CHAPTER XXIII.

"I know a better plan than this," she said. "I might recognize this ring, but I could not distinguish it, perhaps, from a counterfeit; now, this—and she drew a gem ring from her finger and held it out to him with a loving look—"this poor, old ring I should know from a thousand imitations. Take you mine and wear it and I will take yours"—she did not add: "and wear it," but better still, she pressed it to her lips covertly and slipped it on her finger. "If you send a message, let my ring accompany it, and if we return and answer or send to you we'll give the bearer this."

"Capital," said Sir Ralph. Clarence remained silent for a moment, but Lillian saw him lift his hand to his face and kiss her ring slyly.

"Add now," said he, "as there is no time to lose I must be on the road. Sir Ralph, it has struck me that you might be without money. May I presume to offer you a loan?"

And without waiting for an answer he shook Sir Ralph's hand, would not wait for thanks, and opened the door.

Lillian passed out with him and they stopped to say good-by outside the closed door.

"Good-by," he said, taking both her hands and looking down into her beautiful, sweet face.

"Good-by," she said, drawing a little closer and looking up into his eyes, wistfully. "Good-by. I feel so sad at your going. I—I feel frightened, too, and that's wicked, isn't it? because it is doubting your strength, who have proved yourself so strong, but—but it is hard to part so soon when we have met such a little while ago."

She knew what he was thinking of; that Sir Ralph would never let her marry him; and she was bold, as she called it to herself afterwards, very bold, to show him that she held herself as his forevermore, come what might.

"Hard," he repeated, "to part! Ay, it is. But, duty, duty; we must all go when that calls. Good-by, my darling!"

He still held his face from her, longing for a kiss if only upon her brow. The beautiful girl looked up at him slightly, then cast down her eyes.

"You cannot bear the sight of me in this hideous travesty," he said, wistfully.

"You were always ugly," she said, wickedly; "but now, without your mustache, you are simply frightful."

He met her tender glance that beamed her words and sighed as he turned aside.

"I cannot kiss you now, Lillian, with all-pain and remorse."

"No," she said, in a low voice, "you can't, but I—"

And, raising her head suddenly, she kissed him lightly, and before he could clasp her to his breast she broke from him and escaped into the room.

So, with that kiss as a godsend, Clarence Clifford started on the trail. Protected by his disguise, Clarence reached Rivershall undetected, and farther tested his make-up by entering the "Arms" and mixing with the laborers of the village.

From them, seated among them in their sanded taproom, he gained fresh information and a farther clue, for Jim, who had assisted to carry the supposed dead squire to his grave, was one of the number, and, when the beer began to warm him, commenced his mighty observations upon the weightiness of the squire's coffin.

The strange laborer here offered to stand treat, and Jim, when additionally warmed, went over his whole story with emphasis.

Then there flashed across Clarence's mind the conversation he had half-unconsciously listened to when lying in the room above, on the day of the funeral, and as he patted Jim on the back to encourage him into farther gossip, he thought of the grim farce that the master mind of Melchior had planned and wondered how these simple people would take it when their lord and mistress came back to life and their coffins were emptied of the deceptive stones.

In this way he spent the first night, pouring out beer and spirits in plenty, and picking up every scrap of information which the simple fellows let fall.

On the morrow, in the same disguise, he paid a visit to the home farm, and heard how my lady at the Hall was troubled with weak nerves, and how Miss Lucas was mistress of her mistress and all else at Rivershall.

He heard, too, of Lord Harcourt's advent and his speedy exodus, and that sent him into a quiet lane to think.

Who was this Lord Harcourt, and what hold had he upon Lady Melville? Was he mixed up in the plot, too?

However that might be, Clarence felt that he hated him for something more than the bullet scar on his left breast, and he vowed that, should her ladyship be implicated, he should have his share of the punishment.

Thinking thus of Lord Harcourt, he strolled—rolled, rather, in true Berkshire swing—back to the inn, and

MRS. B. H. HART SICK FOR YEARS

Wants Women to Know How She Was Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Cornwall, Ont.—"I am now giving your medicine a fair trial and I surely am doing me good and I am going to keep on taking it. I used to feel so tired in the morning that I didn't want to get up, but that feeling is leaving me now. I also sleep better and feel more like working. For seven or eight years I have had headaches, tired feelings, pain in my back and across my body. I read letters in the newspapers saying what good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done others. It is better and haven't an ache or a pain, isn't that the right way? I have great faith in your medicine. They must be good when those who take them speak so highly of them. I am recommending them to my friends and I will gladly answer letters from women asking about them."

Mrs. B. H. Hart, Box 1081, Cornwall, Ont.

Mrs. Hart is willing to answer letters from sick women asking about the Vegetable Compound.

there, at the threshold, almost ran up against a handsome gentleman with dark, deep eyes, and bright, golden hair. The supposed courtierman galloped aside to let the gentleman pass, and as he did so the gentleman shot a sharp glance at him that seemed full of suspicion.

But Clarence had been well tutored, and was profiting by his wicked master's hints and oft-repeated injunctions, and now returned the piercing glance with a stolid yoked stare that satisfied the gentleman, who passed on with a light yet commanding saep.

Clarence looked after him, and his eyes flashed. He had recognized him at a glance.

It was Melchior, the swindler, the forger, the murderer!

Longing to fly at his throat, and hand him over to justice then and there, Clarence yet restrained himself, and with tightly compressed lips passed into the public house to decide with a light yet commanding step.

That Melchior was here on the spot was an immense relief to him, for now he could kill two birds with one stone, watch two roads from one point of espial.

He could give a strict attention to what was going on at Rivershall, and at the same time watch the arch plotter.

While he was sitting upstairs thus and jotting down in his notebook a memorandum of the gossip he had picked up, he heard a sigh, and instinctively looking down saw the faint freight flickering through a crack in the clumsily laid floor.

Presently, when he had resumed writing again, he heard the sigh repeated, this time with an exclamation of irritable impatience that he knew too well. In a moment he realized the situation.

In the room below, separated from him by only the rough planking, was the man he was tracking!

He listened breathlessly, heard Melchior mutter indistinctly, poke the fire, with the old oath, and when he, Clarence, had almost concluded that he was about to leave the room, heard the door open, and the unmistakable voice of Kate Lucas speaking.

With his mental faculties undulled by love, Clarence penetrated the mask of the man's honeyed words, and knew that the flowery promise he rolled so trippingly off the tongue was made to be broken and to deceive.

Here was punishment for the woman who had betrayed her innocent charge already—punishment bitter and fearful. But Clarence started with disappointment when he heard Melchior propose that she should set off for the Continent.

To let this false, treacherous, unprincipled creature escape him almost maddened him, and when he thought of all that his Lillian had suffered through her villainess he felt inclined to rush downstairs and cage them both.

But he remembered he had a weapon in her love for the man who was deceiving her, always ready to his hand, and with a sigh let her go. He heard the low, heartless laugh of the deceiver, and he heard the muttered words, "Poor Kate, poor Kate!"

Our "Trusteeship" for the Native of the Empire

"Under what conditions is the black man to work? Shall he be conditions of sheer exploitation? Or shall they be conditions of justice, of co-operation, of sympathy, of the reasonable distribution of labour?" asks Mr. Charles Roden Burton in a pamphlet issued by the Anti-Slavery and Aborigines Protection Society, entitled "The Exploitation of the Coloured Man."

"I will only urge two things—first, that native opinion should be far more carefully examined than it has ever been up to the present; and secondly, that the ultimate ideal must be, not 'tutelage,' nor the so-called 'responsible government' which means the domination of a tiny minority over the rest, but self-government, progressively and deliberately realised.

In regard to the elaboration of a Code of Native Rights, and I would suggest that the League of Nations, either through the Mandates Commission, or through the International Labour Office, should take the chief part in this all-important work.

"It is sometimes thought that this is a matter for the 'man on the spot.' That is not the tradition of the British Empire. On the contrary, the main point which has distinguished the British Empire from others is that, over since the middle of the eighteenth century, there has been a section of public opinion at home which has resolutely refused to allow the government of native races to be determined exclusively by the 'man on the spot.'

"One of the peculiar features of the present situation, moreover, is that there are two widely differing views among the 'men on the spot' themselves—even if we define that somewhat absurd phrase as meaning the small minority of whites. The genuine principle of 'trusteeship' is largely represented among the Government officials. Many of them are trying to carry it out in the face of great difficulties, and at the risk of serious personal sacrifice. There is no body of men in the Empire which is more deserving of our sympathy and support.

"It is the home Government, and the people of Great Britain who place and maintain it in power, upon whom in the last resort, the responsibility rests for seeing that justice is done to our tropical Empire. It is the laziness and indifference of the electorate—in other words, of ourselves—which must bear the blame if our administration is made the cats-paw of short-sighted economic interests. It is by our attitude to this question, far more than by our attitude to

Light Reading

Glasgow Herald: The Dean of St. Paul's has commented unfavorably on the widespread taste for reading novels, which he describes as "literary dream-drinking."

Scholars like Dean Inge, to whom literature is a business, do not seem to realize that to a large part of humanity it is only a relaxation. In vain does he claim that because he is virtuous there shall be no more cakes and ale. Even University professors have been known to unbend sufficiently to enjoy detective novels; some are connoisseurs of this type of fiction.

Proud of Themselves

Considerable jealousy has been caused recently by the Chamber of Commerce of Fallstones describing that report as "unsurpassed by any watering place on the South Coast."

But this is a mild self-praise compared with the glowing words in which other towns and cities have taken themselves either directly or by implication. The old Venetians used to say, "See Venice and die," and Rome has always styled itself the Eternal City. Boston calls itself the Hub of the Universe, whilst London has not shrunk from calling itself the Metropolis of the World.

It is a moot point whether Brighton or Scarborough was first in the field with the sub-title "Queen of Watering-places," but it is certain that both use it and believe in its truth. Edinburgh styles itself the Modern Athens, and Glasgow boasts that it is the Second City of the Empire. Seville says that he who has not seen Seville has seen no marvel. Manchester calls itself Cottonopolis, and Liverpool the Gateway of the West.

It's a very strong flavoring extract and takes very little to flavor a freezer of ice cream—Shirriff's Vanilla now obtainable in pint bottles from GERALD S. DOYLE, Phone 811, July 30, 1925.

Safety First

Many remarkable things happen in Kansas, and not the least remarkable was the recent incident of a Kansas being caught sitting on his mother-in-law's lap and holding her hands. The Kansas was detected in this posture by a policeman, and he did not deny the accuracy of the latter's testimony. He explained, however, that he was sitting on the lap of his mother-in-law and holding her hands to prevent her using him as a target with a "six-shooter," which, he declared, she had gripped in her fingers.

Dodge Brothers Set New Record

Deliveries and Production Exceed Best Previous Week in History.

Dodge Brothers have been establishing new high records continuously for several months, as compared with similar periods for previous years, but the record of the week ending April 11 is the best in the company's history.

With retail deliveries aggregated more than 7,000, an average of more than 1,300 each production day, the best previous week was surpassed by several hundred cars. New retail orders exceeded the corresponding week of 1924 by 1,000, or approximately 19.7 per cent.

Although Dodge Brothers Motor Cars are now being built at the rate of 1,100 a day, both deliveries and new orders are some 200 a day in excess of production.

"Had dealers' stocks permitted, the number of deliveries for the recent week would have been even greater," said John A. Nichol, Jr., Vice-President in Charge of Sales. "It is not a spur, but a steady, healthy climb."

Nova Scotia Coal Strike Settled for Six Months.

Four Thousand Miners Will Return to Work on Monday--Ford Motor Company to Manufacture All Metal Airplanes--Time for a Halt in National Expenditure Says Winson Churchill.

THE CONTRACT SIGNED.
GLACE BAY, Aug. 7. The interim contract of six months was signed at noon to-day by officials of the British Empire Steel Corporation and the executive of the United Workers of America. District No. 1 in which were embodied the wage proposals, 1922 scale of wages and conditions as under 1924 agreement. The conference adjourned after noon to meet again this afternoon. The discussion will include the matter in which the miners are to return to the pits. It is expected that the whistles will blow at normal collieries for work on Monday morning.

FOUR THOUSAND MINERS WILL RESUME WORK MONDAY.
GLACE BAY, Aug. 7. The work back to the coal mines of the Province began to-night, with the signing of some maintenance men. Following the signing at noon of a six-month contract between the British Empire Steel Corporation of the United Workers of America, District No. 1 in which were embodied the wage proposals, 1922 scale of wages and conditions as under 1924 agreement. The conference adjourned after noon to meet again this afternoon. The discussion will include the matter in which the miners are to return to the pits. It is expected that the whistles will blow at normal collieries for work on Monday morning.

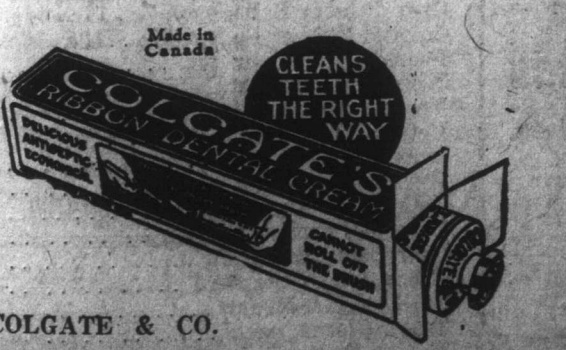

WINSTON CHURCHILL FORESHADOWS RETRENCHMENT.
LONDON, Aug. 7. Winston Churchill, Chancellor of the Exchequer, during a discussion of the national economy in the House of Commons, to-day, said that the time has come to call a halt in national expenditures. The economy discussion occupied most of to-day's session which is the House's last until November 16, until which time adjournment will be taken to-night. The Chancellor announced that Lord Curzon, who is a member of several Government committees, the Earl of Bradford, and Lord Chalmers, former Governor of Ceylon and Under Secretary for Ireland, would form an expert committee to review the expenditures of the army, navy and air forces.

HOME BANK MAY YIELD ANOTHER DIVIDEND.
TORONTO, Aug. 7. That there was a possibility of a further payment to depositors in the defunct Home Bank, from the estate, was intimated by G. T. Clark, joint liquidator of the Bank, after a conference with E. Waldon here to-day. He estimated the possible payment of five to ten per cent, entirely separate from the Government 35 per cent relief. This extra payment depends on a great deal of litigation, such as the double liability hearings which are to begin at Osgeode Hall on September 14th.

PECULIAR AIR TRAGEDY.
ROME, Aug. 7. Two girls were killed and several other persons injured, when private aviator Alfredo Mangiarocchi, flying his hydroplane near Porto Rosa, brought the machine to the water and ran into a group of bathers to-day.

BANDITS IN GOTHAM.
NEW YORK, Aug. 7. Five armed robbers to-day held up the store and factory of the Harry Bielwets Company, manufacturing furriers, sent five employees to the basement, ransacked sixteen petty safes, and escaped with furs valued at $100,000.

FRENCH FORCES PREPARING FOR DECISIVE ACTION.
FEZ, Aug. 7. French operations on a large scale, designed to bring the rebellious Rifian tribesmen to a realization that further fighting is useless, are said to be ready for launching. General Nautin in supreme command of the French forces in Morocco has just returned from Rabat.

NEGRO LYNCHED.
EXCELSIOR SPRINGS, Mo., Aug. 7. Miller Mitchell, negro, was lynched by a crowd near the Excelsior Springs Bottling Works late to-day. Mitchell was arrested here this morning on the complaint of Leonard Utz, U. S. farmer, of near Lawson. He told the police that as he was returning home in a motor car with a young woman companion, a negro flashed a light in front of his car, leaped on the running board as he slowed down struck him over the head, knocking his unconscious. The young woman told the officers she was compelled to get into the back of the car and was assaulted by the negro.

ANOTHER AUTOMOBILE TRAGEDY.
LOWELL, Mass., Aug. 7. Three were instantly killed, two died in hospital and four others were seriously injured as a result of an automobile accident here early to-day, when an automobile carrying nine persons crashed through a six-foot fence on Chelmsford Street bridge over the Boston and Maine Railroad and dropped to the roadbed.

THE FAT MAN.
Gibbon, famous as the writer of a history of Rome, found his garden a little growing tighter as he sat and mused at home. Once he had a shapely figure, most appealing to the eyes, but he kept on getting bigger and bigger. He wouldn't exercise. Learned physicians were consulted, and they always frowned and said, "Sir, you should be kept from your hammock, chair and bed; you should walk and keep on walking from the dawn till evening, but we always find you balking, holding that our reds is wrong. You should do but little eating, drink cold water from a pail, but your works you're always treating to roast beef and wine and ale. Now the garments that enfold you would enshroud three common men, and it takes two chairs to hold you, and we warn you once again." "Thus you spel with open throttle," said the great and famous man; "give me something in a bottle, give me bitters in a can. Why not banish my diseases with some medicated cream? Are physicians merely chesers? Is their dope an empty dream? 'Walk,' you say, instead of giving compound essences of scullies, 'walk if you will keep on living,' what's the matter with your pills? I would keep on living, truly, in the old accustomed way, but I'd value life unduly if I walked nine miles a day. Better far a handsome casket and a tomb on yonder hill, than bran mashes in a basket, and cold water from the rill." So this gifted man departed for the silent, sunless sea, for he was too chicken-hearted to get out and climb a tree.

Report of S. F. A. Inspector For Week Ending August 7th.
Attended two sales of cattle at the Abattoir Company. Several complaints have been made about the way the cattle have been driven through the streets. Owing to the congested condition of our streets, cattle cannot be handled much better. Sent in a horse with a very sore back, and warned the owner that if caught using the horse before the back was healed he would be brought before Court. Also sent in two other horses suffering from lameness. Watched the horses driving at the races and around the city on Regatta Day; and cab horses, express horses and ponies. To my mind they were treated well right until late in the evening and I think all those drivers who took such an interest in their horses and also the police for the way the regulations were carried out. They certainly deserve great credit. Attended to the handling of thirty-five head of cattle from the "Hillwood." The cattle were carefully landed. Was asked by Mr. Chaytor, butcher, to put to death a large bull with the humane killer. Mr. Chaytor was perfectly satisfied with the result and will import one himself a little later. Both he and Mr. William Casey contributed to the funds of the Society. Was interviewed by Mrs. Hammond, Broad Cove Road, with regard to her raccoons and through a bridge and hurting himself very much. The horse is laid up from cut legs and bruises. I advised her to see the Road Inspector regarding the bridge. Have the usual weekly report about dogs being a great annoyance, particularly one from Topsail Road. I have interviewed those in authority who claim there does not seem to be any remedy. About thirty different complaints have been attended to.

THE SUMMER COTTAGE SARDINE.
Oh little fish, which comes to us
In overcoats of tin
Once more sedate upon my plate
I see you with a grin.
Your silver side gleaming fair,
Bedecked with beads of oil.
'Tis sad, but true, to feed on you
They called me from my toil.
Engaged upon some toffy theme
Not long ago I sat,
I'd pledged my time to shape a rhyme
The world might marvel at.
But unto me there came the maid,
'To dinner, sir!' said she
'To dinner, sir!' mark that from her,
Thus dignifying thee.
Three times a week thy Norway kin
I'd pledged my time to shape a rhyme
From yonder sea, has come to me
Full many a sleek sardine.
'Tis a lovely sight, I tell you,
A healthy spot your shore;
The more I eat your oily meat
They keep on serving more.
I know, oh tiny, frail sardine,
That you would rather be
At home alive, to plunge and dive,
Than make a meal for me.
But this is what you cannot know
I, too, bemoan your fate;
I'd rather see you swimming free
Than here upon my plate.

Dear Sir--Although it may be the farthest thought from one's mind to be technical in his expressions both written and spoken, it is marvelous how many times one uses terms that are only understood by those engaged in similar pursuits. The word "dumping" has been so generally used the world over to express a certain and specific form of trading that one naturally expects its meaning and full intent to be well known to everybody whether interested in the business of trading in imports and exports or not.
But on reflection one will at last realize that this is a purely technical term. It, like many other technical expressions and terms and processes has a very simple meaning when explained and can be readily understood by the most uninitiated. May I use your valuable space to give a simple and as clear a definition or explanation of this expression as is possible within my limitations.
A country having a manufacturing industry established in it and employing its population of men and women at living wages may have its industry crippled at any time by a foreign competitor shipping into it the same manufactured articles at prices away below the cost of production with the purpose of killing out the home industry by forcing it to sell its product below cost to hold its trade. This sort of trading from the foreign competitor is called "dumping."
It has the effect of allowing to go on of forcing the home workers out of employment and the invested capital into insolvency and liquidation after which the foreign competitor advances his prices to a profit level and has the market to himself. The home consumer has then to pay an extra price for the goods to make up for the losses while the foreign manufacturer is killing out the home industry. If this method were applied to all the articles produced by the various home industries in a very short while every home industry worker would be forced out of employment, and have to leave the homeland to find employment to support his family.
"Dumping" may be brought about by many methods; for instance a very large foreign firm may by bad judgment have overproduced to the extent of millions of articles more than can be sold in their own markets and may be glad to take a very large loss by dumping into an outside market at very low prices. A great firm may go bankrupt at a time when business is bad and his wares may be sold at only a fraction of their value.
In any case whatever the reason for the cheap prices these goods coming into the home market are known as "dumped," and they have the one and same effect of ruining the home industries and throwing the home workers out of employment. As soon as the home industries are killed then these dumped goods are sold at their regular values as if they were bought in the regular way.
The only real check on the selling price of such products is the competition from the home industries. The laws of most countries provide an effective check against dumping. Newfoundland is not an exception in this respect.
The most prosperous country in the world to-day is the U.S.A., and into it it is impossible to carry on a dumping business very long before their legislators will find some effective means of putting a stop to it, hence it is to that country that our young men and women go to earn a living when their own laws are not applied to their own native land for their protection.
Patriots such as Abraham Lincoln could not descend to these methods of temporary gains at the expense of the whole people. Let us hear Abraham Lincoln on home industries when he says: "I don't know much about the

Supreme Court

 The Government would not guarantee the money, and when the Government would not guarantee the money, the Reids fell to the ground. They were on the ground, and then so far as the Reid is concerned, he ceases to be a figure of any interest in the matter.
 The Reids definitely assert in their communications, after a period of some weeks, when there were some negotiations with Blakstad, that from that time "we will not deal with Blakstad on any terms" and I do not think the Trust had any legal right to interfere in their dealing with him; and the matter as far as Blakstad was concerned.
 In June or July, the company presumed to take away authority to deal with Humber. Your Lordship will find that in 1921, there is a message dated the 28th, 1921, from Reid to Cameron which has been marked J. A. 1921. "In reply to Telegram No. 1921, Newfoundland Banking and Trust Corporation must understand authority is withdrawn regarding Humber and Power Co. deals. Negotiations will be conducted by Reid and Blakstad Co. in the future."
 Now, my Lord, in the absence of a withdrawal of authority, if the authority was justified, I think we will have to assume that it was unjustified. If the defence in his action was that the authority was rightfully withdrawn, it should have been pleaded and particularly should have been given in evidence.
 There has been no allegation on the part of the defence that the Reid Company lawfully withdrew our authority to deal with these properties; and that the position in regard to the Trust was that the Reid went over to Blakstad in Sept.-Oct. 1921. It is, however, of great interest to note that within two months of this withdrawal of authority, Mr. Conroy writes a letter in which I think is of the greatest importance in this suit, and which was produced as a result of an attack on my client's characters, which was thoroughly unjustified, and the result of which was that it rebounded on the other side's heads.
 On August 16th, 1921, Mr. Conroy, after having had an interview with Messrs. Conroy and Mr. Hudson of the Reid Company, and after having told them what terrible rascals the Reid Company had been dealing with, Mr. Conroy writes him a letter which I have already read to your Lordship, in which I think I have shown considerable misrepresentation as to what the Trust had done. The letter is dated August 14th, 1921. In that letter he describes the Reid Company as "a company of rascals"; (Reid's letter). Now, my Lord, that letter, I submit, gives us a conjunction with the interpretation which has been put on the Conroy letter by my learned friend Mr. Howley in his motion to dismiss the complaint and only correct interpretation that can be put upon Mr. Conroy's letter of November 15th, 1921.
 I would ask your Lordship to remember the circumstances under which the letter of November 15th was written. I do not think that anybody is better able to discuss those conditions than Mr. Conroy himself. He says that it was written with a view of keeping the Trust quiet; that the Trust was worrying about its composition; that the letter was composed in a manner that was going to lull them into a sense of false security, or at any rate to lull them into a sense of security, and to make them feel that they were going to get what they thought they were entitled to. Now we have heard, and so far as we are concerned, have heard with amazement Mr. Conroy's interpretation of the November letter in so far as it dealt with the Humber. I think that from my learned friend Mr. Howley heard it with some degree of surprise, because on page 45 of the afternoon session of June 26th, Mr. Howley declared that he considers is the meaning of the November letter, as follows:-
 "The original minute of August 14th, 1921 had reference to a specific deal with a specific party, and had failed. Then we come down to the time when the Reids deal direct with the Armstrongs, and they wrote this letter to the Trust, and I submit that it means this—that if we are able to carry out with Armstrong the

"deal that it was proposed to carry out with Blakstad, we will recon- nize your right to a commission similar to that which you would have got under the Blakstad deal."
 Now my Lord, that is not Mr. Conroy's definition.
 MR. HOWLEY—It is only an alternative.
 MR. EMERSON—Well, my Lord, I would have expected my learned friend to have given to the Conroy letter the Conroy interpretation, if he knew it. I think that one might expect that either in the motion to dismiss by my learned friend, Mr. Howley, or in the opening address of my learned friend, Mr. Hunt, we would have heard the Conroy definition, but we have not heard it from either of them. Not only that, but Mr. Conroy gives an entirely different interpretation on cross examination, and he gives an entirely different interpretation when we look at this letter C.O. N.C.42. And when we come to consider what was the position in regard to the St. John's Light and Power Company, the only construction that can be put upon that portion of the letter which dealt with the Humber, must be the one which the Trust might reasonably be expected to put upon it, namely, that they were going to get ten per cent. on the Humber deal if it went through with the Armstrongs.

Now, at this time, what was the position in regard to the St. John's Light and Power Company, because Mr. Conroy says "The position in regard to the Humber is somewhat similar." Your Lordship will find in the St. John's Light and Power Company file that on the 21st April 1921, there is a cable sent to Reid by the Trust:
 "Waite will inspect St. John's Light Power Co. and confirm report Armstrong Whitworth and Co. will assist finding the money if, they are given the contract."
 Now, the position in regard to the Humber, according to Mr. Conroy, is somewhat similar. The Armstrongs will assist in finding the money if they are given the contract. In another word, if the negotiations with the Armstrongs which are now going on will effect the same as under the Blakstad deal, you will get your ten per cent. of the net purchase price, the amount which was fixed by the August minute passed while Major MacDonald was in St. John's.
 Mr. Conroy tried to get away from that construction of the November letter, and I submit that he failed. He tried in cross-examination and he failed, and my learned friend, I submit, has not re-established him in the eyes of the court.
 At the time when that letter was written, the position was that the Armstrongs would assist in getting the money in connection with the St. John's Light and Power Company, if they get the contract. Therefore, we must read paragraph 1 of the letter of November 15th in the light of that position; and if we read it in that way, it reads as follows:-

 "As to the proposed bond issue of the St. John's Light and Power Co., Ltd., we confirm that should the money be obtained through the assistance of the Sir W. G. Armstrongs, Whitworth Co. Ltd., or other parties introduced by you, Messrs. Armstrong, Whitworth and Company, being the contractors, a commission will be payable to you to be settled by arbitration. As to the Humber Valley project the position is somewhat similar. The Commission... The whole thing is commission. The Commission payable to the Trust under the August minute, which is ten per cent. of the net purchase price, will be paid to you if the Armstrongs, being contractors, assist us in such a way that we raise the money for the development," and that is exactly what they did.

 MR. HOWLEY—Excuse me; you said in your opening speech that they did not assist us, and the evidence is that the Bank of England brokers raised the money.
 MR. EMERSON—In floating the loan, I am talking now about assisting in raising the money, and what Armstrongs did in connection with it. Waite came here to negotiate with our Government for the issue of a guarantee, and the Armstrong people interviewed the Imperial Government giving a guarantee; and the result of Armstrong's negotiations was that a guarantee was given by both Governments and if the guarantee had not been given no money would have been raised; and it was through the efforts of the Armstrong Company that the guarantee of the Governments was obtained, and the Humber project floated; and if the Armstrong Company had not given their assistance the scheme would never have been launched. That is the evidence of the witnesses called by the defendants themselves in London—Harrison and Waite and all the rest of them.
 Now there has been a weird and wonderful argument put forward, that at this time the negotiations—at the time this letter was written, the negotiations with the Armstrongs were of such a nature that the Reids would not get any purchase price for their assets. The thing is not very clear. There is no evidence to support it except the word of Mr. Conroy. I do not wish to cast any aspersions on what Mr. Conroy said, but I think, in view of the number of witnesses that were called that the matters might have been clearly brought forth, and put to these witnesses. However, in a general way it was to the effect that Reids were to throw all their assets into the pot, and they were to mortgage these assets for the purpose of obtaining working capital, and they were to make no profit until the adventures were paid up, and the company was earning dividends. Those were supposed to be the negotiations that were going on with Armstrongs when this letter was written, and according to Mr. Conroy, he was practically saying to the Trust that if the negotiations continue under the present conditions you will get paid ten per cent. of the purchase price. And yet here is a witness who says that he is writing this letter to the Trust, which is not a trick, and which is not intended to deceive them; and he is saying, "now, if you fellows, who think you have a claim against us, will keep quiet, you will be paid all that is due to you. You are going to get ten per cent. of nothing. But if we make negotiations that result in our getting two million dollars, you will not get ten per cent. of that. If you just keep quiet, and we get nothing from the Armstrongs, you will get ten per cent. of that, but if we get something from the Armstrongs you will not get anything."

 Now, my Lord, what occurred in fact. A tremendous do was made by Mr. Conroy about the fact that Mr. Waite came out here in 1921, and was here in January, 1922, to negotiate with our Government here for the complete guarantee of the whole issue of $20,000,000; and those negotiations failed, and then Mr. Conroy with his hands in the air says the whole thing (Continued on 8th page.)

A Wise Decision

It will not be a matter of surprise to learn that His Excellency the Governor has decided against the issuance of a proclamation calling for a Bye-Election at this period.

We understand that amongst the reasons for this decision are the following:—

- 1. The district is already adequately represented. 2. The cost of preparing voters lists (including women) and the other costs of an election would be great.

The following are instances (of which there are probably others) in which vacancies have not been filled within six months of their occurrence:—The death of the late Hon. A. W. Harvey, in 1903, left a vacancy in H.R. Grace for two years.

The above vacancies occurred in the premiership of Sir Robert Bond, Lord Morris, Sir William Lloyd and Sir Richard Squires, and apparently all acted on the principle that surrounding circumstances had to be considered and a wise discretion exercised in the public interest in holding elections, and thus many precedents have been set for the Governor's decision.

dorsed by thoughtful citizens and general relief felt that the turmoil of a contested election will not be allowed to interfere with the orderly progress which is now being made in public matters.

Who is she that never leaves us, Though in prison we may be; Aye, and even then believes us Suffering innocently?

Who is she that watches o'er us From the cradle to the grave, Ever singing that old chorus:—"Love can help you, love can save?"

Who is she though heart be breaking, Bowed with pain and grieved with we, Youth long left her, strength forsaken? Still will wait upon us so?

Who is she though tired and weary From the burdens of the year; Forgetting all will come quite cheery To help to brush away our tears?

Who is she when troubles claim us, Ever watchful helps us out; Bears our burdens, does not blame us, Clears the atmosphere about?

MOORE-HISCOCK.

At 8.30 this morning the Cathedral of St. John the Baptist was the scene of a very pretty wedding, when Rev. F. Hiseock, B.A., Rector of Trinity, led to the altar Miss G. V. Moore of Circular Road, this city. The ceremony was performed by Rt. Rev. the Lord Bishop of Newfoundland. The bride wore a costume of navy blue arch cowlflower crepe de chene, and a silver fox fur. She carried an old-fashioned bouquet of pink carnations, blue cornflowers and sweet peas.

The groom was Mr. Chas. Hammond, son of the bride, and the bride was given away by her uncle, Chas. Hammond. The groom was escorted by Gordon Moore, brother of the bride. After the ceremony the party motored to the home of the bride's mother where breakfast was served. His Lordship the Bishop proposed the toast to the bride and groom. The groom's present to the bride was a silver service, to the matron of honour a signet ring, and to the best man a fountain pen. The bride was the recipient of many useful and valuable gifts. To Rev. and Mrs. Hiseock the Telegram wishes many years of matrimonial bliss.

LAST NIGHT'S GAME.

B.S. The Victors.

The B.S. defeated the Guards by two goals to all at St. George's Field last night after what proved to be a rather listless game. The attendance was large while the evening was all that could be desired for good football, and with two teams fighting for championship honors a much better game had been hoped for. The Guards lacked their usual pep, while the B.S. line was away off color, and had it not been for the splendid work of Ellis in the back division, and the saving of Rose, the goalkeeper, they would have suffered a nasty defeat. The B.S. team confined the ball to Guards territory three parts of the game, and it was only on one or two occasions that the Irish goal was in danger. By their win last night the B.S. bettered their chances for the championship. The C.C.C. Band, in attendance, played lively selections throughout.

First Half.

As soon as the ball was placed in motion the B.S. forwards got going nicely and kept the play to the western end, where they made several attempts to score. The onslaught was continued, several corners followed, and although the ball was placed to the goal mouth, the Guards always managed to clear it from danger. The Guards forwards managed to get the ball east only on two occasions in this half, but the shooting on goal was very feeble. Despite the determined attacks of the Irish in the play which followed, no goals resulted, and the half time whistle blew with no scoring.

Second Half.

Scarcely had the ball been centered, when the B.S. staged an attack on their opponent's goal, a shot was sent to Rose, which was well stopped, but only partly cleared, and saw H. Phalen rise in and head the ball in the net, scoring No. 1 for the B.S. The Guards then showed a little life, when Horney made a splendid run up the left wing. A difficult shot was sent across only to be well handled by J. Phalen. Play was confined to this end for a few minutes, when MacInn and Meadus each had several tries, but no goals resulted.

goals resulted. Play then favored the B.S., and after eighteen minutes had elapsed, H. Phalen scored a second goal for his team on a rebound shot. During the balance of the game honors were pretty evenly divided, with the ball travelling from end to end. The full-time whistle sounded leaving the B.S. victors by 2 goals to nil.

Player Injured.

During the progress of the game, Mr. W. B. Skinner, of the B.S. team, was hit a forcible blow in the side of the head with the ball, at close quarters, and was knocked out for some minutes. After a brief rest he continued the game, but after it was over and on going to the dressing room, he collapsed. Dr. Fallon, upon being called to the field, made an examination of his injuries and ordered his immediate removal to hospital for treatment. During the night Mr. Skinner gradually improved and was well enough to leave hospital this morning for his home.

WORLD BOXING CHAMPIONS MAY BE SUSPENDED.

Jack Dempsey and Mickey Walker Ordered to Appear Before Commission.

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—Jack Dempsey and Mickey Walker will be indefinitely suspended by the New York State Athletic Commission to-morrow if they do not appear in person before the Commission and sign an agreement of the title matches with their outstanding challengers, Harry Wills and Dave Shade. This was learned from a reliable source close to the boxing commission to-night.

Dempsey's presence on the Pacific Coast prohibits his attendance while Walker, it was learned to-night will not accept the Commission's invitation to a conference until the arrival of his manager, Jack Kearns, who is now on his way east.

It was further learned that Wills and Gene Tunney, American lightweight champion would be matched for a fight, winner to be declared the "world's lightweight champion," until such a time as Dempsey, personally, appeared before the commission and posts a bond and signs articles of agreement for a match with Wills.

Too Nervous to Drive

LADY'S LICENCE SUSPENDED FOR TEN YEARS.

It's a very serious danger to the public for you to have a license if all you are too nervous. We must protect the public; and not only do we fine you $5 and $125.00 witnesses' expenses, but also suspend your driving license for ten years." This was the verdict of the Bolton Borough Bench, uttered by the Mayor, in the case of Margaret Clay, of Broad Street, Pendleton, who was charged with driving to the danger of the public. The charge was the sequel to a collision at the junction of Bradshawgate and Trinity Street, Bolton. Defendant was alleged to have misread an old woman, who was crossing the road, so narrowly that her basket was knocked from her arm. Clay then appeared to lose control, with the result that she ran into a stationary motor car, locking the two so effectively that it took half an hour to separate them.

Newfoundlander Injured on S.S. Newton Bay

James Meade, belonging to Burd Islands, Newfoundland, and a member of the crew of the steamer Newton Bay, Capt. Poole, fell in the hold of the steamer, on Saturday, a distance of about twenty five feet, and seriously injured his spine. The steamer was en route to Halifax from St. Pierre with part cargo of liquor and the work of putting down the hatch had been about completed when Meade happened to step on a loose one which tipped and precipitated him to the bottom of the hold. He was taken up in an unconscious condition and the steamer rushed to North Sydney where he was placed in the Hamilton Hospital, and on Monday morning taken to Halifax. On examination there it was found that his spine was broken and the consensus of opinion is that he will not survive the accident. He is twenty six years of age and his wife and two children reside in Halifax.—N.S. Herald.

Majestic Features Win Approval

Big Attractions Promised Next Week. Johnnie Walker scored a big hit at the Majestic Theatre again last night, in his thirty-starring F.B.O. vehicle, entitled "Fashionable Fakers." Walker, as the naive, trusting, innocent Thaddeus, unaware that in "manufacturing" antique furniture he is doing anything dishonest, furnishes genuine amusement and wins further renown for his star of "Over the Hill" and several Emory Johnson melodramas, and in putting it over, Walker demonstrates his versatility as a featured player. It is entirely removed from his dashing caballero, as pictured in "Captain Fly-by-Night," or the hard working mechanic in "The Fourth Musketeer." There is nothing that quite "gets" an audience like the final triumph of a small-town hero, who is the object of derision during the first part of the play, who becomes more deeply involved in trouble as the tale progresses, only to emerge vindicated and victorious. The wrestling feature in which Joe Stetcher wins a sensational bout, was also thoroughly enjoyed by the audience, as well as the comedy. To-night is the last chance the public will have of seeing those three excellent pictures.

De La Ferre in Oriental Mystic at Crescent

Last night's act at the Crescent Theatre was the much talked of attraction, "Mysteria," the interpreter of the mind, from the Far East, the land of mystic and unusual sensation. This act is not at all like the previous one, it is distinctly different in every way and is especially costumed in appropriate garb, worn by the famous Yogi. Many questions were sent in by interested patrons and the answers were given from the stage. This performance is interesting as well as entertaining. To-night the same bill will be presented. Dancing Babe De La Ferre, the talented child dancer of tender years delighted her audience with her dainty dance which she so skilfully performed. At the conclusion of her dance she received tremendous applause. The picture attraction is "The King of Wild Horses," the sensational drama in which an outstanding role is enacted by a beautiful horse.

... cash and parting with a proportion of the shares, the result of the... million dollars of shares... company and get no cash, we would have ten per cent on the... million dollars. It is simply a matter of as it were, juggling with... It makes no real difference, the Reids were to get certain benefits of that flotation, and on those benefits we were entitled to ten per cent. It is quite immaterial, as Mr. Conroy pointed out, whether the Reids in these benefits by retention of shares.

MR. HUNT—If my learned friend will permit me to say, that was a letter to our own solicitors.
MR. EMERSON—Well, surely, if we are employed by the Reids to make a flotation of an enterprise on the basis of ten per cent, we are to get ten per cent, of the profits and we carry out the instructions which we are given, so as to result in their acquiring, either by retention or otherwise, certain shares... KENT, J.—How could they acquire them by retention?
MR. EMERSON—Well, perhaps the term is not quite accurate, but if the Reids, as a result of the flotation are left in possession—we can put it that way—are left in possession of certain shares. Just let us take the Blakstad agreement. Originally we were to sell the Humber to the Blakstad Company and the Reids were to get a proportion of shares in the new company that would result in the destruction of their shares in the Products Company. The Products Company would cease to exist and the Reids shares in the Products Company would be destroyed, and they would get a percentage in the Blakstad company of shares in lieu of the assets that they held in the Products Company. Now, on their instructions, we alter the method—it is only an alteration in method; it is not an alteration in result—and, instead of the Reids destroying their shares in the Products Company and getting a percentage in the Blakstad Company, they retain their proportion in the Products Company and abandon the idea of getting shares in the new company, and the result is that the Reids as a direct result of our negotiations are in possession of a proportion of the shares in the Humber Company. It does not matter whether you call it the Blakstad Company or the Products Company—as a result of our efforts they have certain shares in the Humber Company, they receive certain cash and certain bonds, so that as a result of our work the Reids find that they have shares in the Humber Company.

MR. HUNT—If my learned friend will permit me, he stated yesterday that we were the owners of the Products Company. Well, take the position that we own all these shares, surely you would not claim commission on what we would retain.
MR. EMERSON—Certainly.
MR. HUNT—Under what?
MR. EMERSON—Under the August Agreement.
MR. HUNT—That says merely on the purchase price.
MR. EMERSON—But at that time it was contemplated that we were to sell to a new company and you were to get a certain proportion of shares in that new company. Now, it is quite immaterial what we name the company; the result of our work is that the Reids to-day, say, have certain shares in the Humber Company.
KENT, J.—On a re-organization you really pay for the right to retain these shares; on the re-organization you are to retain a certain number of shares in the re-organized company in consideration of your putting a certain quantity of land into the assets of the company.
MR. EMERSON—That is really the position, yes. You see, after all, the spirit of the transaction may be looked at as well as the letter. We are agents and we are employed for a specific purpose, and owing just to a technical difference, a technical point arising in the course of it, we alter the method whereby a flotation takes place. That is really all that happens. As a result of the work which we perform, the Reids find themselves in a position of being owners of a proportion of the capital of the Humber Company. That was what we were employed to see that they had (plus the cash and the debentures and so forth) when the August minute was passed, and that is what we obtained for them. If we had carried out the original scheme, they would have had the same thing; they would have had a proportion of shares in the Humber Company.
MR. HUNT—My learned friend will, I am sure, admit that the original scheme could not be carried out because the company could not assign its commission.
MR. EMERSON—It is purely a technical point that arose that made it necessary in some way to alter the scheme of flotation; that's all.
KENT, J.—But that altered scheme was a departure from what was contemplated at the time.
MR. EMERSON—Not a substantial departure; it is only a technical de-departure from the position that existed in August. Let us put it this way: that the whole difficulty could have been got over by a slight amendment to the Products Company Act. The difficulty was that the Products Company could not assign its concessions, because the word "assigns" was not in the contract with the Government. Now, the whole Blakstad scheme could have been carried through in its entirety as settled in February as a complete and undoubted sale if a slight amendment had been made to the Products Company Act which would have allowed them to assign their concessions. Now, to avoid having to make that amendment—applying to the Legislature to make that amendment—this other scheme was evolved by the Reids, by Conroy, because, as Mr. Conroy says, the Reid Company would get exactly the same benefits under the one scheme as under the other. It all comes down to getting clear in one's mind the position as to what we were employed to do. We were employed to see that, as a result of our flotation, the Reid interests would get shares in the Humber Company, either a new one—in fact, it was a new one at the time when the matter was discussed in August—or in the old one, and it was subsequently decided in February. The Reids got those shares in the Humber Company, the Humber Development Company, and it is quite immaterial, so far as we are concerned, whether our efforts resulted in their getting the percentage in the new company or in the old company. We were not the cause of the change in the plans; the principals were; and it must be taken that the alteration in the plan was not to make any difference to the payment that we were to receive if the benefits were secured to the Reids were the same or subsequently the same; and they were, supposing that the Reid Company, as a result of this change in method, had received no cash at all, but that as a result of our efforts, Blakstad was brought in as a manager and controlling interest and they got no money at all, would the work of the Trust have to go by the board, and they get nothing? I think the exact words are even stronger than that, "In the face of these facts we no longer felt that we were justified in entrusting our interests to their management, and therefore took over the direction of negotiations ourselves; of course, without prejudice to the rights of the shareholders of the Trust to receive commission on transactions completed by the Trust" and completed by us with the same parties." Now, surely, the Humber deal was a transaction commenced by us and completed by the Reids with the Armstrongs, with whom, as Mr. Conroy says, we brought them into relationship. In fact, my Lord, paragraph No. 3 is a very important part of this letter. "We consider that by bringing us into relations with the Messrs. Armstrongs and the British Metal Corporation the Trust has performed a very useful function." In other words, it is recognized that we have earned our commission by bringing them into relation with the Armstrongs and they direct us now to stand aside and they will conduct the negotiations themselves. That is the meaning of that letter. "You are entitled to carry on these negotiations to a conclusion, but you stand aside and under your commission, agreement you will be paid your commission." It is, as Mr. Conroy says, "without prejudice to the rights of the Trust." Then, my Lord, to bear out this position, let me refer to the fact that in his letter, No. 487 of the 15th of November, Mr. Conroy says: "As it is quite possible that our London negotiations regarding the Humber and Power bonds may lead to nothing, and that we may have to conclude arrangements with our New York friends, and purchase of the Trust shares is in the nature of a gamble, and the price would therefore have to be quite a reasonable one." Now, where is the gamble? The gamble must be, if we are successful in London, you will get something, but if our negotiations in London come to nothing and we have to go to New York, the Trust will get nothing. That is borne out very strongly in letter "C.O.N.C.49". It is one of the letters that are not in the volume, from Conroy to Jackson dated the sixteenth of November, 1921, the day after this famous letter was written. (Reads letter.) In other words, if the negotiations for the Humber are carried out in England it will result in the Trust getting the commission to which they are entitled, whereas if it is carried out in New York they will get nothing, and therefore the idea of purchasing the shares at this stage in the negotiations is in the nature of a gamble. Furthermore, there is obvious evidence of Mr. Conroy's willingness, the Reids' willingness, to purchase the shares of the Trust at this time for £30,000, if arrangements could be made with the Bank of Montreal in Montreal. That is apparent from letters No. 372 and 373. Now, if Mr. Conroy was prepared to gamble to the extent of £30,000 in regard to our commission at this time, it must have been because the amount of commission would be very substantial if the negotiations in London succeeded. Now, my Lord, at this time, when Mr. Conroy wrote this letter, Blakstad had been eliminated from the deal; there is no question about that; it is common ground. If Mr. Conroy intended to convey that we would only get a commission in accordance with the strict terms of the August Minute. In other words, take the Minute as it stands and in so many words construe it, it should mean that we could not get anything because there would be no Blakstad. He obviously therefore did not intend to refer to the August Minute as being a contract whose exact words must be taken in their literal meaning for the purpose of settling our rights. Now, in the second place, the August Minute contemplated a sale to Blakstad out and out, and that idea had been abandoned because Mr. Conroy knew that the Products Company could not assign. Therefore, in referring to the August Minute he was not referring to that part of it. There is only one part of the August Minute to which he could possibly have been referring, and that is a ten per cent commission; unless, as I say, the whole letter was intended as a trick. Now, Mr. Conroy admits that, on page 39 of the same day, (Reads evidence of the 2nd of July, page 39, from "I intended to convey that they would be paid if they were entitled to it" down to "Ten per cent of the purchase price? Yes.") So that in referring to the August Minute what Mr. Conroy was referring to was the ten per cent commission, he was not referring to an outright sale because that was abandoned; he was not referring to Blakstad because he had been eliminated; and the only part remaining was the ten per cent commission. Now, my learned friend has stressed the fact that we did not introduce the Armstrongs as purchasers, but he has failed, so far as I can see, to prove that Armstrongs were purchasers under the final agreement. It is true they bought some shares, but I shall deal with the actual agreements in a moment and show that it was the same position as under the Blakstad deal; that they really took the place of Blakstad in obtaining control, and that the cash paid for the shares is the same as under the Blakstad deal and for the same purpose, although not expressed in the same words. Now, that we brought Armstrong into the deal is quite apparent; it is common ground; if we required any evidence on the point Mr. Conroy's letter of the 15th November is quite clear; it is also admitted in the Pleadings that we brought them in, but they claim that we did not bring them in as anything but contractors. Now the interest of Armstrongs under the existing agreements will be found in Paragraph 19, on page 19 of the Statement of Claim. There is a summary there which is very accurate. It runs into several pages and up to page 25, and just at the end of that very long paragraph it sets forth that all these agreements are provisional and they are provisional on the construction contract between the Power & Paper Company and the Armstrong Company for the erection and equipping of the said mills and works having been duly entered into. In other words, until Armstrongs are satisfied that they are to be the contractors on the Humber, all the agreements are provisional. The one condition upon which the Armstrongs go into the deal is as contractors, and they will not do a single thing; they will not become parties to the documents, until it has been settled beyond all doubt that they are to be the contractors. It was as contractors that they came in originally, and it is as contractors that they are up now, in their capacity as contractors, and in that capacity only, they purchased certain shares from the Reids, and we have only to assume that the position is somewhat like this: that regardless of what the ultimate result may be as to the profits to be earned by the Armstrongs Company as share-holders in the Power & Paper Company, they were prepared to take a chance on expending $65,000 for the purchase of those shares for the purpose of getting this contract, which as the debenture issue shows, involves somewhere in the vicinity of twenty millions, and that is the real reason and the only reason why they bought those shares, so as to ensure that the conditions which were laid down by the Government that they should have control would be carried out. Now, in regard to that $65,000, do what extent can we say that the Armstrongs must be looked upon as having changed their position and became not contractors, but purchasers. Your Lordship will remember that I put to Mr. Conroy the question as to how this amount of $65,000 for the fifty-one per cent interest in the Power & Paper Company was arrived at, and he told us that it was the balance of a million dollars cash after there had been expended some $314,000 mentioned in the letter No. 440 which is "C.O.N.C. 24." Your Lordship will see that it is agreed that the Products Corporation shall either exercise the options mentioned to the extent of $314,560 or else the Reids furnish the funds to the Power & Paper Company out of which it is to be exercised, and that $314,000 plus the $65,000 makes a million dollars, so Mr. Conroy tells us, that the Reids were to receive. In other words, in this flotation the Reids get a million dollars cash, and out of the million dollars cash they have to spend $314,560 in the exercise of options or provide the funds to the Products Company to exercise the options themselves, and the Armstrongs are to get control of the Products Corporation. It is exactly the same position as under the Blakstad agreement, only that in the Blakstad agreements the as-ignment of eleven million dollars' worth of stock to Blakstad is not expressed to have been made in consideration of the payment of one million dollars. Here, for all practical purposes, the same position arises, but in the documents the payment of the million cash is expressed to be in consideration of a transfer of the fifty-one per cent of the common stock, so that Armstrongs in obtaining these shares obtained them in exactly the same way that Blakstad did, and Armstrongs are in a dual capacity in the agreement; they are there as Blakstad was under his agreement, and they are there as contractors, but they carried out. Now, in regard to that $65,000, do what extent can we say that the Armstrongs must be looked upon as having changed their position and became not contractors, but purchasers. Your Lordship will remember that I put to Mr. Conroy the question as to how this amount of $65,000 for the fifty-one per cent interest in the Power & Paper Company was arrived at, and he told us that it was the balance of a million dollars cash after there had been expended some $314,000 mentioned in the letter No. 440 which is "C.O.N.C. 24." Your Lordship will see that it is agreed that the Products Corporation shall either exercise the options mentioned to the will not step into Blakstad's shoes until they are made contractors, and the whole reason for their taking his place was that they were then entirely contractors. Now, your Lordship put the question to Mr. Howley: If the Armstrongs take Blakstad's position, step into his shoes, are we entitled to commission? And I think he admitted we were. Well, Armstrongs have stepped into Blakstad's shoes; they have taken Blakstad's position.

MR. HOWLEY—That is not what I said.

MR. EMERSON—I am speaking from memory; I did not look up the record; but, in any event, I will put the position as my own. If Armstrongs stepped into Blakstad's shoes in the manner in which they have stepped into them, we are entitled to our commission. Here we have the whole Blakstad scheme in its entirety almost exactly, with one exception, that Blakstad is no longer there as an operator, the Armstrongs have taken his place. We have all the elements of the scheme which was developed by the Trust; we have the Government guarantee of the debenture issue;—it is true that the assistance of the British Government had been added,—we have the Armstrongs, whom we introduced, in control of the operations; we have Armstrongs as contractors; as we have in the scheme for the development under Blakstad we have the Reids getting a million dollars cash; we have the Reids retaining forty-nine per cent. of the stock; it is true that we do not get any bonds, but in lieu of the bonds they get those royalties which are payable to the Mines & Forests, Ltd., in perpetuity, and equivalent of bonds; we have the same assets involved, the same acreage, about two million acres of land; you have the same development of something in the vicinity of $50,000 horsepower; you have the scheme for the erection of pulp and paper mills to the extent of four hundred tons a day, or 120,000 tons a year. Every element of the Blakstad scheme as developed by the Trust is to be found in the Armstrong agreements; and, my Lord, I think it is fair to point out that the Reids themselves have given evidence that they have had these assets for over thirty years; they have in a letter to Armstrongs stated that they had for years been trying to get into contact with people to develop them; they never did a single thing until the Trust came on the scene, and for the first time . . .

MR. HUNT—In connection with the Humber they did nothing? Well, there was the Carbide Wilson scheme.

MR. EMERSON—Yes, it was a very successful thing; they spent $250,000 and got nothing.

MR. HUNT—Yes, because the wage came on, and Wilson died.

MR. EMERSON—They did not develop anything; they did not float any scheme; they did not raise any money to do any development, and even if they had done anything under the Carbide Wilson scheme it would have been after having held the assets for thirty years without doing anything. But the Carbide Wilson scheme was dead; it was all dead until the Trust came along.

MR. HUNT—Of course, our position is that the Trust did nothing.

MR. EMERSON—Not a single thing was done except to spend some money, as I say, in this Wilson scheme, and even giving them credit for having done that, why, having made that expenditure, were they not able themselves without the intervention of the Trust, to float the Humber scheme. They were very glad to avail of the Trust's efforts when a scheme was formulated by them, very glad indeed to get the Trust's efforts, they steal their brains; they take their scheme and develop the project under the Trust's scheme, and now they refuse to pay for it.

MR. HOWLEY—Did they not contract for the use of their brains?

MR. EMERSON—They got the development of the Humber from their brains entirely. There is not a suggestion that has come from the Reids in connection with it, so far as I can see. They did not even know what was going on, apparently.

Now, my Lord, the Armstrong agreements were a continuation of ours; there is no hiatus at all; there is no question at all of these negotiations continuing from the very start, from the time we took charge up to their consummation in October, 1922, without any serious break. They get the same benefits under the Armstrong agreements that they were to get under the Blakstad agreements, and surely we are entitled to get the benefits in the same way we would have been entitled to get them under the Blakstad agreement.

Now, there is one very important little detail to which I think reference should be made, and I think it is this: The Armstrong agreements were concluded on the 12th October, 1922, and on the 10th of November, the ink being hardly dry on them, Mr. Conroy brings down copies to Parkers & Hammond's Office. Why? Obviously to make Parkers & Hammond aware of what they were getting on the deal for the purpose of settling this commission if we were to get nothing what was the object of sending them down.

MR. HOWLEY—They were asked for.

MR. EMERSON—What evidence is there of it.

MR. HOWLEY—There is evidence. MR. EMERSON—There is no such thing. There is no such evidence. They brought them down to Parkers & Hammond, so far as the evidence goes, without the slightest request or anything else. He had not then thought of the construction that he put upon the letter.

Now, my learned friends have not argued the plea in regard to the November letter. I do not know whether I should argue it, my Lord.

KENT, J.—It is in the pleadings, it is in the same position as the question that arose under the Statute of Frauds.

MR. EMERSON—Yes, it is rather difficult for me unless the point is argued.

KENT, J.—Are you still standing upon that plea?

MR. HOWLEY—Yes, my Lord. We have not argued it in detail, my Lord. I did not think there was any necessity to argue it. It is abundantly apparent from the evidence that there is no consideration for it.

KENT, J.—Is that your position, Mr. Howley?

MR. HOWLEY—That is the position, my Lord.

KENT, J.—This letter embodies the arrangement that was come to between the parties at the time. It may be based upon other consideration.

MR. HOWLEY—It may be argued that the consideration was a forbearance or suggestion of forbearance to sue at the time, but I leave that matter, my Lord, to your Lordship.

MR. EMERSON—That is what Mr. Conroy says in his evidence.

MR. HOWLEY—That may be argued, if your Lordship feels that it is sustained.

KENT, J.—I have not suggested that I have not considered the matter at all from the standpoint of coming to a decision.

Big Facts About Little Things

Everywhere you go, you see people smoking, but few smokers ever give a thought to the actual amount of the weed consumed day by day. So far as can be ascertained, the daily ration of tobacco for the people of the British Isles is rather over 110 tons.

Think of twenty-two five-ton lorries, each loaded to its utmost capacity, and this may give you some idea of the tremendous consumption of this one single commodity. About two-thirds of the total is smoked in the shape of cigarettes.

Cigarettes make us think of matches, and though matches cost three times what they did in 1914, the consumption is enormous. It is reckoned at well over two hundred millions a day. But when you remember that a pipe smoker often uses six matches to one pipeful of tobacco you begin to understand how the matches go.

Hair-Raising!
The head of a stocking-making factory, speaking to his hands, told them that every week there were lost or broken in the factory 11,760 needles worth about a farthing apiece. The number of needles and pins used daily in a country like ours is almost beyond calculation.

Another article of which the consumption is almost incredible is the hairpin. In spite of the number of ladies who have hobbled their hair, the hairpin factories seem as busy as ever. Some years ago the 'Strand Magazine' published a photograph showing a pile of hairpins picked up by six people during a five-mile walk. They numbered 327.

String is one of those common things of which the consumption is almost incredible. The Post Office alone uses enough yearly to tie London to New York. Then think of the thousands of warehouses and shops where busy fingers are tying up parcels all day long. We shall be well within limits if we say that the consumption of string in these islands is a thousand miles a day.

As she rose from the piano, her husband turned to one of the guests, and asked, "would you like a soupa before dinner?" "I don't mind if I do," replied the guest, showing animation. Hospitals in the Skies
Sixteen Years of Air Triumphs.
Sixteen years ago, on July 25th, a man made himself world-famous and wrote his name for all time on the scroll of adventure and achievement. This man did it for the first time what is now done several times a day. He flew the Channel. His name was Louis Bleriot.

Nowadays it does not sound much of an adventure to cross the Channel upon wings; but when Bleriot accomplished what was then thought to be impossible he did it on a tiny monoplane with an engine of only 25 horse-power. Anything might have happened, for at that time death was always very close to the aerial pioneer. Bleriot's reward was £1,000 and fame. He earned both. To cross the narrow strip of water on that primitive machine was tempting Fate indeed.

It is bewildering to think of the progress made in the air since that red-letter occasion. The opposite extremes have been reached typically in the Avro baby motor glider of 3½ horse-power and in one or two types of giant aeroplanes carrying Napier and Aldershot Cub engines of 1,000 horse-power. And we have progressed from speeds of round about thirty miles an hour to over 200 miles an hour!

When Bleriot started on his perilous journey he sat exposed to the draught of his propeller, while his cockpit was by no means a lap of luxury. When the air traveller today, in his Handley-Page or his Instone air liner, flies across the Channel, he does so in a comfortable armchair, and he may read with ease, or take refreshment, or glance at the panorama of cloud and seascape. No draught; no cold. And, bearing in mind the light fatality figures, little risk.

Other signs of progress are equally bewildering. Only a few weeks ago a "Moth" two-seater aeroplane was flown from London to Zurich and back, a distance of 1,000 miles, in a day. And carrying well over a dozen passengers is a simple task for some of our big planes.

From being, then, simply a spectacular and hazardous form of sport, in sixteen years flying has become a reliable and useful means of transport in all weathers except when there is fog. The fog difficulty is being overcome by experiments with wireless.

Consider, too, the Vickers "Vimy" ambulance, now in use in some parts of the world. This machine, carrying two 450 horse-power engines, has accommodation for a crew of two, a doctor, nurse, and four stretcher cases or eight "sitting up" cases. The interior of its cabin is not unlike a miniature hospital.

Wonderful long-distance flights, such as the England-Australia and Newfoundland-Ireland journeys, are almost too numerous to mention.

Wireless has been used with flight within recent memory. Before the days of radio telephony the orders of a squadron-leader were sent to other pilots in the air by means of a code, but to-day air-drill instructions are transmitted in the air by means of telephony, the pilots hearing their commander above the roar of the aeroplane engine. This is, perhaps, the most remarkable development of all. In France, too, an aeroplane has been flown for short periods under wireless control—that is, without a pilot being on board.

Wireless is also used on the regular Continental air routes. By its use, pilots are enabled to ascertain their exact position should they become lost in haze or fog, and they can also report their positions to the chief aerodromes.

A short time ago, an air passenger on the other side of the Atlantic decided that he would like to buy up certain shares without delay. By means of wireless, and while still in the air, he got into touch with his stock-broker and secured the shares.

Menace in the Milk

COWS AND CONSUMPTION—"CAUSING DEATH AND DISEASE."

The danger resulting from the milk of tuberculous cows, which was declared to be causing death and disease among children, was emphasized yesterday at the eleventh annual conference of the National Association for the Prevention of Tuberculosis, opened at the hall of the Royal Society of Medicine, Wimpole Street, W. "Tuberculosis in Childhood" was the subject under discussion, and the Hon. Sir Arthur Stanley presided.

Opening the conference, Sir Kingsley Wood, M.P., Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Health, said that tuberculosis was one of the costliest as well as one of the greatest scourges of civilisation. Its chief birthplace and home was the squalid, ill-ventilated, and overcrowded dwelling, and it was for that reason that the Ministry was turning such great attention to the housing difficulty. On behalf of the Ministry and the Education Department he could state that they looked at the problem of tuberculosis in childhood in a most hopeful fashion. In ten years the mortality among children from pulmonary tuberculosis had fallen by about 46 per cent., and from non-pulmonary tuberculosis by about 42 per cent., while the number of new cases of both types had also substantially diminished.

Professor Pirquet, of Vienna, in a paper, said that for the poorer parts of the population of Vienna tuberculosis represented an infection which had about the same frequency as measles, and scarcely one child reached the age of 20 without having come into contact with it. The enormous frequency of the affliction showed that it was not nearly so dangerous as was formerly believed.

Dr. A. Stanley Griffith (Cambridge) emphasised the dangers arising from tuberculous milk. He said that bovine tuberculosis in human beings appeared to be more prevalent in England than in any other country except Scotland. The human tubercle bacillus was the more frequent cause of tuberculosis in children, but he found on investigating a number of surgical forms of tuberculosis that 50 per cent. of the lupus cases and 40 per cent. of the bone and joint cases were of bovine origin. "One may legitimately ask why, when the evidence is so conclusive of the danger to man of tuberculous cows' milk, so few steps have been taken to reduce the menace," said Dr. Griffith. "Tuberculosis in cattle is more prevalent now than ever it was—one in every three milk cows is said to be tuberculous in some degree—and at the present day tuberculous milk is being sold for human consumption and is causing death and disease among children."

"The ordinary person does not apparently realise that raw cow's milk frequently contains living germs which may set up fatal and crippling disease in children," Dr. Griffith added. "If milk were heated at 85 degrees centigrade for a few minutes in a closed receptacle the germs of the disease were certainly destroyed; but this was a precaution which could be observed only in the homes of the well-to-do. The only certain method of making raw milk safe for consumption was by completely eradicating bovine tuberculosis. Until the ideal of tubercle-free herds had been attained all milk which was not obtained from such herds or was not efficiently pasteurised should be sterilised in the homes before being given to infants, children, or sick persons."

Protection from Infection.
Dr. Claude Riviere (London), who disagreed with Dr. Griffith, said that in modern civilised communities repeated infection with the tubercle bacillus was unavoidable. This infection led to immunity and protection against disease. He contended that the child had to meet the tubercle bacillus sooner or later, and they had in cow's milk the form of tubercle bacillus least virulent to man. "If I were a native of some tubercle free community paying a first visit to this country the first thing I should ask for would be a glass of raw milk, preferably Scottish," added Dr. Riviere, "and I would treat a tubercle free infant on similar lines." The safe production of immunity, he contended, was the only road to the prevention of tuberculosis, which he as a practical physician had never been able to visualise.

Dr. Woods Hutchinson (United States) said the time of danger in tuberculosis was childhood, and if he were asked what was the greatest barrier of protection he would say a liberal, generous wage for the father of the child.

Sir Robert Philip (Edinburgh) said that he should seek to have parents and guardians understand that tuberculosis was an event common to the race, and even to be expected as one expected distemper in a dog. The fact of tuberculosis having been established, effective measures should be taken to reinforce the resistance of the tuberculous child with a view to anticipation and preventing subsequent developments of a graver character. "It is difficult to emphasise overmuch the beneficial consequences of systematic detuberculation," he added. "If sufficiently carried out it would mean the disappearance of tuberculosis in its grosser forms within a generation and a half."

Develop Our Coal Resources

Editor Evening Telegram.

Dear Sir—Recent issues of your influential journal containing editorial comment on Newfoundland's productive possibilities are undoubtedly having a tonic effect on the public mind, and it is good to see that optimism will not be an unknown quality in any future recasting of the country's industrial horoscope.

Every leader from your industrial credits pen has the ring of sincerity about it and sounds a patriotic note pleasant to the ear, while at the same time leading to the hope that thus will we as a people shed that apathy and lack of interest altogether too evident in the past where the public weal is concerned. In a recent issue of the Evening Telegram appeared an editorial which must do much towards arousing in the public mind a sense of what we owe to ourselves and the great Empire of which Newfoundland is a component part; and in pointing to the fact that Newfoundland iron ore is passing Great Britain's shores, destined for countries which are her greatest and keenest industrial, political and diplomatic rivals, you bring the whole matter within the scope of Empire jurisdiction, separating it, I submit, from a question which otherwise might be considered from the purely local or parochial viewpoint. The considerations involved are too weighty and too widespread, affect too much the vital interests at stake, to admit of any other outcome.

The evil inherent in disposing of our resources to all-comers, regardless of consequences, may not be after all an unmixt one, and may, I verily believe, contain an element which will eventually redound to the benefit of the country. Inter-Imperial relations were never more closely knit, and while there is free and frank discussion of questions at issue as between the various Empire states and the Motherland, there is always evident the cardinal principle of the well being of the whole. This being so then Newfoundland's position as an important factor in the industrial and economic life of the British Empire will have been established. Millions within the Empire, ignorant of the fact before will realize that Newfoundland is a great iron producing country and once their appetite for more enlightenment is whetted, they should be, no doubt will be, informed, that Newfoundland has splendid possibilities in other directions, and that her great natural products can be converted into sources of wealth capable of adding greatly to the stability of the Empire.

What I have said above applies with equal force I feel to another great potential asset of Newfoundland—her coal. On several occasions I have perused with interest and pleasure letters and articles in the Telegram dealing with this most important matter. Only within the past few days was there averted what might have amounted to a catastrophe to the English-speaking peoples of the world, a coal famine, through the complete tie up of the mines in England, the United States and Canada as the result of a widespread strike.

And such a disaster has not been averted, it has only been postponed through compromise and this at the last moment. Coal, especially in the rugged winter and cold and inclement fall and spring months is absolutely indispensable to Newfoundland. Without it there would be widespread misery and almost total unemployment, and contemplation of such dire possibilities has brought forcibly to the public mind the consciousness that Newfoundland has great coal resources, for which only enterprise and capital are waiting to properly develop. None for a moment will dispute the fact that the late James P. Howley was a Geologist of eminence, and that he stood high in the regard of scientists of international repute, and Mr. Howley staked his reputation on the existence of coal in great if not vast quantities on the West Coast of this Island.

In letters written to the Telegram by T. J. Freeman, Secretary of the St. George's Coal Fields, Ltd., that gentleman has gone into voluminous statistics as to the presence of coal at Robinson's, and quotes from the excellent geological reports compiled by Mr. Howley to show that hundreds of millions of tons of coal exist on the West Coast and can be mined cheaply and economically, and yet if anything untoward occurs at Sydney or elsewhere to-morrow, we are without this prime necessity in our industrial and social life though possessed of millions of tons of it at our very doors. Is it not time for us to be up and doing in this connection? The opening up by the present Government of new inter-roads is I think a project which should have a very beneficial effect on the opening up of the mineral resources of the country bringing as they will men of wealth and capital into touch with centres endowed with mineral and industrial possibilities. If our coal areas could at this juncture be opened up for even initial development the labour-giving features would be of incalculable benefit, and an industry would have started which would have almost immediate beneficial effect on our industrial life.

This is a matter which should be outside the domain of party politics in its discussion, and should be treated as one of national importance. It is one, I hold, which no Government should hesitate to help, and I am not afraid to assert that any legislative body which takes the initiative in this matter it will be a difficult matter to divorce from public confidence and esteem. Other features bearing on this most important subject occur to me, but fearing I have already taxed your generosity too much I will defer them till a later date and for the present, while thanking you for the courtesy of publication will subscribe myself,

Truly yours,
LABORITE.

WHAT GOT INTO MARIE!

"I don't know what has got into that child," complained Marie's mother.

That child, a small feminine person aged eight, had been left behind with her grandmother while her mother went on a trip. Mother, after the fashion of the modern mother, had been keeping in touch by telephone and had just been informed thereby that Marie had been dreadfully naughty the night before. She had said she had heard some kind of a bug flying around her room and had refused to be comforted until grandmother slept in the room with her.

Her mother was upset by the episode because she knew that grandmother very much minded being disturbed in her sleep. "I don't think there was a thing in the room," she fretted. "I don't know what makes Marie have those silly ideas. I shall certainly have to punish her, if this keeps up."

I Saw Marie's Mother.

Across my mental moving picture screen, as she said that, there flashed a throw-back.

I saw Marie's mother fleeing across the room to the protection of Marie's father because a Junebug was in the room. And my movies spoke. I heard Marie's mother begging her father to get that horrid bug out and heard her explaining to her guests that she was simply frightened to death of a Junebug while Marie's father laughed and drove out the Junebug, and small Marie watched and took it all in.

And yet her mother can't understand what makes Marie have those silly ideas!

Her mother does Marie an injustice. She is not a stupid child. She is a very bright child and quick like all children to assimilate and imitate.

Born With Only Two Fears.
There is nothing that children absorb any more quickly than fear. Children are born almost without fear. There are just two inborn fears, the fear of falling and the fear of loud noises.

The rest of their fears they get by experience and by imitation.

One of our bears people say that children inherit a fear of this or that. The psychologists tell us that is impossible. "Nonsense," says the mother who is afraid of thunderstorms. "Look at my three children. Every one of them is just as nervous as I am when there is a thunderstorm. Do you suppose that's just a coincidence?"

But Not Of Heredity.

Of course it isn't. Far from it. It is an absolutely natural working of cause and effect, of example and imitation but not of heredity. Ever since those children were babies they have had an example of fear in thunderstorms put before them. They have seen their mother rush to close windows and even seen her put the legs of her chair in tumbles to insulate the chair, they have seen her turn pale and tremble. It is natural that they should regard a thunderstorm lightly!

Of course some of these minor fears may not do us any great harm but fears are surely excess baggage in the journey of life. Most young people accumulate enough of them by their own experience without being loaded down with a lot more that they get by imitation of ours.

The G. F. S. Jubilee Picnic will be held on Wednesday, August 19th. Will members wishing to attend kindly send their names to Mr. Herbert Outerbridge or Miss Annie Hayward, not later than Wednesday, August 12th, conveyances will be provided. Particulars will be in the daily papers later.—aug 11

"NUGGET" has a world-wide reputation and sale. Over 30 years' experience has resulted in the manufacturers of "NUGGET" becoming experts. They could market a water polish if they desired, but being jealous of their reputation, they continue to use Oil of Turpentine, which enables them to utilize waxes with polishing, preserving and water-proofing qualities that water polishes cannot possibly possess.

"NUGGET" would not be "NUGGET" if water were used in its manufacture.
