the 1930s, especially the right to vote.

There never was any need for the evacuation and that it was motivated by prejudice can readily be seen in the treatment of Japanese Canadians after the war. For purposes of immigration Germans were put on the same basis as other Europeans in 1950, while in 1952 the Japanese were still treated as enemy aliens. The enfranchisement of Japanese Canadians occurred only in 1948. Wartime controls on Canadians of Japanese origin were kept on until 1949 so Canadians of Japanese origin were required to carry a permit from the RCMP to visit B.C. Some went to jail for not having a permit. Interned people were not allowed back to B.C. for years, and even later were not allowed to have their fishing permits back.

A scandal erupted on the issue of deportation of people who had requested repatriation to Japan. It was later found that the requests were often never understood. Some were coerced and wives and dependents were included in the deportation. Fortunately, deportation orders were eventually abandoned. As late as April 1947 a CCF motion in the House of Commons was defeated 105 to 31 to remove all restrictions on Japanese Canadians. Only four Liberals and two Conservatives voted with the CCF.

This might be the time to pay tribute to my predecessors in the CCF for their courageous work in fighting against prejudice and for fair treatment. There was Angus MacInnis, J. S. Woodsworth and Andrew Brewin of Greenwood who was prominent in the compensation issue and the fight against deportation after the war.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) has made reference to the Royal Commission on Compensation for Japanese Canadians. I should like to note that the compensation provided was only partial. More than 22,000 people were uprooted and moved across Canada, yet there were only 1,434 claims. Estimates are that people received only one-third of the value of their loss. Claims were made for more than $7 million but only $2.5 million was paid. Some claimants received as little as $50. It was not possible for many people, upon their return, to take up the life they had left behind. They could not buy back their houses and boats or the property they had been forced to sell. The compensation did not take into account inflation, loss of wages, salaries or profits let alone the suffering and humiliation.

The Royal Commission exonerated the custodians office which is to say that it did the job it was told to do. What a job that was. There has been no apology, no remorse, no recognition of the injustice which was done. I note also that the Canadian judicial system failed utterly to redress the wrongs.

• (2305)

In the United States, Japanese Americans were able to get some relief. It was inadequate, but there was some relief. In Canada, these people had no rights once the War Measures Act was declared. Legal action in Canada was confined to the period after the War Measures Act and, indeed, well after the War. Interestingly, it was the last appeal to the Privy Council in the United Kingdom on certain deportation orders which ended that history of appeal. I am sorry to say that the Privy Council failed rather miserably. It did not even allow the modest exception which our timid Supreme Court of Canada would have. This happened to be the first case which was decided in the new Supreme Court of Canada Buildings. It was certainly not a good beginning for that Court.

Since World War II, Japanese Canadians have become an integral part of Canadian society. Many have played a very special role as the conscience of Canada in the peace movement. We cannot forget, and, indeed, I believe it is relevant to the discussion before us now on the treatment of Japanese Canadians here in Canada that it was on Japan that the first two atomic bombs were exploded. I regret to say it was the same Mackenzie King who authorized the internment of Japanese Canadians in 1942, who also said it was fortunate that the bombs were used on the Japanese rather than on the white races of Europe.

Concrete proposals have been made for $50 million to be given to a foundation which would in turn make particular reparation and otherwise use the money for the promotion of racial harmony and human rights. Good projects have been proposed and this seems to be an eminently reasonable approach. Certainly, the Minister of Justice should continue consultations with appropriate organizations and individuals and come back to Parliament with a firm proposal. One requirement for the building of a better society is to admit frankly the mistakes of the past and seek to redress the harm done. Justice must be done to Canadians of Japanese ancestry and it is the responsibility of the Minister of Justice to take the next step.

Mr. Al MacBain (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, there is no question that one of the more striking episodes in our history is that of the treatment of Japanese-Canadians during the Second World War. During that war, Japanese-Canadians were detained in transfer centres and internment camps pursuant to regulations made under the War Measures Act, and their property was seized and their loyalty to Canada was questioned. In Canada, compensation for property losses suffered by about 1,300 persons was paid in 1950, in the amount of approximately $1.2 million, following an examination of the claims of Japanese-Canadians by a Commission headed by Mr. Justice Bird between 1947 and 1950. The procedures for submitting claims were widely publicized at the time and the awards of compensation were made after careful examination of the legal and factual basis of each case.

As the Minister indicated in his answer before this House on June 9, 1983, this matter is indeed under consideration by the Government at this time. This is a complex matter. Claims other than those based on infringement of property rights would be particularly complicated, both factually and legally, and especially having regard to the considerable passage of time. The fact that the events took place so long ago makes it difficult to identify them, quantify them and redress them in a manner which balances all the legal and equitable interests at stake. There are no simple solutions to the claims of those interned during the war.

Japanese-Canadians will be holding a conference in the fall during which they will discuss their position with respect to these issues. The Government will be very interested in learning of the proposals presented at this conference, as the wish of Japanese-Canadians regarding the events of the war must necessarily be an important factor in determining what form of reparative action might be appropriate in the circumstances.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—PERCENTAGE OF PROCUREMENT FROM MANITOBA SUPPLIERS. (B) REQUEST THAT MANITOBA ORDERS BE INCREASED

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, on June 16, as recorded at page 26438 of Hansard, I asked a question of the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) relative to the procurement policy of that Department. That Department had issued figures as to the amount of goods and services it had purchased from various Provinces of Canada.

• (2310)

For some period of time it has been the stated policy of the Government that the procurement of goods and services should be more equitably distributed across the country, a goal which the Government has stated and one which has been accepted by Members of the House. The Government stands condemned by its own figures. Its released figures would show that of contracts worth approximately $5 billion, the following purchase percentages apply: for Atlantic Canada, 7 per cent, for the two Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, 77 per cent and for the West, 15 per cent. Specifically for the Province of Manitoba, which was the focus of my question, the Government's own figures show that only 3.7 per cent of total procurement contracts by the Department of Supply and Services have been issued for suppliers and business people in the Province. The Government gives lip service to a procurement policy which is to be equitable and fairly distributed to all Provinces and to all regions, but its own figures would indicate that those are words only.

In defence, the Government states, "Those are past figures. The next figures will be better". How many times have we heard that the next figures will be better, that we are doing better and that all we should do is to be patient? Manitobans, for too long, have been too patient with the Government.

It is surely incumbent on the Government to give clear indications of procurement policy whereby there will be a better, more fair and equitable distribution for moneys spent. It should be kept in mind that the moneys spent are taxpayers moneys. The Government has received those moneys, to be used wisely and properly, from all sectors of the country and from every citizen. Therefore, the Government should be very careful to encourage, through its purchasing program, fairness in distribution.

Another factor that must be kept in mind is that the Government will state that it does not have the distributors at certain points. Very often one of the reasons distributors are not available is because of the Government's procurement policy to begin with. Through centralisation, too often businesses which could have been established in other regions of the country have not received the same consideration as those in central Canada. It is hard for me to understand, as a person coming from the Prairies, that in Atlantic Canada where we have matters relating to the offshore, the coastline, search and rescue and the Armed Forces only 7 per cent of the total purchases of the Department of Supply and Services would come from that region.

Mr. Crosby: That figures.

Mr. Epp: I am saying that as one who does not come from that region. It just simply boggles my mind to think that there are no more than 7 per cent of entrepreneurs in Atlantic Canada who could have supplied those goods and services for the Government of Canada. Nor am I saying for a minute that the Government would go to those regions for purposes of regionalism only and that competitiveness should not apply. I have no doubt in my mind that those people, given an opportunity, would be as competitive as those in any other part of Canada. The same applies in the West.

The Minister of Supply and Services said that on the Prairies, specifically in Winnipeg, we have been involved in the aeronautical industry. I pointed out to him CAE. CAE has closed down. If that is an example of success, we can do without that success.

• (2315)

I am saying to the Parliamentary Secretary not to promise us better figures but to show us; show us by a very clear pattern how those figures will be changed in order that our business people in the regions will have the same consideration for competitive contracts as those in the two central Provinces. We are asking for tangible results, not promises or hope. Give us some tangible results. The Government has had enough time.

We hear much about regional disparity. We hear much about divisiveness in the country. Surely this would be one very straightforward means by which we could put action to the sentiments expressed by a Government that surely should have national policies in mind rather than regional considerations.

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, it is a plesure to rise in response to the Hon. Member's question on federal Government purchases in the Province of Manitoba. It is, of course, too early in the year to give an accurate estimate of purchases that will be made in this current fiscal year in Manitoba.

The figure of 3.7 per cent referred to by the questioner reflects the current figure of 1,247 contract documents issued in Manitoba for the first two months of this financial year by both our regional and headquarters offices, for a total dollar value of $13.3 million. Last year some 13,000 documents were issued for a total value of $151 million. On that scale these first few months auger well for the future of contracting in Manitoba. In fact, the amount of regional purchases in the Province of Manitoba has increased by 15 per cent per year over the past three fiscal years. In actual dollars, the total of contracts issued regionally in Manitoba has climbed from $34.2 million in 1980-81 to $47.3 million in 1982-83.

I am also pleased to say that there are contracts before Treasury Board at this moment that will be of significant benefit to Manitoba in the aerospace field. On this subject there will be further significant sums going to the Manitoba aerospace industry as part of the CF-18 offset program. The growth of our regional purchases in Manitoba is further confirmed by our recent opening of an extra sub-office in Shilo, reflecting DSS activity in Manitoba.

We are, as the Hon. Member may know, decentralized inasmuch as we operate a network of supply centres across the country. These centres are there to respond to the needs of the federal Government departments that are located in those regions. The number of contracts issued in any particular region depends, therefore, to a large degree on the program requirements of our customers in those areas.

In order to spread the economic advantages of federal procurement to as many of these regions as possible, we also arrange for regional purchasing of the majority of the goods and services that are requisitioned at headquarters here in Ottawa where this is practical in terms of achieving the best value for every dollar spent.

It follows therefore that in terms of percentages of contracts issued across the country, one must take into consideration the industrial base of the Provinces concerned. Obviously, a broad, highly industrialized economic base would naturally succeed in competing for and winning a higher percentage of contracts than one whose base is mainly agricultural. We can, after all, only expect contracts to be let to those companies that win them in open competition.

The Hon. Member must acknowledge that in this free enterprise country, open competition is the only way we can ensure fair and equal treatment to all potential suppliers. The fact that at any particular period one province may be more successful than another is based on its ability to compete at that time.

This nation has experienced the trauma of recession. It is now on the upturn and our collective economic future is brighter today than it has been for years. Simply witness the report of Statistics Canada that shows, our inflation rate to be 5.5 per cent, the lowest it has been in ten years. Over the past year, however, we have seen a cutback in Government spending resulting in a percentage drop in this spending to most Provinces across Canada.

Madam Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

THE ADMINISTRATION—USE OF EXECUTIVE AIRCRAFT BY MINISTERS. (B) STATUS OF PASSENGERS ON FLIGHT TO ANTIGUA

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, my purpose tonight is to review and consider the questions I raised on June 6 and June 7, 1983, concerning the use of the Government's executive jets by the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan). Let me quickly explain that that Minister who represents the constituency of Halifax has also held in the past the portfolios of Secretary of State, a Minister of Labour and was also the Cabinet Member in charge of Fitness and Amateur Sport. I do not want to create any confusion with the various titles. We are talking about the Hon. Member for Halifax (Mr. Regan). Let me begin by stating categorically that I recognize a legitimate need for air services to Members of the Cabinet and other Government officials under proper circumstances. The Government for that very purpose keeps a fleet of planes, three JetStars and other aircraft in order to provide these kinds of necessary special services.

What I want to stress and underline tonight is that there is a limit and a point at which there is not legitimate use of these aircraft, and I think everybody now agrees that the Minister of State for International Trade has gone beyond that limit. He has taken unto himself the right to use these aircraft in a manner which most people would not find proper.

What in specific terms the Minister has done, just to give two examples, is, first, he took a jet aircraft to Vancouver for a meeting and stopped on his return at Denver, Colorado, to attend a World Cup ski meet. On another occasion the Minister took a jet and went to Antigua, stopping in West Palm Beach, Florida, to pick up in-laws, Mr. and Mrs. Golightly. I am not going to stress these points because they are a matter of public record reported across the country and most people have condemned this activity. It is not only my view, and I want to emphasize that. I am not here to wreak a vendetta on my colleague from Nova Scotia, the Minister of State for International Trade. We share streets within the City of Halifax, Dutch Village Road and Main Avenue. I am here on behalf of the people of Nova Scotia and indeed the people of Canada to point out that we cannot accept this kind of behaviour. We are not alone. There is condemnation from the The Mail-Star in Halifax to the Vancouver newspapers. All are agreed that the Minister has overstepped the bounds of proper practice and proper procedure. Let me quote some of the things that have been written, Madam Speaker. On June 3, 1983, the Calgary Herald wrote:

> International Trade Minister Gerald Regan has clearly abused the privileges of his office and interpreted the guidelines for use of Government jets in a manner which insults the public purse.

That is not me writing as the Hon. Member from Halifax West. That is the Editor writing for the Calgary Herald. Then we read in the Vancouver Sun, which was carried from coast to coast:

> Federal Transport Minister Jean-Luc Pepin would have done better not to have said anything at all than be drawn into a defence of his high-flying colleague, International Trade Minister Gerald Regan.

Then we come to the Toronto Star, a paper not unknown for sympathy toward the Liberal Party, which wrote:

> International Trade Minister Gerald Regan once had this observation about the federal government's seven-passenger Lockheed JetStar executive aircraft: "Not as comfortable as flying first class on Air Canada, but better than economy.

Papers are unanimous right across the country in the condemnation of this activity by the Minister of State for International Trade. This condemnation not only extends to the use of the JetStars because we find an article in the Toronto Sun for June 3, 1983, which points out the looseness in the administration of expense accounts. There are also articles in The Globe and Mail that one can read which state that Cabinet expense accounts lack detail. Their articles refer specifically to the expense account of the Hon. Minister of State for International Trade, particularly on the very trip to Antigua.

In this connection I ask Hon. Members to take a look at The Globe and Mail for May 31, 1983. What I am here to complain about and what I indicated in my questions is that something has to be done about this activity. We just cannot sit here and accept this as the standard behaviour. We have to move, Madam Speaker. My suggestion is that the Government move immediately to establish proper rules governing the use of executive aircraft by Cabinet Ministers. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has said in this House, and it is repeated in an article which appeared on June 3, 1983, in The Chronicle Herald, that the Minister of State for International Trade must justify his use of the flights. The standard is your own personal code of conduct. We have found out that that is not good enough. We have to have an objective code of conduct. We have to have it legislated. The Government has to say what Ministers are allowed to do and what they are not allowed to do. It is not good enough to have these executive flight operational rules promulgated by the Deputy Minister of Transport which indicates the circumstances under which Government jets can be used. We cannot have this inane flying over the country, taking one's family hither and yon, stopping in London to let off one's wife and going on to Calgary, costing taxpayers thousands of dollars. We have to impose a standard on ourselves, on Cabinet and on everyone who feeds at the public trough. Everyone who benefits from the public purse has to observe the same standard, and that standard has to be an objective one, one which requires accountability. We cannot go on simply doing what we want to do and taking our chances. These are public funds we are using and for which we are responsible. We must have a code of conduct.

I want to end by quoting an article which appeared in the Edmonton Journal. It gave some advice to the trade Minister; it said, "Take the train." The article indicated that the CBC released some documents showing that the Minister of State for International Trade took members of his family with him on 15 official trips, and it pointed out the pressing need for strict enforcement of federal restrictions on Government travel. It ended up telling the Minister, "Take the train; we do not trust you with our airplanes any more".

It is obvious the Minister of State for International Trade has abused his privileges and now must be held accountable, notwithstanding his defence or his saying that there was room on the aircraft and that he could take his family because it was not costing anybody anything. That is not good enough. I do not think anyone in Government fails to recognize that that is not good enough. We must have an objective test. My purpose is to appeal to the Government, to the Ministry and to those responsible for the public Treasury to come up with a code of conduct and rules governing the use of executive aircraft and to impose them upon every Member of Cabinet, every Member of the House.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member had several specific questions about the use of executive aircraft and made reference to the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan).

First, I think it is unfortunate the Hon. Member is dwelling on the travel of an individual Minister, especially a Minister who has done so much to promote Canadian exports around the world. If the Hon. Member really has concerns about the use of executive aircraft, he can pursue them without reflecting on an individual who happens to be promoting Canadian interests abroad.

The guidelines governing the use of executive aircraft provide for aircraft to be booked in the names of Ministers of the Crown. It is left to their discretion who will accompany them. This is not unreasonable in the Government's view. Once a Minister has established the need for the aircraft for the conduct of Government business, as he must under the guidelines, the marginal cost of filling one or more otherwise empty seats is minimal. Therefore, it is possible for a Minister to be accompanied by officials of his Department, members of his family, members of the press or, as sometimes happens, members of other Parties.

It is interesting that the Hon. Member did not complain in his remarks tonight about his Conservative colleagues who take their spouses and children on DND flights from Shearwater to Ottawa and back. Also it is interesting he did not mention whether he takes his family or part of his family on such DND flights. If he does, the Government has no objection since we see our families so little.

It is very unfortunate the Hon. Member would take off on the Minister in this way rather than seek information on what are the guidelines of the Department of Transport. The guidelines are there. They are very clear. Manifests are kept. This is something about which the Hon. Member asked on June 7. The most important thing in the manifest is to obtain the individual's name. An attempt is also made to obtain the individual's affiliation, such as whether the traveller is a Member of Parliament, a public servant or a guest, but this information is supplementary. If there was an error on a particular manifest, about which the Hon. Member also complained on June 7, I can assure him that there was no intention to mislead him or anyone else. Naturally efforts will be made to be as accurate as possible, remembering the main purpose of the manifests.

Mr. Crosby: Where is Regan?

Mr. Flis: The Hon. Member asks where the Minister of State for International Trade is. He had to leave just before 11 o'clock to fly to Vancouver. I did not ask what flight he took. The Minister is sufficiently knowledgeable to be able to decide whether to take an MOT flight or a commercial flight.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock.

At 11.31 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADIAN AVIATION SAFETY BOARD ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport) moved:

That Bill C-163, entitled "An Act to establish the Canadian Aviation Safety Board and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof", be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

He said: Mr. Speaker, all Members of this House will agree, I am sure, without my having to demonstrate it, that air transportation safety is important. By approving Bill C-163 on the establishment of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, Parliament will have taken a long step toward achieving the goal of safe aviation. Obviously we are not the first to involve ourselves in this area. Some Hon. Members will remember perhaps that in 1972-73 the government asked Brigadier-General McLearn to prepare a report on methods used to investigate transportation accidents in general. This report served as the basis for other consultations, which led in 1979 to the introduction of Bill C-40, the Transportation Accident Investigation Act. I would like to point out that at that time the proposed legislation covered three modes of transportation and not just aviation as this Bill does. Bill C-40 having died on the Order Paper, and public opinion having become alerted to certain alarming situations in the aviation sector, the following government, and more specifically the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), the then Minister of Transport, set up the so-called Dubin Commission to look into aviation safety. The main recommendation of Volume I of the Dubin Report, which was tabled in May, 1981, was precisely that a Canadian Aviation Safety Board be set up.

I would like to say a brief word on existing aviation safety measures. The current system was drawn up under the provisions of the Aeronautics Act of 1927. It provides for the establishment of safety standards and of measures making it possible to guarantee and ascertain compliance with these standards.

For many years now successive Ministers of Transport have been concerned about the worth and the effectiveness of this system. The Dubin enquiry attracted the attention of the public to the system's deficiencies, a certain number of which will be corrected by Bill C-163. The reform of the Aeronautics Act, which I expect to present in the fall, will correct other deficiencies. And some of them can be dealt with, and in effect are being so dealt with at present, by simple administrative and budgetary measures.

One element in the existing system has attracted special attention, and that is accident investigations. But I must point out that this is obviously only one of the elements in a much broader system. At the present time, when an accident occurs, an investigation is carried out by the Aviation Safety Bureau, which as you know comes under Transport Canada's Air Administration. It is however also responsible for setting standards, for drawing up the regulations that affect safety in the aviation sector. There is thus a risk of conflict of interest between these two responsibilities, which have hitherto been exercised by the same people.

Mr. Justice Dubin recommended, and I quote:

—the establishment of a tribunal unconnected with any federal department.

And that is just what Bill C-163 provides for: the creation of an aviation safety board independent of Transport Canada, so that the functions related to regulation and those related to investigation will be disassociated from each other.

Once Bill C-163 has been passed and implemented, and the new Aeronautics Act as well, as I hope it will be this fall, I believe that Canada will be endowed with a first-class aviation safety system.

• (1115)

[English]

This is only the first of two pieces. The next instalment, if I can call it that, will come in the fall when I am sure we will all be here. In the second "tranche" of this reform there will be important material, for example, the appeals tribunal hearing appeals against the decisions of the Minister, the fines he could impose, or the taking away of licences.

The Bill was drafted so as to set out clearly the Board's objective, jurisdiction, and power. It includes provisions aimed at ensuring that the Board co-ordinates its activities with those of other parties such as the RCMP and coroners who have related mandates. The objective of the CASB is to advance aviation safety, and I emphasize this. It is not to assign guilt; it is not to pass judicial judgment on who has done it right or who has done it wrong. It is just to advance air safety.

The principal activities of the Board will be as defined in the Bill; first, to identify safety deficiencies as evidenced by aviation accidents and incidents, or by situations or conditions which, if left unattended, could induce accidents or incidents; second, to conduct independent investigations and, if necessary, public inquiries by itself or by other individuals, into aviation occurrences—and the word "occurrences" is the generic word which encompasses accidents, incidents, and situational conditions or hazards—in order to make findings as to their contributing factors and causes; third, to report publicly on its investigations and inquiries and to make general recommendations. These are the three objectives of the Board to be created.

Structurally the CASB will consist of three members, one of whom must be a full-time member appointed by the Governor in Council, as usual, for a term not exceeding seven years for full-time members and five years for part-time members. The Board will be required to report annually to Parliament, to ensure its independence, through a responsible Minister who will be designated by the Governor in Council. Presumably in the committee this afternoon there will be some generous views expressed on this as to who should be the Minister responsible for the Board. There are arguments on all sides.

Under its mandate set out in Clause 12 of the Bill, the Board will be able to investigate, as I already said, any accident, incident or situation associated with the operation of aircraft.

You will have noticed, Mr. Speaker, that the Board's mandate is restricted to aviational occurrences. It is a unimodal board and consequently excludes occurrences in the other transportation modes, rail, road or water. There is no dispute that conflict of interest between regulators and investigators can equally be alleged to occur with respect to the other modes as recognized by a former Bill, C-40, and brilliantly by the Private Members' Bills introduced by the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) in past years. However, a unimodal board can be established more quickly—I am being very practical—and it is easier for the investigation of air occurrences than for those in the marine and rail modes, partly because of the proselytizing work done by Justice Dubin and others.

We also know that different procedures and practices have been developed in each mode. There is not the same degree of dissatisfaction in the other modes, rail and marine, as on the air side. Consequently, there is more urgency, I suggest, to do it now on the air side than on the other modes. Attempts to move to uniform procedures for consistency could meet with resistance at the present time.

Mr. Justice Dubin has recommended the establishment of a unimodal air board. I do not know if he meant first, but that was his recommendation. Let me emphasize that the establishment of the CASB in no way precludes the future establishment of a multimodal board, or unimodal boards, with jurisdiction in the other transportation modes. To that effect, the experience with the CASB will be a valuable guide.

You will also notice, Mr. Speaker, that I am not being theoretical in this matter. I am being purely practical. Work is now being done in the other modes, on the marine side for example. This is an exercise that will last some time, although not too long, and in due course this exercise will come to a conclusion as to the other modes.

Let me enumerate some of the powers and duties of the Board. Investigators will be given a wide array of powers, including the right to enter, inspect, and seize. The powers are limited, however, to those necessary to enable the investigator to obtain all the information required to carry out the purposes of the Act. In keeping with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, appropriate safeguards have been laid down, including the requirement for the investigator to obtain a search warrant before entering a private dwelling.

The Board will be required to prepare a report on its findings in every investigation and that report will, whenever possible, include general recommendations, as I said before, on its findings. All reports will be made available to the public.

The Board will be required to give other parties opportunities for comment during and after the preparation of reports. For example, before a report is issued, parties with a direct interest must be provided with a draft of that report to comment on. The Board will also be required to provide its report to any Minister whose area of responsibility is affected by the recommendation. That Minister will, in turn, be required to reply in writing within 90 days as to his intentions regarding the implementation of the recommendations. As the Minister's reply must also be made available to the public, the entire sequence of events, including the Government's response, can be examined by the public.

I would like to stress the fact that all of these things were recommended by Dubin. In some cases we have partially amended the recommendations, but never have we gone against what Dubin had recommended.

What about privileged information? The Board in its investigation will obtain evidence of various sorts. For some of those documents there is a good reason to claim privilege from disclosure. The reason is to encourage the evidence to be made available by persons involved. Again the purpose of the inquiry would be to advance aviation safety, not to assign guilt.

Let me give you three examples of this, Mr. Speaker. First, the Board might receive in evidence a cockpit voice recording. Under the terms of this Bill, that document will be privileged and the Board will be prevented from releasing it to anyone or producing it in any proceedings other than as specifically set out in the Bill. There are some provisions in the Bill for cockpit voice recordings to be made available to other parties.

Second, the use of air traffic control recordings obtained by the Board will be prohibited, but only for use against air crew and controllers in criminal or disciplinary proceedings. In other words, there are different degrees of privilege ranging from a degree that is nearly absolute in principle to one that is quite limited. Every situation is described in the Bill so as to avoid misunderstanding.

The third type of document is witnesses' statements, and those will not be allowed to be used against a witness in any legal or other proceeding except civil or perjury proceedings. All of this is defined in some detail in the Bill because the subject is obviously a very difficult one, and a ticklish one as well.

The privilege provisions in the Bill have been developed as a set of compromises after long consideration of the arguments on both sides, the individual and the public interest. I believe that they strike the balance required to provide adequate protection to ensure that evidence is forthcoming while, at the same time, respecting the general principle in favour of public disclosure and the over-all policy thrust of the Access to Information Act.

Again, I stress the fact that nothing in the Bill contradicts the Dubin Report. Some of the provisions go further than recommended, but nothing contradicts the recommendations of the distinguished Justice who gave his name to the report on air safety.

What about incident reporting? In 1981 a study of a comprehensive aviation incident reporting system was undertaken. That was after the Dubin Report. As a result of that study the Bill includes a Clause to enable the Board to set up mandatory and/or voluntary incident reporting systems. There is room for justification of a mandatory system for some big commercial transportation systems, and a voluntary system for smaller carriers, smaller planes, individual pilots et cetera. In the first case the situation is more or less institutionalized. There is a pattern of reporting. In the second, we want to entice people to come forward so it is done on a voluntary basis. All of this is debatable and those who prepared the Bill again attempted to do a balancing act, which is the only "Act" Parliament has never passed, but obviously is the most important of them all.

[Translation]

The Bill contains clauses obliging the Board to co-operate, as far as possible, with other federal and provincial government bodies such as provincial police forces and coroners. These clauses are there because of concerns expressed by the provincial Attorneys General in the course of discussions surrounding Bill C-40 in 1979. For example, Bill C-163 contains a special provision guaranteeing peace officers and coroners access to the information they need to carry out their own investigations, and requiring that if necessary the Board shall communicate its preliminary conclusions to the coroners.

The preparation for Bill C-163 began a long time ago. The government had the advantage of expert advice in all fields, and particularly from the conclusions of the Dubin Report as well as the many presentations that were made within the framework of the Dubin Commission enquiry. I believe that we took full advantage of all the advice we received and that its high quality is reflected in that of the Bill we have before us at the present time. It only remains for me to express the hope that my fellow Members will consider that the Bill deserves their support. I would especially like to thank for their co-operation the Hon. Members for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis), Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) and Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), who are, I believe, going to speak on the Bill. I want to thank them for their co-operation because it is thanks to them that the House will be able to pass this Bill fairly rapidly this morning, on second reading.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-163, an Act to establish the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, has finally made it to the floor of the House of Commons and frankly, Mr. Speaker, it is damn near time.

Before I deal with the substance of the Bill I intend to take a few moments to deal with the timing of this very important piece of legislation. It is intriguing that in introducing the Bill—and I have not discussed what was to be said—the cadence of the Minister's remarks ties in with mine so that I can discuss them as I speak.

The July issue of the Canadian version of the Reader's Digest has as its lead story and article entitled "Air Safety—The Shocking Record". In that article of five pages, condensed in the manner of Reader's Digest, are a number of statements guaranteed to give the millions of readers, and especially those who are regular fliers, a very real fear of flying in general, and of flying in Canada in particular. The article speaks of an accident in Vancouver Harbour in which 11 people were killed, stating that the investigation was confused and delayed. The last sentence of the paragraph is, "Still no preventive action was taken".

The article goes on to discuss the actions of Mr. Justice Dubin, stating:

> He encountered a shocking record of neglect and cover-up in the Canadian Air Transport Administration, the very agency charged with air safety.

After a series of sensational statements such as this, the article concludes by saying that the Parliament of Canada must act in this matter.

The Parliament of Canada has been prepared to act for a long time, Mr. Speaker. The Minister mentioned the Aeronautics Act which will be put before us for changes in the fall. Recently, that Act has been universally condemned by many aviation authorities. The amendments are very necessary. I hope the second part of this dual set of legislation will not be so hard to get started through the House.

The Bill we are discussing today was ready in late 1982. The Transport Committee, through its Chairman, the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne), and others, is more than willing and has been more than willing to deal with the matter on a priority basis.

The time and effort put into the whole matter do not warrant the delay we have experienced over the past seven months. At the Dubin Commission there were 116 hearings, 350 witnesses gave testimony, there were 26,000 pages of oral testimony, and 30,000 pages of exhibits and other evidence.

Given the accidents of an extremely serious nature in air transportation over the last few weeks, this may be one of the more important pieces of legislation that Parliament will deal with in this session. The Minister called it a giant step. I think any nomenclature of that nature we could give to the Bill could not over estimate or over state the importance of the matter. Yet for the last seven months the Liberal House Leader has refused to bring the Bill before Parliament. Now, in the dying days, we are told that only two hours will be allowed for debate in the House. It must go through committee today and be reported back to the House tomorrow without debate. Is it any wonder that Opposition Parties balk at the heavy-handed, inconsiderate, partisan, and highly political way in which legislation is dealt with by the Government?

The aviation community wanted this Bill dealt with earlier. It did not want the ministerial advisory committee with members of the Canadian Air Transport administration on it taking the slower steps that were taken to hold the legislation up before it got to the House. In an unprecedented show of unanimity ten aviation associations told the Minister of Transport to implement Volume I of the CASB when it was released in May, 1981. Those bodies were the Air Transport Association of Canada, the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association, the Canadian Air Traffic Controllers Association, the Canadia Air Line Flight Attendants Association, the Canadian Air Line Dispatchers Association, International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, the Canadian Owners and Pilots Association, the Royal Canadian Flying Clubs Association, L'Association des Gens de l'Air du Québec, and the Aircraft Operations Group.

There will necessarily be a number of bodies such as these which will want to speak on the Bill in committee. I am delighted to report that these associations, given the very short notice, have made a real effort, either to attend this afternoon on the assumption that, as we have agreed, we will put the Bill through the House this morning—they have agreed to attend, or have already submitted very interesting comments on the Bill.

Let me deal for a moment with the background of the Bill, Mr. Speaker. It is the result of the continuation of the Progressive Conservative Party's 1979 election campaign promise and its implementation by the former Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). He probably contributed more to the competent government of Canada in that short time than any Minister of the Crown. He certainly accomplished more in the Department of Transport, prorated, than any Minister before or since. He was able to convince the Cabinet of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) to appoint Mr. Justice Charles Dubin to a commission of Inquiry on aviation safety.

While he took definitive action and from that action came this legislation, he was not alone in recognizing the need. The Minister spelled out in some detail those who had looked at this matter before and indicated the need for this type of legislation. There were discussion papers from the Air Transport Association of Canada in 1977, and the Bill that the Minister mentioned, Bill C-40, which was not passed by the House.

I have to mention, as did the Minister, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), who has long advocated a multi-mode safety board. I know he is particularly concerned with this Bill and I trust that he will speak on it. Like myself he is happy that we finally have a piece of legislation.

The question that obviously arises is whether we must wait for a Royal commission of inquiry on each subject, or a major catastrophe in each mode of transportation, before we finally get a similar body for marine and surface transportation.

• (1140)

The first report of the commission of inquiry headed by Mr. Justice Dubin, was tabled in May, 1981. The 63 recommendations in Volume 1 of that report dealt with the establishment of an independent Canadian Aviation Safety Board. A year later, in March, 1982, a leading editorial in the Toronto Globe and Mail dealt with the matter, and I quote from that editorial:

> It is all the more necessary to create, as Justice Dubin recommends, an independent body, the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, to investigate aircraft accidents and safety practices.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, two years later, the legislation is being dealt with in this House. It is indeed a sorry record of this Government. In fairness here, I must point out that the fault lies very heavily on the Government House Leader, since I know that the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) tried repeatedly to have this matter brought forward in the past seven months. Indeed, he showed the courtesy to the members of the Standing Committee on Transport to apprise us of the steps he had taken, and to keep us posted along the way on what was happening.

Let me briefly deal with the substance of the Bill, Mr. Speaker. The Board will have jurisdiction over any aviation accident or incident within Canada. I define the word "incident" roughly as a situation which could or may have led to an accident. In addition the Board will have the right to cooperate with other jurisdictions where Canadian aircraft are involved in accidents or incidents outside Canada, and with the Department of National Defence in Canada. The Board will have the right to conduct public inquiries for the purpose of finding the causes and making recommendations, but, as the Minister said, not to apportion blame.

The Board will have the right to enter, inspect, seize and protect, and all of those things which the Minister mentioned, as part of its ability to carry on a proper investigation. I am a little upset that we have no idea of what the regulations will be. Obviously, much of what will happen will be carried out within the regulations. I fully agree that the members of the Board should be given the full opportunity to participate in the formulation of those regulations. However, I would have like to have seen some draft outlines of regulations, because there are a few matters in the Bill which are not as clear as I feel they should be.

In my opinion, and I am sure in the opinion of a number of my collegues, it would have been a much better piece of legislation in this instance had the Government followed more closely the recommendations of Mr. Justice Dubin. For example, the recommendations of Mr. Justice Dubin specifically included that certain present functions of the Department of Transport be transferred to the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, including the Aviation Safety Bureau, the Aviation Safety Engineering Division, the Aviation Safety Analysis Division, and the Aviation Safety Promotion Division, none of which are explicit in the Bill. When Canadians read articles such as that which I quoted a few moments ago from the Reader's Digest, I am sure that they would want to expect an independent body to have charge of these functions, given the lack of care taken by the Canadian Air Transport Administration in the past.

I am delighted to see the Minister nodding his head as though, in a sense, there is a good rapport between the Minister and myself. Perhaps that will happen. If it does, I would be delighted.

In order to avoid any conflict of interest, the Dubin Report recommended that a Minister, other than the Minister of Transport, be responsible in the House of Commons for the new safety board. Once again, that Minister is not named in the Bill. The Bill also states that the Board shall send a draft report of accidents or incidents to that Minister on a confidential basis. While I can certainly appreciate the need for confidentiality with regard to cockpit tapes and other pieces of information which may, in fact, he vital to any subsequent criminal or civil trial, nonetheless, there was never any specific recommendation of confidentiality in the Dubin Report, and I doubt that there is quite the need for confidentiality as is outlined in the Bill. It will be very interesting to see exactly how this is dealt with in the regulations. I appreciated the remarks of the Minister a few moments ago when he spelled out in his three examples the possibility of making available certain information in certain instances. However, we will have to see how that works.

I fully understand, Mr. Speaker, that for a Board as important and as new as this one, there will necessarily be a breaking-in period during which the Board will have to proceed very carefully and cautiously, because, obviously it will be breaking new ground in the area of the administration of air safety. It does, however, Mr. Speaker, follow the Government's penchant for secrecy. It is interesting, in light of the freedom of information legislation which is with us right now, that some of these matters are included in this Bill.

An editorial in the Winnipeg Free Press a little over a week ago stated:

There is no reason why it has taken ten years for appropriate legislation to be acted upon in Parliament. The number of accidents in which the present investigator, the Ministry of Transport, was itself involved in its dual role of regulator of the aviation industry, has been growing at a rate which demands prompt action to create an independent board.

This, Mr. Speaker, is just one of many examples of the growing cry within the community for the Board with which we are asked to deal today. The editorial went on to say that the Bill, having been introduced as it was about two weeks ago, left only two weeks in the spring session of Parliament, and again quoting the editorial, "There is some suspicion that the Bill has surfaced not so much on its own merits but as a matter so desired by responsible Members that they may be willing to ease up on the more controversial legislation."

I can tell the House, Mr. Speaker, and the Minister knows this, that the Bill has surfaced because the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East, the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), myself, and others have been hammering at the Minister. In fairness to him, he has been trying for lo these past few months to get this Bill before the House. It is an important piece of legislation and we all recognize the necessity for it. It is only because of the major importance of this piece of legislation that those Hon. Members I have mentioned, and myself, are bending the regulations and the rules in order to deal with it as expeditiously as we are.

I have already in my possession, as I said earlier, recommendations and suggestions from those air associations which I have mentioned. Their comments must, of necessity, be given a major priority and, indeed, this afternoon we will deal with them at some length. I am purposely making my comments brief, Mr. Speaker. I know others want to get involved in this debate. Everyone involved in air safety is bending over backwards to accommodate this particular piece of legislation.

A committee meeting is tentatively called for this afternoon on the assumption that the Bill will pass. The witnesses who wish to come before the committee are in place, again assuming that the Bill will pass. We are prepared, all of us, to deal with it expeditiously. There will not be major changes made in the Bill, if any. Frankly, we do not like the idea of having this Bill pushed on us in this second or third last day of the sittings of the House of Commons before the summer recess. However, as the Minister has said, it is a giant step. It is a most important piece of legislation and, because of that, we are going to deal with it as expeditiously as possible. The tragedy, Mr. Speaker, is that we are having to go about it in this manner when it has been sitting idle for the last seven months.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I am speaking today with some very mixed feelings about the particular legislation before us and the way in which it is being handled. I would like to comment particularly on some of the remarks made by the previous speaker.

• (1150)

I returned from my constituency late last night to find this Bill was in fact up for debate today. I was absolutely astounded this morning to come into the House and find it to be the intention of the Government to push the Bill through committee, report stage, and final reading tomorrow. Let me say at the outset that I have no part in this and I totally disagree with this approach, and I will elaborate why.

One of the comments that Mr. Justice Dubin made as a result of his investigation concerned interference by the Ministry of Transport in the activities of the air safety investigation group. One of the primary thrusts of this Bill is to separate those two groups. Therefore, the public is in no way in jeopardy if we continue this process through to the fall and the investigation units are allowed to conduct their competent thorough investigations and report them in a fair and open manner. If that happens, serious accidents, which happen from time to time in aviation, can be investigated and the important points brought to light. But I would like to re-emphasize that the public would be in no further jeopardy if we maintain this same procedure until the fall. The Bill should go through second reading today, be referred to committee, and then all parties who presented material to the Dubin inquiry should have an opportunity to comment on this Bill.

It is not correct to say, Mr. Speaker, that the people who were so instrumental in bringing out critical information before the Dubin Commission have had a chance to peruse this Bill. I am speaking today without having had an opportunity of perusing the Bill in the way I would have liked, to compare it with Mr. Justice Dubin's recommendations, work through some of the details, and have a chance to think about them. Concerning the groups that have been contacted to appear in committee, some have attempted to put together a brief quickly, but certainly I suspect they have not had any greater opportunity to think about the Bill. I am pleased that someone managed to produce for me briefs from two organizations which will attempt to appear tonight. I have had telephone conversations with other organizations which have spent thousands of dollars and put in thousands of hours in an attempt to enhance air safety in Canada.

One group were approached and asked if they would like to appear, but the notice was too short for them to be able to prepare anything suitable for the committee, so they will not be attending the committee meeting. They have had no opportunity to examine the legislation in the kind of detail they feel is necessary. They have itemized two serious problems they want to have more time to look at before they come forward. Their final comment is that this is too serious a matter to stuff through in an afternoon.

My research assistant is in the lobby this afternoon trying to run through a group of organizations to get their response to the jamming through of this Bill.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, it was my understanding that this legislation would pass through second reading, and I would like to see that happen. We could then move to committee with an opportunity to talk about the Bill, and talk to the Minister about possible changes or further clarification of questions we have. Then we could use the summer to solicit input from organizations responsible for making the Dubin Commission the successful inquiry it was. We could give them a fair chance to examine the Bill, something this whole country would benefit from because of their expertise. But unfortunately that is not being done. I think the Government is just being totally and completely irresponsible in doing this. It is more concerned about the House Leader's scorecard than aviation safety.

It might be interesting, Mr. Speaker, to examine this material in the context of the Government's proposal for changes to the Aeronautics Act. I appeal to the Minister to release the draft of those changes as soon as possible so that people can have a reasonable opportunity to comment on and look at this particular legislation in conjunction with those changes.

The Dubin Commission has to be one of the most successful Commissions ever undertaken in Canada. First, it was not this Government which appointed the Commission. It was in fact the Opposition when they were in Government. I think that had a nice touch to it in that it was slightly more open and comprehensive than it might otherwise have been. But that is only speculation. However, many people were very impressed with the product. It might be useful to consider having a variety of input into the appointment of such commissions in order to round out the various points of view.

Another interesting thing I found in going through the Commission's material is that many employee groups were involved. It was the unions, organized labour, and the Government's own employees who came forward with information. There were attempts by the Government to stop them from testifying before the Commission. But they made a very great contribution, and I would go so far as to say that had they not made that contribution we would not have had the report before us today.

There were senior officials within the air transport administration who attempted to rewrite accident reports or have accident investigators modify their reports. That was a major reason for the lack of confidence in the procedures; it was not the air accident investigators, it was the senior officials. On page 25 of the Commission's report there is reference to a memo to a regional controller which says, "You are to fully consider the possibility of embarrassment to the Minister and any other potential political implications which may result from suspensions". This is absolutely astounding.

Mr. Pepin: You have given it a special meaning.

Mr. Skelly: What I am suggesting, Mr. Speaker, is not to point the finger of criticism, because we have to recognize that there are changes being made. But given the fact that some of the soundest recommendations in Mr. Dubin's report came about because of the commitment of hundreds if not thousands of hours of time by the Government's own employees, perhaps there is some room in this legislation for a permanent advisory body made up of selected individuals representing employee groups. The Minister might consider that in order to facilitate their input.

Another thing to note, Mr. Speaker, is that probably some of the worst examples of labour relations in Government are those between the air administration employees and its management. Hopefully restructuring of that organization will result in better employee relations and a better opportunity for employees to have meaningful consultation with management on matters which affect air safety and that of transportation in general. Those relations must be improved, and there is really no visible public indication at this point in time that that kind of improvement is under way.

It is critically important that along with this legislation air transport administration, employee relations and the mechanisms for providing advisory input be strengthened and improved. I would just use an example of one area of which the Minister and many others are aware. It stems from the Cranbrook crash which has been discussed at length by government and involves a litany of errors. I think that maybe even Mr. Justice Dubin erred in recommending that positive control of vehicles on the runway be given to flight radio operators. These people are dealing with vehicles on runways at remote airports. They could be hundreds of miles away. They are also faced with controlling vehicles in areas where they cannot see the runway. Individuals have come forward and reported errors and in some places disciplinary action has been taken. They have asked for provisions in their contract that would protect them, and if the tapes are searched and errors found, that they be used for improving operational standards rather than disciplinary action. At some point in the day, I think the Minister should comment on these peripheral matters that are important to air safety.

Just before I conclude I would like to comment on some of the other occurrences in general aviation that disturb me. I wonder if this is not part of the mechanism by which the Government is trying to improve air safety, and that is by driving people out of aviation. I am very concerned about the move that I see toward dramatically increasing costs and restrictions on flying which I do not think will particularly increase safety. It is incumbent upon the Government to show where its proposals will increase safety.

I recently had an opportunity to peruse a document released by a senior official of the Department of Transport which listed a number of recommendations about restraining private and general aviation. The rationale for so doing was the Dubin Report. In all honesty, some of the recommendations were solid but in other areas they were not. The additional restrictions and constraints would simply result in driving up the cost of aviation and driving people out of the business.

I would like to give some recent examples. Parking fees have become absolutely astronomical. The Government argues that it is doing a cost recovery program, but it drove virtually every private aircraft out of the Port Hardy airport. They have all moved away and people have sold off their aircraft and have ceased becoming involved in flying any more. What revenue there was has been lost. My thought is that maybe it is simply reducing the number of people flying and therefore the potential for accidents is being removed.

There is also a monopoly involving fuel costs at airports. It is time there was an inquiry into how ordinary 80-octane and 100-octane gas for airplanes, which is virtually the equivalent to regular unleaded gas at the service station, can cost in excess of 60 cents a litre. It is just ridiculous. Maybe we should be considering the manner in which those concessions are granted and those prices arrived at airports, because it is driving people out of aviation. It will certainly reduce the number of accidents if people do not or cannot fly.

Radio licensing, a complete aggravation, has increased 100 per cent with absolutely no rationale for so doing.

Mr. Fulton: Was it the six and five?

Mr. Skelly: No, the six and five is a matter with which we can deal later.

Mr. Pepin: That's before six and five.

Mr. Skelly: Concerning occupational training, there are many people who are still interested in becoming pilots, air crew and whatnot. However, the cost of occupational training is astronomical. To obtain a private licence costs in the order of $3,500. God knows what a full 200 hours of flying time to obtain a commercial licence is worth. If one wants 40 more hours for an instrument rating or one wants to obtain an ATR or senior commercial licence, it is beyond the reach of most people, yet the Government moved not too long ago to restrict the claiming of a deduction on income tax. It is quite prepared to put up student loans and facilitate, to whatever degree, other training programs, but it does not provide a reasonable opportunity for the people who want to pursue a career in aviation. The expense is beyond belief and simple assistance with income tax to bona fide individuals pursuing that field would be useful.

Mr. Pepin: Some of those fees have not been increased for 30 years.

Mr. Skelly: Some of those fees have not been increased for 30 years, the Minister says, but there have been dramatic increases. If there is any doubt about it, I would be more than pleased to show him concrete examples of where the increases in fees have driven people out of aviation, and these increases are simply not justified.

I would simply be very cautious to ensure that there is a great deal of consultation about the way in which restrictions are placed on the flying public, because I am certain that it is not the intention of the Government to drive people out of aviation. There is an argument for cost recovery. There is an argument for restrictions on certain kinds of activities. However, this must be carefully considered because people are being driven out today in, I would say, record numbers.

Mr. Pepin: The total cost recovery is 5 per cent to 10 per cent.

Mr. Skelly: I hope the Minister has a chance to respond just before the Bill goes through. There have been some very serious aviation accidents. Maybe we in the House are a little bit guilty of blowing them out of proportion at times. It is unfortunate that we must do that in order to catch attention and gain a freer flow of information on matters that concern us and the people we represent.

It still strikes me that the most dangerous part of flying, as the old adage says, is driving to the airport. Per passenger mile, we should probably be spending much money and effort on highway safety, or at least the equivalent, where costs for damage, death and injury are astronomical. Nevertheless, air safety is vitally important. More and more people fly. The Bill before us today is a start in the right direction. It is extremely unfortunate that the Government has chosen to move in this manner and that it is intending to push the Bill through all stages today without allowing consultation with other affected groups which would provide very valuable input.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, when I first raised, in this Chamber, the question of separating the departmental regulatory responsibilities from those of its investigative arm back in 1967, some 16 years ago, I thought that perhaps the wisdom of simply removing any potential reason to believe conflict of interest might arise or could arise would in fact occur to Government and to Members of Parliament and that very shortly we might resolve the matter. But by 1968 or 1969, nothing had happened. By 1970, nothing had happened.

Therefore I took it upon myself to consult with the transportation industry in Canada. Without exception, as the Minister is aware, everyone agreed that there should be our a priori independent commission to consider transportation occurrences. I remind the House of interprovincial transport of gas and oil, the possibility of moving grain by pipelines, all the way through to the operations of ferries in our country, air transport, trucking—the whole range of transport that falls under or is touched upon one way or another by federal regulation. It still needs the attention of this Chamber. Thirteen years is too long to achieve one-third of the required independence that will not only aid transportation so it is seen to be safe but to in fact be safe. The surface mode and marine mode remain to be dealt with.

I accept the work of Justice Dubin because it was necessary. His report was very much to the point and told Canadians of the horror story in flying. While pilots occasionally tell us that flying involves hours of boredom, the beginning of these flights hold moments of terror and there are always moments of terror at their end. The same is quite true for passengers except they are not quite as aware of the terror. That same terror still exists in the minds of people who travel on our trains, highways and ferries and in those who work on our ships.

If it has taken us 13 years or longer to achieve an independent commission with respect to air travel, I must ask if we must wait another 13 years for marine transport and then another 13 years for similar commissions with respect to surface transport. The Minister is correct that this new body will provide a good learning experience for us in this country. However, we have had 13 years to learn. Indeed we have had 100 years to learn about transportation.

As far as removing any question of conflict of interest is concerned, we should be taking action today on the three primary modes of transportation in this country. I accept the fact that this legislation represents a first step. I am pleased to join with my colleague for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis) and my friend for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) in welcoming what I hope is just the first step. As I have suggested, if we must wait another 13 years for a similar piece of legislation dealing with marine safety, then what will become of the lessons that we will learn from Mr. Justice Hickman's inquiry into the Ocean Ranger disaster currently taking place in Newfoundland? Will we have to wait another ten years after his report before we determine that there is a need for independence of investigation in that area of transportation as it relates to safety, minimum requirements, construction, operation, repair and inspection?

We know what Judge Hugessen said in his report on the shipboard fire which occurred Christmas Eve, 1981. We know the contents of another judge's report with respect to the accident involving dangerous gases which occurred in urban Toronto approximately four years ago. Why has action not been taken on these recommendations? I am sure the Minister is aware of this concern because he has acknowledged the urgency to take action.

There are many questions to be asked. The Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River has related some areas with which he is concerned. He has stated his concern that members of the general aviation community in this country will not have an opportunity to deal with the issues in detail. I share that concern and I am also concerned about how the Board will be able to fulfil its mandate within the parameters of this Act within a completely independent milieu. I am not satisfied that it will happen.

Notwithstanding that, this Bill does represent a giant step toward safety in Canadian skies and I therefore must welcome this legislation. I hope that it will provide the experience to form the basis of similar pieces of legislation dealing with maritime and surface transportation matters. To do anything less on our part would be irresponsible.

Justice Dubin, in recommending this step, did not preclude and indeed suggested that similar legislation respecting the other two modes of transportation might very well produce the same type of thrust. My concern is that I do not want to wait another 12 years and another 12 years after that for similar legislation. I do not see any reason why we cannot establish an a priori independent body which would have that first responsibility in all areas.

When dealing with this legislation this afternoon, I hope we will have an opportunity to deal with it clause by clause so that I may ask questions that concern me. I was concerned about certain questions when I drafted a multimodal bill very similar to this legislation in the 1960s. I am sure those questions will be answered in some depth today and I hope the Minister will be with us in committee this afternoon. Will he?

Mr. Pepin: There will be good people answering your question.

Mr. Forrestall: We certainly want you and your experts as well. I think we will be able to clear up a number of questions about which we are concerned.

I do not see the need to delay this matter any longer because certain institutional groups in the general aviation community will not have a full opportunity to appear before us to make their views known. This does not concern me because I know that the institutional aviation groups in this country in general, from our major domestic carriers to the manufacturing and operational side, have been concerned about this matter for some time. There are very few measures in this Bill of which specific interested groups in the aviation community have not been made aware, have not helped develop or have not been consulted in their development. After consultation with the Provinces, I am satisfied that the intent of the Bill with respect to jurisdiction is acceptable to them.

I do have some concern about other investigative processes. For example, the Bill does not embrace the military. This could cause difficulty because if one area is excluded there may be a tendency to exclude other areas. I believe this should have been a priority. But this matter can be pursued in committee and experience may prove that the Bill is either correct or incorrect in the exclusivity.

It is important that we have taken the first step and I hope it will lead to increased awareness of aviation safety. I also hope this is a workable Bill which will form the basis for similar legislation in the near future which will cover marine and service transport matters. I suggest to the Minister that if he does not make a start quickly, as soon as we have a by-election in Central Nova and other events take place, whoever is the next Minister of Transport in this country will not live in peace until the legislation is in place.

• (1220)

In closing, may I just congratulate the Minister and his officials for having lost two of the children but having saved one. Again, I regret the delay, as other Member have and as I am sure the Minister has. I will not attach blame to that; suffice it to say that the Bill is now in front of us and pray God that this legislation will be the basis for enhanced general aviation safety and control in this country.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I want to clarify one aspect. I know the previous speaker has been very involved in this particular topic. He had a chance to draft the Bill which he had put forward in a multimodal approach. It was an excellent proposition and it is unfortunate that it has not been brought forward.

However, there is one aspect to his remarks on which I would like a little elaboration. I am referring to the suggestion that we should go ahead quickly with the Bill. This Bill will be approved in principle in a few minutes. It will then go to committee. Essentially, it will be well on its way to being passed. Two and a half months is a very short time in which to have an examination or to have input from people who work continuously in this field.

Let me just give an example of where one of the problems arose. The Canadian Airline Flight Attendants Association is involved on a day to day basis with safety in aircraft. This group was invited to examine the Bill, but unfortunately the Ministry, because of its excellent relations with that organization, sent it to the person who was the president three years ago. The Association saw the Bill just yesterday for the first time. As the group's comments would indicate, it is not very pleased with that kind of liaison and consultation. Most of the organizations that we have contacted, and we are going to use the phones right now to find out where they are, are also not pleased that they have not had an opportunity to comment.

Since it appears that we will, in fact, pass the Bill, it having been approved in principle, would the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) not concede that it would be advantageous to slow down for a few moments to allow those people who put so much time and energy into the Dubin Report an opportunity to peruse and put together something for our consideration which may help us to fine tune this Bill?

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, with all defence to a distinguished assistant of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), that is a hell of a faux pas. I was not aware of that and it is a matter of regret. I am not suggesting it would not be useful or helpful to the committee, to Parliamentarians, the Minister and to Government itself to have had the benefit of these briefs. What I was suggesting was that there are, to the best of my knowledge, no institutional groups within this air transport community that have not been fully and widely consulted and have not had the opportunity to make far reaching and very fair contributions.

This matter has not been under way for two or three months; it has been under way for ten or 15 years. The Standing Committee on Transport is seized now with the Crow Bill. We have outstanding matters of relative importance to the proper conduct of committee work with respect to Air Canada. We have a number of issues already. To refer the report to the Standing Committee on Transport, and to wait another six to eight months before it is dealt with and is sent back into this Chamber, in my judgment would be somewhat irresponsible. I think we should get on with it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Are there any other questions or comments? Debate?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

S.O. 21

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe the next item of business is Bill C-95. In view of the fact that we have dealt with this Bill so expeditiously and sent it to committee, would the House be disposed to call it one o'clock, since the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), has the floor? He is not here at the moment and I know he wants to continue his remarks.

Mr. Smith: Yes, Mr. Speaker, being eminently reasonable on this side we think that is an acceptable suggestion and agree to it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There being unanimous agreement, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 12:26 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

NATIONAL UNITY

ALLEGED DECLARATION BY PREMIER RENÉ LÉVESQUE IN FRANCE

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Madam Speaker, I am rising in the House today to protest against a statement made yesterday in France by René Lévesque, to the effect that the next referendum in Quebec will be won by the Separatists, because according to Mr. Lévesque, 100,000 senior citizens will no longer be there to speak out against separatism. His comments are a sad reflection on the extremist mentality of Mr. Lévesque and his feelings of vindictiveness vis-à-vis senior citizens. He is practically wishing a speedy demise on the senior citizens who built Quebec and defended its traditions and language well before the Separatists or Lévesque himself. It shows a lack of tact, of judgment, of charity and of gratitude to those who deserve our gratitude, love and respect. Madam Speaker, these words spoken by the Premier of Quebec reflect a morally and socially cynical outlook and the attitude that the end justifies the means. Today, I am ashamed of the Premier of Quebec, and I am therefore speaking out on behalf of millions of Quebecers who respect our senior citizens and want to live in a Quebec that is free of separatism and part of a prosperous Canada that respects its senior citizens.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

QUESTIONNAIRE RESPONSE IN FAVOUR OF CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to release the results of 2,567 written responses to a questionnaire distributed in May, 1983, on the testing of the Cruise missile. First, the findings reveal overwhelming support for NATO's decision to deploy Pershing II and Cruise missiles in western Europe to counter the imbalance created by the Soviet deployment of over 300 mobile SS-20 missiles. Second, the vast majority favours Canada testing the unarmed Cruise missile in Canada.

The results of the questionnaire are as follows:

Do you believe that our western allies should station Pershing II and Cruise missiles in western Europe if the Russians fail to remove some 315 triple-headed SS-20 missiles threatening western Europe?

Those people who answered yes, 84 per cent.

The next question was:

Do you believe Canada should remain in NATO?

Those who answered yes, 95.8 per cent.

The third question was:

Do you believe Canada should agree to have the unarmed Cruise missile tested at Cold Lake, Alberta?

Those who answered yes, 79 per cent; those who answered no, 21 per cent.

The results of this poll cause me to believe firmly that Canada should encourage and promote positive discussions at all levels of disarmament negotiations. However, I do not feel world peace can be achieved from a position of perceived weakness. The strength of the NATO Alliance holds the key to our quest for peace and our survival as a free society.

NATIONAL UNITY

ALLEGED DECLARATION BY PREMIER RENÉ LÉVESQUE IN FRANCE

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 21, I wish to inform my colleagues in the House of the indignation of Quebec senior citizens following a statement made in Paris by Premier René Lévesque which I would call the PQ's euthanasia policy. Madam Speaker, I would like to quote from this week's issue of the magazine, Le nouvel observateur:

Quebec in the news

René Lévesque:

"The younger generation will decide—"

Madam Speaker, I would like to quote the interview given by the Premier, appearing in Le nouvel observateur on page 43, and I quote:

In 1980, we lost the referendum on sovereignty. In 1985, however—when the next consultation will probably take place—, hundreds of thousands of voters among those who had been "scared stiff" at the prospect of separation—especially the elderly—will have disappeared, while hundreds of thousands of young people will become eligible to vote.

This is what Premier Lévesque had to say about senior citizens. Madam Speaker, it would seem that the PQ has added a new chapter to its catechism on the independence of Quebec, namely, the elimination of senior citizens. Unfortunately for our Premier, his words have merely served to make his dissatisfaction with the present situation known to all Canadians.

EMPLOYMENT

JOB-CREATION PROGRAM URGED FOR SMALL BUSINESS SECTOR

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, the funding set aside in the budget for job creation indicates that the Government is attempting to address some of the concerns of the unemployed. However, these programs are far from ideal.

Why must it be that to qualify for grants one must be planning something cute or unusual? It seems that the person with a small manufacturing plant who is not involved in research or promotion is out of luck. Why should money only go to hire people who have exhausted their UIC benefits or who have to qualify in other complicated ways?

The time has come for a simpler program, one that will help small business, and on a permanent basis. Looking at cases which have qualified, it seems that jobs are only being created for periods from a few months to at most one year. After that we are back to square one. What is the point?

It makes sense to me that the money now going to assist in hiring part-time help for make-work programs of questionable value should go to aid businesses in expanding production. These businesses would hire people on a more permanent basis and help our economy to blossom once again. This would be the logical first step to take in removing the mystery from job-creation programs and in helping out the average person on the street.

S.O. 21

PLEA FOR ALL PARTIES TO CREATE BETTER OPPORTUNITIES

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I am very grateful to you and to many other persons who had something to say about a birthday I celebrated a week or so ago. I really want to say that it has caused me to do a lot of thinking, to realize that I am 75 years of age and that I have been very effectively involved in things in this country for the last 50 or 60 years.

What impresses me is that persons involved in political efforts should be concerned about the real problems of our time. I am conscious of the fact that some of us have worked on pensions, health, housing, and things like that. If we have been a political force, it is because we have been dealing with something urgent and important. Even if there are ten, 20 or 50 years ahead of us, there are terribly important problems facing us right now, and I think of the question of employment. To me this calls not only for finding money for jobs for a million or a million and a half people who do not have jobs. We must also train people to take part in the kinds of new things which are being developed and will create the kind of life we will know in Canada.

What will be our future will depend very much upon what political efforts we make, not only mine and those of my friends, but those of all of us. My plea is that all Parties in the House take note of this terribly important issue, not only as it concerns funds but as it concerns training to educate people, so that we play a part in building the kind of life we want with the things in it which will make life better for the next 30 years or 40 years. That should be our important goal. It is up to us to do that, and I urge all Parties in this Parliament to make that our most important job.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STATEMENT BY FRENCH PRIME MINISTER ON OCCASION OF VISIT BY PREMIER RENÉ LÉVESQUE

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Madam Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to what was said by the Prime Minister of France, Mr. Pierre Mauroy, to his Quebec counterpart, Mr. René Lévesque, during the latter's official visit to Paris.

Prime Minister Mauroy, speaking on behalf of his country, emphasized that the special relationship between Quebec and France should in no way be allowed to affect the normal relations France wishes to have with Canada, its long time ally and friend.

Mr. Mauroy also indicated to Mr. Lévesque that the future of relations between France and Quebec must be economically viable, and I emphasize this economic aspect. I must say that I heartly approve of this new approach taken by the French.

It is true that we must strengthen our trade, technological and industrial relations with France if we want to see French used more often in trade, business and research.

I think that this week, when we are about to celebrate Canada Day, we should rejoice in the new relationship being established between Canada, France and Quebec.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the Liberal Government has become a thorn in the side of the people of Canada. The policies of the Liberals smack of totalitarianism. No longer does the Government even pretend to reflect the thinking of the people of Canada, which any democratic administration should be doing, but rather it continues to tell the people what it considers is good for the people. Let us glance at some of the examples.

Half of the agricultural nation opposed the passage of Canagrex, including practically every agricultural organization in the West, but the Government insisted on passing the Bill just the same. Thousands wanted the buy and sell provisions removed, but the Government said, "No, daddy knows best". Even Canada's national magazine Maclean's called the Bill "a cancerous growth", and the Alberta Report termed it "the big land grab", but the obedient Liberals and their socialist friends passed it just the same.

Then there was the Crow Bill. Almost half of the House of Commons opposed it in its present form, but that did not matter. The Government sneaked in closure, the Liberals passed it and then had the gall to say it was passed by the House of Commons. What about the Holiday Bill changing Dominion Day to Canada Day, passed by 13 Members of Parliament—not even a quorum, a disgraceful way to pass laws, particularly one that destroys some of the wonderful heritage of Canada. We could go on and on.

Any self-respecting Government would say, "The people don't want us, we will resign". But have hope Canada, the PC's under Mr. Mulroney will soon remove the thorn and set Canada free.

TEXTILES AND CLOTHING

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, in the first five months of 1983, clothing imports in Canada increased 26 per cent compared to 1982. In early March, the Minister of State (International Trade) (Mr. Regan) promised the joint committee of employers and employees in the textile and garment industry that he would soon be giving them an answer to their requests for tighter controls on imports. He repeated this promise on March 30, April 21, May 31, and June 13. Imports are continuing, and layoffs are also continuing in Canadian factories, but the Minister still thinks that silence is golden. Has the Minister forgotten that the industry has over 15,000 jobs that have been affected in the riding of Spadina, 12,000 in Laurier, 6,000 in Brome-Missisquoi, 5,000 in Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot, 5,000 in Shefford, 4,000 in Beauharnois-Salaberry, 4,000 in Sherbrooke, 4,000 in Saint-Jean, 3,000 in Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic, 3,000 in Saint-Léonard-Anjou and 3,000 in Beauce.

What does the Minister intend to do for the workers in these ridings who, because of clothing imports, have been replaced by workers in countries where the hourly wage is 39 cents, 25 cents or even 10 cents?

SHIPBUILDING

IMPORTANCE TO QUEBEC OF FRIGATE PATROL CONSTRUCTION CONTRACT

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency-Orléans): Madam Speaker, within the next few weeks, the Government will have to decide which consortium will draw up detailed specifications for the prototype of the six frigates that will be built as part of a program to modernize Canada's navy.

The Quebec City region is particularly interested in the outcome, since traditionally, shipbuilding has been one of the major industries in this region.

As employment at the Davie shipyards in Lauzon has now reached alarmingly low levels, and since no other major contracts, with the exception of the six frigates, are in the offing, it is absolutely vital for the Quebec region that the Government should retain the services of the Scan-Davie consortium, where it is understood that Davie will build the prototype, thus making this shipyard the leader in this program.

In that case, both the shipyard and its workers could count on having work for many years, because both from the marine technology and shipbuilding point of view, Scan-Davie would be in an excellent position to compete for contracts in NATO countries, where some governments might decide to order the new frigate at some time in the future.

I therefore invite the Government to put its trust in the Scan-Davie consortium, whose proposal complies in every way with the standards and conditions set by the Department of National Defence.

AIR CANADA

LOCATION OF HEAD OFFICE—LETTER WRITTEN BY FORMER CLERK OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It concerns a matter we have not touched on for a few days. In view of the Transport Committee's decision this morning to postpone Air Canada matters until September 13 when the Chairman and President of Air Canada will be recalled as witnesses, can the Minister tell the House why Michael Pitfield, then Clerk of the Privy Council, wrote to the Minister about the future development of the McGill College Avenue area of Montreal, which was one of the places where Air Canada was considering locating its head office?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I would think it would be normal for Mr. Pitfield in his former capacity to write to me or to other Ministers expressing his views or the views of the Prime Minister on matters of this kind. I do not see anything abnormal in that.

MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH CHAIRMAN

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister does not think there is anything unusual about this, is he prepared to table the letter and any other correspondence so that there will be no question of any improper advice?

After the Minister received the letter, and as a result of the letter, did the Minister call in the Chairman of Air Canada, Mr. Rene Amyot, and discuss the contents of the letter with him, especially in view of the fact that the letter appeared to have been influenced by or directed to have been written by the Chairman?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the letter comes under the "advice to the Minister" category and consequently is not one that would be made public. My hon. friend seems to be well informed of the content. It was a suggestion that, if at all needed, I should pay particular attention to the developments taking place in Montreal on the decision with respect to the purchase of a headquarters.

I did much more than was referred to in the letter. I sense that my hon. friend might have seen it. I went to Montreal where I spent a full day with the two main candidates studying their plans. I talked extensively to the personnel of Air Canada, the Chairman and the President and I developed my own feelings about the whole subject. Later on the decision was made unanimously by the Board of Air Canada in the way which my hon. friend knows.

Mr. Nowlan: If there is no real problem with the letter, if it could be tabled, it would help to clarify this matter, which has many confusing elements to it. I hope the Minister might see his way clear to do that.

NATURE OF DISCUSSIONS WITH CHAIRMAN

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, the Minister did not quite answer my second question. As a result of the letter, did the Minister call in the Chairman of the Board of Air Canada and discuss the contents of that letter with him? As a result of that conversation did he tell, direct, or suggest to the Chairman of Air Canada that he should have no further discussion with the Clerk of the Privy Council, Michael Pitfield, or the Prime Minister, unless there was a member of the Minister's staff or someone representing the Minister present?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, as I said, I went to Montreal. The Chairman, the President, and staff of Air Canada were there. The two main candidates, Trizec and Quebec Première, came there to make representations, with drawings and explanations, and answered questions. The Chairman was there and, as we were going along, I had discussions with him. A few days later there was a meeting of the board of Air Canada at which members made the decision to go the Trizec way. It was unanimous. What else could I have done?

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

DESIGNATION OF SECRETARY OF STATE'S RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I too will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

The Deputy Prime Minister will know that the Special parliamentary Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped recommended the appointment of a Minister of State responsible for the status of disabled persons, some two years ago. I wonder if the Deputy Prime Minister could tell the House whether or not that appointment will be made later this day or in the near future, and if he could further tell us who it is likely to be, and to which Department that person will be attached.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I will try to answer the question not as the Deputy Prime Minister but as the Acting Prime Minister. There is a great difference between the two.

On behalf of the Prime Minister I am pleased to announce that the Secretary of State who, since 1981 and up until now, had been co-ordinator in this area, will now be the Minister responsible for the status of disabled persons with a mandate to be responsive and to proselytize for their concerns and their needs, both in Government and outside of Government. I am very, very pleased to be the one to announce this.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: I would like to say two other things if I may, Madam Speaker. I would like to observe the presence in the gallery today of representatives of the handicapped community, and I pay homage to them and to their courage.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: I would also like to pay tribute to the Special Committee of the House of Commons on the Disabled and Handicapped people. This was of course an all-Party committee. Their report, entitled "Obstacles", has become a classic. I understand the Committee is coming to retirement this year and I would like to pay my respects to all of the Members of the Committee and particularly to the distinguished chairman.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Government for taking a half step forward.

REQUEST THAT PERMANENT COMMITTEE BE APPOINTED

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I think it was recommended that there be a separate appointment of a Minister of State responsible for handicapped persons. If I understand correctly, the Minister answered my question by saying that this will be an added responsibility for the current Secretary of State. If I am confused about that, I hope the Minister will straighten me out.

Second, I would like to follow up on the Minister's praise for the Special Committee and ask him whether or not it is the Government's intention to turn that Special Committee into a permanent standing committee of the House. We on this side of the House would support such an initiative with a great deal of enthusiasm, and I hope there will be a positive response to that request.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend is right. The Secretary of State will add to his responsibilities the one I have indicated, but that is quite normal. The Minister of State for Mines is also responsible for the status of women and, as we all know, she does that job extremely well. The Secretary of State will do likewise.

With respect to half measures, I do not think that this is worth underlining because I do not think it is a fair measure. This afternoon the Secretary of State will table the third report which will indicate once again, as the two previous reports did, the dedication and commitment of the Government to that objective, Third, I do not know and in fact I doubt if there is any intention of converting the committee to a permanent one.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF ASSISTANT MAYOR OF SAINT-MALO, MR. ALBERT-YVES SAËR

Madam Speaker: The House is aware that next year, we shall be celebrating the 450th anniversary of the first voyage to Canada by the explorer Jacques Cartier, when he took possession of New France on behalf of King Francis I. I am very pleased to draw the attention of the House to the distinguished presence in our gallery of the Assistant Mayor of Saint-Malo, Mr. Albert-Yves Saër, who is in charge of organizing the festivities in that city.

THE ECONOMY

EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT RESTRAINT PROGRAM ON UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance in anticipation of the Prime Minister's televised statement on the economy tonight.

The Minister might be aware that Bishop Proulx and the Catholic Bishops have said that in our present economic system people are organized to serve the economy rather than the economy serving the people. Would the Minister agree that the six and five program has not led to full employment, and that that is the real failure of the six and five program?

Would the Minister tell Members of the House what we are to say to the 22-year old Canadian who will never find a job, to the middle-aged Canadian woman who has been laid off because of technological change, and finally, to the labourer and carpenter who are working three months out of 12? In other words, what are we to say to the unemployed in Canada, and what does the Government intend to do, aside from the six and five program?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the New Democratic Party is again showing that it has practically no solutions to offer. They do not even have enough imagination to assume there is a sensible answer to the question they are asking. First of all, I would like to make it clear to the Hon. Member that the purpose of the 6 and 5 program was not to create full employment at a moment's notice. The program was aimed at reducing inflation, the result being that we would be able to reduce interest rates, the economy would recover, investment and economic activity would start up again and employment would rise. The purpose of 6 and 5 was basically the creation of jobs in Canada for Canadians. We never claimed that this would happen immediately, but the fact is that during the past year, since the 6 and 5 program was introduced, we have been able to cut inflation in half. We have brought interest rates down from 20 per cent to about 11 per cent. We have been able to create some 330,000 jobs since last November. Economic growth has been constant during the past six months. Economic recovery has been very strong, and we are, of course, hoping to create as many jobs as possible, as soon as possible, for all Canadians. However, we do not have a magic solution, any more than the New Democratic Party does.

[English]

APPLICATION OF PROGRAM

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the same Minister. Thirty-four years ago almost to the month, the present Prime Minister went before workers in Asbestos, Quebec, and, I am told, spoke with passion about liberty and equality. Would the Minister agree that the six and five program has been unequal in its application to Canadians, and would the Minister agree that the present economic system is unequal, in the sense that there has only been a profit recovery, and no recovery for the workers of Canada? Let the Minister answer the question with some policies.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the six and five program has been unequal in the sense that it has not applied to the poorest of the poor and to the people who are in need in the country. The programs designed to help them, have already been fully indexed, as has been the case with old age pensioners, with recipients of the child tax credit, and with recipients of unemployment insurance. These people have not seen a ceiling imposed on increases in their benefits.

All through this time we have been very careful to make sure that the people in need in the country are not affected by the six and five per cent limit that we have put on. What we have done, particularly in the Public Service, has been to disallow increases of even 6 per cent and 5 per cent for upper income public servants. The Hon. Member knows that, and he should recognize that. As a matter of fact the Canadian public recognizes that much more than Members of the NDP seem to realize.

BANKS AND BANKING

PROFITS EARNED BY CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, the Canadian Bankers' Association tells us that its return on average equity for the first six months of 1983 is more than 15 per cent. That places it virtually in the most profitable sector of the entire Canadian economy. If this trend continues, 1983 will be the most profitable year in Canadian banking history. My question to the Minister of Finance is a very straightforward one. Would he not agree that the profits now accruing to Canada's chartered banks are being made, by and large, at the expense of Canada's small business sector?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker, but I may add that the Hon. Member is speculating on what the banks' incomes will be during the next six months, and I would suggest that he wait for the year-end results before drawing any conclusions. However, I may remind the Hon. Member that the present trend seems to indicate that bank profits are proportionally the same as they were in 1981. So there has been no radical change from the situation in 1981, when a committee of the House made a study of bank profits and reached the conclusion that they were not excessive. Parliamentarians themselves examined bank profits in 1981 and found they were not excessive.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

INVESTMENT WITH CAST SHIPPING GROUP

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport concerning the last chapter in the sad saga of Cast shipping group. After losing $62 million, and other millions in uncollected accounts, Canadian National has discontinued its negotiations to bail out Cast, and Euro-Canadian Shipholdings Limited has gone into receivership.

Three years after the Minister was warned about the danger of CN investing in Cast, and two and a half years after he said it was a good investment yielding profits, will he acknowledge the error of his ways and admit his mistake and that of Canadian National? More important, will he guarantee to the House of Commons that not one more cent from the public purse will be put into the Cast shipping group for further activities of that defunct organization?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, if my hon. friend and others did not cry wolf in every instance, I might pay some attention to the advice they give me on specific issues, but they are negative to everything so I have no choice. They are "Messrs. No". There might be other circumstances than the one my hon. friend has in mind to explain the difficulties of the Cast ventures.

Be that as it may, as my hon. friend knows, the situation is that negotiations are rather dormant at this time. I have left the Order in Council on the table so that if and when, or when and if, the banks make their move, CN would have a negotiating position. That is the situation now.

Mr. Crosby: Madam Speaker, the Minister is a hound for punishment. Apparently he is going to keep going.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION BY CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, in 1981 when the Minister was bragging about the return from Cast shipping to CN of $10 million, Frank Narby, the principal involved, received $26 million from the Cast shipping group. Can the Minister tell us what happened to these funds? Where did they go? Did Mr. Narby pocket the funds so that they are lost to the Canadian people and the Canadian marine transportation industry? More important, will he allow the Canadian Transport Commission to investigate all of these goings on, and make a report? On that headless organization: When is he going to appoint a chairman for the Canadian Transport Commission?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, when I reported that there was a $10 million profit on a $60 million investment I thought that was pretty good for one year. I thought I was right in rejoicing at that time.

With respect to the investigation of cast by the CTC, that was supposed to take place in September, but I do not know what the CTC will do now. With respect to not investing one more cent in it, I think that this would have been the case, had the deal been made between Cast and CN, because there was no investment by CN in Cast. Money to operate was all that was contemplated at that time.

GRAIN

CASH ADVANCE PAYMENTS—REQUEST FOR INCREASE

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport with regard to cash advances. I have had correspondence and discussions with him on the subject, and I have given him advance notice of the question. Is he in a position to announce an increase in cash advances for the coming crop year, bearing in mind that the last time there was an increase was 1975, and also bearing in mind that there is little likelihood of very much, if any, final payment this year?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the prairie grain advance payment is still before the Committee of the Cabinet. It has strong support from at least three strong men, the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, the Minister of Agriculture, and the Minister of Transport. We are moving, but I do not think we will reach a conclusion before September. My hon. friend can come back in September hoping for good news. With the legislation on the western rail initiative that will be a good reason for him to come back.

Mr. Mayer: Madam Speaker, I had essentially the same answer from the Minister a year ago.

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I would point out to the Minister that for a very small amount of money he could benefit roughly 150,000 farmers in western Canada. I would also point out that the Wheat Board borrows at prime minus one-quarter. If the Government is willing to spend $1.4 billion on an aircraft company in Montreal, surely it could find about 1 per cent of that amount to help prairie farmers, in what is going to be a very difficult cash situation this fall.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I think I was sufficiently open for my hon. friend to understand that I was in sympathy with his argument. I think there is time for updating that level of payment. In the meantime I am sure my hon. friend, who is an expert on grain, will rejoice with me on the settling of the dispute on the West Coast, and on the indications that this year Canada will again break all records for grain exports 28 million tonnes as opposed to 26.1 million tonnes last year.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

AGREEMENT ON IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE MANUFACTURED CARS—INQUIRY RESPECTING JOB CREATION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for International Trade I will put my question to the distinguished Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, so called by the former Minister, regarding the announcement made yesterday about Japanese auto quotas. This new agreement does not include trucks or commercial vehicles, and allows virtually the same number of passenger cars into Canada this year as last year—more than either Ford or Chrysler. In other words, it is another Government stall tactic without getting to the root of the problem, namely, productivity and jobs. Can the Minister tell us honestly and simply how many new Canadian jobs will be created as a result of this new agreement?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I will be happy to tell the Hon. Member that, if he can tell me how many Canadians will buy North American cars in the coming year.

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Speaker, the Minister knows that as as a result of improved economic conditions in the United States there has been an increase in domestic auto sales, but the fact is that Japanese auto imports still exceed both Ford and Chrysler which contribute to Canada's economy and employment, while the Japanese do not. The Minister should know that quotas and import restrictions alone do not create productivity and jobs in Canada.

REQUEST THAT FOREIGN MANUFACTURERS CREATE JOBS IN CANADA

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, may I ask the Minister when the Government is going to stop pussyfooting around with unproductive, band-aid solutions such as that announced yesterday and, instead, establish long-term arrangements to encourage offshore manufacturers to produce or even assemble vehicles in this country? This would create jobs and increase productivity in this country. There are solutions. When is the Minister going to start using them?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): First of all, Madam Speaker, I think my colleague, the Minister of State for International Trade, should be complimented on the agreement he negotiated with the Japanese automobile industry, under the circumstances. The fact is that the share of the domestic market for Japanese cars, which is forecast to be less this year than last year, indicates that there will be an increase in the share of the market for North American automobiles, which addresses the question that the Hon. Member raised.

MINES AND MINING

MINES AT MURDOCHVILLE, P.Q.—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Madam Speaker, as the Member for Gaspé, I would like to welcome the Assistant Mayor of Saint-Malo, Mr. Albert-Yves Saër. We expect to have thousands of French people visiting us next year.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a question? This period is reserved for questions only.

Mr. Cyr: My question is directed to the Hon. Minister of State (Mines).

Last December, I informed the Minister that Gaspé Mines in Murdochville had suspended operations because of the low price of copper. However, the company wanted to remove overburden in order to provide employment for about 300 to 500 workers in the area.

Recently, the newspaper Le Devoir reported from Quebec City that the Province of Quebec had submitted a program to the Minister for a joint development plan for Murdochville, in order to get the area out of its impasse.

Could the Hon. Minister inform the House whether the Government of Canada has refused to take part in a joint project with Quebec for the creation of 500 jobs in Murdochville? And does the Minister intend to provide financial aid—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

• (1440)

[English]

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, as far as I know, no such request has come forward formally from the Government of Quebec. However, we have had a number of meetings with senior officials from Noranda Mines at Gaspé. Our first meetings took place in December of last year, at which time we explained the programs available to them through the use of Section 38 and NEED. We are at the moment continuing our negotiations with the company, and we have already placed some men through these programs.

FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK

APPROVAL OF LOANS—APPLICATION OF CRITERIA

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, my question was to be directed to the Minister of State responsible for small businesses and tourism. If he has left the Chamber, perhaps I may address my question to the Minister of Finance. In his April 19 budget the Minister of Finance stated, "The operating mandate of the FBDB—the Federal Business Development Bank—will be expanded to give it a broader role in supporting Canadian small businesses." However, subsequent memos, copies of which I do have in my possession, Madam Speaker, from the Vice-President, Financial Services, of FBDB, to the regional offices, clearly outline that the new mandate actually prohibits them from lending money to those small businesses which have turned to the Bank as a last resort. Will the Minister tell the House why more stringent criteria have been applied to approving loans, when we were led to believe quite the opposite?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the Hon. Member to repeat the question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rompkey: I only heard the last part of it.

Mrs. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, I can repeat the question. I believe most Members in the Chamber did hear it. I was basically referring to the budget whereby the FBDB was given a broader mandate, and the fact that I have memos in my possession whereby the Vice-President of the Federal Business Development Bank is doing the exact opposite. In the eastern Ontario region since the April 19 budget only nine loans have been approved to small businesses through FBDB. Could the Minister explain this if, indeed, the Government is expanding or giving a broader mandate to the Federal Business Development Bank? Or is it really that the FBDB is going to be phased out, or sold to another financial institution?

Mr. Rompkey: No, Madam Speaker, the latter is not true at all. Indeed, the mandate has been expanded. We asked FBDB to stay into term lending and to expand its counselling program, including the very popular CASE program, and, in addition, to get into what we call "merchant banking", which is really the role of the deal maker for a small business. FBDB, of course, is not necessarily putting in its own money. The message in the budget was that the private sector needs to do the job. It needs to be out front. What we are saying to FBDB is that in putting together those deals, it should access capital in the private sector as a first alternative. Therefore, there is an expanded mandate for FBDB. We have requested FBDB to make sure it serves small business, particularly in rural areas of Canada.

INQUIRY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, since the Minister of State (International Trade) is not in the House, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. For three months the Minister of State (International Trade) has been promising that a position would be taken by the Government, while clothing imports have risen by 26 per cent, compared to 1982. Could the Minister inform the Canadian people what he intends to do about the thousands of workers who are losing their jobs because of unacceptable delay on the part of the Minister, and what kind of jobs the Government intends to provide for these workers, since their industry is becoming extinct? Are these workers—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I think the Hon. Member's question is long enough.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the Minister of State (International Trade) is working on the problem.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROSECUTIONS FOR BROADCASTING PORNOGRAPHIC PROGRAMS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. The Minister has said that the better way of dealing with pornography broadcasting for which the CRTC has given licences, is to prosecute after the fact, using the obscenity laws. Will the Minister explain to the House how the existing law, or even the amendments which he proposed last week, will suffice for pornography broadcasting? How could the law be used for pornographic programs transmitted by satellite, for example? I refer to complaints I have received of taverns showing pornography broadcasts of vicious gang rapes, which are treated as a spectator sport. Is a TV program a "matter" or "thing", as in his legislation? Would he not agree that the language of Section 159(1) and (2) of the Criminal Code is hopelessly out of date?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I do not recall expressing any opinion that there should not be any special provisions for the broadcasting situation. I certainly have taken the position many times that the existing law on obscenity, and the amendment which I proposed last week, do apply and should apply to the broadcasting area, as to all others.

The Hon. Member asks how this would apply in the situation which she raises. Usually, with an earth satellite station or a cable company, there is no problem in convicting in a case of that kind. In fact one was convicted very recently in this vicinity for showing obscene representations. Nor, Madam Speaker, should there be any problem in the case of an hotel owner or a pub owner who is showing obscene representations. He is responsible and he will be subject to legal liability.

The Hon. Member asks whether such representations are a "matter" or "thing". Whether they are a "matter" or "thing" does not, perhaps, count for so much as the fact that they would be included. The Hon. Member will observe the fact that the Code uses the words "any other thing whatsoever", which is certainly broad enough to include all of the matters which she has raised.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY RESPECTING DATE OF CENTRAL NOVA BY-ELECTION

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Can he inform us whether the Prime Minister has screwed up sufficient courage as yet to announce the date of the by-election in Central Nova?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I do not see the Prime Minister having to muster very much courage to announce that by-election. He said clearly yesterday that it was a matter of a week or two, and that is a short period of time if one looks at Canadian precedents, both federal and provincial, in these matters.

PRECEDENT ESTABLISHED IN 1967

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I am glad that the Acting Prime Minister mentioned precedents. I am going to ask him to take to the Prime Minister, when he reports on his activities in the discharge of his duties on this day, the record of a former Prime Minister, the late Right Hon. Mr. Pearson, a gentleman who had a higher degree of respect for the traditions and practices of this place than the present Prime Minister. Will the Minister convey the precedent to the Prime Minister of the resignation on September 18, 1967, of the then sitting Member for Colchester-Hants, Mr. Cyril Kennedy, and on the same day, September 18, 1967, a warrant was issued to the Chief Electoral Officer, and the day after that warrant, the then Prime Minister announced that the writ for the by-election was issued. That will all be found in Hansard for September 25, 1967.

An Hon. Member: What is your question?

Mr. Nielsen: My question is: will the Acting Prime Minister convey that very useful precedent, which was established by a gentleman who was far more familiar with the practices and precedents of this Parliament?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, obviously the Leader of the Opposition is trying to create a tempest in a teapot. I was here yesterday. The Prime Minister mentioned "one or two weeks". He mentioned "soon". I did not see anything particularly alarming in the statements which he made at the time. However, if my hon. friend would like to give me a copy of the note from which he was reading, I will gladly communicate it to the Prime Minister who might be impressed, who might be influenced, and who might not have to do that particular research if someone else already has done it.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

DEFINITION OF CHARITABLE ACTIVITY

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. On June 21 an article in The Globe and Mail, following last week's conference on Canadian lobbying efforts in Washington, reported as follows:

> On the acid rain issue, foreign service officers in our Washington Embassy have worked with U.S. environmentalists and other interest groups, treading the fine line between diplomacy and advocacy.

As the Secretary of State will know, existing regulations here in Canada provide that any Canadian charitable or voluntary agency considered by the Government to be lobbying public opinion can lose its charitable status. The Minister made a commitment in the House to review this issue by a task force—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. That question is really going on for quite a long while. I will not allow the Hon. Member a supplementary if he goes on any longer.

Mr. McLean: Madam Speaker, in light of this Government precedent, would the Minister not agree that we are at a point where it is mandatory for an early investigation of the definition of "allowable charitable activity"?

[Translation]

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, we share the Hon. Member's concern. I have said a number of times, both inside and outside the House, that one of the key elements of a comprehensive policy to help charitable organizations in Canada was to ensure that the Canadian tax system and our legislation reflect the concerns of contemporary society. In this connection, my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, is continuing a study of the present tax laws so that if amendments are necessary, they will be tabled in the House and we shall be able to reflect the concerns of Canadian communities in our legislation.

[English]

PROPOSED LEGISLATIVE AMENDMENTS

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Finance and concerns tax changes and the voluntary sector. He will know that in December of 1981 the National Voluntary Organizations presented to his Department a series of proposed amendments to the Income Tax Act concerning allowable charitable activities. Is the Minister now in a position to tell the House when we can expect to see the changes, based on this modern definition of charitable activity of which the Secretary of State speaks?

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

POSSIBLE STUDY OF LEGISLATION BY SENATE COMMITTEE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General, who will know that in Toronto last night a large rally was held, with such prominent figures as Anglican Primate Ted Scott, retired Justice Emmett Hall, Doris Anderson, and even a former Liberal Solicitor General strongly condemning the Minister's proposed Orwellian security Bill.

In view of these and other widespread criticisms, and in view of the thundering silence of the Minister's own caucus and Cabinet colleagues on this Bill, how can he possibly justify his decision to ask a special Senate committee to study this Bill, with a four-month deadline, a decision which denies meaningful public input and which is in fact a perversion of the normal democratic process of this Parliament?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, as the House knows, I had hoped there would be a joint committee established to deal with the Bill. I understand that is still possible, although I have been told that Members opposite have indicated they are not willing to sit and listen to representations about the Bill this summer. I understand the Senate may establish a reference to do so. I hope they do, because that will make it possible for all those with objections to and concerns about the Bill to be heard, and will give the public an opportunity for the first time to make up its mind about the Bill.

[Translation]

POSSIBLE VIOLATION OF CIVIL LIBERTIES OF PARTI QUÉBÉCOIS PARTISANS AND MILITANTS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson: Madam Speaker, my supplementary is also directed to the Solicitor General. According to the disastrous provisions of this Bill which, in fact, create a police state, any groups or individuals supporting separatism in Quebec in an unconstitutional manner, as, for example, through a unilateral declaration of independence after a referendum, could be investigated by the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, which would be allowed to open mail, listen to telephone communications and consult confidential medical records. Since the Parti Québécois itself could very well support a declaration of this kind, how could the Minister justify a Bill that would condone this extreme violation of the civil liberties of thousands of supporters and militants of the Parti Québécois?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, perhaps I could suggest to the Parti Québécois to submit a brief to the Senate committee, if there is one, in order to discuss its reactions to the Bill.

EXTENT OF BORROWING AUTHORITY

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who will know that farm income has gone down by 14 per cent this year, that the Farm Credit Corporation ran out of funds within two months of their being allocated, and that it requested permission to borrow an additional $500 million from the private money market. This was refused, and it has only been allowed to borrow $250 million. I ask the Minister why it has not been allowed to borrow the money required to provide adequate farm financing and refinancing?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I was surprised to hear my colleague mention only $250 million. From what I have heard, a quarter of a million dollars is still a rather substantial sum, when we realize that this is in addition to amounts already borrowed by the organization in question, and that the latter is receiving money each year from loan repayments, which it can then lend again. I would think that in the circumstances, $250 million should be enough to meet requirements in the current year.

[English]

Mr. Gurbin: Madam Speaker, I am surprised the Minister feels an additional $250 million would be adequate or that it means so much, when he found $200 million, just like that, when he needed it for his photo opportunity, and when he gave $1.4 billion to Canadair without thinking about it.

THE ECONOMY

IMPACT OF GOVERNMENT RESTRAINT PROGRAM—COMPARISON WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my supplementary to the Minister relates to the six and five program. The Minister has repeatedly said that the economy of this country is dependent on the United States and international economies. Why is the Minister so certain that his six and five program has been responsible for economic recovery in Canada when the U.S., without a six and five program, is doing better in its economic recovery, with a better rate of inflation, less unemployment, and where in the long run they look like they have a happier future?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): How come there are so many Americans who would like to move to Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: That is true.

Mr. McDermid: Name one!

Mr. Lalonde: My hon. friend should remind himself that the figures he has mentioned, all those hundreds of millions of dollars, have been used to create jobs in this country. The recovery program, for instance, is going to be used to build infrastructure across the country. Canadians are going to be employed and will benefit from these developments taking place across the country.

As far as the six and five program is concerned, the Government has never said this was the be all and end all of economic policy. We said it was an important instrument in ensuring that there would be a decline in inflation in this country. It has indeed been that. It has indicated a clear leadership by the Government of Canada, which has been followed by the provincial and municipal Governments and the private sector.

Surely my hon. friend knows this, and knows the program has had a significant impact on the Canadian economy in terms of lowering inflationary expectations and helping us to reach lower interest rates. We also recognized and indicated all along that it was very important that there be recovery in the rest of the world, particularly in the United States, and we are very happy about what is happening in the U.S. We are benefiting from that, too.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

ACCESS TO CONSOLIDATED REVENUE FUND

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, this is the second time in a few days we have had some very disappointing news. The first was the response to a question I put to the Minister of Agriculture last week, in which he disclosed publicly that the FCC was out of funds. The second one was today in the response to the question of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey, where we learned that the request of the FCC for $600 million has indeed been reduced to $250 million.

• (1500)

My supplementary question must be directed to the President of the Treasury Board because he will know there are only two sources for funding for the Farm Credit Corporation, one being from the private side. That has been significantly reduced. The second source, of course, would be from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. In view of the fact that the Minister of Finance has indeed reduced the original request by the Farm Credit Corporation by 60 per cent, has the Minister of Agriculture, on behalf of the Farm Credit Corporation, made the appropriate application to Consolidated Revenue Fund for additional funds?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): My hon. friend has it all mixed up. I am also responsible for the purse, generally. As my hon. friend was a Minister, he knows that every day all kinds of groups, agencies, and Government Departments, come with requests for large amounts of money. It is the job of the Minister of Finance to make decisions, quite often telling those people who apply that they cannot get everything they want. In this case I indicated that $250 million was adequate, and that is the decision.

PETITION

MR. YOUNG—SAFE DRINKING WATER

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Beaches

(Mr. Young) meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. COLLENETTE—STATEMENT OF MR. STEWART PURSUANT TO S.O. 21—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: Since both Hon. Members are in the House today, I would like to rule on the point of order which was raised by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Collenette) on June 21. I have not been able to rule before because either one or the other Hon. Member was not in the House. That point of order dealt with the fact that the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) had allegedly referred to the Royal Family in the context of a partisan statement, contrary to our rules and practices. He quoted Beauchesne and also Erskine May in support of his contention that the Royal Family had been used in order to influence debate.

The Hon. Member's statement, of course, does not constitute debate for the very fact that during that period there was no motion before the House. Therefore technically speaking, the Hon. Member for Simcoe South was not speaking at a time that one could call debate. However, that is just a technical matter.

I would like to stress and caution very strongly that Hon. Members use great discretion in mentioning the Royal Family or, by extension, the Governor General in their statements and in the course of their argumentation. Of course, the practice which has been well honoured in the House is that the names of the Royal Family or the Governor General should not be brought into debate. Had the Hon. Member been speaking in the course of debate, my ruling might have been different, but it was extremely borderline. Therefore, I again caution Hon. Members against this, and I thank the Hon. Member for York East for having raised the matter.

Mr. Lewis: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. With respect to the ruling which Your Honour just made, I wonder if I might inquire from the Chair whether the Chair had occasion to review the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hudecki), as reported in Hansard on June 20, 1983, when reference was made to the Royal Family. Was that included in the Chair's decision?

Madam Speaker: Of course not. That matter was not raised and I certainly did not look into it, but will if the Hon. Member is now raising it. Normally, those matters are raised immediately after they happen. However, if the Hon. Member is raising it now, I will consider it and I will rule on it.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, the point that I wanted to make was simply that we did not consider it worthy of raising.

Madam Speaker: Well, then, it is not raised.

Committee Reports

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

OBJECTION TO REPORT OF COMMISSION FOR THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Madam Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that an objection signed by the Hon. Members for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar), Moncton (Mr. McCauley), Welland (Mr. Parent), Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), Ottawa-Centre (Mr. Evans), Hamilton West (Mr. Hudecki), Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren), Abitibi (Mr. Gingras) and Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) has been filed with me pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, Chapter E-2, R.S.C. 1970, to the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Quebec.

If the House agrees, I would suggest that we follow past practice and print the text of these objections as an appendix to Votes and Proceedings. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

OBJECTION TO REPORT OF COMMISSION FOR THE PROVINCE OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Madam Speaker: I must inform the House that earlier today an objection signed by certain Hon. Members of the House to the Electoral Boundaries Commission's Report for the Province of Newfoundland was filed with me. Hon. Members will know that there are 30 days in which to file objections, after the tabling of the Report. These particular objections have been filed late. The last date for filing objections would have been June 27. However, with the unanimous consent of the House, I guess we could consider that these objections have been filed today. Is there unanimous consent of the House?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I would like an opportunity to consult my colleagues on the matter and will advise the Chair later whether or not we will grant unanimous consent.

PETITIONS

MR. MITGES—TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE ON CANADIAN SOIL

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 201 residents of the City of Owen Sound and surrounding areas of the constituency of Grey-Simcoe in the Province of Ontario. The petitioners strongly oppose the testing of Cruise missiles in Canada and, as well, condemn the first use of nuclear weapons for which they claim Cruise missiles are designed. They therefore urge the federal Government to ban the testing of Cruise missiles in our country and fervently hope that their wishes will be acted upon.

MRS. HERVIEUX-PAYETTE—ELIMINATION OF LEAD ADDITIVES TO GASOLINE

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Montreal-Mercier): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present to the Honourable House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled, the petition of the undersigned residents of the Municipality of Baie Comeau in the Province of Quebec, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present the following grievance: That the practice of adding lead to gasoline is the main cause of high levels of lead in the atmosphere.

That it is a recognized fact that exposure to even minimal quantities of lead is dangerous to human health, and especially to children and the unborn, since it can affect the development of the brain and the child's mental capacity, and can cause behavioral disorders.

Therefore your petitioners humbly pray the Government of Canada will enact legislation that will put an end to the practice of adding lead to gasoline in Canada and provide that existing alternative solutions will be used.

And as in duty bound your petitioners ever pray.

[English]

MR. RIIS—IMPORTATION AND CAPTURE OF KILLER WHALES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to table before the assembled Members of Canada's House of Commons a petition on behalf of the undersigned residents of British Columbia, who urge a ban on the importation and capture of killer whales for display at aquariums across Canada. At present, killer whales die and are replaced at a frightening rate for entertainment and profit. The petitioners request the House to revoke existing permits for their importation and capture and to cease immediately the issuance of further permits.

Finally, the petitioners urge the House to reject the killer whales' forced role as circus performers and encourage us all to direct our attention and energy toward their protection in a natural environment.

MR. BLAIKIE—ELIMINATION OF LEAD ADDITIVES IN GASOLINE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of 622 Canadians from Manitoba, British Columbia and Ontario who are all members of the National Survival Institute and note that the practice of adding lead to gasoline is the leading source of high levels of lead in the Canadian environment and that exposure to lead in all but very small amounts is known to be hazardous to human health, especially in young children and in the unborn child, affecting brain development and intelligence and causing behavioural disturbance. Therefore, the petitioners call upon the House to provide legislation which calls for the total elimination of lead additives to gasoline in Canada and to ensure that safe, economic alternatives which are known to exist are provided.

MRS. COSSITT—DISTRIBUTION OF PORNOGRAPHIC MATERIAL

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition to the House of Commons in Parliament assembled. The petition of the 398 undersigned students and teachers of South Grenville District High School in my constituency of Leeds-Grenville, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your Honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth that those persons who distribute pornographic material should meet their legal responsibility and also ensure that they obey the laws concerning the selling of pornographic material to young people.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, as in duty bound humbly pray.

Order Paper Questions

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

ACCESS TO HOUSE OF COMMONS GALLERIES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege. During the Question Period, the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Pepin) raised the matter of the access of handicapped people to the House. He did so by pointing out there were handicapped people in the gallery. This is largely due to the efforts of the Speaker in the Thirty-first Parliament—

• (1510)

Madam Speaker: Order. That is not a question of privilege and the Hon. Member knows that. If he wants to make a statement on these matters he can use the 15-minute segment before the Question Period. This is certainly not a question of privilege; it is simply continuing debate.

Mr. Waddell: I simply wanted to thank him, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: Thank yous are not in order either.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE—PERSON-YEARS IN MAIN ESTIMATES

Question No. 4,644—Mr. Beatty:

1. How many person-years were approved for the Department of Finance in the Main Estimates for the fiscal year 1982-83 and what is the direct cost to the taxpayer attributable to those person-years?

2. Were increases in (a) person-years (b) costs attributable to increases in person-years approved in Supplementary Estimates during the fiscal year 1982-83 and, if so (i) what were such increases (ii) for what reason did the Minister of Finance feel such additional assistance was needed by him in a time of restraint?

3. Were any advisors who were responsible for the November, 1981 budget released by the Department and, if so, how many?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): 1. Seven hundred and ten person-years were approved for the Department of Finance in the 1982-83 Main Estimates, salaries and wages and employee benefit plans attributable to these person-years totalled $27,977,000.

2. (i) A total increase of 48 person-years was approved in Supplementary Estimates, 1982-83. Costs attributable to these person-years totalled $1,697,000.

(ii) Of the 48 person-years included in Supplementary Estimates, three person-years were required to establish a small secretariat to handle departmental involvement in Industrial and Labour Adjustment Program related activities.

Fifteen person-years were necessary to develop a pool of expertise in the fields of corporate and public finance so as to determine the budgetary and economic impacts of private sector assistance in response to financial distress situations.

Thirty person-years were required to permit increased emphasis on economic research in the area of tax policy and legislation. These person-years will also permit a concentrated effort to be placed into the dissemination of public information and consultation with the private sector.

3. No, the Department did not release any advisors involved in the November, 1981 budget.

HUMAN RIGHTS TRIBUNALS

Question No. 4,750—Mr. McKenzie:

1. From what sources does the Canadian Human Rights Commission get its list of persons appointed to tribunals?

2. What counsel are used and authorized by the Commission in court actions across the country?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): 1. The Canadian Human Rights Commission chooses its members for Human Rights Tribunals from a panel of prospective members established and maintained by the Governor in Council on recommendation from the Minister of Justice.

2. The following are the firms and city of counsel used and authorized by the Commission in court actions across the country since March 1978.

Rivest, Castiglio, Castiglio, Montreal

DARIUS LEUT HUTTERIAN CHURCH

Question No. 4,821—Mr. Neil:

Was there a write-off of income tax owing by the Saskatchewan Darius Leut Hutterian Church colony of (a) Arm River (b) Downey Lake (c) Estuary (d) Fort Pitt (e) Hillcrest (f) Hillsvale (g) Hodgeville (h) Lakeview (i) Leask (j) Ponteix (k) Riverview (l) Simmie (m) West Bench and, if so, in what amount?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): There was no write-off of income tax owing by the Saskatchewan Darius Leut Hutterite Church Colonies cited in the question.

A remission of federal income tax was approved by the Treasury Board of Canada under the authority of Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act, to the Darius Leut Group of Hutterite colonies. The amounts were remitted under order in council P.C. 1981-767, dated March 19, 1981 and promulgated in the Canada Gazette, Part II, Vol. 115, No. 7, Registration SI/81-56 dated April 8, 1981. The order implemented a negotiated settlement with the colonies of the Darius Leut Group and remitted federal income tax payable for the 1967 to 1976 taxation years by the colonies of that Group.

The amount of the remission in respect of colony represented the difference between the amounts of income tax assessed that colony for the taxation years 1967 to 1976 and the amount of income tax that would have been payable by the colony for the taxation years 1967 to 1976 if the tax had been assessed against each member of that colony on the basis that the income of the colony was the aggregate personal income of all the members of the colony.

The amounts remitted for the colonies cited in the question are:

Name of Colony	Tax & Interest Remitted Taxation Years 1967 to 1976
(a) Arm River	$641,844.54
(b) Downey Lake	628,550.69
(c) Estuary	156,181.22
(d) Fort Pitt	62,629.52
(e) Hillcrest	370,906.22
(f) Hillsvale	839,643.42
(g) Hodgeville	195,860.04
(h) Lakeview	240,760.66
(i) Leask	247,234.06
(j) Ponteix	117,899.29
(k) Riverview	685,762.67
(l) Simmie	366,448.76
(m) West Bench	32,960.90

AID AND DEVELOPMENT ORGANIZATION

Question No. 4,828—Mr. Fretz:

Does a new aid and development organization exist which offers technical assistance to third World Countries and is sponsored by the Department of External Affairs and, if so (a) what is it called (b) what are its detailed aims and objectives (c) what is its budget (d) was adequate legislation passed to authorize its creation?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): A new aid and development organization offering technical assistance to Third World countries and sponsored by the Department of External Affairs, does not exist. (a), (b), (c) and (d) Not applicable.

INCREASE IN CIVILIAN POSITIONS CFB GAGETOWN

Question No. 4,844—Mr. Howie:

Within the current fiscal year, have any permanent civilian positions been (a) added (b) deleted from the organization at CFB Gagetown, New Brunswick and, if so, how many?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): (a) and (b) No.

DECREASE IN CIVILIAN POSITIONS CFB GAGETOWN

Question No. 4,845—Mr. Howie:

1. Are there any permanent civilian positions at CFB Gagetown being deleted from the organization within the next year and, if so, how many?

2. What would be the total annual payment in salaries for these positions in the next year, if they had been maintained?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): 1. No. 2. Not applicable.

DND—STUDY OF CERTAIN CHEMICALS IN ANIMALS

Question No. 4,865—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Is the Defence Research Board spending $83,148 to study the fate of certain chemicals in rats, dogs and swine and, if so, for what reason?

2. Are the chemicals already in the rats, dogs and swine and (a) if so, how did they get there (b) if not, how is it planned to get them there and for what purpose?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes. The Department of National Defence has given a contract for $83,148 to McGill University to carry out metabolic studies on the oxime HI-6 using mice, rats and swine.

2. The oxime HI-6 is almost the only compound discovered to date that shows promise for use in the treatment of the refractory nerve agent SOMAN as well as other nerve agent poisoning. The compound will be administered via intermuscular injection at doses approximating the therapeutic level. The intent is to prove that when HI-6 is metabolized no undesirable side effects are produced. No toxic or incapacitive effects are anticipated.

DUTIES AND TAXES ON CLOSED-CAPTIONING DECODERS

Question No. 4,871—Mr. Beatty:

1. Is there an import duty on closed-captioning decoders coming into Canada and, if so, what is the rate of duty?

2. Is there federal sales tax on closed-captioning decoders and, if so, what is the rate of tax?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): 1. Tariff item 48200-1 provides for "closed-captioning devices for attachment to television receiving sets", free of duty under all tariffs.

2. Closed-captioning decoders are subject to federal sales tax at the rate of 9 per cent. This tax is imposed on the manufacturer's sale price if the goods are manufactured in Canada or on the duty paid value if the goods are imported.

Order Paper Questions

FOREST RESEARCH CENTRE, VICTORIA, B.C.

Question No. 4,905—Mr. Miller:

1. Did the Minister of State for Economic Development receive communication from the Council of the City of Port Alberni, British Columbia, on May 3, 1983 or thereabouts requesting consideration of their city as a viable site for the proposed Forest Research Centre for Vancouver Island and, if so, was this request given due consideration in choosing a site for this facility?

2. Was the dire economic plight and traditional affiliation with the forest industry of such areas as Port Alberni given due consideration in the choice of location for the proposed expansion of forest research facilities on Vancouver Island?

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the Ministry of State for Economic Development is concerned:

1 and 2. A telegram was received April 28, 1983; a reply acknowledging its receipt was forwarded May 5. No specific location needed to be considered as this project of $14 million to be undertaken under the Special Recovery Projects Program is only to expand and upgrade the existing research facilities of the Canadian Forestry Service's Pacific Research Centre in Victoria.

AID TO SRI LANKA

Question No. 4,957—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. In (a) 1976 (b) 1977 (c) 1978 (d) 1979 (e) 1980 (f) 1981 (g) 1982, what was the dollar value of aid given by the Government through the Canadian International Development Agency to Sri Lanka?

2. What major projects did Canada undertake through CIDA for and on behalf of Sri Lanka during this period?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. See tables below.

2. Major projects undertaken in Sri Lanka during the period 1976-1982 comprise the following:

(i) Rainfed Agriculture: A $1.5 million grant to strengthen applied research and extension capability in the chena (shifting slash/burn/cultivation) area of the dryzone of Sri Lanka using Canadian technical assistance from Agriculture Canada. Duration is 1978-83.

(ii) Agriculture sector loan: A $10 million loan to increase agricultural production through a line of credit to provide Canadian equipment, materiel, and commodities. It included a $6 million allocation to the Mahaweli Irrigation and Land Settlement Scheme. Duration is 1977-83.

(iii) Maduru Oya reservoir complex: A loan of up to $77.1 million to assist Sri Lanka in the construction by a consortium of Canadian contractors of a rock fill dam and transbasin link canal designed to store sufficient water to irrigate 50,000 hectares of land. Duration is 1980-83. Canadian engineering services are provided for design and construction supervision under a grant of $8.5 million.

(iv) Project Preparation Units I and II: A grant of $5.5 million to provide Sri Lanka with appropriate Canadian expertise to develop identified projects to a feasibility stage for international donor financing. Examples of such studies include: preparation of the Lower Uva Regional Development Master Plan; preparation of the Tea Master Plan; and advisory services to the ministries of Mahaweli Development, Industries, Housing, and Fisheries. Duration was 1978-83.

(v) Embilipitiya Paper Mill: A grant of $1.75 million to provide Canadian technical assistance to train mill management and staff in the management, operation, and maintenance of the National Paper Corporation's mill at Embilipitiya. Duration was 1976-80.

(vi) Commodities/fertilizer loan: A loan of $20 million for the provision of Canadian industrial raw materials and fertilizer to support agricultural and industrial production. Duration was 1978-82.

(vii) Potash grant: A grant of $30.5 million for the provision of Canadian potash fertilizer, and technical assistance for potash research. Duration 1981-84.

ATHLETIC CONTESTS AND EVENTS POOLS ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE GOVERNMENT OPERATED POOL SYSTEMS

The House resumed from Monday, June 27, 1983, consideration of Bill C-95, an Act to provide for Government operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and events and to amend the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture; and Motion No. 3 (Mr. Reid, St. Catharines).

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, in resuming the few remarks that I began to make yesterday evening, perhaps I could first remind Hon. Members of what the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) actually said at the conclusion of his remarks when introducing this Bill. He stated: "We already have many lotteries in the country and this is a very harmless one of entertainment for a worth while cause".

I wish to expand on those three items in considering Motion No. 3 that is before us and which, of course, relates to the possibility of specifically indicating that some funds will be devoted toward aiding the Olympic Games in the City of Calgary.

As the Minister indicated in his introductory remarks, there are many gambling or lottery-type functions in the country at the present time. I would only suggest that instead of the federal Government recklessly going ahead with the type of legislation that is now before us, it is time it reviewed what the functions of some of the lotteries really are.

Since the Minister has indicated that it is a harmless type of entertainment for a worth-while cause, let us see who actually buys these various forms of lottery tickets in the country today. Statistics show that two-thirds of those who participate in lotteries come from a group that would generally be regarded as the lower income group in our society. I categorically state that more than two-thirds of the total public buying lottery tickets come from families who have a household income of from zero to $30,000.

The Minister stated in his introductory remarks that the amount which these people pay out is comparatively small. He did state that one-third of 1 per cent of their total income is going into lotteries at the present time. It does not take long to determine that one-third of 1 per cent from a household income of $30,000 means $100 a year or $2 a week that a family is spending for virtually a worthless activity, the buying of lottery or other type of draw tickets. If we consider a household income of $20,000, they are then spending $66 per year on average.

One might ask about the worth-while cause. It should be made categorically clear that if it is a question of the federal Government providing a one-third contribution to help Calgary hold the Olympics, I do not believe there are many Members of the House who would oppose that aid. However, what Hon. Members and certainly my caucus is trying to indicate is that this approach is not the proper one to take. If the federal Government wishes to contribute roughly $125 million as one-third of the ongoing capital expenditure for the Calgary Olympics, then let us clearly identify that amount.

In regard to this type of sports pool, we must not lose sight of the fact that it requires an average of $100 million of primarily poor people's money at roughly $50 to $100 a year in order to produce a grant of $30 million. It does not take long to discover the ramifications of this legislation. The Minister has admitted that there are many lotteries, which means that there is a lot of competition. He does not admit, however, that rather than make money, this sports pool will probably lose colossal amounts of money when it comes on stream in an attempt to persuade the public to shift from whatever they are presently buying to buying this.

Mr. Paproski: $55 million.

Mr. Stevens: My colleague for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski) indicates that the cost may be $55 million just to enter this field.

My main point is that assuming this sports pool is conducted correctly, which would truly be unique for the Government, it will have to sell almost $500 million worth of sports pool tickets before it can produce the one-third amount that it wants to give to the Calgary Olympics. What an unbelievably costly and unfair way to raise money. Since my time is limited, I wish to emphasize the fact that the Government is, in truth, following the path that has been repeatedly followed in history, that is, toward more and more irresponsibility.

For example, a book entitled "The Itch for Play" was published in 1962. It reviews the history of gambling in the world. It points out that in 1695 gambling in England became a tremendous craze. People from all over that country were attempting to get into some form of gambling. As we know, this eventually led to the South Sea Bubble where the Government set up, under the South Sea Act, a company that was designed to take over the entire national debt. In short, an utter disaster occurred in England during that period as a result of the Government aiding and abetting the gambling fever that was taking over the country. As we know, it eventually got so out of control that the Government had to pass criminal legislation preventing gambling in the future.

It was not until this Government, under the present emperor, that this trend was reversed and we began to legitimize gambling once again and encourage the frenzy that we are now perhaps witnessing in the country. What I am saying is that gambling is something that I do not feel is a desirable thing to be encouraging in our nation. In short, this federal Government should not be getting into the field.

• (1520)

If I may, I might conclude by putting on the record what the author of this book that I have in my hand defined as gambling:

> Gambling is an enchanting witchery. It is a disease of humankind requiring medical attention. It is an incorrigible evil in man. In short, it must be controlled.

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, I would ike to continue the general thrust and tone of comments offered by my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens). I shall explain why it is that Members of this Party will not be supporting Bill C-95 in any form whatever pending a major change in the basic thrust of this legislation. This, of course, would invalidate the proposal.

At the same time we are today speaking to Motion No. 3, an amendment proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid), which would ensure that, should the sports pool go ahead, the funds will be clearly and solely earmarked for the purposes of offsetting any projected deficit arising from the Calgary Olympics, as was the original intention of Loto Canada when it was established in 1976. It was established solely to meet any liability arising from the Olympics in Montreal which we know now approached a cost of $1 billion.

From my point of view I must say that I share the views expressed by many Members of this House that this Government appears to be bankrupt, not only financially but morally. I do not want to get into a debate of chance taking per se. I guess it is an accepted position in our country and it is part of our heritage that people have tossed for lots and taken chances in various types of games and taken chances in terms of advancing their own station in life through what we in this Party advocate, namely the free enterprise system.

I am not opposed to chance taking by individuals operating in a free society where they can afford to take such chances with their own money. But I am certainly opposed to a government which advocates and encourages chance taking by those in society who can least afford to. In that respect the thrust of this proposed legislation and the long-term consequences, far beyond the time when the Calgary Olympics are over and forgotten, of implementing the kind of legislation which says that by changing the Criminal Code the federal Government can essentially violate the law by all traditional standards, yet no one else can, reveals the moral bankruptcy of the Government opposite.

The Government talks about raising something like $100 million a year net for the purposes set out in the legislation. Four items to which these revenues are directed are fitness and amateur sport, arts and culture, medical and health research, and finally—and it is interesting that this is the final priority according to the order of items as set out in the legislation—support for the Calgary Olympics. One wonders why it is that the Calgary Olympics were not the sole purpose of presenting this legislation.

I have to suspect, as other Members in this House do, that the Government's game plan, in a manner of speaking, extends far beyond any suggestion that the Calgary Olympics might require a little help. The focus on helping to offset the cost of the Calgary Olympics is merely a red herring, a form of blackmail of this House, in order to justify a major change and is an example of more stupidity on the part of this Government. In fact, it will be disruptive of and counter to the whole social support system that we have established in this country.

From where does the Government think this $100 million a year is going to come, Mr. Speaker? The Government knows full well this money will come from the pockets of ordinary Canadians, largely speaking those who have been down and out most of their lives and are looking for that one chance in a lifetime to make it big. Those are the people having trouble putting food on the table for their children, meeting mortgage payments and so on. They are faced with unemployment, their businesses are going bankrupt, they are desperate. Yet they are the ones who will buy a football lottery ticket condoned by the federal Government. That just reveals the degree of moral bankruptcy which is so evident to so many Canadians when a government goes to great lengths to evolve a progressive income tax system with all kinds of deductions, exemptions and tax credits for those who need help the most, single parents, old age pensioners, people unemployed and those living on the welfare system.

Where do you think these people will go with their welfare cheques, Mr. Speaker, if every time they walk into a shopping centre, go to a sporting event or turn on a television set they are bombarded with a pitch for the new Canada sports pool promoted by our friend, the Hon. Member for Halifax (Mr. Regan), who thinks it is such a great idea? Where do you think the money is going to come from, Mr. Speaker? It will come from the pockets of those who need it. In that respect it is just merely a form of veiled and regressive taxation against the poor and down trodden in our society.

Where will the money go, Mr. Speaker? We know that no more than 30 per cent of it will go to the so-called good works which the Government has been advocating. I might add there are many other ways to raise money for these good works. Many of them should be legitimately funded but not by some phony windfall mechanism called a sport lottery.

In referring back to the record of Loto Canada for a moment, it is interesting to note that in the year 1977 Loto Canada took in $225 million of revenue of which only $3.7 million, or 1.6 per cent, went to promote fitness and amateur sport. Of the balance, $25 million went to advertising and promotion. The remainder went to wholesalers' commissions, prize money and the Olympic debt. If the prize money only amounts to about 30 per cent, it is obvious that a lot of this money will go down the tube in the form of unnecessary advertising, contracts and commissions to friends of the Liberal Party, nothing more. Let us be honest about it, it is nothing more than a blatant instrument of patronage.

Mr. Ian Howard, who was a great friend of the former Member for Skeena, happened to become chairman of the Loto Canada Corporation because of his Liberal connections. There is no other reason. He went around the country letting contracts to commission salesmen, to various companies, squandering public money merely as a means of exercising and administering patronage and leverage over many organizations and individuals in Canadian society and to reward those who had done favours for and served the Liberal Party. I make that statement as an allegation.

I suggest that what the Government is attempting to do here is to strip away the limited resources poor people have. This totally contradicts and invalidates the Family Allowance Program, the Child Tax Credit, welfare, UIC, and all of those programs of benefit to those Canadians who need them. The Government will grab the money and collect it in the form of a multimillion dollar fund which the Government calls just a mere game, a little fun on the side for Canadians. It will be promoted with red and white flags and stands and little Canadian Liberal logos in the corner of every piece of literature. Canadians are getting sick and tired of this kind of display, just as some Canadians will be sickened by that big, ugly, garish display outside our Parliament buildings being put on as a big July 1 promotion merely to advance the causes of the Liberal Party.

It is high time Canadians realized what this is all about; it is a big political boondoggle on the part of the Liberal Government. It will not help Canadians by setting up yet another pool and by changing the Criminal Code to legalize gambling, while at the same time the RCMP will be entering into the gaming houses of the Chinese, who like to play fan-tan now and again, raiding church bingos and things like that. The Government abides by a double standard—one standard for the Government and another for the rest of us. It can do whatever it darn well pleases. The Government can advertise its lottery, doll it up and try to ram it down the throats of Canadians for its own selfish benefit. It is high time we put a stop to this.

What is wrong with encouraging volunteer organizations and medical causes to solicit funds under an income tax system which would allow Canadians the choice either to send money to the federal Government or to make contributions with a very healthy tax credit being extended to worthy causes? What is wrong with financing amateur sport, culture and medical research by getting people involved in direct participation, not by buying lottery tickets?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) on a point of order.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker made reference to Canada Day. I wonder if he could clarify for the House—

Mr. Taylor: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Harquail: Are you prepared to answer a question?

Mr. Siddon: I will answer a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. That was not a point of order. There are occasions on which the Chair will recognize an Hon. Member who seeks unanimous consent of the House in order to put a question. Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member for Restigouche to put a question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, in his excitement and rhetoric the Hon. Member made reference to the Canada Day celebration taking place only in Ottawa. I wonder whether he would like to clarify that Canadians in British Columbia, the Province which he represents, will be acknowledging and celebrating Canada Day on July 1 in the usual manner in which we all celebrate this important occasion?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, when I was much younger I used to attend parades, stand with pride at attention when our national anthem, "O Canada", was played, and watch the bands marching by. There were many functions put on by community organizations. They continue to sponsor such activities. In my constituency this year I will be riding in a parade with my children. The local community association will be putting on these functions. But it is a sign of the decadence in the country when the federal Government feels that the only way we can promote a sense of national pride is by throwing millions and millions of dollars worth of fireworks up in the air and by building grandiose backdrops in front of the Houses of Parliament. Indeed they are garish and contrary to the nature of our surroundings here.

To answer the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail), Canadian identity and the celebration on July 1, whether we call it Canada Day or Dominion Day, is something which comes from the hearts and roots of Canadians. It is not something the Liberal Party can buy with any amount of money or grand displays.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I want to participate in this particular stage of the proceedings because I think the amendment of the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) allows us to target in one of the important issues in this piece of legislation.

It has been maintained by spokespeople on behalf of the Government that this legislation is absolutely essential for the Calgary Winter Olympics which will be held in 1988 and that without this legislation federal funding will not be forthcoming. That is the essence of the position taken by the Government. It calls, that tune with a sense of déjà vu in terms of the last time we were called upon to establish a lottery or gambling in the name of the federal Government to deal with the Montreal Olympics.

Therefore I think the motion of my colleague is a very appropriate one. He is giving the Government the opportunity to establish its little lottery or game on a national front, with all the signals it will send out to the people of the country, particularly our youth. It allows the Government to bankroll the Calgary Olympics and specifically indicates that when the Olympics have been dealt with and the contribution of the federal Government to the Olympics has been completed, the lottery will be null and void and have no further consequences. What could be more reasonable than that proposition?

I would like to ask rhetorically what kind of priorities there are in a government which, in the dying days of this part of the session, brings forward a Bill to deal with sports pools? When we have unprecedented unemployment and unemployment among youth and students of the country has reached record proportions, what kind of political philosophy would be behind a government which sets as its priority a Bill to create a national lottery? We have to ask ourselves these questions. If all the energy, attention and dedication of the Government were directed toward job creation for the youth of Canada, what would be the result? They are now resigned to holding demonstrations in cities and towns across the country.

When I return to Saskatoon for the summer recess, the students of the University of Saskatchewan are dedicating a full day on July 6 to the problems of employable students who are unable to find work to sustain themselves and to pay their tuition fees. What will I say to these young people who are really hurting? Will I be able to say that in the last days before the recess Parliament tried to grapple with their problems? No, I will have to say that the Government's priority was to set up a form of lottery or sports pool to ensure that Martin O'Connell, executive assistant to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and former Minister of Labour, a well known Liberal, receives a very substantial fee. He will not have any worry with respect to employment; he will be doing quite all right. What about Goldfarb Associates, well known Liberal pollsters? This outfit will receive an enormous amount of money. There will be no unemployment worries for the people who work for that Liberal advertising agency. What can I say to the students of Saskatoon?

I see some Ministers sitting in the Chamber this afternoon who have responsibility to give answers respecting the policy of the Government. I ask them what I should say when I return to my constituency. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) in particular should understand my dilemma. The Government is so devoid of policy that it brings in a piece of legislation which in effect puts a tax on the poor of the country, those people who can least afford to pay. This is what a lottery is all about.

I do not want to wear my morals on my sleeve or take a sanctimonious approach. Those of us who are interested in politics and serve in the House of Commons know, in terms of an absolute political principle, that what is being done on a national level—granted, it was the Government of which I had the honour to be a part that got out of the lottery business—is that Canadians are being told it is okay to tax the poor of the nation. They are the ones who will be paying the sum and substance of the Bill. Hon. Members on the Government side know this. In their heart of hearts they know that these people will put more money, in proportion to their incomes, into this kind of investment and cannot afford it. It is an absoluely reprehensible position for the Government to take.

What are the figures? Ticket purchasing in Canada averages $42 per year for every man, woman and child. As a nation we pay out $1 billion annually for the chance to win.

Mr. Evans: Tell your Premier.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I live in the riding of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) when I am here. Let me tell him that I am disappointed with him. Of course I will tell Premier Grant Devine. That is a position I take, no matter whether it is the federal Government or the provincial Government. I do not need any lecture from the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, who has changed his position in anticipation of a Cabinet post. He will stand in his place, representing an area where there is high unemployment, and in order to get a Cabinet position he would say "Ready, aye, ready". He is not prepared to question something which is morally wrong. That is what is wrong with this Bill. If he would rise in his place and make a speech on this, we might be able to decide what his position is.

• (1540)

This is a very serious question I want to pose. I want to bring out some logic for Government backbenchers who know in their heart of hearts, to quote their philosophical hero, Senator Barry Goldwater, that this legislation is wrong-headed. Quite frankly, it gives the people of Canada very little expectation in return. The best odds in a national lottery in Canada are something like 600,000 to 1. That is the best odds a Canadian has in winning a lottery. This gives some idea of the expectations some people have.

We can spend our money and dream our dreams. Those buying lottery tickets are entitled to do that. I acknowledge that the Provinces have enough lotteries. The Provinces now have the jurisdiction, so why is the federal Government getting into this? What is the crying need that the federal Government sees whereby it must spend valuable time at end of June to bring forward as its priority a sports lottery Bill? I cannot understand it.

Yesterday I pointed out that in another forum, the Superior Court of Quebec, the Attorney General, speaking on behalf of the Government, made representations for an injunction to prevent the Hockey Select program from going forward in Quebec. What was the rationale? By taking this action the provincial Government was undermining the morals of the people of the Province of Quebec because it was carrying on functions clearly prohibited under our criminal law. Why does the Government take that position in one forum, the Province of Quebec, and then come here and tell us this is one of its priorities?

I want to address this Bill again. I will have another opportunity to do so. I have not yet had the opportunity to get my full message across. However, I do want to say one thing. The real irony of this particular enterprise—I am making my prognostication now, and I will give you ten to one, Mr. Speaker—is that this project is going to fail. Look what happened to Hockey Sélect. It has been pointed out that in the Province of Quebec it started off on November 30, 1982 with a high of $136,144 on a weekly gross, dropped to $70,000 in January and $40,000 in February. It is going downhill. People are not buying this kind of version of a sports pool which is very similar to what is being presented to us as a sports pool for all of Canada. It will fail. They young people of Canada want to know about jobs. They want to know about their future. They want to know what they can expect in this country. Therefore, we should be ashamed of ourselves for spending these last few valuable hours debating the creation of a sports pool. The Ministers of the Crown should be the most ashamed of all.

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, it is always a privilege to follow my colleague for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn). He spoke eloquently on this matter. With regard to motion No. 3 and Bill C-95, I want to tell the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) that his laughter and comments about the previous speaker's words suggest to me that an allegation I have heard before about some Members of the Liberal Party, that they want to be the defenders of the rich, may be true. To suggest that the poor do not pay for the lotteries, to laugh at that suggestion when the facts speak clearly, particularly a Member who prides himself on facts, indicates that the Member wants to be part of a lot of political hypocrisy, trying to pretend that something is being done for Canadians when what is being done through this Bill to Canadians is something dreadful.

I am going to speak very briefly on the evidence that was placed before the committee when we dealt with this proposal. I noted in reading yesterday's Hansard that the Minister who was then responsible for this matter at one point interjected and asked an Hon. Member from Edmonton a question. He asked whether Members knew that the commitment to this pool was a condition of Olympics approval, a condition of going to Baden-Baden and asking them to approve the Calgary Olympics. That was the utter and total misrepresentation of the facts.

The simplest way to say that to Canadians is to ask whether anyone on an international Olympics committee would have approved awarding the Games to a country if that country had said to the committee it would only assist if it could get a lottery approved in its House of Commons. Would anybody internationally have believed that? The fact is we made no such claim. We said that the Olympics were important to Canada, and they are. We said we wanted them in Canada, and we do. We said we would finance them out of our existing arrangements. That is what we said. That is precisely the arrangement that Members opposite know was made in order to get the federal Government out of the lottery business and produce revenues for the federal Government.

Let me also say in response to the interjections of the Hon. Member opposite exactly the same thing which the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West said. What is reprehensible about lotteries run by governments is that they are run by governments. It does not matter whether the government is provincial or federal. What is reprehensible is not that someone is asked to buy a ticket or take a chance, but that a government of this country would say to Canadians that the way to do well is to gamble on a get-rich-quick scheme on which the odds are 100 times higher than being struck by lightning.

That is the philosophy of "getting ahead" which the Government of Canada proposes to reintroduce to the citizens of Canada as the means to succeed. It is not to work hard, to struggle or save but to buy a ticket on a government-run lottery. That proposal is what underlies all of the advertising of Loto Canada and all of the advertising behind provincially-run lotteries. It is the morality of saying to Canadians that the way to succeed is to take a 600,000 to one chance with that $10 ticket. That puts into the heads of Canadians that that is the way to succeed. The very suggestion that we should espouse that view is wrong.

The Government says it is only doing this for Calgary. It says it is absolutely essential if we are going to support the Olympics we all want. It is not going to honour the commitment made in the beginning, but it has a new commitment called the athletic contests Bill.

The reason for motion No. 3 is quite simply that the Ministers responsible for this Bill have used that argument across the breadth of this land. If that is the argument for this Bill in the mind of this Government, then let the Government by its vote say that the purpose of this Bill is to fund the Calgary Olympics. The Bill itself does not say that. It says the revenues will be raised any darn way the Government wants through whatever amendments, regulations or orders in councils it wants, and ultimately will be spent on anything the Government wants. That is what the Bill says. It does not say anywhere that the moneys are restricted to the Calgary Olympics. The Government gives an undertaking that it will consider spending some of the money.

When we asked in committee what happened to the share of the moneys now coming to the Government from lotteries, 50 per cent of which were to go to amateur sports and fitness and 50 per cent to culture, when we asked what had the 50 per cent support been and what had it been spent on, the answers were: "We have no idea, we don't know". That was the defence of the moneys that the poor have already contributed through lotteries to amateur sports. No one knew. Now, we as Parliamentarians are being asked to tell Canadians, "Just trust us. We will do it right just as we did with Canadair and de Havilland and, so far as the people opposite are concerned, just as we have done everything right."

• (1550)

Let us be clear, Mr. Speaker, that what we are dealing with is the Calgary Olympics. A great number of volunteers are being used by the Government of Canada to justify having the Government of Canada get back into Government-run gaming. That is what is happening. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that if someone came into the House and said to the Government of Canada: "I will give you $200 million to fund the Calgary Olympics," the Government of Canada would say: "Thank you, but we still need this Bill and we will now say that we need the money for the other things that are in the Bill". It would then use medical research or cultural communities as its whipping boys because it is not the purpose of the Government, Mr. Speaker, to pay for those things. It is the purpose of the Government of Canada to tax the poor in order to have more money to give away to its friends.

As everybody who has studied lotteries knows, something less than one-third of the funds that are raised through lotteries ever find their way to the charities they are supposed to help. That was the evidence that was presented to the committee which the Liberal Members chose to ignore.

Some day I hope to be able to stand in my place and say; "Thank God, finally every government in the country has stopped trying to skim taxes through lotteries." I do not know whether I will ever be able to say that, but I hope and pray that I will, Mr. Speaker. The reason I hope that is not only because there is an incredible amount of hypocrisy and, in my view, untruths being told about the purposes behind this Bill. The reason, Mr. Speaker, is because it must be clear to all Members, particularly to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre who prides himself on being an economist, that the whole idea of raising taxes through lotteries and through corporations that are not accountable to the Auditor General is wrong. The whole idea of creating spending programs that Paliament never sees in order to create situations for responsible officials to say to Parliamentarians "We do not know where the money went", is wrong. Surely the Member for Ottawa Centre and his backbench colleagues know that every single principle of decency and of good government indicates that the whole idea behind this Bill is wrong.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): May I point out to Hon. Members that debate is still continuing on motion No. 3, and of course there remains the matter of debate on motion No. 4 which the House will wish to dispose of. The Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) on motion No. 3.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, we are speaking today about the distribution of funds. We are speaking about those who in fact will benefit from the funds and those who in fact will pay for the funds. In speaking to this particular motion, I think it is appropriate at this stage to remember that an idea has been presented in the form of the entire Bill and its individual parts. It has been discussed and debated in principle and in detail in committee, and now today we are discussing the beneficiary section.

I know from my experience of previous Olympics and from my political experience that the naming of beneficiaries in this Clause is only the broad title. The real beneficiaries of this Bill will be public relations companies and the media. We can be sure that a large portion of any moneys raised and given to this body or other bodies for this particular event will go to public relations firms and the media.

Another big chunk of the money will go to contractors, and again another big chunk of the money will go to bureaucracies. Another big chunk of the money will perhaps be used to exchange moneys from one level of government to another, because if this particular Bill is not passed, it means that a grant of some kind will have to be provided by the federal Government to the Government of Alberta as its share of the cost. It is another way of raising money to be transferred from one Government to another.

Hopefully there will be another beneficiary. A small pittance, perhaps, will in fact reach the level of the athlete who will perform and participate in the Olympics. Unfortunately, the first to deserve will probably be the last to receive, and probably the last to receive will receive the least, and that is in fact those same athletes.

Clause 3 of this Bill, Mr. Speaker, talks about the funding of the Olympics in Calgary. What are the Olympics in Calgary? I hope that we are directing this particular funding and perhaps additional funding from other levels of government to the Calgary Olympics for more than just buildings, contractors, bureaucracies and administration. I think a test of this Bill is whether or not a good chunk of this money will be directed toward upholding the spirit of the Olympics.

In the spirit of the Olympics, I would hope to see some of this money transferred directly to the athletes.

What are the Olympics? The Olympics are athletes in the pursuit of excellence. Because it is a competitive pursuit of excellence, our athletes will be measured against those of other nations. We will not be measured by the size of the buildings. We will not be measured by the nature of the contracts. Canada's spirit and pursuit of excellence will be measured instead by the quality and the performance of our athletes and the relationship between our athletes and the athletes of the world.

This money needs to be directed not only to Calgary, to buildings, to contractors, but also to people, to individuals who are and will be the athletes. It is, of course, too late for that now because one does not travel across the country and identify an athlete this week and tell him that next month he will participate in the Olympics. The identification process is a process that is beginning now for the next Olympics that Canada will participate in, and not only the next Olympics but the Olympics after that. It is beginning not only with the Summer Olympics but the Winter Olympics and all of the Olympics. To create a body of sport in Canada, we must begin now to identify those who can pursue this excellence and represent our country. They must be identified at an early age.

I have heard no talk of money set aside for the identification of athletes. I hope that when the Minister stands up to speak on this Bill, he will talk about athletes, how this measure will affect athletes and how the money will help in the identification of athletes. For too many years we have failed to identify our athletes early enough to begin the training that is needed to instil in them the desire for the pursuit of excellence that will find them successful. Their success, the symbol and example of Canadian youth, strength and courage, will establish the desire of other young Canadians to pursue and obtain success and to represent their nation in this and other competitions that will come in the future.

These athletes must be identified at a very young, formative stage as muscles and minds are growing. So often people see competing at the Olympics as simply a physical activity. Competing at the Olympics is a physical activity, a mental activity, a nationalistic activity, and to be successful, a strong development of all of faculties is needed.

• (1600)

Those who strive for this excellence are not only striving for some physical achievement. By the time they reach the Olympics or that standard of training, it is a matter of the training of mind over body—mind and body united in a desire to find excellence, to be the best in Canada, the best in the world, to uphold our country and its image abroad. This requires not just an attitude of physical and mental competititon but an attitude of friendship that is developed throughout the competition.

Athletes do not compete just once, in Calgary. They compete through a development stage. Unfortunately, in Canada that will not occur because we will direct very little money in that direction. We are not going to identify athletes, let alone begin a development program. How can you have a development program if you have no coach, no professional who can travel around? If you identify a coach but leave him sitting in Ottawa instead of travelling around the country to schools and track meets, swim meets or whatever to find and develop athletes, the development program will not take place.

This is a chicken and egg argument. There is the identification and then the development of the athlete. Not only do you have development of the athlete but there is the maintenance of the athlete. They cannot be maintained for just the three months of the competition. Ahtletes have to be maintained over a period of 15 or 20 years if we are to achieve the excellence for which we strive.

I do not think the Bill is going to do this, Mr. Speaker, and I do not think the House of Commons is going to do it. I have not heard the spirit of the Olympics mentioned in this debate. I have not heard the Minister express his concern that Canada has the capacity for excellence. We have the young athletes with the desire, the talent and the ability, but they are starving, living together in welfare clutches. Yet they are called upon to produce excellence of spirit and mind and body. None of these things has been developed, Mr. Speaker. Like everyone else, these young atheletes need jobs. They need jobs that are flexible and that will allow them to travel.

I feel very strongly about this subject, Mr. Speaker. I have lived through this with athletes. I know they have to make sacrifices of mind, body, spirit—and financial sacrifices. They give their country more than they receive and it is about time they were supported properly and financially, not by a lottery but by a commitment of the Government of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Athletic Contests and Events Pools Act

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to Standing Order 79, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines) moved:

Motion No. 4.

That Bill C-95, An Act to provide for Government operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and events and to amend the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act, be amended in Clause 21 by striking out lines 15 to 43 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"each year by the Auditor General of Canada."

He said: Mr. Speaker, "Some of you may wonder", the Minister said in committee, "how the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation will be accountable". That is the subject of this motion. He went on to point out that the operations of the Canadian Sports Pool would be monitored, and that it would have to submit to the Minister responsible and to the Governor in Council a plan of corporate and fiscal activities.

Hon. Members are all well aware of the scandals that plagued Loto Canada's life. The Canadian public will never know the half of what porkbarrel purposes their money was put to. Yet Loto Canada was subject to monitoring by the Minister responsible, and it was subject to audits of sorts.

Recently in this House we discussed at length the involvement of four Ministers of the Crown in connection with the Gillespie affair. We have the report as contained in the Richmond News as early as September 23, 1981, of the interest of another Liberal put out to pasture by the electorate of B.C. who thinks he will have the inside track for the supply and delivery of the hard computer equipment necessary. The name is Cafik and it was included in the press report.

The name of the biggest game in town so far as this Government is concerned is patronage, and Loto Canada gave full opportunity for much of that. To give some credibility to a game of chance, we propose that the books of this Crown corporation be subject to an annual audit by the Auditor General of Canada. The Auditor General might then review the systems of control and accountability, and provide some check on the ticket distribution and the revenue returns. The Auditor General himself in a recent statement has emphasized that the 306 Crown corporations form a sort of sub-parliamentary group with parliamentary scrutiny ranging from sporadic to none at all.

This has been the experience with respect to Crown corporations already in existence. We have been opposed to the introduction of more Crown corporations but this Bill proposes to establish another Crown corporation to run a gambling game. This is the history of monitoring by the Minister responsible and the kind of accountability that has been put in place by this Government. With this kind of track record and with the kind of corporation that could lend itself to abuse, we should do all we can to protect the gambling dollars of Canadians. The odds against them are bad enough without making those odds worse by human abuse and error.

In moving this motion, seconded by the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid), this Party recognizes the desirability of engaging a competent, responsible auditor who will be required to report to the House, someone who has done so with a great deal of honesty, clarity, conciseness and sincerity. That is the only kind of auditor we should have for a games corporation as envisaged by this Bill, and we urge the passage of this motion.

• (1610)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Appolloni): The Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid).

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Thank you, Madam Speaker, and congratulations on your lofty promotion to the Chair!

I wish to participate in this part of the debate to express the concern which we in the backbenches have as we are examining costs and expenditures of various departments and, in particular, Crown corporations. We are time after time frustrated in our examination of expenditures of Crown corporations in their business dealings. I remember the time I was at a committee where we were examining the expenditures of Petro-Canada. Its then executive vice-president, Joel Bell, was in attendance, together with the president, Mr. Hopper. They answered the questions they wanted to answer. They would not answer questions that perhaps touched on sensitive issues which might expose the corporation, and what it was up to in some of the areas which were questionable at best.

Therefore, we feel very strongly that if we are going to set up a "numbers racket" game, it must be examined very carefully. We cannot think of anyone who is better qualified, who will level with the Canadian people more, than the Auditor General. Unfortunately, the experience of auditing firms over the last few months has been disappointing. One firm which audited the books of Canadair somewhere along the line missed some of the expenditures. That is a shame because that casts a bad light on the accounting profession. Certainly, these people being human, Madam Speaker, mistakes are made. However, in dealing with money which is being used for gambling purposes, we want to ensure that if the Government rams this ill-conceived idea through this House, in fact this corporation is audited very carefully by the Auditor General. We can then take a look at the types of expenditures which are being made.

We were given a list of people who have already received money, but we have no idea on what they spent the money. The only reference is to "research". What kind of research was done? Was it research to find out who buys lottery tickets, or where the money comes from? Was polling done to find out if a numbers game is the most popular type of game? Would a numbers game sell in this country? Would the public buy the tickets? Would anyone have won the other night if this type of ticket was sold on a baseball game? Who would have ever guessed that the Toronto Blue Jays would have won 19-7? There is no way under the sun that anyone would have guessed who would win that game.

According to the list, there is money spent for ticket design and production. Three organizations received money for ticket design and production. We have not seen any of this, although I must say that my colleague, the Hon. Member from Oakville, one day magically produced a "numbers racket" ticket which the Minister denied he had anything to do with. However, we found out later on it was in fact from a group of people who were working on the sports pool development.

We would like to know, for example, where Loto Canada spent the $10.4 million in 1977-78 on advertising. Of course, one of those fine Liberal advertising firms picked themselves up a cool $1.5 million that year. The next year they picked themselves up a cool $1.8 million on $13,139,000 spent on advertising. We want to know the breakdown of that advertising expenditure. Why, for example, would $40 million be spent in advertising promotion and administration in order to give away $123 million? The financing on this is horrendous. Why would it one year cost $3 million to print tickets and the next year $8 million to print tickets, and the net receipts went down from the year before? It just does not make sense. Why does it cost in year two of full operation of a lottery twice as much for furniture as it did in year one? We do not receive these answers. Why does market research in year two cost twice as much as it does in year one? Why are net expenses of draws three times as much in the second year as in the complete year one? Why did salaries increase from $2.5 million to $3.3 million year over year? We do not know these answers. They have not been explained to us. We want to make sure that an auditor does examine expenses such as this and reports to the House of Commons so that we will be able intelligently to question the Minister responsible for this particular Crown corporation when his or her estimates come before the committee.

I must say, Madam Speaker, that I am very disappointed in the Government, which has not seen fit over the last two days of debate in the report stage to put up one speaker. It puts up the odd heckler like the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), but it does not put up one speaker in the entire debate. That is a shameful display of the responsibility of Liberal Members of Parliament. I know that many of them, in speaking to them privately, feel exactly the same way we do on this side of the House. They are very concerned about the set up of this corporation and about the accountability of these people responsible for the administration of those funds to Members of Parliament. Therefore my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid), has moved, and I am very proud to second, a motion to change that particular clause in Bill C-95, Clause 21, by striking out lines 15 to 43, which go through a great deal of rigmarole as to who can and who cannot audit the books. That will make it very simple. It will simplify the legislation. I know the Canadian people themselves would have far more confidence if in fact this particular motion was accepted by all present. Each year the Auditor General of Canada would do the audit and present that audit to the House of Commons.

Therefore, it is with great pleasure that I second the motion and request that the Government support motion No. 4.

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to make a few comments on Bill C-95 in respect to the sports pool and motion No. 4 moved by my colleague in respect to the Auditor General taking over the accountability of this sports pool program. In fact, I would hope that Parliament would see fit to study the possibility of the Auditor General being accountable to this House for all Government agencies and Crown corporations, and therefore to the Canadian public.

At the outset, I would like to say that this sports pool is nothing more than an indirect taxation by devious ways and means. It is an underhanded way of collecting money from the Canadian public because the Government has failed in its responsibility time and time again to collect it by normal means. I would like to mention three examples of the devious ways in which this Government has handled the situation from the outset. On June 26, 1981 I asked a question of the then Minister responsible for fitness and amateur sport, and I will quote my whole question because it puts this whole sports pool into perspective. I said:

• (1620)

Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister of fitness and amateur sport. When the original Olympic lottery was introduced in order to defray the costs of the Montreal Olympics, the Liberal Government at that time gave Canadians and the House its assurances that no further lotteries or gambling operations would be initiated. That promise, as the minister knows, has already been broken. It has now come to my attention that the minister is well on his way to extending federal gambling programs to what is known as all-sports betting, in other words, reducing the Government to the status of bookies for betting on hockey games, football games and so on. Without once again copping out by giving a stock answer blaming the previous Government, can the minister confirm or deny whether his Government is contemplating such action?

The Minister's response was:

I would inform the Hon. Member that the Government has no such plans. We do not contemplate any such scheme as the Hon. Member has mentioned.

Three days later, Mr. Speaker, I produced a sample of a sports pool ticket in this House and showed it to the Minister. He had to agree that they were studying some form of gambling operation but he was not sure whether that was it and he in fact had not seen that ticket. So the Minister was either deliberately misleading the House three days earlier, or he was totally ignorant of what went on in his own Department.

To show you the devious ways and means this Government has used to handle this situation from the beginning, less than three months later, on September 14, that same Minister announced very proudly that the federal Government, the Liberals, were going to introduce a sports pool betting scheme along the lines I suggested he was planning less than three months earlier when he denied it. That is why I call it devious ways and means.

Point number two, Mr. Speaker, is advertising. We have talked about the cost of advertising sports pools and gambling operations by this Government, but there is also misleading advertising. I take you back to December 6, 1976, when I informed the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Mr. Abbott, that the ads for Loto Canada at that time were so misleading that a Canadian is twice as likely to be hit by lightning than he is to win $1 million in that gambling operation. The Minister said that he agreed there was excessive and misleading use of advertising. He said it was exaggerated optimism. He also said that he did not plan to get tough about the ads even though he considered them inappropriate, unfair and in bad taste. He said that while he did not think the ads were misleading, they tend to raise expectations in the public mind which are unjustified. He was then removed from that position and we never heard any further about any changes made in that regard. Again, an example of devious ways and means of promoting federal gambling operations.

A third point, which is probably the most important and comes to the root of this whole problem, is that lottery operations were agreed to by Parliament to defray the cost of the Montreal Olympics in 1976. There was a lot of debate about this and we received all kinds of assurances from the Liberal Government that once those costs were defrayed there would no longer be any attempt by the Liberal administration or Parliament to bring in gambling operations under sports pools or lotteries or any such nonsense. Those were outright lies by the Government at that time because, as you know, Mr. Speaker, the lottery defrayed the cost of the Montreal Olympics but then the name was changed to Loto Canada and the rest is history.

When Hon. Members opposite say that we on this side do not care about helping the arts and amateur athletes, that is the furthest from the truth. As a former athlete I support anything which can be done to help amateur athletes in this country. But certainly not by establishing the phony, sleazy programs the Government is talking about which would be taking advantage primarily of the poor people of this nation, and then misleading them with false and misleading advertising.

There are other ways to help amateur athletes in this country other than through lotteries and sports pools or indeed even large Government grants. First we should try to expand sponsorship by the private sector of amateur sports programs and the arts. We could expand the development fees which the NHL is now paying towards the development of junior hockey players. That makes sense. But we are not going far enough. What about figure skaters, as I once was? I spent all my time learning that sport in this country. Today the federal Government is subsidizing Sports Canada, rightly so, for the development of figure skaters and other sports, but then the cream of the figure skaters are taken away by foreign professional ice shows which do not give anything back to the taxpayer in this country to develop figure skaters. Surely there is a golden opportunity for this Parliament to go to the Ice Capades, Holiday on Ice and Ice Follies and say that every time they hire one of our skaters trained here in Canada, surely they must pay something back. The same thing is true in tennis and other professional sports.

These are just some of the ways and means of correcting the existing problem, whether it is on an ongoing basis for fitness and amateur sports, or specifically, as motion No. 3 stated, that there should be funding for the Calgary Olympics.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I just want to reiterate my total opposition to any type of lottery or sports pool. I think it is degrading, downgrading and certainly not in the spirit of athletic sports and the Olympics. If I had more time I could expand on the many recommendations available to this Parliament and the Government in order to assist the arts and amateur sports in general.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I will try and keep my comments fairly brief, but I cannot help but get involved to a certain extent in this debate. It is important because it involves one of the most important activities in this country, the field of Olympic athletics. I cannot help but recall that it was not too long ago that one of the Ministers on that side of the House got up and was trying to tell Members on this side of the House that this proposed sports pool had something to do with skill. I cannot recall quite how he put it but he was trying to tell us that there was some kind of skill involved in winning these sports pools.

Mr. Mayer: Anything that the Liberals do does not involve skill.

Mr. Fulton: Let me make it quite clear that I find the whole Bill quite immoral and improper, and I am confident all Members on this side, and I would hope a few on that side, will vote against it. To try and mix this legislation with the kind of ahtletics we are talking about here, which involve skills—it takes a whole lifetime to try and become an Olympic athlete—with the sort of Las Vegas type atmosphere which is associated with this legislation, I think is quite wrong.

Let me deal for a moment with Clause 21 of this Bill, which I think all Members of this House have to reflect on carefully and support; that is, to have the Auditor General do an annual audit of the books of this kind of operation. If Government Members see fit to vote it through, the morality of the legislation rests on the Government side alone because I think most Canadians will recognize it is not appropriate legislation for the Olympics or anything else.

On top of all that, for Government Members to get up and vote against an annual audit is wrong. I think the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), after wagging his tongue behind the curtains for so long, has the duty to Parliament to get up and give a speech on the points being raised in this House and as to why the Government feels so strongly that this legislation should go through. For example, Consolidated Computers, just one company, lost $125 million down the chute. The Government is trying to convince us and Canadians generally that it is responsible enough in setting up various Crown corporations. We all recognize that it cannot even run the computer side of it, and the sports pool is going to involve the use of computers. Therefore, we have a certain degree of alarm that another $100 million or more will be lost just on the computer side.

However, to go further—and other Hon. Members have touched on this—what about the amount of money which will be going into advertising? Are we discussing $1 million, $5 million or $10 million? It is very important that Hon. Members be apprised of this through the good offices of the Auditor General, who can dig into the books and ferret out, in a comprehensive way for the Members of the House, where the money is really going.

It is clear that all of us on this side of the House do not agree with the Bill to begin with, but we are requesting one of the very basic tenets. There is a responsibility on the Government side, that of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) or one of the other Government Members who are here, to rise and tell us why they do not think an amendment such as this should be carried in the House. Why should there not be an audit? Why should the Canadian public not know whether only 10 cents or 15 cents out of every dollar is actually getting back to pay for what has been proposed, whether the Calgary Olympics, Olympic activities associated with it, or the training or transportation of athletes and coaches? There is a real responsibility which is being let down day after day in this particular Parliament.

Hon. Members on the Government side will rise and vote against amendments that I think would be supported by any Canadian who is stopped on the street and told: "Bill C-95 is the Sports Pool Bill. We do not know whether you agree with it or not but, in terms of just this one principle, do you think it should be audited by an accounting system that is approved by the Parliament of Canada, and that is through the Auditor General?" I am confident that all Canadians would agree with that.

Another point which has been touched on many times, one which Government Members must sit down for a moment to reflect upon, concerns where the money is coming from. It is easy enough to put up billboards and say: "We are setting up a sports pool to obtain money for athletes, for the Calgary Olympics and for other reasons". However, Hon. Members to my right have pointed out that studies not only in Canada but also in Japan and other areas of the world where there are lotteries and gambling of this type have proven time after time that to an overwhelming extent the money comes from poor people who are attempting to sort of bet against the odds of their lives. They are hoping that at some point $1 million or $500,000 or $100,000 will suddenly come to them. I think we all know that that is not how the world works. The Hon. Member who spoke previously pointed out that one is more likely to be struck by lightning riding a bicycle—

Mr. Mayer: Twice!

Mr. Fulton: —twice likely to be struck by lightning riding a bicycle across the Prairies, or for that matter standing here in the Chamber, as one is likely to win $1 million in Loto Canada. I would encourage some Hon. Member from the Government side to rise now and tell us why, in terms of the present amendment to Clause 21 of Bill C-95, there should not be an annual audit by the Auditor General of Canada. I would like to hear why the Government would oppose that.

Mr. McDermid: There's not one person over there who can do it.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Minister, can you answer for the Government?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, if the Government will not take up the challenge to explain to the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), who made a very valid point, I will do my level best. I will put myself—

Mr. Cullen: Same old gang.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —in the position, pardon the expression—and I get choked up whenever I think of the prospect—of being a supporter of the Liberal Government.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I will try to put my mind into that of the backbencher and of the Government Member to try to explain to the Hon. Member for Skeena why the Government does not want this amendment to pass. It is a very simple proposition. It is because the Auditor General has a record and a history of disclosing expenditures which, in his estimation and according to the guidelines given to him as a person who reports directly to Parliament, constitute misuse of public funds.

A private accounting firm will not necessarily have that mandate. What will Price Waterhouse or Peat Marwick or any of these companies do in a normal audit? They will simply give a balance sheet to demonstrate what moneys have been received, what has been expended by way of expenses, without elaboration necessarily of the type of expenditure. For example—the Auditor General and Government Members will not like this because they will not think it very funny politically—the Auditor General will give an illustration, by way of expenditure, of the way in which the chairman of the sports pool organization conducts himself or herself in terms of personal amenities in that responsibility. He will undoubtedly point out that the chairman will have a chauffeur-driven, large automobile at his or her disposal while in Ottawa. He will point out that there will be a permanently paid up suite in an expensive Ottawa hotel available not only to the chairman but also to the members who are on the board.

Mr. Fulton: And all across the country.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I do not pull these examples out of the air; I give an example of what transpired with Loto Canada. That was the lifestyle to which the people who were looking after the money extracted from the poor of our country, those who could not afford it, became accustomed and to which they felt they were entitled. When we came into Government and appointed Mr. Hamilton as chairman of Loto Canada, let me tell the House that he was met on his arrival in Ottawa by a chauffeur-driven Cadillac—

Mr. Mayer: A chauffeur in uniform.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —in uniform, who also carried on responsibilities in a suite at a prominent local downtown hotel, permanently paid up. Those are the kinds of expenditures that would very likely be offensive. It would not sit well with Liberal supporters because it would be an awful thing if we had to bring this out into the public arena.

What else would we find out? We would possibly find out, by way of the Auditor General, that there are other expenditures which are offensive, such as the mode by which these people are travelling across the country. We would find out the precise percentage of money that is being expended from these funds for administrative purposes, quite contrary to the idea that we are supposed to be supporting out of the proceeds of these moneys worth-while, often charitable purposes, and admirable purposes, by way of seducing the people of Canada to support this lottery that is now coming forward, this gaming endeavour of the federal Government.

I was pleased to hear the representative of the New Democratic Party speaking out on behalf of his Party. I was concerned that the NDP was silent on the issue. As its Members come to meet and to redo the Regina manifesto, I think it is about time that they started thinking about their moral position with respect to the issues in this country. It is damn well time, and the people of Canada will be watching with some interest as they gather in Regina to rewrite and rethink their philosophy which has brought them to the heady level they now occupy today in the Gallup poll. However, I want to return to the subject.

When I was practising law, I had an opportunity to represent people who, to use the vernacular, were bookies. I had many clients who were in that trade, "turning book" as we say. I am concerned. I support this particular motion because I think the Government will give these people who turn book in Canada a bad name and lower their reputation. Damon Runyon of Canada could write stories and talk about these people. They were a very interesting group and basically nice people. However, they were breaking the law. Of course, that would not worry the Government of Canada; it is getting right in there.

Mr. Masters: Didn't worry you, did it?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It will be going full steam ahead, breaking the law, moving ahead, changing the law. Let the Government of Canada do what these poor fellows who are trying to make an honourable living cannot do. They were a great bunch, actually very entertaining, nice people; but they were breaking the law and they needed the best defence they could get, so they consulted me. They had a number of devices. One of them was known as flashpaper. When they took down bets they used a type of paper which had an amazing capacity for incendiary activity on the slightest provocation. All of a sudden, if there were any visitors, such as officers of the law, who would come on to the premises, this evidence would automatically disappear and be disposed of in what we called the toilet. What I am concerned about is that if the Government opposes the proposition put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid), we will have an accounting system which will be totally reliant on flashpaper.

The Auditor General will not be able to conduct a meaningful investigation of the expenditures and the kind of patronage games that might be played. On the basis of this legislation, the Government is entering into flash paper accounting. It is giving bookies a bad name. it will give the bookie, someone who is shunned in society, the wrong idea. Not only will they make money from booking, which is criminally wrong, but they will also avoid their income tax responsibilities because the Government would not worry about proper accounting to any official or to Parliament. That is the issue we face today.

I say this in almost a jocular fashion but I have a serious message that I want to leave with those backbenchers of the Government Party to whom I am particularly addressing my remarks. What can be wrong with the proposition put forward by my colleague from St. Catharines, so admirably seconded by the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid), that the Auditor General should audit the books? Money is being taken from people in Canada, very often the poor, and they are entitled to have the best possible accounting system to ensure that the money is properly spent in the final analysis. What is wrong with fairness in the operation of this particular activity? What does the Government have to hide by not allowing this amendment to go through?

I remember when my colleague for Halton (Mr. Jelinek) raised questions a long time ago to which he received denials by the then Minister responsible and now by the Secretary of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan). I remember sitting in the House and being absolutely amazed that the Minister could stand and deny that their sports pool proposition was coming forward. At the same time we had evidence of that being the case; the Hon. Member for Halton had it in his hand. Yet the Government continued to deny that it had any intention of entering into a sports pool proposition.

If you were buying a used car from a man like the Minister of State for International Trade and he dealt with you in that way, Mr. Speaker, would you be very secure in accepting his word that it would be run properly and the car would be all right? I would not even kick the tire for fear of it falling on my foot. But that is the type of attitude which the Government takes. It has been an attitude of deceit, of prevarication of speaking with a forked tongue, one of stating that which is contrary to the truth. I cannot think of enough ways to describe what is happening here without being thrown out of the House by the Speaker.

That has been the record of the Government and that is why it is so important for us to fight this particular proposal and to vote against it. That is what I intend to do.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support motion No. 4 which was moved by my colleague from St. Catharines (Mr. Reid). I cannot understand why the Government or anyone would not want to vote for this amendment. It will be interesting to see how backbenchers opposite will vote.

Not only is the manner of raising this money questionable but, as has been pointed out many times, the way money has been spent from similar lotteries in the past is very questionable. One manner of ensuring the proper expenditure of this money, if there is a proper way to spend money raised in this fashion, would surely be to give the Auditor General the opportunity to review those expenditures.

Let me go back and deal with Loto Canada. From 1977-78 to 1978-79, expenditures on furniture alone went from $273,000 to $402,000. This is an example of what the Auditor General could examine to determine if such expenditures were proper.

Given the fact that the Government will push this legislation through, I do not understand why it does not want to let the Auditor General review the expenditures of this new Crown corporation unless it wants to use it as a slush fund to look after some of its supporters. If that is not the case, then let the Auditor General look at it. I do not believe it can make any logical argument that the Auditor General should not look at the books of this new Crown corporation which will be established.

Aside from that I find it absolutely incredible at the end of this session, during extended hours, at a time when there are two millions unemployed in this country, that we are debating a measure as foolish and nonsensical as establishing another lottery in this country. It boggles the mind how any Government which would call itself responsible would be using this time at the end of June during extended hours to deal with this kind of nonsense. It reminds me of what my father said about people who did not make sense; he said people like that had about as much sense as a sucking goose. In many ways it is a reflection of what the Government is doing when establishing its priorities. It certainly makes no sense to me.

We should be dealing with piece of legislation which would help provide jobs and increase productivity in the country. Why are we not talking about increased cash advances for western farmers? Why not discuss some of the issues concerning the voluntary sector which were raised last night by the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean)? The voluntary sector is in great need of some consideration by the Government. If the Government were to give priority consideration to this sector, we could pass legislation that would encourage people to become involved in the voluntary sector and provide services to two million unemployed in their time of need. It is only logical that the Government should consider legislation such as that.

However, we are debating legislation seeking to allow the Government to act legally but immorally. We all know that the Government is financially, morally and intellectually bankrupt, but we did not realize it had reached the stage where we must consider legislation such as we are faced with today.

Let me deal with gambling and the chance of winning. This country is relatively young. Many towns, villages and agricultural societies in my area are celebrating their one hundredth anniversaries this summer. People came to this country 100 years ago with a sense of hope and opportunity that if they worked hard they could actually acquire something. I feel very sad about what has happened in this country in the last 15 years. The Government, through its bankrupt policies, has eliminated the opportunity many people had to realize their dreams. The Government has replaced those opportunities with lotteries.

As was pointed out, the best odds one has to win is 600,000 to one. If those who got off the boat to come here to make a living for their families faced those kinds of odds, I suspect that they would not have got on the boat in the first place. If they came here and saw the odds which they faced, they probably would have returned home. I am very sad that our country had degenerated to the point where the Government coerces people not physically but mentally. In some says that is even more insidious than physical coercion. Al Capone used to run a numbers racket by kneecapping people and threatening physical violence. Instead, this Government is threatening emotional and intellectual violence. It is coercing people into buying lottery tickets with the admonitition that they will help the arts, athletes and medical research. That is absolute nonsense because these programs are worthy of support without coercing people with these admonitions of the good they will do by taking a chance at spending a dollar. I find it incredible that we must continually rise to point out facts to the Government which are obvious to any normal person.

If we are to have this legislation, since it appears that the Government will crush the legitimate opposition to it which we have on this side, surely it can let the people know that the money it will collect will be spent in a sane fashion. This can be done by allowing the Auditor General to examine the books. I suspect that the Auditor General believes he should look at the books. I also believe that those who would benefit from this lottery, such as those in medical research, would also like to see the books audited by the Auditor General as well.

This would eliminate the use of chauffeur driven limousines and fancy hotel suites, as pointed out by my colleague for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn). It was also pointed out that the Government's idea of restraint is to have the chauffeur also act as the bartender. I suggest that is the Government's definition of restraint, because not much care is taken about how other people's money is spent. The adoption of this motion would allow the Auditor General, while after the fact, at least to point out that those purported expenses for advertising and overhead actually represent a slush fund for the Government to look after its supporters. Therefore I would ask the backbenchers of the Liberal Party, both of them in the House today, to talk to their colleagues. We appreciate that they are here to listen. I would suspect that if they did want to get up and respond, the would have to agree with many of the points we are making in terms of this amendment. I see an Hon. Member on the other side shaking his head. I would like to know why he disagrees. I think all of us on this side would like to see him get up and explain his reason for disagreeing with this amendment. Then we would know why he is shaking his head or if he understands the amendment.

• (1650)

I think anybody who is concerned about public funds, and all of us are elected to represent people, should be concerned about the way they will be spent. I do not think anybody would be against the Auditor General looking at these books. That is precisely what motion No. 4 provides. Let me put it on the record; the amendment is: "each year by the Auditor General of Canada". That simply means that each year the books should be looked at by the Auditor General. It is a very simple and straight-forward amendment.

As I have said, I suspect everybody connected with this lottery would be in favour of having the Auditor General look at the books. If the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Masters) wants to rise, we would be polite because we would like to hear why he is shaking his head.

I will certainly vote in favour of this amendment because it is a very worth-while one; but I would like to hear why Members on the other side are going to vote against it.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen)—Freedom of Information—(a) McBride Commission Report. (b) Government policy; the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor)—Veterans Affairs—Request that commemorative medal be struck to honour Dieppe veterans; the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer)—Grain—(a) Cash advance payments—Request for increase. (b) Request for assistance to farmers.

ATHLETIC CONTESTS AND EVENTS POOLS ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE GOVERNMENT OPERATED POOL SYSTEMS

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-95, an Act to provide for Government operated pool systems on combination of athletic contests and events and to amend the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture; and motion No. 4 (Mr. Reid, St. Catharines).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Section (11) of Standing Order 79, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Hon. John Roberts (for the Minister of State (International Trade)) moved:

That Bill C-95, An Act to provide for government operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and events and to amend the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act, be amended in Clause 24 of the English version by striking out line 33 at page 10 and substituting the following therefor:

"its three following financial years."

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I find it absolutely disgraceful that the Government has a motion on the Order Paper yet the Minister is not here to debate it. His Parliamentary Secretary is not here to debate it. In fact, there is not one person on the Government side to debate this motion so as to tell us what it is all about and why the Government is presenting it. I find it absolutely disgraceful. Tht is the interest the Liberal Government has in the parliamentary system and in a Bill that is before this House. I find it absolutely unforgiving that the Government presents motions and has no one in the House to handle them. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) are here but neither of them knows what we are debating in the House; they do not have a clue. There is no one here, not even a Parliamentary Secretary, to discuss this Bill. I find it appalling.

We are debating a Bill which is an atrocious piece of legislation in the first place. It should not be before the House. To have no one from the Government side stand up and present the motion speaks of the Liberal Government, of the tired, old bunch that are over there. I know that the Canadian people, whenever the Liberals get enough guts to call an election, will rid the country of this terrible outfit that has been trying to administer this country for the last 15 years.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to say a few words because I feel as concerned as the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) is that the Government has demonstrated a sort of cynicism with respect to this legislation that cannot go unnoticed. The Government is not prepared to stand up and tell us exactly why it feels this legislation should have priority.

It has been pointed out by myself and by my colleagues that there are in excess of two million Canadians unemployed, there are serious social and economic problems facing the nation, and with precious time in the House the Liberals' priorities seem to be to create a sports pool to give themselves an exception under the Criminal Code of Canada to get back into the sports gaming lottery business by virtue of this device. This is the nature of the Government's priorities. I think it is necessary for us to stand up and reiterate the reason the Government is doing this.

I want to conclude my few remarks by saying that those of us on this side of the House look forward with some substantial pride to the coming of the Winter Olympics in Calgary. I will be there, I am sure with hundreds of thousands of other Canadians, to cheer our Canadian Olympic team. I suggest that our national Government has a role to give financial assistance to this worth-while project, and I would support that. There is no question the Winter Olympics will be an event which will promote one of the most beautiful and challenging areas for recreation and athletic events that will be performed at the Olympics. But what this is all about and what this debate has been all about, before we get to the final vote, is really to question—and Parliament is a forum for questioning—the legislation of the Government to which there has been no response. It has been a pitiful display on the part of the Government. When an attempt has been made to have a dialogue and to get answers to what I think are legitimate answers, the Government sits mute, refusing to respond. It lets the matter go through by process of attrition because the fundamental question is the method and the means upon which the Government has chosen to raise $200 million to give to the organizing committee.

When the Minister responsible for fitness and amateur sport accepted that responsibility, this particular sports pool was no part of the commitment on behalf of the people of Canada. I think all of us who watched the application made on behalf of Canada at Baden Baden were supportive and felt that the Government—I do not want to spend a lot of time commending the Government—was speaking on behalf of the people of Canada and saying that yes, the Government was prepared to support and important region of our country in its application to hold the Winter Olympics. But it now comes forward with this legislation, which is not restricted to supporting this particular project but sets into place until such time as it is revoked, which I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, will be after the next election, the enormous cost of setting up an elaborate gaming operation on behalf of the federal Government.

This will be available for a variety of purposes in terms of paying off many friends of the Liberal Government. Examples have been given. This will be done without response on the part of Government Members and its supporters. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) sits mute. They will have to answer to the people of Canada later on in terms of their moral, legal and ethical positions in supporting this piece of legislation without the amendment suggested by my colleague. I think it is a sorry day for Canada that we have to end this part of the session with this sorry Government, pitiful as it is, relying upon a sports pool in order to raise tax money to support medical research, the improvement of our athletic position and the Calgary Winter Olympics.

• (1700)

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I had not anticipated that there would be extensive debate on this particular amendment. In the event Hon. Members opposite are opposed to this amendment, I advise the House that I would be prepared to seek its consent to withdraw motion No. 5. Since it was originally put on the Order Paper, it has been concluded that it is really not necessary. It is fine if it goes through, but I do not think it is necessary to engage in lengthy debate on it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Smith: I am just trying to accommodate Hon. Members opposite. If they are opposed to it, rather than force them to go through a debate on it, I would be prepared to seek the consent of the House to withdraw it.

Mr. Mayer: Tell us why.

Mr. Smith: Because it is not necessary.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, before the debate continues too far and before any strong positions are taken by the Government side, I would like to indicate, in the absence of the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan), that originally that particular section of the Act required the Crown corporation to provide to the Minister responsible for the approval of the Governor in Council a corporate plan for its two following years. The executive directors charged with the responsibility of preparing, organizing and developing programs for both fitness and amateur sport raised a question of concern. They indicated that the original two-year period was far too short, too short a period for good term planning or even long-term planning. They wanted an extension so as to provide better long-range planning, particularly in instances of major sports events.

It was argued in committee that it was an acceptable practice for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and for the Government of Canada, in the presentation of budgets, to file financial forecasts of five years. This was generally accepted by Departments in making submissions to their respective Ministers. Government Departments and Crown corporations should, if they are to do their job properly, plan ahead for at least a period of five years.

Accordingly, in committee the Opposition recommended that the time period be changed and that this Crown corporation be required to submit a fiscal corporate plan for a period of five years. This was not acceptable to the Minister. A compromise arrangement was reached, and hence Motion No. 5 is before the House.

We support this motion which sets out a requirement that the fiscal corporate plan should be submitted to the Minister responsible for a period of its three following years. We in the Opposition are prepared to support that position.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried on division.

Motion No. 5 agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions on the Bill. Call in the Members.

The House divided on motion No. 2 (Mr. Reid (St. Catharines)) which was negatived on the following division:

Madam Speaker: The motion is lost.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I believe there might be a disposition to have the same division recorded for the rest of the motions. However, I would ask the unanimous consent of the House to add to the votes cast by this Party the names of the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) and the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby). If that were done, the same division could be recorded in the Votes and Proceedings. Otherwise, we shall have to go through a recorded division again. I believe it might save the time of the House.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree that the recorded vote for Motion No. 2 should be applied to the other motions, Nos. 3 and 4, and that the names mentioned by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) be added, since they came into the House once the vote had started?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House agrees.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, since that courtesy has been accorded, I suggest that the Hon. Member on the Government side who just came into the House may wish the same treatment. If he does, we would certainly agree on this side.

Madam Speaker: For the benefit of the Chair, would the Hon. Member who came late to vote identify himself to the Chair? The Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid).

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Madam Speaker, I was here for the vote. I merely left my chair to speak to my colleague, the Hon. Member from Scarborough, and then returned to my chair. I was here for the vote.

Madam Speaker: You were here for the vote but you did not vote?

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Yes, I did vote. I was here.

Madam Speaker: I see.

Mr. Lewis: Fair enough.

Motion No. 4 negatived.

[Translation]

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State) moved that the Bill as amended be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Madam Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the third time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1750)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I have had consultations with my Opposition colleagues, and the order of business in the House has been modified as follows: As of now, we shall first proceed with consideration of two Bills which concern the judges and the Federal Court. Since both Bills will have to go to a committee of the whole and a number of amendments are possible, Hon. Members should judge for themselves and decide whether it is important to stay in the House or not. After the judges legislation, we shall quickly dispose of Bill S-24, since we have an agreement that only one speaker per party will be heard, followed by Bill C-119, where we also have an agreement for having only one speaker per party. As soon as these four Bills have been disposed of, whenever that may be, we shall adjourn until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, that is in essence the agreement we have reached. I would ask that the Judges Bill, which we insisted be split, be called separately. On that understanding we are in agreement.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement to the order of business just now enumerated by the Hon. President of the Privy Council.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the House shall adjourn when that order of business is completed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is there unanimous consent for the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) to introduce two Bills arising out of the Judges Act?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

JUDGES ACT—FEDERAL COURT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-166, An Act to amend the Judges Act and the Federal Court Act.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? Later this day?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

AN ACT RESPECTING THE TAX COURT OF CANADA AND TO AMEND THE FEDERAL COURT ACT, THE JUDGES ACT AND THE UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH AND TO AMEND

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-167, An Act respecting the Tax Court of Canada, and to amend the Federal Court Act, the Judges Act and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? Later this day?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

JUDGES ACT—FEDERAL COURT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-166, An Act to amend the Judges Act and the Federal Court Act, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole House.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would first of all like to thank the Leaders and Members of both Opposition Parties for their co-operation in allowing this Bill and its companion Bill to come before us and to receive speedy passage. We are accommodating a good number of Provinces in putting this legislation through.

Bill C-166, Mr. Speaker, is an Act to amend the Judges Act and the Federal Court Act. Since it naturally falls into two segments, I will deal with each of those in turn. First, with respect to the Federal Court Act, I would point out that the Bill provides for an increase of four judges at the Federal Court of Appeal level, and two judges at the Trial Division level. Increases in the number of judges have been requested for some time by the Chief Justice and Associate Chief Justice of the Federal Court, I might add, Mr. Speaker, with a great deal of pressing and persistence on their part. This increase in the number of judges takes into account the present case load as well as the projected increase in the next few years and the desirability of reducing the reliance, to a very substantial extent, on deputy judges.

Deputy judges, Mr. Speaker, are in practice judges of the provincial Superior Courts who have retired on account of age. The Bill will correct an anomaly by extending to a judge of the federal Court of Canada the right to elect to be a supernumerary judge on the same basis as, for example, judges of the Superior Courts of the Provinces.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendments to the judges Bill are mainly of an administrative and technical nature. As Hon.

Members are aware, under the Constitution, the Parliament of Canada appoints the judges of superior courts and district and county courts in the provinces and provides for their salaries. In order to meet the demand in many provinces which have recently created additional positions for judges in superior and county courts or which have informed us of their intention to do so in the near future, the Government is proposing amendments to the judges Bill, authorizing salaries for the additional judges.

[English]

In other words, Mr. Speaker, we try to make some provision in advance for the Provinces by bringing the law up to date and by including the immediately pending modifications of which we have been notified by various Provinces. For example, a major reorganization is to take place this fall in the Province of Manitoba, where a new division of the Supreme Court will be created to deal with Family Court matters and where, I also understand, the County Courts and Supreme Courts will be merged. We have received advance notice of that change on the part of the Province, and so the legislation allows for that. It also allows, through the pool arrangement, for some small increase in the number of judges throughout the country at the Superior, County and District Court levels over the next few years. For these reasons, the actual net increase in the number of judges that the Bill would give us authority to appoint immediately is very much smaller than would be immediately apparent from the Bill itself.

• (1800)

I have already mentioned that with the reorganization four judges would be appointed to the Federal Court of Appeal and two to the Trial Division. There would also be two Supreme Court judges appointed in British Columbia and the Chief Judge of the County Courts in Manitoba. There would be five additional Queen's Bench judges and an associate Chief Justice and also an additional County Court position. There would be four Queen's Bench positions in New Brunswick, that is, for the Family Court in that Province. In Nova Scotia, there would be an additional Appeal Court Judge, two Trial Court judges and a Chief Judge of the County Courts. In Ontario, there would be two additions to the High Court and three to the County Courts as well as an acting Chief Judge. The largest number of new judgeships would be created in the Province of Quebec which has requested us to enable the appointment of nine new judges of the Superior Court level.

I might just add in conclusion that the Bill also makes technical changes and removes language in some parts of the Judges Act that may be considered sexist. These comments summarize the essential elements of the Bill and, if my colleague opposite is ready to proceed, I can sit down at this point and allow him to have the floor.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the benefit of hearing the remarks of the Minister with respect to the split portion of the Bill. I am pleased to be able to join in the debate today dealing with changes to the Judges Act and, subsequently, to deal with a Bill which will, in effect, create a new court in Canada, referred to as a tax court.

As the House will have noticed, the Bill was split into two portions at the insistence of my Party. There was an agreement that was finally reached prior to the introduction of the two Bills, by unanimous consent. This was because of fundamental concern expressed by Members of my Party with respect to the precedent which has been growing in the past on the part of the Government in terms of bringing in so-called omnibus legislation which purports bring in all types of amendments to a particular piece of legislation. This particular instance concerns the expansion of provincial courts at the request of the Provinces, expansion of the Federal Court at the request of the Federal Court and the creation of a new court.

We will support both of these Bills. We are not speaking against them. However, in terms of the precedent that would be established of bringing in one piece of legislation containing all of these portions, we think it is significant to stand up on each occasion ans ask—indeed, insist—that the Government bring in separate pieces of legislation with separate topics. The reason is very simple. It involves the apples and oranges concept in terms of legislation before the House.

When we are dealing with diverse, totally unrelated matters in one piece of legislation, it might well be the case, and often is the case, that Hon. Members in the House may support one portion of the Bill and oppose other provisions. As a result, we are not able to deal intelligently or responsibly with the legislation brought forward by the Government because we are dealing with a diverse number of problems. In order to make our point with respect to parts of the Bill to which we may take exception, we must vote against all the provisions of the Bill. That is simply an unacceptable way of proceeding legislatively. That is why we have insisted on the splitting of the Bill.

I think the Government is to be commended to accept what I would term as being our constructive suggestion in terms of this legislation. It has facilitated the passage of these pieces of legislation. It has allowed us to deal with them seriatim and to deal with the prinicples involved. We do support the provisions and changes to the Judges Act.

The Minister just referred to the amendments to the Judges Act. I should say at the outset that we are a little upset about the length of time it has taken for the Minister to come up with these particular amendments. Many of the Provinces involved in the Federal Court have been experiencing substantial backlogs in connection with cases coming before them and in provision of judicial services. It is clearly undesirable. The House should note the willingness of our Party to rectify the situation as quickly as possible.

There has been representation received from representatives of the Canadian Bar Association and, indeed, from representatives of provincial bars across the country, concerning the difficulties being experienced in bringing cases before various judicial bodies in each of the Provinces. The old legal axiom, which the professor who now occupies the position of Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) will understand, is that "Justice delayed is justice denied". However, I wanted to take this opportunity to address, in very few words, the new and expanding role of judges in general.

Since we are increasing the number of judges, this is an opportunity for those of us who are concerned with justice and legal affairs to consider the role of judges in our society today. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms has, of course, greatly expanded the impact of judges on our society today. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms has, of course, greatly expanded the impact of judges on our society, particularly as they relate to the criminal justice system. Opinions vary as to how great an impact there will be. Some Crown prosecutors and some police officers feel that the exclusionary rule will appear in Canada and that, as a result, we will see a host of technical acquittals and a resultant increase in crimes which go unpunished before our courts in Canada from this time on. To date, I think it is fair to say that this has not proven to be true with respect to those cases which have come before our lower courts. However, many people feel that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is full of loopholes.

A suggestion exists that Clause 1 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms will severely restrict the force and effect of the Charter and that as a result, the evidentiary rules made by the Warren Court in the United States will not have a home in Canada.

In the United States, the United States Supreme Court has developed the exclusionary rule through decisions such as Mapp and Miranda preventing the use of evidence that has been collected in derogation of a person's legal rights under the Constitution. Whether Canadian courts will develop similar rules to protect citizens' rights under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is open to question. All indications to date suggest that Canadian courts will maintain their small "c" conservative leanings, although there are a number of exceptions, and particularly one reported in the Ottawa press, where a local provincial court judge excluded evidence collected through a faulty search warrant.

The American Supreme Court has been openly interventionist in its rulings on the criminal law and on other matters. Its rulings on capital punishment, abortion, busing and the environment, to name only a few, have had profound political and sociological implications.

• (1810)

Indeed, the traditions of the decision-making process within the U.S. courts have been different from those of our judges. American judges have shown in recent years a willingness to take an active position on political and sociological issues. The Anglo-Canadian tradition has been for the judges to confine themselves to the issue between the litigants before them, using precedent as their guide and to avoid making sweeping decisions with political implications.

It is arguable that in enacting a Charter of Rights we have only gone part way in reforming our legal system. My point is essentially that we have developed in this country a Charter of Rights that will take years to interpret. The existence of the Charter substantially increases the power of the final court of appeal in our country, the Supreme Court of Canada, to define and delineate the rights of individual citizens. Those judges who will make these determinations are, in effect, appointed by one person, the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister ultimately determines the competence of the nominees and makes an assessment of their political, social and philosophical beliefs. Indeed, the Supreme Court of this country has, from time to time, been accused of being centralist at one time and decentralist at others. I believe the opportunity now exists for a Prime Minister to shape the day-to-day practice of rights and freedoms in this country, even to the extent of their encroachment on provincial jurisdiction. This is something that causes me major concern.

As most Members will know, United States judges are appointed to the Supreme Court by the President. But the judiciary committee of the Senate then interviews the nominees and makes a recommendation on ratification to the full Senate who then may, by simple majority, accept or reject a nomination. Fifteen presidents have seen 26 of their nominees for the Supreme Court fail to win Senate confirmation out of 139 appointments.

I would suggest to the House and to the Minister that in light of the enactment of our new Charter of Rights, we may have cause to consider what provisions we may adopt in our own country to allow elected representatives—possibly Members of Parliament or other elected officials representing various regions of our country—the opportunity of considering the social, philosophical or other views held by those nominees before their appointment to the highest court in our land is made final. Another opportunity we may consider at this time is that it may be desirable to have the Governor in Council make the nominations, at which time an appropriate committee of the House can be given the opportunity to interview and make recommendations on the appropriateness of the nomination to the Supreme Court of Canada. Indeed, the House of Commons may even be given an opportunity to vote on nominations made to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Without casting any reflection upon the competence of the Members of our Supreme Court at the present time, who are eminent and distinguished jurists, I believe that we are entering into a new judicial age in our country which therefore could make it the appropriate time to consider this type of investigation. Indeed, I have informally discussed this matter with more than one Member of the existing Supreme Court who have found no fault in the suggestion I have made. Furthermore, one judge was rather supportive of what I am now saying, that there should be no difficulty with an investigation not only of the qualifications and competence of nominees to the Supreme Court of Canada when a person takes that position, knowing the powers that will be vested in the Supreme Court of Canada, but to find out where they stand and have stood on issues and their attitude toward issues arising in the House.

I admit that some practical problems will exist with this method since our system involves Party disciplines and the lack of separation between the executive and legislative branches of Government. However, a process such as the one suggested would allow an appropriate committee of the House at least to interview the nominee and discuss that nominee's qualifications and political, social and philosophical views.

Other alternatives are certainly available and have been suggested by responsible people in our country from time to time. For example, the Task Force on National Unity recommended nomination by Governor in Council following consultation with the respective Attorneys General of the Provinces. Nomination would then be ratified by the appropriate committee of the proposed council of the federation, a body which represented the Provinces at the federal level. Perhaps the Senate Reform Committee will have further recommendations with respect to the role of a reformed Senate in terms of judicial appointments in our country with regard to the enactment of the Charter of Rights.

Whatever the method, I think the important point is that it is necessary to develop a system of judicial appointments to the Supreme Court that in effect allows people who are elected the opportunity of having some input into these nominations. Again, without casting any reflection on any particular incumbent in the position of Prime Minister, I believe it is important for these decisions to be made by more than simply one person, even if that one person is the Prime Minister of our country. In developing a Charter of Rights we have only come part of the way to enhancing the rights and freedoms of Canadians. We must work as hard as we can to ensure that these rights and freedoms will be dealt with by the courts in a fair and independent fashion. Furthermore, we must ensure that they appear to be dealt with in such a fashion.

Finally, in dealing with this Bill which increases the complement of judges in various courts across our country, as the Minister pointed out, I want to express my concern over a matter which has received some attention recently in the public press. It concerns the whole question of the independence of the judiciary and the ability of members of the court to speak out on current political issues. I fully understand some of the frustrations felt by members of our judiciary over the traditional way in which they must deal with important political issues facing our country. Traditionally, judges simply do not speak out publicly on political issues. There is a legitimate and valid reason for this which has developed through tradition. It is that justice should not only appear to be impartial but should actually be impartial. Any suggestion that the judges have a preconceived view of the various political issues in our country cannot in any way be allowed to continue to the jeopardy of a citizen who has litigation before a court.

While there may be great sympathy for a position enunciated by members of the judiciary in this country from time to time outside the sphere of their consideration of cases before them, and while their positions may be indeed meritorious and dictate the support of people across Canada, I make the simple observation and proposition to the House that judges, by so acting, put themselves in a position where a litigant may feel he is not receiving a truly impartial hearing while pleading his case before the court if it relates to a matter on which a judge has spoken.

I agree with Chief Justice Laskin of the Supreme Court that the decision has to be made by those who occupy a position of judge of any of our superior courts in Canada that the only way they may address any issue is by dealing with the matter through the courts. Any other conclusion, I think, would be very seriously detrimental to our judicial system. I say to people who consider appointments to the courts that in accepting the appointment they receive some very substantial protection for their independence. They are not able to be removed arbitrarily or by any government. The only way to remove a judge of a superior court in this country is by an address by both Houses of Parliament, a resolution passed by both Houses, a very substantial protection for the judge in dealing independently with the issues before him or her without any concern for political pressure which may be imposed upon them. But by the same token, because they have that unique and unusual protection, they also have the responsibility, indeed the constraint upon them not to involve themselves in political issues from day to day.

I sometimes find it quite difficult to understand the rationale of those who speak out on the floor of the House of Commons in support of a particular judge having the ability to become involved in active debate on political issues, no matter how meritorious. I ask the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), at one time the justice critic for the New Democratic Party who represented as he did at one time Mr. Justice Berger, the rhetorical question whether in supporting Mr. Justice Berger in his right to speak out, he would feel compelled to support another judge who may speak out condemning the policies of the New Democratic Party and feel very legitimately and seriously that he was doing a public service in making a pronouncement on the policies of the New Democratic Party. I think the Hon. Member for Burnaby, or indeed the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper), or indeed the distinguished Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), or indeed the current justice critic, the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), would be the first ones to stand up and say that a judge has no right to criticize the policies of the New Democratic Party, that he is wrong. I am sure they would say that there is no place for a judge in this country to involve himself in that kind of debate. When I hear from colleagues in the House of Commons to my left taking that position, it causes me a great deal of concern. It makes me wonder whether they fully understand the principles upon which judicial independence in our system is based.

I have spoken a little longer than I intended, Mr. Speaker. But this is one of the few opportunities that one has to talk about judges. I do not want to cast any reflection on the Minister or the Government by saying that we in the Opposition are not often consulted about judicial appointments. We hear about them. Press releases come across our desks. From time to time I know that judges appointed by this Government have had some past affiliation with the governing Party. It is not an unheard of proposition that that is the case. I simply say to the Minister that I hope after the next election when we are in government we will take a far broader view with respect to the responsibilities and try to be as apolitical as we can. Mind you, as has been pointed out by our new Leader there are many highly qualified people who at one time or another supported the Conservative Party who are still available for judicial appointments, and I would not want to deny them that responsibility. Therefore, I do not want to tie myself down too closely by saying that we would not appoint any Conservatives because that would be wrong-headed and unfortunate. I simply say to the Minister that while we petition him to develop the process, there has been some progress with respect to the whole process of judicial selection of judges in Canada. An attempt has been made for greater consultation with various provincial bars and the Canadian Bar Association, and I think this is an admirable development concerning judicial appointments in our country.

With the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and for a variety of reasons, the role of the judiciary in our country is expanding in importance. Judges are becoming involved, as they are in many issues, in the interpretations they bring down which affect the daily lives of Canadians, and it is important that we deal with these matters in terms of getting the best people possible appointed to the bench. We should be tireless in our efforts and supportive of each other as much as possible on a non-partisan basis to get the best people possible to serve as judges in the courts of our land.

With those few remarks I conclude my observations with respect to this Bill, but again I wish to assure the Minister of the position we have taken. We are prepared to let this Bill go through all stages today in order to relieve somewhat the pressure on the courts across the country with respect to the workload they experience.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, most of the matters which are dealt with in the legislation before us are technical. They are not controversial, they are not partisan. I presume the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan), in consultation with his provincial counterparts, decided that a certain number of judges is needed in each Province and there is good reason for this. Likewise, for the reorganization into the tax court there is good reason for it and it is something we can all support.

I want to make a couple of comments about judicial appointments, although my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper), will be making a few more. I do recall, apropos of a few remarks of the previous speaker, that in making representations to the last Conservative Prime Minister about judicial appointments, I pointed out that those appointments would all be going to the Conservative Party after years of going all to the Liberal Party and I suggested that appointments might be based relative to population. I suggested that we might concede that a certain number of eligible people would have no political affiliation and that the other appointments should be distributed roughly according to representation in popular vote. I did not get anywhere with this proposal. The former Prime Minister did not think that such a reasonable proposal was worth considering.

The Minister of Justice has made reference to improving some of the sexist language in the Judges Act. I want to commend him for that. However, I want to point out that it is a very minor change he has made so far and it is far from the most important one. The language is still framed in the masculine. The judges are all "he". Of course, this is largely true. Most judges are men, but clearly this is one of the points we want to address. Women should be well represented in the judiciary and so far they are not.

The one change the Minister did make concerns pensions. The phrase now, instead of being "widow's pension", is "pension for the surviving spouse". It is an important principle that widowers be treated on the same basis as widows. Let us not be foolish about this and think that this will address any dire social need. I doubt whether there is any widower of a woman judge who is in desperate need of the pension, and I doubt any injustice would have continued by keeping the old language. What we need is a much more comprehensive change to non-sexist language throughout. I would refer the Minister to the guidelines established by the status of women in Canada which were released very recently. These were prepared for what was called federal Government communications. They were not directed toward legislation. But the same principle holds. They are very good guidelines. I would suggest they be consulted and in the future the Ministry of Justice phrase its legislation in non-sexist terms. This is not just a matter of symbols, Mr. Speaker. Symbols themselves are important. But judges make decisions regarding people's lives. We have had disastrous decisions in the past regarding women. There has been a long series of women's equality cases. They have gone through the courts all the way to the Supreme Court of Canada. The Supreme Court of Canada has a disastrous record in dealing with women's equality right back to the old Persons case. Women were not persons within the lifetime of many Members of this House. In the Judges Act, women are still not persons. They are nobodies. I think we have to assume this affects judges' thinking.

I plan to bring in some amendments at Committee of the Whole stage, but I would like to comment briefly on the rationale behind them. There are two amendments concerning pensions. First, there is a section which eliminates the widow's pension, or what will be called the surviving spouse's pension when the legislation is passed, if the widow or surviving spouse remarries. Clearly there is the idea of a widow being a dependent, and the pension is only for the time that the widow is a dependent. This is a very false idea.

We have a notion that marriage is a partnership of equals. In the case where the judge has a homemaker spouse who did not go into the paid labour force, that person is dependent on the judge and the judge's pension, but that person has also made a contribution. For example, that person has probably raised children over a number of years and done a great deal of work for the couple. That is normally recognized by having a pension as a result, but we do not see this; the person does not get a pension in her own name if her husband dies and she remarries. She loses the pension, which is extremely unfair to her. It may mean that some women in these circumstances who would like to remarry will not remarry because they cannot afford to lose that pension for which they have worked and to which they have contributed for many, many years by their work in the marriage.

The other pension amendment concerns the pension of the judge being split between the two spouses when the spouse reaches the age of 65. This is a proposal which is being considered for many pension plans including the Canada Pension Plan. It is in the green paper and has been discussed wherever pensions were under discussion. This amendment recognizes that a couple is a partnership of equals. They each work, they each contribute, and they should each benefit. Clearly it would not be fair if the spouse did not split her or his pension in the circumstances, but it would be eminently fair in the case of the homemaker spouse for whom there is no pension at all, or a spouse who is in the paid labour force and splits her or his pension at the same time.

I think they are very reasonable and very important amendments. Judges should have a model pension scheme. They make decisions about pensions which affect all other Canadian men and women. They have made bad decisions in the past. Why did we have the cases of Murdoch, Leatherdale and Rathwell? Why did we have these cases where the contribution of women was not understood and was underestimated? Judges' own pensions underestimate the contribution of women. We only have to look at their own scheme, which Parliament provided, to see that women are not equal beings. It is very important in the area of pensions that the provisions for judges be the best possible ones in our society, that they really be just and fair.

I will be introducing these amendments when the Bill is being considered in Committee of the Whole. I do not want to continue any further now. We will be supporting the Bill. As I said, most of its provisions are non-controversial. I hope to obtain the support of the Conservative Party and, indeed, of the Government on the two amendments that I will introduce.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues in the Conservative Party and in the Liberal Party for allowing me the courtesy of making a few short remarks in this debate without in any way whatsoever delaying the movement of the legislation.

What I want to comment upon concerns the process of appointing judges in the country. As I understand it, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) appoints judges and there is no public process through which the suitability of judges for the bench is examined before he makes appointments. While this may have been appropriate throughout our judicial practice in the past, I would suggest that, with the introduction of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Constitution which will now contain provisions with regard to aboriginal rights, it is important that there be an opportunity for a full and open exploration of the views and attitudes of judges before they are appointed, simply because of the fact that indeed they are independent, as they should be, after their appointment.

I must say as well that the provisions in the Constitution with regard to sexual equality demand a full exploration of the views of possible appointees to the bench before they are appointed.

It is crucial that all Canadians understand that when they go before the courts they will be treated fairly and will be seen to be treated fairly. I want to give an example by referring to a recent event that pointed to the need to examine the whole question of how we appoint judges in Canada. I am thinking of the comments in the last few months of Mr. Justice Monnin in the Province of Manitoba. He was reported in the newspapers as having said something to the effect that if he had to throw out of court all the evidence of drunken Indians there would be nothing left. Of course the native community reacted to these comments with anger and dismay, quite rightly so.

I do not want to comment with regard to the quoted statements of Justice Monnin, but I want to say that they point to the need for a full and open process of appointing judges so that all citizens can have full confidence in the judiciary. After these comments were reported, a complaint was made to the judicial council; of course no action was taken. After that the Prime Minister, with no public input, appointed the same Justice as Chief Justice for the Province of Manitoba, to the surprise and dismay of many residents of that Province.

It is time for an open and public process for the appointment of judges. It is important that all citizens feel and know that they will be treated fairly when they enter the courts of the land. This is particularly important now that we have the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and there will be provisions in the Constitution with regard to aboriginal rights.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Francis in the Chair.

The Chairman: The House in Committee of the Whole on what is now Bill C-166.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Chairman, I talked on the wrong Bill.

The Chairman: I believe the Hon. Member spoke to the correct Bill, but I am trying to bring to the attention of the Committee certain difficulties with regard to numbering which I hope have finally been resolved.

Clauses 1 to 12 inclusive agreed to. On Clause 13—

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Chairman, I wish to introduce an amendment at this point. I move:

That the Act be amended by substituting the following for Section 13(3):

"Section 26(3) of the Judges Act is repealed."

The Chairman: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Chairman: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Chairman: In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion (Ms. McDonald) negatived.

• (1840)

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment. I move:

That the Judges Act be amended by adding a new Section 23 (4):

"Where a judge is in receipt of a pension pursuant to the provisions of the Judges Act and his or her spouse reaches the age of 65, the pension shall be split equally between the two, provided that the spouse is not in receipt of a pension that is not also equally split".

This is on the same page as the previous amendment that was sent forward.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Chairman, I might just say a word to indicate why, despite our sympathy for the kind of consideration that is being raised, it is difficult for the Government to go along with it.

First, the whole area of pensions is under active consideration by the Government at the present time in the context of the national pension plan reform. Second, it would be unfair to proceed on a piecemeal basis which would be the effect of the amendment here. It would provide special treatment for the spouses or surviving spouses of judges. There are many other statutes dealing with pensions, such as those governing Members of Parliament, the RCMP, public servants and so on. These groups would all have to be put on the same footing. I do not think one could apply such a provision only to the category of spouses and surviving spouses of judges.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Chairman, it is certainly true that numerous other people have pensions which do not provide for pension splitting and have these other anomalies of being cancelled on remarriage. It is particularly important for judges to have reasonable and equitable pensions because they make so many other decisions. While I would certainly be in agreement that all of these other pension schemes be changed, I think judges should come first. I wonder if the Minister would give us some information as to where he stands on this. Is he prepared to recommend very firmly that in future discussion on pensions the anomaly of cutting pensions be eliminated and that there be a splitting of the pension in recognition of the partnership that is entailed in marriage?

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Chairman, I am prepared to propose that it be considered very seriously during the study of the matter.

The Chairman: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: Those in favour of the amendment please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Chairman: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Chairman: In my opinion, the nays have it. I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion (Ms. McDonald) negatived.

Clauses 13 to 19 inclusive agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Before we move to the next Bill, I have consulted the other House Leaders and it is agreed that we will give unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier), the Chairman of the Committee on Regional Development, to table the report on Bill C-165. I can assure my colleagues that I have talked to the House Leaders and we have agreed to the tabling.

I would seize this opportunity to confirm the business for tomorrow. The first item tomorrow morning will be report stage and third reading of Bill C-165, which will be reported in a moment, followed by third reading debate on Bill C-95. Further to the House Order earlier this week or last week, at four o'clock we will move to deal with the resolution in relation to aboriginal rights. I understand that no later than 5.45 this resolution will have to be disposed of. Following that, if need be, we will resume debate on Bill C-95, followed by Bill C-152. That is the business for tomorrow. I seek unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke to table the report.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to revert to presenting reports from Standing and Special Committees?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Since they are numerous, if the House agrees, the texts of the objections will be printed as appendices to the Votes and Proceedings. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

AN ACT RESPECTING THE TAX COURT OF CANADA AND TO AMEND THE FEDERAL COURT ACT, THE JUDGES ACT AND THE UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH AND TO AMEND

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-167, An Act respecting the Tax Court of Canada and to amend the Federal Court Act, the Judges Act and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very conscious of the importance of not detaining the House very long. However, I think I should outline very briefly the salient points of Bill C-167 and the reasons for the changes introduced by that Bill.

First, the Tax Review Board is continued under the name of the Tax Court of Canada as a court of record. We believe that such a change in the name of this tribunal will improve the perception by the general public of its nature. The Tax Review Board has been considered by many taxpayers as an arm of the Department of National Revenue or of the Government of Canada. The present name of the Tax Review Board is known to have given the mistaken impression that the Board had an interest in the outcome of actions before it.

This change will also reflect the exclusively judicial nature of this tribunal. It is inappropriate to maintain an impression that it is an agency or a board of the federal Government rather than a court of law.

The conversion of this Board into a court of law had been recommended by the Canadian Bar Association to the Royal Commission on Taxation (the Carter Commission). In turn, the latter commission, among its many recommendations which gave rise to the 1972 tax reform, proposed the creation of a tax court. More recently, the Canadian Bar Association was consulted by my predecessor and that association fully endorsed the proposal regarding the change in name and status of the Board.

I stress, however, that the Government does not want to make more difficult the taxpayers' access to this tribunal, nor does it want to introduce formality in the conduct of the board's proceedings—quite the contrary. It is provided in subclause 14(1) of the Bill that an appeal to the Tax Court of Canada does not require any special form of pleadings. Subclause 14(2) sets out that the Court is not bound by the technical rules of evidence. The same Subclause goes even further and states that all appeals are to be dealt with by the courts as informally and expeditiously as circumstances and considerations of fairness permit.

From Clause 15, it is apparent that the taxpayer may appeal to the Court in person or may be represented by a lawyer, friend or any other person of his choice. The Court cannot award costs on the disposition of an appeal. The substance of all these provisions is now found in the Tax Review Board Act.

A second change proposed by the Bill has to do with certain amendments to Part IV of the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971. It should be recalled that Part IV of the latter statute is, at the present time, administered by the Department of National Revenue. Appeals under that part are now heard by umpires who, in practice, are the judges of the Trial Division of the Federal Court of Canada.

The transfer of jurisdiction to the Tax Court of Canada is desirable on account of the fact that the handling of UI appeals on the coverage side more properly fits a court like this tribunal than a court of superior jurisdiction like the Federal Court of Canada.

The appeal system against a decision of the tribunal of first instance in appeals under Part IV of the Act will be simplified in that all decisions of the Tax Court of Canada will be the subject matter of a single review under Section 28 of the Federal Court Act. At the present time, the decision of an umpire with regard to an appeal under Part IV of the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, can be appealed pursuant to Section 86 of the latter Act to the Pensions Appeal Board with leave of that Board in respect of a question of law involving Section 3 of that Act and can be subject as well to an application for review under Section 28 of the Federal Court Act on all other questions involved in that decision. It is to be noted that there is no change in the appeal system regarding benefit cases.

Part III of the Judges Act is also amended so as to entrust the Commissioner for Federal Judicial Affairs with the management of the affairs of this tribunal. The considerations which prompted the Government a few years ago to transfer the administrative duties and functions relative to the staff of the Federal Court of Canada from the Department of Justice to the Commissioner for Federal Judicial Affairs are equally valid in this case. This is done with a view to further enhancing the independence of the judiciary in Canada and ensuring to the greatest possible extent, consistent with the principles of the ministerial responsibility of a parliamentary system of Government, that the administration of judicial affairs is to be separate and apart from the administration of the affairs of the executive branch of the Government.

[Translation]

Finally, the Government is proposing to increase the number of members of this tribunal from seven to twelve. The rapid increase in appeals from income tax payments and the new jurisdiction of this court with respect to appeals under Part IV of the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, are ample justification for this increase. In this respect, I would like to note that the number of members has remained the same since the Act was passed in December 1970.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I commend this Bill to the support of the House, and again I express my gratitude to the Members of the Opposition for their co-operation and for being prepared to consider this Bill at all stages today.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate being afforded the opportunity to show the spirit of co-operation for which I and my Party are known, by zooming through this legislation with dispatch. Nonetheless, we do take these pieces of legislation very seriously. I know that the kind of co-operation I have demonstrated today will be reflected by the Government House Leader tomorrow when I introduce a Private Members' Bill which will ask for unanimous consent of the House. I simply enter into my remarks on that basis so that he will understand the import of my imprecations.

I would like to talk about the creation of a Tax Court in Canada as contemplated by this Bill. It was stated by the Minister in a press release of May 25, 1983, that the Tax Review Board is to be designated as a court of law and the board members are to be made judges so as to dispel "the impression that it is merely an agency of the federal Government with an interest in the outcome of the actions that are brought before it."

On the basis of my experience, Mr. Speaker, I must agree, and I am sure Members of the House of Commons will understand, with the move which is now being made because of the growing number of appeals of income tax and other tax related cases. The litigants involved in these cases want to have at least the impression that there will be an impartial adjudication of their problems.

The quasi-judicial or administrative board approach of the Tax Review Board, while again being served by distinguished Canadians, has lent itself to the unfortunate perception that the Board has been an extension of the Department of National Revenue. Indeed, there is some basis upon which the litigant might have some apprehensions in this regard, because dealing with a quasi-judicial or administrative tribunal is not the same as dealing with a court of record.

In a court of record, the judge has very substantial independence in terms of tenure and there is very little possibility of Government influence under normal circumstances. I say in the spirit of co-operation that it should not be possible to influence judges of a court of record even by a telephone call from a member of the Treasury Branch or a Minister of the Crown. The idea is that a judicial member of a court of record does have independence in terms of that kind of political pressure which, from time to time, might in some circumstances be attempted to be exercised on that person.

In the case of an administrative tribunal, there are considerations of reappointment and of benefits. Indeed there has been some litigation with respect to the independence of the courts in Canada in recent months that has challenged whether or not provincially appointed judges are truly independent because of the fact that matters of benefits and income, of determination of their circuits and workload, are in fact regulated by a Civil Servant or a member of the Department of Justice in a particular Province.

We are then asked to create a new court to dispel the impression that the Tax Review Board was not a truly independent tribunal. How does this Bill seek to achieve that objective? First, all current members of the Tax Review Board will continue in office as judges of the Tax Court. The current chairman will be renamed as Chief Judge of the Court and the assistant chairman who is, incidentally, a former associate Deputy Attorney General and was appointed on June 6 of this year, will be renamed and appointed as Associate Chief Judge of the Court.

Second, the Bill establishes the qualifications for appointment to the Court. One must be or have been a judge of a Superior, County or District Court in Canada or be a barrister or advocate of at least ten years' standing in the Bar of any of the Provinces. Yet in Section 24 of the Bill it is stated that all Tax Review Board members would continue in office despite any of the Bill's provisions such as the varied qualifications required of a Tax Court Judge.

While I understand the fact that there must be a transition period, initially the same crowd will continue on under new appointments. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, Tax Review Board members are exempted from the residency requirements of the Bill. Judges must reside within the National Capital Region or within 40 kilometres of it. This exemption did not appear in the omnibus Bill C-159, but it has been slipped into the new split Bill.

• (1900)

What of the procedures that will be followed by the new court? Will they change the impression that judges are merely extensions of the Government or departments of the Government? At the present time the Board is not bound by any legal or technical rules of evidence in its hearings. Further, its empowering statute states that it must dispose of all appeals informally and expeditiously, keeping in mind considerations of fairness and the circumstances of the case.

The new tax court will hold hearings on appeals under the same set of rules as those which govern the Board. Indeed, Clause 14(2) of the Bill is identical in every respect with Section 9(2) of the Tax Review Board Act. We are, therefore, creating a court of law which will not be bound by legal and technical rules of evidence.

It is interesting to note as well that Clause 18 of the Bill precludes the tax court from awarding costs on the disposition of an appeal.

The point is, Mr. Speaker, that the Government cannot have it both ways. I want to make this observation for the consideration of the Minister. On the one hand the Minister claims to be dispelling an impression that the Tax Review Board is an agency of the Government. He is attempting to do this through the creation of a tax court. On the other hand, we find that all Board members will continue as judges, that they need not meet the qualifications of judges and that they need not meet the residency requirements of judges.

Further, the rights of litigants before the court in terms of the rules of evidence and the awarding of costs in appropriate circumstances, are cast aside. Clearly the Minister is merely changing the name of the Tax Review Board, cloaking it with the distinguished character of a court while in many respects leaving it substantially unchanged. This reflects not only on the legitimacy of the tax court but, it seems to me, the Government is relying more on form than on substance with respect to this Bill. I have serious concern about the legitimacy of the tax court but I am also concerned that a move like this might affect the operation of that court.

In our system if a court is to be a court of record with judges appointed, there is protection in terms of the independence of the judges and, therefore, a very dramatic and substantial effort has to be undertaken if a member of any court in this country has to be removed from the bench. By the same token, when there is that kind of protection the judges of the court are normally obliged to abide by certain rules of evidence and procedure. This protection is not provided for lawyers or any elite group; it is there so there are clearly defined rules to ensure that a litigant's case will receive proper and impartial consideration. That is the purpose of rules of evidence. They are not there to accommodate lawyers or judges so that they can develop their own jargon.

There is a good reason for rules of evidence, Mr. Speaker, and I want to draw my observation to the attention of the Minister. I understand the necessity for informality at the Tax Review Board so that people who appear without counsel are not intimidated. But I wonder whether, going the court route, we should not give serious consideration to monitoring the operation of that court. Perhaps we should reconsider the question of whether that informality is appropriate for a court of record.

I make that observation without drawing any conclusion. When I read the Bill it occurred to me that if we are going the court route we should go the whole way. There may be some places where we will need rules of evidence. I know the Canada Evidence Act is before the Senate at the present time and debate is going on there with respect to rules of evidence and the way judicial proceedings should be conducted. I think that is the appropriate place to have a full and proper consideration of the way the court would be conducted rather than changing the Tax Review Board to a tax court and leaving it with its own informal procedures and technical rules of operation.

If a situation should occur where a judge of that court, due to lack of confidence or some other reason, were to abuse his or her position, the old remedies are not available to the Department of Justice or the Department of National Revenue, or whoever administers the Tax Review Board, to deal with that problem. These will be independent judges, free from interference by the Department of Justice or the Department of National Revenue. I am somewhat concerned about going part way on the rules of evidence and technical requirements of the new tax court.

I know the Minister is giving serious consideration to judicial appointments and my remarks apply to the previous Bill which dealt with the expansion of Superior Courts and the Federal Court as well as to this Bill. The Minister will be supported in any move to increase the number of women appointed to the bench. I think that is a nonpartisan issue in the House. All Parties are in favour of increasing the number of women in the courts of the country. I have lectured at the College of Law at the University of Saskatchewan and have been amazed to see the transformation that has taken place. The number of women enrolled in colleges of law in this country has grown to the point where there are as many women as men. Generally speaking, they do exceptionally well; only a few do approximately as well as I did when I went through law school. Most women are very determined, dedicated and outstanding students.

In my own City and indeed, in my own firm, I have been amazed at the transformation that has taken place in the way that women have become leading counsel and solicitors. When my sister graduated in law in the late 1960s there was still resistance to women lawyers in law offices. If a client was asked to see a woman lawyer in the firm it was almost like asking them if they would like a case of the flu. You could see them shrug and move away. That kind of stereo-typing has gone. Women are actively, effectively and aggressively participating as members of the Bar. But only 4 per cent of our judges are women, Mr. Speaker.

I want to point out to the Minister that this Party would be very supportive of the appointment of more women to the bench. The Minister will find that there now is a larger body of women to choose from because the increase in the number of women graduates from law school means there are many with ten or 15 years experience at the Bar who can meet the 10-year requirement for appointment to the Superior Court.

• (1910)

I wanted to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, some of my concerns about some aspects of the Bill. We are prepared to support the Bill and see it passed, however, I would hope that the Minister, on behalf of the Government, would state that it will be monitoring the operation of this new tax court for the purpose of determining whether or not the informality and the appropriateness of that kind of informality for which the Tax Revenue Board is known will be considered, in light of the new status of the Court as a court of record.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): May I indicate to the House that I apologize for the lack of uniform. I had misunderstood the expectation as to whether or not the House would be sitting over the dinner hour.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, that's your summer uniform.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I want to assure the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) that if the House would provide the occupants of the chair with summer uniforms we would be very grateful.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Blaker in the Chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-167, an Act respecting the Tax Court of Canada and to Amend the Federal Court Act, the Judges Act and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

May I indicate to the House that there are 59 Clauses to this Bill. Perhaps it is the mood of the House to put them all through at once. I intend to call all Clauses at once. Of course, I will recognize any Hon. Member who may wish to speak on any Clause.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make one comment in reply to the Hon. Member opposite with respect to the rules of evidence applied by the Court. I would just like to draw to the attention of the House that Clause 14(2) leaves to the discretion of the Court how formally or informally it shall apply the rules. For instance, if the taxpayer is represented by a lawyer the Court may decide to apply the rules of evidence. That subsection states:

> Notwithstanding the provisions of the Act under which an appeal is made, the Court is not bound by any legal or technical rules of evidence in conducting a hearing for the purposes of that Act, and all appeals shall be dealt with by the Court as informally and expeditiously as the circumstances and considerations of fairness permit.

Of course, as the Hon. Member suggests, we will monitor the operation of the Court to see how this does work in practice.

I wonder if Hon. Members of the other Parties have any particular points they wish to raise? I realize that the New Democratic Party would wish to raise the same amendments again with respect to this Act, Mr. Chairman, but I do not know whether it will be satisfied by the fact that they have already been negatived on the first Bill. Perhaps we might have an indication as to whether we can proceed and take all the Clauses together without moving the separate Clauses?

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Chairman, I am agreeable to dealing with the Clauses all together. I believe my points apply to this Bill. However, since they have been voted down, I believe I will simply accept that the point has been made and I hope there will be further consideration.

The Deputy Chairman: In that case, I will put to the House the question as to whether or not Clauses 2 through 59 shall carry.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clauses 2 to 59 inclusive agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the Schedule carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Schedule agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 1 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 1 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Title agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the Bill carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA-GERMANY TAX AGREEMENT ACT, 1982

MEASURE TO AVOID DOUBLE TAXATION

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill S-24, an Act to implement an agreement between Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to taxes on income and certain other taxes, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am mindful of the wish of the House to have the time of remarks kept to a minimum. I do have a few brief remarks and I understand there are one or two Hon. Members as well who would like to make comment.

The purpose of Bill S-24, Mr. Speaker, is to implement an agreement between Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to taxes on income and certain other taxes. In addition, the Bill provides that the Governor in Council may, subject to resolution of Parliament, give effect by Order in Council to any supplementary agreement.

On this latter point, Mr. Speaker, Bill S-24, as passed by the Senate, is different from that before us, and introduced by the Government, and I will have a few comments to make on that point.

When in force, the proposed agreement will replace the 1956 agreement between the two countries. The agreement with Germany follows the pattern of similar agreements concluded by Canada over the past several years. I believe there are 32 such agreements with other countries.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) for assisting the Minister in preparation of the form of this Bill here before us. There are a number of changes which had to be reviewed. The Senate material had to be reviewed and the work which he gave in preparation to getting to this point has to be commended. In addition, I would at the same time like to commend the efforts of the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) who, as Hon. Members know, has taken an interest in this subject and has been of assistance to the Government in seeing that the legislation has reached this point for conclusion.

This agreement, Mr. Speaker, generally provides that dividends can be taxed in the country of source at a maximum rate of 15 per cent. A general rate of 15 per cent is also provided in the case of interest arising from one country and paid to a resident of another country. However, there is an exemption for certain types of interest such as that paid on Government bonds or to the Export Development Corporation, or the German equivalent of same. Patent royalties and technical know-how payments are subject to a maximum tax of 10 per cent in the source country, and copyright royalties in respect of literary, dramatic, musical and artistic works are exempt. Capital gains from disposition of real property or business assets and of shares in companies, the assets of which consist principally of real estate, may be taxed in the country in which the property is situate. Pensions and annuities arising in one country and paid to a resident of the other country may generally be taxed in the country in which they arise. However, war veterans' pensions and benefits under the social securities legislation in the country will be taxable only in that country. I can understand, Mr. Speaker, therefore, the interest and the consent of Hon. Members in seeing this legislation passed. It should be noted that this provision will be applicable from 1978, and it will be of benefit to several thousand residents of German origin. The agreement also contains the usual provisions concerning relief from double taxation, non-discrimination, mutual agreement procedure and exchange of information.

• (1920)

I want to go back now, Mr. Speaker, to the question of supplementary agreements. The Bill introduced in the Senate on February 2, 1982, contained clauses designed to ensure that the agreement can be kept up to date as a result of changes in the tax systems of Canada or Germany. These clauses ere in line with those approved by Parliament in the past with some 32 countries. But during the Senate proceedings, the Senators made a number of amendments to the Bill. They were primarily concerned with the power of the Government to amend the agreement by means of a supplementary agreement made by order of the Governor in Council. In order to limit the power given to the executive by the Bill to modify or amend the Canada-Germany Taxation Agreement, they made the following change by amending Clause 5(1) to provide that a supplementary agreement:

—shall not, in any manner, impose a greater tax burden on any person than the one to which such person might be subject, but for this Act, as may be amended from time to time—

The second change was to amend the provisions of Clause 6 relating to the negative resolution procedure that applied to the supplementary agreement inter alia through reducing the number of Members in both the House and the Senate who could initiate the procedure I just referred to.

The first mentioned amendment, Mr. Speaker, is not acceptable in that it carries the clear implication that a double taxation treaty can impose taxes, whereas it is generally recognized and accepted by the courts that such a treaty can only reduce or relieve taxes. While I would be quite prepared to accept the addition of some language to Clause 5(1) that would meet the legitimate concern of the Senators, by qualifying the power of the executive to revoke existing agreements, the specific language passed by the Senate is not acceptable to the Government and must be removed.

With respect to the amendment moved in the Senate concerning the negative resolution, I see some merit in keeping them as they represent an improvement over the one previously agreed to by Parliament. The only difficulty I have is with the reduction from 50 and 20 to 20 and 10 in the number of Members or Senators respectively required to file a motion. The Government has proposed a compromise, which I understand is acceptable to Members of the House. So I am suggesting a compromise solution of 30 and 15 respectively.

Germany has been ready for some time to ratify the agreement and is anxious to put it into force, as are we. The amendments introduced by the Senate have to be considered by law officers of the Crown. Department officials and I have reviewed them, assisted by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher), and we believe that it is now time to have this Bill passed and the agreement put into force.

I will conclude by thanking the Hon. Members for their support of this legislation as it will help a considerable number of Canadians. At the appropriate stage in Committee of the Whole I will move two amendments which Members have seen.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I will join in this great spirit of co-operation in which the House finds itself this evening and make my brief comments with respect to this important measure and landmark agreement between Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany.

The Minister has given a fair assessment of what the Bill is intended to do. He has also given a fair assessment of the difficulty associated with bringing this Bill before the House for ratification, and a fair assessment of the amendments he thought, and indeed, I agree, were necessary to improve the Bill so that it can receive the ratification of the House. Indeed, the Minister has given a fair assessment of my involvement with the Bill and I thank him very much for making reference to that.

It was on July 17, 1981, Mr. Speaker, during the Summit Conference held here in Ottawa that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of Canada and the Prime Minister of the Federal Republic of Germany signed this agreement which, in the opinion of many, was long overdue. Canada already has, as the Minister says, about 32 agreements like this. Indeed, there was a previous agreement with the Federal Republic of Germany dating back to 1956. However, there was one serious flaw or shortcoming in that agreement which has been corrected in Article 18, the most important Article in this Bill, dealing with the double taxation of pensions.

There are roughly 1.5 million people in this country who are Canadian citizens of German ancestry, many of whom have earned certain pension rights in the old country and are entitled to benefits. There are also German nationals living out their declining years with their relatives here in our country.

The Bill was introduced in the Senate on February 2, 1982, which was about the same time or shortly after the Parliament of the Federal Republic of Germany ratified the agreement. On July 7, 1982, the Senate passed the Bill but, as the Minister pointed out, it had certain flaws. It took until now to correct those flaws and get the Bill before this House.

For some of the people who have written and telephoned me over the last two years it is difficult to understand why it should take so long. Indeed, some of them suspected ill intent by the Government and accused us of discrimination against German nationals because of all the agreements we have with other countries. I can assure these people today that there was no ill intent. The Bill had some real difficulties.

It is particularly difficult for German nationals to understand this because many of them left Germany to escape bureaucracy and over-regulation. They came to this country because there is greater freedom and control over one's own personal life. They have now experienced bureaucracy in Canada. It can be equally insensitive to the real needs of people as other bureaucracies.

As the Minister has outlined, the Bill affects capital, taxes on total income, total capital, or elements of income or capital, including taxes on capital gains, taxes on the total amount of wages or salaries paid by enterprises as well as taxes on capital appreciation. Because all of these things fall under the Income Tax Act in our own country, that would be the only Act which will be effective. In the Federal Republic of Germany it will be the income tax or the Einkommensteuer provision, the corporation tax of Koerperschaftsteuer, the capital tax or the Vermoegensteuer, and finally the trade tax or Gewerbesteuer, with which German nationals are familiar.

Even though this measure is long overdue, I am delighted to be able to participate this afternoon in the passage of this Bill through all stages, and to report tomorrow to the many people who have written to me and many of my colleagues on both sides of the House that this matter has finally been dealt with and ratified.

Incidentally, in the case of the double taxation of pensions, the measure is retroactive to 1978. So, many people affected by this Bill will indeed get a sizeable refund on taxes they have paid over the years. I am sure the Minister will join me in wishing these people many happy years during which they can spend those hard-earned dollars.

• (1930)

Let me just close by thanking my colleagues on this side of the House, our House Leader and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) for making this special accommodation this afternoon, one day before recess, to assure that this matter will be dealt with in this tax year. I give my particular thanks to the Minister for his assistance in making this accommodation.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): I have just a few brief words to say in joining in the spirit of co-operation in the House today. We in the New Democratic Party welcome this agreement between Germany and Canada which will avoid double taxation. Obviously, taxation of any form is burdensome to carry these days, let alone double taxation. There are some 1.5 million people of German ancestry in this country. The legislation will avoid double taxation as it affects pensions in particular, retroactive to 1978. While the legislation is long overdue, I am sure that the people who are affected, those who have been writing to us all and calling for changes in the legislation, all citizens of German ancestry in Canada, would simply say "Danke" to this Chamber.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a sentence or two and express my appreciation that the measure has been dealt with now and take this opportunity to point out to the Minister that many Canadians are concerned about the impending agreement with the United States, a reciprocity agreement on tax measures. There are many self-employed people in Canada who are facing double taxation as a result of the present tax structure with the United States and there are many Canadians in the United States who suffer that way. I would ask the Minister, when he is responding to the Bill in its later stages, whether he would speak to that issue and give us some clarification as to the position we are now in and give us some hope that perhaps the legislation dealing with the agreement with the United States may be passed very shortly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Blaker in the Chair.

The Deputy Chairman: House in Committee of the Whole on Bill S-24, which apparently consists of seven clauses. As previously ruled, I will be pleased to recognize Hon. Members or Ministers who may wish to address themselves to these clauses. I understand that there may be some amendments. I am informed that there may be three of them.

Accordingly, shall Clauses 2 through 7 carry? I will recognize the Hon. Minister of State for Finance.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I indicated that there were three amendments and I indicated the areas in the Bill. I could quickly outline the first amendment. I move:

That sub-clause 5(1) of Bill S-24 be amended by striking out lines 10 to 19 on page 2 and substituting the following:

—"supplementary agreement relating to the avoidance of double taxation with respect to taxes on income and on capital between the Government of Canada and the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany intended to alter, revoke, replace or add to the Agreement is approved by Canada, and, when the"—

I made reference to the Senate comments, and this is a compromise amendment. While I am on my feet, I think it would be useful to the House if I indicated my intention to move a second amendment as follows:

That sub-clause 6(2) of Bill S-24 be amended by striking out lines 6 to 8 on page 3 and substituting the following:

—"thirty members of the House of Commons in the case of a motion for the consideration of the House and by not less than fifteen"—

I also indicated that that originated as a result of the amendments moved by the Senate.

Finally, I would move a technical amendment as follows:

That the French version of sub-clause 6(3) of Bill S-24 be amended by striking out line 8 on page 3 and substituting the following:

"jours de séance suivant sa remise, sauf si l'autre Chambre a déjà étudié et adopté une motion visant la même fin."

I move those three amendments. Mr. Chairman, I would simply conclude by responding to the Hon. Member who inquired as to the status of the similar agreement with the United States of America. That agreement has been signed, but it is not in force. I am pleased, however, to report to Hon. Members that work has proceeded between Canada and the United States in terms of actually putting that agreement into force.

As a matter of fact, last week in Ottawa the Minister of Finance signed a protocol with the Ambassador for the United States, clearing away, we think, all of the remaining items that would be a bar to the actual implementation of the agreement.

One difficulty does remain, however, and it rests with the United States of America. I understand that the Senate is reviewing some of the provisions of the agreement, the agreement having been signed a number of years ago. With changes in administration and in Government, there have been some questions. However, we are hopeful that, with the signing of the protocol last week, there should be speedy consideration by the Senate and, we are hopeful, a successful one. The information with which we have been provided is that it will be done in the very near future.

The Deputy Chairman: I think the House will recognize that it is not in the usual form to have several amendments placed at the same time. However, I am under the impression that Hon. Members are agreeable to that procedure.

Accordingly, what I will do now is to proceed, clause by clause, and mention the amendments suggested by the Minister.

Clauses 2 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

Amendment to Clause 5(1) agreed to.

Clause 5 (as amended) agreed to.

Amendment to Clause 6(2) agreed to.

Amendment to Clause 6(3) agreed to.

Clause 6 (as amended) agreed to.

Clause 7 agreed to.

Schedule I agreed to.

Schedule II agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

MISCELLANEOUS STATUTE REPEAL ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice (for Mr. Gray)) moved that Bill C-119, an Act to repeal certain Statutes that have ceased to be in force or have become unnecessary, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MacGuigan (for Mr. Gray) moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Peter Lang (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, this is basically a housekeeping Bill to repeal 124 statutes that are obsolete.

Since the Bill has been debated fully in second reading and at committee stage, I do not propose to take the time of the House to detail the Bill.

By repealing all the known obsolete statutes through this Bill, demands on limited time of Parliament will not be unnecessarily multiplied. Of course, further work on legislative housecleaning will be necessary. This project is ongoing and most Departments have already begun the task of reviewing the regulations in order to identify further obsolete provisions.

In conclusion, passage of the Miscellaneous Statute Repeal Act following publication of the first edition of the regulatory agendas on May 31, 1983, is further confirmation of the Government's commitment toward regulatory reform and improving communication and consultation with the private sector.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, if any Member of the House had any doubt as to whether or not there was such a thing as eternal life, one need only look at some of the programs and statutes that have found their way into the books of Canada. Certainly during my ten and one-half years in Parliament, there have been very few instances when Parliament has actually acted to reduce the encumbrances that have been hoisted on the Canadian people by passive Parliaments or that have been added in the terms of new costly programs.

To the extent to which anything is being done this evening in repealing statutes which are obsolete and no longer used, some progress is being made. However there should be no confusion between what is before us today and any substantive meaningful attempt at regulatory reform. Indeed, to the extent to which the Government is trying to sell this Bill before us tonight as regulatory reform by proposing that this in some way meets the demands for regulatory reform from Canadian people at the present time, it is misleading Canadians and putting something before the Parliament of Canada which does not achieve the purpose which it has been discussing. When the Minister spoke to this Bill at second reading, he spoke as if the initiative had begun in the fall of 1980. In fact, the initiative for an omnibus repeal Bill began under the Clark Government. I was the Minister responsible for regulatory reform and, in conjunction with Senator Flynn, who was the Minister of Justice at the time, it was our intention to introduce an omnibus repeal Bill which would sweep away many of the statutes which had become obsolete and no longer used. Unfortunately, we were prevented from doing that by the election.

That was only to be one very minor part of regulatory reform. There were far more substantive issues to be addressed. I might add that there are far more substantive things that remain to be done today, some four years later.

During the tenure of our Government we proposed to Parliament a sunset Bill which would restore to Members of Parliament the right and responsibility of reviewing programs and statutes which had been put in place in order to determine whether they were still needed and still provided the best vehicle to serve the needs that Canadians had expressed. Nothing has been done by the Government to put sunset legislation into place. That initiative simply died with the death of the Clark Government.

There are other initiatives that were intended as well. We had expected that a major program of regulatory reform would be undertaken in many instances to streamline and make more fair and efficient the process of regulations.

I want to express my disappointment tonight, as chairman of the Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, that notwithstanding the fact that the committee's fourth report was introduced some years ago in which we made major recommendations for improvements to the process of regulations in Canada that would be more fair to permit Parliament to discharge its responsibility to the people of Canada, virtually nothing has been done by the Government to act on that report. Indeed, when I moved concurrence in that report, the Government voted to prevent the matter from even being debated. We simply have not heard of it since that time.

We had also intended to undertake a program of deregulation to return to the market place and to individual Canadians the right to determine in so many instances what the policies would be and how they would live their lives. With the election of this Liberal Government we have found that that initiative has faltered. We have found vast new amounts of Government regulation, Government spending and vast intrusion by the Government into the day-to-day lives of Canadians.

What has the Government done. It has taken one positive step. It has proposed a regulatory calendar, which again is an idea of which we approved. It would give some notice to Canadians of proposed regulatory initiatives by the Government over the course of a year. It is a sensible move and it is hard to understand why the Government would take so long to act upon it.

It has proposed this measure which would do away with some obsolete statutes which have been long since forgotten. I understand that some parliamentarians would show concern about repealing an Act for the control and extrapolation of foot and mouth disease. I am relieved, from reading the notes, that the provisions of this Act have been incorporated into the Animal Disease and Protection Act and that Parliament is safe from having these provisions simply stripped away from us.

No doubt Members will be disappointed to discover that the Volunteer Bounty Act of 1908 is being swept away. According to the notes, the purpose of this Act was to grant volunteers who served with the British Forces in South Africa during the Boer War between 1899 and 1902 domicile in Canada, or with the Canadian Corps, two adjoining quarter sections of Dominion lands or $160 in script in lieu of the land.

There are other Acts which I am sure Members will be astonished to discover are being swept away. For instance, there is the Gold Clauses Act. There is the Hemp Bounties Act of 1923. It is an Act which authorized the payment out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of bounties for hemp grown, manufactured and sold in Canada. Because these bounties were payable only during 1926 and 1933, the Act is considered spent. There are apparently no outstanding claims for bounties.

It will come as a shock to Members that all of these measures are being swept away, when I know that so many of us have mentioned support for these measures in our brochures at election time. We will have to tell our constituents that with this Government, so vigilant and anxious to regulate and propose programs, if any gaps are found it will quickly move into the void and provide the services which Canadians did not realize were being provided previously by these programs.

What else have the Liberals done? They have changed the jargon. We heard before about deregulation. The jargon was then changed to regulatory reform. I think that was the expression we used in our tenure in Government; it made sense. They have two new buzzwords. Regulatory reform has been dropped, and now the in-jargon is managing regulation. One can speculate on what that really means. There is a better one; re-regulation. I believe I heard the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) use that expression the other day. It may seem that the difference is only semantic or an exchange of euphemisms, but in fact the difference is more profound than that. It goes to the philosophy of the Parties in power.

We were determined to do two things during our term in office. The first was to make more fair and more effective the process of regulation and to plug Parliament back into the picture to ensure that Members of Parliament would do the job they were sent down here to do. The second thing, one which was at least as important, was to begin to roll back some of the regulatory intrusion into the day-to-day lives of Canadians and to return to the efficiency of the marketplace for making many of the decisions which are now made by the Government. That is what deregulation means. It has to do with one's philosophy, whether one feels that Government is too big, too costly and too intrusive into the day-to-day lives of Canadians. That was our feeling and it remains our feeling. It would be a priority of a Progressive Conservative Government to begin the work of deregulation.

We now hear about managing regulation or about re-regulation. We have a Government in power with the philosophy that perhaps it will tinker in the periphery. It is prepared to act boldly to abolish statutes which are long since obsolete and which no Member of Parliament even remembered were on the books. It will act boldly in that area. It is prepared to talk and to commission a task force on regulatory reform—which has come and gone with very little to show for it. It is prepared to talk about processes, but it is not prepared to act. Most important, it is not prepared to take action to reduce the size of Government.

The other measure the Liberals undertook which would be of some value to Canadians was the measure to shorten the period during which individuals or corporations would have to retain records. That is helpful. Nobody quarrels with that, but it was not a great blow being struck for the people of Canada to have a sensible measure like that initiated.

If we want to determine whether or not there has been any progress in the past three and a half years in the whole issue of regulatory reform I suppose the best way would be to ask ourselves to remember what Canada was like three and a half years ago. If we left the country then and returned this summer, would we find a country which is more encumbered by regulation or less encumbered? Would we find a Parliament that is more able to do its job of holding the Government to account or less able? Would we find a Government that is extended even further into the day-to-day lives of people, making decisions which people should be making for themselves, or would we find a Government that is smaller? Would we find a Government that is more costly and that has confiscated more of our national wealth, or would we find a Government in which spending has been brought under control and has begun to lead by example instead of by simply preaching the virtues of restraint?

In each of those criteria we would find that we have a Government which has grown in size, in cost and in intrusiveness, at the expense of the wealth and the liberty of the people of Canada; at the expense as well of Members of Parliament who believe that it is their responsibility to hold the Government to account, to examine Government proposals, to sweep away from time to time measures which have long since outlived their usefulness, and to protect the civil liberties of Canadians. The simple honest truth is that we have not done our job in this Parliament; we have allowed the Government to usurp unto itself more power, more of the national wealth.

What is the reason for that? Will regulatory reform, regulatory management, or whatever jargon, succeed? Will this program succeed under the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) and under this Government? I fear it will not. I fear that the next time we will see any bold initiative taken for regulatory reform, it will be with a change in Government. What we have in this Minister and what we have in this Government is an administration that believes in increasing the size of Government and in increasing its own power at the expense of ordinary Canadians.

All the incentives, all the rewards and all the momentum in Government is for Government to become more intrusive, not less intrusive; to spend more, not less; to become more bureaucratic, not less bureaucratic. As politicians, the rewards received are for proposing new programs, not for taking programs away. Bureaucrats are judged on the strength and the size of their budgets, the size of the complement working for them and the extent of their responsibilities. Ministers are judged in much the same way. All the rewards in our system are for increasing the size and cost of Government.

The only way we could hope to reverse that momentum and get Government moving in the other direction would be to have the political will, where politicians exert their control on the machinery, where they demonstrate that they believe it is time to swing the pendulum away from Government and back toward the people of Canada, and that it is time to reduce the size of Government and enhance the power and prestige of ordinary Canadians. Until there is an administration in office in Ottawa which believes that and is prepared to fight for it, and to show leadership to Canadians, any proposals for regulatory reform are simply housekeeping, such as this measure is today.

As Members of Parliament we should recognize that our responsibilities are similar to tending a garden. In order for there to be benefits, we have to fertilize and water; but just as importantly we have to weed and to prune. There is no shortage of fertilizer in the House of Commons.

Mr. Cosgrove: Or hot air.

Mr. Beatty: As the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) aptly points out from his seat, there is no shortage of hot air, as he knows. There is no shortage of water, but there is a shortage of people who are prepared to cut back on the size of Government and to do the weeding and pruning which is essential from time to time. There is a shortage of will on the part of Ministers of the Government to restore to Parliament its right and responsibility to review programs.

It is bizarre; the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) shakes his head, yet he is the Minister presiding over the Canada Development Investment Corporation. One of its sudsidiaries, Canadair, had the largest corporate loss in the history of Canada, a $1.4 billion loss, yet that Minister systematically refuses to be candid with Parliament. He systematically refuses even to allow the Auditor General of Canada, Parliament's Auditor, to audit the books of CDIC.

Mr. Bussières: You do not know what you are saying.

Mr. Beatty: He shakes his head when I say that the Liberals are anxious to retain power to themselves, not to share it with others.

Mr. Bussières: What did you do when you were in office? You did nothing.

Mr. Beatty: I am hearing from a guilty conscience on the other side. The Minister is determined to bypass Parliament to put in place the largest and most costly holding company anywhere in Canada. He refuses to allow Parliament to have proper access to its books. In addition, he refuses to allow the Auditor General of Canada to do his job.

Mr. Bussières: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: The Minister who is trying to drown me out from his seat has the temerity to say that the Government has a willingness to share power with Parliament and with the people of Canada. Ultimately leadership is leadership by example, not by lecture. If the Minister were prepared to rise in the House, instead of talking from his seat, he would demonstrate that he is prepared to bring in reforms and to bring controls to Crown corporations which would begin to open up Government.

The Government could begin with sunset legislation to allow Parliament to review programs which have been put in place. It could begin the process of deregulation, for example, in the communications field where the Government still believes it is its job to decide what Canadians will be able to see and to hear, rather than give Canadians the right to decide for themselves. If the Minister would demonstrate that he had given up on the philosophy that mother Government knows better than individual Canadians what is in their best interests, then I would think he had the right to say that the Government was prepared to share with Parliament or to take initiatives in regulatory reform. Instead, what we get is cosmetics. The people of Canada demand better than that. If the Government is not prepared to give better than that to the people of Canada, let it call an election. Canadians recognize that there is an option, and they recognize that following that election we could begin the work of pruning back Government and restoring to individual Canadians a sense of dignity, a sense of worth and the ability to run their own lives free of the dead hand of Government.

• (2000)

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, keeping to the Bill before us, I want first to commend and congratulate the committee on the work it has done, going through the legislation and determining, as anyone reading would conclude, that the legislation now being done away with is indeed obsolete.

I am listening to the arguments across the floor of the House. They should have been on the committee together. They could have worked. It may be an important thing for the Parliament of Canada, in as much as we may be doing something today that is more relevant than much of what we have done over the course of the last two years. We are actually getting rid of some legislation.

It might be a useful exercise if we now take on the task of simplifying much of the legislation that average individuals in the country have to deal with on a day-to-day basis. We have legislation that is written in such a way that by far the vast majority of Canadians are unable to understand it. We have made it almost impossible for Canadian families and individuals, even those of considerable intelligence, to pick a law, read it and understand what it says and how it will or at least ought to be applied.

For many years I have believed that one of the roles of Parliament surely must be to try to find ways to simplify the language used in legislation, not only as this Bill does, eliminating legislation that is redundant or obsolete, making it possible for people to understand not only the Income Tax Act, which is the most obvious, but other Acts that apply to individuals and families. We should devote some time and put some committees to work looking at the words used in legislation that we pass to see if there is an easier or more simple word, a word with more relevance to the day-to-day language of people in order that they cannot only see that we have done something, but perhaps understand what it is that we have done.

I suggest to the Government that as part of the ongoing process, it not only look at legislation to determine whether it is still applicable and therefore necessary, but make an attempt to look at the language of legislation with an eye to finding new phrases, new ways of saying what we say so that the people who are affected by the laws that we produce will be able to read and understand them without having to pay out substantial sums for legal advice. It may be that they may need the advice in any event, but at least they might, in the process be able to understand why they are seeking the advice rather than follow the process they now go through.

As I said earlier, the committee has done a good job. There is a lot more to be done. Quite clearly there is even yet the requirement on all of us not only to cull out the hundreds of Acts that still exist of which the relevance is no longer apparent, but there is also the important work to be done here in the House of Commons on an ongoing basis of trying to ensure that new legislation brought in not only does what we intend it to do, but does it in a way that will provide for those who must use it the highest degree of confidence. I do not think we have been able to accomplish that.

I do not want to enter into a partisan argument about the relative merits of the Government. I think the Government by now understands that I do not agree with much of what it does. However, whether it be a Liberal or a Conservative Government, or at some point in time and NDP Government—that may be hard to picture—we have to start looking at the way we draft the laws we draft.

From my point of view, having spent 16 years of my life working with them, I find that trying to understand them is trying to understand the impossible. We do no one a service by writing laws the way we now write them. In any event, this Bill should pass hastily. We should get on to other pieces of legislation that are of importance for the future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): My understanding is that Hon. Members may have reached some agreement, the effect of which is that we should now adjourn until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning. I have no official message to that effect.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It sounds as though that is agreed.

I see that the Parliamentary Secretary rises on a point of order.

Mr. Lang: Just on a point of clarification, Mr. Speaker. Am I to understand that the Bill has been given third reading?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): That is correct, the Bill has been given third reading.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTE TO THE HON. ELMER MacKAY

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have an understanding to the effect that the previous Hon. Member for Central Nova is being honoured with a dinner this evening. As one of his colleagues in the House, and I hope that Members from all Parties will join me, I think we might send to him at his dinner our very best respects. If I may add a personal touch, I believe the Hon. Elmer MacKay was a Member who not only served his riding well, but in the best of parliamentary traditions he served his country well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In that case, let Hansard indicate that Hon. Members have agreed with that sentiment.

Accordingly, pursuant to order made earlier today, this House stands adjourned until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

At 8.07 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, June 29, 1983

The House met at 11 a.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. It is the Chair's understanding that the Government wishes to proceed with Government Order No. 165. As this Bill was reported from committee yesterday, the Standing Orders require that the 48-hour notice requirement must be met before the Bill can be considered by the House. With unanimous consent, however, this requirement can be waived. Is there unanimous consent to proceed with Government Order No. 165?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INDUSTRIAL AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion) moved that Bill C-165, to provide for financial assistance for industrial development in all regions of Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): When shall the Bill be read a third time? By unanimous consent now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lumley moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to open debate on third reading of Bill C-165, an Act to provide for financial assistance for industrial development in all regions of Canada. Of course everyone in the House wants industrial development in all regions of Canada. I thank the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) for letting me jump ahead of him in the line, so to speak, and open the debate, because I have other commitments later today. If I leave later, I do not want it to be seen as a discourtesy to the Hon. Member or to the Minister.

• (1110)

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) is present in the Chamber this morning. He has been here at every stage of the debate; he has answered all our questions. I must be careful in what I say because I do not want to give too much applause to the Minister, but I think it is fair to say that he has done quite a good job in getting the Bill through the House and in working with the Opposition on this important matter. I think it shows in the way the Bill has proceeded through the House.

I am a new person in the area of regional development. Previously I was energy critic, so this has opened my eyes somewhat and I have a little way to go. I want to make some comments on the Bill because I think it is really important for individual communities in Canada. It is not really that complicated when we get through all the letters, the little short forms, and so on. Basically it has some 17 Clauses. Like the majority of Government Bills these days, most of the job is done in the regulations over which we do not have control.

In general the Bill sets out a new system of awarding financial assistance for industrial and regional development. It works on what is a tier system, four tiers of arranging constituencies by census districts for qualification for grants. The Minister explained this in his speech. It is interesting because it is an attempt to bring together a number of government programs and put them into one program and make it what I think the Minister called a fast-tracking system, or a one-stop system, or whatever is the bureaucratic language, to indicate that it will make it easier for companies and individuals to apply for grants and financial assistance for economic development in Canada. Of course we are all in favour of that.

The problem with the Bill is really an old one, the problem of establishing an equitable system for giving grants. There has been much criticism of the old DREE program. I hesitate to use the word, because when I used "patronage" in committee, there were "oohs" and "ahs" as if patronage did not happen in Canada. Of course it does. The old system at least gave the aura of the possibility of patronage when the Minister really had to make decisions on pretty well his own criteria. That is simplifying matters, but this Bill tends to set out criteria. That is what I want to bring to the attention of the House.

We in the New Democratic Party are supporting the Bill. We are in favour of industrial and regional development. We would like to see the matter simplified and made less bureaucratic. We would like to see the system work a little fairer, and especially see it applied in a better way to the region where many of us have our seats, namely, western Canada. For those reasons we have tried to expedite passage of the Bill. However, we want to keep our eye on the Bill and on the system when it becomes law. I understand that it will be law by July 1. When I thought of all the work we were doing in committee, it made me laugh to think what would happen if we had changed things in committee; the forms might have to be changed and so on.

I want to focus on the key to the Bill. It indicates that in order to obtain aid one has to fall into one of four tiers. One qualifies for more aid in Tier 4, a little less in Tier 3, and so on down to Tier 1. It is based upon a development index, which I think is the next part of the system. The index is based upon a per capita level of income, the level of employment in the district, and the capacity of the Province in which the district is located to raise revenue. As I stated before in committee, this is a problem for British Columbia because we have a higher per capita level of income. The average weekly wage in British Columbia is $464.15, as opposed to $341.66 in Newfoundland. We are more unionized. Our unions have forced good wages in British Columbia.

• (1115)

In many ways the tests that are in the Bill may make it more difficult for some regions to qualify in order to reach a higher tier, and, therefore, more aid. There is the term "capacity in the Province in which the district is located to raise revenues". Alberta has a Heritage Fund, and so on. I am told by the departmental officials, who have given me some papers, that they are trying to rationalize all these tests. I say that will be difficult. We will have a look at this Bill in about a year or so to see whether this development index is really working.

The Minister may not be aware of the kind of problems we have in my area of western Canada. I will just spend a couple of minutes on this. A headline in the Vancouver Sun for Thursday, June 23, 1983, reads, "Federal red tape the only product in Port Alberni". The article talks about the old ILAP program which applies to Port Alberni, as it is one of the designated areas. The article states there was to be a Christmas present of $15 million to the town. Six months later unemployment in that town is still running at 20 per cent, and the community leaders are still trying to unwrap the red tape in which the $15 million gift was wrapped. I believe they received only $1.4 million and only 133 low-paying jobs were created.

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, ILAP is rolled into this Bill as one of the programs contained in it. It is very interesting, because the first paragraph in the newspaper article reads:

> A federal Government program designed for the manufacturing East is not working among the woods of the West.

It shows the kind of problems we have in getting industrial development in different regions of Canada. Port Alberni on Vancouver Island is a beautiful place. It is a town dominated by MacMillan Bloedel, which is the main employer. The main employer is automating and putting technological change in its plant. There are 2,000 fewer jobs than in April, 1981. That, together with the recession, has resulted in some real problems.

Many of the other jobs in the community come from servicing the main employer, the forestry industry. ILAP was supposed to be a program to help that area. However, instead of receiving $15 million, they received $1.4 million, which resulted in 133 temporary jobs with a pay rate of $175 per week, not exactly a booming pay rate.

It is interesting to see what is happening in the community. I use Port Alberni as one example in all the regional areas of Canada. The local Manpower manager there said that he has 2,400 people collecting unemployment insurance. There are 2,000 other people who have exhausted their unemployment benefits or are collecting social assistance, welfare. There are 1,400 others working part-time instead of full-time. This is out of a labour force of 13,000 people. It is typical of a lot of towns in the regional areas of Canada.

A business woman, Paula Anderson, was asked about this. She replied:

> We cannot get manufacturing here. We are not in the Ontario heartland, we are on Vancouver Island and that has to be taken into consideration before it can have an impact on new industry. We want the program to be extended to primary industry.

That is part of the problem with this Bill. Let us look at the development index. The Minister was kind enough to have his officials give us a list of all the different ridings in which the tiers will apply. I have the list before me. When I look through it, I find it difficult to understand. I know that it is supposed to be fair, but I know that the Quebec constituency of Mount Royal is in Tier 2. Who represents that constituency, Mr. Speaker? The constituency of Saint-Henri-Westmount is in Tier 2. I am sure that this was done using an objective standard, but Regina East and Regina West are in Tier 1. Athabasca in northern Alberta is in Tier 1. In other words, these constituencies are in a less favoured category than are those two urban ridings in Montreal. Part of Comox-Powell River is in Tier 1. I have never been there, but that is another area that is like Port Alberni. Port Alberni itself is in Tier 2.

The problem is that it is perceived, and it may be true, that the program will still benefit the manufacturing East and the central heartland more than it will benefit the regions. That is the problem that Port Alberni is faced with when it tries to develop. It is not a problem with an easy solution. How will industry be attracted to Port Alberni when it is really dependent on a resource based economy? Of course, that is part of the answer, but I just point out that some of these areas will not benefit as much as we hope they should.

It is interesting to note that in a Vancouver Sun interview of the Organization of Unemployed Workers—I have noticed that these organizations have grown up all over the country—a Mr. Brian Demorest was asked about ILAP and the programs for Port Alberni. He said that while the temporary jobs have helped some people, as a family man he is better off on welfare. Then he said something very interesting. The article in the Sun reads:

> He says he cannot see manufacturing industry of any size coming into town. Instead the OUW is calling for a six-hour working day (preferably at eight hours' pay but subject to negotiation) to be legislated throughout the province and the country.

This would create another shift and would take up some of the slack in unemployment.

Of course this is what the Government of France did as part of its industrial strategy. The Government of France, which these days has been much knocked, shortened working hours. This is probably what we will have to do in Canada, together with implementing programs for part-time work, and adopting other ways of coping with technological change.

I am saying to the Minister that we are prepared to give the Bill a chance. We are prepared to pass it today, but we want to look a little more closely at these tiers. We appreciate that the Government is trying to be objective in the sense of a development index, but we wonder if development really can be attracted to the Port Alberni's of the country under this program.

There are three other comments I would like to make before I conclude. First, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), raised the matter of native employment, a matter which is very important in the West. The Minister answered the question, and I appreciate that, by saying that that matter is not really being dealt with under this Bill, as I understand it, but would be dealt with under another program. I note that answer.

The second matter I raise is that the Minister talked about decentralizing, and I am a little suspicious of this. I think that there is a lot of centralizing in this Bill, in the sense that the federal Government, because it has been burned by the Provinces, and the Provinces have taken credit for some of the things the federal Government put money into, is, as a political strategy, trying to do things more directly.

I am a little worried about the effect some of these programs might have on federal-provincial relations because I do believe deeply that co-operative federalism is the only way to make Canada work. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has failed absolutely in bringing some of the principles of co-operative federalism to the West.

Mr. Prud'homme: Hey, hey!

Mr. Waddell: The Hon. Member pooh-poohs that statement, but he is not the one who gave the Salmon Arm situation in the interior of British Columbia to the people out there.

There are other problems with the program that we would want to examine. There are certainly some questions about some of the Government guarantees that have been picked up in this Bill, such as guarantees to Canadair, Maislin, and other companies. Canadair is a Crown corporation in need of reform. Some of the other programs smell a little of the corporate welfare that has been handed out fairly indiscriminately, but I will give the Minister the benefit of the doubt on that score. I think he is really trying, and he believes in industrial development. He is from Cornwall, a small town, and I think he is concerned with getting industrial development established.

• (1125)

We cannot have this policy in isolation, Mr. Speaker. We need an industrial strategy for Canada. The example that I used of Port Alberni brings out the fact that there are areas with primary industry only, and no manufacturing base around it. Manufacturing still takes place in the heartland of the country, and that is a real problem for the West and the Maritimes. So much of our industry is foreign owned and controlled that, as well as a regional development strategy, I think we need a whole new Canadian development strategy.

In January a press release was issued about the reorganization of the Minister's Department, Bill C-152. It was accompanied by a big wad of briefing papers which showed it was based on an industrial strategy which was a spin-off from megaprojects. That strategy has gone by the board and the Government has admitted that, so it is looking for another industrial strategy but so far it has not found one.

In subsequent speeches in the House on industrial development I will suggest that the industrial strategy be based on a regional stance and ways of upgrading the regions by means better than those set out in this Bill.

I know the Hon. Member for Mississauga South has a much more detailed mind than I have, and he knows this area very well. Tom Axworthy, the Prime Minister's principal secretary, was talking about these Government development programs and he said that we want to move in on the West like the little bird that sits behind the elephant's ear. I can tell him, Mr. Speaker, that he will find that it is like the elephant who danced among the chickens and said, "Let's make it fair—every man for himself." As a chicken, he is going to have a problem among all those western elephants.

The New Democratic Party supports the Bill, Mr. Speaker, but we have concerns about whether it is going to reach the Port Alberni's of the country. I look forward to the Bill's record receiving committee examination about a year from now. We will find out then if we have really made progress in something that every Member of the House wants, and that is regional industrial development. We must have a fair system all across the country from which everyone can benefit in this great country with the industrial system that we have.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with third reading of Bill C-165. I want to say at the outset that while this Bill does not go in the direction that this Party would go in dealing with industrial development of the regions of Canada, particularly those that are disadvantaged, it is an improvement on what has been happening, and so we support it fully.

I was very pleased with the way the Minister responded yesterday in committee, accepting what we feel were important amendments to define the eligibility of persons entitled to apply. The report on the IRD program will be made immediately after June 1 each year, so that when we determine the new tier levels on July 1, Members on the Committee for Industrial and Regional Development will be able to make some contribution suggesting how the program might be altered in the ensuing year.

The Minister was quite responsive to the sunset clause. This is the kind of legislation that should always contain sunset clauses. It is a grant contribution guarantee type program administered by the Government, in an effort to solve a problem. It may not solve the problem however. It is certainly not a permanent solution to anything. I think the Minister would agree that it is a temporary effort to get at a headache, and that the remedy for that headache should be reviewed from time to time. The sunset for this legislation is five years. In our view that is an important clause, and I thank the Government for accepting our suggestion and amending the Bill in that respect.

• (1130)

This Bill has one other advantage in that it stops some of the alphabet soup. The Bill is intended to replace the EDP, the ILAP, RDIA and the STEP programs. Therefore we now have IRD replacing EDP, ILAP, RDIA and STEP. Unfortunately, there are still five other programs. They are SERB, SAP, IERD, SPLA, and the FDBD.

It is about time that the various programs of the Government were amalgamated, in the sense that this Bill amalgamates programs, puts the bureaucracy which manages programs under one roof, reduces that bureaucracy, makes sure that individual bureaucracies are not competing one with another, and makes it easier for the business community, who may want to apply for the grants, loans, contributions or what have you, which may be available under this program. They at least have one-stop shopping, certainly for the four items which are amalgamated under the new IRD Program.

We would not have proceeded this way. First of all we believe that it is most difficult, well nigh impossible, for people in the Public Service to understand properly the motivations which inspire people to build plants, create new jobs, create new wealth, the motivations which put new people to work on new programs and new projects. The entrepreneur works on the basis of hopes and dreams. He thinks on the basis not of what the steak looks like, but what sizzle, sound and smell are in terms of profit, gain or reward. It is difficult to put that type of thinking into a brief and have that brief examined by unseen and unknown persons in a Government office, and somehow come up with something which really makes the country grow.

What we would have done, therefore, would have been to turn the matter over to the tax system. As we proposed in the last election, we would have a tax credit scheme. In areas which are depressed, where there are no jobs, and where there needs to be development, we would say to the investor who goes into those areas that not only can he get his money back completely before he pays a nickel in taxes, but he can get 150 per cent or even 200 per cent back before he pays a nickel in taxes.

He still has to put his money, his ambition and desires up front, because we say, "We are giving you the carrot, the carrot of an opportunity to make a profit. It is not a cheap loan, not a guarantee and not some sort of percentage contribution based on some mythical unemployment rate in your community or lack of development in your community. It is an opportunity to make a profit, to put your money up. And you will really make a profit on that basis if you go into a depressed area, because when you invest in that depressed area you will be able to get your money back, perhaps even doubled, without the tax man taxing you." That is the opportunity. That is the sizzle. That is the drive. That is the offer.

What do we have here? We have money coming up front, albeit, but coming from a bureaucracy which really has no way of properly judging the spirit, the entrepreneurship, those subjective things which make one person a super businessman and another person a failure. Business is that way. All of the education, all of the training, all of the work which go into a business where you might say on paper the credentials look good, do not really matter. What we are really talking about is that inner spirit which makes some people succeed in business, an inner spirit which makes some people grow and go, and gives some people the ability to put their neighbours to work, to build a country. But some people have not got it.

The problem with the system whereby we have those in the bureaucracy judging applications, is that there is no way in which they can put on paper or justify in a committee meeting that inner spirit which makes success a possibility. So we say, get the Government out of it. Get the Government out of it, but leave the big carrot there. If you really want to build an area which does not have much going for it, put the carrot there, the tax carrot, the allowance. Give these people the ability to make a real profit, because that is what makes our system grow and go in the market place. That is what motivates people. People are not motivated for altruistic reasons. They do not work day and night for altruistic reasons. They go out and work because they want to build for themselves and their families, and because they want to get ahead, and if you offer to them a better opportunity to get ahead in one place in the country than in another, they will go to that place where they have the best opportunity.

One other problem with this piece of legislation is that I, personally, am afraid that in spreading the wealth in terms of the money which is available for Government assistance to business across the entire country, we may have inadvertently—and I give this as a word of caution to the Minister and the Government—hurt some of those areas—the Alberni's of which my friend was talking—in terms of their ability to grow and go. Because what has been done is to make it possible for every area in Canada to get some form of Government assistance in terms of a loan, a grant, a contribution, or in terms of a guarantee of some kind.

Mississauga will get assistance in the same way as Cape Breton. You might be able to get more assistance in Cape Breton, but you can still get assistance in Mississauga. As an Hon. Member from Mississauga I have no objection to that. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid), who is in the same position, also has no objection to that. However, I would like to say this to you, Sir, and to the Minister, that there is only so much money, and I suggest that the Minister and his officials are looking for success. If they can back a project in an area where success is likely, they will back it there. It is sometimes easier to back a project in Brampton or Mississauga than it is in Cape Breton. Statistically, the chance of success may well be far higher in Brampton or Mississauga than it is in Cape Breton.

The Minister is likely to see a situation where his officials will find applications coming from some of the top Tier 1 areas which are very likely to succeed and will make the officials in the Department look good. Those applications are likely to take up the money. Applications from areas in the country where the chance of success is not near as great are not likely to get as much money as they might ordinarily get, because again there is only so much in the till.

I am not saying we are opposing the Bill. We think it is good and should go through. While I suspect that the Minister, even though he is a pretty good one, is not going to be a Minister of the Crown very much longer—the people of Canada are going to make sure that he and his colleagues find some other place to work, and perhaps they will need the advantage of some of these programs—I say to the Minister that in his management of the Department he had better be very careful to make sure that the limited money available is used to get rid of some of the existing inequities and disparities in this country as opposed to the politically and bureaucracy pleasing support of propositions from areas where the success rate is very likely to be much higher.

I will now deal with the question of tiering, Mr. Speaker. For the purposes of this Bill the country is divided into tier areas. Tier 1 covers a good part of the country; most of the major cities are tier 1 or, at the worst Tier 2. Then there is a whole series of criteria which determine Tier 2, Tier 3 or Tier 4 areas. One of the concerns I have with the Bill and the proposed regulations is the contribution the Government can make to a project. It is higher in Tier 4 than in Tier 3 or 2 or 1, and the level at which the program kicks in is lower in Tier 4, 3 and 2, than it is in 1. But the effect is to have virtually the same element of subsidization in all four tier areas.

For example, if the Government is going to give a contribution to marketing of a manufacturer's product in the Tier 1 zone, it could go up to 50 per cent of the cost. But even in Tier 4 zones the maximum is 75 per cent. Bearing in mind that the Tier 4 zones are the areas of the worst unemployment, the worst possible disparity in the country, and bearing in mind that the Tier 1 zones are the most prosperous areas in the country, the variance is between 50 per cent and 75 per cent. I say to you, Sir, that is not much of a variance.

Perhaps the Minister might take a look at that because, while I know he wants to make sure his Department is dealing right across Canada and that there is no discrimination in the country, the whole nature of regional economic development is that we discriminate in the less developed, less prosperous parts of the country. The concept is that you help a person in a weak area more than you help a person in a wealthy area. But the regulations do not clearly make it less attractive in a wealthier area. To put it the other way, you put just about as many bucks in Mississauga as you do in Cape Breton. If that is really the intention, and I suspect it is not, then perhaps there should be some change in the proposed regulations.

As I said previously, we would not have proceeded this way, but we are pleased to support this Bill because we believe it is progressive and a better way of handling the problems than we have had so far from this Government. On that basis I commend the Minister for being prepared to accept amendments and allowing the Members in committee to make valid input to the legislation. If we had that type of co-operation from other Ministers, for example the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) on the Export Development Corporation Bill, that Bill could move ahead too. But when we have a Government Department which stonewalls the Opposition and any effective and proper suggestions, then you do not get matters moving ahead in this Parliament. This Minister is co-operative. The Bill was introduced about a week ago; hopefully it can pass today before noon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Chair should draw to the attention of the House that the Minister is now seeking the floor. As mover of the Bill he had the option to make a speech and he chose not to do so. The Chair suspects it was to accommodate other Members of the House. Is there unanimous consent to allow the Minister to make a statement at this time?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to thank my colleagues on both sides of the House for allowing me the opportunity to wrap up third reading of this Bill on behalf of the Government. I also want to pay tribute to the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), and the Official Opposition critic, the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie), for their constructive criticism and comments with respect to regional development, in the Standing Committee on Regional Development from whence came a lot of the ideas incorporated in this Bill.

I want to address a couple of the issues, Mr. Speaker, that the two Hon. Member have raised today, as well as a brief summary of the Bill. Members of Parliament are all busy these days in committees as well as carrying out our responsibilities to our individual ridings that I think it will take a while before the full impact of this Bill is realized by all Members of this House, and particularly how it affects all parts of the country. This is the first time in almost 15 years, since the Department of Regional Expansion was initiated, that the Department has gone through a thorough re-evaluation and reorientation of its regional development programs.

I think it speaks well of Parliamentarians in general that, of all, the three Parties support the Bill. That has not happened too often during this particular Parliament. Second, there was the non-partisanship. I have been on the Committee on Regional Development for eight or nine years. I also happened to be chairman of the Committee at one time when I first came to the House. I think that non-partisanship is attributable to the importance that each and every Hon. Member, regardless of his or her political persuasion, attaches to regional development.

I would like to summarize some of the most important parts of the Bill. For the first time in Canada's history we will have a consistent measure to gauge regional disparity in Canada. The arbitrariness of the Minister of the day or of the Government of the day deciding which area of the country receives what level of assistance with respect to industrial restructuring and regional development, is past.

We have spent a great deal of time in putting the development index together. I appreciate the constructive input we have had from Hon. Members on ail sides of the House, from the private sector, and from provincial Governments, with respect to the development of this index. It is not perfect. I doubt very much if there is such a thing as a perfect development index. However, I think that we are well along the way toward developing an index which, as the Hon. Member said in their second reading speeches and in committee, is as equitable, as objective, and as fair as any that has ever been previously developed.

I would like to address the second most important part of the program. It is no longer a question as to whether one particular area is designated or not. It is now a question of degree of designation. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South said that he could receive almost the same assistance for Mississauga as one can receive for Cape Breton. On the contrary. If one looks, for example, to the most important part of the regional development, in other words, the basic program element upon which DREE was originally initiated or founded, one finds that it was the establishment of new industries, the diversification of the economic base of the regional disparity areas in Canada. One sees that in areas in the most developed 50 per cent of the country, unless their unemployment population ratio exceed by 1 per cent the national average for six consecutive months, there is no financial assistance from the Government of Canada for new establishments. Yet in the Tier IV areas, those companies applying for assistance to start new ventures are eligible for up to 60 per cent of capital costs to undertake these ventures.

Forgetting for a second southern Ontario, or the southern part of British Columbia, but take a Province like Nova Scotia, one finds that it was very difficult to try to develop certain areas like Cape Breton when the same financial assistance was applicable to companies in the Halifax area. Now there is a differentiation even within individual regions. You will know, Mr. Speaker, that there are substantial degrees of economic disparity within your own particular Province. Now that we have a consistent measure for regional disparity, it will be much easier to differentiate between those various areas.

The other comment of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, and I think it was a justifiable one, concerned success. What our officials are after is success in terms of the number of jobs we will create in every region of the country as a result of the program. We are quite prepared to take a much higher risk for projects in the more disadvantaged areas of Canada than we are in the most developed regions.

The third element that I consider to be so important with respect to the Bill is that, for the first time, we have a manageable number of programs that can now be delivered on a regional basis. With my background as a small and medium-sized entrepreneur and as a mayor of a community which once had the highest unemployment rate in Canada, I have always felt that if one really wants to reach out, if one really wants to solve regional disparity, one must bring all the economic tools of Government to bear. It does not just require one program or two programs. It requires all the programs. From now on, all the economic development programs, the direct delivery programs of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, will be available in every region of the country.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway spoke of the Port Alberni's of this world, the single industry regions, and of the difficulties that one faces in trying to diversify the economic base of those regions that are resource-based and so dependent on one single industry. One of the elements by which the Bill will facilitate in the diversification of the economic base in these areas is through regionalizing the financial assistance for innovation such as design, research and development, et cetera. In other words, we will try to encourage more of these single industry communities to carry out more research and development, to expand their product lines or expand their processing. This is one of the avenues that has really not been addressed to any degree in terms of regional development potential for the past 15 or 20 years.

The other element mentioned by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway was decentralization. This really is decentralization. I think the previous concept of decentralization was sharing the responsibility with the Provinces.That is just one element and we will still do that with the general development subagreements with the Provinces. However, I think the key with this program is that we not only decentralize the delivery mechanism to reach out to the small and medium-sized entrepreneur in every region of the country, but we also decentralize the processing of the applications so that there is a regional perspective in the assessment of the individual applications.

If we were preparing a headline, in the creating of a PR program to promote the program, I would say to every small and medium sized entrepreneur, "You no longer have to come to Ottawa for financial assistance. We will reach out to you". We will ensure that the small and medium-sized entrepreneurs in Canada, who obviously make up the backbone of economic development in Canada, will receive their fair share of all the programs which have historically only been available to most of the major corporations in the most developed regions of the country.

I also want to pay tribute to my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané), the Hon. Member for Matapédia-Matane who, for two and one-half years, was the Minister responsible for DREE before the reorganization. Since the inception of DREE, he is really the first Minister I have known, and I think I have known them all, who has really tried to address the issue in the most sensitive way, the issue of regional development. Many of the provisions that are incorporated in the Bill I was able to obtain from his previous work in this regard.

The other element of the Bill which we have not discussed to any degree concerns industrial restructuring. If there is one message that came home to me loud and clear during the two and one half years I spent as Trade Minister, in travelling to over 50 countries around the world, was the fact that the competition Canadian industry will face over the balance of this decade and of this century will be tougher than we have ever faced before. Therefore, that tells each and every one of us, regardless of our position, that our industries will have to maintain their international competitiveness. That is an undeniable fact. If we are not competitive, we will not survive economically. If we do not survive, not only will we not create the new jobs that are necessary in Canada, but we will not maintain the ones we already have, either.

This industrial restructuring element of the program is as equally important as the regional development priority of the program. That is the reason why we think it is so important to have this national program sensitized on a regional basis. Even in the industrial heartland of Canada there are a number of industries that need financial assistance from the Government to undertake expansion programs, modernization programs or innovation programs to ensure that their companies will be internationally competitive. I believe it was the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway who probably expressed it best on behalf of all of us in the House the other day on second reading when he said, "What is in this Bill is almost too good to be true". I think that is really one of the reasons we have not truly digested its contents, the fact that for one of the few occasions when we have a program in which all Members of Parliament have had some input.

I welcome the amendments brought forward by the Opposition. I think that together, we should not wait until the end of the year when the program will be reviewed. Yesterday, I made a commitment to the committee that any changes in the regulations would be brought to the committee's attention. I believe that the more input we have in this particular area, the better the program will be.

• (1200)

In conclusion, perhaps the best indication that we have done something constructive and positive as Parliamentarians is the fact that we have received no press coverage with respect to the program. That is usually the best indication that we have done something constructive and positive. If the Opposition would have stonewalled the Bill or objected to it, this legislation would probably have been on the front page of every paper in the country and the first story on television and radio news. But the fact of the matter is that we have all agreed on a program which provides financial assistance of anywhere from $500 million to $1 billion a year to manufacturing, processing, tourism and related service sector industries right across the country. Since we have received no publicity, it is probably the best indication that we are on the right track.

I also want to thank my provincial colleagues. I discussed this particular program with my provincial colleagues even before it was passed through the Cabinet. I think their input into this Bill has been very important.

At a time when some 1.5 million Canadians are unemployed, I do not think there is any Member of the House who would not agree that a concerted effort is needed toward strengthening our industries. I do not think any Member of Parliament, regardless of his or her political persuasion, will rest easy until such time as we have full employment in this country.

In my trade days, we had a very cohesive effort between the private and public sectors, whether it was management, labour, federal or provincial Governments. There was a very co-operative effort. I suggest that is one reason why Canadian exports were able to not only maintain but increase their market share and Canada was one of the few countries in the world to achieve this goal during the international recession of the last three years.

I feel very strongly that if we are to be successful with this program, solve the problems of regional disparity and industrial restructuring and create the needed jobs that we want in this country, we will need that cohesive effort by management and labour, the federal, provincial and municipal Governments. I think Members on both sides of the House have demonstrated that co-operation in their input into this program, and as Minister responsible I want to say thank you to each individual.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

ATHLETIC CONTESTS AND EVENTS POOLS ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE GOVERNMENT OPERATED POOL SYSTEMS

Hon. Ed Lumley (for the Secretary of State of Canada) moved that Bill C-95, an Act to provide for Government operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and events and to amend the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this third and perhaps last opportunity to put some final comments on the record with respect to Bill C-95. Needless to say, as I have said so many times before, I view the impending passage of this legislation with mixed emotions. On the one hand it is an abysmally bad piece of legislation. I am positive, and the Opposition is just as assured, that it will return to haunt the House at a later time. Yet I am left with the feeling that because of the great amount of public relations expended in Government advertising, there is the possibility that at least some of the beneficiaries named in this Bill may reap some benefit.

We on this side can take some pride in our efforts to improve the Bill. I refer to the amendments which we raised in committee and discussed very briefly earlier this week. I will comment on those shortly, but before I make those comments, I want to point out some of the existing conflicts and pressures which exist in the House at this time.

Against those conflicts there is one prevailing matter that seems to have been raised consistently by the Government side. It is the obvious, outspoken, obnoxious desire of the federal Government to get back into the lottery business. We have opposed this re-entry of the federal Government into the lottery business from the very start. No individual, group or Province can fault the efforts and sincerity of a great number of our Members who have presented their arguments in the House in opposition to the re-entry of the federal Government into the gaming business.

Our difficulties with Bill C-95 are deeply rooted and have been long lasting. It would be only appropriate to review the record and set matters straight after a lengthy and controversial exchange.

In 1976, our Party had to make a very difficult decision with respect to Loto Canada. The Montreal Olympics had incurred a deficit of approximately $1 billion and the federal Government was pressured by Montreal to get it out of the quagmire in which it found itself. The federal Government promised to assist in the reduction of that $1 billion deficit which Montreal faced.

That was a fair and perhaps reasonable undertaking by the federal Government because the Montreal Olympic Games were a source of pride not only for the people of Montreal and the Province of Quebec but for all Canadians as we reflected in the glory and success of the Montreal Olympics. It was an event which Canadians of all ages and from every region enjoyed and participated in in whatever way possible. It was an event of national and international significance.

As is the case today, the Liberal Government of 1976 was short of cash. Therefore it insisted that whatever help it gave to Montreal would have to be met by non-government revenues, so it said. Therefore the federal Government introduced a federal lottery. For many good reasons, the Opposition of the day was opposed to the introduction of Loto Canada. First, it was said that lotteries were a matter of provincial jurisdiction. But notwithstanding our objection, the federal Government remained adamant; it was Loto Canada or nothing.

In committee we extracted a promise from the federal Government, and particularly the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), that Loto Canada would have a fixed three-year term and would be conducted primarily for the benefit of the Montreal Olympics. The present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources made a great show of his distaste for lotteries and of his desire to help Montreal. The same Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was full of enthusiasm at the prospect of being able to turn lotteries back to the Provinces at the end of that three-year term.

On the strength of the Minister's comments, the Progressive Conservative Party voted in favour of supporting Loto Canada. Our support was not for Loto Canada or any other lottery, bookie operation or gambling racket, but for a Canadian city hosting the Summer Olympic Games. That is why, with respect to the sports pool, we as a Party support the allocation of federal funds to the City of Calgary so that it might adequately host the XV Winter Olympic Games.

• (1210)

All Hon. Members know the story of Loto Canada and how scandal-ridden its life was. Everyone knows how the Loto Canada corporation with all its hangers on became the haven of patronage, resulting in much mismanagement and many misdemeanours. My colleagues the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski) and the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) spelled out some of these disreputable and disgraceful instances in the debate earlier this week. Loto Canada was one of the greatest pork barrels of all time.

Despite that record and despite the present Minister of Energy's assurances given in 1976, the 1979 Liberal Government proposed that Loto Canada be continued in perpetuity. I would have thought that any government with any reasonable ounce of conscience would have said that it had had enough of Loto Canada's reputation hanging around its neck as it faced an election. The extension of Loto Canada's life, Mr. Speaker, was something totally unacceptable to our Party.

The long and the short of the matter is that the federal Government has no business in the lottery or the gaming business. While the tendency of the Liberals is to hide issues at election time, we campaigned as a Party right across the nation during the 1979 election compaign to put an end to the sorry chapter of the Liberal Government's participation in the gaming business. There was no equivocation in our position, and it was a campaign promise that we kept.

The sale of Loto Canada remains controversial simply because too many people, including the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan), just simply refuse to look at the facts. Loto Canada was not the success that government advertising leads the people of Canada to believe. The facts show very clearly that there was a decline in returns over the years of its operation. Loto Canada's very best year was 1977-78 when it netted $74.3 million. But by the following year that net had declined to $62.5 million, and even if Loto Canada had had a full year of operation in 1979-80, it would not have netted $62.5 million. Loto Canada was, therefore, clearly in decline.

These facts notwithstanding, we still hear the Minister of State for International Trade talking about Loto Canada yielding $80 million to $100 million a year in revenue.

An Hon. Member: Net.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): That is right, net. Where will the Minister gain the revenue of $300 million to return that $80 million to $100 million in net profits or gains to the beneficiaries as enunciated in this Bill? The Minister in his heart knows better. He knows that the sports pool is doomed to failure. The only salvation he will have is that if he gets back into the lottery business then we will be back in competition with the Provinces as we were before. We will be back in competition in the news media. Each one will be vying for the same thing with an expenditure of dollars, the likes of which we have never seen. Even though Loto Canada was once known as the greatest advertising spender in the whole country, that will be nothing to what it will be if Loto Canada gets back into the games business.

The 1979 Progressive Conservative Government had a difficult time disposing of a failing product, an asset that was declining in value almost daily but certainly monthly. My colleague from Edmonton North went into some detail on Monday night explaining the results of that sale and the benefit to this country of that sale. Not only did the Hon. Member get a good deal for the Government of the day, but he provided a fixed annual return for arts and culture and fitness and amateur sport. As at the end of this month the federal Government will have received approximately $102.5 million from the Provinces pursuant to the 1979 agreement.

Again, the Minister of State for International Trade chooses to ignore the facts and mocks the value of that agreement. Show me any deal in which the federal Government can get over $32 million a year at absolutely no cost, Mr. Speaker, and I will show you a deal that we should grab and grab quickly. After all, we are talking about the need to fulfil a commitment of $200 million from non-tax revenue for the 1988 Calgary Olympics when that 1979 agreement would have solved the problem.

Between 1983 and 1988, assuming 6 per cent inflation, the Provinces will have paid to this Government $220 million. Why could that money not have been used to fund the Calgary games so the organizers could have in advance adequately planned a successful games venture? Unfortunately, the federal Government has seen fit to spend the money from the lottery agreement on other items. The federal Government says that fitness and amateur sport and arts and culture are getting increased benefits through the ordinary budget system. But no one knows for sure because the money from that 1979 lottery agreement goes into the Consolidated Revenue Fund. The Government has not been able to explain that away, either in committee or during Question Period.

However, the important factor in all of this is that the federal Government has a binding agreement with the Provinces not to re-enter the lottery field. This Government may miss the good old patronage days, but that is too bad. Bill C-95 is nothing more than an end run around the 1979 federal-provincial agreement.

I opened my remarks by saying that the legislation before us is bad. It is worse than that, Mr. Speaker. In committee and earlier this week we tried to improve upon it. First, I know of no other country in the world which distinguishes in the gaming business between a lottery and a sports pool.

Second, there may not be a court in the land—and this was tested in one of the Provinces already—that will see a difference between the federal Government's re-entry into the sports pool and a re-entry into the lottery or gaming business.

Third, the legislation, as contained in Bill C-95, provides a Mack truck clause because it contains a simple clause that allows the federal Government to get back into any other lawful game. Once this Bill is passed, who knows what kind of a game the Government will become involved in, because the legislation will permit the Government to become involved in any kind of a game. The Government will be able to legalize any game, as it has this one. It is make it illegal for anybody else to play in that game but the Government of Canada. It will be the sole gambler and the sole host of a gambling nest of games—lottery games, sports, pools, video tape games, electronic games, even perhaps an electronic game of chess and you will be betting against yourself.

Fourth, Bill C-95 makes it possible for this to happen and lists every beneficiary known to the Minister of State for International Trade without honouring a commitment to any one of them, including the Calgary Olympics, because the Bill does not make any allocation of funds among those beneficiaries with any degree of certainty, by percentage or otherwise.

Fifth, the proposed sports pool corporation will not be subject to the kind of scrutiny and audit demanded by Canadians. We are sick and tired of Crown corporations running wild. The Auditor General has pointed out that Crown corporations are almost a sub-parliamentary group subject to a little bit of accountability to none at all. And here we are talking about establishing a new Crown corporation dealing with the games business. As we mentioned yesterday, the odds against Canadians participating in this game is bad enough without their being subjected to the abuse and error they were earlier with Loto Canada. That should not happen again. We should attempt to protect Canadians by having the Auditor General audit the books of the corporation and set up the appropriate systems.

The Government has refused to table any marketing studies to indicate that sports pools are saleable or marketable. On the other hand, the Provinces have provided to date the only facts and figures relating to sports pools. They indicated very clearly in committee that the game is doomed to failure and that we are about to lose our shirts by entering into competition with the Provinces.

Bill C-95 is ostensibly all about the aggressive marketing of a federal sports pool, yet it provides the sports pool corporation with a start-up grant of $10.5 million to run a gambling business and a line of credit of an additional $20 million, with no obligation on its part to repay those advances of taxpayers' money. If the Government is so sure of success in the sports pool game, why does it not make provision for repayment of the start-up funds provided by the taxpayers of the nation to the corporation? It could make repayment from its revenues, especially if the Government is sure that the sports pool will be successful. No ordinary Canadian wanting to open a business could get a deal like that one.

The Government has still not responded to the points made by the Inter-Church Committee on Lotteries as to the detrimental effect Bill C-95 will have on our society. The Committee pointed out that the games business, including lotteries, is the greatest social disease of our time. I am sure Hon. Members of the House and the public have read recently about the addiction of certain persons, for example the $175,000 which was stolen by a bank teller because of her desire to continue to buy tickets. At one time the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) and the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Fleming) were both vocal in their opposition to lotteries, but neither saw fit to raise those concerns during the debate on Bill C-95. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) saw fit not to speak in a debate despite, as she said, her loathing for such activity.

Finally, Bill C-95 will contribute to the steadily deteriorating relationship between the federal and provincial Governments. No effort was made by the federal Government to discuss what arrangements could be made with the Provinces to assist in the financing of the Calgary Olympics, and the Mack truck clause mentioned earlier is nothing short of a red flag to the Provinces because they view it as a deliberate attempt by the federal Government to get back into the lottery business in competition with them.

The position of the Progressive Conservative Party on the subject of federal involvement in the games, lottery and gambling field is clear and unequivocal. We are opposed to the re-entry of the federal Government into the gambling business. Our opposition is made much easier in the context of Bill C-95 because it is a bad, ill-conceived Bill. There will be no end to the controversy, and I suspect the Government will have its hands full trying to account for this new Crown corporation, just as it had its hands full with Loto Canada. Had our amendments concerning the Auditor General and the elimination of the Mack truck clause been accepted, it might have been a little easier and perhaps more beneficial to the Government. Nonetheless, democracy must take its course, but to what end?

There is only so much an opposition can do to save a government from its own folly. I am extremely appreciative of the support and concern shown by my colleagues and their participation in the debate. I thank them publicly for their participation and for echoing their concerns, just as I have echoed mine. Having fought the fight, the good fight, I naturally want to wish the sports pool corporation well. I trust the Calgary Olympics, the Winter Olympics, will soon benefit from whatever game the Government proposes to introduce. To that end I have to allow that modest acceptance of the position now taken by the Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

Mr. McDermid: They are finally putting up a speaker.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I hear the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid). It is not a matter of "finally"; it has nothing to do with that. It is that we stated our unequivocal opposition to the Bill on second reading. I think our position on balance is somewhat clearer than the position of the Conservative Party inasmuch as it is not a structural opposition to the nature of the Bill in terms of the way it has been drafted, whether it has been drafted well or otherwise. Our opposition is not simply to the federal Government's participation. It is not an opposition which indicates that somehow or other the federal Government opted out of the lottery business and therefore to opt back in would be wrong. Our opposition is that we are opposed to lotteries of this type and to further institutionalizing gambling in this way.

There are sufficient opportunities for people to engage in games of chance all across the country without adding to the number. I am as convinced of that as was the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) some years ago when he spoke similarly on the introduction of lotteries and gambling. I am as convinced today as I was many years ago when I was in the Legislature of the Province of Ontario that the introduction of gambling turns out to be a tax on the poor and to be more attractive to those people of very limited means than it is to those of considerable wealth. The chance of victory, of winning fabulous wealth, is remote. "Remote" hardly describes it: "virtually non-existent" might better describe the situation. The chance of victory is a lure which people of little income find almost irresistible. I believe the Government does the country a disservice by introducing at this point in time the particular proposal for a sports pool.

I have listened with interest over the course of the last few days, in fact at every turn when the Bill came before the House of Commons, to the arguments put forward. There was a suggestion that somehow or other it was based upon a game of skill. I cannot help but think that anyone who would believe that is naïve in the extreme. There is no game of skill involved; it is a game of chance. It is just like any other game of chance.

One has an option and picks between teams or among teams a combination of victors and losers, the end result of which is that one's chance at winning is so remote that one might as well give away the money to the first poor person on the street. That would do more good than going through this process which the Government has established.

I want to make it absolutely clear that we are unalterably opposed to the passage of this Bill. We were opposed to it at second reading. I went into some detail at second reading as to why I felt it was inappropriate. In fact, with a little bit of humour I dealt with my then recent visit to Las Vegas. I had taken my son to Las Vegas just to see the place. At that time I pointed out the despair that I saw on the faces of those who walked out of the gambling casinos, the haggard faces of the gamblers who had sat there—

• (1230)

Mr. Siddon: How much did you lose?

Mr. Deans: I lost absolutely nothing. I never bet, as you know. I saw the haggard and unshaven faces of those who became hooked on the slot machines and the blackjack and poker tables that were there.

Over the years concern has been expressed to me by the families of those who have become addicts. Just as people become addicted to drugs and alcohol, they become addicted to gambling. They become addicted in such a way that the income from their job becomes insufficient to meet their addiction. Family homes are lost because of this as well as the family incomes which are necessary to provide for their day to day well-being.

While I do not pretend for one moment that the purchase of a lottery ticket will necessarily make that financial and substantial difference, I do not believe that the Government should be in the business of promoting further gambling.

Mr. Regan: Including the Government of Manitoba?

Mr. Deans: Including the Government of Manitoba; I do not make any distinctions. When I am opposed to something, I am opposed regardless of who does it. I will be blunt here; I was opposed when the Government of Ontario brought in Wintario. I said so in the Legislature. I might say that I was in the minority, but I stood and said that I was opposed to it, that it was wrong and it was not the direction to go. I would say the same to any government, regardless of its political leaning, that that is not the appropriate direction to go.

If we want to fund something like the Olympics, if a decision is made after careful consideration that it is important for Canada to host the Olympics or some other major sporting event, we then take on the concurrent responsibility to raise the money through normal channels to ensure that the funding is available.

What worries me about all of this is that we are looking at a set amount of money. I hope it is a set amount of money. There are just so many dollars available for the purchase of lottery tickets. All kinds of lotteries are being conducted from coast to coast. If we add a new lottery to the existing myriad of lotteries, we just further distribute the money. It is not new money. Other lotteries which supposedly provide money for local events, such as amateur baseball, amateur hockey, and in the case of Ontario and some other Provinces medical research, no doubt worth-while purposes, there will be fewer dollars available to those institutions as a result of our entering the field.

The end result will be that amateur hockey, baseball, lacrosse, and charitable organizations that attempt to provide recreation in many communities in this country will find that there are fewer dollars available to them; therefore they will not be able to meet their commitments. Children in every part of this country will not have the same degree of access that they have had in the past.

From my point of view, it seems to fly in the face of everything we believe in. I do not often use this kind of term, but frankly, I consider this to be morally wrong. It is wrong to be in the business in the first place. From a practical point of view, I also consider it to be wrong. It takes away from existing charitable funding that is so necessary in many communities. In many ways it is a further enticement to those who can ill afford it. They use the few dollars they have in the fond hope of that elusive prize, a prize which escapes almost all of them.

I urge the Government that it consider these arguments. I understand that they are not powerful arguments and that they have been made before; they are really just a response from my own experience with this. If it is the desire of the Government to fund whatever major undertakings we deem necessary for the enchancement of Canada's way of life and the enhancement of Canada on the international scene, we should do that legitimately. There are various means available to us now through the existing tax structure and the appeal for donations which are tax deductible and, therefore, beneficial to those who can afford to make them. However, we should not add further to the ongoing problems that develop as a result of encouraging people to believe that somewhere at the end of all this there is a pot of gold that they can reach for and thereby get something for nothing. You get nothing for nothing. Lotteries tend to sell on the basis of that theme. You do not get anything in this world without putting some effort into it. You will not become rich quickly from the purchase of a lottery ticket.

If people want to make contributions to the ongoing events of Canada, whatever they may be, they should do so according to their ability and their desire. Surely it should not be on the basis of the hope that they will derive some financial reward in the end, that they will become fabulously wealthy, because that financial reward eludes all but a few. The financial reward causes suffering even to those who win.

Even at this late point I urge the Government to reconsider and to agree that what it is proposing is not appropriate. To suggest that somehow or other it will enhance the sporting events of this land is ludicrous. The proper way to build a society is through a fair and equitable means of raising money, not through a get-rich-quick scheme based on the sale of lottery tickets.

• (1240)

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I did not want to interrupt the Hon. Member during his remarks but I did have a question for him. I accept at face value the sincerity of his commitment to the work ethic and to the fact that we ought not con people into believing that they can get something for nothing, and I agree with him about the immorality of the whole gambling scheme that the Government is venturing into. I cannot help but remember, however, that the New Democratic Party's constituency association in my riding of Surrey-White Rock-North Delta holds the franchise to sell the provincial lottery tickets. It may hold it in other British Columbia ridings as well.

I would therefore like to ask the Member whether he is opposed to what the Party is doing in British Columbia in this area. Without wanting to interfere with his own Party and with its convention this weekend in Regina, would he plan to try to get the New Democratic Party out of the lottery business in British Columbia?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, that hardly deserves an answer. However, I think I might as well rise. I believe that what I have said and put on the record is an adequate indication of how I feel about lotteries. I would ask the Member in return if he thinks that the perpetuation and growth of the lottery system by the Conservative Government in Ontario enhances the lifestyle and quality of life for the people of Ontario or in any way enhances the use of the systems that are so necessary for day to day life.

I believe the Hon. Member spends more time worrying about the New Democratic Party than he does about the problem itself. I am sure that if I were to look closely, although I have not bothered to do so, I would find Conservative organizations that do things that I do not like either.

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, I was going to begin by commending the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) for the sincerity of his remarks because he certainly expressed many views that have been expressed by Members of this Party, although rather infrequently by some Members of his own Party, during the course of the previous debate. In light of the question asked by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen), I am not quite as assured of the sincerity of the Party which the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain represents, but nonetheless, his response seemed to be sincere in that he adheres to his position, which is, as I understand it, that governments in the country should not be participating in the gaming rackets.

As has been very capably expressed by many of my colleagues and especially by our spokesman in this debate, the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid), I too believe that the Government's re-entry into the gaming area is a sign of the moral bankruptcy of the Liberal Party opposite. I would like to say that I think it sets a very poor example when Members of the Crown, those who are appointed to take charge and accept responsibility for the major problems in our society, which are principally unemployment and inflation, the management of Government and the maintenance of respect for law and order, set such a retrograde standard for all Canadians to witness.

This is particularly true, Mr. Speaker, in terms of the example set by for young people by the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan), who is pushing this Bill through the House on behalf of his colleague in the other place. Our young people are hopefully being brought up in a society which establishes law and allows people to pursue their own adventures at their own risks, but society must set certain standards for the people of the country to follow. I would like to assert again that I believe this Minister and the Government are helping to contribute to the degradation of the values that many of us in the country hold dear.

The valuable time of Ministers of the Crown is being taken to participate in the kind of gambling that we do not allow many other groups in the country to participate in. We are rigorous in terms of our enforcement of laws with regard to off-track betting. We regularly instruct the RCMP to raid the gambling houses of many Chinese Canadians who for centuries have participated in their traditional games of chance. Yet under the Criminal Code those games of chance are outlawed and people participating in them are prosecuted to the full limit of the law. I think that it is reprehensible when the Government comes to the House with a piece of legislation which would amend the Criminal Code to suit its convenience while it continues to prosecute people who operate games of chance without its sanction.

I do not know what the current practice is, but in fact, in the past charitable organizations that have run various types of raffles and lotteries and bingo games for various good works in the community have been punished and treated virtually as criminals by this Government and many of its predecessors. Yet now it is setting a new standard for our society.

The stated purpose of the Bill, Mr. Speaker, is to raise funds for so-called good works in our nation. It is to provide financial assistance for fitness and amateur sports, arts and culture, and medical and health research, as is stated in the list that is contained in Clause 18 of the Bill. Finally, and low on the list, comes the provision of funding for the Calgary Olympics.

The people of Canada are being told by Liberal Party Members and all of their paid publicity backs that we on this side of the House are holding up this Bill and therefore jeopardizing the conduct of the Calgary Olympics. Yet this Bill does not even establish a priority in terms of access to available funding for the Calgary Olympics. It puts it as the last item on the list. The Government has refused to accept our second amendment to this legislation which would make the Calgary Olympics the sole beneficiary of this initiative. I think, Mr. Speaker, that that belies the credibility of the Government's pronouncements outside this House that the poor people of Calgary and western Canada will not get the same kind of treatment that Montreal did in terms of the previous Olympics if Conservative Members keep digging in their heels and opposing the Bill.

The fact of the matter, Mr. Speaker, is that we believe the Calgary Olympics can be funded and that the federal Government has a responsibility to share in the cost of those games, but there are various ways of financing such initiatives. The best and most direct means of doing so in the case of something as important and prestigious to Calgary and all of Canada as the Olympics would be to introduce a tax credit system that is the same as the one that operates in the financing of political parties in the country.

The Government could have allowed a 75 per cent tax credit on all contributions up to $200 from Canadians at large who would contribute to the Calgary Olympics. Then we would not have had to award patronage to all friends of the Liberal Party who want to build computer machines and earn commissions and set up stands in shopping centres. We would not have had to spend all of that money on advertising. We would not have had to con the Canadian people into thinking that they can get rich quick, therefore setting a standard of moral corruption on the part of the Government which runs in total contradiction to all of the progressive measures of taxation legislation that this Government and many of its predecessors have established over the years.

By a mere admendment to the Income Tax Act, the Government could attract millions of dollars for the Calgary Olympics and other worthy causes. This simple amendment would make it possible for people who contribute to charity to opt between sending a significant portion of their dollars to Ottawa or to some worthy cause. I guarantee that this would eliminate a whole layer of unnecessary bureaucracy here in Ottawa. It would allow Cabinet Ministers to take charge again of the important tasks for which they are responsible instead of wasting their energies on such corruption as a sports lottery.

I believe the Minister should hand his head in shame because, in fact, what he is doing runs totally contrary to the whole thrust and intent of the Family Allowance system, the Child Tax Credit system, our federal-provincial agreements on welfare payments, the Unemployment Insurance system, the old age pension system, the guaranteed annual income system for those in need, and all of our social support systems, Mr. Speaker. In particular, the very progressive nature of our income tax structure as represented in the tax table is being contravened by this measure that will get the Government of Canada back into the lottery business. We reject this initiative without equivocation even though, as the Hon. Member for St. Catharines pointed out, we cannot go on obstructing all summer. If this is the Government's only way, in its obstinancy, to see to it that the people of western Canada are not left carrying the can for the Calgary Olympics, then I suppose we will have to let the measure go through.

• (1250)

Mark my words, Mr. Speaker, just as Loto Canada failed, just as Loto Select failed even before it got off the ground after the Government wasted $37 million on that boondoggle, this sports pool corporation will also fail. My colleague has wished it well, but if I have anything to say in the next Government of Canada, I will ensure that this type of corrupt initiative is replaced with proper and progressive amendments to the Income Tax Act. We must ensure that volunteer organizations are again funded by Canadians giving of their own free will and not by those who want to get rich quick by taking a chance on a lottery ticket.

In the course of the debate many statistics have been produced to show that those who buy lottery tickets are people at the low end of the income scale. The Minister shakes his head but he knows full well that those who are most careful with their money, the shrewd investors in society, the successes in society, do not buy lottery tickets. He knows that it is the people who get a welfare cheque who buy lottery tickets. They think they have a chance because they see on television or read about some elderly couple who won a million dollars and so they tend to feel that they too have chance, even though the odds are something like 10 million to one against their winning. The odds against happiness after winning are great as well. Nonetheless, the Government is enticing people who can least afford it to buy tickets. Every time they walk into a shopping mall or go to a sporting even or turn on the television, they are coerced and persuaded by the Government of Canada, with that nice, neat, official Liberal logo, to buy lottery tickets. That reflects the moral bankruptcy and corruption of this Government.

When we couple this move with the introduction of electronics into gaming and see the potential for abuse—for outright fraud by people who know how to write computer programs—and when we connect that with some of the people who will be licensed to sell tickets, we see the potential for harm. The concessionaires with license to sell the tickets are usually good friends of the Liberal Party. When we couple that with the people who get the contract to build the systems, like a constituent of mine who is looking for the contract to build these systems and happens to be a former Liberal Cabinet Minister by the name of Cafik, we see the potential for abuse if there is no requirement for public accountability.

I suggest there is the possibility of a major scam being perpetrated, not in the Government's official name, but by people who would stoop to that. The system can be rigged, Mr. Speaker. We have not been convinced that there will be control over the issuance of vouchers. Anyone can program a computer to spew out a lot of extra tickets. There will be no control on the odds; they will just keep selling tickets because they want to raise money for worthy causes.

If the wrong people intervene in the system—and here we are getting into the area of computer crime—a lot of money can be siphoned out of the system. That is why one of the amendments put forward by this Party asked that the books and accounts of the Sports Canada Corporation should be fully audited and scrutinized by the Auditor General. We find it strange that the Government rejected that amendment, just as it rejected our amendment to ensure that the funds would go first to the Calgary Olympics. The Government also rejected our amendment which would have assured that this move could not lead to a wide open promotion of a myriad of electronic games. We are already plagued with these in our communities. Our kids are hanging out at the electronic pinball palaces, where they run into people who push drugs and commit petty break and entry in order to pay for their habit. We read about that in society today.

The Government has rejected our amendment which would have restricted the scope of this kind of lottery, so there is nothing to prevent it from going into all kinds of electronic gaming and distributing these things in our communities where they can corrupt our children. This can all be done with the nice red and white Liberal Party logo stamped in the corner—"officially on behalf of the Government of Canada".

I think that what the Minister is trying to put over in the House smells to high heaven, Mr. Speaker. I put a question in the House to the former Minister who had responsibility for Loto Select. That boondoggle had ordered $17,000 worth of foil-wrapped chocolate candies to be given away as a promotional gimmick. It had leased space in a building in Vancouver, hired a lot of people and entered into a contract with General Instruments of the United States, without going to tender, for 2,000 slot machines as part of the Loto Select initiative. At the end, the whole thing was written off at a cost of $37 million, including severance allowances and $10,000 compensation for over 50 employees.

This all happened under the aegis of that other great prominent Liberal, the former Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sports who came from Skeena and who now presents herself as President of the Liberal Party of Canada and perhaps future candidate for the leadership of that Party. In answer to the question I put to her in December, 1978 about the corruption, scandal and lack of control over the Loto Select boondoggle, she said that Canadian lottery winners are extremely intelligent in their investment in Loto Canada because they are able to maintain most of their dollars in their bank accounts.

Such stupidity, Mr. Speaker; such utter, unadulterated stupidity. This was the reply of a Minister of the Crown who was giving all her time to promoting Loto Canada. She was running around smiling, jumping over barricades and pretending to be a fitness freak when she should have been attending to Government business in some important economic portfolio. We are going around in that same old circle again, Mr. Speaker, with the present Minister who is not destined to sit long in this House. But he wants to go out in flames of glory and leave something that we will have to eliminate when we take office.

The former Minister said that Canadian lottery winners are extremely intelligent in their investment because they are able to maintain most of their dollars in their bank accounts. What about the losers, Mr. Speaker? The losers are the ten million who buy a ticket and do not win. What about the investment in their bank account? They are spending household money at the rate of $40 per capita. If we were to examine the weighting toward low-income Canadians, I wager that many of them would be spending $100 per capita. What about their bank accounts? Is it so intelligent for the Government to encourage them to spend money that should be spent on children's shoes and clothing, mortgage payments and all the things they need in times of tremendous economic difficulty? It smells of moral bankruptcy, Mr. Speaker.

It is quite clear that Members of this Party will vote against this measure. All the indications are that the revenues predicted cannot possibly be realized. If the Quebec hockey lottery is any example, the Government will be lucky to raise $10 million or $20 million, not the $80 million or $100 million that was predicted.

In conclusion, I should like to say that the people of Canada will remember this and demand some changes. Already they are demanding a return to family values and respect for all the things that government should do as an example to our children. I for one will do everything I can to eliminate the sports pool operation when it comes before the next Government of Canada.

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in the debate on third reading of Bill C-95. May I call it one o'clock before I start my remarks and continue after Question Period?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

NATIONAL UNITY

ALLEGED DECLARATION BY PREMIER RENÉ LÉVESQUE IN FRANCE

Mr. Raymond Savard (Verdun-Saint Paul): Madam Speaker, today, on behalf of all senior citizens groups in the riding of Verdum-Saint Paul, I wish to speak out against the statement made in France by Mr. René Lévesque. I think the Premier of Quebec must have been out of his mind to make such a shameful statement, in which he said that he would win the next referendum on Quebec's independence, because today's senior citizens would have disappeared and would no longer be able to vote against the proposal. Personally, I want to join the thousands of Quebecers who respect the senior citizens who built this beautiful country called Canada, and I find it incredible that this Premier does not even think twice about the disgraceful way he is treating these people, and keeps cutting the services to which they are entitled as he has been doing for several years. A number of senior citizens in my riding have expressed their displeasure with the Premier's statement, and I hope that all senior citizens associations in Quebec will see it as their duty to write to the Premier and let him know they will have the last word in the next provincial election.

WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

GREETINGS TO SIXTH ASSEMBLY

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, one of the most significant gatherings of this decade will take place in Canada from July 24 to August 10 when the Sixth Assembly of the World Council of Churches convenes at the University of British Columbia. Nine hundred and thirty delegates from 304 member churches around the world, representing 440 million people in over 90 countries, will be affirming "life", in a world that faces life-denying forces each day. The Assembly theme, "Jesus Christ: Life of the World", has been chosen to focus prayer and discussion on justice and peace, on threats to human survival, and on violations of human dignity.

All Members of the House of Commons will want to relay their warm greetings and prayers of success to the Assembly through the 25 Canadian voting delegates, who represent the following member churches: Anglican, Disciples, Lutheran, Greek Orthodox, Presbyterian, Assyrian Catholic, Quaker and United. Four Canadian Roman Catholics have been appointed by the Vatican as official observers. Also observing will be representatives of other major faiths: Jewish, Muslim, Hindu, Sikh and Buddhist. Joining the delegates will be 2,000 observers and staff. A 1,000-member international press corps, supported by live satellitle transmisssion, will interpret the Assembly's work to the global community. The welcome decision of the CBC to carry the proceedings live on the parliamentary channel will enable Canadians to share in this sixth global ecumenical assembly.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

MEASURES URGED TO OVERCOME JOB DISPLACEMENT

Mr. Peter Lang (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I rise on an issue of importance to all Canadians. We are all aware of the positive long-term effects of the technological revolution, particularly increased productivity and greater wealth generation. However, Madam Speaker, resistance to technological change is increasing, and will continue to increase if we do not dramatically increase our collective efforts to deal with the major negative outgrowth of the technological revolution, job displacement. For just as low inflation is a prerequisite for low interest rates and real economic growth, job security is a prerequisite for an economic environment which promotes a rapid adoption of technological advance as opposed to growing resistance.

Last week, in my riding of Kitchener, 300 workers from three textile factories, Forsythe, Arrow and Bill Klein Ltd., marched down Main Street with a message for me to take back to this House of Parliament. Their plea, Madam Speaker, was for job security.

Increased profit and production provide little solace to people who cannot look with any kind of security to their future. Promises of greater wealth and benefit cannot mitigate the fears of Canadians concerned for their jobs. We must realize that as output increases, the required manpower input does not necessarily increase—

Madam Speaker: Order.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

OBJECTION TO APPROVAL OF PROPANE TRANSFER STATION IN FLAMBOROUGH, ONT.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I want to draw to the attention of the House a matter which is not only of intense local concern in the Township of Flamborough, in my riding, but is an example of what can happen when powerful federal agencies make critical decisions affecting communities without listening to the people. Ottawa's National Energy Board has approved a big propane transfer station on a stretch of Highway 6 in Flamborough, without any input from the citizens whose safety and property values will be endangered.

There are three facts which have caused strenuous objection by my constituents to the Interprovincial Pipeline Limited plan to locate a propane transfer station at Harper's Corners. First, the stretch of Highway 6 being selected is known as "the killer highway" because of scores of traffic deaths due to freaky weather conditions. Second, some 45 school buses turn on and off Highway 6 each school day. Add to that the frightening fact that at least 60 propane tanker trucks will be wheeling on and off the same killer strip 24 hours a day at the proposed location which is approved by the NEB. Third, no written communication with residents in the area, prior to Interprovincial Pipeline's application being promptly approved by the National Energy Board, is anywhere on record that the Township of Flamborough, or I, can find.

Clearly, Madam Speaker, something has gone haywire with the required consultation process between Interprovincial Pipeline, the National Energy Board, and the people. The NEB says it is "very sensitive to the feelings of the communities concerned". Very well, let the Board prove it in this case.

STATUS OF WOMEN

GOVERNMENT'S AFFIRMATIVE ACTION PROGRAM

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, the mandatory affirmative action program which was announced by the Government this week is certainly better than nothing, but the victims of discrimination, intentional, systemic, or whatever, must be wondering why it took so long and whether it is enough. The largest group affected are women who have been under represented in the upper echelons, over-qualified and underpaid for years. How many people will actually benefit from the proposals, with economic restraint and hiring freezes?

[Translation]

The new program is a dream for public servants and a nightmare for activists. Let us note that the Government is not expected to do anything before the next election. Reference is made to guidelines and numerical objectives, but the latter have not been set. The action program will not even be implemented before 1985.

[English]

The inquiry into Crown corporations, the choice of the companies and of Judge Abella, are commendable, but why now only another study? The Royal Commission on the Status of Women back in 1970 recommended that Crown corporations establish means to institute their recommendations and otherwise improve the situation of women in employment. Finally, let us be clear that the proposals are only to move women up the corporate ladder, not to improve the situation of the large numbers of women not promoted. Contract compliance measures to extend equal pay for work of equal value into the private sector are still needed.

CANADA DAY

FLYING OF NATIONAL FLAG

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, in celebration of Canada's 116th birthday on July 1 of this year, I wish to encourage all Hon. Members of this House, and all Senators, to encourage their respective constituents to fly the Canadian flag during Canada Day celebrations on Friday, July 1, and during Canada Week. It is a time to emphasize the benefits of national unity, to encourage a greater understanding among Canadians, and to encourage pride in our country.

The allotment of 75 large Canadian flags, 400 table flags, and 3,000 Canadian flag lapel pins, which each Hon. Member receives annually, was never meant to be kept in drawers or offices. The Canadian flag, in whatever form, was meant to be flown or worn, particularly on Canada's birthday, and I again encourage all Hon. Members, Senators and their constituents, and indeed all citizens of this great country, to fly and wear these Canadian flags during the celebrations of Canada's birthday.

POLITICAL PARTIES

POLICIES PROPOSED BY WESTERN MEMBERS OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, being a son of Saskatchewan I have long watched with interest and fascination the activities of the CCF and the New Democratic Party. The steady decline in the support of the Party to my left in the polls, particularly in the West, has no doubt raised concerns about the political future of its members, their policy positions and leadership. Indeed, they have every right to be concerned when it is so clear that the hopes and aspirations of western Canadians are best represented by the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada.

Some of the prominent western members of the NDP issued a statement of principles, a new Regina Manifesto, which they want to see debated at the upcoming national convention in Regina. Former Premier Blakeney, and Mr. Notley of Alberta, seem to be concerned with the federal NDP's capacity to come down consistently on the wrong side of each issue.

Many people in the West had a good deal of respect for the CCF and its leadership. It appears, though, the western faction of the NDP feels the current policies and leadership of the Party will lead it into the political wilderness. It is because of my deep concern for the NDP, and my sadness at seeing a political movement disintegrate at this time in Canada's history, that I make this suggestion. Perhaps the Party's problem is its leadership. Perhaps the person who has been calling the shots should go. Perhaps Dennis McDermot of the CLC' the real leader of the NDP, must go.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CENTRAL AMERICA—UNITED STATES INFLUENCE ON LENDING POLICIES OF INTERNATIONAL FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, the Centre for International Policy, a U.S. research organization based in Washington, claims that the Reagan administration has basically succeeded in its campaign to make international financial institutions like the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank, and the Inter-American Development Bank, cut loans to Nicaragua but multiply aid to El Salvador and Guatemala. As an exemple, the Inter-American Development Bank is now considering building two bridges to span the Lempa River in El Salvador, both of which are of strategic importance to the army in the civil war which has lasted for over three and a half years.

The Washington institute states that, "in the last half of 1982, the United States was able to squeeze $205 million out of the international financial institutions for El Salvador, limit Nicaragua to $34 million, and brush aside vigorous congressional opposition to Guatemala." All this has been done even though the international lending institutions have non-political charters forbidding discrimination against member countries, and requiring that loans be decided on economic grounds alone. Actually, the U.S. support for an Inter-American Bank Loan to Guatemala is significant, because it was the last right wing country on which U.S. human rights voting policy was in effect. Now the law is being applied only against leftist dictatorships like South Yemen.

In light of this, I call upon the Government to take to heart the proposals of the Canadian Task Force on the Churches and Corporate Responsibility, a group representing the Roman Catholic Church and Protestant denominations, to oppose IMF loan applications from countries engaging in or condoning "consistent and gross violations" of human rights.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS—GRANTING OF EXIT VISAS TO PENTECOSTALISTS

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, on numerous occasions I have risen in this House to criticize the Soviet Government for their suppression of human rights of Soviet citizens, and in particular their steadfast refusal to grant exit visas to those wishing to leave the Soviet Union for religious and intellectual freedom or to be reunited with family members in the West.

Earlier this week the Soviet Union allowed five Pentecostal members of the Yashchenko family to emigrate. I have today sent a letter to Mr. Yuri Andropov to commend his Government on this action, and urging him to issue exit visas to other Soviet citizens wishing to leave for legitimate reasons. There are over 350,000 Pentecostal believers in Canada who welcome this good news about their fellow believers.

Soviet officials should know that if they wish to improve relations with Canada and our allies, and establish good will with Canadians, we need to see more action of this nature. Unfortunately, the Yashchenko family are the exception, not the rule. Thousands of Soviet Jews have been refused permission to leave. Hopefully, however, this is a sign of a reversal in Soviet policy, and I wish to commend Mr. Andropov on this decision and urge him to grant the same treatment to the thousands who are still waiting and hoping.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REGRET AT ABSENCE OF MOTIONS UNDER PROVISIONS OF STANDING ORDER 21

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I rise today to make a statement against statements. Since January, when we adopted new rules, I believe that there has been a great undercutting of Members of Parliament because we now cannot put motions which will cause action to be taken over the words we say in the House. I believe it is quite irrelevant whether we talk of the equality of women, native rights, or the release of Jews from the Soviet Union, if individual Members of Parliament cannot attach to their comments a motion requiring action. It was for that that our constituents sent us to Parliament. To give pretty speeches which have as much effect as if you had given them under a full moon, at midnight, at the bottom of Lake Superior, is no different than having a public speaking competition somewhere out in Boy Scout or 4-H Club country.

I simply say that the time honoured right of Members of Parliament to make a motion to cause action needs to be returned to this House, especially so in light of the fact that it is becoming increasingly difficult—and I understand the reasons why—for Members to make Private Member's Motions. For those reasons I simply urge my colleagues in the House, when this experiment is over, to take a strong look at the matter of statements and to remember that action is more important than words, because Parliament needs to be accountable.

THE ECONOMY

PRIME MINISTER'S TELEVISED STATEMENT—INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who spoke to the unreal world of television last night. Here we have to deal with reality, because he did not deal with it last night. Indeed, it was a cruel way to treat the two million unemployed Canadians when he said, "This is not a time of crisis. I speak of a time of rising hope."

How can the Prime Minister say that to the two million unemployed in this country? How can he say we have come a long way this year when, in actual fact, from last May until this May we have 265,000 more Canadians unemployed—87,000 women, 91,000 young people, and 92,000 heads of families? Where is the rising hope, where is the lack of crisis the Prime Minister spoke of on television last night?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I regret that the Hon. Member did not hear or watch the television program or, if he did, that he switched it off much too soon. I did point out quite clearly we could not talk of a recovery in the true sense when there were still a million and a half Canadians unemployed. I made that point very emphatically. That is why I enjoined Canadians to continue to keep inflation down. We all know that, if inflation is down, investment will proceed, and if investment proceeds, jobs will proceed. In fact that is sustained by empirical evidence. I gave the figures of the last four months when new employment was created at a record-breaking rate. That, Madam Speaker, is because the recovery is beginning to be in sight and investors are beginning to realize they can plan for a more prosperous future. That creates jobs and tends to reduce the number of unemployed.

It is not a very complicated message. Its essence, if I can simplify it for the benefit of the Hon. Member, is that we must continue to do as we have in the last year in keeping inflation down. That is the essence. I dare the Hon. Member to take issue with that statement and say that, on the contrary, we should let inflation go up again and somehow this would help the unemployed.

PURCHASING POWER OF CONSUMERS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I do take issue with that statement. How can the Prime Minister and his Government expect employment to continue to grow when, as the first quarter GNP figures show, the real purchasing power of Canadians continues to decline? It has in fact declined by 3.3 per cent, whereas in the U.S. it has increased by 2.7 per cent. Interestingly enough, unemployment in the U.S. will soon be below double digit, whereas we are told by the Minister of Finance to continue to expect double digit unemployment in this country until the end of the decade. How can we expect employment to grow in this country, how can the Prime Minister offer any hope to the unemployed in this country, when that is the reality we have to deal with in this place?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, first of all the Hon. Member is misquoting the Minister of Finance. Second of all, he asked how I can offer any hope. I think that is really a partisan question. We on this side of the House believe there is hope for Canada, those on the other side do not believe in hope. That is the whole difference between us, and I will never be able to convince them that this country does hold out hope for Canadians.

• (1420)

INCREASE IN LONG-TERM UNEMPLOYED

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I would like to take the Prime Minister's word. I would like to know where the hope is. What hope can I offer to the long-term unemployed of this country who have risen by 262,000 since last year? As of May we have 795,000 Canadians who are considered to be long-term unemployed, an increase of over 260,000 over last year. Real purchasing power continues to decline. Canadians will not continue to spend their savings. Where is the job growth the Minister talks about? Where is the hope he talks about? I ask the Prime Minister, now that he is in the House of Commons, to deal with reality.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member asks how consumers will continue to spend and have hope if this situation is as bleak as he said. He need only consider the statistics. Housing starts are up. Job creation is up. Consumer demand is up. Industrial production is up. Investment is up. Obviously—

Mr. Stewart: Gallup Polls are up.

Mr. Oberle: Your time is up.

Mr. Trudeau: Obviously, Madam Speaker, there is no time when everything is perfect anywhere.

Mr. Deans: Unemployment is up. Bank profits are up.

Mr. Trudeau: There are always some negative signs that one can see, and that is the reality of Government. There is no time that is perfect. However, there are two approaches to the present situation. One is to consider only the negative signs and to say we must therefore be ruined as a country, and the other is to balance the negative and the positive signs and see if things are more positive on the other side and, if so, legitimately to hold out hope for the people of this country. That is our approach as opposed to that of the other side.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: There will be hope if you leave.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Victoria.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, I am sorry. I forgot to mention—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry, but I recognized the Hon. Member for Victoria.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

FRIGATE PATROL CONSTRUCTION CONTRACT—KEEL LAYING DATE

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. First, I would like to compliment St. John Shipbuilding on the well deserved win of the frigate contract.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: The original program called for the first ship to be completed in 1985 and the sixth ship to be delivered in 1989. The Government has taken over three years to reduce the number of contestants for the contract from two to one. Now it is announced that it will be another two years before a keel is laid. Could the Minister tell the House if this long delay is due to cash flow problems within his Department?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I do not think that delay was due to cash flow. I expected the Hon. Member to congratulate not only St. John Shipbuilding and Drydock but also the Government for having taken this important decision.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lamontagne: Since the Hon. Member was Minister of National Defence I think there have been many important decisions taken by this Government concerning incorporation and modernization of our equipment in the Armed Forces. These decisions could perhaps have been taken by the former Minister much sooner, if a decision had been taken when he held that position.

Mr. Wilson: Three years ago. That's pretty weak.

Mr. Lamontagne: This question of modernizing our naval fleet is one of great concern to us. As I said this morning in my speech, this is the first batch of six frigates which will be in operation by the 1990s. That does not mean that over the course of the next few years we will not look again to a second batch, and perhaps a third batch, so that by the year 2000 we will be able to have a fleet which is fully modernized, well equipped and, at the same time, meets all our commitments to NATO. This is the aim of the Government in accordance with the financial resources that we will have at our disposal.

Mr. McKinnon: There must be a statute of limitations on when the Minister must quit blaming the preceding administration for things. In three years, he should have learned.

RATIO OF INDUSTRIAL BENEFITS ACCRUING TO WEST

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, the background information kit indicated that in the distribution of benefits from this program, the West will receive only 6.5 per cent of the industrial benefits. This follows a disappointing 9 per cent of the long range patrol aircraft benefits, with B.C. receiving 1 per cent of those benefits, and western Canada receiving 3.5 per cent of the benefits of the F-18. I would like to know if the Government considers this to be fair. Will it ever be fair to western Canada in the distribution of benefits from these major projects?

Mr. Deans: Of course not.

Mr. McKinnon: I would ask him to note that I have not even mentioned the $650 million refit for Tribal Class destroyers which seems to be going to Davie Shipyard without benefit of any competition.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman is quite right in saying that there will be $158 million for western Canada in terms of the contract itself. However, I would also point out that during the press conference this morning, recognizing that because there was no bid coming from western Canada and the Pacific shipyards, and that there had to be a distribution of shipbuilding benefits, we directed that the 1200 series icebreaker, which is worth more than $100 million, will be kept reserved for West Coast competition only.

Mr. Forrestall: What about Halifax?

Mr. Blais: As well, the hon. gentleman knows that there are two 1100 series icebreakers that will be directed to western shipyards, involving close to $100 million of additional work.

Within the very near future I will be announcing Department of Fisheries and Oceans vessels, one 69 metres and another 72 metres, that will be awarded to West Coast shipyards. As well, there is repair work that is going into the West Coast shipyards. Last month I announced the multiship refit which is valued at more than $50 million.

Madam Speaker, I know that you are becoming impatient and I will therefore stop reciting my list at this time.

THE ECONOMY

PRIME MINISTER'S TELEVISED STATEMENT—DECREASE IN INFLATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, to continue with the Prime Minister's litany of things that are up, I would remind him that shall business bankruptcies are up, personal bankruptcies are up, corporate bankruptcies are up, farm bankruptcies are up, ranch bankruptcies are up, youth unemployment is up, seniors having difficulty are up, the ire of most Canadians is up, and the index finger of most Canadians is now going up.

Mr. Dawson: The NDP is down.

Mr. Riis: My question is directed to the Prime Minister in response to his discussion on television last night.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, my father was a farmer on the Canadian Prairies in the 1930s.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Riis: His daily income was 50 cents a day because of the Depression, when he could buy a meal for 15 cents as a result of the Depression. In other words, the cost of living had decreased as a result of the depression-like conditions in Canada.

Did the Prime Minister not feel a wee bit like a phoney last night when he was taking credit for the decrease in inflation when, in fact, he knows full well that the de-escalation in wages and salaries has been a result of the recession-depression, and that the de-escalation in price increases has also been a result of the recession-depression-like conditions?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member must not have listened to the program, either. I did not take credit for any reduction in inflation. I said that the Canadian people should be congratulated for having, by an act of national will, brought inflation down.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I was asking myself how both Opposition Parties would greet the news yesterday that inflation had been cut by more than half in one year—

Mr. Stevens: It is still double the American level.

Mr. Trudeau: —when, last year, everything we heard from the other side of the House, and, indeed, much of the legitimate complaint of the country was that inflation was too high—

Mr. Stevens: So it was.

Mr. Trudeau: —and that interest rates were too high—

Mr. Stevens: So they were.

Mr. Trudeau: —and that they should be brought down—

Mr. Stevens: So they should.

Mr. Trudeau: —in order that jobs be created. I knew that they would find an answer. I did not know what it would be, but I knew it would be certain not to recognize that it was a good thing that inflation came down. They would find something else, and they did.

An Hon. Member: And not very well.

Mr. Trudeau: And not very well, as my colleague says. The fact is that inflation was cut in half. The fact is that a year ago the Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party were complaining about inflation being double digit and being too high. All of this has come down in the space of the year. I think the Canadian people can take credit for that, no matter what the opposition says.

• (1430)

Mr. Riis: I welcome that clarification. Just so that we all understand, the Prime Minister is saying that the six and five program of the Government had nothing to do with the de-escalation in inflation. I think that has been clarified, then.

REQUEST THAT MEETING OF FIRST MINISTERS BE CONVENED

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, it became clear from the Prime Minister's speech on television last night that the further actions of the Government will not be to create long term meaningful jobs, because of its obvious inability to do so, but to continue with more wage restraint. He indicated a call to the Finance Ministers to discuss the issue of continuous restraint.

Considering the fact that two million people are still left jobless, by his own admission last night, would the Prime Minister not consider it more appropriate to call a meeting of First Ministers to discuss the issue of how to get Canadians back to work, as opposed to discussing further ways of trying to restrain public servants?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the question is obviously rhetorical. If the Hon. Member is asking about what I said last night, the message was not essentially one of restraint but one of coming prosperity.

More importantly, the message was that if we wanted prosperity to continue coming we had to keep inflation down. That is the view of this side of the House. If the other side want to argue that that is not important, that we can shoot inflation up again and everything will be okay, let them take the responsibility for that policy. I would suggest that it is not the policy of the new Leader of the Conservative Party nor, hopefully, of the Leader or new leader of the New Democratic Party.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Once again, I challenge the New Democratic Party, as I challenge the Tory Party, to state that the fight against inflation is over to the point where we do not have to worry about it again and the Minister of Finance does not have to discuss that subject. Perhaps the Parties opposite feel that inflation has definitely been wrestled to the ground, but I am not sure that is true.

PLIGHT OF UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. He should know about wrestling inflation to the ground. He has been in the ring with it for 14 years.

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member is again commenting on the answer. Members must proceed right to their question.

Mr. Waddell: It is so tempting, Madam Speaker.

Would the Prime Minister not agree that the reality of the situation is that we have to deal with the unemployed? We have 1.5 million unemployed. For example, what do I tell my people in British Columbia today when the Prime Minister refuses to award a shipbuilding contract on a regional basis? There is no work for those yards out there. There is no work for a lot of other people in other industries.

Why does the Prime Minister not agree with what Premier Pawley said, and call a First Ministers' Conference on what everyone in the country is concerned about, which is not inflation but unemployment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member wants to know what he should tell his constituents. He could tell them to look at what I said last night. Sixty-eight thousand jobs were created in May, and these are seasonally adjusted. The absolute figures would be immensely higher than that. Another 68,000 were created in April, and more than half of these jobs went to young people. This is something he can tell them.

Instead, he could take the usual NDP negative view, of gloom and doom, by saying, "Well, inflation is cut in half but that ain't good enough. We should worry about something else."

I repeat that cutting inflation in half was stated by those Parties opposite last year as the essential precondition to bring interest rates down and create jobs. All I said last night was that this had happened. I never said that we had worked miracles. I said that it had happened. The real jobs to be created are ahead. That is why I said we are at a crossroads. We can throw it away if we want.

Mr. Fennell: Always in the future.

Mr. Trudeau: On this side we move one step at a time. We cannot do everything today for everybody at the same time.

SHIPBUILDING

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF $2.3 BILLION CONTRACT

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister of Supply and Services. I would like to ask whether the Minister could confirm the news about the contract award announced today, involving $2.3 billion, which will create a high-tech center to the Province of Quebec, as a result of transfer of technology from Paramax and Vickers Versatile.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Yes, Madam Speaker. There are two major factors here. As the Hon. Member is aware, the frigate has an arms system consisting of anti-submarine missiles and equipment, and Paramax, which is a branch of Sperry, will be responsible for integrating all these systems. This means that a staff of about 400 people will be located in Montreal. In addition, Vickers will be the main subcontractor for Saint John Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. Ltd., for the purposes of construction of three of the frigates at the Marine Industries shipyards. The company will also be based in Montreal, which means a transfer of some 140 employees to this metropolitan area.

INDUSTRY

MAISLIN TRANSPORT LTD.—INQUIRY RESPECTING APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTOR BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. He will know that concern still exists regarding the long term financial stability of Maislin. These concerns were further heightened by the recent closed door shareholders meeting held in Montreal.

A year ago the Government guaranteed a loan of $34 million to Maislin on the basis that the Government would be allowed to appoint a director to the board of directors in order to protect the taxpayers' interest. Is the Government going to appoint such a director, or not?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, we have not been able to find an individual with the expertise in that industry who is willing to sit and who does not have a potential conflict of interest sitting on the board of directors at this point in time.

Mr. Lewis: It is sort of like being appointed first mate of the Titanic.

PROTECTION OF TAXPAYERS' INTEREST

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, Maislin's losses over the past two years have totalled the amount of the loan. In fact in the first three months of this year the company lost over $4 million. Yet there has been no Government director appointed to protect the taxpayers' interest. In view of that failure, what steps has the Government taken to protect the taxpayers' interest with respect to the company's assets, especially the rolling stock, to make sure that it stays in Canada?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): First, Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that we are not shareholders of the Maislin Corporation. As I said on several occasions in the House—and the Hon. Member who is a chartered accountant knows the role of directors—the role of a director is to ensure that the company protects the interests of the shareholders of that company. The Government of Canada is not a shareholder of that company at this particular point in time.

AIR CANADA

SELECTION OF HEAD OFFICE LOCATION—PRIME MINISTER'S DISCUSSION WITH FORMER CLERK OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday the Minister of Transport said, as reported at page 26853 of Hansard:

—it would be normal for Mr. Pitfield in his former capacity to write to me or to other Ministers expressing his views or the views of the Prime Minister on matters of this kind.

Did the Prime Minister discuss with Mr. Pitfield the development of the McGill College Avenue area before Mr. Pitfield wrote to the Minister of Transport?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I did discuss with Mr. Pitfield the fact that Air Canada was thinking of building or purchasing new quarters in Montreal. I did indicate to Mr. Pitfield that I would want to make sure that that decision was not purely a corporate decision taken for the convenience of Air Canada but that the Minister of Transport was brought into this discussion so that the Government's input could be made known.

• (1440)

ROLE OF AIR CANADA CHAIRMAN

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the the Prime Minister. Can he tell the House that, in view of his concern, the Minister of Transport perhaps was not involved in some of these matters, and that his interest was stimulated by the Chairman of Air Canada, Mr. Amyot, in representations which the Chairman made to the Prime Minister or to Mr. Pitfield?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, my interest was essentially to make sure that Air Canada would make a decision which was good for the unemployment situation in Montreal—

Mr. Wilson: Come on, Pierre.

Mr. Trudeau: —that they would be looking, as the Government is, for hopes of an economic renewal in that city, and that any decision made by a major Crown corporation, like Air Canada, would be in some way compatible with such economic recovery.

INDUSTRY AND LABOUR ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

CRITERIA GOVERNING PROGRAM IN PORT ALBERNI, B.C.

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Last December the Government announced an Industry and Labour Adjustment Program to the tune of about $15 million for Port Alberni, which was experiencing 25 per cent unemployment. In the six months that program has been in place only 133 temporary jobs have been created, paying $175 a week. With regard to that program, which is basically set up to deal with central Canadian manufacturing industry, will the Minister review the criteria for the program so it would more aptly apply to a primary resource industry in Port Alberni, such as forestry, fishing and tourism, so that jobs can be created from the $15 million promised for the workers of Port Alberni?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member will be pleased to know that I have just received a report from members of my advisory council whom I had asked to do an examination of the labour adjustment programs that we have established. Mr. Emile Vallee, who is a member of the CLC and also a member of that council, visited Port Alberni, has just given me a report recommending certain changes. He pointed out that the difficulty with the program is that we tried to deliver it through the auspices of the local community where we brought together community leaders, municipal authorities, and officials. Under that program we are trying to work up a system where local people would be the primary sponsors of new programs. He has recommended it to me. I hope to be able to visit Port Alberni this summer to go over those recommendations presented by the advisory council. After those recommendations are implemented, I am sure the program will achieve the objectives we established for it.

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF QUALIFYING PERIOD

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, with regard to the Minister's answer, I might add that the established criterion for ILAP is a one-year period. In Port Alberni we still have 2,400 people on unemployment insurance, 2,000 people on social assistance, and 1,400 people who have only part-time work. Could I have some assurance from the Minister that the period for qualification for those funds can be extended past the one-year period, considering the utter failure of the program up to this point?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, if I might be permitted I would like to suggest to the Hon. Member that he examine very closely the kind of program proposals contained in the legislation that has just been passed by this House under the responsibility of my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion which do set out a number of special programs by which communities like Port Alberni can develop special assistance programs for industrial development. In the meantime, the labour adjustment part of ILAP will be continuing to provide for the ability of workers in communities such as Port Alberni, to maintain and develop new job alternatives, retraining programs and others.

It is with the new program, under the new industrial regional development system that has been established by the passage of the Bill, that I think we will be able to provide particularly effective targeting assistance for communities that have gone through the kind of difficulties that Port Alberni has experienced.

HEALTH

INQUIRY RESPECTING POSSIBLE BUDGETING RESTRICTIONS ON SERVICES FOR ELDERLY IN PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Considering the fact that the Minister's Department does a great deal for senior citizens and in view of the statement made in France by the Premier of Quebec, a statement that appeared in a magazine, Le nouvel observateur, and was broadcast on the Radio-Canada news, namely, that the next referendum would be won if more than 100,000 senior citizens were no longer with us, I should like to know whether the Minister of National Health and Welfare, in view of this sensational and disgraceful statement by the Premier of Quebec, could make some enquiries and provide statistics going back to 1980, to find out whether there have been budget cuts affecting staff and services in senior citizens' homes in Quebec.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, if I am not mistaken, the Hon. Member is actually directing his question to the Premier of Quebec and making him pay for his past sins, because of that unfortunate remark concerning 100,000 senior citizesn. These people who were already senior citizens three years ago would supposedly no longer be with us at the next referendum. Well, this means there will never be another referendum, since the Premier seems to have forgotten that the life expectancy of Quebecers at birth has increased steadily, and therefore these 100,000 senior citizens are going to haunt him for the rest of his days.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INCREASE IN STUDENT UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Last night the Prime Minister agonized about how to handle prosperity while millions of unemployed Canadians were agonizing about how to buy food and pay the rent. I would like to ask the Prime Minister about unemployed students.

In the Kingston area there are 1,500 more students unemployed this month than last month, 1,000 more than were unemployed last year. What is happening in Kingston happens in every community across the country. Student unemployment is up 30 per cent this year. Since the Prime Minister was able to commandeer the airwaves to talk about 6 per cent and 5 per cent, why did he not use some of that time to talk about the enormous increase, the 30 per cent increase, in student unemployment, and to put forward proposals to alleviate that grave situation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, last fall I remember the Opposition complaining bitterly that I had "commandeered the airwaves", to use the Hon. Member's phrase, for three nights in a row. Now she is suggesting that last night my statement was not long enough and that I should take to the airwaves another time in order to deal with another problem.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I obviously could not in 15 minutes cover everything that the Government is doing and will want to do, including creating jobs for young people. More than $1 billion this year is being spent in order to create jobs for young people. As I said last night, of 63,000 jobs created in May more than half of them are for young people, those under the age of 25. But I could not put everything in the same speech, Madam Speaker.

Mr. McGrath: How about making a speech in the House?

Mr. Trudeau: I will be happy to go to the CBC with the Hon. Member's suggestion that I have another couple of evenings so I can cover all these subjects too.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Had the Prime Minister utilized the television facilities of the House of Commons he would have been able to speak for much longer than that, and deal with some of the country's very critical issues.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: But obviously he wanted to ignore, and still wants to ignore—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I have again reminded Hon. Members today that they need not comment on answers but that they should simply ask a question. I would urge the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands to ask a question.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister about the 30 per cent increase in unemployment among young people. I am speaking about the students in this country who are without jobs, without unemployment insurance, without income, and who do not have the money to get back to school in the fall. The Prime Minister is jeopardizing their future. Does he consider that they are beneath the concern of the Government to deal with when he talks on national television, or will he put forward proposals that will meet this very grave situation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, how can the Hon. Member truthfully say that these young unemployed are "beneath" our concern, to quote her again.

Miss MacDonald: Don't you realize the increase?

An Hon. Member: Listen and learn.

Mr. Trudeau: We have budgeted more than $1 billion in order to create jobs for young people.

As to using the time of the House on television, the Hon. Member and her colleagues are giving the answer. There is no way in this House that you can give a message of hope and a positive message to Canadians without the group opposite—both groups opposite—trying to say how terrible things are and will continue to be in Canada. That is the reason. The people of Canada do not want to hear only negativism. That is why half the time spent in this House of Commons is wasted on the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is the democratic way, Pierre.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF CENTRAL NOVA BY-ELECTION DATE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On November 1, 1948, in order to accommodate the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, a riding was vacated; the Prime Minister directed the warrant be issued to the Chief Electoral Officer the same day; and the writ was issued the following day, November 2.

I provided the Acting Prime Minister yesterday with the Stanfield precedent in September, 1967, which saw the lapse of only one day between the vacancy and the calling of the election. In accordance with the practices and customs of this place, could he now announce the date of the by-election in Central Nova to accommodate the election of the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, Mr. Mulroney?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I attempted to deal with that question earlier this week when I indicated that I expected to bring the matter to Cabinet this week, or next. I will bring it to Cabinet tomorrow and, if a decision is made, I will make the announcement at the next sitting of this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: It is understandable to hear the howls of glee from the back benches of the Government Party; they really do not appreciate the practices and traditions of the House of Commons.

CITING OF PRECEDENTS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, when the Prime Minister is considering doing the proper thing, will he also have regard, in addition to the precedents I have already cited, to December 27, 1921, when the resignation of the Hon. Member for Grenville, Ontario caused a vacancy? Again the warrant was issued on the same day as the declaration of the vacancy, and the writ was also issued on the same day, December 27, 1921?

Perhaps, if he is not convinced by that precedent, he might have regard to the most recent one of July 2, 1981, when the then Hon. Member for Spadina, Mr. Stollery, was appointed to the Senate. On July 2 that seat was declared vacant; on July 2, the same day, the Prime Minister caused the warrant to be issued; and on July 3, the very next day, the writ calling the election was issued. Will the Prime Minister cease this game of chicken, abide by the practices established in this place, and announce the by-election today or, at the very latest, tomorrow?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I said from the outset that we hoped a chance would be given to the new Leader of the New Democratic Party to take a seat in this House—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are thinking of the wrong convention.

Mr. Nielsen: Don't anticipate.

Mr. Wilson: You know something we don't know?

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, those two Parties opposite are so united in their negativism that I confuse them sometimes. But I did say that we hoped an occasion would be given to the new Leader of the Conservative Party to contest a seat in this place very soon, and that is still my intention. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Yukon wants to hold me to a matter of days. I tell him that we began from opposite points of view in this matter. We on this side were rather happy with the present Leader of the Conservative Party; apparently he is anxious to ditch his job and go on to better things. We will try to accommodate him as soon as possible. I am sure everyone in the House will share his view that he should leave very soon.

PENITENTIARIES

UNIVERSITY COURSES FOR INMATES—STUDY INTO PAYMENT OF FEES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. He knows that we are very concerned to see post-secondary programs in Canadian penitentiaries being continued, programs which have been more successful than any other the Department has tried.

Would the Minister tell us the results of a study he commissioned by the Bureau of Management Consulting on the feasibility of charging fees to inmates of penitentiaries? Will he now admit that this is not a realistic option, that inmates will not go into debt to take courses, the value of which they cannot possibly appreciate until they have in fact been rehabilitated?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, as a matter of fact the Bureau of Management Consulting has not completed its work, but it has told me something which I guess would surprise the Hon. Member, that in a survey it did of inmates participating in the program in British Columbia, over 70 per cent said that they would be prepared to borrow a reasonable amount of money to permit those courses to be continued. I do not have the final results of that study, but I will make them public as soon as I do.

I have indicated—and I am glad to have the opportunity to repeat it in this place—that those courses will be continued in the meanwhile. I have instructed the Correctional Service of Canada to continue the university courses as it has in the past until a loan program could be worked out. I have more faith in the willingness of the inmates to participate in the program on the basis I suggested than does the Hon. Member.

Ms. McDonald: We have heard about hope; now we are hearing about faith.

REHABILITATIVE PROGRAMS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister would concede that of these same inmates, the majority of whom said would be willing to pay for programs, a majority said that they would not have been willing to pay at the time the course started; that this improvement in motivation only occurs after being in the program; and that in the study there was no canvassing of inmates who had not taken programs and who are, after all, the population we would like to see involved? Would the Minister comment on the whole principle of rehabilitation? We do have hope to offer, there are possibilities, but penitentiary inmates are not the same as university students outside. Would he not agree that we have to get them into programs—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I am very proud of the rehabilitative programs available in the Correctional Service of Canada. I believe that they bear favourable comparison with any programs in this country, in any provincial institution, or in any State of the United States.

Canadians invest a fortune in the rehabilitation of inmates in the correctional system of the country which is maintained within my Ministry. I do not think they take a second place to any. The university programs are good ones. We found a way to continue them. I do not see any reason why a person who has been convicted of an offence should be given a program which free Canadians outside institutions have to pay as much as they do in society now to receive. I do not think it is a bit unreasonable to ask inmates to put their credit, as do free students, behind their own university education.

EMPLOYMENT

YOUTH INTERNSHIP PROGRAM

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. He will know that in the April budget the Youth Internship Program was announced, but here we are several months later and we still do not have any program; in fact we do not have any details. When can we expect some kind of information on this program?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as I have explained several times in the House, the program is scheduled to start in September. The reason for the three-month interval was to put the program administration into place so that its implementation could be brought forward without any hitches or difficulties. Because the program in particular is aimed toward working with the private sector to provide an opportunity to help young people obtain employment and on the job experience, we want to ensure proper preparation. Rather than doing as the Hon. Member would suggest, running it in a hasty way, we are prepared to do it in a careful and cautious way to ensure that the program works.

Mr. Cooper: We seem to be having big announcements with big money, but no action. It is now three months later and nothing has happened.

MAKING OF ANNOUNCEMENTS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, the question remains that if we want to find out what programs will be announced, do we now check the CBC booking sheets?

• (1500)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would hope that because of the importance that this Government places upon the ability to provide employment programs for all Canadians, our public network, along with others, would pay proper attention to the important programs we are providing as a contribution to job creation in this country.

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions, with the exception of two, presented by Hon. Members on Tuesday, June 28, 1983, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form. The petition presented by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Leeds-Grenville (Mrs. Cossitt) do not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

FILING OF OBJECTION TO REPORT OF COMMISSION FOR PROVINCE OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Madam Speaker: I announced the other day that some objections filed for the Province of Newfoundland have been filed late. I suggested to the House that, if it were to give its unanimous consent, we would consider that they could be accepted. Does the House give its unanimous consent to the filing of the objections from the Province of Newfoundland?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: It is agreed and so ordered.

It is my duty to inform the House that objections signed by the Hon. Members for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey), Don Valley East (Mr. Smith), York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher), Scarborough West (Mr. Weatherhead), Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau), Burin-St. Georges (Mr. Simmons), Laurier (Mr. Berger), Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) and Sudbury (Mr. Frith) have been filed with me.

I also have objections filed with me by the Hon. Members for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), Regina East (Mr. de Jong), Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper), Kootenay-West (Mr. Kristiansen), The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish), Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), Spadina (Mr. Heap), Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) and Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller).

FILING OF OBJECTION TO REPORT OF COMMISSION FOR PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Madam Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that an objection signed by the Hon. Members for Terrebonne (Mr. Comtois), Joliette (Mr. La Salle), Labelle (Mr. Dupras), Dollard (Mr. Desmarais), La Prairie (Mr. Deniger), Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre), Chicoutimi (Mr. Dionne), Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), Lévis (Mr. Gourde) and Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), has been filed with the Chair pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, Chapter E-2, R.S.C., 1970, to the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Quebec.

If the House agrees, I would suggest we follow past practice and print the text of the objection as an appendix to this day's Votes and Proceedings. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

STATUS OF WOMEN

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT OF CANADIAN ADVISORY COUNCIL

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I wish to lay on the table a copy, in both official languages, of the annual report of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women.

[English]

At the same time, Madam Speaker, in conjunction with discussions that I have held with the members of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure recommending that all terms of reference under which parliamentary standing committees, special committees and sub-committees operate, address and provide for status of women considerations, I am tabling the research documents prepared by the Council as outlined in the Annual Report.

Hearings on the estimates have already given Members of this House an opportunity to examine the mandate and budget of the CACSW and members of several other House committees have had the benefit of the expert advice provided to their committees through Council members and their reports on such issues as prostitution, native women's rights and pensions.

It is my hope that the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs will take advantage of this reference to examine the Council's reports on reproductive hazards at work, better day care for Canadians, and the study of sex equality in Canadian sport, and their associated recommendations.

Likewise, the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration will now have the opportunity to examine the issues outlined in "A Working Majority: What Women Must do for Pay"—

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Minister is going far beyond what we can accept.

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF NOTICE

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 64(1), I wish to table in both official languages a notice of Ways and Means motion to apply the Customs and Excise jurisdiction of Canada to the continental shelf of Canada, and to amend certain Acts in relation thereto or in consequence thereof.

PETITIONS

MR. MITGES—ASSISTANCE FOR DRYDOCK AT COLLINGWOOD, ONT.

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 1,575 people in the Georgian Triangle area of Collingwood, Ontario, in the riding of Grey-Simcoe, who have expressed their desire for the construction of a 400-metre drydock at the Collingwood shipyard, assistance for which has been long promised by both the federal and Ontario Governments. They hope the two Governments will at long last get together to make this drydock a reality, not only for the construction of larger ships but as well to drastically increase ship repair facilities, with the additional jobs that will be created.

MR. PATTERSON—CODE OF ETHICS FOR PUBLIC BROADCASTING

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of my constituents in the riding of Fraser Valley East. The purpose of the petition, signed by members of the Clayburn Women's Institute in Clayburn, B.C., is to register their opposition to the adult erotic entertainment being planned by First Choice Pay-TV on the grounds that such programs are an assault on human dignity and a violation of generally accepted standards of decency. Permitting such telecasting results in the demeaning of women, in the degrading of man and the destruction in children of a wholesome and responsible attitude to the human sexual expression. They have included in their vigorous opposition Red Hot Video stores and similar establishments that are licensed sources of pornography.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to insist that public broadcasting be required to observe a code of ethics that will enhance the highest level of ethical and moral standards and that licensed public retail outlets will be required to promote the highest rather than the lowest levels of morality and human decency.

MR. MILLER—NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure and duty to present a petition on behalf of 222 grade nine students at John Barsby Secondary School. The undersigned humbly sheweth that they demand that Canada urge an international treaty to be signed promising never to be the first one to fire a nuclear weapon on another country; that Canada call for a nuclear free zone between all nations; that Canada never help develop nuclear weapons; and that Canada lead the way in turning the world into a nuclear free zone.

TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE ON CANADIAN SOIL

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I have the honour today to present a petition to the House signed by some 512 people mainly from the Battlefords area. The petition was originated by the Battlefords Association for Nuclear Disarmament.

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your Honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth that testing of the Cruise missile in Canada escalates the nuclear arms race and is therefore a serious threat to world peace.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to disallow the testing of the Cruise missile on any Canadian soil; and as in duty bound your petitioners ever pray.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I also have the duty and indeed the pleasure to present this petition signed by some 50 or 60 constituents of Regina East concerning the testing of the Cruise missile. The undersigned petitioners are now exercising their right to present their grievance that the proposed testing of the American Cruise missile at the Primrose Air Weapons Range sets a dangerous precedent jeopardizing both our Saskatchewan environment and the prospects of world peace.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to cancel immediately Cruise missile testing negotiations with the United States.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present another petition today which is similar to the first petition I presented but is from another area. It is from a group of residents who are concerned about nuclear disarmament and the Cruise missile in the area of Lloydminster. The undersigned residents of Canada, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your Honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth that testing of the Cruise missile in Canada escalates the nuclear arms race and is therefore a serious threat to world peace.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to disallow the testing of the Cruise missile on any Canadian soil; and as in duty bound your petitioners ever pray.

MR. MILLER—EXTENSION OF UIC BENEFITS

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, it is my duty and pleasure to present another petition today. This one is from unemployed workers in Port Alberni. The undersigned residents of Port Alberni in the Province of British Columbia do now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, and humbly sheweth that whereas massive lay-offs in the country are creating hundreds of thousands of unemployed workers; whereas these workers are unemployed through no fault of their own; and whereas the federal Government has failed to protect existing jobs; we the undersigned hereby demand that Unemployment Insurance benefits be extended to cover the full term of unemployment, and Unemployment Insurance benefits be increased to 90 per cent of insurable earnings.

MR. DE JONG—RETENTION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I have also received a petition signed by farmers and some ranchers who live in the Swift Current-Maple Creek area. They are concerned with the proposed changes to the statutory Crow rate. The undersigned residents of the Province of Saskatchewan do now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance to the House of Commons, and that grievance is, Madam Speaker, that the Crow rate is non-negotiable.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory Crow rate; and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING SPORTS FRANCHISES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, in the same way, I would like to ask for unanimous consent of the House to present my Bill.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn moved for leave to introduce Bill C-690, an Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act (sports franchises).

He said: Madam Speaker, I have the honour to introduce a Bill today that would amend the Combines Investigation Act. The House will recall that on May 19, 1983, upon my suggestion, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) instigated an investigation under the Combines Investigation Act of the refusal of the NHL board of governors to transfer the St. Louis Blues to Saskatoon. As a result, the Restricted Trade Practices Commission will hold a hearing on July 12, 1983.

I have had some concerns about the strength of the Combines Investigation Act and its application to the granting, transfer and operation of sport franchises. These subjects have been specifically excluded from the freedom of trade section in the Act. This Bill would correct that problem and thus would hopefully ensure that a professional sports league could not unreasonably restrict the transfer of a franchise, particularly when it is contrary to our national interests.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE RESPECTING TAXATION OF SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I have three motions about which discussions have taken place with the other Parties in the House and I believe there is unanimous consent to deal with these without debate.

The first relates to small business taxation. It is an order of reference.

Motions

Ordered—That the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs be empowered to review the taxation of small businesses and that the Committee be empowered for this purpose to engage the necessary expert staff to assist in its work.

That it be an instruction to the Committee that it appoint a subcommittee to consider the aforementioned matter and that the subcommittee and members of the subcommittee have the power to adjourn from place to place inside Canada for a period of two weeks and to travel outside Canada for a period of one week; and that this travel be only on days when the House is not sitting.

Motion agreed to.

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE RESPECTING STATUS OF FOREIGN BANK SUBSIDIARIES

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the next motion relates to the status of foreign bank subsidiaries and it is also an order of reference.

Ordered,—That the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs be empowered to review the report to Parliament dated May 31, 1983, prepared by the Inspector General of Banks and entitled "The Status of Foreign Bank Subsidiaries" and to include in its report the Committee's views as to whether or not conditions have changed sufficiently since the present Bank Act came into effect to warrant an increase in the eight per cent ceiling specified in subsection 302(7) of the Bank Act and, if appropriate, the extent of the increase proposed.

That the Committee be empowered for this purpose to engage the necessary expert staff to assist in its work.

Motion agreed to.

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE OF WAYS AND MEANS MOTIONS

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I also have a motion which relates to Ways and Means motions and is an order of reference.

Ordered—That the Ways and Means motion to amend the Income Tax Act and the Income Tax Application Rules, 1971, tabled in the House on April 19, 1983, be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and that the Committee shall report its findings not later than September 30, 1983; provided that, if the House is not sitting when the report has been completed, the report may be deposited with the Clerk of the House and shall thereupon be deemed to have been laid upon the Table.

SALES TAX IN PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

Question No. 4,749—Mr. Herbert:

1. In 1982, what was the amount of the tax expenditure in sales tax foregone in the publishing industry?

2. What percentage of publications sold in Canada are considered to be foreign?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Finance and Statistics Canada as follows:

1. Sales tax revenues foregone by the exemptions in the Excise Tax Act for newspapers, magazines, and books is in the range of $260 million per annum.

2. Information for the year 1982 is not yet available, however for the year 1981, in terms of dollar value, 73.7 per cent of all books sold in Canada were imports.

Order Paper Questions

YUKON ADVISORY COUNCIL

Question No. 4,834—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is there a Northern Pipeline Agency Yukon Advisory Council and, if so (a) who are the members (b) what is the (i) background or expertise (ii) term of appointment of each member (c) what remuneration, such as salary or travel expenses, do the members receive and, for the length of each appointment to date, what amount did each member receive (d) what other funding, if any, is provided by the government?

2. (a) What are the terms of reference of the Council (b) what matters did it consider in the fiscal year 1982-83 (c) how often did it meet and how often is it required to meet (d) what reports and/or recommendations did the Council publish in the fiscal year 1982-83?

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the Ministry of State for Economic Development is concerned:

1. The Yukon Advisory Council was established by the Governor in Council in February, 1979, and eight members were appointed for two year terms. In April, 1981, five of the original members were reappointed and two new members were appointed for two year terms. (a) Reappointments to the Council are proceeding at the present time. (b) (i) and (ii) see above. (c) Under its terms of reference, members of the Yukon Advisory Council shall be paid a fee of $125 per day for each day spent in attendance at meetings of the Council. The Chairman shall be paid $175 per day for each day spent in attendance; the Vice-Chairman shall be paid $150 per day. Members' travel expenses are also paid by the Agency. For the term of their respective appointments, previous members received the following remuneration, inclusive of travel, salary and incidental expenses:

DEFENCE INDUSTRY PRODUCTIVITY PROGRAM

Question No. 4,901—Mr. Sargeant:

Since the inception of the Defence Industry Productivity Program, which companies received assistance through the Program for the production of components for nuclear weapons systems and, in each case, how much assistance did the company receive and what components did it produce for which nuclear weapons system?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: one company, Litton Systems Canada Ltd.,

$48,868,123, to produce guidance system components for the Cruise missile.

DIAND—CONTRACT WITH RYAN C. GOOGOO

Question No. 4,915—Miss MacDonald:

1. For the fiscal years 1978-79 to 1982-83, what was the total amount of salaries, expenses and other remuneration paid under contract with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to Ryan C. Googoo, former Chief of the Whycocomagh Indian Reserve in Nova Scotia?

2. Is Mr. Googoo now working under contract for the Department and, if so (a) what are the terms of his present contract (b) what salary, expenses or other remuneration is he receiving under the terms of the contract?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development):

1. 1978-79: none.
1979-80: none.
1980-81: none.
1981-82: $805.
1982-83: none.

2. No. (a) and (b) Not applicable.

NAC—CLOAKROOM

Question No. 4,919—Mr. Herbert:

1. Was a cloakroom open at the National Arts Centre in Ottawa on the evening of May 6, 1983 and, if not, for what reason?

2. Is it intended that patrons carry or wear their coats to a performance?

3. Was the price of a ticket on this evening $17.50?

4. What is the approximate daily revenue from the cloakroom when it is open?

5. Did the management of the Arts Centre apply to the Department of Employment and Immigration for a grant to provide employment for students as cloakroom attendants?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): I am informed by the National Arts Centre as follows:

1. The cloakroom at the National Arts Centre was not open on the evening of May 6, 1983 due to a lack of public demand attributable to favourable weather conditions.

2. Patrons choose whether or not to carry coats to a performance during the fall and winter months and no complaints have been received during the summer months when cloakroom service is not provided.

3. Ticket prices ranged from $10 to $17.50.

4. The average daily revenue of $75, when the cloakroom is open, barely covers the cost of service, whereas, during the period May 1-8 the average revenue was $16 when the cloakroom was open four nights because of weather conditions.

5. No.

Order Paper Questions

CUSTOMS DUTY ON TRUCK REFRIGERATION UNITS

Question No. 4,945—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Was the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce notified of the opposition by Canadian truckers to the imposition of 12 per cent duty on importation of heavy duty reefer units?

2. Will the Minister instruct the Machinery and Equipment Advisory Board to be discretionary in granting Canadian truckers remission of duty on importation of such units and, if not, will the Minister conduct an investigation to determine the effect upon the Canadian truckers of the 12 per cent duty?

3. Is the Minister aware of concern expressed by Canadian truckers with regard to after-sales service on heavy duty reefer units and, if so, will the Minister instruct the Board to ensure reliable and easily accessible after-sales service on such units?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. Yes.

2. The Machinery and Equipment Advisory Board has examined carefully the capabilities of the new Canadian manufacturer of truck refrigeration units and is satisfied that it meets all requirements of the Machinery Program. The Board is monitoring the progress of the company in establishing itself in the marketplace. The trucking industry has been advised that quick action can be taken to re-establish duty remission, when appropriate, in the event that the Canadian manufacturer is not able to supply the demand placed upon it.

3. Yes. The Board is satisfied that the Canadian supplier has the capability to service these units. The company currently has service centres located in nine major cities across Canada.

LISTING OF CONSUL GENERAL IN BOSTON TELEPHONE DIRECTORY

Question No. 4,951—Mr. Stewart:

1. Was the Consul General for Canada listed in the Boston City Guide under "Visitors Information" as "Consulat General du Canada, 500 Boylston Street, 267-9330"?

2. Was the advertisement placed only in French in Boston, an English-speaking city, and, if so, for what reason was it not placed in English and French?

3. Who was responsible for placing the advertisement and under whose direction was it done?

4. What was the cost of placing the advertisement?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): It is correct that the Canadian Consultate General in Boston is listed in the Boston City Guide solely in the French language. However, the listing was done without any consultation with the Canadian Consultate General in Boston, and no payment was made by the Consulate General in connection with the listing. The listing was made solely by decision of the editor of the Boston City Guide who obtained the information from the French language listing of the Consultate General in the Boston Telephone Directory. (The Consultate General is listed in both English and French in the Boston Telephone Directory.) The Consultate General has advised the editor that its listing should be in both Canadian official languages and the editor has agreed that this will be done in future publications.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTES TO PAGES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order that I am sure will be accepted by all Members of the House. I think most of us anticipate that this will be the last day of this particular semester of this session.

During the course of this session we have been served by a number of young people in the House of Commons who have performed duties well beyond what was necessarily required of them. They have served us well and cheerfully. They have put up with us in those times when we were less than courteous. They have seen the House of Commons operate at its best and at its worst. I think it is fair to say that they have been a group of young people who have well represented other young people in Canada, both before the public who came to the House to view its operations and before the television public all across the country.

Therefore, Madam Speaker——on behalf of all the Members of this House, we should thank the pages for their good work.

[English]

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, on behalf of the Official Opposition, I should like to associate this Party with the remarks of the House Leader for the New Democratic Party. We thank the pages who are in the House and ask that they carry our thanks to their colleagues. We wish them the best of luck in their future endeavours.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I want to join in the sentiments expressed by the House Leaders of the two Opposition Parties. Not only have these young people provided us with friendly, courteous service in the House, but in doing so they have had a unique opportunity to add to their education and their understanding of the operation of the parliamentary system beyond that which many people in the country attain.

I join my colleagues who have already spoken in congratulating them on their efforts, wishing them well in the coming summer and in the continuation of their studies and eventual careers.

Madam Speaker: I was going to mention the devotion of the pages at the sitting tomorrow but I get the impression that perhaps this is the last sitting. Unfortunately, the Chair always seems to be the last to know what is going on! I do not begrudge that as I love these little surprises.

In the name of all Hon. Members I want to thank the pages for the service they have given to the House of Commons and to each of us individually. We are always happy to see the new pages come but we are also very sorry to see the others leave as we become attached to them. We know they are going on to bigger and better things and we accept that as a fact of life. We certainly wish them well in all of their new endeavours.

[Translation]

On behalf of all the Members of this House, I would like to thank the pages for the excellent work they have done for the House of Commons and its Members, and I hope that the time they spent with us will have been worthwhile. I must say that we have followed their initiation to political life with affection and interest. There is no doubt that working as a page in the House of Commons is an altogether exceptional introduction to political life, to Parliament and to the game of political strategy that is inherent to all Parliaments. I trust that they were edified by what they saw and heard, and I am sure that they learned a great deal and will share their knowledge of politics with their fellow students at the universities where they will be going now.

We wish them every success with their future plans, and we are sorry to see them go. We like our pages very much and all Members always have a very special feeling for the pages in the House. We wish them every success in their careers, and we hope to see them back often, since the pages have made a habit of coming back to Ottawa from time to time to work a few hours in the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ATHLETIC CONTESTS AND EVENTS POOLS ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE GOVERNMENT OPERATED POOL SYSTEMS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lumley (for Mr. Joyal) that Bill C-165, to provide for financial assistance for industrial development in all regions of Canada, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, we have moved from a worthy subject to an unworthy subject, that being Bill C-95, an Act to provide for the Government to operate pools systems on combinations of athletic contests and events and to amend the Criminal Code. This would mean it would not be illegal for the Government to run the numbers racket and to change the Income Tax Act so that people who win—and also people who lose—will not be in violation of that Act. That is one of the interesting things about the Income Tax Act; if you win money you do not pay tax but if you lose money you cannot write it off.

I want to sum up the discussions that have been going on regarding this disgraceful Act. The first thing it does is establish another Crown corporation. That in itself is a disgraceful act because the record of Crown corporations established by the Government has been less than sterling.

• (1530)

I must admit that every time I see this Government establishing a new Crown corporation, I can see a brand-new bureaucracy being developed; a brand-new area wherein it can appoint its friends, and take care of them; a brand-new area in which to raise taxes in a sneaky way. And that is exactly what this is; it is a sneaky way to raise taxes. It is a disgraceful act because it is using very worth-while projects to raise money, almost to the extent of blackmailing these various organizations into encouraging Hon. Members of Parliament to pass the Act so that in fact they can receive some of the returns from this numbers racket which this Government is going to set up.

Another reason why this is a disgraceful act is the whole question of morality. The federal Government is getting back into gambling. This time it will say that it is not a lottery. The Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan)—old "come fly with me"—tries to tell us that this is a game of skill, that people will have to sit down and think about that hockey game, baseball game, or whatever sport is involved. One must sit down and think very carefully about not only who is going to win that game, but what the exact score will be. The Minister says this is going to take a great deal of skill; therefore, this is not a lottery, it is not a numbers game, it is a skill game. I believe that kind of representation by the Minister is disgraceful.

The Minister also made some other statements. For example, on March 18, 1982, the day after my 42nd birthday, he made this outlandish statement: "It is important that funds become available soon so that the planning and preparation of facilities can begin". In other words, he was saying: "Look, if this lottery is not established, if this 'numbers racket' is not established, if we cannot get it underway, the XV Winter Olympics will not get underway". That in itself was extremely misleading. I must tell you, Mr. Speaker, that Bill C-95 is going to be a very unfortunate piece of legislation coming in these times. I believe we will all be sorry a year or two years down the road that this Bill was even brought into the House, let alone passed by the Liberal Government.

I would like to make some predictions. This corporation will turn into another Liberal patronage machine; there is no question about that. Canada's greatest athletic supporter sits there and shakes his head no, that is not true. He knows full well, however, that it will become another Liberal patronage machine, probably one of the greatest it has. It has started already. The Minister provided a list and it is obvious.

Dr. Martin O'Connell, a former Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister, a former Minister of Labour, just a couple of years after he was defeated—and rightfully so—was given $3,500 regarding the definition of financing and accounting systems, but Howard and Associates were also paid $297,000 to do the same thing. Who is being kidded?

Goldfarb and Associates, a very well-known Liberal organization, were given $16,000 for research. The Minister will not even come clean with the committee or the House. He will not tell us what the research report said. He tells us what his interpretation of the research report is, but he will not produce it. He will not let us see the type of research which the taxpayers' money paid for. He will not show it to us. So we do not know if he is telling the truth or if he is dreaming up his own figures on this great boondoggle which he is bringing to the Canadian people.

My second prediction is that it will be a Crown corporation which will spend money unwisely, just like Loto Canada, which wasted hundreds of thousands of dollars on things which it should not have. It will spend money like it is not its own. It will spend money like it was handed to it and it does not have to account for it. We, in our involvement in the report stage and in committee, suggested that each year this particular Crown corporation should be audited by the Auditor General. Oh, no! The Government said no; it did not give us a reason why. It just said no, that it will appoint its own accounting company to take care of the books. Well, the Government appointed its own accounting company to take care of the books of Canadair and we all know what came out of that.

Let me predict what this Crown corporation will not do. It will not reach the predictions, those outlandish predictions which the Minister of State for International Trade has made about the net income of this corporation. It is just not going to happen. The competition today is much stiffer in the lottery field. It is much easier to buy a lottery ticket for $1, $5 or $10 and not have to work at it than it will be to buy a ticket at whatever price is going to be put on it—that has not yet been established—and sit down and try to figure out who is going to win games. It is a game of skill, the Minister said. I can tell you right now, Mr. Speaker, that because of the competition in the lottery business today, his figures are completely wrong. The goals which have been set will never be reached.

In addition, for the Minister to say that this lottery must go through to support the XV Olympics in Calgary is really misleading this place. The reason I say that is because I do not believe it is going to make itself the $200 million by the year 1988, which has been committed to those volunteers, those people in Calgary who have spent such a great deal of their own time and money putting this excellent presentation together. I do not believe the Government is going to make it with this program. Not only that, it is going to have to add to it to make up that $200 million commitment. While that is going on, those activities which we are talking about, fitness and amateur sports, the arts and culture, and medical and health research, will not receive anything. They will be left out there to dry.

The Minister says that these are very worth-while projects, and I agree with him wholeheartedly, they are very worthwhile projects. There is no question about that. However, how can they do any type of planning, put any kind of program together, a one-year, two-year, three-year, four-year program, when they are relying on gambling money, when they are relying on income from a "numbers racket"? They will have no idea how much will be coming in. They will have no idea how much they are going to receive even on a percentage basis from the funding. They will have absolutely no idea if they will receive anything out of it or if the money will all be eaten up in prize money or if, in fact, it will go down the tube.

What is it costing to set this up? According to the Bill, it is costing $10 million, plus the Corporation is allowed to borrow $20 million. The Minister of Tourism and Recreation for Ontario estimates it will cost $90 million just to set up this particular game which the Government is proposing.

We are opposing this Bill, Mr. Speaker, for numerous reasons. I mentioned the morality of it. I mentioned the porkbarrel aspects of it, and it will be a dandy, you can bet your boots on that. It will be a real dandy. I can see the Ministers now standing there handing out the cheques. I can see the appointments to the boards. I can see the chauffeur-driven cars and another permanent suite like Loto Canada had at the hotels. I can see these kinds of things coming in again with another Crown corporation. I am predicting now that this whole program of getting into the "numbers racket" is going to be a complete and utter failure. It was ill-conceived from the start. It will continue to be a drain on the public purse and especially on the poor people of this country who we all know are the ones who support this type of activity.

I will close by saying we will vote against the creation of a new Crown corporation. We support the Olympics wholeheartedly, but we do not feel worth-while projects should be funded through gambling money and we abhor the immorality of the federal Government getting back into gambling once again, amending the Criminal Code to make it legal for the Government to gamble but not for anyone else. It is a complete shame and I feel very badly that I have to stand up and debate such a Bill. I am completely and unalterably opposed to it and will vote against it on third reading.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I rise to end the debate on the Government's intention to institutionalize gambling by means of a numbers pool, purportedly to help the Calgary Olympics. If it was meant to do that and that alone, the Bill would limit the exercise to the funding of the Calgary Olympics and stop there. Actually it is a Bill to institutionalize this system in the Canadian way of life.

We need to look at the signals this Bill is sending out. The fact is that the Government, in order to introduce this gaming practice in Canada, has to include in the legislation amendments to the Criminal Code. That ought to send a clear signal to all of us that something is drastically wrong with the entire proposition. Presumably this matter has been included in the Criminal Code for all these years because society has felt there is something wrong with the practice. It had to be illegal because it presumably creates hurt and damage to society. I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that making it legal does not make it right. While what was illegal now becomes legal; what was hurtful still remains hurtful.

We have to ask ourselves what is wrong with the entire proposition. First of all, gambling always depends for its success on the fact that most people who participate will lose. The whole system will fail if you have more winners than losers. Gambling is not going to be "a successful" business venture if there are more winners than losers. As other Members have pointed out, there is something morally wrong with government institutionalizing a system which requires more losers than winners. There is something morally wrong with a government which wants to profit on the backs of losers. This is reprehensible and diametrically opposed to the Canadian way of life and the Canadian code of morality.

It is wrong also because it violates patterns of human satisfaction. I think all of us will agree that man is inherently creative, that creativity is man's greatest instinct. I will not deny that all of us get a temporary kick out of a bonanza. We all enjoy a windfall. But that is something quite different from getting satisfaction.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if it is in our nature to be creative, then it seems to me that for us to be happy we have to have satisfaction rather than simply a kick. The only way we can do that is by satisfying our creative instinct, by unleashing our creativity. Therefore, man's greatest satisfaction comes from accomplishment, not from bonanzas. Inherent in this proposal is the attempt to enhance the desire within man to short-circuit the path to satisfaction. That is a disservice to the Canadian people and a denial of the human experience.

What we will end up with, Mr. Speaker, is the Government promoting illusions of instant wealth which will rob people of the inherent human satisfaction experienced when we create something with our own hands. We will have a population directed more and more towards the illusion of instant wealth, when of course the fact is that life is not that way. Most of the time we have to work for what we get. I point to the advertisements for Super-Loto. They show the symbols of wealth, obviously successful people lounging around the yacht club. The obviously wealthy people come in and sit at a table and one successful person says to the other: "Textiles? Shipbuilding?" The answer is: "No, Loto Can". You do not have to invest any more. You do not have to work any more. You do not have to develop your ingenuity any more. You do not have to take risks any more. Just buy a ticket to instant wealth, the leisure class and to acceptability.

We are building these illusions of instant success. We are saying to the unemployed that the way to get wealthy is to buy tickets. We used to say to the young people of Canada that if you will begin early and invest, you can build security. But we are now saying to people that if they will put aside a few bucks and buy a ticket on Loto Select, a sports pool or Loto Canada, they will have a chance of instant wealth. But we never give the odds. We never say it is a million to one, or, as a speaker pointed out yesterday, that you have more chance of being hit by lightning than of winning a large cash prize.

I remember years ago, Mr. Speaker, when I worked at Fraser Mills as a teenager, that I worked alongside a young man of my age at the time, 18 or 19 years old. He had been working at the mill for some years and when he was 19 years old he was building his third house. I imagine that by today he is probably quite successful, but my friends on the left will ask how he got so wealthy, he does not deserve all that money. Well, the fact is he started early and he saved and he worked. Through the system which the Government wants to introduce right now, it wants to undercut that kind of ethic, that kind of working for success. It wants instant solutions. The program is wrong because it builds an unhealthy world of fantasy and illusion.

• (1550)

Third, it is wrong because it overtaxes low income groups. We see the duplicity of the Government working out programs to help low income groups, whether through UIC, grants or any other program—the Government is always on a grant kick to help low income groups—and at the same time there is now a process by which it can take its money away from the low income groups, because as other Hon. Members have mentioned, statistics regularly show that the loto system is mostly supported by members of the lower income groups in our society.

I see the Minister sitting here, the one who is foisting this Bill on us. It is instructive to notice that one does not see Loto Canada kiosks in the lobbies of banks. One does not see them in the malls right in front of the banks. One does not see these kiosks in the glass tower, high-rise business buildings. Where does one see them? One sees them directly in front of or maybe even inside grocery stores or in the shopping malls. The focus is on impulse buying, not on investment. The focus is on a sense of immediate gratification rather than on building and planning one's future. These operations know very well, and the Government knows very well, that they will not do very well if kiosks are placed in banks or directly in front of banks, because people who go there are planning. They are not looking for instant gratification; they are looking for a return on investment. They are looking for work.

The fact that these kiosks are always situated where people are most vulnerable to impulse is pretty well an indication of where the success will lie. The immorality of the whole system lies in the fact that the Government wants to victimize the group that can least afford to be victimized. If the Government would sell the program to those who made $50,000 a year or more, then we would say: "Let those people take a risk". But right now, the Government is victimizing those who are in the low income groups.

We are now in the dying stages of this session. Perhaps the fact that the legislation comes at the end of this session is symbolic of the morality of the Government. This legislation is being foisted on us in this session's dying moments, and the country will pay in more ways than we care to know for the legislation that is now before us. That is why my Party is voting against it.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Mr. Speaker, I will only take a moment of the time of the House. I want to thank all Hon. Members who have participated in the debate. I regret that I am unable to agree with many of the views that they have expressed.

I want to remind Hon. Members of the House that many of the points and concerns that they have expressed are certainly worthy of careful examination and we have sought to do that. However, what we have before us here is not a question as to whether there will be sports pools and lotteries in Canada, but, rather, whether they will be run so that the benefits are available only to the provincial level of Government or whether there will be funds made available to federal Governments to meet their responsibilities that must be met from a non-tax source.

The Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) has just mentioned where kiosks are placed by Loto Canada. He perhaps does not realize that Loto Canada has not existed for the last four years as an operating entity out in shopping centres, and that the kiosks are all provincial Government lotteries that he sees located in those places.

It is unfortunate that Hon. Members in the debate seem to have been taking two standards. The New Democratic Party at the provincial level has been and is involved in operating lotteries, and the Conservative provincial Government of Ontario is indeed unduly aggressive in the way in which it operates a provincial lottery. Therefore, I do not think it is a question as to whether these will exist. I think that the legislators have decided that in the past on the basis of federal laws that make it possible for provincial operations to take place. Rather, what we have here is a question as to whether the national Government will be able to support occasions like the Calgary Olympics.

I came into this question because of my commitments to the Calgary Olympics. However, there will be other occasions that will be worthy of support beyond those. That is why it is not limited only to those reasons. My colleagues felt that we should make a provision that payments could be made to culture and to medical research as well as fitness and amateur sport. I want to assure Hon. Members that every effort will be made to carry on the sports pool in a tasteful manner, much like the British soccer pools.

I finally want to say that our statistics show that sports pools do not appeal to people of low income, but have an appeal to a very different clientele than those who use lotteries.

Once again, I thank all Hon. Members. I urge the House to vote for the support of this positive Bill which will enable the Government of Canada to support very worth-while causes to a greater degree.

Mr. Nickerson: Why don't you put slot machines on the JetStar, Gerry?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Before I put the question, may I point out to Hon. Members that there is a small procedural problem. There is a Standing Order of the House to the effect that the constitutional Bill relating to aboriginal rights should be commenced at four o'clock. It seems to be reasonable that if we now call in Members on the subject of this Bill, we would not want to call in the Members and then advise them at four o'clock that we must proceed with the aboriginal rights Bill. Therefore, I think I had better seek the view of the House.

Mr. Pinard: We will vote first?

Mr. Lewis: Vote first and then proceed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): If the House wishes to call in the Members, then we would proceed with the vote as soon as the whips appeared, but that the one and three-quarter hours allotted to the constitutional Bill would still remain available for that debate.

Mr. Pinard: We would like to vote first, and I think that if Your Honour seeks consent, provided we agree to a maximum of one hour and 45 minutes of debate on the resolution after the vote, you will find unanimous consent.

Mr. Lewis: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House has heard the proposition of the President of the Privy Council. It appears that there is agreement. Accordingly, is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lumley, for Mr. Joyal) which was agreed to on the following division:

AGRICULTURE

ACCEPTABILITY OF TENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Madam Speaker: The tenth report of the Standing Committee on Agriculture was tabled earlier today. I am afraid I must intervene and make a few observations on the content of that report and on a committee's function when considering Bills referred to it by the House.

On Wednesday, March 6, 1983, as Members of the House may recall, Bill C-653, an Act to amend the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, was given second reading and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture. In its tenth report tabled today, the Committee has made observations and substantive recommendations to the House. The Committee did not report back Bill C-653.

I want to remind Members of all committees considering Bills referred to them by the House of Citation 783 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition:

> There is no authority that a committee of the House, when considering a bill, should report anything to the House but the bill itself.

Speaker Lamoureux, who ruled on a similar procedural difficulty on December 20, 1973, stated the following:

> The situation is quite different when the committee has before it a general reference, such as an annual report of a department when there is greater latitude in the submitting of substantive recommendations to the House. With respect, I suggest to Hon. Members there is no authority to support the contention that a committee of the House when considering a bill should report anything to the House except the Bill itself.

Speaker Lamoureux in the same ruling went on to quote Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, Citation 304(2):

> A committee is bound by, and is not at liberty to depart from, the order of reference. In the case of a Select Committee upon a Bill, the Bill committed to it is itself the order of reference to the committee, who must report it with or without amendment to the House.

The Chair's principal concern in this case is that Bill C-653 is still before the Committee and that concurrently the Committee is attempting to place before the House questions related to that same Bill.

Hon. Members will agree with me that such recommendations and observations as contained in the tenth report of the Agriculture Committee would be highly irregular if they were proposed in the Committee of the Whole or at the report stage. There are other procedural avenues for the consideration of such substantive proposals, but this cannot be done by way of a report from any committee studying a Bill.

I have, therefore, no other option but to declare the tenth report of the Standing Committee on Agriculture out of order and consequently it cannot be received.

It being past 4 p.m., pursuant to Order made Thursday, June 23, 1983, the House will now proceed to consideration of Government Business, namely, motion No. 119 which is deemed to have been reported by the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT PROCLAMATION, 1983

MOTION TO AMEND CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

The House resumed from Monday, June 27, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacGuigan:

That:

Whereas the Constitution Act, 1982 provides that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and resolutions of the legislative assemblies as provided for in section 38 thereof;

And Whereas the Constitution of Canada, reflecting the country and Canadian society, continues to develop and strengthen the rights and freedoms that it guarantees;

And Whereas, after a gradual transition of Canada from colonial status to the status of an independent and sovereign state, Canadians have, as of April 17, 1982, full authority to amend their Constitution in Canada;

And Whereas historically and equitably it is fitting that the early exercise of that full authority should relate to the rights and freedoms of the first inhabitants of Canada, the aboriginal peoples;

Now Therefore the House of Commons resolves that His Excellency the Governor General be authorized to issue a proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada amending the Constitution of Canada as follows:

PROCLAMATION AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

1. Paragraph 25(b) of the Constitution Act, 1982 is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(b) any rights or freedoms that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired."

2. Section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 is amended by adding thereto the following subsections:

"(3) For greater certainty, in subsection (1) "treaty rights" includes rights that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired.

(4) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the aboriginal and treaty rights referred to in subsection (1) are guaranteed equally to male and female persons".

3. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 35 thereof, the following section:

"35.1 The government of Canada and the provincial governments are committed to the principle that, before any amendment is made to Class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867, to section 25 of this Act or to this Part,

(a) a constitutional conference that includes in its agenda an item relating to the proposed amendment, composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces, will be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada; and

(b) the Prime Minister of Canada will invite representatives of the aboriginal peoples of Canada to participate in the discussions on that item."

4. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 37 thereof, the following Part:

"PART IV.1 CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCES

37.1 (1) In addition to the conference convened in March 1983, at least two constitutional conferences composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada, the first within three years after April 17, 1982 and the second within five years after that date.

(2) Each conference convened under subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on those matters.

(3) The Prime Minister of Canada shall invite elected representatives of the governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories to participate in the discussions on any item on the agenda of a conference convened under subsection (1) that, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, directly affects the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed so as to derogate from subsection 35(1)."

5. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 54 thereof, the following section:

"54.1 Part IV.1 and this section are repealed on April 18, 1987.

6. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following section:

"61. A reference to the Constitution Acts, 1867 to 1982 shall be deemed to include a reference to the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983."

7. This Proclamation may be cited as the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, fellow Parliamentarians, the resolution before us today is the culmination of a dialogue that has been going on between the aboriginal people of Canada and political leaders since the Royal Proclamation of 1763. If that seems to overstate the significance of the resolution that calls primarily for a continuing dialogue between native leaders and First Ministers, I ask my colleagues to remember the nature of our historic relationship with Indian and Inuit people in Canada.

Before Confederation, Canadians were engaged in a purposeful search for indentity as founding members of a new order in an unfamiliar land. The preoccupations of the day involved war, survival, wilderness and disease. Challenges were met head-on and dealt with directly. All the while the promise of peace and plenty was like a powerful magnet drawing upper and lower Canadians into the twentieth century.

It was in this context and with strong momentum that Canadians faced and resolved the great issues of the day. When it came to creating a new dominion, linking its regions by rail or fashioning ties between cultures, Canadians did what I trust we will always do, the best we can do in our time.

In the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, aboriginal peoples and the new settlers tried to find some reasonable accommodation between their various needs and the contending forces. Native people were often displaced from one part of the country to another. Treaty arrangements were struck on an as needed, ad hoc basis; some of them before Confederation, the majority after.

Indian/non-Indian relations were characterized by a whole set of special, sometimes contradictory legal arrangements. It was a complex and difficult situation, some vestiges of which linger with us to this day. Yet out of that same process came certain provisions and protections for Indian people. Two hundred and twenty years later, contemporary Indian people still recite the recognition of their uniqueness in the Royal Proclamation of 1763 as a basis for new arrangements.

The Constitution Act of 1867 recognized a special relationship between Parliament and aboriginal people which they cherish to this day. Significantly this special relationship described in Section 91(24) of our first Constitution forms today an important element of the Accord signed at the close of the conference in March.

This open door to the federal Government is the basis for continuing discussions with my federal colleagues and myself in parallel with the ongoing constitutional process. Indian people have insisted on this form of insurance based on many decades of experience.

As I suggested earlier, the most fundamental arrangements we struck in the past, those which found expression in the Royal Proclamation and the Constitution Act as it was proclaimed in the last century, still serve us well in the present.

• (1640)

Once again, the future rests on Canadians doing the best they can in their time, only now, we all have more experience. In the 1980s there are still other priorities. We have explored the wilderness, we have built the railways and overcome most of the diseases that plagued the pioneers. The centuries have seen these challenges replaced by others.

But something happened as a result of the March Constitutional Conference that should inspire new hope. By establishing an ongoing process of three similar First Ministers' Conferences over the next four years, we have ensured that the concerns of the aboriginal people, Inuit and Indian, are at the top of the national agenda. That fact alone should make a world of difference to the way we proceed this time.

The focus for the special relationship has since 1867 been the Parliament of Canada. It has taken more than 100 years for the leaders of the aboriginal peoples and the elected leaders of Canada to sit down in one room together and talk openly face to face. In 115 years this has never happened. We have never responded in such a way to an agenda devised by native people. First Ministers and native leaders have never talked in a collective way across one table as common citizens of one country.

Those are but some of the reasons I feel this House must support the resolution that is before it in this debate. It is a momentous debate. When the Parliament of Canada and the provincial assemblies ratify this resolution under the Constitution, a new dialogue will begin. It will be one that is based on an attachment to this nation and all the people who live here. That is what the next three conferences will be about. With this resolution, we can begin to fashion a new sort of future.

The future will be based on how we Canadians, Inuit, Indian and non-Indian, perceive problems and possible resolutions. It begins with the Accord which ensures that native leaders will participate with the First Ministers in a constitutional conference before any amendments are made to those parts of the Constitution dealing exclusively with aboriginal peoples. This is not a formal consent clause but it gives aboriginal peoples a unique and permanent political say in constitutional change of special concern to them.

The Accord also gives past and future land claims settlements a new status and security by including them among the "treaty rights" recognized and affirmed in the Constitution. This should yield a greater incentive for early resolution of many of the outstanding land and related claims of aboriginal peoples. In addition, the Constitution will be amended to ensure that the aboriginal and treaty rights are affirmed equally for men and women.

Perhaps most important of all, we have established that negotiation on a national level is the way to decide on relationships and rights. This time discussions will be based on real negotiation, not just consultation; not mediation but a process of free and open discussion among parties, each of whom has something to offer and something to gain.

The Accord was signed because all the parties, including Quebec, even if that Province did not sign, found common ground. This happened because everyone said what they thought in a spirit of respect and with a genuine desire to understand and reach an accommodation. The Accord, then, represents not only agreement on certain specifics; it is a powerful symbol of a new mode of open negotiation between aboriginal peoples and Governments. Second, it has become a sketch of where we can expect future negotiations to take us.

One of those directions is the issue of aboriginal self-government. In his opening address at the First Ministers' Conference, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated that issues concerning aboriginal government are "the heart of the matter, the crux of our efforts to improve the conditions of aboriginal peoples". He also said that between the unacceptable extremes of assimilation or absolute sovereignty, there is a broad range of negotiable possibilities that could yield various forms of self-government.

I myself see this in my role as Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on a daily basis. Between the extremes, most native groups are struggling to hammer out a form of local control based on economic and cultural independence. I see this on the level of social services where in Manitoba, New Brunswick and Alberta band councils are assuming control of child welfare. In these Provinces bands will receive child welfare services equal to those offered to other citizens in their respective Provinces for the first time.

I see this on the level of economic development where band councils are coming forward now and saying that they want the means with which to become economically self-sufficient. They are saying that they want the means with which to reduce welfare rolls. This involves difficult new bilateral and tripartite negotiations. But the difference between the old and the new is clear. Indians are moving toward controlling their economic destinies instead of being controlled.

I see the struggle for control of individual destinies on the level of Indian policing and education. The strength and independence of the Indian and Inuit cultural movement is also reflected at the grass roots level. This resolution, by the way, acknowledges the cultural distinctiveness and diversity of Canada's aboriginal peoples. It demonstrates an awareness that aboriginal lifestyles, languages and customs must be protected.

The Constitution is the focus of Parliament's attention today, as well it should be for it is also the focus of Indian and Inuit aspirations throughout the country. Those aspirations depend on more than success at the constitutional table, important as that is. I have tried here to outline some of the dimensions of those aspirations that I see in my role as Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In the long run, if we continue to succeed it will mean a new type of Indian legislation rather than the Indian Act.

I do not propose to speculate here exactly how the Act will be changed, but if native communities in Canada are to move forward with new, effective powers to plan, initiate and deliver programs responsive to their needs, then some of the old relationships simply must change.

This is one dimension of the problem that constitutional conferences and native national organizations will have to struggle with in the near future. That will be a challenge every bit as difficult as the one we have just been through. I trust that the Special Committee on Indian Self-government will be a key resource in helping us arrive at some answers that will effect the kind of changes we will want to see happen in the near future. I trust this Committee, established in a climate of non-partisan agreement and with unprecedented latitude in its terms of reference, will be a major asset in our search for solutions.

Another important direction I can see negotiations taking in the future is the involvement of the Provinces and the Territorial Governments. The constitutional discussions introduce for the first time in a formal and fundamental way other Canadian leaders to the developing relations between aboriginal peoples and Government.

• (1650)

While the federal Government will always have a special relationship with Indian and Inuit people, it had become clear that the Provinces and Territories should join in the debate. Now they have. This is a key element in maintaining the momentum towards reforming the system that we presently have, for we are at a crucial period in the development of Canadian native communities. Never has the opportunity for innovative reform been so propitious. This is the message that I have been carrying to Indian and Inuit leaders in my capacity as Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. We have the spirit for constructive change coming from so many different directions—from native communities, from native national and regional organizations and from Parliament.

If you remember, Mr. Speaker, when I asked Parliament on August 4, 1982 to create the Special Committee on Indian Self-Government, there was all-Party agreement. This is not a phenomenon we see every day. I believe the same non-partisan spirit is here today. I believe we will find new, workable relationships between Canadian native people and the Canadian Government. The first step toward that new relationship is to ratify the Accord agreed upon at the First Ministers' Conference. I ask the House to do that today.

As evidence of the spirit of non-partisanship, I met today with my colleagues in the Official Opposition who are on the Indian Affairs Committee. Last night I met with Members of the New Democratic Party who are very much concerned with aboriginal affairs. This is evidence of a new spirit of non-partisanship designed to achieve the aspirations of the aboriginal people in Canada.

We are on the threshold of a new opportunity to act like Canadians in the face of yet another challenge—that is, to do the best we can for our time. We have experience, we have commitment, we have a workable process, and we have for once accorded aboriginal peoples the priority required to make a real difference to their circumstances. Opportunities like the one before us today arise only occasionally in the lives of men and women. Let us join together to make the best of it.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I listened with care to the words of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro). The other day when the resolution first came to the House, as I am sure he will have read in Hansard, there was very warm support for the changes to our Constitution through this resolution. This support was voiced particularly by the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) and the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). That indicated the degree of support the Progressive Conservative Party has given to the measures before the House in this resolution. The changes, though limited in scope, are welcome.

I have a particular interest in this subject. When I first came to the House of Commons in 1972, I was appointed this Party's critic for Indian affairs and northern development. It was in that position of responsibility that I had the privilege on April 11, 1973, of raising the matter of aboriginal debate in this House. I just want to read a few comments that I made at that time. They say something about the approach of people in this House to the vast question of aboriginal rights. At page 3207 of Hansard for April 11, 1973, these words are recorded:

> The subject we are discussing today deals with the concept of aboriginal title. Today, Mr. Speaker, is the first time this vital matter has been debated in the House; the first time in over 100 years that it has received the attention and consideration of the House as a whole. Why is this? Is it because it was not considered of significance and importance in our earlier history? No, indeed. It is because this is the first time a government has failed to recognize the concept of aboriginal rights and has rejected the concept outright.
> Previous governments may have failed to fulfil their obligations to the hundreds of thousands of Indian people, but they never questioned the principle. Not until 1969, following the introduction of the government's white paper on Indian policy when the minister stated that aboriginal claims to land were not realistic, was a Prime Minister of this country to say of this question, and I quote the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau): Our answer, it may not be the right one and may not be the one which is accepted . . . our answer is no.

That was what triggered the debate at that time. There was a rejection of the concept of aboriginal title. We have come a long way since that day. We have come a long way since that debate and much has been accomplished. The perseverance and determination which has been characteristic of the native peoples of this country throughout their history have once again proven to be the major instrument in bringing about much needed reform. Nowhere was that more evident than in the Conference of First Ministers and native leaders which took place in March this year. The country was able to see how our native people conducted themselves in negotiations of such a critical nature.

As others have said, this is only a beginning; much remains to be done. I hope the conferences in the years ahead which are being provided for in this resolution will fulfil the expectations of our native peoples which have been there since time immemorial.

There is one aspect of this resolution which is of particular importance to me. Section 2, subsection (4) reads as follows:

Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the aboriginal and treaty rights referred to in subsection (1) are guaranteed equally to male and female persons.

That is a big step forward. Some of us in the House have been fighting for the removal of Section 12(1)(b) from the Indian Act for a good many years. It calls for the discriminatory aspect that when a woman of Indian status or Indian background marries a non-Indian, she immediately loses her Indian status and so do any children of that marriage. I have a Private Member's Bill in the House of Commons at the present time which would bring about the complete removal of Section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act. The former Government headed by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) undertook to do away with that discriminatory section. I presume that once this amendment to the Constitution is enacted, those who now claim Indian, Métis or Inuit status will be treated equally, whether male or female. That is, those people presently covered by the status of Indian, Métis or Inuit.

I have a concern which does not seem to be addressed in the discussions that have been going on and certainly it was not addressed by the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) or by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in this debate. It has not been included in any resolution or legislation to date. It is that those who suffered loss of status in the past, as a result of the discriminatory sections of the Indian Act, are still without status. They are outside the pale. They are still non-people as far as the Indian Act is concerned. They are not entitled to claim their share of aboriginal title. They are not entitled to take their place as Indians in an Indian society, either for themselves or for their children. There are many, many people in this category in Canada today. The names of some of those who have lost their Indian status are almost household words, Sir. Jeanette Lavell took her case all the way through to the Supreme Court of Canada and was still denied justice. Sandra Lovelace of the Tobique Reserve in New Brunswick lost her Indian status in 1970 when she married a non-Indian. Since she knew that the Supreme Court would probably treat her case and render a judgment on her fate in the same way that it had decided upon the fate of Jeanette Lavell, she took another route to try to seek justice. She went to the Human Rights Commission of the United Nations. She appealed to it in saying that her human rights had been denied. Her case is upheld.

In September, 1981, the Human Rights Commission of the United Nations told Canada that it should clean up its act. Indeed, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) promised at that time that that would be done within a year.

Another case which is very well known is that of Mary Two-Axe Early. A number of us have had occasion to speak to Mary, have listened to her case, have seen her battle over the years for the rights of those women who are denied Indian status. She is a person who has battled long and diligently, not just for her own rights, but for those of all Indian women and children who are denied their rightful status as Indians. Mary told me in one conversation which I had with her some time ago, "It is easier for a dog to be buried on the Caughnawaga Reserve, my Reserve, than it is for me, a full-blooded Indian, who has been stripped of my rights." She is denied burial there. A dog is not.

Those are three cases: Jeanette Lavell, Sandra Lovelace and Mary Two-Axe Early. Their cases are known far and wide and they have been cited often. However, if you look at the number of cases elsewhere in the country, Mr. Speaker, you would find, going back in the records, that it is estimated that since 1920 a total of approximately 15,000 women have lost their status following marriage to a non-Indian. That is an estimate. Since 1965, the Indian Registry has recorded the number of women who have lost their status as a result of marriage to a non-Indian, and I have those figures. I believe in fact they have been produced by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The number of women who have lost their status as a result of Section 12(1)(b) "marriage to a non-Indian", since 1965, comes to approximately 8,000. The estimated number of children born to Indian women who lost their status because of marrying non-Indian men is, according to the figures I have before me, 37,700.

There are other women and children who have lost their Indian status not because of Section 12(1)(b) "marriage to a non-Indian", but because the Indian husband and father in each case voluntarily chose to give up his Indian status. As a result, the mother and the children automatically lost their status as well. These injustices are permitted to continue in our society. They are permitted to continue today and we hear nothing about rectifying them in the future. Until they are corrected, we cannot say that the Canadian Charter of Rights is being honoured either in spirit or in practice.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, when he was speaking, made reference to the Subcommittee on Indian Self-Government which had been established, and the very fine work which had been done by that subcommittee. He neglected to mention that there was another subcommittee which also had been in operation at the same time, and which had done equally fine work. That was the Subcommitee on Indian Woman and the Indian Act. That subcommittee unanimously made four recommendations, four themes, in their report. They recommended, first, the removal of all discriminatory provisions in the Indian Act, but not so as to remove Indian status from those who gained it on marriage; second, the reinstatement of all Indian women who lost their status on marriage, and their first-generation children. That is a very critical and key recommendation, a unanimous recommendation, of that all-Party subcommittee, to reinstate Indian women who lost their status on marriage and their first-generation children. Third, they recommended that there be no future gain or loss of Indian status, or loss of rights such as band membership on marriage; and fourth, Band control of membership.

I make mention of that report, Mr. Speaker, because it is critical that the Government respond to the report of that subcommittee. That is surely the action which should now ensue from the subcommittee report. Back on July 7, 1980, in response to a question which I raised in the House of Commons directed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), he said that he hoped that this matter, that is, the loss of status which had already taken place, would be rectified within one or two years at the most. That one or two years has now passed, and nothing has been done for the women and the children whose rights lie outside the scope of today's resolution.

As we know, there is no retroactivity to the resolution before us. In November, 1981, the Minister responsible for the Status of Women said that she hoped that the necessary steps to redress the situation would take no more than a year to pass. That year has come and gone. Still no action has been taken to deal with the plight of Sandra Lovelace, Mary Two-Axe Early or Jeanette Lavel, or the thousands of other women in circumstances similar to theirs. The Government will be compelled to address this problem once Section 15 of the Charter of Rights becomes fully operative in 1985. However, why not show its good intentions now by taking immediate action rather than risk being dragged into the courts, kicking and screaming, when that three-year grace period elapses?

I know, Mr. Speaker, there will always be argument, and I know there will be reluctance on the part of some to face up to this matter squarely. However, the problem, Sir, is not going to go away and it is not going to become any less acute just because it is being ignored. In passing this resolution, Mr. Speaker, let us resolve that the unfinished business of those individuals who continue to be denied their rightful place, their rightful Indian status, is dealt with and dealt with justly and fairly once and for all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Questions, comments? Debate.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak for my Party with regard to the motion which is before us to amend the Canadian Constitution. As the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) said on Monday when the motion was introduced, our Party supports the Accord, but we have many concerns about it. When we look at the Accord we see it as a minimal achievement. However, it is an achievement and, therefore, we are supporting it.

• (1710)

In the few minutes I have this afternoon I would like to address the substance of the Accord and then look at the process for future debate. There are several minor improvements which tidy up the language concerning treaty rights and agreements. As the Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald) has mentioned, there is the clause guaranteeing aboriginal rights equally to males and females. That clause is extremely important to all Members of our Party because all of us are very much aware of the pain and suffering caused by the discriminatory sections of the Indian Act, in particular Section 12(1)(b).

That can be looked at in several ways. First there are those women who lost their status because they married a non-Indian. Then there are their children. There are those women who might have wished to marry a non-Indian person but because they did not wish to lose their status, they gave up the relationship and suffered thereby. There are those women who do not want to give up a relationship and lose their status so they live common law, and they continue to suffer along with their children from whatever social stigma still attaches to that situation. So we see that Indian women have suffered in countless ways.

In addition, Indian women, families and communities have suffered from the division this Section has brought. We believe it is important to recognize that the major source of this discrimination has been non-Indian legislation imposed on the Indian people without consent. Indeed, in many cases it was against their expressed opposition.

The Indian Act reflects a patriarchal, Victorian attitude in both its colonialist assumptions and its racist and sexist assumptions. It is interesting that in the testimony presented before the special joint committee of 1946, 1947 and 1948 which was looking at the revision of the Indian Act, representatives of the Department indicated that one of the reasons for this kind of provision was that they wanted to reduce the number of Indian people. That would lower the federal Government's financial responsibility to them. You can compare Section 12(1)(b) with some of the earlier Sections of the Indian Act which automatically disenfranchised any Indian person who went to university or became a lawyer or clergyman. The whole attitude of the Government was to get as many people away from Indian status as possible, because it was regarded as an inferior status, which Indian people themselves rejected, but mainly because of the financial implications.

Today, as never before, Indian people are asserting the importance of their status and they want it maintained. Indian women have the right to maintain their status regardless of their marital status, and I would urge the Minister to bring in legislation as soon as possible to deal with the recommendations brought out in the subcommittee's report on Indian women in the Indian Act. When the Minister appeared before the second subcommittee in December he promised he would bring in that legislation with considerable haste. Seven months have gone by since then and we still have not seen the legislation. I remind the Minister, the Government and the House that it is important that this legislation be tabled so that Indian leaders and groups as well as Members of Parliament can study it and make respresentations. It is a very complex subject, it is not going to be dealt with on a Friday afternoon by all Party agreement, so it is important to do it right when we do it.

I regret that some misunderstandings surrounding the equality clause when it was introduced have arisen. Many of the groups representing the aboriginal people thought the wording in the final Accord was not the wording to which they originally agreed. It is important to note the basis for this understanding is Section 35(1), which talks about existing aboriginal and treaty rights. It is that word "existing" which limits the equality clause, just as it limits the whole application of aboriginal and treaty rights. It is the word "existing" which causes Indian, Inuit and Métis people to feel very uneasy about the real intentions of this Government.

A third issue dealt with in this Accord involves an invitation to the aboriginal people to a constitutional conference to discuss any proposed amendment which would affect their aboriginal and treaty rights. This is a first and welcome step but it is a long way from proper provision for the aboriginal people to enable them to defend their rights against any attempted tampering by the federal and provincial Governments. It is important to recognize that we have in our Constitution Section 43 which protects the rights of the Provinces. An individual Province affected by constitutional change has the right to veto the change. If an aboriginal right exists and our Constitution says that it does, well, then it has to be basic to our Constitution. It should not be subject to the whim or even the determined policy of the federal and provincial Governments even if they all act in concert. If aboriginal rights exist, and we believe they do, then the aboriginal people should have the final say about those rights, and it is for that reason, Mr. Speaker, that our Party strongly supports the idea of a consent clause.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, as to substance, there is provision for an ongoing process through a series of First Ministers' Conferences which will continue to work at the agenda set before the First Ministers by the aboriginal peoples. These ongoing conferences are necessary. Indeed, this is one of the major reasons why our Party is supporting the Accord. Most of the agenda items which the Indian, Inuit and Métis people laid on the table last year continue to be outstanding. No progress has really been made in defining the rights of Indian people with respect to aboriginal title or treaty rights or Indian Government. Their hunting and fishing rights continue to be under threat from provincial Governments and courts. So it is essential that we begin to make progress toward a further definition, clarification and entrenchment of these peoples' rights.

In connection with the future conferences, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few suggestions regarding process. These suggestions come out of the hearings the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development held with respect to this motion when the different aboriginal groups appeared before us. First of all, I think it is important to recognize the need for a bilateral process. Indian people have always been very proud of the fact that their relationship is with the federal Government, not with the Provinces. This is enshrined in Section 91(24) of our Constitution. To involve the Provinces has, in fact, been a divisive factor. It can be pointed out that there are some 70,000 Indian people who were not represented at the First Minister's Conference in March. They were not represented because they did not want to appear at a forum in which there was provincial involvement. They felt that their relationship was with the federal Government and they want that basic relationship to continue.

• (1720)

We are dealing with a situation, whether we like it or not and whether the Indian people like it or not, in which the provincial Governments are involved. However, the suggestion has been made that there should be a series of bilateral meetings between the federal Government and the Indian people to draft some very clear proposals. Once basic agreement has been reached between the federal Government and the Indian people, then the federal Government can take it to the Provinces and to the First Ministers' Conferences for ratification. However, I think it is important, if we want to see progress on these agenda items, that there be a move toward a bilateral process. In conjunction with that thought, it is important that we recognize that Indian people, Metis people and Inuit people are all separate peoples. They have separate concerns and needs. They have separate agendas that they want to see addressed at these First Ministers' Conferences. Therefore, it is important that in the preliminary discussions there be separate tracks for each of these peoples instead of trying to bring them all together and persuading them to compromise and agree to some common agenda which, very often, leaves out some items of importance.

I regret that the Government has not moved more in recognition of the role of the Native Women's Association of Canada so that it can have some direct input at the First Ministers' Conference instead of requiring it to deal through the other national organizations.

It is important that Indian political leaders, in preparation for future conferences, be able to deal at the political level and not be relegated to dealing with bureaucrats, because what we are dealing with here is policy, and it is important that politicians who are able to speak for the Government be involved in making decisions and reaching basic agreements with the aboriginal peoples' politicians.

With regard to process, it must be increasingly recognized that there is a very complicated process, that there are numerous stages of discussions and reporting back to parent bodies and to constituencies. If the aboriginal peoples' organizations are to be enabled to do a proper job, they will have to receive adequate funding, more than just enough to come to a First Ministers' Conference once a year. They will have to have the kind of funding that enables them to report back to their own constituencies and allows for the kind of consultative process throughout their own constituencies that is so necessary.

At some of the preliminary meetings that were held last year, it seemed as though the federal Government was mainly interest in smoking out the position of the aboriginal groups that were there. It is important that the federal Government declare its position in some detail so that these people will know what they are up against. There must be a two-way process of laying cards on the table so that people know what is involved. The federal Government expects the aboriginal groups to be up front with their positions. It is only legitimate that they should be able to expect the federal Government to do the same.

Finally, we have taken, in the accord, a small first step, but we have a long way to go. We support that first step, but we urge the Government to get on with the long journey toward proper recognition of aboriginal rights.

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT PROCLAMATION, 1983

MOTION TO AMEND CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

The House resumed debate on the motion of Mr. MacGuigan:

That:

Whereas the Constitution Act, 1982 provides that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and resolutions of the legislative assemblies as provided for in section 38 thereof;

And Whereas the Constitution of Canada, reflecting the country and Canadian society, continues to develop and strengthen the rights and freedoms that it guarantees;

And Whereas, after a gradual transition of Canada from colonial status to the status of an independent and sovereign state, Canadians have, as of April 17, 1982, full authority to amend their Constitution in Canada;

And Whereas historically and equitably it is fitting that the early exercise of that full authority should relate to the rights and freedoms of the first inhabitants of Canada, the aboriginal peoples;

Now Therefore the House of Commons resolves that His Excellency the Governor General be authorized to issue a proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada amending the Constitution of Canada as follows:

PROCLAMATION AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

1. Paragraph 25(b) of the Constitution Act, 1982 is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(b) any rights or freedoms that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired."

2. Section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 is amended by adding thereto the following subsections:

"(3) For greater certainty, in subsection (1) "treaty rights" includes rights that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired.

(4) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the aboriginal and treaty rights referred to in subsection (1) are guaranteed equally to male and female persons".

3. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 35 thereof, the following section:

"35.1 The government of Canada and the provincial governments are committed to the principle that, before any amendment is made to Class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution Act 1867, to section 25 of this Act or to this Part,

(a) a constitutional conference that includes in its agenda an item relating to the proposed amendment, composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces, will be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada; and

(b) the Prime Minister of Canada will invite representatives of the aboriginal peoples of Canada to participate in the discussions on that item."

4. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 37 thereof, the following Part:

"PART IV.1 CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCES

37.1 (1) In addition to the conference convened in March 1983, at least two constitutional conferences composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada, the first within three years after April 17, 1982 and the second within five years after that date.

(2) Each conference convened under subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on those matters.

(3) The Prime Minister of Canada shall invite elected representatives of the governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories to participate in the discussions on any item on the agenda of a conference convened under subsection (1) that, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, directly affects the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed so as to derogate from subsection 35(1)."

5. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 54 thereof, the following section:

"54.1 Part IV.1 and this section are repealed on April 18, 1987.

6. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following section:

"61. A reference to the Constitution Acts, 1867 to 1982 shall be deemed to include a reference to the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983."

7. This Proclamation may be cited as the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983.

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be taking part in this debate on an amendment to the Canadian Constitution which concerns the first people who settled in this country. I think that today, on June 29, 1983, we are truly making history. This is the first time, since the Canadian Constitution was adopted, that Parliament is proposing amendments. The nature of this motion proves that the Canadian Government is extremely aware of the issue and that it will do everything in its power to ensure that in the coming months and years, the genuine aspirations of native peoples will now be discussed on equal terms.

Mr. Speaker, as the Member for Manicouagan, a riding that has a large population of native peoples, including Montagnais, Naskapi and also the Inuit on Ungava Bay, I am proud to be able to stand up in the House and express my support for the motion moved by the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan). Often when we talk about native peoples, it seems almost like an abstract concept, although we know they are there across the country. However, anyone who has been in close contact with these people realizes how great their contribution is to Canada's culture, and when we talk about the founding peoples in referring to the English and the French, we must never forget that the first people who populated this country are the native peoples. Today, by amending the Constitution in order to start major negotiations with the native peoples, with the provinces and with the federal Government we are proving that the debate on the Constitution in 1982 was not a mass of meaningless words and that it is now becoming a reality that will make it possible for native peoples to truly participate in the affairs of this country.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the nine provinces who have already agreed to sit down with the native peoples and the Canadian Government, in order to amend their own provincial legislation so as to embody therein various amendments regarding native peoples which the Canadian Government wishes to include in the Constitution. I hope that the Province of Quebec, which has not yet agreed to negotiate with the Canadian Government and with the native peoples will do so in the near future, because the issue here is to establish clearly the rights of native men and women. I therefore call once again on the Province of Quebec to sit down as soon as possible with the nine other provinces and the Canadian Government, so that at last our native peoples will be able to live on equal terms with all Canadians, whatever their origin may be. This is a fundamental principle.

Mr. Speaker, I think that what should be emphasized today is the fact that the Constitutional Conferences that will be starting shortly will now be held on a truly legal basis. Before, native peoples were practically obliged to negotiate from scratch every time, on the basis of ancestral treaty rights or rights acquired through various pieces of legislation adopted since 1931, while now, through the Constitution, the Canadian Government and the native peoples will be negotiating on equal terms. It is truly a new beginning for these people who had to work extremely hard to obtain recognition of their status and their rights. Often, legal distinctions have been made regarding the nature of a treaty, compared with an Act or the rules of custom, and often the legal experts, and here perhaps I might point out what the Department of Justice has done at the federal level to bring about the entrenchment of all these rights but, before, tradition was more or less ignored. The usual comment was: Listen, it is not a statute, and it is not something that is recognized by the statutes. With the various constitutional conferences, what used to be called traditions or vested interests will now become a daily reality well supported in our statutes, and that is the important thing because we were too inclined in the past to leave the matter open without ensuring that native rights were truly recognized in legislative, legal and judicial terms. The resolution introduced by the Minister of Justice will now allow us to do so.

As I said earlier, I am especially happy to support this resolution because it is the first time that the Constitution approved by the House of Commons is amended, and I want to congratulate the Minister of Justice on being first to propose an amendment. It could have been amended in other areas, but the change was made directly for the benefit of our native people, and in this regard, the concern of the Minister of Justice for human rights, which are at the very root of our Constitution, should be singled out. I therefore believe that both sides of the House should congratulate the Minister of Justice on amending the Constitution in favour of our native people at an early opportunity.

Another point that I should like to make, Mr. Speaker, is the importance of updating quickly the rights of the native people. I say this because in my own area, Manicouagan, which borders on both Labrador and Quebec, for strictly provincial reasons, the right to hunt, fish and trap of Quebec Indians on Labrador territory has been restricted if not withdrawn completely, and I had to contact the Newfoundland Premier several times to ensure that Quebec Indians have the same rights in Newfoundland-owned Labrador. When a caribou wanders about Labrador or Quebec, it is still the same caribou, but we, the white men, have passed laws which allow the Indians to hunt this caribou in Quebec, but not on Newfoundland territory, and the same applies in various provinces. Where the Inuit live, there are a number of conflicting laws which prevent the Inuit and other native people from following their traditional way of life. This situation is due to conflicting statutes and regulations which restrict the daily activities of the native people.

When I say that the provinces, the Indians and the Inuit have to sit down with the Federal Government in the near future, it is because the native people must be allowed to live as they have always done. We often forget to mention the significant contribution of these people to Canada. To acknowledge that fact, Mr. Speaker, you really have to live in areas where there are native people. When reference is made to native people in this House, the city dwellers often come to mind, but most of them live in northern Quebec and Canada and in frontier areas. They are the first guardians of the country. They are the ones who allowed French, British and Canadian explorers to travel across our country safely, because they know it like the back of their hands. These exceptional guides have enabled our oil and gold mining companies to make important discoveries for the economy of Canada, but this fact is rarely mentioned.

• (1730)

However, the amount of tax dollars spent by the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs is often mentioned. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that all the native people will claim at future constitutional meetings is the right to self-government and to economic self-sufficiency so that they will no longer be dependent on the central government. Mr. Speaker, native people are asking for equal rights, of course, but they also want an opportunity to develop within this country without losing their identity. We should keep in mind that equal rights and equal legal entity does not in any way wipe out the identity of an ethnic group. Native people do not claim to be better than Canadians generally, they are not concerned about being treated as inferior human beings as they have been in the past, but they certainly want to be part of the day-to-day economic activities and thus give their younger generations a chance to prosper with the country without forever depending on Government laws and regulations.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the best way to sum up the initiative taken last Monday by the Minister of Justice would be to say that we are aiming at the eventual disappearance of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development so that, once and for all, native people will be full-fledged citizens like the rest of us with their own brand of Government to take matters in their own hands. Essentially, that is the take over which the Minister of Justice was advocating last Monday when he introduced amendments to the Canadian Constitution. I think that is wonderful.

In certain regions already, and I have in mind my friend Charlie Makiuk of Fort Chimo, or Joseph Guanish of the Schefferville area, the Naskapi chief, those people are pressing ever harder to be free on their own territories and to develop them as they see fit, with due respect for the rights of white people and other Canadians. They want to spur their economic activity and give a chance to their future generations to go on living as free and prosperous men and women. That is what the native people are asking for and that is indeed what the Minister of Justice paves the way for by introducing amendments to our constitutional resolution of 1982.

That was the second point, Mr. Speaker, namely to make sure that we will have more constitutional conferences to bring current laws and regulations up to date to give native people an opportunity to develop and manage their own affairs.

My third point, Mr. Speaker, has to do with information. Native people need to have more information and more training if they are to be looking after themselves. In that respect, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is to be commended for what it has accomplished over the past twenty years or so, but a lot of ground remains to be covered when it comes to information and training.

Anyone attending the various House committee sittings where Indian affairs are dealt with can see for himself that an increasing number of native people have become experts in many fields and that they are now quite capable of assuming administrative, social and civil responsibilities on behalf of their own people. We have seen it again in the Fort Chimo area since the signing of the James Bay Agreement. The Makivik corporation which has replaced the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is now managing the assets granted under the James Bay Agreement.

In the Ungava Bay area, Air Inuit is now operated by the Inuit themselves. It is now necessary, Mr. Speaker, during the various constitutional conferences that we make sure that training and information are not only available but that means are taken to enable the young people, because there is not such a large native community and it is essential that a greater number of young people attend our schools, colleges and universities in order that these leaders may be in a position to engage in discussions on the same footing as their countrymen.

That is most important because even, if we have bills of any constitutional resolution entrenching those rights, it is essential that such rights be defined, considered and upheld by the native people themselves with the same degree of learning as those around them.

When we look at the negotiations carried on with the Indians, either the Montagnais, Naskapis or Dénés we cannot but see their cohort of white lawyers. And often when we have discussions directly with the first inhabitants of this country, we realize that finally their demands are quite simple but everything is tremendously complicated in the legal system with which we deal. I am not sure that those lawyers, either men or women, seek any speedy settlement of the native problem. I think that we should make sure that our young and older native people are trained to discuss directly with the white people, to actually deal on a personal basis by mutual agreement without having any inferiority complex, Mr. Speaker. This has often characterized our discussions with the native people. We had a superiority complex as white people and we were always dealing from a superior point of view with them so that our relations were thwarted from the beginning. Now if we want to maintain those relations, we will have to be at the same status level and have the name degree of learning. And this calls for information and training, Mr. Speaker.

There is a fourth aspect I would like to deal with, even though time is moving fast, and this is local geography. When travelling through the Manicouagan riding and across Canada with the Transport Committee and different other committees, I have always noted how much the native people have been able to shape this country with their culture, their traditions, their own characteristics. It is very important for the sake of the discussions that will take place and with the motion introduced by the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan), that native people be allowed a lot of room in this country. I am not certain that the current reserve system is the best formula. The native people themselves should be asked what they want in that respect, because reserves were established with the thought that they might be good to keep native people in one place. But the white man's traditions and ways of life were forced down their throats, and this has imposed upon them a culture that is not theirs.

Sure enough the native people who live in Caughnawaga or who can live in the Huron Village or in other places in Vancouver or in Alberta, those who have become city dwellers, may have adopted our style of living. But if we are to preserve the rights and the characteristics of the native people, if they really insist on protecting their traditions, their heritage and their sociology, we will have to ensure that the Canadian territory is available to all native people. This is very important. This does not mean that either they or we have to forego the rights or lifestyle that we share in common. It is simply a matter of having complementary ways of life. I am thinking here of the various rivers where they go fishing for salmon and other species, the hunting of various species of game. In my view, Mr. Speaker, it is an absolute anomaly that in this country we should have very restricted territories with an unbelievable number of licenses that a native must carry if he wants to do hunting, fishing or trapping for his livelihood. What the native people are asking us, and I remember two years ago the Montagnais from La Romaine were caught 300 miles north of La Romaine, in Labrador, and we had to send Canadian Forces' helicopters to get them out because of abnormal winter conditions, that is too little snow and bad seasonal temperature causing the game to get rather scarce, and indeed the Indians went short of food and they had to be flown down fast. Those Indian people are forced to comply with all kinds of regulations, to get all sorts of licenses to live as their ancestors did, and it is my view that within the constitutional talks that will start we should be very, very cautious to ensure that the native people have the freedom to lead lives of fulfillment as far as hunting, tradition, medical care and their crafts are concerned, and this is extremely important, Mr. Speaker.

I will conclude on this because my time is up, but I would simply commend once again the Government, the native people and the provinces who have now succeeded in agreeing to initiate complete discussions on the constitutional level, respecting the rights of native men and women. I commend the nine provinces who have already taken part in this initiative, but I hope that Quebec will follow suit and very soon. And I hope that these talks will lead to a better life for all native people which will serve the best interests of Canada as a whole, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Chair should now see a Member to its left. However, I should inform the House that the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) has already spoken in the debate. He may contribute additionally with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): I appreciate the House giving me a few minutes, and I will take only a few minutes, Mr. Speaker. In my remarks I want to bring a few of the observations from the standing committee which received this resolution on Monday. We worked with it on Monday evening and through Tuesday. I think it is important, not only for this House but for the Senate, to recognize that the aboriginal groups want this resolution passed as quickly as possible.

I appreciated the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) and the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais) on this Bill. I know the Hon. Member for Manicouagan will be very interested in the report of the special committee on Indian self-government because that report will address many of the issues that he brought forward in the debate regarding the aboriginal people, the way that they relate to the people of Canada and to the Government of Canada. The protection of their lifestyle and culture is tied to a land base and that land base is very important to them. We will address that in our report.

I must say again that this Party and I approve of this resolution, the amendment to the Constitution. We want it passed with all haste. There are, however, some legitimate concerns that have been brought forward by Members of all Parties in this House and as well by various groups which appeared before the committee.

Let me quote the words of national chief Ahenikew who appeared before the standing committee on Monday night. I think his remarks really reflect some of the concerns that Members have regarding the process by which this amendment has been brought to the House. He said:

> If you stop to think of what is really happening here, Parliament has been put in a similar position to the Indians. You—> —have a choice of rubber stamping an accord in which you have had minimum, if any, participation.

Meaning Parliament.

That is true. Members of Parliament have had very little participation in this whole process. In fact, we were not able to get any of the Government papers before the actual constitutional discussions were going on at the Conference Centre across the street. We had no idea what positions the national Government was taking to that conference. I hope in the future that can be amended. I know the various aboriginal groups were very forthcoming with their positions. They were putting them before Members of Parliament and before the country constantly. We really had no idea of the positions of a number of the Provinces and of the federal Government. What we, as Members of Parliament, are being asked to do today is, in fact, either to approve or to reject this process. If we amend it, we will have to go through the whole process again because the Provinces are involved in the amending process.

I agree completely with the statement which the National Chief put before the committee on Monday night. He went on to say:

• (1750)

> Or, you can refuse to do so and see the constitutional process fade out of existence. Parliament should have been involved in an overseer role, from the beginning, to see that the process which produced the Accord was just and equitable, and in which the first nations had a determining voice. The entire process to which we were subjected caused divisions among the first nations. We cannot afford to be divided. Those who decided not to participate in the constitutional talks were as concerned as those who did. We did not divide ourselves. It was the process that divided us. What happens this year cannot allow that division to continue. In that respect, I must emphasize to you that my wish that the resolution be approved should not be interpreted to mean that I approve the participation of the Provinces. Nor do I approve the process. Nor do I mean that the rights of those first nations that did not participate should be disregarded.

Basically the National Chief was saying that Indian, Inuit and Métis people are very concerned about the participation of the Provinces. They recognize that their rights flow through the Indian Act to the federal Government and, as a result, are very concerned that some of the rights they have attained could be passed off to the Provinces and their way of life could be lost. There is great concern regarding the process. They would far rather there be discussions between the aboriginal people and the federal Government and then the results of that discussion taken to the Provinces so that each and every party knows exactly the stands being taken before they go into a public forum with television cameras, the Premiers, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and a number of officials.

It is very difficult when negotiations take place before the entire country and television cameras for people not to play to the country. Therefore, there is often a question as to whether true negotiation can take place in such a forum. Aboriginal groups brought this concern before the committee, as they were asked for their ideas.

Also there seemed to be lack of direction. The agenda was set and a great number of items were placed on it. The groups were not sure which item would be chosen for debate. This caused some difficulties. The term "aboriginal people" in a Canadian sense as well as in the world sense is one about which we have to be concerned because it does not distinguish one troup from another. The Constitution indicates that aboriginal people are Indian, Inuit and Métis. They are concerned that there may be an over-emphasis on one group as opposed to another and suggest that we ought to start identifying them individually rather than as a group, which makes sense.

The process in the past has been that various aboriginal groups deal with bureaucrats in ongoing discussions before they actually get into the forum of discussion with the Provinces and the Prime Minister. The various groups that appeared before us were very concerned about this process and hoped that they could have discussions directly with Ministers as well as with the various officials, although the officials on all sides play an important part in the process.

The Inuit who appeared before us felt that politicians should be more involved in the process than they were in the past. They made a very firm recommendation that there be more information and more involvement by various political Parties in and before the next constitutional conference. Again and again each group appeared before the committee and indicated their concern that they did not know what was the position of the federal Government; they did not know on which of the agenda items there would be concentration in the next constitutional conference. It is very easy for the federal and provincial Governments, with their officials, to prepare themselves for all agenda items and then, with the give and take of the conference to concentrate on the one which seems to be in order, the one the provincial Premiers and the Prime Minister wish to discuss.

Aboriginal groups are given specific funding by the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) to prepare themselves for all the issues. They would much rather see us concentrate on one or the other. These are some of the concerns which were raised before the committee. I commend the House for it will be passing this resolution today. Also I commend the nine Provinces that will pass similar resolutions, and I am pleased that my Province of Alberta was the first one to deal with this.

In conclusion, I would like to place two more quotations on the record because I think they are very important. The first quotation is by the National Native Council and the second one is by the Inuit Council for National Issues. They both indicated to the committee that while there are difficulties with the process, such as some of the matters which I mentioned today, this resolution must pass and must pass quickly. The first is a quote from Mr. Smokey Bruyère who represents as well the Native Women's Association of Canada. He said:

> The statement that I am going to make is designed to express some very real anxieties that we, as aboriginal leaders, are hearing from our people. But these statements should not be interpreted or used by any Member of any Party to delay the passage of this critical Bill.

I think that remark was also directed to the attention of the Senate. The next statement which I will quote was made by the Inuit Council for National Issues before the Committee last night. It said:

> It is our understanding, however, that the equality provision is a priority agenda item for the next First Ministers' Conference and we realize that the only way to pursue this issue further is through the ongoing process. We would prefer to deal with the matter in this way rather than place in jeopardy passage of the resolution.

On being questioned they again said that they were pleased with the progress and with the section referring to land claims and they thought that the resolution ought to pass.

I thought it was important to have on record those statements by the four groups that appeared before us in the last day and a half so that all Parties of the House, the Government, its Ministers and the Senate will attempt to pass the resolution and take cognizance of the various problems of these groups with the process. I am very pleased to have been given an opportunity to speak again on the resolution. This is an historic debate because it is the first amendment to the Constitution, and there is no need to have it ratified by any other Parliament.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There seems to be disposition for me to table certain documents, and I seek permission to do so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Minister to table certain documents?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT PROCLAMATION, 1983

MOTION TO AMEND CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacGuigan:

That:

Whereas the Constitution Act, 1982 provides that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and resolutions of the legislative assemblies as provided for in section 38 thereof;

And Whereas the Constitution of Canada, reflecting the country and Canadian society, continues to develop and strengthen the rights and freedoms that it guarantees;

And Whereas, after a gradual transition of Canada from colonial status to the status of an independent and sovereign state, Canadians have, as of April 17, 1982, full authority to amend their Constitution in Canada;

And Whereas historically and equitably it is fitting that the early exercise of that full authority should relate to the rights and freedoms of the first inhabitants of Canada, the aboriginal peoples;

Now Therefore the House of Commons resolves that His Excellency the Governor General be authorized to issue a proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada amending the Constitution of Canada as follows:

PROCLAMATION AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

1. Paragraph 25(b) of the Constitution Act, 1982 is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(b) any rights or freedoms that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired."

2. Section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 is amended by adding thereto the following subsections:

"(3) For greater certainty, in subsection (1) "treaty rights" includes rights that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired.

(4) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the aboriginal and treaty rights referred to in subsection (1) are guaranteed equally to male and female persons".

3. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 35 thereof, the following section:

"35.1 The government of Canada and the provincial governments are committed to the principle that, before any amendment is made to Class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867, to section 25 of this Act or to this Part,

(a) a constitutional conference that includes in its agenda an item relating to the proposed amendment, composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces, will be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada; and

(b) the Prime Minister of Canada will invite representatives of the aboriginal peoples of Canada to participate in the discussions on that item."

4. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 37 thereof, the following Part:

"PART IV.1 CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCES

37.1 (1) In addition to the conference convened in March 1983, at least two constitutional conferences composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada, the first within three years after April 17, 1982 and the second within five years after that date.

(2) Each conference convened under subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on those matters.

(3) The Prime Minister of Canada shall invite elected representatives of the government of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories to participate in the discussion on any item on the agenda of a conference convened under subsection (1) that, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, directly affects the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed so as to derogate from subsection 35(1)."

5. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 54 thereof, the following section:

"54.1 Part IV.1 and this section are repealed on April 18, 1987.

6. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following section:

"61. A reference to the Constitution Acts, 1867 to 1982 shall be deemed to include a reference to the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983."

7. This Proclamation may be cited as the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, in the closing moments of this debate, and I am very much aware of the cogent points that have been made with respect to this accord, I want to take a few moments of the time of the House to say, from the point of view of a Member of Parliament who was part of the federal delegation, a Member of Parliament who has for a number of years sat on the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development and who has since 1980 chaired that committee and is presently involved with his colleagues in sharing the task force on Indian self-government, what a proud moment it was for me to sit in the Conference Centre and see the process work in a most acceptable manner, leading to a satisfactory conclusion after only a few days.

It was less than a year since our Constitution was patriated when this meeting in March, 1983 was held. It was fitting that the Government of Canada should have chosen for the first constitutional amendment to deal with the aboriginal peoples of this country, the Indian, the Inuit and the Metis.

The true partners of Confederation were there: the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau), the Premiers of the Provinces, the Leaders of the Territorial Governments, the Leaders of the Indian peoples, the Inuit and the Metis. The proper, correct partners of Confederation were there. Although I agree with much of what has been said by my Hon. friends on the other side, I cannot agree that the process was incorrect. The process was the right one because the aboriginal peoples of this country know that the future for them lies by way of constitutional recognition, by way of constitutional guarantees.

I want to say also that the opening statement made by the Prime Minister at that conference was one of the most remarkable speeches on the subject of aboriginal peoples I have ever heard. I say it was remarkable because, although it was delivered by the Prime Minister, it was not just the product of his own thinking. It is true that Dr. Ahenikew on Tuesday evening lamented the fact that parliamentarians had not been as fully involved in the process as he would have liked. I must say I give Dr. Ahenikew full marks for his respect for Parliament.

The Prime Minister's speech was the product of a great deal of discussion which has gone on among parliamentarians, Inuit leaders, Indian leaders and the representatives of the Metis people. Thousands of hours of dialogue have taken place at the Indian Affairs Committee and at meetings with parliamentarians in their offices on the aspirations and the hopes of aboriginal peoples. Those many, many thousands of hours of discussions and honest exchange were reflected in the Prime Minister's statement. That is why I applaud this document. It does represent for me the participation of parliamentarians over a long period of time.

I said that I was proud, I sat as a member of the federal delegation at that first constitutional conference, but I want to be very clear about the basis of my pride. I was proud because the Government of Canada had agreed that this was going to be the first action that we would take now that the Constitution was fully in our control. I was proud of that. I was proud that this was a new beginning for the aboriginal peoples of Canada. However, as I saw the Indian leaders, the Inuit leaders and the Metis leaders, I was not proud at all of the besmirched past which had brought them to this point.

It is not necessary in this debate to go over all of that, but there is testimony in the thousands of pages of the proceedings of the Standing Committee and of the task force which I am presently chairing which tells just how dark and shameful is that past relationship between the Government of Canada and the aboriginal peoples of this country. It is not a relationship of which any of us can take any pride. Therefore I want to be very clear that I was proud because it was a new beginning. It was a start for a new relationship that is going to make the aboriginal peoples full and complete partners in Confederation.

In the opening paragraph the Prime Minister said we had a Constitution that still needs to define the place of our aboriginal peoples in Canadian society. This was only the beginning, but it was a beginning that will reject some of the totally unacceptable approaches of the past; the approach of what sometimes is termed assimilation or termination, an attempt to absorb aboriginal peoples into the mainstream of Canadian society and cause them to lose their identity and distinctiveness. The statement categorically rejects that approach. We know that in the past this has been tried by a variety of means.

The opening statement also rejected the possibility that we could have in this country complete, total sovereign enclaves existing in isolation from the rest of the country. That, of course, is not realistic, and it offers no real hope for aboriginal peoples. The real hope is to become full and complete partners in Confederation. Therefore, the Prime Minister indicated that it was something between assimilation on the one hand, which had to be totally rejected, and something else on the other hand which has been described as sovereignty and which has no basis in realism. It is looking at the world through rose-coloured glasses.

To allow the aboriginal peoples to become full partners in Confederation also means that there will be an end to the paternalistic approach to these people, as if their affairs need to be managed by someone else; that there needs to be an entire department of well-meaning people who are going to be sure that Indian people are not alienated from their land; to be sure that Indian people are going to be able to look after their capital trust funds and that they will be doled out in amounts they will be able to manage, that we will not actively encourage independence by way of economic development—how much better it is to dole out small amounts of money and keep a half million people or more dependent upon the Government of Canada through social assistance. To become full partners in Confederation means the end of all of that. It means a new beginning.

The Prime Minister went on to say very clearly in his statement, reflecting what parliamentarians have been hearing for a long time, that the heart of the matter is to come to that moment in the constitutional discussions within the next few years when we will recognize the right of aboriginal peoples, Indians, Inuit and Metis, to manage their own affairs.

The task force hopes to define for Parliament and explain to the people of Canada exactly what Indian self-government means. We do emphasize that it means above all that they are going to be part and parcel of the Canadian Confederation. They are going to participate in it along with the Premiers, the leaders of the Territorial Governments, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice at conferences which are going to define and describe their future.

• (1810)

I want to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that it will not be enough as we forge ahead toward that definition based on this very admirable Accord, an Accord which is just a beginning. I compliment the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan), and I share the sentiment of all the other Members of the House who have praised him for his good work at that conference, but it is a beginning. The next step must be the recognition of aboriginal peoples' ability to manage their own affairs. Along with that, Sir, must go the economic wherewithal to manage their own affairs.

Under Section 36, Parts I and II of the Constitution, we have provided for the Provinces the economic base to manage their own affairs within the jurisdiction assigned to them. That same step, Mr. Speaker, must be taken when we recognize Indian self-government. To simply recognize it and let it lie there as a constitutional right and to allow the present arrangement, relationship and dependency to be perpetuated will not be satisfactory. We must follow the example set by the agreement we have with the Provinces by saying: "We recognize you, we will negotiate your jurisdiction and we will provide you with the economic wherewithal so that you can realize your own destiny, so that you can establish your own priorities and so that you can give the leadership to your people that you have always wanted to give but that has been frustrated for hundreds of years because of the domination of one level of Government over your governments."

I conclude, Mr. Speaker, by simply saying that I think we have made a remarkable and amazing beginning and I applaud and commend the Minister of Justice and the Government of Canada for setting us off on the right road. I look forward to seeing where this process will lead us in the next decade and beyond.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I will not keep the debate going for very much longer, but as the representative of the Sarcee, Stony and Blackfoot reserves I do want to make one or two comments on this historic occasion.

As so many Members have said, this is the beginning, and that is really all that it is. It is the beginning of negotiations. I would like to make some suggestions in regard to the continuation of these negotiations.

When I was with the Department of Highways in Alberta, I had the responsibility of negotiating with the Stony Indians for a right-of-way for the TransCanada Highway through their reserve. I spent many, many hours listening to the elderly chiefs in the band councils. One of the things that sticks in my mind is that time and time again the elderly chiefs outlined, sometimes in their own language which was interpreted and sometimes in good English, how the white man had deceived them. That was the biggest obstacle we had to overcome. They had learned to disbelieve white men because they had been deceived so many times.

I would like to suggest to those who do the negotiating now that we must be honest with our Indian friends, we must be honest with our Metis friends and we must be honest with our Inuit friends. There has been too much deceit on the part of white man in order to take advantage of these people. I believe that should be the base upon which we start to build a new relationship with native people of the country.

I remember one chief who must have been 90 years old. He had a tremendous memory. I think they called him Chief Buffalo Robe. He was a very religious man who was converted by the MacDougalls in the early days. He lived a wonderful life, but one of the things that irked him most was the fact that the white men always talked down their noses to him. He was never accepted as an equal. We must realize that Indian, Metis and Inuits, each with their own cultures, were created by the same God who created us. They bleed when they are pricked as we do. Their women cry when their children die as our women do. We must treat them as equals.

We must recognize their cultures. We should not be trying to make white men of them. We have a culture of which we are proud and have every reason to be proud. I think we should develop our culture, but let us also recognize that the Indian people have a culture as well, a culture that is older than ours. Part of our culture is intertwined with the Indian culture. The Metis people have a culture, a culture that came from Scotland, Ireland, England, France and China along with the Indian culture. Those marriages that brought the Metis into the world had a culture of their own as well. Metis people are not to be considered vagabonds or illegitimates. They must be considered as men and women and recognized as equals. They have the desire to live as we do, to live well.

I would like to speak for a moment about self-government. I see that I only have three more minutes to do so. Our self-government should be an example to the Indian people. When Government Ministers refuse week after week to meet a delegation of Indian people, that does not set a very good example. When the Government refuses to unfreeze the capital moneys, so that Indians have to go out and borrow money to be paid back out of their grants, that is not something of which we can be very proud. When we give money in the form of grants to the Indians, as we did in October for a sewage system and then wonder why the money is wasted, the Indians lose respect for our way of Government.

Yes, I do believe in self-government for Indians, but it should not be imposed upon them. Let them accept it. Let them develop their own particular brand of Government. I must say that when I visit band councils I am amazed by the wisdom of the men and women. There are both men and women on band councils, but my heart bleeds when I see Indian children half-fed and half-clothed, when I see 27 of them in one house which should only accommodate five or six, when I see the standard of living we have subjected them to by closing them off and treating them as unequals. Then I go to our prisons and find that the greater percentage of the prisoners are Indians, many there for trivial matters. I pay tribute to Chester Cunningham of Edmonton, an Indian himself, who is trying to get Indians a proper deal in the courts by helping them to understand what is right and wrong and not trying to shove them into jails for trivial matters. If they do some great wrong, certainly they expect to be punished, but certainly the great percentage of them should not be there.

I welcome these negotiations as well, and I hope this will be a new day with a new, honest approach to Indians, Inuits and Metis people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. It being 6:19 p.m., pursuant to the agreement reached earlier today and the order made Thursday, June 23, 1983, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the motion now before the House.

Motion (Mr. MacGuigan) agreed to.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, 1983

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Wednesday, June 22, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. Trudeau that Bill C-152, an Act Respecting the Organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, for some time I have been very interested in the Bill we are dealing with today with respect to the DREE program.

The Department of Regional Economic Expansion was created in 1969 to combat regional disparities in Canada. A 1972 review of its policy showed that its programs were often limited in scope and focused on isolated problems. This led to the decentralization of the Department in 1973-74 and the signing of the general development agreements with the Provinces. These agreements provided for the federal-provincial cost sharing agreements which have worked since then.

When this Department was created, I had great hopes that it would be of assistance to areas such as my riding of Victoria-Haliburton. As the years have progressed I lost all hope of that. Consistently, when businessmen in my constituency have come to me for assistance I have gone to bat for them. I have had some successes in getting them sources of funding, but never from the regional and economic expansion program.

Last Fall, I approached the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley)—and I remind the House that the legal name for that Department is still Industry, Trade and Commerce—to help a promising constituent firm and representatives from local councils. The response I got was that there was no use even asking for a meeting with Department officials as Victoria-Halburton was not considered to be a designated area. The Minister told me that his hands were tied and that there was no use whatsoever in even discussing the matter. I must admit that my opinion of DREE was not enhanced by that experience.

It is very difficult to tell eager businessmen that even though the unemployment rate in our area is 14.4 per cent, a full three points above the provincial average, the federal Government does not consider us as a priority area for assistance. I could enlarge upon that but there is no point in naming other ridings now. Similarly, I have had to tell many older employees, laid off due to technological change, that even though their entire plant has closed they are not eligible for benefits under the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program. They are not eligible because Victoria-Haliburton is not a designated area.

This area was settled as a rural agriculture and logging area. From the beginning, immigrants from many lands have seen it as an area of vast resources and challenges. It quickly became a mirror of rural Canada. Considerable foresight on behalf of our residents resulted in the creation of industries subsidiary to the agriculture and forest industries. They realized that diversification was necessary to maintain a stable economy. Now Lindsay, the largest community in the area, boasts many small businesses and the very fine campus of Sir Sandford Fleming College. Our students may remain in the area to complete their education. I am very proud of the progress we have made, yet we have retained the caring nature in the community which is characteristic of most of Canada's mixed rural and urban constituencies. This is why I have been so disappointed in the responses I have been given in the past by DREE officials.

The community wants to be productive and vital. Our students do not wish to be forced to find work outside the community because there is no incentive to local businesses to hire them. Businessmen want to continue to compete with their peers in other constituencies.

One good example is a local firm which bid on a contract to manufacture fish traps. It made a bid on a Government contract. The Department of Supply and Services chose another applicant it said had considerably underbid the local firm. That is fair ball if everything else is equal. However, deeper investigation showed that the firm that won the contract is in a constituency which is designated under DREE. In fact, the firm had originally been set up with the assistance of the Government and its transportation costs continue to be subsidized. The local firm would have had to absorb all transportation costs to compete. Thus, it lost the contract because it did not have the same availability of Government subsidization.

I hope the new Minister of Industrial and Regional Development will eliminate this kind of discrimination. I have been very pleased with the way he has conducted things so far.

The Bill will give most people an opportunity to apply for assistance at one level or another under this program. As I said in committee yesterday, I have seen more constructive policy come from this Minister than any other in my experience, regardless of which Government was represented.

I think one of the new Ministers in charge of this program has shown great promise for constituencies such as mine. When I drive home through another constituency that probably has a rate of unemployment no higher, or perhaps as high as my constituency, and see beautiful buildings going up while my people are denied the same thing I am somewhat irritated. With the reorganization of the Department and the tier system, I hope that constituencies such as mine will have greater opportunities. I look for great things from the Minister in charge of the Department.

The Government agreed to consider each of these objectives in a separate Bill. Bill C-152 was drawn up to deal with the reorganization of the Departments of Regional and Economic Expansion, Industry, Trade and Commerce and External Affairs and Parliamentary Secretaries. The Government then proceeded to implement the changes in Department structure. It did this despite the fact that it did not bring the Bill back for second reading until May 27, 1983. It proceeded without legislative authority, and without consultation with the Provinces; it simply ignored these two key elements of the process.

The announcement in this House on Monday by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce that most of my constituency, as well as others, would benefit from the highest enrichment levels of anywhere in Ontario was encouraging. I have always respected this Minister for his honesty and dedication, and I was not surprised to note yesterday that indeed three of the five census divisions in my constituency will be at tier three level. Naturally, I would prefer to have all regions above Tier 1 level. I do understand however from the committee meetings yesterday that even Tier 1 areas will be available for the ILAP program which may be of some additional benefit.

• (1830)

Initially, I had some skepticism about the development index. I had prepared a speech in which I dealt with the possible inequities that could be created by using the census data. In the past, programs based on such statistics have ignored the chronically unemployed, those who stopped looking for work, and students who did not try to find work because they knew none was available. This year's Summer Canada Program was a prime example. In Victoria-Haliburton, only $4,000 was added to last summer's allocation due to the use of the student surplus rate. Upon the publication of yesterday's list of allocations, I am prepared to forgo these objections. At first glance it does appear that the index may be fair and equitable, as the Minister stated on Monday.

It still concerns me a little that all the Tier 4 areas are in Quebec and the Maritimes, but perhaps it is asking a lot to pick out specific trouble spots in the other Provinces and exclude the rest. I believe the Minister has made every effort to make these allocations equitable.

Let me tell you a little bit more about the constituency of Victoria-Haliburton. Those who have never been there do not know what they are missing. Tourists flock to our lakes and campgrounds in the summer and winter. It is known in Toronto as "cottage country", a haven for tourists and city dwellers alike. That is why I get so perturbed when the Government promotes policies which discourage the tourist trade. The national energy plan was a disaster to the industry and the Government's failure to prevent price gouging by oil companies is further hurting tourism.

As a Member of our caucus committee on tourism, I have mixed emotions about the inclusion of tourism in the duties of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. We have been asking for sometime now for the creation of a separate and independent minister of tourism. I hope that the inclusion of responsibility for tourism and small business in the duties of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion will result in an increased onus on these two vital sectors. It will be wrong if it only applies to the Tier 3 and Tier 4 funding level constituencies. This will make for two classes of tourist and small business facilities. The goal should be a much higher level of equal support for all.

Bill C-152 will add four more parliamentary secretaries and expand eligibility to include Senators. As I look across at the Government benches I can see why this Government needs more parliamentary secretaries. It needs a plum to give to more backbenchers to keep them from crossing the floor. What I cannot understand is why Government thinks it needs Senators as parliamentary secretaries. Surely it is difficult enough now for the Opposition to force a Minister to answer a question. Is this an attempt to ensure that even the parliamentary secretary is not accessible? Or, is there some plan to move an MP to the Senate with the promise of the additional staff and salary of a parliamentary secretary?

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to again congratulate the Minister, and his Department officials. I feel they have done a real good job. I believe he is one Minister who will deal with this Bill with fairness and justice. As a Member of the committee, I certainly wish him well.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I understand that by speaking I will wrap up the debate. We need unanimous consent.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I understood that we were awaiting word from another place, and that that is about to happen. I would like to participate in this debate very briefly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. I would like to determine whether or not the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) has indeed spoken in this debate.

Mr. Forrestall: Yes, he has.

Mr. Pinard: I moved the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In that case, should the Chair recognize the President of the Privy Council that would end debate. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall).

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be relatively brief. I understand the difficulty of the Government House Leader during the last two or three days. I understand his anxiety to remove himself, if not all of us, from this Chamber. As I understand, this will be the last matter before us, other than matters which might arise from the other place.

Before we do in fact depart from here for the summer, there are one or two points with respect to this Bill which I believe have to be made. They relate to the fact that in the beginning it was recognized and has been succeedingly recognized by the Leaders of all Parties and all of our institutional groups, that in fact disparity is a major problem in our diverse, geographical and cultural community. In fact, Governments have a real responsibility to address these disparities with meaningful programs.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott), has had this problem for 15 to 20 years in his part of Ontario which is suffering marginally. It has never been able to claim any of the benefits under any of these programs which flow directly from promises by Governments to rid this nation of disparity between the regions of our country. We have now an attempt to spread the program to all regions of the country, tiered as it is. Some regions will receive more, but the Government can still claim, as it has that in fact some regions will be entitled to greater levels of assistance than other regions. The fact remains, however, that all regions of this nation now in fact can turn to a singular program as opposed to four or five programs, and can in fact qualify and take advantage of that program.

That is not why I rise to intervene at this time. I do not intervene for that purpose at all. I intervene to remind a sick and lazy Government that it has abandoned its cause with respect to disparity in this country. I want to remind it forcefully that it has done that. If it thinks for one minute that this is a great measure, a great piece of legislation, let me say that in spite of the fact this Government has been consistently in office and in power since 1963 under a couple of Leaders, both of whom have vowed their allegiance to ridding this nation of disparity, this Government does not give a damn about disparity. This afternoon in this House it went to the porkbarrel. It reserved for Davey, for Dome Petroleum, for Jack Gallagher, and for whoever owns the shipyard, $650 million worth of work—reserved without tender. Everyone else was cut off. Who over there is going to stand up and tell CN to put its ships and ferries into the Halifax shipyards? I suggest no one.

I want to make two or three observations with respect to disparity. It is the responsibility of all the Members of this Chamber to address themselves to the question of national disparity, disparity between the regions. It is not our responsibility to talk about it, but to do something about it. If this particular Bill—Good afternoon, Mr. Minister, nice to see you here. I would smile too if I got $4.5 billion worth of work this afternoon.

I have some tables, Mr. Speaker, showing examples of the approximate increase. These are fairly accurate, but published tariffs never accurately reflect the cost of moving a given product. A tariff is one thing, but an individual arrangement between a producer and trucker is something else. Let me tell you what the Maritime Transportation Commission in the Atlantic Provinces says with respect to the movement by this Government which will simply never let the left hand know what the right hand is doing.

The Government moves to this great universal program and does it at exactly the same time it is reviewing, with a view to eliminating, the Maritime Freight Rates Act and the Atlantic Region Freight Rates Assistance Act. A manufacturer in St. John's, Newfoundland, will pay 26.4 per cent more to move his competitive product into Montreal; 24.9 per cent to Ottawa; 22.3 per cent to Toronto. Because of economies of scale the further he goes the cheaper it is, and he will wind up paying only about 10 per cent more to get it into Vancouver. His market is in Montreal, Toronto, in the heartland where the buyers are. These figures are on the basis of the removal of the basic 30 per cent subsidy, which in fact is already a reduction in the carrier's published rates. There is no relationship whatsoever to what in fact is charged or what in fact it costs.

The shipper will pay 24.6 per cent more to ship from Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, to Montreal; to Ottawa, 22.5 per cent; to Toronto, 19.3 per cent. And so it goes across the country, reducing to about 8 per cent to get to Vancouver. You have, for example, in my own metropolitan urban area of Halifax, a 22.9 per cent increase in the cost of every manufactured product we have to send to the central market in order to survive. That is what we are going to achieve. I have the figures here and my friend from the north shore of the river knows it.

Mr. Breau: Baie Comeau.

Mr. Forrestall: Baie Comeau.

Mr. Maltais: Where Mulroney will not run.

Mr. Forrestall: Brian Mulroney will run in Baie Comeau and my friend will welcome it because he will go to the Senate. He is not worried about it.

I have more figures, Mr. Speaker. It will be 26.4 per cent more from St. John's, Newfoundland; 25 per cent from Corner Brook; 24.6 per cent from Yarmouth; Sydney, 24 per cent; Halifax, 22.9 per cent; Charlottetown, 22.5 per cent; Moncton, 21 per cent; Bathurst, 20 per cent; Edmundston, 15 per cent.

I will tell you what are the figures resulting from the removal of the basic 30 per cent and the additional 20 per cent subsidy on selected commodities which applies as a reduction from the carrier's published tariffs. Let someone over there tell me what the relationship between the right hand of Government and the left hand is.

When you include both the selected commodity rate and the MFRA rate, from St. John's, Newfoundland it is 26.4 per cent under the basic rate; 53.4 per cent when you include both; from Corner Brook it is 50.5 per cent; from Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, 49 per cent; from Sydney, 47.6 per cent; from Halifax, 45.1 per cent; from Charlottetown, 44.1 per cent; from Moncton, 40.3 per cent; from Bathurst, 38.4 per cent; and from Edmundston, 27.8 per cent. That is just into Montreal. What manufacturer, processor or producer can afford that kind of impact? Does the Government not communicate from department to department? Is it not clear that while there are enormous benefits to be gained for this nation in what is proposed, in fact you are allowing another branch of Government to undermine all of that good?

We do not have a lot of time left today, Mr. Speaker, and I am not at all that certain about how interested most Members are, but I want to very quickly go through some selected comments with respect to the impact of the Government's proposed action with respect to the MFRA.

The Atlantic Provinces Chamber of Commerce urged retention and strengthening of the program. The source for that was their annual meeting in Digby, Nova Scotia, on May 30, 1983, according to the Telegraph-Journal and Chronicle-Herald of June 1. Atlantic Canada Plus, one of our successful programs, said:

> Any reduction in freight subsidies will have severe repercussions on business here. Withdrawing the subsidies is then one of the most ill-conceived blows against Atlantic industry.

That was a statement by Harvey Webber, the president, as reported in several newspapers in late May of this year.

The Canadian Manufacturer's Association passed a resolution urging the federal Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to guarantee the intent of the subsidy program, and that additional assistance be provided, if necessary, to meet the intent of the program. That was reported in a number of newspapers.

The Maritime Lumber Bureau passed a resolution urging retention and expansion of assistance programs.

The Annapolis Valley Affiliated Boards of Trade have stated they support efforts:

> —to hold off any reduction in transportation subsidies paid to Atlantic area businessmen to help them compete.

The New Brunswick Federation of Labour said:

> —more plant closures will follow elimination of the transport assistance programs.

The Pictou County Research and Development Commission

> Many of our local industries may not be able to absorb the higher costs if the complete removal of these subsidies is implemented which will result in higher transportation costs—

That was from a statement by Bill MacCulloch, executive director, as reported in the Chronicle-Herald of May 3, and also June 7, 1983. Yes, shrug your shoulders. It does not matter a damn to you, does it, my friend from the St. Lawrence River? Not a damn.

The Maritime Farmers Council—laugh at them Minister, if you will—passed a resolution urging that the assistance program be retained and strengthened.

The Voluntary Planning organization said:

> —companies would have a tough time operating and probably find it was more advantageous to shut down.

Is that what you want to do, get rid of jobs?

• (1850)

The resolution of the Canadian Industrial Traffic League, Atlantic division, was as follows:

The elimination of the subsidy will probably mean the closure of many Atlantic area companies which have been established as a result of this and other Government funds that are made available to make all regions equally competitive in the national marketplace.

The statement of the Chairman of the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission was as follows:

A reduction or elimination of westbound freight subsidies could be critical to the existence of Atlantic area companies trying to compete in major Canadian markets.

That is our problem.

As reported in the Telegraph Journal of May 20, 1983, T.S. Simms, Jr., of T.S. Simms and Co. Ltd., stated:

Review of the subsidy program is " . . . a serious threat to the economic health of the region. On the one hand, the federal Government says it is interested in promoting economic development and creating (a) good environment for business and then on the other hand they initiate this kind of review."

The M.W. Graves Company is internationally known. Its President stated:

The M.W. Graves could not survive the loss of the federal freight assistance program and would be forced to move its Nova Scotia operations to Central Canada if Ottawa opts to do away with the transportation subsidy.

How is the Government to answer that one? What does it have to say? Yet it goes with it.

As reported in the Telegraph-Journal of June 10, 1983, the Marketing Services Director of Atlantic Sugar stated:

If the federal Government lifts the transportation subsidies, "the future of the Saint John plant would be in jeopardy".

Campbell and Burns stated:

The removal of the federal transportation subsidy would mean industries in (P.E.I.) Province could no longer compete for business outside the Maritimes.

The President of Ganong Bros. Ltd. stated:

The cost to Ganong Bros. Ltd. if Atlantic freight subsidies are lifted will be substantial. But the greater, long-term costs will be felt provincially and regionally and will mean the loss of Maritime jobs.

Mervyn Dickie of Crossley Karastan Carpets stated:

—oppose any change in the freight rate subsidy. With suppliers next door, Ontario manufacturers have a definite edge while Atlantic firms must bear the transport costs of bringing raw materials in and shipping the manufactured product west.

Lock-Wood Ltd. is a substantial company which has gone to great pains to try to develop industry in Atlantic Canada. This is its position as reported in the Telegraph-Journal of June 10, 1983:

The Maritime freight subsidies are important to (Lockwood's) business. Removal of the subsidy would make it more difficult to send goods at a competitive price. But even with the subsidies, the company is still facing higher transport costs than its Quebec competitor.

This refers to its Quebec competitor with regard to certain of its specialized markets. The report continues with a statement by its sales manager as follows:

Reduction or removal of the westbound subsidy threatens competitiveness in Ontario and Quebec markets. While interested in further expansion, "we may have to make some hard choices. We might have to locate outside the Atlantic region. The choice is very real . . . not knowing what is going to happen . . . means people have to put plans aside".

Over the last two or three days there have been indications of several millions of dollars in plant expansion with the probability or likelihood of new job creation plans being put aside while the Government contemplates what it will do with respect to MFRA, and it is a fait accompli, a foregone conclusion.

I remind the Government that this summer it will hear from Atlantic Canada, from Members of its own Party who are from Atlantic Canada, I would suggest even the Ministers, with respect to the hardships that will be imposed on Atlantic industry if the Government tinkers with MFRA and the intraregional subsidy program. The intent of that was not to subsidize or distort the marketplace but, rather, to encourage the location in Atlantic Canada of industries so that they might compete in our limited marketplace here in Central Canada. If the Government carries out its intention of eliminating these grants, these subsidies, it will make it even more difficult for those industries in Atlantic Canada which look offshore for their markets. The Government must remember that we must bring into our region the raw materials for processing for re-exportation. The Government speaks blandly and wonderfully. I welcome the program. It helps friends. It helps people across this country.

The Hon. Member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott) has just told us of the difficulty he has had over a long period of time. I am saying to this Chamber that we have a responsibility as parliamentarians, especially those who are Government Members, not to bury the question of regional disparity under a motion and a Bill that, in fact, is not a bad move. We welcome the move. However, I remind the Government: do not ever let the right hand, through a Bill like this, forget or not know what the left hand through other motions or other movements, is in fact doing.

If the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) now wants to go home for his summer vacation, as far as I am concerned, he can rise. However, I admonish him with respect to this matter. His friends from the North Shore and from the Gaspé region are affected. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) knows well the impact this will have on Atlantic Canada. I am happy that the Minister has not intervened in the sense that the Bill is probably a good Bill, nationally. However, I will try to extract a promise from him and other Ministers, and I pray to them not to overlook the question of intraregional disparity in this country, or we will never have the kind of national unity that is born of goodwill, born of the belief that we live and prosper in Canada, equal to all with respect to opportunity. Please be aware; please act to ensure that while the Government puts a good program into place it does not allow, by the other hand, another act of Government to undermine it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions or comments?

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be taking part in the debate on Bill C-152, an Act respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto. My comments will be mainly concerned with Part II and Part III of the Bill, and Schedule II, which appears on page 21. My reason for doing so is that these particular parts are specifically concerned with the issue of regional economic development and federal structures in that area. There is also the matter of the political will, at the federal level, to deal with development issues in general, whether we are talking about development requirements in areas under federal, provincial or even municipal jurisdiction.

Since 1969 and even before then, when a start was made with the ARDA and FRED agreements and these development tools were first introduced, the federal Government expressed its intention to analyze the general economic situation in certain regions and to identify regional problems and needs, to see how government aid, whether federal or provincial, could be used to maximize regional resources and to create projects to deal with the situation in disadvantaged regions. Industrial development is one thing, but regional development is a different thing altogether. Industrial development means that we want to promote industries existing in certain regions. Some examples are mining, forestry and fisheries. Industrial development means that we are going to take a look at an industry that is typical of a given region, and see what we can do to improve it. Regional development however, is directly concerned with the general situation in a region, and the purpose is to change that situation. Such changes may sometimes be unfavourable to a given industrial sector or policy, because, as I said earlier, they are aimed at improving the general situation in the region.

• (1900)

Mr. Speaker, especially since 1969, the federal Government has somewhat modified its policy. Instead of the ARDA and FRED agreements we had had since 1965 or 1966, and even before then, maybe as early as 1964, a decision was made to create a department, namely the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. It would have its own budget like other federal Departments and would conclude agreements with the Provinces on economic development and would also administer legislation on industrial incentives. The latter can be done without consulting with the Provinces, because it consists in providing assistance to individuals or businesses.

Thus, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion had two functions.

Part of the Bill refers to agreements with the Provinces. Obviously, it was essential to enter into agreements with the Provinces, because in order to promote regional development, it is necessary to explore all possibilities, especially in the less well-off or smaller provinces. We cannot say: This should be done by the federal Government and that should be done by the provincial Government, and let both parties do their share. It is absolutely necessary to make use of all the resources available at various government levels through development agreements. That is what the Department of Regional Economic Expansion was trying to do in connection with its responsibility for regional development.

Today, we have a Bill that is supposed to change this Department by amalgamating the section responsible for industrial assistance with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As far as this aspect of the Bill is concerned, I am entirely in favour of the proposal. I think it is an improvement. There is or was no valid reason, at least after DREE had been in existence for ten years, to have parts of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce that were responsible for industrial development competing with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion which dealt with regional interests. I think it is far better to put those parts of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce that could be called the vertical parts of industrial sectors together with DREE, in order to give the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce a better awareness of regional needs. So that part is an improvement. There is also the other part which deals with agreements under which investments could be made in various infrastructures, such as roads, industrial parks and municipal developments in certain cities. In other words, under those agreements, we could do everything that governments should do, and it made no difference whether the need came under federal or provincial jurisdiction.

Of course, the general development agreements signed since 1974 are not affected by this Bill, since they did not come under the statute which established the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. The agreements are therefore still in force and the Government has said that it will renegotiate them with the provinces when they expire. However, there are some concerns about this aspect of the Government reorganization. Of course, reorganization is already a fact from an administrative point of view, even though the Bill has not been passed. There are some concerns, and I know that several of my colleagues from the Atlantic provinces on this side of the House, as well as some Members on the other side and many provincial Premiers, Ministers and MLAs also believe that it will be a good thing to have, at the federal level, a Ministry of State for Economic Development which, instead of acting like a Department, will act as a secretariat and try to make all federal economic departments aware of the problems so that federal agencies in various regions will be better co-ordinated. There are co-ordinators in each province who are working on this. I have no objection to the Federal Government trying to promote better co-ordination among economic departments, that is the Department of Transport, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, the new Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and so on. I have nothing against that, quite the opposite.

I am happy to see that one of the benefits of this reorganization will be that a secretariat or group within the Federal Government will try to bring about a better co-ordination of federal efforts. That is fine.

I admit that the old system was far from perfect, but one of its advantages was that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion had the duty and the responsibility to carry out, on an on-going basis, analyses of regional economic needs and of existing opportunities, and kept in touch with the industrial boards, the provincial Governments, and in some cases the Federal Departments, but, most important, a Minister was responsible under the Act to deal specifically with these matters and to ensure that his Department would focus its attention on the needs of certain regions. This can continue with the reorganization under the Ministry of State for Economic Development. However, I have examined very closely the administrative organization of the new Ministry of State, and I doubt that it will have the necessary administrative resources in the provinces and here in Ottawa to ensure the same degree of attention by the Federal Government to the needs of those regions which, in some cases, have been slow to develop since Confederation. Although federal agencies will be more centralized, I doubt there will be the same focus on regional requirements in areas where it is not directly a federal concern and where it is not up to a single federal department to help when there is a need for every available government resource at the provincial, municipal and federal levels.

Mr. Speaker, I am from a riding that is affected by slow growth, a riding where we have always had chronic unemployment and where the economic situation is not only a historical reality but is also related to the region itself. It does have certain natural advantages, but there are also certain disadvantages because we are far from the major markets. We have no large urban centers, so there is practically no local market, and everything we produce has to be exported to the United States or Central Canada, Europe or Japan. As far as Europe and the United States are concerned, in some cases it is an advantage to be near the ocean, and we are, of course, only 100 miles from the U.S. border and the very rich Atlantic Seaboard market. However, as a member of Parliament representing such a region, I am concerned about the situation and I shall follow very closely the committee proceedings on this Bill when the officials will appear before it, or the Minister of what will now be called the Ministry of State for Economic Development, in order to determine whether this new Ministry, which I like to call a secretariat, will really have the administrative resources required to deal with what used to be the second part of the responsibilities of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, in other words the promotion of regional development. We have never spent that much time discussing and defining the precise meaning of regional development.

I shall therefore follow closely committee proceedings. In summary, I support this Bill because, as I said earlier, there are some benefits in ensuring a better co-ordination among Federal Departments. It is also an advantage to merge the services of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce which provide assistance and analysis of industrial sectors with their counterparts in DREE. As I was saying, this will improve the services provided by this Department and make it more aware of industrial adjustments and regional needs. It will a big improvement. As for the general matter of infrastructures, economic analysis and regional needs, and especially infrastructures such as roads in the case of my region, for instance, if we want to develop our tourism industry, it will be essential to get the municipal and provincial governments to agree on a comprehensive approach to regional development needs. That aspect of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion was most worthwhile and I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that there is a lot of concern about this issue. Several Members of the Atlantic Liberal causus are concerned about this issue even though they generally support the changes because they will be beneficial.

We are going to look very carefully when this Bill is before the Committee. We are going to see the new MSERD as it would be called, under the jurisdiction of the Minister of State for Regional and Economic Development (Mr. Lumley), together with the new co-ordinators in the Provinces and the extent to which they will have the administrative capacity to carry out economic analyses and to get involved with the Provinces and municipalities in identifying opportunities and projects on a continuing basis. While there were things wrong with that aspect of DREE, I think in some cases that aspect of DREE had become—I hate to use the words—a little fat, and I believe a lot of federal officials along with provincial officials were acting as a government within a government. To some extent that is okay and it is advantageous. But I do not deny that there was a need to streamline and weed out what is going on in that part of the bureaucracy

That aspect of reorganization is good. But the approach of the Government in the reorganization of development agencies reflects a difficulty we have in this country in dealing among Governments. The whole question of federal-provincial co-operation and federal-provincial relations concerns me very much. I am concerned with the way in which some provincial Governments carry out their relationships with the federal Government either substantively or politically. I am also concerned sometimes with the way in which the Government carries out its relations with the Provinces. I think we have to separate the politics and the substance. We have to be able to find ways, regardless of the political stripe of the federal Government, to carry out mechanisms of co-operation in regional development between the Provinces and the federal Government. The question of political credit, I believe, is important. I do not blame provincial Governments for the fact that the federal Government did not have credit for many programs. Sometimes provincial Governments were at fault. But on many, many occasions—and I have been here 15 years and some days—my frustration was with the federal bureaucracy and with Ministers within the federal Government who did not do as politicians should do, and that is to make sure there was political credit for the federal Government.

I believe political credit is extremely important, not only because of image or glory, but because the citizen, the voter, has the right and the responsibility to know and to find out what his Government is doing for him or her in his or her region. A citizen must make a judgment as to what the federal Government does and as to what the provincial Government does. The question of which Government is responsible for carrying out a program is extremely important in a democracy. The way the whole area of federal-provincial relations is going with regard to regional development is something which should concern many Members. The electorate in regions of slow growth, areas of the country that need to develop their economies, will not tolerate its politicians at different levels of Government bickering and destroying mechanisms of co-operation. It seems to me, in the case of my Province, that in some cases both Governments have been at fault. They have not differentiated between negotiating objectives and seeing where agreements or disagreements are. That is the substantive part. We have not differentiated between that and the politics of the situation.

I hope that when this Bill and this reorganization is complete we will have found ways to improve and to meet the concerns that I know some of the Members in the Liberal caucus have on this Bill.

• (1920)

Generally I think we all support the Bill. I certainly support it because there are some good things in it. There are some things wrong with the system as we know it and some things will be improved. I have made some proposals to the Government as to how to meet these concerns. They are being discussed, and I hope that we can improve the legislation in committee to ensure that we have a better system of meeting the needs of the slow growth regions of the country. We require more co-operative effort at both levels of Government to meet the needs of these regions and to ensure that they can plan their future so that there will be economic development and improvement in the standard of living in these areas.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, comments. Debate.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this Bill I hope to be very brief because I know there are other Hon. Members of the House who have comments to make. For example, I am sure the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) would want to talk about DREE and what it failed to do for Simcoe County, particularly the Orillia area. I know he is anxiously preparing notes at the present time to participate in the debate between now and the time the Senate completes its deliberations. I know as well that other Hon. Members are anxious to participate, if given the opportunity.

I want to depart somewhat from the discussions which have taken place to date and concentrate upon other aspects of the Bill. First I want to deal briefly with Part IV which amends the Parliamentary Secretaries Act. There are probably other elements in the Bill which have captured the attention of the public more than this particular section. As Members of Parliament we should be very concerned about the growing lack of responsibility within Parliament for actions taken by the Government. Anyone who has sat in the House of Commons during Question Period knows that there is no greater frustration than trying to ask questions about an area of concern and discovering that the appropriate Minister is not even a Member of the House of Commons, that in fact he is a Senator and is not properly accountable in the House of Commons.

Every one of us accepts that it is both necessary and in some cases desirable to have Members of the Senate represented in Cabinet. It was useful for us when we were in Government and had few Members from Quebec to ensure representation from that portion of the country through using the vehicle of the Senate. The present Government which has only two Members of the House of Commons elected in constituencies west of Ontario has no choice, if it is to have western representation, but to appoint some Members of Cabinet from the Senate.

It leaves us in an invidious position in the House of Commons when important portfolios are given to Senators who are not accountable in the House of Commons. On a day-to-day basis when we attempt to obtain answers from Ministers, we find that the Ministers who have the information are simply not present. That problem will clearly be compounded if the Government gives itself the authority to appoint Parliamentary Secretaries from the Senate. Instead of simply running into problems where Ministers are not available and are not accountable in the House of Commons, Cabinet has devised a formula which will allow Parliamentary Secretaries to be drawn from the Senate as well and will prevent them from doing their job, the job that is necessary, as Parliamentary Secretaries in the House of Commons itself.

Were I a Member of Government, were I a Government backbencher, certainly I would be very concerned about the prospect of parliamentary secretaryships which currently reside in the House of Commons being transferred to the Senate, with the commensurate loss of authority within the House and the commensurate decline in the ability of Government Members of Parliament to have influence in what is happening at Cabinet level.

Nowhere is the lack of responsibility more apparent than it is in the case of the Canada Development Investment Corporation, a Bill which is currently before the House of Commons. The Minister responsible for CDIC is in the Senate, Senator Austin, yet the Minister responsible for the Bill in the House of Commons, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières), is incapable of giving answers. On occasion after occasion when we have asked him questions, we have found that he is simply incapable of giving answers and that decisions are not being made by him but by a Minister who resides in the Senate. For example, within the past few days I, among others, have raised questions about whether the Auditor General would be permitted to audit the books of CDIC. It is clearly appropriate that the Auditor General, who is Parliament's auditor, should be the one given access to the books of CDIC which will be the largest holding company in Canada, will have the authority to spend vast amounts of tax dollars and will be largely unaccountable to Parliament. It is clearly appropriate that the Auditor General be given access to those books and be responsible for alerting Parliament if tax dollars are not being well and prudently spent.

In the past few days we have also gone through an experience with Canadair and de Havilland. In the case of Canadair we found that that Crown corporation ran up the largest corporate loss in the history of Canada of $1.4 billion. The response of the Government, both in committee and to Hon. Members in the House, has been to claim that it was simply unaware of what was happening, that somehow it was the fault of management, and that the Government did not have any responsibility. Canadair and de Havilland will now be subsidiaries of CDIC which will have the responsibility of ensuring proper management, notwithstanding the fact that the management of CDIC has had very little, if any, experience in the private sector and is being asked to run the largest holding company in the history of Canada. Also, the Minister responsible for CDIC is in the Senate instead of being in the House of Commons. That Minister has a responsibility which dwarfs the responsibilities of many Ministers who are in the House of Commons.

That sort of situation leads to a position of impotence on the part of Members of Parliament in doing their job in holding the Government to account, in examining the Government's activities and in making suggestions on a day-to-day basis on how improvements could be made. We find as well a sense of frustration among the people of Canada when they find that they have a Government which has grown remote and a Parliament that is incapable of doing the job for which Members of Parliament were elected. With this Bill the Government would just remove that much further from the House of Commons, the elected representatives, the ability to obtain answers and to hold the Government to account. This is why, more than any other reason, I feel this provision of the Bill is one that is not healthy and should be struck out.

If the Government is to proceed with other elements, let it go ahead, and we will consider them on their own merits. But certainly it would be completely wrong for the Government to go ahead with proposals to put Parliamentary Secretaries in the Senate and to have them totally unaccountable to Members of the House of Commons.

I have cited one case, the case of CDIC, where there is clear irresponsibility at the present time, but there are others as well. What we have found as Members of Parliament—and no doubt, Mr. Speaker, you have found it during your tenure in office—is a growing tendency on the part of Government to remove itself from Parliament's scrutiny and to allow decisions, which should properly be made by Parliament itself, to be made by administrative boards and tribunals. Nowhere is that more apparent than in the case of the CRTC. The Government has given the CRTC vast grants of power to determine what Canadians will be able to watch on their televisions and will be able to listen to on their radios. That Commission, which is largely unaccountable to Parliament, does not find its estimates rigorously challenged by Parliament. It has in the Broadcasting Act a tremendous grant of authority to do whatever it wants. It has taken unto itself a tremendous amount of authority to make decisions about what Canadians will see and hear, to determine the shape of Canadian culture for the future, to determine the future of a multi-million dollar industry and to affect in some cases international relations, all without guidance from Parliament and all without the proper input of elected Members of Parliament as to what should be the policy.

It is just another example of how Government has grown remote and how it has been removed by one further degree from the elected representatives of the people. If the Government goes ahead with the proposal it is making in the Bill before us now, Government will become that much more remote.

Any of us could cite other examples of where Government has grown distant from Members of Parliament and where this Bill would simply complicate that particular problem. Another example could be found by returning to the question of Crown corporations. The Bill which the Government has before the House at the present time gives authority to create a limited number of new Crown corporations. Throughout the span of your tenure in office, Mr. Speaker, and the time that I have been here, the vast majority of major Crown corporations have been statutory corporations. Legislation has been introduced in Parliament which has been debated here. We have had the opportunity to discuss the elements of the Bills and to discuss what was good about them, propose amendments and suggest ways in which improvements could be made. This has been healthy.

• (1930)

In the case of Petro-Canada, for example, we had a long and very spirited debate in Parliament in which Members of Parliament were able to express their view and the views of Canadians at large as to what the proper course of action would be. However, we find new provisions and new legislation which would provide that the Government could incorporate an unlimited number of new Crown corporations without ever going to Parliament, as long as they were subsidiaries of existing Crown corporations. That particularly would be the situation in the case of the Canada Development Investment Corporation which could buy or sell any company in Canada without a bye-your-leave from Parliament, without a moment's debate here in the House of Commons. Surely that sort of irresponsibility, that use of tax dollars, that intrusion by the Government in the marketplace without proper accountability in Parliament and without the ability of the elected representatives of the people to do their job and to hold the Government to account could only cause concern for ordinary Canadians who already believe that Government has grown too large, too remote, too costly, and too intrusive in the day to day lives of Canadians.

I was just getting warmed up, but I get the feeling that we are being called away. Perhaps I can pick this up in September when we return.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I thank the Hon. Member. Before we proceed any further, I have some matters of which I must inform the House.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

FILING OF OBJECTIONS TO REPORTS OF COMMISSIONS FOR PROVINCES OF ONTARIO, QUEBEC AND BRITISH COLUMBIA

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is my duty to inform the House that a number of objections to the Electoral Boundaries Commission reports have been filed with the Speaker. Since they are numerous, if the House agrees, the texts of the objections will be printed as appendices to Votes and Proceedings. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate requesting this House to appoint a committee to act jointly with a Senate committee already chosen, if the House deems it advisable, to examine and consider the subject matter of Bill C-157, an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact An Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto.

I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has agreed to the amendments made by the House of Commons to Bill S-24, An Act to implement an agreement between Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to taxes on income and certain other taxes, without amendment.

I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed the following Bills, without amendment:

Bill C-166, An Act to amend the Judges Act and the Federal Court Act;

Bill C-119, An Act to repeal certain Statutes that have ceased to be enforced or have become unnecessary;

Bill C-165, An Act to provide for financial assistance for industrial development in all regions of Canada;

Bill C-167, An Act respecting the Tax Court of Canada and to amend the Federal Court Act, the Judges Act and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971; and

Bill C-95, An Act to provide for Government-operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and events and to amend the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

Government House,
Ottawa,

June 29, 1983

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable W. R. McIntyre, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 29th day of June, at 7.30 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Esmond Butler
Secretary to the Governor General.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[Translation]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Madam Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the Chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, the Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

• (1940)

And being returned:

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate Chamber, the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give in Her Majesty's name the Royal Assent to the following Bills:

Bill C-151, An Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority—Chapter 151

Summer Recess

Bill C-85, An Act to establish a corporation called Canagrex to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural and food products from Canada—Chapter 152

Bill C-148, An Act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act (No. 2)—Chapter 153

Bill C-147, An Act to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act (No. 2)—Chapter 154

Bill C-161, An Act to amend the Canada Student Loans Act (No. 2)—Chapter 155

Bill S-24, An Act to implement an agreement between Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to taxes on income and certain other taxes—Chapter 156

Bill C-166, An Act to amend the Judges Act and the Federal Court Act—Chapter 157

Bill C-167, An Act respecting the Tax Court of Canada and to amend the Federal Court Act, the Judges Act and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971—Chapter 158

Bill C-119, An Act to repeal certain Statutes that have ceased to be in force or have become unnecessary—Chapter 159

Bill C-165, An Act to provide for financial assistance for industrial development in all regions of Canada—Chapter 160

Bill C-95, An Act to provide for government operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and events and to amend the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act—Chapter 161

Bill C-164, An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1984—Chapter 162

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUMMER RECESS

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have had consultations with my colleagues, the House Leaders, and, provided that both of them rise and say that I am correct in saying that there is unanimous consent, I move that the House do now adjourn and stand adjourned until September 12, 1983, without prejudice to Standing Order 4.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of this Party, the Official Opposition, I am prepared to give unanimous consent. I know that my colleague, the Government House Leader, would probably want to move on to the property rights amendment debate and I know that the House Leader for the New Democratic Party would want, in the splendour of his tuxedo, to lead that debate on behalf of his Party. We would probably not get the required unanimous consent, however.

I should like to take this opportunity to wish all my colleagues on both sides of the House and the staff a welcome respite. I think it is important that we all get back to our ridings, have a little rest and see our constituents. We will be back on September 12 when the House resumes.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, you will notice that in my non-partisan fashion, I am wearing my Tory blue shirt. I wear it in the hope that they will learn something from the debates that have occurred in the last few months.

Of course I am delighted to join with my two colleagues and agree that we should not sit tomorrow but should rise tonight until September 12.

I also join my colleague in the Conservative Party in wishing that everyone will have a good and healthy summer. I hope they will put it to good use canvassing their ridings and meeting their constituents, particularly in the case of the Liberals in western Canada, in order that when we come back to debate the Crowsnest Pass freight rate changes they will have learned that those in the Prairies do not want the change.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, since I was very brief in moving the motion, I would now like to congratulate all our Parliamentarians on the work they have done in the past year. I also wish to thank all members of the support staff of the House of Commons and I would like to wish everyone a pleasant stay away from Parliament. Hon. Members are aware that these are not real holidays, since the Summer recess gives us an opportunity to go to our ridings and fulfil our duties as Members of Parliament and elected representatives by consulting with and informing our constituents. So we are not rushing off to go on holiday but to do a different kind of work that is nevertheless part of our duties as Parliamentarians, and I am sure that Hon. Members will carry out those duties very responsibly as they always have done. We shall return on September 12 to continue our legislative duties in the Parliament of Canada.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): May I say the same thing. On behalf of Madam Speaker and the other occupants of the Chair, including the Deputy Speaker, may I extend to all Members of the House our thanks for the privilege of serving in the course of the past year.

[Translation]

On behalf of Madam Speaker and my colleagues in the Chair, I wish you all a very pleasant vacation, if I may call it that.

[English]

I know it is not only a question of a vacation but for many of us a question of work as well.

Motion (Mr. Pinard) agreed to.

At 7.53 p.m. the House adjourned until September 12, 1983, pursuant to special order.
