Advertizing. THE DRUNKARD'S DREAM. (FROM THE DORMANT ELEMENTS OF REALITY.)

From the dawn of what country of the world has not felt and acknowledged the mystery of their origin and end? I have thought not a little upon the subject, seeing it is one which has been forced upon my attention, and sometimes strangely enough; and yet I have never arrived at anything which at all appeared a satisfactory conclusion. I have endeavored to penetrate the mystery of it, but in vain. I have endeavored to penetrate the mystery of it, but in vain. I have endeavored to penetrate the mystery of it, but in vain.

He should read there; but I visited her at once. The scene, indeed, was most unpleasantly familiar to me; but, however fruitless my visit and advice might have been at another time, the present was too fearful an occasion to suffer my doubts of their utility as my reluctance to re-tempting what appeared a hopeless task to weigh even against the lightest chance, that a consciousness of his imminent danger might produce, in some degree, a more tractable disposition. Accordingly I told the child to lead the way, and followed her in silence.

After a walk of about five minutes she turned off into a narrow lane, of that desolate and comfortless class which are to be found in almost all small, old-fashioned towns, child without ventilation, reeking with the stench of unwholesome effluvia, and, in some places, and pen-up buildings frequently not only in a wretched but in a dangerous condition.

Four fathers had changed his abode since I last visited him; and I had almost, much for the worse, said I. Indeed he has, sir, but we must not complain; light and air, and food, though it's poor enough, it is his honor. We passed before a narrow, brick door, which was opened by a child, and we forthwith began to ascend the steep and broken stairs, which led upwards the sick man's room. As we mounted, light and air, and food, though it's poor enough, it is his honor.

"This way, your honor," said my little conductor, at the same time pushing open a door of polished oak, and half-rotten plank, she admitted us into the apartment which she called her father's room. The light, however, was very dim, and the air was very close, and the smell was very strong, and the smell was very strong, and the smell was very strong.

"I there any hope," I inquired in a whisper. "A sliver of the head was the reply. There was a sliver of the head was the reply. There was a sliver of the head was the reply. There was a sliver of the head was the reply. There was a sliver of the head was the reply.

I stood actually riveted to the spot. The figure nudged itself and lifted its arm, I thought with a meaning gesture. A thousand confidential, unwholesome thoughts at once rushed upon my mind. I was roused from the expectation of terror in which I stood, by the piercing scream of the mother, who now, for the first time, perceived the change which had taken place. She rushed towards the bed, but, stunned by the shock and overcome by the conflict of violent emotions, before she reached it, she fell prostrate upon the floor. I am perfectly convinced that had I not been startled from the torpor of hurry in which I was bound, by some power, and arousing stimulus, I should have gazed upon this unearthly apparition until I had fairly lost my senses.

As it was, however, the spell was broken, and satisfaction gave way to reason; the man whom all believed to have been actually dead, was lying in bed. Dr. D. was instantly standing by the bedside, and, upon examination, he found that a sudden and copious flow of blood had taken place from the wound which the latest had had, and this, no doubt, had effected his sudden and almost preternatural restoration to an existence from which all thought we had been forever removed.

raising himself, he exclaimed with startling vehemence—"Look, sir, there is no one in my room; the matter: I'm blessed with the fire of hell, and I'm in hell; what do you think of that?—I'm damn'd, I'm lost for ever—I have not a chance—I am damn'd, and already—damn'd—damn'd—damn'd. The end of this sentence he actually shuddered; his vehemence was perfectly terrific; he threw himself back, and laughed, and sobbed hysterically. I poured some water into a tea-cup, and gave it to him. After he had swallowed it, I told him if he had anything to communicate, to do so as briefly as he could, and in a manner as little exciting to himself as possible.

"It's only foolishness," he continued; "for me to try to thank you for coming to such a villain as myself; I told him to proceed to the matter which weighed upon his mind; he then spoke more as follows:—"I came in drunk on Friday night last and got to my bed here; I don't remember how, sometime in the night, it seemed to me, I awakened, and feeling as if I was in a narrow lane, I got up on my feet, and I went down stairs, but I did not get it, and I stopped my way out, and went down as fast as I could. I felt quite sober, and I counted the steps one after another, as I was going down, that I might not stumble at the bottom. When I came to the first landing-place, the floor of it sank under me, and I went down, down, down, all the stairs along with me. I do not know how long I was falling, but it seemed to me a great while. When I came right to myself at last, I was sitting at a table, near the top of the stairs, and I could not see a thing, if it had any, so far off; and I was then men before me, sitting down, all along by it, at each side, so far as I could see. At all, I did not know at first what it was, but I felt that there was a close smothering feel in it, that was not natural, and there was a kind of light that my eye might never see before, and I was coming from, and I was for a long time where it was coming from, until I looked straight up, and then I saw that it was coming from great balls of blood-colored fire, that were rolling high over heads, and were striking the floor, and I perceived that they struck on the ribs of a great roof of rock that was arched overhead instead of the ceiling. I saw that, and I knew what I did, I got up, and I said, 'I have no right to be here; I must go, and the man that was sitting at my left hand only smiled and said, 'at that moment you can never leave this place, and his voice was weaker than any child's voice I ever heard, and when he was close speaking he smiled again. Then I spoke, and he said, 'I am your friend Dr. D., and I am the most humane of a humane profession, standing by the bedside. He had been attempting, but unsuccessfully, to hold my hand, and had now applied his finger to the pulse.

"I there any hope," I inquired in a whisper. "A sliver of the head was the reply. There was a sliver of the head was the reply. There was a sliver of the head was the reply. There was a sliver of the head was the reply. There was a sliver of the head was the reply.

purpose of constructing and maintaining a Boom at the mouth of the River Anse-au-Loup, by which the passage into the Saint John of Timber illicitly cut on the banks of that River may be effectually prevented.

Mr. Owen, from the Committee appointed to take under consideration the subject of the Fisheries, submitted a Report, which he read, and handed the same in at the Clerk's Table, where it was again read and approved.

The Committee on that part of His Excellency's Speech which recommends a bounty on the Fishery Report.

That in pursuance of the duty assigned to us, we have examined a mass of evidence, and the Petitions on the subject on the Table of the House, and take leave to state that the branch of our country, manifestly so important, and now evidently in so neglected and depressed a condition, has been so often in all its details before this House as to render any recapitulation superfluous.

Your Committee finds the subject of the necessary protection of the Fisheries will require much more consideration than they have been able to bestow upon it. But they have lost no time in preparing such a Bill for their encouragement, as they deem most expedient to be immediately adopted.

NO CURE, NO PAY!! HAYS LINIMENT. NO FICTON—This extraordinary chemical composition, the result of scientific and practical investigation of a celebrated medical man, the introduction of which to the public was invented with the solemnity of a death-bed confession, has been published in the most authentic manner, first in the form of a tract, and then in the form of a book, and is now being distributed in the most liberal manner...

THE PILES.—The price is refunded to any person who will use the Piles Liniment for the Piles, and returns the empty bottle without being cured—These are the positive orders of the proprietor to the Agents, and of many thousands sold, not one has been unsuccessful.
