The bridegroom, with his sister, who was to perform the part of brides-maid in the ceremony, arrived some little time before the bride and her friends. The Clerk, on perceiving the bridegroom and his sister approach-ing, immediately told the Cergyman, who asked of how many the party was composed, and was told only the happy couple, and consequently he told the Clerk he must give away the bride; the necessary preparations were immediately com-menced—the Clerk standing by in readiness till his services should be required. The Clergyman CURIOUS OCCURRENCE AT A WEDDING .- A by a prospective appreciation of an attracted commerce. The atmosphere of the Customs is apt to impregnate men with an unconquerable dispo sition to meddle with the most ordinary details of trade; a striking example was furnished only the other day by Orders in Council secretly issued and stealthily recalled, only to be succeeded by fresh Orders in Council as objectionable and impracticable. It is to be hoped that wiser counsels will influence the Representative Assembly when they shall have an opportunity of affirming the The Clergyman his services should be required. The Clergyman commenced reading the marriage service, and went on until he asked for the ring, before the bridgeroom was aware of the mistake.
